Sport in England.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 27th November 1908.

THE TURF.

DONCASTER.

IT is difficult to diagnose the strength of the attendance upon a wide expanse of moor such as at Doncaster, while the enclosures are of such spreading range that on a more cramped course the muster would strike the eye as a very large one. One thing is certain there were scarcely as many people present last Friday as on the previous day. Nevertheless, there was an animated tone about the sport that cannot fail to auger well for the future of the meeting, fields being again of capital dimensions. Results :—

FOLKESTONE.

Delightfully seasonable weather gave a glamour to the second day of the Folkestone Meeting, making bright eyes more sparkling and cheeks ruddier in a crisp air, while sunshine sparkled on the dewladen Kentish pastures, and the previous day's nipping nor-'easter had sunk to rest in his receptive cave. A bit of a fog hung round the outskirts of the Metropolis, but did not spread its skirts very far, and another large and representative company enjoyed a capital afternoon's racing at Westenhanger. Results :—

HURST PARK.

From the parting of the ways at Warwick to Doncaster and Folkestone, sportsmen reunited at Hurst Park on Saturday—a comfortable conclusion for the Metropolitan division, who in this season of crowded weeks are nearly living in railway trains. The big elms, resplendent in pale gold, harmonised with the Venetian blue sky, and sunshine lent cheerfulness to a scene anything but wintry, although the leaves lie thick underfoot ; a charming day that gave no indications of the succeeding wet evening. The racing was interesting and exciting, but with a 100 to 8, a 10 to 1, and a 20 to 1 chance landing, it can be imagined that the "talent" received a severe check. Results :—

BIRMINGHAM.

A strong wind blowing half a gale all night did good service in keeping the track from being too holding, on Monday, but, except for a breeze which made caps preferable to hats, the day was a pleasant one, September-like sunshine giving a cheerful aspect to the scene. Thanks to morning arrivals, big fields did justice to the capital card, and sport was interesting throughout. Results :—

Tuesday morning broke clear and bright at Bromford Bridge, but a change in the wind brought up a regular South-coast bank of "fret," the light early becoming bad, and we left off in a penetrating rain. Considering the cheerless conditions, the attendance was a very good one as far as the holiday crowd went, while several prominent patrons of the sport were present in the club enclosure. Fields panned out well. Results :—

NEWBURY.

The day did not belie the morning's promise. On Wednesday the pretty country looking fresh and bright in welcome sunshine, and but for the bare poles of the trees it was hard to realise that we are within a few weeks of the shortest day and the possible bleak rigours of winter. After the recent rain, the course was a bit on the soft side, but improving under the influences of sun and wind, and though the entries all round were not quite up to Newbury standard, good fields and grand sport supplied the deficiency. Results:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

ONCE more Ireland has had to submit to defeat from England at Association football. For many years the representatives of the Emerald Isle have been vainly endeavouring to conquer the Sassenachs, and it speaks volumes for their good sportsmanship that they should come up smiling after every defeat, always cherishing the hope that eventually their efforts will be rewarded with victory. It really appeared that they had a fair chance to gain their initial success on Saturday, when amateur teams representing the two countries met at Dalymount Park, Dublin. This was the third game of the series, the two which had preceded it resulting in the triumph of the Rose. The resources of the Irish Association for amateur Internationals are extremely limited, but this does not damp their ardour or weaken their enthusiasm, and the Selection Committee trust to achieve a belated success by virtue of the players of their choice having a greater knowledge of the play of their colleagues than is possible to Englishmen, drawn from so many different clubs.

The Bohemians, on whose ground the match was played, provided seven of the Irish team, four of them being in the forward line, and as this club won the Irish Cup largely through the extra smartness of the attack, no fault could be found with the decision of the selectors to give it a trial against the English defence. The experiment was both a success and a failure. So far as the work in the open was concerned, there was no fault to find, but there was conspicuous lack of judgment when in the neighbourhood of goal, and the shooting was poor in the extreme. The halves were excellent when supporting an attack, but they were somewhat slow in recovery, and this threw a tremendous lot of work on the backs. A mistake now and again was inevitable under the severe pressure of the English forwards, but on the whole Foy—brought in at the eleventh hour in place of Seymour—and Thunder tackled and kicked admirably, and got through a heavy afternoon with distinct credit. Hehir, though five times beaten in goal, has not anything to reproach himself with, for he had a busy time, and saved several shots he would have been pardoned for missing.

The English team gave a thoroughly satisfactory display, notwithstanding the heavy handicap under which it laboured almost from the start. We refer to the accident to Woodward, which placed him completely hors de combat for a time, and even when he returned to the field he could do little more than centre the ball or push it forward for Berry to take on the run, and dash through. Berry took the inside position after Woodward was injured, and he has never played a finer game. He combined with his colleagues, but he also had sufficient confidence in his own powers to indulge in solo efforts, and his dribbling and shooting were at times electrifying. Stapley was slowed up by the heavy going, but his judgment was never at fault, and his deft passes to his inside men were a feature of the game, while his shooting was clever and well-timed. Porter and Hardman made a most aggressive left wing. Hardman was in his best form, and those who remember what he was like a couple of years ago will understand what this means. Of the halves, Dafferin was by general consent the most skilful of the half-dozen on the field. Chapman, strong, burly, determined, was a dominating figure in the first half, and frequently overshadowed the Irish inside forwards. Healy was obviously nervous at the start, but he knows the half-back game, and as play progressed he improved to such an extent that in the closing forty-five minutes he challenged comparison with his colleagues, and came well out of the ordeal. Hebert Smith played a game worthy of his career, but Corbett, sound as was his display, was not so convincing as he has been seen on some former occasions. Lemoine made a most successful debut, his fielding being clean, and his returns well-judged.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.—The nine Southern League games on Saturday produced, 28 goals, eight of which were scored in the Reading vs. Norwich City match at Elm Park, and seven of these were claimed by Reading, whose forwards surprised their keenest supporters, for not more than a couple of goals had previously been obtained by them in one afternoon in the tournament this season. The East Anglians, however, had had a previous experience of thrusting forwards, as on 5th September, they were routed at Swindon by ten goals to two and they have now given away 32 goals in their seven out matches. Two home clubs went under, Leyton allowing Bristol Rovers to take away both points, and Portsmouth vanquished Plymouth at Home Park. Leyton were somewhat unfortunate to lose, as they were more than a match for the Rovers in the open, but the forwards did not drive home the chances that came their way, and the only goal of the match gave the visitors their first away win of the season. There was a smart game on the Plymouth ground, and perhaps the visitors just about deserved their win because of the stubbornness of their defence. It was the first victory of Portsmouth on foreign soil, and Plymouth's second home defeat. Luton did both Southampton and Crystal Palace a good turn by defeating Northampton at Luton, the visitors having their defence broken down on three occasions, their heaviest reverse to date.

As both Southampton and Crystal Palace secured both points in their games, there is every probability of an early desperate struggle between them for supremacy, always provided that Northampton do not intervene. It is significant that the Sotonians could only manage to score once against Watford, and there is no doubt that the forwards are not nearly so dangerous as they were in the first six weeks of the season. The Palace did not have matters all their own way with Millwall, but the visiting forwards were sadly at fault in the early stages, when excellent chances came their way, and the Palace improving later on a keen game saw the Glaziers winners by the odd goal in three. At Brentford there was a close struggle between the home club and New Brompton, and at the finish honours were even, this result being one that could not well be cavilled at, for it would have been unfortunate for either team to be beaten. West Ham United continued their run of home successes by defeating Coventry City, and had the Hammers gone all out there would have been a wider margin than 2—0 between the sides at the close. The visit of Queen's Park Rangers to Swindon was not satisfactory from the point of view of the Royalists, for they dropped both points, in spite of tremendous efforts by their halves. On their own ground Swindon are one of the most difficult sides in the competition to beat.

LEAGUE I.—Some of the results in the First Division of the Football League were astounding. The most startling was at Woolwich, where the Arsenal were beaten by Sunderland by four clear goals, the score reminding one of Everton's similar performance on the second day of the season. The Gunners had a re-arranged front line, and the forwards never really got going. With the Sunderland defence having a comparatively easy time, they were able to initiate many attacks, and the Arsenal were, in consequence, always playing a losing game. Chelsea are a consistently inconsistent side, their form being as fickle as April weather. They were in one of their accommodating moods at Leicester, and the Fosse were not slow to take advantage of the fact. A defeat by five goals to two from a team that had only won one match in six on their own ground does not furnish food for pleasant reflection, and the many thousands of Chelsea supporters must hope that this is the last time this season that the defence will be found so seriously at fault. Another extraordinary result was that at Preston, for Bury, who had not obtained a point away from Gigg-lane, overcame the North End, while at Newcastle Aston Villa netted twice without response from the United, who stepped on the field prior to play with 14 points from seven home games. There was another remarkable contest at Goodison Park, the meeting of Everton and Blackburn Rovers producing eight goals, and these being equally shared, the Rovers preserved their undefeated away record, Everton being the only club to share this distinction with them. Of the other matches, the only one that did not work out as it might reasonably be expected to do was that at Nottingham between the two local teams, the County placing to their credit their most emphatic win of the season.

THE SECOND DIVISION.—As two of the three Metropolitan clubs in the Second Division were victorious on opponents' grounds, this is something of a set-off to the defeats of Chelsea and Woolwich, but there is another fly in the ointment, for Fulham allowed Leeds City to win at Craven Cottage. The word "allowed" is advisedly used because the West Londoners should have made victory secure in the first half when the City gave a most moderate exhibition. A win on Saturday would have taken the Cottagers to second place in the table, for Birmingham were beaten on their own ground by Hull City. Long delayed success has rewarded the unwearied efforts of Clapton Orient, who will be much encouraged by their win at Burnley, because it will inspire the team with confidence besides enabling them to jump from the twentieth to the seventeenth position in the table. Congratulations likewise to Tottenham Hotspur, who thoroughly deserved their victory at Gainsborough, and it is the more creditable because it was obtained in the absence of V. J. Woodward. Glossop, too, succeeded on their own ground against Chesterfield, the winners being minus Stapley, and West Bromwich Albion continued their march towards the championship by sending Derby County away pointless from the Hawthorns.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. OLD MALVERNIANS.—There was not a very large attendance at Queen's Club on Saturday to see Cambridge oppose the Malvernians, and the 'Varsity did not come out of the conflict with flying colours. The Old Boys played really good football, and the Brothers Day, on the right wing, with G. N. Foster in the centre, gave the Cambridge defenders plenty of exercise, although Gray, in the 'Varsity goal, had little to trouble him, so well was he covered by Thew and Pritchard. The Cambridge forwards were frequently in the vicinity of the Malvern goal, Squire, Brisley, and Edwards getting in good shots, while the latter also hit the crossbar. Then the Malvernian forwards rallied, and after Canny had tried a shot from the half-way line, some clever combined work by the right wing men culminated in G. N. Fotster working his way into a good position and scoring. The interval then arrived, with the Old Boys leading by the only goal scored.

On resuming, Brisley and Squire were conspicuous for good attempts to equalise on behalf of Cambridge, but A. P. Day gave a good account of himself in the Malvern goal. Foster took advantage of a miskick by Thew, and set S. E. Day on the move. The latter cleverly drew the defence, and then passed the ball on to Foster, who scored. Shortly after this S. H. Day scored a fine goal. The custodian saved his first shot, but Day dashed forward and met the rebound, from which he sent the ball into the net. Nettled by these reverses, the Cambridge forwards rallied finely, and eventually C. E. Squire scored for them. The end soon came, with the result three goals to one in favour of the Old Malvernians.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. CROUCH END VAMPIRES.—A fair number of spectators witnessed this match in the Parks on Saturday afternoon, despite the fact that there were several counter-attractions. A hard and fast game ensued. The 'Varsity, who thoroughly deserved their victory of 3 goals to 1, combined well, whereas their opponents relied more on individual effort. In the opening stages of the game Oxford had the best of matters, and some good work on the left by Sayer and Maples and Edwards at centre half was witnessed. Subsequently the visitors got well together, and Appleton was called upon to save from Williams. Following some play in midfield, the 'Varsity came again, and after a concerted movement on the part of Hain, Pears, and Jordan, the last-named nearly scored. The University continued to press, and after some scrambling play round the visitors goal Jordan gave his side first blood. At half-time, the score stood 1—0 in their favour.

On the resumption the Vampires assumed the offensive, but some good work by Tuff set the Oxford forwards in motion, and Maples, running down on the wing, shot. The custodian partly cleared, but Jordan dashed up and sent the ball into the net. The Vampires played up determinedly, and made strenuous efforts, which for some time were futile. At length good work by their forwards brought the ball in front of the 'Varsity goal, and Williams getting in position, netted with a beautiful shot. Soon after Jordan added another point for the Dark Blues, who thus proved successful by 3 goals to 1.

RUGBY RULES.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. LIVERPOOL.— Liverpool did not visit Oxford with a very strong reputation, and the University were content to place a strong "A" team in the field against them, for of those who played against the Australians only Cronje, Turner (forward), Cunningham, and Gilray were again doing duty. That they were quite justified in doing so was proved by the result, as nearly the whole of the game was fought out in the Liverpool twenty-five. Just at the start a forward rush by the visitors gave some hope of a close game, but after Gilray had checked they never again entered the Oxford twenty-five during the first half, save on one occasion. Lloyd, receiving from Cronje, opened the scoring for the Dark Blues, and Cunningham added the major points. Then came a fine bout of passing, in which Cunningham, Poulton, and Gilray shared, and the latter got in, but the place failed. From this point the Liverpool backs were powerless against the Oxford attack, and, with two further tries by Gilray and one by Poulton (the latter's being converted by Cunningham), the Oxonians led at the interval by 19 points to 0.

The second half was even more disastrous to the visitors than the first, as they were completely outplayed at all points. Cunningham (twice), Page, Lloyd, Buchanan, and Gilray all crossed the line, and in four instances the goal kick was successful, Cunningham placing three and Turner one. Just on the finish a good rush of the Liverpool forwards led up to a clever try by Bryde, which Darbishire converted, and Oxford won a most uninteresting game by 45 points to 5.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. LONDON SCOTTISH.—A win for the Light Blues by 8 points fairly well represents this game at Cambridge on Saturday. Walter, the International, and one or two others missed the train, and the Scottish side had to be practically re-organised behind the scrum. The two right Blues, Lockhart and Grant, who turned out for the Scottish, found plenty of openings, but the three-quarters lacked understanding, and very seldom got together. Cambridge made a couple of changes in their side. The left wing three-quarter place was filled by Read, who is the sixth man tried in this position. The forward line was slightly changed, G. V. Carey, the Blue, who has been indisposed, displacing Fraser, the Freshman.

The Light Blues attacked strongly during the first ten minutes, Macleod missing a penalty goal and Pyman a dropped goal, but the visitors were then aggressive, and when Pyman punted away Macleod and Wade had a race for the ball. The latter got there first, but was well collared, and, unfortunately for his side, passed to Wright, who easily scored under the posts, and Macleod added the major points. Strangely enough the next score four minutes later came in the same manner. This time Macleod, well in his own "25," sent away. Wright followed up, gained possession, tricked Wade, and landed under the posts. Macleod again converting. Cambridge having been compelled to touch down, and Grant having missed dropping a goal, Macleod found some fine touches. Then Sutherland started a good bout of passing which let Wright in, and again Macleod scored the maximum points.

Immediately after the change of ends Whitworth got clear, but was splendidly collared by Atkinson, but in a forward rush Macleod, in endeavouring to save, kicked over his own head, and Kirkwood crossed the line near the corner flag. Lockwood kicked a fine goal. Cambridge then set to work with a will, and Macleod made a mark but gained nothing by it. Flank movement was then tried, and Macleod, receiving a pass back from Wright, was unable to get through, and punted into the centre. Purves, almost unmarked, fielded, and easily got under the posts, but Macleod's place kick was charged down. Pyman then tried to drop when he should have passed out, but the forwards worked on to the line and Sutherland received from the pack and grounded over. Morton had bad luck with his kick. This concluded the Cambridge scoring. The game was fairly even for a period, but Lockhart at length made a mark and scored from it, whilst a combined attack let Whitworth in on the left wing, and Lockhart converted, the final score being:—Cambridge University, 3 goals 2 tries (21 points); London Scottish, 2 placed goals 1 goal from a mark (13 points).

