THE TURF.

For the first time since I have had the honour of contributing this budget of sporting news to The Indian Field I find myself absolutely without a single item of turf news or race report to send you. The frost caused the abandonment of four week end meetings last Saturday, and since Monday every race fixture has shared the same fate! There is an indication of a break in the weather at the time of writing and some hope of racing being possible to-morrow.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

Any hopes which may have been entertained of the Association Cup being brought South this year were rudely shaken when, in the third round of the competition, Bristol City—alone among South-country clubs—succeeded in qualifying for the next stage of the struggle. Bristol City's victory gained at the expense of another Southern team in Norwich City, the conquerors of Liverpool, was thoroughly well earned, but Millwall and Plymouth Argyle both suffered defeat, and neither Tottenham Hotspur nor West Ham United, although playing at home, could score against Burnley or Newcastle United. In holding their own with so skilful a combination as Newcastle United, West Ham United accomplished all that could reasonably be expected of them. Indeed, it was something of a triumph for the London club to keep their goal intact against so skilful an attack. That West Ham will pull through in the replay at Newcastle is scarcely likely.

Whatever the fate of West Ham at Newcastle, that team have matter for satisfaction in making so creditable a display in the struggle for the Cup. Tottenham Hotspur, on the other hand, cannot be pleased with the result of their encounter with Burnley. That Burnley would give the North London team a hard fight most people expected, considering what the Lancashire club accomplished against Crystal Palace, but the general anticipation was that some superiority of attack would give Tottenham victory. No success at all, however, attended the Hotspur forwards, so a visit to Burnley during the week is in front of the Tottenham men and the chances must be in favour of Burnley. Defeat at Turf Moor, however, might prove a blessing in disguise for Tottenham, who, free from anxieties as to Cup-ties, would be able to conserve their energies for the work which lies before them in the Second League. In this—their first year in League II.—Hotspur at this advanced stage of the winter possesses a record equal to that of any of their opponents, and, if they can only retain their form, must possess a splendid chance of finding themselfves in the First League next season.

Of the other Southern clubs, Millwall, after giving Nottingham Forest a hard fight up to the interval, were in the end well beaten, but Plymouth Argyle experienced distinctly hard luck, holding their own at Derby until the last minute of the game and then having a goal headed against them. The great surprise of the round occurred at Sheffield, where no one entertained much doubt as to the ability of Sheffield Wednesday to dispose of Glossop. Awarded a penalty kick in the opening half, however, Glossop promptly turned it to account, whereas Wednesday—lacking, it is true, the services of Bradshaw and Tummon—not only failed to overcome the Glossop defence by combined attack, but actually missed scoring from two penalty kicks. Sunderland followed up victories over First League clubs at Bramall Lane, Sheffield and Deepdale, Preston, in the previous rounds, by beating Bradford City at Bradford, a very fine record, and Manchester United accomplished a remarkable performance in running up a score of 6 goals to 1 against Blackburn Rovers. This achievement will probably make Manchester United favourites for the Cup, but it should not be forgotten that in all three rounds they have been drawn to play on the Clayton enclosure.

ASSOCIATION CUP.—THIRD ROUND

Hotspur vs. Burnley.—After a keen, hard game, in which the honours were pretty evenly divided, Burnley and Tottenham Hotspur both failed to score at Tottenham. It was a poor match, which gave us none of the finer points of the game. Tottenham tried to play their usual clever football, but the vigorous tactics of the Burnley backs and halves, not always too scruplously applied, rendered their efforts inoperative, and at times the Tottenham defence was hard pressed to keep a capital forward line at bay. The ground was rather sloppy owing to a sharp night frost and a brilliant sunshine throughout the morning and afternoon, but there was absolutely no wind, so the conditions were quite equal for both sides. There were 30,000 spectators. Tottenham, like Burnley, have not suffered defeat since the turn of the year, so a hard fight was expected, but few people thought that a pointless draw would be the result. The game opened in the Hotspur's favour, and after five minutes Middlemiss beat Dawson, but was so obviously offside that the referee's decision caused no disappointment. Burnley were not often aggressive in the first half, but defended sturdily, and Dawson, the Burnley goalkeeper, saved stinging shots from Walton and Morris. The Hotspurs started the second half in great style, but still found the Burnley defence too good for them, although Steel should have scored once from a fine pass by Woodward. The last-named tested Dawson thrice with good headers. Then a change came over the game, and Burnley had the best of the subsequent exchanges. Morris once intercepted a fierce shot from Abbott, and Morley missed an open goal from a lovely centre by Smethams. Just towards the finish Tottenham nearly scored from a corner, and that brought a poor game to an end, and the sides will have to meet during the week at Burnley, to decide which is to enter the fourth round. Tottenham Hotspur, 0; Burnley, 0.

Sheffield Wednesday vs. Glossop.—Although the result of this tie was looked upon as a certainty for the Wednesday, there were quite 35,000 persons on the Owlerton grand at Sheffield including many of Glossop's supporters, who were hopeful that their club would emulate the performance of Norwich City last year when the Wednesday were so unexpectedly beaten. Glossop won the toss, but quickly had to defend, the Wednesday pressing vigorously. The Glossop men were, however, on their mettle, and the attacks of the home forwards were ably resisted, Butler saving splendidly from a good shot by Chapman, and Hofton making a fine clearance from Wilson, when the latter had a first-rate opening. In an attack by Glossop, Lyall had to save from Underwood, but, generally speaking, the Wednesday showed capital defence, both Buxton and Layton kicking well. The home team had the better of the play, but at the end of twenty-five minutes the visitors broke away, and in a scrimmage in front of goal they were awarded a penalty, from which Greechan scored for Glossop. Following this reverse, the Wednesday pressed strongly, but could not penetrate the visitors' defence, and at the interval Glossop still led by 1 goal to 0. The Wednesday had much the bigger share of the play in the second half, but met with bad luck, Brittleton and Burton both missing from penalty kicks. Glossop rarely got over the halfway line in this half, but the Wednesday defence was very weak. Nothing more was scored. Glossop, 1; Sheffield Wednesday, 0.

Bristol City vs. Norwich City.—In meeting the City at Bristol Norwich City had the same team in the field as gained such a surprising victory over Liverpool in the second round, while the home team only found it necessary to make one change, Hardy standing down. With splendid weather prevailing and the ground in excellent condition everything pointed to a fast and interesting game, and when play began there were about 20,000 people present. Bristol City won the toss, and for the first quarter of an hour had all the best of the exchanges. Their forwards played with great dash and forced many corner kicks. These led to many exciting incidents in front of the Norwich goal, but French and Craig, the visitors' backs, played in determined style, and Roney in goal brought off some smart saves. The Norwich City forwards rarely broke away, and from a sixth corner kick Burton put Bristol City ahead. Tomlinson once made a fine run for Norwich, but he was fouled, and a penalty given against Annan. Allsopp, who took the kick, hit the post. For the remainder of the first half Bristol City attacked with vigour, but met with no further success. Play in the second half went largely in favour of Bristol, but Norwich showed plenty of resource in defending. Twenty minutes after the restart Rippon increased the lead of the home side after good work had been done by Gilligan and Staniforth. Bristol did not have to defend until nearing the end, when the Norwich forwards put in several shots, but mostly at long range. These Clay saved cleverly, especially one from Tomlinson. Nothing further was scored. Bristol City, 2; Norwich City, 0.

Notts Forest vs. Millwall.—At Nottingham, before 24,000 people. Twigg kicked off for Millwall and from a centre by Hooper West missed a good chance of scoring for the Forest. Millwall then broke away and Linacre cleared cleverly from Tones and Vincent. Milwall continued to press and from a centre by Vincent Shand opened the scoring after eighteen minutes. Following this reverse the Forest played up strongly and West and Morris were rather unlucky not to get through. At the end of forty minutes, however, West equalised and at change of ends the score stood at one goal each. Some fast and exciting play took place in the second half. Six minutes after the restart the Forest took the lead, West scoring from a penalty given against Jefferies. Comrie, Millwall's centre half-back, was injured and had to be carried off the field, but he resumed after Hooper, by a brilliant effort, had added the Forest's third goal. Millwall were unable to respond, and Notts Forest, who completely outplayed their opponents in the second half, won with ease. Notts Forest, 3; Millwall, 1.

Arsenal vs. Liverpool.—A more ineffective opposition on the part of a First League team could hardly be imagined than that set up by Liverpool in their game with Woolwich Arsenal at Plumstead before 15,000 spectators. The conditions were ideal, except that the turf was on the slippery side, which makes the very poor display of Liverpool all the more difficult to explain. They played very well at the commencement; in fact, in the first five minutes they came very near scoring through Parkinson, but after this they gradually fell away until at the finish they were nothing less than a demoralised side. Arsenal were certainly in a happy mood, but their form was not such as one would expect to so completely upset the balance of a team of Liverpool's reputation. As a whole the visitors' front rank lacked dash and method, Parkinson and Goddard being the only two to show anything like form, while of an extremely moderate set of halves, Peake, who is a reserve, was the pick. Chorlton and Crawford at back were quite unequal to the work thrown upon them. When all did so well, it is difficult to individualise as far as Woolwich are concerned, but special mention must be made of Beney, who scored four of the goals. This was only his second appearance in the centre position and he more than justified his selection. It was the halves, Ducat and McEachrane, who were chiefly responsible for Liverpool's downfall. They effectively bottled up the visitors' front rank and fed their men with clock-like precision. On two or three occasions only were Liverpool near scoring; this was in the first half. Parkinson missed when he had only McDonald to beat, while on another occasion Gray suddenly appeared between the posts in a scrimmage, McDonald having run out, and turned aside a shot from Hewitt. Even though Lewis had missed a penalty, Arsenal were leading by 3 goals to 0 at the interval and if they had not delayed in front of goal in the second half they would have added more than the two goals they did register. The first goal was scored by Lewis and then Beney added a couple in quick succession. It was fifteen minutes after the change of ends that Beney added the fourth, and the fifth was from a penalty successfully taken by Satterthwaite. Arsenal, 5; Liverpool, 0.

West Bromwich vs. Orient.—At West Bromwich the Albion beat Clapton Orient by 1 goal to 0. The home side were without Pennington, who prior to the start was suspended sine die for insulting the directors. The Albion had the best of the first half, Davies scoring for them five minutes before the interval. After change of ends Buck missed two good chances. Clapton improved towards the end, but could not score. There were 12,000 spectators. West Bromwich Albion, 1; Clapton Orient, 0.

AMATEUR INTERNATIONAL.

WALES vs. ENGLAND.—Amateur elevens representing Wales and England opposed each other at Aberdare before 4,000 spectators. Delightful weather prevailed, and despite the hard frost of the previous evening the ground was in good condition. England were at full strength and the only absentee among the Welshmen was Jeffreys Jones, who owing to injury stood down in favour of H. Wright, of Wrexham. Winning the toss, the Englishmen started downhill and showing good combination immediately besieged their opponents' goal. Play had only lasted a minute when Hunt scored their first goal. A series of attacks by the Welshmen followed, but these were easily warded off and England again pressed. Dunning scoring their second goal about midway through the first half. Wales then took up the attack and save the situation England conceded a corner, which was effectively cleared. The visitors again became aggressive and Barber scored their third goal. Then Wales became dangerous, Atkinson having some difficult shots to stop, and Hughes scored their first goal from a penalty. Nearing the interval Chapman scored another goal for England, who at half-time led by four goals to one. Both teams attacked in turn after change of ends. At length Hughes scored for Wales as the result of a penalty. Wales after this attacked repeatedly, but were not able to again get past the English defence. Williamson scored the fifth for England, who at the close were again attacking strongly. Result:—

LONDON AMATEUR SENIOR CUP.

CLAPTON vs. LONDON CALEDONIANS.—Despite the counter-attraction of West Ham vs. Newcastle United close by, a goodly number of spectators were present at this match at Upton. Clapton made a splendid start, for shortly after the commencement Bell, taking a pass from Rance, beat Watson with a good shot. From this stage to the interval play on both sides left much to be desired, except on a few occasions. A neat bit of passing by J. R. McFarlane, Sutherland, and Melhuish nearly ended in the Caleys equalising, whilst just before half-time the visitors' goal had a rather lucky escape. For the most part the game was evenly contested, but at no time was either team in its usual form. At half-time the home team were still leading by one goal. In the second half, however, things brightened up considerably, the pace being faster and both sides displaying more vigour and better combination. Before three minutes had elapsed Bell repeated his performance in the former half, thus increasing Clapton's lead. The home team followed this up with a number of dangerous attacks, the visitors' defence being severely tried, and Watson having a heavy task in saving several well-directed shots. The Caleys were occasionally aggressive, but Clapton proved themselves the superior team. The latter side, however, met a stubborn defence, and were unable to score again until a few minutes from the finish, when Tull beat Watson with a ground shot. In the meantime the visitors had negotiated two or three rushes, in the course of which they very nearly reduced their opponents' lead, Melhuish being conspicuous with some neat work. Clapton, 3; London Caledonians, 0.

ARMY INTERNATIONAL.

IRELAND vs. ENGLAND.—Favoured by fine weather the match at Dublin between teams representing the Army in Ireland and the Army in England attracted a large gathering of spectators. No further changes took place in the elevens. At the outset Ireland showed capital form, and after about a quarter of an hour's play Groves scored the first goal of the match for them. Following that, however, England did better. They frequently attacked, and had several fine chances of equalising, but finished weakly near goal. Then Ireland pressed again, but could not get through, half time arriving with the score at Ireland 1 goal, England 0. Early in the second half Howarth, one of Ireland's forwards, was off the field injured for ten minutes, but Ireland more than held their own, their forwards being faster and cleverer than the English five. After about twenty-five minutes Groves added another goal for Ireland, and this lead they held until near the close, when Pearson scored for England. A rather moderate game thus ended in a victory for the Army in Ireland. Ireland, 2; England, 1.

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.—The open aspect of the game and the fight for the lead in the records attracted a big crowd to the Queen's Club. It was a representative crowd, as prominent sportsmen of almost every persuasion were in evidence. Ladies, as usual, were well to the fore; in fact, it was once again demonstrated that the more prominent "battles of the Blues" are functions to be as religiously attended by Society as Royal Ascot, Goodwood, or the opera. Old Blues were in great force—some of them very old Blues. Under this category may be mentioned Messrs. W. S. Rawson, E. H. Parry, the late Colonial Secretary, F. E. Lacey, F. H. Ingram, C. Wreford Brown, T. M. Pike, Lord Kinnaird, R. T. Squire, and, if I mistake not, one of the ever-famous brothers Walters. Others to be met with at every turn included Messrs. G. O. Smith, Gilbert Vassall, G. B. Raikes, S. S. Harris, R. J. Salt, K. R. G. Hunt, W. C. Jordan (still looking seedy after his recent illness), A. H. Haigh-Brown, M. Morgan-Owen, A. T. Coode, etc. What a reunion that half hour or so before the kick-off provides to be sure. It was a discriminating crowd, too, if not so wildly enthusiastic as that at the Rugby match. And in the main, the ring's verdict was sound. Few mistakes were made in the way of injudicious approbation or undistinguishing blame. Put another way, it was by no means considered a point of honour to applaud everything—good, bad, or indifferent—done by the respective sides, as in some representative contests. Under all circumstances, Mr. Stoddart has to be congratulated upon the excellence of the turf and the general arrangements alike. Right from the outset it was speedily made clear that the tussle was going to be a stubborn one. Oxford were warm favourites with most, yet many good judges of the game pinned their faith on Cambridge. As it turned out their optimism was justified. The Light Blues had quite as much of the game as their rivals throughout. It was full of incident, exciting crises, and good old English strenuous play; such, I mean, as that seen in Mr. Cobbold's day. That veteran himself quite enjoyed it. All the scoring was done in the first half. Oxford opened in great style, and before the game had been in progress many minutes G. R. Sayer scored for them with a "beauty." This roused the Cantabs, who attacked hotly all along the line, and as the outcome of a fine concerted movement by Squire, Brisley, and Bache, the first-named equalised midst rousing cheers. Such a rate of scoring put everybody in good humour, and most of us settled down to enjoy what promised to prove a big scoring game. It was not to be, however. The defence always proved superior to the attack until half-time was called with the score 1 goal all. Resuming almost directly the second half mainly consisted of attack and counter-attack by the forwards. Plenty of clever hot shots tested the goalkeepers severely, and both emerged from the ordeal with honours. J. A. Appleton (Oxford) enhanced his reputation considerably, and C. Pinkham (Cambridge) made a brilliant debut in first-class play. It was a fast game from start to finish, and more than one player had had enough of it when time was called. On the trend of the play this "honour easy" verdict (1—1) was a just criterion of respective form on the day. What is more, it was accepted as such by the majority of spectators. Neither team was quite first class this year. They both lacked polish; that is to say, they failed to put the crowning point on really excellent mid-field work. Both were weak in front of goal, too. Many fine shots were rained in at intervals, yet numerous opportunities of scoring were muffed. Coming to individuals, R. L. L. Braddell (Oxford) was the best back on the field, and A. C. L. Clark (Oxford) the best half-back. Braddell upset many a combined rush, tackled splendidly, and kicked with a judgment worthy of Mr. W. J. Oakley at his best. V. G. Thew (the Cambridge captain) also did splendid work throughout. Forward honours belong to Messrs. A. Berry, G. R. Sayer, R. C. Maples (Oxford), and C. E. Brisley, C. E. Squire, and W. B. Harris (Cambridge). K. Raynor (Oxford) lacked speed on the right wing, and V. Edwards (Cambridge) hardly centred with his usual skill and accuracy. Brisley's dribbling work brought forth cheers again and again. Where all did well, however, it will never do to go in for too much comparison of an invidious nature. It is curious that both the Rugby and Association matches should thus have ended in draws. In that under notice, compensation is afforded by the fact that both teams still claim seventeen wins. This means, of course, that the fight for the lead will be renewed next year. If we get another such an interesting, stubborn, and exciting tussle as that of yesterday everybody will be satisfied. The season's record now read:—

Oxford	19	12	4	3	59	28
Cambridge	18	11	5	2	55	25

CAMBRIDGE vs. STADE FRANCAIS.—The Stade Francais, coming over with the reputation of being, perhaps, the best club in this season's French football, gave a disappointing display at Cambridge on Tuesday, when they suffered defeat at the hands of the 'Varsity by 12 goals to 1.

At one time an even larger score seemed probable, the score being 8—0 at half-time. After the interval, however, Cambridge eased down appreciably, while the Frenchmen, playing with increased confidence, did much better. After Pinkham had done well to save a hot shot from J. Jordan, Matthey netted the ball amid a burst of applause, but was adjudged off-side. Shortly after, some pretty passing, started from the half-way line, ended in Royet scoring with a fine shot. But for the most part the University held their own with extraordinary ease, and the French defence was kept continually busy.

The Stade may consider themselves unlucky to have found the Cambridge forwards right at the top of their form. Freed from the restraint and worry of the 'Varsity match, they dribbled and passed and shot with all the accuracy and verve which made the side so formidable before Christmas. It was the opinion of a good judge who has watched all their home matches that they have not given a more piquant display this season.

With such a front line opposed to them the Stade backs were hard put to it to keep the score within reasonable limits.

After about twenty minutes' play Astley changed places with Rouxel, and this materially stiffened the defence. He, Nicolai, and, in the second half, H. Jordan, were the pick of the backs, but it was to Emery, the goalkeeper, that the Frenchmen owed most. Time after time he prevented a goal by his quickness, and though his play lacked polish some of his saves were wonderful. A genuinely sporting crowd rewarded him with round after round of applause.

Indecision was the worst fault of the forwards, so that even when they got the ball they were invariably robbed of it before a combined movement could be started. In the second half they improved somewhat, but they have manifestly much to learn. And for an object lesson nothing could have served better than the play of the Cambridge forwards in the first half. The goals were scored for Cambridge by Bache (7), Brisley (2), Squire (2), and Edwards (1); for the Stade Francais by Royet.

RUGBY RULES.

COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP.

NORTHUMBERLAND vs. DURHAM.—Always the better side, Durham gained a well-earned victory at North Shields by 15 points to 3. All the scoring took place in the first half, Watson getting two tries, Sivewright one, and kicking two goals, while Taylor converted the other try. Northumberland defended splendidly after change of ends, but never looked like making a close fight. As the result of this match Durham and Cumberland tie in the Northern Division of the County Championship. Sivewright converted two of the tries and Taylor the other. Leading by 15 points to 3 Durham entered upon the second half with splendid vigour and almost monopolised the attacking. They lacked cleverness in finishing, and were met by such remarkably sure tackling that they failed to increase their lead. Northumberland, however, also failed in attack, and so the game was won by the half-time score, after a spirited struggle. Durham, 3 goals; Northumberland, 1 try.

OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS vs. ROSSLYN PARK.—A very hard game was played between these sides at the Old Deer Park, Richmond. The Taylors were well represented, but the Park were weak and had to call on several substitutes to complete their team. But in spite of this, played a very good forward game and completely bustled the Taylors off their play. In the first two minutes the Taylors' backs got an opening and O'Callaghan ran in with a clever try behind the posts and R. A. Lippingwell added the major points. After this the game resolved itself into a desperate struggle between the forwards, in which neither side gained any material advantage. The backs got very few openings and the game was mostly kept very close. The tackling on both sides was very determined and neither side got near scoring after the opening. The Park men kept the ball very near the Taylors' line for a good part of the first half, but though they were the stronger pack they could not carry their efforts to a successful finish. There was no more scoring and the Taylors won by 6 points to nothing. Old Merchant Taylors, 1 goal; Rosslyn Park, 0

LONDON SCOTTISH vs. LONDON IRISH.—At Richmond. This was never a very interesting game, though it was marked by a good deal of keenness. The Irish forwards worked hard all the time, but their methods were generally of the kick-and-rush order; but all round the Irishmen tackled splendidly. If the Scotsmen could claim no advantage forward, they were very well served by their backs and their three-quarter line played so well together that the Scotsmen should have won more decisively than they did. Very early in the game the Irishmen, while attacking, were awarded a penalty kick for off-side, and O'Grady scored the goal. A little later, however, from one of the fine passing runs by the Scottish three-quarters, Walter ran in with a fine try and Kidston placed the goal. Early in the second half an accident to Monteith reduced the Scotsmen to fourteen men, but they still more than held their own, though they could not get through the Irishmen's defence. Just on the point of time, however, after the Scotsmen had been pressing resolutely, the ball was rushed over the line, and, Grant getting up, scored another try for the Scotsmen. Kidston failed with the place-kick and thus the London Scottish won by 8 points to 3. Scottish, 1 goal 1 try; Irish, 1 penalty goal.

HARLEQUINS vs. RICHMOND.—The brilliant sunshine after the severe frost left the Wandsworth ground very slippery, and the fact, perhaps, partially accounted for the distinctly poor play of the Richmond backs. The Harlequins also made mistakes, but their halves and three-quarters were greatly superior and but for the selfishness of F. M. Stoop in the centre their side would have won by a far greater margin than 1 goal and 2 tries to 0, which was the record at the end. Forward there was not much to choose, Hodges, Odgers, and Mehaffey for Richmond, and Bulkley, Walker, and Denison for the others, all doing splendid work. The first try of the match was gained by Adrian Stoop, who snapped up a pass which Lewis, on the wing, had missed, and the second was secured by Bulkley while backing up his three-quarters in fine style. In the second half the solitary points were obtained by Lambert, who twice handed off would-be tacklers and scored after the most brilliant piece of work in the match. Lambert added the major points to Bulkley's try. Harlequins, 1 goal 2 tries; Richmond, 0.

LENNOX vs. OLD ALLEYNIANS.—The Old Alleynians were in splendid form at Wimbledon yesterday and defeated Lennox by 21 points to 0. The Alleynians' three-quarters played well together, but the result was largely due to the forward line, who played a strong and dashing game throughout, entirely undoing their opponents' defence towards the end. The Alleynians started the ball and maintained the attack well within their opponents' twenty-five for the first ten minutes. At length Newbury broke away for Lennox and the Alleynians just averted a try against them by a successful claim of off-side. Returning to the attack from an awkward position near the Lennox upright, King dropped a splendid goal for the Alleynians, and before the interval that team put on three more points with a try by Gold. The visitors had matters all their own way after the interval and, following a fine individual run by Inglis, Wright scored another try, Mackinnon hitting the cross-bar with an excellent shot. The Alleynians' attack became even stronger during the last fifteen minutes of the game, three more tries being scored in quick succession—two by Garrett and one by Gold, Wright being successful with one of the kicks. The Alleynians' three-quarters tackled splendidly throughout, Garrett in particular being responsible for the spoiling of many of the Lennox attacks. Old Alleynians, 2 goals (1 dropped) 4 tries; Lennox, 0.

UNITED SERVICES vs. U.C.S. OLD BOYS.—The Services won at Portsmouth by 3 goals and 1 try to 0.

BEDFORD vs. LONDON WELSH.—At Bedford, the Welsh gaining a capital win by 19 points to 3.

R.M.C. vs. UNITED SERVICES.—The Services won at Sandhurst by 3 goals (1 dropped) to 0.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. BLACKHEATH.—Owing to frost this fixture at Oxford was abandoned.

DEVON ALBION vs. COVENTRY.—At Devonport, the Albion winning by 21 points to 0.

MOSELEY vs. MANCHESTER.—At Birmingham, the Moseley team being successful by 17 points to 5.

CHELTENHAM vs. GLOUCESTER.—At Cheltenham, the visitors winning by 2 goals (1 penalty) and a try to 2 penalty goals.

WATSONIANS vs. EDINBURGH INSTITUTION.—At Edinburgh, the Watsonians winning by 4 goals (1 penalty) to 5 tries to 1 penalty goal.

PLYMOUTH vs. EXETER.—Playing at home Plymouth won by 3 goals and 1 try to 1 try.

SWANSEA vs. ARTILLERY.—On their own ground the Swansea team won by 2 goals and 3 tries to 0.

NEATH vs. LLANELLY.—A hard game at Neath ended in a win for the home club by 1 try to 0.

NEWPORT vs. LEICESTER.—At Newport, the home side winning by 2 goals (1 dropped) to 1 goal.

RUGBY vs. NORTHAMPTON.—The Northampton fifteen won at Rugby by 5 tries to 0.

EDINBURGH WANDERERS vs. STEWARTONIANS.—A capital match at Edinburgh ended in a draw of 1 goal and 2 tries each.

FRANCE vs. WALES.—France and Wales met on the 23rd instant in an international match on the Colombes ground. The weather was superb. Eight thousand spectators were present, including some hundreds of British excursionists. Many Welshmen wore leeks in their buttonholes.

Both teams were enthusiastically cheered on entering the field. The Welsh kicked off at three o'clock, playing against a slight breeze. Ten minutes after play began, Lesieur (France) retired hurt, but he returned six or seven minutes later. The early part of the game was very open, the Frenchmen making a good defence. They were remarkably quick, and tackled well, but were constantly nonplussed by the fine Welsh passing. Trew secured the first try, and Baker the second five minutes later, both being in difficult positions. Bancroft, who took the kick on both occasions, failed to convert. The third try, scored by Williams, was the outcome of a splendid run through. Bancroft once more failed to convert, and half-time was called with the score at 9 points to nil in favour of Wales.

In the second half the Welshmen had things practically all their own way. A try by Trew, which was converted, brought the score to 14 to nil. From this point, goal followed goal with amazing rapidity. Three tries were scored within six minutes by Watts, Baker, and J. P. Jones, of which Bancroft converted two, but failed with the third. The remaining four goals were kicked within eleven minutes from tries

THE CRUSADE AGAINST DYSENTERY

Wise Words by a Physician.

Among the pernicious diseases incident to life in India dysentery takes an important place. The reasons for this are many and varied. It is, however, unnecessary to enumerate them here. The great fact which every resident in the country, and therefore every possible sufferer, has to keep prominently in mind is how to avoid this dread complaint in the first place, and, in the next, how to take steps to cure it should he be unfortunate enough to contract it.

Speaking broadly, no tropical disease is more pestilential than dysentery, for it undermines the health, depresses the nervous system, reduces the tone and vigour of the whole body, diminishes the mental energy, and, generally, interferes with the individual's physical power of resistance against disease. The result is that, unlike what happens in most other diseases, one attack does not act as a preventive, but rather predisposes to another, thus rendering the weakened system liable to still further inroads, until the condition of the sufferer is deplorable indeed, for he may be attacked by many after-effects, like abscess of the liver, dropsy, scurvy, and nervous affections of various sorts.

Bad as all this is, the patient's case is rendered still worse by consideration of the fact that the general nutrition of the body is lowered by life in hot climates, that the digestive system is therefore depressed as well as the vitality, so that he not only starts heavily handicapped in favour of the disease, but also heavily handicapped against the conditions which make for recovery.

In these respects dysentery may be said to resemble typhoid fever on the one hand, and malaria on the other, and the danger of both is too well known to need more than passing notice. As typhoid is due to ulceration of the small intestine, so dysentery is due to a similar condition of the large or lower bowel, while malaria and dysentery are believed to often have a close relation, the former predisposing to attacks of the latter.

The treatment of dysentery, like that of typhoid, and, in great measure, that of malaria, is admittedly one of diet. Milk, the blandest of foods, was, until a comparatively short time ago, the sheet anchor of the physician. In the very acute stages of the disease many doctors are, however, opposed to its use, and many patients are not able to digest it, so that they grow steadily worse.

Happily, science has discovered a food-tonic which, as one physician has written, "possesses virtues of a very high order," and is practically a specific in the modern treatment of dysentery. This is Sanatogen. Its composition is well known, for it has been widely stated to consist of 95 per cent. of pure casein of milk, the substance to which that food owes its nutritive value, in chemical combination—not merely mixed—with 5 per cent. of Glycero-Phosphate of Sodium, the chief vital constituent of the nervous system. These two substances, in the combination in which they exist in Sanatogen, are so digestible that the preparation puts no strain on the most enfeebled digestive organs. All of it is absorbed or assimilated by the body, so that there is no residue to irritate the ulcers which are formed in the course of the disease and prohibit the giving of solid food.

Sanatogen is, therefore, universally prescribed even in the acutest stages of the severest cases, for it prevents deterioration in nutrition, and maintains the patient's power of resistance at a high level, thereby giving him a better chance of recovering quickly and without complications. More than that, cases which get worse under ordinary conditions rapidly improve when Sanatogen is added to the diet. One of the supremest values of Sanatogen is that it is not limited to restoring the health during or after dysentery. It is actually a preventive of the disease by strengthening the system so that it can withstand exposure to the infection.

Sanatogen can be obtained from all chemists. To meet the special needs of the Indian population, a booklet, "How to keep well in India," has been written by a physician, who has practised for many years in the country, and it will be sent free to all who write for it mentioning The Indian Field to Messrs Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, who are also able to supply Sanatogen.

SHERLEY'S

DOG MEDICINES

MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

ROWING.

THE 'VARSITY BOAT RACE.

In rowing circles the topic of the hour is undoubtedly that of the make up of this year's Cambridge eight. "Ought President Stuart or Mr. R. W. M. Arbuthnot to row stroke?" "Has Stuart voluntarily given up his well-won seat, or has he been practically driven to do so?" "Stuart is non-Etonian, does that fact speak? "The possible coaches, are they of the Eton Cabal?" "Did they refuse to coach if Stuart stroked once more?" "Has the great 'Varsity race been imperilled?" —all these and other questions germane have been submitted for consideration in the big correspondence that has ensued. Mr. F. F. Poyntz (Albemarle Street) suggests that such interference with the functions of the C.U.B.C. officials savours of that rude impertinence which assumes so much and knows so little. I cannot agree. In my opinion it must be put down to "all zeal." The Boat Race is a national affair, and very few there are who fail to take an intelligent interest in it. All the same, I do think outside interference has attained an absurdly high pitch this year. Cantabs past and present have, of course, the right to feel aggrieved if C.U.B.C. procedure is not in their opinion quite "on the square." For instance, if the success of the 1909 crew is (as alleged) imperilled by the present seating—Arbuthnot instead of Stuart at stroke—they are well within their rights to call attention to the fact. But is it? Mr. Steve Fairbairn, Mr. Bushe-Fox, Dr. Foakes-Jackson, Mr. Escombe, Mr. Muttlebury, with many others, think not. The general feeling in Cambidge aquatic circles is that the 1909 boat is good enough to beat Oxford with either Stuart or Arbuthnot at that thwart. Other equally prominent rowing men disagree, however, and back their opinion up by, inter alia, the following reasons: (1) As Arbuthnot is 6 ft. in height and only 10 st. in weight, there can be little superfluous strength; (2) his work is eccentric in many movements; (3) his blade is bad; and (4) he fails to "nurse" his heavy men. There is a deal of truth in all this, yet it seems to be forgotten that real coaching has only just begun. Moreover, that the Old Etonian is essentially a stroke, and, underlying all his faults just now, there is perfect rhythm. This, of course, compensates for a good deal. Personally, I should prefer to see the President setting the work again. He is a splendid oarsman and water-man knows the Putney to Mortlake course better than most, and has hitherto always inspired his men to doughty deeds. And nobody can gainsay the fact that he does twice as much work at the disputed thwart as the Old Etonian. However, the coaches seems to have come to the conclusion that the last-named has qualities which out-weigh those of Mr. Stuart, so there is an end of it. The suggestion that the 1909 coaches, being Old Etonians, refused to go on if Stuart set the work again is preposterous. The C.U.B.C. would not countenance anything of that sort of exclusiveness.

For the rest, it is also forgotten that Mr. Stuart is president of the C.U.B.C., hence paramount (so to speak). Anyway, the arrangement of the crew rests with him, and it would be mock-modesty or worse on his part to accept the present position if he did not believe it to be the best. "Old Salopian" (Sevenoaks) writes very emphatically under this heading, and remarks, "if Mr. Stuart really thinks it would be beneficial for the crew if he were to stroke again he ought to do so at all costs. It is a new feature at Cambridge if coaches or anybody else arrogate to themselves the right to dictate to the president in this respect." Exactly; that sums up the whole case in a nutshell.

I append some details:—

Oxford.—The Dark Blues did not go below locks yesterday, as was anticipated, but restricted their labours to the home water, owing to the fact, that a change was to be made in the constitution. Most people thought the crew was finally made up, seeing that they went into training on Wednesday, but, apparently, someone has been found wanting, and the unlucky individual seems to be no less a personage than the Old Blue Kitchin, of St. John's who, on the second journey, was superseded by Garton, the Eton Freshman, who has been rowing No. 6 in the Magdalen Torpid boat. It by no means follows that the change is a permanent one, but should Garton be preferred he will have had enough hard rowing during the present term to last him for some time to come.

Mr. W. F. C. Holland coached, and he was accompanied by Dr. Bourne. A keen east wind prevailed, and so no tubbing was indulged in, the crew making two excursions in the eight. The first time down, Wednesday's order was maintained, and after paddling to Iffley they did a hard bit of rowing to the Freewater Stone, and subsequently paddled at 26 up to Randall's whence they returned to the boathouse in one piece.

After half an hour's interval they got afloat a second time, and with Garton at 4, vice Kitchin, again proceeded to the Lasher. They did a half course to the ferry, and on returning to Iffley rowed hard to the Freewater Stone at 32 and 30, and thence paddled up to the boathouse, which concluded the afternoon's work. The indisposition of Gladstone, the chosen for the bow thwart, is such as practically to prevent him rowing again this year. In the circumstances W. P. M. Newman, who has been most efficiently deputising for the Christ Church oarsman, will retain the seat.

BOXING.

Summers vs. Britt.—In the decisive international battle contested at the National Sporting Club last Monday night Johnny Summers, of London, proved beyond all possible question of doubt that he is a better man than Jimmy Britt, of San Francisco. An even larger crowd of members and friends assembled than that which witnessed the contest between Moir and Burns a year ago.

The men were articled to box twenty rounds of three minutes each at catch-weights for a purse of £800 and £100 stake money a side, making a total of £1,000. Britt weighed several pounds the heavier of the two. In spite of this Summers won easily on points at the end of twenty rounds.

Mr. A. F. Bettinson, manager of the club, acted as M.C., while the refereeing was in the capable hands of Mr. Eugene Corri.

The referee's was an arduous task, for he had perpetually to come between the two men, and it was not long before he had to divest himself of his coat, and at the close of the evening he seemed a good deal more tired than either of the boxers.

Summers showed really remarkable quickness and cleverness at times. He brought off a beautiful double "left-right" with such quickness that the blows could scarcely be seen. Details:—

Round 1.—Summers went straight in and led with the left The American returned with a left hook to the chin. There was a lot of light sparring, and each man was very careful. At the end of the round Britt expostulated with the referee for cautioning him for holding.

Round 2.—Mr. Corri severely cautioned Britt again and Britt denied aloud. Presently Summers dashed in and seemed to damage the American not a little at close quarters. Mr. Corri entered the ring.

Round 3.—The referee was in the ring again, ready to part the men at any instant. There was a good deal of holding in this round and not much damage done.

Round 4.—Some fierce work at close quarters, with the continual necessity for the referee's interference. Britt looked as if he stood no chance against the Englishman without perpetual holding. Britt's nose showed blood, and in the second minute he slipped to the floor. Summers's round.

Round 5.—The round opened with the referee again, and then there was fast work and furious, Britt holding at the end of every rally to avoid punishment. The Londoner more than once brought off a beautiful straight left and right, and was strong throughout.

Round 6.—Britt swung savagely time and again, but always over his opponent's head. The referee was again called upon to part the men.

Round 7.—The American began the meeting by holding with the right hand and punching with the left. He rather showed to advantage when he got Summers against the ropes. Summers put in a perfect straight left in the face in the middle of the round. A diversion was created by the referee receiving a blow in the face while parting the men.

Round 8.—Summers damaged the American's wind considerably in this round, and Britt was again swinging wildly. Distinctly Summers's round.

Round 9.—Summers slipped down once, but the American stepped back generously. Britt was again cautioned for holding. Ringsiders considered Summers not fighting his best. Among these was Jack Goldswain.

Round 10.—Half-way was reached without anything decisive having occurred. Cautions for holding against Britt became monotonous. All the best attacking was on the side of the Englishman, who landed blows continually left and right to head and body, more particularly the right.

Round 11.—Britt began by dancing towards his opponent, but these tactics soon proved too tiring, and the Englishman again showed superiority. Britt was ever trying to avoid punishment, and hardly landed a blow throughout the round.

Round 12.—Britt landed a light hook on Summers's jaw early in the first minute and a swing later on, but the Londoner was always landing the better and harder blow at body and head. Particularly hard were his kidney punches. Britt held his guard low, and seemed a little distressed.

Round 13.—Britt landed high on the jaw twice. But in a few seconds Summers had his own way again, hitting freely and heavily. The intervention of the referee was necessary as it had been throughout the fight. The American could never resist holding on any occasion.

Round 14.—There were no further signs of the improvement Britt had shown in the previous round. Again he had the bad taste to contradict the referee when told not to clasp Summers's arm with his right hand. Britt was now a little tired, but Summers looked fit to fight for his life at the end of the round.

Round 15.—The American landed three sharp hooks on Summers at once and then began holding again. There was no power behind his blows and he never hit straight once. Summers's blows were always worth twice those of his antagonist, but he seemed to hang back a little.

Round 16.—More holding as a beginning and an exchange of swings. Britt then had Summers on the ropes, and sent in two light lefts with no sting in them. A particularly fierce rally ensued, in which the Englishman showed to marked advantage. There were many cries of encouragement for Summers at the close of a round more interesting than many previous ones.

Round 17.—There was no question whatever but that the men meant business when they came together for the seventeenth time. After the usual holding on the part of Britt and a hard rally there were two or three fierce bouts of long-range boxing with alternating luck. The round ended with a terrific onslaught by the Englishman, who took a most decided lead. Britt looked groggy.

Round 18.—The Englishman came up fresh and Britt a little less so. Then there was some of the fastest work on Summers's part that had yet been seen. Britt was plucky in taking punishment, of which he had a full share, but Summers was all over him and led easily.

Round 19.—Light and anxious work began the round, and then Summers began "mixing it" for a brief space. Britt had a lot of fight left in him, but the Englishman was careful and never let him have a chance.

Round 20 and Last.—Britt started by landing a light swing to the body. Then followed some rapid exchanges, Britt held as usual to avoid as much punishment as possible. It was a very disappointing fight, for Summers is the cleanest of clean boxers. It is a pity that the same cannot be said of the American, whose clinching was intolerably persistent.

HOCKEY.

Oxford vs. Cambridge.—Previous form pointed to an even game in the twentieth inter-'Varsity hockey match at Beckenham and there was little to choose between the sides before half-time. At this point Cambridge had gained a lead of three goals to two, but they proved unable to hold their opponents in the second half, and in the end were well beaten by six goals to three.

The Cambridge defence—except that G. M. Bottome at left back was excellent—always seemed uncertain, but in the first half their forwards did so much splendid work as to make a close game probable.

After the change of ends the Oxford front line improved in every way, and their backs always held the Light Blue forwards. In fact, Cambridge were only really dangerous about four times in the second half.

Despite their persistent attack, however, Oxford could not equalise until a quarter of an hour from the end, and then they had matters so much their own way as to put on three more goals.

E. Clover, the Oxford left back, was in brilliant form throughout, and the whole half-back line—J. Y. Robinson, M. A. Mathew, and K. Raynor—showed to excellent advantage. Although quite unable to get going in the second half, the Cambridge forwards showed undoubted ability, their quick and effective passing being one of the features of the first half.

Mirfield, Leese, and Ponton each scored twice for Oxford, and Stinson (two) and Hamilton got through for Cambridge. Cambridge had won the three previous games, and in the whole twenty they have gained nine victories to eight by Oxford, three matches having been drawn.

COURSING.

THE WATERLOO CUP.

The somewhat open state in which the Cup was left on Thursday had the effect of drawing a much larger crowd of spectators than is generally seen when the final stages of the great event are fought out.

Some really fine trials were seen, the only drawback being that owing to the touch of very sharp frost during the night the commencement of the proceedings had to be delayed for two hours and thus the early finish which is generally associated with the third day was made impossible.

The conditions under which the semi-finals were started on strongly resembled those of last year, for in both cases the issue seemed to be confined to two, with the others looked upon as almost hopeless outsiders, but the results were quite different, for whereas last year the despised ones had all the best of the finish, on this occasion form worked out correctly, and the two fancied ones were left to fight out the finish.

Dendraspis and Such a Sell were left to fight out the final, which ended in a victory for the elder of the two antagonists. Dendraspis certainly deserved his triumph, for he scarcely made a mistake throughout his six courses. One thing was generally admitted, viz., that on the day the two best greyhounds saw the end of the stake, and no truer compliment can be paid than this to the legitimacy of the trials

Waterloo Cup (with value £100 added by the Earl of Sefton), for 64 subscribers at £25 each; the winner to receive £200, two dogs £50 each, four dogs £30 each, eight dogs £20 each, sixteen dogs £10 each.

Fifth Round.

Such a Sell beat Writ. Betting: 3 to 4 on Such a Sell. The favourite, as usual, was some time before he drew clear, but coming away at the finish he reached his hare three lengths in advance, and swinging round beautifully on the line, ran up a nice little sequence before losing his place. Writ had only scored once before the favourite was there again, and sustaining his fire to the finish of a course of more than average length, he allowed Writ nothing more but the death.

Dendraspis beat Second Barrel. Betting: 7 to 2 on Dendraspis. Dendraspis drew out three lengths, and scored the next three or four before Second Barrel obtained possession, and the latter was for a time so busy that the course began to assume an open character, but the favourite resumed at the first opportunity, and after three or four smart points he knocked the hare off her legs for his opponent to kill.

Final.

Mr. J. E. Dennis' r d Dendraspis, by Wartnaby—Gleneva beat Mr. G. Mayall's nom (Mr. E H. Sikes') r f d Such a Sell, by Father Flint—Fan o' the Forest.

Betting: 6 to 5 on Dendraspis. Such a Sell getting best from slips, Dendraspis was at one part of the run-up nearly clear, but the young one soon began to catch him, and had just got on terms when the hare bent to Dendraspis, who was thus enabled to gain the turn. Going round with his hare, he used it three times before losing his place. The puppy then began to mix it, and took more than his share of the exchanges which followed, but when Dendraspis drew out for the last two and the kill he was a decided winner.

Winner's Performances.

Dendraspis, the winner of the Waterloo Cup, is a third season red dog by Wartnaby—Gleneva, the property of that enthusiastic patron of coursing, Mr. J. E. Dennis. This is a good all-round greyhound, and in the Waterloo Cup last year he raised three flags before being beaten by the eventual winner, Hallow Eve, after leading a length. This season he shared the Clipton Cup with Betterment and White Rubicon. Prior to his victory yesterday the dog had won 24 out of 30 courses, and on the night of the draw no more than 8 to 1 was obtainable about his chance to win the Cup outright.

Runner-up's Performances.

Such a Sell, the runner-up of the Waterloo Cup, is a March puppy by Father Flint—Fan o' the Forest. He belongs to Mr. E. H. Sikes, but ran in the nomination of Mr. G. Mayall. He did not display much promise at Ridgway, but at Benacre he showed considerable fire when reaching the final of the Puppy Stakes, defeating some smart greyhounds. It was not thought, however, the Puppy would be up to Waterloo form, and on the night of the draw, 1,000 to 10 was offered against his chance.

BILLIARDS.

M. Inman vs. T. Reece.—These old and keen rivals contested a match of 8,000 up on level terms for stake-money amounting to £200 at the Leicester-Square Hall during the week, and from the commencement a great struggle had been witnessed, first one then the other being in front, but never by many, and when play began on Saturday only one point divided them, Reece being in front. During the day the "Twickenham Terrier" did best, and he eventually won, amidst tremendous enthusiasm, by 282 points. The most important compilations were 94, 92, 73, 95, 125, 80, 94, 93, 112, and 100 (unfinished) by Inman, and 162 (full), 81, 120, 71, 50, 54, 65, and 171 by Reece, Final scores:—

Inman	8,000
Reece	7,718

E. Diggle vs. C. Harverson.—The seventeenth heat in Messrs. Burroughes and Watts' tournament, between Diggle (receives 1,000) and Harverson (receives 2,000), ended at the Soho square saloon last night in a win for Harverson by 546 points. By this victory the South African is in the running with both Stevenson and Inman for premier honours, each having only lost one game. The heat between Harverson and Inman will be eagerly awaited, for the winner will tie with Stevenson, should the latter be beaten by Aiken for first prize. Yesterday Harverson made breaks of 104, 62, 102, 234, 93, 70, 55, and 82 unfinished, while Diggle was credited with 73, 106, 159, 84, 75, 78, 143, and 123. Full scores:

Harverson	9,000
Diggle	8,454

GOLF.

Cambridge University vs. Sunningdale.—No better golfing conditions could be imagined than those which prevailed during the match between Cambridge University and Sunningdale, at Sunningdale on Saturday last. Sunningdale won the match by 7 games to 3. Details:—

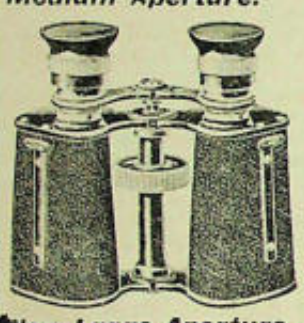
WINCHESTER

HIGH POWER BIG GAME RIFLES.



When you want to drive a ten-penny nail you don't use a tack hammer. For the same reason when you set off to hunt big game generally shot at fairly long range don't take a medium or low power rifle just because you happen to have one, but carry a long, strong shooting rifle—one that hits a smashing, knock-down blow. Such rifles as the Winchester Model 1886 .33 caliber; the Model 1895 .30 Army, .303 British, .35 and .405 calibers; and the Model 1907 .351 caliber, using High Power Smokeless Powder Cartridges with metal patched soft pointed bullets. The bullets used in these cartridges have a good-sized cross section which gives them great killing power at the distances most big game is shot. The accuracy of these rifles and cartridges has been thoroughly established and if you sight right the game is yours.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

BOMBAY residents have been warned to make arrangements to be at the Meet in good time as, owing to the sun making its appearance at an earlier hour now there is very little time to spare. On the bye day the Meet was at a favourite spot, Sahar Hill, and on arrival hounds were at once taken round to the covert on the north side where they immediately gave tongue. The bit of melon ground that so often has to be traversed making its appearance, we were glad of the cart track which many hoofs during the season have firmed and flattened. Making towards the barracks, our quarry took in the enclosure at the Grange bungalow before crossing Andheri Road, cutting through the Mango Tope there and setting a line over a good bit of country towards Marole Hill. Instead of climbing it, he led us round past the Church, over Tulsi water main and viâ Jack Symons Hill to a ford across the Backwater. Making for the main road, something made him change his mind and he ran along it in Kurla direction. Suddenly hounds threw up their heads and the reason was found to be that the jack had found a refuge in a drain which runs under the road. Bamboo sticks, a bonfire with volumes of smoke and any device thought of failed to dislodge the varmint so that hounds being drawn off, a bloodless run has to be recorded after a good gallop.

Again a cool morning on Tuesday, for the extra hunt, and a good number out to participate in another invigorating gallop. Meeting at Chuckla Hill, a move was made through the village and hounds put in near Bomanwadi Valley. As previously, we were led towards the barracks, across the Tulsi main and through the stony nullah frequently met with. The other side of this lies the old trap, the walled-in enclosure, and we know it well enough now to go round as the quarry sets his mask for the Backwater. Before reaching it, however, he turns across Andheri Road and passes Marole Church and the hill on his way to the Mango Tope. Here he dodges hounds for some time before again being driven into Marole Valley and a good run is enjoyed along the range of hills. Eventually he took one of them and after a circular run, ran to earth near the famous caves after a run of over half an hour without a bad bit of ground to negotiate.

Considering the lateness of the season and the earliness of the Meet at the kennels on Thursday, there was a very good attendance, including half a dozen of the fair sex. As it happened, it was some time before light was sufficient and this occasioned a wait just outside the wood bordering the old Chuckla Brickfield. When hounds were eventually put to it, they did not keep us long, going over rice fields to Sahar Hill, up it and across Bomanwadi Valley to the north, near Sahar Church, however, hounds were at a loss We viewed the quarry shirking along a cactus hedge straight back and hounds were soon on the line again taking us back to, and up, Sahar Hill. In the Chuckla melon ground there was a slight check before we continued down the hill at the same spot as before and fortunately away from the railway. Down and up the familiar stony nullah, we carried on over good going to the Backwater. Successfully negotiating the steep banks, we crossed and went round the wall enclosure in good time to see the pack cross the Karla-Nehar Road. Entering Powai Valley, the quarry made for Hog's Back Hill, over it and into Horse Shoe Valley. Beginning to feel the pace and length of the run, the jack turned towards one of the steep hills bordering the valley and was killed half way up it. Everyone was glad to see the Master present the brush to Mrs. Lovett Cameron after a considerable absence from the hunt owing to her mount coming down over a blind hole.

SUBALTERNS' TOURNAMENT.

SEMI-FINALS.

ROYAL DRAGOONS vs. 12TH LANCERS A TEAM.—This was the first game in the semi-finals, played on the 10th inst. in a high wind and in clouds of dust. The Lancers won by 9 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The Lancers were the first to attack, but the shot went wide, and two penalty shots against the Dragoons were also unproductive. Play continued in the Royals' territory, and Wood at length opened the scoring.

Second Chukker.—The Lancers pressed throughout this period. Badger scored twice and Leatham and Wood also registered goals. Score: Lancers, 5 goals.

Third Chukker.—Offside against the Lancers brought the ball to the vicinity of their flags for a spell, but they got away at length and Badger hit another goal. Score: Lancers, 6 goals.

Fourth Chukker.—The Lancers continued the attack and Leatham and Badger contributed further goals. A good run by Irwin was spoiled by the wind blowing the ball out of direction. Score: Lancers, 8 goals.

Fifth Chukker.—Up and down play, a scrimmage in front of the Lancers' goal ending in Chapman putting through. Score: Lancers, 8 goals; Dragoons, 1 goal.

Sixth Chukker.—The Royals attacked, but the ball was brought back to their own territory and another goal scored for the Lancers. Up and down play closed the chukker. Final score: 12th Lancers, 9 goals; Royal Dragoons, 1 goal. Teams:—

Umpires:—Captains Barrett and Rasbotham.

KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS vs. 10TH ROYAL HUSSARS.—Played on the 10th instant. The wind and dust interfered with the game, but it was an exciting struggle, the Dragoon Guards winning by 3 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—Level play: both goals were visited, but all shots went wide. No score.

Second Chukker.—The Hussars attacked, but Hawkins cleared, and rushing down drew first blood. The Hussars pressed on resuming, but Palmes' shot went wide. Score: King's Dragoon Guards, 1 goal.

Third Chukker.—Three shots by the Hussars were unsuccessful, then the Dragoon Guards attacked but could not score.

Fourth Chukker.—The Hussars were determined to get on terms, and after two abortive attempts they rushed down and Fielden equalised. Score: 1 goal all.

Fifth Chukker.—Up and down play. No score.

Sixth Chukker.—The Dragoon Guards got away and Weinholt scored. Hawkins added a third point, and then the Hussars attacked and registered a goal. They continued to press, but time arrived before they could score again. Final Score: King's Dragoon Guards, 3 goals; 10th Hussars, 1 goal. Teams:—

FINAL.

12TH ROYAL LANCERS vs. KING'S DRAGOON GUARDS.—The final game was played on the 12th instant before a big crowd, the weather conditions being better than during the earlier games. The King's Dragoon Guards were "at home" and their band was in attendance. It was a splendid game, well contested throughout. The Lancers were at the top of their form and showed excellent combination Wood at back and Badger giving a fine exhibition. The 12th eventually won by 6 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The Lancers were on the offensive, but several shots went wide and the Dragoons at length cleared and ran the ball down. No score.

Second Chukker.—Badger got away and scored. Offside against the Lancers gave the Dragoons a penalty hit, of which nothing came. The Lancers returned to the attack and Badger scored from a mêlée in front of goal. A run by the Dragoons was unsuccessful. Score: Lancers, 2 goals.

Third Chukker.—The Lancers pressed but Cheape defended his flags in great style, and play was transferred to midfield. No score.

Fourth Chukker.—All the Lancers' efforts to score were abortive, and Weinholt at length got a good run to the 12th's goal, Wood saving. The ball was kept in the Lancers' territory, but the Dragoons were prevented from scoring, and Bryant getting away towards the close scored another goal. Score: Lancers, 3 goals.

Fifth Chukker.—Play was for the most part in the Dragoons' ground and the Lancers scored twice through Wood and Leatham. Score: Lancers, 5 goals.

Sixth Chukker.—Level play till the Lancers got away and Bryant notched a goal. On changing ends, Hawkins got away and Weinholt scored for the Dragoons, who pressed for the rest of the period but did not add to their score. Final score: 12th Lancers, 6 goals; King's Dragoon Guards, 1 goal. Teams as before.

Umpires:—Major D. Campbell and Captain Barrett.

ROYAL CONNAUGHT B.C.

ANNUAL REGATTA.

THE annual regatta occupied three days, the 9th, 11th and 13th instant, and was most successful throughout. The arrangements were perfect, the racing excellent and the fixture was well attended on each day, Poona and Kirkee society gathering in strength. Colonel Fowler, D. S. O., was judge, and Messrs. Fergusson and Walker starters. The Honorary Secretary, Captain Paris, R. E., is to be specially congratulated on the success attending his efforts. Saturday's proceedings were enlivened by the Band of the 114th Mahrattas kindly lent by Colonel Mosse and officers and at night there was the usual dinner and dance at Rosherville. The following are the results:—

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

A. DIVISION.

DALHOUSIE vs. CALCUTTA.—These teams met on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday. The home team attacked at the start and forced three corners none of which were improved upon. A couple of unproductive runs by the visitors followed: then Dalhousie again pressed but could not get through. At length Calcutta got away and Simson scored. Continuing the attack Calcutta registered three more goals through Beddy. On changing ends play was very level and while the home team's endeavours were unsuccessful Calcutta put on another goal and thus won by 5 goals to nil.

CALEDONIA vs. MOHAN BAGAN.—Played on the Caledonia ground, the home team winning by a goal to nil. The visitors netted the ball twice but the points were disallowed.

Y.M.C.A. vs. CUSTOMS.—This match on the Y.M.C.A. ground on Saturday ended in a win for the Customs by 3 goals to 1 after a good game. The visitors scored once in the initial half through Fischer. Vanspall equalised on changing ends but McCready and Smith scored a goal each for the Customs and they won as stated.

RANGERS vs. E.I.R.—Played on the Rangers ground on Saturday the Railway team being defeated by 4 goals to nil. Cody and Skempton scored in the first half and Skempton netted another goal on changing ends. The other goal was scored from a penalty bully.

ST. XAVIER'S vs. MEDICALS.—These teams met on the Rangers' ground on Monday when the Medicals won by 3 goals to nil. Beveridge (2) and Boileau were credited with the scoring.

B.-N.R. vs. ROVERS.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Monday, the Railway team winning by 2 goals to nil. Ball and Carroll were responsible for the scoring—a goal in each half.

CALCUTTA vs. SIBPUR.—Calcutta met with their first defeat this season at the hands of the Sibpur College on Monday. Calcutta drew first blood, Simson scoring from a corner hit. The remainder of the play in the initial half was very even and there was no further scoring. On crossing over Haupt equalised and shortly after Durrell shot a second goal. All the efforts of the red shirts were unavailing and they were beaten by 2 goals to 1.

DALHOUSIE vs. CALEDONIA.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Tuesday, ending in a draw—2 all. Rogers and Haselbrooks scored for the Caledonia and Blacquiere both goals for the home team.

Lawn Tennis.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA TOURNAMENT.

THE MARRYAT CUP.

FIRST and most important of the events in connection with the Bombay Gymkhana Lawn Tennis Tournament, the Marryat Cup, came to a conclusion on Wednesday. There were sixteen entrants, byes thus not being required, and all round some very good form was exhibited, though Reid and Lucas were always fairly safe for the final, the closest being when Bean won his first game with the latter, but lost the next two easily.

Quite a big crowd turned out to watch the final between the old rivals, and some of the best tennis we have seen was played with plenty of long rallies and, very evenly matched, the pair kept their audience continually interested and excited. In the first set the score stood four all, and a long game gave Lucas the advantage till Reid made it five all. Eventually Lucas won, and followed up by securing the next mainly through a strong and accurate service. Captain Lucas thus wins the Championship of 1909. The table is as under :—

Yachting.

BOMBAY YACHT CLUB REGATTA.

THE presence of H. M. S. Hyacinth and Perseus and R. I. M. S. Hardinge and Northbrook in the Harbour has done not a little to increase the interest in yachting in Bombay at this most important time. A special effort is asked for at the time of the annual Regatta and entries prove more than satisfactory.

Four events were down for decision on the first day, and only Sapphire and Eileen started for the third Challenge Cup, Sapphire being to windward and covering her, Eileen could not get far ahead on the run to S. Karanja. Thence, however, Eileen increased her lead and eventually managed to make up her time.

There were eight in "B" Class Handicap and all were over within half a minute. Rounding Mark Buoy, Melody led Turquoise and the former headed Pixie by five minutes at Sunk Rock. Well as Pixie sailed, she could not catch the leader but saved her allowance and won from Mannikin.

All nine entrants started in "C" Class and Lapwing was first away in a good start. Curlew was one of those which headed straight for Mark Buoy not allowing for tide and finding it pay, rounded first. Thence to Sunk Rock, Tomtit and Lapwing scored by keeping shorewards and led, but Tomtit allowing too much the latter led to S. Karanja after rounding, Tomtit again led and Maud joined them for the run home in which Lapwing beat Tomtit in a pretty finish. Maud won on time from Sitara and Lapwing; a very close thing.

The Ships' Boat Handicap had fourteen, and all crossed in a bunch and round N. Karanja the Hardinge's third cutter led well, followed by their first. Reaching S. Karanja their second had made up and passed all, but the Hyacinth Pinnace 2, but eventually did so. The Hardinge thus continue their series of successes.

Unfortunately there was very little breeze on the second day, and the Tomtit Class were unable to finish within time, being becalmed.

First was the Ships' Boats for which again fourteen entered, but thirteen went. First over was the Hardinge's cutter No. 2 in a straggly start. At N. Karanja their No. 1 led, but was becalmed, and the former came in first and thus won again from the Hyacinth cutter.

"A" Class had four and Sapphire was first over from Melody, Turquoise and Eileen close together. Eileen making straight for S. Karanja rounded a head from Sapphire and kept there. Beating back to Sunk Rock, Melody passed Sapphire, to be repassed on the run in. Eileen made up her time on Melody.

Four went for "B" Class and Erin was first away, but Pixie passing her won very easily, twelve minutes in front and well within her handicap.

Ladies' Day, the third, was favoured by a good, fresh breeze and quite a sea on the far side of the Harbour, all of which meant careful sailing.

Out of a total fleet of nine, eight started in "C" Class, all getting away well with Sitara leading Lapwing. On the reach to N. Karanja Lapwing went ahead and Clutha came up second and Jean and Tomtit closing. Rounding the buoy Lapwing sailed well away, Coralie coming about cleverly making up way, Lapwing coming about nicely judged got the schooner in ample time to save her handicap. Tomtit just beat Maud on the line, but on time Sitara and Clutha beat them.

Three went in "A" Class, Sapphire first over to windward of Eileen and Turquoise; Eileen, being smothered by the first, nevertheless got to Mark Buoy first with topsails up on all. Eileen looked the winner, but, overstanding, lost her chance and Sapphire won with Turquoise saving her time on Eileen.

There were four in "B" Class and Mannikin soon gave way to Pixie, all being close. At N. Karanja, with a strong breeze, Erin was second. Standing on longest, Pixie fetched the schooner first, but Erin and Mannikin saved their time on her in a heavy head sea.

Five from the Hardinge and four of the Flag Ship started in the Ships' Boat. The Hardinge's No. 2 led over from the Hyacinth's pinnaces. Round the Mark Buoy to the East, the line home was a difficult one, a fact which the Hardinge's No. 3 realised when well in front. The Hyacinth's second Pinnace came along finely, but carried on too far and the other caught the gun. Third was the Hyacinth's first Pinnace, and this and the other classes sailed in a heavy wind and sea do our yatchwomen the greatest credit, twenty-four of them in all taking the helm in various events.

On Thursday, the fourth day, there was not such a strong breeze, but one which was quite sufficient to wet jibs.

For the Thirty Footers there were only two Sapphire crossing to windward three seconds in front of Melody. On the reach to Sunk Rock she increased this to 45 and at N. Karanja was four and a half minutes to the good, 6mins. 20secs. ahead the first round, she increased her lead to S. Karanja on to Sunk Rock with a free reach home. Eventually she made up her time with 12mins. 20secs. to spare.

Three of the Pixie class started, Trixie getting the best of the start, Erin and Pixie having to luff. To South Karanja spinnakers were out, and Trixie being smarter got a nice lead. Returning to the Committee Vessel, however, she fell back last and Pixie led. Bearing away for N. Karanja, Pixie held her advantage and won comfortably.

Eight of the little Tomtits went out for a pretty race. Lapwing, Coralie, Clutha, Maud, Sitara and Tomtit in a bunch. Curlew, Clutha and Sitara took a more direct course down the Harbour and Sitara led at S. Karanja. Heading back, Tomtit made up and led. Lapwing round and away for N. Karanja. On returning, Tomtit still led well and caught the gun, Lapwing being interfered with by a launch, as also was Maud. Tomtit won the class prize and Sitara the handicap.

In the mixed class handicap only three started, Eileen closely followed by Turquoise once the former had got her spinnaker out. Jean was never in it, the race lying between the others. Never allowing Eileen to get far away, Turquoise succeeded in saving her time from the bigger boat.

The two Hyacinth pinnaces were the only two to complete the course for the Lord Lamington Challenge Cup, their cutter and the two of the Perseus with their gig giving up. Eventually the No. 2 won by 7 minutes.

Of a very mixed programme on Friday, the fifth day, the majority were rowing and, with a party composed of both sexes on the Committee Vessel applauding the various winners, there was plenty of life about it.

We started with a "C" Class handicap, yachts sailed by their own tindals, the course being round Tucker Beacon and North Karanja. This Sitara won from Tomtit and Maud.

The rowing course was to Middle Ground Buoy and back. First was 28 and 30 foot cutters, native crews, two starting from the Hardinge and one from the Northbrook. First away and first home was the Hardinge's second cutter. There was a great bumping match between the others rounding the stern of the Spine, and how they got through the European boats as they started is a miracle. The Northbrooke's eventually finished second but, being a 30 footer, was given as dead-heat; each getting a prize.

In the European crew race two went from the Hyacinth and one from the Proserpine. The Hyacinth's first got best through the tangle with the native crews and won easily from their second.

This crew won their second race in the All-Comers' event, coming in again on their own from their second cutter and the Perseus's.

The Jolly Boat Race had seven entrants and with jibs up they made good headway, Asprey eventually winning. Nos. 13,518 and 9550 went clear away from five others in the Tony rowing race helping themselves to good starts by leverage on the schooner or whatever boat lay handy.

An amusing item was the "Kit" Race, the men using plates for oars. In this No. 2, of the Hyacinth beat No. 1.

The Dummy Race was for single-handed amateurs in Tomtits. They had to row a dinghy to the yachts, pick up a dummy and sail a given course. Clutha eventually won from Tomtit very close ahead of Lapwing and Maud.

A man, who had been convicted for stealing was brought before a certain Judge, well known for his tender-heartedness.

"Have you ever been sentenced to imprisonment?" asked the Judge.

"No; never," said the prisoner, bursting into tears.

"Well, well; don't cry, my man," said his Honour, consolingly; "you're going to be now."

The Naturalist.

A SHORT COLLECTING TRIP ON THE SINGALILA RANGE AND IN PART OF SIKKIM.

5th August.—It rained pretty heavily during the night and was drizzling when we got up. After chota hazri we worked hard at the birds and got them done by about 7 A.M. We started off for Pemiongchi about 8, the weather having cleared up in the meantime. We crossed the torrent below the bungalow on a rough bridge. The jhora was broader than the Rhoto and was rushing along madly. After crossing it the path led upwards and was very stoney in places. It then descended a bit and a very fine waterfall was passed. Near the latter there was a huge rock and numbers of Hodgson's martins (Chelidon nepalensis) had nests on it. The nests were generally in some hollow or indentation in the face of the rock. The young had evidently flown and even had there been eggs we could not have got them without the aid of a ladder; one could not see into the nests from the top, as that part of the rock overhung the rest. We went about a mile or a mile and a half and then came to a huge landslip. It was passable for men but not for ponies, but they managed to cross lower down. We then went on a bit, but in turning a bend in the road we came across another landslip down which large boulders and smaller stones were rolling. My syce and one of the coolies tried to cross it, but just jumped aside in time to save themselves being crushed by a rock, which came rumbling down. After staying there till nearly 10 A.M. and not being able to get across as even the coolies could not make it passable, the rain that fell during the night having made the earth loose and giving, we gave it up as a bad job and reluctantly retraced our steps. We shot a couple of the martins and I made a sketch of the waterfall and rock with the martins' nests. While I was sketching the shikari hunted for birds but got none. I found a fine plant of the Sikkim lily, the plant stood nearly as high as my shoulder. I took out the bulb and made a sketch of the flower. All the bungalows we have been in contained a nest each of Hodgson's striated swallow, (Hirundo nepalensis). We saw very few birds. I noted the following: the spotted munia (Arcloncha punctulata), the rufous necked laughing thrush (Dyonastes ruficollis) the Himalayan, green finch (Hypacanthis spinoides), the jungle crow (Corvus macrorhynchus), the Himalayan treepie (Dendrocitta himalayensis) the bronzed drongo (Chaptia aenea) and a plumbeous redstart (Rhyacornis fuliginosus), the latter was on a boulder in the middle of the stream and if shot could not have been retrieved. In the evening a rufous chinned laughing thrush (Ianthocincla rufigularis) was shot. It started to rain at 7 in the evening: stupidly on returning to the bungalow I gave the sweeper and coolies an advance, so they and the bangalow chowkidar got drunk and were very boisterous.

6th August.—It rained during the night but early in the morning it stopped. At about 10 o'clock it began to rain heavily. Not feeling like going out in the downpour, I let the shikari go by himself to get me one or two more Hodgson's martins, which I wanted for friends; he brought in three ♀ and one ♀; the males had enlarged testes but I am sure they had finished breeding; he also got a plumbeous redstart (Rhyacornis fuliginosus) ♂ and a white throated fantail-fly catcher (Rhipidena albicollis) ♀; he also said he had seen a bird like a duck swimming in the jhora, it had a white belly. He didn't shoot it as it would have been carried away by the current. It was probably a goosander (Merganser castor) if it was at duck, or might have been a golden eye (Clangula glaucion, but this is unlikely.

It rained the rest of the day and I did not go out at all. A shopkeeper came up and said the owner of my servant's pony had spoilt his grog and wanted compensation for it. He brought some witnesses, two of whom were women, one wearing a necklace quite worth Rs. 60; but as they said they knew nothing about it, I gave the chap a flea in his ear to take away with him. The owner of the pony is a dirzi but carries a pack the same as any of the coolies.

7th August.—We were up before 3-30 A.M. as we had a long day's march before us through Chua Bhanjan to Phalut. Chua Bhanjan is eleven miles from Dentom and Phalut is another six and a half further on. It was a great climb the greater part of the way, as may have been by the various elevations, Dentom being 4,500 ft, Chua Bhanjan 10,320 ft, Singalila 12,160 ft. and Phalut 11,811 ft. I had chota hazri about 4-30 and got off at 5. The road led down a little way from the bungalow and then two jhoras had to be crossed. The first one was crossed easily enough, but the second one was broader and deep. I got across by one of those flimsy bridges, three bamboos tied together and a handrail, but the ponies had to be got over by some other means. I sent a man back to the bungalow and the chowkidar brought a long rope, made of yak hair, which I bought for Re. 1-8, as the overseer told me we would have to cross another jhora before we got to Chua Bhanjan and the rope might be of use there. We got the ponies across after a good deal of gentle persuasion, but had to take them higher up the steam to do so. The path ran for a short distance along the bank of the Kulhait jhora and here we saw several little forktails (Microcichla scouleri) but couldn't get a shot as they would keep to the middle of the stream. We however bagged a brown dipper (Cinclus asiaticus)♀ which momentarily came within reach of the bank. After leaving the river the road led up and a terribly stiff climb began. After a bit the road led down again and a nice piece of jungle was gone through and the going was also very level. In this patch of forest we got a bartailed cuckoo dove (Macropygia tusalia)♂ and a blackheaded sibia (Liuptila Capistrata). We also got a crested bunting (Melophus melanitterus) ♂ near some swampy ground; near the jungle a pair of plumbeous redstarts (Rhyacornis fuliginosus) were got in a stream, only one was seen and fired at, but on going to the spot two were found dead, the other having been concealed from view but within range of the shot. Then began another very stiff climb to Chua Bhanjan. On the way we shot a Darjeeling pied woodpecker (Dendrocopus darjilensis)♂. About a mile from Chua Bhanjan was a large landslip which blocked the road. Huge trees had been uprooted and carried down and tons and tons of loose, gritty earth, also besides these there were rocks and boulders. We reached here about 12-30 P.M. I sent the shikari to ferret out some means of circumventing this obstacle, and while he was busy doing so I ate my sandwiches. He cut a sort of a path in the jungle, but there it was nearly as bad as on the slip and the ponies had to go over boulders and sunk up to their hocks in the loose earth. I believe this is the spot where the overseer said we would have to swim our ponies as the slip seemed to have divided the jhora in two, making two narrow and shallow streams on each side of it. We then had to climb again to Chua Bhanjan, where we arrived at 2-5 P.M., only the stonework and the window frames of the bungalow were there and the latter were being whittled away. After leaving Dentom and getting up to a fair height the jungle changed to small bamboo with a little rhododendron here and there. The road was terribly bad, very rough and rocky, and in places frightfully steep. I walked up some of the worst places but was too fagged to do so in every case and had to ride. I went up some places on horseback, which I would never have done had I been able to scramble up them on foot. In places it seemed impossible for the pony to keep his foothold as he had nothing but rock to climb on and it was wonderful how he managed to do so, though of course he floundered and stumbled a good deal. I had never been over such a road in my life and hope never to have to do so again, or rather should I ever be tempted to do the trip once more I will go round the other way, first to Jorpokhri and over the Singalila range, instead of starting at Chakung, as I did, and then I would go down this road instead of having to go up it. I never felt so done up in my life as I did when I arrived at Chua Bhanjan and only longed that the bungalow had been habitable, that we could remain here instead of having to do another six and a half miles. Another reason why I wished we could have stayed here was that the blood pheasant (Ithagenes cruentus) was to be had in this neighbourhood, as Mr. Masson told me he had shot them on the ridge here. After leaving Chua Bhanjan the road led up again and went up and up till I thought we were never going to get to the top of the ridge. At last, however, we got to Singalila which has an elevation of 12,160ft. The road was execrably bad and we went up it at a very very slow pace, as it was all my Bhutea pony could do to manage it; my boy unfortunately had to walk the whole way from Chua Bhanjan here as his little tat couldn't do it with him on its back, in fact it was all it could do to manage it for itself. After leaving here some huge rocks, many feet high, were passed, these being about three miles from Phalut. I found a nest of the golden bush robin (Tarsiger Chrysaeus) which held two tiny little young ones and one addled egg; the latter I took and rolled up in my handkerchief, put it in my pocket and of course it got smashed. A good many birds were seen about the rocks but not close enough to identify. It had poured ever since we left Chua Bhanjan and I felt like a drowned rat. The waterproof I had on was useless against the heavy rain and I simply got soaked to the skin and besides this there was a cold piercing wind blowing over the ridge, which chilled one through and through. My only thought was to reach Phalut and I doubt whether the rarest nest would have made me diverge from the straight road. After passing the rocks the road led down for a good distance and I got off my pony and walked it and was thus able to keep the circulation going. Here the land was quite bare of trees and a good number of cattle which appeared to be hybrids between yaks and domestic cattle were seen. I reached Phalut bungalow at 6-45 P.M. dead tired and almost freezing. I got the Chowkidar to make up a fire and then stripped and wrapped myself in one of the bungalow purdahs till my clothes dried. My shirt dried quickly, but my tweed breeches took three hours in front of a blazing fire before they could be put on again. My servant, the shikari and syce got in about 7-30, but I didn't see them as they cleared off to the cookroom to get warm and dry. I waited till 10 P.M. to see if the coolies would turn up as I felt very hungry, the only food I had all day being two poached eggs, a slice of bread and marmalade before starting and four sandwiches of bread and marmalade on the way. The shikari shot a chestnut headed short wing (Oligura castaneicoronata) near Chua Bhanjan, but it was too much knocked about to be of any use. On the way to Chua Bhanjan I got three lillies. They had finished flowering, but my shikari, who seems to know more about plants than birds, said they had fine red flowers. I had them tied on to my saddle in front of me, along with my waterproof, but when I put the latter on at Chua Bhanjan they were transferred to my servant's pony and one got lost. I never saw anybody climb like my shikari. He went the whole eleven miles from Dentom to Chua Bhanjan without a rest and was in front of me the whole time, keeping at a good steady pace. Seeing the coolies didn't turn up I went to bed and having no bedding I rolled myself in the bungalow purdahs and was soon asleep.

The Story Teller.

THE GHOUL'S STRATAGEM.

Mrs. Kingscote, when not too occupied in plotting iniquities on her own account, was wont to devise matrimonial schemes of a comparatively innocent nature on behalf of her daughter. I went one afternoon to call on the Jeffcoats, and found Mrs. Kingscote sitting there, almost buried in a sofa.

The "Ghoul" as we had somehow got to call her, was in her usual costume of unrelieved black, and her strange blue eyes glimmered at me through the dark fog of a thick veil. In spite of well cut features and undeniable good looks, there was something uncanny and weird in her appearance. Indeed had she lived a couple of hundred years ago, instead of in these enlightened days, it is highly probably she would have been burnt as a witch.

"Ah Mr. Steele!" cried the ghoul with animation as I sat down opposite to her "you are the very man I have longed to see! Have you seen my daughter Geraldine lately? No? Well, she was with me at the Francottes' At Home and Mrs. Francotte assured me that she had never seen a girl who combined such charm of manner with such beauty of face and figure." At pricked up my ears, the Ghoul was laying it on remarkably thick, for her daughter, though personable enough, with a good figure and clear brunette complexion, was yet unmistakeably nosey. In fact as a plain spoken lady put it. "Dear Geraldine has such a Semitic smile!" "Lord Manville" went on the Ghoul, after a pause, "is immensely taken with Geraldine."

"Is he," I enquired innocently. Now I knew for a certainty that Lord Manville was heiress hunting, and in any case not nearly well enough off, to dream of marrying an impecunious girl like Geraldine.

A few days later I heard that the Ghoul had in some strange way completely fascinated Mrs. Poppels, an extremely wealthy woman of plebean extraction, with an only daughter. Soon the Kingscotes and Popples were hand in glove, and seldom or never seen apart.

Later it transpired that Mrs. Poppels was about to give a very smart dance, and that, of course, the Ghoul would arrange and manage the whole affair.

Eventually the day of the much talked over entertainment arrived. Lord Manville, of course, went, so did I—when there, something struck me, which somehow had never done so before—that Geraldine Kingscote and Mary Popples were extremely alike. Moreover not content with being alike in face and figure, they had accentuated the similarity by wearing dresses of the same colour and style.

Manville danced a great deal with both girls, and the champagne, for which, like many young men, he had a decided liking, being both plentiful and good, he became more and more hilarious as the night wore on into early morning. Exactly what happened is probably only known to Geraldine and her Mamma: but it soon leaked out that on the following day there had been a painful scene between Mrs. Popples and the Ghoul, in which the former lady declared that Geraldine, the false and designing had taken Lord Manville away from Mary.

At length bit by bit the plot unravelled itself and the Ghoul's skilful snare became apparent.

Poor Mary Popples, though superficially resembling Geraldine, was when you came to look at her closely, decidedly better looking than that young lady, especially as regards the shape and size of her nose.

In character there was certainly no resemblance whatever between the two girls. Mary was simple, unselfish and rather shy: while Geraldine's disposition was far too deep for a mere man to dare hazard the futile effort of attempting to guage! Few of her own, and certainly none of the robust sex, have ever fathomed the young sphynx.

Can it be wondered at, that a young man who had drunk enough champagne to make everything very rosy and a little confused, should have become somewhat hazy as to which was Box and which was Cox? Thus he continued to Geraldine the pointed attentions he had commenced earlier in the evening paying to Mary!

Also can it be doubted which of the two girls was most likely to inflame and allure an hilarious youth late in the proceedings? Simple Mary whom Manvilles' ardent glances made feel frightened and shy, or Geraldine the past mistress of every feminine art and wile? As Manville confessed afterwards. "I don't know what there was about that young devil, but she clean carried me off my feet, and that night in Mrs. Popples' conservatory, I'd have given her any damned thing she asked for!"

The sequel to the scene between Mrs. Popple and the Ghoul, was that the latter lady had a private interview with Lord Manville.

The exact text of the negociations have naturally never been published, but there is little doubt that Mrs. Kingscote first got money out of Lord Manville, on condition he was let out of the entanglement with Geraldine; and subsequently money out of Mrs. Popples, for so engineering the arrangements with Lord Manville that that young nobleman immediately announced his engagement to Mary.

The Kingscote mother and daughter went abroad at once, and were seen shortly after in very flourishing circumstances at Trouville. Both were extremely smartly dressed and staying at the best Hotel.

A couple of months later Lord Manville married Mary Popples, and I have reason to know that the marriage has proved a very happy one for both.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.
For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.
Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

THE UNIVERSITY BOAT RACE.

THE Oxford and Cambridge crews are now completing active training for their annual boat race over the Thames Championship course which is to be decided on Saturday, 3rd April.

The names and weights of the crews are:—

OXFORD.

D. C. R. Stuart (Trinity Hall). stroke ...	11	2
C. D. Compston (Trinity Hall), cox ...	8	11

A comparison of the weights will show that the light blues are slightly the heavier crew.

Not for some years have speculation and discussion been so active at Cambridge on the subject of the composition of the light blues crew as on the present occasion. For the last three years the Cambridge boat has been stroked to victory in the inter 'Varsity Boat Race by Mr. D. C. R. Stuart, who is this year President of the C. U. B. C. The pluck and dash of his rowing have made him famous among Cambridge strokes, and he has always exercised an almost magnetic influence in stimulating the exertions of the men behind him. This year, however, the work of the crew was set for nearly two months by Mr. R. W. M. Arbuthnot, a freshman, from Eton, while Mr. Stuart occupied the bow thwart. The composition of full crew during most of practice on home waters being as follows:—

	st.	lb.
D. C. R. Stuart (Trinity Hall), bow	11	2
2. G. E. Fairbairn (Jesus)	11	12
3. G. L. Thompson (Trinity Hall)	12	6
4. H. E. Kitching (Trinity Hall)	12	10½
5. E. G. Williams (Third Trinity)	13	4
6. J. E. Rosher (First Trinity)	13	13
7. E. S. Hornidge (Trinity Hall) — ...	11	12
R. W. M. Arbuthnot (Third Trinity), stroke ...	10	4
C. D Compston (Trinity Hall), cox	8	10

Mr. Arbuthnot is a brilliant young oarsman who stroked Eton boat in the Grand at Henley, last summer, and confirmed the good opinion then earned as stroke of the winning Cambridge trial eight last year.

Despite all this, however, considerable difference of opinion prevailed as to the wisdom of this change in the strokes. Mr. Stuart's dash and experience of the Thames Championship course was held by some to be virtues which Mr. Arbuthnot lacked, and statements were even made that the arrangement had given rise to dissention in the 'Varsity Boat Club. Arguments in rowing circles and numerous letters to the English Press on the subject, had no influences whatever on the light blue coaches, who stood by their guns; and the make-up of the crew came to be regarded as permanent until just before the 'Cantabs concluded their work on the Cam.

Then, to the general surprise, but to the delight of many experienced rowing critics, the Cambridge President once more took up his old position at stroke, and Mr. Arbuthnot was left out of the boat altogether.

It appears that Mr. Stuart delayed to make the change and return to his usual place because such a step would apparently mean that he would be abandoned by his coaches and left without a Mentor for the remainder of the training. At last, however, the President placed his own knowledge in front of Messrs. Muttlebury and Escourt by altering the crew and taking the great risk placed on his shoulders by the University.

The eight as now constituted is one of the heaviest University crews ever seen, with Swanston rowing 2, and Fairbairn bow, there is weight, strength, and extreme watermanship in evidence at both ends of the boat. Stuart and Hornidge are both excellent scullers, and so, too, is Williams, the Secretary, at 5, together with Thompson at 3, Swanston at 2, and Fairbairn the Colquhoun winner at bow. An improvement was noticeable almost immediately the change was made, and it has continued. How the boat seems to run! There is no rush, no jerk, but simply a long powerful swinging stroke, rowed right through, and driven hard home, and the crew with heaps of time.

The confidence the President gave the crew became more marked as the training continued, and was only equalled by the lack of it instilled into the Oxonians by his presence at stroke thwart. Some members of the Oxford crew have been beaten once, twice, and even three times over the Putney to Mortlake course by Mr. Stuart, and this fact has not helped them at all.

The experience gained by Mr. Arbuthnot during his temporary, although lengthly, stay in the Cambridge boat will be a great benefit to Cambridge in future years, and also to the Third Trinity Club, whom, no doubt, he will assist greatly in the Lents and Mays; and there seems to be no doubt that with careful coaching he will make an excellent stroke.

Now all that remains to be said is that Cambridge, this year, is represented by about as powerful a combination as ever sat in a University boat, and given average luck, Mr. Stuart may break many records. Judging by the reports of the way the boat moves along there is no doubt that this year's Cambridge crew is one of the fastest ever seen.

"THOSE WHOM THE GODS LOVE DIE YOUNG."

The world in general, and England in particular, is distinctly the poorer for the death of Mr. J. W. Brooke, who was foully murdered during last November in the Sze-chuen province of north-western China. Although young in years, Brooke, who had the divine afflatus of the born explorer, had already done much good work both in Africa and Asia; and there is little doubt that had his life been spared he would eventually have made a great name for himself. But it was not to be, and his gallant spirit has been called away, leaving to stay-at-home mortals one more splendid example of the indomitable pluck and determination of the better type of England's sons, and adding another name to the roll of honoured explorers who, like Hayward, have lost their lives in the endeavour to wrest her hidden secrets from the treacherous heart of Central Asia. J. W. Brooke was a Yorkshireman, being the son of Mr. and Mrs. Brooke, of Phenay Lodge, near Huddersfield; and at an early age gave indications of his roving disposition by the earnestness and avidity with which he read and learnt all he could about travel and adventure in wild and distant lands.

His opportunity came to him at an unusually early age, and a comparatively short time after completing his education he was appointed as a member of the staff of the recent English expedition to Mount Ruwenzori. Here he did good work, but as it is our purpose to speak of his achievements in Asia rather than in Africa, we dismiss this portion of his career with this bold notice and pass on to subsequent events in his career.

At the close of the Ruwenzori expedition Brooke appears to have decided to give up, at least for a time, the idea of further exploration in the dark continent, and to devote his energies to Central Asia, where Tibet formed the chief object of his ambition. He was advised, we believe, by the veteran Himalayan explorer and surveyor, Colonel H. H. Godwin Austen, to endeavour to get into Hundes, with the object of collecting fossil mammalian remains from the horizontal Siwalik strata of that area. Application was accordingly made to the Indian Government for permission to enter Tibet; but this was, as usual, firmly and decidedly refused. And although the Chinese Government subsquently granted leave to the explorer to enter Tibet from any part of their own territory and to travel therein as freely as he pleased, for some reason or other Brooke never availed himself of this privilege; and, instead of Tibet, turned his attention and his steps towards Sze-chuen.

Here he did much good work, not only in exploring and surveying, but also in collecting natural history specimens, all of which he generously presented to the Natural History branch of the British Museum, where several of the skins have been set up and placed on exhibition in the public galleries. Perhaps the best idea of his achievements in the sporting line and his observations on the natural history of the country will be gleaned from the following extracts from a letter received from the late explorer, dated Chentu, Sze-chuen, 9th October 1908.

After referring to the claim of the American Consul in Chungking to have shot the Sze-chuen takin (Budorcas tibetanus), Mr. Brooke goes on to say that these animals are "most exceptionally difficult to find, as they live in dense bamboo and rhododendron jungle on precipitous hill-sides where it is nearly always pouring with rain. My friend Mr. Meares shot a female in the first week of May at Wen-chuan, after three weeks' hunting, but a hunter procured the big male of which the skin and skeleton were sent with those of the former to the British Museum. The males have a long red coat in winter, and a light grey one in summer, which is, of course, much thinner. These animals grow to an enormous size; I have seen tracks of a 6-inch square hoof, and, like the golden monkeys, they seem never to stop growing. They live at 8,000 and 10,000 feet from October to May, but in March, April and May the females come down to the valleys to feed and rear their young. The latter are fed from their mother's milk for only one fortnight after birth; and I have seen their little tracks going up the most precipitous places. I believe that takin must have some way of holding on to the branches of the rhododendrons with their horns. So steep and smooth are the places they get up. [This is a bit improbable.]

"They go about in herds of from five to fifty head, and the hunters report that they always follow a leader, who may even jump over a precipice, when the rest of the herd will continue the same course. The best time to shoot them seems to be in the winter, when the heavy snow compels them to come down to the valleys, but as the snow is soon melted by the warm wind from the plain, they are only to be found low down during the largest and heaviest snowfalls. They are always wandering during the winter, as if they were never contented with one grazing-ground, and they take a great deal of hunting if you do not find them in the valleys."

Such is our only authentic account of the ways of the takin in its native wilds.

As regards the members of the deer tribe to be found in Sze-chuen, the late explorer states that "there is a white cheedyer, like the whany-cheedyer (small red deer) but white. I do not think an albino—, these, however, are rare; also a roebuck, very rare; red deer (me-ludyer), difficult to get; and the large stag of the grass country (dar-ludyer)."

This last specie may be Thorold's deer (Cervus albirostris), as it may be inferred from the context that its colour is not red. As to the "large red deer," one cannot help wondering whether this can possibly be Pere Davids' deer (Elaphurus davidianus), the mi-lu of the Pekinese, in its wild state. By the "small red deer" may be meant Sclater's muntjac; while the "roebuck" possibly stands for the tufted deer (Elaphodus cephulophus), unless, indeed, it be the Manchurian roebuck.

Under the name of "mole-rat" Mr. Brooke refers to a large species of bamboo-rat (Rhizomys), of which several skins were received after his death at the museum. He also mentions a flying-squirrel, very common in the country, and reported by the natives to live on birds; when one of the members of the party attempted to capture a specimen, it was found to be capable of defending itself most vigorously.

As to the golden monkeys, the orange snub-nosed monkeys (Rhinopithecus roxellanæ) of naturalists, Mr. Brooke states that "they live at elevations of from 6,000 to 8,000 feet, and the males grow to enormous dimensions. I have seen a skeleton which measured from the crown of the head to the tip of the tail 6 feet 4 inches; this was in Chentu, and I regret that I did not buy it."

At the time of writing the communication from which we are quoting Mr. Brooke stated that he was in hopes of getting bear, and also the so-called parti-coloured bear, now more generally known as the great panda (Æluropus melanoleucus), but no skins of either have hitherto arrived.

Of other Carnivora, the explorer wrote as follows:—"There is a small leopard, called by the Chinese 'red spring leopard,' the common leopard, the snow-leopard north of Sungpan, and I have been told that tigers existed at Hanfew, the altitude of which is 8,000 feet. The list also includes a lynx of which I am sending a skin from Sungpan, the common red fox, a dark red fox with the nose and the inside of the ears white, and two kinds of marten-cats.

On arrival, the so-called lynx proved to be the rare Fontanier's cat or Asiatic ocelot, Felis tristis, of which the British Museum previously possessed only a single skin."

Finally, it is stated that "on the grass country which lies above the tree-line, that is to say, on the borders of Tibet, where the mountains rise from the sides of the wooded valleys, are found bharal sheep, although these may be different from those of Ladak. I believe that the Ovis ammon is found nowhere except in the typical grass country: that is to say, country where the creature can find its way down to valleys with more grass and less snow, and are with less precipitous mountain peaks, than the bharal country."

Almost the last words in the letter relate to a report that a Captain MacNeil had shot no less than seven takin.

The Zoological work thus energetically and enthusiastically commenced by Mr. Brokes must now, alas! be left for others to complete.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE first of the big Spring Handicaps, the Lincolnshire, brought out a field of twenty-three on Tuesday, Duke of Sparta a 20 to 1 chance finishing in front. Succour started at fives and Arranmore, who was at the top of the betting on Monday, went out at 15 to 2. The winner is a four-year-old by Eager—Simple Aveu He ran fifteen times last year, winning the Doveridge Handicap Plate, £563, 1 mile, at Derby, carrying 7st. 2lbs.: was second to Billy the Verger in the Great Cheshire Handicap at Chester; second to Hallaton in the Stewards Plate Handicap at Liverpool; and second to General Stossel in the Hurst November Handicap at Hurst Park, and was four times placed third.

MR. JOE THOMPSON, the well-known bookmaker, whose name was a synonym for honour and uprightness, died at Madeira early this month in his seventy-first year. He had been in indifferent health for some time. He had a striking personality which made him many friends, a direct manner of speech and a genial withal. Besides this he had a wide and varied knowledge of most sports and was a daring speculator. In his younger days he was a pretty good athlete. He was an Englishman but had been much in Australia, and during his long Turf career had won and lost many fortunes. He was noted for the pronounced views he held upon sport. He was greatly respected in England, and the majority of the big double events, in which many thousands of pounds were often at stake, were laid by him. He visited India some years and made a book at the Calcutta cold weather meetings, where his brother "Barney" is also remembered and where his brother-in-law, Mr. Harry Goldspink, is still to the fore. Joe Thompson's place in the Ring will not be easily filled.

IT will be remembered that at the first Calcutta Monsoon race meeting last year Rosette, who won the Stand Plate, was disqualified on an objection lodged by Mr. J. C. Galstaun and the race awarded to that owner's Flower Girl, who finished second. Rosette had run under the name of Parody at registered meetings in Australia and had been warned off at Warnambool. The last sheet calendar of the C. T. C. publishes the following notice in continuation of the case:—

"In connection with the Notice published in the Racing Calendar No. 11 of the 20th August 1908, it is hereby notified that the Stewards have considered the explanation offered by Mr. John Rowan, the owner of the pony Rosette, and decide that under Rule 153 Mr. John Rowan be warned off the Calcutta Course and other places where the Calcutta Rules are in force.

CALCUTTA TURF CLUB, 17th March 1909.

THE Calcutta Turf Club have withdrawn the license to ride granted to J. Taylor the jockey.

WE have to acknowledge receipt of a complimentary copy of Vol. XXVII of that indispensable turf guide The Australian Racing Calendar, embracing the period from 1st August 1908 to 31st January 1909. It can be obtained from Messrs. Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta.

THE 12th Royal Lancers propose holding a two days' open Gymkhana at Sialkot after the Rawalpindi Spring Meeting.

THE Fifteenth Annual Horse Show, held by the Tollygunge Club, has been fixed for the 31st December 1909.

WE regret to record the death at Benares on the 17th instant, of Captain G. A. Soltau, I.M.S.—the result of an accident at polo.

A TELEGRAM, dated 23rd March, states that the Oxford crew rowed the boat race course on that date in record time—18mins. 21secs. The previous best time for the Putney to Mortlake course is 18mins. 47secs. which has been twice accomplished—by Oxford in 1893 and by Cambridge in 1900.

THE 1st Battalion Durham Light Infantry held a Marathon race on the 18th instant, the course being from Ajmere to Nasirabad, a distance of twelve miles. There was a big entry, keen competition and good prizes were offered. Bandsman Nurse led all the way and completed the distance in 68 minutes—an excellent performance.

SOME dingo puppies are among the recent additions to the London Zoo, where they were born a few days ago. The Australian dingo is the only true dog still existing in a state of nature. Beyond doubt, this remarkable animal has inhabited the Continent from very remote times, for its remains have been discovered in a fossil state. Its ancestors were probably semi-domesticated animals, descended from some Asiatic species, and introduced by human agency. It is quite unlikely that the dingo was ever in a complete state of domestication, for puppies, reared with care and treated with every consideration, run away from their masters at the earliest opportunity. The dingo has all the characteristics of a wild animal, killing more than it can eat and lying in concealment during the day.

THE Executive Committee in Vienna, of which His Highness Prince zu Fürstenberg is the President, has, with the approval of the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador to the Court of St. James, appointed Sir Arthur Trendell, C.M.G., who acted as Secretary to the Royal British Commission for the Vienna International Exhibition of 1873,—— to be the Commissioner-General in Great Britain for the International Shooting and Field Sports Exhibition to be hed in Vienna in 1910.

A LONDON paper, noticing the accident in which Colonel Brooke and an angry rhino took a prominent part a while since, has dropped into poetry as thus:—

THE PEEVISH PACHYDERM.

E'en in the more or less delightful Duchy
Of Lancaster you will be at a loss
To hit upon an animal more touchy
Than is the Indian rhinoceros.

His intellect is past all civilising,
Perhaps because he is of hefty build:
He hates, although the fact may sound surprising,
To be snapshotted while he's being killed.

This natural history truth is somewhat curious
And very few will venture to explain
Why he should be objectionably furious
At being photo'd while he's being slain.

The oyster on his death-bed won't object to
The camera's portrayal of the blade;
The eel will philosophic'lly expect to
Be Daily-Mirror-ed while he's being flayed.

And, reader, you and I would smile seraphic
Did we perceive some enterprising friend
Produce his apparatus photographic
Contemporaneously with our end.

The fact I've mentioned, therefore, is quite striking,
And for the moment I am at a loss
To understand this singular disliking
Exhibited by the rhinoceros.

MR. C. B. FRY will play for Hampshire this summer. The old Reptonian has notified the Secretary of the Sussex County Cricket Club of his intentions. He will play for Hampshire under the residential qualification, having resided in that county for nearly ten years.

The work to which he hopes to devote the greater part of his life renders the step imperative. The work we refer to is connected with the training-ship Mercury, with which in future Mr. C. B. Fry will be closely identified.

AT a special General Meeting of the Indian Football Association, held at the Y.M.C.A. Hall on the 17th instant, it was unanimously decided to hand over the control of the Beighton Cup Hockey Tournament to the newly formed Bengal Hockey Association. In the event of the B.H.A. being defunct at any time, the Beighton Cup will revert to the I.F.A. The energetic Honorary Secretary of the I.F.A., Mr. Douglas Baker, having resigned, Mr. A. R. C. Miller has been elected to the position.

Oxford won the Inter-'Varsity sports last Saturday by six events to four. As will be seen from our special telegram they accounted for the 100 yards, ¼ mile, ½ mile, 3 miles, hurdles, and putting the weight, the two jumps, the mile and the hammer falling to Cambridge. The present meeting was responsible for some really good performances, and R. H. Lindsay Watson's throw of 148 feet 10 inches in the hammer is a record for the sports, the previous best standing to the credit of A. M. Stevens of Oxford in 1907—146 feet 9 inches.

E. M. Atkinson (holder) and L. S. Deane met on the 19th instant in the final game of the Bengal Lawn Tennis Championship Singles, which, owing to their having to leave Calcutta, they were permitted to play off at Lahore. It was not a very exciting struggle, Atkinson winning by 3 sets to nil. In the first set they took the games to three all and then Atkinson secured the next three and ran out. Deane only obtained one game in the second set but played better in the third, which was the best of the match. It was closely contested throughout, Atkinson eventually winning by seven games to five. Final score : Atkinson 6-3, 6-1 ; 7-5. This is Atkinson's third successive win in the singles and he has also won the doubles three years in succession, in 1907 with Captain B. O. Roe, and in 1908 and 1909 with L. S. Deane.

The competition for the Captain's Prize in connection with the Calcutta Golf Club this year drew a record entry of 80 and has been in progress since the last week in January. The final played last Saturday brought together Mr. H. B. Turle—8 and Mr. A. Mann +1, Mr. Turle winning by 3 up and 2 to play. The scores were as follows :—

Mr. Turle, 5+5+4+5+6+6+5+3+1=43 / 3+5+6+4+6+4+5+5+5=43 } =86−8=78

Mr. Mann, 3+4+4+4+5+5+5+4+5=39 / 4+5+5+4+5+4+5+4+4=40 } =79+1=80

The long delayed Rugby International match between England and Scotland was played on the 20th instant and resulted in a win for Scotland by 18 points to 8. The same day Ireland beat France in their Rugby match by 19 points to 8, but were beaten by Wales in the Association International match by 3 goals to 2.

The feather merchants of Gujerat in a memorial to the Secretary of State for India say :—Till the year 1902, they were not restrained from carrying on the trade of exporting feathers, largely of peacocks and cranes, to England and other countries outside British India, but by the passing of a resolution under the Sea Customs Act 1878 by the Government of India, they are forbidden from carrying on their trade as heretofore. That with a view to ameliorate their condition resulting from the imposition of this restraint they had approached the Government of India, but did not meet with the consideration their memorial deserved. In Gujerat the feather merchants deal in feathers of crane and peacock, birds which are held in high esteem and regard by the people of India on account of the elegantly rich colours of their plumage. Amongst the Hindus of all castes and creed, the peacock is looked upon with religious reverence and even the low caste Hindus, such as Kolis, worship the bird equally with the sacred cow. The process resorted to for collection of these eathers is as laborious as it is serviceable in obtaining employment to a large body of individuals like Kolis, Dheds and such other low caste Hindus.

The supposition that birds are killed for collection of the feathers, cannot hold good for a moment. The Public Works Department of Ahmedabad and other places have given contracts for feather thrown off by these birds, for Chandula tank and other such watering places, which means the local Government considered it a legitimate trade and gave contracts for them. All these facts most strongly go to show that birds are not killed for plumage in Gujerat and that the trade consists of feathers thrown off by birds in course of nature. Your memorialists are aware of the liking and admiration European ladies bear towards such plumage of rich colour, and your memorialists were always on the alert to select the best assorted quality for their use and service. Thus, it is a matter worth considering, whether these articles can be supplied at a cheaper rate in Europe, when supply thereof, by legitimate and approved methods, has been restricted or checked. If the Government entertain misgivings about the above-mentioned process resorted to, for purposes of collection of feathers, your memoralists most humbly beg to submit that measure in the nature of a penal enactment may be devised as a deterrent means for effectually checking the killing of these birds for purposes of sport, game or collection of plumage. Your memoralists therefore most respectfully beg to submit that you will be graciously pleased to issue, in the interest of justice, such directions to modify the said resolution of the 19th September, 1902, under the Sea Customs Act of 1878, as may enable the feather merchants to export to England and other places outside British India, the feathers of peacocks, cranes and other wild birds which throw off their feathers in the course of nature.

The Kadir Cup Meet began on the 22nd instant, the winners of the heats on the first day being Reade (2), Brooke (2), Barden (2), Faunthorpe (2), Vernon (2), Nutting, Brownlow, Tilney, Palmer, Poynter, Bruen, Carter, Dimsdale, Learmouth, Parker, Day, Atkinson, Birch Cotton, Adams, Hay, Vaughan and Hambro.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes :—Eight events again on Saturday and more good sport in which punters had the better of it as the terms' races were not very hard to pick. Both the Selling Plate and the Little Nursery Handicap were divided and three of them provided good things. Of the three races in which winners were put up, none were sold, the owners in each instance being lucky to buy in cheap.

In the first division of the Selling Plate no great study of form was required to pick out the two in Byramjee's stable, Sherali being favourite from Hermit. The former, a bad starter, put his backers out of their misery by getting well away, but the well-backed Sir Jamal was badly left. Good Chance and Surrender were held safe, but Sherali only just managed to get home from a strong run by Hermit. who would have won in another couple of yards.

Only good money for Prince Chestnut and Squire let Rajput in the second go out at a shade of odds against. It was as big a certainty as it looked on paper, as Rajput soon passed Malik Jaman, Gaucho and was never headed. Squire caught Prince Chestnut, but in a great fight the latter got second place. Hooded Falcon was well backed for a shop but only got through late to finish near the other two.

Both the Little Nursery divisions were open in the betting, the earlier having Chechan for favourite from Mizhir Beg and Defence. What chance the former may have had was spoilt by Melsom shoving him away to the front, as when Chechan caught him all was over. A formerly unknown quantity in Yacoob got away in the last bunch, but made up ground remarkably well and snatched third place from Defence. Before the races Mr. Hoosein Obayed bought him, and should find him a good investment.

Winchester and Hachal of the same stable commanded the betting in the other, the former warming with Hurgon, Zamorin, Malta, and Hyacinth next. The last of these getting off badly never had a chance, Goldman leading Hurgon, Hachal and Winchester. At the bend Hurgon drew level, and down the straight had Malta, who came well outside, and Winchester well beaten.

A hard race to pick was the nine-furlong Mahim Plate, though on Precious being scratched Spearmint was thought to be good ; plenty money for Darianoor and place betting for Si Hazza and Moscow. Gladiator as usual ma running, Nooman, Sialkote and Spearmint f Moscow joined them at the seven and was the three, where Darianoor put in a gr Moscow taking the lead at the quart Merrily came third, but down the straight noor closed on the leader and went away bit in hand. Hazza put in a strong finish, pla in front of Spearmint.

Though six were taken out of the Verar Plat we were still left with a puzzle and event Lookman and Vasco went out at tours fron Munshi, Dilerjung, Grey Falcon, Amood, F and False Start. Of these False Start shewed to the half mile, where his stable compani Dilerjung, and Company drew level. From th bend Company went away and held his own very safely from Dilerjung and Lookman, with Farick and Reefat close ; Amood being left was nev in it.

The Horse Consolation Plate was though for Pincher on his running behind The R just previous to the Big Meet. He warmed t on from T. M. S., late Lady Metal, and th he led out suggested the race being over. T. and Admiral Crichton passed Winsome an former of these came after the leader fron bend. Finding her at his quarters Melsom busy, but it would have been better had he sat A desperate finish ended in the win by a head of the former Lady Metal with Admiral Crichton and Winsome some way back.

A chance awaited those who were losing to get all back on Mundoor in the last race, though at a very short price. Running into a place so often with a good class, he now seemed to stand out amongst this lot, the next best seemingly being Sinclair, who will be useful when he fills out. Sinclair displaced Misyar in pursuit of the favourite at the bend but could then make no impression. Duxion ran up third and was lucky to save place money from Waterloo, who got a very bad start but finished strong. As mentioned, Mr. Goculdass was lucky to get no opposition in the sale ring.

As wired to you last week, Mr. W. E. Young beat Mr. Carnall in one of the semi-finals of the Bombay Presidency Amateur Billiard Championship at Pyrke's by 500 to 364. Carnall started promisingly by consecutive breaks of 29 and 25, but Young, less stylish but more solid, gradually drew on him and won comfortably as stated. His best were 45, 27, 24, 23, 22, 21 and 20, Carnall's 29, 26, 25 and 22.

On Monday the other semi-final was played, between Messrs. Monk and Gunian, the game requiring but little description, as Monk had it won all the way, finishing up 500 to 264.

The final of the preliminary rounds took place on Tuesday, to decide whether Monk or Young would meet the holder. For the first three hundred the game was very level, 305 all being called to a packed room. From then onwards, however, Monk showed some of his true form and played really well. The break that took him well away was a fine one of 83 which, being an amateur, was composed of interesting all-round play. He continued to score very rapidly and was not troubled, winning by 500 to 380. Monk's best were 83, 48, 44, 42, 38, 34, 32 and 25, Young's 32, 29, 27, 24 twice and 20.

It would be impossible to have a more exciting match then was the actual final between Messrs Louth and Monk before a literally packed "house."

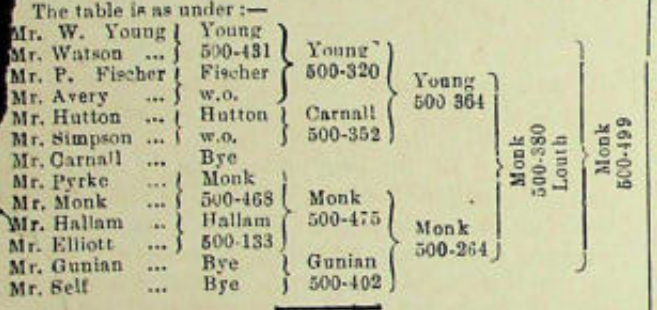
There was no shade of odds to be had about either, and indeed those who did bet probably wished they hadn't five minutes from finish. "Alec" Taylor acted as referee, and his gentle persuasion did much to quieten the talkers.

At the start both scored usefully, Monk taking a lead of 30 with items of 22, 14, 13 and 16, but 18 and 15 followed by a pretty compilation of 40 sent Louth to 113 to 82. Going strong, he strung up 27, 15 and 20 landing him 70 to the good. Monk showed up with 18, but Louth was in great form and with 18, 25 and 21 was 320 to 195 when an interval was announced. He had averaged 12·3.



Monk gave his supporters some hope when he opened the second half with 31, 13 and 37 in succession, but Louth on top of it in three visits made 13, 26 and 34 and on passing the fourth hundred led by 136. From then, however, the balls at last began to run for Monk and he took full advantage of it with 19 26 35 and 21 passing into the last hundred. He just missed a clever double baik which would have done him good, but the miss did him no harm. Louth had a bit of very bad luck when wanting only 6. The red was over the top pocket, but, owing to the nearness of the spot ball, he could not get at it. Monk added 16 and then with Louth at 499 the latter missed an easy wide cannon, owing to being under the cushion.

At his next he missed a white hazard and that s his last as Monk, getting the red going at middle pockets, ran out with 18. He averaged second half 11·6.

Monk	...	...	500
Louth	...	...	499
eneral average	...	...	9·4

One of the finest up-hill game ever seen here and a well-deserved success but extremely hard on Louth, who had only to win this to keep the Cup r good. Monk wins the Cup for a year and a old medal, the gold medal for the runner up oing to W. E. Young.

The table is as under :—

The final game in the Eastern Command Native Army Hockey Tournament was played at Cawnpore on the 17th instant and resulted in a win for the 5th Light Infantry who beat the 1st Brahmans by a goal to nil.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 5th March 1909.

We are still in the throes of the biggest snowfall of the season. Snow, frost, and thaw alternating every few hours has found the metropolis this morning bathed in fearsome dirt and slush. It is a veritable riot of mud, everything is splashed, disfigured, greasy and filthy, and our tempers, believe me, are to match.

It has been a shocking time for business men, while, as for sportsmen it has been no time at all, sport has not been practicable. Ten good race meetings—Sandown, among them—have gone by the board ; much first class football ditto ; the Southern Cross County Championships were pulled off somehow in a blinding snowstorm ; six inches of snow helped to make the 'Varsity Trial Sports a function to remember ; the Boat Race crews are slogging away while the coaches "impart" from a tow path knee deep in snow ; and so on ad nauseum.

And one was beginning to hope that spring had almost got a strangle hold on winter! This was perhaps, more by reading the boat race paragraphs with which the papers now teem. To me people le retour du Printemps is not announced by our friend the swallow, or suggested by the appearance of the daffodil or early tulip, confirmed by the ability to again take the matutinal ghoosal without ejaculation ; it is to them high at hand when the welcome and familiar heading "Boat race practice" is once more in daily use by the newspapers, and the crews have got down to Putney. Then hope revives and one conjures up the visions associated with the river, the leafy shades and all the other things that make a summer paradise when old Sol is that way inclined. And further ; last Tuesday (called Shrove) I have reason to remember the time-honoured pancake forced on me by a kind lady whom I am quite unconscious of having injured, and here we are in Lent with the Easter Monday bank holiday within measurable distance. The sparrows will soon be twittering more cheerfully on their respective spouts telling me that, ere long, instead of gazing stolidly at the Strand and after having denied myself some delectable luxury by way of showing the good that is in me, I shall be wending my beflannelled way riverwards.

As your foreign horse supply comes chiefly from Australia and New Zealand, you in India may not, perhaps, be particularly concerned at the present parlous condition of the English horse-breeding industry, though your Army readers may be sufficiently interested to know that the greatest disappointment has been caused over the clause in the Army Estimates regarding the census of horses. Nothing is more necessary than a census of horses, though an inadequate census is already made by the Board of Agriculture ; and from this and other sources we gather several alarming facts. The shortage of horses bred in the last two completed years amounts to 23,010. Apart from the Territorials the regular cavalry of 11,368 men have only 7,577 horses to ride.

Our Army, we are told, is spending the miserable sum of £1,665,000 on quarterings, transport, and remount, which includes nothing for breeding, at a time when France is making a special grant of £300,000 for horse-breeding additional to the Army Estimates.

Eighty per cent. of horses used in England—shires excepted—are brought from abroad. The Army now "proposes to take a census of horses by co-operation between the county associations and the police authorities, and arrangements have been made for a trial of the plan." This means no more than that, owing to the energy of one man outside the Department, the Devonshire County Association is about to make a county census of horses. Wiltshire county is also making a census on its own initiative. As soon as the Devon experiment is completed the other counties, if the plan is approved, will be asked to follow suit.

This means delay ; the county associations have not money to do the work, and the farmers will not co-operate with the police. Further, as the Times points out, the police are not right persons to judge whether a horse is or is not suitable for military purposes.

English lawyers, whether they pocket their fees within a stone's throw of the spot where old Temple Bar stood or under a punkah in Lower Bengal, will learn with sorrow of the great robbery of national library treasures from the famous Lincoln's Inn library. A great number of the rarest volumes of reference have disappeared from this five-hundred year old library and, so far, there comes no clue to throw any light on the mystery. Apart from the r intrinsic value, the books were unique because of their historical associations. The years they had been in the library have them a sentimental value which makes their disappearance an irreparable loss to the Honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn.

The disappearance of the volumes became known quite by accident. A book was asked for and reference to the shelves showed it to be missing. Then others were asked for, and to the astonishment of the library authorities these were found to be missing too. A thorough investigation of the library was made, and it became evident that theft had deprived the collection of some of its most prized books. Whereat, as may be imagined, all the legal luminaries around our London Law Courts have been mightily astonished and annoyed.