GUY'S HOSPITAL vs. LONDON IRISH.—Guy's beat the Irish by 1 marked goal and 2 tries to 1 goal at Honor Oak Park on Saturday. The Irish had ill-luck in losing Brydon at half-time owing to injury, as up to that time they held their opponents wonderfully well. Quite early in the game Guy's got 6 points up. The first score was from a mark by Sauer, Stokes goaling, and then Sauer got away by himself, dodged Shannon, and scored a wide-out try; no goal resulting. Soon after, Lacey misfielding, O'Grady dribbled over and scored, goaling his own try with a magnificent kick. At half-time nothing further had been scored.

Guy's were hard pressed soon after the game recommenced. Forster finding touch near the corner. Guy's now pressed heavily, and Stokes and Stringer tried "drops," without success. Then, from a drop-out, Stringer made a delightful run, but he was eventually tackled when almost over. At length Stokes got over by the corner, and making a good but fruitless attempt at goaling, the game ended as above.

LONDON WELSH vs. ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S.—The London Welsh, after a series of five consecutive away matches—and all lost!—were at home on Saturday to St. Bartholomew's, whom they defeated by 9 points to 5. By preventing Jenkins from returning the kick-off, the visitors established themselves in Welsh territory. After huge exchanges between Ferguson and Evans, Jenkins took a flying kick inwards, gaining a lot of ground, which Maddocks further improved by a dodgy run. The recurrence of an old leg trouble compelling Coppock to retire for a few minutes, the Welsh only barely held their own during his absence, but immediately on his return the visitors' defence was overcome by superior combination and dash. The ball was sent over the Mediocs' line, and Rees touched it down, but it had touched the corner flag. From a subsequent scrum Vivian wriggled through and scored, but Evans just failed to convert. Jenkins, Rees, and Maddocks in turn attacked strongly, but it was Alexander who effected the score by a good run from the "25." Maddocks unsuccessfully essayed to place the goal. After a brief interval the Welsh followed up the resuming kick, and before they could be driven back Vivian scored from a scramble on the line, Evans narrowly missing the extra points. Henceforward play ruled fairly even, and following up a charged-down kick, Waddington scored, and sustained an injury in the effort. Ferguson did not convert. Result:—London Welsh, 3 tries (9 points); St. Bartholomew's, 1 try 3 points).

GOLF.

£200 PROFESSIONAL MATCH.—George Duncan, of Hanger Hill, and C. H. Mayo, of Bexhill, have established themselves in the front rank of foursome couples. Indeed, it is an open question whether they do not constitute the finest combination of the present day. The manner in which they defeated the challengers from the Channel Islands, Edward Ray and Tom Vardon, in the 72 holes match which concluded at Prince's, Sandwich, on Saturday, was brilliant in the extreme. The margin of success, 6 holes up and 5 to play, was by no means flattering to the victors. The winners finished the first half of the contest, decided at Deal, with an advantage of four holes, and they never looked like losing the lead.

The conditions on Saturday morning were testing in the extreme. Heavy gusts of wind blew from the north-east, and made the outward half of a truly magnificent course—a course fit for any championship—almost too difficult. Duncan, perhaps, did not play so well as at Deal; at least, he did not drive so well. But the youngsters (Mayo is only 24, and Duncan but a year older) had increased their lead to five at the turn. They might well have been six up at this point. Duncan, the golfer of genius to whom the inspiration to do remarkable things comes in a flash and is put as quickly into operation, was contributing his strokes of brilliancy. The most noteworthy of these was provided at the eighth hole, a which has, for the second shot, a huge bunker not unlike the corsets on the Royal St. George's links. From his tee shot Mayo was in a small bunker to the right of the fairway. It was a long carry over the big bunker and on to the green—a very long one to attempt from sand. The hole measures 418 yards, but Duncan took his spoon and landed the ball on the green. His side deserved to win the hole, especially as the others were in trouble from their second, but Duncan missed a four-foot putt, and the result was a half.

Ray and Tom Vardon made a great effort coming home, and there was one period when a suspicion of anxiety was traceable on the faces of the leaders. The challengers had regained one hole when, at the fifteenth, a remarkable thing happened. The hole measures 389 yards, and the scratch score is reckoned at 5. Mayo laid his side dead with the second shot, so that they seemed likely to win the hole in 3. But Vardon actually holed his half-iron shot for a 2! He was so taken aback by his own extraordinary feat that he forgot that it was his turn to drive from the next tee and had to be sought in the crowd. It would not have been surprising if the younger men had cracked at this point; but they halved the sixteenth hole, won the seventeenth by means of two faultless shots on to the green, and, although losing the eighteenth, were three up with a round to play.

Any chance that existed of a close finish disappeared within a quarter of an hour of the beginning of the afternoon round. Ray and Vardon lost the first three holes through nothing but bad golf. From that point the match was little more than a procession, and the end came on the thirteenth green. The losers never touched their finest form. Their long game was faulty, and Ray did not give the ball a chance on the greens. Often he was dead straight, but an inch or two short, nor did Vardon putt well. Still, Duncan and Mayo performed splendidly, and it would have taken a very fine couple to beat them as they played on this occasion. Mr. H. Mallaby Deeley acted as referee on Saturday.

At the first hole Ray did not allow enough for the wind with his tee shot, and got into the rough. He only just escaped the road to the right, and the second shot was still in the rough. With the approach the Ganton man failed to clear the bank in front of the green and stopped short. Duncan and Mayo were eight feet from the hole in 3. Ray missed a seven feet putt for a half in 5, and his side became 5 down. Going to the second Mayo outdrove Vardon by fully twenty yards, but Duncan put the second into the rough. Vardon played a picture of a mashie shot, which went seven feet passed the pin, and the Channel Islanders secured the hole in 5 to 6. The third was divided in 4. At the fourth Ray played a magnificent brassie shot in the teeth of the wind, but a fine chip shot by Duncan, and a good putt by Mayo, enabled the latter couple to effect a half in 5. Ray was bunkered from his tee shot going to the short fifth. Mayo, however, could not put his running pitch dead, and the hole was halved in 4. Vardon and Ray got back a point at the sixth, where Mayo was bunkered from his drive, and his partner could not get far with the second. The younger men took 4 to reach the green, Vardon being twenty yards wide in 3. Ray played the like to within four feet of the hole, and his partner got down the putt for five.

Vardon sliced his brassie shot going to the seventh. Neither of the other men did too well in the long game, but a fine approach by Duncan left his side four yards from the pin in 3. Vardon failed to get down a seven yards putt, but Mayo holed his putt of four yards for the hole in 4. Going to the eighth Mayo drove into a bunker to the right of the course. The ball was lying well, but the shot that Duncan made was a remarkable one. He took a cleek, and with a terrific shot carried the big bunkers—in itself no small feat—and left his side on the green. After this the younger men looked certain to win the hole. Duncan, however, missed a four feet putt, and Vardon, screwing round a half stymie, effected a half in 5. Duncan outdrove Ray by thirty yards going to the ninth, and Mayo all but reached the green in 2. The latter player, however, gave the others a chance by missing a five feet putt, but Ray failed to get down a slightly shorter one for a half in 5. Mayo and Duncan thus turned for home with a lead of 5 up. The next two holes were halved. Vardon and Ray were fortunate to secure a division at the eleventh. Vardon had to play two more on the green, but Duncan was nearly two yards too strong with a long down-hill putt. Mayo missed the putt back, and the challengers thus snatched a half.

The latter couple won the twelfth, where Duncan's brassie shot was bunkered. The leaders were never in sight of a half, and Vardon and Ray secured the hole in 4 to 6. Both sides played an indifferent short game to the thirteenth, which was halved in 5. A fine pitch by Duncan to within five feet of the pin, and a good putt by Mayo enabled the younger men to effect a half in 3 at the fourteenth. Mayo laid his approach to the next hole practically dead, and his side appeared to have a good chance of increasing their lead. Vardon, however, holed a half-iron shot from a distance of just over a hundred yards for a 2. The Channel Islanders, of course, won the hole. Ray pulled his second to the next hole into rough, but Duncan equalised matters by getting into the bunker to the right. Mayo made a good recovery from a bad place, but they could only halve the hole in 5. A very long drive by Duncan enabled Mayo to reach the next green in 2. The others were short, and Ray was ten yards past the hole with his run up. The consequence was that Mayo and Duncan won the hole in 4 to 5, and thus became 4 up. They lost the home hole, however, Duncan topping his mashie shot into the bunker. Vardon and Ray thus finished the round 3 down on the round. The scores were:—

Duncan and Mayo.
Out: 564546455—44. Home: 456533545—40. Total, 84.

Ray and Vardon.

AFTERNOON ROUND.

In the afternoon the sky became overcast, but the fact that the wind had died away made the conditions much more favourable for low scoring. Mayo and Duncan rapidly regained their old lead of 5 up. Vardon missed a 7 feet putt for a half at the first hole. At the second Mayo and Duncan were dead in 4, and Vardon had a 5 feet putt for a half. He missed it, and the younger men became 5 up. They became 6 up for the first in the course of the match at the third. At this hole Mayo laid his chip shot practically dead, but Vardon was short with his run-up, and Ray was not equal to getting down the putt. The Channel Islanders looked like losing the fourth, where Vardon fluffed his approach. Ray, however, saved the situation by holeing a long putt for the hole in 4. The fifth was halved in an indifferent 4.

Thanks to a good shot out of the rough by Vardon to within five feet of the hole, the challengers won the sixth in 4 to 5. They lost the seventh, however. Here Mayo played a fine cleek shot on to the green. Vardon was short, and Ray was then short with his approach, with the result that the leaders won in 4 to 5. The play at the eighth hole in the afternoon was, in its early stages, similar to that seen in the morning. Mayo was in the same bunker, and Duncan again took his spoon in an effort to recover. But this time he was trapped, and Ray and Vardon secured the hole in 4. Going to the ninth Ray made a weak approach, and Duncan laid the other side a stymie. Vardon could not negotiate the obstacle with his mashie, and Duncan and Mayo were again five up.

A bunkered tee shot by Vardon made the Channel Islanders six down at the tenth. After a half they won the twelfth, where Vardon played a splendid shot out of the rough, and Ray holed a putt for a 4. But they were now five down with six to play, and the next hole saw the match end. Mayo hit a fine second on to the green, while the others were short and wide to the left. Duncan and Mayo always had the hole safe, and so they gained a notable triumph. The scores were:—

Duncan and Mayo.
Out: 553545464—41. Home: 4554—18. Total, 59 (for 13 holes).

Ray and Vardon.
Out: 664444545—42. Home: 6545—20. Total, 62, (for 13 holes).

CROSS COUNTRY RUNNING.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. BRIGHTON AND COUNTY H.—Owing to the date of the Inter-'Varsity match having been changed from 12th December to 5th December, the first meeting Cambridge have ever held with Brighton and County had to be brought forward a week, and hence the visitors had had little special practice for Saturday's match. They had out a strong side, and were expected easily to defeat the Light Blues, who just now are experiencing bad luck. G. N. Selby-Lowndes, E. C. Inman, and F. G. Swan, the three Blues, have all been "off colour," which is unfortunate, as Saturday's home contest was the last they will be engaged in previous to meeting Oxford. Inman, who finished first last year against Oxford, was unable to run, and Selby-Lowndes soon broke down. Swan showed much improved form, and is gradually getting into condition. Loveless, who was unable to compete the previous Saturday against the Cambridge Town, showed up well, and is probably the best man now running for the 'Varsity. Hughes, Gavin, and Ewart all ran well, and their side thereby gained an unexpected victory by 24 points to 31. Starter and timekeeper, Mr. Newton Digby; judges, the Rev. C. T. Ward (president, C.C.U.C. H. and H.) and Messrs. H. H. Edmondson and J. B. Fothergill (Brighton).

G. N. Selby-Lowndes and H. P. Dawson (Cambridge) and C. Jenkin (Brighton) did not finish.

Selby-Lowndes went away with the lead, but Gavin early went ahead, and remained in front for about three miles. Climbing the "Gogo," Pullinger went to the front, and looked an easy winner. Gavin made a fine effort, but it so upset him that he could only finish fifth. Loveless came up on the road, and although he made a fine effort, he failed to overhaul the speedy Brighton man. There was some exciting racing between the next five home.

BLACKHEATH H. vs. OXFORD UNIVERSITY H. AND H.—The first team match was decided at Blackheath on Saturday, starting and finishing at the Heathens' quarters, Green Man, Blackheath Hill. Contrary to custom, it had been agreed to run 10 a side, and the Oxonians turned up with a strong team. The start was delayed for a considerable time owing to the late arrival of one or two of the visitors, while Blackheath were short of the club crack, E. F. Judson.

The Oxford men went away with a rush, and when the country was reached had already won, bar accidents, as they had nine in the first ten. Eventually the 'Varsity won by 10 points, the lowest possible, to 40, although had the scoring been reckoned on the usual lines, the Heathens' total would have been considerably higher. As regards first position there was a very close race, although it seemed throughout as if the first three were more intent on "packing together than beating one another, and the next pair finished a dead-heat. This year's Oxford team is unquestionably strong, [illegible] they have studied the art of team racing.

* Dead-heat.

The new 7½ miles course was taken, and it is evident from the times that it is well over the stipulated distance, as there is a deal of fast going in it. The direction taken is across the heath, through Morden College Grounds, and then sharp to the right through Kidbrooke to the Lee road, across towards Nottingham, and then round by Well Hall, and towards the main road, finishing by Kidbrooke Park and the Dover road. The Oxford pack went away at a big pace, and on reaching the country claimed the first six men. A mile further on Mais, Worsley, and Clemes were close together, Haigh and Sainsbury next, then two 'Varsity men, and the first "Heathen," Glaeser, together. Worsley and Clemes took it the running at times, and the three leaders drew right away from the field in the second half. On the road they were together, and remained so until fairly close to home, when Worsley spurted, with Clemes in close attendance, and the latter, with a strong effort, beat his man in the last dozen yards.

BOXING.

SUMMERS vs. GOLDSWAIN.—This great contest came off at the N. S. Club on the 23rd instant. To reconstruct with success a big contest almost at the eleventh hour, is indeed a difficult task, but this was accomplished by the management at headquarters, where Jack Goldswain (Bermondsey) took the ring against Johnny Summers in place of the American, Rouse O'Brien, who had been compelled to call his engagement off owing to a recurrence of a malady from which he suffered less than a year ago. Although many were under the impression that the match would be at catch-weights, this was not so. Goldswain having agreed not to exceed 10st. 4lb. at two o'clock yesterday, and to get down to this poundage the lightweight champion had a most difficult task, for it is stated that last Wednesday morning he scaled over 11st. However, by sheer hard work, with never less than twenty-five miles road work daily, Goldswain put in an appearance at the appointed time yesterday, prepared to do the weight. After waiting a few minutes for Summers, who was late in arriving from Brighton, Goldswain mounted the scale, and in nature's garb just turned 10st. 4½lb. Appended are details of the contest.—

Goldswain was looked after by Alf. Howitt, Dan Sullivan, and Bill Baxter; while in Summers's corner were Harry Paul, Bill Higgins, and Wally Morgan. Everything being in readiness, the men stood up for Round 1.—Upon "Time" being called each advanced briskly to the centre. Goldswain appeared all 10lb. heavier. Standing very prettily, Summers began to work in and out, and after leading with the left, the pair came to close quarters, where each jabbed away on the body. Upon breaking away Summers met Goldswain with a hard left on the mouth which immediately left its mark. Goldswain twice had to be cautioned for holding with his left.

Round 2.—The pair immediately rushed to a clinch, and on breaking away Goldswain tried the left on the body without success, Summers retaliating with right and left on the head. At this period they indulged in some in-fighting, to the advantage of the Canning Town youth. Both fought hard for the body, and Goldswain several times drove the right home on the kidneys, while Summers finished up the meeting with a straight left-hand jab on the mouth.

Round 3.—Very little time was wasted in sparring. Summers, after feinting with the left, drove the right hard home on the head. Covering himself nicely, Goldswain proved very awkward to land on. The Bermondsey lad afterwards had a turn at forcing, and frequently tried to uppercut his rival with the left, but failed to do much damage. The pair were in the midst of some spirited exchanges when the gong sounded.

Round 4.—Summers wore a somewhat flushed appearance. Goldswain, who boxed very coolly, proved exceptionally busy, but twice missed with the right. Summers was not by any means idle, and his short half-arm jabs appeared to have a lot of sting

Round 5.—Summers was the first to lead, reaching the face with great force. This performance he several times repeated. Goldswain was apparently waiting for an opening, but in trying to bring across the right was out of distance, and the blow went harmlessly over his opponent's head. Both continued to contest every inch of the way, and there was very little to choose when the interval arrived.

Round 6.—Both attempted to lead simultaneously, and after each had missed Goldswain twice drove his opponent's head back with the left. Following this Summers did some excellent work, and after Goldswain had missed a swinging blow with the right Summers dashed out his left into the face with terrific force. The Canning Town lad certainly finished up the fresher.

Round 7.—After several short leads Summers fought for the body, but owing to the Bermondsey man keeping at close quarters he was unable to do much damage. Just after Summers, with a nice right hook, scored very heavily on the mouth and staggered his adversary. Goldswain tried to shake off the effects, but before the end of the metting was the recipient of another couple of right-hand punches.

Round 8.—Although recuperated to a certain extent, Goldswain was by no means the stronger on resuming. Summers, seeing the state of affairs, gave him no rest, and with some useful digs with both hands again had his man very tired at the end of the meeting.

Round 9.—Goldswain was by no means done with, for he started in resolute fashion in this round, rushing in with left and right. Summers neatly avoided, and several smart rallies ensued, in which neither could claim much advantage until just on the call of time, when Goldswain swung the right to the head.

Round 10.—Calmly waiting for his opponent to lead, Summers scored with the left and right on the head. Just after Goldswain left himself open, and, like a flash, Summers dashed his right squarely on the jaw, and Goldswain went down. He quickly rose. Summers standing well away until he had regained the perpendicular. Goldswain, though dazed, managed to avoid further punishment, but was used up when he went to his corner.

Round 11.—A deal of in-fighting opened this round, but Summers soon began to take the initiative. Goldswain never shirked his work, and time after time joined issue with his now much stronger adversary. Summers apparently deemed it advisable to take a rest, for towards the close of the meeting he was content to pink his rival on the face with the left.

Round 12.—There was very little to chronicle at this meeting, though Summers, if anything, increased his lead.

Round 13.—Both were rather slower in this round, and a deal of hugging ensued, while Goldwain appeared to be recovering from his recent bad time.

Round 14.—This opened in promising style, Goldswain attempted agressive tactics, which just suited Johnny, who with some fine half-arm jolts again had his man in difficulties. Timing his delivery, Summers crossed his man with the right and toppled him over. Gamely Goldswain rose, but Summers was on him as quick as lightning, and with a similar punch again sent him down. Goldswain managed to regain his feet and tried to get to close quarters, but as he advanced Summers sent the right well home on the mark, and Goldswain on this occasion was on the ground when the end of the round expired. It appeared impossible for Goldswain to sufficiently recover to resume, and the referee stepping to the side of the ring, exclaimed, "Gentlemen, I think this is enough." Summers thereupon was declared the winner.

ROWING.

EASY WORK BY OXFORD EIGHTS.—The Trials were restricted to the home water yesterday. The president and secretary shared the coaching and Dr. Bourne was also present. Nothing of a very arduous character was done. Both crews made a couple of journeys to the Lasher and back, but on neither occasion did they row the course through. Short bursts of rowing were indulged in although for the most part they were restricted to a paddle of 27 per minute. Campbell and Kitchin and Johnston and Carton also went out in the gig pair. The order of rowing remains as follows:—

No. 1 Crew.—P. Newman (Trinity) (bow), 10st. 9lb.; J. R. Somers-Smith (Magdalen); 11s. 6lb.; P. R. Filleul (Wadham), 11st. 3½lb. B F Ayrton (Trinity), 11st. 7lb. G S Johnston (New College) 12st. 10lb. S Garton (Magdalen), 13st. 6lb. P Fleming (Magdalen), 12st. 5lb, G. S Harter St. John's (stroke), 10 [illegible] R A Fitzgibbons (Christ Church) (cox), 8st. 11lb.

No. 2 Crew.—F. E Villiers (Christ Church) (bow), 11st. 4lb. C. A. Gladstone (Christ Church), 10st. 5lb; G. F. Fisher (Exeter), 11st. 2lb; E. V. Culme-Seymour (New College), 11st., 7lb; J. Campbell (Exeter), 12st. 7lb; A. E. Kitchin (St John's), 13st. 4½lb.; D. Mackinnon (Magdalen), 12st. 13lb; R. C. Bourne (New College) (stroke), 11st. 2lb; A Weyman (University) (Cox)

CAMBRIDGE UNIV. EIGHTS' PRACTICE.—The weather Cambridge yesterday remained cold but dry, whilst a strong wind blew down stream in the lower and more exposed reaches. Lloyd's crew, under Mr. E. G. Williams, were first afloat, and did some fairly heavy work. They paddled and rowed in four stages to Baitsbite, and, having turned, paddled to the Red Grind, and then rowed from Ditton Corner to the Pike and Eel at a stroke ranging from 30 to 32, finishing up slightly faster than that.

The crew did not give satisfaction, getting very little pace out of their boat against the head wind. All through the boat there is tendency to be slow waywith the hands, which makes the finish ragged, whilst some of the men are very late getting the work on at the beginning, and thus their sliding becomes irregular. No. 7 yesterday was heavy with his hands over the stretcher, and continually late on stroke, which naturally had a bad effect on the crew. Arbuthnot's crew, advised by President D. C. R. Stuart, launched their craft very soon after their rivals and as usual, went very well, getting a good hard finish and keeping the knees down to let the boat run between the strokes. They are more advanced than the other crew, and took matters fairly easily. Order of rowing:—

Mr. Arbuthnot's Crew.—T. D. Richardson (Trinity Hall) (bow), 10st; P. Verdon (Jesus), 11st. 3lb; J. F. A. Trotter (Trinity Hall), 12st. 5lb; W. A. C. Perry (First Trinity). 12st. 10lb; H. G. Baynes (First Trinity), 14st. 3lb; J. B. Rosher (First Trinity), 13st. 13lb; E. S. Hornidge (Trinity Hall), 12st. 10lb; R. W. M. Arbuthnot (Third Trinity) (stroke), 10st. 3lb; W. P. Ainley (Jesus) (cox), 8st. 8lb.

Mr. Lloyd's Crew.—E C. Henty (Jesus) (bow), 11st. 5lb; H. E. Swanston (Jesus), 12st. 4lb; F. G Hudson (Jesus), 12st. 5lb; C. F. Cooke (Trinity Hall), 12st. 6lb; A. J. Gardiner (Christ's), 13st. 2lb; C. J. W. Henslow (Lady Margaret), 12st; C. M. Stuart (Trinity Hall) 11st. 6lb; M. A. Lloyd (Pembroke) (stroke), 11st. 11lb. G D. Compston (Trinity Hall (cox), 8st. 9lb.

Hunting.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

THE Bombay Hunt's new pack gave us a better exhibition of their worth last Bye Day when the Meet was at the old familiar, picturesque Sahar Hill. Over fifty were out and amongst them the Hon'ble Mrs. Brougham, Mrs. Beatty, Mrs. Rumboll, Mrs. Meyer and Mrs Priestley who keep up over the treacherous going across paddy fields in a manner that does them the greatest credit. One never seems to have a tiring wait at this rendezvous, and we were soon away hell for leather over the ever welcome valley of Bomanwadi. There was some tricky going after this but leading to more galloping country, and indeed one had to gallop to keep up. Hounds made away along the Tulsi Main and eventually came to Marob Here there was a check for a time before they took up the line again in the direction of Powai Hill. A sign of the quarry's tiring was his making for the jungle on the summit of one of these. He dodged about for a time but his end was not postponed for long, the field catching a glimpse of him just before the kill.

Foremost of the ladies, and one of the first of the whole field, was Mrs Rumboll, a hard one to beat here or in the mud sports, and she was the recipient of the brush after quite an hour's run.

ON Thursday the meet was at the Kennels when but a few short of the previous one turned out to follow two capital runs, the latter of which was at any rate the fastest so far experienced this season. The first rays of light saw hounds put into the Parla coverts, and almost at once they came out with such a burst of music and passed the brickfields at such a pace that it was evident scent was tip top. This jack took a circuitous course, and, though the run was quite good, he was not one of the champions we have followed at other times. We had to cover some very bad holey going in the direction of the barracks at Takola but this was soon over. Before getting there the jack twisted at more than right angles, hounds gradually gaining on him, and soon after he was palpably in need of a breather as he tried to elude the pack by seeking the refuge of a well. Scent was, however, too good and he was not passed over.

Taking hounds to the coverts where the Tulsi Main tunnels under the Andheri road, a good example of a 'stiff-neck" was put up who fully taxed the powers of our mounts. Before reaching the valley near Marole we had some very rough country to negotiate, some good lepping making up for it to some extent, but after that all was serene and we could not gallop too fast. On reaching the hills hounds went up one of them followed by a certain number, others giving best to that old stager, Colonel Bull, and following him round the base. At the same pace another valley was crossed providing a long run to a hill covered with undergrowth through which the jack went but without troubling the pack. He showed marvellous stamina in a run in the open as far as a thick jungle, and here hounds at last broke up but one of the branches pulled down one of the gamest varmints one could meet with.

OLD CLIFF.

Paperchasing

CALCUTTA PAPERCHASES.

I.

THE first chase was run over the Salt Lake country starting from the Screw Pines and was about 2¼ miles in all. There was a very big crowd out for so early in the season and an unusually large proportion meant business. The going was very ponky and this coupled with daring riding and badly schooled horses occasioned an undue amount of grief luckily without hurting anybody particularly, and the only serious accident was to good honest old Ruddigore, who came down at the last wall and broke his neck. The pace was very hot and John who was ridden by Mr. Evers, thanks to his light weight, was best able to last it out. The final order was : Mr. Evers on John, Mr. Gibbs on Trilby, Mr. Curtis Hayward on Pardon, Captain Holden on Lord Harry, Mr. Ballantyne on Fairy, Mr. Winckworth on Ermine, Mr. Muir on Hyong, Lord Francis Scott on Fermoy, Mr. Stewart on Pohontem, Mr. Levetus on Lord Chester, Mr. Mill on Tired Tim, Mr. Wallace Jones on Matsumata, Mr. Corbett on Trustee, Mr. Dudley Myers on Napier and Mrs. Morgan on Blue Bell, Mr. Radmore on Prince Morefield, Mr. Bletsoe on Grey Wolf, and many others. There was also a very keen competition in the pony chase, the newly-instituted average cup probably having something to do with it and the first six raced home well together. Dynamite led a great pace till he ran off the paper. Ungava tried to run out at the last hurdle, giving an easy victory to Pathfinder. The final order was : Captain Holden on Pathfinder, Mr. Evers on Ungava, Mr. Ballantyne on Meprise, Mr. Corbett on the Pink 'Un, Mr. Stokes on Look Lily c, Mr. Levetus on Pineal, Mr. Muir on Clarice, Mr. Damiano on Scarbro ; Mrs. Paris on Zig Zag, Mr. Hilliard on Lisha, Mr. Wheeler on Lovelace, Mr. Bletsoe on Chasse, Mr. Hutchison, Mr Lamotte etc.. Among others out we noticed Lady Violet Elliott on a chestnut, Mrs. Forsyth on a bay, Miss Forsyth on Grey Man, Mrs. Walker on Detective, Mrs. Dring, Mr. Halliday on Ruddigore, Mr. Laing, Mr. Gwen Wilson, Mr. Stelle Perkins on Dalgai, Mr. Charrington on Colors, Mr. Rothschild on Boolara, Mr. Rees on Spinnet, Mr. Orr on Raffles, Mr. Holmes on Red Sea, Mr. Deakin, Major Templar, Mr. Campbell on Dynamite, Mr. Robertson on Solano, Mr. Dudley Myers on Sir Walters Mr. Alan Harvey on R. B. The next chase is fixed for to-morrow.

Polo.

POLO IN POONA.

ON Saturday of last week two more games were played in connection with the Alderson tournament in Poona, the first proving exciting. In one the Baluchis with plus 3 met the M. I. No. 2 with plus 4 and the former by scoring two to one drew level in the first chukker. In the third, however, the two to one went in favour of the M. I. who again took the lead only to have three hit against them in the fourth and lose by 9 goals to 7.

In the other the 26th Cavalry No. 1 had another easy time of it against the R. F. A. No. 1 to whom they were giving four. The Cavalry at once started pressing and in the first chukker hit three goals and hit a similar number in each of the next two. In the last the Artillery nearly scored, but being repulsed the Cavalry put in a tenth with R. F. A. still only the four they started with. No less than four games were played on Monday when three Cavalry teams won comfortably, but the Divisional Staff rather unluckily lost.

Firstly the 26th Cavalry No. 1, scratch, met the M. I. No. 1, plus 3, and held them more than safe all the way. They actually took the lead in the first chukker when they hit five. They hit three in the second when the M. I. had the satisfaction of scoring, though only once. Three and two followed so that the Cavalry came out with a margin of 13 goals to 4.

Secondly the Cavalry No. 3, minus 1, met the Baluchis, plus 3. In the first period the Cavalry put in four and were level. In the second the Baluchis hit two to one, but in the last two the Cavalry added three and one and ran out by 8 goals to 5.

Thirdly the Cavalry No. 2, scratch, and Lincolns, plus 2, met and whereas the latter could not score the former did so steadily throughout. After one in the first they put in three, two and three in the subsequent chukkers, consequently winning by 9 goals to 2.

Fourthly the Divisional Staff, scratch, and R. F. A. No. 2, plus 3, had a great fight of it. No score in the first chukker, the Staff hit two in the next when all looked well for them. In the third they got a set back, the Artillery scoring. The staff could only get through once and on the handicap lost by 4 goals to 3 after a good, fast game.

AGAIN on Wednesday a similar number of games were played, the three Cavalry teams again being engaged and again winning.

Their No. 2 team first met the M. I. No. 2, scratch, and plus 4, and had a very easy time of it. The M. I. began defending well, but the end of the chukker saw the 26th hit two goals. They added three in the second and four in the third. On opening the fourth the M. I. hit their only goal but the Cavalry, adding two more, won by 11 goals to 5.

In the next the No. 1 met the Miners, scratch, and plus 3, and they also had a pretty easy time of it. They drew up level by hitting three in the opening period and added two in the next. The third was blank but they put in two more in the fourth though the Miners had the satisfaction of one just on time. Final score : 8 goals to 4 in the Cavalry's favour.

No. 8 team met the R. F. A. No. 2 in the third which they won almost as safely though being minus 1 to plus 3.

Half the difference was made up in the last minute of the first chukker, and the Cavalry took the lead by hitting three in the second. There was no scoring in the third, but two more in the last left the 26th winners by 6 goals to 3. A very close game was the last, between the Sappers, minus 1, and R. F. A. No. 1, plus 4, though the former were one short. The Sappers opened brilliantly with three goals, and putting two more to their credit in the second were level. The third was fast and level, neither being able to score and excitement was great till the Sappers put in the deciding goal. Throughout the last chukker the Artillery looked like equalising again, Colonel Russell twice getting within a foot, but this being unproductive the Sappers ran out winners by 5 goals to 4.

Racing.

THE ENGLISH RACING SEASON.

THE many surprises which have been sprung upon the English racing world during the past season suggest a comparison between the old and the new order and tempt one to enquire whether they are due to indifferent judgment or not. Occasionally a choice thing in contrasts will strike you with such suddenness and force that you cry out in the language of the man whose head intercepted the downward flight of a half-brick : "I never expected that." Coming back from Derby after the Gold Cup it amused me, writes "Spearmint," to find in the same paper a list of the frightful outsiders who have won great races this year, and hard by, a comparison of present and past trainers, which ended in this oracular fashion : "The old order changeth, giving place to new. There is not much room now for the mere stablemen who used to train Derby winners and there will be less still presently. This is the era of the brainy amateur and of the young professional who has inherited his father's stablemanship and grafted on it the accomplishments of education and science ; and with this higher order of intelligence to prepare horses and estimate their chances, bad blunders should be of much less frequent occurrence in the future, to the advantage and profit of backers." It is our old freind Captain Kettle who says the "point of a remark lies in the application of it," or something to that effect, and this panegyric on the higher intelligence of modern trainers set me wondering how it would apply to the great races of this now moribund season.

"Blunders should be of much less frequent occurrence in the future." Ah, it is a consummation most devoutly to be wished, as Shakespeare says, and he was no dunce in racing matters, remember. Did not he forecast the result of the 1905 Derby by saying : "We must stand well with Cicero ?" But, regarding blunders, the results of the leading races this year—classic events as well as handicaps—are a fair example of what the higher order of intelligence can effect, we must leave our panegyrist to stew in his own optimism. No doubt the cussedness of things was to some extent accountable for the Signorinetta and Marcovil miracles and the many other upsets which filled to repletion the bookmakers' pockets. Fortune does sometimes declare war on favourites by sending us a week like that at Epsom when Jeddah won the Derby at 100 to 1, and scores of backers, amateur as well as professional "took the knock." But a whole season nearly devoted to outsiders in big races—and some of them such outsiders—is a vastly different thing from one disastrous week, and nobody who follows racing carefully can doubt that bad judgment played its part in bringing about a goodly number of these calamities for backers. One or two of the errors committed were first cousins to the classical blunder which inspired the bitter remark that "it was worse than a blunder—it was a crime."