Really this jingo business is beginning to grate mightily on the nerves. We have been besieged by the Territorial Terror on all sides. At every music-hall this week it has been on tap in some form or other. At the Empress, Brixton, we had a sketch called "Territorials," at the East Ham Palace "The Home Defenders," at three other halls the bioscope got to work with "England Invaded" and "With the Territorials," two comedians obliged with "Wake up, England," and "Bravo, Territorials!" This would seem to be quite enough of a good thing, but there is more in store. Mr. John L. Shine has a new sketch almost ready for production called "Invasion." Mr. Wrighton's "Invasion of England" will also get a place in London music-hall programmes, and Leo Stormont is to give us "England Invaded," and Miss Decima Moore is putting on a new number at the Tivoli called "A Call to Arms," and it is about the Territorials. In London it doesn't take long to work a decent idea to death ; if the war boom emerges safely out of the ordeal and is proof against the ridicule it has now begun to attract to itself it may make for some degree of ultimate good ; but I doubt if it will survive. I have seen too many patriotic schemes

THE quaint entertainment at the Aldwych, for which Miss Dressler is responsible, affords a striking example of the dissimilarity between American and English musical comedy. Entitled "Philopœnic" the author and composer describe it as a farrago of fun, fancy and foolishness and on the face of such candour it becomes difficult to criticise. It begins in the Alps. We have an American father fond of titles, whose considerable daughter (Miss Dressler) is fond of a boy not quite ripe for matrimony. After much foolishness, some fun and less fancy, the whole clan adjourn to Paris, for no obvious reason, and there they are farragoing ahead until there is enough of sing-song, tweedle-dee, and tweedle-dum, and the curtain falls on much ado about nothing. Miss Dressler, who is capable of good work, relies for her success on her bonny personality, the quaintness of her contours and movements, and in her peculiar top note. Mme. Morichini, from Paris or Italy, looks charming, and sings after the manner of the Café Concert; Mr. Sidney Barraclough, once an actor of some power, makes much of songs with silly words; there are acrobatic actors of American importation, and the chorus, selected with the eye of a connoisseur, hustles in the approved Transatlantic manner. The story, besides being studded with some jokes in-and-out of season, was sometimes interrupted by music familiar, but by no means contemptible, a real "live" motor-car, Swiss and Parisian scenery, in fact everything except wireless telegraphy and aëroplanes.

"THE Real Woman," at the Criterion, is an assured success, if only on account of its capital second act. It is strongly constructed, sparkling in its lighter passages, rings true in its graver moments, has somewhat of harrowing realism and draws a pitiful picture of human misery which has real tears in it. A supper party after the opera at Lady Arden's house in Grosvenor-Street, a flippant company of Society's butterflies conversing of flippant things. Presently a chance reference to Hugh Graham, the eccentric son of a noble house born in Belgravia, now spending his life and his fortune in Poplar, fighting night and day in the interests of the poor. A scoffing remark by rakish Horace Carruthers that if such a woman as Lady Arden set herself to fascinate this youthful sentimentalist he would soon desert his cherished poor and become a society lap-dog. Laughing consent by her ladyship to try her hand at the game, a bet between Carruthers and Mark Vernon as to the result of it, the former anxious, for reasons of his own to see Graham made ridiculous, and Vernon being Graham's friend, consenting to the scheme only to prove that one man in London knew his own path and would not be turned from it by anyone.

WHEN this much has been told—in a quarter of an hour from the raising of the curtain—most people must have been willing to wager that they already knew the end of "A Real Woman." The sequel looked obvious enough—by all the rules of plots based on such bets as Carruthers's, Lady Arden's amusing experiment must quickly develop into serious love ending with her marriage to Graham.

But Mr. Robert Hichens, having something more serious to tell in his new play than a pleasant love story, has worked upon different lines. The sentimentalist does fall in love with the lady; but her experiment teaches her only the reality of life. It is the story of a soul's awakening. When Graham comes late on the night of the supper party to ask Vernon to visit a dying boy in Poplar she insists upon accompanying them, to gratify a curiosity and to win the bet for Carruthers. And first she busies herself in the boy's poor home with trying her wiles on the unresponsive Graham. But suddenly she is brought face to face, for the first time in her life, "with truth, with terror, with pity." The agony of the dying boy—who, it is as well to say does not appear on the stage—the despair of his sister, who cries out with broken-hearted sobs that she cannot "let Jack go"—these things strike like a thunderbolt upon the frivolous soul of the bejewelled Society butterfly, and she takes the poorly-clad girl in her arms and comforts her, a "real woman" at last.

The acting triumph was won by Miss Kate Cutler, who played the part of the dying boy's sister with compelling pathos. It was a magnificent piece of realistic emotion. Mr. Henry Ainley played with beautiful sincerity as Hugh Graham. Miss Evelyn Millard showed the change in Lady Arden very convincingly, Mr. Allan Aynesworth was strong and dignified as Mark Vernon, Miss Annie Hughes contributed an amusing study of a languid Duchess, and Mr. Herbert Waring looked and behaved like the complete villain Carruthers was suggested as being.

As it was in the beginning, so in the end at the Savoy. "The Yeomen of the Guard" was the first play revived nearly two years ago, when the first real comic opera returned to the city, where the sham had reigned so long. Last Tuesday night's revival was received with all the enthusiam that each and all the Gilbert and Sullivan operas had deserved. The well-loved airs, the graceful lyrics—these were given a magnificent welcome by "the faithful," and also by the many converts who have come to understand the difference between the real comic opera and the sham.

It goes without saying that Mr. C. H. Workman was the "star" of the piece. He is an artist. He has such wonderful facial play that whenever he is on the stage the piece simply compels laughter. For the rest, Miss Jessie Rose, Miss Louie Rene, Mr. Rutland Barrington, and Mr. Richard Temple gave the best possible interpretation to Gilbert's wit and Sullivan's music.

TWO BIG GAME BOOKS.*

THE number of works on big game shooting and travel, especially African, is little short of amazing; and one cannot help wondering whether they all pay, although it may be presumed that if they did not the output would soon be checked. Photography is, of course, everything in books of this nature; and it is little short of a revelation to contrast the illustrations especially of the animals—in modern books of sports with those of kindred works half a century or so ago. Although all such works (except when they break new ground, which nowadays can but be seldom) have a certain similarity, so that to have read one is in some degree to have read all describing the same country, yet the two now before us are excellent examples of their kind, being written with a verve and freshness of style, combined with an accuracy as regards facts, which is wanting in more than one we could name.

Mr. Wallace's book covers a very wide field, comprising experiences of shoot in the Yellowstone Park and British Columbia, red-deer shooting in New Zealand, a short sporting trip in Japan and another in India, and a larger trip in East Africa, the account of the latter comprising five out of the fourteen chapters which go to form the book.

As regards the Yellowstone, the author confesses that he was disappointed for the reason that it was impossible to see the animals; adding that this is specially the case in autumn, when his visit was made, winter would undoubtedly be the best time, but then a special permit would be necessary in order to visit the Park, and the wapiti would have gone south.

"Nearly every species of American game is represented, with the exception of the Rocky Mountain goat, the caribou, and the musk ox. Wapiti are the most plentiful, though owing to the nature of the ground, they do not winter here but go south, through the timber reserve, into the Jackson's Hole country, I only saw one unenclosed wapiti all the time I was in the Park, and that was a two-year-old bull in the Hayden Valley."

Mr. Wallace regards the bears—which apparently can be seen—as by far the most amusing animals in the Park. They resort to the refuse heaps of nearly all the hotels, and one evening he heard of no less than a party of three and twenty "silver-tips" enjoying their dinner at once, although by the time he arrived on the scene half of them had taken their departure. It is not wise to make too near an approach to these bears; and on one occasion two workmen employed in the Park had to seek refuge with all possible expedition by swarming up a pine-tree, one of them leaving a portion of his clothing in the jaws of Bruin.

Of British Columbia as a sporting country, the author speaks highly, although he has to deplore the diminution of the game.

"In the Bridge River country where we made our trip, the sportsman may count on killing three varieties of game, namely, sheep, goats, and (black-tailed) deer. By far the finest sport is afforded by the first-named of these three animals, and it is proportionately sad to contemplate that both in numbers and size he is diminishing. In districts where formerly heads of forty-five inches and longer were obtained, a man is now considered lucky if he gets one of thirty-two inches. The reasons are not far to seek. Natural causes have something to do with it; sheep scab kills some; so do mountain lions; so do eagles; so do hard winters; and last, but not least, so do hunters."

Red deer shooting in New Zealand comes in for high commendation; and to many of us it will be a surprise to learn how numerous these fine animals now are in the country. In the North Island, without an introduction to one of the big land-owners it is, however, now difficult to obtain leave to shoot. This appears to be due to the greed of certain so-called sportsmen, two of whom are reported to have killed something like one hundred head of deer and these for the most part immature. At the date in question the whole district, including the Government reserve of 32,000 acres, was freely open to all sportsmen, but it is now closed,—and little wonder!

There are several herds in different parts of the two islands, each of which has developed characteristics of its own. Many of these herds have an admixture of German blood, but the one in Northern Otago is pure Scots. The present number of this herd is estimated at no less than ten thousand head.

In India Mr. Wallace's experience were not very fortunate, as he appears to have lacked introduction to native chieftains or high Government officials, and was, therefore, according to his own account, unable to obtain big game shooting, and had therefore to be content with black buck and chinkara and such "small deer." He ought, however, to have had little difficulty in getting sambar, barasingha, or chital shooting; and we believe no introductions are necessary in order to be able to shoot to bison in the Wynaad and adjacent districts.

What he lacked in India he made up for, however, in British East Africa, where his account of the game to be met with on the great Athi plains—now strictly preserved by Government—is enough to make the mouth of every sportsman and naturalist water.

"Lion and rhino," he writes, "were absent, though they are often to be seen, but that was about all. Zebras flicked their heels in sheer exuberance of spirits, and raced madly along within thirty yards of the line. Giraffes, with a perpetual smile imprinted on their features, peered at us over the mimosa scrub; uncouth wildebeests deluded the unwary into the belief that they were buffaloes; hartebeest swarmed in hundreds; through a belt of trees dashed a herd of beautiful impala; three huge boars, the ends of their tails oddly drooping, careered across the flat expanse at our approach; troops of graceful gazelles, both Grant and Thomson, fed quietly within a few hundred yards of the stations at which we stopped; in the distance wary ostriches made bold black splodges against the faint background."

Despite some trouble with his men, Mr. Wallace speaks well of the arrangements and regulations made for sportsmen in British East Africa, as well as of the prospects of the game. He pertinently remarks, however, in connection with the restrictions as to the number of animals permitted to be killed, that if a sportsman shoots one or more poor heads, there is nothing on earth to prevent him leaving them on the ground, and going on with his shooting until he gets one to his satisfaction. The book is full of interest from end to end, and should be put in an easily accessible position in every big game sportsman's library.

The same may be said of "On Safari," a work which ought to command a big sale if only on account of the fact that it is written by one of the authors of the most delightful book, "Wild Spain." In choosing the title for his volume Mr. Chapman has, indeed, made a decided hit, as from both the æsthetic and the practical points of view no better one could possibly have been found. For the benefit of those to whom Suaheli is an unknown tongue, we may be permitted to explain that "safari" means a hunting expedition. As this volume covers practically the same ground as the last five chapters of Mr. Wallace's work, our readers must be content with a very brief notice, although this by no means implies that the one work is any degree inferior to the other.

We may, however, specially refer to Mr. Chapman's observations with regard to game preservation. The chief cause of its diminution or extermination in all countries is to be attributed, in the author's opinion, to the use of the horse. He is especially "down" on the practice of riding after herds of game and shooting into the "brown." That this was common in the old days, there is abundant testimony; but in British East Africa we presume that it would not be tolerated for an instant. The author would also prohibit the use of repeating rifles in big-game shooting, as coming under the denomination of "methods of barbarism," but we think he has little chance of obtaining a veto on these deadly weapons.

Mr. Chapman is, however, something more than a big game shooter, being, in fact, an experienced and enthusiastic ornithologist; and even the professed naturalist will probably find much matter of interest in his notes on the birds of East Africa. These notes appear as an appendix to the volume, and occupy about thirty pages of letterpress. The author is perhaps too diffident of his own power when he states that he would have been unable to compile this list without the assistance of his brother ornithologists; but be this as it may the list as presented can scarcely fail to have considerable scientific interest and value.

With this we take leave of a most attractive and interesting volume.

HOW LIONS ARE CAUGHT.

A NEW way of dealing with formidable wild animals is now being widely employed in tropical regions where they abound.

Until within a few years efforts to trap the largest beasts of prey were nearly always unsuccessful. Extraordinary precautions were taken in setting the traps, very strong traps were provided, the traps were kept from rust and were handled with instruments so that odour from the human hand might not be perceptible; but all in vain.

These precautions are now thrown to the winds. Under the new plan white men are having great success in trapping lions, tigers, leopards, bears, hyaenas, jackals, and many other of the less famous prowlers.

These animals cause great loss of cattle and domestic creatures, and also cost the lives of many human beings every year. The Governments in nearly all tropical countries now have close times during which the hunting of harmless wild animals, such as elephants, zebras and antelopes, is forbidden, in order that they may have an opportunity to breed and thus be saved from extinction. But the protecting arm of the law is not extended over beasts of prey.

Specially strong steel traps are now employed for catching these animals. The jaws of the traps are so deep that when a lion sets foot upon the spring the trap closes upon the leg above the knee and within two or three inches of the body.

An advertisement of a certain German trap recently appearing in a colonial newspaper has an affidavit asserting that on a certain plantation in German East Africa 405 beasts of prey, including lions, leopards and hyaenas, were successfully trapped last year. The fact that the extermination of these animals by trapping now appears to be practicable is the cause of much rejoicing among tropical colonists.

Wherever one or more species of the larger beasts exist they are a source of trouble to white men who are opening farms or raising live-stock. It is no serious undertaking for a lion or an African leopard to kill the strongest horse or the largest ox.

Herds are often decimated by their ravages, all the poultry may be killed in the night, skins and hides within reach are destroyed, and jackals will even steal boots and make a meal on them. M. Kiene, a farmer writes from German South-West Africa that when he kills a sheep or steer it is not necessary to burry the offal for prowlers the very next night will clean it up and carry it off to the last morsel.

The success of trapping the largest beast of prey is due to improvements in the trap and in the methods of using it. The traps now made for this purpose are proportioned to the strength of the strongest animal that can get into them.

A shallow hole is dug and filled with moss so as to bring the trap nearly to the level of the ground, the moss helping to keep it exactly level. The trap and the ground around it are then covered with earth free from stones. Over this leaves or grass are strewn.

A few bits of bait are scattered among the leaves from one foot to one and a half feet from the spring of the trap. The beast, whose fine nose detects the meat, approaches at night, hunts the tidbits in the litter, and while picking them up nine chances in ten he will spring the trap.

This implement has some appurtenances which have only recently been used. It was formerly the practice to fasten the trap on the spot, but the new way of trapping has a different device.

The trap is attached to a strong, stout chain, at the end of which is a three-pronged anchor, with points almost as sharp as needles. When caught the animal will haul the trap with its chain and anchor out into the brush. At every instant the anchor is catching in the ground or scrub. The animal cannot travel far, for every step means a pull on his imprisoned limb, and the scars which the anchor makes on the ground and underbrush are a sure guide to the crippled brute.

The hunter may be awakened by the first frightened howl of his victim, but he will wait until morning before investigating the matter. A few minutes will take the animal into the bush, and his outcries soon cease. In the morning, when convenient, the hunter will follow the trail, rifle on shoulder, knowing perfectly well that he can safely approach the brute within two or three rods and put an end to its misery with a well-aimed bullet.

The experienced trapper to-day does not take the slightest pains to conceal his participation in setting the trap. He handles the trap as he would a hoe, puffs away at his pipe, does not care if the trap is rusty, and puts no oil on it, as was formerly done to disguise odour. In fact, he carries out the work as simply as though he were catching a muskrat.

Here are some of the latest statistics of trapping big beasts of prey in tropical regions. On one coffee plantation in district U-S, Sumatra, three tigers were caught in two days near the remains of two oxen they had killed. Missionary A. Mayer in British Bechuanaland caught three lions in a week besides many other beasts of prey.

Theodore Hartmann, on plantation M, in German East Africa, trapped 404 beasts of prey last year. A. von Quast, on another plantation, trapped in one month two lions, eight leopards and one hyaena, all but one lion and one leopard being caught in the same place. In 16 months he trapped 204 beasts of prey, for which he received bounty amounting to 1,500 marks.

C. Hagenbeck trapped three lions in November of last year. C. Fortsmann reports from Dutch East Indies the trapping of two royal Bengal tigers and three bears, while H. Janson, in German South-West Africa, has recently trapped 4 leopards, 80 hyaenas, 160 jackals and 36 foxes.

These facts show that the steel trap is going to have a very important part in ridding the world of dangerous beasts of prey.

Fishing.

SHARK-HUNTING IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

For over two months the small steamer of which I was Chief Officer plied along the Pacific coast of Central America from Panama to the Costa Rican border, navigating a region frequented only by the native pearl fishers and an occasional small local trader. Our mission was of a character which often required anchoring for several days in lonely coves or lying off and on the shore for like periods.

It was monotonous in the extreme ; at times, under the burning tropical sky, the intense heat lulled only temporarily by fleeting thunder storms, with terrific downpours of rain for a few minutes, followed by a depressing steaming humidity when the sun shone again. Amusements were few, as no one was allowed to go ashore except on duty, and the scarcity of fresh provisions was only partly relieved by the catching of a few fish from over the ship's side.

One amusement, however, was extremely exciting and popular—shark killing. They were not mild looking nor mild mannered sharks, either, that were our prey. They were the huge, hideous, cavernous-jawed tiger sharks, which could nip off a man's head, arm, leg, or large part of his body and gulp it down in a jiffy. The waters in which we sailed and anchored were infested with these monsters, and they would often follow the ship for miles. I do not recall seeing one less than six feet long. The largest we caught measured twelve feet from nose to end of tail. We saw larger ones, notably a famous shark which survived many a combat with man and his weapons.

This huge fellow was known to at least two generations of seafaring men as "Taboga Bill." He derived his name from his habitat, which was in the waters of Taboga Island, a beautiful health resort and watering place a few miles out in the bay from Panama City. He was a wily old fellow, and although several times wounded, once losing a fin in an encounter with some men in a boat, he was never killed or caught, as far as known, but although seen for years by hundreds of sailors and travellers, he disappeared from his old haunts during the influx of Americans after the acquisition of the canal zone, and it is generally conceded that he has died, probably from old age. From the two or three glimpses I had of him I should should say he was fully fifteen feet long. Others give him greater length.

To amuse ourselves we frequently took rifle and revolver shots at the sharks about the ship, but this was neither exciting nor sportsmanlike. The favorite method of capturing them was a decidedly seamanlike one. We literally fished for them, as we did for the ugly twelve-footer we caught while lying off the San Pedro River, near the mouth of which is the town of Pedregal, Chiriqui Province, Panama.

This fellow had been our companion for two or three days. He had a voracious appetite and quickly devoured any of the refuse thrown from the ship that came anywhere near him. He was quick and powerful in his movements, although wary and cunning. He was likewise greedy and a bully, brushing aside the smaller sharks that got in his way. We determined to get him.

A big meat hook, well sharpened, was baited with a piece of salt pork and suspended from a cork life preserver floating in the water. A stout Manila line was made fast to the life preserver and led up over the taffrail aft. We anglers (there were three of us taking turns) then began our fishing.

It was several minutes before the old shark would approach the baited hook. He was evidently suspicious of it. He would approach it, look at it, smell it, dart away, circle around and return to it. We gently agitated the line. He grew bolder and finally began to make quick, cautious nibbles at it, until pretty soon most of the bait was gone. We started to haul in and put more bait on, and then, with a dash, Mr. Shark bit. He swallowed the whole thing. That was our time. We quickly jerked the line in, but as a strain came on it we saw at once that the shark was stronger than the three of us so we had to take a turn with the line around a cleat, easing off as the strain increased and hauling in as it lessened.

The shark, now firmly hooked, went into a desperate "flurry." He dived and turned and thrashed the water in his frenzy. So violent were his struggles that we feared the line would part, but it held and we began to pour lead into our victim, as to have hauled him on board while he was full of life and vigor would have imperilled limb if not life of any one approaching near enough to despatch him.

And he was hard to despatch. I was using a high-powered 38-calibre military pattern Colt automatic pistol. One of my companions used a small calibre Lee rifle, the other an old style 45-calibre Winchester. It was the last that did the most damage, for while the small calibre steel-jacketed bullets of the Colt and the Lee passed through and through the shark, several of the soft Winchester bullets were found imbedded in his body.

For fully twenty minutes we "played" the shark, and great sport it was. His strength and rage waned slowly. Finally, probably due more to his own terrific exertions than to our shots, he began to weaken, yet not to such an extent that three of us could haul him aboard. So we rove the line through a small leading block made fast to a boat davit, called some of the crew, and soon had him hanging, still struggling, to the davit head. There we fired several more shots into him and he appeared to relax.

But he was by no means dead. Nooses were slung around him and he was hauled, shot full of holes, on deck. Weak though he was, he had plenty of fight left in him. His eyes still glared, his tail flapped, his vast jaws, with double rows of hinged, saw-edged teeth, moved convulsively as if yearning to macerate one of his foes. His huge body, a dirty mud color, with black transverse stripes (hence the name "tiger-shark"), pulsated with pain and rage. In a moment of comparative rest, a man, thinking the shark at last dead, approached with an iron bar to pry open the jaws and extract the hook. Instantly the jaws snapped and the man leaped back none too soon.

The shark's head was chopped open with axes, but even then the body, tail, and fragments of jaws worked convulsively for several minutes. It was the most wonderfull exhibition of vitality and pluck I ever saw.

The spine once severed at the neck, life soon became extinct and then we took our measurements and proceeded to collect trophies. The ship's surgeon took the spine and gave it a treatment which converted it into a unique walking stick. The eyeballs were preserved and became hard, milk-white spheres. The fins were given to some of the men as curios and the teeth were distributed. The cuff buttons I now wear were made from them, and, with a simple gold setting, are handsome, being very hard, highly polished, with strange serrated edges and as white as the purest ivory.

We caught other sharks, but none gave us the battle this big tiger did.—A. H. D. in Western Field.

A PLEA FROM MYSORE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—The dates of the official measuring tour have now been published, and Bangalore has once again been given one of the latest dates, quite at the end of April. We have been hardly treated in this direction for the past three years, in spite of the fact that the racing season under C.T.C. roles begins down here with the Mysore Meeting in June, and Bangalore early in July. Local owners have repeatedly represented to the Secretary of these meetings, that unless they get an early measurement it is impossible to get ponies fit to run by the time required. And I understand that the Secretary has repeatedly brought the matter to the notice of the C.T.C. The only apparent result, however, is that the dates appointed for our measurements are becoming later year by year. Now this matter is of just as much importance to the Stewards of the Mysore and Bangalore Meetings as to owners themselves, for by late measurements a large amount of entrance money is lost to them yearly. I notice by the way that the first measurements of the season are given to Lucknow and other places in that neighbourhood, which have no racing till November, and can therefore well afford to wait for their measurements. Now sir, we are no doubt like Uriah Heep, somewhat "umble" down here, but, unlike that personality of infamous memory depicted by Dickens, we are sportsmen, and if it would be a graceful act, not to say only fair to us, on the part of the all-powerful C.T.C. if they would give sport a chance down here. Let us have an earlier date, as early as possible in fact and it will do a heap to help the Mysore and Bangalore meetings.

THE ·25-20-86.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Though in past letters to the Indian Field I have again and again mentioned the ·25-25 and ·28-30 straight case Stevens' rifles, pointing out their excellence for both medium and smal' game, I have, I believe, quite neglected all reference to the far better known ·25-20. This latter rifle has of late years gained a good reputation at Bisley for medium range target shooting : such competitions as the Martin Smith having been shot for with it. In America, of course, the rifle has been held in the highest repute for many years, and is an immense favourite for target shooting up to 200 yards, as well as for many kinds of small game hunting. The ammunition is cheaper and easier to procure than that of such special weapons as the ·25-25 and ·28-30, while the ·25-20 is capable of doing very much the same sort of work, in the same way, as the above slightly more powerful rifles. There are two ·25-20s, the single shot which takes a longish and slightly bottle shaped case, and the repeater which has a shorter and more decidedly bottled cartridge. The shell used in the single shot rifles would not suit any of the existing repeating mechanisms, being too long for the bolt opening and carrier, consequently a shorter and more suddenly contracted shell was designed, adaptable to the Marlin and Winchester actions. Smokeless ammunition is obtainable for both single shot and repeating ·25-20s, but only in low power for the single shot, while for the repeater ammunition giving a muzzle velocity of 1650 f.s. is available. With this cartridge the little rifle is well able to account for black buck, chinkara, etc. With high velocity ammunition the trajectory is greatly flattened, the highest point in the curve over a range of 200 yards being only about 9½ inches, as against 13¾ inches for the ordinary black powder cartridge.

A load of 20 grains of black powder, and 67 grain bullet also gives a flat curve, combined with satisfactory accuracy. When trying this charge lately, in the course of some experiments with a friend, we got a ten shot group at 100 yards range into a rectangle 2 inches high by 2¾ inches broad. Another good load is the 75 grain hollow bullet with 20 grains of black : this does not give quite such a flat curve, the highest point in 200 yards being about 12 inches, but the accuracy is first rate, and the killing effect excellent.

With fresh ammunition loaded with 19 grains of black and the 86 grain bullet, the target shooting capabilities of the ·25-20 are of a very high order. Under favourable weather conditions it is capable of putting a ten shot series into a six inch circle, at 200 yards.

A friend stalking wild-fowl on the coast of Ireland last autumn with a ·25-20, brought off some phenomenal shots ; for instance he actually killed a brent goose at 186 yards, and many other geese and ducks at distances well over 100 yards.

I believe that there is little difficulty in getting ·25-20 cartridges loading in America with any weight of bullet desired ; or if preferred sportsmen can get the bullets they want from the Ideal Company, and load their shells themselves. This is really no trouble at all ; with bullets ready lubricated to hand, the rest of the loading operations are mere child's play : not a task in fact to dismay anyone, even in the middle of the hot weather. I am laying stress on the possibility of little things like cartridge loading proving wearisome to the sportsman in India, because there is no doubt that the East makes the doing of small jobs quite irksome, though the carrying out of the very same things may, at Home, be a real pleasure. Bullet making and bullet lubricating is real hard tiresome work, and the fact that nearly every kind of bullet that one can possibly want is to be bought ready made and lubricated, makes it quite unnecessary for the sportsman east of Suez to do any casting himself.

NEW COLT ·25 CALIBRE.

That the automatic pistol has become recognized as practical, convenient and effective arm is proved by the increasing demand for this type of firearm. Several different styles have appeared on the market within the past year and many attempts have been made to produce a handy, very small size and extra light weight arm that would possess the essential feature of a practical, safe and efficient pistol.

The latest product of the Colt's Patent Fire Arms Mfg. Co. of Hartford, Conn, and 15A, Pall Mall, London, is believed to be the most perfect achievement in the line of a small bore pocket arm yet produced, and is known, as the Colt Calibre ·25 Automatic Pistol, which is claimed has no equal in its size for power, simplicity and accuracy. This new model weighs only 13 ounces and is of such small, compact shape (4¼ inches long) that it may be carried in a vest pocket or other easily accessible place, and ready for instant use with perfect safety because of the practical and convenient devices that have proven reliable on the larger Colt Automatics. Security against accidental discharge is insured by an action safety which prevents discharge until the breech is entirely closed; an automatic grip safety which locks the firing mechanism until released by pressure on the handle in the regular manner of grasping the handle when pulling the trigger; and as a third precaution the little pistol is fitted with a conveniently located slide lock safety which when pushed up and engaged in the slide cut when the arm is cocked, blocks the sear so that it cannot be released from the trigger. This lock may be instantly drawn down by a slight movement of the thumb. The new model is quick in action, there being no limit to the rapidity of fire which is under instant control of a finger, and it is only necessary to pull the trigger to fire each shot,—ejection of empty shells, charging of the chamber and cocking of the piece being automatically performed by the recoil which is so absorbed as to have no disturbing effect on the aim, making the pistol much more pleasant to shoot than one in which the "kick" is not eliminated.

The ammunition adapted for this diminutive weapon is of the modern high-power smokeless powder variety, shooting metal patched bullets that will penetrate 3½ seven-eighths pine boards, thus proving its effectiveness.

The ·25 calibre Colt Automatic Pistol will prove of inestimable value to those who desire an inconspicuous very small, extra light weight yet powerful pocket arm. It is made of special materials and each one is thoroughly inspected and tested before leaving the factory and is fully guaranteed.

The magazine holds six cartridges, and the arm is of blued finish with handsome case hardened trigger, side lock safety and grip safety, with rubber handles.

Full descriptive circulars will be sent on request by the manufacturers.

THE TURF.

A STOP TO RACING.

THE snow and frost necessitated the abandonment of more meetings—Leicester, Wolverhampton, Folkestone, Newbury, Haydock Park and others—a most regrettable step as some capital sport was promised. The last few days have been an absolute blank as far as racing is concerned.

The present streak of weather, reminds one of the season of 1895, when a late frost played havoc with sport generally, and rendered coursing and racing alike impossible until the Ides of March were come. Nature has given us indeed a "close season" in the steeplechasing calender, without a question as to its benefit or detriment, and the racing army has had to do the best it could under the fortnight's veto with more or less satisfactory results. Such a wholesale interference with race meetings has not occurred for some years.

Some idea of what the stoppage has cost racing men generally, and owners of horses in particular, can be gathered from the appended values of the stakes that would have been run for had racing been practicable:—

Wolverhampton December (2 days)	...	£1,000
Hurst Park December (2 days)	...	1,310
Manchester New Year (1 day)	...	560
Manchester January (2 days)	...	1,240
Nottingham January (2 days)	...	1,270
Newbury January (2 days) ..	...	1,745
Kempton January (2 days)...	...	1,600
Southwell Hunt (1 day) ...	...	300
Windsor February (1 day) ...	...	500
Lingfield February (1 day) ...	...	480
Warwick February (2 days)...	...	980
Newbury February (2 days)	...	2,225
Haydock February (2 days)	...	1,080
Total	...	£14,270

The racecourse companies must have suffered in greater measure, however, as in addition to gate-money deficiencies, there is the cost of advertising the fixtures and many other minor expenses incidental to racecourse management, which make quite a respectable total, and for which they have no return; while the traffic loss to railway companies must have been enormous.

In various other directions the effects are felt. Practically everyone makes something at a time when racing is in progress. There are the various members of the staffs on the racecourses, who, of course, suffer a serious loss in wages alone. Then the cab proprietors reap substantial advantage from the visitors to meetings, and in a great many instances the ordinary citizen, even though he be the most bitter enemy of racing, derives a certain amount of benefit though indirectly, from the sport, for the increased revenue from the electric trams is applied in most instances towards a relief in the rates. Then again the hotel proprietors and caterers generally suffer direct loss when a race meeting has to be abandoned. There is, in fact, no section of the community which does not in some way share in the loss entailed, from the newsboy in the street to the millionaire in his mansion.

And yet there is a small party of narrow-minded people who would, if they could have their own way, put an end to a sport which has such far-reaching effects. The loss all round through simply a week's cessation has been tremendous. What would it mean if racing were to be stopped altogether? Perhaps the Faddist element will give some consideration to this side of the question, and formulate a scheme for dealing with the thousands of people who would be deprived of their means of livelihood.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

EIGHT years having elapsed since the representatives of the Scottish League last overcame the English League, the result of yesterday's International struggle at Glasgow came as a surprise as well as a delight to the 50,000 people who gathered at Celtic Park. Not only was the victory by 3 goals to 1 deserved, but it had to be worked for very strenuously indeed. The opening stages suggested strongly another addition to England's list of successes. A high wind blowing from corner to corner led to the ball going often out of play, but there was plenty of skill, and apparently a useful understanding between the English front rank, while the attacks of the Scottish forwards, spasmodic in character, were so easily repelled that during the first twenty minutes Hardy did not touch the ball. Gradually, however, the Scotsmen got better together for the purposes of attack, while the untiring and vigorous methods of the Scottish defenders began to exercise a marked effect upon the visiting forwards. From this change the game went still further in Scotland's favour, and they finished up the opening half, not only a goal to the good, but the stronger side. The home team, encouraged by success, did better and better after crossing over, the forwards, except that Bob Walker had lost something of his old pace, giving a splendid display. After Scotland's second goal England had a fair share of the game, and had they seized their opportunities they might possibly have drawn level. Their most marked weakness lay at half, were Roberts, handicapped by the greasy turf, could not move to real purpose, and neither Hunt nor Makepeace was able to hold his opponent. Thus very heavy work was thrown upon Crompton and Whitson. The latter was only moderate while Crompton frequently found himself beaten for pace by Paul. Altogether the Scottish League had cause for much satisfaction, for in addition to the dash and brightness of the forwards, the halves enjoyed the distinction of breaking up the combination of the visiting forwards. Collins was the stronger back, and Brownlie, severely tested at times, came through the ordeal admirably.

NOTWITHSTANDING their heavy work in the Cup—they only just won their replayed tie with West Ham United on Wednesday—Newcastle United maintain their League form, and their latest success yesterday raises them to a very strong position at the head of affairs—four points ahead of Everton with a game in hand. To go to Manchester and beat the City by the only two goals scored was much the best performance achieved yesterday. No other visiting team won in the First Division of the League, and the Newcastle club also profited by the reverses sustained by Everton and Sheffield Wednesday. Newcastle had to call upon several reserves, and with all their resources they seem capable of successfully carrying out the arduous programme before them. The Cup draw involves them in a serious encounter at the end of the week, but Sunderland, who then visit them, could only just win yesterday against Bradford City, who, with Leicester Fosse are very badly off at the bottom of the competition. Because of the comparative weakness of the Sunderland backs the prospect of Newcastle reaching the semi-final ties looks distinctly bright, though Sunderland have done extremely well in the earlier rounds and will not succumb readily.

IT is only possible, however, to regard the chances of Newcastle United in both competitions as extremely good. Three times in the final tie in four years, they certainly deserve the greatest reward that can come to an Association team. After their difficulty in overcoming quite an ordinary Southern League team success is far from a certainty, and the same remark applies to the other three ties in the fourth round of the Cup contest, which is the feature of next Saturday's programme. After overthrowing Tottenham Hotspur, following the thrashing administered to the Crystal Palace, Burnley will frighten any visitors and may overcome Manchester United. There appears nothing to choose between Derby County and Notts Forest, and any supposed superiority of Bristol City is negatived by their having to journey to Glossop. Probably these matches will have much closer finishes than the semi-final ties on neutral grounds, in which it is possible that two of the weak teams will have decidedly inferior opponents.

WITH a brilliant victory over Burnley at Turf Moor Bolton Wanderers improved their position in the Second Division of the League, and were further helped by the fact that both West Bromwich Albion and Tottenham Hotspur, the other two clubs in the running for promotion, could only draw their matches. Although third on the list, Tottenham Hotspur still possess the best record. With two games in hand they are only three points behind the Albion and two behind Bolton Wanderers, who have fulfilled three more engagements than the London club. The position is highly interesting, and with the three teams removed from the Association Cup they are free to concentrate all their energies and resources upon the struggle for promotion. Tottenham Hotspur yesterday came near to losing their unbeaten record on their own ground, Glossop scoring a couple of goals against them in the first eight minutes, but in the end the result was a draw at three goals each. Fulham could only draw at Bradford, but Clapton Orient, showing fine form, gained a splendid victory over Birmingham.

CHELSEA vs. BLACKBURN ROVERS.—Both sides were weakened by Inter-League match calls, and from the Rovers' side Robert Crompton and Latheron were missing, while Chelsea were without Warren. They played Walton at full back for the first time at home since his accident in September, 1907. He played splendidly, but the whole of the Chelsea left wing were weak. Birnie at centre-half, and his vis-a-vis Chapman, were both highly successful in a game which was not distinguished by much good football. Snow fell throughout and only 10,900 people were present. The ground became rather greasy and somewhat upset the calculations of the two sides. Quite early Ashcroft was hustled off the ball by Hilsdon, but Cowell cleared, and Ashcroft later saved a header from Hilsdon. Whitley had to be sprightly to intercept a shot from Aikenhead, following a smart combined movement by the visiting forwards. Ellis Crompton twice shot well, but on the interval Kyle lifted the ball over the bar when to fail to score seemed impossible. The second half was dull and marred by many mistakes. Hilsdon was unfairly pulled down in the goal mouth, but a penalty

TO CONQUER MALARIA.

Words of wisdom from a Physician's Pen.

"Those who conquer Malaria conquer the tropics" is a proverb with which every resident in India is familiar. While in consequence of the onward march of scientific achievement, this disease, so depressing in its onset, so devitalising in its effect, and so disorganising in its result to the whole system is better understood than it used to be, it is still, unhappily, exceedingly prevalent and is likely to continue until the conditions which produce it have been banished.

Most people know that while Malaria may take various forms it is due to a specific germ or microbe, which destroys the red corpuscles by which the oxygen of the air is carried by the blood to every part of the body to burn up its impurities. The destruction of these corpuscles produces the marked symptoms so characteristic of the disease,—the pale, sallow, earthy complexion, the mental and physical lassitude, the depression, the morbid thoughts and feelings, the aching muscles and the tender joints.

Bad as is all this, the result of Anaemia or poverty of the blood, as it is commonly called, which makes life a burden to the sufferer, it may go considerably farther until it produces that wasted and dangerous condition of the system doctors call "Cachexia."

For long, Quinine has been the sheet anchor of the physician, and in the acute stages it generally answers admirably, but in the later stages something else must be employed to destroy the effects wrought by the microbes.

Happily, in this conquest of the hosts of the disease germs which invade the body under the banner of Malaria the physician has been presented with a weapon as potent over them as the modern machine gun is potent against the old flint lock gun.

This weapon is Sanatogen, one of the most powerful restoratives and vitalising agents ever given to the world. Its remarkable properties are due to its two constituents Casein, the solid portion of pure, new milk, and Glycero-phosphate of Soda, a preparation containing phosphorus in the precise form in which it exists in the body. Phosphorus, as every one knows, is not only as a physician has written "intimately associated with the health of the system," and is indispensable for the discharge of the functions of the nervous centres," but is also "absolutely essential for the growth of what physiologists term the cells of the body, the microscopic bricks of which the human edifice is constructed." This cell growth is greatly interfered with in Malaria, and a supply of phosphorus which is easily absorbed by the depleted system is urgently necessary to restore it to its standard activity. Nothing does this so well as Sanatogen, as nothing so rapidly restores the vitality of the blood as this preparation, which is prescribed by over ten thousand physicians in the world because no secret has ever been made of its constituents and they realise its overwhelming value in rousing the functions of the body to do their duty.

How rapidly Sanatogen restores the blood after Anaemia may be judged from the fact that one eminent physician records that the red blood corpuscles in a patient increased eighty thousand per cubic milli-metre in a week, and the percentage of red colouring matter in them advanced from 61 per cent. to 62·5 per cent., while another patient, who was unable to take any solid food and was losing weight rapidly so improved in a fortnight that the red corpuscles increased two hundred thousand per cubic milli-metre, their red colouring matter from 48 per cent. to 52 per cent., and she was able to resume her household duties, completely cured of the terrible melancholia from which she was suffering.

Children are especially liable to Malaria and its pernicious after-effects which may delay their development and stunt their growth. When given Sanatogen they rapidly improve. One child who at three years old, in consequence of Malaria, weighed only half a pound more than it did when it was a year and a half, was given a small quantity of Sanatogen daily, and its weight at once began to go up half a pound a week.

Just as Malaria causes wasting in children it makes adults prematurely old, in consequence of the depression of the vitality of the system. This condition is rapidly cured by Sanatogen which removes the prematurely old look and soon substitutes for the feeble will and listless spirit a healthy interest in normal pursuits.

An exceedingly interesting pamphlet on the subject of Malaria has been written by a physician who had a wide experience of it in India. In order to give this momentous publication "Malaria, its Causes and Effects" the widest publicity, the proprietors of the copyright have instructed Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, to distribute a limited number of copies free of charge, to anyone who may feel interested in it, and will send them a postcard mentioning the "Indian Field."

Sanatogen, by the way, may be obtained direct from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, and at all chemists, etc.

DOG MEDICINES

MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,

And in BOMBAY from THACKER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

was refused. Whitley saved smartly from Kyle and at the end of twenty-five minutes Suttle fouled Humphreys. BURY vs. WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—A crowd of about 12,090 people witnessed the match at Bury between these teams. Birnie, Bury's new player, made his first appearance for the club at outside right. From the start the game was well contested, both goals being subject to strong attacks. For Woolwich Fitchie and Satterthwaite put in fine shots, while Kay and Hibbert nearly scored for Bury. On the whole McDonald had harder shots to save than the Bury goalkeeper, but he brought off some fine clearances. Then, shortly before half-time Lewis scored for Woolwich Arsenal, who crossed over leading by 1 goal to 0. Soon after the resumption Woolwich Arsenal attacked, and Lewis sent in a splendid shot. Raeside, however, saved it and cleared well. Then with Bury pressing, McDonald twice brought off clever saves. Kay then equalised the scores about twenty minutes from the finish. For the rest of the game the exchanges were strenuously fought out, but nothing further was scored, and the result was a draw. Bury, 1; Arsenal, 1.

HOTSPUR vs. GLOSSOP.—At Tottenham Glossop played a hard, untiring game against Tottenham, and although a trifle lucky shared six goals with the Tottenham club. Injuries at Burnley, sickness, and the League international at Glasgow prevented Walton, Morris, and Woodward from playing, Woodruff, Leslie and Macfarlane respectively coming into the team. It was not expected that Burton would be able to play, and that Wilkes, who has just been transferred from Reading would take his place but Burton was not really fit, and it would have been better had he stood down. There was a sensational start to the match, Sharpe scoring for Glossop in four minutes from a pass by Raine and the last-named getting a second goal five minutes later from a reverse movement, Sharpe putting the ball across from the other wing. Tottenham were all at sea, with a driving snow in their faces, but they soon settled down to play good football, and from a free kick R. Steel scored. Half a minute later he got another goal from a centre by Woodruff, all four goals coming in the space of nine minutes from the time the first was shot. After this Tottenham had the best of the exchanges for a time, and Macfarlane hit the cross-bar with a fine header. Right up to half time play was fast, and both goals were threatened, but nothing more was scored. In the second half the Hotspurs pressed almost incessantly for a long time, but Butler kept a fine goal. After seventeen minutes Burton passed back to Hewitson, but did not kick hard enough, and the latter running out kicked the ball against Raine, and it rebounded into the net. Tottenham played a fine dashing game subsequntly, and Butler saved all sorts of shots cleverly. Eventually Macfarlane equalised, but try as they would Tottenham could not get through again, and so the game ended in a draw. Tottenham Hotspur, 3; Glossop, 3.

CLAPTON ORIENT vs. BIRMINGHAM.—Notwithstanding the cold and wintry weather, fully 6,000 spectators were present at Homerton to see the return League match with Birmingham. The Midlanders came without Kearns (their back), who was transferred to Ashton Villa during the week, and played Wormack, while Beer played centre forward. Clapton Orient had the same side that defeated Stockport County a fortnight previously, but it was not until the second period had been entered upon that Clapton displayed the smart form that accounted so easily for Stockport. Birmingham played by far the more powerful game at the start, within 12 minutes Ring, who, along with Chapple played a clever game on the left wing, caught a long return by Stokes and went clear through to beat Whittaker with a hard, low shot. Then a clever right wing manœuvre resulted in Bumphrey shooting a second goal. Clapton Orient immediately responded, Parker scoring from a melee, but at half-time the home team were still a goal down. Within a minute of resuming Bell negotiated a fine opening, from which Scott scored the equalising goal. Thereafter Clapton Orient played much superior football and the Birmingham defence had a most anxious time. Again and again the Orient attacked in a desperate effort to secure the winning goal, but for long Box and his backs defied all attempts. Parker once shot through as the referee's whistle went with two Birmingham players on the ground injured, but near the close Parker scored while Box was on the ground after a hot attack, and thus snatched a victory for the home side. Scott was injured as the goal was scored and was carried off. Clapton Orient, 3; Birmingham, 2.

BRADFORD vs. FULHAM.—A well-contested and interesting game at Bradford ended in a draw of one goal each. About 9,000 spectators were present. Smith was absent from the Bradford forwards, and Fulham re-arranged their front line, Freeman and Lee playing on the right wing. Bradford had the best of the opening half and McClarence scored, but close on half-time Parsonage equalised. After change of ends Bradford did most of the pressing, but they could not score again, Fulham defending in splendid style. Bradford, 1; Fulham, 1.

WALES vs. SCOTLAND.—Wales created a surprise on the 2nd instant by beating Scotland, at Wrexham, by 3 goals to 2. In most quarters Scottland had been regarded as probable winners, despite the fact that Wales were at home, and the best that was expected to happen to the Principality was a division of the points. Scotland, however, were at a big disadvantage in the absence of their centre-forward. Had Quinn been playing, the result might have been very different, but as it was, the Welsh defence was always able to hold the Scottish front rank, and even in the second half, when Scotland got the only two goals scored during that period Roose, Morris, and Blew, splendidly supported by their halves, were never mastered for any length of time.

Scotland have not beaten Wales in Wales since 1903, when they won at Cardiff, while they have not been successful at Wrexham since 1899. Previous to 1905 Wales, in thirteen matches played at Wrexham, had never beaten Scotland and only four times avoided defeat.

The defeat of Scotland has an important bearing on the international championship, and England's prospects of securing this are now exceedingly hopeful. Still, Scotland must be conceded a moderate share of bad luck in not being able to play the same brilliant forward line that represented the Scottish League on Saturday. The re-arrangement of the Welsh right wing worked excellently, Wynn and Meredith playing a splendid game throughout.

The match attracted a crowd of 8,000, the gate receipt being £361. One change was made in each team. Morris of Nottingham Forest was unable to turn out for the home side, and the front rank was re-arranged. Lot Jones was transferred from the right to the left wing to partner Evans, and George Wynn, of Wrexham, was brought into the team to accompany Meredith. In the Scottish team Hunter (Dundee) took the place of Quinn (Celtic). The ground was in a greasy condition owing to a fall of snow, and a rapid thaw after a severe frost. Despite this the game was contested at a rare pace throughout, and from start to finish was full of interest, and one of the keenest internationals ever seen on Wrexham Racecourse.

The Welshmen began with rare dash. The forwards combined beautifully, and the defence was very sound, while some of the Scotsmen proved bad marksmen. Play for a time was very even, but at last the Welsh right wing got well away, and from Wynn's centre Davies found the net. A few minutes later, Lot Jones ran through and beat McBride, thus giving Wales a second goal. Still another success awaited the Welshmen before the interval, when Davies again found the net, this success also resulting from a pass by Wynn. Half-time score:—Wales, 3; Scotland, 0.

The resumption saw the visitors playing in most vigorous fashion. They showed great determination and a keen desire to reduce thsir opponent's lead. Wales, however, offered a stubborn defence, and it was not until the half had been in progress 25 minutes that Walker scored the first goal for Scotland. Three minutes later, Bennett, whose pass enabled Walker to open Scotland's account, placed the ball neatly to Paul, and the Queen's Park amateur promptly availed himself of a splendid opening, and scored Scotland's second goal.

From this point to the finish, the play was fast and exciting. The Welsh defence was splendid, Roose, Morris, and Parry especially excelling themselves. Both teams made strenuous efforts to increase the score but failed, and the result was:—

Scotland	2

RUGBY RULES.

SCOTLAND vs. IRELAND.—Fifteens representing the Rugby talent of Scotland and Ireland met on the Inverleith ground, Edinburgh, to decide the thirty-second match between the countries. Of the previous encounters Scotland had won twenty-two to Ireland's six, and three had been drawn. Two changes had been made in the Scottish fifteen. Sloan and Stuart coming in for Gilray and Gowlland, whilst J. C. Blacklow, of Queen's College, Cork, filled the vacant place in the Irish pack. The weather had been fine during the week, but yesterday morning a light rain fell, which, however, ceased before the game commenced. The ground had been well protected, and looked to be in capital condition. Despite the uncertainty of the weather, there was a good attendance, the crowd probably numbering 15,000. The wind was very slight, but Scotland had the assistance of any advantage it might confer, for winning the toss, they decided to play with it at their back. Ireland kicked off at a quarter-past three and the first scrum was formed in the Scottish half. Magrath gained some ground for Ireland with a mark, and then Sloan got in a useful kick which Simson followed up, but could not secure the ball. However, the game was taken to the Irish twenty-five, but the visiting forwards replied with a rush, which took the ball back. The Scottish forwards replied with a similar movement, and from a penalty kick Scotland reached their opponents' goal line. After a hard struggle the Irish forwards managed to gain some ground, and reached a safer position. It could now be seen that the ground was on the soft side. The Scottish backs got in motion, and the ball was passed out to Simson, who was finely tackled and thrown into touch by Hinton. With a strong rush Ireland reached the centre and their backs attempted some passing, but the Scotch collaring was good. The game was fought out in the centre for a time until Simson had his kick charged down and Thompson found touch in the Scottish twenty-five. After this Ireland worked to their opponents' goal line, but they were collared, and Thrift, who put in a capital run, was well stopped by Schulze in the Scotch quarters. In turn Magrath and Simson made a move for their respective sides without any particular advantage to either. Then Tennent's kick was well followed up, and Hinton was tackled in his own quarters. A little later, from a long kick, the ball went into Ireland's touch in goal. Then came some rather bad passing by the Scotch backs Thrift put in a useful run and took the game to the centre, whilst Parke got in a good reply to a kick by Simson. Ireland were penalised for off side and McCallum gained ground by finding touch in the Irish half. However, the Irish forwards carried the next scrum, but subsequently were beaten by the opposing pack, who went through and tackled Hinton. Scotland thus reached their opponents' line, but were unable to maintain their position, the Irish forwards coming away, but spoiling themselves by getting off-side. Thompson made a clever feint to pass, and ran through some distance into the Scotch half before being stopped. Soon the game was back at the centre, the forwards continuing to have nearly all the play. Thompson again slipped through and with a good kick took the game into the Scottish twenty-five. Ireland now showed considerable improvement, and a great struggle went on just outside the Scottish line. The Irish backs got up a movement, but Parke spoiled a good chance by passing forward to Thrift. Ireland lost ground through slow heeling and Scotland with a rush got to mid-field. Lindsay-Watson made his mark and found touch in a good position, but the Irish forwards worked back and by quick following up prevented the full back from getting in his kick. Then came a bout of passing by the Irish backs, but Thrift was brough down by Pearson. Ireland had a free kick awarded, but Parke's shot at goal fell short. Then Sloan, by holding too long and then passing forward, lost a chance Simson got away and cleared Magrath, but was collared by Linton. Then, after a bout of passing, Lindsay-Watson scored a try for Scotland but McCallum failed at goal, and at half-time the score stood:

Scotland	1 try

In the second half Scotland quickly followed up the kick-off, and at once reached the Irish quarters, but Pinion replied by finding touch at the centre. A sharp Irish dribble took the play to the Scotch twenty-five and some scrambling play followed. At last the ball went out to the Irish left-wing and Magrath, after run, put in a kick and found good touch. Attempts were made by both sets of halves to get clear, but they were too well marked. With a rush Scotland went beyond the centre, and then Schulze made a mark, but failed to find touch. Thrift failed to field a kick by Schulze, and Hinton had to clear. Then Parke, following up his own kick, collared Sloan, this effort quite clearing for Ireland. The Irish forwards got away again, but as they had done on several occasions, kicked too hard, and the game went on in the centre on pretty much the same lines. Parke ran cleverly and gained ground and Thrift put in a splendid run, handing off two men and coming within an ace of scoring. Ireland, however, lost their position by faulty passing, chiefly by Thompson. Thrift made another good run, but could not get round, and after another rush by the Irish forwards Scotland were penalised. The charge was disallowed and Parke kicked a goal, thus making the score 3 points each. This score came about fifteen minutes after the resumption. On continuing Ireland were penalised, but Scotland did not gain much ground. The Irish forwards rushed to the centre, but Scotland were soon back again, Simson making a run and a fine kick, which Parke did not field, and Hinton was collared on the line. The Irish forwards, however, came away, using their feet well, whilst the Scotch forwards replied with a good effort, the game being continued near the Irish twenty-five line. Sloan made a mark, but did not find touch with his kick. Then came a bout of passing by the Scotch left wing, and Pearson was nearly in, being held up two or three yards from the Irish line. Ireland were again penalised, but McCallum's kick fell short. A bad cross kick by Tennent lost Scotland some ground, but Simson regained it with a run and a cross kick, and the game was taken to the Irish line. With a fine dash McGregor went over, scoring a try for Scotland, but again McCallum failed with the place kick. A couple of minutes later Kyle gained another try for Scotland in a forward rush, but it was rather a fortunate effort. Again McCallum's kick failed, but with only six or seven minutes left for play Scotland held a clear lead of 6 points. Afterwards Thrift and Parke carried the play very close to the Scottish line, but Ireland could not maintain the position, and when the whistle blew the score stood:

Scotland	3 tries.
Ireland	1 penalty goal.

SCOTLAND.—G, D. Schulze (London Scottish), back; J. T. Simson (Watsonians), J. Pearson (Watsonians) T. Sloan (Oxford University), and R. H. Lindsay-Watson (Hawick), three-quarter backs; J. M. Tennent (West of Scotland), and J. R. McGregor (Edinburgh University), half-backs; J. M. R. Scott (Edinburgh Academicals), G. M. Frew (Glasgow High School), A. C. McCallum (Watsonians), W. E. Referee—V. H Cartwright (E.R.U.).

LONDON WELSH vs. CHELTENHAM.—At West Ham, contrary to general expectations it was found possible to play this match, the somewhat milder weather having taken a good deal of the stone out of the ground. The ground, in fact, was on the soft side but the prevailing conditions were anything but good, snow falling throughout the match. London Welsh, although without Hardinge, were fairly strongly represented, but Cheltenham were not at full strength. The visitors playing a strong game forward just won after a capital struggle. The Cheltenham back lost many opportunities by faulty passing and on the whole the Welsh rear division were more accurate in their methods. Cheltenham held a strong lead after a quarter of an hour's play, Mather, Fry, and Beck each crossing the line, while T. Unwin goaled on two occasions. After this the Welsh backs played well together and were so successful that they gained a lead of a point at the interval, Edwards, Rowlands, Vivian and Maddocks grassing, Evans goaling once. London Welsh thus led by 14 points to 13 at the interval. In the concluding half the game was somewhat scrappy, but after Arthur had given Cheltenham the lead with an unconverted try the game improved, and the visitors were very lucky to keep the Welsh out. Their defence held out, however, and the home team were beaten by 16 points to 14. Cheltenham, 2 goals 2 tries; Welsh, 1 goal 3 tries.

BLACKHEATH vs. BIRKENHEAD.—Snow fell throughout the game in this match at Blackheath and there was but a sparse attendance. The Heathens had a very good side out and play was very lively on the hard surface. Soon after the start the home side attacked and Marsden made the way easy for Nicholas to score a try. Stone failed at the goal-kick. A little later a clever series of passes ended in Mounsey scoring under the bar and Stone added the extras. Then E. S. Ashcroft scored at the corner for Birkenhead and Pemberton kicked a fine goal. The Heathens retaliated and further tries were scored before the interval, Mounsey and Nicholas being the scorers, although each had the way made easy. Stone placed one goal and Heathens led by 16 points to 5 at the interval. On crossing over, the Heathens were soon busy, and Hill got an unconverted try, but, after failing to get through with an easy chance, Blackheath were driven back and E. S. Ashcroft again scored for the visitors. Pemberton converted this try also from the touch line. Both sides missed chances after this, but nothing further was scored, and Blackheath won by 19 points to 10. Blackheath, 2 goals 3 tries; Birkenhead, 2 goals.

LONDON IRISH vs. BEDFORD.—Snow was falling when the Bedford team arrived, but they decided to play, despite this and the further handicap of frozen ground. Then it was not without some discussion, and finally the teams took the field at a quarter to four. Only a thirty-minutes half was possible and most of that was taken up by play of a scrambling nature, which took place in mid-field O'Grady and Moran at length burst through, but some fine fielding and passing by Burber turned the advantage into a try for Bedford. Ridgeway was responsible for the actual score and he placed a neat try in an easy position for Read to convert. The latter, however, failed and thus the visitors led at the interval by 3 points to nil. If the display by the Irish backs was disappointing, that given by their forwards in the loose was much above expectation, and it was one of these rushes that lead up to a try by Sherwin, who scrambled over. Some worthy three-quarter play on the part of the Bedford backs resulted in a deciding try being obtained by R. Willet, and in this case, as in the others, the goal kick proved unsuccessful. The visitors therefore won on their merits by 6 points to 3. Bedford, 2 tries; London Irish, 1 try.

LONDON HOSPITAL vs. HARLEQUINS.—While the Hospital were at full strength at Hale End, the Harlequins were without Dove, Schofield and others of their back divison, in addition to "Walker," from among the forwards. The turf was in surprisingly good condition, considering the wintry weather, and there was a good attendance. At the outset there was little in it, the feature of the football being the excellence of both sets of halfbacks, but better supported by their forwards, the Hospital pair (Lindsay and Heath) were always the more prominent in attack. Up to half-time nothing was scored, for while the home team did most of the attacking the visitors were superb in defence. Just before changing ends, however, Sibree was hurt, and though he pluckily continued he was of little use, and Lambert also went lame towards the close. As a consequence London Hospital had a better chance of pressing home their continuous attacks; first Palmer and then Lloyd scored for them. Lloyd was successful with his place kick and the Hospital—always the better side on the day—won by 8 points to 0. London Hospital, 1 goal 1 try; Harlequins, 0.

RUGBY DISPUTE ENDED.—The dispute between England and Scotland is happily ended, praise the pigs, and the match—quite the most interesting of all the internationals—will take place for a certainty.

What has happened has been, very briefly, this. Scotland said: Your payment of players makes dead for professionalism, and we won't have it." Unfortunately the Scottish letter came at a most unfortunate moment, and the idea among most was that the unfortunate moment was "accidental, done on purpose."

England replied: We love your motives, but not your methods." Later England gave in to the Scottish demands, and the International Board decided that the match should be played. Then Scotland wanted a bit too much and England had to stand firm.

The following is the text of the letter sent to Mr. Smith, the secretary of the Scottish Union, by Mr. Marriott:—

Dear Smith,—I have laid your letter before my emergency committee. The assurance for which you ask seems to them really unnecessary, as any union can raise any question at any time.

At the same time, as you make a point of it my committee authorise me to say that no objection will be made by them to any union raising the question of irregularities which in their opinion may have occurred prior to the date of the resolution I forwarded to you on the 18th ult.

Kindly wire me if you will now be able to play on the 20th, as having to put up considerable extra stand accommodation it is imperative that I should know.

(Sd.) C. J. B. MARRIOTT.

Yesterday Mr. J. A Smith wired to Mr. C. J. B. Marriott that Scotland were willing to play the match, mentioning the 20th as the date. So that's all right. Though there's been a bit of feeling against the Scottish committee, both in Scotland and in England, there is no blinking the fact that Scotland, in standing out against anything that might jeopardise amateurism, or encourage professionalism, did the right thing in the true interests of the game.

CROSS COUNTRY RUNNING.

THE SOUTHERN CHAMPIONSHIP.—Despite a constant downfall of snow, the crowd, which stretched from the Grand Stand to Tattenham corner (Epsom) was the largest which had ever gathered to witness the championship.

The Eastbourne A. C. did not start, and the 24 clubs which took the field were represented by 235 runners. The competitors were sent away splendidly, and on reaching the Grand Stand, 150 yards from the start, B. C. Long (Polytechnic H.) was seen to be leading by a couple of yards from F. A. Ritchie, of the Essex Beagles.

At the end of the first circuit of about 3 miles, A. Williams (Kent A. C.) led in 17mins. 25secs., followed, in the order named, by A. E. Wood (Essex Beagles), J. A. Pearce, (Highgate H.) C. H. Ruffell (Highgate H.), W. H. Brooks (Highgate H.), and F. A. Knott (South London H.). On the completion of two laps (about six miles), Wood showed the way in 35mins. 29secs., next, in order as written, being F. C. Neaves (Surrey A. C.), Pearce, Brooks, H. Green (Sutton H.), J. S. Satch (Kent A. C.), Williams, Ritchie, G. Still (Highgate H.), and J. G. Coughlin (Highgate H.).

Wood eventually won by about 140 yards from Pearce, while the Highgate Harriers, who had five men in the first dozen, and their last scoring man only fourteenth, again won the team championship with the low score of 63 points and by no fewer than 41 points from the Herne Hill Harriers, who were second with a score of 104.

GOLF.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. MID-SURREY.—At Old Deer Park, Richmond, on Saturday, the 27th ultimo, this contest resulted in favour of the Mid-Surrey Club by 5 points to 4. One of the most noteworthy features of the match was the fine form of Mr. J. S. Worthington, who opposed the Cambridge captain, Mr. B. Hammond Chambers. The Mid-Surrey representative led from the start, and became dormy at the twelfth hole. He eventually proved successful by 5 and 3. Mr. S. J. Chesterton played well against Mr. C. L. Macdona. He was 3 up with 3 to play, but the Cantab won the next two holes. Going to the home green, Mr. Chesterton sliced his second shot out of bounds, and Mr. Macdona looked like squaring the match. The Mid-Surrey representative, however, effected a hard half, and thus won the match by a hole. Mr. E. S. Ulyat was 1 up on Mr. Frank Newnes, M. P., going to the home green but he put his second shot into the bunker and lost the hole. Mr. Newnes, therefore, halved the round. Mr. J. B. Dudgeon and Mr. J. F. Ireland, the cricket and hockey Blue, had a tight match up to the eleventh hole. At this point the players were "all square" but Mr. Dudgeon lost the next four holes and was beaten by 4 and 3. Appended are the scores:—

ATHLETIC SPORTS.

'VARSITY SPORTS.

MOST unfavourable weather was experienced for the fixture at both Universities. There was six inches of snow at Cambridge and about the same amount at Oxford; but the Cinder tracks were cleared and though, of course, the going was heavy several capital performances were recorded. Appended are details:—

OXFORD.

First Day. 100 YARDS RACE.—Heat 1: J. W. Woodrow (Queen's), 1; A. C. MacNabb (Balliol), 2; E. A. Hunter (Christ Church), 3. Won by three yards; a foot between second and third. Time—11secs. Heat 2: L. C. Hull (Brasenose), 1; G. W. Nowell (Queen's), 2; E. Spencer Jones (Pembroke), 3. Won easily by five yards; a yard between second and third. Time—10⅗secs.

120 YARDS HURDLE RACE.—Heat 1, N. Field (Brasenose), 1; M. V. Macdonald (Lincoln), 2; J. W. Woodrow (Queen's), 3. Won easily by eight yards. Time—17⅘secs. Heat 2: G. R. L. Anderson (Trinity), 1; R. L. Robinson (Magdalen), 2; D. G. W. Anson (Trinity), 3. Won by four yards; a yard divided the next two. Time—17⅘secs.

THROWING THE HAMMER.—G. E. Putnam (Christ Church), 143ft. 6in., 1; D. F. Herring (Merton), 90ft. 11in., 2; C. W. Garner (Oriel), 3.

QUARTER-MILE RACE.—Heat 1: P. Stormonth Darling (New College), 1; L. C. Hull (Brasenose), 2; A. H. Stuart (University), 3. Won by a few inches; four yards between second and third. Time—52⅘secs. Heat 2: C. Howard Smith (Brasenose), 1; G. R. L. Anderson (Trinity), 2; E. A. Hunter (Christ Church), 3. Won by four yards; six yards between the next two. Time—52⅘secs.

ONE MILE RACE.—R. D. Clarke (Hertford), 1; A. E. Cator (Keble), 2; A. M. Brown (Oriel), 3; R. E. Knight (Pembroke), 4. A very close race, won on the post; three yards divided second and third. Time—4mins. 35⅘secs.

HIGH JUMP.—A. N. Doorley (St. John's) and J. S. Huxley (Balliol) tied at 5ft. 5⅛in.; E. G. Joseph (Lincoln) and R. F. Blake (Exeter) tied at 5ft. 3⅛in.

Second Day. 100 YARDS RACE.—L. C. Hull (Brasenose), 1; J. W. Woodrow (Queen's), 2; A. MacNabb (Balliol), 3. Won by 3 yards; 2 yards divided the next two. Time—10⅗secs.

LONG JUMP.—W. H. Bleadon (Brasenose), 22ft. 2in., 1; J. D. Casswell (Pembroke), 21ft 6in., 2; F. G. Buchanan (Trinity), 20ft. 9⅛in., 3.

QUARTER-MILE RACE.—L. C. Hull (Brasenose), 1; C. Howard Smith (Brasenose), 2; G. R. L. Anderson (Trinity), 3. A fine race, won by half a yard; a few inches between the next two. Time—51secs.

PUTTING THE WEIGHT.—W. H. Bleadon (Brasenose), 38ft. 2in., 1; R. L. Robinson (Magdalen), 34ft. 5in., 2; J. D. Casswell. (Pembroke), 31ft. 7⅛in., 3.

THREE MILES RACE.—A. M. Brown (Oriel), 1; S. P. B. Mais (Christ Church), 2; A. Chandler (Hertford), 3. Won easily by 50 yards; 200 yards divided second and third. Time—15mins 13secs.

CAMBRIDGE.

First Day. 100 YARDS RACE.—Heat 1: R. H. Lindsay Watson (Glenalmond and Trinity), 1; H. Banister (Merchant Taylors' and Jesus), 2. Won by two feet. Time—10⅘secs. Heat 2: H. R. Rigg (Hereford and St. John's), 1; C. Armstrong (St. Lawrence's Ramsgate, and Jesus), 2. Won by a foot. Time—10⅗secs. Heat 3: W. T. Wetenhall (City of London and Caius), 1; P. B. Phelps (Loughborough and Downing), 2. Won by a yard. Time—10⅘secs.

120 YARDS HURDLE RACE.—A. G. Boycott (St. John's, Leatherhead, and Selwyn), 1; M. G. D. Murray (St. Peter's, South Australia), 2. Boycott held a slight lead most of the way and won by half a yard. Time—16⅗secs.

QUARTER-MILE RACE.—Heat 1: R. B. Horsfield (Harrow and Trinity), 1; V. G. Thew (Charterhouse and Trinity Hall), 2. Won by half a foot. Time—51⅘secs. Heat 2: C. Armstrong (St. Lawrence's and Jesus), 1; W. H. Pelham (Eton and Trinity), 2. Won after a hard race, by a couple of feet. Time—52⅘secs.

HIGH JUMP.—A. C. B Bellerby (St. Lawrence's and Emmanuel), 5ft. 6in., and W. T. Warwick (Doncaster and Emmanuel), 5ft. 6in., equal; L. G. Bouchier (Warwick and Trinity), 5ft. 5in., 3.

PUTTING THE WEIGHT.—W. H. Smyth (King's Lynn and Clare), 34ft. 11½in., 1; H. J. Bower (Uppingham and Emmanuel), 31ft. 5in., 2.

ONE MILE RACE.—H. P. Dawson (Oundle and Trinity), 1; G. N. Selby Lowndes (Clifton and Queen's), 2; R. E. Garrod (Oundle and Clare), 3. There were ten competitors. Dawson won by four yards; twelve yards divided the next two men. Time—4mins. 37⅘secs.

Second Day. 100 YARDS RACE.—H. R. Rigg (Hereford and St. John's), 1; W. T. Wetenhall (City of London and Caius), 2; C. Armstrong (St. Lawrence's and Jesus), 3. The track was somewhat heavy, and there was a slight cross wind. Rigg held a trifling lead throughout, and won by half a yard. Time—1 yard inside 10⅗secs.

LONG JUMP.—M. G. D. Murray (St. Peter's, Adelaide, and Trinity), 20ft. 11in., 1; A. C. B. Bellerby (St. Lawrence's and Emmanuel), 20ft. 9⅛in., 2; H. Leakey, 19ft. 7in., 3; C. H. Williams, 19ft. 6in., 4.

THROWING THE HAMMER.—R. H. Lindsay Watson (Glenalmond and Trinity), 140ft. 1in., 1; H. J. Bower (Uppingham and Emmanuel), 108ft., 2; F. A. Trenchart (Oundle and Trinity Hall), 107ft. 7in., 3.

QUARTER-MILE RACE.—C. Armstrong (St. Lawrence's and Jesus), 1; W. H. Pelham (Eton and Trinity), 2; R. B. Horsfield (Harrow and Trinity), 3. Armstrong was in front all the way, and won by eight yards from Pelham, who, in turn, beat Horsfield by four yards. V. G. Thaw did not finish. Time—51⅘secs.

THREE MILES RACE.—G. N. Selby-Lowndes (Clifton and Queen's), 1; K. Hooper (Aldenham and Queen's), 2; W. B. Loveless (Wellington and Pembroke), 3; R. E. Garrod (Oundle and Clare), 4. There were twelve starters. Hooper took the lead after a mile, and remained at the head of affairs until the last lap. Selby-Lowndes went to the front 120 yards from home and won by 15 yards; 40 yards divided second and third. Time—15mins. 20⅘secs.

BOXING.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY COMPETITIONS.—The annual boxing and fencing competitions at Oxford University took place in the Gymnasium, on the 27th ultimo, before a large company.

Of the light-weights, the first bout, between Brown and Gibbs, produced a capital display, although in the opening round Brown was troubled by a hit on the jaw, which floored him. He, however, boxed in plucky fashion, and at the commencement of the second round made a bold effort to recover his position. Gibbs was much the fresher, and using both hands well, took a strong lead half-way through. In the last round Brown, after a plucky display, was brought down again, and before the expiration of time Gibbs was given the award.

The second bout, Townsend vs. Pearson, went to the latter From the start he used both hands well, and sending his man down more than once, he was a good winner when the referee stopped the bout half-way through the last round.

In the third bout, between Rosman and Fenwick, the latter did all the damage. Getting his right home repeatedly, he brought this man down just on the finish of the round, and repeating the performance at the commencement of the second, victory went to the Magdalen representative.

In the second series, Fenwick met Gibbs, and both displaying an excessive amount of caution the first round passed with no damage to either. Gibbs opened strongly in the second round, but Fenwick administered some good checks with his left, and the round ended with little advantage to either. In the last meeting Fenwick opened by forcing his man on the ropes, after which there was a fine rally, in which both got home some telling blows, the advantage being with Gibbs. The latter used his weight to the best advantage, and after a rattling set-to was a good winner.

Pearson sparred a bye with G. B. Lynch.

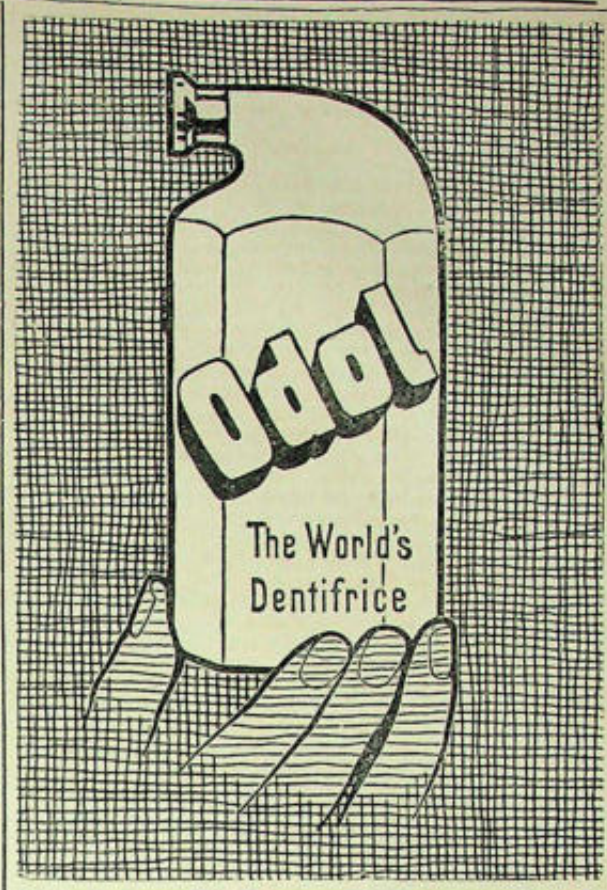
The final, between Pearson and Gibbs, produced a capital contest. Pearson went for his man in fine style at the onset, using both hands to good effect, but Gibbs held his own, and there was nothing in it when they came together for the last round. In this, however, Gibbs out-fought his man, and twice bringing him down, gained the verdict amidst loud applause.

Only two competitors turned out for the "bantams," Griffiths (Keble) and Spread (Exeter). There was a lot of wild hitting in the first round, which ended without much damage being done. On getting together a second time there was a rattling set-to for a while; but it was cut short by Griffiths landing home on the jaw, and his opponent being counted out.

The first bout of the feathers, between Corker and Sillem, saw the former receiver-general all through, and after being brought down at the end of the second round, the referee stepped in midway through the third and gave the award in favour of the Oriel representative. Corker, who was giving away a lot in height and weight, was heartily applauded for his plucky display.

Rutherford sparred a bye with M Thornewill (New).

In the final there was little hard fighting in the first round, in which, however, Rutherford showed himself to be possessed of a very effective left. Sillem went for his man finely at the commencement of the second round, and got in a terrific punch with his right. Rutherford warmed to his work and there were some capital exchanges before it finished. Rutherford's left was again very much in evidence in the last round, repeatedly checking his opponent's onslaughts, and jabbing his man time after time with an occasional reminder with his right. He was a good winner at the finish.



Only Grenfell and Fairbridge competed in the middle-weights, and in the opening round the advantage was with Grenfell, who did nearly all the leading. Things were even in the second meeting until Fairbridge got home a short right on the jaw, and Grenfell falling back heavily on his head was unable to come up to time.

The Heavies also resolved itself into a duel, in which Day (Christ Church) opposed Basden (Lincoln) The latter who was giving away a stone, had no chance from the outset and was knocked out at the end of the round.

Officials:—Boxing: Referee. G. T. Dunning: judges, G. N. Hall-Say and J. W. Douglas. Fencing: Judges, Dr. Duigan and Messrs. Carter and Doyne; M C. C, B. Gull. Details:—

LIGHT-WEIGHT COMPETITION.

First Series.—A. H. Gibbs (St. John's) beat J. H. Brown (Worcester); C. G. Pearson (Jesus) beat T. A. Townsend (New College); C. R. Fenwick (Magdalen) beat H. F. Bosman (St. John's).

Second Series.—Gibbs beat Fenwick; Pearson a bye.
Final.—Gibbs beat Pearson.

BANTAM-WEIGHT COMPETITION.

Final.—A. W. Griffiths (Keble) beat R. Spread (Exeter).

FEATHER-WEIGHT COMPETITION.

First Series.—A. C. Sillem (Oriel) beat T. G. Corker (Trinity); J. W. Rutherford (Merton) a bye.
Final.—Rutherford beat Sillem.

MIDDLE-WEIGHT COMPETITION.

Final.—K. Fairbridge (Exeter) beat Hon. J. Grenfell (Balliol,

HEAVY-WEIGHT COMPETITION.

Final.—F. Day (Christ Church) beat E. D. Basden (Lincoln).

FENCING COMPETITIONS.

Sabres.—Count Esterhezy (Queen's) beat A. Hossack (Christ Church).
Foils.—R. Chalmers (Oriel) beat M. P. Namek (Queen's).

CAMBRIDGE TRIALS:—The Cambridge University boxing and fencing trial competitions attracted an unusually small number of entries this year. Practice for the Lent races no doubt prevents rowing men from competing, and the presence of a full contingent of Old Blues may have discouraged some of the younger generation, but it was rather disappointing to find that a popular weight like the middles was contested by only two competitors, while no one appeared to challenge Mr. G. H. Fisher in the feathers.

HEAVY-WEIGHTS.—G. M. Chapman (Caius) beat H. M. Stephenson (Caius). Stephenson rushed in wildly, and was met by a steady straight left. In the second round he received a good deal of punishment; and in the course of the third round the fight was stopped, the Rugby Blue gaining a decisive victory.

G. A. Lilly (Caius) beat J. W. Coles (Trinity Hall). Lilly, last year's heavy-weight Blue, had considerable advantage in height and rich. He is quicker than he was last year, and his blows seemed to carry more power. Coles appeared to best advantage in the second round, but lost on points.

Final.—Lilly beat Chapman. Chapman made plucky efforts against the Old Pauline's great advantages of reach, but Lilly was able to meet most of his leads with stop-hits, and won on points.

LIGHT-WEIGHT.—Six competitors entered. In the semi-finals R. W Jennings (Jesus) beat C. E. Storrs (Pembroke). Jennings, winner of the novice' light weights, trusted almost entirely to the straight left. He boxed throughout with the left shoulder raised in an exaggerated way to guard the chin. His opponent, the old Blue for this weight, mainly attacked the body. In the last round Jennings's advantage in reach enabled him to land a succession of straight jabs and left hooks on the chin, which sent Storrs down for six seconds. On rising he was crossed with the right and went down again, the fight being then stopped.

E. J. Boyd (Sidney) sparred a bye.

FINAL.—Jennings beat Boyd. Boyd attacked vigor-ously, but Jennings, using a right cross-counter, sent him down three times in the first round and Boyd being dazed the fight was stopped.

BANTAM WEIGHTS.—N. D. Williams (Trinity) beat A. V. Ratcliffe (Sidney). Williams had the advantage in foot-work and led throughout. Ratcliffe fought rather wildly towards the end.

In the fencing competitions, which had been decided privately, V. C. M. Reeves (Magdalene) won both the foils and the sabres. Mr. Reeves will probably reserve himself for the foils in the inter-'Varsity competitions, however, in which case G. H. Charleton (St. Catharine's) represent Cambridge in the sabres

ROWING.

THE BOAT RACE.

Another stage of Boat Race preparation has now been reached The Oxford eight migrate to Henley to-morrow, which is wise policy. They badly want change of scene and surroundings, while the livelier regatta course will more fittingly prepare them for tidal-water work ten days or a fortnight hence. They leave the Isis distinctly one of the beefiest and speediest combinations seen for some years, and their new racing craft is being built to suit a crew averaging some 12·6 per man. Dr. Bourne and Mr. Claude Holland have done their teaching of detail work right well, and I think Mr. F. W. Warre will be gratified when he takes them in hand from to-day. The latest order of seating need not create any alarm, by the way. Both W. P. M. Newman and A. S. Garton are Old Etonian oarsmen of repute, who did splendid work in this year's trials, and are fast developing into something very good. The dropping of A. E. Kitchin (the Blue) was certainly a surprise, yet the president and his advisers know exactly what they are about. Of the Oxonians' pace there can be no two questions, while vast improvement in swing, loin play, and recovery is now being shown even at a fast rate of stroke. The rhythm is very much better, and there is a truly refreshing freedom and liveliness about the work generally. Some appear to doubt certain oarsmen's stamina, but that is so much nonsense. There is absolutely no reason why every man should not prove a stayer.

The Cambridge Eight are due at Putney next Monday. They were wise to do some interim rowing on the Ouse, for obvious reasons. A direct migration to tidal waters from the sluggish Cam would have put them all at sixes and sevens for a time, Avoirdupois is also their strong point this year, as their new craft is being built for a crew averaging some 12st. 7½lb. per man. Eleventh-hour alterations in their case have brought about increased pace, far greater freedom of action generally, and splendid rhythm. It is idle to dispute that fact that Stuart's installation at stroke again has effected vast improvement in other respects. There is now more "devil" and determination throughout, while the moral effect of his presence at his old thwart was apparent from the first. He seems to inspire all the others to doughty deeds. G. E. Fairbairn makes a capital bow, and H. E. Swanston (Loretto and Jesus) is fast settling down into a workman like No. 2. Swanston has a wonderfully successful racing record, besides adding appreciably to the weight and strength of the boat. Nr. 4 seems the butt for certain critics, I note, yet there is no more honest "plugger" engaged than the Old Uppingham oarsman. Like their rivals, pace is also a feature of this year's Cambridge crew. Both on Saturday and Monday last they showed fine speed for over a mile, excellent form being preserved from start to finish. The characteristic leg-drive of the 1906-07-08 crews, too, is beginning to assert itself. They are just the crew to find high favour with the Putney critics from the first, and, on very latest form, to develop into a combination well above the average. Their work will be done from the Leander headquarters, and "Bill" East will again render them valuable service in many ways.

THE CAMBRIDGE "LENTS."—Fourteen bumps in the Cambridge "Lents" on Saturday, the concluding day, made the total for the four days 51, but this is not so large as usual, being fourteen short of last year's figures and seven behind the 1907 total. This is chiefly accounted for by the fact that in all only ten bumps were made in the first division. The rowing was hardly up to last year's standard, whilst the steering was the worst witnessed for some years, the King's first boat cox being the only one to exhibit any knowledge of the art.

Only five boats won their oars—Jesus (Head of the River), Clare II., Pembroke IV., Queen's II., and Clare III., (three bumps and "getting on"). The Pembroke boat was composed of all Rugby footballers, and had only been practising about a fortnight. H. J. S. Morton, the international, was rowing No. 5.

The two most successful clubs are Clare and Queen's. The Clare first boat went down one place, but the second boat ascended five places, making two bumps on one afternoon, whilst the third boat "got on" and went up three places. Queen's made three bumps, whilst their second boat did one better. In addition to those mentioned, First Trinity 2 and 5, Caius 2, and Jesus 3, also made three bumps. Only two boats went down each day—Emmanuel 2 and Christ's 2.

On Saturday Messrs. L. H. K. Bushe Fox, G. N. M. Bland, M. A. Lloyd, J. F. A. Trotter, and P. A. Cooper officiated as judges. Details:—

Third Division.—Order of starting:—Selwyn 2, King's 2, Pembroke 4, Emmanuel 3, Trinity Hall 3, Peterhouse, Queen's 2, Christ's 2, Jesus 3, Pembroke 5, Downing, First Trinity 5, Magdalene 2, Clare 3, Christ's 3, First Trinity 6.—Selwyn 2 were never challenged by King's 2 on Saturday, but the latter were chased by the Pembroke "Rugger" boat and had to give in at Grassy. Trinity Hall 3 got within three yards of Emmanuel 3 at the Pike and Eel, but no nearer. Peterhouse held out to Grassy, but then had to give way to Queen's 2. In the Gut Jesus 3 had no difficulty in bumping Christ's 3. Pembroke 5 got over, but the four following boats stopped at the Little Ditch. First Trinity 5 running down Downing and Magdalene 2 and having their colours lowered by Clare 3. Christ's 3 and First Trinity 6 got over.

Second Division.—Order of starting:—Third Trinity Trinity Hall 2, Pembroke 2, Caius 2, Emmanuel 2, First Trinity 3, King's, St. Catherine's, Magdalene, Selwyn, Pembroke 3, Lady Margaret 3, Clare 2, Caius 3, First Trinity 4, Selwyn 2.—The Etonians were more than their distance away when the Hall 2 had to acknowledge defeat to Pembroke 2. Caius 2 got over, but after a hard race to the Willows Emmanuel 2 were vanquished by First Trinity 3. 'Cat's" quickly gained on King's and achieved their object at the Red Grind. Magdalene, Selwyn and Pembroke 3 were their distance apart at the finish. As early as the Little Ditch Clare 2 made their fifth bump by rowing up on Lady Margaret 3, whilst half way up Post Reach, Caius 3 had their colours lowered by First Trinity 4, and Selwyn paddled over.

First Division.—Jesus, Lady Margaret, First Trinity, Trinity Hall, Caius, Emmanuel, Clare, Christ's, Pembroke, First Trinity 2, Jesus 2, Corpus, Sidney, Lady Margaret 2, Queen's, Third Trinity.—Jesus rowed clean away from Lady Margaret, who were rowing very badly and First Trinity coming up after Grassy easily bumped them at the Glass Houses. At the finish Caius were their distance off the Hall. At Grassy Clare looked like overtaking Emmanuel, but could not get near enough, and at the Willows were themselves defeated by Christ's. At Grassy First Trinity 2 rowed upon Pembroke and Jesus 2 rowed over Corpus reached the Glass Houses, but then had their colours lowered by Sidney. Lady Margaret 2 and Queen's had a fairly hard race, but nothing resulted, the Johnians keeping well away, with Third Trinity their distance behind Queen's.

Hunting.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

THE Bye Day Meet at the Cross Roads, Melon Ground, was a big one and a splendid run was the result of a good scenting morning. A surprisingly thick fog awaited us and the dew was exceptionally heavy as we moved round to the north of Sahar Hill. Soon away to the accompaniment of very confident "music," we galloped fast over Bomanwadi Valley, in the direction we have so often taken lately, towards Vangoli. Crossing the nullah at the old familiar spot where the enclosure lies, we most of us skirted it and carried on to the Backwater over fine country. In the Mango Tope the other side of the water, hounds gave the quarry a great chase and eventually hunted him out over the road into Powai Valley. So dense was the mist here that hounds could not be seen and we followed them by ear to Hog's Back Hill. With a momentary check, hounds were after him round it amongst the undergrowth and rocks, then into Horse Shoe Valley. Taking to the famous big hill here, he is given no rest and, coming down, takes to another further on. The hunt continues along the whole range of Powai Hills before he again came down into the plains. When he did, however, and his end seemed certain one of those unaccountable things occurred—he was hopelessly lost and had to be given up.

There was again a thick fog and a certain amount of moisture in the air on the extra day, but of a "muggy" description which, though scent lay well, was not as acceptable as when there is some crispness in it. To an extra meet, the attendance on the flats was big, and to miss none of the already short morning an early move was made to the Chuckla brickfields.

A jackal breaking, we went away at a fast pace over rice fields into the open Melon Ground towards Vangoli. Turning along the water main, hounds led us past Sahar Church, which meant tricky going as far as Bomanwadi Valley. Towards Vangoli again and the Andheri road we meet good country once more and a fast gallop ends in the killing of our quarry in the open.

It being still early, the Master made a move to the covert near the Andheri road and met with immediate success. This one did not lead us a very straight run, making first over the rice fields to Chuckla Hill, climbing it and dropping down into a big plantation. Routing him out of this, hounds hunted their quarry into Parla, and in the village put an end to it. At the aforementioned plantation we met barbed wire and righteous indignation results. We can no longer boast that "ware wire" is an expression we have no use for.

We are warned that next Bye Day will be the last Meet, and doubtless a very full field will turn out to see the last of the season.

THE VENUGOPAL CUP TOURNAMENT.

MYSORE IMPERIAL SERVICE LANCERS vs. RAJAH VENUGOPAL'S TEAM.—The competition opened with the game between these teams on the 15th instant. Play was fast and interesting throughout, the Lancers winning by 3 goals to nil.

First Chukker.—Mysore attacked and Captain Walshe in saving sustained a nasty fall, but recovered sufficiently to continue playing and render good service to his side. Mysore continued the pressure and Murad Beg scored their first goal. The Rajah's team were kept busy defending and shortly before the close of the period another accident occurred, Rajagopal having to retire, a substitute playing in his stead during the next two chukkers.

Second Chukker.—Level play throughout. No score.

Third Chukker.—Both goals were visited, the Lancers having the better of the exchanges, but this period was also pointless.

Fourth Chukker.—Rajagopal resumed his place, but Mysore did most of the attacking, and after Raja Urs just missed scoring, Murad Beg put on a second goal. Rajah Venugopal almost secored for the Madras team from a pass by Walshe. Score: I. S. Lancers 2 goals.

Fifth Chukker.—Fast up and down play, Walshe had hard luck in not scoring after a good run and the Lancers were kept on the defensive for a spell. At length they came away again. Murad Beg missed by inches, but Raja Urs put on a third point. Score: I. S. Lancers 3 goals.

Sixth Chukker.—Walshe was conspicuous with two good runs, his final effort going wide in each case. The Madras team gained no advantage from a free hit for a foul against the Lancers and the Mysore team coming away Murad Beg scored again. Final score: I. S. Lancers 4 goals; Rajah Venugopaul's team nil. Teams:—

First Chukker.—"A" Team pressed at the start, Hidayat Ali eventually opening the scoring. Ranjit Singh next made a good run but missed his shot at goal. "A" Team pressed for the rest of the chukker, Worgan and Ross hitting goals. Score: "A" 3 goals.

Second Chukker.—"B" Team had quite as much of the play as "A" but they were weak in front of goal. Ross and Hidayat Ali registered a goal each for "A." Score: "A" 5 goals.

Third Chukker.—"B" Team attacked strongly and after several shots had been missed, Jarvis scored their first goal Score: "A" 5 goals; "B" 1 goal.

Fourth Chukker.—Fast and evenly contested; each team scored a goal. Ahmed Khan for "B" and Hidayat Ali for "A." Up and down play closing the chukker. Score: "A" 6 goals, "B" 2 goals.

Fifth Chukker.—"A" Team took up the attack and put on 3 goals, Worgan being responsible for 2 goals and Hidayat Ali for 1 goal. Towards the end of the chukker Jarvis scored for "B" after a good run. Score: "A" 9 goals, "B" 3 goals.

Sixth Chukker.—"B" attacked hotly but were kept out by Ross, and then "A" got in a couple of good runs, and goals being scored by Konsal Singh and Hidayat Ali. Final Score: "A" Team 4 goals. "B" 3 goals. Teams:—

Final.

MYSORE IMPERIAL SERVICE LANCERS vs. "A" TEAM, 20TH DECCAN HORSE.—These teams met in the final game on the 19th instant. The Deccan Horse outplayed their opponents and won by 10 goals to nil.

Rajah Venugopal was "at home," there was a large gathering of spectators, including Their Excellencies Sir Arthur and Lady Lawley, and the magnificent trophy and smaller cups were handed to the winners at the conclusion of the game by Lady Lawley.

First Chukker.—The Deccan Horse attacked and from a scrimmage in Mysore territory the first goal was scored. They continued to attack and Worgan and Konsal Singh each hit a goal. Score: 20th Deccan Horse 3 goals.

Second Chukker.—Mysore were prominent for a spell and then the 20th got away and registered another goal. They kept up a heavy pressure and after some ineffectual attempts hit another goal. Score: 20th, 5 goals.

Third Chukker.—The Mysore team were kept on the defensive, but the 20th's efforts to score were unsuccessful till just before the close of the period when a penalty against the Lancers gave the Deccan Horse an easy shot. A penalty for offside against the 20th earlier in the chukker was unproductive. Score: 20th 6 goals.

Fourth Chukker.—The Deccan Horse kept up a bombardment of the Mysore goal. The flags had many narrow escapes and then the Mysore team rallied and took the play into their opponents' territory. It was not for long, however, for the Deccan Horse returned to the attack once more and Worgan hit a goal. Score: 20th 7 goals.

Fifth Chukker.—Worgan rushed away and scored. The Deccan Horse kept up a strong attack but Mysore eventually cleared and were on the offensive for a spell. Then Konsal Singh got the ball, and taking it down scored in a mêlée. Worgan hit another goal on resuming. Score: 20th 10 goals.

Sixth Chukker.—Mysore attacked strongly and were unfortunate not to score. Up and down play followed, and in spite of gallant efforts by the Lancers, they were unable to break their opponents' defence and the game ended with the score: 20th Deccan Horse 10 goals, Mysore I. S. Lancers nil. Teams:—

THE MADRAS BOAT CLUB.

ANNUAL REGATTA.

Saturday, 20th March 1909.

THE annual regatta was held this afternoon and as usual proved a most successful fixture. Preliminary heats had been rowed off on previous evenings and the programme this afternoon was confined the finals to Mr. F. J. E. Spring, C.I.E., was Judge Major P. Ashworth, R.E., Umpire and Timekeeper and Mr. N E. Cachmoan, I.C.S., Starte.

There was a large attendance and by kind permission of the Officers the Band of the 88th Carnatic Infantry played during the afternoon. Mrs. Todhunter gave away the prizes at the conclusion of the proceedings and Major Ashworth, President of the Club, made a short speech. Details:—

WINCHESTER

Rifle and Pistol Cartridges

It's the careful and scientific manner in which Winchester cartridges are made and loaded which has earned for them a reputation for accuracy, reliability and uniformity which no other brands can approach. Winchester cartridge shells are carefully inspected before loading for size, length and conformity. All Winchester bullets are swaged by machinery which makes them exact in size, contour and density. Then the loading is done by automatic machinery which not only insures a uniform charge, buts seats the bullet in the shell so that its axis coincides with that of the shell; hence with that of the barrel of the arm. These are a few of the many reasons why Winchester cartridges in all calibers are the most satisfactory on the market.

9th DIVISION TOURNAMENT.

ROYAL FUSILIERS vs. 13TH HUSSARS.—These teams opened the tournament at Secunderabad on the 14th instant. The Fusiliers pressed at the start and Nihan tested the Hussars' custodian twice. Then the Cavalry attacked and forced a corner, which they were unable to improve upon. The Fusiliers retaliated, an abortive corner ensuing. The Hussars brought the ball back and secured two corners in succession Both were cleared and the Fusiliers rushed down, Crane scoring their first goal. Up and down play followed, but this was the only score till the interval. In resuming, the Fusiliers showed improved form, Nihan shot a goal. The Hussars then attacked for a spell but lost opportunities of scoring. Franklin and Oxford added goals to the Fusiliers score, and though the Hussars fought gamely they could not find the net and were beaten by 4 goals to nil. Teams:—

ROYAL FUSILIERS.—Fitzjohn, goal; Smallwood and Buchanan, backs; Peters, McGovern and Gifford, halves; Oxford, Smith, Franklin, Crane and Nihan, forwards.

SHERWOOD FORESTERS vs. LEICESTERS.—A good game was anticipated when these teams met on the 16th instant and expectations were realised, for the issue was in doubt up to the last moment. The first half was very evenly contested, each team obtained a corner which was not turned to account and the interval arrived without score. On changing ends the Leicesters attacked vigorously, but all their attempts to score were frustrated and the game was taken to the opposite end, where Dooley saved at the expense of a corner; nothing resulted, but the Foresters continued to attack till Owen got his forwards going and the Leicesters rushed away. One shot went over the ball and Marsden got rid of another in great style. Hands against the Leicesters let the Foresters through and Sibthorpe scored. The Leicesters pressed for the remainder of the game, but an unproductive corner was all they could get, and they were thus defeated by a goal to nil. Teams:—

LEICESTERS.—Ower, goal; Dailey and Dooley backs; Wardle, Wale and Whitmore, halves; Murphy. French, Butler, Nowden and Thorpe; forwards.

Referee:—Major England

DORSETS vs. ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Played on 17th instant. Both teams attacked in turn, the Dorsets securing a corner, which was not improved upon. They had the better of the exchanges till half time. Tarrant scored a goal and from a free kick for a foul against the Gunners, Davis narrowly missed putting on another. The Artillery had a chance of equalising just before the interval which was spoiled by a misskick. The Gunners pressed on crossing over but the Dorsets defence was equal to all their efforts and a good run by the Dorsets ended in Tarrant once more finding the net. The Artillery played hard but Gough and Emberson gave a fine display and cleared time and again. The game ended in the victory of the Dorsets by 2 goals to nil. Teams:—

R.A.—Ellis, goal; Hannell and Migon, backs; Bowen, Price and Price, halves; Bough, Hartney, Clarke, Fagan and Parryman, forwards.

DORSETS.—Prestidge, goal; Gough and Emberson, backs; Davis, Banbury, Rayner, halves; Bonmor, Perry, Tarrant, Shute and Scott, forwards.

FUSILIERS vs. SHERWOOD FORESTERS.—The Foresters rushed away at the start and scored two goals in quick succession, Smedley netting the first and Stevenson the second. Thereafter play settled down and both goals were visited in turn. Smith scored for the Fusiliers who made great efforts to equalise but there was no further scoring. After the interval, Franklin nearly scored for the Fusiliers, who forced two corners which were unconverted Then the Foresters took up the attack and had the best of the remaining play. That they were unable to add to their score was due to the fine exhibition given by Fitzjohn in goal. Final score Foresters 2 goa l Fusiliers 1 goal. Teams as before.

Referee:—Captain R. Burnett.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

"A" DIVISION.

CALCUTTA vs. 10TH JATS.—These teams met on the 20th instant, Calcutta winning by 4 goals to nil. The Jats had quite as much of the game as their opponents, but their shooting was very poor. Simpson, Beddy and Sherman (2) were credited with the scoring.

DALHOUSIE vs. MEDICALS.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday, the Medicals winning by 4 goals to 1. Rowley 2, Perkins and Darcy scored for the winners.

SIBPUR COLLEGE vs. E.I.R.—Sibpur beat the Railway on Saturday by 3 goals to 1. Severs netted for the Railway, Haupt (2) and Durrell for the College.

ST. XAVIER'S vs. MOHAN BAGAN.—This game on Saturday ended in a win for St. Xavier's by 3 goals to nil. Thomas and L. Rosser (2) were credited with the points.

CUSTOMS vs. CALEDONIANS.—Played on the Customs' ground on Saturday, the home team winning by 3 goals to nil. Alexander, Fischer and McCready scored the goals—all in the first half.

RANGERS vs. B.-N.R.—The Rangers defeated the B.-N.R. by 5 goals to nil on Saturday. Cody scored twice in the first half, and Cody, Lawton and Skempton after the interval.

10TH JATS vs. MOHAN BAGAN.—These teams met on the Rangers' ground on Tuesday, the Jats winning by 6 goals to 1; Mortimer (2), Twiss (2) Slater and Hurdayal were responsible for the scoring Mozumdar netting Mohan Bagan's single point.

CUSTOMS vs. ROVERS.—The Customs ran up a score of 8 goals to nil against the Rovers on Monday. The native team gave a good account of themselves in the first half during which there was no score, but after the interval they went to pieces and the Customs won easily.

Y.M.C.A. vs. CALCUTTA.—Calcutta who were without Beddy and McCaw could only draw with the Y.M.C.A. on Monday. There was no scoring and the game was a poor one.

CALCUTTA vs. E.I.R.—This match on the 17th instant ended in a win for Calcutta by 2 goals to 1. Calcutta pressed at the start but thereafter play was very even. Sherman scored both goals for Calcutta and Bennett netted for the Railway.

ROVERS vs. 10TH JATS.—Played on the 17th instant. The Rovers played two short in the first half during which the Jats pressed but could not score. With their full complement in the second half the Rovers scored 2 goals through Chukerburty and the Jats only registering a single point retired beaten.

RANGERS vs. SIBPUR.—This match on the 17th instant resulted in an unexpected victory for the Rangers. Sibpur were off colour and were beaten by 2 goals to nil. Skempton and Oliver scoring for the Rangers in the second half.

APPENDED are tabulated results up to 23rd March inclusive:—

Yachting.

BOMBAY YACHT CLUB REGATTA.

THERE was an unusual south south-west breeze for the sixth day on Saturday, but it kept up fairly strong and all finished well within time.

The race for the Lord Curzon's Challenge Cup had only two entrants, Sapphire and Eileen IV, the course being 17·6 miles, twice round N. and S. Karanja reverse courses. Sapphire was first over and just round N. Karanja first, but then Eileen came up on her lee and, going away, won easily, also saving her time.

Five went in "B" class and Mannikin having to be recalled, Melody and Trixie were well. Away with spinnakers out to S. Karanja, Melody took a good lead passing Sunk Rock well away from Pixie and Erin, Mannikin making up her ground. The leader went further away at N. Karanja but, having to tack on the run to the schooner could not save her time on Trixie and Mannikin, the latter losing by 22secs.

Over the same course "C" class had eight and Tomtit now had to be recalled, Maud leading over from Jean and Sitara. Lapwing then reaching over better took the lead and kept it, but Sitara's big handicap got her first place from the limit boats, Valkyrie and Jean.

Lastly the Ships' Boats Fancy Rig, the Hardinge sending out three cutters named "It's all Done by Kindness," "Some One Must be First" and "Get There." The second one got a good leading, by the others crossing prematurely, "Get There" being very late after. Making up fast, however, "Get There" won comfortably from No. 1.

The Naturalist.

EXHIBITS.

The attention of members was drawn to the skin of a fine Kathiawar lion which was exhibited and which has been obtained for the Society through the generosity of H. H. the Nawab of Junagadh and through the instrumentality of two of the Society's members, Mr. C. H. Hill, I.C.S., and Mr. W. H. Lucas, I.C.S. The lion was shot by Mr. Dudley Myers. The skin is being sent to England for mounting. The Honorary Secretary exhibited some West Indian bananas (musa cavendishii) which had grown in Bombay, and members present were requested to try them and report whether they preferred them or not to the local varieties of plantain. He mentioned that 126 fruits were on the first bunch.

The collection of snakes which had been prepared and mounted by Mr. Kinnear for the Medical Congress was shown and greatly admired.

THE ACCOUNTS.

The Honorary Treasurer, Mr. L. H. Saville, presented the statements of accounts for 1908, which he observed showed a satisfactory result. The subscriptions for the year were Rs. 17,094, showing an increase of Rs. 1,822 over the previous year. The entrance fees were Rs. 1,480 compared with Rs. 1,44 for 1907, and 160 new members had been elected during 1908 against 157 in 1907.

The accounts having been audited and found correct were duly passed.

ELECTION OF COMMITTEE.

The following gentlemen were elected as office-bearers for the present year:—President—H. E. Sir George Clarke, F. R. S., G. C. I. E. Vice-Presidents—Revd. F. Dreckmann, S. J., Mr. J. D. Inverarity, B. A., L. L. B., and the Hon'ble Mr. N. C. Macleod. Managing Committees—Veterinary Col. G. H. Evans, Mr. E. C. Stewart Baker, F. Z. S., Mr. E. Comber, F.Z.S., Mr. E. E. Green, F.E.S., Professor G. A. Gammie, Mr. T. R. Bell, I.F.S., Col. W. B. Bannerman, I.M.S., Mr. H. Bulkley, Mr. C. L. Burns, Revd. E. Blatter, S. J., Major G. L. Lamb, I.M.S., Capt. W. Wall, I.M.S., C.M.Z.S., and Mr. J. Wallace, C. E. Honorary Librarian—Mr. E. D. Richards. Honorary Treasurer:—Mr. L. H. Saville (ex-officio). Honorary Secretary—Mr. W. S. Millard (ex-officio).

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary announced that the index number (No. 3, Vol. XVIII) of the Society's Journal had just been published and as No. 1, Vol. XIX would be ready in a few weeks, the two numbers would be posted together to up-country members.

PAPERS READ.

A paper was then read on "the History of The Sea Cocoanut (Lodoicea Seschellarum)," by the Rev. E. Blatter, S. J.

THE SIXTH SENSE IN ANIMALS.

No great natural catastrophe occurs without some clear premonitions. As in a number of previous earthquakes and storms, so in this last and most terrible Sicilian disaster, several animals are said to have scented the impending danger observes Mr. W. Beach Thomas. They "showed perturbation, according to one account, and it is safe to prophesy that there were many undoubted examples when the people began to realise the hours that preceded the numbing catastrophe. Instances are on record where women, whose nervous centres are more sensitive than those of men, have given some proof of this sixth sense, if it may be called so.

We have plenty of instances of this strange prescience in England. The sheep once stampeded all over the Chilterns simultaneously; the race-horses at Newmarket, before one slight shock, ceased to feed. These are small examples of more remarkable occurrences in countries where the up heaval is greater. It is said that every shock of the great Agram earthquakes was preceded by the crowing of cocks and the howling of dogs; and a very striking example is on record of a monkey that refused to enter a house and showed every symptom of fear before a considerable earthquake at Villefranche.

We may take it as certain that peculiar states of the atmosphere affect animals quite as distinctly as they affect the barometer or thermometer. No one who has watched birds can doubt this for a moment; and I am persuaded that many insects have this sensitiveness in at least as acute a degree.

IS IT ELECTRICITY?

Men talk sometimes of a "sixth sense" or an electrical sense in animals; and it is at least understandable that live things have some communion, as it were, with this impalpable all-pervading medium called ether which carries on its viewless journey the waves of light and of electric discharge. Is it not probable that men, covered over the greater part of their body with thick, non-conducting materials, should lose a surface sensitiveness that is conveyed along the hair or feathers of other animals?

The sixth sense, however, is much too general an explanation. Species of animals differ among themselves, as much as we differ from them, in their perception of coming change. Nearly all the records of earthquake prophecies are to the account of domestic animals, especially cows and horses. Sheep are peculiarly sensitive to electrical change, and are aware many hours in advance of a great thunderstorm.

Of other atmospheric changes, such as those announced on our mercurial instruments, birds have the finer sense; and besides this they possess that inexplicable hereditary sense of direction shared in some degree by other animals; but this, it must be remembered, they often lose completely in a thick mist. Some odd isolated gifts are possessed by domestic animals. Sheep know the time of day, as represented by feeding time, within a few minutes. A shepherd who is five minutes early will find the hurdled flock lying down oblivious of his approach. If he is a minute or two late they will be alert, and all grouped to the sides of the pen in the direction of his approach.

These varying capacities do not spring from one sense, whatever name we give it. Birds, I am convinced, do possess an extra sense which has no close parallel in other animals. One can see the organ itself; and seeing is believing. In many parts of their body, enclosed in the bones, are little air sacs which, it is generally supposed, have been developed because they aided flight. The birds most lightly buoyed would most tend to survive; since their great protection from hunger, as from more tangible enemies, is the "carage of their wings." When you see the gulls sweeping inland from an unheralded but certain storm; when the owls hoot in concerted ecstasy in obedience to a rising glass; when the snipe leave the inland marsh for warm western shores at the unseen approach of frost, the message is conveyed, it may plausibly be supposed, by the little barometers hidden about the bones of their bodies. Season and date, though they are agents in migration, do not produce this prophetic sense.

How Animals are Guided.

Birds are easily guided by fine weather. They often pair and build and sing in obedience to to-day's or to-morrow's weather; but they know hours before we do by our senses, if not by our instruments, what weather is approaching. They can certainly feel an increase of moisture, in which prospect they especially delight, as you may tell by the hilarious jets of song which precede the verdict of the hygrometer; and though we cannot separate the sensitiveness to change of pressure and temperature, the air sacs doubtless help to create through the body the restless feeling that appears in long flights or quick movements or sudden song. In these air sacs we have at the worst an aid to the other senses, another sense when we compare them with our own.

The four footed animals have some senses much more finely developed than those of birds. I cannot believe that birds have a high sense of hearing. They can hear tolerably well, of course; but again and again I have tried to test pigeons, which are supposed to hear well, and have always come to the result that they hear no better than we do.

Standing under a tree in a wood, you may tap the trunk quite hard with a stick or pencil and rouse no notice in a pigeon on the branches. If you are out of sight you may change your position freely without risk. Birds are perfectly easy to stalk if there is sufficient cover; and the smaller birds seem quite heedless of lesser sounds, though there is some reason for supposing that they can detect a large span of the higher notes to which we are stone deaf.

The four-footed animals have a different sense of hearing. From general observation one would say that they excel in hearing the notes that are below, and not above, our range. A dog is astonishingly quick to hear any rumbling noise. I knew a terrier that would mark the place of a rabbit in its hole almost unerringly by listening, not at the mouth of the hole, but from a position between the several mouths.

The Quality of Sounds.

The subject of the quality of sounds which different animals can hear is one to which science might well devote attention. It is likely that the cows and horses, some of which sweated with fear before the earthquakes, heard the subterranean rumblings long before the vibrations and waves of movement were translated into any tangible quaking of the ground.

Whether the senses of these animals are reinforced by an extra sense, such as may be supplied by the air sacs in birds cannot be proved. Men of science, as a rule, are extremely dogmatic in asserting that the five senses are the exclusive outfit of all animals. No doubt the sense of smell, almost absent in men, may in itself explain all sorts of phenomena. The air may, for all we know, have smells perpetually expressive of the subtleties of change above or below the earth. The winds have each their distinctive smell, gathered in the quarters from which they blow; and these may bear as clear tidings to the gull, while he crosses the several currents, as carrion bears to the crow or vulture.

But when all is said, and all allowance made, it is difficult to avoid the belief that the animal, whose life is the exercise of sense, does not, perhaps through the medium of the hair, feel change, especially electrical change, by reason of some general sensitiveness that does not belong to sight or sound or touch or smell or taste, or even any combination of these.

In all events the animals have a receptivity, an instinctive state of sensitiveness, to which beings with preoccupied brains are wholly strangers. In another sense than Nero, we fiddle while Rome is burning, and our ears are too full of the sound of the world to take note of the warnings of its upheaval.

The Story Teller.

TRICKED.

At Ambrose and Hills', the Bond Street jewellers, David Carr, the junior assistant, and Mr. Ambrose, the senior partner, were alone in the shop when the telephone bell rang. Mr Hills and the manager and the senior assistant were all at the Old Bailey giving evidence against the remaining assistant, who had been discovered helping himself to his employers' property, and was that morning making his last appearance for some time to come in his own clothes.

Carr answered the call, and spoke to his employer with the receiver in his hand.

"Mr. Corney Wynn wants us to send round some diamond necklaces for his inspection, sir. Something to cost more than two thousand pounds. He wants to see them at his City office before twelve. He says that he won't want the necklace unless he can have it by then."

Mr. Ambrose's eyes brightened. Even Ambrose and Hills do not sell a two-thousand pound article every day, and Corney Wynn, the somewhat notorious millionaire financier, was one of the firm's best customers. But the old gentleman's face clouded when he glanced at the clock. It was already five and twenty to twelve.

"He gives us very little time," he said, "but tell him that he shall certainly have a selection for his inspection by twelve. You can manage to get to Threadneedle Street by then in a hansom. Do you know Mr. Wynn by sight?"

"No, sir, but I have seen his portrait in the papers very often."

"Of course," said Mr. Ambrose as he turned away to make a selection of the valuable necklaces in the strong-room for the millionaire's inspection.

Barely five minutes later, David Carr was in a hansom driving to Threadneedle Street with a leather jewel case on the seat beside him containing six of these, varying in price from one to three thousand pounds each.

He was only eighteen, and it was the first time that he had been entrusted with so much responsibility. In a usual way his task would have been performed by the manager, if not by Mr. Hills himself, and he felt very full of importance, and very determined to show his employers that he was worthy of the confidence placed in him.

It had not yet struck twelve when his hansom pulled up before Corney Wynn's palatial offices, but he was apparently only just in time. A taxi-cab was waiting at the kerb, and coming down the granite steps was a tall, well-built man whose silver hair, contrasting effectively with a very black, military moustache turned fiercely upwards, he recognised at once as the salient characteristic of the notorious millionaire's much photographed face.

He was about to enter the taxi-cab, but turned at the sight of Carr springing hastily from his hansom with the jewel case in his hand.

"Are you from Ambrose and Hills'?" he asked, before David could address him. "Yes, well! you would have missed me if you had been a minute later. I have an appointment at Brixton Hill at half past. I am afraid I cannot look at the diamonds now, unless I look at them as I am going. Perhaps I had better take them with me."

Mr. Ambrose's instructions had been explicit, and David smiled apologetically.

"I am not to allow the case out of my sight, sir," he said, "but if you would care to make a selection on your way to Brixton Hill, I am quite at your service. If you will wait one moment while I pay my cabman, I shall be ready to accompany you."

The financier nodded.

"All right, but look sharp, I have not a moment to spare."

He stepped impatiently into the taxi-cab as he spoke, and David followed him a moment later with the jewel case.

"Well! I am glad you caught me," said the financier, his tone flatteringly easy and familiar, as the cab threaded its way dexterously towards London Bridge. "But where is Mr. Hills. He generally does business with me, or a little, fat, pompous man, with a face like a turkey cock. I forget his name."

"Mr. Mayle, the manager," said David, smiling at the accurate description, and he explained what was going on at the Old Bailey.

"What a fool a young man must be to try and rob his employers. It takes more cleverness really to make a penny on the crook than a pound on the straight," said the financier.

"That is what I have always thought, sir," said the young assistant diffidently. "Honesty is the best principle."

"That is so," said the financier. "By the way, have you seen Miss Cissie Sarantelle in her 'Slave Dance' But, of course, you have."

David's face stiffened slightly.

"I never go to a music-hall, sir," he said, and the millionaire patted him on the back.

"And a very good resolve too. I am a pretty rich man, but I should have been a good deal richer if I had stayed away from theatres and music-halls all my life. However, I am too old to change now, and Miss Sarantelle is a ripping little woman. I promised to call and take her out for lunch to-day, and she is a stickler for punctuality. That is why I am in such a hurry. It is her birthday, too, and I forgot it till just before it was time to start. I should have been in her bad books if you had not answered my message on the 'phone so smartly. And now let us see what you have got."

David Carr produced the key of the leather case from his pocket, and opened it with a suspicious glance at the traffic around him. They were threading their way at a fairly good speed along the Borough High Street; and although the display of about ten thousand pounds' worth of diamonds was not likely to make the most desperate of thieves attempt robbery on the spur of the moment from a cab in the public streets, he did not forget that he would have to return to Bond Street alone with five out of the six necklaces in his possession, and that he had no desire to be marked and followed.

His companion, however, seemed quite indifferent to any scruple of prudence or caution. Spreading out the six sparkling necklaces on the seat before him, he took them up one after the other, holding them in different positions, deciding first that one then that another was his favourite. Finally, after keeping them exposed all the way to Brixton, he confessed himself quite unable to make a definite decision.

"I think I had better let Miss Sarantelle choose for herself," he said, "if you are not pressed for time."

"I am quite at your service," said David, who knew that his employers would think a whole day well spent if it ended in a purchase; but if the choice is left to the lady, I think I can guess which it will be—the most expensive one.

The elder man laughed.

"No doubt if she knows the price," he said; "but we will keep that a secret between ourselves. You may as well pack these things up till we get to the house. We shall be there in another minute."

By the time that David had closed the leather case on its precious contents, the taxi-cab was turning through the open gate of one of those old-fashioned detached houses on the Hill, which for some reason are particularly favoured by the stars of the music-hall stage.

A man-servant in a suit of rusty black opened the door in answer to the financier's ring.

"Is Miss Sarantelle ready?" asked the latter, and the man shook his head.

"She has not been long out of her bath, sir."

The financier turned to Carr with a laugh.

"Oh, those ladies! If you are five minutes late for an appointment they raise Hades; but they don't care a toss about being late themselves. But come along in; I have no doubt she will be down quickly enough when she knows what you have brought."

He led the way, with an air of easy familiarity with the house, upstairs and into a small back room at the head of the first flight.

It was a plainly, almost sordidly-furnished room, with the ashes of a dead fire in the grate. Together with the hall and the stairs, it gave David the idea of one of those houses that are furnished for letting. The man, too, who had opened the door was very unlike the usual indoor servant. He was a huge, hulking fellow, and his frowsy black suit had evidently not been made for him. Altogether, his surroundings gave him a vaguely unpleasant impression.

"If you will take a seat," said his companion, "I will see whether Miss Sarantelle can come down."

He had taken off his hat, and as he turned to the door David stopped him.

"Oh, don't ask Miss Sarantelle to hurry on my account," he stammered. "My time is of no importance."

He was scarcely conscious of what he said, and he did not what the other man answered. He only knew that he must keep him until he had settled a sudden suspicion which had flashed into his mind as "Corney Wynn" was turning away from him. The second concentrated glance left him in no doubt of it; just behind his right ear a line of light brown hair showed beyond the silver. The man was wearing a wig, and, as David Carr realised the fact, he realised also that he had been trapped by a trick.

He saw it all with strange clearness—the telephone message sent on a morning when anybody might know that Mr. Hills and Mr. Maley, the only two people in the establishment who had personal dealings with Corney Wynn, were engaged at the Old Bailey, the shortness of notice which enabled the man waiting on the steps of Corney Wynn's office in a presentable imitation of his outward appearance to ensure within a few minutes the moment at which the diamonds would arrive there. He saw the ingenuity of it—and his own helplessness.

He was alone and unarmed in a comparatively secluded house with at least two men—for he did not doubt that the big brutal-looking fellow who had admitted them was an accomplice—at least two men much more strongly built than himself who were determined to get the diamonds from him by force or by fraud. As the so-disant Corney Wynn's steps died away in the direction of the upper stairs, he opened the door very softly and glanced down into the hall, wondering whether he could make a dash for the street. But the man in the rusty black suit was standing there evidently on guard, and he dismissed the idea. If it came to a contest of brute strength, he knew that he would have no chance, and he closed the door as softly as he had opened it, and walked to the window. Below was a basement yard, offering him, if he tried to escape that way, a sheer drop of more than thirty feet. It was not to be thought of, and his brain busied itself feverishly.

He had at the most three minutes for planning and action.

At the end of that time, the pretended Corney Wynn returned, and found him rearranging his necktie in the mirror over the fireplace.

"Miss Sarantelle can't come down yet," he said smirking, "but she is dying to see the diamonds, and wants me to take them up to her."

"My orders are not to allow the case out of my sight," said David stoutly, for the second time, but this time the man only gave a little intolerant laugh at the remonstrance.

"That is rubbish," he said; "I am responsible for them while they are in my hands."

He seized the handle of the jewel-case as he spoke, but Carr clung to it.

"I hope you will tell Mr. Ambrose, sir, that I only allow it under protest," he said, and the elder man pushed him away.

"That is all right," he said, and there was a look in his eyes which told David Carr that his captor had ceased to care very much whether his coup was to be carried off by force or by fraud. He knew that it only required another protest on his part to provoke violence, and he did not make it.

"Of course, if you insist, sir," he said weakly, and the next moment the pseudo-millionaire had taken full possession of the locked case, opened the door and shutting it quickly behind him had turned the key.

The young assistant, finding himself made a prisoner, flung himself upon the locked door, kicking at the panel and shouting, but the only response that came in answer to his outcry was the sound of the hall door slamming and then the whirr of the taxi-cab as it turned out of the garden gate into Brixton Hill, carrying with it the two accomplices and their prize.

It was ascertained through the police inquiries made later that they had taken the house furnished only three days earlier, giving most excellent forged references and paying one week's rent in advance.

For that small outlay and a little trouble they would have managed to possess themselves of about ten thousand pounds worth of diamonds, if it had not been that David Carr was given three minutes for planning and action after discovering that he was tricked.

It took him less than ten minutes to release himself from the room by forcing the lock with his pocket-knife. No ordinary lock can resist the efforts of a determined man very much longer than that, and David worked very feverishly, thanking goodness that he had blustered the enemy into taking the case without the key, a fact which offered him a little more respite.

Then when the lock yielded, and after listening a moment he found the house absolutely silent, he opened the coal-box and, taking out six diamond necklaces, he stowed them hastily into his pockets and hastened to get out of the house and secure a cab before "Corney Wynn" and his friend could think it safe to examine their prize and discover that it was weighted with nothing more valuable than a few lumps of coal.—

London Opinion.

"What part am I to take?" said Chappie.

"You are to be the heroine's father," replied the stage-manager.

"What does he do?"

"He dies ten years before the curtain rises on the first act."

"Not that way," whispered a burglar to his accomplice after they had broken into the hotel; "the proprietor's room is down this way."

"Wot's the matter with you?" growled the more expert cracksman; "I know my business. We want to get to the room of the head waiter."

Friend (at a French play): "Why did you applaud so vigorously, when that comedian made his speech before the curtain?"

Spriggins (confidently): "So that folks would think, I understood French. What did he say?"

Friend: "He said the remainder of his part must be taken by an understudy, as his mother was dying."

Stanzer: "I'd like to know how to get this poem published. I've sent it to a dozen editors, but it's of no use."

Carper: "You might put it in an envelope, leave it on your table, and then commit suicide. All the papers would have it next day."

McNab treated the family to a fantasia on the bagpipes, and when he had concluded, he looked around with honest pride, and remarked: "Eh, mon, but that's vera deefecult!"

"Is it?" said the O'Flaherty. "Be jabbers, Oi wish it had been impossible."

A smoking competition just held at Helmond has had remarkable results. For smoking slowly "the yard of clay" the first prize was won in 1hr. 37mins. 18secs., the "fast smoker" completing his task in 2mnis. 1sec. The times for cigar smoking were 1hr. 46mins. 30secs. and 1min. 46secs. respectively.

Tourist (in North of Scotland): "Never get a paper here? Then you never know what's going on in London?"

Native: "Aweel, they're as badly off. They never ken whut's a-gaun on here!"

Diogenes, lantern in hand, entered the village chemist's. "Have you anything that will cure a cold?" he asked.

"No, sir, I have not," answered the pill-compiler.

"Give me your hand," exclaimed Diogenes, dropping his lantern. "I have at last found an honest man!"

The celebrated soprano was in the middle of her solo when little Johnny said to his mother, referring to the conductor of the orchestra, "Why does that man hit at the woman with his stick?"

"He is not hitting at her," replied his mother. "Keep quiet."

"Well, then, what is she hollerin' so for?"

THE NURSERY OF CRICKET.

How many people, who are looking forward to the forthcoming cricket season in England, and the excitement that will be engendered by the Test matches with the Australians, are, we wonder, acquainted with the knowledge of when and how the game originated.

When Hambledon is referred to as "the Nursery of Cricket," sticklers for historical accuracy have an unpleasant way of reminding us that Chaucer, who probably knew nothing of Hambledon, referred to the game in "The Canterbury Tales," that one Joseph of Exeter made mention of it before the twelfth century had run its course; and that even in the eighth century, a game that cannot be distinguished from early cricket was played and enjoyed in Italy. There is a manuscript preserved at Oxford, too, nearly 600 years old, which, in gorgeous illumination, shows a monk playing, with an admirably straight bat, the wily bowling of a fellow monk, while more of their order stand like so many Mac-Larens or Braunds in the slips. The use of the word "nursery," too, leads to further argument; for so many Yorkshire cricketers have come from Lascelles Hall, so many Nottingham players from Sutton-Ashfield, and so many of Surrey's famous recruits from Micham, that "nurseries" seem to be numerous. Hambledon, however, has its reputation well established, and its right to the title is not likely to be questioned seriously.

More than a century and a half ago, an insignificant little village, lying between Portsmouth and Winchester, formed for itself the first cricket club that was ever regularly constituted. This is how Hambledon's claim arose; and Hambledon made such good progress in its early attention to the game that it was, for very many years, more than able to hold its own in the cricket field against the rest of England.

The date of the foundation of the Hambledon Club is unfortunately unknown, for in the year 1825 there occurred at Lord's a disastrous fire which destroyed many of the early documents of the game, and among them, so it is said, the chief records of the Hambledon Club and its players. We may presume, however, that the Hambledon Club was incorporated about the year 1755, for at that time, John Small—the hero of the monograph by John Nyren and one of the fathers of the Club—would be at the age of 18, and old enough therefore to become a pillar of the game.

It is, however, with the name of Nyren aforesaid, that the early fortunes of the Hambledon Club are chiefly connected. There was Richard Nyren—indeed there are two Richard Nyren's—and John the son of one of them. It was Richard Nyren, senior, born in 1734 or 1735, who was among the original members of the Hambledon Club, and to whom the little Hampshire village owed most of its fame in cricket. He has been called the "general" of the Club, and he undoubtedly deserved the title. "Old Nyren," as he was always called to distinguish him from his equally famous son John, was the pupil of Richard Newland, of Slindon near Arundel, whom Mr. E. V. Lucas has described as "the father of serious cricket." Nyren communicated his knowledge to the Hambledon Club, and the game was made.

But, if Richard Nyren was Hambledon's "general," he was nobly served by his rank and file. Old Nyren himself and Thomas Brett were the principal bowlers, with the two "Williams"—Barber and Hogsflesh—as corps de reserve. Among the batsmen John Small, the elder, shone most conspicuously. After him came Tom Sueter—a hard hitter and a fine wicket-keeper, and Peter Steward, another hard hitter, an excellent man in the long field. George Lear was the long stop, and Edward Aburrow, a steady bat, a good change bowler, and a safe man in the deep field. Another bowler, with a most puzzling twist, was Lamborn, who was generally referred to as "the little farmer." Tom Taylor completed the eleven and was particularly noted for his smartness in the field. There were, of course, many other players besides, but those were the pick of the older members.

No record of Hambledon Club matches exist prior to the year 1772, but we may gather from John Nyren's imcomplete descriptions—which are woefully lacking in date—that they were fine occasions. Everybody who was anybody went to see the Hambledon eleven play against All England. In 1787 a three-day match was played in August at Bishopsbourne Paddock, the seat of Sir Horace Mann, against All England, the Hambledon men winning by 266 runs. In June of the following year the Club again beat All England, this time by an innings and 76 runs. Matches in those days were not played only for the honour and love of the game, but often for large sums of money. A thousand guineas was a favourable stake, and the match between Hambledon and All England, played in July 1778, was for that figure.

Before this, however, "the true old Hambledon Club" had broken up, the date of its dissolution being fixed by some as coinciding with old Nyren's departure from Hambledon in 1791.

From "Lillywhite's Cricket Scores," it appears that some sort of a club was maintained till 1825, and "up to the nineteenth century all the gentlemen in the neighbourhood belonged to it." In 1829 there is a solitary record of a match played in Midhurst on 15th June, between eleven of that town and eleven of Hambledon, but the latter could not emulate the deeds of their illustrious predecessors, and were beaten by 69 runs. Hambledon of to-day has its cricket club as a matter of course, and it still has a fixture against an All England eleven.

A FOOTBALL STRIKE.

A few weeks ago we told of trouble in the Rugby football world. We referred, of course, to the international dispute between the officials of the game in England and Scotland which threatened to have serious results. Happily, in this case, the hatchet was buried.

Now there is strife in Association circles which threatens to develope into a situation hitherto unknown in the annals of sport. This is the result of the withdrawal by the Football Assocation of its official recognition of the Union of Professional Football players. The players may choose to strike in order to obtain their liberties. If they do England—and perhaps Scotland—will be bereft of its staple amusement for a period of time.

The public mind is not prepared for a contingency of this sort and how it will look at the matter it is hard to say. Most certainly the masses who take such a keen interest in the game will not be pleased at being robbed of their usual Saturday afternoon's amusement, no matter which side they take.

The Football Association is powerful, but so also is the Players' Union, and any deadlock between them would lead to a most regrettable state of things from the point of view of the sport.

The Union has a membership which embraces nearly every professional player of note in England and Scotland. Certainly if a strike were to be declared the Football League and Southern League competitions would be paralysed.

Of course, the clubs would endeavour to fulfil their remaining fixtures of the season with amateurs, but the public would hardly continue to pay to see such performers after having had a surfeit of first class artists.

The cause of the dispute is simple, but it involves a very important principle. The players wish to retain the rights to recover wages in arrears and in dispute by appeal to the law of the land; the Football Association desires to be the sole arbiter and agent in these matters.

What the Football Association will do to enforce its authority has not yet been decided, but, as it has withdrawn its official countenance from the Players' Union any contrary act by the latter body might precipitate a crisis at any moment.

So far as independant observers can judge, the players have reason on their side, and if they are forced to go to extremes, they are certain to secure a considerable amount of public sympathy.

As a matter of fact, it is open to discussion whether a strike would not be the very best thing that could happen to the game.

The notion of a strike of football professionals seems at first sight rather strange, but, although it is sincerely to be hoped that matters will never reach that stage there is no denying that there have long been the makings of a quarrel between the Football Association and the players.

Above and beyond the question in dispute—the right of players to have recourse to recover wages, etc., there are other matters in question, such as the limit of players' wages, which is placed at £4 per week, and the transference of players from one club to another for large sums of money, of which the player himself receives not more than £10.

Of course, it may be urged with truth that there is something unpleasant in the idea of all this buying and selling in connection with sport, but one cannot get away from the fact that Association football has been made into a regular business by the big clubs, and that with these clubs as limited companies paying dividends to shareholders out of the gate it is impossible to pretend that the element of commercialism is not there.

It really comes to this that the professional player is a man possessed of certain skill which the public is willing to pay to see. He is, therefore, much on the same basis in this respect as any other public entertainer, only that instead of being paid as other entertainers are, according to his power of attracting money into the coffers of his management, he is tied down to a certain limited income, which cannot be exceeded. Herein he certainly seems to have a legitimate grievance, and he may elect to go the length of striking in order to get it remedied.

Strikes in amusement circles for after all, although football may be a sport, looking on at it, is only an amusement—are, of course, not unknown. It is not very long since the music hall artists "came out" in order to wring certain concessions from the managements. For a while London got on as best it might without its bright particular stars. Perhaps the fact that the strike aforesaid was not exactly a howling success may not be without its influence on the present dispute. The public which cheers its favourites on the stage was quite inclined to be out of humour with them concerning their temporary retirement.

After all, strikes are clumsy things, and the less we see of them in connection with either work or play the better. Especially would it be unfortunate if those connected with sport should fail to settle their differences without appealing to this form of compulsion, particularly as a strike would leave so many people with nothing really exciting to do on Saturday afternoons.

WE publish to-day the full result of the Grand National Steeplechase. Thirty-two started (the biggest field in the annals of the race—once equalled in (1850) and of these sixteen fell including Rubio and Mattie Macgregor; Lutteur III. the French horse, won by two lengths from Judas. The winner is a five-year-old by St. Damien—Lausanne and scored four winning brackets out of five starts on the continent last year. He won the Prix Auricula Chase at Auteil, in March, the Prix Canot Chase, the Prix de Nice Chase and the Prix Montgomery Handicap Chase at Auteil in November.

THERE is absolutely nothing doing in the racing world of Calcutta just at present and the chief interest centres in the question of the Stewards' new ruling on the subject or decision of bets in the event of dead heats. As however by the time these lines appear in print the decision of the Special Meeting which was held at the Turf Club last night will be public property it is useless to comment on them now, though we may say our own sympathies are entirely with the stewards, as we think it much more satisfactory for every one to know exactly where he stands and not to be subject to a chance of one or other of the owners scratching so that the backer may not even get a run for his money.

A MAJORITY of the trainers have now departed with their strings to various cooler spots for the hot weather; their ranks in the coming Monsoon Meeting will be short of one very familiar figure. Mr. F. G. Smallman who has been known and respected as a trainer and jockey in Calcutta for many years past has retired from the business and taken a position under the Calcutta Corporation where we all wish him every success.

WE regret to learn by telegram just received that Mrs O. M. D. Bell the wife of the well-known owner and shipper died suddenly during her voyage to Australia. No details are to hand. The deceased lady will be much missed by her very large circle of friends in Calcutta and we can only offer our deepest sympathy to Mr. Bell in his loss.

WE learn that Mr. W. Griffith's pony Tod has been sold to a gentleman in Cawpore and will probably race in up-country meetings, where he is likely to meet with success.

THERE is not much news yet of any new purchases of first-class Australian horses for racing up here, but we learn that Lord Carlyon, a bay colt by Carlyon—Thora, a four years old, who has put up some very good performances was bought by Mr. Howell for 800 guineas for a prominent native owner in Bombay.

MR. HUTCHISON, the Secretary of the C.T.C., held a farwell measurement this morning and is off to Europe by the mail train to-night. We wish him a very pleasant journey. Capt. Hughes, who has taken over his dutits will first of all be busy in getting out the prospectus of the first four meetings of the coming Monsoons and same is likely to be in print in the course of a few days.

THE Kadir Cup was won by Lieutenant H. A Vernon, King's Royal Rifle Corps, Jubbulpore, on his pony Fire Plant. In the final heat there were Garden, Birch and Vernon. The Hoghunters' Cup was won by R. Warren on Black Coon, and the pony Hoghunters' Cup by the same owner's Jenny Jones. We publish a full report of the meet further on.

A LONDON correspondent writes:—"Jeddah, the sensational Derby winner of 1888 died at the Lanwades Stud on Sunday. Bred by his owner, Mr. J. W. Larnach, he was by Janissary—Pilgrimage, but despite being so well bred, he did nothing as a two-year-old, being beaten in both races in which he took part. As a three-year-old he came out in winning colours in the Craven Stakes at Newmarket, and, on the strength of it, was expected to win the Two Thousand Guineas. In that race however, as well as in the Newmarket Stakes, he did badly, and it was hardly thought he would run for the Derby. He drifted out in the market when Dieudonne, his stable companion, received support, and at the start for the great race on Epsom Downs 100 to 1 was obtained about him. Dieudonne could only get fourth while Jeddah was a clever winner. Greatly to the astonishment, not only of the connections of R. Marsh's stable, but of the general public, Batt, who was well backed, followed him home, and Dunlop, who also started at 100 to 1, finished third.

At Ascot Jeddah again beat Batt easily, and gave him weight, thus showing that the Derby had been no fluke as far as the pair were concerned. In the Doncaster St. Leger the Derby winner was well beaten by Wildfowler, and he only ran once afterwards, when the next season he finished behind Flying Fox and others for the Jockey Club Stakes. Mr. Larnach's colt was then sent to the stud, but he sired nothing of very great account, the best of his progeny being Mussalman and Simonson, of whom the last-named has been successful over hurdles, and last year won the Duke of York Stakes at Kempton Park.

We have before us a copy of Volume I.—No. 1 of The Polo Monthly, a journal devoted to the king of games and one which should find a conspicuous place in the library of every regimental mess and civilian club in India. It is turned out in the best style, its illustrations are first class, its letter-press valuable and interesting. It aims at recording the game at Home and abroad, and it certainly scores a bull's-eye. There are articles on players, past and present, on polo at Cannes, in Buenos Ayres, in India, in China, Africa and other widely distant centres; there is something about regimental pony clubs, inter-regimental records, the latest Hurlingham rules, Army polo and much more. It is edited by Mr. L. V. G. Simmonds and published at Craven House, Kingsway, London. We wish our sporting contemporary long life and uninterrupted prosperity.

In the world of horses it is confidently believed that the coming International Horse Show, at Olympia, will prove to be the greatest show of its kind on record, writes the Evening Standard.

Any defects which were noticeable at last year's show will be remedied, and it is expected that even greater interest will be exhibited by the public, in view of the strong military element which will be in evidence. Officers from all the important armies of the world have been invited by the War Office, which arranges these matters through diplomatic channels. The King of Spain has promised to send five of the best riders in the Spanish army; the Argentine Republic is sending six; and Italy, France, Belgium, and Holland will be represented by strong contingents. The War Office is also negotiating with Russia and Sweden, and Russia, it is hoped, will give a display of Cossack riding.

A number of new jumps have been arranged, some of them appearing most difficult to eyes accustomed to the ordinary obstacles encountered in the hunting field. There is, for instance, the Italian "The Pianoforte," consisting of a combination of a moat, a rampart, and a stone wall. "The post and rails"—three obstacles 12ft. apart—is also new, as is the "tree trunks"—tree trunks being piled up on each other, affording a test which, although most useful for cross-country riders, has not been practised at shows in this country

Among the 854 prizes, amounting to £12,000, as compared with £900 last year, the most valued will be that given by H.M. the King—a splendid trophy to the value of £500. This prize is to be competed for by officers of all armies entered, over a course of special military jumps, including a line of infantry, six feet high. Each team will consist of three officers of the same nationality, in uniform. It is hoped that His Majesty will present this cup personally. The Duke of Connaught has presented a cup worth £200 for British officers. Special encouragement is given to the Territorial Army, and there is a cup known as the "Territorial Cup," worth £100, to be awarded to a Territorial team of officers or men in uniform for jumping over a course to be arranged. The jumps in this event will be such as are met with in the hunting field.

A large and select "meet" is expected for the "Coaching Marathon" from Hampton Court to Olympia. The track is set from the King's Arms, over Bushey Park, Teddington, Strawberry Hill, Twickenham, Richmond, and Barnes Common, and the judges will consider the condition in which the teams arrive. The maximum time allowed will be one hour and a-half.

Special precautions have also been taken to safeguard amateurs from competition with the professional element. It is satisfactory to learn that energetic measures are being made by the War Office to prevent last year's unsatisfactory results, as regards British military competitors, from being repeated. Intending competitors are busy, and, stated a prominent War Office authority, "Englishmen can sleep safely in their bed o'nights; the Army will do its duty!" The Continental officers are also practising high jumps, to win the special prize for the beating of last year's record—7ft. 2in.

The Mussoorie Polo Tournament has been fixed to begin on the 17th May. Good entries are expected, the Gurkhas, 10th Hussars, 15th Hussars, King's Dragoon Guards and the 17th Lancers, who hold the cup being likely competitors.

The polo tournament for the Murree Brewery challenge Cup which has been in progress at Rawalpindi, reached the semi-final stage on the 27th ultimo. In the preliminary rounds A Suadron 10th Royal Hussars beat the Rawalpindi Gymkhana by 3 goals to one: the 11th Lancers beat the West York Regiment by 3 goals to 2: A Squadron beat D. Squadron 10th Royal Hussars by 5 goals to one: the Northumberland Fusiliers beat the Royal Artillery by 2 goals to one: and the 12th Royal Lancers beat the 23rd Cavalry by 3 goals to one. In the semi-finals A Squadron 10th Hussars beat the 11th Lancers by 3 goals to one after a fast and well contested game: 12th Lancers beat the Northumberland Fusiliers easily by 6 goals to nil.

A meeting of the North Punjab Fishing Club was held at Rawalpindi early last month Major-General Martin, C.B., presiding, and a fair attendance of members and others interested in fishing being present.

The following resolution was passed:—That the subscription of Rs. 2 a month be abolished, and that a new form of half-yearly subscription be introduced for those who wish to avail themselves of it, viz, Rs. 12 for the first half-year ending 30th June, and Rs. 12 for the second half year ending 31st December. The yearly subscription of Rs. 16 to remain so.

The following committee was elected:—Major-General Martin, C.B. (president, Colonel Lowry Cole, C.B., Captain Pratt, D.S.O., Lieutenant Howard, Mr. Kitchen, D.C. Rawalpindi, ex-officio, Mr. Bosworth Smith, D.C. Attock, ex-officio, and Colonel Hamilton, Honorary Secretary.

The fishing has begun early this year, and a good many fish have already been taken from the Sohan and Karang at Rawalpindi, but members have apparently not visited the rivers Harrow and Chiblat at Hasan Abdal, as no reports on those rivers have been received up to date.

The honorary secretary will be glad to give any information concerning the club to intending members on application.

Mr. V. G. Thew (this year's Cambridge "Soccer" captain) is arranging to take out a team of past and present Cantabs to South America during the summer months. They will make Buenos Ayres their centre and play ten or twelve matches. All being well, they will leave England in July. The new Lord Moncrieff is an old Cambridge athlete, who, among other things, claims to have invented the three-stride system for hurdling. He was a brilliant all-round athlete, excelling at football, cricket and golf, at which he is still a power in the land. His son and heir "J. A." is an old Oxford man, who also excelled at golf and athletics.

The subject of the golf professional's lot has, of late, aroused considerable interest in England. That his present-day lot is often exceedingly little must be patent to all close observers. The very growth of the game has been detrimental to his interests, because it has prompted the leading sports' outfitters and other big houses to specialise in golf goods. These establishments have naturally elaborate schemes for attracting customers, and it follows that they capture a great portion of the trade in golfing equipment. This, of course, is ordinary commercial enterprise, but the fact remains that it hits the professional very hard.

Another circumstance that affects his income is that clubs do not break now that the rubber-cored ball is in vogue. In the "gutty" days there was an extensive business in mending broken clubs and supplying, in emergencies, new ones; in the present age a smashed shaft is almost the event of a week on a golf course. Here, again, the professional is suffering as a consequence of the progress of the game. Golf has developed a degree of importance that has prompted inventive geniuses to focus their attention upon it. For the pastime and its players the results have been excellent. The professional cannot complain of this advancement, but he is apt to be distressed by it.

The leading men are doubtless in comfortable enough circumstances—or, at least, as comfortable as can be reasonably expected in a period of strenuous competition. Their exceptional playing ability enables them to obtain engagements at clubs where there is much golf and, accordingly, a fair amount of business; they are sought as teachers, as course architects, and as providers of exhibition games. But the lesser lights must feel the pinch severely, and it is an open question whether the prevailing scheme of every club having its own professional will endure.

There is a strong feeling among the governing body of the English racket world that professional rackets requires a fillip. There has been no championship match in England since 1903, when Jamsitjee, the Parsee professional, from Bombay, defeated Gilbert Browne (Prince's Club, Knightsbridge) by eight games to two for the championship of the world and £400. This match took place soon after Peter Lathem's retirement.

To stimulate interest in professional rackets Mr. J. De-la-Rue, the old Eton and Cambridge player, has offered prize money to the amount of £100. He placed this sum at the disposal of the committee of the Tennis and Racket Association, and left it to their discretion to decide whether the competition shall be an open or handicap one.

At a meeting of the committee of the Association held at Queen's Club early this month it was decided to hold a handicap during the Public Schools competition at Queen's Club, and to give four prizes, provided there were at least eight entries.

With the approach of the English rowing season there are indications of aquatic activity in London. For example, on the 13th instant a meeting was held at the London Rowing Club, Putney, to found a club with the definite object of strengthening the membership and resources of metropolitan clubs, by consolidating their oarsmen, and giving them a common meeting place at Henley. Membership of the new club will carry with it the use and enjoyment, under conditions hereafter to be settled, of the Grosvenor Club buildings and lawn, near Remenham, at Henley-on-Thames. There is at present no idea of producing a combined crew, of taking an active part in competitive oarsmanship, or of directly influencing rowing. The London, Thames Kingston, Molesey, Twickenham and Staines Clubs are to be the founding clubs, and the members of these will be eligible for membership, without election, until the 500 original members have been obtained.

The semi-final round of the Association Football Cup was played on Saturday last. At Sheffield Manchester United beat Newcastle United by a goal to nil, while Derby County and Bristol City played a draw of one all on the Chelsea ground.

The Ninth Division Footbal Tournament was concluded at Secenderabad on the 22nd ultimo when the Sherwood Foresters beat the Cheshire Regt. by 2 goals to nil.

The All-India Championship Chess Tournament, will be held in Bombay, commencing on Saturday, 17th April, for Bombay players and on Wednesday, 12th May, for up-country players.

The Tournament will be held in two sections. In the first section, Bombay players only will play among themselves. Only the first six players out of these in the order of merit, will be entitled to play in the second section. In the second section, on the issue of which will depend the adjudgment of prizes, the abovementioned six Bombay players and all the up-country players will be entitled to compete. In each section every player shall have to play one game with every other player in that section.

Five prizes will be given as under:—First Championship prize of Rs. 500; second prize Rs. 200; third prize Rs. 90; fourth prize Rs. 50; fifth prize Rs. 30; and a special prize will be given to the player who has not lost a single game in the second section of Rs. 30. A chess problem solution tourney will also be held on the day of the distribution of prizes and a prize of Rs. 30 will be awarded to the player handing in the correct solution in the shortest time.

If the number of lady players joining the Tournament is more than three, a special prize of Rs. 50 will be awarded to the lady who secures the largest number of wins amongst the lady players.

A wire from the London Office of the Mercantile Bank of India, Limited, advises the working of the year 1908 as follows:—

Net profit about £101,050 dividend on "A" and "B" shares 6 per cent. carried to Reserve Fund £40,000 (making it £250,000). Carried to Pension Fund £2,000. Amount carried forward about £25,300.

The rifle is made specially for Long Rifle, or Short R.F. ammunition. In the latter case the twist of rifling is only one turn in 25 inches, but when chambered for the Long Rifle cartridge, the twist of rifling is one in 16, the 40 grain bullet requiring a faster spin to keep it point foremost. The retail price of the rifle will be about £2, and it will be ready for issue next May.

"FLEUR-DE LYS."

THE ORIGIN OF A NAME.

A CURIOUS FACT IN NATURAL HISTORY.

ONE of our contemporaries brought, a few days ago, a notice of a very interesting kind in his columns as to how names are discovered. In consequence of more exact information which we are fortunate enough to obtain, we are able to declare that the name Odol is not derived from the formation of the craters in the moon, but has been seen for the first time on the skin of a tiger in the jungles of British India.

An eminent naturalist has drawn attention to this very peculiar feature in the markings upon the tiger's fur, which affords another remarkable evidence of the proverb that there is "nothing new under the sun." While scientists were busy with the important investigations which resulted in the discovery of the famous dentrifric, Odol, and centuries before the name was thought of, it would appear that tigers were roaming the jungles of India bearing upon their coats the impress of the very word. That this powerful and beautiful habitant of tropical forests—perhaps the animals of all others with the best dental equipment—should be, as it were, the actual forerunner of Odol is one of those coincidences which are nothing short of marvellous. It provides food for thought, and Odol is fairly entitled to whatever advantage may accrue from the discovery of the coincidence.

NEW ·465 BORE VELOPEX SYSTEM

EXPRESS "INDIA" RIFLE.

MESSRS. HOLLAND & HOLLAND beg to introduce to the notice of Sportsmen their New ·465 Bore "India" Model Rifle. This weapon has been especially designed to replace the ·450 bore, the importation of which into India having been prohibited. The New Rifle retains all the features of their well-known ·450 and has the same balance, handiness, and lightness of recoil, with the advantage of increased velocity resulting from the use of their New Patent Velopex Cartridge.

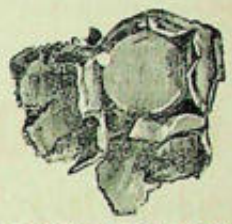
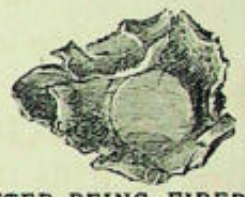
"VELOPEX" BULLET.



SOLID NICKEL BULLET.



7 CONSECUTIVE SHOTS at 100 YARDS.

All WOULD HAVE STRUCK A POSTAGE STAMP.

"VELOPEX" BULLETS.

AFTER BEING FIRED.

AUTHENTICATED DIAGRAM. See "THE FIELD," 19th January 1907.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper,

19th January, 1907.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2.282 feet per second).

PRICES*:—DOUBLE BARRELLED RIFLE, best quality and finish, Royal Hammerless. 70 Guineas. B. Grade, 55 Guineas.

THE NEW ·375 BORE "HOLLAND-VELOPEX" MAGAZINE SPORTING RIFLE.

PATENT SYSTEM.

As a Sporting Magazine Rifle, this weapon is the latest development of our well-known 375 bore, and is constructed to carry our New Patent Velopex Cartridge, giving a muzzle velocity of 2,500 feet per second with hollow point or solid bullets.

With the exception of the Magazine, which is specially made for us, the whole of the Rifle is our own design and manufacture.

The perfection of a Magazine Rifle.

Some of the Leading Features. Very High Velocity (2,500 feet), Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, and Accuracy. Simplicity of mechanism, an improved system of Detachable Barrel, facility of loading with Clip or Single Cartridge. A Perfectly Balanced weapon, light and handy, equally serviceable in the Jungle or on the Hills, for Sambur, Antelope, and other Soft Skinned animals. Rifle with its ammunition, may be imported into India.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

Judge:—W. U. NICHOLAS, ESQ.,

Starter:—MAJOR H. P. E. PARKER.

Joint Secretaries:—W. D. SANDAY, ESQ., G. O' HARA, ESQ.

BOTH days of the Hunt Races have gone off with great success. The attendance on both days was far above the average for Karachi and the racing was of an interesting nature, there being several closely contested events, especially in the handicaps on the second day. The chief feature of the meeting was the increase of trade done by the totalisator which up to now has been somewhat scantily patronised, and which now appears to be gaining rapidly in public favour, with very satisfactory results for the funds, and both the Hunt and the races should be substantially assisted by the proceeds.

The Ladies Bracelet was won on the first day by Mr. O'. Hara's Ariadne ridden by the Owner and on the second by Major Anderson's Duchess the rider being Mr. Gough.

First Day, Saturday, 20th March 1909.

THE TURF.

HURST PARK.

AT last racing has been resumed. On 9th instant at Molesey, it was wonderful to note how the crisp grass had recovered its dryness and elasticity under what sunshine the previous days could afford after the subsidence of the snow, and better going neither too soft, nor too hard—could not have been desired. The attendance, as usual at this popular meeting, was a good one all round, many well-known patrons of cross-country sport occupying the members' enclosure, Tattersall's was well filled, and despite the long rest induced by the abnormal spell of comparative idleness, fields turned out in fairly strong proportion to the card. The sun rarely showed behind the clouds, but the morning's drizzle dried up, and with a temperature that did not demand a great coat, the afternoon was enjoyable. Results.—

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

EXCEPTIONALLY favoured in the matter of weather for three-fourths of the season, the Association game had a disastrous experience last Saturday, when the afternoon's programme included not only a considerable number of matches in the First, Second, and Southern Leagues, but the four ties in the penultimate round of the Association Cup. Despite the severe frosts in the course of the week, practically all these games could have taken place had only yesterday proved fine, but more snow fell all over the country, with the result that more than a dozen of these contests had to be postponed. So adverse did the conditions prove that in several instances football was quite out of the question, while in others play had to be abandoned before time. The Southern League did not fare quite so badly as the other competitions, six games out of ten being decided, but three Second League contests out of seven had to be given up, and in the First League there was only match out of six brought to a finish, play at Plumstead being stopped in the second half and none being attempted at Bradford, Nottingham, Leicester, or Sheffield.

Curiously enough, although play took place in three of the four Cup-ties, absolutely no progress was made in determining the important question what clubs shall participate in the semi-final round of that all-important competition. So hopeless did the outlook appear at Derby, where Derby County and Nottingham Forest should have tried conclusions, that the gates were never opened, and at Burnley, although the opposing teams struggled on, despite a snowstorm, for more than an hour, the referee stopped the game a quarter of an hour before the finish when Burnley, who had scored ten minutes from the start, still led Manchester United by 1 to 0. At Newcastle, where nearly 55,000 people assembled despite the wintry afternoon, plenty of excitement was aroused a goal from Rutherford for Newcastle being promptly equalised by Mordue, and Wilson placing the home side on level terms directly Brown had given Sunderland the lead. On crossing over the Wearsiders continued to make a capital struggle for a time, but gradually Newcastle assumed the upper hand, and in the end Sunderland—so far from repeating their memorable League triumph of 9 to 1 at Newcastle in December—were rather lucky to escape defeat.

A draw also resulting at Glossop, where Bristol City, although very dangerous in the second half, failed to score, the four ties have all yet to be decided. The games at Derby and Burnley having been abandined, Nottingham Forest again go to Derby and Manchester United to Burnley on Saturday, while on Wednesday Newcastle United and Sunderland replay at Roker Park, and either on that day or Thursday Glossop journey down to the West to meet Bristol City. Bristol City should pull through on their own ground, but on recent form Sunderland are quite as formidable in out engagements as at home.

After holding the first place in the Second Division of the League since the middle of November, West Bromwich Albion were on Saturday deprived of that honour by Bolton Wanderers. The change, however, was only brought about by the inability of the Albion to fulfil their engagement with Barnsley. West Bromwich would most probably have won if the ground had been fit for football, so that they have not gone down through any fault of their own. The position is now extremely interesting, for while Boston Wanderers were defeating Blackpool, Tottenham Hotspur—third on the list—were gaining a brilliant victory over Stockport Country at Stockport. Consequently their chances of promotion are stil. as good as, if not better than, either of the other two clubs. The Hotspurs have three games in hand over Bolton Wanderers and two over West Bromwich Albion, and are only two points behind the leaders.

One of the four victorious teams in the Southern League on the 6th instant, Northampton, further improved their chance of carrying off the championship. They now hold an advantage of eight points from Swindon, and with only nine more fixtures to fulfil it is difficult to see how they can fare so badly as to fail to retain a lead. Their last performance was a good one, the Albion team being difficult to beat at Brighton. Northampton retain all the skill and consistent excellence which took them to the front at Christmas-time, since when they have never appeared in danger of being deprived of first place.

THE ASSOCIATION CUP.

So adverse were the conditions which prevailed that one of the four ties could not be commenced, and another had to be abandoned a quarter of an hour before the finish. In two other instances the result was a draw, so that not a single game was brought to a definite issue.

NEWCASTLE vs. SUNDERLAND.—Decidedly the most attractive tie of the fourth round was the meeting of Newcastle and Sunderland on the ground of the first named at St. James's Park. These teams have always been great rivals and in League matches their opposition has invariably aroused an enormous amount of local interest. In addition it has long been the great amition of both Newcastle and Sunderland to win the Cup, but so far neither club has suceeded, although in the four previous seasons Newcastle reached the final tie at the Crystal Palace. Under the circumstances it was not surprising, therefore, that, despite the unpleasant weither conditions prevailing there were 53,453 persons present and the receipts amounted to £2,483. The teams entered the field in a storm of sleet and the game commenced a quarter of an hour before the advertised time. As might have been expected, the ground was soft and heavy. Howie played at right half back for Newcastle and Sunderland were without Jarvie, Low coming into the eleven at left half-back. Newcastle started weakly and Sunderland got well into their quarters, but the home half-backs forced the visiting forwards to retire. Sunderland were placed on the defensive and Rutherford scored the opening goal for Newcastle after fourteen minutes' play. Mordue equalised a minute later and the subsequent play was intensely exciting, the doings of the players arousing tremendous enthusiasm. Bearing in mind the adverse conditions, the football was of a capital order and the men tackled strenuously and fairly. Sunderland had a big share of the play, but Newcastle struggled well against the blizzard. Brown put Sunderland ahead after half an hour's play, but a few seconds later the scores were again level, Wilson getting through for Sunderland. The remaining play to the interval was very level, neither side having any decided advantage. Half-time was reached with the scores 2 goals each. Considering the state of the ground and the wretched weather the combination of both teams was very effective and despite the keen rivalry that existed between the two elevens the game was played in excellent spirit. Newcastle had the best of matters immediately after the restart, but a good chance was missed owing to Rutherford being offside and in consequence penalised. Both sides played dashing footbal and pressed in turn, but neither could gain any definite advantage. Anderson was hurt, but soon resumed. Sunderland were prevented for some breaking away, but at length they got down and the home goal had a narrow escape. Then Shepherd narrowly missed scoring for Newcastle, and for a time the Sunderland goal looked to be in danger. As it happened, however, there was no scoring in the second half, the game ending in a draw. Newcastle United, 2; Sunderland, 2.

GLOSSOP vs. BRISTOL CITY.—The conditions for this Cup-tie at Glossop could hardly have been worse, for at the time for starting play a heavy snowstorm was raging over the ground. The match had been eagerly anticipated in the district, but in the circumstances it was not surprising to find only about 5,000 people present at the start. Glossop played J. T. Robertson in place of James Robertson, who is laid up, and Bristol City also found it necessary to make a change, Hardly taking the place of Hilton. Play during the first quarter of an hour was fairly even, both defences being tested. The conditions did not improve as the game went on, snow falling heavily and rendering accurate football next to impossible. Hardy at outside left for Bristol made a number of clever runs, and gave Horton, the Glossop back, many moments of anxiety. Some clever work by Underwood initiated a dangerous attack by Glossop, but only a fruitless corner resulted. A little later J. T. Robertson received a fine centre by Underwood and shot hard against one of the posts, and then Greechan, when well placed, sent the ball far over the bar. With the ball very greasy and heavy, good shots were few and far between, and at half-time nothing had been scored. Playing with the snowstorm at their backs, the Bristol City men pressed strongly after change of ends. Gilligan struck the crossbar with the first really dangerous shot of the match, and a little later Burton sent the ball just over. Then Glossop attacked, and Clay had to save from Greechan. In turn each side was nearly through, Staniforth for Bristol and Stapley for Glossop, both being very good. The heavy state of the ground handicapped the players more and more. Hardy made one great effort that failed, and Bristol pressed again, the game going largely in their favour. No scoring occurred, however, and the result was a pointless draw. Glossop, 0; Bristol City, 0.

BURNLEY vs. MANCHESTER UNITED.—Thirty thousand people gathered at Turf Moor, Burnley, despite the snowy weather to see the tie between Burnley and Manchester United, the accommodation for the public, specially increased for the occasion, being severely tested. Such interest in a game at Burnley was indeed quite unprecedented, special trains, chiefly from Manchester bringing fully 10,000 people into the town. Naturally after such severe weather as had been experienced during the week, the turf was frost bound. Burnley won the toss and set their opponents to kick off against both wind and snow. At the first neither side could settle down, but when once the men had got into their stride there was little to choose between the two elevens. The stormy conditions, however, played rare pranks with the ball, rendering anything like accurate work almost impossible. Still, with the wind and snow behind them Burnley secured an advantage within ten minutes of the start, Ogden scoring amid tremendous cheering from the home partisans. Subsequently the Manchester men attacked vigorously, one shot rebounding from the post. At half time Burnley still led by 1 goal to 0. On resuming the condition of the ground had become very bad, but the pace and general excellence of the play was maintained. At times the excitement was intense, and seemed to have an adverse effect on some of the players. The weather got worse as time wore on, the snowstorm being almost blinding. Manchester United pressed heavily, but Dawson, who had some dangerous shots to clear, kept goal in very skilful style. In the closing stages the players on both sides were greatly handicapped by the snowstorm. Sixteen minutes from the finish the referee consulted with the linesmen, with the result that he stopped the game. This came as a great disappointment to the supporters of the home side, as at the time Burnley, who had to face the snow, were leading by 1 goal to 0.

ARSENAL vs. SHEFFIELD UNITED.—After playing for seventy minutes, Woolwich Arsenal had the unfortunate experience of having their match at Plumstead abandoned when they were leading by the well-deserved score of three goals to nil. Only 4,000 people witnessed a farcical exhibition. The snow was cleared entirely from the ground, which was very much on the soft side, a condition rendered infinitely worse by a downpour of rain before the game. Throughout the time the play was in progress the rain fell persistently, and as a matter of fact it was a mistake to allow the game to be started at all. The Arsenal were clearly the better side in the first half, but no goals were scored, although Beney and Fitchie shot well and Lewis missed two grand chances. It was really folly for the players to return after the interval, for the rain was coming down with renewed vigour and pools of water were in evidence all over the field. After Lewis had scored, Sheffield protested against a continuance, and again when Beney scored they lodged objections with the referee. Then Parker put through his own goal, and with the game absolutely a farce the referee stopped play twenty minutes from the end.

PRESTON NORTH END vs. MIDDLESBROUGH.—Unfortunately for Bond and Percy Smith, for whose benefit this game at Deepdale had been set apart, wretched weather prevailed in the Preston district, and only about 5,000 spectators were present when play began in a blizzard. Smith was unable to turn out owing to a cold, and Pratt played at centre, while Hodgson took the place of Danson. At the outset the Preston forwards were very aggressive, setting up a number of dangerous attacks. After twenty-five minutes' play Wilson

HOW GREAT MEN RECOUP THEIR ENERGIES.

SOME STRIKING TESTIMONY.

Eminent men are the authoritative exponents of a nation's thought. Their views, given with the sense of responsibility which rests upon those who mould public opinion, must command the most earnest attention. When the subject for consideration is the creation and preservation of those physical and mental attributes which so largely enter into the sum total of human success, then, surely, the opinions of those who have risen to the proud position of leaders of men will be all-convincing.

The unanimity with which the most distinguished personages proclaim Sanatogen to be the ideal tonic food remedy, affords striking evidence of the high esteem in which Sanatogen is held as a restorative and a tonic.

Sanatogen is proclaimed as being the most powerful restorative known for renewing and sustaining the vigour of health. When run down and in conditions of lassitude, nervousness, mental inertness, as well as debility, and all the ills foreshadowed by that danger signal depression, Sanatogen is unrivalled. It speedily and permanently restores that buoyancy and elasticity which are the very essence of well-being.

Sir Gilbert Parker, equally famous as a gifted author and an intrepid traveller, is full of enthusiastic praise:

"20, Carlton House Terrace.

"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the overworked body and mind."

Gilbert Parker

Sir John Hare gives us a peep into the means employed to sustain the wonderful vitality which is one of his distinguishing characteristics:

"Upper Berkeley Street.

"I have found Sanatogen a most valuable tonic and stimulant during a period when I had to work very hard under conditions of great weakness and ill-health."

John Hare

Lord Sutherland Gower, the creator of the noble Shakespearian memorial at Stratford-on-Avon, says of Sanatogen:

"Hammerfield, Penshurst, Kent.

"I feel it only due to the benefit conferred on my general health by Sanatogen to write to inform those interested in that wonderful medicine that in a couple of months' time it has cured me of all gouty trouble. Sanatogen has done me far more good than all the waters of Bath and Harrogate."

Ronald Sutherland Gower

The Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair expresses his opinion as follows:

"The Chapter House,
St. Paul's Cathedral,
London, E.C.

"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

William Sinclair

Madame Sarah Grand, the gifted authoress of "The Heavenly Twins," says she has found in Sanatogen renewed vigour of body and brain.

"Grove Hill.

"Sanatogen has done everything for me which it is said to be able to do for cases of nervous debility and exhaustion. I began to take it after nearly four years enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately. And now, after taking it steadily three times a day for twelve weeks, I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again, and also able to do as much of both as I ever did."

Sarah Grand

Conclusive proof is forthcoming also in the testimony of over 9,000 physicians as to the superlative merits of Sanatogen as the ideal tonic food remedy.

Amongst the many who have written in praise of Sanatogen, Dr. Andrew Wilson expresses golden opinions in that striking publication, "The Art of Living," a copy of which will be sent gratis and post free on forwarding name and address to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, mentioning the Indian Field.

Sanatogen is sold by all chemists, etc., throughout India.

DOG MEDICINES

MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

shot a good goal for the North End. Middlesbrough were largely on the defensive, but five minutes from half-time they equalised through Thackeray. Snow was still falling heavily when play was resumed, and the ground was little better than a quagmire. Middlesbrough were soon placed on the defensive, but weak shooting brought to nought some promising attacks by Preston North End. Bloomer worked cleverly the North End defence and seemed certain to score, but Winchester charged him off the ball. In the closing stages the play became very tame, both sides being fatigued. Nothing more was done, and the game thus ended in a draw: Preston North End, 1; Middlesbrough, 1.

FULHAM VS. WOLVES.—Played on a veritable swamp, the game between Fulham and Wolverhampton Wanderers at Fulham yesterday was almost as much like water polo as football. Great pools of water in front of both goals and miniature lakes dotted over the rest of the field gave the arena a picturesque appearance. As the players fell about in the liquid mud they were cheered by the spectators, who thoroughly enjoyed the spectacle of mudlarking. K.R.G. Hunt, the old Oxford captain, played at centre forward for the Wolves instead of Wooldridge, and Fulham had Mouncher at left half and Lee at outside right. Under the circumstances the game was much better than might have been expected. Wolverhampton adapted themselves the more readily to the conditions, and were rather unlucky in not winning. They did far more pressing than the London side, and but for one or two unaccountable blunders in front of goal they must have secured both points. In the early stages they had much the best of the exchanges, but Fryer kept goal well, saving brilliant shots from Harrison, Skelton, and Pedley. After a time Fulham improved, and Lee scored with a long shot which struck the upright and the crossbar before going into the net. In the second half the Wolves continued to have the best of matters. Pedley scored with a fine low shot after five minutes' play. Towards the end the game opened out, both goals being attacked, but nothing more was scored, and so the game was drawn at one goal each. Fulham, 1; Wolverhampton Wanderers, 1.

WEST HAM VS. NEW BROMPTON.—The match between West Ham and New Brompton at Boleyn Castle was played under the worse possible conditions. After the thaw the pitch was very heavy, but rain fell heavily during the second half, and at the finish the playing pitch was more like a lake. The players tried hard enough, and indeed showed plenty of spirit, but at no period could the football be described as scientific. Spills were rather frequent, and those taking part did not hesitate to use their shoulders. There were 3,000 spectators. West Ham were served by Dawson in goal, and it was the first Southern League match in which he has played. Costello, whom the locals recently secured from Southhampton in exchange for Foster, was at inside left. Bourne, who plays in spectacles, partnered Taylor in the rear. The only goal of the game was scored for New Brompton by Whyman about a quarter of an hour from the start. Sheppard had previously had an open goal, but he struck the bottom of the upright. Thrice before the chance of ends Dawson saved on his knees, and on the whole he did not shape badly. The teams did not leave the field at the interval, and Dawson had practically nothing to do during the second half. West Ham pressed on their opponents' goal, but could not get the ball through. Several excellent chances came their way and opportunities were missed by Costello and Miller. New Brompton, 1; West Ham, 0.

CRYSTAL PALACE VS. EXETER.—There were not more than 1,500 present at the Sydenham enclosure when Crystal Palace and Exeter played a drawn game, neither side scoring. The game was made possible by a clearance of the snow in the field, but left behind were small and large puddles of water, in and out of which the players floundered, while the ball frequently came to a dead stop in one of them when it had been kicked straight at the net. It rained, too, during the whole afternoon, so that the state of the ground towards the end was even worse than before. The visitors, who played Bulcock and Copestake instead of Crelley and Parnell, were the first to make any headway, and all the attack for thirty minutes of the first half was done by them. They adapted themselves well to the wretched conditions, and while the Palace were slipping and swimming all the field Exeter made more or less progress. Kicking strongly whenever they had the chance, the Palace goal was early in danger, Johnson having to save from Drain, Bell, and Ambler. At the interval the Palace were doing much better, and by adopting the same tactics as that of their opponents the attack was carried into Exeter's quarters. Throughout the second half the Palace continued in the same line, and the exchanges were certainly in their favour, but nothing was scored, and the game ended in a pointless draw. Crystal Palace, 0; Exeter, 0.

THE GAME IN SCOTLAND.—Although the weather in Scotland on Saturday the 6th instant was sufficiently severe to put off all Rugby games throughout the country, it only prevented two of the League games from making a start, viz., Hearts vs. Partick Thistle at Tynecastle, and Morton vs. Airdrieonians at Greenock. Grounds were hard and treacherous, and the attendances all over were poor, the best "gate" of the day being £220 at Falkirk, while only £40 and £30 were taken at the St. Mirren vs. Aberdeen and 3rd Lanark vs. Port Glasgow Athletic matches respectively.

At Falkirk a penalty goal allowed Celtic to divide the points, Falkirk in the first half having all the play, and missing many fine chances. The Celtic, however, were without three of their best men, McNair, Somers, and Hamilton, while Quinn was hardly fit, and did not exert himself. The dropping of a point by Rangers at Ibrox to Hibernians gave further assistance to Celtic in their fight for the League championship, but the Edinburgh men were value for the division. Hibernians had Dixon, who has been with Queen's Park all the season, at centre, the ex-amateur having signed a professional form.

Dundee on play were scarcely value for a win against Clyde at Shawfield, but the North men took the chances they got, and if the Clyde forwards are to beat Celtic in the semi-final of the Scottish Cup a fortnight hence they will have to show a vast improvement. Clyde's defence is about the best in the Scottish League, but most of the points lost this season have been due to weakness in the front rank.

Kilmarnock, taking all risks on hard ground, and adapting themselves better to the conditions, bustled Queen's Park so much that early in the game they were two goals ahead, and this kept to the end, Templeton being in his best form for the Ayrshire club. 3rd Lanark, after starting like winners fell away sadly on their own ground to Port Glasgow Athletic, and all Port's four goals were got in the second half. The St. Mirren and Aberdeen game was featureless, the ground being in a terrible condition, while Hamilton Academicals secured their fourth win of the season at the expense of Motherwell.

RUGBY RULES.

THE NAVY VS. THE ARMY.—The third annual match between the Army and Navy was played on the 6th instant at Queen's Club, and as on the two previous occasions the Navy won, this time by a much more considerable margin than before. The conditions were by no means favourable, and the attendance was not nearly so large as would have been the case in fine weather. The ground had been cleared of snow, but the turf was very soft, and towards the close the ground was little better than a quagmire. The weather was fine when the game began, but rain soon commenced to fall, and the second half was played in a storm of rain. The Navy soon showed superiority, and though the backs could not under the condition get up much of an attack the forwards took the ball down and Blagrove dropped a goal after about ten minutes' play. Shortly afterwards Coopper put in a fine run on the left, and after handing off one opponent and jumping over the full back, he scored behind the posts and Lyon placed a goal. This was all the scoring before the interval, but in the second half the Navy continued to hold the upper hand and scored four times. On the soft ground the backs were almost powerless for attacking purposes, but the forwards kept the ball in the Army territory, and only twice during the half did the junior Service get up anything like an attack, and on each occasion they were repulsed. But with the Naval forwards keeping the ball in the Army twenty-five" a score was always impending, and first Warrington-Morris, then Woodhouse, then Greig, and lastly Woodhouse again all scored tries, and both those scored by Woodhouse were improved by Lyon. The result was that the Navy won by 25 points to nil. The Prince of Wales was present during the game, and was cheered by players and spectators. Navy, 4 goals (1 dropped) 2 tries; Army, 0.

HOCKEY.

SCOTLAND VS. IRELAND.—Ireland was unable to put her best team in the field against Scotland, at Glasgow, with the result that Scotland gained her first victory, winning by 3 goals to 2. The ground at Gilmorehill was frost-bound and snow was falling at the start. Scotland attacked at the start, and ten minutes after the bully off, McKenzie shot the home side's first goal. Walker and Elliott, the Scottish left wing, showed capital form, and a little later they forced a corner. From this penalty, A. B. Burt succeeded in notching Scotland's second point. Ireland then settled down to their game, and, shortly afterwards, Rentoul opened the scoring for the visitors. They continued to press during the remainder of the first half, but, being unable to score again, Scotland led at the interval by 2 to 1. On resuming, Ireland attacked, and for some time play was confined to Scotland's territory. Gradually the Scottish defence prevailed, and carried the game into their opponents' quarter. Following a free hit, Walker scored for Scotland. Ireland replied in spirited fashion, and Johnstone scored for them. Scotland had the better of the game towards the finish; but nothing further was scored, and Scotland therefore won by 3 goals to 2.

ENGLAND VS. WALES.—At Swansea on a damp ground, the international hockey match, England vs. Wales was played. The teams turned out as finally selected. England proved successful by 6 goals to nil. At the start England pressed, but Richards defended well and Turnbull saved a hot shot. A fine run by the Welsh right wing took the play to the English quarters, but the game was soon transferred to the Welsh end, and Logan shot wide. After fifteen minutes play Shoveller opened the scoring for England. The Welsh twice got into attacking position, but failed in the circle, Pridmore scored the second point for England after a corner, and at the interval the score was England 2 goals, Wales nil. Logan scored for England ten minutes after resuming. Both sides attacked in turn, Shoveller missing for England and Pearson for Wales, then Shoveller put on England's fourth goal and Pridmore added two more goals before the finish.

CROSS COUNTRY.

THE NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP.—The thirty-third annual race for the National Cross-Country Championship was decided at Haydock Park, Manchester, a splendid record entry for the race in the north of nineteen teams having been received. These did not include a single entry from the south, the clubs affiliated to the S.C.C.C.A. having decided to stand down, as a sign of loyalty to their association, although several of them doubtless regretted that body's action in seceding from the National Cross-Country Union. When last year's race was run at Newbury the Hallamshire Harriers won with a total of 146 points, the Birchfield Harriers were second with 158 points, the Bradford A.C.H were third with 187, and the Highgate Harriers (Southern champions) fourth with 189. For individual honours the placing were A. J. Robertson (Birchfield H.), 1; W. Coates (Thrapston), 2; A. E. Wood (Essex Beagles), 3; and G. Pearce (Highgate H.), 4. The most regrettable thing about the absence of the southerns yesterday was Wood being thereby prevented from again pitting himself against his old opponents, as many people were of opinion that with his added experience he might have got his revenge, especially after his fine show at Epsom a week ago.

The result was a win for the Birchfield Harriers, and individual honours went to J. Murphy, of the Hallamshire Harriers, who won the Northern Counties' Championship a fortnight ago. The weather was the worst in which the race has ever been run, snow falning all the time. The field numbered 163 runners, the Sefton H. and Chesire Tally Ho scratching. At the end of the first lap Coales, of Thrapston; Robertson, of Birchfield; Murphy, of Hallamshire; and Warburton, of Bury, were leading, in close company, in 16min. 6secs. ... this point nearly all the Bradford team left the track, called off by their captain Smith. At the half distance Murphy led from Robertson, Massey (Birchfield), Baldwin (Derby and County), Coales, Warburton, Lord (Wibsey Park), Green (Birchfield), and Loney (Birchfield). The time was 31mins. 35secs. When the bell rang the order was Murphy, Robertson, Massey, Baldwin, Coales, and Pateshall (Small Heath), and the time 47mins. 5secs. Murphy eventually won by about thirty yards from Robertson, with Coales about another 100 yards away third.

The order of finishing of the first twelve was as follows:—

Position.	Name and club.	Time. min.	sec
1	J. Murphy, Hallamshire H. ...	62	25
2	A. J. Robertson, Birchfield H. ...	62	31
3	W. Coales, Thrapston C. and A. C. ...	62	50
4	E. Green, Birchfield H. ...	63	4
5	E. Massey, Birchfield H. ..	63	7
6	H. D. Baldwin, Derby, and County A.C	63	8
7	F. V. Loney, Birchfield H. ...	63	10
8	A. F. Pateshall, Small Heath H. ...	63	18
9	P. McGuiness, City and Suburban H.	63	27
10	F. Lord, Wibsey Park A.C.	63	46
11	S. Welding, Sutton H.	63	52
12	E. Barnes, Derby and County A.C ...	63	57

The club placing were as follows: Birchfield H., 61 points, 1; Hallamshire H., 113 points, 2; Sutton H., 175 points, 3; City and Suburban H. (Dublin), 182 points, 4; Small Heath H., 228 points, 5; Derby and County H., 255 points, 6; Thrapston H., 242 points, 7; Broughton H., 3[illegible] points, 8; Wibsey Park A.C., 344 points, 9; Warrington H., 429 points, and Salford H., 429 points, tied for tenth place; St. Helens H., 444 points, 12. Only four runners finished for Bury H. and Manchester Y.M.H., two for Crewe H., one for Bradford H., and none for Manchester H.

ATHLETICS.

VARSITY PROSPECTS.—For once in a way the O.U.A.C. and C.U.A.C. trial meetings' results which I gave you last mail, must not be taken too seriously. Very few of the competitors were properly wound up, several notable athletes were absent, while the conditions were most unfavourable. The last-named fact, however, emphasised the high excellence of the performances that were accomplished. The best at Oxford were, perhaps, Mr. Hull's "Hundred" and "Quarter," Mr. Bleadon's Long Jump and Weight (22lb. (10 3-5 and 51), Mr. Bleadon's Long Jump and Weight (22lb. 2 in. and 38 ft. 2 in.), and Mr. Putnam's hammer throw (143 ft. 6 in.). When a man combines all the dash of a sprinter with the capabilities of a ¼-miler, as in Hull's case, he must be labelled dangerous. I predict great things for the Brasenose flier at Queen's Club. His Iowa and Queen's colleague, Mr. Woodrow, too, looks like easily beating 10 3-5 on the 19th instant while Mr. Howard-Smith, runner-up for the "Quarter," should also train on. Bleadon's dual feat was accomplished with that characteristic ease which has ever marked his efforts. The amateur champion long jumper will get very near 23 ft. even yet, but I am not so sure about the weight. He will always beat 36 ft. or 37 fe., presumably; albeit, it would not surprise me to see Mr. Robinson turn the tables at Queen's Club. This lengthy Australian has been very seedy for some time, and we have yet to see him at his best. Putman's hammer throw was nothing out of the way; that is, for the famous Rhodes scholar. He is the most polished exponent of the art I ever remember, and, what is a good deal more, about the most consistent. With Mr. Lindsay-Watson (Cambridge) in tremendous form also, we may look forward to some hammer-throwing extraordinary when they meet. The best Cambridge performances were Mr. Ragg's "Hundred" (10 3-5), Mr. Boycott's Hurdles (16 3-5), Mr. Armstrong's "Quarter" (51 3-5), and President Just's "Half" (2 2 4-5). Ragg promises to prove very speedy directly he has learned to get off better, and Armstrong's dash and stride are valuable assets in his new role as a quarter-miler. He will have to be seriously reckoned with on the 19th instant. Mr. Murray (the hurdle Blue) will probably turn the tables on his conqueror at Queen's Club, although the old Leatherhead boy tops the timber well and has an undeniable finish. The president himself seems in trim thus early, but is far from wound up, which applies equally to his Oxford confrere Mr. Stormonth-Darling, by the way. As a matter of fact, it would be idle at the present moment to even attempt to sum up respective chances for the Inter-'Varsity meeting. That will best come a fortnight later, for Messrs. Hallows, Cator (Oxford) and Baker (Cambridge) will all run at Queen's Club, despite their absence from divers events in the trials. The last-named will take no end of beating in the mile, while Mr. Hallows means winning the 3-miles for the fourth successive year. Nor would it be surprising to find the Olympic Games record-holder getting very close to, even if he does not beat Mr. Horan's long-standing figures of 14·44 3-5 for the distance. Both teams will be finally selected almost directly and will then migrate to the seaside, as usual, to finish up their preparation. May they have better weather!

LACROSSE.

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.—The seventh annual lacrosse match between representatives of Oxford and Cambridge took place on the New College Ground at Oxford and resulted in a victory for Cambridge by 8 goals to 6. It was a fast and interesting game throughout, for though the Light Blues led at half-time by 4 goals to 2, when three-quarters of the period had passed the score stood at five goals all. Thereafter Cambridge scored thrice to Oxford's once, and won a well-deserved victory.

The ground was rapidly drying after the recent rain, but was naturally slippery in parts. The weather was beautifully fine, and a good company assembled. The game had not long been started when Batty opened the scoring for Cambridge, and then Bothwell, the Oxford cover-point, let his side down badly by allowing B. H. Holloway, the Cambridge "Rugger" Blue, to shoot thrice, close in and unchecked. Meanwhile, however, Adamson and Robinson had both scored for Oxford, so that Cambridge had a useful 2 goals lead at the interval.

After the restart, the Oxonians enjoyed the larger share of the ball, but their attack was ineffective. Adamson was too well marked by Buttery to be really dangerous. The Oxford defence, with the exception of Bothwell, was fairly sound, Cameron holding N. J. Holloway well, but, nevertheless, the Light Blues scored four more goals through Batty, B. H. Holloway, Fiddian, and Williamson. As Oxford could only get through an equal number of times in this half by virtue of Davies (2), Robinson, and Dart, Cambridge won as stated.

For the winners, Spetter, B. H. Holloway, and Buttery all played a fine game, whilst Cameron, of Oxford, was one of the best men on the field.

OXFORD.—E. A. H. de riel (St. Paul's and St. John's), goal; A. G. Cameron (Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, and Balliol), point; A. M. Bothwell (Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, and Trinity), cover-point; *J. M. Bell (Manchester and Trinity), third man; E. A. Salter (Leys and Lincoln), right defence; A. R. McLeod (McGill University and Balliol), left defence; ... S. Macdonnel (Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, and Balliol), centre; M. W. Davis (St. Dunstan's Catford, and Christ Church), right attack; C. D. Dart (King Edward's School and St. John's left attack; *R. L. Robinson (St. Peter's Adelaide, and Magdalen), third home; E. C. Ansorge (St. Paul's and St. John's), second home; and *C A. Adamson (Manitoba and Merton), first home.

CAMBRIDGE.—C. T. Edwards (Dulwich and King's), goal; *H. R. Buttery (Leys and Christ's), point; W. F. Thompson (Leys and King's), cover-point; G. D. Ascoli (Manchester Grammar School and Caius), third man; *J. T. Spittle (Rugby and Pembroke) (capt), right defence; *J. Neal (Leys and King's), left defence; J. M. Williamson (Leys and Caius), centre; E. J. Woodall (Leys and St. John's), right attack; W. R. Batty (Manchester Grammar School and Jesus), left attack; W. M. Fiddian (Leys and King's), third home; *B. H. Holloway (Leys and Jesus), second; and N. J. Holloway (Leys and Jesus), first home. *Played in last season's match.

ROWING.

THE VARSITY BOAT RACE.

CAMBRIDGE.—Under favourable conditions, with good water except near Thornycrofts, Cambridge rowed from Hammersmith Bridge to Barnes Bridge yesterday afternoon, starting at 32. They kept up to 31 all the way, passing Chiswick in 4mins. 9secs. and reaching Barnes Bridge in 8mins. 21secs. which is within 11secs. of the record performance by their 1899 crew, who also got to Chiswick steps with a following wind in 3mins. 57secs. when they were only rowing that distance. Stuart's cold is evidently much better, and the men all look fit and well. There was a little too much tearing out at the finish in the last two minutes, but on the whole the boat travelled well all the way, and they finished at a lively 36. Names and weights:

OXFORD.—A high wind meeting the swift-running stream caused Henley Regatta Reach to be very lumpy yesterday, and the Oxford crew had their watermanship fairly tested. In the morning Mr. Warre gave tub-pair practice to Mackinnon and Gillan and Newman and Barker. When the eight was launched the crew did a strong four-minutes' paddle, clearing the broken water well. Then a little starting practice was indulged in, Bourne first striking 10 strokes in 17secs. and afterwards 18 in half a minute. All backed up well except No. 2, who hit the water. Another five and a half minutes' row at an average of 28 was well done, and then a row-home over the last half of the regatta course was accomplished in 4mins. 24secs. In the afternoon the crew had their first trip in the new boat, built by Rough. In a short trial the craft gave every satisfaction. Later another trip was made in the old boat, when in exceedingly rough water the men rowed the full regatta course in 8mins. 8secs. their half-way time being 4mins. Names and weights:

BOXING.

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.—The Cambridge Corn Exchange was packed last night, when the annual inter-'Varsity boxing and fencing contests were decided. Cambridge were considered to stand a very fair chance of winning, but were badly defeated by six events to two, although all the boxing was very close, and some of the decisions were not popular.

The officials were:—Boxing: Mr. A. F. Bettinson, referee; Messrs. Eugene Corri and R. Hair, judges. Fencing: Mr. R. M. P. Willoughby, president Messrs. A. V. Buckland and A. B. R. Wallis, judges; Con Griffiths (Cambridge) and Dave Barry (Oxford), seconds; Instructor Fordham, M.C. Details:—

BANTAM-WEIGHTS.

N. D. Williams (Trinity College, Cambridge) beat A. W. M. Griffiths (Keble College, Oxford).—This pair, the first to take the ring, were evenly matched. Griffiths adopted a crouching attitude. Williams was early attacking, and it was soon seen that something had happened to Griffiths's left arm. For the remainder of the round he relied chiefly upon his left, and had the worst of matters. In the second round Griffiths's arm seemed recovered, but it soon went again. The Oxonian adopted forcing tactics, but hit rather widly, whereas Williams stood his ground well, and making good use of his right was still leading at the end of the second round. At the last meeting Griffiths resumed the aggressive, but Williams still relied on his right. There was practically no science, but all hitting, and the Light Blue certainly had the best of that, and was declared the winner on points.

FEATHER-WEIGHTS.

E. O S. Gordon (Exeter Coll., Oxford) beat G. S. Fisher (Clare Coll., Cambridge).—Fisher was slightly the taller, but his opponent led off. The Light Blue tripped and fell, but appeared little the worse, and, forcing matters, for a period did well with his left. He was the more nippy of the pair, but at the end of the first round there was practically nothing in it. The second round was marred by too much clinching, and the referee was frequently compelled to interfere. Fisher frequently found his way to the wind, but threw a good opportunity away by not striking when he had got Gordon off his balance. However, throughout the round he left most of the attacking to the Oxford representative, who again scored points. In the last bout, when there was again a lot of holding, Fisher continued to do well with his left, and was smart in getting out of reach, but he was beaten on points. He did not box with his usual dash, and throughout the contest was rather tame.

LIGHT-WEIGHTS.

A. H. Gibbs (St. John's Coll., Oxford) beat R. W. Jennings (Downing Coll., Cambridge).—Gibbs was much the heavier, and decidedly the more scientific. He has a fine swinging left, which he early used. Jennings left his wind absolutely unprotected, and Gibbs fairly showered hard lefts on his body in the first round. At the second meeting Gibbs continued to send his left to the wind, but towards the end Jennings improved, and landed one or two head blows. The Light Blue was obviously in the pink of condition, and he came up for the last round the fresher. Very frequently in this round did Gibbs find his way to the body, whilst Jennings also did considerable damage with both left and right. Several times he forced his antagonist on to the ropes, and was scoring points fast when time was called, but the Oxonian had scored too fast for him in the first and second rounds.

MIDDLE-WEIGHTS.

D. Portway (Downing Coll., Cambridge) beat E. Fairbridge, (Exeter Coll., Oxford).—This opened very briskly, and gave great promise. Portway, the winner last year, at once forced matters, and it was soon seen that he was the better boxer. Very early he got a good left under the chin, and followed with another on the same spot straight from the shoulder. He continued to pepper Fairbridge's face and body, and at the first rest was almost untouched. Throughout the second round Portway continued to have matters practically all his own way, and frequently got his left home heavily. The Oxonian's only stroke appeared to be a bang on the kidneys. The last round was again all in favour of the Light Blue, who was trying for a knock-out. He showed great skill, and using his head remarkably well, won on points.

HEAVY-WEIGHTS.

F. P. Day (Christ Church, Oxford) beat G. A. Lilly (Caius Coll., Cambridge).—This was an extremely close contest. Day had all the weight on his side, and looked like disposing of Lilly very quickly, but the Cantab got well within his guard, and never gave him a chance of a knockout. Lilly did all the leading, and dodged smartly, but very little damage was done by either in the opening round. Once early in the second set-to Lilly came in for a left uppercut, and replied with a clean left, but put nothing behind it. The Light Blue kept up a strong attack, but his blows lacked force, and he frequently hit wildly. Towards the end of the round the Oxonian got in a stinging left, and was boxing very strongly when time was called. The last round was very wild and scrappy, and the Cambridge man did well with straight left leads, but he did not put enough power into them, and Day just won on points.

FOILS.—First Strings.

R. Chalmers (Oriel Coll, Oxford) beat V. C. Mr. Reeves (Magdalene Coll., Cambridge) by 8 hits to 1.

Second Strings.

M. F. Namek (Queen's Coll., Oxford) beat M. C. Kachorn (Trinity Coll., Cambridge) by 4 hits to 3.

SABRES.

Count O. Esterhazy (Queen's Coll, Oxford) beat V. C. M. Reeves (Magdalene Coll., Cambridge) by 8 hits to 5.

BILLIARDS.

C. HARVERSON vs. M. INMAN.—When the tournament heat between these players, both of whom receive 2,000 points start, closed on Friday night both men were a long way behind their points, but Inman held the winning lead the winning lead of 1,294 he still having 1,945 points to make. To enable the game to finish three sessions were played next day. Inman eventually won easily by 1,903 points. He is now top of the list, and should Stevenson be beaten by Aiken in the last heat Inman will take first prize. During the day the most important breaks were 81, 66, 225, 105, 80, 197, 150, 118, 86, 91 (twice), and 69 by Inman, while Harverson was credited with 71, 70 (twice), 168, 66, 62, 83, and 109. Result:

Harverson	7,097

H. W. STEVENSON vs. T. REECE.—The match of 20,000 up, in which Stevenson conceded 4,000 points start, for £200, ended at the Leicester-square Hall last Saturday night in an overwhelming victory for the Oldham professional by no less than 3,662 points. Yesterday Stevenson was seen to great advantage, Making breaks of 268, 88, 228, 221, and 78, Reece's most important runs being 81, 85, 88, 279, 79, and 69. Full scores:

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIPS.—Extraordinary interest was taken in the final heat of the London District qualifying competition for the Amateur Championship, held under the auspices of the Billiard Association, and Messrs. Orme's Soho-square salon packed to its utmost capacity when play began on Monday was afternoon. The contestants were Major H. L. Fleming, who had beaten Messrs. Berridge and Nutt in the preliminary rounds, and Mr. A. W. T. Good (an ex-holder of the title), who had disposed of Messrs. Hardy and Diehl in the earlier heats. The major was first favourite for Bradford immediately after his initial appearance in the event, and he fully justified the confidence placed in him by defeating Good by 174 points.

Following the customary opening misses, Major Fleming, with breaks of 20, 16, 24, and 28, reached 105—29, the Londoner's best break so far being 12. Good later sent up a useful 30, after which there was some sparring for an opening, which ended in favour of the Scotsman, who recorded breaks of 43, 33, 36, 20, 50 32, and 14 in the course of a dozen innings. Against these Good placed a fine all-round 47, and two others, each amounting to 14, and later an excellent 47, but the major countering the last effort with a useful 30, led by over 200, with but 50 points to score to reach the scheduled number. Good drew up a little with consecutive efforts of a 24 and 28, but Fleming, gathering items of 20 and 25 (unfinished), reached his points 159 ahead. Interval scores:—Fleming (in play), 501; Good, 342.

On resuming at night, Fleming broke down after adding 6 to his incomplete run, following which Good created some excitement by drawing to within 46 of his rival by means of a fine sequence of efforts yielding 18, 20, 55, 18, and 40. In the interim the major collected items of 23 and 21, and getting the run of the balls after Good's valuable sequence, he forged ahead again with 15, 16, 21, and 54, in the last of which he made fine use of the red ball, after being compelled to pocket the object white. Still Good remained in dangerous proximity to his rival's score by the aid of a prettily-compiled 46 and then 27; but Fleming was wonderfully steady, and after runs of 26 and 38 had again given him a lead of well over 100, he was never afterwards in any danger. Good continued to display any amount of pluck, but hardly utilised his openings to the best advantage, although sending up breaks of 14, 16, 25, 19, and 25. Fleming meanwhile was steadily progressing, and with items of 20, 19, 23, 18, and 12, eventually won comfortably by 174 points. In the afternoon Good had 46 innings and Fleming 45, and at night Fleming 92 and Good 58. Final scores:—

Pigsticking.

THE KADIR CUP, 1909.

Shujmana, 21st March.

Once again the annual pilgrimage to this most sporting of contests has commenced, and from every part of India the eager competitors are making their way to the well-known camp in the Ganges Kadir. Some favour the route viâ Meerut and Kithor, but these are mostly local sportsmen, those coming from a distance proceeding to the little railway station of Gajraula.

From the latter place a track of ten miles brings one into camp.

In company with some score sportsmen and a fair sprinkling of the gentler sex, the writer arrived about 2-30 P.M. Hungry for a long delayed luncheon, a rush was made for the "Hogshead Arms," and the little inn was soon filled to overflowing by ravenous sahib-log playing havoc with pressed beef, eggs and bacon and bottled beer.

Soon after 3 o'clock in driblets of twos and threes the cavalcade started their dusty trek to camp.

On arriving at Bachraon we found the members of the local club were "at home," so some of us halted for a short rest and some welcome refreshment, with which to wash the dust from our parched throats.

A metalled road runs as far as Bachraon and thither one luxurious party travelled by motor. Since last year a telegraph line has also been opened; most useful for wiring news from the front.

Another four or five miles brought us to camp. Baggage did not arrive until after the dinner rattle had sounded, so most of us were unable to adorn ourselves for dinner as we should have wished, though some appeared in borrowed plumes.

Who minds such trifles in the Kadir!

After dinner Mr. Norton, our hard-working and genial Honorary Secretary, announced that a Committee would be elected and the heats for the next day drawn.

As has been usual of late years the entry was again a record one, no less than 145 horses, of whom 116 were expected to start.

The Committee was elected as follows:—

President: Brigadier-General W. E. Peyton, D.S.O.

Members: Captain A. E. Wardrop, R.H.A.; Mr. J. C. Faunthorpe, C.S.; Captain S. H. Charrington, 15th Hussars; Lieutenant E. Norton, R.H.A., Honorary Secretary.

Field Master: Lieutenant-Colonel N. T. Nickalls, 17th Lancers.

The heats and the winner of each will be found below.

On looking through the list of starters we find that the horses are divided as follows:—

Gunners, 20; 15th Hussars, 23; Royal Dragoons, 10; Native Cavalry, 11; Civil Service, 7; P. W. D., 2; 17th Lancers, 14; Carabineers, 2; 10th Hussars, 8; British Infantry, 11; Indian Police, 4; Army Remount Depôt, 2; and General Peyton, 2.

Dawn broke cold and crisp to usher in the thirty-third anniversary of the Kadir Cup, and sportsmen were early astir to be ready on the line at 8 A.M. sharp, as the Honorary Secretary had ordered with emphasis on the previous evening.

The line started west of camp, not far from Basauli village and beat towards the river. Many pig were soon afoot, but owing to the heavy nature of the grass it was some time before any of the three heats on the line could be brought to a successful conclusion.

On the line bringing up their right soldiers and heading southwards, more rideable country was met with, and heats were run off with varying rapidity.

By the time a halt was called for luncheon at Basauli seventeen heats had been decided leaving twelve for the afternoon.

The line continued beating towards the south, and by 5 P.M. the remaining twelve heats had been run off.

Owing to a mistake on the part of the umpire of No. 29, the fate of this heat was left in the hands of the Committee, who decided that it should be run over again on the following day.

The following competitors were successful in getting both their horses through the first round:—Messrs. Parker, Vernon, Brooke, Palmer, Major Carden, and Captain Meade.

After a merry dinner, during which each heat was ridden over again and each unlucky competitor described to one equally unfortunate the "might-have-been" of his heat, the ties for the second round were drawn.

Later in the evening, or was it in the small hours of the next morning, certain hilarious young officers broke through the stillness of the midnight air and regaled their would-be somnolent comrades with snatches of "The Old Bull and Bush" and "I'm afraid to go Home in the Dark."

Tuesday, 23rd March.

Line started about half mile north of the Sherpur Ghat and beat northwards towards Makarampur.

By luncheon time all the heats of the second round, and the 29th heat of the first round,—which had to be run over again, had been decided, except one, No. 3 heat.

Whilst attempting to water her horse an unfortunate lady very nearly succumbed to the treacherous mud of the Burha Gunga: a few minutes later an ingenuous young cavalry subaltern, who had failed to take warning from this recently averted catastrophe, nearly succumbed in a similar manner.

All this occurred within full view of the horrified spectators.

Soon after this little excitement a much-needed luncheon was partaken of in the shady bagh at Makarampur. No. 3 heat was quickly disposed of after luncheon, and so early to camp.

The heats and results of the second round were as follows:—

Second Round.

Heat No. 1.—1 Capt. Meade, 10th H., Melody; 2 Mr. Paynter, R.H.A., Butcher (spear); 3 Mr. Adams, I. C. S., Clontarf. Umpire—Capt. Forsyth.

Heat No. 2.—1 Mr. Martin, I.P., French Girl (spear); 2 Mr. Dimsdale, R. B., Bugler; 3 Mr. Cotton, I.C.S. Dun Boy. Umpire—Capt. Wardrop.

Heat No. 3.—1 Mr. Faunthorpe, I.C.S., Brown Girl; 2 Mr. Parker, X. H., Shaugraun (spear); 3 Mr. Vernon, R. B., Barron Trek. Umpire—Major Kennard.

Heat No. 4.—1 Major Tilney, 17th L. D.G.; 2 Lt.-Col. Vaughan, X.H., Victoria; 3 Major Carden, 17th L., Gunjaish (spear). Umpire—Capt. Forsyth.

Heat No. 5.—1 Mr. Bromilow, 14th L., Rascal; 2 Major Hay, 5th Cav, Jew; 3 Capt. Birch, 29th L., No. 2 (spear). Umpire—Capt. Charrington.

Heat No. 6.—1 Mr. Brooke, R. F. A., Fellah; 2 Mr. Day, R.H.A., Dandy; 3 Mr. Bruen, 15th H., Twilight—(spear). Umpire—Major Pritchard.

Heat No. 7.—1 Major Carden, 17th L., Ugly; 2 Mr. Palmer, 10th H., Curraghmore; 3 Mr. Nutting, 17th L., Industry (spear). Umpire—Mr. Paynter.

Heat No. 8.—1 Mr. Palmer, X H., Skyscraper; 2 Mr. Vernon, R.B., Fire Plant (spear); 3 Major Hambro, 15th H., Enfilade; 4 Mr. Brooke, R.F.A., Reliance. Umpire—Capt. Wardrop.

Heat No. 9.—1 Mr. Atkinson, R. D., Leotard; 2 Mr. Parker, 10th H., Research; 3 Capt. Meade, 10th H., Neptune (spear); 4 Capt. Learmouth, 15th H. El Dorado. Umpire—Capt. Charrington.

After dinner the heats for the semi-final were drawn, and the usual lotteries on the Hoghunters and Pony Hoghunters' Cups took place.

Much credit is due to Major Kennard for the able and eloquent manner with which he conducted the lotteries. I hope a little nest-egg in the shape of percentages will accrue to the funds of the Tent Club.

As will be seen by looking at the results of the second round, nobody had two horses left in for the semi-finals. This is surely as it should be; people can hardly be so selfish as to wish to have two horses left in, to the detriment of their brother sportsmen's chances.

Wednesday, 24th March.

A start was made about a mile higher up the river than on the previous day, and the beat was again northwards towards Makarampur.

By 10-15 A.M., the three heats of the semi-finals were run off and resulted as follows:—

Heat No. 1.—1 Mr. Nutting, 15th Lancers, Industry; 2 Mr. Parker, 9th Hussars, Shagrun; 3 Mr. Vernon, 60th Rifles, Fireplant (spear). Umpire—Captain Learmouth. A good start after a small fast boar in open country: Parker was first on to the pig. The pig jinked frequently and everyone had a chance. After a long hunt Vernon secured a good spear.

Heat No. 2.—1 Mr. Bruen, 15th Hussars, Twilight; 2 Mr. Paynter, R.H.A., Butcher; 3 Major Carden, 15th Lancers, Gungaish (spear). Umpire—Major Pritchard. Paynter's horse was somewhat lame and Bruen had been ill in bed since Monday afternoon. A fast jinking pig; Carden rode him throughout and speared before any one else had a look in.

Heat No. 3.—1 Mr. Martin, I. P., French Girl; 2 Captain Birch, 29th Lancers, Monarch (spear); 3 Captain Meade, 10th Hussars, Neptune. Umpire: Captain Wardrop.

After a real fine boar, Martin made the running but Meade was well up. A sharp jink let in Birch, who speared.

There was now an interval of about three-quarters of an hour to give the competitors' horses a breather for the final tussle.

Refreshments, followed by a photographic group by that well-known photographer Mr. Ballad Yates, helped to pass the time.

A scramble for the elephants followed and the three remaining competitors took their place on the line.

1 Major Carden, 15th Lancers, Gungaish; 2 Mr. Vernon, 60th Rifles, Fireplant (spear); 3 Captain Birch, 29th Lancers, Monarch. Umpire: Major Kennard.

A strip of high jhow was first beaten, but from the spectator's point of view, luckily, without result.

The line then swung right round and beat back towards Sherpur in some somewhat light grass. There were a few false alarms as a pig broke back or out at the side. At last, the beat were slipped to a fair boar, who appeared in front of the line. The three competitors were started level and raced up to the boar level for the first 100 yards or so. Carden and Vernon drew ahead of Birch. The two former raced neck and neck and kept to the pig through several jinks. A sharp jink back let in Birch, but he failed to avail himself of his opportunity. Carden and Vernon were again on to the boar, and came up with him almost simultaneously. Again the pig jinked and this time Vernon on the pony was quicker round and spearing cleverly, won the cup.

Our best congratulations are due to the winner who is a keen sportsman and a hard rider. His pony, Fireplant, is a marvel; he held his own with the horses as to pace, and tured inside them ridden with a snaffle

Mr. Vernon gained a thoroughly well-deserved win and won all through on his merits and those of his good pony.

Our condolences to the runners-up, either of whom with a bit of luck might have been the winner.

We are especially sorry for Major Carden, who has now been twice in the final out of three attempts. He is a great trier and a hard man to beat; may he win yet!

It must be a good many years since two ponies have been left in the final; this fact should be an encouragement to owners of fast and handy ponies.

An adjournment was made now to the tiffin bagh at Basauli, but it was a four-mile trek before we got there.

Early after tiffin the Hoghunters' and Pony Hoghunters' Cups were to be competed for.

The course was a triangular one which Colonel Vores, assisted by Mr. Day, had been kind enough to lay out.

The former over four miles and the latter over two miles of fair pigsticking country.

I heard it remarked that the Hoghunters' course was nearer five than the four miles, certainly it seemed a good deal longer than usual.

The starters for the first race were marshalled at 2-15 P.M. and numbered nine only, fewer than usual.

½ Hoghunters' Cup.

Mr. Winser, South Lancs., Black Coon, 1st; Mr. Fraser, 31st Lancers, Diabolo 2nd; Lord Francis Scott, Fermoy 3rd; M. Warren, R.F.A., Ginger; Mr. Irwin, Royal Dragoons, Wandering Willy; Mr. Nutting, 17th Lancers, Acorn; Mr. Miles, Royal Dragoons, Cocos, fell; Major Tilney, 17th Lancers, D. G.; Captain Forsyth, R.F.A., Lochinvar.

A nullah containing deep water had to be crossed within the first half mile. This brought down Diabolo, the favourite, and another. Diabolo lost between half and a quarter mile here before he was got going again. Major Tilney on D. G. followed, I believe, by Lochinvar, missed the second turning point, and having been told there was more water to cross, proceeded to swim the Ganges itself; they arrived somewhat late at the finish. Fraser lost more ground by going the wrong side of one of the elephants, but in spite of his misfortunes came with a rush into the straight for home. The pace had told on his horse, however, and Mr. Winser got home first on Black Coon by a few lengths, Lord Francis Scott being third on Fermoy.

Mr. Winser is to be congratulated on his win; he rode a well-judged race.

Mr. Fraser must have won as he pleased had he not had the misfortunes referred to above. As it was, he rode a great race to obtain second place and he rode all through with only one stirrup leather, the other one having broken at the start.

Pony Hoghunters' Cup.

Mr. Warren, R.F.A., Jenny Jones, 1st; Mr. Fraser, 31st Lancers, Serrifile, 2nd; Mr. Micholls, 17th Lancers, Mosenstein, 3rd; Mr. Adams, I.C.S., Clontarf; Mr. Brooke, R.F.A., Fellah; Mr. Stampe, P.W.D., Phobbos fell; Mr. Sandbach, Royal Dragoons, Double Keys, fell; Mr. Jenkins, I.C.S., Sam; Mr. Winser, South Lancs., French Maid.

This was a much shorter course than the previous one, about two miles only.

In the run in for home it was seen that Mr. Sandbach on Double Keys and Mr. Warren on Jenny Jones were having a great race for first place. As they neared the winning post Double Keys drew out to the front and had Jenny Jones beaten. Within thirty yards of the post Double Keys came down, thus giving the victory to Mr. Warren on Jenny Jones. Some lengths behind Mr. Fraser came in second on Serrifile, followed by Mr. Micholl's Mosenstein into third place.

It was very bad luck on Mr. Sandbach, who fell within a few yards of the post just as he had practically won the race. Luckily neither pony nor rider were injured.

A cheery dinner in the evening, during which the health of the winner and several other toasts were drunk, brought to a close a most enjoyable and smooth-running Kadir Cup meeting. Except during the last afternoon the weather was cooled by a refreshing breeze, and it was one of the coolest Kadir Cup meetings I remember. Everything went without a hitch, and our comfort in camp and on the line left nothing to be desired.

It is difficult to thank the Honorary Secretary, Mr. Norton, R.H.A., sufficiently for all the hard work and trouble he must have taken to ensure such a pleasant and thoroughly successful meeting.

This is his third year of office, and we can only hope that his tenure of the appointment may last for many years to come.

Our thanks are also due to General Peyton, the President of the Committee, for his assistance, to Colonel Vores for the trouble he took in laying out the course for the races, and to Colonel Nickalls, our energetic Field Master, to whose efforts on the line the quick running off of the heats was in a great measure due. As previously mentioned, the attendance at the meeting was a record one, and amongst the spectators were a great number of the fair sex, who, heedless of the burning sun, graced the meeting with their presence. Amongst others, I noticed Mrs. Nickalls, and Mrs. Tilney of the 17th Lancers, and Mrs. "Rattle" Barrett of the 15th Hussars, eager to cheer their husbands on to victory, or sympathise in their ill-fortune.

WINCHESTER

MODEL 1907 SELF-LOADING RIFLE

.351 CALIBER HIGH POWER.

Before deciding upon a rifle for your next hunting trip, don't fail to investigate the merits of this new Winchester, which is reloaded by the recoil of the exploded cartridge. There is nothing complicated, cumbersome or freakish about it. It is a reliable, handy gun from butt to muzzle. The .351 Caliber High Power Cartridge which it shoots represents the latest development in powder and cartridge manufacture. Although small in size it develops tremendous velocity and energy, making it powerful enough for the largest game. This most modern type of cartridge also possesses the added advantage of economy. Owing to the comparatively small amount of metal used in the shell it costs much less than old style cartridges no more powerful.

'RIFLING, LONDON."

Mrs. Trench, the sporting daughter of our sporting Lieutenant-Governor, was to be seen daily in saddle at Ranchi. We hope she will persuade her father to honour us next year with his presence.

Other keen spectators were Mrs. Saunders, Mrs. Warren, Mrs. Wingfield, Mrs. Lockett and Mrs. Fazakerley, whose husband has been a faithful supporter of the Kadir Cup for—I don't know how many years.

Mr. Cockrell, Forest was in charge of course, gunnery and hospitality personified.

Besides Mr. Fazakerley and Captain Bancroft, runners-up in 1908, other old competitors included Captain Learmouth, winner in 1905, Major Pritchard, who has been in the final more than once, Major Kennedy, who now runs the Muktha Test Club, Captain Cherrington, Honorary Secretary during 1903-04, Mr. Cotton, an old supporter of the Test Club, and last, but not least, Captain Wardrop, who ran the Meerut Test Club for no less than seven years, and is principally responsible for the excellent and smooth working of the Club.

It is with the keenest regret that the writer realises, that owing to the exigencies of the service to which he belongs, this will be, in all probability, the last Kadir Cup in which he will take part.

And although some of us are fated never to compete again, in memory at least we'll ride our heats again. To adapt the words of a well-honoured sportsman and poet :—

"For when long years have passed away,
And the summer of life be o'er
When the joyous days of youth and strength
Have gone to return no more;
Yet memory often shall cheer the heart,
And brighten the flickering life,
And side by side—as of old—we'll ride
And join in the glorious strife."

Hunting.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

There were a good number out on the Bye day at Santa Cruz and, after meeting on the flats, a move was made at a slow pace to Sahar Hill, giving Bombay folk plenty of time to come up. The covert at the base of this hill was tenanted as usual and away went a jack to give us our customary sprint across the banked fields of Somanwadi Valley. Taking the usual line for Vanpoli, he ran along the Tulsi main and, passing the valley, came to Chandia Hill. In the grove there was a check, and any amount of casting about failed to have the desired effect. Later we found that a couple and a half in charge of the second whip had "got on" and chased the quarry to the railway between Jola and Andheri. They carried on the chase the other side, crossed again and effected a kill. As they crossed the line the overwatcher of a train actually caught one of the hounds, who thus had a very narrow escape.

As to the main body, they were taken off to the coverts near the barracks, where another object de chasse came to light. Crossing the water main, the line lay across the stony nullah and, after avoiding the enclosure, we carried on to the Backwater. We crossed near the stone bridge and followed through the mango plantation, the fruit of which we shall soon enjoy, in a line for the road and the open Powai Valley. The varmint, however, refused to carry on, and entering the woods tried to hide in the walled in enclosure. From this he never came out, hounds pulling him down after a sharp run round.

With the coolness of the wind, scent had been quite good, better than at many earlier meets.

The extra day on Thursday, a sort of last drag to a long and thoroughly successful Hunting Season, was well attended; the pack having been considerably diminished owing to the dispatch of about ten couple for the Belgaum Hunt. It was cool as we moved away from the Jackal Club towards Sahar Hill and got away on the line of a jack from the covert at its base. He set his mask in the usual direction, across Romanwadi Valley into the country beyond, but at the Tulsi water main hounds were at fault. Just when we were thinking of drawing hounds off one of them gave tongue again, and away went the lot along the valley, over the aforementioned main and left handed away from the unwelcome stony nullah. Passing Vanpoli and reaching the Andheri road there was again a long check before the line was picked up leading to Marole. Passing the village and Stacey's Tank, the quarry took us to Sunday Hill, and on the slopes at the last succeeded in effectively hiding. It was hopeless in the long grass and though the morning had been cool there had been a lack of dew, which is so essential to a good run.

LUCKNOW REGATTA.

The annual regatta at Lucknow was held on the 26th and 27th March and was a most enjoyable function. There was a large attendance on both days, H. SEASON 1908-1909.

The past season, the forty-fifth since the Club was founded in 1864, was probably the most successful on record. Out of 29 matches played, no less than 19 having been won, and only 2 lost.

The average per wicket lost has risen from 18·6 in 1905-06, 21·89 in 1906-07 and 1907-08, to 25·3 in 1908-09, whilst the average per wicket captured is 15·34, compared with 14·6 in 1905-06, 15·8 in 1906-07, and 19·17 in 1907-08.

The bat presented by the Club for the best average goes to B. A. White with the extremely satisfactory figures of 45·5 for 18 innings, H. S. Skinner being a good second with 40·88.

The bowling average (qualification 20 wickets) goes, as is only fair it should, to F. Gould, on whom by far the major portion of the work has fallen; his figures of 103 wickets for 11·83 each, speak for themselves, and, so far as the writer is aware, constitute a record for the Club, no one having previously taken 100 wickets in any one season.

Both H. F. Yeoman and B. A. White have also done useful work in this department at times, though the latter has generally been rather expensive.

Behind the wicket, J. G. Frost has put in splendid work, and has fully upheld his reputation of being one of the best, if not the best, stumper in Calcutta.

J. R. COULTHARD,
Honorary Secretary.

9th DIVISION TOURNAMENT.

CHESHIRES vs. DORSETS.—These teams met in the semi-final on the 19th March. The Cheshires lost three men through injuries at various stages of the game, but gave a good account of themselves nevertheless, eventually winning by a goal to nil. The first half saw the Cheshires doing most of the attacking, and at length Eden headed the ball into the net. On changing ends the Dorsets attacked. They had certainly the worst of ill luck in not scoring. All their efforts were unsuccessful: several corners were not improved upon: and time arrived without further score. Teams :—

CHESHIRES.—Trueman, goal; Price and Edwardes, backs; Patience, Stephens and Shelton, halves; Smith, Walker, Eden, Pickering and Hickley, forwards.

DORSETS.—Prestidge, goal; Emberson and Gough, backs; Davis, Banbury and Rayner, halves; Bontnor, Perry, Tarrant, Lieutenant Shute and Scott, forwards.

Final.

CHESHIRES vs. SHERWOOD FORESTERS.—The final between the above teams was played on the 22nd ultimo before a large gathering of spectators. The Foresters won by 2 goals to nil. At the start the Cheshires forced a corner which was unproductive, but they continued to attack till Marsden at length got the ball away and the Foresters took up the offensive. Both goals were then visited in turn: the Cheshires forced another abortive corner and thereafter the Foresters kept up a vigorous attack, nothing accruing till half time. On resuming save for a few spurts by the Cheshires, who obtained another unconverted corner, the Foresters had the best of the play, but there was no scoring and at time the score sheet was blank. Extra time was played during which the Foresters scored twice. Orange heading the first goal and Smedly adding another with a hot shot. General Kenyon Slaney gave away the cup and congratulated the winners on their success and the losers on their plucky exhibition. Teams :—

CHESHIRES.—Trueman, goal; Price and Edwardes, halves; Fowles, Stephens and Patience, halves; Henshaw, Shelton, Eden, Jarral and Pickering, forwards.

FORESTERS.—Marsden, goal; Doncaster and Burford, backs Moss, Smith, and Chesterton, halves; Millington, Stevenson Sibthorpe, Smedly and Orange, forwards.

SIBPUR vs. ROVERS.—Played on the 24th instant, Sibpur winning by 2 goals to nil. The game was evenly contested till the closing stages, when the Sibpur team got the upper hand and scored twice, Haupt and Scott being responsible.

10TH JATS vs. DALHOUSIE.—These teams met on the 24th instant, a fast and interesting game resulting in a win for the Jats by 4 goals to 1. Mortimer scored in the first half for the 10th. Alden equalised after the interval, and then Slater (2) and Mortimer hit goals for the Jats.

MEDICALS vs. MOHAN BAGAN.—Played on the Customs' ground on Friday, the Medicals winning by 2 goals to nil. There was no scoring in the first half which was fairly level. Perkins and Hendricks were credited with a goal each during the closing stages of the game.

RANGERS vs. Y. M. C. A.—The Rangers put another victory to their credit when they defeated the Y. M. C. A. on Saturday by 3 goals to nil. Davis scored in the first half and Skempton added 2 more goals on changing ends.

DALHOUSIE vs. ROVERS.—This match on Saturday ended in a pointless draw.

CUSTOMS vs. ST. XAVIERS.—Playing on their own ground on Saturday the Customs beat St. Xaviers by 6 goals to nil. They had the best of the exchanges throughout. McCready, Fisher and I. A. Smith scored in the first half, and McCready, Fisher and I. R. Smith on changing ends.

CALEDONIA vs. SIBPUR.—Played on the Caledonia ground on Saturday, ending in a draw—one all.

MEDICALS vs. CALCUTTA.—These teams met on the Rangers' ground on Saturday when Calcutta, who had out a scratch side, were beaten by 2 goals to 1, after a well contested game. Boileau scored for the Medicals in the first half and D'Arcy added a second on crossing over. Sherman was credited with Calcutta's single point.

SIBPUR vs. MOHAN BAGAN.—Played on Monday, Sibpur winning by 2 goals to nil. Patterson and Durrell were responsible for the scoring—a goal in each half.

E. I. R. vs. 10TH JATS.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Monday, the Railway winning by 2 goals to 1. Both teams scored in the first half, Slater for the Jats, W. Smith for the Railway, and on changing ends Bennett registered the winning point.

CALEDONIA vs. Y. M. C. A.—A pointless draw was the result of this match on Saturday after a scrambling game.

CUSTOMS vs. MEDICALS.—These teams put up an excellent game ton Monday, the match attracting a large crowd of spectators. The result, a pointless draw, is a true index of the play.

R.-N. R. vs. MOHAN BAGAN.—Played on Tuesday evening, Mohan Bagan meeting with yet another defeat. The Railway scored twice through Ismay, and Bagchi was credited with Mohan Bagan's single goal.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA TOURNAMENT.

WESTERN INDIA CHAMPIONSHIP.

SINGLES.

THIS Annual Tournament held by the Bombay Gymkhana was concluded on Tuesday, the 23rd March, when J. S. Milne beat A. H. Glendenning after a hard-fought-out game by 6—5, 6—3, and won the "Singles" Championship for the year.

Nine players competed, seven of whom drew a bye in the initial round. The only game was between W. Reid and Lieutenant Bacchus and the former had a easy win of it by 6—0, 6—1.

In the second round, Glendenning easily disposed of Lieutenant Stevenson by 6—1, 6—3 and in the next game Captain Lucas and W. Reid provided a good exhibition and Lucas eventually won by 6—3, 6—5. P. M. D. Sanderson had a walk-over over W. E. Holl, while the last match of this tie between R. D. England and J. S. Milne was another interesting affair, England, however, succumbing by 6—3, 6—4.

In the semi-finals, it was a stroke of luck for Glendenning that Lucas scratched, for the former could never have had any chances with the winner of the "Marrayat Cup." The other game was also a practical walk-over for Milne over Sanderson, the score being 6—1, 6—1 in favour of the former.

The final was perhaps the best game in the Tournament. The first set was very close. Milne led at the beginning 3—1, but Glendenning picked up and finally led 5—4. The next two games should have been won by Glendenning but he threw away his chance in the first, and after being 40—15 lost the last also. From this point Milne improved and although Glendenning led 2—1 in the second set, the former was playing a winning game, making a lot of very nice shots down both side lines, finally winning by 6—3. Boxing.

POONA BOXING TOURNAMENT.

THE opening night of the Poona Boxing Tournament took place on Monday, the 22nd inst. and cannot be said to have been a very great success as two walks-over in the Light-weights made the programme too short and the majority of the fights were not of a high order. Experience should have taught the Executive by now that thirteen fights are insufficient for preliminaries.

Beginning with Feathers, one of the most extraordinary exhibitions of perfect condition was when Calloway led persistently from start to finish, though usually too short to get home. Edwards invariably landed but, tiring at the finish, was declared the loser. Panton secured a clever win, as had he allowed any of Steward's right upper-cuts to get home it would have been the end of him. Steward is a likely boxer, but times his hits badly. Manning beat Grooby as expected, but the latter fought hard though too wildly. Callear beat Poole, but will not go far, which also applies to Hookings, who beat Hammond. Robson, of the Durhams, is a nice boxer, very light but quick and would have beaten Moss had the latter's wrist lasted or not; the winner recently beat Martin.

None of the Lights lasted long, the best being curtailed owing to Wilson hurting his wrist when ahead on points with Firmestone. The former is only 18 and has twice been in the final of the Boys'—he should improve greatly. We did not see much of Oakes, as Norris's thumb went out, and Dixon and Hillier had walks-over.

In the Middles, Atkinson was very lucky to get the verdict over Barry, and would not have done so had the latter gone in more: Atkinson is very strongly built but clumsy and cannot use his strength. Barnshaw shewed himself quite a nice fighter, and his leads were much too good for Gibson who swung very wildly and did no more damage. Griffin, however, is quite the pick of those seen, putting Williams out in the first round after sending him down twice. Griffin is well proportioned and quick and will take beating.

Mr. Ben Defrece is again time-keeper with Lieutenant Haynes, of the Northamptons, M. C. as well as Honorary Secretary, Captain Noake, R. A. M. C., and Lieutenant Mowatt, 26th Cavalry judges. Everyone was glad to see that keen enthusiast, Colonel Grantham, in the Referee's Chair. Open fighting is the order when the Colonel officiates and though it is a little disappointing to have quick in-fighting interrupted, it is, I am told, advisable with soldier fighting. The Colonel, however, has to be thanked for allowing as much latitude as possible.

The general sympathy felt for H. E. the Governor at his second sad bereavement within such a short time undoubtedly did much to detract from the enthusiasm of all present.

The second night's boxing was admirable, some good men were seen out, and with the others what they lacked in science they made up for with energy. Quick, and clean fighting was seen, the referee on only rare occasions making his presence felt and allowing close work till it came to a wrestle. Sufficient proof of the Colonel's keenness is that he came this long journey immediately on top of two other tournaments.

Most interest was naturally in the Heavies, when the famous Lance-Corporal Smith (Gipsy) was seen out but, owing I am told to rheumatic fever, did not shine. He had to meet a plucky, raw-boned man in Wright who, after rushing him clean over the ropes, gave him all he could do to win on points. He will have to improve considerably to beat Wells, of the Mountain Battery. This young boxer is an example to most in that he is trained more for the game than for weight-lifting as the majority in this class. A tall, clean-limbed fellow, he is quicker and better on his feet than any heavy I have seen out here and does not appear to hit as hard as he does. Turner went down and out to him in the third round. Jarvis beat Meechan in a regular rough and tumble, and will not go far, and last year's winner, Tansell, had a walk over.

In the Lights we saw the holder, Marke, shew himself improved on last year as, seemingly physically stronger, he uses his right more and retains his fine left lead. Tpr. Boston, a youngster, stood up gamely but, being guilty of failing to avoid a knock-out, was sent to his corner. Makins won his fight, but is much too slow, and another of the old ones in Strickland won easily with as powerful a punch as ever. Beazly shewed himself a nice hand fighter and with Williams always on the defensive there was really no need for an extra round. Dean and Hill are new to us, and here an extra minutes would have gone down well. Hill's superior strength was in his favour, but Dean is the cleverer and varies his tactics nicely.

Jones had a W. O. and McIntosh and Baker won tame fights against stronger opponents through their quickness. Hammings and Roberts had a great set to, the former's reach getting him there.

A Boys' bout was on the programme, this ended early in the second round through Harley, who was the better—succumbing to a feeling of sickness which began in the interval; Jones, the bigger, thus winning.

Sport was again quite good on Wednesday when three walks over and a couple of early knock-outs somewhat curtailed the programme, a six round contest also going only a couple of rounds, Roberts knocking out his bigger opponent, Spencer. Most of the fights were of a rousing description and we had to be thankful that a referee presided whose rulings were lenient.

An Officers' Heavy-Weight figured but, as usual, was very poor. Saunders must have been over a stone heavier than Chesney and leading with his left all the way, won; Chesney never once being the aggressor.

There were three fights down for Middles, but in one Sandford got a walk over and in another Griffin knocked Flower out in the first round, keeping up the good impression he has made as a nice, clean fighter. In the third Barnshaw and Atkinson had a rare dusting up. As remarked before, Atkinson is not as powerful as his build suggests, and Barnshaw's lefts were two much for him, having him quite groggy in the third.

The Feathers provided plenty of life, the first being between Spillard and Farley, who banged away rights and lefts with little attempt at guarding. Farley was stronger and, having his man groggy in the first, sent him down for 7 in the second, opening his eye. Spillard went down for 8 in the third but gamely stayed on. Martin made short work of Carter, though the latter's ducking avoided the former's eight swing till near the end of round 1, when he was counted out with a beauty on the point. Sullivan was never a match for Daniels, who is very well developed and has a hard punch. He was guilty of hitting in clinches once or twice and, after getting his man groggy, put him out with a succession of weighty jabs. Kay and Dibbs had a great set to, not too scientific a one, the former going down twice in the third before being counted out.

In the Lights, the last of round 1 was between Arthur and Thorpe. The former has a pretty, open style and had Thorpe well set, the latter being disqualified early for taking to the boards unnecessarily. Next was quite the best seen yet in pace and cleverness between Gunners Lyons and Oates. Lyons had the advantage in reach but Oates is a strong fighter and a hard nut. From the start it was evident Lyons' lefts would tell, though Oates brought in a quick double and held his own for three rounds. The third was very good, Oates at the finish feeling the effect of those left upper-cuts with the body behind them, and Lyons deservedly won. Lyons seems in the old form which won him this class two years ago and will be hard to beat. Dixon was always too strong for Firmistone; and a poor fight ended in the referee stopping it in the third with Firmistone at his opponent's mercy on the ropes.

Hillier had a walk over as also did Glossop in the Boys' competition.

There was some whole-hearted fighting on Thursday, the fourth night, and the Committee will find some difficulty in deciding upon the special prize winners, such as for "science" and the "best loser." When catering for the various weights, it is surprising how much weight some men have to give away. The cause is that the big ones train down for the scales and then immediately put on weight, as much as a stone can come on within a couple of days. In all big fights the men weigh in at the ring-side and as, in these tournaments, the men are supposed to enter the ropes at a certain stipulated weight, it would be a good idea were they forced to weigh in before each programme starts.

Some brisk work was seen in the Feathers, Healy and Callear going all the way and having to fight an extra minute though Healy was well on top. In extra time, however, he settled it, Healy was well on top. In extra time, however, he settled it, Callear's face being a mass of blood. Manning also had to go all he knew to beat Panton, who is very much like Marke of the same Regiment in style. Panton did well while he lasted, but Manning was too strong for him at the finish. Quite a youth, and a slim one, too, Robson has a surprisingly hard punch. Hookings seemed to think he was on a soft thing, but a left to the body steadied him. A similar punch sent him down for 9 in the second, and a moment later he was forced to "tender his mitten." Wright, of the G. I. P. Volunteers, never had a hope with Calloway and quietly gave in during the second round.

The Middles provided a fine fight between Barnshaw and Price. Price was in marvellously good fettle and made the pace hot despite Barnshaw's weighty lefts and rights. Barnshaw was always kept busy, but was more sure of his blows, Price's right being a bit wild but he came up for it every time. When Price was declared winner, we thought a mistake had been made in names, but when no correction came it left us sympathising with Barnshaw. Sandford purely set himself to avoid a K. O. from Griffin, who did all the fighting and never left us in doubt as to the winner.

In the final of the Boys' Competition, Glossop was much too good for Jones, who had had enough in the second. When taught to use his left, Glossop will devel p into a good boxer.

There were four pairs in the Lights, the best being Jones, who has often fought here and is known for a good guard and useful left having now put on strength and learnt to use his right, and Strickland knowing the latter's strength. Jones started on the defensive using a very useful left prop. Strickland's head frequently went back in the second and a couple of rights steadied him. Jones was distinctly the fresher in the third and assuming the aggressive, won a good fight. Marke confined himself to left leads against Baker and did not seem fully extended to beat him, getting away in time to avoid most of Baker's right swings, Makins and Hemmings indulged in slogging match without much science, the latter staying better and winning. Arthur made short work of Brownsward, when he got him on the ropes and proves himself to be in the front rank. He is very quick, and has an attractive style with a peculiar habit, not uncommon, of smacking his thigh. McIntosh retired, ostensibly owing to his wrist in the second round to Beazley, who had him well set. Beazley has 18 years' service to his credit and is one of the fittest men fighting.

The fifth, and last but night one, had an attracting programme of a dozen fights, but it came as a great disappointment to hear that Lance-Corporal Smith would be unable to meet Tansell owing to over 103 fever. All felt confident it would have been a rare go, and the other Heavy Weight was a foregone conclusion. I expressed my opinion of Wells before and he now never gave the hardy Jarvis a chance. Having a longer reach, Wells jabbed away with his left in the first. In the second he twice got home on the mark and, when Jarvis missed a swing, drove home a right to the jaw. Just able to stand, Jarvis made for the ropes and hung on, the referee forthwith stopping the fight.