Kaffir Chief struck the keynote to the season's surprises by his victory in the Lincolnshire Handicap, after having been abused and written down by every self-styled authority at Newmarket. They said he had lost his action, but what he really did lose was the opposition. After Kaffir Chief came Rubio in the Grand National. He was managed by one of the brainy amateurs, and in the opinion of the stable had no chance of beating even his home companion, Mattie Macgregor. The National, however, is sui generis ; things happen in it which are beyond all human foresight, and which exempt it from ordinary tests of cleverness and judment. On the other hand, the classic races afford a good test, and with regard to them a colossal blunder was made by somebody in backing Perrier for so much money for the Derby before his defeat and exposure in the Two Thousand. Was not some bad judgment also associated with Lesbia in the One Thousand ? A safer trainer to follow than Blackwell when he is out for blood could hardly be found, but this notwithstanding, Lesbia finished "down the course" to the outside Rhodora, whose chance was alleged by some authorities to have been blundered away by unorthodox methods of training.

Was not the Derby a vertiable mass of errors ? These related chiefly to what horses could do when unfit, but the greatest of them all probably lay in treating Llangwm as a sprinter and tying Maher down with waiting orders. Mr. Hall Walker declined to have Polar Star tried for the Manchester Cup, so instead of being the good public favourite he deserved to be, and would have been if only there had been a private rehearsal, he started at 100 to 6—and won with 14lbs. in hand. That was not clever, but Mr. Walker is both a law unto himself and a non-betting owner. Other dismal examples of the "unexpected" where there was some bungling could be quoted before reaching the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire, but they may be passed over as "inferior Dosset," as Perkyn Middlewick says, in comparison with the cases of Pure Gem and Cocksure II. Here we had the brainy aristocrat at fault equally with the veteran professional who had turned out the winners of the Eclipse Stakes, St. Leger, Liverpool and Stewards' Cups, and City and Suburban. Morton looked on Pure Gem as an unbeatable certainty—and he finished a bad second because he was lucky. Cocksure II. was proclaimed the best of his age, and backed for tons of money, but the terrible mistake was made of racing him against Dean Swift a fortnight before the Cambridgeshire, and the struggle being a severe one it temporarily robbed him of his speed, and he never showed in the Cambridgeshire with a thousand to one chance.

It seem to me that the more brainy amateurs and alleged young professional geniuses we get the more complicated becomes the game of racing. Certainly no improvement in the morals of the turf was so far signalised the edging out by aristocrats and fledglings of old training families of what our panegyrist of the higher order of intelligence calls the "mere stablemen" I suppose he would thus label William I'Anson, who bought two cripples and respectively won the Cesarewitch and Derby Cup with them. Any trainer can break down a horse, the skill lies in getting him sound again ; and how many are there, I wonder, who could have taken Mintagon—an animal considered not worth keeping by a past-master like Sam Darling—and fortified him against the real, old-fashioned, arduous Cesarewitch, preparation which enabled him to gallop right away from his rivals. William I'Anson thinks of removing to Newmarket if he can find a suitable place. A Yorkshireman bred and born, and and living all is life in the county, it would be a wrench for him to leave Malton, but really a trainer of his superlative ability is wasted in the north now that the leading owners insist on having their horses in the south. These many years have I known I'Anson, not as a racecourse acquaintance merely, but as a friend, and looking back over his record I should say he has about as small a faculty for blundering as any trainer alive. Given a stable of good horses at Newmarket he would shew the new school of kid-glove, patent-leather-shoe trainers something.

Whether the "swell" trainer is an unmixed blessing to the turf may be doubted. Suppose the case of a brainy aristocrat with a bit of the "crook" about him. He is licensed the same as the trainer of half a dozen platers for little money-grubbing owners, but mixing with his equals in the Jockey Club enclosure, and hob-nobbing with the governors of racing, is he likely to be treated with the same sternness as the trainer of platers for professional patrons with regard to in-and-out running ? I have seen terrible things done by amateurs. Not so very long ago the "management" of one well-known horse—in view, as it turned out, of the Cambridgeshire—excited much scandalous talk. A little man in such a case would probably have had his manipulative ingenuity severely sat on by the powers, but the amateur in question merely got a friendly hint to be careful.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

GORDONS vs. CUSTOMS.—This match was played on Thursday last, the Customs losing their first this season. The Highlanders batted first and put up 120, Taylor (40) and Fowke (32) being the chief contributors. The Customs were all out for 81, Hudson and L. H. Smith being the only couple to reach double figures. Sullivan took six wickets for 18 runs.

In the second innings the Gordons lost seven wickets for 80 runs and the Customs three for 27. Scores :—

CIVIL vs MILITARY.—This annual match was played in Eden Gardens on the 12th and 13th instant ending in a win for the Civilians by 65 runs. Lord Francis Scott and Fowke opened the military innings. Lord Scott's wicket falling with the score at 42. Thereafter the remainder with the exception of Fowke, made a poor show and when stumps where drawn on the first day, eight wickets were down for 161. Of this Fowke had scored 103 and was still unbeaten—a brilliant and faultless innings. The next day he was bowled by Stewart after adding 4 to his over night total. McKenzie and Twiss put on a few runs and the innings closed for 175. Calcutta then went in, Turnbull and Guise carrying the score to 51 before the former was bowled ; Guise followed him out shortly after ; and then Yeoman and Paine came together and scored fast. Paine left with the score at 116, and the the next four batsmen did little. Yeoman continued to score freely and with Quin as partner the military total was passed Quin made 21 and Yeoman was caught when two runs off three figures. A very creditable display though he was given one life. Banton was not out, 14, and the innings closed for 240. For the Civilians, Paine, Guise and Stewart got 3 wickets each for 29, 38 and 43 respectively ; while Fowke for the soldiers was most successful with the ball taking 4 wickets for 71 runs. Score :—

Hockey.

POONA DIVISIONAL TOURNAMENT.

THE concluding game of last week in the Divisional Hockey Tournament at Poona was that between the 64th Pioneers and 114th Mahrattas. On form it promised to be a good exhibition, and so it was though the Pioneers won by a decisive margin of 3 goals to nil.

On Wednesday the final was played before a crowd of enthusiastic on-lookers, and a very close affair it proved between the 64th Pioneers and 66th Punjabis. It was a ding-dong struggle throughout in which the Pioneers had slightly the better of exchanges and won by 2 goals to 1.

After a brief speech by General Alderson complimenting the players and remarking upon the increasing interest in the game in the Army, Mrs. Alderson presented the winners with the Cup given two years ago by General Richardson.

HOUND TALK.

In the middle ages, and even earlier, the hare was highly esteemed as a beast of chase, observes a London paper. In one of the first books on hunting, William Twety, Grand Huntsman to Edward II., describes the hare as the most marvellous beast which is on this earth, and he cherished the old belief that it had the power of changing its sex when being hunted. At the same time, poor "puss" could not compare with the hart for sport. Does not Turberville speak somewhat slightingly of her when he is telling of the fallow hounds, so much thought of in France? "Since princes in these days have mingled the races of fallow houndes one with another, therefore they have become much stronger and better for the hart, the whiche is the right chace to veeld pleasure unto kings and princes. But such houndes are not meete for meane gentlemen, because they are commonly but for one chace, and they parse not greatly for the hare and other small chace." Although Beckford respected hunting in whatever shape it appeared, he had to confess, with excuses to his brother hare-hunters, that he followed that diversion more for air and exercise than amusement. The hounds this fine old sportsman most favoured were a cross between the large, slow hunting harrier and what he called little fox-beagles. To the latter we probably owe our foot-beagle of the present day. In Beckford's time, where no pack hunted a country, the fox became a nuisance, and was run to earth by means of foot-beagles and terriers.

Nowadays we hunt the hare with harriers, beagles, and bassets, nearly 150 packs being kept in this country alone for that purpose. The Brockside Harriers, which hunt the country round Brighton, can probably claim precedence as regards age. A painting of a hare killed by this pack in 1771 is still in existence. The Badlesmeer private pack, hunted by the Rev. Courtney Morgan-Kirby, may be singled out for distinction, inasmuch as it is composed of Old Southern Hounds, which some people believe to have been the original hound stock of these islands. They were too slow, however, for modern requirements, and are nearly extinct. Judging from a photograph, they much resemble the sketch of a Southern Hound published in Youatt's book in 1861. In a very interesting description of them, Mr. Morgan-Kirby says: "My hounds are absolutely pure Old Southerns. The dogs are about 24 to 27 inches high, and the bitches about 23 inches. They have ears about 2 feet long, and are nearly all dark-blue mottled, with a few red mottled and lemon and hare pied. They have large flews and dewlaps, but crooked legs and not good feet. Also eyes showing the haw like bloodhounds, and wrinkled foreheads. Their music is simply beautiful, and sounds for miles like thunder rising and falling. With a good scent they can fairly race, but with a bad one they sit and roar on the line. In kennels they are very savage indeed, are always fighting, and occasionally eat one of their companions. From being so in-bred their nerves are like fiddlestrings, and when first cast off they go roaring away for half a mile, but once on the line one cannot stop them. They are very savage at a kill, and will pin you if you are not careful. I had great difficulty in getting them, mostly from the remnants of old packs in the Weald of Kent, and a few from the Stannington, Penistone, and Holmfirth and Honley."

It is a pleasure to know that the old breed still survives and is in such good hands. The hound shown in Youatt's picture, already mentioned, is not quite straight at the pasterns, but it is well to remember that French authorities believe in this formation of the leg rather than the orthodox plumb trueness of our own foxhounds.

Beagling is growing in popularity, and is undoubtedly a great sport for the man who cannot afford to ride to hounds. Quite a fair number of packs of bassets are also worked regularly in this country. They are grand little hounds, with fine noses and magnificent music. It is true they do not take kindly to rating, and they are not good at stiff fences, but, in spite of this, a pack will account for a good number of hares in the course of the season, while they have pace enough to satisfy the average man. We have known a basset hunt the clean boot with as much zest as bloodhounds, and be would hang on to the line all the way, coming home a considerable time after his larger companions. In the United States field trials with beagles, rabbits being the quarry, are a regular institution.

A writer in an American sporting paper advances the contention that foxhunting is of greater antiquity in Virginia than in this country. Unfortunately he gives no dates upon which to substantiate his case. Although the fox was hunted here as early as the Middle Ages, it was mainly with the object of getting rid of him as vermin. The period at which foxhunting came seriously to be regarded as a sport was about the year 1689, or slightly earlier, when the Charlton pack, in Sussex, was changed from the stag to the fox. One would like to know if Virginia can surpass this record.

The recent escape of three convicts from Dartmoor serves to emphasise the advisability of bloodhounds being used to trace the fugitives. The present system of effecting a capture is slow and costly, and must considerably upset prison routine. It has been said that a very large sum of money was expended before the two men who got away a few weeks ago were once more safely housed within the prison walls. The cost of a couple of trained bloodhounds would be insignificant, and there is no doubt that they would be far more efficacious than any human agency. It is difficult to see that any runaway could enjoy more than an hour or two of liberty at the outside. Probably he would be found within the hour. No sentimental reason can be brought against the employment of the hounds, as it is not their habit to touch a man when they catch him. The Prisons Commissioners have been approached on several occasions, but they are immovable. Would an appeal to the Home Secretary be more effectual? The Association of Bloodhound Breeders would willingly render any assistance in their power. One thing cannot be too strongly insisted upon. The hounds should be on the spot, so that they could be laid on immediately while the scent was hot. It would be no use telegraphing to the other end of the country, and giving the men time to cover up their tracks. Only the other week the American papers contained a remarkable testimony to the wonderful power of these hounds. A man was shot, and his assailant had got clear away without leaving any trace. A bloodhound, which was sent for, succeeded where the police had failed. He carried the trail over some five miles of rough country to a railway station, and a telegraphic message along the track resulted in the missing man being apprehended on board a train. Had it not been for the bloodhound, he might have got clear away.

As an express train was going through a station one of the passengers leaned too far out of the window, overbalanced and fell out. He fortunately landed on a sand heap, so that he did himself no great injury, but, with torn clothes and not a few bruises, said to a porter who was standing by, "What shall I do?" "You're all right, mister," said the porter; "your ticket allows you to break your journey."

THE LONDON COMEDY COMPANY

The London Comedy Company established itself in public favour on their first appearance in Calcutta and with every successive performance it has confirmed the opinion that Mr. Ward, Miss Palotta and their fellow artistes are the most versatile company that has visited us for many years. They have sent us away from their farcical comedies with our sides aching and have shown us that they are equally at home in drama, as evinced by their finished performance of "Young Mrs. Winthrop." The comedies "When Knights were Bold," "The Man from Mexico," "Mr. Hopkinson"—each one funnier than the last—provide Mr. Ward with big opportunities to delight his audiences with his mirth-provoking impersonations, but in "The New Clown," staged for the first time on Saturday night, "Hugh J." is immense. This three-act comedy by H M. Paul was one of Mr. J. Welch's great London successes; it certainly is one of the funniest pieces ever produced in Calcutta. Lord Cyril Garstin, believing he has committed a murder, joins a circus in order to escape capture, and his adventures as the new clown provide the uproarious merriment of the play. The supposed murdered man appears unexpectedly at the circus with certain others of Lord Garstin's friends, among whom is the lady of his heart, and all ends happily. Mr. Ward is "a jokative and a humorous"—as an Aryan friend of ours once put it—and as Lord Garstin he has special scope for his peculiar talents. The house rocked with laughter at his eccentricities. Miss Grace Palotta was delightful as Mary Platt, the "star" of Dixon's circus, dainty and bewitching we have not yet seen her to greater advantage in any other part. Several songs and dances were interpolated in the play and Miss Palotta sang with great charm while her dance with Mr. Ward brought down the house—it is one of the best things of the kind we ever remember to have seen. Of the other ladies Miss Celia Ghiloni appeared to advantage as Lady Chesterton; she was in splendid voice and her song "Sunshine Lane"—a number specially written for her—was much appreciated. The Misses Rose Musgrove and Ruby Baxter as Winnie and Maud Chesterton were most pleasing in small parts. Among the men Mr. Wernham S. Ryott was excellent as Captain the Hon. J. Trent, whose disappearance into the river as the result of a push from Garstin is the cause of the latter's misadventures. The parts of the circus proprietor and the real clown were admirably interpreted by Messrs. Wykeham and Eldred, and minor characters were capably by other members of the company. A notice would be incomplete without a special word of praise for the mounting, which is a big feature of Mr. Ward's performances. The setting of the second act being a triumph of stage craft.

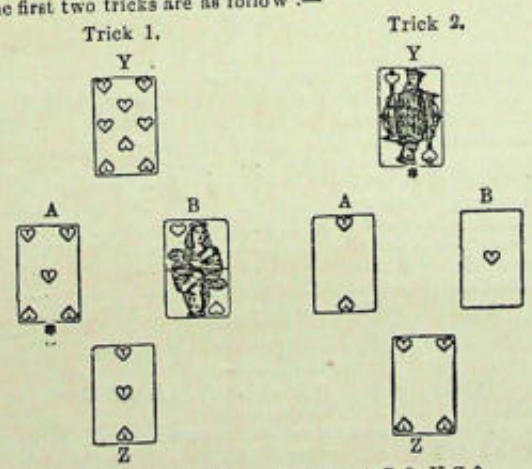
Solution to Problem No. 78.

SOLUTION.

Z cannot afford to go on with trumps with the whole suit of diamonds against him, and he must not infer from B's discard that the ace of hearts is with A. As A held four trumps to the knave originally, he probably led from strength in spades, and in that case Z can make two more tricks in the suit if he leads it from his own hand. At trick 4 Y's best lead is a small diamond. If the opponents go on with the suit, Z will ruff the third round, and lead a spade through A, finessing the 9 if a small one is played If the 9 of spades wins, Y can establish Z's queen by returning the knave. If, instead of going on with diamonds, the opponents lead anything else, they will be playing up to Y's hand or Z's.



Problem No. 79.

Score: A B 28, Y Z 20. Z deals, and declares clubs. Y's (dummy's) and B's (third player's) hands are as follow:—

Y's Hand (Dummy).—King, 8, hearts; ace, king knave, 10, 4, 2 diamonds; 9, 7, 6, 5 clubs; 3 spades.

B's Hand (third player).—Ace, queen, 6 hearts; no diamonds; 8, 4 clubs; ace, king, queen, 10, 9, 5, 4, 2 spades.

Tricks: A B 1, Y Z 0. Tricks: A B 2, Y Z 0.

How ought B to go on with the hand, and why?

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

London, Friday, 27th November 1908.

THE OLYMPIA SHOW.

All motorists of whatever degree endeavoured to find their way to Olympia during the past week. Both Mr. Asquith and Mr. A. J. Balfour made their annual pilgrimage to this Mecca of motorists early after the opening. As both are owners of Napier cars, Mr. S. F. Edge piloted them round the exhibition. It is, of course, impossible to state the exact number of persons that will have visited the exhibition when it closes this evening, but it will certainly reach a total of 150,000 individuals. The exhibition has been quite a fashionable rendezvous, and practically all society has visited it. The Ladies' Automobile Club day was a great success, and 21,716 visitors passed the turnstiles on that last day, Thursday; Wednesday, the preceding day, showed the greatest attendance since the opening, of 25,695 persons, but those figures may be beaten to-day.

When the historian records the impressions of the 1908 Olympia Motor Car Exhibition, the advent of the new Daimler engine, and the ready sale of all cars of about 15 h.-p. will be the two leading points that mark this exhibition in the history of motoring. Another event in connection with the show that deserves specially to be recorded is the resurrection of the two-cylinder Panhard car. Modernised and brought up-to-date in all its particulars, it carries the memories of old motorists back to the early days, when "Panhard" and "automobile" were practically synonymous words. The 1908 show will be a remembered as a successful selling year, for the public and the motor-trade agent have certainly placed more orders with the manufacturers than in the two previous exhibitions. High-powered cars have not been in such demand as those of moderate power, but the manufacturers have received welcome support from the general public for the latter. In many cases exhibitors were showing at Olympia because they did not dare stay out. They arrived with pessimistic ideas, but hoped for the best. During the early days of the show the dealers were surprised at the orders they received. The pessimist became an optimist, and never a grumble has been heard from any exhibitor. This augurs well for the coming year, as after the eight days' strain of the show the manufacturers are returning to their works full of orders, and buoyed with hope that the 1909 season will continue in the prosperous way it has started.

The gallery may roughly be divided into five sections for the purpose of the sightseer. Firstly, there is the tyre section, which forms a most important adjunct to the show, for where would the cars be if it were not for the tyres they run on?—quickly shaken into scrap iron, without a doubt. Then there is the accessories and parts section, in which are comprised the necessary lamps, speedometers, milometers, patent fittings, such as the Allen-Liversidge front wheel brake, patent gears, besides magnetos, lubricators and special electrical devices for the car. This section is almost as large as that of the tyres, and of equal variety. After this comes the oil and petrol merchants' division. These increase in their grades and character every year, so that there is now petrol that leaves no unpleasent smell in its combustion and oil that does not smoke through the exhaust. Another section is the clothing and leather factors and makers, in which may be included the upholstery specialists; and lastly come the machinery and tool makers' exhibits, which, in reality, are the foundation of the whole exhibition. For if it were not for the machine tools and appliances the manufacture of the modern motor-car would be an impossible commercial transaction.

Tyres are an important item. They more or less govern the cost of up-keep, and consequently we find tyre manufacturers too numerous to mention extolling the merits of their latest types. The Dunlop stand contains their 1909 models, and in going over the stand, I noticed a new flange-ring which is used with the detachable rim. The device is at once simpler and neater than the old method, and I believe the price is on the right side. The Continental Tyre Company also have a fine display of new models, an all rubber non-skid being an outstanding feature of their exhibits. The tyre is made of fine quality grey rubber, and has exceptional walls. This firm is also showing a new steel studded non-skid, and it is claimed for this type that the studs cannot be removed or ejected unless undue force is used. At other stands magnetos are throwing out their sparks with tiresome regularity. You may learn how best to overcome the art and difficulties of motor-car driving at motor schools; punctures are made to look silly by the Harvey Frost process. Practically this well-known firm holds the field in the art of vulcanization, and at the stand in the gallery you may discover the case and simplicity with which repairs are effected.

It is to appeal to a much wider public that the new 15 h.-p. Deasy car has been introduced. During the progress of the Show this car has been favourably received by critics and motorists generally. Number of orders have been received from casual visitor to the exhibition, who arrived there with the intention of buying a car, but had no preconceived notion of which. This, after all that may be said for or against any particular design, is high testimony. It was quite a feature of the exhibition to note the number of would-be buyers taking the various prices of the different cars, comparing them in regard to price, horse-power, and workmanship, and then seeing the car they finally decided on. In this the 15 h.-p. Deasy, the 20-30 h.-p. six-cylinder Siddeley, and the 15 h.-p. Napier all proved popular choices, according to the cash available to the purchasers. The British made Clement also found many friends; while of the Continental makers the 14-20 h.-p. Gladiator, the 12 h.-p. Martini, the 16 h.-p. Vinot, and the Lorraine Dietrich and Metallurgique small cars sold very well. In six-cylinder cars Rolls-Royce, Napiers, and the 30 h.-p. Pancia held their own; while the Fiat Company easily topped the Italian-made cars sales.

Moving from stand to stand taking notes of all the new chassis is rather interesting, as it at once shows the great strides which have been made by manufacturers in car construction. The Straker-Squire exhibit has been built after many tests and trials. The car stands as an epoch-making attempt to really supply a first-class article at very low cost; low initial cost, and assured minimum running cost, a car that is low in fuel consumption and exceptionally light on tyres. This result has only been obtained by an applied study of the needs of the moderate motorist as regards speed and the amount of money he desires to spend on the sport. The firm realised that a cheap car—a cheap and nasty foreign runabout—was pooh-poohed by the sane English motorist. The Straker-Squire is cheap—cheap as regards finish, material used, and real reliability. It is just the right horse-power, and has all the necessary merits to stamp it as an outstanding feature of the small cars at the show.

A very attractive and comforting stall was that of Drykitt, Limited, to the motor clothing specialists. There is a saying that the man who attempts to do many things never does anything well. In other words, people who undertake too much cannot possibly devote that time and trouble to perfecting themselves in one particular line. For this reason people now make use of the services of specialists when they require a thing well done, whether it be the repairing of the human body or the mending of a motor-car. It would be delusion to think that at "General Stores" people could find satisfaction as regards the making and fitting of motoring garments. Nothing requires more care and clever workmanship than the cutting and making of a motor coat. A lady or a man either looks smart or otherwise, according to the cut of the coat, and there are other considerations, such as the selection and suitability of the materials employed, the provision of ventilation and ease, all of which, combined, go to make the perfect garment.

"Drykitt's" long experience in this particular line can produce a perfect article. It is therefore wise economy to buy motoring garments from a firm who devote themselves to a close study of this particular branch of industry, and they claim to be in a position to satisfy their clients in every respect. The best proof of this is that they are daily adding to their number.

At the courts a case concerning motor-driving was being heard, when the chauffeur declared that when driving at forty miles an hour he could, if necessary, pull up in ten or twelve feet. "Um!" said the Judge. Then the next witness—an expert—gave his evidence. Said his Lordship: "If a motor-car were travelling at forty miles an hour and the brakes could be put on in such a manner as to stop it within ten or twelve feet, where would the driver go!" "Depends very much on the sort of life he'd been living," said the expert.

UNSYMMETRICAL ANIMALS.

By far the great majority of animals are symmetrical to a line passing through their longer diameter so as to divide them into two lateral halves. Moreover in the great majority of groups such symmetry is manifest and apparent at the first glance. There are, however, cases where the bilateral symmetry is not self-apparent, so that a certain amount of examination is necessary before it can be realised. A case in point is afforded by the star-fishes and sea-urchins, which look at first sight as if their symmetry was wholly of a five-rayed type. Close examination will, however, reveal the presence on the upper surface of a small boss or tubercle; and if a line be drawn through this and one of the rays of the star-fish (or the corresponding one of the sea-urchin), it will be found that the creature is really bilaterally symmetrical to this line.

In the corals and sea-anemones is it, however, difficult to discover any trace of bilateral symmetry, and it really seems as if these creatures were of a radiate type. Still even this cannot be considered absolutely certain; and it may be that traces of bliateral symmetry will be discovered even in these lowly animals. Sponges are absolutely unsymmetrical as regards the form of the whole structure.

Among the higher vertebrates the bilateral symmetry is almost universal; and this being so, it is not a little remarkable that in the matter of head-gear both sexes of the human species arrange the decorations unsymmetrically; and, what is more, that the unsymmetrical arrangement looks much better than would a symmetrical arrangement. In the case of most types of men's hats the want of symmetry is confined to the bow, which, except in the case of a bishop's or an archdeacon's head covering, is worn on one side. In the case of the wideawake or Tyrolese hat, the brim may be bent unsymmetrically, while when a plume is sported it is invariably worn on one side. The daring assymmetry of feminine head-gear is obvious to all; and to find symmetry in this respect we must go back to the bonnets of the early Victorian era.

Dispite the general prevalence of symmetry in the higher animals there are, however, certain very curious instances of assymmetry, for which it is frequently impossible to assign any adequate reason.

The most remarkable of these occur among dolpins, porpoises, bottle-nosed whales and sperm whales, in all of which the bones of the skull are more or less markedly unsymmetrical, the blow hole being never exactly in the middle line, and the want of symmetry in some of the component bones of the two sides of the skull being extraordinarily great. Of what advantage to the animal the lack of symmetry may be (if indeed it be an advantage) it is impossible to guess.

The assymmetry in the cetacean group is, however, not confined to the skull. That remarkable creature. the Narwhal, of the Arctic Ocean grows, as a rule, only one tusk—almost invariably the left one, Occasionally, indeed, it grows a pair, but even then the same want of symmetry is displayed, since the spiral of both is twisted in the same direction instead of one forming a right-handed and the other a left-handed screw, as in the horns of spiral horned antelopes, such as the Indian black buck. This departure from the normal rule of bilateral symmetry in the tusks of two tusked narwhals is at present altogether inexplicable.

Near akin to the want of conformity between the two sides of the skulls of dolphins and porpoises is the much greater development on one side than on the other of the bones forming the region of the ear in the skulls of certain species of owls; the want of symmetry being in some cases remarkably great. Here again we look in vain for any satisfactory explanation of this departure from the normal.

A giraffe skull with an unpaired horn on one side has been described from East Africa ; but it is quite probable that this may be only an individual peculiarity.

When we come to the well-known crossbills the want of symmetry in the upper and lower halves of the beak admits of a perfectly easy explanation, as their crossed tips facilitate the birds extracting the hard round seeds from beneath the overlapping scales of pine cones.

The unsymmetrical form of the beak in the marine birds known as skimmers (Rhynchops) is likewise obviously connected with the procuring of food. On the other hand, there is, we believe, a kind of sandpiper in which the beak is curved one side, but for what purpose we are quite unaware.

As abnormalities, instances of want of symmetry are by no means uncommon among vertebrates, but those detailed above are all we can recall as being of normal occurrence.

Passing on to the invertebrate groups, the most marked and widely spread prevalence of normal want of symmetry occurs among the mollusca, where all the whelks and snails, together with a large proportion of their near relations, are profoundly unsymmetrical, the central portion of their bodies forming a long spirally twisted cone, covered with a shell of the same shape Limpets and slugs furnish us with examples of perfect symmetry in molluscs of this group ; and it is easy to see how the spirally coiled forms have been evolved from these simple types. Probably the compact form produced by such a spiral shell, and its greater strength as compared with a long straight cone, are sufficient reasons for the development of the twisted type.

As a rule such twisted or coiled shells form a right-handed spiral ; left-handed spirals in most species occurring only as rare abnormalities, as in the case of the Indian chank shell. Among land snails there are, however, many instances where left-handed spirals are the normal form ; while in some cases such as the beautiful citron-bulimus of China left-handed spirals are as common as right-handed ones. Nothing whatever is known as to the reason of the prevalence of one type, and its replacement in certain instances by the other.

One remaining instance of want of symmetry in animals is taken from the crustacean class, where one of the great nipping claws is almost invariably much larger and more powerful than the other. The reason for this may be economy ; development being concentrated on one claw at the expense of the other, and thus saving waste of material.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Saturday's meeting was the last extra before the big days and a very big crowd, including Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Minto and Lady Eileen Elliot, the Lieutenant-Governor and Lady Baker were out to see the sport. The books are almost unanimous in stating that they had a very bad time of it and so many favourites got home that they must have had the worst of the encounter, but their time will come pretty soon and from to-day the racing should be of that open description which gladdens the hearts of the layers of odds. The Pony Hurdle Race began the day and for this Bandy Leg was made favourite on the theory that if a big 14-2 like he is is any good at all he must be able to win with 7st. 5lb. up. However, it was not to be, as though he led nearly all the way Solace was always lying handy and was able to defeat the Monsoon hero very comfortably at the end. She appeared to have the race at her mercy any time.

There was a big field of 15 in the Cornwallis Plate and at first Fizz was backed a lot for a win, Jackeroo and Mother Goose win and place. Then at the end a big rush came on Sugar Apple, who was standing at eights and he was quickly brought down to about 6 to 4. The stable thought it was a real good thing and had made no mistake either as the favourite pulled it off all right. It was a pretty near go, however, as though he won by a length the little horse was all out. Bantock from whom the winner was receiving 1st. 11lb. ran second and finished the stronger of the pair. The race was run uncommonly fast for this class of horse, 2mins. 38½secs. and the pace was much too strong for Jackeroo, who could not go with them at all, till towards the end when he came up into fifth place.

The Wellesley Plate was the event of the day which excited most interest, as seven Cup horses were engaged. It was a most peculiarly run race, for all the horses were waiting on one an other and at the end Retort with the best turn of speed was able to come out and win easily in the ridiculously slow time of 2mins. 13secs. Then on weighing in Murdison, who rode Retort, could not draw the weight by a small margin and was disqualified, the race going to Misty Morn. It was afterwards found that the weight cloth was rotten and one of the leads had slipped out, a piece of bad luck indeed for Mr. Holmes. Misty Morn, who ran second, did not go at all as his backers for the Cup would like to see, and though it is said that he always goes a bit stiff till warmed, he seemed to us to move none too well throughout. Fitzgrafton ran a game horse in the race but looked hopelessly broken down as he walked out of the unsaddling enclosure. Stirabout has come on a good deal again and led the field easily for the first 6 furlongs.

The Fort Plate was very pretty to watch. Chivalry was thought a good thing with Killua the danger, but when they jumped out of the machine it was Tangaroa, who was up with the favourite, Saloon, in attendance. Tangaroa stayed with Chivalry on the inside, less than half a length behind, till they came into the straight when the leader drew clear and was challenged by Saloon. It was a grand race all the way home and Chivalry just managed to pull it off by a head. Killua made no show till just at the finish when he came up fast on the outside into fourth place.

The Canning Plate—divided handicap I.—was a gift for Sacricomar, and his stable companion, The Rooster, was thought the next best. Each in turn was favourite and their connections are said to have backed the pair well for win and place and had the pleasure of getting first and third respectively. Melbourne, who ran very well for about 4 furlongs in the Maiden Horse Plate, finished second, though on a bit worse terms with The Rooster than when the latter finished in front of him last week. The Stewards thought this required explanation and called up Killorn and cautioned him.

Tana was a hot favourite for the second half of the Canning Plate and won it very easily with the race in hand all the way from the 3-furlong post. Captain Carrington, the second horse, has never done anything beyond winning two third class 6 furlong races in Lucknow last month, but seems to be improving.

The Charnock Plate for ponies was expected to be a very easy thing for Evening Herald again, but a difference of 7lbs. proved sufficient to wipe out the 2½ lengths by which she beat Bonita II. at the third meeting and bring the verdict the other way. It was a grand struggle between the two ponies. They were at one another all the way down the straight and Murdison, riding a very determined finish, just managed to get Bonita's head in front at the end. Honest old Wal ran into third place.