Saunders had now to meet a taller opponent in de Boys for the Officers' Heavies and more than met his mark, de Boys opened his check near the eye in the first and sent him down with a neat right on the jaw in the second. Saunders was so palpably beaten that the fight was stopped.

There were two contests, in one Baker just managed to go all the way, though down twice, with Gibbons. The other saw Barry give in to Barnshaw in the second.

Some healthy hitting in feathers and Lights, but in the former there were two cases when an extra round if not a reverse decision, would have met with more approval. First on the boards were Martin and Farley, the latter stronger built and pressing Martin could not get his right in and was always pressed, having to duck frequently. The third was fast and even, but Farley's points in the first two won him the verdict. Healy put up a game fight with Manning, who was too strong and long in the reach for him and scored freely at the finish. Robson had the worst possible luck in losing to Calloway. The latter, as remarked before, presses continually, but Robson almost invariably got home, whereas Calloway was usually short, keeping a careful guard. Robson did not appear all out, possibly thinking he had sufficient points in hand. The case of Daniels was similar, Dibbs being a rare sticker, though on occasion badly punished. The conclusion one arrives at is that a man fit enough to continue aggressive, oblivious of punishment, will pull through.

As to the Lights, Lyons had an easy time of it with Dixon, who was soon groggy on the ropes. So groggy that Lyons was able to measure him up and lay him out with one of his marvellous left swings. Beazley at last found his big share of energy useless, but put a very game exhibition. After going down once in the first and four times in the second was willing to continue. Hillier's lefts were too good for him, however, and the fight was stopped. He is lucky to have got through to this without a fight and will have some tough nuts now. The meeting of Marke and Jones was very interesting, Marke hanging back in the first had the worst of it. Faster in the second, Jones' guard and right cross-counter were useful and in a quick third Marke scored prettily with his left. An extra minute showed Marke the quicker. The poorest of fight was that between Arthur and Hemmings, the former winning on points. He frequently hit low, and Hemmings lost no chance of claiming fouls through slapping his glove to a place a few inches lower than he was actually hit. After Arthur's previous shows this was very disappointing.

The Naturalist.

PROTECTIVE COLOURING IN ANIMALS.

Everyone is familiar with some of the instances in which the natural colour of an animal helps to hide it from view, remarks Sir Ray Lankester. Green caterpillars, for instance, are less visible when among the green leaves which they eat than they would be were they brown, blue, red, yellow, or black. The little green tree-frog is difficult to see when he is clinging to a leaf, because his colour is the same as that of the leaf. Sandy-brown coloured animals, birds, reptiles, and beasts of prey, are found on the sands of the desert; white birds, foxes, hares, and bears on the Arctic snow. The similarity of the colouring of these animals to that of the ground on which they live results in their escaping the observation of man's eye, and we are entitled to believe that they escape for the same reason the observation of other animals. They are thus in many cases protected from the attacks of enemies searching for them as prey, or in other cases they may themselves be enabled the more easily in consequence of their concealing colour to creep upon other animals and seize them as food. Some of the simple cases of this resemblance between an animal and its surroundings are easy to observe, and the value of the resemblance as protection, or as a means of secret attack, is plain enough.

But there are far more numerous cases in which the significance of colour as concealment, is not so immediately obvious. There are the curious stick insects, with long bodies and delicate long legs, sometimes with bud-like knobs on the body which look like bits of the branches of trees, not merely on account of their colour, but on account of their shape. Shape or modelling has a great deal to do with the effective concealment of an animal. Then, too, there is the curious fact that some insects (and also some birds), when at rest on the stems of trees, are practically invisible, but if they spread their wings are conspicuous. The beech-leaf butterfly of Assam and Africa is of a purple colour, marked with a great orange-coloured bar on each fore-wing when the wings are open, and it is obvious enough. But when the wings are closed and the insect is at rest, the undersides only are seen, and are coloured so as to represent the veining and fungus marks of a dry brown leaf, so that not even a human observer, let alone a bird or a lizard, can distinguish at two-feet distance the butterfly from dried leaves placed near it.

A well-known little moth with pale green mottled wings, is the only case in which I have myself watched the protection afforded by colour at work. It was on a summer's evening, when I saw this little moth zig-zagging up and down with the most extraordinarily irregular flight, and a bird pursuing it. Twice the bird swooped and just missed his prey owing to a sudden turn and drop on the part of the moth. And then to my great delight the moth flopped against the stem of a tree on which was growing a greenish-grey lichen. The bird swooped again close to the tree, but failed to see the insect, and quitted the chase. It took me an appreciable time to detect the little moth resting against the lichen, and closely matching it in colour. There are endless examples known of such "protective resemblances," some of them (such as that of the buff-tip moth, which, with its wings closed, looks like a broken birch twig) being most unexpected and fascinating. In the forests of Madagascar, the whitish-grey tree lichens are imitated by thread-like growths on beetles, tree bugs, locusts, and even lizards, with a wonderful concealing effect, and some other flat membrane-like insects are so much like the greenish and yellowish bark of trees that we actually lost a specimen for some time in the case labelled "mimicry," in which a series of these things was arranged by me for the edification of visitors to the Natural History Museum. It was found after a day or two to have been present all the time with other specimens on a piece of bark from which it was indistinguishable.

Some eight years ago a distinguished American painter, Mr. Abbott Thayer, was able to add very importantly to our knowledge of the ways in which colour serves to conceal animals when in their natural surroundings. Mr. Thayer was able to do this owing to the fact that he was a devoted student of woodland life. This, however, alone was not enough. Mr. Thayer had the special ability to deal with this subject which comes from the trained eye of an artist. He had, above all, the knowledge of "tone values" and of the illusive and delusive effects of false shading and of colour-spots and bars, and of complementary colours and "irradiation"—which only a painter who deals every day in the most practical way with these matters can attain to. Mr. Thayer showed eight years ago—and demonstrated conclusively by means of models, one of which he presented to the Natural History Museum at my request—that in very many cases it is of no use for an animal to be of the same colour as its surroundings, since if the animal (a bird, or a quadruped, or a fish) is of plump and rounded shape and is observed under the open canopy of heaven, a deep shadow will exist on its lower surface and make it as obvious as a shaded charcoal drawing on a piece of light-brown paper. But if the back of the animal is of a dark tint and its belly white or whitish, then the effect of light and shade is (Mr. Thayer showed) completely counteracted and the animal becomes totally invisible in its natural surroundings.

Mr. Thayer's model demonstrating this consist of two life-size wooden models of ducks seated on a stick—one to the left, the other to the right. The stick, with the two models on it, is fixed horizontally in a box, which is open above (that is, has no lid) and is also open in front. The box is in fact, a little stage, lit from above by the light of the sky, and its three remaining sides are sufficiently high to form a complete background to the model ducks, whose perch runs across the "scene" at some 7in. or 8in. from the floor of the box. The box itself is lined with a pale purplish-brown flannel, and each bird is tightly covered with the same material. When so prepared the box is placed on a table under a skylight (where it is to stay), the table being high enough to bring the ducks just below the line of sight. Of course, deep shadows are formed by the top-light on the under side of the beak, head, and body of the models, and in spite of their colour being itself identical with that of the walls of the box, they are as obvious as it is possible for anything to be. Now Mr. Thayer takes his paints and very carefully darkens the back of one of the ducks and whitens its belly and the under side of its head and beak. The light and dark regions merge into one another along the side of the bird by skilful gradation. When this shading and whitening is finished (and, of course, the perfection of the result depends on the continuance of the right amount of sunlight, which is not a thing one can always insure in a London museum) the duck-model so treated is absolutely invisible at a distance of 10 ft or 15 ft—and even when one is nearer escapes notice—looking like a haze or vague shadow of a bird even to an observer who knows nevertheless that it is there and is really as solid and large as the untreated model by its side. If now some one stretches out his hand so as to cut off the top-light falling on the painted model, it immediately becomes as solid to the eye and as visible as the untreated one, and when the hand is withdrawn it melts away again like Banquo's ghost. The models made by Mr. Thayer were, so long as I was director, exhibited in the small room between the fish gallery and the central hall of the Natural History Museum, and if they have not yet been removed are well worth a visit.

Mr. Thayer's models work perfectly, and astonish everyone who sees them. The great point of interest about them, however, is that the bird with dark back and light belly is really in the condition which is quite common in a number of birds, especially ducks and wading birds, where it must act as a means of concealing the bird—just as it does in the painted model. Of course, there are vast numbers of birds not so shaded, but it is possible to explain the darker and lighter colouring, in various arrangements seen in birds, as helping to produce concealment or disappearance from view, when the habits and natural surroundings of the bird are known. So too with many hairy quadrupeds (mammals, or "animals" or "beasts," as they are often called). The white hair under the tail and about the rump, helps a running animal to escape the vision of its pursuer—blending, as Mr. Thayer shows that it does—with the white colour of the sky-line. In the case of fish—especially fresh-water fish—the dark back and light belly are very common, and although they do not help to conceal the fish when seen from above, swimming over a light-coloured river-bed, yet when looked at by other fishes or by otters in the water, the effect of the light from above on this disposition of dark and light tints on the fish's body must be the same as that demonstrated by Mr. Thayer's "disappearing duck," and must often render the fish absolutely invisible, even at close quarters.

Mr. Thayer has pursued this object during the past seven years, and a few weeks ago he gave some interesting demonstrations in the Zoological Gardens in London. He showed a model of a white egret, which was but little noticeable when standing up clear against a bright, white-coloured sky. The wing plumes on the wings developed in the breeding season, were shown (by putting them on and taking them off) to assist in causing invisibility, since they made the side of the body flat and concealed the shadow on its rounded under-side. A similar bird-model marked with strong black on the neck and legs—the rest being white—refused (so to speak) to shape itself as a bird at all, and looked at a distance of twenty yards like a bit of rock or stump of wood with a twig and dead leaf attached. The effect of different tones of brown carboard cut into the form of a butterfly, when seen on different back grounds, was shown; but the most interesting expriment was made with a black-green piece of card cut to the shape of a butterfly and fastened on to a sheet of dead-black cloth in the open air, in the presence of white cloud light of moderate brilliancy. At five yards one could see the outline of the dark-green butterfly-shaped piece; at fifteen yards one could just distinguish the edge separating the dark-green piece from the black cloth. Now Mr. Thayer stuck in the middle of the dark-green butterfly-wing a small circle of pure white (about one-third of an inch across). The effect was entirely to obliterate the previously visible edge; one could no longer see the dark-green area at all—one only saw a white spot on a continuous dark ground, the dark green and the black were merged into one. That is no doubt due to the powerful stimulation of the sensitive "retina" of the eye by the white light of the spot; the feeble stimulation by the dark green and black, though these remain physically as distinct from one another as before, ceases to affect the brain, which is, as it were, entirely occupied with the strong white spot. Thus, according to Mr. Thayer, is the value to butterflies and other animals of a violently contrasted white spot or band on a dark general colouring. The fringe of white dots and connected white flakes nearer the centre of the wing—common on the wings of butterflies—has, similarly, the result of rendering the wing-outline imperceptible and the butterfly invisible. Many such relations of colour, spots and bands, as well as of dark and light markings, have been elucidated by Mr. Thayer, and will be illustrated by coloured drawings in the book which he is preparing on the subject.

While it is the fact that Mr. Thayer has thrown new light on the colour-protection and invisibility of animals, it must be remembered that there are other explanations of certain cases of brilliant colouring in animals besides that which he has so well illustrated. "Warning" colours, recognition marks, and sexually attractive colouring all certainly and demonstrably exist in well-known and in well-studied kinds of animals. It is very possible that some of these colour markings have been produced by a slight change in what were previously "concealing" patterns or colour-markings. The tendency of the human observer is to regard any colour, spot, or pattern on a bird, fish, beast, or insect as a "mark" or distinguishing "sign." We examine these things at close quarters, and do not, unless we reflect a good deal on the matter and experiment with the object, realise that what is a mark of distinction or recognition when seen at a few inches distance may be an illusive and obscuring colour scheme when seen at a distance of some feet, and in natural and habitual surroundings. It is not unlikely that we shall arrive at definite knowledge of the psychological "sight interpretations" of animals by a further study of this subject. It is in the highest degree probable that the retinal picture produced in an animal's eye by certain spots of colour, shade, and light exhibited by another animal, are not interpreted by the receptive animal in the same way as they would be by a scrutinising, inquiring, reasoning man, even one who is what we call a "savage." Moreover, though many English naturalists have travelled and seen "life and light" in the sunny regions of the earth, there are few students of the colour-markings of animals in our museums, especially in great cities, who have adequate experience of what colour-markings really can effect in the way of concealment and illusion when light and surrounding objects are as they are, in the tropics or sub-tropical regions. It is a fashion nowadays in the best-provided museums of natural history to exhibit stuffed beasts, birds, and insects in what are called "their natural surroundings." The fatal objection to such exhibitions is that were the beasts, birds, and insects placed in their most usual "natural surroundings," they would be invisible!

It is the merit of Mr. Thayer to have drawn attention to these considerations, and to have carried out some interesting demonstrations of the more frequent significance of colour-markings as means of concealment and illusion than had been recognised before his work. At the same time, it is not possible to consider the yellow and black livery of wasps, of certain evil-tasting grubs, and of poisonous salamanders as anything but a "danger-flag," a warning to other animals that the yellow and black animal had better not be bitten and tasted. So the previous experience of animals who have bitten yellow and black creatures is appealed to, and ensures the safety of the yellow and black gentry from tentative bites which would kill them. Other recognition marks by which ill-tasting, nauseous butterflies are distinguished, and in consequence of which they escape attack, and, not only that, but are "mimicked" (as the yellow and black poisonous wasp is mimicked by some innocuous flies which thus escape attack) by other pleasant-tasting butterflies which fly with them, are considered by Mr. Thayer to be wrongly interpreted as recognition or "warning" marks. He shows, with more or less success, that the markings of the butterflies known Heliconiae are effective as concealment, and is therefore inclined to deny their value as "warning" marks, serving to indicate a noxious quarry best left untasted.

It is, of course, quite possible that what are "concealment markings" when viewed by an aggressive bird or lizard at a distance, may be recognised as "warning marks" when seen by the same observers at close quarters, and it is also possible that the latter may have become the more important or only important result of the colour marks of a given butterfly which were once useful as "concealments." The possible change of significance of colour spots and markings in wild animals may be illustrated by the effect on human beings of the burglar's crepe mask. At the present moment probably the most prominent result of the appearance in a house-full of people in the dead of night of a man with a crepe mask over his face would be terror to those who saw him. The mask would be interpreted as a "mark" or "sign" of evil, not to say violent intentions on the part of the masked man. It would be "warning colour," and most unathletic individuals would severely avoid it; in fact, retire from it in alarm. But actually, the burglar's mask—as possible some noxious insects' distinctive markings—was not invented for the purpose of causing alarm. Far from it! The burglar, or nocturnal malefactor, dons his crepe mask in order to cover the white glitter of his face, and so to escape observation. In origin it is a protective colouration leading to invisibility, and only secondarily has it become a "warning colour" or mark" at close quarters. There will be much more ascertained and much instructive discussion as to the colours and markings of not only animals, but also of flowers and foliage, before this wonderful subject is thrashed out. I have only been able here to indicate its outlines.

Mr. Rutland Barrington has recently been lecturing on "Encores, their Advantages and Drawbacks." He seems to have forgotten that there is a certain class of musical output which never stands a chance of becoming an encore. One night a tenor, who threatened to break every blood-vessel in his body, was battling bravely with a romantic ballad, when a gentleman in a box rose hastily and commenced to put on his overcoat. Thereupon the indignant vocalist, being much hurt in his feelings, stopped in the middle of the song and, addressing the departing guest said, "I have another verse to sing yet." "Yes, I know," said the unkind man; that's why I am going home."

Rich Uncle (to his physician): "So you think there is hope for me?" "Not only that, but I can assure you that you are out of danger." "Very well; I wish you would inform my nephew, but break the news gently to him."

A firm of shady outside London brokers was prosecuted for swindling. In acquitting them, the Court with great severity, said, "There is not sufficient evidence to convict you, but if anyone wishes to know my opinion of you, I hope they will refer to me." Next day the firm's advertisement appeared in every available medium, with the following, well displayed: "Reference as to probity, by special permission, the Lord Chief Justice of England."

THE INDIAN FIELD.

THURSDAY, 8th April, 1909.

BOMBAY RACES, SEASON 1908-09.

WITH most of the outstanding features of the racing that has just concluded, still fresh in our minds, we have another interesting season to look back upon. Whether the persistence of the petitioning owners has had effect or not, or if so to what extent, is a closed book to us; but one nevertheless feels confident that the Stewards will act with a stronger hand in future, as becomes the growing importance of our racing, and that trainers will take very little risks. To arrive at that celestial stage when ring transactions do not mean everything, and when those who assiduously study form will be the profiters is, one fears, almost impossible; but one may now expect a distinct move in the right direction. The real bookmaker probably looks forward to this state of things more than the average punter, who at present fails to realise that with every horse a trier he has more to consider than if, by a glance at the odds, he can leave half the field at least out of his calculations.

Owners generally have by no means relaxed their energy in looking out for new blood, and there is likely to continue to be an ever-flowing current of new importations steadily improving in quality. Shipments of new Arabs are plentiful as ever, and once more we have had proof of their work by their running against older stagers; one of them actually winning, as did Malik Jaman last year in his first season. There is quite a batch of these, who promise to turn out well, and Fruit Salt, who only came out late, strikes one first with Jadir, Zamorin, Burtho and Parliament as stayers, a likely one in Hyder, winner of the Second Dealers', dying. Sheriff, Goldman, Sharar, Patras, Winchester and Hachal for shorter distances. Last year's new ones have come on mostly as stayers, and the most improvement is noticeable in Jehangir, who, one is glad to see, was not raced sufficiently to spoil him for the future. Meazer, Merrily and Sialkote are others who now have to be reckoned with in the best class.

Whilst on the subject of long distance Arabs, the sensation of the year has been the remarkable running of Dhafer, property of a one-horse owner. Formerly a troublesome starter, he is now second to none in gameness and reliability. Starting eleven times, he has won six races and placed three tilme till now he is handicapped at practically level weights with old Precious, whose win with 9-12 up against the best keeps him still the public favourite.

Very nearly as sensational, if not quite, has been Lookman's running. He was one of those mentioned as sure to improve in your résumè of the Poona Season and has admirably borne out this conviction. Out of six runs, half are wins, and now over anything under a mile he is right up with the old top weights. His third over a mile carrying 10-2, shows that if in his work he were trained for such a distance he would not get weight from many. Bay Middleton is not what he was, but, as he only went out four times, he may be by the time Poona comes round. Creditor, however, is good as ever and the former cannot afford to give him many pounds up to six furlongs. Sanjakdhar is another who has improved well, beating such as Salanic, giving away a bit and is not much behind those mentioned above with his three wins out of seven.

Turning to other classes, the 14-2 class failed badly during the Extras to fill sufficiently, but the sport they provided during the Big Meet will stay the Stewards from abandoning them altogether, as they have more than once threatened to do. Lady Avon we found as shapely and good as ever, and Wild Boy very much improved as a sprinter, he has to be measured again soon. Russley Rose, on the other hand, has developed into a slow starter, and her Innovation Plate win shows her with a liking for a long journey. Another locally owned improvement is old Gun Metal, and a new one to us, Refresher, is likely to challenge Lady Avon's supremacy over any distance.

Amongst the big guns one naturally thinks first of Pelargonium, who, a season ago, was but a second rater, but who now is considered very likely for the big Cup. Neither Absentee or Wandin showed us much and it was left to game old Kipling to supply the danger in the long race. Over a shorter distance we find Master Theo a different horse to when we last saw him. His style when running third to his stable companion, Prince Lyon, in Poona, was promising, but we were not prepared for such sudden developments into a tiptop class. Paddy's Darling continues to do Mr. Galstaun well, but after his performance late in the Calcutta Meeting, Kaffirpan was a disappointment, as were most of Jack Scott's charges. Lovania also failed to reproduce true form, and it was left to her to win with a big impost amongst second raters in a minor Extra.

Tangaroa was facile princeps over short distances, fairly donkey licking the opposition over six furlongs and only losing narrowly to Lord Merv at a difference of no less than three stone. The Rooster and Wise Bird ran very consistently, but Mr. R. R. S.'s lot, Uro, Metal Maid, Killua and Posco, were right out of form. In Croat, however, he has something one must keep an eye on in Poona, which also applies to Lady Cressy, belonging to Byramjee.

We have to wait for Poona for jump races, Bombay not indulging in the illegitimate game. Why, nobody knows, as hurdle races would be quite practicable and there is no reason to suppose they would not fill satisfactorily.

The success achieved by the owners, trainers and jockeys is always interesting to know at the end of each season. As remarked already, Mr. R. R. S. has not had as much of it as he had during the two preceding meetings, though still well up, and his none too profitable Calcutta visit had something to do with it. Russley Rose and Wise Bird have done well, also latterly Paul Pry, for Mr. Kelso and with Mr. Runchordass, whose Meerjan has improved, and their trainer Byramjee is a good third.

Mr. M. Goculdass, who two years ago had held first position so often that he seemed almost a fixture there has the biggest number of wins to his credit. Well enough endowed with this world's goods, he is an enterprising owner and loses no chance of picking up new Arabs of promise. He is also looking further afield, as is evident by his recent purchase of Peru and Lord Carlyon, a stayer and a sprinter. It is, however, with his Arabs that he has won most, Jehangir in particular. Old friends in False Start, Hazza, Vedas, Gun Metal and T. M. S., old Lady Metal, whose Too Many Seconds caused her name to be changed, have won, and amongst the new ones, Jadir, Racer, Winchester, Hachal and Mundoor are likely to continue to do well.

Those next to the top are owners we only saw in the Big Meeting, when Mr. Galstaun did well enough to encourage him to continue his visits this side. Paddy's Darling and his new colt, Winkfield's Melody, as well as Wild Boy and of course Tangaroa were the scorers. A local owner, however, Mr. Jiji, just beat his total with such marvellously improved animals as Pelargonium and Master Theo, with his new pony Refesher, that, for reasons best known to himself, he should have decided to sell the whole string to his trainer, Mumford, is disappointing, as it means the loss of one of our most enterprising owners. Neither of the Viceroy's Cup first two did anything, but H.H. of Patiala did well neverthless, Tom Scott scoring with Lord Merv, Mozart and Lorraine.

Having a big Arab stable in a number of different interests, Fahad bin Saif is found top of the trainers' list, beating Bleach, who has once more reaped the benefit of hard work with Mr. Goculdass' variegated string. As jockey for this stable, Hoyt has ridden many winners, his judgment being of soundest, an advocate of the waiting game and one of the followers of the old seat.

He, though, has to cry second best to Evans, who rode independently and being in great form, had most of the best rides; notably those on Dhafer. Considering the comparatively few riders he had, Killorn did very well, and if one went by average he would be top. Young A. Ferguson has come on stones in the public eye, and deservedly so. Marvellously cool for a youngster, he never bustles his mount more than necessary, and it is a pleasure to see him draw up on the leaders as a reward for his patience in the early part of a race.

Heeroo, Oomerkhan and C. B. Mahomed are old stagers amongst the native boys who continue to win, whereas Mujeed, Hazza and Yussuff continue to improve since they began to show form last Bombay season. The latter ones have steered winners for Mr. Newton, the wealthy Arab owner whose Sanjakdhar is now a top notcher, and who has some very useful new ones, including Sheriff, Chechan and Hyacinth. The other big Arab owner, Mr. Ali bin Talib, has also a big sum to his credit, mainly with Lookman, Farick, Darianoor and Merrily.

In conclusion we can state that the Club is in a flourishing condition, racing is improving, local owners have more than held their own and the Books have not broken too many punters.

THE POPULAR HACKNEY.

ONCE again has the Hackney proved itself beyond question the popular breed of horseflesh. Of the Spring Horse Shows recently held in London, that of the Hackney Horse Society attracted more people than the others put together.

The "man in the street" understands and appreciates the Hackney, whose make and shape appeal as much to him as does its wonderful action and pace. To him the breed represents the acme of perfection, the horse to excite the envy and admiration of his friends and neighbours were he its possessor. Of the value of the Shire he knows nothing, whilst the hunter and the polo pony he regards as but accessories for the sports for which they are respectively bred.

The Hackney can reckon among its supporters thousands who know and value the worth of a horse which is playing so large a part in the development of the equine race, and which, even in these days of mechanical traction, holds its own in almost every country in which highways exist. In England the high-actioned, speedy harness horse has always had it admirers, and the possessor of such an animal has generally found it to be an asset of considerable commercial worth. Thanks to the Hackney, these harness horses are vastly more numerous than was the case even a decade ago, and as they have increased so has the demand for them grown, until at the present time England is the resort of horse-buyers from all parts of the world. In proof of this assertion one has only to glance over the lists of transfer certificates granted by the Hackney Horse Society during the past year. From these it will be found that pedigree Hackneys have been exported to the Argentine Republic, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Cape Colony, Chili, Columbia, France, Germany, Japan, New Zealand, Russia, Spain and the United States.

Such a list as the above requires no comment wherewith to accentuate the widespread demand which exists at the present time for the well-bred carriage horse, but it may be mentioned that the first and last-named countries between them took no less than sixty stallions and fifty-five mares from English breeders. In addition to these, a number of pedigree harness geldings and mares also left the country to spread the reputation of the breed far and wide throughout the world.

Nor is evidence wanting that into whatever part of the world the Hackney goes there he reigns supreme as the king of harness horses. One has only to look back to the International Show of last year to see how well the breed emerged from the trying ordeal of competition with the best harness horses the continents of Europe and America could produce, and statistics have recently been published which bear even stronger testimony to its unassailed position in the showyards of the New World. At the eight great shows held in the United States in 1908, Hackneys not only won more prizes that any other breed in open harness classes, but almost as many as all other breeds combined. When it is recalled that only some 2,500 of the 220,000 horses of all recognised harness breeds registered in the States were pure-bred Hackneys, the results are the more remarkable. Moreover, it is stated upon good authority that in proportion to their numbers more Hackneys have been sold for high prices in the States during the last few years than horses of any other harness breed.

In England the prospects of the breed had never been brighter. A number of foreign buyers, many of them acting for the Government of their country, have recently been visiting the old country, and reports are heard that they have selected many stallions at remunerative prices. Some of these, it is said, are destined to be used for crossing with heavy mares for the breeding of artillery horses, but, whatever their mission may be, it is certain that they will carry with them the fame of England as the source whence harness horses may be obtained.

The object lesson provided by this year's Hackney Show will doubtless be assimilated by those who went from other countries to judge for themselves of the utility of the Hackney. They could not fail to carry away a high opinion of Britain's premier breed of harness horse; for, although more outstanding champions than Mr. Buttle's Kirkburn Toreador and Mr. Hackling's Adbolton St. Mary may have been seen in times past, they were both typical specimens of the breed which has been so skilfully preserved and improved by the private enterprise of individuals without any extraneous assistance from the Government. Although at the present time there are to be heard on all sides expressions of opinion that the British Government should be urged to contribute towards the horse-breeding industry, and Mr. Richard P. Evans has made a generous offer of £20,000 free of interest for five years provided the British Government will subscribe an equal sum, it is to private enterprise and the determination of breeders to continue their self-imposed task of improvement that the Hackney must owe its future, as it does its present prominent position.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

IN the re-play in the semi-final round of the Association Cup at Birmingham, last Thursday afternoon, Bristol City defeated Derby County by 2 goals to 1.

THE Elton Cup Hockey Tournament, open to teams, members of which are under 18 years of age on 1st June 1909, is now in progress at Bombay.

THE International Association Football match between England and Scotland on Saturday last ended in the defeat of Scotland by 2 goals to nil.

As will be seen from our special telegram, Oxford won the 'Varsity Boat race by three and a half lengths. Latest advices by the mail pronounced the crews to be the fastest that have represented each University and good time was expected to be put up. But here disappointment awaited the critics for the time 19-50 was 30 seconds slower than last year and 1min. 39sec. outside the record established by the Oxford crew in a practice row over the course on the 23rd ultimo. Of the 66 races that have now been rowed Oxford has won 35, Cambridge 30 while the race of 1877 ended in a dead heat.

THE final game in the Polo Tournament for the Murree Brewery Challenge Cup was played at Rawalpindi on the 30th instant in the presence of a large gathering of spectators. The teams engaged were: "A" Squadron, 10th Royal Hussars.—Mr. De Twyll, Mr. Peto, Mr. Palmes, and Captain the Hon'ble C. Mitford (back); 12th Royal Lancers.—Mr. Wyndham Quin, Colonel Clifton Brown, Mr. Badger and Mr. Nicholas (back). The umpires were Major Chaplin and Major Warren. It was a very level game all through, the Lancers eventually winning by 2 goals to nil.

ANOTHER good sportsman has gone to his rest. Reuter announces the death at Home, on the 31st instant, of Mr. Henry Zouch Darrah, C.S.I., B.A., Ll. B., F.R. Ast. S. Mr. Darrah entered the Civil Service in 1875 and held the following appointments:—Director of Land Records and Agriculture, Assam, 1884-93; Collector, Lucknow, 1894-95; Commissioner, Rohilkhand, Gorakhpur and Allahabad, 1899-1906. Since then he had been Member of the Board of Revenue, U.P. and in 1907 was honoured with the C.S.I. He was a keen volunteer and a good sportsman. He issued a number of publications, the best known perhaps of these being his Sport in the Highlands of Kashmir.

THE United States are doing big things in the way of game preservation, and it is evident that Canada also realises the importance of preventing the indiscriminate destruction of her wild animals and birds. We learn that the Minnesota Fish and Game Commission has received an intimation from the North American Game Protective Association to the effect that the Canadian Government has agreed to set apart 1,000,000 acres of land in Ontario for a game preserve. This land will be contiguous to the 1,000,000 acres recently set apart by President Roosevelt in St. Louis, Lake, and Cook Counties, Minnesota, as a forest reserve to be known as Superior National Park. This will be the largest game preserve in the country.

POSEIDON, the famous Australian race horse, who was taken up a little while back after a spell, has again been thrown out of work, and has finished his Turf career, says the Sydney Referee. He retires with a great record, as though he only won one race as a two-year-old, he accounted for eleven out of the fourteen races in which he started as a three-year-old, his victories including the A.J.C. Derby and St. Leger, V.R.C. Derby and St. Leger, and Caulfield and Melbourne Cups. At four years he won seven out of twelve races, the Caulfield Cup (with 9-3) being one of the number. Subsequent to that race he was well backed for the Melbourne Cup, in which he had 10-3, but did not get closer than eighth. He only started once this season, running nowhere in the Rawson Stakes, in which Perkeo beat Mooltan and Virtu, and made an Australasian record for nine furlongs. In all Poseidon won 19 of the 33 races in which he competed. No doubt he will be well patronised at the stud, and a notable fact in connection with his maternal line is that his grand-sire, Martini-Henri, won a Melbourne Derby and Cup and Chester (sire of Ianthe, dam of Jacinth) was similarly successful.

ABOUT 40 per cent. of the weight of an ordinary horse is muscle. All muscles concerned with locomotion are attached to bones, and when they contract they cause the bones to which they are fastened to move. The lower parts of a horse's legs are nearly all bones, but the muscles in the body and upper part of the limbs are attached to various parts of the bony construction by tendons, and can thus produce a motion of the parts located some distance away.

The amount of motion produced by the action of say one of the horse's hind legs, will depend upon the length of the muscles and the length and the relation of the bones to which they are attached. The commonest idea amongst students of this subject is expressed in these words: "Long muscles for speed, short muscles for power." A long muscle enables a horse to get over the ground quickly. A short muscle, however, is not powerful, because it is short, because in horses constructed on that plan the muscles are thicker, contain more fibres, all of which, pulling together when contracted, exert a much greater pulling force than a long, more slender muscle. It is because of this that in buying horses to draw heavy loads, we look for a large and heavy muscle, while in roadsters we must attach importance to the length of the muscle.

The most of a horse's muscle is in his hind quarters. This may be a surprise to you, said Mr. Marshall of the Ohio Agricultural College, recently, but the next time you have an opportunity to see a horse pulling a very heavy load study him carefully. You will be impressed with the idea that most of the work is being done with the hind legs. When the hind foot is moved forward the toe rests on the ground and the leg is bent at the hock joint: if the toe does not slip, and the horse is strong enough for his load, the muscles above, pulling on the tendon fastened to the back and upper point of the hock, will close the joint, or in other words, straighten the leg and cause the body to move forward. It is by the performance of this act at every step that the horse moves, although, of course, the strain on all the parts is much greater when pulling very hard. This will also show the necessity of having large, broad, straight joints and legs, that give the horse the most secure footing.

You have probably also noticed when driving that many horses put their hind foot on the ground in front of the mark left by the fore foot, and the faster they go the greater will be the distance between the marks made by the fore and the hind feet. This shows that the length of a step is determined by the hind quarters; it also explains the need of large, strong hocks and legs that are not so crooked as to seem weak or so straight as to lessen the leverage afforded by this very wonderful arrangement of the parts.

LAST month the tables were turned in a double sense when an old fox jumped through the coffee-room window at Laker's Hotel, Redhill, right on to the table around which a party of huntsmen were dining one evening. From being hunted, Master Reynard became the huntsman, and in the mêlée which followed his sudden and unexpected appearance champagne bottles, flower vases, and wine glasses were scattered in all directions consequent upon the overturning of the dining table. A party of huntsmen from the Rugby Beagles were entertaining Mr. H. Boileau, the Master of the Old Surrey Foxhounds, and some other hunting friends to dinner. The chorus to "John Pell" was in full swing when through the open window dashed the fox. The sporting instincts of the company were immediately aroused. "Tally ho," "Gone away," resounded through the room, the small dimensions of which gave the animal little chance of exhibiting his customary slimness. But his sharp teeth stood him in good stead, and several members of the company and a waiter were bitten in the improvised chase. The fox for a time, indeed, held more than his own. Chairs were mounted by the astonished huntsmen, tables were overturned, glasses were smashed and wine spilled in all directions. Eventually, after a short but exciting "run," the animal was cornered, bagged, and released—possibly to renew the acquaintance under more traditional conditions

THE problem of the smooth, the rather smooth, and the very pimply ball is with us again. Sir Ralph Payne-Gallwey recently contributed to the Times a very interesting article on some experiments he has been making as to the flight of golf balls. Sir Ralph possesses a projectile engine which can throw a stone ball weighing 12lbs. to a range of a quarter of a mile, but this alarming monster would presumably be too much for a poor little golf ball, and so he employed a small model of it which would pitch a ball a mere matter of 200 yards.

It appears that in his first experiments he caused the engine merely to throw the ball, and not to hit it as a golf club does. In this test, when the shooting was down wind, the poor old gutty—now despised and rejected—appears to have won pretty comfortably, but golfers must not on that account go forth and buy all the gutties they can lay their hands on, because when the ball is merely thrown and not hit the rubber core loses, of course, all the advantage of its extra elasticity.

Sir Ralph does not tell us much about his hitting as opposed to throwing experiments, but he does mention that when the engine began to hit the poor non-elastic gutty carried shorter than all the other balls, and next to it in shortness was a rubber-cored ball which is rather smaller and heavier than the ordinary ball.

More interesting, perhaps, is Sir Ralph's account of his experiments with smooth and rather smooth balls, which seem to show that those who have been industriously preaching the rather smooth ball will have the laugh of us all yet. He tells us that he tried his engine (he does not mention whether hitting or throwing) upon a perfectly smooth ball, and it ducked hopelessly every time and refused to carry more than eighty yards, thus confirming the heart-breaking experience of anyone who has tried to hit one.

Sir Ralph, however, thought he would see if Ray could do what the projectile engine could not; so he strightway went to Ganton and got Ray to play a round with the smooth ball. That mighty hitter, however, could make no more of it than the engine and could not carry 100 yards to save his life.

Now comes the chief point of the story: Sir Ralph took a penknife and nicked the ball with the point of it, as he says "spacing the small raised nicks about one-third of an inch apart, the ball being still a very smooth one in comparison to any of the usual kinds." Immediately the ball flew like a bird, some of its carries being over 200 yards, which is a long way even for Ray. Moreover, the ball on being submitted to the engine test immediately beat the best on record for projectiles, but when its owner nicked it a bit more it resented such treatment by refusing to fly so far and by soaring too much against a head wind.

Finally Sir Ralph suggests that the ideal ball should bear a marking resembling in pattern the network on the outside of a melon. Now, which ball-maker will be first in the field with a ball to be called "the melon with the pink and blue dot?"

The Abbey Shot Company's financial year has been very satisfactory. This Company has a large output for their noted Improved Chilled Shot. The output for last year exceeded the previous year by 20 per cent. This company devotes all its time to shot making, and is the only one in Great Britain doing so.

On the 15th March, in New York, Dorando Pietri once more beat, and handsomely beat, the American Hayes over a full Marathon Course. This makes his second victory over Hayes since the latter received the official award, on protest, at the Stadium last summer.

Dorando immediately went to the front, and led by a few feet at the end of a mile. He continued leading, with Hayes trailing two yards behind at the end of the fifth mile, where the Italian's time was 27min. 38sec.

Dorando also finished the sixth mile ahead, but Hayes sprinted a lap, and then slowed up and permitted Dorando to go to the fore.

There was great Irish-American and Italian enthusiasm among the spectators, but the best good feeling prevailed, and applause greeted Dorando as he passed the ten miles two yards ahead of Hayes in 56min. 46sec.

During the fourteenth mile Hayes sprinted, but Dorando led at the end of the mile and also at the end of the fifteenth, where his time was 1hr. 27min. 5sec.

After finishing the sixteenth mile in 1hr. 33min. 20sec., the Italian started off with a dash and finally lapped Hayes within half a mile. Dorando's seventeenth mile was completed in 1hr. 39min. 22 2-5sec., the fastest time for the distance ever made in America.

In the eighteenth mile Dorando gained another lap and then settled down behind Hayes.

At the end of the nineteenth mile Dorando still led by two laps, his time being 1hr. 53min. 7sec.

The former record for the distance, made in the race between Longboat and Shrubb, was 1hr. 54min. 26sec.

The twenty-first mile was the slowest of the race, Dorando completing it in 2hr. 8min. 15sec., still maintaining his lead. Hayes was now tiring, while the Italian seemed fresh.

From now Dorando simply jogged behind Hayes until the final miles, when he spurted again, and finished half a mile ahead in good condition, his time being 2hrs. 48min. 8sec.

The race was a full course Marathon on a track made of sawdust and tan bark.

Marathon races continue to be of the first importance in America. Reuter wires the result of yet another of these exciting contests, the Marathon Derby, run on the 3rd instant in New York and won by a French ex-waiter from London named Saint Yves, who defeated the Champions Dorando, Hayes, Longboat, and Shrubb. The winner's time—2hrs. 40mins. 50secs.—is better than any times previously put up by Dorando, Hayes or Longboat, but is outside the record established by Maloney, an amateur runner at New York last December and that recorded by Siret, who won the professional Marathon Race orgainsed by the Evening News in October last. Maloney's time for the 26 miles 385 yards was 2hrs. 36mins. 2½secs. whlie Siret was credited with 2hrs. 37mins. 23secs. In the present race Dorando finished second to Saint Yves in 2hrs. 45mins. 37secs. and Hayes was third in 2hrs. 49mins. 27secs. Shrubb and Longboat collapsed. It is interesting to review the Marathon races which have taken place in America since Hayes won on protest the memorable race at the Olympic games last July. In November Dorando Pietri met Hayes to decide which was the better man and beat him by 60 yards in 2hrs. 44mins. 20⅗secs. Then Dorando was defeated by the Indian, Longboat, in December, the Italian collapsing after 25 miles, Longboat winning in 2hrs. 45mins. 5⅗secs. The second meeting in January between these runners again ended in a victory for Longboat, Dorando retiring at the end of 19 miles. Longboat then met the English Champion, Alfred Shrubb and beat him after an exciting race. The time—2hrs. 63mins. 40⅗secs. As will be seen above Dorando's second match with Hayes resulted in another defeat for the American, though the time was 45secs. slower than in their previous race.

Messrs. Barton, Son & Co., the eminent Jewellers and Silversmiths of Bangalore, have sent us a photograph of one of their latest productions, a casket which has just been presented to the Hon'ble Mr. H. E. Procter by the staff of the Bombay Steam Navigation Co., Ld. The casket takes the form of a silver model of one of the Company's steamers (S.S. Nitravati) and has been shown on a silver base representing the sea. The actual model is only 10 inches long, and in it are shown practically every visible detail of an ocean—going steamer. The photograph shows us that a sense of motion is given to the whole, for the vessel is seen cutting through the waves, while at the stern the churning of the screw is distinctly visible on the surface of the water. The whole is fitted on to a polished rosewood base with solid silver dolphins at the corners and a silver plate bearing the inscription. This splendid piece of workmanship has been executed in the manner for which Messrs. Barton, Son & Co. are justly famed throughout the peninsula.

We would draw the attention of those of our readers who keep dogs to the advertisement of the Summer Home for dogs which appears further on. The objects of the Home are (1) to provide a suitable and convenient place in the hills where dogs may be sent out of the great heat of the plains, which frequently causes undermining of the constitution or not unfrequently causes the death of valuable dogs. (2) to avoid the necessity of being under obligations to friends to take dogs to the hills, when too frequently the dogs have to be kept in hotels or boarding houses in ill-ventilated smoky unsuitable godowns, and are badly fed. Owners may be assured that their dogs will be properly fed, kennelled and looked after and in the event of sickness properly treated at Rockcliffe. The Home is under the personal supervision of Major W. H. Kemp, late Army Veterinary Department, who has been over forty years in the country and has kept most kinds of sportings dogs. It is run on business lines and for the last three years there has been an average of 75 dogs in his care. People do not realise what looking after 75 dogs ranging from Mastiffs and St. Bernards to Chows and King Charles Toys really means. We would point out that it is essentially a home, not a hospital, for dogs have been sent from long distances, without a word of warning, sick, in fact at death's door and owners have grumbled when such have died. Thanks to exercising the greatest care, Major Kemp has had only one case of rabies in his kennels. This luckily did no harm, for the early symptoms were recognised and the animal segregated at once and destroyed. The charges are small—too small we should say, when one considers the amount of trouble and risks taken. Major Kemp will be happy to send prospectuses and particulars to any interested in the home.

A record rhino has recently been shot in Assam by Mr. Tom Briscoe, the measurements being: length of horn 24¼ins., height at shoulder 6ft. 4ins. There are only two other authenticated records over 20ins. in horn measurement. One of 24ins. credited to Jerdon and one of 21½ins. shot by Lord Curzon in the Nepal Terai. The record height at shoulder is 6ft. 6ins.,—a specimen shot by H. H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, but this animal had a horn of only 13ins. Another rhino shot by His Highness measured 6ft. 4½ins. at the shoulder with a horn of 16¼ins.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—The annual Bombay Jackal Club Point to Point came off on Tuesday at Santa Cruz, the course being mapped out in a none too easy line of country near Vakola barracks, a portion through which we have so often hunted during the past season. More than the average number were out and showed marked interest, the two Books, Ben Smith and Thomson, doing a far larger business than is usual.

As customary, jumping events came first, both filling very well. That for horses went to a very neat performer in Mrs. Beaty's country-bred, Vigilance, ridden by Colonel Forbes. In the pony classes Mr. Blair's useful bay waler, Nimrod, scored.

Fifteen entered for the Hunt Cup over four miles, first prize being the Boulton Trophy in addition to the James Graham Trophy for the first in who has not previously won a race of any description bar scurries, on a horse coming under the same definition. That old stager Spartan was generally expected to win, but was made too much use of by Mr. A. K. Graham, who took a long lead from Mr. Rommel on Good Luck and Mr. E. C. Reid on Ripple. At the last flag but one Ripple drew up second, but after the last and on entering the open Good Luck had the benefit of his owner's patience. Having Ripple in difficulties, he began to cut down the twenty lengths between him and the leader. Spartan was done and came back so quickly that Mr. Rommel was able to win comparatively easily. This is the second year this keen sportsman has carried off the event and the German colony are naturally exuberant. The Graham Trophy went to Ripple.

The Pony Hunt Cup for the Townsend Trophy and the Remington Trophy, on similar terms to the Graham, had eight entrants. One of our whips, and a better one would take finding, Mr. Blair, brought off the double event of the day with Nimrod, riding a nice, cool race in front of Mr. Crawford on Idar.

An open race is always included, the Jackal Club Point to Point over the same course and it was surprising to see a pony, good as Akbar Khan is, made favourite. He could never have a chance, and the winner turned up in Mr. H. Symon's Tragedian, ridden by Mr. Blair, who thus had a great day out. The winner this time did not have Sentiment, who beat him in the Hunters' Flat as well as in a match at Mahaluxmi, to compete against and had all the others badly beaten.

The Junior Aga Khan Hockey Tournament came to a conclusion on Tuesday, when the Byculla Education Society and St. Mary's College met on the Cooperage.

Having the better of the first half, St. Mary's drew first blood. In the second they fairly romped over their opponents, and won by 6 goals to nil.

In the finals of the mixed doubles in the Bombay Gymkhana Lawn Tennis Tournament, R. D. England and Mrs. Piggot (−30) beat Mr. and Mrs. Pickard (+15).

The annual general meeting of the Western India Motor Union was held at the Club Rooms in Bombay last week, the Hon. Sir Vithaldas Damodar Thackersey taking the chair. The report for the last year was adopted and the following office-bearers appointed for the current year :—President, the Hon. Sir Vithaldas D. Thackersey ; Vice-Presidents, Lieutenant-Colonel M.A.T. Collie, I. M.S., Mr. Dwarkadas Dharamsey and Mr. Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy ; Chairman, Mr. Narayanji Dwarkadas ; Vice-Chairmen, Mr. Dadiba Merwanji Dalal and Mr. J. D. Davar ; Committee, Dr. A. H. Deane, Mr. Rustom K. R. Cama, Mr. R. D. Sethna, Mr. Phirozsha Bomanji Petit, Mr. H. A. H. Payne, Mr. Narottam Morarji Goculdas, Mr. Mulraj Khatau, Mr. Govindji Madhowji, Captain T. Duff Blair, Mr. W. W. Proctor, Mr. K. D. Wadia, Mr. S. R. Lalkaka, Mr. P. C. Sawyer, Mr. A. Turner Laing, Mr. James Vernon, and Mr. J. A. Taylor ; Honorary Secretary, Mr. N. M. Marshall ; Assistant Honorary Secretary, Mr. F. Hogan.

Dr. A. H. Deane suggested that the Union should do something to justify its existence. He pointed out that reliability trials were no longer necessary either in England or in India and urged that steps should be taken to make the Union more popular with members.

The Hon. Sir Vithaldas Damodar Thackersey thought that the Committee might obtain from Government a piece of land near the Band Stand, where members could meet and suggested other means for increasing the sphere of the Union's usefulness.

Various suggestions as to club runs, etc., were put forward by other members present, and it was agreed to appoint small working committees from the office-bearers nominated at the meeting to give effect to the matter under discussion.

The meeting concluded with the usual votes of thanks to the chair and to the Secretary.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 19th March 1909.

Those quaint and noisy people the Salvationists have had a great innings this "self-denial week." Times they amuse one, at others they are irritatingly demonstrative and always they are ill-favoured and unconvincing. Raucous, red-nosed females have assailed one at every public entrance, rattling their wooden collecting-boxes under one's nose, and so persistent have been their efforts that I expect to hear of a plethoric state of the Exchequer when all the pennies are counted up. It is a pity to be churish, but street collections are becoming a little overdone, and during summer hardly a week goes by without a collecting box rattling at every street corner. My point is this—the toleration of a legitimate collection opens the way for other collections the bona-fides of which are very often open to question. Meanwhile, I note the Suffragettes have begun a money-raising fund by competing with the gutter merchant, peddling flowers, chocolate and other trifles, from the kerbstone, and playing the over delightful street organ. What the ill-clad, ill-fed army of people who pick up a slender living in the streets of London think of this fresh invasion. I gathered from some lurid remarks made by a gutter "timber merchant" who for a brief spell relinquished the attempt to find purchasers for his slender stock of Bryant and Mays" and was just getting nicely wound up when a bobby moved him on.

It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good. Certain deserving London charities may be excused for hoping that the press persecution of Mr. Lloyd George may go on for a bit, in view of the fact that the damages he gets out of libellous prints are invariably devoted to charity. Not long ago our worthy Chancellor of the Exchequer took £600 from the Bystander for having said some untrue and hurtful things about him: this week he gets £1,000 from the People who, as Uncle Remus would say, "dropped their money-pus" over certain articles in which they asserted Mr. L. G. was shortly to figure as co-respondent in a peculiarly wicked divorce case. The defendants admitted that the matters complained of in the statement of claim were libels upon the plaintiff, and there was no foundation or justification whatever for the same, or any of them, and desired to put on record their profound and unqualified regret that the same were inserted in the People newspaper, and offered the plaintiff the frankest and fullest apology for the publication thereof. Quite good business. But one may permit oneself the remarks that while co-respondents, like race horses, "run in all shapes" it would surely be a person of extraordinarly vivid imagiation who could picture Mr. Lloyd George as a Lothario!

Polo players in India will learn with satisfaction that the tenth annual show of the Polo and Riding Pony Society, which came to an end last Saturday, was very numerously attended and from the breeder's and the general point of view was pronounced a complete success. Still there is no denying the fact that it was a one man show, the prizes, as in recent years, being monopolised by Sir John Barker. It is time the Army looked into the merits of the excellent stamp of pony here exhibited, if it did, farmers who now abstain might breed it with profit to themselves and to the nation. At present three or four wealthy men monopolise the industry. There can be no doubt, after carefully noting the exhibits at this show, that a new variety of horse is emerging. The English polo pony of former years was crossbred, with something of the thoroughbred and something of the mountain or moor pony in him, now one sees whole groups of the same general pattern, thick set, handy and quick animals capable of carrying weight and as hardy and good looking as could be desired. If the society can only make breeding to this type a permanent thing immense benefit to horse owners will be secured.

It seems ages since I noted the opening of the Bottomley case, certainly it was some time last year. It has dragged its weary length through the Guildhall Police Court for many, many weeks, but to the relief of all concerned in it and of the public who must have been sickened with it long ago, the wretched business terminated last Saturday in the dismissal of the summons, for, as Alderman Sir J. T. Ritchie said no jury would convict on the evidence and there was absolutely no case to go to a jury. Loud cheers greeted this decision. Evidently Horatio Bottomley, M.P. journalist, financier, horse owner and what not, has some following ; at any rate a strong leaven of such were on hand to demonstrate when the curtain was rung down on this farce. Several developments made this case somewhat remarkable.

Besides Bottomley, the defendants were Messrs. Stevenson, Fewings, and Easum, and all were charged with conspiracy to defraud.

When the case was well advanced the magistrate, Sir Gorge Smallman, suffered from a nervous breakdown, and had to retire.

The matter was taken to the High Court, which decided that the case need not be re-opened.

Then Alderman Sir Horatio Davies presided over the court, but he, too, was taken ill, and his place was taken by Sir J. T. Ritchie.

It was only last Saturday afternoon that the latter Alderman had stated he was suffering from a cold, and would not be able to continue after Bottomley's speech had ended.

Another feature of this remarkable case was that Bottomley was summoned for contempt of court, and was fined £300.

The mania for starting clubs shows little sign of abatement. A club called the King's Club, is shortly to be sprung on astonished and delighted Londoners. It is to form a central meeting place in the West End which, whilst giving most of the facilities of a first-class social club, will have for its main object the practice of rifle shooting. The club-house, which is situated at 75, Jermyn Street, and will be opened very shortly, contains, in addition to the usual reception rooms, miniature ranges, 75ft. in length, for both rifle and revolver shooting. Competent instructors will always be in attendance, and modern rifles and revolvers will be provided for the use of members. Another development of the Territorial Epidemic started by a play at Wyndham's, helped on by the ha'penny papers, "Lord Bobs," Lord Esher and Mr. John Burns, —of course he must be in everything—and countenanced by most entities and non-entities. I have not seen anything on the subject from either Hall Caine or Marie Corelli, but they may be relied on to weigh in anon—possibly they are waiting till the nation has sufficiently recovered from the poet laureate's contribution to the discussion!

THE Curfew of the juvenile cigarette smoker has begun to toll: this is the last week in which children will be allowed to smoke in public—and a jolly good job too. After this week infant precocity which delights to indulge in the seductive "Woodbine" or the soothing "Tab" will find themselves classed as law breakers. Policemen, park-keepers and other dreadful ogres in authority can confiscate stocks found in packets, tobacconists may not sell cigarettes to callow youth, and penalties ranging from £2 to £10 attend on convictions. The tobacco trade has promised to assist in carrying out the law, parents and guardians have been appealed to. I suppose boys and girls will now revert to the brown paper, dried clover and cane which used to be fashionable when your scribe was in training to take on his first cigar.

LAST Saturday night's experience at the Lyceum Theatre showed that "Hamlet" apparently is a good a card to play as any melodrama in which the heroine, after a very rough experience, finds herself in the arms of a hero that has dared everything for justice, honour, and love. There was a disposition expressed on the opening night in the gallery to laugh when the unseen ghost called on Hamlet's friends to "swear," but the respect due to tradition eventually prevailed, and Shakespeare's masterpiece was taken seriously. Five acts, in thirteen scenes, progressing towards an inevitable tragedy, is a rare test for a Saturday night audience, but they were equal to it at the Lyceum Theatre, and accepted it all in a spirit that amply justified the numerous calls taken at the end of the acts.

If there was not a great deal of inspiration in the performance there was certainly no lack of enthusiasm. No one could well have failed to understand the meaning of what the players put before them in this "popular" rendering of Hamlet and this absence of hesitation was no small factor in the successful carrying of a play that might have before hand seemed—commercially—a risky undertaking.

Mr. Carpenter understands as well as most people what a popular theatre audience requires, and to that end he put "Hamlet" before them with a pictorial background that was an advance on anything hitherto attempted by him and his partner, Mr. Smith. Some of the stage scenes were exceptionally good, and with much brass band and a quickening series of events played quickly in front of them the venture was never in doubt.

WHEN a dramatist makes a conscientious effort to champion a good cause his play is deserving of respect. Mr. Seymour Obermer, the author of "The House of Bondage," which was produced by the After Noon Theatre at His Majesty's this week obviously feels acutely the injustice of the English divorce laws as they affect the woman, and throughout three acts he pictures the cruelty and the degradation that may be produced by them. His injured woman is Lady Joan Meredith. Sir Vincent Meredith is notoriously unfaithful to her. It is to the Duchess of Banff that he goes for help and advice; it is in her society that he passes his days. And while Lady Joan, neglected, degraded by his behavour, has ample proof of his adultery, she is powerless to regain her freedom because her husband has never been physically cruel to her. If only he would black her eye all would be well. But his ill-treatment runs on different lines, so the tragic farce must continue.

And Lady Joan has very pressing reasons of her own for wishing to divorce her husband—she is in love with Paul Bertrand, a celebrated doctor. Passion is strong on both sides, but these are the good people of the play. Since a marriage ceremony is impossible they must part. And when at length Lady Joan leaves her husband, goaded to desperation by his open preference for the Duchess, she first extracts a promise from him that when he becomes a Cabinet Minister—his appointment is certain—he will work heart and soul to bring about an alteration in the divorce laws. The audience is left to suppose that Lady Joan and Bertrand, strong in their self-respect, will live as far apart as possible until the desired alteration is brought about. They appear to be in for a very slow time.

Mr. Seymour Obermer has made out a good case, but this is not a remarkable achievement. He had merely to state the obvious. And where his play fails is in the lack of sympathy he wins for his characters. Bertrand talks a great deal about the sublimity of his love for Lady Joan, but one cannot help feeling it is his career that he is chiefly concerned with when he declines to "take the plunge" with her. One cannot help feeling that Bertrand and Lady Joan are tarred with very much the same brush as Sir Vincent and the Duchess. Most of the situations are brought about by the somewhat crude method of causing one after another of the characters to hear the end of conversations they are not expected to hear, with the result that wordy arguments arise. The piece, indeed, suffers from a superfluity of talk, and while much of the dialogue is vigorous and natural, the characters, being such a decadent crew, never get to the heart strings.

The success of the cast was Miss Beryl Faber as the Duchess of Banff. She conveyed well the impression that her love was as sincere and as worthy as Lady Joan's, although she did go further than the threshold, and for all her apparent indifference. Mr. Aubrey Smith acted with grave dignity and a suggestion of strength as Paul Bertrand. Miss Eva Moore as Lady Joan portrayed with fine spirit a woman suffering from a sense of great wrong. Mr. Herbert Waring made Sir Vincent a very cold, unemotional sinner.

INDIAN memories are proverbially short, but some among your Calcutta Paperchasers and Monsoon racing men must surely remember David Fraser, the "bold, bad banker of Ballygunge," who, after smelling powder with Lumsden's Horse in South Africa, blossomed out into a war correspondent of no small calibre. Well he has just written another interesting book which I commend to your attention, a sort of Arabian Days' Entertainments, under the title of "The Short Cut to India." In it he tells of the stirring times he experienced in his attempt to traverse the route of the railway from the Bosphorus to the Persian Gulf and he writes much that is informative and pleasant. Halfway on his journey he was severely wounded by an Arab robber, suffered horrible agony at the hands of the amateur surgeons of the desert, but managed by the aid of the River Tigris to see enough to give us some vivid pen-pictures of this little-known country.

A NOT particularly interesting and by no means convincing war test of motor transport was carried out between London and Hastings last Wednesday. To the average man in the street it proved very little and the average British householder I fancy feels no more secure than he did a week ago.

The idea of the test that England had been invaded, that railway communication had been cut by the enemy, and that a relief column was being sent by motor-car to Hastings to the assistance of the defenders. All the cars used in the experiment were lent by members of the Automobile Association.

Over 1,000 Guardsman were transported at twenty miles an hour, over a good road in two hundred and eighty cars, and if they enjoyed their outing at least something was accomplished.

Everything that would be required in time of war was taken. The supplies include tinned and compressed foodstuffs, water tanks, stretchers and hospital equipment, a field kitchen, blankets, mattresses, and 20,000 rounds of ammunition, to form a reserve to the 150 rounds served out to each man in the battalion. Two of the chassis were set apart for the mounting of two machine guns and ammunition.

Well they started off amidst tremendous cheering, were cheered all along the route, had a great ovation at Hastings, where they fell in, were paraded, refreshed and sent back. The scheduled time was kept fairly well, only one car was burned, several minor casualties were reported and some funny incidents helped to keep things lively. But remembering that the main idea was rapid mobilisation on special and grave emergency the experiment remains unconvincing in that the whole affair was cut and dried days before it was carried out, troops were in readiness, the roads were lined by police, the route kept clear, special scouts and warning hand posts scattered broad cast and in short the bundobast could hardly have been more carefully conducted had a road race instead of an emergency rush of troops to threatened centre been in progress.

THERE was a good deal of shamrock—real and spurious about London town on St. Patrick's Day, and at Windsor it was a great day for the Irish Guards at Victoria Barracks. Lord Roberts, Colonel of the regiment, distributed the Queen's gift of shamrock to the men, there was a heavy lunch followed by sports, a dinner and a concert. In town there were many convivial gatherings; I was at one, and meeting an old "Ditcher" thereat, we wondered if Irishmen in Calcutta were also celebrating, and whether those cheerful Hibernians the cousins Martelli were taking their usual prominent part in the postprandial programme.

THE VAGRANT.

"HELLO, old man!" exclaimed Dubley at the Literary Circle reception; "it is a pleasant surprise to met you here."

"Good of you to say so, old chap," replied Brown.

"Yes, you see, I was afraid I wouldn't find anybody but bright and cultured people here."

THE cross-eyed man was watching the activity of Niagara. "What a big waste!" he remarked to his friend.

The very stout lady standing near by looked at him angrily. "Mind your own business!"

FATHER: "It's singular that whenever I want you to marry a man you object, and whenever I do not want you to marry one you straightway insist on it."

Daughter: Yes and whenever we are agreed the man objects."

Review.

BIRD-HUNTING THROUGH WILD EUROPE.*

THE "Wild Europe," to which Mr. R. B. Lodge takes his readers in this thoroughly interesting and really valuable book, is that of Spain and the Near East. If he would see many rarities the ornithologist must now travel far, and many bird-lovers will feel envious of the opportunities which the author of this volume has had for pursuing his fascinating studies far afield. At the outset Mr. Lodge tells us that in the big pine woods and rugged sierras of Spain no fewer that five different kinds of eagles and four kinds of vultures are to be seen! The first two of his chapters deal with bird's-nesting expeditions in Spain in 1897 and 1905, and show that within twenty-four hours of London lies a land peculiarly rich in bird-life, especially in that district in which during the spring migration many thousands of the most varied birds are to be seen gathered together on their way to all northern parts of Europe; "these knots, for instance, are not stopping here, but merely feeding and resting on their long journey to their nesting-grounds, round the Pole. Bosnia, Montenegro, Albani and Hungary—these are the countries to which we are taken in Mr. Lodge's later chapters, and we see them in something of a new light when they are shown as the happy hunting-grounds of the ornithologist. The traveller with a definite object in view, whether as hunter, as scientist, or collector, is doubly blessed, as Mr. Lodge puts it:—

"Travelling in itself is pleasant enough; travelling for any specified object adds enormously to the interest. And the search after rare birds is a most fascinating pursuit, inasmuch as it leads one of necessity into the most out-of-the-way and therefore the most interesting places, where the scenery is of the finest, and where the people, if there are any at all, are genuine representatives of their country, unspoilt by the life of cities and by contact with the ubiquitous tourist. The very difficulty of the pursuit adds to the enjoyment of success, and if there is a suspicion of danger attached to the work, it gives fresh zest to the whole."

A distinct element of excitement must be introduced, too, by the electric camera, which is "baited" and left where the bird to be photographed is likely to go, so that when it touches the bait the camera works, and a near snap-shot is obtained of a creature that would not allow the photographer to get within snapping distance. Mr. Lodge tells us how having thus baited his camera in Spain once to secure the portrait of a shy bird, he found on developing the plate that he had got a dog instead! Mr. Lodge's account of his journeyings in the Near East is extremely interesting, for he writes at once with simplicity and attractiveness, so that anyone interested in "our little brothers, the birds" will find his book making a double appeal—though the Saint of Assisi would scarcely have approved of the shooting of birds and the taking of their eggs. We have in recent months heard so much about the Near East from a political point of view that it is a relief to find a traveller who is not concerned with national or international matters, but only with telling us how the rose-coloured pastor was shot in Albania, the great bustard was found in Roumania, and the little grebe in Hungary, and such like matters. To the lover of nature possessed of special knowledge "Wild Europe" evidently affords much that is attractive, and while Mr. Lodge's book will delight all people with a liking for bird life, it will also make many of them wish for an opportunity of following more or less closely in his steps. And even in Wild Europe changes of fauna are rapidly going on, for it is pointed out that even in the wilder parts bordering the Danube birds met with by the late Prince Rudolph are no longer, or only very infrequently, to be seen. The volume has many interesting photographs of nests and of birds "at home."

MY FIRST CARIBOU.

WHEN I told my friend Bellows that I was going to write an account of my first caribou, he asked me what a caribou was. Naturally, I looked him over with pitying contempt. Our scorn for those who don't know what we know is almost as great as our lofty disdain of the knowledge which others have and we haven't. I said.

"What an ignorant fellow you are, Bellows!"

It did not occur to me that if any one had mentioned a caribou a year ago I should have been equally puzzled. I should not have known, either, whether it was an animal or a synonym (which Bellows thought it was) for what they call in some parts a "jag"

I explained to Bellows that a caribou is a species of deer found in Canada, Newfoundland, and the United States. It belongs to the reindeer type, a large, graceful beast with fine antlers, very difficult to stalk, partly because the forests it inhabits are so thick and trackless. From the moment I caught sight of one from the train between Port-aux-Basques and the interior of Newfoundland, I longed to be on the hunter's trail. I am not much of a sportsman, but the caribou inflamed some savage instinct in my blood,

First I must explain how I got to Newfoundland. My friend Redland is living there. He has a log hut, the most picturesque and comfortable dwelling you could imagine. There is not a town within eighteen hours' railway journey; yet the log hut is heated by hot-water pipes, lit by electricity, furnished and provisioned in exactly the same style as a modern country house.

When Redland asked me to go and see him, he made light of the journey. "In the winter the climate's a bit rough," he admitted, "but you're coming in May. Just the right time. You'll escape both the cold and the mosquitoes."

I didn't go direct to St. Johns, for although it is nearer it takes longer to get there. I went to Quebec in the C. P. R.'s very fine and large Empress of Ireland. We left Liverpool on a Friday evening. Next Thursday morning we were steaming along within easy sight of Newfoundland, and that afternoon we got into the St. Lawrence River. I never felt so miserably cold in my life.

There was a scattering of snow on the hills. The country was bleak and bare. The tiny fishing villages looked stiff and numb after their long winter. A piercing wind lashed the dark waters of the wide river. I left the deck hastily and sat in the warm, cosy music-room all the rest of the afternoon, making up offen-ive things to say to Redland when I saw him. This was Canada in May! And the captain had told me at lunch that in Newfoundlad it would be twice as cold!

I thought with shivering dread of the twenty-nine hours' journey from Quebec to North Sydney, where I was to take the Saturday night steamer for Port-aux-Basques. But here I was disquieting myself in vain. The spacious Pullman car of the Inter-Colonial Railway, into which I climbed at Quebec, was as comfortable as any one could desire.

All the same I was not sorry when we began to approach our journey's end. The boat would be waiting at North Sydney. The time-table said the passage took eight hours. I should be at Port-aux-Basques next morning. Then another twelve hours would see me at Redland's.

When a brusque ticket inspector, as we were nearing North Sydney, snapped out something about the boat having left, I did not at first quite take in what he meant. I fancied I was still in Europe, where time-tables are sacred; where the orderly despatch of trains and boats is regular, inevitable, and appears to be as much part of the universal mechanism as the movements of sun, moon, and stars. I soon found out my mistake.

There was no doubt about it. The boat had gone. It had left quite early in the evening. It was "two or three trips behind," I was told, cheerfully, and just sailed whenever it had got aboard enough cargo and passengers to make the trip worth while. When would it be back? Perhaps the next day. Perhaps Monday. Possibly not for a week. Its coming depended entirely on the ice, which was driftng down the St. Lawrence and packing the gulf full.

Clearly there was nothing for it but to put up at the only hotel in North Sydney and make the best of things till the steamer turned up. The hotel was a fair specimen of a wooden "summer boarders'" resort. The proprietor, a boy of about nineteen, was at the station himself and was not too proud to seize hold of our bags—there were four of us in the same predicament—and hoist them on to the roof of a rickety old cab, which he then proceeded to drive furiously into the town.

Arrived at the hotel, he proposed at first to put us all four into one room and when this had been firmly negatived he, not at all abashed, suggested that while our beds were being got ready we should eat lobsters; he had several beauties in quite fresh. Seeing that it was 1 o'clock in the morning it was not surprising that this offer should also be declined. But all the same I feel sure that irrepressible young man will get on.

The hotel was of the shop-front style. The ground floor had big plate-glass windows, and here the guests—or such of them as could endure a brazen publicity—sat in rocking-chairs with their feet up and exhibited the soles of their boots to the passers-by. No drink was sold on the premises, though there was a way to—well, no matter. It pleases the pious teetotalers of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton Island to pretend that they have stifled the drink traffic, and the drinkers didn't mind, for it adds to the flavor of whisky to be obliged to procure it in an illicit way. Indeed, I am inclined to believe the whisky-sellers promoted the prohibition laws, for every one knows that the more you try to stop people having anything the more they will want it. The only measure which would really stop drinking would be to let every one have as much as he liked for nothing.

The most of Sunday I displayed my boot soles and waited for news of the boat. None came till breakfast-time on Monday. Then I heard she had come in about 7 o'clock and would sail again shortly after noon. I lunched early and was on board by 1. But I need not have hurried. Preparations for departure went on leisurely all the afternoon. It was nearly 6 before we cast off and headed for the open sea.

The old captain who looked like some kind of antediluvian furry animal, said there was a "considerable quantity" of ice to get through. However, the boat had a greenheart stem and her nose sheathed with steel, so she was pretty good at getting through it. Half an hour after we had left harbour we could see no clear water. As far as the eye could discern there was nothing but ice.

At first it was in small floes, but as we drew further away from shore the hummocks grew bigger—huge masses twenty feet deep. You could see their sides far away down, gleaming green and blue. Very few of the blocks were high above the water, but here and there they had piled up on top of the other and formed a dangerous obstacle. We steamed at the rate of about three knots—that is to say, we just moved. Every now and then, all through the evening, while the four of us sat in the little deck-house playing bridge, we heard the engines reversed as we backed in order to get around an unusually big hummock. Every few minutes the brave little ship—she was only 300 tons—trembled violently as she struck a huge floe and ground her way through it.

Under a gray, lowering sky, the field of dirty gray ice was the gloomiest sight imaginable. There was a hopeless comfortless look in the scene. It seemed like a circle from Dante's "Inferno." In the moonlight, just before we turned in, it was softer, less melancholy; the rays of silver glistened on the frozen surface, the stars twinkled cheerfully in a steel-blue dome.

Next morning we were under full steam in open water with the coast hills of Newfoundland getting clearer every half hour. They were snowy, too, and the cold was intense.

After we had eaten fried cod-steaks in the stuffy saloon I tried to sit on deck. In a few minutes I had lost all feeling in my face, hands, and feet, so I went inside and stayed there, again rehearsing the sarcastic speeches I should make to Redland on the subject of weather when we met.

The Reid Company's train was waiting on the quay at Port-aux-Basques, roomy and comfortable, that is, until it began to move. Then for eighteen hours it flung us about, and jerked us, and rattled us, and tossed us from side to side. We were lucky not to run off the line. It was a wonderful feat, of course, to make a railway across an island so sparsely peopled that you may go for fifty miles without seeing a house.

I am glad I don't have to travel on it every day. In places the way, which it would be flattery to call permanent, is so rough that passengers have to keep their mouths tight shut so as to prevent their teeth being shaken out.

We saw the beautiful Bay of Islands at sunset, its waters dyed blood-red by the flaming sky. We ran alongside rivers where the salmon were leaping, and where trout can be taken at certain seasons as quickly as one can cast flies. We puffed through dense forests, and I felt the caribou fever in my veins.

Two days after I had got to the Log Hut it came on badly. Redland had gone up the line to look after a missing convoy. I said to another man who was staying there, "Let's go out and see if we can get a caribou." He said, "A carry-what?" I said, "A caribou," and told him about them. So we took a couple of light sporting rifles from the gun-room, and off we went.

It was pretty hot now, in the middle of the day, at any rate. The far-away mountains were sleeping in a golden haze. The river that sweeps past Log Hut sparkled and sang a gurgling song as it hurried to fling itself over the great falls half a mile below. We walked along the muddy path through the thick brushwood growing on the bank. After about half an hour we came to a lake where Redland said caribou often went down to drink.

To-day they didn't seem to be thirsty. Of course, I know that man, great and glorious creature, drinks whether he is thirsty or not. But caribou are only animals. One mustn't except too much of them. For nearly two hours we sat in the sun-shine watching. Then I somehow seemed to be back home, at the club, in the billiard-room, after lunch. I was proposing that we should build a log-club across the road in the green park, and telling them how fine it would be to have caribou at our very doors, when I was rudely shaken by the shoulder, and I heard the man I had brought with me say: "Look there! what's that swimming across?" I looked, and, sure enough, there were four caribou in the middle of the lake. A stag with splendid antlers was leading, and three does came after, all swimming leisurely from side to side.

There was a small row-boat on the lake belonging to Redland. We rushed down to it and pulled for all we were worth. But we couldn't get out in time. We saw the deer land far out of range, clamber up the bank, and shake themselves and disappear into the woods.

However, the probability was that they would recross before very long, so we decided to wait in the boat. For three mortal hours we sat there without seeing a sign of a living creature. We got colder and hungrier every minute; still we sat on. At last, about half-past four in the afternoon, we saw the quartette again. They came wandering quietly through the woods on the bank, cropping as they went, and evidently not intending to swim back that night.

The thing to do now was evidently to stalk them. The wind was blowing lightly against them, so we rowed to a spot where we could get ashore to leeward of them. They can only spot human beings by their sense of smell, unless they see you right in front of them, so we didn't mind how much noise we made getting through the forest, except, of course, that we didn't speak above a whisper.

There was lots of snow left in the sheltered spots, and we pretty soon got disgustingly wet. Our clothes were torn by the thick undergrowth. We had continually to take round-about ways to avoid morasses or impenetrable clumps of brushwood. Deer-stalking on a highland mountain is child's play to the sort of hunting which you get in a country still covered by primeval forests and never touched, very likely, by a white man's foot.

It wasn't long before we lost the caribou tracks altogether. We had no notion where we were. It would be getting dark in another hour or so. We began to feel foolish. In addition, the man I had brought with me was pretty well "done." He said he must sit down for a bit and recover. I agreed to prowl around near by keeping within ear-shot all the time, so that we shouldn't lose one another. I had a sort of idea the caribou were not far off.

My idea was correct—they weren't. I came out suddenly upon a bit of open ground, and there, within twenty yards of me, they were feeding, all four of them, as quiet as you please. I was still well to leeward of them, so they didn't worry about me. I stood there admiring their graceful shape and movements for quite ten minutes. They browsed on unconcerned, I think they saw me, but, as they had probably never seen a man before, they were not afraid. They had no suspicion that I was an enemy, with the blood-lust in my heart and a weapon in my hand which could kill without warning.

I didn't like to fire without giving them a chance. I felt it would be as bad as to pot a sitting pheasant, so I rustled the undergrowth with my feet. They looked up and one doe bounded off. The others went on with their meal. Then I cleared my throat. They took no notice. Then I said "Shoo!" but they showed no signs of shooing. How could I start them off? Only by letting them get wind of me. As soon as they scented something unfamiliar they would be off like a shot, and I could send my bullet after them without compunction.

There was another opening to the glade further round on the left, and the wind was blowing from that direction. So I crept round in the bush and got to the other opening just as my continuous crackling noises had begun to make the caribou really uneasy. The moment at which I appeared to them again was also the moment of their scenting me. The does fled at once. The stag, with his head lifted and his forefeet angrily pawing the ground, gave me one glance and then leapt at me with a tremendous spring.

I know what I ought to have done. I know what I should say I did, if this were not strictly a veracious history. I ought to have got my rifle up to my shoulder in a flash and pulled the trigger, and pierced the noble stag to the heart.

What actually happened was this: I did not get my rifle up to my shoulder. In a panic I tried to use it as a defence against the stag's onrush. He was on me in the twinkling of an eye, and I felt as if a house had fallen and buried me in the ruins. I had a sensation of being kicked by all the feet in the world, of being ploughed deep into the soil, of becoming all at once the centre of the most scintillating display of fireworks that ever happened. Then I lay quiet and wondered whether I was dead.

Before half a minute had passed, however, while the noise of the stag crashing through the forest could still be heard, I was aware of Redland's voice and immediately afterwards of Redland's bulky presence, standing over me. He was calling me a darned fool,

I sat up and said, "Where am I?" (I remembered that out of a book, or rather, many books.)

He said: "Close to the Log Hut, you infernal idiot. What do you want to go stalking caribou in the close season for?"

"Close season?" I repeated, mechanically, "I didn't know there was one."

"Well, you'd jolly soon have found out. Lucky for you that stag bowled you over. You'd have let yourself in for a pretty fine if you'd shot him. You haven't got a game license, either. What hopeless fellows you people from the city are! Come in and change for dinner. You aren't hurt, only dirty and bruised. Less than you deserve for trying to get caribou in May. Come back in the autumn and you shall stalk 'em as much as you like."

But I haven't yet been back in the autumn, so you see I have still to bring down my first caribou.—W. H. F., in The Western Field.

FEATHER EATING IN FOWLS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—That unfortunate failing—feather eating—has broken out among my fowls, most of them imported or of good imported stock. Can you give me any idea as to the cause or any hints as to the best way to stamp out the vice.

PURKHOR.

[Absence of, or an insufficiency of animal food is a common cause. It is sometimes due to the birds living in dirty surroundings, which cause them to be plagued with lice and such vermin, and they pick out their feathers to relieve the intense irritation which is occasioned by the pests. Of course, if the above is the reason why the fowls have developed such a failing as eating their own and also other birds' feathers, the remedy is very obvious. Clean out the sleeping houses and runs, washing down walls, perches, nest-boxes, and, indeed, every possible crevice in the houses and sheds where the birds congregate with an insecticide of some kind, or else with strong lime; and dust the birds over with Keating's, Naldire's, or Kemp's Circassian Powder. If the birds have sores on the bare places whence they have plucked out the feathers bathe them daily with Condy's Fluid, diluted to about the strength of one tea-spoonful in a quart of water.

Another reason why birds are addicted to feather-eating is that they are not getting some needed constituent in their food or may be they have been fed with too heating foods, such as oatmeal, potatoes, or rice in too great quantities; or they may be suffering from a lack of lime or grit or a scarcity of green food; and, if they are in confinement, cannot pick up bits for themselves which they feel that nature requires. In consequence if such be not supplied to them the birds cannot thrive and be healthy, for no bird if in a robust, healthy condition will ever pick out its feathers. The birds if possible should be allowed a little liberty. If this cannot be done, put plenty of scratching material in their houses or runs and throw their paddy or other grain food upon it in order to make them scratch and pick up some of the grit, etc., with the grain. Flowers of sulphur is a very good old-fashioned remedy for curing them. Mix about three teaspoonfuls with enough soft food for twenty-four birds' daily rations, and if this scours them too much, give it every second day, and reduce the quantity.—ED.]

THE NO. 3 AIR RIFLE AND ITS LIMITATIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I have lately carried out a series of exhaustive experiments with a No. 3 Air Rifle of the latest construction. The gun is on the Gem principle, but very much better made, and with a more powerful spring and may be accepted as being as good a weapon of its kind as it is possible at present to manufacture.

The calibre of the rifle is ·250, and it shoots a pellet of the usual hour glass form, weighing 20 grains. The muzzle velocity is approximately 450 feet per second.

The first thing done was to find out exactly the curve of trajectory for 25 and 50 yards, that is, the highest point reached by the pellet over these two ranges, above the line joining the point of mean impact on the target with the muzzle. This height is for the 50 yard range 6·3 inches and for 25 yards 1·57 inches. The time of flight for 50 yards was found to be ·362 of a second and for 25 yards ·174 of a second. Remaining velocity at 50 yards 378 feet per second and at 25 yards 414 feet. The penetration at 25 yards was about $\frac{3}{8}$ inch of deal. At 50 yards the pellets still hit hard enough to kill a crow or bird of similar size.

A cross wind was found to cause considerable drift, even at the moderate range of 50 yards. Thus a breeze of about 8 miles an hour, which was blowing across the range, caused the pellets to strike 4 inches to the left of the centre of the target. From this one obtains a good rough rule for a side wind. Half the speed in miles per hour of a side wind gives the number of inches the pellet will be drifted right or left at 50 yards. At 25 yards the number of miles wind speed divided by eight would similarly give the inches of drift on the target. On analysing the above results, we find that the air rifle, though a charming toy for use in the compound, at very short ranges, becomes absolutely futile when we seek to use it at unknown distances beyond about 30 yards. With the sights set for exactly 50 yards, if we aim at an object which happens to be only 40 yards away, the pellet will go 4¼ inches high. Even at 45 yards the pellet will still be 2½ inches above the mark aimed at, while at 48 yards the pellet will be one inch above the spot it would strike at if allowed to travel two yards further. The slope of descent in fact, at which the pellet reaches the 50 yards target, is $\frac{1}{12}$, that is, the bullet is falling at the rate of an inch in every six feet of forward travel. It is quite obvious that when one wants to shoot a bird at 50 or 60 yards one cannot carefully estimate the exact range and set the backsight with correspondingly minute accuracy. It is also equally obvious that unless one does do all this the chance of hitting the object aimed at is extremely remote. You have in fact at 50 to 60 yards to know the range within 3 or 4 yards in order to secure a central hit.

As regards accuracy, supposing one does know the range exactly, the No. 3 Air Rifle is not at all bad. A good shot would be able to get a series into a 4 inch or 5 inch bull at 50 yards on a calm day. At 25 yards there is no difficulty at all in hitting an object two inches in diameter, and no doubt one might, with careful shooting, under favourable conditions, get a series occasionally into a 1 inch circle at this distance.

To sum up, the No. 3 Air Rifle is an excellent little gun for ridding one's compound of vermin, etc., but one must keep in mind that trying to hit a bird at long range is like shooting with a howitzer, unless one has the distance exact and the backsight elevated to suit, the pellet is certain to go over or short.

SIGHTS FOR AIR RIFLES.

I have pointed out that beyond 25 yards the trajectory of spring impulse air rifles becomes so curved, that there is great difficulty in hitting a small object unless the exact range is known. It is obvious that complications are increased, if in addition to estimating the range, one has to set the sights to suit as well. The problem, however, becomes comparatively simple, if variations in range are met by simply taking more or less foresight. The most suitable sight under the circumstances would be a ring shaped one, very similar to the well-known Lyman Combination foresight, but having the ring of larger diameter, so as to carry an ordinary spectacle lens of about 60 inch focus. Then by having a peep sight on the grip one obtains an efficient magnifying sight of simple description. The back peep sight would be at about half the focal length of the lens from the foresight: thus one would have a magnification of 2 diameters, but with somewhat hazy definition. The small hole in the back peep sight serves to clear this haziness sufficiently to make the definition as sharp as one wants. A small black dot in the centre of the lens acts as the bead of the foresight, and as this remains unmagnified, while the object is enlarged to double, one has a sight with which it is possible to aim at any part of even a small object. This dot in the middle being then the sight for 25 yards, it is only necessary to add two or three horizontal lines below it at the right distances apart for, say, 40, 50 and so 60 yards. When shooting at a bird, which is thought to be 50 yards off, all that is necessary is to bring the middle horizontal line across the centre, while keeping the 25 yard dot vertically above the bird; then if the range has been estimated correctly, there is every chance of a hit. This is far simpler than first guessing the range, and then fiddling about with the backsight to get it screwed to the exact elevation necessary.

It is a very simple affair making a lens foresight. The lens would be a common spectacle one, costing about fourpence. The ring which holds the lens can be put on like a sight protector with a sliding fit; or it can be made just like a Lyman foresight, but with a larger loop. I have been using two of these home-made lens foresights on a ·25 Stevens rifle with most satisfactory results; and fitting one to an air rifle would be just as easy. Anyone who is not a good hand at doing little jobs of this kind himself could get the whole thing fixed up for a few annas by any intelligent native mistri.

The principle of the spectacle lens giving magnification is only this, the length of focus of the lens being 60 inches. If you hold the glass this distance from the eye, objects seen through it will be in sharp focus, and the same apparent size as usual. If you come in to 30 inches and look through the lens again, objects will appear double their natural size and the definition will be hazy. By interposing the small peep hole of the backsight between one's eye and the lens, the hazy definition is to a large extent cleared, and the object, though it will not be focussed with extreme sharpness, will yet be quite clear enough to see distinctly; and, moreover, the increase in apparent size will be found to make aiming on the exact part of the object desired very much easier than with any form of non-magnifying sights. Though I have shown above how some of the difficulties caused by the extremely curved flight of an air gun pellet may be overcome, it is by no means to be inferred that the addition of such sights will for a moment make an air rifle equal to a good powder rifle, such as, say, the ·22 Long rifle RF. Until the muzzle velocity of the Air Rifle can be largely increased, it will remain essentially a gun to practise shooting cheaply with on the target, and its uses on live objects will continue to remain very limited.

BOVRIL, LIMITED.

Some Medical Experiments In Tropical Diseases.

The twelfth Annual General Meeting of Bovril, Limited, was held recently at River Plate House, Finsbury Circus, E. C., the Earl of Arran (the Chairman of the Company) presiding.

In the course of his speech, the Chairman referring to the increased cost of manufacture said.—From an examination of the accounts since the formation of the Company I find that if the cost of manufacture had remained at the rates prevailing in the first year of the Company's working, viz., 1897, we should have earned, approximately, some £600,000 more net profits during the twelve years than we have done. This would have enabled us to pay 10 per cent. per annum on the deferred shares, and at the same time to bring our Reserve Fund up to double the amount at which it now stands. Consideration of these facts will enable you to realise the expansion which has taken place in your business, and at the same time will give you some idea of the unforeseen difficulties with which your directors have had to contend. The continual increase in the cost of raw material for years past has been a source of much anxiety to your directors. During these twelve years the price of cattle all over the world has taken a decidedly upward trend. This brings me to the recent important development in connection with our supply of raw materials, namely, the formation of Argentine Estates of Bovril, Limited. These estates consist of a large group of "estancias," situated in the province of Entre Rio and Santa Fe, in the Argentine Republic. The area of the freehold property alone is 438 000 acres These estates are in compact blocks, through which runs the River Parana With these estancias the new Company takes over two extract of meat factories, which have supplied us with a large portion of our raw material for some years past. They are situated one on each side of the River Parana. The present stock of cattle on the estates is between 100,000 and 150,000 head, and the quality of the cattle is being constantly improved by the purchase of fine breeding stock. Though the question of a more definite control over our supplies of raw material was of vital importance to the Company, your directors were very loth to commit the shareholders to fresh obligations in this connection. The problem, however, was solved by your Vice-Chairman, Mr. George Lawson Johnston—(applause)—who, on his own initiative, went to the Argentine and carried out all the preliminary investigation, obtained valuations, and made all necessary arrangements for the acquisition of these important estancias. This was done entirely at his own expense. (Applause). The result was that your Company incurred no monetary risk until the success of the scheme was assured, Bovril Limited, assuming responsibility as promoters only when the underwriting of the necessary capital had been arranged and the successful issue was certain. (Hear, hear.) I mention these details in order to show that, while your directors have been very cautious to avoid any risk whatever in the formation of this Company they have been successful in the attainment of an object which is of such great importance to the interests of the shareholders. A prospectus of the new Company was sent to every shareholder on our register before it was posted to the public, so you should all be pretty well informed as to the position of Bovril, Limited, in the matter. With the prospectus was sent a marked application form, so that any Bovril shareholders desiring shares in the new Company should receive special attention.

Raw Material from the Colonies.

I think you are aware that we have always drawn large supplies of raw material from our Colonies, and I should be sorry for you to think that under the new arrangement we are turning our back upon them now. The fact is our Colonies have not been able to provide the quantity of raw material we require; when their output increases we shall be ready for it. For large as the output of these Argentine Estates of Bovril, Limited, is likely to be, it will supply only a portion of our increasing demands. The Entre Rios portion alone of the estates we have acquired an interest in is, I think, the largest block of estancias under one ownership in that province. We have fixed on an installation which has for long past produced the best materials in the market, and is in a position to continue to do so for many years to come. Furthermore, we have reason to believe that the Entre Rios Railway will pass through these estates; this extension must invitably increase the value of the land. As I have already stated, the initiation and formation of the new Company were undertaken by our Vice-Chairman, Mr G. Lawson Johnston, and it is entirely due to his untiring energy and constant labour that the whole matter was successfully accomplished. (Applause.) I cannot let this opportunity pass without expressing, for myself and on behalf of my colleagues on the board, our intense satisfaction with the result of his labour so generously undertaken and so successfully carried out entirely at his own expense. The arrangements made mean that for a series of years the cost of material should keep well within bounds. I do not wish you to gather from anything I have said that we are in the future going to get our supplies at the prices ruling in the first year of the Company; that is too much to hope for in view of the tremendous increase in the demand for cattle; but we believe that we shall be able not only to obviate any further increase in the price, but to show an improvement over last year. A point to remember is that we necessarily hold at the present moment large stocks of material. It was, of course, necessary to maintain these stocks. I mention this to show that it will not do to look for all the benifits from the new company in the first year, as it will take some time for the cost of these stocks to be averaged. Our foreign and colonial business continues to labour under great disadvantages. In Canada trade was much upset by the after-effects of the financial disturbance in the United States; but I am glad to be able to report that the outlook over there is much improved, and that the returns for the last two months show a decided increase over the same period last year.

British Bovril.

In Africa and Australia the heavy duties remain in force, in spite of our strenuous efforts to secure preferential treatment for Bovril as a purely British product; for British we are, with our directors all British. Our staff at home and at our branches across the seas is British and our shareholders are British. We stand alone in this respect; others may call themselves British, but, after all, Bovril is the British beef beverage. (Hear, hear.) During the summer, at the invitation of Sir James Crichton-Browne, some medical and scientific gentlemen attended a a private reception in our offices here Sir James may have a few words to say about this later on; but I must express our thanks to him for the trouble he took to secure the attendance of these most influential visitors. There is another matter to which I might refer—viz., the Franco-British Exhibition, which was held during the period under review. The Bovril Castle was a huge success and proved a wonderful advertisement, and we were awarded two of the highest possible prizes. I should like to say a word or two about "Virol." I am informed that there is an increasing use of Virol in hospitals and public institutions. The importance of this preparation as a physiological food and stimulant is now generally recognised by the medical profession. The business continues to develop satisfactorily, and I am pleased to report that the sales for the ten completed months of their financial year show a substantial increase over those for the same period of the previous year. In conclusion, I have only to add that the maintenance of our trade in a year of general depression is to your directors a very considerable satisfaction, and with the new arrangements made for supplies of raw material they look forward to the future with very confidence that, given a revival of the general commercial conditions of the country, Bovril, Limited, will be one of the first to benefit.

Sir J. Critchton-Browne said:—It is in times of strain and stress that a fine constitution declares itself, and I venture to think that the way in which Bovril has come through the last depressing year without a general shrinkage of trade is encouraging, and shows that it has a sound constitution, and has probably a successful and vigorous year before it. The report submitted to you, the adoption of which I have to second, and the full and explicit speech of the Chairman, have I think, this to recomend them, that they are neither apologetic nor inflational, but are expressive of confidence and reasonable prudence. Since I joined the board of Bovril I have become acquainted with two or three suggestive facts. I have found, for instance, that while Bovril is consumed everywhere, and by all classes of the community, the sales of it are, in proportion to population, largest in cathedral cities and in university towns, and the meaning of that I take to be that as regards the cathedral cities it is in the odour of sanctity, and as regards the university towns it commends itself to the intelligence of the country. (Laughter and applause.) But, beyond the cathedral cities and university towns, throughout the Empire, and beyond the confines of the Empire, Bovril makes its way; and I have just heard of a new application of it which may, I think, interest you, and which I am sure will certainly interest the general public. I notice in the report of the Governor of Uganda that the victims of that terrible malady, sleeping sickness, which is devastating vast tracts of Africa, have an intense craving for animal nutriment, and that in the hospital camps, when it became known that an ox was to be killed feeble cries of joy went up from these stricken people. I need not tell you that this intense craving in sickness has sometimes a very subtle meaning, and it occurred to me that Bovril, which is pure animal nutriment, might give relief to these unhappy beings. I do not for a moment suppose it would be curative, because sleeping sickness is due to a parasite in the blood; but I thought it might afford comfort and consolation, support and sustain strength, while specific treatment was being carried out. I therefore had a small supply of Bovril sent out to Colonel Sir David Bruce (Fellow the Royal Society and Director of the Uganda Sleeping Sickness Commission), and that distinguished man, to whom we are indebted for the complete abolition of Malta fever, promised to give it a trial.

Only on Saturday last I received a letter from Sir David Bruce, dated Chagwe, Uganda, 13th January 1909, from which I will quote the following passage:—"I have received your letter of 4th December. I found the Bovril of great use on several occasions. It is excellent stuff, and if the Bovril Company can see their way, as you suggest, to send us another supply for experimental purposes, I will be happy to use it. I cannot promise that it will be always used on sleeping sickness patients, as we have only a few here now; but at any time we might have more and there are other occasions on which it might be experimented with. For my own part, I think that it ought to take the place, as a stimulant in many cases, of the whiskies and sodas which are run to on every occasion of fatigue in tropical climates." (Applause.) If we can only secure the general adoption of Sir David Bruce's advice—the substitution of Bovril for whiskies and sodas during fatigue in tropical climates—then your directors will be able to promise you very largely increased dividends. I am glad to notice from a paper just handed to me that in that terrible Stanley Colliery disaster, which all deplore, Bovril has been found exceedingly useful to all the rescuers when they came up from the pit. It was administered with champagne—not a bad mixture—and it was highly valuable as a restorative to them. The Chairman has told you that a number of eminent medical men and men of science visited the factory of Bovril last summer, and closely inspected every step in the preparation of Bovril from the arrival of the raw material to the packing up and dispatch of the finished article. They were, I know, deeply impressed by the skill, care, and scrupulous cleanliness observed in every step of the process. Those who have read the recently published report of Dr. McFadden to the Local Government Board on tinned and glass packed meats, with comments on their manufacture, will realise the vital importance of that. Pray bear in mind, as the Chairman has alluded to the fact, that the whole manufacture of Bovril takes place in this country, and that cannot, I believe, be said of some much-vaunted meat extracts; and so Bovril gives employment to British labour—and surely that is something worth thinking of at this time—and its preparation is carried out under a vigilant supervision that cannot be guaranteed in the case of meat extracts that are packed in foreign parts. Dr. McFadden urges that all practical steps should be taken to require evidence from official sources as to the supervision and inspection of establishments from which meat foods are brought to this country. It is for the shareholders of Bovril to bear in mind that Bovril is for the shareholders of Bovril to bear in mind that Bovril in a pure animal nutriment, without any admixture of yeast or any other cheaper or more adventitious products, which some of our experts tell us are rich in purins, and therefore conducive to gout and other ailments. My own view in that personal recommendation is one of the best of advertisements. (Hear, hear.) All our shareholders, it may be assumed, have contracted the Bovril habit, a habit which once contracted can never be abandoned by any reasonable being—(laughter)—and if they will only persuade and induce all their friends to adopt that habit then they will have the satisfaction of knowing that they are promoting the welfare of their friends, while at the same time they are improving their own investments. I have much pleasure in seconding the resolution which Lord Arran has submitted to you. (Applause.)

Blinks, after inviting to dinner his friend Jinks, who had just returned from abroad, was telling him what a fine memory his little son Bobby had.

"And do you suppose he will remember me?" said Jinks.

"Remember you? Why he remembers every face that he ever saw."

An hour later they entered the house, and after Jinks had shaken hands with Mrs. Blinks, he called Bobby over to him.

"And do you remember me, my little man?"

"Course I do. You're the same feller that pa brought last summer, and ma was so wild about it that she didn't speak to pa for a whole week."

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,
THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.
Newton Abbot, Devon

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

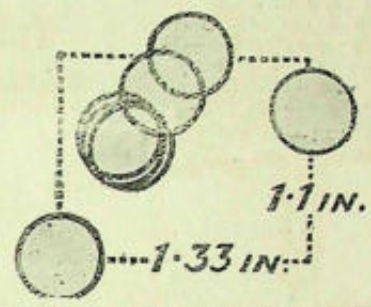
LANG

NEW ·470 BORE.

Expressly designed to replace the prohibited ·450 Bore



VELOCITY 2,250ft. sec.

This cartridges originally designed did not, in our opinion, come up to a sufficiently high standard, and in consequence our expert visited Messrs. Kynoch's Works, and in conjunction with their experts conducted a series of experiments extending over three weeks, ultimately designing the bullets now in use for this popular rifle.

LANG'S therefore confidently claim that in collaboration with Messrs. Kynoch they were the first to introduce the ·470, and as evidence submit the following extract from the Field, and illustration of the actual diagram made before the editor of that journal.

"FIELD," 23rd March 1907: ". . . . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridges complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450, and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a diminution of recoil and pressure."

THE BEST DIAGRAM made before the Editor of the "Field" with a Rifle of this bore.

7 Shots at 100 yards with Lang's ·470 Sporting Rifle.

GATWICK.

IT was a happy and appropriate idea which caused Messrs. Pratt and Co. to come to the rescue of disappointed racegoers and make frozen-out holders of passes at Folkestone, Leicester, and Sandown free of the Gatwick paddock on production of their respective badges last Saturday. The public had evidently made up their minds to chance it, in spite of a grey sky and a searching nor'-easter, as the attendance was a good one, but the weather was of the very worst type March could afford, without one glimmer of sunshine. The going, however, was excellent, and fields ruled of good proportions, while the falls that occurred, though at first looking serious, were of the usual sort to jockeys in hard condition. Results :—

ROSTRUM SELLING STEEPLECHASE—Of 100sovs. 2 miles.

Mr. H. Hartigan's Gruinard, by Mackintosh—Villa Vista, 5yrs., 11st. 7lb. ... Cowley 1

TROPICAL DEBILITY.
HOW TO FIGHT IT.

Of all the evils which the inhabitant of the torrid zone is called upon to endure, the greatest are, perhaps, the deadly debility and nervous depression which are the forerunners of the more serious ills so rife in warmer latitudes. Physical fitness should be the constant watchword; healthy nerve force must be the subject of the most earnest consideration. Happiness, nay life itself, hangs in the balance.

When exhausted Nature fails readily to respond to the extraordinary demands made upon the system by the exigencies of climate, Science once more comes forward with precisely the needed remedy. Sanatogen, the tonic food, is the means discovered whereby impaired vitality may be safely and rapidly restored.

Sanatogen has a singular effectiveness. It is not as a tonic only that it stands unrivalled; it is, besides, a perfect food, extremely rich in just those properties necessary to the perfect nourishment of the depleted system. The basis of Sanatogen is the casein or "curd," the nitrogenous principle of milk. Nitrogenous foods are our bodybuilding ones. They are demanded constantly by the body for the formation, and for the repair of its tissues. United with the casein, we find glycero-phosphoric acid, which is an all-important constituent of the brain and nervous system. This is the reason then, why Sanatogen has obtained its high reputation. It repairs the wear and tear of the most vital parts of our frames, and above all it gives to brain and nerve their essential food in precisely the form in which they are capable of readily receiving and assimilating it.

Doctors in India have not been slow to see the wonderful advantages in the use of Sanatogen among their patients, and a great many of them have written setting out the success that has attended the use of this preparation. They have used it with the greatest success in Malaria, Dysentery, Enteric Fever, cases of Plague and Cholera, as well as amongst those who are suffering from ailments due to disordered liver, spleen or digestive system. One or two of their opinions are worth considering.

Thus Dr. H. H. W. HART, Hapur Remount Depot, Babugarh, United Provinces, India, writes:—

"I have much pleasure in certifying to the value of Sanatogen in cases of Malaria, Enteric Fever, Dysentery, and other exhausting diseases. I have used it regularly now in my practice for the past two years, and in no single instance have I been disappointed with its results. I can honestly affirm that many of my worst cases owed their recovery to Sanatogen. I could quote numerous cases where the administration of Sanatogen was followed by immediate and marked amelioration of the symptoms. I cannot speak too highly of its value, and I certainly consider it the best of artificial foods."

Whilst Dr. C. R. NAYLOR, Bangalore, South India, writes:—

"It was through my influence that your excellent medium of nutrition—Sanatogen—was introduced into South India, and I have reason to be proud of my success in doing so, for I consider that I have thereby conferred a benefit upon suffering humanity. I have found it unequalled by any other food when the internal arrangements of the body (whether in children or adults) are in want of a stimulating nutrient. When milk, diluted to any degree, cannot be digested, Sanatogen will be greedily assimilated. In many almost hopeless cases of plague, where heart failure has been threatening, I have found Sanatogen helpful in getting the patient to turn the critical corner, and it has admirably aided my treatment of this fell disease. I have no hesitation in stating that by the discovery of Sanatogen you have added a most powerful weapon to those already in the possession of every physician."

And Dr. R. F. BOWERS, Bhaptiahi, P.O., Bengal and N.-W. Railway, N. Bhagulpore, India, writes:—

"I was able to try Sanatogen in a patient who had passed through the acute stage of Asiatic Cholera (in a severe form) but was utterly prostrated. That woman, I consider, owes her life to Sanatogen."

A physician has written a remarkable treatise entitled "How to Keep Well in India," a copy of which will be forwarded, post free, to all who apply to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, mentioning the Indian Field.

Sanatogen can be obtained from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, and of all chemists, etc., in India.

DOG MEDICINES
MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA
In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book.

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

DERBY.

THINGS did not look at all encouraging for Derby on Monday morning, but the sun fortunately came to the rescue, and at St. Pancras Station the welcome notice: "Racing certain at Derby" was a charming change from the prohibitory postponement placards that have been a sort of judge's black caps to so many meetings. But evidently only the hardened sportsmen cared to brave the rigours of the open, and though the afternoon matured into almost a spring one with bright sunshine, the muster was but moderate. The going, a bit heavy, was not so bad after all, but, as was anticipated, fields suffered from the recent stress of weather, and were small compared with Gatwick's plethoric list. Results:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

With the victory of Derby County over Nottingham Forest at Derby the fourth round of the Association Cup, in which not a single tie was brought to a definite issue on the previous Saturday, is now complete. Newcastle United, Manchester United, Bristol City, and Derby County compete in the semi-final stage, the two former clubs meeting at Bramall Lane, Sheffield, and the two latter at Stamford Bridge. Curiously enough, not one of the four clubs have yet carried off the national trophy, Bristol City and Manchester United, indeed, being strangers to the Final Tie. In that all-important contest, on the other hand, both Derby County and Newcastle United have each appeared on three occasions. The Derby club qualified first eleven years ago, when they lost by 3 to 1 to the club they knocked out last Saturday. In the following season they again earned the honour, but went down at the Crystal Palace before Sheffield United by 4 to 1, and six years ago, with Bury as opponents, they suffered defeat by no less than 6 to 0, the beating being the most severe in the long history of Final Ties. Newcastle United's appearances at the Palace have all been within the past four years, Aston Villa overcoming them by 2 to 0, Everton by 1 to 0, and Wolverhampton Wanderers—last April—by 3 to 1.

Last Saturday for the first time this season, Tottenham Hotspur suffered defeat on their own ground, West Bromwich Albion gaining a brilliant victory by three goals to one. The beating seriously prejudices the chances the London club possessed of gaining promotion. On Monday last they had gone to the top of the Second League table, but now they are once more third, their record being badly spoilt. West Bromwich Albion lead them by one point with an equal number of games played, Bolton Wanderers, who won at Bradford, being top, two points ahead of Tottenham Hotspur, with two extra fixtures fulfilled. For the rest of the season, therefore, one may expect to see a desperate struggle between the three clubs. The position is quite an open one, but West Bromwich Albion, by their victory have made themselves strong favourites for one of the first two places. They played excellent football against a good side, the combined work of the forwards being as brilliant as the defence was sound.

Germany have a lot to learn in the art of Association football. The team that lost to the English Amateurs at Oxford had some idea of combination and played pluckily, but only long practice can give the necessary skill in dribbling, quick passing, and shooting. Of course, the game has been played in Germany for many years, but until a higher standard has been reached experience in good-class football must be lacking. This is where the Germans failed. They had pace, dash, and a fair knowledge of passing, but were generally too slow in all they did. Constant practice with the ball, watching clever sides, and playing along with good men will remedy this fault; but it would seem as if many years must elapse before any Continental team will seriously trouble our best amateurs. England did not play well in the Olympic Games—the only occasion when foreign teams have made a real fight under Association rules.

In the fifth annual match played between teams representing the Army and the Navy, the Soldiers gained their third success. Each year the Navy men have improved in their all-round form, and on the run of the play at Aldershot last Saturday they fully held their own, but whereas they lacked ability to score, their rivals turned their opportunities to account. Hard and keen throughout, the match was a most exhilarating one to watch, and, of course, great enthusiasm prevailed among a crowd largely composed of soldiers and sailors. The Army owed much to their goalkeeper, Private Penstone, of the Royal Irish Rifles, whose saves in the early part of the game, when the energy of the Navy team completely upset their opponents, gave the team time to find their form.

CHELSEA vs. MANCHESTER UNITED.—After a fairly good game at Stamford Bridge the result was a draw—one goal all. The early play, watched by probably 30,000 people, gave promise of a a great display, and much of the football was of a high class, but after the visitors took the lead, early in the second half, they seemed content to lessen their exertions, and, with Chelsea playing the one back game, owing to the temporary retirement of Cameron, the play lacked exciting incident. Each side had to make an alteration at left half-back, Miller taking Birnie's place, and Downie coming into the Manchester eleven for Bell. Facing a fairly fresh wind, Chelsea began strongly, but were prone to attempt shots at too long a range, and, except when windridge sent in a low shot into the corner of the goal, Moger had little to do. A Turnbull made one great effort, but finished with a long shot that went too high. Meredith often went down the right, but the most dangerous attacks were made by Chelsea, owing to a rather indifferent defence. Crossing over, Manchester United forced the pace, and in seven minutes Wall scored a great goal with a right-foot shot. He outpaced the backs and completely beat Whitley. Manchester seemed to be easily holding their own when Brawn ran right down and passed back to Bridgeman, who with only Moger to beat, scored easily, amidst great enthusiasm. A glorious run and centre by Wall was the chief incident in the remainder of the play. Chelsea, 1; Manchester United, 1.

ASTON VILLA vs. WOOLWICH ARSENAL.—Fine weather favoured the meeting of these sides at Birmingham, and at the start of the game there were about 15,000 people present. The ground was on the heavy side, but during the opening half both teams maintained a capital pace, and the football proved thoroughly interesting. McDonald saved in fine style from Reeves, and George cleared from Lewis. Aston Villa had slightly the best of the game, but half an hour had elapsed when they succeeded in penetrating the Arsenal defence, Eyre shooting through. Woolwich Arsenal tried hard to equalise, but failed, and Aston Villa crossed over with a lead of 1 goal to 0. On resuming the Arsenal showed much improvement and the play was even. A strong movement by the visiting side left Fitchie in position, and he succeeded in equalising. Aston Villa played up finely after this, and from a penalty given against the Arsenal goalkeeper for fouling Hampton, Wallace gave them the lead. Aston Villa, 2; Woolwich Arsenal, 1.

HOTSPUR vs. WEST BROMWICH.—Playing really superb football at Tottenham, the Albion beat the Hotspurs by 3 goals to 1. With the exception that Bull played at right half for Morris, who is on the high road to recovery from his recent attack of pneumonia, the Hotspurs were at full strength, and the Albion were able to call upon the services of Hewitt at inside right. That player was injured in November, and he signalised his reappearance in the team by scoring a couple of goals. Play was very fast throughout, and the 40,000 spectators were delighted with the splendid display given by both sides, although the enjoyment was, of course, chastened to many by the fact that the Hotspurs were on the losing side. The Albion had a slight northerly wind behind them in the first half, but the Hotspurs were the first to attack, and Woodruff tested Stringer with a hot shot from a pass by Woodward. The ball went out to Middlemiss on the left wing, and he drove it back hard, Stringer again clearing finely. In the first quarter of an hour Tottenham were the more frequently attacking, but Pennington and Bettelby played very soundly at back, and few good scoring openings came to the forwards. After a time the play opened out a lot, and Davis gave Garratty a fine pass from which the Albion centre forward scored with a fast low drive, which gave Hewitson no chance. Tottenham tried hard to equalise, but were forced back, and from a scrimmage in front of goal a penalty was awarded the Albion, from which Hewitt scored. The pace continued hotter than ever, and Woodruff scored for Tottenham with a drive that Stringer nearly saved. Just before the interval another scrimmage in front of the Tottenham goal ended in Hewitt scoring again, and the Albion crossed over leading by 3 to 1. With the wind in their favour Tottenham had just a trifle the better of the mid-field exchanges, but they were rather weak in front of goal, and the Albion backs defended splendidly. Corner after corner was forced, but that was because the visitors concentrated themselves on defence. The Tottenham goal had a narrow escape when Garratty hit the crossbar from a corner. It was exciting and fast right up to the end, but the second half produced no goals. West Bromwich Albion, 3; Tottenham Hotspur, 1.

MILLWALL vs. WEST HAM.—At Greenwich, before 8,000 spectators. Millwall played their usual brisk game against the wind in the first half, but Taylor and Shreeve at back, and Yenson amongst the halves did some good tackling for twenty minutes. Then Shreeve handled inside the radius in dealing with a shot from Morris and a penalty was awarded. Twigg took the kick and hit the cross-bar, but from the rebound Cunliffe opened the score. Millwall held their lead to the interval, in spite of some able shooting by Burton and Shea. Seven minutes after the teams had crossed over Taylor turned the ball into his own goal from a shot close in by Morris, and at the end of half an hour Dawson lost the ball in a struggle with Vincent and enabled Twigg to put on a third point for the Dockers. ENGLAND vs. WALES.—England played the second of her three international matches of the season on the ground of the Nottingham Forest Club on the 15th instant and won by 2 goals to 0. The match was watched by about 15,000 spectators, the gate totaling over £400. As England had previously beaten Ireland, and Wales had beaten Scotland, this game had an important bearing on the international championship. Both countries were able to place in the field the teams originally chosen, and it may be assumed that both were represented by the strongest available side. It was a daring experiment to introduce three new forwards, and there was considerable speculation whether the latest internationals would blend with the old.

V. J. Woodward, who captained the home side, won the toss, and decided to play with the sun behind his back, and with an oblique wind in his favour. The initial dash by the Welsh forwards was pulled up by Wedlock, who made considerable ground and then pushed the ball through to Holley, who had Roose well beaten with a rasping shot that travelled right across the goal and just missed the farther post. This was a very narrow escape, and within a minute there was another, as Woodward indulged in some juggling, and having drawn the defence, sent Freeman off, the latter only losing the ball through a partial stumble when within a half-dozen yards of goal. The English halves were playing a fine spoiling game, and they were keeping their forwards so well fed that the latter were able frequently to threaten danger. The Welsh defence, however was safe, Morris being particularly prominent, and it was subsequent to one of his clearances that Meredith dashed away on the right and dropped the ball nicely in front of goal. Davies, the centre, had a race with Cromption for possession, and the latter, getting his head to the ball, sent on to Wedlock, who started Bridgett in a run which Blew summarily closed. Two bouts against Wales were given, Parry coming under the ban of the referee for indulging in questionable tactics. Pentland here left the field, and during his absence Warren pulled up Lot Jones and then pushed the ball through to Woodward. Clever work between the latter and Freeman ended in the Evertonian making an opening for Holley, and he shot past Roose from ten yards' range, England taking the lead sixteen minutes from the start. Pentland returned shortly afterwards, but although he did not lack the will, he could not get going in his usual style, and this meant that Woodward had additional work thrown upon him. Danger, however, frequently threatened Wales, and there were some thrilling tussles between Freeman and Woodward on the one side and Morris and Peake on the other.

As the game got older, so did the visitors improve. Meredith had not had much to do, but his confreres now began to sedulously feed him, and as Veitch allowed him plenty of liberty, the Mancunian got in a succession of centres and shots that sorely troubled the home defence. On several occasions, when Veitch was well down the field Pennington rushed across, and as between the West Bromwich man and Meredith honours were about even. Although some good work was also done on the Welsh left and the inside men were well plied with the ball, they were kept so well in hand that they seldom troubled Hardy. The English forwards were much more insistent, and although their shooting lacked accuracy, it did not lack force, Holley, Bridgett, and Freeman all missing the posts by a few feet. One terrific shot by Freeman was going straight for the corner of the goal, with Roose at the other end, but Morris headed out from almost under the bar, and in a few seconds the goalkeeper cleared an express drive from Holley, and threw away a neat header from Woodward. Bridgett was left, after a short bombardment of the Welsh goal, with a ridiculously easy chance of scoring, but he lofted the ball over the bar. From the kick-off Meredith was given a clear run, and having only Pennington to beat, he worked in and brought Hardy to his knees with a lovely shot. For some minutes Wales more than held her own, but she could not make any definite impression on the solid defence opposed to her. The English left wing changed the venue of play, and next came a bout of passing, in which Warren, Woodward and Pentland figured, the movement being ended by Holley heading into Roose's hands. Nearing the interval England applied severe pressure, and consummate strategy by Woodward enabled him to give Freeman a clear opening, and the centre forward promptly netted with a shot that Rosse had no chance to save. Half-time:—

The first half ran strongly in favour of the home country, but Wales certainly had the better of the exchanges in the second half. There appeared to be contentment among the English players at what they had achieved, and they developed a lethargy that boded ill for their success. On the other hand, the Welshmen were much quicker on the ball, and yet they were seldom dangerous in front of goal. The only player who seemed likely to score was Meredith, and early on he made a long, sinuous run, during which he outwitted Veitch and rounded Pennington, but he had still to reckon with Hardy, and the goal-keeper was equal to a powerful cross drive, which must have scored against a less daring keeper. Before relief came to the harassed England defender, Davies (centre) was presented with an opening, but he shot high over the bar.