A few hours after this paper goes to press the result of the Trials will be known and an end put to our weeks of uncertainty. Sham Fight has steadily settled down into the position of firm favourite and at the time of writing these lines is quoted at 5 to 2 in the betting. We hear a rumour that Barrett the first jockey for the stable is going to ride The Bedouin, and Rickaby Sham Fight. In any case our idea is that Tangaroa will require all the beating they can give him. A horse that can live with Chivalry out of the gate for 3 furlongs, as did Mr. Galstaun's waler last week, and is also a stayer as he has proved himself is no mean opponent. Wandin, Retort, and The Bedouin are all pretty well up in the betting, then comes Saloon, who stands at 12 to 1 and 3 to 1 a place—a very good price considering how well he ran on Saturday in the 5 furlong race. Jack Scott seems to have patched up the little horse most successfully, but whether he will still be able to stay a mile in the company he has to meet to-day is doubtful ; it is a very different crowd from those that ran behind him two years ago and Saloon can hardly be as good now as he was in those days. The Bedouin is pretty certain to run well, but this is his first race in India and it is a leap in the dark to back him. Our idea is that Tangaroa will win, The Bedouin and Saloon to be placed.

For the Viceroy's Cup on Saturday a great change has come over the spirit of the market. After the Wellesley Plate on Saturday, a mad rush brought Retort into the position of favourite, then early Monday morning they "came" for Kaffirpan and installed him in the premier position. This horse is reported to have done a round the course gallop in 3mins. 8secs. on Tuesday morning. Meanwhile Fitzgrafton has been anxiously watched. He looked hopelessly broken down when he walked out of the unsaddling enclosure on Saturday, but seemed to be sound when he went home. On Sunday, however, he was reported dead lame and did not appear on the course on Monday morning. On Tuesday and Wednesday, however, he was out, and, though he seemed to be sore as he walked on to the course, he went twice round at a nice canter and came off again walking as well as he has ever done ! It is said that they are going to try to patch him up somehow for the big race, but the question is will such expedients serve to enable him to last 1¾ miles at Cup pace. In the meantime, the Books are taking no liberties with him and his price has fluctuated between fours and fives. Ill-fortune is still dogging Mr. Apcar's stable as the death of Ballark has been followed by the breakdown of Mallard, due, it is said, to the horse putting his foot in a hole and Fitzgrafton will go out without pacemakers. The Bedouin has been pretty well backed for the Cup. Some big wagers have been taken about Wandin and a little bit of money has gone on Galloping Girl II. at long odds. The Bedouin is looking very well and the gallop in the Trials will no doubt bring him on—if he can only stay the distance : we like him as well as anything, taking it for granted that Fitzgrafton will not run as good a horse as last year.

There were only three schools done over the hurdles on Tuesday afternoon. Pneumatic (Alford) and Stockman (Native) went round the course both jumping well. Stockman was moving in first-class style and Alford could not keep his mount up with him at all. Queen of Gems (Alford) schooled by herself in better form than before but made a couple of bad mistakes. Gerard (Alford) also did a solitary ; he was very refractory coming on to the course and tried to get out of the first hurdle, but once he learnt that the man on top was his master he went the rest of the way really well and is certain to make a jumper.

Appended is the latest betting on the Cup and Trials :—

Mr. Ernest Day has brought out a very likely lot of English two-year-olds for sale on account of Lord Westbury and Mr. Farquharson. They are standing at Smallman's stables in Ballygunge and anyone who wants to see them ought to go out soon as purchasers are already nibbling and the youngsters are not likely to remain long unsold. They are just half-a-dozen all told and have all landed in excellent condition. Edgar Stuart (4yrs.), Barna (2yrs.), and Sofka (3yrs.)—in fact all are likely winners.

Mr. T. G. Evers, the well-known local G. R., left for Home by the last mail : he will be missed in racing and paperchasing circles this cold weather.

"Spearmint" writing in a London paper, is severe on the riding of the English jockeys during the flat racing season just concluded. "No doubt, he observes, "1908 will in turf story be known as the Season of Surprises. With equal justice it might also be known as the Season of Rank Bad Jockeyship. Our horses are supposed to be bad. Very likely. But they are not so bad as some of our jockeys.

"The plea was advanced for a certain bad actor that he should not be sacked because he was good to his mother, and I have heard it said of indifferent jockeys that they were employed because they were honest. If indifference in saddle artistry involves honesty, many of the jockeys of to-day should be marvels of integrity. 'He pull a horse,' scornfully remarked a disgusted backer of a jockey who lost a race through sheer inability to allow his mount to do its best. 'Oh, dear no! Don't run away with that idea. He might pull a handcart, that's what he's fit for. But as for pulling a horse—why, it takes him all his time to keep in his saddle!' This, of course, was an extreme case.

"Viewed in its true light, the fact that Maher—unwilling to go to scale at anything under 8st. 4lb.—occupies the position he does this season in the winning jockey list is a scathing commentary on English riding. It may be advanced, of course, that Maher has been so long among us that he is 'English, quite English, you know.' That is nonsense and could only soothe the vanity of a muddlehead. Maher came here a recognised American rider, and his riding is still and always has been American. He has learnt nothing since he arrived, and could learn nothing, for our school had nothing to teach him. And it is not as if it were only Maher, as before him were Sloan, Lester Reiff and John Reiff. When Sloan and the Reiffs were in their prime there was such a wailing and gnashing of teeth among the home riders as reminded one of the lamentations of the widows of Ashur. Idols were, indeed, broken in the temple of Baal. I turn to the records of 1900, and I find this thing—that Sloan (26·45), Lester Reiff (25.85), Maher (21.09), and J. Reiff (20.52) headed the list of percentages—all Americans.

"I am prepared for the argument that owners 'ran after' the jockeys named, and allow its accuracy. But why did they run? Because of their superior jockeyship, or, at any rate, their better ability to win races. They certainly did not run after them for their cheapness. The English school was assuredly not being ruined by American cheap jockey labour. One owner at the time protested to me against the demands made by the Americans. I failed to recognise the force of his complaint, pointing out that there was no Jockey Club law compelling employment of the imported school. 'No; but I want to win races, don't I?' A bitterer comment on English contemporary riding would he difficult to pen. Owners speedily recognised that without American jockey assistance—the assistance, that is of [illegible] of the four Americans I have named—their horses [illegible] handicapped. Bluntly, in 1900 there seemed [illegible] one jockey who could hold his own with [illegible] invaders, and that was Sam Loates. Well, 'Sam' always had brains, and always could [illegible]de. As he once told me, 'I was not going to be beaten by them if I could help it. I found their style beating mine, and I soon studied their ways.' It was Loates, by the by, who rubbed a beating into Sloan, with almost Voltairean vitriol. 'You're always beating me,' said Sloan, after he had been short-headed by Loates. 'Oh,' said 'Sam,' beamingly, 'that's easy.' 'It was not,' said Loates, smilingly, in relating the anecdote to me at Beverley House, the stables of which place, I am glad to hear, are now occupied by Mr. Byrne's horses.

"The lady informed the French judge that there were degrees of virtue. Equally there are degrees in American jockeyship. I am not contending that the poorest American jockey will beat the English best. In bulk, however, the American specimens we have seen have been above our average, and it is not exactly a flattering thing to recall that the Derby winners of 1901, 1902, 1903, 1905, and 1906 were ridden by Americans.

"The point is that the general jockeyship of to-day is not up to the proper standard. The majority of it gives no evidence of brains or knowledge. By brains I do not mean low cunning, and by knowledge I mean knowledge of pace, and not knowledge of what other jockeys are doing to be imparted to betting confederates on a future occasion.

"As for the rising generation, that is altogether a sad affair. There is certainly a little bright blood, but really the merest trickle. In recent years I have seen too many embryo Archers and Fordhams to grow enthusiastic, the mischief of the matter being that they so frequently remain embryo. They remind me of the 'Derby winners' that are discovered in the spring of each season. I wish the youngsters well. They must, however, 'prove their steel' before they are raised to pedestals their merits do not yet demand."

At the International Horse Show at Buenos Ayres (Argentina) the broad jump was won on Saturday, the 28th ultimo, by Lieutenant Montefiore, Great Britain, whose horse, covering 27ft. 11ins., broke the world's record. Lieutenant Brooks, Great Britain, was fifth; Major Beresford was second in the steeplechase and Lieutenant Brooks sixth.

The statistics of English racing during the past season are out. We append brief details.

His Majesty heads the list of successful owners by right of sovereignty with £5,490, and a multi-millionaire subject the aggregates with £26,246 by grace of Your Majesty, a son of the King's first Derby winner Per-immon, now unfortunatly dead. A sequence of lean years for the "purple and gold" has followed the opulent one of 1900, when Diamond Jubilee alone won £27,985 Fortune freakishly gave the best of Persimmon's children to other owners, leaving Nulli Secundus, Perrier and such-like disappointing animals to run for the King, which explains his lack of success; and though nearly double as much was won this year as compared with 1907, £5,490 is still a small total in such a connection. Forfeits alone would absorb the bulk of it, if not the whole.

Mr. J. B. Joel moves up from second place last year to first, while Mr. Hall Walker drops from first to seventh place. Both depend exclusively on animals of their own breeding. This has been Mr. Joel's most successful year; everything came off for him except Pure Jem in the Cesarewitch, whom he backed to win £60,000, and Your Majesty in the Derby, who was prevented from running and probably winning, by a mishap some days before.

Signorinetta won the Derby and Oaks. She had never distinguished herself before nor has she since; and the season of 1908 will be known as that of the Ginistrelli miracle. The amiable chevalier jumps from a total of £201 last year to £11,400 this, and Mr. Ludwig Newmann is equally indebted to Siberia for the difference between £355 and £13,754. Lord Durham's figures also disclose a striking contrast, but his good fortune was mostly of a vicarious kind. He temporarily, for reasons of mourning, raced some of the late Lord Derby's horses on lease. Lord Carnarvon, the brothers Barclay and Reid Walker, Mr. Stedall, Mr. W. Raphael and Lady de Bathe all improved largely on their 1907 totals. Her ladyship won £12,000 in bets over Yentoi in the Cesarewitch, and altogether she may be said to have passed from the ridiculous to the sublime, as last year her stake winnings were only £330.

The following table shows who were the most successful owners and the horses which won most money:—

Henry Isaac Barnato (the late "Barney's" brother) died in London on the 30th ultimo of heart trouble. He was well known on the English turf; the best horse he ever owned was Sir Geoffrey, winner of the Lincolnshire Handicap in 1900. With his nephews, the two Joels, Mr. Barnato carried on the great business of Barnato Brothers after the death of his brother "Barney." But although head of the firm, he had been for some years little more than a sleeping partner. Unlike his restless and volatile brother, this South African millionaire was a silent and reserved man, cautious and reticent, whose great wealth seems to have come to him almost as a disturbing surprise. His original surname was Isaacs, to which, like his brother, he added the name Barnato when they went out to South Africa. Among the Transvaal diggers the two travelled with a popular entertainment, Harry Barnato's share being sleight of hand tricks.

A London sporting paper which voices the opinions of the antiquated section of turfites who refuse to be reconciled to the starting gate weighs in with its annual list of "Official victims" which were left at the post, whipped round or otherwise failed to get a fair start from the machines. The total is 375.

A London correspondent writes:—This mild weather has broken the ordered rest of the Tortoise House at the Zoo. Nowhere, as a rule, are the laws of the natural history book more patiently observed. Not later than October the Giant Tortoises retire yawning to their couches. Not until spring has warmed and aired the world does the Giant Tortoise wake up and come down to breakfast.

A well-spent life which began somewhere about the later years of Queen Anne has made the second of the Giant Tortoises a beast of regular habits. Imagine, therefore, the sensation at Regent's Park, when week-end visitors saw him dash from his bedroom and career upon the sanded floor at the rate of some two inches an hour, before lunching heartily upon cabbage leaves.

Fortunately the oldest Giant Tortoise, whose recollections of the age of Charles II. are much valued in the Gardens, is still asleep. A dream of premature spring all but persuaded him to rise and join the gambols of his young friend. But his flappers are now still, and cabbage does not tempt him to irregular meals. The French proverb, 'He who sleeps dines,' is a commonplace in the Tortoise House.

Other news from Regent's Park includes the death of Barbara's baby. Barbara, the Polar bear, is painfully modern in her rejection of maternal duties. She had abandoned her babe on the cold flags of her exercise yard, whence the keeper rescued it. In spite of a foster-mother's care, the infant died, as all Polar bear cubs die at Regent's Park. One of the two young walruses, just landed from Arctic seas, was found drowned in his tank on the 30th ultimo. Some idiotic arrangement of stretched canvas was responsible. This had been put down at a depth of 3 feet as the Zoo people feared the tank might be too deep for the walruses !! The poor brute had got under this canvas and was found dead.

The average man in the street would have suggested a shallower tank—of which there are a few suitable—but the idea seems to have been beyond the Zoo people. It is forty years since the London Zoo exhibited a walrus ; it would almost appear as if the practical naturalist who arranges for the killing of rare specimens belongs to the Museum School of Zoologists!

English Society received somewhat of a surprise early this month when it was announced that the famous sportsman, Lord Walsingham, had married Miss Marion Gwytherne-Williams. It was a quiet wedding in the Isle of Wight and very few people were in the secret. Lord Walsingham, who is in his sixty-sixth year, shares with Earl de Grey the distinction of being the finest shot in England. His bag of 1,070 grouse, which he accounted for after shooting single-handed for fifteen hours, holds the world's record, while on another occasion with 1,100 cartridges he dropped 842 birds.

He is, too, probably the only man in the world who can shoot wasps on the wing. The weapon which he uses for this shooting is a miniature rifle specially constructed for him.

His collection of lepidoptera, the largest in the world, can be seen at the Natural History Museum at South Kensington. His lordship conveyed it to the nation by deed of gift in 1901.

Lord Walsingham, who has travelled widely, is the owner of an estate of nearly 20,000 acres, and reintroduced the great bustard into England. The Norfolk fens, which border on his estate, are the haunt of the bird, and he has proved that tobacco can be successfully grown and prepared for use in England.

A boxing tournament will be held at Lucknow from 30th January to 3rd February 1909.

The dates for the All-India Hockey Tournament have now been definitely fixed and the competition will be at Allahabad from the 25th February to 6th March.

The Connell Cup Polo Tournament was concluded at Allahabad on the 18th instant, when the 68th Durham Light Infantry beat the 4th Cavalry subalterns by six goals to two.

The Madras Gymkhana Horse Show will be held on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd January instead of the 4th, 5th and 6th February as previously announced.

Reuter wires that in another Marathon Race at New York last week Dorando was beaten by the Canadian runner Longboat, the Italian collapsing at the 26th mile. Doubtless he hade not quite recovered from his tough struggle with Hayes.

Away with the old-fashioned methods of training !
People who stick to such notion as these
Don't know enough to come in when it's raining.
Up-to-date chaps eat and drink what they please.
Whisky-and-seltzer will help you in running ;
A tankard of stout is the thing for one's wind.
Fill up on claret, boys, if you are cunning—
So shall you leave your opponents behind.

Get out the cork-screw, and pass round the sparkling ;
" Bumpers " like these are not " boring," I trow ;
Shame on the traitor who looks at us darkling ;
Never a Beaune of contention we'll know.
Talk about abstinence, nothing but fudge is
In future we'll train on the juice of the grape ;
And winners will gurgle, on hearing the judges :
" Whish or theshe three ish er jolly ole tape ! "

We publish to-day a report of the matches for the World's Lawn Tennis Championship decided at Melbourne at the end of last month, and won by Australasia.

The bogus athlete one meets everywhere—at home, travelling in the big towns in the mofussil, in office and out of it. He may be spotted in a moment, for he brags. The real sportsman never does that, because in the enjoyment of his particular recreation he is bound to have met many men who are infinitely more expert than he is, however smart he may be. If he is indeed a champion in his own line, then he is too strong a man to boast. The trouble with the bogus athlete is that he won't hold his tongue. If his appearance annoyed you, you could look at something else ; but you can't close up your ears, at least, not conveniently. If he is a stranger, you must, of course, tolerate him till the first opportunity occurs of getting out of earshot ; but if he is in the same place of business, or chummery as yourself you will be compelled, sooner or later, to show him up, and sooner the better. That way alone lies peace. Supposing he brags about physical culture and cold baths and dumb-bells your best plan is to challenge him to the performance of some simple feat in his own line, such as lying flat on his back and then sitting up without bending his knees. Ten to one he can't do it. These experiments are safe, because you can be all but certain that he is no good at what he brags about ; if he could do things he wouldn't boast.

We reproduce in our Shooting column to-day an article on the Lyon Lethal Bullet, which appears in the number of the English Field to hand by last mail. This is interesting reading after our recent article on the same subject and the letter of criticism from a correspondent which followed it.