The Rose next had a turn at attacking, Wedlock starting a movement in which all the forwards took part, and Pentland, outwitting Morris, lifted the ball to Holley, who headed over. Roose several times ran out and cleared, and Morris, when hard pressed, had no hesitation in sending back to the goalkeeper, but this almost brought about disaster, as Freeman was on one occasion within half a yard of the ball when Roose made a dive, and managed to get it away. Back to the other end raced the Welsh forwards, and Crompton twice kicked away from close quarters, while Hardy had to deal with a shot by Jones. By way of relief, Bridgett indulged in a solo run, the finest individual effort of the match. Receiving the ball well in his own half, he tricked man after man, and concluded with a powerful drive that missed the goal by a couple of yards. Shortly afterwards Parry left the field, but the visitors fully held their own in a somewhat tame finish, the game ending:—

SCOTLAND vs. IRELAND.—Ideal weather favoured the twenty-sixth match between Scotland and Ireland at Ibrox Park, Glasgow. Taken all round, the game was disappointing, the Irishmen never getting properly settled, first through the poor combination of their forwards, and later through the failure of their defence.

For the first ten minutes play promised well, but as the game progressed the Scotsmen sorely harassed the Irish backs. The first goal was scored fifteen minutes after the start, McMenemy beating Scott after the latter had saved hard shots from Bennett and Thompson. Five minutes later Paul scored a second point after some clever passing. Weak finishing lost the Irish forwards any chances they had, and though Harris and Sloan kept them well supplied, their shooting was poor, and the home backs easily cleared. Half-time:—

Within a minute of the restart Thomson accepted a nice pass from Bennett and headed past Scott, thus placing Scotland three goals ahead. The Irish forwards then made an effort, and Greer, Webb, and Kirwan all sent in good shots, but Brownlie cleared smartly and play returned to the Irish goalmouth, where Scott, through the backs standing in front of him, failed to see a nice shot from McMenemy, who scored his second goal during the match. Before the finish Paul again scored from a pass by Bennett.

The failure of the Irishmen may be put down to want of combination among their forwards, who rarely gave the Scottish defence much trouble. Greer and Lacey played well, but the pick of the visiting team was Harris, their right half, who put in a great deal of good work, which in the end went for nothing. Sloan at left half also did well, while Craig was the better of the backs. Scott, even considering the big score against him, made some wonderful saves, but was badly supported.

On the Scottish side all did well. Brownlie in goal had little to do. Watson was the best back on the field, and Walker and Stark the pick of the halves. Forward the honours went to Bennett, Paul, and Macfarlane. Watson's display at back impressed the Scottish selectors, and his selection for the same position against England would cause little surprise. Result:—

THE GAME IN SCOTLAND.—There was a full League programme in Scotland on Saturday, the 13th instant and in Glasgow interest was divided between football and a great march out of 6,000 Territorials. The weather was ideal, and crowds followed the soldiers, with the result that what is generally a 50,000 crowd at Celtic and Rangers' meetings dwindled down to about 30,000, with drawings amounting to £762—easily the best of the day in Scotland, the next best being £193 at the Kilmarnock and Aberdeen match. The shadow of next Saturday's semi-finals lay over the most important games, but some temper got into the Celtic-Rangers at Parkhead, and what promised at the opening to be a nice quiet game early turned to be fast and furious, and, as a result, it is almost certain Quinn will be unable to take up centre position for Scotland against Ireland, at Ibrox Park, this afternoon, while Gray is also a very doubtful starter, as a result of the game. Rangers won a game that was rarely scientific, simply because of their better finishing at goal.

The best play of the day was seen in the St. Mirren and Dundee game at Paisley, and there was further proof that the Dundee men play the prettiest football of any club in Scotland. The bustling tactics of the Paisley men held good for a long time, but in the last fifteen minutes the Northern players were the fresher and more methodical, and Dainty and McFarlane scored two pretty goal, giving Dundee two points, which sustains the interest, in view of Celtic's defeat, in the race for the League championship.

Port Glasgow Athletic scored their third successive win, Queen's Park, as usual, showing poor form at goal. Clyde were always masters of the Hearts, who were without Walker, while at Airdrie 3rd Lanark divided the points with Airdrieonians, due mainly to the splendid goalkeeping of Brownlie, his saves including a penalty. Brownlie is the only goalkeeper who is being considered along with McBride, Preston North End, for honours at the Crystal Palace on 3rd April.

Any chance Aberdeen had of beating Kilmarnock was gone when Dalgarno was carried off injured, and Niblo went lame early in the second half. In addition, Aberdeen were without Lennie, and he was badly missed. Kilmarnock on play were value for the points. Templeton being in one of his best moods.

ASSOCIATION CUP.

DERBY COUNTY vs. NOTTINGHAM FOREST.—Postponed from the previous Saturday owing to the snowy weather this, the one remaining tie in the fourth round of the Association Cup, took place at Derby before a company of about 20,000 people. Fine fresh weather favoured the encounter. Derby County laboured under considerable disadvantage through the indisposition of Maskrey and Ben Hall, in whose places Scattergood and Bagshaw appeared. The home side, winning the toss, attacked at starting, but the Forest soon asserted themselves, and pressed a good deal, Richards of Derby on one occasion clearing rather luckily. Twenty minutes from the start, however, Thompson put in a fine centre and, though Linacre kept the ball out, the Forest custodian could not clear, Bentley dashing up and forcing it into the net. Following upon this success by Derby, play ruled fairly even for a time, but the Forest were the more dangerous side. Twice Scattergood brought off good saves in dealing with shots from West, whereas Linacre had comparatively little to do. Without becoming unduly rough, the work on both sides was vigorous and several stoppages occurred. The home side at the interval still possessed the lead, the game at half-time standing: Derby County, 1 goal; Nottingham Forest, 0. A fine pace was still maintained on crossing over, and within five minutes further success attended the efforts of the Derby men, Davis centreing splendidly from the corner to Bentley who headed into the net. The Derby team soon afterwards had a fine opportunity of putting on a third point, but Thompson's centre was badly placed. Half way through the second portion of the game, West, the Forest forward, for kicking Barbour, was ordered off the ground. Thus reduced to ten men, the Forest team found themselves overplayed, although on one occasion, when they broke away, Hooper only missed in the narrowest fashion. The game for the most part, was all in the Forest quarters, and, with the ball sent in from the left wing, Bentley was given, and promptly seized, the opportunity of scoring his third goal of the match. The end came shortly afterwards with the game standing: Derby County, 3; Nottingham Forest, 0. Derby County thus earned the right to play Bristol City in the semi-final round at Chelsea on 27th March.

ARMY vs. NAVY.—The match under Association rules between representative teams of the Army and Navy was played at Aldershot, and although the weather was cold and rather cheerless, some 8,000 people assembled. Playing against the wind in the first half the Navy opened with a strong attack, but the Army defence was very sound. In turn the Army forwards pressed, and two goals were quickly put on, Corporal Benfield (on the Leicestershire Regiment) and Corporal Pearson (Royal Engineers) being the scorers. The Army continued to show good form, and at half-time they still led by two goals to none. In the second half the play was very fast, and for some considerable time in favour of the Navy, who had the breeze behind them. They had several fine chances, but lost them by bad shooting. On occasions, however, Penstone had to save shots. Towards the close Charlesworth scored for the Navy, but the Army immediately retaliated, and Benfield added another goal. That was the extent of the scoring, the Army thus winning by three goals to one. At the close the medals were presented to the victorious team by General Grierson. Army, 3; Navy, 1.

RUGBY RULES.

WALES vs. IRELAND.—Fine weather favoured the twenty-fourth international Rugby match between Wales and Ireland, which took place on the St. Helen's ground at Swansea. Of the previous encounters Wales had won fourteen and Ireland eight, one being drawn. The Welsh team took the field as originally selected, but there two changes in the Irish fifteen, Blackham and Greeves coming in for Gardiner and Carrig. Some fears were expressed that Parke might not be well enough to turn out but the Monk-town three-quarter, having recovered from his indisposition, took his place in the side. A moderate breeze below from end to end of the ground. The game aroused the usual interest in Welsh Rugby circles and the attendance numbered probably over 35,000. Wales previously had beaten the Australians, England, Scotland, and France, and naturally there was a keen desire to win the last of their engagements. Prior to the game, Mr. Walter Rees, the Welsh secretary, announced that Mr. George Nicholls, the famous old Welsh three-quarter, had been appointed to referee the England and Scotland match at Richmond next Saturday. Winning the toss, Ireland played with the wind in the first half and after an exchange of kicks Bancroft found touch in the Irish half. Then came a rush by the Welsh forwards, the game being taken close to the Irish line. Wales were penalised and Parke kicked into touch at the centre. The Welsh backs attempted some passing, but the Irish tackling was keen. Hopkins made a good mark, but did not find touch, the exchange ending in favour of Henneberry. Parke made a clever mark and Ireland reached their opponents' quarters though a penalty. Parke, however, had his kick charged down and Ireland lost a lot of ground. Then Jones and Owen got the ball to Hopkins, who cleared Thompson, but was well tackled by Henneberry. Then the Irish forwards broke away, but, kicking too hard, enabled Bancroft to save. Then a little later Bancroft was forced into touch by Thompson in the Welsh quarters. Wales worked away a little and then the Irish backs attempted a bout of passing, but Park held too long, and in trying to feint was collared. Parke nearly let Wales through, but Hopkins failed to take his pass. The Irish forward rushed back again, reaching the Welsh twenty-five line, but J. P. Jones relieved with a good kick into touch. After this Wales carried the play past the centre and R. Jones in trying to break away was well tackled by Thrift. Another rush by the Welsh forwards followed, the play now being well in the Irish half, but Henneberry regained much of the ground by a fine kick into touch at halfway. The Irish forwards got away, but Bancroft saved in good style and got in his kick. Then Piper stopped a Welsh rush. In a strong rush on to the Irish line Wales nearly went over and two Welshmen were knocked out. One of them, B. Thomas, left the field having apparently, hurt his hand. The Welsh halves had the ball out, but J. P. Jones made a wild pass. Directly afterwards the ball was out again, but Trew threw away a try by attempting to go in himself instead of passing out to Hopkins. Wales again pressed, but Williams was collared by Thrift and Ireland reached the centre. Later McCormac found touch in the Welsh twenty-five and Henneberry kept up the position with a good kick. However, Wales worked to the centre, where some sharp scrummages took place. The Welsh backs had the ball first, but J. P. Jones held too long and was collared, a fair chance being lost. The Irish forwards kicked too hard in their dribbling and Bancroft got in his kick. There was some passing by the Irish right wing, but Thrift was forced into touch. At this point B. Thomas returned to the field. The game was now in the Welsh twenty-five, but Bancroft cleared with a good kick. The Irish forwards, however, worked back, but Owen relieved Wales a little. Henneberry, however, got in a good kick, but Bancroft from a mark found touch at the centre where some sharp play took place. Then Parke, Piper, and Wilson dribbled right down, but Trew effected a plucky save two or three yards from the Welsh line. Wales cleared from an awkward position and struggled to the centre. Then in turn Williams and Hopkins knocked on.

Ireland	... 0

On restarting the ball went to Thrift, who raced down, and he and Parke carried the play right on the Welsh line, Wales having hard work to save. A minute later Pinion and Thrift made a strong attack on the Welsh line, the defence being sorely pressed. Owen cleared with a useful kick, and J. P. Jones following up, Wales reached the centre. Then Wales rushed down, and Ivor Morgan broke through, but was well collared by Henneberry a yard or two from the line. Directly afterwards Owen and Jones cleared the way for Hopkins to score, and Bancroft placed a goal. This score to Wales came about five minutes after the resumption. On continuing the Welshmen again reached their opponents' twenty-five, and after two bouts of passing, one of which Williams spoiled by failing to hold the ball, J. P. Jones broke through, and though tackled by Henneberry, managed to fall over the line. Bancroft failed with the place-kick, but Wales were now leading by 8 points.

A minute or so later Watts went over in a loose rush, and this time Bancroft kicked a goal. The Welsh backs attempted some passing in their own "twenty-five," but J. P. Jones held too long, being collared, and in another attempt Jones overran his pass. For a little while the play was in the Welsh quarters, but the home side soon reached the centre. Wales were penalised, and Parke gained some ground, while directly afterwards Pinion found touch near the Welsh goal line. From a kick by Henneberry the ball went dead behind the Welsh line, the attack thus coming to an end. Then Wales attacked, but Henneberry tackled Williams. Afterwards in quick succession Henneberry, who played a fine game, got in two good kicks. Ireland reached the centre, and their forwards looked like going through, but were checked. Then Trew came away, and running right through the centre, quite beat the Irish defence, finishing a great run behind the posts. From this try Bancroft placed a goal.

After this further reverse Ireland again got to the Welsh quarters, but were unable to maintain their position. Wales were penalised, but Ireland could not gain much from the kick. From another one directly afterwards, however, Ireland got into the Welsh twenty-five. Pinion broke through, and the ball was passed out to Thompson, who, however, was forced into touch near the Welsh line. Thompson was held up at another attempt, but half a minute later he crossed the line and Parke converted with a great kick. On resuming Pinion was clear, but he unwisely kicked instead of going on. The play was now at the centre, and then came a bout of passing by the Irish backs, but Thrift was collared by J. P. Jones, who got across just in time. Then Parke made a capital run from his own half to the Welsh twenty-five. Result:—

Wales	... 3 goals 1 try.
Ireland	... 1 goal.

SPORT AND OUTDOOR LIFE.

FREE FROM DUST AND DIRT.

If you have been for a long bicycle ride or have driven many miles in a motor car; if you have been travelling for hours in a dust-filled train or on a grimy steamer you will feel a persistent longing to free your mouth from dust and dirt. The same longing will be experienced after a game of hockey, golf, or a day in the cricket field.

Then is the time when Odol comes in handy. When your mouth is delightfully refreshed by a "mouth bath" with Odol, when your breath is sweetened and your gums cooled you will forget your fatigue, and feel a new man again.

And it is so little trouble, you only want a few drops of Odol and a little water. Retain the mixture in the mouth a few seconds before ejecting and rinse the mouth well. You can also gargle with Odol. It produces really an indescribably delightful sensation.

Odol is not only more agreeable and refreshing to use than any known tooth preparation, it is also more efficacious. Its antiseptic and refreshing properties are unique. It is a deodoriser and perfectly innocuous to the most sensitive mouth. Don't forget also that being liquid it penetrates everywhere, not merely as tooth-soaps and powders, brushing the surface. One feels directly after use that it is doing wonders for the mouth, and its antiseptic effects lasts for hours after application.

competition became necessary, and this took place at Durham before 4,000 spectators. From the start the Cumberland forwards settled down in strong form, and following upon a kick by Seymour that gained a lot of ground, Elliot broke away from a line out and scored, Seymour falling at goal. A little later Ewbank followed with a second try for the visitors, but again Seymour was unsuccessful with the place kick, half-time arriving with the game standing:—Cumberland, 6 points; Durham, 0.

On crossing over Cumberland still did most of the pressing for a time, but Durham struggled on in most determined fashion and kept their opponents out. The improvement in the home team was not, as it happened, confined to the matter of defence, for from a penalty kick Taylor placed a goal, and in the last five minutes, Ellwood dropping a goal for the home side, Durham snatched a rather lucky victory by a dropped goal and a penalty goal to two tries. Durham, 7 points; Cumberland, 6 points.

Hospital Cup Final.—Although Middlesex made a match of it for over half an hour, and always opposed a plucky resistance to Guy's, the final for the Hospital Cup was by no means an exciting game the issue, once Guy's had scored, never being in doubt. In the second half, though Middlesex, by interceptions of Guy's passing, occasionally reached the centre, the game was very one-sided, Guy's in the end winning by the uneven score of 7 tries to nothing. Middlesex had the misfortune to lose the valuable services of Howell Gabe, who broke his collar-bone after play had been some half-hour in progress. Penny, who did some fine saving, tackling, and spoiling, was the best of the Middlesex backs. Saunders, too, was seen to advantage at half, while Harrison enhanced his reputation. The Middlesex forwards played pluckily, but they were out-weighted—especially when reduced to seven—and were beaten for the ball practically all through. Though Guy's were much the better side in all departments, and could afford to, and did, run all sorts of risks in attack, the advances of the backs were none too well executed, and not only frequently let Middlesex away, but might have been easily checked but for the poor and high tackling of the Middlesex forwards. Stringer made some fine runs, but Lacey and Lee were the best of the backs. Lacey made some fine saves, strong runs, and good passes; while he played his usual sound game.

The crowd never exceeded 1,500, and there was much less excitement than usual. The conditions were perfect, the ground being in excellent order, while there was neither sun nor wind. Guy's kicked off, and the first item was a run by Stringer in reply to the return kick. The Middlesex forwards got to the centre, where a bout of Guy's passing broke down. Close play followed, neither side being able to gain ground. Another passing bout by Guy's broke down, but another advance was better executed, and Lee kicked to touch at the Middlesex "25. Here Middlesex were penalised for off-side, but Stokes's kick lacked direction. The Middlesex forwards broke away, and Penny, who was up with them, fly-kicked past Lacey. Stokes had dropped back, however, and saved. At length the Guy's forwards reached the centre. Jones took them into Middlesex country with a good kick, and Stokes, after passing, crossed the line to the right. He had put his foot in touch, however, and from the throw out the Middlesex forwards, led by Harrison, broke away to the centre, where a bout of Guy's passing ended in Penny intercepting and kicking to Lacey. Gabe followed up, and in trying to tackle Lacey slipped and broke his collar-bone. He, of course, took no further part in the game, Harrison came out of the pack to take his place. On resuming Jones found touch at the centre, while a round of Guy's passing ended in Stokes being held at the "25" by Penny. The Middlesex forwards relieved to the centre, but a fast follow-up of a high kick by the Guy's forwards nearly yielded a score, Sturridge just securing the touch. Guy's maintained the pressure, and after Stokes had failed with a penalty, passing from right to left and a very good run by Medlock ended in Lee scoring under the posts. Stokes's kick hit the right post. The drop-out gave Middlesex no relief, and just on half-time another advance by the Guy's backs ended in Stokes outpacing Eggar and scoring far out. Stokes failed with the place kick, and half-time arrived with the score:—Guy's, 2 tries (6 points); Middlesex, 0.

The second half proved very one-sided. Jones by a long kick was lucky to find touch (O'Kane slipping) near the Middlesex line, and though bad passing let Penny intercept and dribble to the centre, Stringer took Guy's back by a good run, while Lacey, in reply to a kick, ran from full-back through the ruck, and passed to Williams, who ran in. Stokes failed with the place kick. Guy's were now getting the ball in practically every scrum, and though the breakdown of passing advances let Penny and Saunders in turn break through, Guy's always regained the ground with ease. Several passing advances had failed, however, before Stokes ran over to the right. He failed at goal. Just after Sturridge was at fault in checking a dribble by Roberts, who gathered the ball when in his stride and ran over. Stokes again failed at goal. Middlesex were now hopelessly beaten, and O'Kane making a weak defensive kick, Saner gathered the ball, and ran in unopposed. Stokes again failed with the place kick. In reply to the drop out, Lee ran instead of kicking, and initiated a bout of passing which ended in Medlock scoring the seventh and last try. A one-sided game thus ended:—

	Pts.

POLO.

The Coming Season.—To-day the stretching acres belonging to the Hurlingham and Ranelagh Clubs are still closegripped in winter's chill embrace, yet in but a few more weeks, when the London polo season shall have opened, these same resorts of devotees of the grand galloping game will have assumed that other aspect which alone has made them famous in the popular mind.

It may be urged that one season is very like another. This is only true to a certain extent. It is true in so far as season by season a vast amount of play is crowded into a brief period, and that the playing of the game has to take its chances with the weather's vagaries. Only for three months are the grounds in use, and then with the going out of July those splendid galloping spaces are deserted again for another nine months. At the end of the season men are tired, and ponies are stale from the effects of strenuous play on five or six days a week; and, besides, August brings in the grouse and thoughts of the moors.

From the beginning of May to the end of July, then, four grounds are in use at Ranelagh; so also the match ground and the practice ground at Hurlingham and three grounds at Roehampton. Each fresh season may also be said to differ from those that are past in the sense that the game is still developing and in the process of organisation, while visits from players in other lands must inevitably introduce new features. What strangers are expected in 1909? Firstly, the season should be notable for the presence at the clubs of Mr. Harry Payne Whitney's team of Meadowbrook players from the United States. Meadowbrook, by the way, is the aristocrat polo club of the U.S.A. Mr. Whitney is bringing with him Mr. "Larry" and Mr. M. Waterbury (both known on London grounds in seasons past) and Mr. D. Milburn, a young American player, who was educated at Oxford.

There is speculation already as to whether Meadowbrook will challenge for the international cup, which was originally given for contests between England and America, and which is held by England. It was last played for in 1902, when the American players were defeated in London, a member of the challenging side being Mr. "Larry" Waterbury. Mr. Whitney, in reply to an inquiry, has definitely stated that his team will not challenge for the trophy, but nevertheless Hurlingham will not be altogether unprepared for a challenge should the Americans eventually consider their side sufficiently strong as to justify a challenge.

The Marquis de Villavieja's team of Madrid players have arranged a series of matches, but in this case the visit has no international significance. Their strength falls a long way short of the best English teams, but against second and third teams Madrid has put an excellent record in the past. The marquis is a very keen player, and has been chiefly responsible for interesting the King of Spain in polo. He is wealthy, and the visit of his team may now be regarded as an annual one.

During May a number of matches will be taken part in, chiefly at Ranelagh, by a team bearing the fearsome title of "Wild Horse Estancia." It is the name of a ranch in America run by Mr. Schwind, and this gentlemen is coming over with three companions and twenty ponies in order to taste the delights of genuine London polo. Nothing is known as to the strength of the side, but in the event of their ponies getting fit quickly the team should enjoy some good polo.

The principal tournament of the season, the Champion Cup at Hurlingham, will no longer clash with Ascot week, for it has now been fixed to follow the big racing carnival.

RACKETS.

The Military Championship.—At Prince's Club yesterday, in the challenge round of the Military Doubles Championship, the 50th Brigade Royal Field Artillery, the winners of the preliminary competition, defeated the holders, the 1st Life Guards, in a love match. At the same time the match was well contested, the first three games being set at 13 all; but the superior combination of the winners made them the better pair, and without having any predominant share of the luck they deserved their victory. Individually Mr. Astor was the best of the four and had Lord Somers been a shade more consistent a different result would have to be recorded. Colonel King was also much in evidence in the rallies, and his hard hitting in the court was the chief factor towards the Gunners' success. He received good support from Captain Bond and so unvarying has been the steadiness of the pair that they have gone through the whole competition without losing a game. Chiefly by means of a sequence of seven by Colonel King, the Artillery reached 10-1 in the first game. Mr. Astor was then responsible for a run of ten, the old Etonian serving admirably. In the second game Mr. Astor made five aces, and Lord Somers, as second hand, added six. Runs of three by Colonel King and five by Captain Bond improved the Gunners' position and the last-named, getting in at 11-13, ran out after the game had been "set three." The Guards led at 11-6 in the third game, but Colonel King rose to the occasion with seven aces. Hands were small in the fourth game until Colonel King went from 6-3 to 11-3, and in the succeeding innings Captain Bond reached "game ball." A sequence of six by Mr. Astor was the Guards' only subsequent success. Score:

The Military doubles championship—Challenge round: Colonel C. D. King and Captain H. H. Bond, 30th Brigade Royal Field Artillery (challengers), beat Mr. J. J. Astor and Lord Somers, 1st Life Guards (holders), by four games to love (18-13, 16-13, 18-15 15-10).

Mr. F. H. Browning was referee.

HOCKEY.

England vs. Ireland.—Fully 5,000 spectators witnessed this match on the Irish Union ground, near Dublin, the Lord Lieutenant being amongst those present. The ground was in excellent condition. England attacked from the bully off, but Pridmore's shot went wide. The visitors, however, attacked again, and five minutes from the start Shoveller scored. The Irishmen then played with great dash and attempted to force the game, but they were seldom dangerous. The English side, on the other hand, several times appeared likely to score, and about midway through the first half Shoveller notched another point from a rebound. Pridmore added another goal, and at the interval England led by 3 to nil.

The rain, which had fallen rather heavily during the first half, stopped when the game was restarted. Shoveller and Pridmore added goals for England in the first ten minutes of the second half. The visitors then eased up for about five minutes, and the Irishmen were during that time in their opponents' circle, but could not score. The Englishmen again got going, and Pridmore and Shoveller scored the sixth and seventh goals in fairly quick succession. The visitors from this point again took matters rather easily,—and Shoveller scoring once more in the last five minutes, the match resulted in a win for England by 8 goals to nil.

BILLIARDS.

E. Diggle vs. T. Reece.—The twentieth heat in the London tournament between Diggle (receives 1,000) and Reece (1,500) ended at the Soho-square Saloon last Saturday night in an easy victory for Diggle by 1,780 points. During the day the most important breaks were 139 (full), 101, 122, 73, 331, 146, 67, 138 and 85 by Diggle, while the Oldham professional, who must be admitted was suffering from a severe cold, and could only make 43, 69 and 82. Result:—

Diggle	9,000
Reece	7,220

M. Inman vs A. E. Williams.—At the National Sporting Club, London, these players contested a game of 9,000 up level for £2,000 and the Billiard Association Championship. A good game was witnessed up till Thursday, when Williams was leading by close on 300 points. From here Inman played a most brilliant game, and had no difficulty in retaining the title by 1,338 points. Yesterday Inman's best breaks were 69, 95, 94, 131, 121, 136, 133, 96 and 69, and Williams 58, 70, 59, 147, 52 and 73.

Full scores:—
Williams	7,662

Army and Navy Championship.—This annual championship, promoted by Messrs. Thurston, was concluded at the Leicester-square hall when last year's winner, Sergeant-Major Briggs, Royal Engineers, easily beat First-class Steward Davis, Royal Navy, by 431 points. Briggs made breaks of 55, 40, 32, 37, 35 and 34 unfinished, to Davis's 41, 59, 53 and 28. Scores:—

Sergt.-Major Briggs	1,000
Steward Davis	569

GOLF.

Cambridge University vs. Oxford and Cambridge Society.—The annual contest between Cambridge University and the Oxford and Cambridge Golfing Society took place on the Royal Worlington and Newmarket Club's course when the 'Varsity gained an excellent victory by 11 matches to 3. They won the singles by 7 to 2, and the foursomes by 4 to 1. In the former B. Hammond Chambers, the Light Blue captain, lost to B. Darwin by 3 and 2, and J. F. Ireland was beaten by H. D. Gillies by 5 and 4, but C. L. Macdona and E. S. Ulyat each gained one-hole successes, and the "tail" was strong. Details are appended.

CROSS-COUNTRY.

Scottish National Championship.—The twenty-fourth national cross-country championship of Scotland was decided at Scotstown. The course was over ten miles. Alex. McPhee, Jun, Clydesdale, Harriers, last year's runner-up to Jack, was the first to break the line, but after a lap of the Agricultural Society's show ground, Sam Stevenson, Clydesdale, the champion of 1906, led from J. W. Templeman, Bellahouston Harriers and J. T. Jamieson, Watsonian Cross-Country Club. The order was the same on leaving the ground, except that J. S. Matthew, Dundee Thistle Harriers, had moved up into second position. At the half distance McPhee, Alex. Mann (Clydesdale Harriers) T. Jack (Edinburgh Southern Harriers), J. Clelland (West of Scotland Harriers) George Mackenzie (West of Scotland Harriers), and Templeman were in the van bunched together. McPhee got away in the last three miles and won very easily. Order of finishing: Alex. McPhee, jun. (Clydesdale Harriers), time—57mins. 58secs., 1; J. W. Templeman (Bellahouston Harriers), 58mins. 30secs., 2; T. Jack (Edinburgh Southern Harriers), 58mins. 55secs, 3; Alex. Mann (Clydesdale Harriers), 59mins. 4secs., 4; George Mckenzie (West of Scotland Harriers), 5; A. J. McGuffie (West of Scotland Harriers), 6; William Bowman (West of Scotland Harriers), 7; J. Clelland (West of Scotland Harriers), 8. The club placing were as follows: West of Scotland Harriers (holders, 1905, 6½ points, 1; Clydesdale Harriers (holders, 1888-9-90-92-8-4-6-7-8; 1901-2-6-7), 65 points, 2; Edinburgh Harriers (holders, 1886-7; 1891-5; 1903-4), 118 points, 3; Motherwell Y.M.C.A. (holders, 1908), 134 points, 4; Edinburgh Southern Harriers, 146 points, 5; Edinburgh Northern Harriers and Glasgow Y.M.C.A. did not close in.

ATHLETIC.

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE SPORTS.

Thanks to help of Mr. L. C. Hull, the Michigan Rhodes scholar, who scored twice, Oxford came out winners at the Annual University Athletic sports against Cambridge at Queen's Club on 19th March by 6 events to 4. Hull's victories were both obtained in the sprint races. In the hundred yards dash he was out of the slips like a flash and never being headed won easily in 10⅕secs. The American experienced some trouble from Messrs. C. Armstrong and W. T. Wettenhall, the light blue first and second strings in the quarter, but he put in a powerful finish and managed to shake them off, the verdict in his favour being 3½ yards. Just as the winner breasted the tape he unfortunately ricked his ankle and he was assisted off the track in great pain. There were three other Americans besides Mr. Hull taking part in the sports and these were J. W. Woodrow of Drake University, U.S.A., who ran as second string to Hull for the Dark Blues in the hundred and Messrs. D. G. Herring of Princetown University, and G. E. Putnam of Kansas. Both the last mentioned competed in the hammer-throwing competition in which the Oxonians expected Mr. Putnam would come ont successful. R. H. Lindsay-Watson, the Scottish International Rugby footballer, who was Cambridge's first choice, however, put up a record throw of 148 ft. 10 ins., at his first attempt. This proved too much for Putnam whose best effort was 142ft. 3ins. Mr. Lindsay-Watson's throw was the only record made. But it was the half-mile race which provided the tit-bit of the programme. The finish of this was in the opinion of many old blues present one of the finest that has been seen for many years. Both Universities were represented in this race by their Presidents, Cambridge relying on Mr. T. H. Just, who is Amateur Champion of England, and Oxford was represented by Mr. P. Stormonth-Darling. The second strings of both teams cut out the pace for half the distance when they retired and then ensued a superb struggle between the presidents. Just before reaching the final bend the Cantab sprinted and gained a lead of a few yards. On entering the straight, however, Mr. Stormonth-Darling drew up to his side and then ensued a ding-dong struggle that will not soon be forgotten by those who witnessed it. All the way up the straight the pair ran nip and tuck and everyone seemed to go mad with excitement. Three yards from the tape the issue was still in doubt, but in his next stride the Oxonian gave a terrific leap which landed him on the tape and gave him the victory. This event put the dark blues in the lead, for previous to its decision the scores were three all, Oxford having won the hundred and quarter with Mr. Hull, and the hurdles with Mr. G. R. L. Anderson, whilst the mile high-jump and hammer had gone to Cambridge, the winners being P. J. Baker, A. C. B. Bellerby, and R. H. Lindsay-Watson respectively. W. H. Bleadon defeated Lindsay-Watson in the weight-putting and this victory gave the dark blues a lead of two events which was reduced to one when M. G. D. Murray won the long-jump with a leap of 22ft. 0½in. for Cambridge. The concluding event was the three-mile race, and while it was being decided many spectators thought the sports would end in a tie of five events all, especially when Mr. F. Hallowes, Oxford's first string, dropped out after going two laps. Hallowes knew what he was doing, however. It was soon seen that his retirement had been arranged, for immediately he left A. M. Brown of Oriel ran clean away from his opponents, eventually winning by half a lap. Oxford's victory enabled them to draw level, for both Universities have now been successful on twenty-two occasions. There is some talk of another international meeting between Oxford and Cambridge and Harvard and Yale, but whether it will be arranged this summer is a moot point. The American challenge

.405 Caliber, Big Bore High Power Rifles.

It's safer, when you are going after big game, to use a rifle whose power to kill you can always depend on. The Winchester .405 caliber Model 1895 rifle is at all ranges the most powerful made, a statement borne out by the following comparison: The remaining energy at 200 yards of a bullet shot by the .405 is greater than the muzzle energy of a bullet shot from the .45-70-405, which for many years was considered the most powerful rifle for big game hunting. The .405 is designed to use the Winchester .405 caliber cartridge, whose high velocity and 300-grain mushrooming bullet makes it particularly effective against all kinds of big game. Winchester rifles, with Winchester cartridges, each made for the other, are invaluable to all successful hunters.

THE SCHOOLBOY AND LONG-DISTANCE RACES.

EVERY writer on education, from Plato to Herbert Spencer, has advocated physical activity as a means of attaining that harmonious development of all parts of the human economy so essential to robust, vigorous health. And at no time in our country's history has the subject of physical culture been more in evidence than at the present moment. It has received a new and deserved importance just lately by the opinion expressed in a letter to Mr. J. Herbert Farmer by Sir T. Lauder Brunton, Sir Thomas Barlow, Dr. Goodhart, Dr. Hale White, and Sir Thomas Fripp as to the deleterious effect of races for boys over distances greater than a mile. In their opinion "such races are wholly unsuitable for boys under the age of nineteen, as the continued strain involved is apt to cause permanent injury to the heart and other organs." Emanating from such men, this opinion must, of course, be held in great esteem. Happily, however, expert opinion on the point at issue differs very considerably; in fact, Sir Thomas Fripp and confreres are in a minority. May I be allowed to say they have failed to precede their teaching by an inquiry into the nature, capabilities, and requirements of the beings to be taught? This, by the way, will be exhaustively done at a meeting of the School Doctors' Union to be held within the next day or so. The whole question will then be thrashed out from every point of view, which is quite as it should go. Mr. Farmer's letter has naturally given rise to feelings of alarm in many quarters, and irate fathers and mothers are already protesting against any school athletic procedure likely to bring about such physical disabilities as those predicted. It may relieve their minds considerably to hear that many doctors, headmasters, and others concerned view the whole matter in the light of a storm in a tea-cup, and for these reasons: (a) at schools where hare-and-hounds work is in vogue no boy is allowed to compete without special medical permission, (b) undue training, if any, is frowned upon by the "powers that be," and (c) graduated exercise is insisted upon in the main. What is more, these alarmists forget that most careful and judicious selection, and equally careful supervision, is a sine qua non in every case. Some cases of over-doing matters may perchance have been brought to light, but not many; and, where no compulsion is used, one fails to see the evil implied. A Reading school official dubs Mr. Farmer's letter an exaggeration, and I agree. As he truly remarks: "There are boys who should not run, but they are nowhere allowed to compete."

If the pernicious practice of allowing boys to take part at will in so-called "runs" of inordinate length is still in vogue at some schools, it ought to be stopped. Mr. R. R. Conway (the famous Old Cantab) and others rightly decry such procedure, which brings about lamentable results both from the physical and athletic points of view. The Haileybury precedent of not allowing any boy to start without the sanction of his house master might well be followed generally. Otherwise (given such restrictions as those mentioned above) all healthy boys should most certainly be encouraged to take part in races even of four, six, or more miles in length. Mr. T. Christie (the ever-famous Oxford miler of the "seventies") asserts that no ill-effects have been observed at Rossall from so doing within a period of some thirty years. Similar testimony is afforded from Shrewsbury, Blundell's, Stonyhurst, Bradfield, Reading, etc., and this practical testimony is worth all the theory in the world. Yet medical testimony is not wanting to support the same argument. The learned Dr. Schmidt divides up the ordinary schoolboy life into (a) the years of childhood, 6 years to 14, and (b) the years of development 14 to 20. During the first period he insists that a stimulus to growth is above all things needed, and this, he adds, is given by movements which stimulate and quicken the circulation. He decries gymnastic feats for boys at too early an age on the ground that they are generally far behind others in growth, development, and nutrition. What he specially commends are exercises of speed—i.e., those which have a strong stimulating effect on breathing and circulation. And he emphatically places running as one of these rightful exercises. Not only so, but he awards the chief place for boys from nine to fourteen years of age to distance running at a moderate pace. He even advocates moderate exercises of endurance in the form of walking-tours, always provided they can be made enlivening without being too fatiguing. Numerous other medical men with whom I have discussed the subject agree absolutely with Dr. Schmidt on this point. That is to say, they insist that moderate, judicious long-distance running is far less harmful for lads of nine to fourteen years of age than shorter distances implying more speed than endurance. They contend that the size of the heart as compared with the size of the arteries in the boy fits him well for exercises of this kind, and enables him to recover extraordinarily quickly from loss of breath. He avoids the extremes of under or over-exertion, you see, and gives the strongest impulse to movement by the tonic effect of pleasure on the nerves. What the representatives of the School Doctors' Union think of this theory will be known very shortly now. I am optimistic enough to believe they will endorse it fully and finally.

From the age of fourteen to nineteen, it is my opinion, schoolboys can well go in for any sort of exercise with impunity, especially those of skill. The quick-run, i.e., anything from 100 yards to one mile, now takes its place beside the more extended distance run, moreover; albeit anything in the form of hare-and-hounds work is still most valuable. In fact, at this age it is only the trying exercises of strain that need be avoided. Football, cricket, fives, boxing, and all ball games are in every way most appropriate. Matches, too, may be entered upon with gusto without the slightest fear of after results. Rowing ought to be indulged in most moderately, perhaps, and boat-"racing" very moderately until the age of eighteen to twenty. It all depends upon the supervision which obtains, however. Such matters as Dr. Warre, Mr. de Havilland, and the late Mr. H. M. Evans, cum multis aliis at Shrewsbury, Oundle, Westminster, etc., could always be depended upon to see that matters were not overdone even with the oar. As regards the training supposed to be necessary for school sports, my advice is,

Don't train at all. Practise by all means, and thus work off superfluous fat. For the rest, keep to the school hours and diet, shun the tuck shop, and, above all, shun the surreptitious cigarette. I verily believe that more harm has been done by so-called schoolboy training than all the preparation or fatigue involved by the actual contest. Without labouring the point, it is my experience that many of the alleged evils attached to all school sports, and especially distance running, are in fact due to a combination of athletics with much less legitimate amusements (?). Unless he has the remains of a too strong conscience, the boy tells his parents he is suffering from the evil effects of an over-devotion to games, instead of the reverse, and thereby makes sport the scapegoat. It is the old story of giving a dog a bad name. Anyone who feels a pain in his leg states that the dog has bitten him. I feel no doubt at all that, with reasonable precautions, long-distance running may be made as safe for lads of the age specified as any other out-door exercise. Only the authorities must take sedulous care—as they might with perfect ease—that boys do not join in such contests without due medical authorisation in all doubtful cases. The words of the late Admiral Rous de equis: "Learn to always show mercy to your young horses," certainly applies in this case. For it is the bounden duty of headmasters and all concerned to protect all in their power the rising generation of athletic youngsters.

As a sort of corollary of this discussion, it is amusing to hear from "Paterfamilias" and others that Young England is, if anything, over-athletic, that our public schools are running mad in white flannels, and anxious parents are in despair because more attention is paid to athletics than study. I grant there probably never was a time when the worship of sport was more pronounced than just now, yet "Paterfamilias" goes a good deal too far in his scathing remarks. He forgets that, as a rule, the best lads at school with the oar or bat are invariably the best at their books; moreover, that the development of brain is never interfered with by the development of biceps, always provided there is a basis for evolution of talent at all in the former case. It is folly to talk of our Public Schools thus suffering from a mania for muscle. Considering the killing pace at which the intellectual work of the world will ultimately have to be taken by these boys, as men, it is imperatively necessary that their bodies should receive fully as careful training as their minds. My regret is that, when their school days are over, far too many of them abandon active sports and pastimes altogether. Yet there is no reason why they should thus consider their condition of prime health a folly, or excess of youth—which is as much a matter of indifference to many ex-schoolboys as the recollection of their Latin verse. Despite the numerous cricket, rowing, football, and other Old Boys' clubs now in existence for their especial benefit, I feel convinced their numbers might be increased largely to the distinct benefit of the community at large. Healthy athleticism is a foe not only to vice but to that "slacking" which, quite as much as the stimulus of sensual propensity, sends so many of our young men to demoralising amusements. Far better a return to the savage respect for animal health, or the primitive notion of the inherent claim of the strong man to power. After all, there is a lesson of profound national as well as moral consequence in the doctrine of the "survival of the fittest," and the recognition of the fittest as the best!

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

"A" DIVISION.

Y.M.C.A. vs. E. I. R.—Played on the 31st ultimo, the Young Men winning by four goals to nil. Newpott scored in the first half, Rosetti (2) and Gay after changing ends.

MEDICALS vs. 10TH JATS.—A level and interesting game between these teams, on the 31st ultimo, ended in a win for the Medicals by two goals to nil. They scored a few minutes after the start and just before time was called. The Jats lost several opportunities of scoring.

CALEDONIANS vs. ROVERS.—Played on the 31st ultimo, ending in a draw, one all.

MEDICALS vs. ROVERS.—These teams met on the 2nd instant. The Medicals had the upper hand throughout and won by five goals to nil. D'Arcey (2), Boileau (2) and Hendricks were responsible for the scoring.

ST. XAVIER'S vs. B.-N. R.—Played on the Rangers' ground on Saturday, St. Xavier's winning by three goals to one. Ford (2) and Nicholas scored for the Park Street boys and Carroll for the Railway.

SIBPUR vs. Y. M. C. A.—These teams met on the Y. M. C. A ground on Saturday, the visitors winning by two goals to nil. Durrell and Haupt were responsible for the scoring. The Y. M. C. A. lost opportunities owing to erratic shooting.

RANGERS vs. DALHOUSIE.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday, a one-sided game ending in a win for the Rangers by four goals to nil. Skempton and Oliver scored in the first half, Cody and Oliver after the interval.

CUSTOMS vs. E. I. R.—Played on the Customs' ground on Saturday. The first half was level, the Customs scoring one goal through Fischer, but on changing ends the home team had the best of the game and put on four more goals. McCready scoring three and Fischer one.

CALCUTTA vs. CALEDONIA.—On their own ground last Saturday Calcutta beat the Caledonians by five goals to nil. They attacked throughout and netted four goals in the first half; Sherman (2), Dawson and Simson putting through. Sherman added the fifth goal just before time. Calcutta lost many chances owing to poor shooting. Apcar scored the visitors' only goal.

Y. M. C. A. vs. ROVERS.—Played on the Association ground on Monday, the home team winning by three goals to one. The Rovers drew first blood through Dey: Gay equalised: and in the second half Rosetti scored twice.

10TH JATS vs. B.-N. R.—Played at Alipore on Monday the Jats winning by two goals to nil. Slater scored both points.

RANGERS vs. ST. XAVIER'S.—A very level game between these teams on Monday ended in a win for the Rangers by a goal, scored by Templeton in the first half, to nil.

CUSTOMS vs. CALCUTTA.—This match on Tuesday attracted a big crowd to the Calcutta ground. The Customs were expected to win, and they did, a fast and interesting game ending 2 goals to nil in their favour. They had the best of the exchanges all through and scored a goal in each half. Smith put through in the opening period after a good bout of passing, and Fitzpatrick notched the second point on crossing over.

Boxing.

THE POONA TOURNAMENT.

THE final of the Poona Boxing Tournament arrived on Saturday when a huge crowd was present to witness what promised to be one of the finest night's sport ever seen in this annual fixture. Most of the very best talent had been seen during the preliminaries in the majority of classes, and the finals were indeed meetings of champions. To begin with the Feathers, a bit of a surprise came to Manning's supporters when Farley lowered his colours in the semi-final. Both were so fit that a knock-out was improbable, and we saw three rounds of lightning heavy hitting in which Farley was quicker with his right. The other semi-final saw Calloway's tactics once more successful. Dibbs had every advantage but Calloway never gave him a moment's rest, and a greater sticker never entered the ring. He, however, met a fighter of a similar style in Farley in the final and the latter's ability to go all the way and make use of superior reach was too much for him.

Lights were the best represented class, four of the best, Marke, Lyons, Hillier and Arthur being left in. Both the former have had tough nuts in Jones and Oakes to meet, and now that they themselves met in the final there was indeed a battle royal. In the first round each in turn looked like going out, but picked up in the interval. Both have a marvellously fine left, Lyons the stronger but not so good with his right. It was fight all the way and then no accession. In the extra round Marke proved himself fresher and won. In the semi-finals Lyons' left to the mark had put Hillier out and Marke had not to extend himself to beat Arthur.

The Middles seemed always to be a foregone conclusion for Griffin, though Price had shown himself a glutton for work against Barnshaw. Now, however, he was always on the defensive and never opened out sufficiently to have a chance. Griffin was always the aggressor with his free style, and won anyhow.

In the Heavies also it was a one man affair though Tansell had been fortunate to reach the finals without putting the gloves on. Wells I have described before as the quickest and cleanest man of his weight I have seen out here. Never allowing Tansell to mix, his swings consequently going agley, Wells came in and away with a left jab that has more power in it than one might think. Eventually in the last round the same glove went home on the mark and Tansell took the count. Private Collessy of the Munster Fusiliers has challenged Wells for Rs. 1,000 aside, and if the latter accepts we shall have two really good men together. How the Championship stands it is impossible to say as Smith was too ill to continue, and again we are left to regret that there is no ruling body in India to decide such questions. If the two mentioned meet, I should say the winner will be looked upon as holder of the title.

There were two contests, both good fights, the one between Light-weights, Oates and Dean, going all the way for the former to win by not too much. The other pair were Feathers Martin and Healey, Martin effecting a knock-out with his pet right hook on the jaw in the fifth round.

Thus ends, as General Alderson remarked at the prize distribution, a splendid tournament full of good, hard fights. The Judges frequently had difficult tasks and the men had a thoroughly competent referee to rely upon. Colonel Grantham came all the way from Secunderabad to officiate, and whereas he is quick to pick out foul play he allows the boxers all the in-fighting they want till, according to the rules, they hold. The matter of this in-fighting was, I think, discussed at some length last year in your columns, and let us hope the Colonel has set an example that will be followed—too many good fights are spoilt by incessant calls to "Break." It remains for us to congratulate the Superintendent of Gymnasia and Quartermaster-Sergeant Chinnery, and hope this high standard will be maintained in Poona.

The prize for best loser went to Gunner Lyons, and that for best loser in the most scientific fight to Private Jones.

STRAY NOTES.

From an asphalt bed near Los Angelos, California Professor John C. Merriam, of the University of California, has recovered the skeletons of many prehistoric animals unlike any now known in the world. Among these are the giant sabre-tooth tigers, huge sloths, wolves of enormous size, and elephants. This sticky pool of water and tar has been a death-trap for thousands of centuries. Here, ages ago, the enormous ground sloth, which was larger than an ordinary ox, the huge prehistoric mammoth, the great extinct camel, a strange and now unknown species of deer came to drink, only to be held relentlessly in the implacable clutches of the death-trap. The sabre-tooth tiger, marauding for his prey, and the huge antediluvian wolf, the largest of his kind, and once common to California, seeing the nightly herbivorous creatures of the plain in their mad death throes in the hungry pool, sprang upon them, only to meet a like fate, and to be preserved for all the enlightenment of a future era. In the great pool Professor Merram and his assistants have unearthed no less than fifty good skulls, with parts of many other skeletons of prehistoric animals. Excellent specimens of over twenty sabre-tooth tigers have so far been recovered. A mounted specimen now at the University of California has a skeleton a little larger than the ordinary African lion. The teeth or sabres of these huge cats were used for cutting down with a downward stroke, as is indicated by the conformation of the bones of the head.

More remarkable almost than the huge sabre-tooth tiger is the giant wolf, whose bones found in this strange pool proclaim it the largest member of the dog family that has ever existed. Aside from a single tooth and a few fragmentary remains, no specimens had hitherto been found of this huge canine, which ranks as rare among evidences of extinct gigantic mammals as the recent discovery of the ichthyosaurus, of which only two perfect specimens exist in the world, one in the New York Museum of Natural History and one of the lesser degree of excellence in the British Museum. The most usual extinct species of the hoofed herbivorous animals that came to the pool to drink were the wild horses and bison. This horse, which was about the size of the racehorse of to-day, became completely extinct, and is not the progenitor of the wild horses of the plains which were introduced by the Spaniards. Occurring less frequently are camels, deer, goats, and a small and previously unknown deer-like animal and the mammoth. There have also been unearthed by the experts of the University many remarkably and extinct species of hawks, eagles, ducks, and other birds, which in countless centuries past were lured to the pool by the helpless struggles of some feeble rabbit, ground squirrel, or other rodent, upon the surface of the hungry oil-pit. Beetles and insects innumerable have been found in the solid asphalt, and in such a remarkable state of preservation that were they not unknown it would be difficult to imagine that they had been entombed a million yesterdays ago. Perhaps the most remarkable feature of these amazing discoveries from a scientific viewpoint is the fact that they give a comparatively enormous collection of prehistoric relics representing the fauna of California at one place and during a contemporaneous period.

A good-sized rat was slain by a sailor on the Isle of Man steamer Fenella as she lay in Douglas Harbour the other day, and its corpse was heaved overboard, says a writer in the Manchester Guardian. To the astonishment of an eye-witness, a gull swooped down, seized the body, and swallowed it whole. "I have seen gulls swallow fair-sized fish," he writes, "but the rat beat all previous records." This, however, depends upon the species of the gull; the herring gull, an abundant bird round the island, could with an effort get a rat through its gape, and the rest would be easy. A lesser black-backed gull in captivity, about the same size as a herring gull, has been known to swallow small birds and mammals regularly, and when it found any difficulty on account of size it shook them in its water-dish until they were thoroughly wet, when they slipped down with greater ease. The greater black-backed gull will swallow whole wounded wildfowl of much larger size than a rat; indeed, it is astonishing what big creatures a gull can manage. The fur, feather, and bones are disposed of in the form of pellets, thrown up by the birds when the flesh is digested, just in the same way that an owl throws up "pugs"; these gull pellets, consisting of fragments of shell, fish-bones, and other indigestible matter, are common on the edge of cliffs frequented by gulls.

The rarest and most beautiful fur is that of the black fox. The skins, which are obtained in the extreme north of Canada, are so scarce that on an average, only five perfect pelts are brought down from the northland each year, and in exceptional years as many as ten or twelve, though each year thousands of men make a living trapping and the yearly catch of foxskins amounts to over 1·100,000 from Canada alone. The black fox appears to be a freak, as in no way except in colour does it differ from the red fox, whose pelt sells for about eight shillings, or from the grey fox, whose winter coat is valued at from £30 to £80; but whenever a hunter can secure a black fox and remove its skin without marring the fur he is sure of receiving from £160 to £300 for his trophy. Not only is every black fox pelt bought as soon as taken, but a dozen Russian noblemen have paid agents travelling in North America all through the the winter seeking out remote hillside farms and abandoned logging camps where it is possible that a shy and elusive black fox may have been seen. Within the last few years a number of wealthy men owing fenced game preserves have spent a great deal of money in buying foxes alive and turning them loose within the enclosures. Presently it may be that some skilled or fortunate breeder will produce a black pup, or perhaps a pair of black foxes may be captured alive, and from these a new breed of black foxes will arise and cause a great panic among the men who hunt for black foxes. He who can wrest the secret of breeding black foxes from Nature is assured of great wealth and can command the grateful appreciation of the Russian nobility and aristocracy, who will pay any amount for the pleasure of wearing overcoats made from the skins of American black foxes.

The Story Teller.

THE OVER-INGENIOUS HUSBAND.

Madam la Baronne de Givone was a reproduction of that famous type of classic beauty, the Greek goddess, examples of which are so rare now, and growing more and more so in this fin-de-siecle epoch.

A woman born for the Olympian cothurne and the simple drapery clasped upon the shoulder, neither pretty, nor witty, nor marvellous in any way, but Greek, plain Greek, from brow to instep—upon the word of her estimable husband, the shrewd, farsighted, and successful financier, M. le Baron and banker, Alonzo de Givone.

The baron, moreover, was not wrong; madam, his wife, reflected the universal admiration as a polished reflector throws back the light; they always chose her to preside over those functions that required traditionally statuesque patronesses; men bowed before her as before an armed sentinel, and women never thought of such a thing as being jealous of her.

The age of this beautiful Greek, however, announced by herself, was of a very vague character, like the age of a statue as given on the bill of sale, "somewhere between nine-and-twenty and nine-and forty years."

As for the baron's age, it was that of all husbands when they are loyal spouses—fifty years. Very rich and childless, every evening saw them in the social swim, but leading there, as elsewhere, the solemn, ceremonious, well-regulated, dignified life of the old clock in the salon of their stately old mansion in the outskirts of the Bois de Boulogne.

But—alas! that it should be so!—transcendent virtues are always subject to thunder-clap relapses. One day, at the house of a diplomatic personage—a careless parvenu, who opened his doors to all sorts of arts and artistes through an affected democracy—Madam de Givone made the fatal encounter. She trembled—she, the proud, distinguished Baronne de Givone, trembled before a comic singer, the vulgar star of a cafe concert hall.

He had come there, poor devil, to earn a louis and his supper, without a thought of reanimating goddesses of the Parthenon. The physique of this singer of comic ditties perfectly corresponded with his employment—cat-eyed, turnip-nosed, nose like a duck's bill, awkward in gait, and with only the knowledge of making a stage-bow fairly well—an ungainliness, all the same, that mattered little; Madam Herminie de Givone was caught by the epidemic that at times seizes all too-perfect women of vaguely defined years.

She believed that she loved Cæsar Ibes, and fell upon him, like a bolt from a clear sky, with all the notes, flowers, invitations, etc., that women of the great world employ in such cases as barometers, so to speak, of the condition of their affections. Cæsar did not, however, return this love, though touched a little, of course, like all amiable animals to whom, through an impulse of pity, one speaks caressingly as one passes.

Cæsar Ibes was not rich. Herminie bankrupted him in cabs engaged by the hour, and actually dared to offer him on his birthday a cigar-case embroidered by her own Greek fingers, when he would have infinitely preferred to the work of the needle a diamond scarf-pin, or even a good imitation diamond, provided the mounting was not too sham.

Still, one can taste a little of love, and not become a drunkard. Cæsar, not knowing what else to do, permitted himself to go on being loved, and being ruined by cab hire, in obedience to the will of the goddess, who made of this prosaic and useful vehicle their regular and not too compromising trysting-place.

It went on thus—well, really, it does not matter how long—when, one morning at the breakfast-table, M. le Baron, with frowning brow, announced a sudden departure, position, a week's absence, and a call to Lyons on a serious banking errand.

Herminie saw him set out with the joy of an emancipated school girl, and promptly dispatched a note to her "dear friend" to call upon her that coming evening, closing with directions as to finding the servants' stairway.

"My husband deceives me," she declared; "I am sure that he deceives me, because he has grown so cold to me of late. This voyage is but a pretext to join some—some creature. I scorn him, and I wish to see you—to see you here, in my own house. Come!"

The evening came, and the clocks of the quarter were still striking ten as Herminie de Givone, the "deceived" wife, all glittering with diamonds and rustling with laces, as she had come from the concert where Ibes, all the fashion at the moment, had been the lion of the occasion, stepped from her carriage, dismissed the waiting-maid, and ten minutes later, by the servants' stairway, was ushering the young comedian to the sacred precincts of her private boudoir.

A strange awkardness, however, seemed to settle upon the two culprits as they crossed the threshold of that severely Greek nest, with its Olympian memories; Herminie slowly and silently unclasped her diamond necklace, and turned to lay it upon a table near by, and Cæsar, with equal slowness, fumbled nervously with the buttons of his concert-hall paletot.

Then, just as the diamonds fell into the bronze tray waiting to receive them—fell with the light spattering sound of falling tears—the door opened again, and M. de Givone appeared.

Herminie uttered a cry, and fell prone to the floor, and Cæsar began mechanically to re-button his paletot, his pale face convulsed with terror. The banker was pale, too, but ominously calm.

"Sir" said he, quietly drawing a revolver from his pocket, "you are poor, you are a coward, and I know why you are here. You came to steal my wife. Happily, I had taken my precautions. I have placed on guard at each side of the servants' stairway of my house two police officers charged to arrest and to search you. They will find" pointing to the baronne's jewels glittering in the tray beside them—"that diamond necklace concealed between your shirt and waistcoat; they will take you to the police-station, and there you will admit the theft; there, also, you will declare that you were here to see the baronne's maid, and this vulgar comedy will end by a just application of the law—that is to say, a certain number of months in prison. In consideration of recovering the diamonds, however, I agree to do what I can to soften the rigour of the richly deserved sentence."

And, smiling blandly, M. de Givone placed his finger upon the revolver's trigger.

"But—but, monsieur," stammered the comedian, entering the tragic role; in spite of himself, "you would compel me to sacrifice my honour."

"And my honour, sir," responded the banker, drawing nearer, "what of that, sir? Appearances give me the right to blow out your brains here, and now, sir; but I do not love scandal. Take your choice, then. Carry off the diamonds, or—I kill you!"

Briefly, nothing was more cleverly arranged. Cæsar Ibes was poor, a nobody, riddled with debt, of a physique to please only chamber-maids, and Herminie de Givone as flawless before the world as the statue she resembled.

With moist brow and chattering teeth, Cæsar made but a step to the table, where flamed the resplendent necklace.

"To call out is useless," he grumbled, essaying to smile. "If I told the truth, even, they'd take me for a fool, I suppose!"

"No one would believe you, sir."

Givone raised his arm again, and Cæsar saw the gleaming barrel of the revolver almost against his brow. It was an invincible argument. Cæsar yielded.

"Well, if I must, I must," said he; "better a prison than death, you know." And the necklace vanished into the hiding-place designated by M. de Givone, who followed him to the threshold, pointed the way he should go, and dropped behind him the portiere.

Cæsar found himself alone in the corridor. To the left, in the distance, twinkled the lamp of the vestibule, lighting the servants' stairway; to the right, shining in the moonlight, gleamed the long, sparkling panes of the corridor window. Beyond that window was the garden, beyond the garden the Bois de Boulogne, the fields, security, and freedom!

"Bah! why not?" thought Cæsar, brusquely, dazzled and blinded by that which he had suddenly conceived; "I've time enough to throw myself into a train; eight hours lands me at Havre, and, once in England—the devil himself couldn't catch me, Houp-la! my boy, and that"—snapping his thumb lightly in the direction of the banker's closed door—"that for all the enraged husbands in Paris!"

He threw up the sash, flung a leg over the window ledge, and—the diamonds with him—was lost in the night.

Six months have gone since then; the worthy financier is still deploring the mistake he made in persuading Cæsar to steal against his will, and Madam la Baronne Givone more than ever resembles a well-groomed statue.

BALUCHISTAN BIVOUACS.

II.

BARBUS TOR.

Hops and Turkies, Carps and Beer.
Came into England all in a year.

So the chronicler tells us. What a truly glorious year for Merry England that must have been, though what particular year in which particular century this influx of luxuries took place, or who were the venturous importers, and whether they made their respective fortunes or not the historian does not put on record. More's the pity, many will say, for another high—or holi—day (not for a whole year) might now be figuring on our calendar and the metropolis or some provincial town might be the richer in famed statues. The same couplet, however, cannot be taken with reference to Barbus Tor in this Peninsular. Long before turkies or beer were seen on the great man's table the mahseer had been lording it for centuries, may tens of centuries past, in every rocky stream and mountain river in the orient.

From the cantonment of Fort Boulderman angling picnic—ers (excuse the coining of a new word) had sallied forth to a neighbouring stream and excellent creels had been obtained. The writer has always abhorred this form of pleasure party. If it is to be a picnic my rod is left behind safely at home. I then can concentrate my whole attention on the particular portion of the female element with whose safety I am entrusted. I have two hands and two free arms to carry her over the rivulet; I can sit down in the shade of a bush and offer advice; I have plenty of leisure and eight fingers and two thumbs to aid in unravelling the desperate knots into which the line will get, and a pocket knife handy to extricate the hook when it gets deeply embedded in a some delicate lingerie. This side of the picture is quite all right, and one can congratulate oneself on having passed a lazy, amusing, and harmless day, seen a pretty pair of ankles, and acted the part of a useful and perhaps admiring slave.

But if the rod is taken all the wicked passions of man come out in their nakedness. A fine run is descried just round the bend. Malice of forethought flickers in the corner of the eye. A little eddy, perfectly useless to one's own sure knowledge, is pointed out and the fair creature is advised to give it a very careful trial. Meanwhile the culprit saunters off, with an air of self-sacrifice, down stream, till he passes out of view round the turn. Now the heroic demeanour has passed in a flash. A furtive glance is taken over the shoulder, and when it is evident that the coast is clear, with a mental ejaculation to the effect that somebody had been diddled all right that time, the dawdling step gives place to one unusually brisk, and as the pool is approached eagerness is transformed to stealth, until a body is seen crawling sinuously along a flat rock and a pair of avaricious eyes scan the pellucid depths below, noting exactly where the bait will have to be cast, so as to make it pass the patriarch of this piscine congregation after a natural fashion.

Thoughts are thus concentrated when a shrill voice from the opposite bank electrifies the prostrate form.

"Oh! what a lovely pool—but what are you doing—do come and help me over quickly———."

Now if the intruder had been a man a shake of the fist in his direction would probably have been a sufficient hint that his room was more desirable than his presence, emphasized if necessary by a few every-day expressions. But when such happens to be another man's wife, or perhaps daughter, or even sister, this type of play acting might lead to subsequent trouble, so with a pleasant smile, a glib tongue, and a heart filled with righteous anger, the rod is placed unobstrusively in a safe situation the stream is forded, the fair burden is deposited high and dry in safety, whence it immediately hastens in all its wealth of white skirt, blouse and pith hat to the rock in question advances boldly, and takes up a commanding position on the very brink.

"Oh, what monsters these are, what has made them so excited I wish I could catch some of them."—

Man is but a mere mortal, and the irony of the situation for this particular man might indeed lead almost to a volcanic eruption if he had set out on angling bent. But if the excursion was a purely pic nicking one his equanimity would not be in the least disturbed; in fact rejoicing would be paramount, for the adoption of such showy tactics on the part of the damsel would result in all the more fish being left in the pool for the next visit.

As a matter, of course, a spring balance had never formed part of the outfit of these pleasure parties, so that the weight of the creel had to be taken cum grano salis; moreover the identity of the fish had not even exploited. A favourable opportunity presented itself for an outing so I made up my mind to seize it, and satisfy myself whether barbus tor could claim these desolate regions as his rightful realm and also to add one more record of a day's angling in another corner of our Empire.

In a morning up we rise
Ere Aurora's peeping,
Drink a cup to wash our eyes,
Leave the sluggard sleeping :—

Then we go to and fro with our knacks
at our backs, to such streams
As the THAMES,
if we have the leisure.

So it happened one cloudless morning in June, though in this instance the sluggard was no sluggard from choice, for the arduous duties of a doctor's life bade him attend to the wants of his patient prior to the pleasures of rod and line. True, the stream was certainly not the Thames, but what matter so long as it contain fish worthy of the angler's skill. The lure that is most suitable to any particular stretch of water cannot be determined without a trial; so I set forth prepared for all contingencies It is well on such occasions to work out a plan of compaign previously, and to adhere to it as much as possible modifications being introduced only in cases of urgent necessity. Two days could be spent at the riverside. It was arranged that first the worm and a fly spoon would be experimented with and on the last day paste and perhaps the entrails of the humbler hen.

Followers of the gentle art may be interested to know what baits were recommended by the Father of fishermen—Isaak Walton—two and a half centuries ago with which to entice the carp.

"The Carp," he writes, "bites either at worms or at paste, and of worms I think the blewish Marsh or Meadow worm is best; but possibly another worm not too big may do as well, and so may a green Gentle; and as for pastes, there are almost as many sorts as there are Medicines for the Toothache, but doubtless sweet pastes are best; I mean, pastes made with honey or with sugar: which, that you may the better beguile this crafty fish, should be thrown into the pond or place in which you fish for him some hours or longer before you undertake your tryal of skill with the angle-rod: and doubtless if it be thrown into the water a day or two before at several times and in small pellets, you are liklier when you fish for the carp to obtain your desired sport; or in a large pond to draw them to any certain place, that they may the better and with more hope be fished for, you are to throw into it in some certain place, either grains or blood mixt with cow dung, or with bran or any garbage, as chickens guts or the like, and then some of your small sweet pellets with which you purpose to angle: and these small pellets being a few of them also thrown in as you are angling will be the better.

And your paste must be thus made: take the flesh of a Rabbet or Cat cut small, and Beau-flowre and if that may not be easily got, get other flowre and then mix these together, and put to them either sugar, or Honey, which I think better, and then beat these together in a Morsar, or sometimes work them in your hands (your hands being very clean) and then make it into a ball, or two, or three, as you like best for your use; but you must work or pound it so long in the mortar; as to make it so tough as to hang upon your hook without washing from it, yet not too hard; or that you may the better keep it on your hook, you may knead with your paste a little (and not much) white or yellowish wool.

And if you would have this paste keep all the year for any other fish, then mix with it . virgin wax, and clarified honey, and work them together with your hands before the fire, then make these into balls, and they will keep all the year."

I must confess that the paste with which I armed myself contained no such luxuries as the flesh of a "Rabbet" or a "Cat"—alas rabbits are unobtainable and cats—well—Fort Boulderman contains so few that the mysterious disappearance of one could not pass without comment. But what a magnificent threat to be able to dangle over one's better half. Do that, and poor "Punch" must go. And then to think that when things are not going as you wish them, you can go to a cupboard and produce the waxed and honied remains of darling "Fogs," and ponder over his early decease.

The 11 foot green heart is ready with a gut leader and a single hook and in the first fishable run two small mahseer are taken out. Half-a-mile is tramped, the stream being everywhere fordable and interspersed with large boulders, till the water glissades down a shelf of rock forming a deep pool. The water is not clear, containing a milky coloured sediment, so that stalking the prey is unecessary. Spinning is found impracticable. In the space of three miles, three good three pools are encountered, and between these only sprats are forthcoming. Breakfast is secured in a rest-house and in the evening the stream below it is tested, but most of the water is being drawn off for purposes of irrigation, and 2½ miles are traversed before the first fish is hooked. In one particular holt a most delusive creature deprived me of many a good worm. The line would be jerked violently, I would strike almost simultaneously, but without result. Continued failure puts me on my mettle. This time he is welcome to swallow the bait; and he does. Ah-ha—I have you now and no mistake—you can struggle till you are weary—you———.

Oh, Helen Tarnation!—it's an eel. The first day's basket was productive of quantity rather than quality—28 mahseer, 2 eels, and 3 small carp of some other unknown species weighing 8½ lbs.

On the following morning the same three pools are fished most carefully with paste and the results were far more satisfactory. twenty-three mahseer were creeled which took the balance down to 15 lbs. The biggest scaled 1½ lbs. and there were several about 1 lb. in weight.

On the light trout rod these mahseer gave excellent fun—strong and lively, they ran out the line in truly sporting style, and they fought every inch for their lives and liberty.

It is such outings as the above that go to make existence in these latitudes bearable; but the one prayer of both the angler and gunner is that may the day come soon when such holidays may be enjoyed without the necessity of having to employ an armed posse to prevent an ounce of lead from finding a billet in one's back. Time and a sound policy will no doubt bring about the required change, but that policy must be a strong one in which the village malik take a prominent position.

MORVEN.

A SCOTSMAN went to an English race meeting, and boldly staked a sovereign. The horse he backed proved a winner, and he went to the "bookie" to claim his winnings. The sporting man begrudgingly handed him seven sovereigns. The Scot looked at each one very carefully before placing it in his pocket. "Well," said the bookie, with a snarl, "are you afraid they're bad?" "Oh, no," said the Scotsman; "but I was just lookin' to mak' sure the bad'un I gie'd ye wisna amang them."

Two wretched-looking tramps were brought up before a justice of the peace. Addressing the worst-looking one, the justice said, "Where do you live?" "Nowhere." "And where do you live?" said the J.P., addressing the other. "I've got the room above him, your worship."

EVERY employee of the Bank of England is required to sign his name in a book on his arrival in the morning, and if late, must give the reason therefor. The chief cause of tardiness is usually fog, and the first man to arrive writes "fog," opposite his name, and those who follow write "ditto." The other day, however, the first late man gave as the reason, "wife had twins," and twenty other late men mechanically signed "ditto" under neath.

Lucas Cleeve, the novelist, tells of an old nurse who had a very pretty daughter. The girl met a millionaire broker at Broadstairs one week-end. The man proposed, and they were married. An excellent match. Lucas Cleeve saw the mother a short time after the wedding. "Mollie has done well, hasn't she?" she said. "She has that, ma'am," said the old woman. "Her husband is very rich, isn't he?" "Rich! Save us, yes. Ye should see, ma'am, Moll's brougham, her coachman and footman, her motor-car, and her diamonds and pearls. Oh, she lives high. Quite like the nobility and gentry, ma'am. Why she stripe for dinner?"

Jewish boys will stand their ground with any in the country, says an athlete. It recalls the small, frail Hebrew fighting boy, who, when asked why he never budged although his features were badly disorganised, replied: "No fear—I'm standin' on a tanner."

A new constable was on duty at one of the metropolitan police courts, and was conducting a prisoner to the cells. "Mind the step," he said, as they passed a dark corner. "All right," muttered the prisoner; "I knew that step before you were born."

"Mamma, is the old black hen going to be sent away for the summer?" "No, Tommy; but why do you ask?" "Well, I heard papa tell the new governess that he would take her out riding when he sent the old hen away for the summer."

THE representative of the newest and most up-to-date debt-collecting agencies marched up the path of the suburban villa with an air compared with which that of Cæsar, as he made the famous if flatulent "veni, vidi, vici" announcement was merely side.

"The master's out," grunted a dishevelled general.

"I saw him at the window a minute ago, my girl."

"Then 'e's saw yer first," she returned, unsympathetically, adding, as she gently closed the door, "an' by now 'e's got a good two minutes start by the back door."

THURSDAY, 15th April, 1909.

THE INTERNATIONAL HORSE SHOW.

ENCOURAGED by the great success achieved by their two previous exhibitions the executive of the International Horse Show intend doing even better this year and they are leaving no stone unturned to make their third annual show, which is to be held at Olympia this summer, the greatest thing of its kind on record.

Money is being spent lavishly and when the bill comes to be totalled up it will be found to amount to nearly £50,000. Of this sum about a quarter, or to be precise, £12,000, will be devoted to prizes alone. This in itself is a record, for it exceeds the value of last year's awards by over £2,700.

Visitors to the show, which opens on June 5 next and continues for ten days, will find that the directors have made jumping, which was so popular at the previous exhibitions, as strong a feature of their programme than ever. Much time and consideration has been devoted during recent months to the invention of new jumps, some of which will be very attractive. One, for instance, will represent a file of guardsmen wearing busbies so arranged that the "man" may be broken either at the head or below the waist if the horse makes a mistake. Another consists of two field guns placed muzzle to muzzle. Three tree trunks piled up in the form of a pyramid make another good obstacle and others will consist of a "double" with a railway level crossing between the two fences and a railway level embankment with the metals running along the top and a fence guarding it below on either side. A "pianoforte" obstacle will consist of four feet of water followed by a sloping bank of turf with a three foot wall at the end of it. But the great thing will be the "precipice" from the gallery to the ground down which horse and rider will have to scramble.

The executive are experiencing some difficulty with this. The meterial for this must be something that will give the horses a footing and will not slide and require constant renewal. Experiments with cork, rubber, and asphalte have already been made, but none have proved quite satisfactory, and so Mr. Frank Euren is starting at once for Italy, where the "precipice" is in constant use for the training of cavalry, to see how the thing is worked.

The most important trophy in the jumping competitions will be the King Edward Gold Cup, value £500. This is to be devoted to jumping over the course by teams of three officers of the same nationality. The contest is open to the world, but only one team of three from each country can compete in any one year and the cup is to be held for a twelvemonth by the successful nation. A point to be remembered is that only horses belonging to officers or their governments may be ridden. Officers from all the important armies of the world have been invited by the War Office to compete for this. American and Canadian officers will come over for the first time. The King of Spain has promised to send five of the best riders in the Spanish army. The Argentine Republic is sending six and Italy, France, Belgium and Holland will be represented by strong contingents. The War Office is also negotiating with Russia and Sweden, and Russia, it is hoped, will give a display of Cossack riding.

There will be several other new features and many new exhibitors. Mr. Alfred Vanderbilt has been here before, but two new men who are coming from America are Judge Moore and Mr. G. T. Stotesbury. Judge Moore is bringing fifty-six horses over, then the two polo teams from the U.S. and Buenos Ayres that will be playing here in the summer will compete.

Four-in-hands have always occupied an important place in popularity at Olympia, and the directors have done well to develop this picturesque and serviceable side of the schedule. A new class has been established with the object of testing the merits of teams on the road. In this all the turn-outs competing will leave Hampton Court at different intervals on the day appointed for judging and will finish the course in the show ring at Olympia, where each coach will be expected to arrive within one and a half hours from the time of starting. Each four-in-hand must carry at least seven people, including one representative of the show and the conditions in which the teams arrive will weigh largely in the judging. Some of the other novel competitions arranged include one for Shetland ponies in harness and another for girls and boys under fourteen, mounted on ponies. The latter only applies to the children of parents not professionally interested in horse dealing. In order to encourage well-appointed "turn-outs," there will be new classes for those driving or riding horses which have been in regular use in the park or on the road for not less than two months. This will be interesting for it applies more to amateurs than to the regular show customers.

The decoration scheme at Olympia will afford a pretty sight. The big building is to be transformed into a great conservatory. Its domed roof will be lined with trellis, from which strings of blossom and creepers will hang. Every one of the great lamps will be hidden in a basket of flowers. Even the stables will all of them be decorated. And in order that the floral decoration may be as perfect as possible those who have the arrangement of the show in hand have secured nursery gardens of their own and have sent agents to the Continent to procure the finest palms and flowering shrubs they can find.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

A General Meeting of the Turf Club was held on Wednesday of last week to consider a proposal signed by eight members and supported by the great majority of owners both in and out of the Club to rescind the recent addition to the Rules of Betting made by the Stewards in conjunction with the W. I. T. C., the effect of which is as follows:—In the case of a dead heat for first place the money betted on the horses which run the dead heat shall be put together and equally divided irrespective of whether the race be subsequently run off or not. The arguments against the new rule are very strong and practically the whole of the racing opinion of Calcutta is opposed to it. It clashes with existing rules making anomalies, it may often operate unfairly to owners and it offers a direct incitement to an owner of a favourite in a run off to have his horse artistically stopped and back the other as he would have nothing to lose by so doing except the stakes which are comparatively unimportant. However the Stewards having made an obvious mistake would not admit it and preferred to take the somewhat undignified course of threatening to resign if the motion was carried. This dire possibility had due effect on a meeting composed largely of the "social section" of the Club who care little for racing and know less of it but have a great respect for the powers that be and the motion was accordingly lost by a narrow majority. It will, however, no doubt be brought up again in the cold weather with more success, and whether the Stewards resign or not in consequence is a matter that concerns only themselves.

Captain Hughes, Mr. Hutchison's locum tenens, is proving himself a most energetic Secretary and takes any amount of trouble to have things well done. He has taken up the question of making Tollygunge Steeplechase course worthy of the name, and with the assistance of Mr. Lance has put up a model jump for inspection. It is about 4 feet 2 inches high on the take off side and slopes up to 4 feet 6 inches and is about 4 feet broad. Composed of bundles of palms tied tightly and wedged in it is bound together by a stout rail about 2 feet high and presents a stiff and almost unyielding obstacle that horses will be compelled to jump and with which they can take no liberties. Captain Hughes estimates that with a reasonable number of men and proper supervision it will take about a day to make each jump and they will have to be renewed each season as the palms will of course wither. The Stewards' opinion on the fence has not yet been obtained and it will probably be some time before we learn whether they decide to adopt this great improvement on the present flimsy obstacles or not.

The second measurement of the season was held on Saturday last and was chiefly noteworthy that Mr. Galstaun, whose luck in measuring seems dead out just now, just missed with Winnie R., who went 14-0¼ and has thus forfeited her excellent chance of winning the Civil Service Cup in which she would have no doubt been handicapped to carry the maximum weight of 10st. 7lb., but on her Australian performances would almost certainly have won even with that heavy impost. Wild Boy went 14-2 again and this time for life as he was aged six years. Winnie R. by the way will have another chance next season as she was put down as five. Bleach had sent a lot of Arabs over to W. Adams to prepare this side and they came up on Saturday but mostly missed the sizes they wanted. The full list of ponies measured is as follows:—

Mr. E. N. Corbett's b aus g Firelock, 6yrs., 13-2.
Mr. Goculdass' g a h Thuvil, 5yrs., 13-3½.
Mr. Goculdass' ch a h Farick, 14-0.

There is a little bit of mild schooling work going on in preparation for the Monsoons. Mr. Dass means to turn most of his into jumpers. Mulison and Amazon have both had goes in the C. T. C. cage, the latter, however, shaping somewhat badly, and Mr. Bletsoe has ridden Sidonia over some of the fences in Milton Park. The mare, though a bit green, looks as if she would make a real good jumper. W. Alford also has been educating Pallas and Narwana up there and the former anyhow is likely to take well to the hurdling game.

There will be a Polo Tournament, Sky Meeting and Horse Show at Pachmarhi during the last week in May and first week in June.

The "horse special" has long been familiar to those who go aracing in most countries; the kennel special is now un fait accompli in England and there seems no reason why it should not become popular. A London correspondent writes.—

The experiment of running a "dog special" from London to Manchester in connection with the championship show was carried out successfully by the Great Central Railway Company. Every provision was made for the comfort of the dogs. They were accommodated in steam-heated vans, the largest of the animals having vans for their own use with a mattress of straw and a pannikin of water. Most of the dogs came from London, two attendants receiving them at Marylebone, but other "passengers" were picked up at High Wycombe, Leicester, Nottingham and Sheffield. The "kennel special," as it was termed by the company, also provided accommodation for the owners, who, during the journey, were able to attend to the wants of their pets. The luncheon menu consisted chiefly of dog biscuits, but some of the dogs had bones, scraps of meat, soft bread and filtered water. The journey from London extended over five hours, but none of the animals seemed to have suffered from the excitement of travelling.

The Gujerat Cup Pigsticking Meet is now in progress at Dholka. Medlicott has won the first chances of the Gujerat Cup, while for the Salmon Pony Cup Messrs. Forbes, Medlicott, Vernon and Campbell are left in. We hope to publish a complete report in our next issue.

Of all the emblems for good fortune, the horseshoe stands among the first. Everybody knows it is unlucky to pass a horseshoe on the road without picking it up. It is a luck emblem of the greatest power. Again, we are indebted for this statement to old tales, centuries in age, that have descended from father to son, from mother to daughter, through the years.

It is necessary to notice how the horseshoe lies before picking it up. If the ends are away from one, the sign is that fortune will be within grasp, but by extravagance, carelessness, or the operation of rogues, it may depart almost as soon as it comes. A sign to take care is given, therefore.

The right thing to do is to turn the horseshoe around, so that the ends are toward the finder, before picking it up. And in carrying it home it is correct to hold it with the ends upward or the earth will attract to itself all the promised fortune.

After all "WHITE HORSE" WHISKY IS THE BEST.

When the shoe is nailed up on door or window in its destined place the ends must be upward, or the whole luck emblem will be nullified. Instead of keeping evil spirits away, the shoe, in the wrong position, will attract them! Instead of bringing good fortune, the luck of the house will be diverted.

It is supposed that the element of electricity enters into the matter. From the shoe proceeds a current of beneficent rays that, with the ends upward, will spread over the house as a protecting influence; with the ends downward, the good rays are drawn into the all-receiving, all-giving earth, and with them many of the good influences that are about the place.

A century ago it was very common to see upon a cowshed the horseshoe that scared off witches who would milk the cows or dry them up. Nowadays they are not so common, yet here and there they are still seen.

The old myths repay research. The luck of the horseshoe has a most respectable beginning. It is traced to the religion of the old Greeks and their sea god Poseidon, who was identical with the Roman sea god Neptune.

To Poseidon horses were sacred, and to him they were sacrificed. Poseidon was believed to have created the first horse when he struck the ground with his trident and a horse sprang from the hole, which afterwards became a spring. The sea god was the lord of springs. To him all springs were ascribed. In the shape of a horse he sometimes wandered by the shores of his ocean domain, and where he struck his hoofs deeply there the waters gushed out and permanent springs were found.

This is the reason why horseshoes are reckoned lucky. Going to the root of the matter, one sees a nature myth as the root principle. From the sea all rain comes, and to the sea all springs owe primal origin; and to the rain and the fresh waters, sea derived, we owe all fertility on earth.

The old Greeks therefore worshipped Poseidon as the fortune giver through his springs. They gave him horses, his precious beasts, and they adored the foot prints of horses when they found them, for they might be the very footprints of the god himself.

When horses came to be shod the transition of the luck emblem from the footprint itself to the shoe mark—practically the same thing—was easy.

Pegasus, the winged horse, from whose hoofs the water springs gushed copiously when he came to earth, has been credited with the origin of the horseshoe luck.

Some legends called him the son of Poseidon, and therefore gifted by his father with power to call the waters from the earth. Other legends state that Pegasus sprang from the trunk of Gorgon Medusa, after Perseus had cut off her head. He had the power of producing famous spings which gave the gift of poesy, of art, of intellectual powers. From these springs the muses drank yearly.

The horseshoe was a specific against earthquakes. It would keep a horse safe from harm by earth shaking. Again, one receives the sea myth—Poseidon was the shaker of the earth.—

President Roosevelt is at last on his travels, and life insurance premiums for big game in Africa have gone up by leaps and bounds. As an Irish admirer puts it, the number of extinct animals to be found in Africa will shortly show a remarkable increase.

Dog-owners in India, especially those who affect breeds such as Irish, Airedale and Scottish Terriers —more especially the latter—are always glad to hear of a reliable remedy for such skin troubles as eczema, mange and loss of coat. Last August we recommended a preparation called Pass-Cora to the attention of horse owners; better acquaintance with these magic powders convinces us that they take a very high position as kennal remedies, especially after the manufacturers have devoted months to perfecting certain details with the special object of making the stuff a valuable adjunct in dog treatment. Used as a wash it undoubtedly keeps a dog's skin healthy, improves the coat and stimulates new growth of hair. Also its healing properties render it an excellent dressing and the claim that it strengthens weak legs seems well established. The same firm make Distemper powders and a condition mixture known as "Fortifine," which is growing in popularity. Prominent English breeders and exhibitors, among them Mrs. Ashton Cross, Messrs. H. H. Hickling, E. W. Dunn and H. Leader warmly recommend the Pass-Cora specialities.

A giant pike, which is for English and Scotch streams the record catch, was caught on the 20th March on the Hampshire Stour by the orthodox method of rod and line. This fish next day turned the scale at 37½lb. Its length was 45 inches and girth 24 inches. When first taken out of the water it was weighed with a spring balance and reached the figure of over 40lb. It was displayed, a wonder to all beholders, in the shop of Messrs. Milestone and Stanforth, Swallow place, Oxford Street, with the tiny roach with which it was caught still stuck fast in its gills. The captor of this noble prize said, "I caught her on Sunday morning on Lord Wimborne's estate. The stream was in flood, and I was fishing with snap tackle in a very fast stream. I had an hour before caught and given away a 14lb. pike, which is probably the male fish. I dropped my bait into the run and it was carried by the swirl round the corner into a backwater which shelves gradually up towards the bank from the point of the island. The pike took me fairly quietly, for she was old and sluggish, and not for some time did I realise that I was fast in one of the biggest pike that have ever been caught in the British Isles. She fought me for nearly half an hour, and at last I managed to get her towards the shelving bank. My keeper, wild with excitement, plunged into the water, and we got her out somehow."

The White Star liner Persic recently brought to Liverpool a Tasmanian wolf and some Bennett's wallabies, which are now in the sanatorium at the Zoological Gardens. Two wolves were shipped, but one died on the passage; the survivor has been purchased by the Zoological Society, in whose care the wallabies have been deposited. The Tasmanian wolf, or thylacine, which is its naturalistic definition, is a carnivorous marsupial now confined to Tasmania, where it formerly had a wide range. From the more populous districts it has been driven back into the mountainous regions, owing to its ravages on the flocks of the sheep farmers. In shape it may be compared to a small wolf, with short, close, crisp fur; this is greyish brown with a yellowish tinge on the upper surface, and paler below. The hinder part of the back is marked with about sixteen blackish-brown transverse bands, descending on the hind limbs nearly to the knee. These stripes have given rise to the popular names "tiger wolf" and "zebra wolf," for which there is no foundation beyond the superficial resemblance to the wolf and the striping. It is about 60 years ago that the thylacine was first exhibited at the Zoological Gardens.

We may expect to see aeroplanes as common objects of the sky in the near future, and then what will be their effect on the denizens of our moors and manors. We will imagine a grouse or partridge drive in progress when suddenly an aeroplane appears sailing aloft like a huge hawk. That it would make the birds lie like stones, all those who have seen an ordinary kite at work would scarcely dispute, as in the imagination of the birds it would be taken for an enormous bird of prey possessed of terrible and bloodthirsty characteristics. Anyhow, it is almost certain the drive would be spoilt, and then what remedy would the owner of the shoot have against the navigator of the air? This would be a nice question for the lawyers. We presume that it is really a trespass, as a man's property is supposed to extend as far down as the centre of the earth and as high up in the air as he likes. It seems as if the troubles of the game preservers are likely to be increased, and the duties of a gamekeeper will in future have to include the pursuit and capture of poaching or trespassing aeroplanes.

The Beighton Cup Hockey Competition will begin in Calcutta on Monday, the 19th instant, entries closing to-morrow. The Bengal Hockey Association, who now control the tournament, has sent us a copy of the bye-laws relating to the competition.

The following is culled from an Australian exchange :—

Oh! Paddy dear, an' did ye hear
The news that's in the pubs?
Them golfers is removin'
All the shamrocks wid their clubs.
The puttin' grass, so nately swep,
Is nowhere to be seen,
For the mischief's in that mashie-club,
That's rippin' up the green.

I met with D. G. Soutar,
An' he tuk me by the hand,
An' sez he: "I've sliced the soil myself,
So shure, I onderstand."
It's the most uprippit counthery
That iver yit was seen,
From Hunter Hill to swate Dobroyde,
They're wearin' out the green.

Oh! some in coats o' cruel red,
An' some in tartan knicks,
An' some wid ties o' chaney blue
But all o' thim wid sticks.
An' they batthers at a weenie ball,
That's lyin' on the sod,
An' hits it—no! they hammers it,
An' digs out pounds o' clod.

If the ball wint wid the surface then
Them two'd complate the scene—
But, no? It's shleepin' where it lay,
Like a mushroom, white an' clean.
It's the most uprooted counthery
That iver yit was seen,
From Rose Bay coorse to Kinsington,
They're slicin' off the green.

They come wid drivers, cleeks, an' spoons,
An' clubs o' quarest name,
An' they calls a hape of sand their tay,
But it's whisky that they mane;
An' they calls the sods they're flitterin' out
Big "divots" as they fly,
For they can't spake dacent English,
Like yersilf, Paudeen, an' I.

Sic transit. Poor old Jim Mace, the once invincible, probably the cleverest and most scientific boxer who ever entered the prize ring, has just applied for an old age pension of five shillings a week. His first great fight was when he beat Bill Thorpe in eighteen rounds. After the redoubtable Tom Sayers, the conqueror of Heenan, retired from the championship in 1860, Mace was regarded as his legitimate successor, but his supremacy was soon challenged by the famous Tom King. The two met on a wet, cold, and cheerless morning in January 1862, when after forty-three rounds of really scientific boxing Mace was given the verdict. Mace is over seventy-seven years of age and was till last month earning a bare living with a music hall sketch, but at last the wheels positively refused to go round and, practically friendless and worn out, the grand old fighter has had to bow to the inevitable.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 26th March 1909.

The outstanding events of the week have been the opening of Selfridge's Mammoth American "dry goods" store and, some way after it, the arrival of the Vernal Equinox and the official opening of the English spring.

Selfridge's is a huge pile in Oxford Street, not far from the Marble Arch end of that classic thoroughfare, it is one of the largest of London's many large shops, and Mr. Selfridge is a fine type of the Yankee who aspires to make the effete Britisher sit up and rub his eyes. All London was invited to the inaugural ceremony, and those who went found that it would take best part of a week to thoroughly investigate the Show right through from the collars and cuffs department to that for the "lost children" of such constituents as momentarily relax the parental instinct in the struggle to acquire the astounding bargain. Mr. Selfridge is a smart man; his stock is amazing in extent and variety, his advertisements are artistic and quaint, his enterprise and assurance unbounded, his methods original and daring; and if clamour spells success he is half way there already.

But the B. P. is still conservative and many there be who, like our old friend the adder, have stopped their ears to the voice of the charmer and decided to give Selfridge's a miss in baulk for the present. And really, after the gigantic boom of the past week, it is positively refreshing to find that some of our old established places still keep their doors open: the crush at the spring sales, now on, is as great as ever and the proprietors of the old firms appear to be keeping calm.

But I must pass on to the advent of spring. It occurred last Sunday with sunshine and soft breezes. Gazing up, before breakfast, at a sky of cloudless shimmering blue I rejoiced, and lowering my gladdened eyes and contemplating the back garden I saw the warm rays greeting the crocuses, the aconites and the snowdrops. The first notes of the black bird fell on my ear, and in the lull between passing motors and early milkmen I detected the birds drawing inspiration from the soft airs that gently swayed the sap-laden twigs and branches—and so on. I struck for the open country without loss of time. From the heights of Hampstead Heath would I look down on distant St. Paul's, in Highgate woods would I wander, at "The Spaniards" would I quaff off the nut brown home brewed, and later, at "Jack Straw's Castle," would I dine. All this and more, dear readers, would I have done had the glories of the morning but held out long enough; but a George Washington penchant for veracity compels me to say that an hour's plod over a sloppy part of the heath with mackintosh and umbrella and a tramp back to the tube station through the drizzling rain necessitated the carrying forward of all those simple joys to some blessed day in the sweet bye and by when the sun will shine long enough to enable one to travel ten miles out and home in comfort. But while London was unfortunate, many other places revelled in warmth and light, and quite a number of sunshine records were broken. For example, my Monday morning's paper comforted me with the announcement that "Rhyl had over eleven and a half hours of bright sunshine and Llandudno only half an hour less." "Is'nt it marvellous?" as poor Bertram used to say.

I don't think the Bengal Automobile Association (have I got the title correctly?) have risen to the dignity of an annual dinner yet; as an example of what may be achieved in this respect let me tell members of that pioneering organisation something of the twelfth annual banquet of the Automobile Club, held at the Covent Garden Theatre last Friday. I have seen it stated that it was probably the largest and most important Club dinner ever held in London. There was no public eating place in the metropolis with accommodation sufficient for this huge gathering, so the unprecedented expedient had to be adopted of taking over the Royal Italian Opera House in Covent Garden, clearing the stage and removing the fauteuils from the parterre, and turning the whole area into a banqueting hall. Even then sufficient space was not obtained. The lower tier of boxes and most of the boxes on the grand tier had to be taken over and equipped for the reception of separate parties, among whom were many ladies. In the tiers above hundreds of spectators were accommodated.

Close upon six hundred members and friends sat down to a capitally served banquet notwithstanding the fact that all the cooking and service arrangements had to be improvised for the occasion.

The Prince of Wales honoured the gathering by his presence. Prince Francis of Teck presided. The Austrian Ambassador, the Spanish, Portuguese, Danish and Norwegian Diplomatic representatives, the Duke of Sutherland, Earl Carrington, Lord Balfour of Burleigh, Lord Montagu of Beaulieu, and Lord Farquhar were among the occupants of the principal table.

There was only one toast, that of the King. When that had been honoured the company retired to the foyers and crush rooms, while the dining tables in the parterre were cleared away and replaced by rows of fauteuils. For after dinner arrived more than a thousand additional guests, for whose delight an entertainment had been provided of great and varied attractiveness. Among the performers were Miss Vesta Tilley, Miss Maud Allan, Mr. Arthur Prince, the Palace Girls, Miss Margaret Cooper (who in order to be present took a special train from the country), Little Tich, and other London favourites.

Sir Robert Hart, fairly well known in your parts, was dined by the Authors' Club last Monday, and never in the course of its hospitable practice of entertaining distinguished guests, has the Club had a more interesting guest. The menu included that Chinese delicacy "birds'-nest soup," and on the card, designed by Mr. Charles Ince, the menu was translated into Chinese by Mr. Ivan Chen, first secretary to the Chinese Embassy. On the top table was a model in sugar of the summerhouse in Sir Robert Hart's garden in Pekin. Lord Monkswell presided, and Mr. Percy White occupied the vice-chair. Sir Robert, who probably knows more of China than any living Englishman, made a lengthy speech on that curious country, its extraordinary peoples, and their customs and habits; needless to add his oration was followed with wrapt attention and rewarded with delighted applause.

The dâk bungalow fowl never fails to suggest some Joe Millerism to you good people across seas, and I myself have encountered some that afforded food for reflection if not for the body, but recently at a West End restaurant I came face to face with a reputed chicken which, on the spur of the moment, I was prepared to back as a breaker of every longevity record. But the bet is off, I see America—as usual—goes one better in the matter of a certain duck discovered in a stratum of sandstone at Wyoming, whence, of recent years, the wierdest antediluvians have been purveyed. This elderly waterfowl is estimated to be three million years old, no less. The inhabitants of Wyoming will find it practically useless to roast it; they might try to make a salmi of it, and failing in that I could recommend a certain bawarchi, Peeroo by name, who might be guaranteed to serve him up in a savoury "eshtew," or other fragmentary dish, in a way calculated to deceive the biggest gourmet in Bengal.

It has been whispered for some time that Sir W. S. Gilbert, after a long period of rest, was writing a new opera, and a fairy one at that. The rumour has been confirmed, and the announcement will be of particular interest to the music-loving public. The music is being composed by Mr. Edward German (whose real name is German Edward Jones), and who is best known for his Henry VIII. dances, which were written in 1892. He it was who, when Sir Arthur Sullivan died, was chosen to complete the music to "The Emerald Isle," and he has since composed two other operas for the Savoy—"Merry England," in 1902, and "A Princess of Kensington," in 1903. He also wrote the music to "The Conqueror" in 1905 and the comic opera "Tom Jones" in 1907.

The prolific Mr. Somerset Maugham has so pretty a wit of his own, and so great a talent for inventing ingenious plots and situations, that he might well have evolved something from his own fertile brain more subtle and fresh than "The Noble Spaniard," which is his adaptation from the French of Grenet Dancourt. This is not to say that the "Victorian farce" with which Mr. Charles Hawtrey began his management of the New Royalty Theatre on Saturday night is not amusing. It is amusing—intensely so. It kept the audience laughing, and it earned a deservedly hearty reception. Only it did not strike us as being so ingenious and so rich in verbal gems as the plays Mr. Maugham has given us, "off his own bat."

The piece is of farce made up of the inevitable misunderstandings. The fun is there because nearly all the characters are at cross purposes. The Noble Spaniard is a nobleman with a great many titles, a great deal of cheek, and a volcanic temperament. He falls in love at sight with a fair young widow, and after haunting her like a shadow for some days he forces himself into her presence and declares his passion. In the hope of inducing him to leave the house quietly the fair widow leads him to believe that she already has a husband; but, bless you, that is no odds to the ardent Spaniard. If the husband refuses to relinquish all claim to her, then the husband must die, declares the Spaniard; and in turn he proceeds to mistake an elderly judge, a dandy military captain, and a fiery Frenchman for the lady's spouse, and endeavours to force a duel upon them. As all of these imagine that the Spaniard is enamoured with the lady of their own affections the muddle is complete, and the fun grows fast and furious.

Mr. Charles Hawtrey as the Spaniard looked strangely unfamiliar in whiskers and a hat of the circumference of a cart wheel. He was not this time to play the plausible liar. He is a fire-eater with a volcano in his bosom. But his mock seriousness is exceedingly funny, and his unabashed cheek and his naive egotism are as delicious as anything Mr. Hawtrey has done. Splendid, too, is Miss Fanny Brough as the judge's wife, a skittish old thing upon whose nature the atmosphere of a French watering-place has a remarkable effect, and who assumes all manner of airs and graces under the impression that it is she who is the object of the Spaniard's passion. As the judge Mr. E. Lyall Swete introduces an admirable sketch of comic character, and Miss Kate Cutler is a delightfully dainty and vivacious young widow. Other parts were safe in the hands of Miss Joy Chatwyn, Miss Anne Cleaver, Miss Vane Featherton, Mr. Athol Stewart, and Mr. Leon M. Lion.

When I saw the announcement of the marriage of Miss Maudi Darrell writ large on the Contents bills last night the man I was walking with remarked "another Guardsman, I suppose," for among our leading musical comedy stars matrimonially disposed there has been a long and steady run on the Guards, as every one must have noticed. Sure enough, the paper conveyed the intelligence that the lucky man, Mr. Ian Bullough, was up to a short time ago in the Scots Guards. He is a brother of Sir George Bullough, who lent his yacht as a hospital ship for service during the South African War, and who was knighted in 1901. All your readers know Maudi Darrell and her Gaiety and other successes, the latest being in "The Gay Gordons" and "The Belle of Brittany" which has just ended a brilliant run at the Queen's.

When I sojourned in the East I noted the fact that the Celestial was a nocturnal bather (when he bathed at all) and that he frequently carried his bathing far into the night. Questioned on the point one of them maintained that it was beneficial if not exactly health-restoring. Can our medicine men have taken a leaf out of John Chinaman's book in the new all night bathing treatment now being advocated as a popular cure by certain fashionable physicians, and are tired Londoners likely ere long to replace sleep by all night bathing? Perhaps not, but the idea has caught on and may develop into a craze during the summer. It is certain that in recent years the Turkish and Russian baths have grown extremely popular.

A new bath-house which makes a speciality of all night bathing has just been opened in Jermyn Street, Piccadilly. At any hour of the night a gentleman can go through the bath treatment, instead of going home to bed. The treatment consists of a combination of Russian and Turkish baths, concluding with a body shampoo, douche, and massage, lasting from three to five hours, or longer, if desired. It is claimed that this all night bathing is so refreshing to the body and mind that the need of sleep disappears. If a visitor wishes to sleep, however, there are cubicles provided, but usually he prefers to smoke or read.

The 'Varsity boat race will be over by the time these lines see print. Cambridge are favourites and are certainly doing excellent work, while Oxford up till to-day were thought to have hardly knocked together, and every member of the crew, especially stroke, has been well roasted in the press. But I shall not be the least surprised if the dark blues win, for I was a witness to their very remarkable first trial over the full course last Tuesday afternoon, and on that form they would certainly carry my money were I inclined to bet on the result. It was a grand—indeed it was a marvellous—performance. They covered the course in 18mins. 21secs., which is better than anything previously accomplished. The tide, of course, helped them a lot, but the achievement was a wonderful one nevertheless. The record time for the race is 18mins. 47secs., made by Oxford in 1893, and equalled by Cambridge in 1900. So, accidents barred, on the 3rd proximo I shall expect to see Oxford win.

in this year, and as only about 1,700 can be accepted many aspirants are doomed to disappointment. A very considerable number of artists persevere year after year, and the majority haven't a thousand to one chance: it is on record, I believe, that one man has unsuccessfully submitted over 200 paintings during the last thirty-five years and still remains "unhung!" The limit is now three; in the days when artists might send in an indefinite number of pictures the work of the hanging committee must have been a severe test of endurance.

General Robert Napier Raikes, the father of the British Army, died at Eastbourne to-day in his ninety-sixth year.

The good old General remembered the time when the troops were armed with the old flint-lock musket, such as the soldiers fought with at Waterloo, and when they were taught to act on Wellington's maxim, "Don't fire till you see the whites of their eyes.'

From Addiscombe, where he went as a cadet, he was expelled in 1828 for refusing to give the names of five cadets who were out one night without leave. His commission was dated nearly eighty years ago—19th November 1829—and he went out as an ensign in the Bengal Army.

His first active service was in clearing rebels and dacoits out of Bundelkand. Then he went through the Burma and Gwalior campaigns, and experienced all the horrors of the Mutiny. His wife was with him, and could never afterwards bear to talk of the terrible scenes. Her baby she hid in the manger of a stable. Shooting and riding were his chief hobbies in India. A hundred tigers had fallen to his gun, and he thought nothing in those days of riding 100 miles, dancing all night, and then riding back to his quarters. Ah! those tough old Qui Hais, the generation is practically extinct, worse luck.

Review.

A GERMAN OFFICER ON BRITISH RULE IN INDIA.*

The testimony of President Roosevelt to the benefits of British rule in India was the more gratifying because many of his countrymen—notably Mr. Bryan and Mr. Carnegie—are prone to look on the Hindu as the victim of despotism. This opinion is common also in the military States of Europe who cannot understand how a handful of Britons can maintain without the tyranny of force, authority over 300,000,000 natives. Personal experience alone can correct this impression. Even inveterate prejudice and calculated misunderstanding can rarely withstand a visit to India.

A German staff officer might be pardoned certain prepossessions that would make him an unfriendly critic of our administration. Count Konigsmarck, apparently, has none of them, for he has written a book—"Die Englander in Indien"—that is a tribute to the self-sacrifice and courage of British officials and an acknowledgment of the success of our rule in India.

The count has a graceful style, and sees with the eye of a poet as well as of a man of the world. His descriptions of the Court and the camp, of sport and society, are not wanting in the charm of animation and variety; but what interests most are the glimpses he takes into those grave problems that are engaging the thoughts of statesmen.

In Bombay he is told that there is a conspiracy against the white man: that the native wants to be at the head of everything. And who is this oppressed native? He is the man who lives in the finest house in the healthiest part of the city; who rides the best horses and drives in the most elegant carriage; who has the dearest and fastest motor-car; who sits on the bench of magistrates; who owns the busiest factory; who is absorbing the most lucrative appointments and the most profitable business in town and country.

Count Konigsmarck is impressed by the contrast between the successful native and the British official, who bears the burden of rule—the responsibility for order and even the laborious control of sanitary measures.

"While Hindu and Moslem pursue their personal ambitions and pleasures, the Briton toils and moils for the welfare of the community, sacrificing the best years of his life and too often his health. If he cannot endure the strain he embarks for home—to die."

Many things have happened to modify the attitude of the native toward the foreigner. The day is past when the Hindu stepped from the footpath or stopped his carriage so that the sahib might proceed. "The nimbus that surrounded the white man"—to use Count Konigsmarck's metaphor—has lost much of its radiance. Knowledge has come to the native dweller in cities that all white men are not sahibs to whom reverence and instant obedience must be paid. "The foreigner no longer occupies an exclusive and separate position. Men of British birth serve in stores; they are tailors' cutters and commercial travellers; they are waiters in hotels—and even chauffeurs in receipt of wages from natives."

Count Konigsmarck notes these changes. He sees how culture is no more the exclusive privilege of the West, and how even our social customs and our manners have affected the native. Hindu, Moslem, and Parsee are educated at English universities, travel in the United States, take their "cure" at Homburg, wear European dress—yet "remain in their hearts Hindu of Hindus, whose secret watchword is Home Rule. Western culture is but a superficial polish. In thought and instinct the Oriental remains what he has been for a thousand years—whether he be Hindu or Moslem, Chinese or Japanese."

Being a soldier, the count could not avoid some comment on the military position in India. Lord Kitchener's new concentration meets with emphatic approval. He has "welded the armies of India into a solid mass and has forged a weapon hard and sharp enough to beat back any attack."

But among these pæans that fall so pleasantly on our ears is one to which this German soldier returns again and again with delight.

"What would India be without England, and what would the British Empire be without English women? To these women are due the gratitude not only of their country but of the civilised world. Fearlessly the woman of British birth looks into the eye of danger. Faithfully and with willing sacrifice she upholds the standard of the King-Emperor—the standard of culture and of service to humanity."

THE BISON OF THE SATPURAS.

The bison is, I think, the hardest earned of all trophies, for though, of course, the tiger may be the king of the jungle, he is plentiful, and not very hard to bag—especially over a kill. Bison on the other hand are scarce and extremely difficult to get, at least they proved so, in our district of the Central Provinces, and though we heard them occasionally on the hills, I only once got a sight of one.

On many occasions I organized beats in the hopes of bagging bison, but never succeeded in catching them in the beat, except on one occasion, and then the beaters muddled it, as is generally the case, and the herd of about five head broke back. I did however at last succeed in bagging a fine bull, shortly before I left the Central Provinces but it was a great stroke of luck and I had no more idea of meeting bison that morning than I had of finding a native who could tell the truth.

It happened this. I was out for a few days' holiday in December 1904, my camp being pitched close to the village of H. I had chosen this spot, as there is a considerable amount of malguzari jungle surrounding it, and as I was only out for a short period I had not applied for a permit to shoot in the Government Reserves. One night I heard some sambhar calling on one of the hills, and so decided to try my luck at stalking, in the hopes of securing a good head. Accordingly, about 5 A.M. the next morning, I got up and taking my ·500 Express, and my shikari, Abdul, we started off. It was bitterly cold, and it had been freezing during the night, and must still have been freezing when we started; there was a small waning moon, being the last quarter. My plan was to get up to the top of the hill before dawn, as the sambhar generally make for the summit at dawn, and rest there during the daytime, descending again in the night to feed on the crops in the fields. It sounds easy enough on paper, but in reality it was a very stiff job, what with the cold and the bad light, to say nothing of the long grass which was wringing wet with the dew, reaching up to our chests; and to make matters worse it was spear grass. I was not so badly off, having on thick khaki cord breeches, and a stout drill coat, but the unfortunate Abdul, though he had on a drill coat, had only thin cotton pyjamas over his nether limbs, and must have suffered considerably. About half way up the hill I nearly walked on top of a sambhar doe, which got up with a bell, and rushed off up hill, where it stood belling for a short time, and then cleared away. This did not look very promising for us, however we kept on and finally reached the summit. This we found as is often the case, was almost bare, with very short grass, and only a few trees. As it was not yet dawn we had to wait for about quarter of an hour, so sitting down under a tree we tried to make the best of things; though even the luxury of a smoke was denied us. After about 5 minutes' wait we heard something coming up the hillside, on the opposite side to which we had come, and though it was some distance off, we concluded it was a sambhar, so sat still and waited. Presently the day began to dawn and as the animal was now nearer the summit, and there was nearly enough light to shoot by, we made our way cautiously along the top to a point which we thought was nearest to where the animal was grazing. Arriving there we concealed ourselves behind a bush, and were delighted to hear footsteps coming in our direction. Our hopes were soon dashed to the ground however, as instead of coming to the grassy plateau on top, as we had hoped he would, the animal turned off at right angles and began moving away from us along the side of the hill. By this time it was fairly light, and we followed along the top, as well as we could, guided by the noise he was making. All of a sudden the sound ceased, and we waited breathlessly, fearing that he had scented us, and would make off in another direction. For fully 5 minutes we waited, and then we heard footsteps again, and this time coming towards the top. There happened to be a small nullah with bare stones running down the side of the hill, close to where we were stationed, and the animal was heading for this. Accordingly we crept along for a little distance and took up our position behind a stunted teak tree, which commanded a fine view of the nullah. The animal approached steadily and we heard him step into the nullah, and the sound of his hoofs on the stones, and then to our delight we heard him coming towards us up the nullah. About 50 yards down there was a bend beyond which we could not see. I got ready, though my hands were so cold I could hardly raise the hammers. Slowly, slowly, the footsteps approached, and then round the bend there appeared, not as we had expected a sambhar, but a large bull bison. For a second I was too surprised to do anything, and then I raised my rifle to fire. That one second's pause spoilt everything, for he had spied us, and wheeled about to run. I managed to get in a hurried shot, and hit him, for he staggered perceptibly. There was no time for a second shot and we heard him crashing down the hillside at a terrible pace, into a large valley, which was at the base of the hill dividing it from another even higher hill than the one we were on. When he reached the valley, we did not hear him any more.

Abdul and I then held a consultation as to the best plan to adopt, whether to follow up the bison at once, or return and have breakfast and bring more men to help us, and if necessary to organize a beat, for I scarcely thought that he was mortally wounded. We decided on the former, so descending into the nullah we examined the spot where he had stood when I fired at him. There were one or two spots of blood on the stones, and we thought he was only hit slightly, but on proceeding a little further we were pleased to see that he had been bleeding profusely, and that the blood was bright red in colour, so that we knew he was badly hit. However, it is no joke following a wounded bison in long grass, and we proceeded very cautiously when we reached the valley. Here he had evidently stood for a short time, for under a teak tree there was a small pool of blood, and the tree itself was smeared in one place where he had evidently brushed against it. The spoor led us for some distance along the bottom of the valley, there the grass was about waist deep, and then up the side of the opposite hill. The blood drops were less frequent now, though the spoor was easy enough to follow, as the grass was all bent and trodden down where he had passed. A little way up the side of the hill, he had sat down for a short while for the grass was all beaten down, and plentifully smeared with blood, but he had evidently not remained long, as we had followed pretty hard on his tracks, but I thought we were getting close to him and kept an extra sharp look out in consequence remembering that he was above us, and in all probability, unless hors de combat, would charge us on sight. We proceeded very cautiously for a short distance further, and then what I feared happened. Without the slightest warning the bison jumped up from the long grass ahead of us, and charged down on us like a flash. I fired both barrels simultaneously into his chest at about 20 yards distance, the recoil very nearly knocking me head over heels : as it was I fell but managed to fling myself sideways into the long grass, and felt the bison go crashing past within a couple of yards of me. How Abdul escaped I do not know, I was fully occupied with reloading as soon as I knew the bison had passed me, for I expected him to return to the attack. It was, however, his final effort, the two bullets in his chest taking effect, he rushed down the hill for about 50 yards and then fell with a terrific thud, and with a few kicks died. I afterwards learned that Abdul had escaped in much the same way as myself, as soon as he saw the bison charging, he jumped aside, and to use his own expression, "dobbed down in the grass till the danger was over." Though had my shots not taken effect, I am afraid things might have ended rather seriously for us. We went down to where the bison was lying, and found him quite dead. My first shot had hit him in the side and penetrated his lungs, the last two fired simultaneously, hit him in the left breast and entered his heart.

It was now about 10 o'clock and we were stranded in the middle of a thick jungle, with a large bull bison to get back to camp, to say nothing of our having had no food or smoke, with the prospects of a stiff climb up the hill again before, we could reach the tents. However I was so pleased over the bison that I forgot all discomforts and having cut down some boughs and covered him up as best we could we set off on our homeward tramp ; we arrived at length, and had our much needed breakfast. Needless to say there was great rejoicing in camp and also in the adjacent village among the beef eating community, though those whose caste forbade them to eat, did not show so much excitement.

After breakfast, and a short rest, we returned with a regular army, and, of course, had to skin the bison in the jungle.

The head I sent on to camp as soon as possible, in the charge of one of my own men. We skinned the rest of it, and returned to camp by about 4 P.M., thoroughly tired out but happy. I, because I had bagged my bison, Abdul, because the huzoor had had good luck, and the villagers, because they had as much meat each as they could carry to eat.

RIFLE NOTES.

HIGH velocity is the leading feature of sporting rifles of to day and it is constantly being increased accompanied by greater power and flatter trajectory. The express rifle of the old black powder days was the first attempt in this direction in modern sporting weapons, though it was preceded nearly a century and a half ago by the Kentuckey Rifle which, within its limits, was an excellent arm in its time, its heavy driving charge giving its light spherical bullet a very flat trajectory. Some forty years ago Forsyth applied the principal with fair success to large bore sporting rifles and with the advent of the "express" the acme of perfection seemed to have been attained with black powder.

The small bore military rifle with its light bullet and very high velocity, though not an ideal sporting weapon in all respects, was an enormous improvement in flatness of trajectory especially on the old express, but now the larger calibres of nitro rifles have nearly all the advantages of the small bore military weapon combined with an enormous increase of power and range compared to the old express.

To get the fullest possible ballistic results from a rifle it is necessary to give its projectile the highest possible velocity with the larger calibres such as the ·303 Lee Enfield the ·311 Mauser, &c. With bullets of the ordinary weight very high velocities entail a great increase of recoil and strain, on the breech action together with considerable recoil and a lighter bullet is therefore necessary. Luckily the sharp pointed light "Spitzer" bullet can be given a very great increase of speed without undue strain, and it is being adopted by most modern armies. The German, French and American rifles having been altered to take bullets of about 150 grains weight with velocities of 2,700 to 2,900 feet, which lower the trajectory to about half that of the ·303 and increases the "danger space" correspondingly.

The smaller bores such as the ·256 and ·276 have an advantage as they need not use pointed bullets of lighter weight. The ·280 Ross rifle adopted in Canada and manufactured as a sporting arm by Charles Lancaster shoots a 180 grain bullet with 2,700 feet muzzle velocity (3,050 feet with a 140 grain bullet) without undue pressure its breech action being amply strong enough. If the light sharp pointed 150 grain bullet is adopted in the ·303, the muzzle velocity would probably have to be restricted to about 2,400 feet per second, on account of the weak breech action, but perhaps an improved explosive such as Axite might to some extent remedy this defect. The Mauser action is admirably adapted to meet any possible strain from high velocity charges and most of our gunmakers use it for very high velocity Magazine rifles of various calibres. The first of these was the Westley Richards ·375-·303 shooting the ordinary weight ·303 bullet with 2,500 feet speed. It was followed by the ·318 designed specially for India on account of the prohibition of the ·303. This rifle shoots a ·250 grain bullet with 2,500 feet velocity, and both rifles have far greater power and are far more effective than the ordinary ·303. Holland has also a 2,500 foot Mauser action rifle, shooting a 250 grain bullet and Jeffery has lately introduced a very powerful Mauser action rifle, the ·333, shooting a 250 grain sharp pointed metal capped bullet with the extremely high velocity of 2,600 feet seconds. A heavier bullet of ordinary soft nose pattern 300 grains weight can also be used in this rifle.

The highest speed yet attained by sporting rifles is about 3,050 feet per second, and this has been got by the Ross rifles of ·280 bore introduced by Lancaster. This wonderful rifle gets this high speed with a 140 grain bullet, which gives it tremendous power for its small calibre and renders the judging of distance quite unnecessary within sporting distances which I take to mean nowadays the distance at which a good game shot can be fairly certain of hitting an animal in the desired spot. In the case of the new rifles the trajectory has beaten the eyesight and the latter must call in the aid of telescope sights to take full advantage of the power of the modern rifle. Game is being shot off the face of the earth now and will doubtlessly in course of time get more shy as it gets scarcer and will necessitate accurate long range shooting, though I think most of the enjoyment of sport consists in the attempt to outwit the game by fair stalking and it will be a pity when these days are over. Some forty years ago the black buck used to look upon 150 yards as a fairly safe distance. Now I believe he has trebled it.

Coming back from high power and flat trajectory I must mention a new weapon which has just the opposite characteristics, but which is an exceedingly nice and useful little weapon, the new ·22 rifle made by the B.S.A. Company. It is very like the W.O. Miniature rifle, but has a simpler bolt action and sighting (up to 200 yards) and its price is extremely moderate, only 30s. which compares favourably with the cheap American rifles. Its accuracy seems to be very good, the diagram shown in the B.S.A. Company pamphlet showing a 2¼ inch group at 100 yards with the ·22 "long Rifle" cartridge.

The revolver firm, Webly and Scott, are bringing out a single shot target pistol shortly for this ammunition. I should strongly advise anyone wishing to improve his markmanship or to keep his eye in to go in for these two little weapons.

The New Rifle retains all the features of their well-known ·450 and has the same balance, handiness, and lightness of recoil, with the advantage of increased velocity resulting from the use of their New Patent Velopex Cartridge.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper,

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

BLAIR'S GOUT PILLS,

GOUT, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, LUMBAGO, NEURALGIA.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,

THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.

Newton Abbot, Devon

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

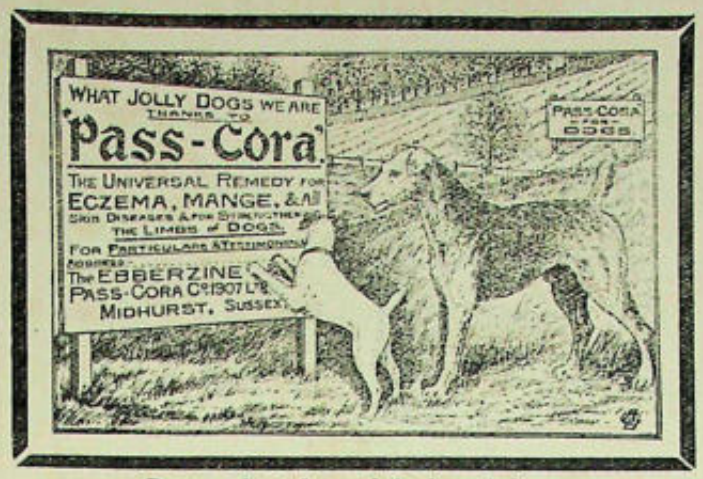
TESTIMONIALS.

Weston Rhyn, Chirk, N. Wales.



I enclose P.O. for two more Pass-Cora Powders; they have done wonders for my puppy's eczema, and also for a weak leg. I think them wonderful and told a great many people of them at the Birkenhead Show.

MRS. WILLOUGHBY L. COTTON,

187, Queens Gate, London, S.W.

Can I use Pass-Cora round my dog's eyes? Will it hurt them? I have never forgotten that it was the only thing after months and months of other treatment that did him any good, and indeed for two years it cured him when he had raw patches all over his body. The last two months he has been inclined to have it again, but immediately we see a pink patch coming and any irritation, we dab it well for two or three days with Pass-Cora and it goes way.

MRS. CAPRON.

TESTIMONIALS.

Bishop's Court, Exeter.

Miss Garratt will be much obliged if the Pass-Cora Co. will send her another 1s. packet of Pass-Cora; it has been most successful in curing eczema in Scotch Terrier.

MISS GARRATT.

Irelands Mansion, Shrewsbury.

Please send me two more Pass-Cora Powders, the effect it has had on my tiny deformed four months old Pom Puppy is wonderful. I told several ladies about your Pass-Cora Powders at Cruft's Dog Show.

MRS. ANNIE BOWDLER.

Collinstown, Leixlip, Co. Kildare, Ireland.

Please send me another Pass-Cora Powder, the last seems to have had a good effect on a Spaniel which is very bad with eczema.

Honorary Secretary:—CAPT. J. B. CAUTLEY, R.A.M.C.

First Day, Tuesday, 6th April 1909.

CAPTAIN CAUTLEY must have been disappointed at the small number of acceptances for the first day, as although entries were good, owners did not appear to approve of the hard state of the ground. A little rain would have remedied this defect and made the meeting wholly successful. The arrangements were all that could be desired, and the Honorary Secretary must have been to any amount of trouble to get the course and enclosures in such nice order. The racing to-day was not very exciting, as all the favourites won without being called upon to make any effort. The lotteries were well supported and the ring was represented by two Calcutta firms in James Pymm and Russell and Co. The following are the particulars:—

THE MAIDEN CUP.—Rs. 300 (cup value Rs. 150 and Rs. 150 in cash) to the winner, Rs. 75 to the second, and Rs. 25 to the third. For maiden ponies 14-2 and under. Arab ponies 14-2 to carry 9st. 7lb, C. B. ponies 14-2 to carry 10st., English and Australasian ponies 14-2 to carry 11st. 7lb. ½ mile.

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 26th March 1909.

KEMPTON.

ON the eve of flat racing the change in the weather last week end was very welcome, and while the least venturesome discarded the heavy wraps which have of late come into temporary vogue, the more audacious proclaimed the glad advent of spring by leaving the great coat behind. The course afforded excellent galloping, and fields ruled well, while the attendance was a very good one. Some capital sport was shown, but two objections during the afternoon marred the harmony, and in both instances the judge's verdict was upset.

ASHFORD SELLING HANDICAP HURDLE RACE.—Of 100sovs. 2 miles.

Mr. F. C. Parker's Marcellin, by Marco—Bestbelle, 4yrs., 10st. 7lb. ... Walkington 1

LINCOLN.

Judging by the joviality that characterised the incoming crowd, everybody was glad to be here after the dull and tedious winter. We never expected a very big attendance here on the Monday, as but for nursing the first ante-post betting race of the season, Lincoln has little claims to a first position in the list of fixtures, and the majority of sportsmen wait to take the Handicap day in their stride. However, glorious weather, grand going, and a capital card attracted the locals, whose ranks were swelled by the gallant Lincolnshire Regiment, the red uniforms making picturesque splashes of colour in the crowd on the far side, while the members' stand was well filled. Results:—

There was a huge gallery to see the Cup run for on Tuesday. After breakfast the thoroughfares were almost impassable and the stonebow, as big a block on these occasions as was Temple Bar in its day, was a siege perilous between the high road and the low road of which, as with the old Scotch ballad, visitors took their choice, and for comfort it is any odds on the "upper circle" on these occasions. Monday had prepared us for a great attendance, but expectations fell short of the actual muster, which proved one of the best on record, the holiday-makers fairly swarming up the course, while the rings and enclosures were packed—a striking testimonial to the popularity of the first handicap of the season. Sport was good and the result of the Cup was a big upset. Results:—

BROCKLESBY TRIAL STAKES (Handicap).—Of 100sovs added 5 furlongs.

LIVERPOOL.

There was a boisterous wind on the opening, but a bright sky made the afternoon pleasant. A very big gathering watched the racing, the holiday people gave such a grand show on the far side as to suggest a record for Grand National Day, and certainly backers have plenty of material, good, bad, and indifferent, to deal with in that event. The going was in excellent trim, and enthusiasm was let slip when the Royal colours, after succumbing to their old opponents of the house of Rothschild, were borne to the front in the Molyneux Stakes. Fields ruled well and sport was up to the high standard of Aintree. Results:—

The morning opened in brilliant sunshine at Aintree, a great contrast to yesterday, when all was damp and cheerless. The promise of a good day was realised, and when racing opened the sun shone strongly from a cloudless sky. The paddock, with its spring flowers, presented a charming appearance, while the scene on the course was magnificent, and just such a one as will live in memory.

There was a tremendous crowd, and one frequently heard the language of France, for Frenchmen were present in large numbers, full of hope that Lutteur II. would accomplish the ambition of his owner, and win for France the blue riband of the 'chase. So confident were the connections of Lutteur III. that it was expected that the five-year-old would start favourite, but in the betting prior to the start of racing, both Mattie MacGregor and Lutteur III were ousted from the head of quotations, and Tom West, who had figured at 20's overnight, was the medium of so much speculation that he was installed favourite. Mr. H. Hardy, the owner, and Bletsoe, the trainer, were very sweet on his chance, and fully expected him to improve on his second to Eremon two years ago. The general public have a prejudice against Grand National favourites, and this is readily understood, as the number of favourites who have won the race is indeed strikingly small.

While the race for the Hylton Handicap was taking place a start had already been made with the saddling of the candidates for the Grand National, and thus early the crowd surrounding the parade-ring was a big one. There was a natural desire to see Lutteur III., and, though on the small side, the representative of France made many friends. Rubio, last year's winner, seemed to have recovered from the mishap which at one time threatened to keep him out of the field. Ascetic's Silver, who won the race in 1906, also looked remarkably well, in spite of his twelve years. Mattie Macgregor was one of the best-trained of the lot, and her stable companion, Davy Jones, also came in for admiration, as did Tom West.

THE CRUSADE AGAINST DYSENTERY.

Among the pernicious diseases incident to life in India dysentery takes an important place. The reasons for this are many and varied. It is, however, unnecessary to enumerate them here. The great fact which every resident in the country, and therefore every possible sufferer, has to keep prominently in mind is how to avoid this dread complaint in the first place, and, in the next, how to take steps to cure it should he be unfortunate enough to contract it.

Speaking broadly, no tropical disease is more pestilential than dysentery, for it undermines the health, depresses the nervous system, reduces the tone and vigour of the whole body, diminishes the mental energy, and, generally, interferes with the individual's physical power of resistance against disease. The result is that, unlike what happens in most other diseases, one attack does not act as a preventive, but rather predisposes to another, thus rendering the weakened system liable to still further inroads, until the condition of the sufferer is deplorable indeed, for he may be attacked by many after-effects, like abscess of the liver, dropsy, scurvy, and nervous affections of various sorts.

Bad as all this is, the patient's case is rendered still worse by consideration of the fact that the general nutrition of the body is lowered by life in hot climates, that the digestive system is therefore depressed as well as the vitality, so that he not only starts heavily handicapped in favour of the disease, but also heavily handicapped against the conditions which make for recovery.

In these respects dysentery may be said to resemble typhoid fever on the one hand, and malaria on the other, and the danger of both is too well known to need more than passing notice. As typhoid is due to ulceration of the small intestine, so dysentery is due to a similar condition of the large or lower bowel, while malaria and dysentery are believed to often have a close relation, the former predisposing to attacks of the latter.

The treatment of dysentery, like that of typhoid, and, in great measure, that of malaria, is admittedly one of diet. Milk, the blandest of foods, was, until a comparatively short time ago, the sheet anchor of the physician. In the very acute stages of the disease many doctors are, however, opposed to its use, and many patients are not able to digest it, so that they grow steadily worse.

Happily, science has discovered a food-tonic which, as one physician has written, "possesses virtues of a very high order," and is practically a specific in the modern treatment of dysentery. This is Sanatogen. Its composition is well known, for it has been widely stated to consist of 95 per cent. of pure casein of milk, the substance to which that food owes its nutritive value, in chemical combination—not merely mixed—with 5 per cent. of Glycero-Phosphate of Sodium, the chief vital constituent of the nervous system. These two substances, in the combination in which they exist in Sanatogen, are so digestible that the preparation puts no strain on the most enfeebled digestive organs. All of it is absorbed or assimilated by the body, so that there is no residue to irritate the ulcers which are formed in the course of the disease and prohibit the giving of solid food.

Sanatogen is, therefore, universally prescribed even in the acutest stages of the severest cases, for it prevents deterioration in nutrition, and maintains the patient's power of resistance at a high level, thereby giving him a better chance of recovering quickly and without complications. More than that, cases which get worse under ordinary conditions rapidly improve when Sanatogen is added to the diet. One of the supremest values of Sanatogen is that it is not limited to restoring the health during or after dysentery. It is actually a preventive of the disease by strengthening the system so that it can withstand exposure to the infection.

Sanatogen can be obtained from all chemists. To meet the special needs of the Indian population, a booklet, "How to keep well in India," has been written by a physician, who has practised for many years in the country, and it will be sent free to all who write for it mentioning The Indian Field to Messrs Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, who are also able to supply Sanatogen.

DOG MEDICINES
MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA
In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"
(ILLUSTRATED),
which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.
These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.
Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."
An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."
The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."
A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.
It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.
It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

THE INDIAN DUCKS AND THEIR ALLIES.
By E. C. Stuart Baker, F.Z.S., M.B.O.U.

Since Messrs. Hume and Marshall published their work on the "Game Birds of India" (1879-80), now, and long since, out of print, and which, when a copy is offered for sale, realises a considerable advance on the published price, no work has appeared on the Indian Ducks with coloured plates.

The Bombay Natural History Society have reprinted Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker's articles on this attractive group of birds, which have appeared from time to time during the past ten years in their "Journal."

The book forms a handsome volume of over 300 pages of text, the same having been revised throughout by the Author.

The thirty Coloured Plates are reproduced by chromolithography, under the supervision of the well-known bird artist Mr. Henrik Gronvold.

The binding of the book is in half-morocco, gilt top, with the plates guarded forming a very desirable addition to the library of the naturalist or sportsman.

THIS EDITION WAS LIMITED TO 1,100 COPIES, 800 of which were subscribed for leaving only 300 for sale to the public. The remaining few copies are being rapidly bought up.

BETTING AT THE START: 100 to 9 agst. Lutteur III., 100 to 9 Shady Girl, 100 to 8 Domino, 100 to 6 each Tom West, Mattie MacGregor, Leinster, and Davy Jones, 20 to 1 each Caubeen, Rubio, and Ascetic's Silver, 25 to 1 each The Lurcher, Paddy, Maher Lord Rivers, and Judas, 33 to 1 each Hercules and Robin Hood IV., 50 to 1 each Wickham, Rustic Queen, and Lord Chatham, Logan Rock, Count Rufus and Red Hall, 100 to 1 any others.

PLACE BETTING (1, 2, 3): 3 to 1 each agst. Lutteur III. and Shady Girl, others at one-fourth the above odds.

After a break away, the field was despatched to an excellent start, and Rubio went away in front of the Lurcher, Buckaway II., Tom West, Lutteur III. These were followed by Ascetic's Silver, Domino, Mattie MacGregor, Caubeen, Shady Girl, and Carsey. At the first fence Rustic Queen fell, and soon afterwards The Lurcher went on, followed by Judas, Carsey, Tom West, Mattie MacGregor, Caubeen, and Ascetic's Silver, with Hercules II. next, followed by Leinster, Rubio, and Davy Jones. Over Valentine's Brook Judas headed The Lurcher, who fell at the last fence approaching the straight, with Shady Girl next, followed by Lord Chatham, Davy Jones, and Ascetic's Silver. Judas maintained the lead till reaching Beecher's Brook the second time, when Shady Girl went on; but on the racecourse Judas went to the front again from Caubeen, Shady Girl, and Lutteur III. Two fences from home Lutteur III. drew up to the leaders and at the last fence, where Paddy Maher fell, he assumed the command, to win by two lengths; Caubeen was a bad third.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

Among the international matches of the Association season, only that between England and Scotland, which takes place at the Crystal Palace on the first Saturday of April, now remains to be played. Three of the six contests forming the programme took place last week, England, following up their victory over Ireland at Bradford with a win against Wales at Nottingham, Scotland atoning in some measure for their defeat by Wales with a heavy score against Ireland at Glasgow, and Wales last Saturday at Belfast overcoming Ireland by the odd goal in five. Ireland losing all three games, succeed Wales as the holders of the "wooden spoon," but the representatives of the Principality, achieving their fourth victory over Scotland in the course of five years, and beating Ireland, enjoy some compensation for the disappointments of last season.

On the respective form of the two countries against Wales, England would appear fairly certain to beat Scotland, but, as a matter of fact, the issue is quite open. In the encounter at Wrexham, the Scottish backs failed their colleagues strangely in the opening half, but when the side once settled the arrears of three goals in which the Scotsmen found themselves at the interval were nearly cleared off, and must have been had not Hunter—the substitute for Quinn—missed some glorious openings. Scotland, indeed, in the second half of the game with Wales, showed better football—apart from the failures of the centre-forward—than has been displayed by any other international team this season, and, with Quinn available, the attack should prove more dangerous at the Palace than anything at the command of England.

With another back instead of Pennington to help Crompton, the English defence ought to be thoroughly strong, even if Crompton is not quite the equal in pace of Paul, the Queen's Park amateur, who fills the post of outside left, but the choice of the front rank is not an easy task for the Selection Committee. The idea seems to be gaining ground with the authorities that Hilsdon and Windridge sacrifice effectiveness for cleverness, so it must be regarded as probable that either Freeman, of Everton, or Shepherd, of Newcastle, will be picked as centre-forward, and, if Hilsdon accordingly stands down, the committee may decide to play the Sunderland pair—Bridgett and Holley—on the left wing, the latter superseding Windridge. Woodward must be regarded as certain as inside right, but in a vigorous match such as England and Scotland must necessarily be, the authorities might do well to find someone who can stand knocking about better than Pentland.

Tomorrow the teams to compete in the Final Tie at the Crystal Palace will be known, the penultimate games being set for that day. Without in any way slighting either Bristol City or Derby County, it may fairly be said that the great game is that at Bramall-lane between Newcastle United and Manchester United. Newcastle, having reached the concluding round three times in the last four years, will be generally regarded as favourites. They gave striking illustration of the strength of their resources yesterday, when, with several of their best men absent, they scored heavily against Sheffield United. Manchester United, also placing in the field a side far from representative, did not appear to anything like so much advantage against Blackburn Rovers, but they were very unlucky in one of their backs presenting the Rovers with two goals. Still, admitting the ability of the Manchester club's attack, Newcastle will be expected to win at Bramall-lane. The tie at Stamford Bridge between Bristol and Derby appears very open. No doubt Bristol City, taken all round, command the stronger eleven, but it would not be at all surprising if Derby County—shorn as they are of the greatness which once attached to them—were this year to atone for the severe disappointments they caused their friends on the three occasions of the club qualifying for the Final Tie.

Following their brilliant victory of the previous week over Tottenham Hotspur with another win against Hull City, West Bromwich Albion took a clear lead at the head of the competition among the Second League clubs. Tottenham Hospur, on the other hand could only draw with Birmingham; and Bolton Wanderers being without a match the London club remain third on the list. The position of affairs is thus still extremely interesting. With eight matches to play, West Bromwich Albion have scored 42 points, Bolton Wanderers being second with 41 points and seven engagements to fulfil. Tottenham Hotspur are a point behind the Wanderers and, like the West Bromwich Club, have one more match than Bolton to take part in. It is impossible of course to predict even in the vaguest way how the three clubs will finish, but West Bromwich Albion naturally possess the best chance of promotion, while Tottenham Hotspur hold a slight advantage over Bolton Wanderers by reason of the game they have in hand.

The London teams that have been very badly placed in the Southern League may now feel more confident of finishing above the fatal last two positions. The assistance of K. R. G. Hunt at centre-half has made an enormous difference to the Leyton team, who have now eight clubs below them. West Ham United and Brentford are worse off, but each won handsomely yesterday. Brentford, indeed, accomplishing the most noteworthy performance of the day by beating Northampton. Still four points to the good with a game in hand Northampton need have no apprehension of failing to secure the championship that has appeared within their reach for so long, but they cannot afford to relax an effort when so many of their rivals need every possible point to keep free from the danger of relegation to the Second Division—should the League in its present form be in existence next season.

ARSENAL vs. NOTTS FOREST.—Woolwich Arsenal's defeat at Plumstead came as a rude shock to the vast majority of the 16,000 people who witnessed the triumph of Nottingham Forest. The conditions were almost ideal, but the Arsenal were handicapped by the absence of T. T. Fitchie and Gray, for whom Gordon Hoare and Chisholme deputised. The Forest had Butler for Hughes. Neave forced a corner early in the game, and Linacre only just got the ball away from Hoare. A dashing run by West caused McDonald to turn the ball over to Morris, who shot, but Sands dashed back and saved brilliantly. Linacre at the other end saved brilliantly from Lewis, Ducat, and Hoare. McDonald had to clear, and just before the interval Linacre saved splendidly from Butler, who nearly turned the ball through his own goal. Play was keen in the second half, and McDonald cleared in great style two shots from Spouncer and then from Hooper. After twenty minutes Boney turned the ball to Neave, who shot hard and true and scored a good goal. The Forest played pluckily, and after Hooper had forced an abortive corner the same player gave West an opening, and he scored a brilliant goal. Twice West came near to augmenting the score, and just on the stroke of time he smartly headed through a centre by Hooper. Nottingham deserved their success. Nottingham Forest, 2; Woolwich Arsenal, 1.

EVERTON vs. CHELSEA.—Fine weather and the prospect of a good game drew together a crowd of 25,000 people to this match at Goodison Park, Liverpool. Everton were without Scott, Harris, and Young, the first two of whom were playing for Ireland against Wales. Berry, Rafferty, and White occupied the vacant places. Chelsea had a strong side out. From the outset the play was fast and interesting, both teams attacking in turn. Makepeace and White narrowly missed scoring for Everton, but then Freeman got through. Hilsdon equalised from a penalty kick, but Freeman put Everton ahead again. Windridge, however, made the scores level once more, and at the interval each side had obtained two goals. In the second half the play was again full of interest. Chelsea, who had played a great game in the first half, opened strongly, and Makepeace crossed over to deal with Chelsea's left wing, who were very persistent and frequently dangerous. Freeman, however, scored for Everton, and, try as they would, Chelsea could not draw level. Everton, 3; Chelsea, 2

FULHAM vs. ORIENT.—Clapton created considerable surprise at Fulham by outplaying the West London side and beating them by 2 to 1. The match was played for the benefit of Fryer, the Fulham goalkeeper, and with the weather delightfully fine and mild there were fully 20,000 people present, a large proportion of them having travelled from the East End. The Fulham team had a couple of alterations, Harrison returning to the centre-forward position in place of Freeman, the vacancy at outside right being filled by Smith. Clapton Orient were at full strength. In the first minute of the game Johnston nearly gave Fulham a goal through miskicking, the ball going just over the bar well out of the reach of Whittaker. Following this play was fast, but scrambling, with the Orient having a trifle the better of the exchanges. After a little more than a quarter of an hour Hind took a free kick for hands some thirty yards out of the Fulham goal, and with a fast shot caught Fryer napping, the ball going through off the Fulham goalkeeper's hands. Later on Scott missed an excellent chance of increasing the Orient's lead, and Harrison once ran through the Clapton defence and shot wide. Early in the second half Scott scored a fine goal for the visitors after smart passing between Ward and McLean, in which the Fulham backs and halves were completely beaten. Fulham kept on trying and a quarter of an hour before the close Dalrymple scored from a pass by Sharp. This was their only success, however, Johnston and Reason, the Orient backs, playing very steadily, with the result that Clapton won a handsome and well-deserved victory. IRELAND vs. WALES.—The twenty-eighth Association match between Ireland and Wales took place at Belfast in fine weather in the presence of 9,000 spectators. Of the previous contests between the two countries Wales had won thirteen and Ireland nine, five having been drawn. One change occurred in each team, Slemin of the Bohemians, taking the place of Kirwan, of Clyde, on the Irish side, and Jones, of the Northern Nomads, turning out instead of Brew, of Wrexham, for Wales. The ground was a little on the soft side. Ireland, who started, immediately assumed the aggressive, but Morris, with a clever shot, took the play to the other end, and Wales for a time attacked strongly, Seymour and Macartney having a difficult tack in repelling their opponents. Lacey became dangerous, and after beating Jones passed to Hunter, Roose rushing out and clearing. Wales then attacked with great vigour. Meredith being conspicuous, and a free kick against Webb gave them a splendid opportunity, but Scott saved the situation. The game was now very fast, the Irishmen being somewhat superior, and a sharp fusillade on the Welsh goal resulted. Hunter sent a swift shot, which Jones narrowly missed just at the goal line, and a minute later Wales almost scored through Meredith. As the result of fine combination on the part of the Welsh forwards, Ireland were called upon to defend their charge. Davies, the centre-forward, sent in a remarkably swift shot, Scott bringing off a marvellous save. Ireland retaliated, and Greer, obtaining possession, passed to Hunter. Jones intervened, but Harris robbed him, and almost scored, the ball striking the crossbar and going over. Ireland continued to defend stubbornly, and after severe tackling, Slemin and Webb got away. Morris unsuccessfully tackled them, and Lacey receiving, tested Roose, who picked up and centred, but the ball was quickly returned, and Lacey, shooting again, missed the goal by inches. From a throw in Wales obtained a little relief, and Meredith, securing the ball, tried his best to score, but the shot went wide of the mark. A moment later Slemin centred, and Lacey, with a wonderful shot, scored the first goal for Ireland, Roose having no chance of saving. Encouraged by their success, Ireland continued to keep up the pressure, and a free kick just outside the penalty area gave them a splendid opportunity, but Greer, who took the kick, shot over the bar. With ten minutes still left of the first half Wales attacked strongly, and getting a capital opening Lot Jones endeavoured to equalise, but his effort was weak, and Scott had no trouble in clearing. McConnell repulsed an attack made by Meredith and his partner, and Ireland again pressed, Greer getting within shooting distance when offside robbed him of his chance. Just before the interval Wynn put the ball through for Wales, but offside had just been called. Davies, however, immediately scored a legitimate goal, and the first half finished up with the scores level. Half time:—

Wales	...	...	...	... 1 goal.

On resuming Wales showed their superiority in repulsing a fairly long-sustained charge made on Roose. The Welsh right wing then worked their way along the touch line in the direction of Scott, and Wynn was almost through when he slipped and fell and the Irish goalkeeper cleared just as Davies was about to rush him. Wales played with greater vigour, Meredith having hard lines in not giving his side the lead. Jones made a nice opening, but Price missed with his shot. The game was stopped for a few minutes owing to McConnell getting hurt, and he was compelled to retire, but despite the handicap of playing with a man short, Ireland pressed in determined fashion, and beseiged their opponents' goal. Roose had to concede a corner to save, but this proved of little use to Ireland, Webb shooting behind. Meredith passed beautifully to Lot Jones, who, with a side shot, placed Wales ahead. McConnel now resumed his place, but Wynn a few minutes later scored the third goal for Wales. Scott was obliged to give away a corner to Meredith, but the resultant shooting was erratic. Ten minutes before the finish Hunter scored for Ireland, and just before the call of time Greer shot a goal which was disallowed on account of offside. Result:—

Wales	...	...	...	... 3

RUGBY RULES.

THE CALCUTTA CUP.

Scotland vs. England.—By a margin of ten points Scotland defeated England at Richmond on Saturday in their thirty-sixth international Rugby encounter after as fast, hard, and clean a game as one could well wish to see.

England were beaten and beaten properly on the day's play, though there was not nearly that disparity between the sides which the margin of points would lead one to imagine. England's defeat was due to weakness at half-back and lack of decision in defence on the part of the centre three-quarters.

For the first quarter of an hour the Scottish forwards gave the English pack a very severe rattling, and but for a little bad luck they might well have established a long lead instead of being only three points up. Then the English forwards "found themselves," heeled in brilliant form, and fairly penned the Scotsmen in their own "twenty-five." When the interval arrived England were leading by 8 points to 3. But in this last twenty minutes England occasionally by bad luck and occasionally by poor judgment, lost several good chances of scoring.

The first quarter of an hour in the second half settled the game. In that period Scotland, her forwards playing like men possessed, scored twice, a third effort, a little later, giving them the winning margin of ten points. After that the English forwards had much the better of the exchanges, but the back seemed "rattled," the halves opened up the game slowly and clumsily, while the backs could do nothing quite right. Therefore, although they kept in a scoring position, their efforts never materialised.

The try in the first half was scored by Simpson for Scotland after some fine handling all along the line and a strong burst by the wing man. Mobbs obtained England's first try. Running at great pace from the half-way line he cut through the Scottish centres, dodged the full-back, and swerved in close by the posts to avoid Martin. It was the try of the day, and a groan went round the field when Palmer failed to convert from an easy position. From a line out on the Scottish line Harrison, the tallest of the English forwards, received and merely fell quickly over the line, to score England's second try. Palmer converted.

During the interval it was generally felt that on the form shown by the English backs and forwards during this last twenty minutes the home side would win comfortably, but in less than twenty minutes the boot was on the other leg.

The Scottish forwards started off at a tremendous pace; they fairly swept the Englishmen aside, and came swooping down to the line in a solid mass with the ball at their toes. Cutting right through them, on one occasion Gilray picked up and planted the ball between the posts, Cunningham converting. Ten points all.

A moment afterwards the same wild rush and Tennant was darting through the centres with the ball. Again Cunningham converted. Then for a time the Englishmen rallied desperately. Poulton, Mobbs, and Harrison were all within an ace of scoring, while Sibree, when clear with the ball at his toes, had the mortification of seeing it lodge right in Schulze's hands when the line seemed at his mercy.

Again a Scottish rush. Tennant through like a streak of lightning, and Cunningham converts. Then England took charge of the game again. Wright stumbled when within a yard of the line. Palmer was within an ace of scoring, and Wright hit the post from a beautiful drop at goal, while a moment later he took a futile shot when had he passed to Poulton the latter must have scored. Everything just went wrong for England that last quarter of an hour, and Scotland left the field victorious by 3 goals and 1 try (18 points) to 1 goal and 1 try (8 points).

Ireland vs. France.—The ground of the Irish Rugby Union at Lansdowne Road, Dublin, was on Saturday the scene of the first international encounter between Ireland and France at Rugby football. Following upon some very unsettled weather during the week, the afternoon turned out bright and fine, and a company of quite 10,000 people gathered to witness the struggle. Ireland won the toss, and play settled down in the Frenchmen's half, where the visiting three-quarters were first to get in motion, but Parke checked the attack. Ireland then pressed. Thompson dashing away, but being splendidly tackled by de Jouvencel. The home side being awarded a free, Parke took the kick and hit the post, but with the Frenchmen again penalised a minute later, Parke on the second occasion made no mistake. Ireland thus securing a lead of three points five minutes from the kick off. Following upon this reverse the French team set to work in fine determined fashion. Lane broke away down the wing, but was brought down by Thompson, and then a shot at goal by de Jouvencel fell just short of its mark. The Irishmen soon had the game back in the visitors' half and a capital bout of passing between the home three-quarters ended in Thompson scoring in the corner, Parke placing a very fine goal. Having thus established a lead of eight points, the Irishmen continued to hold the upper hand. Thrift was only held up on the Frenchmen's line, and though a free kick brought the visitors some relief, smart work by O'Connor renewed the pressure on the visitors' lines. Greeves kicking too hard, de Jouvencel succeeded in touching down, but the drop out brought the Frenchmen little relief. Still, the visitors had the satisfaction of keeping their opponents out during the remainder of the first half, the interval arriving with the score: Ireland, 8 points; France, 0.

Hamlet restarting, the Irishmen at once began to press, and soon a long kick by Henneberry took the play right on to the French line, where O'Connor forced his way over for a try, Parke failing at the place kick. Getting the ball repeatedly the home halves were enabled to give the men behind them plenty of opportunities, but although the three-quarters passed fairly well, the strong and accurate tackling by the visitors prevented further tries. Parke on one occasion was nearly in after a dodgy run, but found himself held up on the line. Some endeavours at passing on the part of the Frenchmen nearly led to disaster for the visitors, Greeves intercepting and passing to Thrift, between whom and de Jouvencel a great race ended in a win for the Frenchman, who brought his man down just in time. Ireland, however, went further ahead with tries by Thompson and Gardiner, the latter improving his own score. Before the end was reached, however, the Frenchmen met with some consolation. Hourdebaight and Lane in turn each crossed the Irish line, and in one instance Maurnet placed a goal. Thus, in the end, Ireland won by 19 points to 8.

Ireland ...	... 3 goals (1 penalty) 2 tries.
France ...	... 1 goal 1 try.

The Army Cup Final Tie.—A splendidly-contested game at Aldershot in the final of the Army Rugby Cup ended in a victory for the First Welch Regiment (Pembroke Dock), who defeated the 2nd South Wales Borderers (Aldershot) by 2 tries (6 points) to 1 goal (5 points). Boisterous weather prevailed, but fully 5,000 people assembled on the Army Athletic Ground. The Borderers had the better of the opening play, but at the end of twenty minutes Corporal Reed scored a try for the Welch Regiment. Cartridge failed to convert. The Borderers tried hard to draw level before the interval, but by dint of resolute tackling the Welch Regiment retained their advantage and crossed over with a lead of 1 try to nothing. On resuming the Welch Regiment played up strongly and Doolan added an unimproved try. After a long attack by the Welch Regiment had been beaten back Lieutenant Birkett got the ball close to the half-way line and, running through all opposition, scored a try for the Borderers which he converted. A great struggle ensued, the play being vigorous and keen right to the end, but there was no further scoring. First Welch, 2 tries: second S. W. B., 1 goal.

Eton and Harrow Draw.—The annual match between Eton and Harrow at Harrow resulted in a draw of three points each. The two previous matches under the handling code between the two famous schools had resulted in a win for Eton.

The game as a whole was well worth watching, for its fluctuations were many and the play was brimful of interest. The Harrow forwards packed with marked ability and shoved with power, while their control of the ball in the loose was deserving of great praise.

ATHLETICS.

THE VARSITY SPORTS.

For once in a way an important event at Queen Club was decided in fine weather. It was a typical spring-like afternoon when the rival sprinters took the field to open the programme of the 46th annual engagement between athletes of the Dark and Light Blue Universities. After the Arctic conditions prevailing of late, it is strange—yet in a manner pleasant—to record the fact that the atmosphere was inclined to be muggy and oppressive, whilst the track being on the soft side, in consequence of the recent rain, good times were scarcely to be looked for. Yet in contributing to the ultimate result, a victory for the Oxonians by six events to four—an exact reversal of that of last year—many notable performances were achieved. Principal of these may be mentioned Hull's dual success in the hundred yards and quarter; Darling's great victory over the A.A.A. champion by 6in. in the half; Bellerby's high jump, and Lindsay-Watson's "hammer" record. Scarcely less meritorious were P. J. Baker's mile in 4min. 27-3/5secs. and A. M. Brown's sterling three miles in 15mins. Details.—

100 Yards.—'Varsity record 10secs. Holders J. P. Tennant (Oxford), 1868; J. G. Wilson (Oxford), 1870, G. H. Urmson (Oxford), 1873.

H. R. Ragg (Hereford and St. John's), Cambridge	... 3
J. W. Woodrow (Drake Univ., U.S.S., Queen's), Oxford	4

Hull drew outside position, next the stands. He got splendidly away, and, leading throughout, won by 2 yards. Wetenhall came along finely in the last 25 yards and gained second place by a foot. Time, 10-2/5secs.

Quarter-Mile.—'Varsity record, 49-3/5secs. Holder, W Fitzherbert (Cambridge), 1896.

W. T. Wetenhall (City of London and Caius), Cambridge	0

Hull drew inside position, but the Cantabs went off at top speed; the Oxonian was put clean out of his stride at 150 yards, and again failed to get through on the second corner, where his leg seemed to give. However, he forced his way through when in the last straight, and running gamely, won by nearly 4 yards, breaking down at the post. Time—50-3/5secs.

Half-Mile.—'Varsity record, 1min. 54-4/5secs. Holder: K. Cornwallis (Oxford), 1904.

P. Stormonth Darling (Winchester and New), Oxford	... 1
T. H. Just (St. Paul's and Trinity), Cambridge	... 2
G. F. Rogers (Liverpool and Brasenose), Oxford	... 0
W. H. Pelham (Eton and Trinity), Cambridge	... 0

Pelham led off at a fast pace, and led by 15 yards at the bell, which he increased to 20 yards by the pavilion; the others now began to gain, and at 500 yards Pelham retired, Rogers following his lead 50 yards further on, when Just rushed to the front, followed by Darling. The latter never let his man get away, and a grand race ensued. At the last bend Just was a yard ahead, and from there the race was neck and neck; say, 50 yards from home, the Oxford president drew level, and after one of the finest contests ever seen at the sports, won by inches—six inches being the official verdict. Time—1min. 59secs.

One Mile.—'Varsity record, 4mins. 17-4/5secs. Holder, C. C. Henderson Hamilton (Oxford), 1905.

H. P. Dawson (Oundle and Trinity), Cambridge	... 4
G. H. Gilbey (Eton and Christ Church), Oxford	... 0
A. J. N. Williamson (Highgate and Pembroke), Cambridge	... 0

Williamson rushed off, but Gilbey soon passed him, and led for 150 yards, when he was again displaced by Williamson, Baker, and Hallows lying last. At the first lap (1min. 24secs.) Gilbey just headed Williamson, and after forcing the pace past the pavilion retired on the bend, Williamson now took a decided lead, and kept it to the bell (2mins. 58secs.), where he also retired, leaving Dawson ahead of Cator, Baker, and Hallows. So they ran till a furlong from home when Baker dashed away and slipped his field. Hallows went after him and spurted grandly, but could not get on terms with the Cantab, who, running all out, won by 12 yards; 18 yards between second and third. Time—4mins. 27-3/5secs.

Three Miles.—'Varsity record, 14mins. 44-3/5secs. Holder, F. S. Horan (Cambridge), 1893.

A. M. Brown (Charterhouse and Oriel), Oxford	... 1

N. F. Hallows (Felsted and Keble), Oxford	... 0
K. Hooper (Queens'), Cambridge	... 0
R. E. Garrod (Clare), Cambridge	... 0

Garrod took the lead in the first fifty yards, and went away at a moderate pace, Mais and Brown lying next, and Hallows last. At 440 yards the latter dashed up to his leading men, and seemed to be urging them along. At the end of a lap Garrod led Brown and Mais, with Hallows close up, just after which the latter retired. Garrod still led at the mile, with Mais, Selby-Lowndes, and Brown at his heels, but in the next lap Mais put on steam and took Brown past Garrod, who retired at 1½ miles, Hooper stopping just afterwards. Selby-Lowndes hung on gamely, but Mais kept up a good level pace, and at two miles the Oxonians were eight yards ahead of Lowndes, who was going weak, and in the seventh lap they got right away. Eight hundred yards from home Brown started lengthening out his stride, and left Mais, who had done his full share of the pacemaking. Coming away every stride, he eventually ran out a fine winner by 95 yards. Time—15mins. Mais's time was unofficially taken as 15mins. 18secs., and Selby-Lowndes's as 15mins. 49-1/5secs.

New No. 2 ·360 Bore

In comparison with the ·400/·360 the muzzle velocity of this new Cartridge is approximately 230 F.S. higher, and although the charge is increased the same low pressure, viz., 14 tons, is maintained. The increased velocity coupled with the extra weight of bullet and consequent greater striking energy gives one a rifle that has practically the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express, and is consequently an ideal weapon for deer stalking and for shooting heavier forms of non-dangerous game; moreover, in consequence of the importation of the ·303 into India being prohibited, it is well worthy the notice of Sportsmen in that country who desire to have a weapon in which is combined High Velocity, Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, Minimum Recoil, and in which, through low pressure, a greater margin of safety is given and the risk of jamming reduced to a minimum.

VELOCITY 2,150 F. S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

"FIELD." "A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . A very fine performance for a double rifle very hard to beat."

That is why BOVRIL is so invigorating a beverage, so strengthening a food, why Cooks find it so useful, why Doctors and Nurses recommend it, why the sensible housewife will have nothing in place of it.

Boycott got away first; in fact, he appeared to beat the pistol, but Anderson was level at the second hurdle, and began to draw ahead at the fifth. Here Field came along, and at the seventh hurdle had passed Boycott, while Anderson was a full yard ahead. Keeping up the pressure, the Oxford first string won by two yards, with Boycott nearly as far behind. Time—16secs.

R.M.C. SPORTS AT SANDHURST.—The annual sports at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, were run off on Friday and Saturday last in the presence of a large number of spectators, including the Commandant, Col. W. B. Capper, and most of the officers of the R.M.C. and Staff College, and several officers from the Aldershot Garrison. A new event was introduced in the form of an inter-company half-mile relay race, and the two heats produced fine contests, B and F. and D. and A Companies being left in to contest the final Results of finals.—

Putting the Shot.—D. C. Robinson, St. Lawrence College, Ramsgate, B. Company, 31ft. 6in., 1; J. D. Macindoe, Fettes, A Company, 30ft. 11in., 2; G. J. Gartland, Downside, F. Company, 30ft. 5½in., 3; R. W. Braile, Haileybury, A Company, 30ft. 4½in., 4.

Half-mile.—D. A. Macgregor, Fettes, A Company, 1; E. Gilbey, Harrow, E. Company, 2; A. C. Stanbridge, Blundells, A Company, 3. Won by 4 yards. Time—2mins. 9secs.

Wide Jump.—R. F. B. Naylor, Charterhouse, C. Company, 19ft. 8¾in., 1; T. E. Lawson Smith, Harrow, B. Company, 18ft. 8in. 2; S. A. H. Hungerford, Eltham College, B. Company, 17ft. 11¾in., 3.

College Employees 120 Yards Handicap.—F. Harris, 1 yard, 1; F. Webb, scratch, 2; G. Cox, scratch, 3. Time—15secs.

120 Yards Handicap.—H. E. H. Blakeney, Army School, Maidenhead, A Company, 15 yards, 1; B. D. Costin, Bedford, A Company, 11, 2; E. T. R. Wickham, Oratory, Birmingham, E. Company, 12, 3; R. H. Broome, Wellington, E. Company, 7, †; H. A. Law, Eton, A Company, 11, †. Won by 6 yards. Time,—12-1/5secs.

Two Miles.—E. Durham, Cheltenham, E. Company, 1; D. Baillie, Charterhouse, A. Company, 2; M. W. H. Pain, Harrow, B. Company, 3; C. P. Bethune, Kelly College, F. Company, 4. Won by about 5 yards; same. The race was run in the pouring rain. Time—10mins. 39secs.

Company Challenge Shield.—"B" Company, 1, 161 points; "E" Company, 2, 93 points.

100 Yards (138 entries).—A. M. Kennedy (Glenalmond), 1; R. F. Naylor (Cheltenham), 2; H. E. H. Blakeney (Army School, Maidenhead), 3. Won by a yard; a foot between second and third.

One Mile (144 entries).—D. A. Macgregor (Fettes), 1; D. Baillie (Charterhouse), 2; G. L. Compton Smith (Radley), 3. Won by two yards; one yard between second and third. Time—4mins. 54-1/5secs.

Hurdle Race 120 Yards, 10 Flights (104 entries),—G. F. C. Shakespeare (Wellington), 1; R. F. B. Naylor (Cheltenham), 2; J. W. Owen (Marlborough), 3. Won by a foot, 4 yards between second and third. Time—17-1/5secs.

Half-Mile Inter-Company Relay Race.—"B" Company, 1; "D" Company, 2; "A" Company 3. Won by three yards, ten yards between second and third. Time—1min. 41secs.

Tug of War.—E. Company beat A. Company by two pulls to nil. Both pulls were very well contested, the teams being evenly matched, but "E" combined better.

Quarter Mile (106 entries).—J. F. O'Brien (Wimbledon), 1; R. F. Naylor (Cheltenham), 2; A. M. Kennedy (Glenalmond), 3. Won by a yard; 3 yards between second and third. Time—55secs.

Strangers' Invitation Limited Handicap Quarter Mile.—A. C. McNabb (Oxford University A.C.), 10 yards start, 1; G. A. V. Connolly (South London Harriers), 23 yards start, 2; W. R. B. Thomas (L.A.C.), 20 yards start, 3. Won by 3 yards; 2 yards between second and third. Time—50 1/5secs.

High Jump (76 entries).—B. T. James (St. Paul's), 5ft. 4in., 1; G. J. Gartlan (Downside), 5ft. 3in., 2; W. J. Kerr (Bradfield), T. E. Lawson-Smith (Harrow), and E. T. R. Wickham (Oratory, Birmingham) tied for third place with 5ft. 2in. In an exhibition jump James cleared 5ft. 5in.

Throwing the Cricket Ball (86 entries).—G. G. Phillips (Repton), 95 yards 2ft. 10in., 1; A. W. Forbes (Bedford), 95 yards; 9in., 2; G. S. Dobbie (Charterhouse), 90 yards 7in., 3.

Warrant and N.C.O.'s 120 Yards Handicap.—Company Sergeant-Major Watts, 14 yards start, 1; Staff Sergeant Watkins, scratch, 2; Sergeant-Instructor Adshead, 12 yards start, 3. Won by a yard; 2 yards between second and third. Time—14-1/5secs.

Obstacle Race.—Lawson-Smith, 1; Shakespeare, 2; Thwaylis, 3; Scott, 4; O'Neill, 5. Won easily; poor third.

GOLF.

LONDON AMATEUR FOURSOMES.—A very interesting match was seen at Bramshot, in the second round of the London Amateur Foursome Tournament, between Muswell Hill (Mr. J. R. Dick and Mr. A. J. Tate) and North Hants (Mr. O. T. Falk and Mr. F. N. Harvey). At the turn North Hants were three down but they finished one up on the first eighteen holes. Muswell Hill played steadily in the afternoon, and eventually proved successful by 2 and 1.

South Herts (Mr. W. S. Lurcott and Mr. W. H. Scarborough) beat Burhill (Mr. W. D. Bovill and Mr. H. H. Marriott) at Northwood by 4 and 2. The match was square at the end of eighteen holes.

Bramshot (Brigadier-General C. M. Mackenzie and Mr. P. L. Smith) beat Hanger Hill (Mr. Lewis Fielder and Mr. C. J. Hamilton) at Walton Heath by 9 and 8. Bramshot were 5 up at the ninth hole and 6 up at the eighteenth.

CROSS-COUNTRY.

THE INTERNATIONAL RACE.—Derby was the scene of the annual race for the international Cross-Country Championship. It was the seventh of the series, and, in every race since the competition was instituted, England had proved successful. The position of other competing countries, however, had changed from time to time, and when, last year, the event was decided near Paris a team representing France secured second place. For Saturday's contest the Frenchmen crossed to England on Friday, but their team was not so strong as was at one time anticipated.

There were 3,000 spectators present when the event was started in fine but threatening weather. An early sensation was caused by the announcement that stress of business would prevent A. J. Robertson (the English captain) starting, and that his place would be taken by H. Sowell (Derby and County), the English first reserve. F. J. MacNamara (City and Suburban H.), F. Arthurs (City and Suburban), and R. Kerr (East Antrim) were also absent from the Irish side, and the only substitute for the three was M. McCann (Dundalk H.) T. Paney (Abertillery H.) took the place of H. Lloyd (Cathays H.) in the Welsh team, whilst the Scotsman turned out as selected.

The total number of starters was 55. At the end of the first lap Bouin (France), Coales (England), Wood (England), and Murphy (Ireland) were in the leading positions. At the end of the second circuit Coales, Bouin, and Wood were running in the order named, with Loney (England) lying next and Murphy fifth. After covering four miles Bouin, Wood, Harris (Ireland), and Coales were in close company at the head of the field. Then came Loney, Straw (England), and Downing (Ireland), whilst Murphy had fallen back to twelfth place. The end of six miles saw Bouin and Wood together, about a hundred yards ahead of Coales. When the bell rang the leading pair had increased their advantage to 150 yards, Loney lying next. Right to the end a splendid struggle ensued, Wood finishing only three yards in front of the French champion. Both appeared none the worse for their efforts. Individual positions.

HOCKEY.

ENGLAND vs. FRANCE.—On the ground of the Brondesbury Hockey Club at Acton, on the 20th instant the annual match between England and France resulted in another easy victory for England by 9 goals to 1. Except for a number of spasmodic rushes on the part of the Frenchmen, the home side had the upper hand from start to finish. In the first half they gained a lead of 7 to 1. The reason why they were unable to score more than a couple of points in the second half was entirely owing to the brilliant goalkeeping of R. Salarnier. He saved shot after shot, and the two full backs, L. Saulnier and R. Benoist, set up a more effective defence in the second half than they had done in the opening stage. The English defence was seldom tested, but the forwards gave a brilliant exhibition. Pridmore and Leighton made an ideal left wing, and Shoveller in the centre kept the wings together in his usual masterly manner. The only French goal was scored in the early stages of the game, when England led by 2 to nil. C. Pattin, the outside left, got the ball: Burns fell, and the Frenchman ran right through and scored. The English points were shot by Pridmore (4), Shoveller (3), and Stafford (2).

RACKETS.

THE MILITARY CHAMPIONSHIP.—The final round of the Military Singles Championship, at Prince's Club, Knightsbridge, ended in the holder, Mr. J. J. Astor, being beaten by Captain A. Berger by 5 games to 2. Mr. Astor was a strong favourite for the event, but all through he never found his game, while the winner played admirably in the court. His judgment in killing the ball was very marked, but on neither hand was the service good. Mr. Astor won the first game after being 11—13, and while making his sequence of eight aces he served effectively for the only time in the match. In the second game hands ruled small, the best realising five and four to Captain Berger and four to the Guardsman. It was the same in the third, neither player keeping possession long, until Captain Berger went from "8—9" to game. On continuing his hand in the fourth game, Captain Berger was put out without adding and then Mr. Astor made a sequence of ten aces, the best of the match. Captain Berger drew close with runs of three and five, but the Old Etonian made the games level by going out with four. The rubber game was keenly contested, no fewer than twenty-four innings being taken. Mr. Astor added three at the outset and then Captain Berger somewhat discounted his chances by scoring double faults in two consecutive hands. Afterwards a run of three gave him the lead and this he kept to the end. Score:

The Military Singles Championship.—Final round. Captain A. Berger (Army Service Corps) beat Mr. J. J. Astor (1st Life Guards) (holder) by 3 games to 2 (13—18, 15—9, 15—9, 8—15, 15—9).

BILLIARDS.

THE LONDON TOURNAMENT.—The twenty-first and final heat in the Soho-square Tournament was between Stevenson (scratch) and Aiken (receives 2,250 start). Stevenson gained a brilliant victory, and thus shares the first prize with Inman. The game was very keenly contested, and it was not until last night that Stevenson got in front, to eventually win a grand game by 75. During the day Stevenson's most important breaks were 107, 166 149 (twice), 89, 385, and 181, while Aiken was responsible for 60, 169, 97, 116, 197, 69, 115, 76, 85, and 77. Full scores:

Stevenson	9,000
Aiken	8,925

T. Aiken (rec. 2,250) ..	6	1	5 6
J. Harris (rec. 3,000) ...	6	1	5 7

Aiken is credited with Dawson's two defeats when that player retired, through a defection of the eyes. The decider will very likely take place towards the end of April.

Stevenson also won the Snooker Pool Championship with a grand aggregate of 8,578 points.

AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—Major H. L. Fleming won the amateur championship at Bradford last night at the first time of asking, beating H. C. Virr, holder for two successive years, by the all-convincing margin of 499 points. The major is a fine all-round sportsman. He is a good polo player, and a great rifle shot, and without a doubt his abilities in the latter direction bear very materially on his almost extraordinary accuracy in dealing with the red ball. It is but rarely that he misses a winning hazard, and on Friday he had the great satisfaction of equalling the best amateur performance on record by making no fewer than 153 off the coloured ivory. Yesterday Major Fleming made breaks of 39, 53, 172, 40, 52, 59, 96, and 67; Virr's best were 70, 55, 34, 54, 50, 90, and 49. Result:—

Major Fleming	2,000

WINCHESTER .33 CALIBER

A New Large Caliber High Power Rifle.

Big game hunters who have advocated a large caliber high power rifle will find in the Winchester .33 caliber a gun that will meet their requirements. The popular and reliable Model 1886 rifle has been adapted to handle this new cartridge, which is large enough and powerful enough to kill any big game known. The Winchester .33 caliber belongs to the high power smokeless powder class of cartridges, having high velocity and flat trajectory, and it develops great striking energy and penetrating power. The .33 caliber bullet weighs 200 grains. Soft pointed bullets used in this cartridge have special upsetting or mushrooming qualities, owing to their high velocity. This makes the Winchester .33 caliber a particularly desirable cartridge for big game shooting, as mushrooming bullets of this size have terrific killing power.

PROFESSOR TAIT ON THE GOLF BALL.

THE English Golfer just now is rather in trouble about his ball. He would not have been in any trouble if left to himself, but people are coming along to him and telling him that he is not doing so well with his drives as he ought to do and could do if he were given the right sort of ball.

He was quite satisfied, but he is begining to get a little unsettled in mind. He need not do so. He is all right as he is. Experimenters are working in his behalf all the time, and he can depend on it that he has got the best thing that is possible at the present time.

Nobody can properly explain the antics of a golf ball when it is driven by the golfer's club. They vary almost every time and they seem to defy every scientific theory.

One of the most brilliant scientists of the Victorian era was the late Professor Guthrie Tait, and he happened to be a keen golfer and the father of the most popular and one of the cleverest golfers who have ever lived. He probed deeply into the science of the game of golf, and he tried to find out those secrets of the flight of the ball.

Near the beginning of his investigations he committed himself to the statement that nobody could drive a golf ball that would have a carry of more than 189 or 190 yards without exerting at least three times the strength that is exerted by a strong man when driving, but a very little while afterwards his young son, Fred, as if by way of celebrating his twenty-third birthday, drove a ball with much more carry than that. This sent the professor upon a new line of investigation. He suddenly realised that he had overlooked the possibility of the golf ball defeating that great force of nature which is named gravity. He timed the flight of the ball, he found that it was twice as long as it ought to be, he discovered that whereas the golf ball, considering the length of its flight ought to occupy six and a half seconds in the air, it only took three and a half, and he set himself out to find the reason why.

In the beginning it was clear to him that it was due in some way to the rotation of the ball in the air, and that that rotation was caused by the peculiar way in which it was hit, assisted in some measure by the way in which the ball was marked on its cover. He set up catapults in his garden from which he despatched balls and carefully noted all that happened to them, and he erected engines inside his house by which other balls were driven, and again he noted results.

He got his son Fred and his friends to drive balls against screens of clay, and sometimes he attached strings of tape to the balls so that he would know how many times they rotated when travelling through a known space. Incidentally he did find out that the golf ball, when it leaves the club, is going along at the rate of about 300 feet a second, or over two hundred miles an hour.

Two or three things of value the professor certainly did discover. He found that it was the rotation that made the golf ball fly so far as it did, and that there was enormous importance in the centre of gravity being dead in the middle of the ball to ensure that rotation being perfect and uniform.

That point is being impressed upon us again at the present time. He found out that, strangely enough, the golf ball that was driven in the best way and went the longest distance in the air, started off from the club in a line parallel with the ground and, as if by some hidden force, began to rise afterwards of its own accord. Thereafter it took strange lines in the air, and did not seem to be bound by any known natural laws.

What Professor Tait discovered is still almost all that we know about the flight of the golf ball. What the inventors need to find out is what the professor could not. Can they do it.

SIBPUR vs. ST. XAVIER'S.—These teams met on the 7th instant, an interesting game ending in favour of the Sibpur College by two goals to one. L. Rosser drew first blood for St Xavier's, Scott equalised and on changing ends Durrell put Sibpur ahead.

10TH JATS vs. CALEDONIANS.—Played on the 7th instant the Jats winning by four goals to one. Siblall scored three goals and Slater one for the 10th. Apcar registered the Caledonians' single point.

MEDICALS vs. B.-N. R.—Played on the 8th instant, ending in a pointless draw, The Railway team had the best of the exchanges in the first half, but were kept busy defending on crossing over.

CUSTOMS vs. 10TH JATS.—This game on the Customs ground last Thursday was a one-sided affair; the Customs did all the attacking and won by four goals to nil.

Y.M.C.A. vs. DALHOUSIE.—Played on Saturday, a level game ending in a win for the Y.M.C.A. by a goal to nil.

RANGERS vs. MEDICALS.—A fast and interesting game between these teams on Saturday ended in a draw, neither side scoring.

ST. XAVIER'S vs. CALEDONIANS.—St. Xavier's defeated the Caledonians on Saturday by seven goals to two. Rosser and Ford scored for the victors in the first half, Rosser (3) and Ford (2) after the interval. Apcar and Behrend were credited with the points for the Caledonians.

CUSTOMS vs. B.-N. R.—The Railway scratched to the Customs on Saturday.

ROVERS vs. MOHAN BAGAN.—Fixed for Saturday, Mohan Bagan failed to put in an appearance and the game therefore, goes to the Rovers.

E. I. R. vs. DALHOUSIE.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Monday the home team winning by a goal to nil.

MEDICALS vs. SIBPUR.—A well contested game on the Customs ground on Monday ended in a win for the Medicals by two goals to one. There was no score during the first half, but in the second period Scott hit a goal for Sibpur, Hendricks equalised and Beveridge scored the wining point.

B.-N. R. vs. Y.M.C.A.—Played on the 13th instant the Railway won by a goal to nil. Baker scored in the first half.

Shows.

GREAT PUNJAB HORSE SHOW.

THE sixth annual show was held in Topa Park, Rawalpindi, on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd instant. Entries were good, and the class excellent. Captain the Hon. C. B. O. Mitford, the Honorary Secretary is to be congratulated on the splendid arrangements, the proceedings being carried through without a hitch from start to finish. There was a large attendance on each day, and the Band of the 10th Royal Hussars was a distinct factor in the enjoyment of all.

The Judges were General Wodehouse, General Dawkins, Colonel Broome, A.R.D., Colonel Clifton-Brown, 12th Royal Lancers, Major Chaplin, 8th Cav. A.M.S. Major England, R.A., Major Griffith, 16th Cav. Captain Loch, A.R.D., Captain Allen, A.V.C., and H. Kindersley, Esq.

The prizes were given away by Lady Wodehouse, but prior to their distribution General Sir J. Wodehouse, in an address to the gathering, said that thanks were due to the Lieutenant-Governor for his support of the show; he regretted that His Honour was unable to attend it in person. He also said that the thanks of all were due to Captain Mitford, of the 10th Hussars, who had proved such an able and courteous Secretary. He was sure that the meeting now concluded compared favourably with any of the preceding ones. For his own part he could not think of a single fault in the whole meeting; but faults or omissions must inevitably occur, and he recommended the Committee, who had so ably managed the Show this year, to meet at an early date and consider if any improvements could be suggested or effected before the next Show. The name given to the Show was rather a grandiloquent one, and nothing should be omitted to sustain its right to the title of "The Great" Show. He had been present at the first, and two other Shows, and was now very pleased indeed to be able to attend a fourth.

Cheers for Sir Jocelyn and Lady Wodehouse brought the proceedings to a close. Appended is a list of the awards :—

ARE ANIMALS AMENABLE TO TELEPATHY?

In a highly interesting article in Daily's Magazine for April, Mr. Athol Maudslay raises the question whether men who have magnetic influence over their fellow-creatures also possess the faculty of making animals obedient. He also supplies some novel instances of animal training.

"In our intercourse with dumb animals much is done," writes Mr. Maudslay, "by telepathy, or thought transference, or, rather mental suggestion. Telepathy has, of course, a near relationship to mesmerism. So that, in fact, when animals are obeying strictly our commands, and even anticipating our wishes as they often do, there is no doubt that our thoughts are communicated to them, without movement or speech on our part, since they fulfil our wishes without our having expressed them verbally.

"It would be interesting to know whether great men who have swayed public opinion, who have controlled the affairs of an empire, whose influence is not so much due to their position as to the personality which has such an inspiring effect upon those with whom they are brought into contact, have exercised the same supreme influence over animals.

"So far as my knowledge of such matters goes, the famous men I have known have not appeared to possess the faculty of making animals obedient. This may arise from intolerance of faculties so far below those they themselves exercise, just as some men cannot adapt their speeches to their audience, and are out of sympathy with people with whom they are not on an intellectual level.

"There is no doubt that to exercise a supreme control over animals and birds a mesmeric or hypnotic influence of some kind is necessary. Some people possess this to an astonishing degree, others are absolutely deficient in such qualities.

"Animals and birds are strangely amenable to the tone of one's voice; in the voice of a person desiring them to obey an order there must be a determination that indicates a strong will, a stubborn will.

"Animals and birds are very quick at discovering whether your voice is insistent, or whether there is any indication of yielding, as, if there should be they will immediately take advantage of it to disobey.

"I firmly believe that an intelligent horse after being driven some time in a vehicle of a certain size gets to know exactly how much space is required for the vehicle he is drawing to clear obstacles on the way, and that he judges accordingly.

"This may be seen when being driven in a hansom cab by an indifferent or a drunken driver. The man probably is incapable of judging accurately the distance when cutting in and out of crowded traffic, but the horse knows perfectly well, so between them they manage to get along without a smash.

"This may be proved to be the case, owing to the fact that the driver's reins are too slack to assist the horse in his computation of distance.

"But it is dogs of all animals that are most easily taught. The intelligence of some dogs is extraordinary.

"I had a very beautiful collie dog which accompanied me all over London. When I wanted a hansom cab I would point it out to my dog, and crossing the road he would wait his opportunity, and jump into the cab, and up on the seat.

"Sometimes the cabby would open his trap-door and poke him with his whip to dislodge him, but nothing would make him budge; then when I managed to get across the road I would tell the cabby that it was my dog that had engaged him for his master, and peace would be restored.

"Once I had a splendid Australian kangaroo hound, standing about 40 inches at the shoulder. He was given to me by a cousin in Australia.

"I was abroad on the Continent when he arrived in England, so one of my brothers went down to the London Docks to meet him and took him to our stables behind my mother's house in Hyde Park Square, where the dog was put into a loose box.

"But the next day he, having been let out for a run in the stable yard, escaped, and ran away back to the docks, right through the crowded City streets, and went straight back to the ship in which he had come to England.

"That he should have found his way was very remarkable, since he was brought through London from the docks to the West End in a four-wheeled cab, and could have seen very little of the streets through which he passed and yet he managed to find his way to the docks.

"I bought of Sandy, the English clown in the Cirque L'Imperatrice, now the Cirque Nationale, in the Champs Elysees, a white poodle. I think his name was 'Pianchette,' but I changed it to 'Ugly,' and in spite of his ugliness no dog did I ever love more.

"When I first had him he did a marvellous lot of tricks, but I taught him many more. I taught him to ring the bell, to shut the door, to hold my horse at the street door, to stand on his head, and turn somersaults, and in the park to walk on his hind legs behind me down the Row. He would also play cards and count, and do simple sums in arithmetic.

"He used to go fishing with me at Eastbourne, off Beachy Head, and, what is more, held his own line in his mouth, the end of which I made fast so that it could not run out and be lost overboard.

"When he had a bite he would make a great noise; he could not bark, as he was holding his line, but he growled and jumped about when I took the line from him and hauled in the fish.

"Ugly, when I was living in town, in Albemarle Street, and my man called me of a morning, directly the window was open would jump out on the parapet wall outside the windows, and sit there watching the cabs and carriages passing down the street.

"Alas! one day he refused to come in, and so, as I was in a hurry, I ran down to breakfast and saw something fall past the window; it was, alas! poor Ugly, who, falling asleep, had rolled off the wall, and was killed on the pavement.

"I was terribly cut up; but his funeral, poor fellow, was one fit for a king. He had an oak coffin, and was sent down to Eastbourne, and there off Beachy Head, in the deep blue waters of the English Channel, where he had so often fished with me, he was buried with all the honour he deserved.

BALUCHISTAN NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

PROCEEDINGS of a Meeting of the Baluchistan Natural History Society held in the Quetta Museum and Library Building on Thursday the 25th March 1909.

Present. President:—The Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.

Vice-President Colonel C. E. Peirse and Colonel J. C. O'Donnell,

Members:—Mr. A. M. Anscomb, Lieutenant R. G. Bignell, Mr. C. H. Dracott, Mr. A. A. Flynn, Mr. G. Foley, Major F. H. Goodwin, R.A.M.C., R. B. Dewan Jamiat Rai, Lieutenant A. M. Lloyd, A. D. Marker, K.S., Major A. McConaghey, Mr. A. D. McDonough, Colonel D. O'Sullivan, R.A.M.C., Mr. Shiawakshaw Pheroxshaw, Mr. W. R. S. Porter, Captain J. D. Richmond, R.A.M.C., Captain A.B. Smallman, Mr. H. R. Smith.

Honorary Secretary:—Mr. J. W. N. Cumming.

Read letters from Colonel D. O'Sullivan, R.A.M.C. Major C. M. Moore, M.D., I.M.S., and Lieutenant J. W. L. Scott, R.A.M.C., thanking the members of the Society for electing them members.

List of donations received by the museum since the last meeting was also read and the exhibits themselves were passed round for inspection. Of these the following were interesting:—

1 Common Teal from Quetta presented by Mr. E. W. Mason,
1 Pintail from Kushdilkhan presented by Major T. H. Goodwin.
1 Red-crested Pechard presented by Major T. H. Goodwin.
1 Wigeon presented by Major T.H. Goodwin.
1 Marbled Duck presented by Major T. H. Goodwin.
1 Indian little Grebe or Dabchick from Sirinan presented by Mr. Russ.
2 Common Mynas from Sibi presented by Mr. T. Clear.
2 Blue Rock Pigeons from Quetta presented by Master Walter Cumming.
1 Indian Redstart presented by Master Walter Cumming.
2 European Hoopoe from Quetta presented by Masters Arthur and Walter Cumming.
2 Large White Scavenger Vulture presented by Masters Arthur and Walter Cumming.
1 Little Ringed Plover from Quetta presented by Master Arthur Cumming.
1 Red Wattled Lapwing from Quetta presented by a native (name unknown).
1 Hume's White-eared Bulbul from Jhelum presented by Lieutenant A.M.O. Lloyd.
2 Palm Squirrels from Sibi presented by Mr. T. Clear.

Read extract from letter, dated 16th February 1909, from Colonel C. Swinhoe, England, returning duly identified the butterflies last sent to him which were also passed round for inspection.

Resolved that this Society place on record their appreciation of the trouble taken by Colonel Swinhoe in identifying these butterflies.

Read letter No. 317, dated 13th March 1909, from Dr. Anandale, Superintendent, Natural History Society, stating that he has forwarded the Quetta Isopod sent to him on 27th May 1908 to Rev. T. R. Stebbing, England, the great authority on the group.

The Hon'ble President impressed upon all present to collect everything they come across and remarked that the commonest animals were often the very last to be identified.

Resolved that the result of the reference be awaited.

Read letter, dated 20th March 1909, from Mr. E. J. Gleeson, advising despatch of a White or Roseate Pelican and stating that immense flocks of this bird pass over Upper Zheb on migration and that the natives shoot or otherwise capture the bird for its oil which they value highly for its medicinal properties.

A copy of "A Working List of the Flowering Plants of Baluchistan" prepared by Mr. I. H. Burkill of the Indian Museum, Calcutta, was then placed before the Meeting by the Honorary Secretary.

The Hon'ble President commented on the importance of the List and urged upon Members to do their best to add to it.

Resolved that the congratulations of the Society be conveyed to Mr. Burkill for his very useful contribution to science.

A specimen of rock from Shah Bilawal in Las Bela was next passed round, Mr. Dracott remarking that it was known locally as Zahira Mora and was used medicinally by the natives for snake bites and also as charms.

The election of new members was then proceeded with and the following proposals made:—

Lala Mulraj, Extra Assistant Conservator, Forests, proposed by R. B. Dewan Jamiat Rai, and seconded by the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon.

Captain McConaghey, proposed by Major A. McConaghey, and seconded by the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon.

Mr. T. C. Raikes, proposed by Major T. H. Goodwin and seconded by Lieutenant A. M. Lloyd.

Carried unanimously.

The Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon next proposed that, as Colonel Ellis had left the station and Colonel Peirse would be absent from Quetta for the next 8 months, Colonel O'Sullivan and Major T. H. Goodwin be elected Vice-Presidents.

This proposal was seconded by Mr. Cumming and unanimously carried.

In conclusion the Hon'ble President invited such of the Members as had not already done so to join the Bombay Natural History Society and invited particular attention being paid to Crabs it being yet unknown to Science how the young are produced, i.e., whether hatched from eggs or otherwise brought into being.

The following gave in their names as desirous of joining the Bombay Natural History Society :—

Colonel D. O'Sullivan and Mr. A. A. Flynn.

J. W. N. CUMMING,
Honorary Secretary.

The Story Teller.

THE FIRST BOW.

An unnamed river flowing through the green plains of a nameless land. Yet the land was England and the river the Thames. The time however was in the very Youth of the World, before these names were even thought of. How different a country then to England as we know her now, nearly a hundred thousand years later. The climate in B.C. 98000 was sub-tropical as evidenced by the feathery tops of palms, peeping above the deep green of the forest. Our island moreover was no island at all in those days, but only part of a great promontory jutting forward from Western Europe into the Atlantic. What is now the North Sea was a wide grassy plain, whereon wandered great herds of Mammoths and Bison. There too lived those hugh pleistocene deer, the stags of which stood over six feet high at the shoulder, and carried horns so wide and massive, as to dwarf into insignificane the finest deer heads of this degenerate epoch. In those days too, the rhinoceros grazed peacefully in the glades of Britain, while the rocky hills were the abode of Cave-bears, surly savage brutes bigger than the largest Grizzlies of modern times. The music of our woods now, after sunset, is the sweet song of the nightingale, then the shadows of evening echoed with the roars of lions and sabre toothed tigers, the grunts of prowling leopards, and the howling of wolves. It was a realm where as yet savage nature reigned supreme. But Man endowed with new-born soul and mind had arrived upon the scene. The first wandering hunters had worked their intrepid way across the great plains from Denmark and Holland and had discovered England. Finding the land was fair and the hunting good, small communities had established themselves here and there, through the southern and central parts of the country.

Despite their physical inferiority to the great beasts around them and the feebleness of their flint headed weapons, these early pioneers managed to hold their own by virtue of their dawning intellect. At night they slept either in platforms among the tree tops or in caves. In the latter case the entrance was carefully closed with a rock at night; for in those days the wild beasts were without fear of man and no lion, leopard, or wolf, ever hesitated about eating a human being, whenever opportunity occurred.

The Thames Valley, near where Reading now is, was the home of one of the small bands which were scattered through Southern England at this epoch. Among this little community there was no sturdier hunter than Dort. Indeed the young fellow had already gained a high reputation among his fellows, by reason of the skill and strength with which he could cast the flintheaded spears, which were their only weapons. Dort was also wonderfully clever at trapping, so that his lodge never lacked an ample supply of good food.

It was a brilliant morning in early summer, and though the sun had not been above the horizon long, the heat was already considerable. Dort sat on a grassy knoll at the edge of the forest; from the little eminence one could see across the flats through which the river wound its way. The stream was broader and the current slower than now, and the broad ribbon of water crept sluggishly through prairies of waist deep grass. The young hunter's muscular body was naked on account of the heat. Dort would have been thought ugly and unintellectual looking in these days, for his forehead was low and projecting, while his powerful lower jaw jutted forward almost level with his broad flattened nose. The eyes however, deep set, grey and keen, showed intelligence and good humour combined. Our primitive hunter was not tall, nor was his carriage erect; in fact he walked with a decided stoop. He made up however for lack of height by the power and solidity of his build. The great shoulders, deep chest, and long muscular arms would have made him a formidable opponent, even for one of our most powerful present day athletes.

At Dort's side lay half a dozen reed throwing spears, tipped with laurel-shaped heads of flint. The neat binding of twisted fibre, which held the spear heads into the clefts at the ends of the reeds, showed considerable progress in the art of string making. Indeed as might be expected from a skilful trapper like Dort, he was an adept at plaiting and twisting vegetable fibre and the tendons obtained from animals into strong and serviceable cords, suitable for a variety of purposes. The young hunter was just now busily at work, fashioning a stout pike for thrusting purposes at close quarters. He had found a long branch broken by some gale close to the tree to which it belonged. There, for perhaps two years, it had hung straight down close to the main trunk, drying and seasoning in the shade. This spar, nearly two inches in diameter, had seemed to Dort to be a splendid find, and having with his flint axe completed the severance which the gale had begun, he had sat down there and then and set to work to trim and smooth the shaft. The stick was not however quite straight, so the savage bent it back in order to take out the curve. But bend it as he would, so soon as the pressure was removed the elastic wood reasserted itself, and sprang back to its original curved form. At last Dort took a stout coil of twisted fibre, which lay beside his throwing spears, and fastening an end of the cord to one of the staff, bent his pole until he had curved it in the opposite direction to its natural bend, and there kept it by tying the cord tightly to the other end as well. The idea in the hunter's mind was that if the pole was thus kept curved for a while in the opposite direction and soaked in water it would lose its kink and become straight. The staff being so stiff and springy, Dort had had to exert great force in order to bend it, and tie it when bent in the desired position; consequently the cord was strained very tight, and as Dort struck his finger carelessly against it, the note of the first bow string sang out. With a child-like delight in the new sound, Dort pulled the shring again and again. Then suddenly as he felt its springy strength an inspiration seized him. He picked up one of his short throwing spears and setting the butt end against the shring, pulled with his finger and thumb, and then let go. The spear sprang forward weakly for a few yards and fell. Dort went forward and having picked up his spear again, stood looking at it for some minutes thinking. At last a second inspiration came to him, he seized his flint axe, and cut the shaft of the spear shorter. He cut it too a little above one of the projecting knots, and then sawed a notch for the string with the rough edge of his axe. Then again he fitted his altered spear on to the bow string. This time the projecting knot gave a firm hold for his strong finger and thumb and he was able to draw the bow very much harder: when he let go, the arrow leapt forward like a living thing for seventy yards, and buried its flint head deep in the turf.

Dort had made a great discovery. Thousands of years later the stout archers of this very land were to win victory after victory by means of the very weapon which he the simple hunter of the wild had just invented.

Dort had however instantly grasped the great importance of his discovery to himself. He therefore lost no time, but at once shortened and notched his other five spears, and also cut nicks at each end of his bow stave and then attached the cord anew firmly and strongly. Having spent some two busy hours in perfecting his equipment, the next thing naturally was to test one of the new made arrows on some kind of animal. After stealing stealthily some distance just inside the edge of the wood, Dort peeped round some bushes, and beheld exactly what he sought. A hare with its back towards him was nibbling the grass, only twenty yards away. Dort's skill with the throwing spear made archery absolutely novel as it was, come easy to him. Without a moment's hesitation and with perfect confidence, he drew back and then loosed his arrow. The shaft sprang from the bow, and the flint head striking the hare fairly in the middle of the body, passed through and penetrated the turf beyond. For Dort thenceforth, the throwing spear was an obsolete weapon of the past. So came archery into Britain.

"WHAT has come of your sister who used to sell flowers about here?" asked a philanthropic old gentleman of a newsboy.

"Oh, she can't come out—she's got a baby."

"What is her husband?" pursued the old boy.

"Garn!" she ain't got one? replied the urchin; "she ain't old enough.

"I UNDERSTAND," said the manager "that you have had a half-day off to attend your aunt's funeral?" "Yes, sir," replied the junior clerk. "And did all go well at the final ceremony?" asked the kindly employer. "Oh, it wasn't the final, sir. It was only the semi-final," said the absent-minded youth.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL HACKETT, of the Royal Dublin Fusiliers, tells this story: "A squad of raw recruits were being drilled by irritable drill sergeant The command, 'Double!' was given, and all the men obeyed with the exception of one, who remained standing still and gazing vacantly around 'Why, man haven't you learnt anything about doublin yet?' roared the irate sergeant A gleam of intelligence passed over the face of the recruit as he replied, 'No sir; I'm a Cork man.'

HE: "Does your father know I love you?"
She: "No. He isn't very well, and we're kept it from him."

"WHY, you couldn't even dress me!" said she.

"Er-no," replied her embrassed swain, "but you could have a maid."

Depôt of Museum and Naturalists' supplies with Department for Ornamental Taxidermy, Feather Pictures of Birds, Skin Dressing, etc.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

PROPOSED CHANGES AT THE "ZOO."

BEFORE this article appears in print the Zoological Society of London may have already decided the issue of a most important crisis in its hitherto successful career. For some time past it has been known that the Society's house in Hanover Square is in a bad state of repair, and is, in fact, unfitted to sustain the great weight of the huge library on the first floor. To put the house in a thorough state of repair, so as to make it fitted for its purpose, would entail the expenditure of a very large sum of money, which, if it did not actually cripple the Society, would at all events very seriously interfere with the progress of building in the gardens, for which there is such urgent need.

Accordingly, the Council, with the Duke of Bedford at its head, has unanimously decided to recommend the Society to sanction the sale of the Hanover Square house, and the erection in the gardens of buildings suitable for the library and offices, with a room for the fortnightly scientific meetings hitherto held in the establishment in the centre of London. By such a sale a very large amount of money, either in a lump sum or in the form of an annuity spread over a certain number of years would at once become available. A considerable proportion of this sum would, of course, be absorbed in the erection of buildings in the gardens to replace the house in Hanover Square; but a very handsome amount would be available for much-needed improvements in the garden buildings and general establishment. About £18,000 would, in fact, be expended on a new house and library in the garden which would leave (from the office already secured by the Council for the Hanover Square house) another £12,000 available for new animal-houses.

In the proposal for submission to the annual meeting to the Society, the Council has very justly and honestly set out the advantages and the disadvantages which would result from the suggested change. As regards the disadvantages and objections, the Council recognises that the transference of the library to the gardens would make it less convenient for some fellows who consult it personally. On the other hand, it will be more convenient for the many fellows who are accustomed to take a scientific interest in the living collection, and it would leave undisturbed the growing utility of the library to those workers who would have books sent them. It is recognised also, that the holding of the scientific meetings at the gardens will be less convenient to certain fellows, and it is proposed, therefore, to make special arrangements for the conveyance of fellows after the evening meetings to a convenient tube-station, and it is expected that meetings held at the gardens can be made more interesting. But Council recognised that until there is more direct communication with Regent's Park, the holding of evening scientific meetings at the gardens must be experimental. If the experiment prove unsuccessful, there are many ways of arranging to obtain the use of a meeting room for the bi-monthly evening meetings.

As regards the advantages, it would be possible to carry out immediately a number of much-needed improvements, and to make use of the large area of new ground obtained in 1907. The close association of the central offices with the gardens would facilitate the work of the officers of the Society, and add to the efficiency of the administration. Although their scheme is prepared on the basis of not anticipating an increase of revenue, the Council regards it as certain that continual progress with improvements would lead to a rapidly increasing revenue. The Council's scheme provides for an increase in the expenditure on the scientific objects of the Society, which, it is hoped, might begin in 1911, but if the expectation of increase of revenue are fulfilled, the Council would be able to make much larger contributions to the scientific objects of the Society, such as the adequate illustration of the publications, assistance to zoological exploration by maintaining zoological collectors, and otherwise, and scientific work at the gardens.

The presence of the library at the gardens would be of great advantage to those fellows who are interested in the animals and their natural history, and in the case of new arrivals of rare species it would much facilitate there identification by the official staff at the gardens. One other objection to the scheme still remains to be mentioned. Owing to the tenure on which the Society rents the gardens it is obvious that capital spent on buildings cannot rank as an asset in the balance-sheet, and in the meantime the Society's balance of assets, although still very large, would be diminished. The Council's scheme provides, however, for the rapid replacement of the capital involved, and it is to be noted that precisely the same technical objection applies to all money spent on buildings and enclosures at the gardens. But the Council is well assured that the security of tenure will increase with every step taken to improve the gardens, and is confident of undisturbed possession so long as the Society adequately fulfils its responsibilities.

This, we take it, from a business point of view, is by far the most serious of the anticipated objections; and we confess to being somewhat surprised to find such a business man as the present Secretary recommending that because a large part of Society's building-investment cannot rank as an asset, therefore recommending that a further big step should be made in the same direction. It is throwing good money after bad with a vengence.

Nevertheless, although its recommendations cannot be supported from the point of view of strict and sober finance, we are inclined to think that, taking all circumstances into consideration, the Council has acted wisely in the proposal it has made to the fellows.

As regards the fellows themselves, we understand that there is very considerable difference of opinion among them on the subject; and that there are some who assert that the carrying out of the Council's proposal would spell ruin to the Society from the scientific point of view; this, however, it may be hoped, is exaggerated pessimism. Nevertheless, it cannot be denied, as indeed is admitted in the Report of the Council, that there is a tendency at the meetings of the Society even now to subordinate the scientific to the popular element. Such a tendency requires very careful treatment; for while the original object of the Society was to promote the study of zoology, it has to be taken into consideration that a very large proportion of the fellows now subscribe to the Society for the sake of the gardens alone.

On the whole, we are inclined to take the side of the Council, the members of which must know more about the needs of the Society generally than the fellows who are not in that body.

The Report for 1908 is a fairly satisfactory document, although there was a falling off of nearly 5,000 in the number of persons who passed the toll-gates, as compared with 1907, which means a considerable decrease in revenue. This, however, may perhaps be accounted for by the unusual number of other out-door attractions in London during the past year.

The feature of 1908, so far as the gardens are concerned, was an exhibition of Australian and New Zealand animals. This collection was, however, of strictly zoological rather than popular interest, and did not contain any animals that would naturally attract great attention. In the earlier part of the season, the Franco-British Exhibition was a formidable rival attraction; and it cannot be said that this collection was so successful as a public attraction as the Prince of Wales' Indian collection in 1906. It made, however, an important addition to the Society's collection, and renewed friendly relations between the Society and kindred bodies in a distant part of the Empire. The Council have decided to continue their scheme of biennial exhibitions from different parts of the British Empire, and hope to arrange for the formation of a collection from South Africa to be exhibited at the gardens in the summer of 1910.

In co-operation with Sir William Ingram, and with the assistance of the Government of the Commonwealth of Australia, the Society arranged for the formation of a collection of birds-of-paradise. The collectors employed were Mr. W. Stalker and Mr. C. B. Horsbrugh, who were so successful that the Society was able to exhibit in the course of the summer sixty-one birds-of-paradise, belonging to eleven species. The Council desires to record the thanks of the Society to the Government of the Commonwealth, and to Sir William Ingram, who was elected an honorary life-fellow, and on whom the Society's silver medal was conferred in the course of the year.

In conclusion, we may express the hope that the ancient and popular Society will come out of the crisis through which it is now passing with renewed strength and vigor.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE prospects for the coming Monsoon Races are excellent, especially in the Jumping Department in which a lot of really good ones will be engaged. In addition to Mulison, Amazon and Pallas, whose schooling we mentioned last week, we learn that Bridge Knight, Colina and Creel are all being put over the sticks. W. Bloss, who has charge of these three, was riding them over some of the small fences in Milton Park last Sunday morning and they all seem to be taking to the game well. Mr. Galstaun also proposes to put his recent purchase Eruption into the Hurdling Division.

THE prospectus of the Monsoon Meetings has already been prepared by Captain Hughes and was considered at a meeting of the Stewards on Tuesday night and we understand that the same will be in the hands of owners very shortly.

A MEETING of the Stewards for the Tollygunge Gymkhanas was held at the Turf Club on Saturday evening The Stewards in addition to the Committee of the Club will be Messrs. E. C. Apostolides, R. H. A. Gresson, A. G. H. Macpherson, H. Stokes and E. A. Woodhouse. Mr. R. A. C. Pugh will officiate as Clerk of the Scales, and we believe Mr. K. Campbell will undertake the duties of Starter. The first meeting has been fixed for 12th June, weather permitting, that is to say, if there is any rain before that date to make the going possible : four meetings have definitely been decided upon, and if sufficient inducement offers the club will probably hold a fifth. The success of these Gymkhanas in former years fully warrants the hope that it will be possible to increase the number of meetings.

THE Tollygunge Club are now the possessors of three starting gates so that it is to be hoped that the long and tedious delays at the post, which were the great blot on these meetings last summer, may to a great extent be obviated.

REGINA, who did so well in the Gymkhanas last summer, has been purchased by Mr. Barton and is being trained for the coming Tollygunge meeting by W. Bloss. She is pretty good over the short distances and is fairly certain to pick up a couple of races again.

W. BUTLIN, the well-known steeplechase jockey who was in charge of Mr. J. D. Scott's stables last season, has gone up to Dehra Dun in charge of Dennie Norton's horses until the latter returns from Australia. Butlin will come back here for the Monsoons and is open to take any horses to keep in Dehra, get ready and bring down here to train during the coming Monsoons. His address is Belle Ville, Lytton Road, Dehra Dun.

THERE were very few ponies which came up for measurement yesterday morning. Piper had a very nice little chestnut English mare called Violet, who is by Oraflambe out of Gold Medalist. She went 14-1¾ for life. Mr. Cowper's Lionel also obtained his life certificate, this time again going 14-2. The other three ponies were grey Arabs, the property of Mr Goculdass, which had been sent over to Dr. Adams to get measured. The best of them was a beautifully shaped one called Grey Rose, a big pony who is very lucky indeed to get 14-0½. The date for the next measurement is not yet fixed, but will probably be in about a fortnight's time, and will be arranged to suit the convenience of owners having ponies ready to come up. The following is the complete list of ponies measured :—

Lieutenant W. S. Ashman's ch e m Violet, by Gold Medalist—Oraflambe, 6yrs., 14-1¾.
Mr. Cowper's ch aus g Lionel, by Heolantes, Dam by Antoros, 6yrs., 14-2.
Mr. Goculdass' gr a h Najmi, 6yrs., 13-3¾.
Mr. Goculdass' gr a h Hazza, 4yrs., 13-3¾.
Mr. Goculdass' gr a h Grey Rose, 6yrs., 14-0½.

WE hear from Bombay side that both Lady Leslie and Evening Herald have missed measurement. Lady Leslie has failed to go 14-2 and will have to race among horses in future. This is a pity, as if fit and well she would have been one of the few ponies who could have made the redoubtable Hughie gallop and would have lent added interest to the 14-2 races. She was never really herself when racing last season. Evening Herald has gone over 14 hands and will have to race among the 14-2's in future. This, however, was not surprising, as she is a very big pony and was lucky to get the lower measurement last season.

THE Maharaja of Jodhpur has presented the race stewards at Meerut with a £50 cup annually for a race which His Highness wishes should be on the lines of the Grand Military at Sandown.

LAUGHING MIRROR's win in the Great Metropolitan Stakes at the Epsom Spring Meeting on Tuesday was a bit of an upset. The mare's previous performances have not been very brilliant. As a two-years old she ran five times unplaced : last year she fulfilled six engagements, her best being third to Whyte Melville out of a field of four in the Maiden Plate, 1 mile, at Birmingham in November. This season she has appeared on four occasions running, second to Enthusiastic Lad in the Thursby Selling Handicap, 1½ miles, at Liverpool on the 26th ultimo.

WE publish in our Turf columns to-day a circular elaborating a scheme for the formation of an Upper India branch of the Calcutta Turf Club. The circular points out that up-country racing is not in a healthy condition and it is believed that it would be possible to surmount the existing drawbacks by the C. T. C. delegating its authority in the matter of up-country race meetings to an Upper India branch of the Turf Club, to be constituted, with headquarters at Lucknow.

THE Annual General Meeting of the Rangoon races was held at the race stand on the 14th instant and was well attended. The accounts for the past year and the budget for the present year were discussed and passed. Attention was called to the difference between the amount realised from entries, viz., Rs. 29,335 and that spent in stakes, viz., Rs. 89,057, and it was suggested that the present practice of entries being made long before the meetings be discontinued. This would be a great relief to owners whose ponies were found out of condition when the meetings were close at hand.

The Meeting then proceeded to the election of Stewards for the coming year. There were nine nominations, of whom the following six were elected : Mr. Justice Robinson, Mr. W. N. Baines, Mr. L. Chin Tsong, Mr. H. P. Todd-Naylor, Mr. C. Stewart, and Mr. E. C. Shuttleworth.

THE prospectus for the Poona races has just been issued and shows that the meeting this year will be divided into two parts. The first comprising four days will be held on 4th, 8th, 11th and 18th September and the second meeting, three days, on 25th and 29th September and 2nd October. This allows a week for the heavy rain which usually interrupts and spoils some of the big events.

The entries for the races close as follows :—First Meeting—first entries, 27th July ; second entries,

Another important item of the prospectus is the increase made in the place money of most races. A number of the important events also show an increase in first money. The Trial Plate will this year be worth Rs. 5,000 to the winner, Rs. 1,200 to the second, and Rs. 600 to the third; Poona Plate and Poona Derby, Rs. 4,000 to the winner, Rs. 1,000 to the second, and Rs. 500 to the third; Poona Grand Annual, Rs. 2,500 to the winner, Rs. 700 to the second, and Rs. 350 to the third; Aga Khan's Cup, Rs. 6,000 and Cup to the winner, Rs. 1,500 to the second, and Rs. 750 to the third; Governor's Cup, Rs. 4,500 to the winner, Rs. 1,000 to the second, and Rs. 500 to the third; Western India Stakes, Rs. 8,000 to the winner, Rs. 2,000 to the second, and Rs. 1,000 to the third; and Ganeshkind Plate, Rs. 4,000 to the winner, Rs. 1,000 to the second, and Rs. 500 to the third. Other races have similar increases all round.

A new event for Arabs, called the Arab Champion Plate, distance one mile and three-quarters, has been introduced this year and will be run on the first day. The Stakes are Rs. 3,000 to the winner, Rs. 700 to the second, and Rs. 350 to the third.

The latest addition to Hon. Mr. A. A. Apcar's string is the Australian three-year-old Hyman, a bay colt by Havoc—Bridal Morn. Hyman ran twice as a two-year-old winning on both occasions—the Limerick Handicap 6 furlongs at Inverell, carrying 9st. 5lb. and the Picnic Handicap 6 furlongs at Inverell, carrying 10st. 9lb. Last year he appeared twice and scored two further victories—the Tramway Handicap 6 furlongs at Newcastle in September, carrying 6st. 7lb. and the Flying Handicap 6 furlongs at Randwick, in October, carrying 7st. 8lb. Last Monday Hyman won the Doncaster Handicap, 1 mile at the A. J. C. Autumn Meeting, carrying 7st. 13lb.

The Sydney Cup, run on Easter Monday at the A. J. C. Meeting at Sydney, resulted in a win for Messrs. P. and W. Mitchell's ch c Trafalgar, by Wallace—Grand Canary. Mr. P. Hefferman's Ungarie was second, and Mr. H. Gordon's Didus third.

The horse is a strict vegetarian, and the most particular animal about the quality of his food known in domestic life, says Rural World. His taste and sense of smell are acute, and he will almost famish before he will partake of tainted food or water. He is a creature of strong muscles, and shows a constitution of iron when put to tests of endurance, but for all these qualities his is a delicate physical makeup in certain ways and easily upset in health by ill treatment. Heat him up and let him stand in a draught and pneumonia or at least a bad cold will result; nag and bully him and he will steadily lose flesh, no matter how well fed; work him immediately after a hearty meal and he is liable to indigestion and colic; give him poor care and he will prove weak in the performance of his duties, and his useful life will be shortened. On the other hand, the delicacy noted in him will turn just as quickly in response to good treatment. Good food, sanitary stabling and kind handling will tell their story on almost any horse in an incredibly short time. A thin and abused horse under a new and kindly master who is a real horseman can be made to pick up flesh at the rate of a pound a day till he reaches a normal state and with his flesh there will be a return of spirit, and, best of all, a return of respect for that certain elongated, two-legged creature on whom the horse in slavery must rely for care.

The Gujerat Pigsticking Cup was won by Mr. H. Medlicott of Hodson's Horse, his second victory in this event, having previously carried off the trophy in 1907. Medlicott beat Vernon, the winner of the Kadir Cup, in the second chances and the final lay between Forbes with one chance and Medlicott with two, the latter winning. He rode two ponies, the South African gelding Result II and the waler mare Miladie. The Salmon Pony Cup was won by Colonel Forbes on Multiform, who beat Mr. Vernon on Fire Plant in the final. Our full report is not to hand, but we hope to publish it next week.

Lord Carlyon, Mr. M. Goculdas' latest importation from Australia, met with an extraordinary adventure while being landed from the French liner During the disembarking process by some unaccountable manipulation the horse box containing the racer and a syce turned a somersault. There was consternation among the onlookers and the connections of the animal, but when the box was eventually brought to its original position both horse and syce were found uninjured, though the groom was considerably dazed.

Recently in England anglers were given an opportunity of seeing some gigantic trophies. At the National Trades Exhibition in Birmingham, was an exhibit of over 200 cases of preserved fish sent by the members of the Birmingham and District United Anglers' Association. Among these exhibits are a giant pike which weighed 41½lb. and which was caught in Loch Arroy, Ireland, a barbel of 8½lb., a roach of 2lb. 4oz. caught in the Thames, a tench of 5½lb., a trout 9lb., and a carp 10lb.

It appears that the big pike whose capture we referred to in our last issue was after all ignominiously caught in a drag-net. It seems that the shooters who rent Lord Wimborne's preserves on the Stour were anxious to reduce the number of pike, as the fish were very destructive to the young wild ducks. They therefore instructed their keepers to net the water, and it was during these operations that the big fish was caught.

A new weekly paper devoted exclusively to the Royal and ancient game, entitled "The Golfer" has made its appearance in London, under the editorship of Mr. Henry Leach. It is a dignified journal, as befits a sport possessing so many noteworthy traditions. The first number contains an article of considerable value and interest, by Mr. John L. Low, on that vexed question, the championship rota. He suggests that if the present system is to be abolished, the best thing to do is to appoint a committee of experts—players—who will make themselves thoroughly conversant with the merits of all the best courses, and construct a new rota covering four or five years. At the end of this period Mr. Low recommends a re-examination of the whole situation, and, if considered desirable, make another rota for a like number of years. There are many outstanding features of "The Golfer," apart from its series of excellent illustrations, which should make it a welcome addition to golf literature.

To discover if cholera and typhoid can be spread by fishes, MM. Remlinger and Norris have been experimenting with golden carp, and have reported their results to the French Academy. The fish were placed in water containing bacteria and cholera germs, and it was found that the fish harboured the germs, but that these were destroyed in cooking. There would thus be no danger of infection in eating cooked fish. It appears that fish may carry contamination from a river to its tributaries, and this may account for cases of epidemics spreading up streams, as has been noted by experiments with sources of infection.

The resignation of Major Kenneth Maclaren from the position of manager and official umpire of the Hurlingham Polo Club is officially announced. Major Maclaren, an excellent polo player himself, was equally successful as an umpire, thanks to his intimate knowledge of the game, and his resignation is a matter for regret to the players, among whom he was exceedingly popular.

A London correspondent writes on the 28th ultimo, "Every dog has his day, and this is the day of the big dog. At the Crystal Palace to-day are nearly two hundred and fifty dogs, great Danes, and borzois, a record number in an English show. Though a huge brute almost as big as a Shetland pony and of fierce aspect, the great Dane is a mild and docile gentleman, who allows himself to be led by a girl whom he could carry away in his jaws.

As a watch-dog the Dane has his qualities, for, gentle as he may be, he has all the doggish suspicion of the prowling person whom his instinct tells him is no friend of the family. Yet he must be reckoned among household pets, for the sportsman in English woods no longer follows game that calls for the rush of the great Dane into action.

If we must have the pet dog it is a healthy sign that these big fellows are favourites again. From nose to tail the great Dane stands for life and vigour and for the old companionship between man and his fellow of the chase. Neverthless £150 is to-day the price of Boy Bob or for Viola, champions both, while rumour speaks of twenty times that sum being refused for one of the wretched Chinese curs whose only qualities are their rarity and their pampered feebleness.

The Borzoi, that hairy gaint from the Russian steppes, is another big dog who is often to be seen circling about his owner in the London parks. If we must have an exotic dog, let us have the borzoi, a noble and mysterious creature whom we shall understand as easily as a Russian problem-novelist. To see him leap and run is a sight to rouse in the Hyde Park idler a touch of the ancestral hunter."

It is announced that Gotch, the champion wrestler and eye-gouger, signed articles in Chicago to meet Hackenschmidt in January next at Melbourne for a purse of £2,600. Well, it is long time to look forward to and experience of the ways of star wrestlers teaches us to regard nothing as really fixed up till the men are actually on the mat.

The Cheshire Regiment have just held a three days' Novices Boxing Tournament at Secunderabad. The fighting was very poor on the opening night but improved on the following evenings, the sport witnessed in the final contests being really good. The Rev. C. F. Giles, Chaplain of Trimulgherry, officiated as Referee on the first two nights, Major England, R.F., taking his place on the 14th instant. Quartermaster Sergeant Old, Gymnastic Staff, and Staff Sergeant Taylor, Supply and Transport Corps, were the judges. Results:—Boys.—Won by Boy Smith: Bantams.—Won by Bandsman O'Brien: Light Weights.—Won by Lance-Corporal Ems. Heaviers.—Won by Private Chiltern.

The fight between Jack Johnson and Sam Langford, fixed for 24th May at the National Sporting Club, is off. A Morning Leader New York telegram announces definitely that the champion declines to keep this engagement on the ground that the purse offered is too small.

Gunner Moir has lost the Heavy Weight Boxing Championship of England. At the National Sporting Club on Monday night he was beaten in one round by Ian Hague of Yorkshire. The fight was for £1,300.

The Annual General Meeting of the Indian Football Association was held on the 16th instant, Mr. Maurice Remfry presiding. The reports and accounts were passed and the following office-bearers elected for the coming season.

President:—H. H. the Lieutenant-Governor. Vice-President:—Mr. J. H. Fyffe. Joint Honorary Secretaries and Treasurers:—Messrs. P. C. Margrett and S. N. Bose.

The representatives of the following clubs will constitute the Council:—Calcutta, Customs, Dalhousie, Y. M. C. A., Caledonia, Gordons, Sova Bazar, Nationals, Wanderers and St. Xavier's.

A contemporary states that there is every likelihood of a strong protest being made by the leading European and Indian clubs of Calcutta against the illegal contitution of the new Council of the Indian Football Association elected at their last Annual General Meeting convened by Mr. A. R. C. Miller (and not by Mr. Walker) who was declared ineligible for the office of the Joint Honorary Secretary of the I.F.A. As his election has been declared illegal owing to his not being a member of an affiliated club, all his actions in the said capacity are to be evidently null and void with retrospective effect. The proceedings of the last meeting and all issues arising therefrom should, we are informed, be quashed.

The Mohan Bagan and Sova Bazar Football Clubs are anxious to take part in the "A" Division of the Calcutta Football League this year and have applied to the League Committee for permission. They point out that since the inauguration of the League their clubs have been deprived of the advantage of playing any senior European team to the serious detriment of the quality and form of their players.

The R. A. Bengal Football Cup Tournament, played at Meerut, was won by "S" Battery, R.H.A., from Lucknow. They beat the 66th Battery, R.F.A., by a goal to nil in the final. "S" Battery has a good football record in India, having won the Madras Football Cup in 1906, 1907 and 1908, and previously having annexed the same trophy in 1896, 1897 and 1898 when, on a former turn of foreign service.

The annual general meeting of the C. F. League was convened by Mr. D. L. Walker on the 13th instant in the C. F. C. tent, but owing to there having been no agenda of business and regular notice for the proposed alterations to the rules of the Competition, the meeting was declared irregular and adjourned till Monday, the 19th instant. On that date there was a fair attendance of the representatives of the First Division League Clubs. But on the motion of Mr. P. C. Margrett of the Rangers' Club, the meeting was again unanimously declared to be null and void, as no notice of this annual meeting had been sent to the second division teams. The meeting thus came to an end after a prolonged debate and was postponed till to-morrow evening.

A sub-committee then sat to consider the proposed amendments, additions and alterations to the League rules. We publish the League fixtures for 1909 in our Football columns.

At the annual meeting of the Y. M. C. A. Football Club held on Wednesday last week, Mr. F. H. Reynolds was elected Captain, Mr. H. Gay Vice Captain, Mr. S. H. Richards Secretary, with Dr. Gray and Mr. P. Vanspall as committee.

A big riot took place at a football match at Glasgow last Easter day. The crowd, numbering sixty thousand, demanded an extension of time to settle a Cup tie. They rushed on to the field, tore up goal posts and nets, set fire to and burned down the payboxes and barricades, and cut the firemen's hose. Stones and knives were used and free fights were indulged in everywhere. Mounted Police charged the crowd with batons and succeeded in preventing them setting fire to the pavilion and stands. Fifty persons were injured, most of them policemen, by stones and bottles. The Scottish Association has decided to withhold the Cup owing to the riot and there will be no replay.

The Sirhind Annual Open Boxing Tournament will be held in Simla on 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th and 12th June. Further particulars will be published in due course.

The Murree Brewery Hockey Tournament was brought to a conclusion at Quetta on the 17th instant, when the South Wales Borderers beat No. 5 Mountain Battery in the final by two goals to one after a splendid game.

Heavy rain in Calcutta on Monday evening flooded all the hockey grounds and necessitated the postponement of the four opening matches in the Beighton Cup competition. The fixtures were re-arranged at a meeting of the Council of the Bengal Hockey Association held the same evening. We publish the revised list in our Hockey column.

The Northamptons and Lincolns, who were drawn together in the first round of the Bombay Aga Khan Football Tournament, played their match at Poona on the 17th instant, the Northamptons winning a fast game by 2 goals to nil.

A team of hockey players from Calcutta visited Chittagong during the Easter holidays and met the local team in two games. Calcutta won both games, the first by 8 goals to nil and the second by seven goals to nil. Chittagong entertained the visitors royally, and the members of the Calcutta team returned with many pleasant reminiscences of their short visit.

As will be seen by our special telegram two Amateur Athletic Association championships were decided last year. E. J. Webb, Herne Hill Harriers, repeating his victory of last year in the seven miles' walk and covering the distance in 25⅗secs. better time. His time last year was 53mins. 2⅝secs. The ten miles' run was won by A. E. Wood of the Essex Beagles in 52mins. 40secs. Wood has run very prominently at the cross country meetings in England during the past season. He won the Southern Championship by about 140 yards from J. A. Pearce of the Highgate Harriers, and was first in the International cross country race on the 20th ultimo. J. Bouin of France gave Wood, who was one of England's representatives, a great race and was only beaten by three yards.

Last month Arthur Lancaster, a young Brixton man who last year achieved athletic fame by swinging a blacksmith's hammer for twelve consecutive hours at the Crystal Palace, added to his laurels by beating the British record for ball-punching. He punched a 24oz. ball for fifteen hours continuously, thus surpassing by forty-three minutes the time made by John Norris at Liverpool, which had stood as a record since 1901.

Lancaster accomplished this rather senseless yet extraordinary feat of physical endurance at Monte Saldo's School of Physical Culture, Leicester-place, Leicester-square. He commenced his task at 8-30, and for several hours kept going at the average rate of 145 punches a minute. Ocasionally he would go away on a burst of 250 or 260 a minute, and so terrific was his fist work that three times he broke the rope of the ball and had to turn his attention to the one kept in reserve.

He used his head to the ball frequently in order to relieve his arms, but he did not keep this up long, as it was a punishing method with such a heavy ball. After completing ten hours Lancaster was still going strong, although the strain was evidently telling on him. He had lost about 6lb. in weight, his face was haggard, his eyes distended, and his feet swollen. And what of it when accomplished? The athletic crank endures and suffers much at times, but he is, on the whole, not a person to be encouraged.

The Australian cricketers recently in Colombo en route for England are the thirteenth team to visit the old country and the first which has been sent from the Commonwealth under the auspices of the International Board of Control, and marks a new departure in connection with the visits of Australian cricket teams to the motherland. So far as financial arrangements are concerned, there is not much difference from those of previous trips. The only notable exception is that a percentage of the takings will be paid to the board as a fund with which to carry on its operations. Four years have passed since an Australian Eleven went away, and this is the longest interval which has elapsed between these periodical visits. From 1878 until 1890, both inclusive, the trips were undertaken once every two years, and from the latter year until 1905 the period in each case was three years. Probably the length of time which has slipped by since the last combination went home accounts, in a great measure, for the new faces which the Englishmen will see. Seven only of the 15 playing members have visited England before in a representative capacity. The veteran, of course, is S. E. Gregory, who is now making his seventh journey, and is just double the age he was when he was first taken in 1890. The band will be under the captaincy of M. A. Noble, one of the finest cricketers the world has seen, both as a player and as a sportsman, and it is safe to say that the honour of Australia in the cricket field will be worthily upheld by the new leader. He is following in the footsteps of giants like Trott and Darling, but he is not expected to suffer in comparison. Mr. F. Laver is the manager, and he will have under his care the following players:—

From New South Wales.—M. A. Noble (captain), V. T. Trumper, S. E. Gregory, H. Carter, A. Cotter, A. J. Hopkins, W. Bardsley and C. G. Macartney.

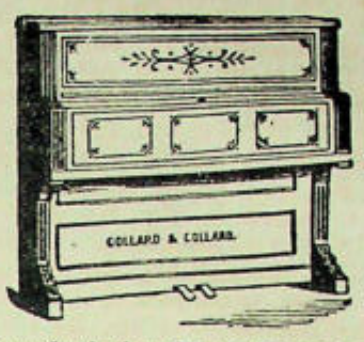
From Victoria.—P. A. McAlister (vice-captain), W. W. Armstrong, V. Ransford, and W. Carkeek.

From South Australia.—J. A. O'Connor and W. J. Whitty.

From Queensland.—R. J. Hartigan.

Of these Noble, Trumper, Gregory, Carter, Cotter, Armstrong, and Hopkins have previously played with Australian Elevens in England, and will, no doubt, prove valuable on account of their experience on English wickets; but much controversy has arisen over the question of the representative strength of the team. In the absence of C. Hill, D. R. A. Gehrs, and G. Hazlitt it cannot be said that the combination is the strongest the Common—wealth can put forward; but, notwithstanding these defects, the fights for supremacy between England and Australia will be fully worthy of the international standard. The batting perhaps may not be quite so strong as the eleven of 1905, but there is a greater variety in the bowling, which should make for all-round efficiency, and the fielding will not be below the high character which the Australians have won in this direction. So far as South Australia is concerned, its interest in the team is lessened by the fact that it has but indirect representatives in the combination.

In O'Connor and Whitty, however, it has adopted a couple of worthy sons, and cricket enthusiasts will watch with the keenest interest the doings of these two members. Noble and his men carry with them the mythical "ashes" which are associated with the tests between the two countries, and it will be no surprise if the captain brings them back with him on the return trip.



The following tables indicate the batting and bowling averages of the team in the Sheffield Shield contest of 1908-9:—

THAT fine cricketer and good sportsman Lord Dalmeny was married to Miss Dorothy Grosvenor at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, on the 15th instant Lord Dalmeny learned cricket at Eton and played vs. Harrow match at Lord's in 1900, scoring 52 : two years later he appeared in two matches for Middlesex. In 1904 he joined the Surrey team and was Captain on one or two occasions. The following year Lord Dalmeny accepted the captaincy and it would be difficult to over-estimate the value of his work for Surrey during his three years as leader. Taking office after the disastrous season of 1904 he at once put fresh spirit into the side, his personal influence over the professionals being very great. Thanks largely to his example the fielding improved out of knowledge. At the end of the 1904 season Surrey stood eleventh in the county championship, while when Lord Dalmeny resigned at the end of 1907 they were fourth on the list. Last year they stood third. Like his eminent father the Earl of Rosebery, Lord Dalmeny is a keen follower of racing and owns several race horses.

WE regret to announce the death on the 10th instant of Lieutenant R. D. C. Bell of the 11th Ammunition Column. He had been bitten by a tiger and death was due to blood poisoning.

THE inhabitants of the district round Joynugger have recently suffered considerable loss and annoyance great harm by the ravages of tigers. Two men have been carried off beside a number of cattle. Here is a chance for Calcutta sportsmen. Joynugger is 32 miles from Calcutta and is easily reached. By train to Magura Hât Station, E. B. S. Railway. Southern Section, thence by "dug—out" to Joynugger. The whole journey occupying less than four hours.

VERY seldom do much plain traces of a game-eating tiger come to light in Singapore as those revealed on Saturday, says the Singapore Free Press of the 30th March. "A tracker came in on that day to one of our local shikaris with the news that a tiger had crossed the Mandai-rd about the 12½ mile (between Selitar and the Bukit Timah-rd.) A visit to the spot showed that the tiger had pulled down a large deer that had evidently been grazing quietly in the rubber patch bordering the road, probably early in the morning. The spoor of the tiger was discernible where he had first stalked and then sprung on the deer at the edge of the undergrowth. He dragged the carcase a short distance away into the jungle, where he had a good feed, tearing off the hind quarters and picking it to the bone, and dragging the remainder through the jungle where he lay down. Neighbouring jungle was beaten, but Stripes had evidently sneaked off unobserved. Unfortunately the remains of the deer, quite fresh, were carried off by the beaters, so that all chance of the tiger remaining in the neighbourhood was spoiled."

London Week by Week.

Friday, 2nd April 1909.

THINGS are at last happening. The week has not been quite so unproductive of events worth noting as some we have lately experienced. Those interested in the turf are beginning to live again with the opening of the flat-racing season which was celebrated by a really good Lincoln meeting, full details of which you will find further on. We have had some strenuous electioneering work at Croydon. A censure debate has livened up things a bit in the House of Commons. The first Aero show has been held. To-morrow we boat race, and to-day we definitely decide that Spring has come.

IT has entered appearance about a fortnight behind its normal date, but at the present rate of development this handicap will soon be made good. Too soon, according to a gardening friend who fears it may injure the prospects of fruit-growers: but there, if some section of the British public didn't have real or imaginary cause for grumbling one would be justified in concluding that the millennium had arrived. The Spring feathered migrants are nearly all here, an unusually previous swallow has been seen, that sprightly and distinctive little fellow the wheatear, who is usually in the van of the immigration, is reported on the south coast, and, after all, though the lilac and the almond may be in bud and the flowers in bloom, it is the coming of the first flight of homing warblers which tells us the time when "the young man's fancy lightly turns" is with us at last.

"NAVYNERVES", or Dreadnought on the brain, is the prevailing malady; it has put influenza into a back seat. Britain's command of the seas must be maintained at any cost, the public clamour for an assurance that immediate steps will be taken to see that this remains unchallenged, and in the debate on the vote of censure in the Commons last Monday night this was given by the Premier. The vote moved by Mr. Arthur Lee, a young military officer, was as follows.—

"That, in the opinion of this House, the declared policy of his Majesty's Government respecting the immediate provision of battleships of the newest type does not sufficiently secure the safety of the Empire."

The Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs made the following declaration.—

"A new situation for this country is created by the German programme, whether that programme is carried out quickly or slowly. When her programme is completed Germany will have a fleet of thirty-three Dreadnoughts. That fleet will be the most powerful which the world has ever yet seen."

Some more than usually eloquent speeches were delivered in the course of this debate and, on division, the motion suffered defeat by 353 votes to 135.

THE City of London in this connection has raised its voice and no uncertain one be it noted. At a packed meeting in the Guildhall last Wednesday, there was some fine oratory to which Mr. Balfour was a prominent contributor and the various resolutions demanding eight more Dreadnoughts were voted with practical unanimity. "That the first question for the nation to consider is the safety of the Empire"—so ran the first resolution, moved by Lord Brassey, and it was in support of this that Mr. Balfour made his earnest appeal to patriotism. "What we insist on," declared the speaker, "is immediate work." Two things were necessary—the country's plant should be increased to the height of our naval necessities, and it should be used. "You must build, build without delay, without hesitation, without waiting for contingencies." A new and disquieting situation, he pointed out, had arisen, and we could no longer wait till another Power had laid down its ship, in order to improve on the type. Finally, he declared that such a magnificent gathering would do much to retrieve a situation "which, though imperilled, I hope is not wholly lost", and much more in the same strain.

A GREAT Unionist victory was gained at Croydon on Monday when Sir Robert Hermon-Hodge was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Arnold Foster. He polled 11,989 votes, the Liberal candidate 8,041 and the Labour representative but 886, so the Unionist majority over the Liberal was 3,948, a result over which the Unionists make exceeding merry.

THE Aeroplane Exhibition at Olympia attracted a huge gate, and the promoters, I understand, are more than satisfied with this practical evidence of public interest in the show in particular and aeration in general. According to a leading expert in such matters "the show has been an enormous success, and it marks an important epoch in the history of the country. It is the starting point of a new industry, the dimensions of which will astound people before long. I am glad to see the nation is awaking to the importance of our being in the van as regards aerial navigation. The possibility of a visit from foreign airships has been taken too lightly. It must be remembered that twelve hours is all the time that would be required for a fleet of airships from the Continent to come over here and inflict damage which would be almost irreparable. That is no fantastic dream, but a plain statement of fact. We must be ready for such an eventuality, and the sooner we realise that the better."

Regarded from a commercial standpoint good business was done by aeroplane manufacturers, many machines were ordered, many enquiries were made and the intelligent foreigner—Japanese, American and Continental—was taking careful note of it all I observed. It was undoubtedly an amazingly interesting Exhibition; I wonder if the shade of that far-seeing old lady Mother Shipton was anywhere about, noting with satisfaction how near we now are to the fulfilment of yet another of her remarkable prophecies!

ANOTHER bright feature of the week is the proclamation of the historic fact that the War Office is the proud possessor of an expert in brandy tasting so gifted that he performs his functions blindfolded. It has hitherto been generally accepted belief that a blindfolded person could not distinguish between milk and sherry if put to a tasting test, but the specialising drink expert of the War Office shatters yet another childhood's illusions.

At the same time, we must not allow ourselves to become too optimistic. There is a dark side to the picture. The House of Commons has been defeated at chess. Whether anybody ever expected its members to be victorious at a game which demands some intellectual equipment is a matter for doubt, but the gloomy truth remains staring us in the face.

Then, again, the Grocer portentously informed us the other day that "very cheap eggs cannot be expected for several weeks to come." In view of the fact that we have just got through the important by-election at Croydon as noted earlier in this letter, and that we may ere long be electing again, a statement of this gravity cannot but bring feelings of alarm to the soul of any genuine patriot. The cheapest of all eggs is the electioneering ovum, and its absence at this critical juncture is a disconcerting indication of the depth of the apathy into which this country is at this moment plunged.

YOUR military readers especially will remember the case of that unpopular ex-Grenadier Guardsman Mr. Woods, who, some time ago, on the strength of the unfavourable reports made by Colonel Cavendish and Major Gathorne-Hardy, was called upon to resign the service by the Army Council. A somewhat sensational development has just taken place in connection with this action. I hear that Mr. Woods is now bringing a claim for £75,000 and £2,500 special damages against Mr. Haldane, General Sir Neville Lyttelton, General Sir Charles Douglas, Colonel Hadden, Mr. T. R. Buchanan, M. P., Sir Edward Ward—in fact, everyone who was a member of the Army Council at the time of Mr. Woods's removal. He also asks for a declaration that the defendants had no authority to deprive him of his position as an officer in the army.

In the Army Annual Bill just published, the Government have inserted a clause to transfer the powers of the Secretary of State and the Commander-in-Chief and Adjutant-General to the Army Council and to indemnify the members of the Council for action taken in the interim since their appointment.

This is regarded by a number of members on both sides of the House as an attempt to nonsuit Mr. Woods whose chief ground of action is that the Army Council acted ultra vires. The question will be raised in the House of Commons on Tuesday week, when the Army Annual Bill goes into Committee. A demand will be put forward for the deletion or such amendment of the clause as will not make it retrospective, and if the Government does not give way an attempt will be made by Ministerialists and members of the Opposition who are taking part in the movement to prevent the further progress of the Bill. The rejection of the Bill would mean that no money would be voted for the army next year.

FOR many days the theatres and most other places of amusement in London have experienced a sharp "slump," more severe than any they have felt for a long time. Almost every theatre in the West End has had a drop in receipts. The smaller audiences are attributed by some managers chiefly to bad weather, the epidemic of colds and influenza, and the influence of the Lenten season.

Since the end of the first week in February a more than usually large number of plays—compared with other corresponding periods—have been withdrawn. Several of these will be remembered as having enjoyed successful runs, but the majority had not the same good fortune, and during February and March no less than twenty-three pieces have been taken off.

Fresh attraction are, of course, in preparation for the good times which all theatres look forward to when Lent has passed and the season brings its thousands of visitors to London. Among these are "The Devil" (Adelphi), "Bevis" (Haymarket) "A Persian Princess" (Queen's), "The Chorus Lady" (Vaudevlle), "The Double Conquest" (Lyric), "The School for Scandal" (His Majesty's), a new musical play at the Shaftesbury and the Opening of the Grand Opera season at Covent Garden.

The National Theatre scheme seems to be going very strong. Its bona fides is beyond dispute, and even the most suspicious must feel satisfied when they read how the governing body is to be nominated by every public body of whom one has ever heard. There are one or two bodies who ought not to be excluded from this nomination game and who are justified in claiming to be allowed a say in the matter. Among these one may safely point to the Thames Conservancy, the M.C.C., the Water Rats, and the Committee of the Earlswood Aslyum for Idiots.

"Bevis" at the Haymarket is the only piece worth nothing this week. It is built on a very slender frame work, but it is full of laughs, though by no means up to Mr. H. H. Davies' best work. The piece really consists of much irrelevant talk about nothing. It is padding personified. The Marquis of Bewdley begins by wanting to marry Rachel Hopkins for her money. Rachel Hopkins begins by consenting to marry the Marquis of Bewdley because her parents are keen on the match. Presently each jibs at the arrangement, and eventually each comes to love the other without thought of wealth or social position. Really, that is all that it amounts to. Mr. Davies pads out his slender theme with customary cleverness. The love affair of Lord Herbert Penrose and Mrs Pym is skilfully introduced, and is amusing chiefly because Mrs Pym is played by Miss Lottie Venne. But this time the author has no vital, flesh, and blood, feminine character to introduce, such as has been the case with his recent plays written obviously with an eye on the particular talents of Miss Mary Moore, and in consequence even the nimbleness of his dialogue is a very slender proof to support three long acts.

Mr. A. E. Matthews lounges with caracteristic ease through the part of the Marquis of Bewdley—Bevis to his friends—and Miss Lottie Venne, Miss Henrietta Watson, Miss Nina Sevening, Miss Madge Titheradge, Mr. C. V. France, and Mr. C. M. Lowe figure prominently in the cast.

A celebrated novelist, at one time connected with India, lies so dangerously ill as I write that he has only a fighting chance, according to his doctors. Mr. Marion Crawford's first novel—"Mr. Isaacs"—was the result of his Simla experiences, the hero being a well-known and eccentric Hebrew jewel merchant and curio-dealer who is (or was, possibly, for I am not sure that he still lives) known to some of your readers. The strange personality of the plaintiff in the great Hyderabad diamond case suggested "Isaacs" to Mr. Crawford when he was a journalist at Simla and the book secured immediate fame for the writer. He was a rapid worker and since those days we have had some forty novels from his pen, some historical work and a play produced by Sarah Bernhardt. For nearly twenty-four years he has lived at Sorrento (Italy), where he now struggles bravely against a severe attack of bronchial pleurisy.

Those who have cycled or used to any extent the main road between London and Oxford will hear with a sigh that the famous old mail coach which used to do the journey, passing through Slough, Maidenhead, Reading and Wallingford—and had done it for nearly twenty years—pulled up at the end of its last journey on the 31st ultimo, its place being taken next day by a motor wagon.

Something of the old romance of the road lingered with this last of the horse coaches, for the guard had his weapon with him after the old fashion. Not, however, a blunderbuss with a brass bellmouth, but a serviceable revolver. During his last trips, however, this firearm had been taken from the guard and replaced by a truncheon and police whistle. The whistle, however, was never blown; the last of the highwaymen had left a business which might expose a gentleman of the road to the ignominy of having a mere police truncheon flourished before his horse-pistols.

The Vagrant.

An American who was on a visit to London rode on a 'bus to the City every morning where he had business to do with an Anglo-American firm. On the first journey he noticed from his usual seat behind the driver that on arriving at a certain corner the driver took out his big silver watch, dangled it to and fro a few times, and winked jovially at an individual who stood at the door of a shop. "Why do you do that?" the American asked. "Well," said the driver, taking his pipe from his mouth, "that's a little joke we 'as between us, bein' as we are old friends. You see, his father was 'anged."

Shikar.

A STORY IN SAND.

One evening as the sun was setting, a young tiger rose from his couch of grass beneath an overhanging clump of creeping cane, and after a stretch and a yawn, strolled down to a nullah hard by to drink. He was a fine specimen of his race, some nine feet in length, and as he stooped to drink, the mighty muscles of his shoulders swelling beneath his sleek and well kept skin told of a power that few beasts could hope to resist. The day had been hot, for it was the month of May, and there is very little breeze stirring in those dense and tangled forests of Assam. So he drank deeply, and then raised his head and gazed around. He was standing on the bank of a stagnant grass-green creek, which wound through the forest from some marshy land a few miles away to his left down to the river half a night's run to the right. It was now merely a lane of short green grass with pools here and there in which myriads of frogs lived, who each evening made the whole air vibrate with their ceaseless chattering over their various love affairs. A few white paddy-birds stood here and there at a respectful distance, watching with outstretched necks, the common enemy. A pair of huge hornbills passed overhead with slow and laboured flight; the quaint rustling swish of their wings clearly heard long after they had passed out of sight.

The sudden sharp bark of a kakur from the dark jungle on the opposite bank of the creek some thirty yards away roused the tiger from his reverie, and reminded him that he was hungry. His hunting had not been successful of late, and for three days he had not tasted food. Deer were not so plentiful now as they had been during the winter months; the gadflies which swarm in millions in these jungles as soon as the hot weather begins, had driven them away. He wished now that he had gone to the hills, as the majority of his kind had done a month ago, instead of being tempted to stay by the number of deer that the succulent green grass in this nullah had attracted all the winter. Life had been easy then. He had only had to follow the windings of the nullah till he found some sambhur or kakur busy feeding. The nullah was narrow, and it was easy to approach within striking distance without leaving the dense jungle on the bank.

He turned to bite at a leech that was creeping up his leg; when something moving to the right caught his eye, and made him sink down into the grass till nothing was visible but a dull brown streak, which might have been a fallen tree or a patch of naked earth. Some fifty yards away a railway crossed the nullah by a bridge. Something was moving along the path by the side of the metals. He watched intently, and in a few seconds a fine young bull buffalo crossed the open space, and vanished on the other side. This railway was a favourite run of the tiger; and many a mile had he run along this path, hunting for the deer which used to come out to feed where the jungle had been cut and burnt beside the line. He had often seen buffaloes that had strayed from the neighbouring villages feeding along the line. But he had never yet attacked them; for the Assam buffalo, whose father or grandfather is often some wild bull that joined the herd of tame ones when feeding in the jungle, is an animal well able to take care of itself. Once when he was young his mother had killed a young buffalo calf that had strayed from the herd; but before the life was out of it, the herd had winded the marauders, and charging in had driven them off their prey. He still remembered the glimpse of lowered heads and mighty tossing black horns bursting through the long grass which he had caught before his mother had told him to fly. The tigers had come back later, when the herd had gone, and had feasted on the fallen calf. But ever since that day he had had a dread of those quiet sleepy looking buffaloes almost as great as he had for the red dogs.

He lay quite still for a few seconds. Instinct warned him to leave the buffalo alone, but hunger drove him on. He would stalk the beast, and taking it unawares would get the fatal grip upon its throat before it was aware of the presence of the enemy. He rose, and silently crossing the nullah disappeared into the darkness of the forest on the other bank. The ground was strewn with dry leaves and sticks, which under any other feet would have signalled an enemy's approach from fifty yards away. But he was a past master in the art of treading silently. He did not walk on tip-toe as foolish mortals do when they wish to walk quietly. He planted his feet down flat and square, and when a leaf began to crackle beneath, the foot descended so slowly, that though the leaf was ground to powder by his great weight, a faint rustle audible only for a few yards was the only sign that thirty stone of flesh and bone was moving through the jungle.

Soon he come to the forest edge, and stopped to watch the coveted buffalo. It was walking slowly along beside the line, stopping every now and then to feed on some tempting bit of grass, or to dislodge with horns and tail the swarm of gadflies, which hovering like bees above it descended on either flank immediately the tail ceased lashing for an instant. It was a huge beast with massive far spreading horns tapering to points as sharp as needless. The tiger, however, his hunger sharpened by the sight, regarded it only as his evening meal. The wind was right, and a glance at the lie of the ground sufficed to shew him the best method of attack. Some forty yards further down the line was a shallow cutting with banks four or five feet high; while clumps of high elephant grass, which had half escaped from the fire when the jungle by the line had been burnt, afforded splendid cover for a stalk.

He vanished into the jungle again, and a few minutes later a shadow that hardly seemed to move, so slowly did he crawl, left the forest opposite the cutting, and began to cross the twenty yards of open ground between the edge of the jungle and the cutting. So flat did he crouch as he went that it seemed as if it were a flat greyish board instead of a large tiger that kept sliding, sliding nearer and nearer to the edge of the bank. At last he reached the brink, and drawing up his hind legs under him, and choosing a firm place for his feet to grip upon, he lay flat beside a clump of grass, and waited for the buffalo to come. Absolutely still he lay, and only the spasmodic twitching of the last few inches of his tail shewed that he was alive. The buffalo came slowly on, all unconscious of its danger. When it was some five yards off, the tiger's claws sprang from their ensheathing pads and bit deeply in the crumbling soil.

The moment had arrived. The buffalo was now directly opposite the tiger, and only some two yards distant. With a low coughing growl the tiger sprang upon the buffalo's neck, and his claws bit deep into the yielding flesh. He had been quick, but the buffalo was quicker still,—or perhaps it was luck that his horn lay between those terrible teeth and the throat they sought. With a mighty toss of his head the buffalo tore the tiger from his hold, and flung him back into the grass he had just left. It was a few seconds before the tiger recovered himself, and by this time the buffalo had broken into a lumbering gallop, and was some twenty yards away. With a fierce growl the tiger sprang down into the path, and rushed in pursuit. All his fighting instincts were aroused, he was no longer the crafty animal hunting for his food, but a furious incarnation of rage thirsting for battle. In an instant he had caught up the buffalo, and had sprung upon his back, and teeth and claws sank deeply in. The buffalo stumbled under the blow, but the side of the cutting saved him from the fall which would have placed him at the tiger's mercy. He regained his feet, and galloped madly forward with the tiger on his back. Then he paused, and lunged backwards with his terrible horns. The point of one caught the tiger on the shoulder, and sinking deeply in forced him to loose his hold. Next second he was hurled sprawling on his back in the dust, and the buffalo had resumed his flight. Blood was now sprinkled freely on the buffalo's track, and the tiger also as he ran left a bright red mark where his left forefoot touched the ground.

Again and again did the tiger rush, but he could not again get home. Each time his quarry was ready for him, and turned to meet him. Again and again he had to stop to avoid certain death on the points of those lowered horns. For a quarter of a mile the running fight continued; along the track, then up one bank, and then up the other. The gravel was torn up and thrown for yards by the hoofs of the flying buffalo and the claws of the tiger. The smell of the blood spurred the tiger on, but it was of no avail. He had met his match, and at last gave up the pursuit, and limped painfully back to his grassy nullah, leaving a trail of blood from his wounded shoulder behind. This was the story, I, the hunter, read one day in the sand by the side of the railway line. It was written as clearly in Nature's book as it is upon this sheet of paper. As I stood and looked upon this record of the struggle, I felt that I would have given much to have been permitted to see such a fight between two of God's grandest creatures.

A NORWEGIAN PATTERN OF AUTOMATIC SHOT GUN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,— Automatic shot guns have met with considerable opposition in England, some people looking on them as too murderous for purposes of fair sport. It is difficult, however, to know how much of the hostile criticism to take seriously; for those who hold that a pair of hammerless ejectors and a loader, are fair and sporting adjuncts, would find it hard to make out their case against a gun, which after all only does automatically, what has hitherto been carried out by a hired assistant. The Browning Automatic 12-bore, though somewhat heavy and unusually shaped, works efficiently and well, as I am able to say definitely from the practical experiences of a friend, who regularly uses one of these weapons. The new automatic to which the heading of this letter refers, is a Norwegian production, and the manufacturers aim at supplying sportsmen with a repeating shot gun of lighter weight, and better form and balance, than any hitherto on the market.

The gun is called the "Normal Automatic Shot Gun", and is on the Sjogrin system, quite different in principle from other automatics. The Normal gun carries five cartridges, one in the chamber, the other four in the tubular magazine. The price is about £12, and the weight seven pounds.

The action is as follows: The barrel and stock are a fixture without relative movement between them during the working of the mechanism. The breech is closed by a sliding bolt, and over this is a heavy bolt cover. On firing, the recoil moves the gun back, but the weight of the bolt cover and its consequent inertia, causes it to remain stationary. That is to say the result is that the gun itself slides back from under the bolt cover, leaving the latter behind. This backward motion of the gun compresses a spiral spring in front of the bolt cover. After being compressed the spiral spring naturally reasserts itself, and drives the bolt cover back again over the bolt: during this reverse motion, the bolt cover unlocks the bolt, and carries it back, opening the breech, throwing out the expended shell, and raising a fresh cartridge in line with the chamber. As the bolt cover runs back carrying the bolt along with it, a second spiral spring is compressed: this in reasserting itself serves to return the mechanism to the closed position, at the same time pushing the new cartridge in front of the bolt, into the chamber. There are then three distinct movements; first the recoiling gun leaves the bolt cover behind, next the bolt cover impelled by the recoil spring runs back after the gun, unlocking and opening the bolt in the process; and last, under the impulse of the closing spring, the parts are all returned to the closed and ready position.

The series of operations sounds lengthy, but as a matter of fact the mechanism works too quickly for the eye to follow its movements. The Normal Gun is made with either a choked barrel 28 inches in length, or a cylinder barrel 24 inches long. The usual length of stock is 14 3/8 inches, but it can be varied by having different thicknesses of heel plate.

Messrs. Moore and Grey are the London agents, and can furnish any further information, or arrange for a practical trial of the gun.

TESTIMONIAL FROM IR SAMUEL BAKER,
THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.
Newton Abbot, Devon

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

Honorary Secretary:—CAPT. A. CAMPBELL ROSS.

Saturday, 17th April 1909.

NOTWITHSTANDING that most people in the station have left for the Hills, Captain Campbell Ross, Honorary Secretary of the Gymkhana Races, succeeded admirably in getting a tolerably good card for this afternoon's races, which went off very pleasantly and successfully. There was a fairly good attendance, including several ladies, and the Band of the 119th Infantry played during racing intervals. A solitary bookmaker catered for punters, of whom there was a small ring, and there were several refreshment bars for thirsty and hungry people.

Sport began with a scurry for N. C. O.'s, half a dozen of them from the 14th King's Hussars competing and the winner turning up in Sergeant Goddard. Then came the Charger Stakes; for which there were five candidates, of whom Mr. Sykes' Starlight was expected to win, but she only ran second to Opal who was well ridden by Captain Ross. A Pony Scurry drew five starters, Clarendon being considered a safe investment, but here again the public were at fault, Tulloo getting home with a fair amount of money. Of the five that went out for the Brigade Plate, Truculence started a red hot favourite and fully justified the confidence placed in him. The Arab Scurry was a moral for Broadrib and Canter Home fully justified his name by winning the King's Plate, which was a great race. For the Tum Tum Stakes, the last race of the day, there were six starters, Truculence having been scratched as he had not complied with one of the conditions of the race (to be driven to the Course). The General was most fancied and Tulloo was again well supported. The race ended as they were placed by the bookies. No time was taken.

Following are details:—

Sport in England.

(From The Home Papers.)

London, Friday, 2nd April 1909.

LIVERPOOL.

The sportsman who worries through the first week of the season generally feels—win or lose—glad that his toil and troubles are over, as backers and layers have earned a night's repose by the time London is reached on Saturday. Both at Lincoln and Liverpool class, which is generally looked for later in the season, has been well exploited, both meetings did well, and commanded staunch support. The Aintree gathering, appealing particularly to a cosmopolitan coterie, was a grand success, the presence of Lutteur III. in the Grand National bringing almost as strong a contingent of our lively neighbours across "La Manche" as Erin sent across St. George's Channel, and the attendance on the memorable Friday was a second best to the record of late years, which was reached when Rubio furnished a surprise last year. Details:—

Liverpool Hurdle Handicap—Of 500sovs. 2 miles.

SANDOWN.

It was generally anticipated that this military function would suffer in comparison with most postponed fixtures. From the moment it was found necessary to re-open the stakes with reduced prize money, interest generally was lessened, the events closing with much smaller entries all round. Nevertheless, the usual sporting spirit attached to the proceedings, and in the members' enclosure there was the usual representative muster, the soldiers, their wives, and their friends making a brave show, especially in the paddock, where many pretty costumes rendered the scene a particularly picturesque one in the sunlight. The attendance in Tattersall's the minor ring and in the park itself fell a lot below usual dimensions, a state of affairs not likely to occasion any surprise. With only one first favourite scoring throughout the afternoon backers experieced a rather bad time of it. Results:—

A pitiless downpour on Tuesday somewhat damped the ardour of the soldiers and their friends, and the attendance for the concluding stage of the meeting naturally showed a considerable falling off as compared with the previous day's muster. The weather could scarcely have been less inviting, while the going being very holding, the majority of the runners finished very tired; but backers, however, did a good deal better than on the previous day. Fortunately, after the second race the rain held up, and the racing for the remainder of the afternoon was conducted under leaden skies. Results:—

NEWBURY.

The sun did not get a chance here on Wednesday, and soon after racing commenced a regular Southdown fret worked up from the east, making the light very bad for glasses, especially at its culmination, when the big race was being run, but with rain coming to the rescue towards the finish, the air cleared again, and visitors were thankful for the shelter of the stands from start to finish. The going was soft and the runners were all out on this level, trying course. Results:—

TO CONQUER MALARIA.

Words of wisdom from a Physician's Pen.

"Those who conquer Malaria conquer the tropics" is a proverb with which every resident in India is familiar. While in consequence of the onward march of scientific achievement, this disease, so depressing in its onset, so devitalising in its effect, and so disorganising in its result to the whole system is better understood than it used to be, it is still, unhappily, exceedingly prevalent and is likely to continue until the conditions which produce it have been banished.

Most people know that while Malaria may take various forms it is due to a specific germ or microbe, which destroys the red corpuscles by which the oxygen of the air is carried by the blood to every part of the body to burn up its impurities. The destruction of these corpuscles produces the marked symptoms so characteristic of the disease,—the pale, sallow, earthy complexion, the mental and physical lassitude, the depression, the morbid thoughts and feelings, the aching muscles and the tender joints.

Bad as is all this, the result of Anaemia or poverty of the blood, as it is commonly called, which makes life a burden to the sufferer, it may go considerably farther until it produces that wasted and dangerous condition of the system doctors call "Cachexia."

For long, Quinine has been the sheet anchor of the physician, and in the acute stages it generally answers admirably, but in the later stages something else must be employed to destroy the effects wrought by the microbes.

Happily, in this conquest of the hosts of the disease germs which invade the body under the banner of Malaria the physician has been presented with a weapon as potent over them as the modern machine gun is potent against the old flint lock gun.

This weapon is Sanatogen, one of the most powerful restoratives and vitalising agents ever given to the world. Its remarkable properties are due to its two constituents Casein, the solid portion of pure, new milk, and Glycero-phosphate of Soda, a preparation containing phosphorus in the precise form in which it exists in the body. Phosphorus, as every one knows, is not only as a physician has written "intimately associated with the health of the system, and is indispensable for the discharge of the functions of the nervous centres," but is also "absolutely essential for the growth of what physiologists term the cells of the body, the microscopic bricks of which the human edifice is constructed." This cell growth is greatly interfered with in Malaria, and a supply of phosphorus which is easily absorbed by the depleted system is urgently necessary to restore it to its standard activity. Nothing does this so well as Sanatogen, as nothing so rapidly restores the vitality of the blood as this preparation, which is prescribed by over ten thousand physicians in the world because no secret has ever been made of its constituents and they realise its overwhelming value in rousing the functions of the body to do their duty.

How rapidly Sanatogen restores the blood after Anaemia may be judged from the fact that one eminent physician records that the red blood corpuscles in a patient increased eighty thousand per cubic milli-metre in a week, and the percentage of red colouring matter in them advanced from 61 per cent. to 62·5 per cent., while another patient, who was unable to take any solid food and was losing weight rapidly so improved in a fortnight that the red corpuscles increased two hundred thousand per cubic milli-metre, their red colouring matter from 48 per cent. to 53 per cent., and she was able to resume her household duties, completely cured of the terrible melancholia from which she was suffering.

Children are especially liable to Malaria and its pernicious after-effects which may delay their development and stunt their growth. When given Sanatogen they rapidly improve. One child who at three years old, in consequence of Malaria, weighed only half a pound more than it did when it was a year and a half, was given a small quantity of Sanatogen daily, and its weight at once began to go up half a pound a week.

Just as Malaria causes wasting in children it makes adults prematurely old, in consequence of the depression of the vitality of the system. This condition is rapidly cured by Sanatogen which removes the prematurely old look and soon substitutes for the feeble will and listless spirit a healthy interest in normal pursuits.

An exceedingly interesting pamphlet on the subject of Malaria has been written by a physician who had a wide experience of it in India. In order to give this momentous publication "Malaria, its Causes and Effects" the widest publicity, the proprietors of the copyright have instructed Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, to distribute a limited number of copies free of charge, to anyone who may feel interested in it, and will send them a postcard mentioning the "Indian Field."

Sanatogen, by the way, may be obtained direct from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, and at all chemists, etc.

SHERLEY'S DOG MEDICINES

MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA.

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

While a crowd of between 30,000 and 40,000 people gathered at Stamford Bridge on Saturday to see Bristol City and Derby County contend for the right to appear in the Final Tie for the Association Cup, it cannot be said that, apart from some very enthusiastic partisans of the Bristol team, anyone present anticipated football of more than average merit. Those who expected little were not disappointed, for the play, without being absolutely poor, never attained to exceptional excellence, and at one period turned rather wearisome. The match, indeed, threatened to end very tamely, but there came quite a memorable finish, Bristol, after being a goal behind for more than half an hour after changing ends, equalising by the last kick of the game, and so securing another opportunity of overcoming the Derby club. Securing the lead ten minutes after the interval, Derby County decided to devote their energies towards retaining this advantage rather than towards making an endeavour to increase it. The policy naturally did not render the game any brighter, but it seemed as if it would be justified by results, the Midlanders' goal being the only score when, in the last minute, Nicholas, one of the Derby backs, most palpably knocked the ball down with his hand. Maskrey had missed his clearance, but Morris was at hand, and it did not appear absolutely certain that the ball would find the net. With a penalty promptly given, Rippon shot the ball past Maskrey, and so Bristol just managed to escape defeat.

The sensational finish atoned in some measure for the lack of brightness and excitement, but from start to finish only the keen followers of the competing clubs could find anything to arouse enthusiasm. There were no great runs, no remarkable shots at goal, and only one save out of the ordinary, but still the halves and backs on both sides deserved hearty praise for the manner in which they prevented the forward lines developing really effective attacks. In the matter of defence Derby County probably possessed some slight advantage over their antagonists, except that Maskrey, without having much to do, was at fault more than once. Wedlock, it had been expected, would devote himself mainly to Bentley, who had scored so well in the previous rounds, but, attempting rather too much, he gave the Derby centre a fair amount of rope. Curiously enough, Bentley did not succeed in scoring at all. He had one great chance, but Clay got one hand to the ball and brought off a somewhat lucky if brilliant save. Derby enjoyed the services of a capital half-back line, and Nicholas, apart from his bad blunder at the finish, rendered Charles Morris capital support at back. The Midlanders may not be so well equipped all round as Bristol, but they appeared more likely as Cup-tie winners, even if those present could not entertain expectation that either team would possess much chance of victory at the Crystal Palace.

In beating Newcastle United at Bramall Lane the Manchester United team gained a distinction that had never before been earned by the club. Apart from the great attendance the handsome gate, and a fast, strenous struggle, the tie was disappointing. As a display of football the match fell far below expectations, but in this respect it was only in keeping with the majority of the battles that lead up to the all-absorbing event of the year at the Crystal Palace. In one respect Manchester United played above their ordinary form, their defence never faltering. Stacey and Hayes, the backs, had a comparatively easy time, thanks to the consistent excellence of their middle line, in which Roberts, the centre, stood out most prominently. Owing to the strength of the opposition and their own fault of lifting the ball and indulging in long passing almost exclusively, the Newcastle forwards never found their game. Shepherd being incapacitated throughout the second half, of course, disorganised them, but it was during that period that they for the first time adopted short passing tactics with any skill. Considering how thoroughly Whitson and McWilliam kept Meredith under control, Manchester United could consider themselves fortunate in winning. Their great attacking force on the right was rendered almost ineffective, and the long centres of the Welsh International, made very seldom, proved of no avail. The one goal that determined the issue was the outcome of short passing, which rendered Newcastle's defence helpless. Almost throughout the game the tendency to kick high made accurate control of the ball extremely difficult, and if the pace at which the game began slackened somewhat, the best football, in the matter of skill, took place when rain was falling, during the last half-hour. Many stoppages for off-side, fouls, often not apparent from the ring, and minor injuries contributed to spoil the game, and perhaps Manchester United's success could be attributed to the good fortune of all their players remaining practically sound to the end. Surprisingly few exciting incidents occurred, and until Manchester's goal was scored the vast crowd showed little enthusiasm.

THE ASSOCIATION CUP.

SEMI-FINALS

BRISTOL CITY vs. DERBY COUNTY.—The records of Bristol City and Derby County show that their style of play is more of the dashing than the scientific order, and they lived up to their reputations in this match. From beginning to end one side mercilessly worried the other. It was more a case of triumphing by preventing rather than by superior merit. So far as the conditions were concerned they were well nigh perfect. The weather was gloriouly fine and the ground was in admirable condition. A crowd of about 35,000 people, certainly not more, saw the game, and both sides were at full strength. Derby had Maskre and Hall again in the team, and Garry played at inside right, vice Bevan. Bristol, who have been fortunate in being able to play ten of their first team in all their Cup ties, also had their regular outside left, Hardy, in this game. When operations were commenced Morris quickly distinguished himself by some excellent clearances, and when the exchanges were carried to the Bristol goal Bentley shot wide when Cottle failed to clear the ball. Morris was guilty of one faulty kick, but Burton did not make the most of the opening and the Derby back was enabled to clear. Marr, with a fine overhead kick, sent Gilligan and Staniforth down the right wing, but Staniforth finished rather weakly by kicking the ball behind. The first real danger to either goal came fifteen minutes after the start, when Rippon got round Morris and shot hard. Maskrey made a clever clearance, but Marr banged the ball back, only to see the stalwart Morris filling the breach with his ready foot. Cottle was noticeable for good defensive work and there was certainly no lack of pace in the play, even if it was deficient in the finer parts. Bristol rather played too much on the three inside men, to the obvious neglect of the two extreme wing men, and this was not at all a paying policy. Nearly half an hour after the start it certainly looked as though Derby must take the lead, for Wedlock made his one serious mistake in a very hard-working display, and Bentley raced through with the ball. Annan was beaten, and Bentley had a clear road for goal. Only Clay stood between him and success, but he might have done better had he taken more time. As it was, he fired the ball accurately and hard away from Clay, who, however, effected a magnificent clearance, by fisting the ball out. It was a gallant effort. Barnes sent one slow shot into Maskrey's hands, and for some little time the excellent defence of Morris and Nicholas, and also of the half-backs, Barbour, Hall, and Richards, kept the Bristol men in check. Once, however, the Derby goal escaped luckily, and later on Burton shot, and Morris, after tripping his own goal-keeper, cleared from beneath the bar twice in quick succession. That was just before the interval, and at half-time there was no score.

The first incident in the second half was a nasty accident, in which Hardy got kicked in the face, but he resumed playing, although he was not of very great service to his side afterwards. A hard shot by Davis brought a corner, but this was cleared at the expense of a similar concession. Thompson placed this rather well, and a scrimmage in the goal mouth resulted in Garry finding an opening, through which to score the first goal, at the end of ten minutes from the interval. Hardy, later, failed to seize a hard chance from a pass by Rippon, and then a gallant dash along the right wing by Thompson was followed by a brilliant centre, Bentley, who received the ball, however, shot wide. A grand shot by Marr reached Maskrey, but the keeper, after letting it fall, managed to clear. Bristol tried hard to get on terms, and once Morris cleverly intercepted a very hard drive from Staniforth. The ball swung over to Rippon, who headed wide. Burton had one good shot, luckily charged down, and Staniforth shot over the bar, when Annan had dropped the ball into the goal mouth. The end was fast approaching, and it looked very much as though Bristol were doomed to pass out of the competition, when in the last minute Gilligan centred the ball. Maskrey came out to clear, but failed to touch it, and when Hardy shot the ball goalwards, Nicholas ran back, and fisted it out. A penalty was at once awarded, and Rippon scored. Time was then up, and the referee did not go through the farcical formality of having the ball kicked off from the centre. He merely ordered the men from the field, so that Bristol equalised with absolutely the last kick of the match. A draw was a very fair result, although in the matter of actual pressure Derby just had slightly the better of the game. They were quicker on the ball and their forwards were more sprightly.

Derby County 1

MANCHESTER UNITED vs. NEWCASTLE UNITED.—Tremendous interest was taken in the meeting of Manchester United and Newcastle United on the Bramall-lane Ground, and there was an attendance of over 40,000, the gate-money being nearly £2,600.

The wind was at the backs of Newcastle United during the first half, but Manchester were the first to become dangerous, thanks largely to the pertinacity of J. Turnbull, who forced his way along, and then slung across to Meredith, who promptly returned to the centre, for McCracken to clear. After Duckworth had compelled Lawrence to clear from a long shot, there was a fine bout of passing between Wilson and Stewart on the Newcastle left, but the latter committed the mistake of dwelling too long on the ball, and Roberts intervened with happy results for his side. There was not much to enthuse over with regard to the forward work on either side, but their comparative ineffectiveness was due to the masterfulness of the halves and the deadly tackling of the backs. Opportunities, however, came the way of both teams, and quite early on Higgins should have given his side the lead from a perfect pass by Wilson, but his shot was a very tame affair. For a brief spell Newcastle flattered their supporters, and with Higgins and Duncan getting the better of Bell and Hayes, danger threatened the Manchester goal. The ball was worked towards the centre, where it was given to Shepherd, and he was not more than a foot wide with a shot that had Moger beaten all the way. This was a fortunate escape for the Mancunians, who responded to shouts of encouragement from their followers by putting any amount of dash into their work, and Lawrence had three or four times to be extra smart to keep his opponents at bay. Wall on one occasion from an awkward angle got in a terrific drive, but Lawrence was equal to the occasion, nor was he any less successful in repelling one of Merdith's characteristic shots.

For Newcastle, Shephered was twice only a fraction of a second too late in attempts to rush the backs, and at the other end Lawrence had to clear with the Manchester forwards endeavouring to rush both ball and goalkeeper into the net. Twice free-kicks enabled the Novocastrians to get a little respite, and then as half-time approached Manchester were rolled back on their own lines. Roberts was very much in the picture with brilliant defensive play, and it was largely owing to him that the opposing forwards were kept out. In making a powerful rush in an attempt to force his way through, Shepherd was badly injured, and left the field. He did not return until after half-time, when he went outside left, but he was of no further practical use, and the spirit of the Newcastle attack died away with his retirement from the centre-forward position. Manchester pressed heavily before the interval, but to no purpose, half-time arriving with the score sheet still a blank.

The wind had freshened up, and on resuming the Mancunians had this to assist them. The efforts of the players in the first half had palpably tired them, and the pace was not so fast as it had been. The balance was easily in favour of Manchester, whose halves and forwards were most persistent, but for a long time they were kept out, the Newcastle backs and Lawrence being right on top of their form. Roberts headed on to the bar from a corner, and from a hook-shot by A. Turnbull, Lawrence tipped over the bar. Meredith dropped the ball in the goalmouth from the corner-kick, and there was a fierce scrimmage, but the defence triumphed. With rain falling, the ground, which was destitute of grass except a narrow strip on one side, became very slippery, and the players were tumbling about in all directions. There was more than a quarter of an hour to go when there was a sustained attack on the Newcastle goal. There was a slight mix-up, and the ball went to Halse, who banged it into the net. This goal settled the match, for Newcastle were always held in the remaining stages, and Manchester were less concerned about scoring again than to retain their lead, and the ball was frequently kicked out of play. The end came somewhat tamely with the score:—Manchester United 1, Newcastle United 0.

SUNDERLAND vs. ARSENAL.—Sunderland's match at Roker Park with Woolwich Arsenal proved a very poor attraction, and when the game began the ground looked quite deserted. Only about 6,000 people were present. Sunderland had to take the field without Hogg and Holley. For the first quarter of an hour or so there was little to choose between the sides in some fast play. Then, however, Sunderland put on severe pressure, and as the result of a strong attack took the lead through Bridgett. For the remainer of the half Woolwich were largely on the defensive, Brown, Low, and Clark all sending in shots for Sunderland. At the outset of the second half the Arsenal forwards showed marked improvement, and their frequent attacks caused a good deal of trouble to Roose and Thompson and to the Sunderland defence generally. Maxwell, Fitchie, and Neave all put in good shots, but the home defence was excellent and prevailed to the end. On the other hand, in repelling a counter attack, Gray very nearly gave away points by miskicking, Macdonald just preventing the ball from going through his own goal. Nothing further was scored. ARTHUR DUNN CUP.—FINAL.

OLD MALVERNIANS vs. OLD SALOPIANS.—Old Malvernians won the Arthur Dunn Cup at the Leyton County Ground on the 31st ultimo afternoon by three goals to nil. Superior forward play was the chief factor in their success. The Days—S. E. and S. H.—played grandly on the right wing, Foster was a clever centre, and Lowe and Napier were very fine on the left. At half, the Old Salopians had an advantage, with M. Morgan Owen a splendid centre. Of the four backs Page was easily the best, although Vachell was very much in the picture in the last thirty minutes, when the majority of the players had had more than enough. This was due to the great pace at which the game was carried on in the initial half on a very heavy ground. The Malvernians were rather slow in settling down, and for something like twenty minutes the ball was generally in their half. In this period the Salopians were not too lucky. H. Morgan Owen just missed with a fine long shot, and the same player rattled the cross-bar with another capital attempt. The latter effort led to a scrimmage, and it was more luck than judgment that kept the Malvernian goal intact. Then the Malvernian forwards commenced a series of brilliant runs, with the Days always to the fore. Just before the interval S. H. Day scored a great goal for them. He took the ball from the half-line clean through the Salopian defence, and gave Appleton no chance.

The Salopians were generally overplayed after the interval, and only clever goalkeeping by Appleton kept the score down. He saved beautifully from S. H. Day and Foster, and cleared other accurate drives like a champion. It was after S. H. Day had hit the post that the Malvernians' second goal arrived, Napier taking the rebound and finding the net with a grounder. Later the irrepressible "S. H." scored again after superb combination with "S. E.", and although the Salopians spurted towards the end, they failed to get through. Result:—Old Malvernians, 3; Old Salopians, 0.

OLD MALVERNIANS—A. P. Day; B. N. Balfour and C. C. Page; E. H. Cuthbertson, S. B. Canning, and F. H. Hooper; S. E. Day, S. H. Day, B. S. Foster, W. W. Lowe, and C. Napier.

OLD SALOPIANS.—J. A. Appleton; R. D. Owen and E. Vachell; R. D. Craig, M. Morgan-Owen, and Rev. E. M. Cooke; J. O. Hughes, F. J. Roberts, H. Morgan-Owen, F. W. Roberts, and N. Wells.

Referee.—Mr. P. R. Harrower.

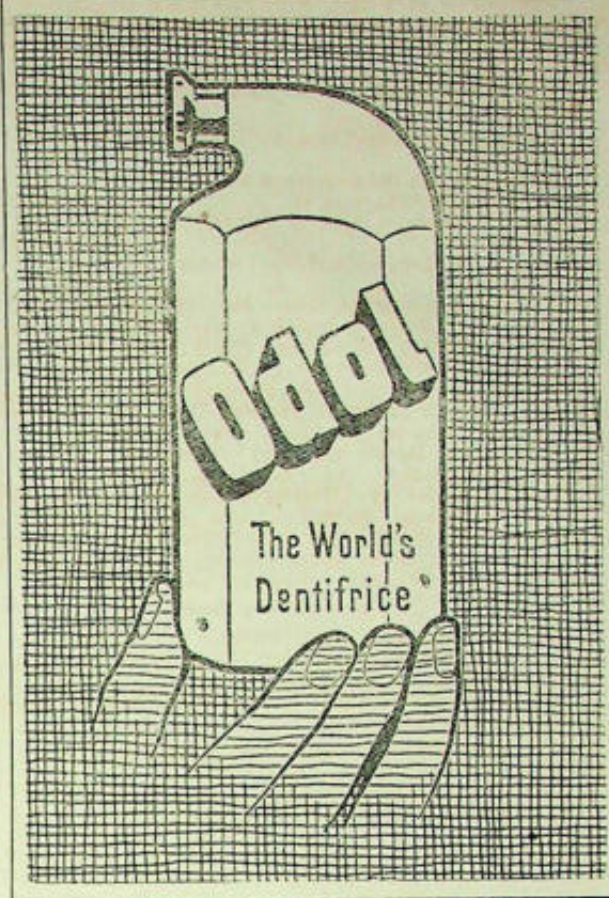
RUGBY RULES.



THE COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP.

DURHAM vs. CORNWALL.—The final tie in the Rugby county championship was contested at Hartlepool under excellent conditions and before 6,000 spectators. In the first half Durham, winning the toss, had the assistance of a slight wind, but had to face the sun. R. Jackett started the game for Cornwall, and the Durham reply was a poor one. However, Coverdale, the Durham half, intercepted, and in some loose play Cornwall touched down. Thanks to some fine kicking by Taylor, Durham took up the attack, and some keen scrummaging took place near the Cornish line. Bennetts cleared in good style, and a penalty-kick sent Durham back. Ellwood, the Durham full-back, dropped a goal without success, and followed with a splendid kick to the drop out. Chapman missed a pass and Bennetts dashed away, but was finely tackled by Ellwood. Taylor rendered good service to Durham by his splendid kicking, but in attack the Durham backs did rather badly. The home forwards had the better of matters, and the Cornish backs had few chances. Durham lost two good chances, and Cornwall, by clever loose work, took up the offensive, but Ellwood cleared. A penalty-kick well taken by E. J. Jackett put Cornwall again in a good position, and a bout of passing by the Cornwall backs nearly ended in success, Solomon being collared a yard or so from the line by Chapman. The home forwards rushed the ball to the centre, and at half-time nothing had been scored. After changing ends the kicking of the Cornish backs, now aided by the wind, was more effective than before. Durham twice touched down in quick succession, but the dash of the Durham forwards prevented Davey and Wedge, the Cornish halves, from opening up the game. A clever punt by Davey put Durham on the defensive, but once more the loose rushes of the home forwards prevailed. They dribbled to close to the Cornwall line, and Thompson passed to Coverdale, who dropped a neat goal. Afterwards Cornwall attacked strongly for a time, but the home pack were able to clear. Chapman scored under the posts, Taylor converting, and later Coverdale also crossed the Cornish line. The result was a win for Durham by 12 points to nil. Durham 2 goals (1 dropped) 1 try. Cornwall nil.

OLD ALLEYNIANS vs. LENNOX.—The ground at Dulwich was in a very heavy condition, and with the exception of the latter part of the second half the game was lifeless and uninteresting, the Alleynians beating Lennox in the end by nine points to nil. Play ruled even throughout the first half, the outstanding feature being the failure of the three-quarters on both sides to combine. When half-time arrived no score had been recorded. For the first fifteen minutes after the interval play was quiet and uneventful, the Alleynians at last scoring a lucky try by Everett as the result of an intercepted kick near the Lennox goal line. Wright failed to convert. A few minutes later some smart play by Jordan and Garrett gave an opening to Firth, who scored the Alleynians's second try beneath the posts, Everett hitting the upright with the kick. The Alleynians' three-quarters showed more life during the remaining stages of the game, and Jordan put on another try just before the whistle blew, Wright again failing to convert. Old Alleynians, 3 tries; Lennox, 0.

OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS vs. HARLEQUINS.—Seeing that at the beginning of the season the Harlequins beat the Taylors by nearly 50 points, the latter did well in losing by only 1 point. During the whole of the first half the home team kept up a hard pressure, but the Harlequins tackling was good, and the Taylors were only twice successful, M. J. Lepingwell crossing over at the start (R. A. Lepingwell converting) and Cheeseman scoring a penalty goal. Just before the interval Stoop nearly got in, but being collared he transferred the ball to Elmslie, who gained a try. At half time the Harlequins were 5 points behind, and at the commencement of the concluding half M. J. Lepingwell added a try for the Taylors as the result of a fine run by Parker. The visitors then made strenuous efforts to improve their position, and after several minutes a smart three-quarter run enabled Stoop to run over. The Harlequins were now playing better and having most of the game. Subsequently Brougham and H. E. Ward each secured a try. Close on time the home team made a dangerous incursion into the Harlequins' twenty-five, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the visitors saved the situation. The Harlequins might have had a bigger victory if the three-quarter had taken advantage of the several openings Stoop made for them, and there was no doubt that the absence of Lambert made an appreciable difference. Harlequins, 4 tries; O.M.T., 2 goals (1 penalty) 1 try.

OLD LEYSIANS vs. CLIFTON.—Delightful weather favoured the Clifton team on their visit to town and on the Wandsworth ground a very keen contest took place. O. Pepper was the only absentee of note from the home side and Clifton were without Coles and Turner. Within the first ten minutes, Hawkins executed a brilliant movement, which led to Kenneth Brown's getting a try. Boyd failed to convert this, but a little later he scored a penalty goal from a more difficult position. A short while afterwards, Hawkins, after running half the length of the field and evading several opponents, gained a splendid try, but again the kick failed and, with a lead of 9 points in favour of the Old Leysians, the teams changed ends. On many occasions, the visitors might have scored, notably towards the end of the game, but bad passing always foiled their efforts and it was left to W. A. Pepper to increase the leader's score by scrambling over with a third try. Mellor improved from an easy position. Thus the Old Leysians won by 14 points to nil. Leysians, 2 goals (1 penalty), 2 tries; Clifton, 0.

GOLF.

AMATEUR vs. PROFESSIONAL.—It is so seldom that prominent amateurs and professionals meet in exhibition events, or, indeed, in any kind of public matches, that more than ordinary interest was evinced in the contest on the Kidderminster course between Mr. Edward Blackwell, of the Royal and Ancient Club, and C. H. Mayo, of Burhill. The match was over 36 holes, and Mayo won by 3 up and 2 to play. He showed the steadier form, Mr. Blackwell doing some brilliant things, but being more erratic than the professional. Nevertheless, the match was full of interest, and never one-sided. Mr. Blackwell was 1 up at the turn, and only 1 down at the end of 18 holes, Mayo securing the lead for the first time on the sixteenth green. A run of success early in the second round increased the professionals' advantage to 3, and he was never afterwards caught.

Mr. Blackwell opened with a win in 3, but by negotiating a stymie, Mayo squared at the second. He was again stymied at the third, which he lost, and the amateur turned 1 up. A fine 3 enabled Mayo to square at the tenth. Five halves followed, and then, at the sixteenth, Mayo gained the lead, a beautiful approach and a long putt giving him a 3. The last two holes of the round were halved. Mayo had a score of 75 (38 out and 37 home). Mr. Blackwell took 76 (37 and 39). Mr. Blackwell holds the record of 66 for the course.

The afternoon round was played in a downpour of rain. Mayo took the first hole in 5, and Mr. Blackwell won the second in a like figure. The professional, playing good golf, captured the next two holes, Mr. Blackwell secured the eighth hole, which measures 435 yards, in an excellent 4, by holing a putt of 15 yards from the edge of the green, but the ninth fell to Mayo, who turned 3 up. Mr. Blackwell regained a hole at the twelfth, but, getting down a long putt for a 3, Mayo again stood 3 up at the thirteenth. The fourteenth fell to the amateur in 3, but after a half, Mayo won the sixteenth in 3, and with it the match.

ONE-ARMED PLAYERS' MATCH.—Some remarkable golf was witnessed on the links of the Royal Liverpool Club at Hoylake yesterday, when J. Scott and J. Haskins, the two one-armed players, brought their 36-holes' home-and-home match for £20 a side to a conclusion. As a result of the first half of the contest, at Silloth, Scott gained a lead of 5 up. At the third hole at Hoylake he had increased his advantge to 7 up, and the match appeared to be as good as over. Haskins, however, began to show brilliant form. He holed a long putt at the seventh for a 3, and, getting down a putt of twenty yards at the ninth, he had another 3. At this point he had reduced his opponent's lead to 3 up. He won the tenth hole in 4 to 5, and another 4 at the twelfth enabled him to reduce his deficit to only 1 down. The thirteenth was secured by Scott, but he lost the fourteenth. After a half, however, Scott won the sixteenth and seventeenth, and thus gained the victory by 3 up and 1 to play. Haskins's score for 17 holes was 82 to Scott's 85.

GOLFERS vs. FOOTBALLERS.—In a golf match at Bramshot the footballing golfers amply avenged the defeat they recently sustained at the hands of a team of golfing footballers in a football match at Tottenham. The event on the Bramshot links was a twelve-a-side match, and the golfers gained a decisive victory by 12 points to 0. It was originally arranged to play singles and foursomes, but the deluge of rain in the morning caused a late start, and the foursomes were abandoned. The contest produced some very interesting matches, most of which were, of course, under handicap.

One of the best matches that was played on level terms was that between George Duncan, the Hanger Hill professional, and George Kitchen, the West Ham footballer. Kitchen made a great fight of it going out. He was only 1 down at the turn, but Duncan then secured the next three holes. He lost the thirteenth and fourteenth, but the golfer won the match on the next green by 4 and 3. Rowland Jones, playing under handicap, beat F. Piercey by 2 and 1. The famous Wimbledon Park professional went round in the fine score of 74 (38 out, 36 home), in spite of the fact that he took 5 and 6 respectively for the last two holes.

Another match under handicap was that between Captain W. J. Seton, the old Casual goalkeeper, and Ben Sayers, jun. Sayers went round in 77, and won easily by 5 and 3. Josh Taylor, the Acton professional, beat H. L. Curtis by one hole, and W. E. Reed beat A. Butchart by a similar margin after being 2 down with 5 to play. One of the most noteworthy performances was that of J. Oke, the 17 years old brother of J. H. Oke, the Sutton Coldfield professional. He beat R. P.

James by 4 and 3, and had a score of 70 for 17 holes. Details:—

ATHLETICS.

Aldershot Cross Country Championship.—The race which took place at Aldershot on the 31st ultimo is the consummation of a project, the first foreshadowings of which were seen some three years back when the All Ireland Military Cross-country Championship was initiated. But nothing definite was done towards the establishment of a similar meeting in England until the 1st Royal Irish Fusiliers, themselves winners of the Irish event in two successive years, took up their quarters in Aldershot. A few months after their arrival came the 2nd Royal Irish Regiment, who finished second at the Irish Meeting, and with two developed teams in the command, and a score or more of clubs anxious to try their prowess against the Irish battalions, a scheme was put through with excellent results.

The runners, 416 in number, started from the top of a steep hill, and a very pretty picture they made drawn up in two ranks, their variegated costumes standing out well against the sky-line. At the bottom of the hill was the first obstacle—a plain wire fence. And here it should be said that the committee wish to tender their sincere thanks to the owners of properties along the course, who so kindly removed all barbed wire from the vicinity of the cross-country track. With the start, the whole crowd went down the hill in a bunch, rather gingerly, for it was as steep almost as a Dover cliff. But once at the bottom and over the first ditch and fence, and the pace improved. A good mile and a half had been covered before the leaders began to shake themselves free of the ruck, and then Pte. Moore, of the Irish Fusiliers, was seen in the van.

It was only possible to get occasional glimpses of the runners, and it was a good two miles further on before they were next seen. Then Heavor, of the 2nd Lincolns, the Army mile champion, had run into first place, with Moore, Cook, and McCann, all Irish Fusiliers, trailing after him. At five miles, however, Cook took up the position he held for the remainder of the journey—that of leader, with Love, of the Coldstream Guards, close behind him. The Coldstreamer frequently tried to get up, but could not, and, in fact, was actually passed by Parrish, of the Scottish Rifles, before the sixth mile was finished. A mile from home it was obvious that the race was going to the Eagle badge, for out on Cove Common the Faugh-a-Ballaghs' first ten were first, fourth, seventh, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, nineteenth, twenty-fifth, and thirty-third.

The club most dangerous to the Fusiliers' chances all the way through had been the Royal Irish Regiment from Blackdown, although they had never threatened Cook's supremacy. Out on Cove Common it was equally obvious that, the first two positions would go to Irish battalions, for, with the Fusiliers palpably first, the odds were heavily on the Royals for second place, their first nine men occupying the following positions as they left the plateau:—8, 9, 14, 15, 21, 22, 37, 38, and 42. There was nothing in the nature of a desperate finish once the Queen's was passed. Cook ran into view a good 250 yards ahead of his nearest rival, and without troubling himself, he kept his lead and ran, an easy winner in 54mins. 14secs.

Pte. Love, 1st Coldstream Guards, finished just half a minute behind Cook, with Corpl. Parrish (2nd Scottish Rifles), following 13secs. later. The excitement by no means died away with the arrival o of the first three, for every little batch of a dozen that have into sight struggled desperately until the tape was reached. And that these struggles were continuous may be judged from the fact that, of 416 starters 403 finished within the 30mins. time limit, and fully half that number must have reached the tape 15mins. after Cook.

BILLIARDS.

Inman vs. Reece.—Friday: Inman (in play), 14,632; Reece, 11,514. Inman added one more to his long list of triumphs over Reece at Leicester-square on Saturday when he won this 16,000 up match for £100 a side in easy fashion by no fewer than 3,629 points. The Lancastrian must by now have recognised the hopelessness of beating his rival. He had everything in his favour on this occasion in the important matter of conditions; he commenced so well as to set up a four-figure advantage in the first few days, yet met with one of his most severe defeats in the end. Inman played a fine game after settling down, and his form since Saturday week suggests that he is the most improved player of the day.

A small company patronised the penultimate sitting. Inman led by 3,118, but having a double baulk to face for his first shot, he saw his rival reduce this advantage straightaway by 122, the result of some capital play near the top spot. Inman, however, lost no time in restoring the balance, as, following a safety touch, he scored a fine century, when, the object white having found an unexpected pocket, he voluntarily closed the effort. Reece broke through Inman's defence, but was beaten by a very narrow cross loser after subscribing 22, which let the leader away in consecutive efforts of 30 (safety) and 77.

Subsequently the Lancastrian shaped a little more, convincingly and collected breaks of 39, 66, 54, and 49. He could never go the pace set by Inman, who played breezy billiards at all parts of the table, although showing his best form at the top end, for splendid breaks of 179 (losing the white most unluckily). 140, 79, and 34 (unfinished) practically in succession. Inman aggregated 702, and returned the very good average of 43·75, while Reece's figures were 399 and 24·68 respectively. Interval score:—

Inman (in play)	... 15,334

At night it soon became apparent that Reece was by no means inclined to lighten his opponent's task of scoring the points necessary to take him to game. After Inman had scored 42 (from 34 unfinished), 32, and 50, and Reece 54 (miscueing) and 64, the latter joined issue with the prospective winner in an interesting bout of safety exchanges. Thanks to a very fine cushion white loser from the right bottom rail to the left centre pocket. Inman took the offensive with a capital 61, and followed on with 50 (48 off the red) and a splendid 248, the last a varied display, marred only by a weak attempt at a drop cannon at the end.

This let in Reece for an attractive and rapidly compiled 172, which he supported directly afterwards with a capital 95, in which a double baulk cannon off five cushions at the outset was well appreciated. This was the Lancastrian's final noteworthy effort in the match, Inman with chief runs of 113 and 70 and a few minor items proceeding to game, a winner by a margin of 3,629 points. Inman averaged 34·68, and Reece 27. Final score:—

Reece	... 12,371

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HUNT.

Its History.

Records of this thoroughly English branch of sport are found as far back as 1835, when sambur and barking deer were hunted with a capital pack of foxhounds round about Ootacamund. But from that date to 1854 no material can be found by which to trace its existence or progress. In that year we find a few couples of foxhounds were hunted by Captains Macfarlane and Lawson of the 74th Highlanders. The pack was brought into Ooty every week, as Jackasulla, as Wellington was then called, did not afford a suitable surrounding for the sport. The Mutiny broke up the Hunt, and it was not till 1862, when the 3rd Battalion of the 60th Rifles arrived, that fresh efforts were made, under Captain the Hon'ble Colburne of that corps, to keep the game going. This pack was a "Bobbery" one, the nucleus being a few couples purchased from Mr. G. A. Royal Dawson, who had hitherto used them for beating sholahs for sambur, tiger, and other big game. Pegu ponies and tats, for which the 60th were notorious, were the favourite mounts. In 1864 a draft of foxhounds was sent from Madras, Colonel Primrose acting as Master. In 1867 a subscription pack was started under Captain Fitzgerald, 16th Lancers, who was succeeded by Captain Millaird and Colonel Bradley, and in 1868 Mr. Minchin, a sporting planter of the Wynaad, showed some sport for a few months. It was not until the following year that Mr. J. W. Breeks, the first Commissioner of the Nilgiris, assisted by Colonel Jago and Mr. W. E. Schmidt, made the Ooty Hunt an established institution. A compact was entered into with the Madras Hunt, by which for Rs. 1,000 the Madras Hounds were to be sent up to Ooty for the season, i.e., from April to October. It was during this first season that an incident immortalised by the Field and Illustrated News took place. The following is an extract from the account as it appeared in the local paper:—

"But the most exciting event of the day has yet to be related. Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Atkins, who had wisely remained in the valley, saw a sight which probably surpasses anything even Ashton Smith experienced in his life long hunt. These two gentlemen met the hounds who were returning from their breakfast in the Nunjanad Valley, and were trying to collect them till the huntsman came up, when a fine full-grown leopard suddenly bolted from a shola, and away went every dog in full cry at his heels. They soon came up with him, dashed at him and rolled him over in the open. What follows, speaks volumes for the blood and courage of the foxhound. The leopard left his mark on some of the hounds, and broke away into a small thick copse with a stream at the bottom. The pack followed bravely, and went straight at him again, till, leopard and hounds rolled one over the other into the stream below. It was just at this time the huntsman galloped up, and hearing the howl of a dog and thinking there was a porcupine afoot jumped off his horse and ran to whip the hounds off. He found himself so unpleasantly near the deadly struggle that was going on, that he bounded up the bank and on to his horse with agility unusual to his spare frame, making such circles in the air with his arms and legs as were never recorded of any gymnast. Again the leopard broke away and ensconced himself in the thickest part of the nullah in the small copse above mentioned where the hounds brought him to bay.

"The horror of the Master may easily be imagined when coming up just as the leopard was fairly roused; he found an invincible stuggle going on and heard the furious barking of the dogs, diversified by an occasional howl, as with a low deep growl the beast charged some of his boldest enemies. Every one gave up the hounds as lost; but after half an hour's violent exertion on the part of the field present, the pack was at last whipped off, and to the surprise and relief of all the whole thirteen couple turned up safe, though some were wounded. The number of the assailants seems the only explanation of such an escape from a beast, a stroke of whose paw would have killed the strongest dog that ever barked. The rush, however, of over twenty hounds on different sides as soon as the leopard turned on any one direction seems to have left him neither time nor presence of mind for a single well aimed blow, and the few wounds inflicted were principally snaps."

The hunt continued to flourish for the two following reasons until 1871. Major Jago having taken his furlough to England no proper hunting was undertaken, but as a make shift there used to be frequent Meets and Runs with Colonel Christie's (the Government Tiger Slayer) bobbery pack.

1872 finds the O. H. once again re-established on a proper footing with Major Barton, 18th Hussars, as Master and Mr. Schmidt as Whip as well as Honorary Secretary and Treasurer. A draft of sixteen couple was procured from the Madras Hunt. The season commenced in April and good sport with excellent runs was the order of the day.

Dr. Furnell rendered valuable assistance to the Hunt during the season, and for a short time assumed the Mastership after Major Barton's departure from the hills.

It was during this season that attention was turned to the breeding of hounds on the hills, and as an experiment fourteen couple of pups were reared, amongst whom was the celebrated Crooktail with many others, all quite equal in dash, keen scent and good looks to any of their imported and high bred companions.

The success of this trial inbreeding was mainly due to the assiduous and watchful care of Mr. Schmidt, who spared no pains in attending to the comfort and welfare of his interesting charges, by providing foster-mothers and good supplies of cow's milk for the various litters of whelps. By this the breeding of foxhounds on the Nilgiris becomes an established fact, and by a judicious selection of sires, from the best strains, a very good and useful breed of fox hound can be raised. En parenthesis I may mention we recently had a Puppy Show which proved a great success. It was the first of its kind here.

In 1873 Mr. Schmidt was in charge of fourteen couple and Mr. J. R. Cockerell, the then Commissioner of the Nilgiris, as Master, and the course known till lately as "Cocky's Course" on our Western Downs was named after him.

In 1874 Colonel Jago returned and infused new vigour into the Hunt, and amongst the foremost of his supporters were His Highness the late Maharajah of Mysore, who assisted with substantial subscriptions, which are continued to this day by the present Maharajah and the Yuvahraj.

In 1875 I find that Colonel Jago resigned his post of Master of the Ooty Hounds to Major Pigott, who, after hunting the hounds for about four months, was succeeded by Colonel Beresford.

In 1876 under the administration of a Committee composed of that famous sportsman Mr. Cockerell, Colonels Jago and Beresford, Major Pigott, Messrs. Schmidt and Irvine—the last a well-known planter on the Nilgiris and whose colours were often to the front in days of yore on the Wellington racecourse—the Ooty pack was augmented by ten couples selected from the Madras Hounds as well as by five other couples from the Quorn Hunt, which were imported and kindly lent by their owner, Captain Elmhurst, A.-D.-C. to the then Commander-in-Chief, Madras Presidency.

When Lord Wenlock assumed the reins of the Madras Government and Captain Hon'ble Lawley was appointed His Excellency's Military Secretary, he took charge of the Horn, and during the period of his Mastership he offered for competition a Cup valued at Rs. 600 for the Hunt Point-to-Point Horse Race. This was in 1892. The following are the names of the yearly winners of the Cup, which has to be won three years in succession to become the absolute owner:—

1892. Capt. Holmes, A.-D.-C.
1893. Capt. the Hon'ble Lawley.
1894. H. H. of Dholpore.
1895. Major the Hon'ble Lawley.
1896. Mr. Colin Mackenzie.
1897. Capt. the Hon'ble Bingham.
1898. Mr. Mare Clementson.
1899. Capt. Swan.
1900. Mr. Colin Mackenzie.
1901. Major Carnegie.
1902. Capt. Fife, A.-D. C.
1903. Capt. Campbell.
1904. Mr. Colin Mackenzie.
1905. Capt. Fife, A.-D.-C.
1906. Capt. Fife, A.-D.-C.
1907. Miss Lawley.
1908. H. E. Sir the Hon'ble A. E. Lawley.

Captain Fife, who hunted the Hounds from 1902 to 1905, wrote an interesting diary, which is worthy of perusal. It is printed by the South India Observer. For the last three years Captain Heseltine has hunted the hounds for four days each week during the season months.

In future our Hunt season will begin on the 1st May, which will enable late arrivals to join in the sport. The Hunt uniform at present consists of a red coat with a green collar, gilt buttons engraved O. H., and a white topee. Ladies, being the wives, daughters or sisters of members, are entitled to wear the collar and buttons, and other ladies may qualify for the same privilege by paying an annual subscription of Rs. 50 to the General Hunt Fund.

Mr. W. E. Schmidt, who was connected with the Ooty Hunt since its inauguration, has through ill-health and old age been compelled to resign the office as Honorary Secretary.

In conclusion it may be truly said that there is no fairer turf in any of the downs of the Old Country than on those on these hills. Tilton or Burrough carry no such consistent blaze of scent, and Austinwood never bred a stouter "varmint" than we have on the Nilgiris. True there are no fences, but it is an occasional bush which allows one the luxury of once more leaning right back on the saddle, and the pleasant tickle to the soul in 'setting him at it." But no jumps and misty mornings notwithstanding the Ooty Hunt. Semper floreat.

Racing.

A TURF CLUB FOR UPPER INDIA.

The following is the "Note" which has been circulated on the above subject.

I believe that there is a very general feeling amongst those who are interested in racing in Northern India, that things are not as they should be, and that there is a danger of the sport decaying unless radical measures of reform are undertaken. I gather that a number of racing men are of opinion that the necessary reforms can only be carried through if a Northern India branch of the Calcutta Turf Club be established, with competent and influential Stewards and an official staff of its own. There is, however, no organised body, representative of the scattered interests of up-country racing, in a position to submit definite proposals to the Calcutta Stewards.

In writing this note I am only attempting to give expression to what I believe to be the opinions of a large number of men who are much better qualified to deal with the subject than I am. I have neither the authority nor the knowledge to enable me to propound a practical and detailed scheme for the consideration of the Calcutta Turf Club, and of those who are responsible for the various meetings in Northern India.

But it is possible that I may be able to set the ball rolling, and I have been encouraged to make an attempt to do this, by one whose position and influence in the world of sport will be recognised and accepted by everyone, the present Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces. I do not wish to convey the idea that Sir John Hewett has expressed any opinion either as to the practicability or as to the suitability of the proposals put forward below. But he agrees that the facts are as I have described them, and he thinks that there can be no harm in ventilating and discussing the subject.

So much by way of exordium and apology.

2. If it is the case that up-country racing is not in a healthy condition, the first step is to make a diagnosis of the trouble from which it is suffering. To do this the proper way is, I take it, to state the facts first, and then to deal with the reasons which account for them.

When one is dealing with facts one must state them more or less dogmatically, unless one adopts the diffuse methods of the politician. If my facts are fancies then the racing community, which I am addressing, will have none of them, and 'cadit quæstio,' with, I hope, no harm done.

I believe the facts are as follows:—

(1) We suffer from a paucity of owners.

(2) We suffer from the want of organised, scientific, and co-ordinate management of our up-country meetings.

(3) We suffer from the crooked and unsportsmanlike practices of some who are in our midst, and from the want of firm control and discipline.

As for the reasons—

(1) The facts which have been stated as (2) and (3) largely account for fact No. (1).

WINCHESTER

LIGHT WEIGHT .22 CALIBER RIFLES.

MODEL 1904
SINGLE SHOT RIFLE.

The biggest value in a gun ever offered. It is a take-down .22 caliber rifle, fitted with a heavy 21-inch round barrel, a handsome Schuetzen-shaped butt stock, and has the well-known Winchester bolt action, which has been so widely imitated. Ask your dealer about it. When you see it and learn its low price you will insist on having one.

The Model 1902 is a hammerless take-down and can be taken apart easily and quickly. It is made with an 18-inch round barrel, fitted with open front and rear sights. It shoots .22 Short and .22 Long Rim Fire Cartridges and Breech Caps. Its low price puts it within reach of all.

(2) Calcutta is too remote, and the Calcutta Stewards are with the best will in the world, quite unable either to recognise the peculiar circumstances of our position, or to assist us in applying the proper remedies.

(3) Modern conditions are such that it is almost impossible for soldiers or civilians to find time to run a race meeting as it should be run. It is in fact unfair to impose so great a burden as the conduct of a race meeting entails on men who are busy with their official duties.

(4) No one can discharge the duties of a handicapper efficiently who cannot attend all the meetings at which the horses with which he has to deal are are accustomed to run.

(5) It is impossible to collect at each and every racing centre a body of stewards competent and willing to deal with malpractices and breaches of turf discipline firmly and consistently.

As a rider to the above, I should like to say that I believe that all these on whose behalf I am venturing to speak fully recognise their great indebtedness to the many able and energetic race stewards, secretaries, and officials, who have laboured, and are still labouring, in the interests of sport in Upper India. Our point is that we cannot hope for consistent good management. And when we see a particular meeting being worked up to a high state of excellence, we are the more anxious about the future, recognising that the transfer of one or two individuals will lead to the inevitable periodic collapse which leaves owners with a number of unsaleable animals on their hands, and, by destroying confidence in the continuity of good racing, checks all enterprise.

3. We believe (I can speak with certainty about a considerable number of racing men, and I hope I am correctly interpreting the views of many whom I have not been able to consult) that if the general supervision and management of up-country meetings can be vested in a staff of stipendiaries controlled by stewards having local knowledge, influence, and authority, we shall be able to secure better racing; the more scientific adjustment of prospectuses to the requirements of owners; the promotion of racing by a class of owner, and for a class of animal, not now catered for and the elimination of those who bring our sport into disrepute. These are objects with which the Calcutta Turf Club should sympathise. The last thing we want to do is to fight clear of Calcutta, or to start an opposition Turf Club of our own. In fact, we want from Calcutta not only sympathy, but cash. And to extort this we must convince them that by establishing (and subsidising) a Northern India branch of their Turf Club, they will be able to discharge the obligations which now rest upon them more efficiently than they can at present. This should not be difficult. Nor should it be difficult to convince the Calcutta Turf Club that obligations apart, the development of up-country racing will, in the long run, be to them a source of profit. By ensuring the stability of our meetings we shall encourage greater enterprise on the part of our owners. By offering the attraction of Club membership, we shall induce some who are now merely onlookers to become active participators in the sport of racing. By making the atmosphere of the Turf sweeter and cleaner than it is at present, we shall widen the circle of our friends, increase our "catchment area," and eventually transform many who now regard us with something akin to aversion, into whole hearted lovers of the game. Having done all this, we shall have established up-country a very healthy nursery for racing in Calcutta. For those who are fortunate enough to sweep the board up-country will certainly want to try conclusions with the champions at headquarters. Moreover, we shall provide better market for animals which may prove to be not quite up to Calcutta form, and thus stimulate enterprise on the part of owners themselves unable to race up-country, who hesitate to enter into competition at the turf metropolis, fearing that if they fail they may be left with horses or ponies on their hands for which there is no demand at all.

4. If an attempt is to be made to establish a Northern India (perhaps Upper India would be the better nomenclature) branch of the Calcutta Turf Club, I take it that the first step should be to ascertain the views and wishes of those who are responsible for the management of, and also of those who support the various meetings in Upper India. Supposing that the general opinion is in favour of the proposal, the next step should be the formulation of some sort of definite scheme. This would of course involve consideration of the financial aspect of the whole question.

Supposing that a number of race secretaries can, on behalf of those whom they represent, arrive at some sort of tentative agreement on the difficult question of finance, the next step would be the constitution of a Commitee, or the selection of an individual, empowered to enter into negotiations with the Calcutta Turf Club on the subject. Finally, all those who are interested in the scheme should be given an opportunity of pronouncing for or against it when Calcutta has given its decision, and when we know what to expect from them in the way of assistance and support. The interests involved are so scattered that it is difficult to know how to set about the collection of opinion without breaking the proper sequence of procedure, and without filling in certain details by way of suggestion, which should properly be left for a later stage in the discussion.

It is therefore only with a view to arriving at some thing practical that I venture to put forward the following propositions. They may be regarded—like the figures of the fiscal reformer—as merely illustrative. (1) An Upper India Branch of the Calcutta Turf Club may be established with headquarters at Lucknow. (2) The Calcutta Turf Club may be asked to delegate their authority in the matter of the conduct of the following race meetings to the Upper India Branch of the Calcutta Turf Club:—Rawalpindi, Sialkot, Lahore, Ambala, Meerut, Lucknow, Bareilly, Cawnpore, Jubbulpore, Simla, Dehra, Mussoorie. (3) The present secretary of the Lucknow races, may be offered the appointment of secretary to the Upper India branch of the Calcutta Turf Club. He may be given an assistant. He will certainly require one. (4) The duty of the secretary of the Upper India branch of the Calcutta Turf Club may be, to frame prospectuses for all meetings, to manage all the accounts, and discharge all the functions of secretary during the actual progress of each meeting. (5) The Stewards of the Upper India branch of the Calcutta Turf Club may be ex-officio stewards of all race meetings which they may attend. We may look forward to the time when the Upper India branch of the Calcutta Turf Club will be able to employ one or more stipendiary Stewards. But festina lente! (6) There may be local stewards and a local Honorary Secretary for each meeting, as at present. The Honorary Secretaries may be relieved of all the drudgery in connection with race meetings, but may be asked to look after the race course, and to exercise a general supervision over matters connected with racing interest between meetings. (7) A percentage of the income of each meeting may be paid into the general fund of the Upper India branch of the Calcutta Turf Club. (8) The Upper India Branch of the Calcutta Turf Club may employ its own handicapper. (9) The Official Measurer of the Calcutta Turf Club may continue to be responsible for measuring ponies, and fees may be credited to the Calcutta Turf Club as heretofore. (10) The Calcutta Turf Club may be asked to guarantee a certain fixed annual payment from their funds to the Upper India Branch of the Calcutta Turf Club for a term of five years; I cannot say what sum we might fairly ask for, or what is the minimum we should require. But I have an idea that about Rs. 15,000 per annum would be appropriate.

5. These suggestions, being mainly by way of illustration, are intentionally sketchy and lacking in detail. They are put forward in order that those who may be asked to give an opinion as to the advisability of making a movement towards the establishment of a Branch of the Calcutta Turf Club in Upper India, may understand the general nature of the scheme proposed.

In the immediate present I would ask the stewards of the meetings enumerated above to authorise the race secretaries to forward a copy of this memorandum to all those whom they count amongst their habitual supporters, with the following question:—"Are you in favour of the establishment of an Upper India branch of the Calcutta Turf Club, supposing that satisfactory arrangements can be made with Calcutta?" To this a note might be added to the following effect:—"Any gentleman receiving a copy of this memorandum from the Secretary of more than one meeting is requested to send one reply only to the secretary of any meeting which he may select. Recipients of this memorandum are requested to show it to any gentleman who is interested in racing in Upper India, and to invite those who have not been personally addressed to forward their opinions to the secretary of any race meeting which he may select."

When the opinions of the racing community have thus been collected, I would suggest that the management of each meeting should, after considering the views of the supporters, decide whether they are prepared to back the scheme. I would ask them to communicate their decisions on this point to the Secretary, Lucknow Races. In the event of this decision being in the affirmative, the secretaries of the consisting meetings might inform the Lucknow Secretary of their present financial positions. That gentleman would then be in a position to circularise all other secretaries with the following information:—

Assenting Meetings.	Assets.	Liabilities.
Name.	Amount.	Amount.
Dissenting Meetings.
Name.

With this information before them I would suggest that as many of the race secretaries as can do so conveniently, should assemble at Simla during the summer meeting, and there associate with themselves in a preliminary discussion all those present at the meeting, whose views on racing matters are likely to carry weight. It would be a good thing if, as an outcome of this discussion, a small committee could be appointed, and armed with authority on behalf of the racing community of Upper India to approach Calcutta.

In the event a general meeting might be held under the presidentship of Sir John Hewett at Lucknow during the Army Cup Meeting of 1909. The views of Calcutta would then have been ascertained, and with a definite scheme before it, such a meeting might arrive at some practical result; otherwise the discussion would probably be vague, hypothetical and inconclusive.

Since writing the above I have ascertained that Sir John Hewett will not be present at the Army Cup Meeting at Lucknow in 1909.

This is unfortunate. But if any general support is accorded to these proposals, it should not be difficult for some of those who are interested to convene a meeting at Lucknow, at which matters might at least be carried a step forward.

CRICKET AT PATIALA.

A TWO days' match with the Ferozepore Station came off on the 9th and 10th April. Only the mornings and evenings were devoted to the game as it got very warm about noon. The first day it was started late; but the home team made up by fast scoring. The Maharaja, winning the toss, went in first with Mistri to open the innings and made a capital start. In 40 minutes they made 96 runs by first-rate cricket. The Maharaja's faultless innings of 47 was warmly appreciated, as he showed a marked improvement in his batting. The Kour Sahib's 26, comprising 3 threes and 4 fours with a 1, attracted much notice especially his fine strokes to leg; while the high scores of Mistri, Gokal Chand and Tara Chand lifted the total to 325. Others failing to help Abdulghani and Jaswant Singh succeeded in carrying the score to 403.

The visitors met with a bad start, losing two of their best wickets for only 1 run. Hebbert and Gray being run out, the whole responsibility fell to Lumsden, who made a magnificient stand and played capital innings of 67, but receiving little assistance from others bar Cullen and Drake Brockman, the score ended at 155.

Following on they could make only 120 against the accurate bowling of Gurbakhsh Singh, who captured 8 wickets for 31 runs. Cullen succeeded in making 40, while Lumsden, Gray and Hamilton scored double figures. Ferozepore thus lost by an innings and 128 runs.

The remarkable improvement in the batting and fielding of the Patiala cricketers reflects great credit on F. A. Tarrant for his excellent coaching during the last winner.

(X.) Winners of "T" vs. Winners of "V," 29th April.

Final.

Winners of "W" vs. Winners of "X," 1st May.

THE Tournament opened on the 20th instant when three games were played. In the two other matches down for decision the Caledonians scratched to the Y.M.C.A; and the Y.M.C.A. "B" team scratched to the Medicals. The heavy rain just before the games started put the grounds in a wretched condition and none of the matches produced good play.

CUSTOMS vs. B.-N. RY.—Played on the Calcutta ground before a small gathering of spectators. As was expected the holders won, beating the Railway team by 3 goals to nil. Conditions were all against fast play and though the Customs showed good combination and attacked almost throughout the first half there was no score. But on resuming they opened the scoring through Fitzpatrick. Smith netted the second goal and Fitzpatrick the third. For the winners Fisher, McCready, Cadell, Smith and Fitzpatrick all showed up prominently, while for the Railway team Tripp did splendid work and was well backed by Bull, Gahan, Ismay and Marrion. Teams:—

CUSTOMS.—Seth, goal; Anderson and Quiterio, backs; Barlow, L. A. Smith and Cadell, half-backs; Fitzpatrick, MacReady, Fisher, L. H. Smith and Alexander, forwards.

BENGAL-NAGPUR RAILWAY.—Marrion, goal; Clarke and Slane, backs; Tripp, Richardson and Webb, half-backs; Gahan, Bull, Ismay, Carrol and Baker, forwards.

HORNETS vs. MOHAN BAGAN.—The native team were represented by six men and withdrew at the interval. The Hornets attacked throughout and scored five goals.

HASTINGS vs. WANDERERS.—Played on the Customs' ground the Hastings team winning by 3 goals to nil. Shortridge scored two goals and Crane one.

The Story Teller.

THE RETURN.

The pearling fleet had come in from the Arafura seas, and Port Clarion prepared to emerge from its periodic slumbers. Like most of the tiny galvanised iron towns on the northern shores of Australia, it existed only for such occasions as these, and when at stated intervals they arrived, the excitement was sufficient to last until the next time. For the pearl-fishers are a tough crowd, recruited from every white race, and most of the coloured ones, wild, unbridled, bent on making up for their enforced abstinence aboard the little twelve-ton luggers. And when at last they have the chance, the burning tropical stars look down on strange sights—deep drinking, fierce fighting, brutal lust, and wickedness, among the world's off-scourings.

Hence, when the season draws nigh, the Chinese saloon-keepers make ready their opium dens, bedizen anew their drinking hells, compel their white barmaids to be in readiness with their gaudiest toilet and their freshest rouge, and sit down to wait for their profit, chuckling.

The fleet had come in that afternoon; the crews had received their accumulated pay, and were already engaged in getting rid of it. It was but an hour after dark, and already from the shore came shouts and yells of laughter, and snatches of drunken song.

On board the lugger two men were sitting. The one a huge Norwegian, fair-haired and fierce-looking. He was the skipper. Beside him was a young man, almost a boy, handsome in a devil-may-care sort of way; he looked, what seemed strangely out of place in such an environment, a gentleman. He was—but no one knew what he was! Two years before he had suddenly turned up from the South. He had asked Hans Jorgensen, the skipper, for work. Jorgensen had taken him on, more from pity than anything else; for, like many of these giants, his most notable trait, next to his size, was his kindliness. That was all. No one asked questions. No one does up there, where the majority of the community are "wanted" for something or other. It did not matter in any case. No one knew even his name; that, too, it is hardly discreet to ask up there.

Moreover, if you get an answer, the chances are ten to one against its being the truth. So this young fellow went by the name of the "Kid," and, if Jorgensen ever troubled his mind at all about the matter, he probably thought the Kid must have been a clerk who had come to grief, or an extravagant son who had tried to imitate someone's signature, and had come up here to forget and be forgotten.

Jorgensen took his pipe from his mouth, and placidly remarked:

"You was glad now you stay mid me here in the cool. We drink one beer, we smokes one pipe. That was much better than to go into the bar and drink, drink, drink."

"You're a good sort, skipper; you don't think me past redemption, eh?

"No man was that," said the skipper, seriously. "I haf been the wust of the wust, and I know. You, you was too young to go mid these others the way they go. Last voyage, last two voyages, last three voyages, you go and drink. Four, five days you come back mid noddings, but ver' sick. Each time you say it the last."

"I know, skipper; I'm pretty far gone. But, you do not know everything about me. You think you're saving me from a drunkard's grave, but, I tell you, I drink to forget. Out at sea with the few of you I'm all right, but when I get here among men and women and lights—then it all comes back to me."

He stopped and gazed hungrily into the night. Ashore, some half-tipsy Italian began to sing "Fimicul, Fimicula," with the tinkling of a mandolin. The distance hid the harshness of his voice; the soft reflections on the still water, the balm-laden enchantment of the tropical night threw a glamour over all these crudities.

The Kid talked softly, as if in reverie.

"Do you know where I heard that last?" he said. "She was sitting there in the stern at Henley with a banjo one summer's night. We were drifting along among the lights. That hour. I'll never forget it! and here I am now!"

He got up, walked up and down nervously. Then his face became bitter and hard again.

"Good-night, skipper," he said; "I'm off to get a drink. I'll go to Ah Ling's and see Poppy."

Jorgensen nodded. He had known his efforts at reclamation would be of no use, and he had expected this. He had seen too many young men like the Kid, for whom forgetfulness had to be bought, and could only be bought in this wise. Still, he sighed as he saw him pull in the dinghy, and depart with a wave of the hand. He had got a great fondness for the young fellow, sometimes so boyish, sometimes so bitter and hardened. He had gone wrong once, perhaps, but Jorgensen was tolerant, and the lad was a hard-worker and a good companion. A life spent in the pearling fleet sets these virtues paramount. Take a man as you find him, that is the test.

The Kid reached the jetty and passed down the straggling sandy street. Flaring saloons, from which sounds of revelry issued, beckoned on either side, bold-eyed Japanese girls smiled at him from the shanties, but he passed on till he came to a long, low, galvanised iron structure with foot-high letters:

"The Pearlers' Paradise,
"John Ah Ling."

He went in. It was brilliantly lit by flaring kerosene lamps. The atmosphere was thick with their stench, and with the fumes of drink and tobacco. At the tables all round the room sat a cosmopolitan crowd, drinking and playing cards. Here an ear-ringed Portuguese elbowed a Kanaka from the South Seas; a Greek, a Scotchman, and a Chinaman were playing cut-throat euchre together. All were represented. The room was packed. The huge mirrors with which the walls were plastered—thanks to Ah Ling's business acumen, the Pearlers' Paradise was the most showy hell in the place—were dulled with vapour. There was a continuous babel of oaths, jests, scraps of song in every tongue.

The Kid pushed his way to the bar, where a girl, loudly dressed in red, was talking to a big Yankee who went by the name of Flash Jim. Then she saw the Kid, she immediately left her admirer, who looked blackly at the newcomer.

"Hullo, Kid!" she said, in a shrill voice. "How're you popping up. Thought you'd forgotten us altogether. Guessed you'd signed the pledge."

"It isn't likely, Poppy!" said the Kid, calmly taking possession. "By Jove, you're looking well to-night!"

The girl certainly was handsome, in a bold, brazen kind of way, despite the obvious artifices of rouge and powder. She was one of the type often found in these places, appearing no one knows whence, and disappearing no one knows where.

"Perhaps I thought you were coming," she said smiling "so I made the best of myself."

She liked the Kid. She knew there was something wrong, or he wouldn't be there. But still he was a gentleman, and he treated her with a half-serious respect that was very different to the rough-and-ready familiarity of the other patrons of the saloon. And the likes, as well as dislikes, of the tigerish Poppy were absorbing, and apt to prove embarrassing.

"Good!" said the Kid. "Give me a kiss, Poppy, and we'll have a bottle of fizz in honour of the prodigal's return."

Both were forthcoming, and more of the same. And when Jorgensen came in an hour later he found the Kid sitting on the bar counter, his right arm round Poppy's waist, a glass in his other hand, flushed and bright-eyed.

The Kid saw him at the door.

"Hooray," he said, "here's the old man! Come along skipper, and have a drink. Poppy, another bottle."

Jorgensen's towering form cut through the crowd as through grass. He came to the Kid, and handed him a letter.

"Was this for you," he said.

The Kid took it, glanced at it, and grew pale. It was addressed in a woman's handwriting:

"B. Sefton, Esq.,
Care of Captain Jorgensen,
Port Clarion,
Northern Territory,
Australia."

He fingered it abstractedly.

"How the devil did she know?" he said. "No one here knew my name."

At last he opened it with hesitating fingers, and drew out just a photograph of a smiling young girl. Underneath were three words, "Come back.—EDITH."

He gazed at it hungrily, and as he gazed Jorgensen saw his face soften and grow gentle again, and his eyes smile. Then Poppy broke in with:

"Come on, Kid, ain't you goin' to show us?"

The Kid seemed to wake up. He blushed; and made as if to hide it.

"No, Poppy," he stammered; "it's private."

"Well, you've no secrets from me. Go on, there's a good boy."

"No, I can't."

"Go on," said Poppy, wheedlingly; "I'll give you a kiss if you do."

But in vain were Popp's coaxing and cajoleries. They fell on stony ground.

"No, Poppy," was all he said; "it's a portrait of a girl I used to know at home, and I'm not going to show it in this place."

Poppy fired up with chagrin and jealousy.

"So that's it. I ain't good enough. I'm the dirt beneath your feet, am I? How particular we are all of a sudden. You reckon I'm too low down to look at your girl? Tell me straight."

"Well, if you will have it, that's my reason."

Poppy's eyes blazed.

"All right, Mister B. Sefton, Esquire; I'll not forget that. You come here and make love to me, and you don't value me no more than a bit of earth. I mayn't be as good as your bread and butter miss there, but I'm good enough to make sport with, am I? A fine straightforward gentleman you are! I'm not good enough, ain't I? Well, we'll see who's sorry first."

She swept off in a passion.

"You makes her angry; that was not so wise," said Jorgensen.

"Oh, it doesn't matter," said the Kid, absently, "she can't hurt."

But Jorgensen was anxious. He knew that in this lawless community an unscrupulous woman's words can work great mischief among drink-mad men, eager for her smiles. He was very emphatic that the Kid should make his peace without delay.

And at length the Kid moved along the bar to where Poppy had taken up again with Flash Jim. The latter eyed the Kid with triumph.

"Well," said Poppy, distantly, "what do you want, Mister Sefton?"

"I'm sorry, Poppy; I was beastly rude just now, and have come to apologise. Will you forgive me?"

Poppy's hard mouth became a little harder.

"If you're really sorry you'll show me the photograph, then I'll forgive you."

"I can't do that," replied the Kid. "I'm sorry. Good evening."

Poppy turned back to the Yankee without a word. The Kid went to Jorgensen.

"It's no go," he said. "She's cut up rough."

"We had best go," said the skipper. "Here it is not safe any longer. These womans is the very devil, and that Yankee, he is liddle better."

"Right oh!" said Sefton, and they turned towards the door. Suddenly two shots rang out. A woman's voice called:

"There you are, Mister Sefton. That'll teach you manners."

The Yankee stood with a smoking revolver, and the Kid staggered, stretched out his hands as if to feel his way, and fell. Jorgensen stood petrified for a moment, and then, with a roar like a bull, seized a chair, and rushed over to the bar. Someone smashed a lamp, for in darkness lies a measure of safety—then the rest went one after another. And Jorgensen raged in fury with the chair. If he could no longer find the Yankee, there were others there, and he saw red.

In the darkness all was confusion. Knives were drawn and used. Soon groans and shrieks mingled with the oaths. Jorgensen knew not whom he hit, nor cared, but smote on.

Vengeance must be done, even if it fell upon the guiltless.

At last, somehow, the saloon emptied. The Norwegian stumbled round, cursing the blackness that robbed him of more prey. Suddenly he collided with someone.

"Don't hit," said a woman's voice, "it's me. The rest's gone."

Jorgensen gripped her shoulder so that she winced.

"See what you half done," he said.

Meanwhile, the frightened Chinese servants had begun to reappear cautiously with lights. Such rows are inconvenient, of course, but otherwise do not cause any agitation. They are trade risks, and without much excitement the attendants came round to repair the damage. The floor was strewn with men, some of them badly knocked about. Jorgenson had laid low many, and knife thrusts in the dark had claimed their tale. The mirrors were broken, the bar wrecked, but without a glance at these things Jorgensen went over to where the Kid had fallen; Poppy followed, pale beneath her rouge, and sobbing. She threw herself down beside the Kid, and kissed his white motionless face.

"I did it," she cried to Jorgensen; "I told Jim to shoot him. He'd do anything to get me, and I knew it."

Jorgensen said nothing, but knelt down and tried to force some brandy between the set lips. Poppy raised the young head on to her lap. The floor was red and wet.

Then the Kid opened his boyish eyes and smiled.

"Hullo," he said, "I've got it, I think, now. Poppy, put your hand in my left breast pocket, and take out the envelope."

Poppy did as she was bid.

"Look at it quick, and give it to me."

"I don't want to look at it," sobbed Poppy.

"You've got to. Hurry up; I've not very long—you wanted to see it before."

Poppy looked at it, and gave it to the Kid.

"I guess you were right," she said. "There wasn't any call for a woman like me to see it."

And she sobbed anew.

The Kid took it in a tremulous hand, kissed it, half sat up, and fell back into Poppy's arms—expiring.

HAVE ANIMALS OCCULT FACULTIES;

The Occult Review has an article upon the occult faculties of animals written by Dr. Hartmann:—There was a time in the not "long ago" when there existed a great difference of opinion among the scientists as to whether animals were in possession of reasoning powers, and whether they could act occasionally according to logical reasoning and foresight, or were merely led by an unreasoning instinct. It seems that this question has been settled; because there are so many instances known in which especially the higher animals—such as the elephant, the horse, or the dog—acted in a manner exhibiting an almost human intelligence and showing a comprehension of the emergencies of the case. Elephants are employed in India for loading and unloading cars and perform their labour in a manner showing considerable intelligence; dogs employed for herding or in the service of the police know their business; horses sometimes exhibit more intelligence than their drivers; even hogs can be trained to perform clever tricks. A case is known of a beaver who collected his winter supply of living frogs, and to keep them from hopping away and escaping he broke the back bone of each.

Volumes might be filled with examples of the intelligent working of the mind of animals, and also of their domestic affection and virtues. A pair of storks were occupying a nest, and during the absence of the male the female was visited by another stork. The male upon his return seems to have discovered the indiscretion; he called together a council of the storks in the neighbourhood, and after what seemed a noisy deliberation the assembly killed the unfaithful female with the strokes of their bills and threw her out of the nest.

The animal organism of man does not differ much from that of other beings; perhaps it is only a difference of degree. The brain is the instrument for thinking and the blood, with its central organ, the seat of affection and desire. Animals have an astral body, and they are capable of forming mental images by means of their thoughts. They are consequently capable of appearing as guests after the death of their physical forms, and they may project their thought-bodies to the person or place of which they are thinking. They are, on the whole, more clairvoyant than men or women; they have animals souls like ourselves, and consequently their own psychic or occult faculties and powers, even if they employ them instinctively and without scientific knowledge of the way in which they are employed. But even we employ our psychic powers usually without intellectual reasoning; because these powers belong to the soul and not to the reasoning intellect. Paracelsus says that even the greatest magician or sorcerer performs his feats without knowing the way in which his magical powers act. There is no doubt that animals may be hypnotized so as to make only one idea dominant in their minds, as is shown by the well-known experiments of drawing a chalk line in front of a hypnotized chicken, which the chicken, imagining itself to be imprisoned, dares not cross. They are subject to thought-impression and can be acted upon by means of telepathy, as I have often proved to my own satisfaction by experiments made with a favourite horse of mine, which on certain occasions use to take the road which I willed it to take, without any other indication except my wish and my thought.

Two years ago a great sensation was caused in Germany by the public exhibition of a horse, which answered questions asked at random by the visitors, without being in contact with anybody, and without its trainer standing near, although he stood within hearing of the questions. If, for instance, the number of the day of the week or month was asked, the horse gave the correct answer by so many times stamping his feet. I do not know what theory the scientists invented to explain this phenomenon, but it seemed to me that the questions were answered by the trainer by means of telepathic impressions made upon the mind of the horse.

Animals, especially horses, dogs and birds are susceptible to astral impressions. In haunted houses animals often perceive ghosts which are not seen by non-sensitive people. Lord Lytton tells of a remarkable case of this kind in his story of a "haunted house," and innumerable similar cases are known. Only recently at the funeral of the assassinated King of Portugal, when the corteys arrived at the place of the tragedy, the horses attached to the hearse refused to proceed. They probably saw the horrible impressions in the astral light created there by that murder. Adolphe d'Assier, a French writer, gives in his L'Humanité Posthume several interesting accounts of astral apparitions of animals and even of visible, and tangible materializations. I know by personal experience of several cases in which the astral bodies of pet dogs that died still haunted the premises and could be heard to act according to their previous habits, jumping on chairs and beds as they used to do while alive.

I also have evidence that animals think of their friends, and that their thoughts may reach them; because love can carry the thought-image to any place, however far it may be, and create a mental impression. I was very fond of a little pet dog that was very intelligent and affectionate; it belonged to the Princess M——R——at Florence. Once while I was on a journey at Berlin this dog appeared to me, wearing a new collar, which I had not seen before. On my return to Florence I found that the dog had been ornamented with such a collar. The same little dog afterwards died, and I have seen his astral image several times and without thinking of him. It therefore could not have been caused by my own imagination. Mr. Leadbeater, in his book On the Other Side of Death, also cites some examples of apparitions of dogs, and one interesting story of a spectral dog may be found in Mr. Stead's Borderland, Vol. iv, No. 5.

It is not to be supposed that a dog intends to project his thought-form; it may be sufficient that he loves his friend and thinks of him; and as we know that thinking beings, after they leave their physical bodies at death, have still an ethereal brain, there is no reason why we should not accept the theory, that deceased animals, as well as deceased human beings, may after death think of the person they love, and thus appear to them in a spectral form.

The above business has been started to fill a long-felt want and to give sportsmen an opportunity of having their trophies artistically mounted with anatomical correctness.

There is no further need to send trophies to Europe to be prepared as the work turned out by this firm is equal to that of any similar business in England or elsewhere, and the rates are very much cheaper.

The mounting of birds and animals and the modelling of heads is entirely done by European workmanship and not by European supervision only, as is the case with other firms of this nature in India.

INVADING OLD ENGLAND.

NOWADAYS one cannot take up a paper from home without finding some reference to the threatened "invasion of England." So far as we can gather the old country is still safe from "those terrible Germans," but the Americans and French have succeeded in making an incursion and the Gauls have scored two victories. Landing at Dover the French forces made for the south of England, where the first attack proved successful, and going on to Liverpool they carried of—we are writing of racing, not warfare—The Grand National.

Lutteur III.'s capture of the blue riband of the British chase was an all-round triumph for France, except that the owner, Mr. J. Hennessey, is an Irishman, for the winning horse was born and bred in France, and was ridden by a French jockey. Long before the finish it was seen that the wonderful speed the French horse displayed could not be coped with, and he adds to the brilliant but small list of five-year-olds who have won the race.

The Americians who are confining their attentions to the flat racing events have yet to break ice; but they are bound to be heard of when their horses have become more acclimatized.

Many a time have Americans made friendly incursions into England with a view of racing their home-bred produce against British, but never, hitherto, have they sent thither such wholesale exportations of their (professedly) thoroughbred stock (for not even Foxhall was what we should acknowledge for strictly thoroughbred) as circumstances, upon which it is unnecessary to dwell here, induced them to send over last year or in the very early months of the present. It will not be impertinent, therefore, to recall to mind what their chiefest successes have been in England. Last year a little good luck (instead of bad) might have put Norman III. "bred in the U. S. A.," and winner of the Two Thousand on a higher level than even that which was attained by his "national," Iroquois, whose fate it was to miss the "triple crown" for lack of the Two Thousand. Well then, the year 1881, the year of the three-year-olds, Iroquois and Foxhall, saw the greatest successes that have been won hitherto in Great Britain (and in France, which is neither here nor there) by race horses "bred in U. S. A.," Howbeit, Iroquois, like the celebrated "Frenchman," Gladiateur, did all his two-year-old training in England, though unlike Gladiateur (whose trainer was the famous Tom Jennings) his trainer was a "national" of his own, the popular Jacob Pincus. The Americans began the season of 1881 badly; for their champion, Mistake, was only an indifferent runner-up for the Lincolnshire Handicap to the grey Buchanan. Soon after this, however, Mistake won the Newmarket International Handicap, and set the balling rolling for the Americans, though it was the only race that he won out of eleven attempts. After no long interval came the Newmarket Stakes, won by Iroquois, and he proceeded further to take the Burwell Stakes (w.o.), the Epsom Derby, the Prince of Wales's Stakes (Ascot) the Doncaster St. Leger, and the Newmarket Derby.

As for Foxhall, his successes in England were the (now discontinued) Grand Duke Michael Stakes, the Cesarewitch, the Select Stakes and the Cambridgeshire, all at Newmarket; but in France he won the Grand Prix de Paris, beating the good British horse Tristan and the French horse (curiously named Albion) winner of the French Derby (Prix du Jockey Club). Other successful American horses were very few, and their successes were insignificant, about the most conspicuous having been the two-year-old Golden Gate, winner of the then extant Granby Stakes (Criterion Course) at Newmarket.

It will be seen then that the successful American horses of 1881, though inferior in number, were superior in achievement to any that preceded them or so far have come after them. And the result of their prowess was that Mr. Pierre Lorillard, owner of Iroquois, failed by only £6 10 shillings to take first place among "winning owners," Mr. W. Stirling Crawfurd having occupied that position with £17,919 10 shillings against £17,913 and that Mr. J. R. Keene had to be content with £4,966, to which, if one be allowed to travel a little out of the record, may be added £6,414 for the Grand Prix. Altogether the brilliant campaign for American horses, not to be repeated, it is to be hoped, without unfriendly feelings in this year or any other time to come. And even in 1881 British turfmen had little consolation for Bend Or, who was giving 2½ stone for the year to Foxhall, debeated the American colt for the City and Surburban, and Iroquois for the Champion Stakes at Newmarket and Robert the Devil (4yrs.) left Foxhall "down the course" for the Ascot Cup (though the American was to win in next year's corresponding race).

So far the feature of the English flat racing season has been the successes achieved by King Edward's horses, three of which, Vain Air, Minoru, and Oakmere have gained winning brackets. Minoru and Oakmere scored at Newbury on the same day, and in succeeding races, and their victories naturally occasioned the liveliest satisfaction. Both are colts which His Majesty leased from Mr. W. Hall Walker three years ago. The former has several important engagements during the present season among them the Two Thousand Guineas, the Newmarket Stakes, the Derby, and the St. Leger. He has evidently made more than a normal advancement during the winter. It is many a long year since His Majesty won two races in one day not to say consecutive. Coming as the feat does, at the beginning of the season, let us hope that it is a happy augury, the forerunner of many more successes for the Royal colours in the near future.

"Behold!" whispered the Spiritulistic Medium; "It is the spirit of your deparated wife."

The man replied not; neither did he look.

"Why don't you speak to her?—it is your dead wife," whispered the Medium.

"Oh" she'll do the speaking, if it's she!"

Excited Citizen (rushing into police station): "I want a detective."

Inspector: "What do you want a detective for?"

E. C.: "Well there's a fight going on in front of my house, and I want him to find a policeman."

"Well, do you know the time, John?" inquired Mrs. Brown, sternly, as her husband returned from the club some time after midnight.

"Yes, dear," was the reply; "but I'll tell you what kept me late. An argument started amongst the married members as to which of them had the cleverest and prettiest wife. Each, of course, voted for his own; at last we put it to the single members to decide, and, would you believe it, darling?—everyone voted for you!"

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

THE dates fixed for the Calcutta Monsoon Races are as follows:—31st July, 7th, 14th, 21st August, 4th, 11th, 18th, and 25th September. Programmes for the first four meetings can be had on application to the Secretary of the C. T. C.

THE Stewards have kindly favoured us with an advance copy of the prospectus of the Tollygunge Gymkhana meetings which is as follows:—

1.—The Novice Stakes.—A Flat Race for Horses that have never won a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase value Rs. 45 or over nor started in a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase, value Rs. 550 or over. C. W. over 11st. Distance—4 furlongs.

2.—The Visitors' Plate (Open).—A Flat Race for Maiden Horses. C. W. over 10st. Distance—4 furlongs.

3.—The June Stakes.—A Flat Race for Maiden Ponies 14-2 and under. W 1. 14-2 to carry 12st Allowances.—Arabs 40lb., Country-breds 21lb Distance—4 furlongs.

4.—The Club Stakes.—A Flat Race for Horses that have never won a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase value Rs. 500 or over. Penalties—Winner of a Flat Race, Hurdle Race or Steeplechase value Rs. 450 or over, once 5lb., twice 10lb., oftener 14lbs. C. W. over 10st. 7lb. Distance—4 furlongs.

There will be meetings at the Tollygunge Club on the 12th and 26th June and the 10th and 24th July.

IT will be seen from the above that there are only four races drafted at present, but the programme will probably be made up to five or six events by the addition of a Polo Scurry and Jiu-Jitsu Stakes or whatever else seems to be desired by the owners and is likely to fill. We believe an open Pony Race for 14-2 and under would be a popular item.

ANY one going down to the race course in the morning can see writ large all over it that we have got a man at the head of affairs now who means to make things a success and does not consider apparent trifles too unimportant to receive his attention. As a little instance of the thorough way in which Captain Hughes does things we might example the Hurdles which were left up for purposes of schooling. It has been the custom for some years past to leave three or four hurdles standing for this purpose, but nobody has ever considered it worth his while to see if they were kept in a proper condition. Now all this is changed. The fences instead of lying about like drunken men who have difficulty in keeping their equilibrium are set well and level at a proper angle and without having those gaps to which we have unhappily become accustomed. Further, the ground on the landing side has been carefully prepared and there is no risk of a horse slipping and straining himself on alighting. Another agreeable thing to notice is that the wishes of owners and trainers if feasible receive due attention in these days, as on Monday morning a trainer stated that he would like three hurdles instead of two over which to school on Thursday morning and lo and behold! on Wednesday by 6 A.M. the third hurdle was ready. This is a welcome change with a vengeance, and it is quite a new thing in Calcutta for the wishes of unimportant people like owners and trainers to receive much consideration and we hope this state of things may long continue.

THE new race course is proceeding apace. The soil has already been turned up well past the 7-furlong course and there is no doubt whatever that the whole mile will be completed long before the cold weather. We notice also that a deep trench is being dug along the side of the Monsoon Hurdle Course where it comes parallel with the straight, and as this was the only part last year where the going was bad it will no doubt help to make this course an excellent one.

FOLLOWING the lead of the Calcutta Turf Club several racing centres have made big improvements in their course, stands and enclosure. Big changes have been effected at Karachi and a number of improvements have been put in hand at Poona. Visitors to the meetings at Poona next September will find many alterations which should be appreciated. The stand in the second enclosure is being extended twenty feet on either side, while the enclosure itself has been lengthened as far as the rubbing down sheds on the north of the main enclosure. The Bookmakers' sheds in both enclosures are being enlarged and improved upon to give the public more room and to accommodate the new totalisator worked by the W. I. T. C. There are big extensions in the paddock and the refreshment pavilions are to be rebuilt.

THE Annual Meeting of the Madras Race Club, which was to have been held last week, was postponed for want of a quorum. It is proposed to convene the meeting again in November.

THE latest betting on the Derby is as follows :—

2 to 1 against Bayardo by Bay Ronald—Galacia.

6 to 1 against Minoru, by Cyllene—Mother Seigel.

10 to 1 against Sir Martin, by Ogdon—Lady Stirling.

12 to 1 against Diamond Stud, by Diamond Jubilee—Dame d'Or.

MICK BURNS, the cross-country rider, well known in South Australia, Victoria and in India, and in his best days a good horseman over fences died recently from wounds self inflicted. He twice won the Indian Grand National for the Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar. In an obituary notice, the Adelaide Observer writes :—

He was 42 years old, and was born in West Adelaide. Mr. Alec Rankine took a fatherly interest in Mick as a boy, and persuaded him to leave off selling matches and papers and take a situation under him. Soon afterwards Burns, who was then only a youngster, rode for Mr. Rankine at the old Plympton meetings ; but perhaps the first winner he piloted was Euchre, the property of Mr. Henry Ayliffe. At that time Burns displayed ability in the saddle, and was induced to join Mr. J. E. Saville's stable, and then threw his lot in with Mr. G. Read. Over 20 years ago he toured the north with that good horse Converse, and won races up as far north as Hawker with this much-travelled gelding. For years he rode in races around the Wimmera, and did most of Mr. Tom Cawker's riding but about 10 years ago he went to India. He soon jumped into the front rank of cross-country riders in the land of the Rajahs, and was first jockey so far as hurdle races and steeplechases were concerned for the Hon. A. A. Apcar. For that sportsman he won the Grand National two years on Simon in 1901 and on Milburn in 1903. The deceased returned to Adelaide a couple of years ago, and first purchased the steeplechaser Cronje (who was killed in Burns's colours), and then he secured that good mare Becky. With the latter he did well, capturing, among other races, the last Port Adelaide Cup, of 500sovs.

COLONIAL visitors to London this summer may be reminded that a very interesting and important Horse Show is held on the 18th and 19th of June next, in the Old Deer Park at Richmond, Surrey, about half an hour's pleasant ride from the Metropolis by road, rail, or river. The owners of all the best, horses in the country are attracted to this classic show, not only by the generous Prize List, which this year considerably exceeds £2,000 in Cups, cash, and medals, but by the splendid general arrangements, and the spacious turf-clad Ring, which is acknowledged by experts to be the finest arena in the United Kingdom for the display of horses in saddle or harness. The Show is now recognised as one of the big social events of the London season—a pocket edition of Ascot and Goodwood—and this year promises to be even more brilliant than usual. The Duke of Teck the popular President, will be present after a long absence as Military Attache in Vienna. Royalty is expected ; and the Lord Mayor of London, with the Lady Mayoress and Sheriffs are to pay the Show a visit in semi-State, on the opening day.

A great feature of the Show this year will be the Jumping Competitions for which the prizes have been largely increased. In counection with these the "Teck Cup" is to be competed for by officers in uniform. This Cup, valued at £60, is a magnificent specimen, and a masterpiece by Pandiani, of Milan. Mr. Alfred G. Vanderbilt is again presenting a valuable and beautiful Cup for the Pace and Action class. The High Jumping, for which the Exeeutive has provided a special "jump" made on the continental plan, will afford a remarkable and interesting exhibition of horsemanship of a very sensational character. The Riding and Harness classes, the classes for Four-in-hands, and the horses in hand already promise an exceptionally strong entry. The Show has also an important commercial side, and buyers are yearly frequenting this meeting in increasing numbers. The Show is pleasantly easy of access from London, and every arrangement is made for the comfort and accommodation of visitors of all classes. The Band of His Majesty's Royal Artillery will attend, and a high class string Band will play upon the Lawn, which is recognised as the popular rendezvous of London society. Colonial visitors are sure of a cordial welcome and invited to spend a most delightful week end at the quaint and beautiful old Surrey town on the banks of the silvery Thames.

MR. FRANK FINN, F.Z.S., is to be heartily congratulated on the production of the first volume of his popular natural history—"The Wild Beasts of the World." Few zoologists are better qualified to give us a combination of accurate information coupled with scientific treatment, yet in popular and simple style withal. An intimate acquaintance with Mr. Finn's writings naturally leads us to expect that the habits and personal character of the animals have been amply noticed by one whose faculty for close observation and accurate deduction is second to none. The excellent illustrations are by such well-known artists as Cuthbert E. Swan, Winnifred Austin and Louis Sargent and they are undoubtedly a specially attractive feature of the work, showing us the animals, admirably depicted amid natural surroundings. We are promised, when the series is completed, no less than one hundred fully coloured plates ; if they are up to the standard of the first instalment, they will form a valuable and interesting collection in themselves. We commend Mr. Finn's latest book to our readers' attention with the fullest confidence.

THE hooking of a partridge on the wing by a Frome angler while making a cast recalls other similar occurrences where birds, and even rats, have been accidentally caught on rod and line. It is by no means uncommon for trout-anglers to hook swallows and martins—indeed, these birds sometimes hook themselves through darting at the fly and mistaking it for the natural insect. A writer in a London paper states that he has caught a swallow with a May-fly on the Kennet, and two more swallows—these latter in one afternoon—while roach-fishing. This happened on the Lark, the pretty little Suffolk river, and at the time many swallows and martins were "hawking" over the stream. Both the birds dashed at a bunch of gentles, and hooked themselves in the beak. One was saved, and went off all right, as did another swallow, which was rescued after being knocked into the river through coming in contact with the rod while a cast was being made. The late James Tayler ("Red Palmer"), who was so well known as the Secretary of the Gresham Angling Society and a skilled troutfisher, once hooked and landed a water-hen on a Hampshire stream, and several instances of bats being accidentally hooked have also occurred. One evening, too, as an angler made a cast close under the bank on the Herts Colne a rat rose to the surface, and in the fading light was taken for a trout. The angler struck, and hooked the rodent in the tail—a performance which was instantly followed by a series of loud squeaks and a plunge into the rushes, where the hook came away. More than one fly-fisher has before to-day also hooked a cow when that gentle domestic creature has, unobserved, been quietly browsing in the line of the cast. The writer has a vivid recollection of having (when the old Calcutta Angling Club was in existence) hooked a big baboo when trying for the elusive Cutla in the Dalhousie Square tank. It happened at the end of a particularly hot and blank day and came quite as a relief to the dull monotony of bottom fishing in Bengal.