It is once more our pleasant duty to acknowledge the receipt of numerous almanacs and other seasonable gifts from our business friends. The Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society, Limited, send us a handsome wall calendar for 1909, the Commercial Union Assurance Company, Limited, and the Alliance Assurance Company, Limited, the Sanitarium Bath and Treatment Rooms have also weighed in with useful almances. The Standard Life Assurance Company's neat and useful calendar is always a welcome addition to our desk. Messrs. Thacker, Spink's greeting this year takes the form of a calendar surmounted by an amusing sketch in the style of E. T. Reed's " Readymade Coats of Arms " which were a feature of Punch some years ago. The drawing is a suggested design for the city arms.

The Ladies' Amateur Golf Championship open to all lady golfers in India will be held over the Tollygunge links, Calcutta, on the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th January.

The Polo Pony Parade in connection with the Connell Cup Polo Tournament at Allahabad was held on the 13th instant at the 4th Cavalry Mess. Entries, though not so large as last year, included many good ponies, the property of the 4th Cavalry, 57th Middlesex Regiment, 60th Rifles, 68th Durham Light Infantry, 48th Pioneers, and the Allahabad Gymkhana.

Colonel J. G. Turner and Mr. Justice Richards judged the Arabs and Country-breds and General J. L. Keir and Major Gordon the English and Colonial Class. Both classes were won by the 60th Rifles. Captain Harker's g a g Impudence winning the cup presented by Mr. F. Atkinson for the best Arab or C.-B., and Captain Heseltine's g.w.g. Roseleaf carrying off the cup presented by the officers of the Allahabad Squadron U. P. Light Horse for the best English or Colonial pony.

The Calcutta Kennel Club Show will be held on the 29th and 30th January next, Messrs. C. N. Atkinson and Lewis Medley having undertaken the Secretaryship.

The schedules are being printed and will soon be ready. Applications should be made to the above at 302-1, Upper Circular Road—or Post Box 36.

It has proved impossible for the judging of classes, awarding of specials, and distribution of prizes to be all got through in one day satisfactorily, and so the Committee, after careful consideration, have decided to hold a two days' Show.

On the first day dogs must be at the Show by 9-0 A.M. and remain until 7-30 P.M. and those that are removed the first evening must be brought back the second day before 2 P.M. and remain until 8-0 P.M. when the Show closes.

All dogs will be watered and fed by the Club free of charge. Arrangements, not yet completed, are being made for safe benching and covering on a scale not hitherto attempted.

The well-known English judge, Mr. Hood Wright, has expressed his willingness to undertake the journey from Ceylon, and if the dog owning public support the Club venture sufficiently well, his services will be requisitioned. Several other first class judges will be invited to assist in making the awards.

Dr. J. H. B. Martin, who has invariably given such satisfaction with his awards, is willing to again adjudicate, but advises a change of judges as they are available.

However he will be at hand in case of need and is helping the present venture considerably with his valuable assistance and experience.

The judging of the classes will be done the first day and the special prizes will be awarded the second day.

The classes to be offered number over 130. Exhibits may be interested to know this greatly overshadows other shows in India.

A numerous and valuble collection of special prizes is being presented. It may be mentioned that only members of the Calcutta Kennel Club are eligible to compete for these.

Every effort is being made to provide a good exhibition for dog owners, and it is hoped that they will respond by entering their own animals and inducing others to do likewise.

Many dogs have been imported this year, and new fanciers are springing up daily, these should join the Calcutta Kennel Club and so support the executive in their endeavours to run a decent Dog Show. The entrance fee is Rs. 5, and the annual subscription Rs. 10. Other particulars of the club may be had of the Honorary Secretary, Mr. E. A. Lyon, 252, Lower Circular Road, Calcutta.

Messrs. Witherby and Co. announced that the first number of "Travel and Exploration," a new illustrated shilling monthly devoted to travel in all its aspects, will shortly be ready. Among other contributors to the number Sir Clements Markham will urge the importance of encouraging the exploring spirit, with personal reminiscences ; Captain A. Trolle, of the Danish Royal Navy, on whom devolved the command of the recent Danish National Expedition to Greenland after the death of its leader, will tell the story of the Expedition ; Miss M. Edith Durham writing from Albania, will discuss the Balkans as a field for travel ; and Mr. Eric Stuart Bruce, Member of the Council of the Aeronautical Society, will trace the development of dirigible ballooning.

Probably it would surprise a good many people to learn that there is a growing demand for venom in medicine and other branches of science. The supply comes from Australia, and a recent Sydney quotation placed the market price at 20s. to 25s. per grain, or about 30,000dols. per lb. troy, an attempt seeming to have been made hitherto to distinguish between the poison of snakes whose bite is usually fatal and that from reptiles that seldom kill. Dr. Tidswell, of the New South Wales Health Department, states that the venoms are now being classified. Laboratory experiments place the tiger snake venom first, as it is 16 times as deadly as that of the black snake and four times as powerful as that from the brown snake or the death adder. In average yield at a bite the death adder supplies three times as much as the tiger snake, and 17 times as much as the brown snake. So far the snakes have been mostly captured by hand, to avoid loss of poison, and, at even greater risk, have been held in the hand while being enraged and made to bite through a rubber band, ejecting upon a glass plate the venom from the two poison fangs in the upper jaw. Each snake has supplied the material from one bite, averaging about a grain.

An interesting incident demonstrating the hardiness of birds of paradise occurred recently. Last September Mr. Walter Goodfellow, the well-known naturalist, brought to England from New Guinea a number of birds of paradise, and these were placed in Mr. Johnston's aviaries at Burrswood. A few days later one of the birds escaped and was given up for lost. On 19th November, however, it was picked up alive at Langton, some two miles away from Burrswood, having flown against the vicarage window and become partially stunned. The bird quickly revived, and after being fed was restored to the Burrswood aviaries in perfect health. What makes the matter so extraordinary is the fact that the bird, which has always been supposed to be a tropical bird which would quickly die in a low temperature, had been living for two months in a wild state in our climate, when the temperature went down as low as 17 degrees and it was occasionally very wet and cold. The bird seemed in fair condition, and must have fed on the wild berries of the hedges and any insects that it could find.

It is proposed to bring off the annual Murray Football Tournament during the cold weather, and the semi-finals and final will, it is expected, be played in Lucknow about the second week in March next. The Rev. R. M. Kirwan, Garrison Chaplain, Lucknow, has kindly undertaken the duties of Honorary Secretary. Last year the entries for this tournament were twenty-two, constituting a record for any tournament in the country. Certainly it is the most popular tournament in the East. This year there is every reason to believe the number of regiments entering teams will prove a further record. Entries for the tournament may be sent to Murray and Co., Ld., Lucknow.

The cricket fixtures during Xmas Week in Calcutta promise to be very interesting. The Bombay team begins its engagements to-day with their three days' match against Calcutta. They will meet the United Services on the 27th, 28th and 29th instant, and Ballygunge on the 31st December and New Year's Day. The United Services, who will have a good team this year, play Ballygunge on the 27th and following days, and Calcutta on the 31st December and 1st January. The Ballygunge C. C. in addition to the above matches will play the Bharatpur State team to-day and to-morrow and the Nattore team on the 2nd and 3rd proximo.

The tour and speed trials of the South India Motor Union proposed for the Christmas holidays will not take place owing to insufficient support.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—The Alderson Polo Tournament at Poona continued with its long series of games on Monday when only one was played. This was between the 26th Cavalry No. 2, scratch, and the Miners, plus 3. It was quite a well contested game in which the Cavalry only showed marked superiority in the third chukker in which they scored three times. In the others they scored once each and so ran out by six goals to three.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—The Bombay Gymkhana Cricket team that has been selected to visit you is not a strong one, and has furthermore been weakened by the inability of Commander Vines and Ainsworth to make the trip. It has been practically decided to send Messrs. K. E. Cooper, A. S. Stowe, A. Wright, E. Marsden, A. C. Miller, A. M. Tillard, F. S. Farquharson, S. N. Powell, E. C. Reed, S. C. Phillips, V. R. Marston, and C. G Stileman. Judging by what we hear of your batsmen, the above team will have to put up with a good deal of leather hunting.

A novel and undoubtedly interesting game of billiards was seen on Monday at Pyrke's Saloon when Mr. Fred Weiss conceded Mr. Avery 400 in 600 on the Arc-Oval table. The latter had had some practice on the table, but was frequently at a loss with the angles, though he three times got into double figures. When it is said that Mr. Weiss averaged 27 one can realise he scored consistently and won easily. But that is unimportant, interest naturally centreing on the professional's play. He made a speciality of the game on its introduction, and his mastery over the balls and knowledge of the angles seemed almost as perfect as on the table to which we are accustomed. Several of the well-known "half ball" shots still hold good on it, the one, for instance, from the middle pockets off the red on spot to the end ones. Weiss' best break was 84, and whilst compiling it he went several times in off red into the top pocket from one to the other. The curve is such that the red does not travel down the sides but rebounds towards the centre of the table. Whether the balls ran in that way or whether the Arc-Oval table is conducive to it, he scored more from potting than anything. One of the prettiest shots, and yet a simple one when known, is the all-round cannon, the travelling ball hugging the cushion unless it meets a pocket jaw.

The final score was 600—494, the professional's breaks being 15, 61, 35 and 84, 35, 37, 14, 37 and 15 in succession, 36 and 34 before he ran out with a sequence of 36, 52 and 43 unfinished.

A second game on the same table was on Thursday, when Weiss' attempt to give Mr. Johnson 400 in 600 was ineffective. The latter, as an exponent of the ordinary game, is well known to be quite a top notcher and showed himself quite an adept at the new idea. He was naturally inferior in position playing and at some of the shots peculiar to the table, but his general play was even more accurate than the professional's, and assisted by efforts of 28, 23, 21, 19 and 17 he completed his 200 points with the professional only at 391. Weiss did not play nearly as well as on the previous occasion, though he made useful breaks of 82, 64, 49, 45, 29 and 24.

On Wednesday the two met at the orthodox table, Weiss conceding 600 in 1,000, at the Yacht Club. It was a great game, and the professional only won by a single point, running out with 69 when Johnson had failed with only one to get.

A Challenge issued by Mr. Weiss to give 1,200 in 2,000 for a side bet has been taken up by a Mr. Powala, who beat Stevenson on one of the latter's off days. It is to be for Rs. 300 a side and should take place shortly.

It is rather amusing to hear of some "amateurs" asking what they may expect of the gate!

Mr. Weiss will probably arrive in Calcutta during the first week of January.

On the 16th instant a representative gathering of Bombay dog owners and breeders met at the rooms of the Western India Motor Union to inaugurate a Kennel Association for Western India. Hitherto dog owners in the Bombay Presidency have had no status and prizes won at the annual Bombay Dog Show did not count towards championship. The promoters of the new scheme have met with enthusiastic support and it is expected that the club will do much towards improving the various canine breeds. It is proposed to obtain affiliation with the N.I.K.A. and to hold two dog shows annually at Bombay and at Poona. The Hon. Hill Trevor was elected President of the Association, and Mr. Douglas Bennett Vice-President. Mr. R. Stone of the Ordnance Kennels, Colaba, has undertaken the duties of Secretary and a Committee has been formed to draw up rules and regulations.

The Second Extra on Saturday provided quite good racing and fair fields; results, however, once more going in favour of the books; contrary to the usual during the early meetings. Some rather extraordinary reversals of form occurred to open our eyes and the day was not without incident. After examining the books the Stewards permanently disqualified Kamad for his riding of Hullo in the Selling Plate and Golam Ali, the trainer of Good Morning.

Taylor has been suspended for the next day's racing, i.e., on the 2nd proximo, for crossing with Dhafer in the Arab Trial Plate.

Sabah in the first race ran very differently to last time, but just missed getting there in a hot finish with Plassey, who won again. The winner was the unbacked one of the stable, Zari running a coot after last week's promise. Sir Jamal, not a month out of hospital, was well fancied, but being left was always out of it.

Urgent was not generally recognised as old Fattahal Kher, though this knowledge would not have enhanced his chance in the public mind. He had put up a great gallop, and ran up to it, beating Fritz and the favourite, Desert King, who was ridden none too well, whereas Evans rode Urgent to perfection.

Though Lady Metal had the support she merited on form in the Winter Plate one could not get away from the solid money for Ashanti Gold, despite his hopeless performance last week. The mare made the running, but the favourite was ready to come away at any moment. Chevalier and Peria Doray wound up in places.

Peculiar is apparently not himself, as both he and Safoog failed in the Arab Trial; the latter's stable companion, Dhafer, having matters all his own way from Colaba after his bad luck last Saturday.

Despite having been out already, Real Blood was made favourite for the Christmas Plate and ran up to his Poona reputation, though Mutlag had him well set after disposing of Good Chance.

Lastly, Hullo again lost his following a little pill, though the race did the public a bit of good, Good Morning being well backed and winning a great race from Orby and Santra. Those who saw the winner's late finish last week were prepared for this, despite his being far better treated then.

A well-known English Bishop some time since lost his third wife. A clergyman who had known the first wife returned from Africa and wanted to see the grave. He called at the cathedral and saw the verger, 'Can you tell me where the Bishop's wife is buried?' 'Well, sir,' replied the verger, 'I don't know for certain, but he mostly buries 'em at Brompton.'

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 4th December 1908.

My last word about the Licensing Bill. As I foreshadowed a week ago, it was buried last Friday. There was a crowded house, some scathing criticism of the opposition by Lord Fitzmaurice and the measure was rejected by an overwhelming majority. A few white robed bishops and a thin line of sombre clad peers filed into one lobby, a perfect crush of Unionist peers made for the other. In twenty minutes the result was announced. For rejection, 272; against, 96; majority, 176. Of twenty-six spiritual lords entitled to vote, thirteen voted against killing the bill.

The silly season is not quite dead yet—it lingers on while the present spring weather lasts I suppose. Its latest symptom is the suggestion to employ a few thousand of the unemployed in a search for the ancient treasure lying fathoms deep in the sands of The Wash! The loot which was lost when King John's baggage train tried to make that treacherous short cut without a guide has suggested to some people that platoons of hunger marchers might profitably be put to digging. We are told that "there is every probability that the treasure is still there—wreck of wagons, bones of men and of horses, armour and weapons, golden plate and chalices of silver which disappeared from mortal ken seven centuries ago—and if that be so, surely it is worth while to make some effort to find it." It is quite a common complaint this itching to sieze a mattock and dig for buried treasure. The promoters of the scheme, I have no doubt, already imagine themselves watching the great trench slowly driven across the land where the loot of half a kingdom lies hid. They picture the fierce excitement of the moment when the first trace of the wrecked train of wagons is lighted upon, the fevered digging that will ensue, the gradual uncovering of the rolling stock of that remote period, the forcing open of the rotting chests, the laying bare of wondrous pieces of mediæval workmanship. M'yes. I believe I once had the digging craze myself, gentle Editor; but, like the Psalmist "I have been young and am now old;" old enough, at any rate, to smile superior.

Last week London was introduced to a novelty in mechanical locomotion, to wit a covered-in electrically propelled onimbus. The Electrobus Company are responsible for it and vouch for its complete stability inasmuch as most of the weight is placed beneath the axles. It differs mainly from the present electric or petrol driven buses in that it is roofed in, like the double-decker tramcars; it certainly looks top heavy, but the roof will be a decided boon if the car has come to stop.

Only a few weeks ago I was bewailing the fact that the London Telegraph system had something to learn from Calcutta, I now read of a disease peculiar to English telegraphists, one which I trust will not spread to your peninsula or dire will be the result of a combination of baboo signaller and "Telegraphic Cramp," as it is called. I hear that the most conscientious operator afflicted with this malady is liable at any moment to substitute C for TR, G for O, P for J, D for K or IE for H. Imagine for one moment the effect upon a wearily waiting wife when her husband has wired her:

"Coming home two four train.—Jack," and she is confronted with:

"Coming iegme twg-fgur cain.—Pacd."

The revival of Henry V. at the Lyric and the unqestionable success which has attended it, impels one to ask why Mr. Waller doesn't always play Shakespeare. True his personality lends distinction to the most improbable characters in romantic drama, but it is only in a Shakespearian play that we see him at his best and in Henry V. he is almost matchless in pure declamatory force, while he invests the character with a noble valiancy and magnetism. He is really magnificent, the piece is magnificently staged, and in every respect it is a notable revival. It was in 1900 that Mr. Waller first revived "King Henry V." at the Lyceum Theatre, and his acting in the name-part added his name to the greatest interpreters of King Hal. Last night's performance at the Lyric Theatre was another very real triumph for him, both as an actor and a producer. He is so fitted by personality, voice, and bearing for the character that it would be difficult to imagine a more stirring and telling interpretation. All the fire and beauty and splendid patriotism of the lines, all the big heart and bravery and dignity of the King, were brought out by the actor to the full. It was not wonderful, then, that the audience were moved to vast enthusiasm, and that Mr. Waller had to bow his acknowledge ments time after time at the close of every act. But while the chief success of the revival easily belonged to Mr. Waller, little but praise can be given to the company supporting him. Mr. Calvert as Pistol, Master Duff as the Boy, Mr. George as Fuellen, contribute bravely to the merriment. Miss Titheradge was pleasing as "Kate," if she did not make very much of it, and Miss Fay Davis spoke Chorus with a charm which grew upon one.