A LONDON Correspondent has been moved by a perusal of the Zoological Garden commissariat account to express his sorrow and shame at the amount and character of the food provided. He writes :—Plaice, rats, and tares seem to play an important part in the commissariat at the Zoo, and I look down the list in vain for salmon and cucumber, while hors d'œuvres and savories are not included in the menu. Surely this is not as it should be.

WHERE IS THE S.P.C.A.?

Who is it, I enquire, who hardens
  His heart so much that not one beast
Inhabiting those famous gardens
  Is favoured with a gourmet's feast ?
The toucan has no caviare,
The sloth is given no cigar.

I sit and sob when I am reading
  Bald details of the workhouse fare
Distributed to creatures needing
  Cates which are never handed there.
Fancy, the hippopotamus
Deprived of his asparagus !

I cannot think that the society
  Is conscious of the craving hot
For something tending to variety
  Experienced by the guillemot ;
The pelican grows glum when he's Not given Gorgonzola cheese.

We ought to treat our animals
  Not merely as we paupers treat ;
We ought to look on them as pals
  And variegate their daily meat.
No wonder that the zebras droop
When they're forbidden turtle soup.

My blood, I vow, commences boiling
  At thought of tigers, baulked of tea,
And all my nature 'gins recoiling
  Before such false economy.
In vain the alligator begs
To start his lunch with plovers' eggs.

Where is Old England's zest for freedom ?
  What must the nations think of us
When animals that come from Edom
  And elsewhere are neglected thus ?
I just despise the person who Is satisfied with London's Zoo.

THERE are animals that never in all their lives drink a drop of water. Among these are the llamas of Patagonia and the gazelles of the Far East. A parrot lived for 52 years in the gardens of the Zoological Society of London without drinking a drop of water, and many naturalists believe that the only moisture imbibed by wild rabbits is derived from the green herbage laden with dew. Many reptiles—serpents, lizards, and certain batrachians—live and thrive in places quite devoid of water, and sloths are also said never to drink. An arid district in France has produced a race of non-drinking cows and sheep.

To owners who take a deep interest in their horses and who do not regard them as mere mediums for gambling purposes, the question of nomenclature should be a particularly absorbing one, and it is satisfactory to note that in many instances great care has been taken to obtain an appropriate name.

In glancing through old racing records, one finds such senseless titles as Tommy Up a Pear-Tree, Who Would Have Thought It, Here I go with my Eye out, Jo I so I, Heel and Toe Fanny, and Jenny Come Try Me ; but the tendency nowadays is to get a name having some connection with either the sire or dam, and now and again one comes across a real gem.

Some years ago, Mr. H. T. Barclay, who will always be remembered by racing men as the owner of Bendigo, had a colt by Cylinder—Staff of Life, and it was a happy inspiration when he called it Roll, for a cylinder must roll, whilst a roll is made of bread—the Staff of Life.

Anyone conversant with the free-and-easy language at the famous fish-market will appreciate Billingsgate for a son of Anathema ; and the owner of a descendant of Beeswax could not do otherwise than christen the youngster Adherent.

Sir James Miller, of Sainfoin and Rock Sand fame, once had to name a colt by Gladstone, and probably to remind us of Lord Beaconsfield's famous phrase, he chose, Verbosity.

Mr. Schwind's colt, Hackenschmidt, was aptly named, for he is a son of Vici, and at the time his owner gave the colt his name the great Russian wrestler was causing an immense sensation, and could take no other motto than the time-honoured "Veni, Vidi, Vici."

The owner of Madrali, too, was justified in selecting the name of the Turkish athlete for a son of Resolute, and bearing in mind the splendid ride of the ill-fated Guardsman, Khiva Pass could hardly be improved upon for a son of Burnaby.

Readers of Cutcliffe Hyne's popular book will appreciate Captain Kettle for a colt by Buccaneer—Comette, but I notice that Mr. Randall has endeavoured to raise a laugh by christening a younger horse with the same pedigree Captain Pott. Neither, it may be added, is a "black."

Edicius, for a colt by Despair, has, no doubt, set many people wondering, but this is a smart piece of work on the part of Mr. B. Strauss. The horse was originally named Suicide, but some objection came from Old Burlington Street, and Mr. Strauss simply reversed the spelling of the word.

The Presidency-Parsee cricket match at Poona has been fixed for the 6th, 7th and 8th September. The Hindoos will meet the Parsees in the first of the Triangular matches on the 16th, 17th and 18th September and the winners will play last year's winners, the Presidency team on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd idem at Bombay.

We regret to record the death of Mr. J. C. Leighton, Sub-divisional Officer of Asansol who died at the General Hospital of blood poisoning. Mr. Leighton met with an accident to his knee while playing cricket last January and it was found necessary to bring him down to Calcutta. He was laid up a long time but was on the high road to recovery when fever supervened and he died on Monday morning last. Mr. Leighton came out to India from Dundee in December 1901 taking up the duties of Sub-Divisional officer in Naraingunge, and afterwards at Dinapore. He was subsequently transferred to the post of Assistant Settlement Officer, Ranchi and finally to Asansol as Sub-divisional Officer.

It has been officially announced that Mr. H. D. G. Leveson-Gower will captain the team which the M.C.C. intend sending out to South Africa next winter. This will be the second tour of a team through South Africa under the ægis of the M.C.C. In 1905-6 the side was led by Mr. P. F. Warner, and, although it contained several of the leading players of the day, lost four and won only one of the five Test matches played.

Reuter announces the death on the 22nd instant of the Earl of Sheffield.

Henry North Holroyd, 3rd Earl of Sheffield, was born in 1832 and succeeded to the title in 1876. He was attached to the Embassy at Constantinople from 1851 to 1852, was Attaché at Copenhagen during the latter year and then returned to the Turkish capital where he remained till 1856. He sat for East Sussex from 1857 till 1865. He was well known as a yachtsman and was closely identified with cricket for many years and especially with the visits of the Australian teams which he entertained at Sheffield Park. In 1891—92 he took an eleven to Australia, captained by W. G. Grace and managed by Alfred Shaw. The team played twenty-seven matches, won twelve, lost two and drew thirteen. The Earl of Sheffield was president of the Sussex County Cricket Club, resigned in 1896, was re-elected in 1904 and resigned once more the following year.

Australian cricket has suffered a big loss by the death of Mr. John Cresswell, Secretary of the South Australian Cricket Association, news of which reaches us by the last mail. He had held this office for twenty-five years, was well known and enjoyed a wide popularity. His work for the cricket association was perhaps better known than any other branch of what he undertook and scores of visiting cricketers and athletes had reason to appreciate his kindness and hospitality.

"All things come to him who waits." A waiter from the Monico restourant (London), who won the waiters' race last summer, has earned undying fame by winning the £2,000 Marathon Derby at New York early this month. His name is Henri St. Yves—a "darned mounseer" be it noted—and he beat Dorando Longboat and Hayes and left Shrubb collapsed! Vive! by all means. Here are details:—Up to the end of the fifth mile St. Yves led with Shrubb second. In the eleventh mile Shrubb took the lead, Longboat and St. Yves being just behind. At the end of the fifteenth mile Shrubb led St. Yves by a yard, with Longboat and Dorando a lap and a half behind. In the nineteenth and twentieth miles the Frenchman forged ahead. Longboat gave up in the twentieth mile. Shrubb fell into a walk in the twenty-second, and St. Yves eventually won in 2hrs. 40mins. 50⅘secs. Dorando was second.

The contest of Shrubb and St. Yves for the lead was one of the prettiest ever seen in the States. For mile after mile Shrubb stuck to first place, only a yard separating him from the ambitious young Frenchman. At the nineteenth mile St. Yves sprinted nearly a lap ahead. Thenceforth the issue of the race was not in doubt. From the beginning the Frenchman ran in catching style. Poor Shrubb! He was struck a barren patch lately: is there no one to whisper ne sutor ultra crepidam, why will he run out of his distance?

In a fifteen mile Marathon Race at New York last week. Shrubb beat St. Yves in 1hr. 26mins. 12secs. St. Yves' time was 1hr. 27mins. 58secs.

It has not been long before the Marathon racing crase has claimed a victim. A twenty-mile Marathon race at Hull on the 3rd instant ended in a tragedy. Among the runners was a local athlete named Frederick Rumsby. During the race, which was promoted by the Hull and East Riding Harriers, Rumsby several times complained of dizziness to the cyclist who accompanied him.

He was stopped and rubbed down, but insisted on again joining in the race.

Just as he was completing the twenty miles and had entered the city he collapsed. He was carried in an unconscious condition into an inn near by and there he lay unconscious till death took place.

He was only twenty-two years of age, and won a similar race last year.

Private J. Batchelor, "F" Company, 2nd Dorset Regiment, Fort St. George, is, we understand, prepared to run any one in Madras, over a course of 10 miles, for a wager of between Rs. 100 and Rs. 200.

Our Special Telegram regarding the 'Varsity Boat Race gave the result and a few important details; a full account of the terrific struggle appears in our review of English Sport to-day. It was a complete upset of public form and general prediction, and in spite of all that could be urged in explanation of the defeat of Cambridge there is not a shadow of doubt that the best, the strongest and the fastest crew won.

Both crews were well above the average this year by common consent. Six of the Oxonians were Etonians. Mackinnon hails from Rugby, Gillan from Edinburgh Academy, and Cudmore is an Australian. Two Etonians were doing battle for Cambridge. Swanston hailed from Loretto, Thomson from the City of London School, Kitching from Uppingham, Rosher from Charterhouse, Hornidge from Sherborne, Stuart from Cheltenham, and Compston from Dulwich. Nearly every man in either boat had figured at Royal Henley, while Cudmore, Gillan, and Mackinnon were members of the now famous record-breaking Magdalen College Four.

Our London Notes deal with the race, we will permit ourselves in this place to deal with a few historical facts in connection with the contest which may be of interest to some and may accrue to refresh the memory of others who are already familiar with the records of the race. The Westminster-Putney course was adopted in 1836, the ever-famous "seven-oar" race took place in 1843, and the present Putney-Mortlake course was finally selected in 1845. In the last named year, 1846, outrigged boats were first used in the race. The only foul recorded took place in 1849, and the 1855 race was abandoned owing to continued frost which stopped the practice of the crews. In 1856 the Putney match became an annual fixture, and a year later both crews utilised keelless boats and round oars for the first time. In 1859 Cambridge sank. A certain wit is said to have backed the Cantabs "for a place" this year, by the way, but lost his bet and never indulged in practical joking again. 1859 was also notable for the last appearance of either O.U.B.C. or C.U. B.C. representative crews at Royal Henley. The Oxford vs. Harvard international race was decided in 1869 and in 1873 both crews used sliding seats for the first time. The memorable dead-heat occured in 1877, and in 1880 the race had to be postponed from Saturday to Monday owing to a dense fog. The episode of Mr. D. H. Maclean's broken oar took place in 1887, while, in 1893, one of the Cantabs lost a rowlock soon after the start. It is curious to note the difference in weights between the crews of (say) 1860 to 1870 and 1890 to 1900—two decades divided by twenty years. During the former decade the winners averaged 94st. and the losers 93st. 11lb., or 11st. 9lb. odd per man. During the latter the winners averaged 98st. 8lb. and the losers 97st. or 12st. 3lb. odd per man, taking both together. It will, therefore, be seen that a 'Varsity oar from 1890 to 1900 was, roughly speaking, 7lb. heavier than one who rowed between 1860 and 1870—a significant fact when viewed in connection with the advent of the sliding seat. In the majority of cases the heavier crew has passed the post first. Sensational finishes have been of frequent occurrence, notably in 1856, 1867, 1885, 1890-91-96, and 1901. In 1886 Oxford led at Barnes Bridge by two lengths, and then Cambridge—stroked by Mr. F. J. Pitman, this year's umpire—got up and won by two-thirds of a length. In 1896 Cambridge led at the same point, but then Oxford—stroked by Mr. Harcourt Gold, their 1909 coach—also got up and won literally on the post. The record time for the race itself is 18·47, accomplished by the 1893 and 1900 Oxford and Cambridge crews respectively. In 1897 the Dark Blues rowed a trial in 18·27, but they have beaten it this year, when they went right through in the unprecedented time of 18·21. Prodigious! The next day the Cantabs also did a little record-breaking by rowing between bridges in the wonderful time of 7·11¼. This easily beat all previous records on either flood or ebb.

At a meeting of the Calcutta Football League held last week, Mr. D. L. Walker was re-elected General and Honorary Secretary of both divisions. Burn's have secured the vacancy due to the retirement of the Port Defence from the Second Division which now consists of the following 9 teams: Gordons (B), Xaverian Association, Measurer, Y. M. C. A. (Amateurs) R. G. A., Sibpur, St. Joseph's, Burn's, and Wanderers.

A ten-round boxing contest was held on the 19th instant in the Oval gronds at Bombay in aid of the Bomanjee Petit Parsee General Hospital. The principals were Lance-Corporal Oates, Light Weight Champion of India and Private Branshaw, runner up in the Middle Weight Championship at Simla. Mr. J. C. Taylor, R. N., was the referee and Private Gent of the Gloster acted as judge. Despite the disparity in their sizes Oates gave a fine exhibition, outclassed his opponent, and was awarded the verdict.

Paddy Gill, the professional feather weight boxer, has signed articles to meet Lance-Corporal Baker of the Royal West Kents in a six-round contest at Barrackpore on Saturday, the 1st proximo.

Gunner Dixon of the 59th Battery has just made an attempt on the Army and Navy club swinging record at Jullunder. Using clubs weighing 2lbs. 1oz. each he started swinging at 8 A.M. on Friday morning the 23rd inst., and kept going all day and through the night, but towards noon on Saturday he showed signs of distress and collapsed at 2-30, having swung for 30hrs 29mins., thus failing in his attempt by 6hrs. 32 mins.

Owing to the heavy rain in Calcutta on Tuesday evening no matches in the Beighton Cup hockey tournament were brought off, the grounds being quite unfit for play.

The All-India Championship Chess Tournament of 1909 was opened on the 17th instant at Green's Mansions, Bombay, and will continue daily until

The Viceroy's shoot at Hardwar produced a fair bag, Captain Keighley of the Bodyguard getting a fine tigress. Another shoot is to take place in the Mohun Pass beyond the Sewaliks, but it is probable that the inclement weather will cause its abandonment.

In view of the annoyance caused by tigers in the 24-Pergannas and Khulna districts, a reward of Rs. 200 is to be offered by the Forest Department or the Civil Department for each full-grown tiger or tigress and Rs. 40 for each tiger cub proved to have been killed in the two districts noted above. This notification is in modification of all previous orders.

The death is announced of Mr. Edward Hamilton Aitken of the Bombay Civil Service. Born at Satara in 1851, he was educated at Bombay and Poona, graduating B. A. and subsequently proceeding M. A. at the head of the Bombay University list. He won the Homejee Cursetjee Prize Poem in 1880 and was Latin Reader in the Deccan College 1880—1886. He then entered the Customs and Salt Department and served in various parts of the Bombay Presidency till his retirement in 1907. He was a keen naturalist and his writings on this subject and his delightful sketches of Indian life are well known. Behind the Bungalow, Tribes on my Frontier, a Naturalist on the Prowl, and The Common Birds of Bombay have all made the name of "Eha" famous throughout the peninsula,

London Week by Week.

Good Friday, 1909.

The Boat Race has been the event of the week for your humble scribe. What a struggle it was! Simply terrific up to Barnes Bridge were the exertions in both boats, and though Oxford won by three and a half lengths, how they had to work to do so no one but they can fully realize. Weeks ago I tipped you Oxford to win without reserve; I had formed my opinion on watching the practice and after their record course I was never in any doubt about it. But Cambridge started favourites and their defect is generally regarded as a complete upset of form. Certain it is that Oxford rowed even better in this race than they did at any time during practice. Hence the term "Dark Blues." What? They confounded all the critics by evincing splendid time body-swing and uniform slide-action from start to finish. Bourne especially proved himself "good at need," and he was undoubtedly the hero of the race. He never once got flurried, but kept his men going without any apparent exertion right away. All his colleagues rowed grandly, notably Kirby, Gillan, MacKinnon, Cudmore, and Gladstone. One feels sorry for Stuart. To be so near and yet so far from a four-consecutive-wins record was very sorry luck. He himself did all that such a fine oarsman, strategist, and stroke could be expected to do, but after Barnes those behind him couldn't respond and they finished utterly rowed out whereas the Oxford crew never lost their form and flew past the post in the most workmanlike uniform and powerful style imaginable.

* * * * * *

Not the least pleasurable function of the day was the annual dinner at the Grand Hotel, Trafalgar Square, presided over by Sir Charles Lawes-Wittenwronge, Bart., who stroked the Cambridge crew of 1865, and is a wonderful sportsman. He won the "Colquhouns" in 1862, the "Diamonds" in 1863, and the "Amateur Championship" in 1865. Outside these triumphs he boasts an athletic career second to none, while his cycling triumphs are still talked of to this hour.

Boat Race might well maintain its reputation, if not quite in the same rowdy fashion as of old. Light and Dark Blues "scattered abroad" as usual, yet there was not much mischief wrought—as in the good old days. The loving-cup went round freely in most of the leading restaurants, and even in the streets the startled passers-by often heard that

> "Noise of song, and clapping hands,
> And boys that crash the glass and beat the floor," immortalised by Tennyson. And why not? If they do make a lot of noise, and are rather rough in their play among themselves, what of that? Boat Race Day, like Christmas, comes but once a year, and they are very young. It is meet and right, moreover, that Boat Race Day should still be made the most of, provided young Oxford and Cambridge keep within the bounds of public decorum. It is one of our most valued national institutions.

As I post this, "everything points to glorious weather for Easter," according to the weather experts. So mote it be. Last Easter Monday I biked through Bucks in a heavy snowstorm I remember: possibly the present cheerful forecast may, ere Monday, utterly belie the steadily rising barometer in the hall—I beg pardon—passage; but in the Londoner's breast, at holiday time, hope springs eternal. If we get anything like the lovely sunshine and blue skies of the past week there will be few complaints.

The exit has been in full swing since Wednesday. The cheap excursion traffic at Easter means the heaviest in the year for the railway world. All 'Arry and 'Arriet laden trains from London have been run in triplicate. Over 2,000 trains have left London in 48 hours, goods traffic has been suspended on many lines. Ah well, its all very startling and wonderful this hurry and rush; but, after all, you in the East, in spite of soporific booking baboos and turgid luggage clerks, "get there just the same" in more leisured fashion, which is, perhaps, more wonderful still.

A new terror! The suffragettes are now seriously studying the gentle art of ju-jitsu with the special object of tackling the police whose nasty, brute force habits have hitherto baffled them when on raiding bent. Suffragette ju-jitsu displays are to be a prominent feature of the coming Fair of the Women's Freedom League at Caxton Hall and rumour says Robert is beginning to feel uneasy. He does not quite fancy himself hurtling through the air in obedience to a twist of a suffragette wrist and he does not at all relish the idea of being thrown and sat on by the poor things he has hitherto tucked under his arm with almost parental tenderness and marched off towards Holloway. It might perhaps be not altogether unpleasant to be laid flat and find a really young and pretty girl or two sitting on your chest; but as the suffragette is recruited almost exclusively from the ugly, bony or heavy sisterhood, poor Robert fails to take heart. May I be there to see when the fun begins.

"Ichabod" has been writ large above the portals of that once glorious hostel the "Star and Garter" at Richmond for some time; many of your readers who have pleasant recollections of the old place will hear of this with regret. For the second time within two years the place has been offered for sale by auction.

It is just one hundred years since the Star and Garter was reopened, after being for five years left to decay. Perhaps some clever hotel-keeper may find a good augury in that circumstance. In 1809 Christopher Crean, who had been the Duke of York's cook, became proprietor of the hotel, even then seventy years old, and he succeeded in making it a favourite resort of the period—the period of bucks and dandies, of heavy gambling and quick quarrels, of four-hour dinners and wonderful feats in the consumption of port.

The popularity of the hotel continued throughout the century. Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort, Louis Philippe, Napoleon III, and the Emperor Maximilian were among its many royal patrons.

In the sixties and seventies the Star and Garter attained the zenith of its fame. Thackeray mentioned it more than once in his novels; Meredith made Richard Feverel talk to Bellona there; and Mr. W. E. Norris makes it the scene of some of his cleverest chapters. But the real revealer of the charms of the Star and Garter was "Ouida."

Who can forget that page in "Under Two Flags" in which the water-party at Richmond, who pay seven guineas apiece for their dinner, are pelted with brandy cherries by Zu-Zu, have their best cigars "thrown away half-smoked by pretty pillagers," and listen to Laura Lelas singing a barcarolle? And who does not remember that even more dramatic scene at the Star and Garter in which Beauty meets Lady Guenevere?

"Psyche," described as "an idyll in three scenes," with dramatic action and dances arranged by Alfredo Curti, and with music by Alfred Moul, was produced at the Alhambra last Monday night. A ballet—for that's what it really amounts to—with a story, it fully maintains the Alhambra's reputation for beautiful staging. It happens like this: Psyche's beauty so moves a certain crowd that they destroy the statue of Venus and invite Psyche to take her place. This brings upon her the wrath of the gods. Venus herself puts in an appearance, and is enraged. Poor Psyche—for no fault of her own—is condemned to be chained at the entrance of a sea monster's cave. But here Cupid takes a hand in the game. He is smitten with a violent fancy for Miss Psyche, carries her away to his bower, and eventully, in spite of the opposition of his mother, Venus, has her ordained a deity, so that the road of true love is made smooth.

That is the story, although one might not follow it were the Alhambra management not so kind as to tell it in print. But, after all, it is only the spectacular effect of an Alhambra ballet that really matters, and "Psyche" is exceedingly pleasing to the eye. Shapely ladies, fair of face, are ever present, and with Mlle. Leonora to look beautiful and to dance most attractively in the title rôle, and with Mlle. Britta also appearing in the cast, it is not surprising that a delicate story beautifully staged was received with enthusiasm.

That fine, old, crusted institution Madame Tussaud's is waking up again. It is long since we had a really sensational or interesting exhibit in the old place, but this Easter we are to have a large and complete tableau of the Messina earthquake. It should be gruesome enough for most people, but I understand, from one who has been privileged to gaze on the work quite recently, that its treatment is not only realistic but artistic. It will be a change from the murderers, crowned heads and uninteresting "notabilities" at any rate.

For what is perhaps the most brilliant comedy the English language contains, Mr. Beerbohm Tree has gathered together a singularly brilliant cast, and last Wednesday night's revival of "The School for Scandal" must be considered as the most interesting comedy revival seen in London for some years. It was a wonderful night. Star after star, old favourite after old favourite, made an entrance until there was gathered together Mr. Edward Terry, Mr. Lionel Brough, Miss Ellis Jeffreys, Mr. Beerbohm Tree, Mr. H. V. Esmond, Mr. Henry Neville, Mr. James Hearn, Miss Marie Lohr, Miss Suzanne Sheldon, Miss Dagmar Wiehe, Mr. Basil Gill, Mr. Robert Loraine, and Mr. Charles Quartermaine. A star cast indeed!

In these days there can be few interested in the theatre who are not thoroughly acquainted with Sheridan's great play. Although the many asides and soliloquies strike something of a false note upon the sensitive ear of modern playgoers, the atmosphere of the piece remains wonderfully fresh. Every gem of wit—and what gems there are!—retains its piquancy; every polished line—and how wonderfully Sheridan contrived to polish them during those nineteen years he was engaged upon the play!—is a delight to the ear still and all the ingeniously arranged situations, all the deftly drawn characters, still carry straight to our hearts, and open the floodgates of our laughter.

And with such a splendid cast present to interpret such a splendid play, the revival at His Majesty's could scarcely have failed to win an immense success, even at a period when subtlety of wit is not regarded an necessary to a long run. It was a night of many personal triumphs, and although in some cases the renderings given to the characters were not the renderings of our dreams, there was no weak spot in the performance. It would be idle to dretend that Mr. Tree is at his finest as Sir Peter Teazle. At times last night he was inclined to be a trifle heavy. But he acted with characteristic subtlety and intelligence, and made every point. Mr. Robert Loraine was a complete success as Charles Surface—light, graceful, human, Miss Marie Lohr was a charming Lady Teazle, and it goes without saying that Mr. Edward Terry as Crabtree, Mr. Henry Neville as Sir Oliver Surface, Mr. Lionel Brough as Moses, and Miss Ellis Jeffreys as Lady Sneerwell were all in their element. There were calls for everyone at the end.

The craze of the England-returned Indian for the meaningless affix of "Esquire" instead of the well-understood and really dignified and correct prefix of "baboo" is of course better known to you good people than it is to us. I have heard of native gentlemen waxing indignant, not to say incoherent, over the omission to tack on the "Esquire" in recognition of the Europe clothes and English visit, and here in London we have had a case in point. A certain Shayamaji Krishnavarma, barrister, has come out second best in a little encounter he has just had with the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple. That body has decided that the seditious Mr. Shayamaji Krishnavarma is not quite what you would call a credit to the Inn, and has taken steps towards disbarring him. This action seems to be much appreciated by Mr. Krishnavarma, for he has written to tell The Times all about it. He says that the official letter to him did not bear the word "Esquire," and adds, "to which, as every lawyer knows, barristers-at-law are entitled." Every lawyer doesn't know anything of the sort, and if the egregious Krishnavarma will take the trouble to inquire at the Heralds' College he will find that while King's Counsel are entitled to the word "Esquire" after their names, ordinary barristers are not. S. K.'s law doesn't seem to be any better than his morals.

A pale young man, of raven hair and eagle eye, has been lecturing at Claridge's on the enthralling subject of "hand-thinking." He is called Dr. Olaf Nikola, and he is particularly strong on the thumb as the seat of human will-power. "Suppose," says he, "a man with a tendency to drink had his thumbs cut off, he would never be able to give it up after that." Hitherto the man whose fingers are all thumbs has been looked upon as the last word in human clumsiness, but now we must fain regard him as the acme of iron purpose, while in future we must not restrain, but rather encourage, children who suck their thumbs, as they must be considered by the process to be lubricating their budding will-power. Nothing seems able to impede the onward march of modern science!

The L.C.C. steamers are at last about to pass into the limbo of forgotten things; the ninety-four years of fruitless endeavour to make the Thames a passenger highway has come to an end. Nearly a century ago the first passenger steamboat appeared on the Thames, this week the London County Council took the final step for getting rid of the steamboats built only four years ago, on the ground that the public will not patronise them in sufficient numbers to make the venture pay working expenses.

REMINISCENCES OF SOME LEOPARD HUNTS.

VII.

The question whether felis pardus has the sense of sight well-developed is one that forms, and has in the past proved, a lever for considerable controversy. An exceedingly interesting note, written by Mr. C. H. Donald, F. Z. S., in the journal of the Bombay Natural History Society, published on 13th April 1908, quotes many instances in which the sight of birds and beasts, more especially in relation to the carnivora, has appeared to be quite normal. Major Burton on the other hand doubts whether the tiger has keen sight. A problem of this description cannot possibly be determined with any degree of finality on the facts of a few isolated cases. There would seem to be no reason to disbelieve the assumption that short-sightedness and deafness are prevalent in the carnivora as well as in the human race, but perhaps neither to the same extent nor degree. It should be the endeavour, therefore, of all sportsmen-naturalists to place on record their opinions on this subject, backed up by personal experiences, which will carry weight in their arguments tending to the solution of the question. It is a general belief that the carnivora are enabled to see better at night than during the daylight hours. A tiger or leopard looking up into a brazen sky and perhaps into the very depth of a blinding sun could not be expected to distinguish objects with any degree of accuracy; but if felis tigris or felis pardus were unable to distinguish danger at the distance of a few feet at night, as a general rule, it might then be reasonably assumed that the visual and olfactory powers of the greater carnivora were not by any means highly developed.

During the writer's sojourn in the abandoned military encampment described previously, a particularly bold leopard located itself on a small village less than 200 yards from my abode. A well-grown cow was seized from the very entrance to a cattle pen, and dragged off by the four-footed thief. On the following morning the owner instigated a search, and the carcase was discovered, partially devoured, about 50 yards within the extreme confines of a vast stretch of elephant grass. The stems rose on all sides to a height of 12 to 15 feet. The only possible method, by which any hope of a successful issue to the quest, could be anticipated, lay in siting in a hole in close proximity to the kill. The night would be moonless, and at that season of the year a mist settled down on the land enshrouding everything in its damp pall. I realised full well that the darkness, surrounded as I was by a wall of elephant grass of such a height, would be phenomenal. In fact one might have been located at the bottom of a blind well, with just a circle of dim light overhead. The front edge of the pit was, therefore, constructed not more than six feet from the carcase, which was wedged close up against the roots of the grass stalks. The obscurity beggared description. About 9 P.M. the hustling of the grass to the left gave warning of the approach of the quarry. From the depths of my retreat I was craning my neck to the right of the loop hole (about one foot square) to catch the first glimpse of the outline of a head and neck as it emerged round the corner. Of a sudden a shadow, a mere ghostly outline, seemed to be slowly moving directly in front of me. I raised the weapon, a ·577 to fire, but as the hammer fell the beast gave a spring into the air, and fell with a crash into the brake. The creature's body was between 4 and 5 feet away from the muzzle of the rifle. In lifting the rifle to the shoulder some earth had become dislodged, and the noise of the falling lumps had given the alarm. It may seem an incredible, and to some a grossly exaggerated, incident, but the position of the pit and part of the skeleton of the cow were inspected by several brother sportsmen in situ shortly afterwards, and they, no doubt, would be willing to corroborate the accuracy of the distances as stated. The beast had walked between the hole and the body of the cow. I feel sure that had I been armed with a 12 bore shot gun and slugs, the extra celerity in bringing up the firearm would have enabled me to lay low the feline. The brute escaped unscathed, but though no trophy resulted from this particular essay, it gave rise to considerable food for quiet meditation.

It would seem quite beyond the bounds of possibility to accredit that leopard with anything approaching a highly-developed sense of sight or smell if it could wander within 4 feet of danger without even being aware of its presence. Let us take a parallel instance. In place of the meat substitute a stolen safe, and in lieu of the four-footed prowler imagine an ordinary burglar coming to recover his loot. The time would be broad daylight. I think it will be generally admitted that unless the thief was suffering from some constitutional defect the presence of the trap laid for him would be discovered long before he had got within 4 feet of instantaneous death. In the instance under discussion, had the leopard seen the ambush he would unquestionably have retreated by the same path along which he had advanced. The fact of his having arrived abreast of me and on being started, jumping forward would tend to shew, that instinct of self-preservation was communicated to the brain through the ears, and not by means of the eyes.

Another case is on record which would still offer better proof of the lack of keenness of sight and bearings when leopards are concerned. A well known sportsman had elected to watch over a kill, concealing his person behind a bush. Drowsiness overcame his senses, and later on in the vigil he was rudely awakened by the noise of bones being crunched. To raise himself and his weapon without attracting notice required the strictest caution, but the feat was successfully accomplished and the feline slain. How could an animal boasting of a normal (that is as regards the feræ naturæ) olfactory and visual development lie down to enjoy a meal with his arch enemy man stretched unconscious within a few feet of teeth and claws?

It is a matter of some surprise into what extraordinary and unexpected places felis pardus will roam. There are many instances which have been related of these beasts taking refuge in the native houses in a village. Such examples, however, are easily accounted for. A shout is set up in the dead of night that a leopard is afoot. Dusky forms rise up on all sides and the terrified brute seeing himself trapped make for the first available place of refuge. Some little time ago, Fort Dufferin, Mandalay, was the scene of the death of a specimen of felis pardus. For the benefit of those who have never paid a visit to the Burmese centre of the universe a brief description will be fitting. Fort Dufferin is built in the form of a square. Each wall is 1½ miles in length approximately, and about 30 feet in height, the outside façade being devoid of all buttresses or other aids to escalading. At regular intervals in each wall are gateways furnished with heavy iron doors. Most of these are permanently barred, the remainder are open during daylight, closed and guarded by the military during the night. Between the wall and the moat is a term about 50 yards to 75 yards in breadth, and the moat is practically of the same width. The south moat is bridged in two places, the east in one, the north in two, and the west in three. One morning the news was conveyed to the cantonment magistrate that a leopard had ensconced itself in his compound and that his staff of menials were afraid and unable to carry out their daily avocation. The information was scarcely credible, but the circumstances required investigation without delay, if human life was not to be endangered. A subaltern heard of the rumour, and taking with him a single barrelled rifle proceeded to the scene of the reported intrusion. On arrival the feline was discovered, at a distance of about 10 paces, cronching under a bush. The hunter's lucky star was in the ascendant, for the beast was in no very amiable frame of mind. The bullet sped true, causing the creature to spring 6 feet or so into the air. Had the first shot not crippled the brute the sportsman's life would have been in grave jeopardy. It is interesting to surmise why this leopard had taken refuge within the precincts of Fort Dufferin. Its means of entry were disclosed in a small unused, and wholly forgotten drain It is reasonable to suppose that the fera naturæ just as the members of the human race whenever they get into a strange land are apt to lose their bearings and wander about till some familiar landmark catches the eye. It may have been possible that hunger induced too rash a pursuit in quest of or perhaps a period of mental aberration may have been responsible for such erratic behaviour.

The foregoing series of incidents have been related in the hopes that they may prove useful to the sportsman, tend to the elucidation of controversial zoological problems, and add to the knowledge of the habits of felis pardus. The writer has pursued the leopard on many other occasions, but the events that occurred have pointed to no moral, and in consequence would not be of general or particular interest.

Fishing.

FISHING WITH CORMORANTS IN JAPAN.

HAVING long felt a keen desire to witness this interesting sport, I was naturally glad to seize the opportunity of doing so when visiting Japan last year. With this idea in view, accompanied by my wife, I went to Negoya and Gifu early in June to await the advent of a favourable night. At this time there was a spell of very wet weather, and it was three days before the flooded and turbulent river became practicable for fishing. Although the torrential rain had only ceased at noon of the third day, by nightfall the mountain stream had almost regained its normal size for, like all the quick-running Japanese rivers, the Nagara very soon rids itself of surplus water

The night in question (8th June) was intensely dark, for the sky remained very much overcast, and the clouds were brooding low over the landscape. When, therefore, we left our hotel at 11 and made our way in rickshas through the straggling and dimly lighted streets of Gifu the view beyond the town was completely obscured, and we could see nothing of the beautiful pine-clad hills and the wide fertile valley through which the Nagara runs. But this was well, for on bright, moonlit nights the fishermen always remain at home, these conditions precluding all possibility of a large catch.

Arriving at the quayside we found a boat awaiting us, having been previously ordered by our Japanese friend, who had kindly made all arrangements necessary for our comfort. This boat proved to be a large one, but, being shaped like a broad, flat-bottomed punt, she drew very few inches of water, and was therefore eminently suited for the navigation of this shallow river. Her furniture was very limited ; under the shelter of a canopy a few rugs had deen spread upon the boards, and upon these we were able to recline at full length. A couple of paper lanterns hung beneath the awning, and cast a soft, rose-tinted light into the obscurity. No sooner had we taken our places than the two men in charge pushed her into the swift current, and the next moment we realized that they were forcing the boat upstream by means of poles. At each powerful thrust of their arms the poles struck the river bed with a sharp, clanging sound, while at the same time the water rushed noisily beneath the bows. In this way, for ever hugging the right bank and favouring all the quieter shadows, we progressed slowly for upwards of an hour.

The midsummer night was delightfully soft and warm, but a sultry breeze just fanned our faces, and could be heard rustling the leaves in a distant grove of bamboos. Over the paddy fields on the further bank the faint blue lights of a myriad fireflies could be seen twinkling like so many stars, while above the murmur of the river the loud musical drone of singing frogs was faintly audible.

Our destination was a point about a mile above Gifu, in daylight commanding a view of a long stretch of water, though now we could barely see the dim outline of the hills towering above us. On looking about us we discovered that at least a dozen boats had already congregated at the same place, evidently bent on the same errand as ourselves. These boats were almost exactly similar to our own, but the light from their round-bellied lanterns showed that they were packed with a picturesque throng of laughing, merry-making Japanese, and the sound of their revelry soon came pleasantly to us from all sides. A passionate love of sightseeing is an innate characteristic of this race, and cormorant fishing, as alone practised on the Nagara, seems to especially appeal to their sense of the weird and grotesque. I am told that from the middle of May to October (which is the fishing season) a similar concourse of heavily laden boats may be seen leaving the quay at Gifu every night, and that during August, when the fishing is at its best, the numbers are increased tenfold, while once a year the Mikado himself honours the scene with a visit.

The home of the fishermen (who always work in company) is about ten miles above the town of Gifu, and each evening, when the conditions be favourable, they drift down the river to a point some ten miles below, covering in this way about twenty miles of ground. They return again at their leisure during the daytime. Those wishing to see the performance proceed upstream for rather over a mile where they await the arrival of the boats, joining the fishermen as they boat down to the town of Gifu. This was exactly what we intended to do.

We had not waited long when our Japanese friend suddenly pointed into the darkness. "See, they come !" he said Away to the north the night was relieved by a faint, ruddy glow, at first scarcely perceptible, but momentarily increasing in brightness. A few minutes later seven small pin-points of light showed one by one round a distant curve of the river, and grew steadily larger as they drifted toward us. In a very short while we saw that these lights were really flaming braziers, great iron baskets of fire standing out about two feet from the prow of each boat. In the light of these glaring fires a number of dark objects could be made out moving hither and thither over the water, and at the same time our ears were assailed by strange cries and the clattering sound of oars being knocked against the sides of the boats, all this being done to encourage the birds in their labours.

As the bizarre flotilla came more within our ken we saw that the seven boats were floating down stream abreast of one another and that they each contained three standing men, one steering and the other two in charge of cormorants. The great braziers, now close upon us, illumined the darkness with a vivid glare, and the wood fires could be heard cracking loudly as they showered thousands of sparks into the water. The whole produced a peculiarly weird effect, and one not easily forgotten. The head fisherman in each boat stood in the fore part of his craft, a brightly lit figure against the indigo background. In his hands he held twelve leads which were attached to as many cormorants by collars round their necks. As the birds were diving and swimming in all directions it was quite marvellous to witness the dexterity with which he kept the reins from becoming hopelessly entangled, as one would imagine would inevitably be the case as the birds criss-crossed in the water. His hands seemed for ever at work sorting the lines with almost lightning rapidity. The second fisherman, apparently a younger and less experienced man, controlled only four birds and had a much easier task.

If the cormorants showed signs of becoming inactive their owners encouraged them with uncouth cries ; but this was hardly needed, for they were diving every few seconds and with really extraordinary energy. Judging by the success of their efforts, the water must have been teeming with fish, doubtless attracted by the light of the braziers. The gullets of the birds very soon became distended with the fish they had captured—the collar, of course, effectually prevented them from swallowing their prey outright. When replete the birds would swim idly on the surface of the water, and noting this, the fisherman would immediately haul them into the boat, the birds protesting feebly to this proceeding by uttering sundry croaks of annoyance. Holding the bird firmly by the body, he would then deftly run his fingers along the neck, by which means the wretched bird was forced to disgorge all its fish. The cormorant would thereupon be thrown back into the water to continue its work.

During the night a single bird will catch large quantities of fish, and seeing that over a hundred birds are used, the whole catch is considerable, and brings in a rich harvest for their owners, which perhaps more than compensates them for many months of enforced idleness. When the night's fishing is concluded the cormorants are rewarded by a meal, and are given all the small, unmarketable fish. But by this time many of them are already partly satisfied, for the very tiny fish can, of course, pass through the collar, and are swallowed during the evening's work. Each individual is known by a name, and, furthermore, has its own recognised place on the gunwale of the boat. When fed up they sit quietly in a row, preening themselves and occasionally exchanging a friendly peck or croak with their neighbours. They entirely ignore the presence of mankind and are apparently quite fearless.

The particular kind of fish caught by these cormorants is known as "ai," and is highly prized by the Japanese gourmets ; consequently it commands a comparatively high price in the markets. In size it averages only six inches to eight inches, perhaps less, and hardly ever exceeds 12 inches in length. To us it looked and indeed tasted something like a smelt ; but I believe it really belongs to the family Salmonidae, being known to ichthyologists as Plecoglossus altivelis, Temminck and Schlegel. It is apparently migratory, and does not run up from the sea until about May. It is said to increase rapidly in size as the summer advances, so that the bigger fish are not caught until the latter end of the season.—Collingwood Ingram in the Field.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

NEW ·465 BORE VELOPEX SYSTEM

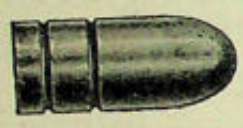
EXPRESS "INDIA" RIFLE.



MESSRS. HOLLAND & HOLLAND beg to introduce to the notice of Sportsmen their New ·465 Bore "India" Model Rifle. This weapon has been especially designed to replace the ·450 bore, the importation of which into India having been prohibited. The New Rifle retains all the features of their well-known ·450 and has the same balance, handiness, and lightness of recoil, with the advantage of increased velocity resulting from the use of their New Patent Velopex Cartridge.

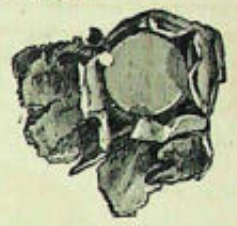
"VELOPEX" BULLET.



SOLID NICKEL BULLET.

7 CONSECUTIVE SHOTS at 100 YARDS.

All WOULD HAVE STRUCK A POSTAGE STAMP.

"VELOPEX" BULLETS.

AFTER BEING FIRED.

AUTHENTICATED DIAGRAM. See "THE FIELD," 19th January 1907.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper,

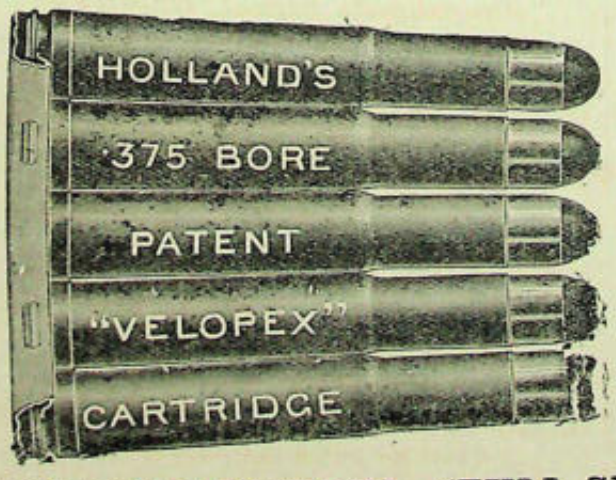
19th January, 1907.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

PRICES:—DOUBLE BARRELLED RIFLE, best quality and finish, Royal Hammerless. 70 Guineas. B. Grade, 55 Guineas.



THE NEW ·375 BORE "HOLLAND-VELOPEX" MAGAZINE SPORTING RIFLE.

TESTIMONIALS.

24, Guildhall Street, Lincoln.

Enclosed please find Post Order for 2s. for two packets of your Pass-Cora Powders for making Eczema and Mange Lotion. I sent for some some time ago and mixed it as stated in directions, and have tried it on a Bull Bitch with Red Mange, a very bad case, it has cleared it out of her body, only just showing a little bit in feet and head, but with two or three more dressings will be all right. I never saw stuff shift the disease so quickly in my life. I have tried all sorts of lotions and ointments but PASS-CORA knocks them all into a cocked hat. I gave some to a friend of mine to try on a Bull Pup and am pleased to say it is doing him a lot of good. He has spent no end of time and money on him but could not do any good. He asked me what I used on my dogs for skin disease. I told him I had tried Pass-Cora and it had cleared me of all the disease in the kennels.

PESHAWAR GYMKHANA RACES.

First Day, Thursday, 15th April 1909.

THE two days Gymkhana races held at Peshawar last week produced excellent sport, and Captain Marriott is to be congratulated on the success attending his efforts. Rawalpindi, and Nowshera sent representatives, fields were good and the racing interesting throughout. Mr. Barney, who was riding Whistling Rufus in the Chargers' Chase on the second day, came by a nasty fall and was rolled on by his horse. Assistance was quickly at hand, but though no bones were broken, it is probable that it will be some time before he makes a complete recovery. Details of the racing:—

An aged medical man of wide experience was in the habit of saying "Almost all the maladies and infirmities of man can be referred to one of three causes:

1. They take too little exercise.
2. They masticate imperfectly.
3. They pay no attention to their mouth and teeth.

These were words not only of practical medical experience, but also of golden practical wisdom. And so every man who desires to live healthily and happily, in accordance with this dictum of an old man who had studied men and understood life, will,

1. Take frequent walks.
2. Take care to masticate every mouthful properly.
3. Regularly cleanse his mouth and teeth with Odol.

Odol is the first and only preparation for cleansing the mouth and teeth which exercises its antiseptic and refreshing powers not only during the few moments of application, but continuously for some hours afterwards.

Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Good Friday, 1909.

DERBY.

THERE was an almost wintry breeze in the air at Derby last Friday morning, but towards noon sunshine gave a pleasanter aspect to the big midland pastures. Fortunate in influential local support, Derby always gives its patrons plenty of good sport on the flat, and the programme was of such an attractive character as to bring the London brigade down in strong force, the attendance being a good one all round. The going was a bit on the soft side, but fields panned out very well, considering that the meeting was hardly up to the April standard—a fact accounted for by the abnormal winter. Results:—

The wind was bitingly keen at Derby on Saturday, and though the sun came to our assistance, sending shafts of light across the valley of the Derwent, and redeeming the sombre influence of a leaden sky, it was more a day for exercise in the open than standing about to see racing. The early promise of a good attendance was verified, the holiday makers beginning to swarm into the ground as the horses were at the post for the first race. Results:—

HOW GREAT MEN RECOUP THEIR ENERGIES.

SOME STRIKING TESTIMONY.

Eminent men are the authoritative exponents of a nation's thought. Their views, given with the sense of responsibility which rests upon those who mould public opinion, must command the most earnest attention. When the subject for consideration is the creation and preservation of those physical and mental attributes which so largely enter into the sum total of human success, then, surely, the opinions of those who have risen to the proud position of leaders of men will be all-convincing.

The unanimity with which the most distinguished personages proclaim Sanatogen to be the ideal tonic food remedy, affords striking evidence of the high esteem in which Sanatogen is held as a restorative and a tonic.

Sanatogen is proclaimed as being the most powerful restorative known for renewing and sustaining the vigour of health. When run down and in conditions of lassitude, nervousness, metal inertness, as well as debility, and all the ills foreshadowed by that danger signal depression, Sanatogen is unrivalled. It speedily and permanently restores that buoyancy and elasticity which are the very essence of well-being.

Sir Gilbert Parker, equally famous as a gifted author and an intrepid traveller, is full of enthusiastic praise:

"20, Carlton House Terrace.

"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the overworked body and mind."

Gilbert Parker

Sir John Hare gives us a peep into the means employed to sustain the wonderful vitality which is one of his distinguishing characteristics:

"Upper Berkeley Street.

"I have found Sanatogen a most valuable tonic and stimulant during a period when I had to work very hard under conditions of great weakness and ill-health."

John Hare

Lord Sutherland Gower, the creator of the noble Shakespearian memorial at Stratford-on-Avon, says of Sanatogen:

"Hammerfield, Penshurst, Kent.

"I feel it only due to the benefit conferred on my general health by Sanatogen to write to inform those interested in that wonderful medicine that in a couple of months' time it has cured me of all gouty trouble. Sanatogen has done me far more good than all the waters of Bath and Harrogate."

Ronald Sutherland Gower

The Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair expresses his opinion as follows:

"The Chapter House,
St. Paul's Cathedral,
London, E.C.

"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

William Sinclair

Madame Sarah Grand, the gifted authoress of "The Heavenly Twins," says she has found in Sanatogen renewed vigour of body and brain.

"Grove Hill.

"Sanatogen has done everything for me which it is said to be able to do for cases of nervous debility and exhaustion. I began to take it after nearly four years enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately. And now, after taking it steadily three times a day for twelve weeks, I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again, and also able to do as much of both as I ever did."

Sarah Grand

Conclusive proof is forthcoming also in the testimony of over 9,000 physicians as to the superlative merits of Sanatogen as the ideal tonic food remedy.

Amongst the many who have written in praise of Sanatogen, Dr. Andrew Wilson expresses golden opinions in that striking publication, "The Art of Living," a copy of which will be sent gratis and post free on forwarding name and address to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, mentioning the Indian Field.

Sanatogen is sold by all chemists, etc., throughout India.

SHERLEY'S

DOG MEDICINES

MAY NOW BE OBTAINED IN INDIA

In CALCUTTA from SMITH, STANISTREET & CO.,
And in BOMBAY from TREACHER & CO., Ltd.

These preparations are based on the most recent and up-to-date veterinary research, and are the best possible remedies for the various ailments and diseases for which they are recommended.

It is of the greatest importance in treating all cases of sickness in dogs that the nature of the ailment should be recognised, and in order to enable dog owners to do this we have published a book,

"HINTS TO DOG OWNERS"

which is now the standard work of reference in thousands of kennels in the United Kingdom, where it has had a larger circulation than any book on dogs ever published, the demand for it being so great that more than 200,000 copies have been disposed of. It may be obtained gratis on application to either of the above-mentioned firms in India, and everyone interested in dogs should make a point of obtaining a copy at once.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR DOGS.

These Capsules are tasteless and odourless, and are the surest and safest means of expelling both Round and Tape Worms from dogs (or puppies three months old or over) weighing 10 lb. or more. They require no purgative medicine afterwards. May be easily given wrapped up in a piece of meat or cheese.

SHERLEY'S WORM CAPSULES FOR PUPPIES AND TOY DOGS.

Every puppy at six weeks old should be dosed with these Capsules which may be safely given to even the smallest and most delicate toy puppy. They surely expel all Worms and never cause the least discomfort. Castor oil is not required before or after giving them, and it is not necessary for the puppy to fast before being dosed.

SHERLEY'S "SKIN CURE."

An absolutely unrivalled dressing for Mange, Eczema, Ringworm, and all other Skin Diseases of dogs. It cures Mange for certain in a week, and not only cures the disease but starts an immediate and vigorous growth of hair.

SHERLEY'S "DISTEMPERCURE."

The best remedy for Distemper ever discovered; it reduces the fever and creates an appetite. In each tin are full instructions as to nursing and dieting, on which the cure of Distemper depends so much.

SHERLEY'S "SHAMPOO."

A Liquid Soap for Washing Dogs. It penetrates the hair, which it cleanses much better than any solid soap and in less than half the time.

It removes dandriff, stimulates the growth of hair, and gives the coat a healthy, glossy appearance.

It also prevents Eczema, and destroys Fleas and all other insects.

WINNING JOCKEYS.—As was to be expected, Frank Wootton has quickly taken the premier position in the list of winning jockeys. A week ago he had to take second place to W. A. Higgs, who, with the same number of winners, had a better winning percentage. The latter could do no good last week, and rode in seventeen races without scoring, while Wootton added six points to his score.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

England's victory over Scotland at the Crystal Palace brought the season of Association internationals to a close. Victorious over Ireland, Wales and Scotland in turn, the Englishmen are undisputed champions, Wales finishing second with two wins and a defeat, Scotland third with one win and two defeats, and Ireland—as at Rugby football—last with three defeats. Not only do the English team carry off first honours, but without a single goal being registered against them, Ireland going down at Bradford by 4 to 0, Wales losing at Nottingham by 2 to 0, and Scotland suffering defeat by the same margin as the Principality. In carrying off the champion-hip England have had occasion to make very few alterations in the matter of defence, Hardy, Crompton, Warren and Wedlock taking part in all three engagements. Cottle—tried at back against Ireland—gave way for the other two matches to Pennington, and Lintott—dropped for the game with Wales—was reinstated for this encounter, when goalkeeper, backs, and halves were identically the same as appeared against Scotland at Glasgow last year.

A very different experience has been that with the forward line. Against Ireland Woodward had Berry, of Oxford, as his partner on the right wing, with Bridgett and Windridge on the left and Hilsdon in the centre. For the contest with Wales Hilsdon, Windridge, and Berry were dropped in favour of Freeman, Holly, and Pentland, Woodward and Bridgett retaining their places. Only one alteration from the front rank picked against the Principality was made in choosing the side for the Scotland match, Wall, of Manchester United, being preferred to Bridgett, of Sunderland: but, as it happened, Woodward found himself slightly lame, and, not wishing to jeopardise the chances of England, stood down in sportsmanlike fashion, the vacancy thus created furnishing an opportunity for Fleming, of Swindon, to display his abilities in international football. Thus, in marked contrast to the small number of changes made in the English defence, the front rank did not include a single member of the line picked for the game with Ireland.

Newcastle United had to rest content with a draw, but their position in the League is now so strong that they only require three points from their five remaining engagements to be certain of the Championship. The team are to be congratulated upon the manner in which, since the beginning of the year, they have distanced Everton, Sheffield Wednesday, and Manchester United, but the marked superiority of their record robs the closing stages of the competition of much interest that would attach to the struggle were the issue at all open. The contest to escape the last two places also is not yet at all exciting. Leicester Fosse are certain to return to the Second Division and Bradford City, although victorious over Everton at Goodison Park, have still a lot of leeway to make up before they can cherish hopes of escaping a similar fate.

As the three leading clubs in the Second Division of the League all won, no change occurred in their positions, and the question of promotion consequently remains as open as before. By gaining a victory in an away match, however, Tottenham Hotspur, who defeated Grimsby Town after being a goal behind at half-time, materially improved their chances. They have a severe holiday programme in front of them. To-day they meet Clapton Orient and play Fulham to-morrow, both these engagements taking place at Tottenham. Then on Easter Monday they play the return game with Clapton Orient at Homerton. Not one of these matches can be regarded as certainties for Tottenham Hotspur, although on form they certainly should win their home fixtures.

ENGLAND v. SCOTLAND.—Fortunately for everybody concerned the conditions for the great Association International match at the Crystal Palace last Saturday was everything that could be desired. The sun shone brightly, and there was very little wind, while the fine weather of the previous two days had enabled the ground to make a splendid recovery. It was rather soft on the far side, but not nearly so treacherous as had been expected.

England won the toss but except that they were able to play with the sun at their backs, that did not give them much advantage, as there was practically no wind. Directly after the start Cameron blundered badly in clearing, but recovered himself, and after neat work by Quinn there was some pretty combination between Paul, Wilson, and McWilliam. England at once attacked from that point, and following some passing by Fleming and Pentland, the latter forced a corner. From this the ball went well to Wall, who shot. The ball was intercepted, however, and went straight back to the Manchester United player, who again shot hard with the right foot. This time he was successful, for the ball was put into the corner of the net, well clear of Brownlie, who appeared to be unsighted by the players in front of him. Thus, three minutes from the start, England took the lead. An attack by Scotland followed, and, Quinn being brought down, Scotland were awarded a free kick close in, but nothing came of this, Crompton and Pennington both kicking well and clearing when danger threatened. The English half-backs, too, were playing a fine worrying game, giving the Scottish forwards few chances of developing any telling attacks. Then came a fine movement by the English forwards, which, though checked, was carried on by Wedlock with a neat kick. Fleming got the ball and passed back, and a goal seemed certain, but Cameron threw himself down on the ball and prevented Holley putting in his shot, and Brownlie, rushing out, kicked clear. On both sides the half-backs were doing fine work, but the Scottish backs were by no means safe, being slow on the ball and kicking badly. After some even exchanges the ball was passed out to Wall, who, beating McNair and Cameron in turn, dribbled on towards goal and then scored again for England with a terrific shot from about seven yards out. Brownlie, who came out of goal, having no chance of saving. At the end of a quarter of an hour, therefore, England had a fine lead of two goals, and on the play they thoroughly deserved their advantage. Mid-field play followed, but with Scotland attacking on the right Wedlock gave away a free kick in bringing Bennett down. This, however, was cleared and neat work by Holley enabled Wall to get away. He put in a good centre and Holley shot, but the ball rebounded off McNair. Then England were awarded a free kick just outside the penalty area, Fleming being badly brought down when he looked like scoring. Nothing came of this, however, Wedlock, who took the kick, failing to get it past a mass of players. The half-backs continued to dominate the game to some extent, but Crompton and Pennington played a great game, both kicking beautifully. At length Paul got away on Scotland's left and swung in a glorious centre, but Hardy caught the ball, and though charged by Bennett, the English goalkeeper cleared with a mighty kick. Almost directly afterwards the English forwards got away again, Freeman bursting right through a disorganised defence.

Cameron, however, managed to kick away, but Fleming returned the ball with a nice centre and the attack ended with Holley heading over. England attacked once more, Fleming getting in a lovely shot, which Brownlie had to come out and meet to save. England were showing by far the better form, the Scottish forwards rarely getting together in any combined attack. Whenever they did break away the English halves or backs cleared easily. From one of these clearances Fleming, who played a most intelligent game, broke right away and cleared all opposition, but his centre was rather too far back and nothing came of a very promising movement. So far the pace had been tremendous, but as the game progressed the play, though by no means slow, was not carried on with quite so much spirit. Twice in succession, however, England broke away, Fleming shooting hard, while Holley missed a good chance by kicking wide. Then, with Scotland pressing, Crompton dashed in and checked the movement grandly. The Scottish left wing was certainly the more aggressive, but none of the forwards did really good work. Soon afterwards half-time arrived with the score standing:

England	...	... 2 goals

The second half opened with a strong attack by Scotland, who were soon awarded a free kick close in. From this Walker sent in a magnificent shot, but Hardy jumped and saved beautifully. Directly afterwards Paul, with a lovely swerving run, dribbled the ball between several men and centred, but Pennington cleared, and a little later Crompton, after missing his kick, charged Quinn over when that player was dangerously near goal. Scotland were still having the better of matters, but at length, from a nice long pass by Wedlock, Wall got away and was nearly through, Cameron and McNair ultimately clearing. Following another attack by Scotland Freeman sent Wall away with a nice pass, but the ball hung on the heavy ground, and Hall overran it. Holley, however, came up and dribbled on, finishing his run with a lovely centre, Watson ran across and kicked, but nearly sent the ball through his own goal. The attack was thus ended, and then came a splendid burst by Scotland. First the left wing attacked, and from a centre by Paul a corner was forced. Nothing came of it, but Quinn got in a magnificent shot afterwards, the ball going just wide. Another corner followed just afterwards, and from this Quinn headed in, but Hardy saved superbly, flinging himself full length, and after grabbing the ball just having time to throw it behind. This was a great save. Scotland were playing far better than in the first half, their combination being splendid, while they carried on their attacks at a great pace. After withstanding pressure, however, the English defence cleared, and Freeman got away clear, with Watson missing his kick. Freeman put in a beautiful cross, but Wall, standing unmarked, shot wide, with only the goalkeeper to beat. Scotland continued to dominate the game, but Crompton played in great style, and twice Wall got away. Then, after neat pressing by Bennett and Walker, the former put in a nice centre. Just as Paul was getting to the ball, however, Warren fouled him just outside the penalty line Hardy cleared the kick, however, but a moment later Pennington handled in the penalty area, and Scotland thus had a good chance of getting a goal.

Stark took the kick, but sent the ball straight at Hardy, who cleared amidst tremendous cheering. The next moment the Scottish defence, never safe when pressed, broke down, and left Fleming through, with a clear field. He dribbled on fast, though hampered by two opponents, and got in a good shot, but Brownlie, coming out, met the ball and cleared. Still Scotland attacked, the English defence being hard pressed to save their lines, Crompton, however, worked untiringly, but using his weight a little too vigorously, was spoken to by the referee. Gradually the English defence prevailed, and twice Freeman got away, a scrimmage ending in Holley shooting hard, and only inches wide of the post. Nearing the end the game died down somewhat, both teams obviously feeling the effects of their strenuous struggles for the mastery. The English defence, however, never became slack, all three half-backs, and the two backs, working very hard against the bustling Scottish forwards. There was a slight delay, owing to an injury to Pentland, and on resuming the Englishmen still played a determined game. Fleming got away, and gave Pentland a nice pass, but the Swindon man got off-side to take the return, and a likely chance was lost. Even play followed to the end, which came with Wall making a fine dribble along the wing. Thus, the thirty-eighth annual struggle between the two countries ended in a splendid victory for England, the final score being:

Scotland	...	... 0

ARSENAL v. CHELSEA.—The Arsenal revenue suffered considerably by the fact that the international match at the Palace clashed with their most important home fixture—that with Chelsea. Only 20,000 were present—a small "gate" for such a match and on such a beautiful day. The Arsenal made only one change—Raybould for Lewis in the forward line—but in the Chelsea team Cartwright and Humphries deputised for the two absent internationals, Cameron and Warren, and at left half a local amateur, E. W. Reilly, was given a trial. Douglas and Freeman formed the right wing, and Brawn was in the novel position for him of outside left. A very strong wind helped the Arsenal in the first half, in which they forced the pace, and all their scoring efforts were futile. A grand shot by Fitchie was stopped by Whitley in clever fashion, and from a centre by Neave Raybould headed the ball just wide. Humphreys made a clever clearance, when Cartwright miskicked, and when Hilsdon opened out a promising movement Brawn got offside. He, however, soon made amends by a very fine centre, from which Freeman nearly scored, and at the other end Raybould shot hard and true, Whitley making a great clearance. Chelsea made poor use of the wind, and the second half was dull and lifeless. The play was of the poorest possible character, and nothing being scored by either side the result was a pointless draw. FULHAM v. BARNSLEY.—Playing below their proper form, Fulham could only contrive to draw with Barnsley at Craven Cottage yesterday, the result being 2 goals each. Fulham had Littlewort at centre half-back, and he performed fairly well, but the best players for the home side were Sharp, Charlton, Harrison, Collins, and Stuart. Dalrymple did many clever things at inside left, but he failed to give Lipsham sufficient work, and the right wing pair, Millington and Freeman were good and bad by turns. Thorpe proved to be an excellent custodian for Barnsley, and during the time that the visitors were being heavily pressed in the first half he brought off many fine saves. But twice he committed an error of judgment in leaving his charge, and if the Fulham forwards could only have taken advantage of this they would have won the game for their club. Downs and Little were not as scientific as they were resolute at full-back, and the half-backs were more prominent for their keenness than for their judgment. Style, Doyle was quite equal to mastering Harrison, well as the latter played. The first goal of the game came from Dalrymple, who headed into the net from a centre by Freeman. The ball had previously been placed past Thorpe, but offside was successfully claimed. Another goal was obtained by Harrison in brilliant style, and at half-time Fulham led by 2 goals to 0. In the second half the play ran an even course, though Barnsley managed to equalise through Boyle (from a penalty against Littlewort) and Birkenshow. The weather was fine, and there were about 16,000 spectators. Fulham, 2; Barnsley, 2.

AMATEUR F.A., CUP,—FINAL.

NEW CRUSADERS vs. CASUALS.—At Ipswich on Saturday glorious weather prevailed, and over 4,000 spectators watched the match. The Crusaders were early prominent, Yates getting away on the left and centring in the first minute, but nothing came of it. Even exchanges followed for a time, till Brisley executed a nice movement on the right wing, but his final effort went wide of the mark. The Crusaders' left wing were an effective pair, frequently causing the Casuals' defence anxiety, but Sargeant was extremely safe, kicking very cleanly.

The Casuals were the first to score. A pretty movement by Simonds and Brisley ended in the former centring finely, and Joseph, one of the Crusaders' halves, put through his own goal in attempting to clear. The Crusaders then attacked, but several good chances of scoring were missed through faulty shooting. The interval arrived with the Casuals leading by 1 goal to nil.

On resuming, the exchanges were very fast, the Crusaders showing the better football. Their forwards were very tricky, and after good work by their right wing, H. B. Farnfield made the scores level with a long dropping shot which Lacy-Scott failed to reach. Two corners were kept out by the Casuals, and time after time the Crusaders went away in a line, only to be robbed at the critical moment. Brisley was prominent in the Casuals' attack, and Wilson did well to fist out his shot. Eventually the Crusaders took the lead. Joseph sent in a surprise shot at thirty yards range, and Lacy-Scott just failed to reach the ball. The Crusaders were the cleverer team, and Buck registered a third point. Simonds got away on the right wing, but his centre went begging. A fourth goal was scored for the Crusaders by B. S. Farnfield, who slipped through the backs and scored with ease. Towards the finish Yates made a brilliant run and centre across the goal mouth, and from a scrimmage in front of goal A. J. Farnfield added a fifth goal. Result:—New Crusaders, 5; Casuals, 1.

SECOND R. I. RIFLES BEAT FIRST Q. O. CAMERON HIGHLANDERS.—After playing for two hours at Woolwich on Wednesday last, and for a similar length of time at Chatham on Saturday without reaching a definite result, the 2nd Royal Irish Rifles on Monday at Chatham qualified to meet the Royal Artillery (Shoeburyness) in the final of the Army Cup by beating the Highlanders by 3 goals to 1.

The match attracted upwards of 3,000 spectators, who witnessed a hard and interesting game. The play was tolerably even in the first half, when the Rifles had the wind behind them. Corporal McInnes opened the scoring for the Highlanders at the end of half an hour, but Smith equalised, and the score was one goal all at half-time.

Soon after the change of ends Rafferty placed the Rifles in front, and then the Highlanders played a loose and disjointed game. The Rifles, on the other hand, admirably led by Edmondson, their captain, showed excellent combination, and had many chances, two of which were turned to account by Rafferty and Smith. The Rifles deservedly won by 3 goals to 1.

RUGBY RULES.

LENNOX vs. OLD LEYSIANS.—At Wimbledon in delightful weather the Old Leysians were considerably weakened by the absence of Boyd, Mallinson and Pepper, and although substitutes were found, they were easily beaten by Lennox. The latter, however, only scored one try to nothing in the first half, and that was the result of a fine three-quarter movement which ended in L. Garrett, the Old Alleynian, getting over. Some fumbling on the part of Newberry and Napier let L. Calvert in for the Old Leysians at the outset of the second half. Mellor failed to improve. Shortly afterwards, however, the home side scored two tries in quick succession—one the result of a fine individual run by Saunders, and the other by Walker. The last-named player converted one of the three tries and failed in the others. Then Bell, the Old Leysian wing three-quarter, who had been badly fed with passes throughout the game, at length seized an opportunity, and making good use of his place, got a second try for the visitors, and Mellor again failed at goal. Towards the end of the game Sintzenich was responsible for a splendid piece of work, but the try which he got was disallowed on the ground that he only bounced the ball instead of touching down. Lennox, who were easily the better side, won by 11 points to 6. Lennox, 1 goal 2 tries; Leysians, 2 tries.

CATFORD BRIDGE vs. LONDON WELSH.—At Catford the London Welsh snatched a victory out of the hands of their opponents during the last few minutes of the game, the final scores being London Welsh two tries, Catford Bridge one try. From beginning to end the game was fast and exciting, Catford being entirely successful throughout in breaking up the Welsh combination. The home team were unfortunate in losing Wallis, one of their forwards, who retired just before the interval with a compound fracture of one of his fingers. The Welsh started the ball, and play for the first twenty minutes was even, one of Catford's forward rushes resulting in a try by Adams, which was not improved. The visitors did their utmost to equalise before the interval, but were unsuccessful. Playing only fourteen men in the second half Catford managed to hold up the Welshmen and break up their attack. During the last few minutes, however, the visitors found their true form, and a pretty bout of passing let in Maddocks, who scored just inside the corner flag. Only a minute remained for play, during which Lloyd, profiting by a magnificent opening made by Jenkins, scored the winning try in the opposite corner, and, amidst a scene of intense excitement, the whistle sounded the end of the game. During the second half Maddocks retired hurt for fifteen minutes, but he returned, and shortly afterwards scored:—Welsh, 2 tries; Catford Bridge, 1 try.

RICHMOND vs. LONDON SCOTTISH.—One of the brightest and most interesting games played at the Richmond Athletic Ground this season was that between Richmond and the London Scots yesterday. Richmond team included Stoop and Williamson and three Services international forwards, and they had somewhat the best of the game throughout. At times their superiority was of a towering character, but throughout the play of Stoop and Williamson was of a brilliant description, and they made a number of openings that could not have failed to have led to scores. Such were those from which Bolton, Wilson, and Palmer scored in the first half, while a fourth try was secured by Burges-Watson, after a really sensational bout of passing in which Te. Water was an outstanding figure. Macpherson got the Scots' only try in this half, and Bruce Lockhart goaled, Richmond led at the interval by 14 points to 5, Palmer having converted one try from the touch line and missed three in front of goal. On crossing over Stoop scored after a brilliant run, Odgers converting. Palmer got over again after splendid passing, while at the other end Martin scored for the Scots and Bruce-Lockhart goaled. Richmond won by 22 points to 10. Richmond, 2 goals 4 tries; Scottish, 2 goals.

ROWING.

THE 'VARSITY BOAT RACE.

"A GOOD Boatrace" had been confidently predicted since the improvement in the Oxford boat became marked ten days ago; but such a splendid struggle as the race produced from the start and maintained until Chiswick had been passed exceeded all expectations, and will cause the meeting of this year to be long remembered. Stuart's adherence to his usual policy—a desperate effort to get the lead at once and to keep it—and the determination of his younger rival Bourne, to play him at his own game and to answer spurt by spurt, so that the Cambridge men should never be free from anxiety or his own crew in danger of losing confidence, gave the race something of the nature of a duel between the two men; and it was a duel in which both distinguished themselves. In the end it was only superior staying power that gave one side the advantage; and it was the less experienced stroke and the less favoured crew that managed to row down its rivals and to win a magnificent victory.

The start showed that at last Oxford have found a stroke who can compete successfully with Stuart as a smart starter. Several minutes were occupied in getting the boats into position; and when at last Mr. Pitman gave the signal for the start Bourne was the quicker to get to work, and the Oxford men pulled 39 strokes to the 38 of Cambridge in the first minute. Then at once began one of the most heroic struggles of the many that have been seen between Putney and Mortlake. For a dozen minutes or so the two crews were rowing side by side, first one gaining a few feet and then the other; and neither of them was able to assert its superiority until at last superior stamina or better condition told its tale.

After the start, which took Oxford for the moment to the front, Cambridge settled down more rapidly than their opponents, and by virtue of their superior steadiness, took a lead of a few feet. When the boathouses had been passed they still retained this advantage, and they were leading by a quarter of a length, rowing in almost perfect form. Bourne, however, who has shown some of his best work in racing side by side with scratch crews, declined to allow himself to be bustled, and kept his men well in hand. Gradually they regained a little of their lost ground, but Stuart was bent on securing a good lead, and the struggle became a desperate one.

At Walden's Cambridge led by half a length or a little more and then they began to feel the advantage of the Surrey station, which gave them the inside of the big bend to Chiswick. Bourne, however, rowed with admirable pluck, and with the judgment of a veteran, he never allowed this lead to become long enough to give the Cambridge men a "breather." Off Walden's he spurted, and Oxford again began to reduce their disadvantage. Before Harrod's was reached Oxford had got their boat in front, notwithstanding the curve of the river; but Stuart, after relaxing his efforts slightly, answered with another spurt that resulted in the two boats passing under Hammersmith Bridge absolutely side by side.

Oxford were now rowing the slower stroke of the two—35 to 36—and keeping their form perfectly; and they again secured a slight lead; but a deviation from their proper course, caused by the appearance of a rowing-boat out of its proper position, slight as it was, enabled Cambridge to draw level once more and at the Waterworks neither had the slightest advantage. Oxford, still having the greater distance to travel round the bend, got slightly ahead again in passing Chiswick Eyot; but Stuart at once went after him, and at Thornycroft's the boats were still level. Then, however, came the beginning of the end.

Up to this point the race had been a magnificent one, but its severity was unmistakeable. Passing the Duke of Devonshire's meadows Bourne spurted again; and this time Stuart, hard as he tried, was unable to get his men to make the answering spurt that was required of them. The Cambridge men still rowed well, and made every possible effort to keep Oxford from going away; but Bourne, with the more powerful men behind him, kept such control over his crew that the result was not much longer in doubt. Passing the Bull's Head Oxford led by half a length; and soon after Barnes Bridge had been left behind they drew clear for the first time. Then they began a fine "finish," which the Cambridge men, whose repeated spurts had left them more or less exhausted, were unable to imitate. The distance between the two boats increased rapidly and, though Stuart made one last effort and called upon his men for a final spurt, which they attempted pluckily but quite ineffectively, the Oxford boat passed the winning-post three and a half lengths ahead, in 19mins. 50secs. from the start of the race.

The intermediate times were:—

LIGHT-WEIGHT.—F. Grace (Eton Mission B. C.).

FEATHER-WEIGHT.—A. H. Lambert (Belgrave).

BANTAM-WEIGHT.—J. Condon (Lynn A. C.).

There was the usual crop of surprises in the amateur boxing championships at the Alexandra Palace yesterday. The only holder who competed again, W. Child, of the Cambridge A. B. C., certainly retained his title, but all the other four champions are new to the honour. Results:—

BANTAM-WEIGHTS (8st. 4lb. and under).

J. W. Thompson (Polytechnic) beat W. Webb (St. Pancras).

W. E. Turley (British N. A. C, Toronto) beat H. Mathias (Battersea) on points.

J. Condon (Lynn), who was generally on the aggressive, beat W. Hatchman (Victoria A. and B.C.) on points.

T. Morgan (Lynn) beat G. Scott (Scottish G.A.)

Perry (Columbia A.C.) and Viez (Federation Francaise des Societies de Boxe) did not appear.

Semi-final Round.—Turley beat Morgan. Condon beat Thompson.

Final.—J. Condon (Lynn A.C.) beat W. B. Turley (Toronto) in three rounds.

FEATHER-WEIGHTS (9st. and under.)

A. H. Lambert (Belgrave H. and B.C.) beat A. J. Joye (Hastings S C.) on points.

W. Raynon (Gainsford A.C.) beat T. Symonds (Belgrave H. and B.C.) on points.

A. Arnold (Polytechnic B.C.) beat J. Broadbent (Uxbridge A.C.) in two rounds.

C. Morris (Polytechnic B.C.) beat Mons. Mourier (Federation Francaise des Societes de Boxe).

J. G. Large (Northampton Institute B.C.) beat W. Mathews (Liverpool A C.) in two rounds.

J. White (Battersea B.C.) beat G. Houghton (Northampton Institute B.C.)

Second Round.—C. Morris beat J. G. Large on points.

A. H. Lambert beat J. White on points.

A. Arnold beat W. Rayson.

Semi-final.—Arnold beat Morris. Lambert a bye.

Final.—A. H. Lambert (Belgrave, Harriers) knocked out A. Arnold (Polytechnic) in three rounds.

LIGHT-WEIGHTS (10st. and under.)

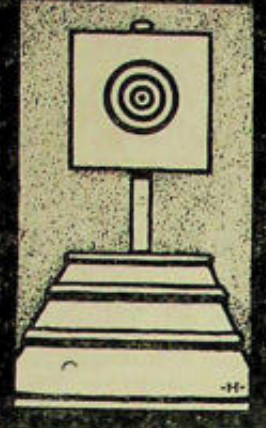
F. Grace (Eton Mission B.C.) beat J. Bent (Polytechnic B.C.) on points.

H. Napper Avis (Belsize B.C.) beat J. Cavanagh (Manchester A.C.) on points.

G. Jessup (Mildmay B. C.) and R. Hayes (Northampton and County A. B. C.) were over weight. J. Saddlier (6th Dragoons) had a bye.



F. W. Dyer (Premier B. C., Cardiff) beat J. Smith (St. Pancras B. C.) on points.

W. E. Ingham (Leicester Harriers) beat S. L. Heaton (unattached).

F. Spiller (Gainsford A. C.) beat H. H. Johnson (Northampton Inst. B. C.) on points.

Second Round.—Wells beat Ingham. Saddlier beat Napper Avis, knocking him out in the first round. Grace beat Dyer.

WINCHESTER CARTRIDGES SHOOT WHERE YOU HOLD

WINCHESTER

.22 Short and .22 Long Caliber Rim Fire Cartridges.

If you want to use .22 Caliber Cartridges that shoot when you want them to and where you point your gun, and strike a good, penetrating blow, buy the time-tried Winchester make, having the trade-mark "H" stamped on the head. They cost but a few pence more a box than the cheap, unreliable kind, and they are shillings better. Winchester .22 Caliber Cartridges are loaded with Black and Smokeless Powder. Those loaded with Smokeless Powder have the celebrated Winchester Greaseless Bullets, which make them cleaner to handle than any other .22 Caliber Cartridges. Special powder, made according to carefully determined and tested formulas, is used in loading all Winchester Cartridges, and every bullet is swaged by special machinery, which makes them uniform in size, weight and density. This modern method of manufacture, coupled with a rigid system of tests, makes Winchester Cartridges better than any other brand on the market. A trial will convince you.

TEN MILES SCOTTISH A. A. A. CHAMPIONSHIP.—Decided at Ibrox Park, Glasgow, on Saturday. The weather was wet, which made the track heavy, and a strong wind blew down the home straight. Ten started out of fourteen entrants. The race was practically between Alexander McPhee, junior. (Clydesdale H.) and Thomas Jack (Edinburgh Southern H.), the holder, who led at every mile, with McPhee in close attention. With two laps to go McPhee shot to the front, but Jack soon overtook him, and, running strongly, won by a good yard from the Clydesdale man. Time—54mins. 5⅘secs. The other placings were :—Alexander Mann (Clydesdale H.), 54mins. 49secs. Alexander Thomson (Edinburgh Southern H.), 55mins. 43secs., and F. Farrer (Maryhill H.), 56mins. 10secs., who all finished under standard time, which is fixed at 57mins.

ALDRIDGE vs. BOUCHARD.—All else but boisterous weather favoured the men in this fifteen miles race, which was decided on the 6th instant at Stamford Bridge grounds, Chelsea. Other conditions might have been against the competitors and yet none so undesirable as wind, or so prejudicial to an attempt to beat J. Hewitt's record—viz. 1hr. 22mins—accomplished at the Copenhagen grounds, Islington, as far back as 22nd March 1852. Aldridge and Bouchard had beaten each other in turn, and both came to the scratch brimful of confidence and hopeful of success.

Aldridge, on the inside, immediately took the lead. In the second lap Bouchard dispossessed him of it, and led at the end of a mile by one yard and a half. In the next mile they alternately assumed premier position. After once more—and for the last time—taking the lead, Bouchard at the end of two miles and three-quarters dropped behind and Aldridge entered the third mile eight yards in front. It was observed at this juncture that Bouchard was running in pain, and frequently put his hand to his right side. In another half-mile Aldridge was sixty yards ahead, which he increased to 110 by the time four miles were credited to him. Bouchard now appeared to have recovered, but Aldridge was still adding slowly but surely to his lead.

At the half-distance Bouchard was 250 yards in the rear, and making strenuous efforts to lessen his adversary's advantage. All to no purpose, however, as Aldridge widened the gap every circuit and just after completing thirteen miles was within two yards of lapping Bouchard. The latter, with a splendid effort, left Aldridge's company, but had no chance whatever of jeopardising the Englishman's victory, which after the tenth mile was well assured. Bouchard continued the struggle with great energy, and after a courageous endeavour to draw dangerously close was defeated by 350 yards.

BILLIARDS.

H. W. STEVENSON vs. M. INMAN.—During the past week these professionals contested a game of 9,000 up, Stevenson, who is the Billiard Control Club champion, conceding the Billiard Association champion a start of 2,000. Throughout the game a strenuous struggle has been witnessed, first one then the other having the better of matters, and when play ceased on Friday night Inman claimed the useful advantage of 237 points, he then leading by 471. The match ended last Saturday night is a victory for Inman by 211. During the day Stevenson's best breaks were 112, 181, 99, 211, 104, 139, 148, and 75; while Inman was credited with 395, 123, 112 and 87. Result :—

Inman	9,000
Stevenson	8,789

B. ELPHICK vs. A. RAYNOR.—At the Soho-Square saloon yesterday the match of 7,000 up on level terms for £50 aside which these young professionals are contesting ended in a win for Elphick, who had displayed fine form throughout, by 1,278 points. On Saturday his most important breaks were 62, 210, 101, 54, 57, 75 and 155 (unfinished), while Raynor made 85, 53, 91, 113, 56 and 59. Full scores :—

Elphick	7,000

Pigsticking.

THE GUJERAT CUP MEET, 1909.

(By Our Special Representatives.)

THIS meeting was held at Dholka, not far from Ahmedabad, in most delightful weather. There was not a large attendance, but it included some previous winners and well-known spears. The local talent was poorly represented. One familiar face was very much missed, that of Jack Symons, the father of the Hunt, whose "hukk" it is to sing "The Mighty Boar," but his brother Heugh represented the family; and a good contingent came from Bombay.

Captain Hutchison ran the whole show most ably. He came a long way to do it, and the thanks of all are due to him for the trouble he took.

The messing arrangements were excellent. The country is indeed a grand one, but a little overgrown and thick in parts. The thorns do a good deal of damage to horses, but there were no serious accidents, except to Brown's good mare, whose artery was cut by a fighting boar. I am glad to say she is well on the way to recovery now.

The heats and results were as follows :—

In the first heats of the first chances Medlicott and Forbes both missed difficult chances before Medlicott speared.

The best heat of the round was that between Vernon, Blair and Ranjitsinghi. They had a very good run with no result, in which Vernon was always prominent, and then, almost immediately, got started off again. Blair rode most gallantly and got the spear. This is the first time he has been out pigsticking, and it was a good performance to beat the winner of the Kadir. Blair has been whipping in to the Bombay hounds this last season, and has a good eye for country and is a light weight, and, when he has become a little more expert in the use of the spear, he should be hard to beat anywhere.

The other heats in the first chances were without incident Medlicott having an easy task.

In the second chances first round Symons and Vernon went after a fine old grey boar who charged and fought very bravely and died game.

In the second round Forbes had it all his own way in his beat, but Medlicott and Vernon had a rare gallop, in which Medlicott, on his mare had the best of it, though Vernon, who was riding Fireplant, got on first at the start.

The final of the second chances produced a lot of incident. The first time they got started off the pig jinked in amongst the spectators, and then Forbes was within an ace of spearing, and in attempting to do so dropped his spear; and a few minutes later Medlicott disappeared into a "wait a bit" thorn bush and both he and his pony were extricated with great difficulty.

Eventually they got off after a big heavy boar, who did not travel very fast and Medlicott had the luck to be nearest to him, when he got into a lane, and speared him very soon. Forbes was riding his good horse Khala, and had the run been longer and faster it would have been a most interesting struggle.

This boar, like most of the others killed here, put up a grand fight; as long as this is the case there is always plenty of fun for those who are unfortunate enough to get knocked out of their heats early in the meeting.

Although this Cup is open to all horses, Medlicott rode two ponies, Result II. and Milade. The last named is a very fast big waler polo pony, but Result, who did most of the work, is only 14 hands, a grey South African pony, thoroughbred, up to any weight, and beautifully shaped.

This is the second time that Medlicott (who is in the 3rd Skinner's Horse) has won the Gujerat Cup on Result, and it has never been won twice by the same man or horse before. More honour, then, to the gallant pony, who carried a welter weight on his back.

The Salmon Cup draws were as follows :—

Hotson ... ... } Medlicott

Forbes: Campbell (scr.), Forbes

There were some very fast and well contested heats, notably the semi-final between Medlicott and Vernon, and the final between Vernon and Forbes.

Forbes was riding his well-known Arab Multiform and Vernon was on Fireplant. Forbes knows the country well and very seldom makes a mistake and his pony is a veritable flyer. It was a grand heat; Vernon drove the boar through a hedge to Forbes who got on to him and never gave Vernon a chance and nursed the boar into the open and speared. Vernon had no luck at the meeting, and was on the line for many weary hours with his different heats. Everyone was delighted at Colonel Forbes' win as he is a staunch supporter of Gujerat pigsticking, always turns up well mounted, and takes luck as it comes, good or bad, without grumbling. This is the second time he has won the Salmon Cup. The last time was in 1905 when he won on Sapphire. Cecil Grey is the only other double winner of this Cup.

One very amusing incident happened, which seems worth recording. The Honorary Secretary was riding his Arab stallion in his Salmon Cup heat, and the umpire was mounted on a fascinating little Kathiawar mare. Before the word to ride had been given Hutchison came a real purler in a blind ditch and his pony got away and at once pursued the umpire's mount. Mr. Umpire thought discretion was the better part of valour and fled, closely pursued by the Arab, whereupon the following advice was heard emerging from the ditch "Don't run away from him you ——— ———, catch him !!!!"

Heugh Symons gave us an exhibition of aquatic feats on horseback on another occasion, in the Sabarmati, but he said that the water wasn't really deep enough.

There is some talk of raising a permanent Challenge Cup, to replace the Rs. 1,000 given annually for the Gujerat Cup, as subscriptions are not forthcoming as in the old days, and it is to be hoped, that, if an appeal is made for funds, all, who have the interest of this sporting meeting at heart, will respond liberally.

MADRAS BOAT CLUB.

MERCHANTS AND BANKERS REGATTA.

Saturday, 24th April, 1909.

AN interesting programme was put through this afternoon. The merchants and bankers of Madras were at Home to their friends, the Band of the 88th Carnatic Infantry was in attendance and a most enjoyable afternoon was spent. Proceedings opened with a sailing and sculling race in tub boats, for crews consisting of one lady and two men. Five started, Miss Mitchell's boat with White and Cunliffe as crew winning comfortably.

Then came the big race of the day the Merchants and Bankers fours. Two heats had been previously rowed. In the first.

BINNY AND C., Ltd.			BANK OF MADRAS.
K. Kay	(bow)		G. Tyres	(bow)
D. Annan	2		C. Nuttall	2
G. A. Rambridge	3	beat	W. B. Stephens	3
H. N. C. Campbell	(str.)		R. Lecky	(str.)
K. Lee	(cox)		E. Bentley	(cox)

Binny's went away at the start and kept the lead. The Bank rowed pluckily to the end but were beaten by a length. In the second heat.

GORDON WOODROFFE AND Co.			NATIONAL BANK
A. Burgess	(bow)		T. N. Graham	(bow)
H. Fearon	2		F. H. Greig	2
R. C. M. Strouts	3	beat	J. Carnegie	3
G. K. Gillon	(str.)		C. W. Gowan	(scr.)
A. H. Steele	(cox)		J. S. Hunter	(cox)

They got away level but Gordon Woodroffe's took the lead at the mound and eventually won by three quarters of a length.

The final this afternoon produced a splendid finish. Binny's got off very badly and were more than a length behind at the mound but they crept up and had reduced the lead to half a length at the Adyas Club landing stage. They spurted at the finish and passed their opponents, winning on the post by four feet.

The Chatty breaking competition in tub boats for crews consisting of one lady and two men was won by Mrs. Morrah's boat Lloyd and Irwin. Miss May's boat was first home but was disqualified for not going the proper course.

A double sculling race brought the programme to a close. Mrs. St. John's boat winning easily.

Mrs. Jackson gave away the prizes.

AN indignant correspondent writes :—"Many a clever actress is a charming wife." A soured cynic remarked in reply: "Many a charming wife is a clever actress."

"WHAT! Your husband is dead?"
"Yes; a year ago. And last week I married again."
"MY sincerest condolence and heartiest congratulations."

He: "So you refused him?"
She: "I did—he has a past."
He: "But a man can always blot out his past."
She: "Maybe, but he can't use me for a blotter!"

"Gertie was afraid the girls wouldn't notice her engagement ring."
"Did they?"
"Did they! Six of them recognised it at once."

"As I was going over the bridge, the other day," said an Irishman, "I met Michael Connolly. 'Connolly,' says I, 'how are you?' 'Pretty well, thank you, Keeffe,' says he. 'Keffe?' says I—'that's not my name.' 'Faith,' says he, 'and mine's not Connolly.' With that, we looked at aich other, and, sure enough, it was nayther of us!"

BEIGHTON CUP TOURNAMENT.

First Round.

CALCUTTA vs. TOWN CLUB.—Played on the 21st instant, a one-sided game ending in a win for Calcutta by three goals to nil. They opened the scoring through Mortimer in the first half, and after the interval Mortimer and Sherman scored a goal each. The winners lost many chances owing to erratic shooting, and their score might have been yet bigger had it not been for the excellent play of Bose, the Town Club goalkeeper. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Cooper, goal; Badham and Bocquet, backs; Powell, Studd and Oliver, halves; Lieutenant Slater, Robertson Sherman, Lieutenant Mortimer and Dixon, forwards.

TOWN CLUB.—Bose, goal; Mitter and Banerjee, backs; Sinha, Bose and Mullick, halves; Chatterjee, Sarkar, Banerjee, Mitter and Ghose, forwards.

Referees:—Mr. Yachee and Sub. Oomrao Singh.

SIBPUR vs. SPORTING UNION.—There is little to say about this game on the 21st instant. Sibpore attacked throughout and registered seven goals to nil. Batterbury (3) and Durrell scored in the first half, Durrell and Tirki (2) after changing ends. The Sporting Union were outclassed but played pluckily to the end. Teams:—

SIBPUR.—Brown, goal; Patterson and Fox, backs; Payne, Baptist and Murphy, halves; Scott, Durrell, Batterbury, Tirki and Duncan, forwards.

SPORTING UNION.—Gupta, goal; Ghosh and Mitter, backs Mukerjee, Dass and Roy Chowdhury, halves; Bose, Chatterjee, Razak, Banerjee and Nag, forwards.

Referees:—Messrs. McGuiyer and McCready.

RANGERS vs. BALLYGUNGE.—Played on the 21st instant, the Rangers winning by 4 goals to nil. With more practice Ballygunge might have given a better account of themselves. The winners were without Lawton and played below their usual form. Skempton and Smart [illegible] and Olive in the [illegible].

RANGERS.—[illegible] goal; [illegible]; Berkley, Burgess and Watson, halves; [illegible]; Skempton and Cosby, forwards.

BALLYGUNGE.—F. Mildren, goal; Jones and [illegible] A. C. Bonham backs; H. F. Yeoman, R. [illegible] Hill and C. S. Mosley, halves; Horncastle, Wilford, Townend, A. Gould and Dowson, forwards.

Referees.—Messrs. A. B. Rosser and A. Manuel.

DALHOUSIE vs. ROVERS.—These teams met on the 21st instant, a level game ending in a win for the Trades Club by 2 goals to nil. They had the best of the game in the first half and Blacquiere scored from a scrimmage in front of goal. On changing ends the Rovers rallied but could not score: then Holley adding a second goal to the Dalhousie score they won as stated. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Hughes, goal; Lees and Smith, backs; Whysball, Currie and Allan, halves; Knight, Blacquiere, Holley, McGee and Evans, forwards.

ROVERS.—Ghose, goal; B. Sukul and H. Ghose, backs; Mitter, Joseph and Daw, halves; Peter, Sakhal, A. Sukul, Chakravarti and Bose, forwards.

Referees:—Messrs. Richardson and Baker.

Second Round.

CUSTOMS vs. Y.M.C.A.—This game on Thursday last ended in a win for the Customs who held the upper hand throughout. McCready scored the first goal and Fisher added two more before the interval, while in the second half McCready and Smith netted a goal each. The Customs were inclined to take things easy at times and on one of these occasions Pooler got away and scored a goal for the Y.M.C.A. The Young Men played a man short all through, Adams at back being an absentee, and they made a very creditable display. Final score: Customs, 5 goals; Y.M.C.A., 1 goal. Teams:—

CUSTOMS.—Seth, goal; Anderson and Quiterio, backs; Cadell, L. A. Smith, and C. Barlow, halves; Fitzpatrick, McReady, Fisher, L. H. Smith and Alexander, forwards.

Y.M.C.A.—Heysham, goal; Reynolds, back; Collingwood, H. Vanspall and Hudson, halves; Rosetti, P. Vanspall, Gay, Pooler and Price, forwards.

Referees.—

MEDICALS vs. HORNETS.—The meeting of these teams was looked forward to with interest and a big crowd assembled on the Calcutta ground on Thursday last. The game was evenly contested, the Medicals having, if anything, the better of the exchanges. They went away with a rattle at the start but the game was quickly transferred and in clearing from L. Rosser, Asquith fell, letting in D'Silva, who opened the scoring. The Medicals pulled themselves together and forced a corner. Nothing came of it and level play followed. At length the Medicals got away and Heppolette equalised. On changing ends both goals were visited in turn, D'Arcy missed an open net but made up for it by scoring a good goal a little later. Bowley added a third point just before the close and in spite of every effort to reduce the margin the Hornets were beaten by 3 goals to one. Teams:—

HORNETS.—Russel, goal; Yachee and Cooper, backs; Jewell, A. B. Rosser and David, halves; Manuel, L. Rosser, Apear, D'Silva and Yachee, forwards.

Referees:—Messrs. Bocquet and Studd.

JAMALPUR vs. HASTINGS.—Played on the Customs ground last Friday the Jamalpur apprentices winning by five goals to nil after a fast and interesting game. Milchem opened the scoring five minutes after the start, and Ellison netting another goal, Jamalpur crossed over with an advantage of two goals to nil. Play was very level on resuming, but the closing stages of the game found the up-country team pressing and they scored three more goals, Milchem, Bennett and Irvine being responsible. Teams:—

JAMALPUR.—Tomkinson, goal; Rule and Dickens, backs; Solomon, Jordon and Caliston, halves; Lakin, Milchem, Irvine, Ellison and Bennett, forwards.

HASTINGS.—McCarthy, goal; Kinnaird and Hounsell, backs; M. Hazelbrooke, F. Hazelbrooke and Boylard, halves; White, Crane, Shortridge, Behrend and Codwell, forwards.

Referees:—Messrs. Yackchee and Manuel.

CALCUTTA vs. DALHOUSIE.—These teams met on Friday last, a very level game ending in a win for Calcutta by the narrow margin of a goal to nil. Play was fast and very even during the first half and it was not till just before the interval that Sherman got through and scored. On changing ends the game continued to be well contested and the score remained unchanged. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Thomas, goal; McCaw and Bocquet, backs; Badham, Studd and Oliver, halves; Slater, Roberts, Sherman, Mortimer and Dixon, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Hughes, goal; Lees and Smith, backs; Currie, Street and Whysall, halves; Allan, Knight, Blacquiere, McGhee and Holly, forwards.

DHANBAID vs. ASANSOL—Played at Asansol on Friday Dhanbaid winning by a goal to nil. Dhanbaid pressed throughout the first half and would have scored had it not been for an excellent defence. Asansol kept them out and the interval arrived without score. Both goals were visited in turn on resuming and then Dhanbaid took up the attack once more and Davis netted the ball. Asansol made great efforts to get on terms but without success. Teams:—

ASANSOL.—Aldridge, goal; Curry and Jones, backs; Goff Simmons and Ananias, halves; Vanderbeck, Manooch, Chesney, Gunning, and Lewis, forwards.

DHANBAID.—Harris, goal; Reed and Slinger, backs; Patricks, Arakiel, and Mackertich, halves; Wordsworth, Davis, Hannay, Shave, and Walker, forwards.

E. I. R. vs. 64TH R. F. A.—Played on Saturday on the Rangers' ground, an uninteresting game ending in a win for the Railway by two goals to one. Each team scored a goal in the first half, J. Smith putting through for the Railway and Dyer for the Gunners. In the second period Young gave the Railway the lead and they kept it to the end. Teams:—

E. I. R.—Noland, goal; Palmer and A. Smith, backs; Ginder, Hunter, and Jones, halves; G. Smith, A. Young, W. J. Smith, Bennett, and G. Peddie, forwards.

64TH R. F. A.—Nicholls, goal; Thompson and Head, backs; Biggs, Quinn, and Coldwell, halves; Miller, Blake, Dyer, Grace, and Chambers, forwards.

Referees:—Messrs. Richardson and Bocquet.

SHROPSHIRE L. I. vs. RANGERS.—An excellent game was witnessed when these teams met on the Calcutta ground on Saturday last. Both teams played at the top of their form. The Shropshires attacked at the start and Gasper was called upon to save. Then the Rangers pressed and after one unsuccessful attempt Oliver scored. Even play followed till the Rangers attacked once more but lost chances through erratic shooting. On changing ends the ball travelled up and down. Skempton scored the second goal for the Rangers and added a third shortly after. The military team made great efforts to reduce the margin but all their shots were effectually dealt with and the game ended in a win for the Rangers by three goals to nil. Teams:—

RANGERS.—Gasper, goal; Margrett and Postence, backs; Berkley, Burgess and Warden, halves; Davis, Oliver, Smart, Skempton and Coly, forwards.

SHROPSHIRES.—Turner, goal; Humphreys and Lieut. Linton, backs; Davenport, Leister and Halby, halves; Bushby, Lieut. Fort, Stantham and Ryan, forwards.

Referees:—Mr. A. B. Rosser and Havildar Omrao Sing.

SIBPUR vs. DUBLIN MISSION.—These teams met on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday, the game ending in a draw—one all. The Mission goal was disputed, it being held that the ball crossed the line outside the post and entered the net. The game was replayed on Monday, the Sibpur College winning by three goals to nil. Durrell (2) and Batterbury were responsible for the scoring. Teams:—

SIBPUR.—Brown, goal; Fox and Patterson, backs; Payne, Baptist, and Umphry, halves; Duncan, Tirki, Batterbury, Durrell and Scott, forwards.

DUBLIN MISSION.—Joel, goal; Jehan and Barden, backs; Tiki, Mungal and Philip, halves; Emmanuel, Prabahu Dyal, Heame, Paulus, and John Bunyan, forwards.

Third Round.

MEDICAL COLLEGE vs. JAMALPUR.—The Medicals and Jamalpur apprentices put up a splendid game on Monday. Owing to the rain early in the afternoon the ground was not in a condition for good hockey nevertheless play was fast and well contested throughout. The up-country team were first to attack, but the Medicals' defence was sound and play being transferred a penalty hit to the local team enabled Boileau to open the scoring. In the second half Jamalpur pressed hard and at length Milchem equalised. Thereafter play was very exciting, the ball travelled all over the field till a good combined run by the Medicals ended in Dawson putting through. Jamalpur kept their opponents busy for the rest of the game but they were unable to score and were beaten by two goals to one. Teams:—

MEDICALS.—Mann, goal; Hendricks and Asquith, backs; Lynch, Elkins, and Regi, halves; Boileau, D'Arcy, Heppolette, Rowley, and Perkins, forwards.

JAMALPUR.—Tomkinson, goal; Rule and Ricks, backs; Caliston, Jordan, and Solomon, halves; Saking, Milchem, Irving, Ellison, and Bennett, forwards.

Referees:—Messrs. Richardson and Bhattacharjee.

CALCUTTA vs. DHANBAID.—This game on Monday evening was played on the Customs' ground and resulted in a win for Calcutta by four goals to nil. The visitors were outclassed and the local team had matters their own way all through. Sherman played brilliantly and was responsible for all four goals, scoring two in each half. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Cooper, goal; McCaw and Bocquet, backs; Badham, Studd and Oliver, halves; Lieutenant Slater, Robertson, Sherman, Lieutenant Mortimer and Dixon, forwards.

DHANBAID.—Harris, goal; Brown and Reid, backs; Arakiel, Codwell and Patrick Singh, halves; Walker, Slane, Hannay, Daoud and Wordsworth, forwards.

Referees:—Messrs. A. B. Rosser and Oliver.

AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT, BOMBAY.

14TH HUSSARS vs. PARSEE PIONEERS.—The tournament opened on the 19th instant when this game was played on the Marine Lines ground. The game was very one-sided, the Hussars having it all their own way. They pressed all through the first half and Weatherall, Terrill and Edmunds scored goals. Crossing over the Parsees gave a better display, but after forcing a fruitless corner and pressing for a spell they were driven back to their own territory, where, after Hallard had missed a chance, Baker and Weatherall added further goals and the Hussars ran out winners by 5 goals to nil. Teams:—

PARSEE PIONEERS.—R. M. Pagdiwala, goal; M. C. Havildar and P. C. Ponchkhanavala, backs; N. C. Chinoy, M. J. Patel and M. J. Surty, halves; B. F. Mehta and R. D. Keravala, P. D. Chothia, R. D. Kalapesi and B. K. Punthaki, forwards.

14th HUSSARS.—Izard, goal; Powell and Lewis, backs; Smith, Rasall and Bartlett, halves; Baker, Terrill, Edmunds, Wetherall and Hallard, forwards.

Referees:—Messrs. Bean and Grayling.

Y.M.C.A. vs. MAHOMEDANS.—This game on the 19th instant was a run-away affair for the Young Men who attacked vigorously all through and scored as they liked: they put on 6 goals in the first half and 7 in the second period, thus winning by 13 goals to nil. Teams:—

Y.M.C.A.—G. Flynn, goal; N. Essai and H. Pires, backs; V. Hildreth, C. M. Ward and L. Dowley, halves; H. Templeton, C. Kelly, A. Spilling, N. George and A. McMullen, forwards.

MAHOMEDANS.—Papa, goal; Sher Hoosein and Aziz, backs; M. H. Nulwalla, Sher Ahmed and Sheik Ahmed, halves; Sheik Papa, Sheik Mahomed, Kadar Khan, Sheik Ebrahim and Sheik Guffur, forwards.

QUEEN'S REGIMENT vs. PARSEE PIONEERS "B."—Played on the Bombay Gymkhana ground on the 20th instant, the Queens winning by 5 goals to nil. Laurence opened the scoring in the first half, Davidson scored a second goal and then the Parsees attacked for a spell. Nothing resulted and at half time they were two goals behind. On resuming, save for an occasional burst by the Parsee, the Queens did all the attacking and registered three more goals through Davidson. Teams:—

QUEEN'S.—Ivatts, goal; Silver and Arundell, backs; Grainger Stemp and Barshaw, halves; Oates, Gilbank, Lawrence (Captain) Davidson and Lieutenant Matthews, forwards.

PARSEE PIONEERS "B."—Cabinet, goal; Motiwalla and Khodijai, backs; Mehta (Captain), Irani and Mistri, halves; Kotval, Pavri, Lalkaka, Karinjia and Gandhy, forwards.

CHESHIRES vs. 13TH BATTERY R.F.A.—On the Marine Lines ground on the 20th instant these teams put up a capital game. The Cheshires were slightly superior on the day's play and won by a goal to nil. They pressed at the start and midway through the first half scored a goal. The Gunners made great efforts to get on terms but without success and the remaining play in the first half was level and exciting but the Cheshires still led at the interval. Play all through the second period was fast and well contested. Both goals were visited in turn, both teams obtained corners which they failed to improve upon and time was called without any further goals being recorded. Teams:—

CHESHIRES.—Wakefield, goal; Harris and Price, backs; Cartright and Charlesworth, and Simmonds, halves; Eden, Hance, Trueman, Hayes and Pickering, forwards.

13TH BATTERY R. F. A.—Honegold, goal; Hogarth, and Lieutenant McGrath, backs; Boak, Connaughton and Lieutenant Furser, halves; Storrie, Surgeon, Spicely, Lieutenant Wallace, and Lieutenant Akerman, forwards.

Referees:—Mr. Coles and Mr. Ward.

PIONEERS "A" vs HINDU GYMKHANA.—The Pioneers, who won the trophy last year, easily defeated the Hindu Gymkhana in their match on the 21st instant. They scored goal after goal in quick succession, netted 7 in the first half and 6 after the interval, thus winning by 13 goals to nil. Teams:—

PIONEERS "A."—F. Guard, goal; V. Palvenker and D. Karanjia, backs; A. Devacha, N. Nagporewala and S. Surveyor, halves; H. Chocksey, G. Palvenker, D. Driver, S. Palvenker and J. Driver, forwards.

HINDU GYMKHANA.—S. W. Kamat, goal; D. K. Telang and K. B. Kamat, backs; N. R. Navalker, R. K. Telang and N. H Kharwa, halves; B. A. Dalvi, B. S. Sanzgiri, P. G. Wagle, W. B. Kamat and V. S. Kantak, forwards.

EMPIRE vs. SECUNDERABAD.—Played on the Bombay Gymkhana ground on the 21st instant. The Empire team attacked first but were forced back and shortly after the start Secunderabad registered their first goal. They added a second point and then the Empire team assumed the offensive but lost opportunities of scoring. After the interval Secunderabad pressed and Pascal scored and on resuming the Empire forwards got away and netted a goal. Level play followed, but the closing stages of the game were all in favour of Secunderabad, though they did not add to their score. Final score: Secunderabad, 3 goals; Empire, 1 goal. Teams:—

EMPIRE.—Watson, goal; Myres and Vaz, backs; Hurst, Dickson and Lisboa, halves; Mercado, Belton, Schultz, Ardagh and Colabawalla, forwards.

SECUNDERABAD COMBINED.—Abdul Guffur, goal; Daraswamy and A. H. Bengali, backs; Mahomed Mustapha, Abdul Ahmed and A. Jacob, halves; Abdul Rahim, V. Anantrao, P. Pascal, C. V. Gungadharam and Abdul Mujeed, forwards.

INTERNATIONAL vs. ELPHINSTONE COLLEGE.—This was the only game played last Thursday and resulted after an uninteresting display in a win for the Elphinstone College by 7 goals to nil. They scored two goals in the first half and five after the interval. Teams:—

ELPHINTONE COLLEGE.—Kanga, goal; Fapadia and Sethna, backs; Metafram, Burgess and Sabawalla, halves; Bilimoria Antia, Rickwood, Bhappe and Idawalla, forwards.

INTERNATIONAL H. C.—Omer, goal; Khan and Amir, backs; Gindill, Doctor and Clubwalla, halves; Gillespie, Warkar, Bhagia, Modi and Govind, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. CASUALS.—This match should have been played on the Marine Lines maidan on Thursday evening, but the Casuals scratched.

1ST WING GLOUCESTERS vs. R.G.A.:—Played on Friday the Gunners winning by 6 goals to nil. Lieutenant Brook scored a goal at the start and shortly after the same player added another point, after Sexton had saved twice. The Gloucesters then pressed but were kept out and even play followed but there was no further score in the first half. On crossing over the Gunners attacked vigorously and scored four more goals, Lieutenant Brook 2, Burke and Turner putting through, the Gloucesters were unable to score and were beaten as stated. Teams:—

R.G.A., COLABA—Hurley, goal; Watts and Sothcott, backs; Bolton, Hunt, and Heaney, halves; Reynolds, Turner, Lieutenant Brook, Burke and Lieutenant Kerne, forwards.

1ST. WING GLOUCESTERS.—Sexton, goal; Bartlet and Lovell, backs; Browning, Captain Beasley and Lieutenant Goldeney, halves; Francis, Davis, Wagner, Bullen and Lieutenant Scott Tucker, forwards.

UNION vs. POONA SIBCARI.—Played on Friday, the Union winning by 2 goals to 1 after a well contested game. They drew first blood and scored again before the Poona team got a goal. The second half was very even and there was no further score. Teams:—

UNION.—Eagle, goal; C. Rodrigues, and L. Whitcombe, backs; A. Alima, D. Baker, and P. Powell, halves; J. Douglas, B. Paul, V. Smith, J. Regnaud and W. Breganza, forwards.

POONA SIBCARI.—Sadan, goal; Abdul Kadar and Manoor, backs; Itat, Gool Mahomed and Ebrahim Khan, halves; Rama, Shankar, Ahmed, Yacoob and Hamzada, forwards.

GLOUCESTERS vs. INDO-PORTUGUESE H. C.—These teams met on the Marine Lines ground on Saturday evening, an interesting game ending in a win for the Gloucesters. The Portuguese showed good form at the start and were awarded three corners in succession. None were improved upon and play being taken to the other end Hodgson scored for the Gloucesters. After the interval the Portuguese again asserted themselves but could not withstand the heavier team, Stait scored a second goal for the Military, Hodgson put on a third, Sherwood netted a fourth. Then the Portuguese took up the attack Nelson scored and they continued to press for most of the remainder of the game. Cyriaco scored their second goal but they were unable to add to this and were beaten by 4 goals to 2.

EDUCATION SOCIETY vs. ALL BLACKS.—Played on the Bombay Gymkhana ground on the 24th instant. It was not a particularly interesting game. The first half was devoid of score but on changing ends after a long spell of desultory play Scott opened the scoring, Holtham followed this up with a goal and added a third goal shortly after. The All Blacks scored their only point just before time, Clough putting through. Final score: Education Society, 3 goals; All Blacks, 1 goal. Teams:—

EDUCATION SOCIETY.—Swingler, goal; O. Murray and Millard, backs; Watson, Dudley (Captain) and Wood; haves; Holtham, Scott, Major Gilder and V. Murray, forwards.

ALL BLACKS.—Ward, goal; Stevens and Clifford, backs; Brown (Captain), Newland and Viney, halves; Buckley, Fido, Faulds, G. Hildreth and Clough, forwards.

The Story Teller.

A FATAL LETTER.

THE evening of my arrival in town after an absence of some five years in the wilds, I was dining with Archie Harrison at the club. We had settled down to our coffee and cigars in the smoking-room, when I casually remarked:

"By the way, Archie, I met Jack Marsden leaving the club this evening just as I was coming in. He looked very staid and solemn—not at all as I remember him—and, when I asked him how his scribbling was getting on, he answered very shortly that he had given it up, and left almost immediately. I noticed that his whole face hardened and a strange look came into his eyes when I mentioned the subject. What's come over him?

"Do you mean to say you don't know his story?"

"No, you forget. I've been in exile for a lifetime."

Archie looked very grave. "It's a very sad business, he said, "but I'll tell you quickly and get it over. You remember what a cheery soul Jack used to be—never seemed to have a worry or care of any kind."

"Rather," said I, "we've had many good times together."

"And you remember how he used to amuse us by his attempts at journalism, how keen he was, and how he loved to tell us all about his efforts, and what sulphurous language when editors sent back his stuff?"

I nodded, with a smile of reminiscence.

"Well, four years ago, about a year after you went away, Jack got a job to write a serial for a half-penny paper. He was rather amusingly ashamed of it, and we used to rag him. He wrote it bit by bit, and generally forgot what point he had arrived at in the instalment before; killed his hero two or three times in the first twenty chapters or so, and had to bring him to life again. Well, after a bit he found he had exhausted every form of cheerful sensation—except one. He decided that it was quite time to work in a suicide. So he wrote the chapter leading up to it, but the letter which he had decided his victim was to leave behind to his betrothed fairly stumped him.

"However, on returning from the office that evening an idea struck him, and he jerked down on to a blank sheet of paper a brilliantly realistic farewell of a suicide to his fiancee. Much pleased with himself, he went off to dress for dinner, leaving the 'copy' on the writing-table. But in the passage—you know his little flat—he suddenly remembered he had forgotten to give some important instructions at the office; and, in his impetuous way, picked up his hat and dashed straight off there."

Archie paused; then resumed.

"He hadn't been gone ten minutes when Alice Wilson, the girl he was engaged to, turned up. She wasn't in the habit of going to his flat—in fact, had never been there before, I believe. It appears that she and Jack had had some silly sort of quarrel the day before. Now, they were madly in love with one another; but, whereas Jack had not thought much about the business, being sure it would all be made up when they next met, she had worried and worried over it, hadn't slept all night, and had finally worked herself up into thinking that Jack no longer loved her, and that it was her fault, etc., etc. You know what a woman is when she gets something on the brain—especially when, like this girl, she has a tendency to hysteria. So she decided to go straight to Jack and have the whole thing out.

"The servant told her Jack was out, but was expected back soon to dress for dinner. She said she would wait..... Well, to cut it short, I don't know how long it took her, but in time she found Jack's masterpiece on the writing-table, and read it. Now, the garrulous idiot of a servant had told her that Jack looked worried when he went out, and she was in a thoroughly weak over-strung condition, and had already made a tragedy out of a trifle. The result was that she put two and two together, made five, and jumped to the conclusion that Jack had gone out to kill himself, and that it was her fault.

"When Jack got back, he found her on the floor, unconscious.

"They got her home, where she lay for some time between life and death with a bad go of brain fever. It was from what she said in her delirium that they were able to piece together the story."

"She recovered?" I asked.

Archie shook his head. "Complications set in, and she died within a fortnight. She knew no one up to the end."

"And Jack?"

"No one knows or ever will know what he went through. He has never spoken of it to a soul. All we know is that he disappeared for some months, and then returned to his work—but no longer the Jack we knew. ..... You've seen him.

"I was afraid myself he would peg out or shoot himself: he was absolutely wrapped up in the girl. But he continues to live—conscientiously. He has a highly developed moral sense, has Jack, and he thinks it his duty to go on existing until his appointed time comes. And so he plugs on at it, poor old chap, with that grim set face, and scarcely a word to anyone, through the regular office routine and the solitary evenings.

"And, outside the office, he never puts pen to paper."