A clever piece and an amusing is "Sir Anthony," produced at Wyndham's this week. It is an elaborate satire of the petty weaknesses of suburban life, and as such is not likely to be particularly well received by the many thousands of suburban theatre goers who bulk so largely in the audiences of West End Theatres. But for all that it is well put together, bright, funny and specially built to give Mr. Weedon Grossmith ample opportunity for exhibiting his talent at its best. He is cast for the character of Clarence Chope—of Herne Hill—a clerk to a pork and bacon curing firm. While journeying to America on the business of the firm he scrapes acquaintance with Sir Anthony Mellish; the baronet wished him good morning or asked for a light or something that was really all. But on the strength of it little Chope bragged of Sir Anthony as a bosom friend, put on airs, aped what he believed to be the ways of Mayfair, and became quite a lion in Herne Hill. Chope's employer even went the length of trying to advance his business on the strength of his clerk's supposed friendship with the baronet. This it was that led to Chope's undoing, for Sir Anthony wrote and told the pork and bacon curer the truth of the matter, and the clerk stood revealed as an impudent little liar. He lost his job, and was in danger of losing his sweetheart in the hour of his disgrace, but kept her by fighting his rival. Mr. Weedon Grossmith, as the clerk, was as wonderfully snobbish as only he can be upon the stage; while Mr. J. D. Beveridge, as the unctuous minister, and Miss Nina Boucicault, as the loyal sister, were delightful. Mr. Evelyn Beerbohm, who, as the boxing clerk, made what was said to be his first appearance on the stage, is a nephew of Mr. Beerbohm Tree.

Mr. Smith, at the Waldorf, has made a praiseworthy attempt to give us good musical comedy at cheap prices, having reduced the charges for stalls, dress circle and pit, and, as a result, he had a crowded house when "The Antelope" started running last Saturday. But though it is exceedingly well played I fear Mr. Smith is not this journey going to earn the statue in Trafalgar Square promised by certain humorists for the manager who can make the Waldorf pay. "The Antelope" is an abbreviation of the name of the Anti-Elopement Matrimonial Agency, which ensures its customers against the indiscretions of their wives. Adapted from the French by Mr. Adrian Ross, and composed by Dr. Hugo Felix, who wrote the music of "Madame Sherry" and Les Merveilleuses," a good company, including Mr. Fred Wright, jun., Mr. Fred Emney, Miss Kitty Gordon, Miss Maudie Thornton (who was very good as a drummer-boy), and Mr. Farren Soutar play it for all it is worth; but its reception was by no means encouraging.

A memorable programme was presented at the Matinée given at His Majesty's Theatre last Monday in commemoration of the work of the great actress Ristori. Most of the prominent figures on the British stage took part; needless to add a complete artistic success was secured and a crammed house went with it. Mr. Tree's "Shylock," Mr. Cosmo Hamilton's "Soldiers' Daughters," Mr. Forbes Robertson's "Hamlet," Mr. George Alexander in a bit from "The Thief," Mr. Oscar Asche and Miss Lily Brayton in Petruchio's proposal from the "Taming of the Shrew," Miss Geneviève Ward in the sleep walking scene from "Macbeth," Mr. Cyril Maude in the dressing room scene from "The Clandestine Marriage." Mr. Martin Harvey in a piece from the "Conspiracy," and some of the other leading artistes contributed to the programme. As if this were not enough, Miss Marie Tempest, Mr. Ben Davis, Sir Charles Santley shared in the musical honours, Miss Lena Ashwell recited and there was an enchanting dance, arranged by Madame Cavalazzi, with the correct Greek note in its stateliness, and statuesque pose. I shall always count it a special privilege to have been at this Matinée.

The Kendals have announced their determination to retire from active theatrical work at no distant date, in fact at the end of the provincial tour now about to commence. Mrs. Kendal comes of a famous family of actors and made her first appearance on the stage when a child of five in 1854, and fifteen years later, when she was making a name for herself as Miss Madge Robertson, she married Mr. W. H. Kendal, whose family name was Grimston. Since then they have acted together.

They were co-lessees and managers with Sir John Hare of St. James's Theatre from 1879 to 1888, and since then have been in management at several other London theatres. They are said to be among the wealthiest managers who have ever retired from the English stage.

Mr. Horatio Bottomley, M.P., racehorse owner, City man, Editor of John Bull, and player of other parts, is now endeavouring to answer a charge of conspiracy in connection with the Joint Stock Trust and Finance Company and the Selected Gold Mines of Australia, Limited. Of course the proceedings at the Guildhall evoke the utmost public interest. There are three other defendants—former employés of the first-named company, George F. Fewings, William Albert Stevenson, and Dalton Easum. These were represented by various counsel, while Mr. Bottomley conducted his own case. In a speech lasting over three hours, Mr. Horace Avory, K.C., outlined the case for the prosecution. Delay in taking action, he explained, arose from two causes—the destruction or disappearance of a great number of books of accounts and documents, and the delay on Mr. Bottomley's part in signing notes of his public examination. The charges were distributed by counsel into three groups. The first related to a scheme for obtaining debentures in the Selected Company under the pretence of their conversion into shares, turning them instead into cash and appropriating the proceeds. The second group involved charges of obtaining money from shareholders of the Trust and associated companies by false pretences and the publication of false statements; and the third group was described as the duplication of shares of the Trust Company, by reason of which persons who paid for or dealt in them were defrauded, an item in this set of charges being the alleged destruction of transfers and transfer receipts. The case is proceeding as I pen these lines, and even with two hearings a week I have an idea it may be months ere I am able to give you the result!

Apropos de Noel, how is this for a seasonable recipe? published in a London paper this week:—

Cabinet Pudding:—Take a fresh young Suffragette, add a large idea of her own importance, and as much sauce as you like. Allow her to stand on a Cabinet Minister's doorstep until in a white heat. Well mix with one or two policemen.

Roll well in mud, and, while hot, run into a police station and allow to simmer. Well garnish with sauce of martyrdom. Cost: A little self-respect.

The Vagrant.

Shikar.

THE CREEPING SHADOW.

I cannot guarantee that this story is true, but as I personally examined the place where the circumstances were reported to have occurred, I am in a position to state that the yarn may be true. I have further reasons for relating the facts, as the earnest expression on the face of the narrator led me to suppose that he was not lying.

Many years ago—about 1886—I found myself at the base of a range of hills which lie between Mount Abu and Deesa. The time was mid-day, and I had just had a very successful beat for jungle and peafowl. The beaters had all disappeared to an adjacent pool to enjoy their frugal repast, and I was left alone with the head shikaree—commonly called "John," but whose real name was Jan Mahomed, a Mussulman hunter, whom I had only recently engaged. I was talking in a general way to "John" about sport, when he observed: "This is a spot which has a history. It was at one time the rendezvous of Kana, the notorious one-eyed dacoit, and some of the older men amongst your beaters have cause to remember the place for other reasons. We are now sitting under a mhowa tree, wherein two of my countrymen once lost their lives in a very peculiar way."

Before recording the continuation of "John's" narrative, I will describe the locality and its surroundings. We were at the base of a steep ravine; on both sides were huge boulders, topping one another. Between the mhowa tree (under which we were sitting) and the boulders was a banyan tope—that is to say, a vast group of trunks of that tree interlaced with cross branches connecting them together. (The banyan drops tendrils which take root and eventually form trunks.) I have seen many ancient trees of the kind which could shade indifferently five hundred men. I say "indifferently," as the foliage is somewhat sparse.

I will now let "John" continue his yarn. "Fifteen years ago," he said, "sambhur and cheetul were abundant here, and when the mhowa flower dropped the tree under which we are now sitting was a magnet to the deer tribe, for two reasons. About five hundred yards from here is what hunters call a 'salt lick,' which is, as you know, a great attraction to sambhur and cheetful. Well, one of the village shikarees made a machan and sat on it; it was fixed where those three mhowa branches above us converge. The moon was nearly at the full, and he expected, with slugs, to lay low a cheetul or sambhur attracted by salt and mhowa flowers.

"The shikaree never returned to the village.

"His relatives sought for him, and found [illegible] stone dead at the foot of this tree, and on his neck were the marks of a panther's fangs. The ground was searched for footprints, and the bark of the tree was also carefully examined. The tree was climbed, but where the panther came from remained for a time an unsolved mystery.

"The village, which lies three miles away, then contained twenty-five adults, and volunteers were called for to sit on the machan on the following night. One of the best shikarees was chosen; his name I have forgotten, but he was a relative of the dead man, and extremely wakeful, and unlikely to slumber on his vigil. Anxiety reigned in the village during the night, and shikaree No. 2 never returned. Almost on the identical spot where his predecessor fell, he also was found quite dead, but in his case the weapon with which he was armed had been discharged. The same panther had killed him and vanished, apparently into space.

"General distress beset the village, and again a consultation was held. The council finally determined to send for my father, who was a renowned and fearless hunter. He lived ten miles away, near the western base of Abu, where he made much money from Englishmen whom he helped to find tigers. His name was Lall Mahomed, and eventually he arrived amidst the desolate mourners, who were composed of two wives and eight children. At the villagers' request he rapidly came to this place, and walked all round, examining the bark and ground as others had done. He was an old man, but very shrewd and cautious, and after an hour's deliberation decided on a plan of campaign.

"Under the shadow of this tree he directed the villagers to make a ground machan—that is, a space surrounded by stout karindah thorns, and such a fortress cannot very well be penetrated by any beast, excepting the tiger or wild boar. He had already examined the battery of the villagers. He himself had an old Brown Bess, with which he had, with slugs, laid many tigers low. Two other men had weapons, not so powerful, but still capable of hurling two ounces of slugs with effect up to thirty yards. The moon was at the full, and the most gruesome part of the plan necessitated replacing the dead body of No. 2 shikaree on the machan to attract the unknown enemy once again. Death had stiffened the limbs, which had to be forced back into a natural sitting position. My father's preparations were now complete. He told me that owing to the heat and exposure the body had commenced to decompose, but the villagers were bent on revenge, and such a slight objection did not weigh with them. At 7 p.m., with a supply of water and food, my father and the two men finally enclosed themselves within the thorny circle, which was about six yards in diameter. The moon rose behind the mhowa tree and hills; and the arrangement was that two men should sleep whilst the third remained on guard to watch the dead body, which was fifteen yards off and clearly defined against the rising moon.

"Nothing occurred until about 11 P.M., when my father was on duty and on the alert. At that hour several jackals and hyenas gathered around the spot, attracted by the decomposing body in the tree, but after raising their noses in the air they departed one by one with dismal howls of disappointment. At about 11-20 a great beast approached, which proved to be a hyena—my father thought at first by its size and movements that it might be a panther. Whilst watching the departing animal he peered over the karindah fortification, and saw shadowed on the sand a moving body quietly advancing towards and parallel to the mhowa tree. He looked up, and saw a huge panther creeping along the branches of the banyan tree. He determined not to disturb his companions, but watched the slow movements of the beast. Step by step the panther crossed the ramifications of the tree, until he was within springing distance of the dead man in the mhowa tree. Silent as death were the movements of the panther, until he made its last leap, and for the second time planted his fangs in the neck of the dead shikaree No. 2. The body dropped to the plain with a thud, and my father levelled his old Brown Bess on the murderer, who followed in the wake of his victim."

I have asked many hunters to explain this weird affair, and the only rational solution is as follows. Panthers love to hunt monkeys in trees, but monkeys roost, as a rule, in groups, and are very difficult to surprise at any time. The panther in question thought, probably, that he had found an ostracised, solitary monkey, but discovering that he was a human being left him alone after the death grip. Forlorn monkeys exist, and the same rule obtains in regard to bison, boars, and other dangerous animals, who have been ejected from herds by their companions. Jan Mahomed concluded his narrative by stating that the villagers found the panther's den amongst the boulders, and that it had used the banyan tree as a bridge to attack the shikarees without ever touching the plain. The beast was not what might be termed a "man-eater," but it had mistaken a man for a monkey—an error which in this world is often made.—FELIX—in the County Gentleman.

Shooting.

THE LETHAL 12-BORE BALL.

THE accompanying illustrations depict what is described as Lyons Lethal bullet, the same being intended to overcome the old difficulty of employing ball cartridges in choke-bored guns. As is well known to users of ball cartridges, the choked muzzle forms a dangerous obstruction, which in the case of a ball fully up to the gauge of the back part of the barrel results in at least a bulge. Some unpublished experiments, which were conducted during the past few months, using steel bicycle balls of ⅞ inch diameter in a special duck gun, with a size of choked muzzle easily capable of passing a ·75 inch ball, resulted disastrously for the gun. The muzzle was badly bulged by each shot, no doubt because the bullet struck the choke and was slightly arrested in its forward movement previous to finding its way out. Thus there is not full security even when the shooter has taken the precaution of seeing that the round ball freely passes the muzzle of his choke barrel.

A.

Fig. 1. Exterior view of the Lethal Bullet. The letter d marks the upstanding ribs which characterise the bullet.

B.

Fig. 2 Sectional view, showing the interior steel discs for promoting expansion on impact.

The Lethal bullet aims at overcoming the difficulty of a loose bullet by means of ribs or projections, giving it two diameters, which for convenience of description, may be characterised as gross and net. The bullet takes its bearing in the barrel by resting on these equators and longitude lines, and even if the bore is a little tight the protections are easily squeezed down till they accommodate themselves to whatever may be the precise bore of the gun. The solid central ball thus lies approximately concentric with the bore notwithstanding that it measures rather less than ·695in, viz, the muzzle diameter of a fully choked 12-bore.

Samples of the bullet having been received from Messrs. Eley Brothers, who enjoy the sole rights of sale, a few experiments were carried out last week. No absolute guide as to the proper method of charging single balls exists in any recent literature with which we are acquainted. The weight of a true lead sphere running twelve to the pound would naturally be 1¼ oz. The present bullet weighs exactly 1¼ oz., thus being practically speaking 14-bore, the decimal equivalent of which is ·693 in. The outstanding ribs fill out the ball to the required diameter without materially adding to the weight. For shooting tiger, wild boar, or any other kind of soft-skinned game encountered at close quarters a 1¼ oz. ball is effective enough, but it should be propelled with the highest velocity consistent with reasonable recoil. Two charges were accordingly used, viz., 50 grs. of Schultze, representing the 42 grain class of powder, and 36 grs. of Smokeless Diamond, a powder of the 33 grain type, which is very largely used throughout India. The wadding employed was the ordinary 1-12 in. card over the powder, than an ordinary ⅛ in. felt, following that a Field cloth punched with a round hole about ⅛ in. diameter.

On this hole, or seating, the ball was placed, and a similar ring wad was used on top, the usual turnover being then made. These two powder charges, strictly speaking, are not in true relation with one another. The Schultze lead was the first fired, and the table of results given below showed a velocity in the region of 1,300 f.s., and a recoil movement of practically 11¼ in. of the proof gun, which is accepted as necessitating a gun weight of about 7¼lb. This was regarded as excessive recoil for a standard load, and in the case of Smokeless Diamond a reduction to 36 gr. was decided upon, this in a 33-grain powder being equivalent to about 46grs. of the type to which Schultze belongs. The velocity was thereby reduced by 100 f.s. and the recoil by about 1in., the equivalent gun weight for 10½in. of travel of the proof gun being exactly 7lb. This is admittedly some slight amount on the high side, according to the ordinary shot gun standards; but bearing in mind that ball cartridges are only occasionally used, the small excess of recoil for guns of ordinary weight may be passed without further comment. The full results obtained were as follows:—

Table of Results with Lyons Lethal 12-bore ball for smooth-bore guns, with or without choke barrels.—

		Chamber pressure tons per sq. in.	Recoil movement in.	Velocity over 20 yards f. s.
50 grs. Scultze	1.	2·86	11·54	1,320
	2	2·68	11·38	1,280
	3.	2·30	11·30	1,250
	Av.	2·58	11.41	1,283
36 grs. Smokeless Diamond	1.	2·58	10·56	1,170
	2.	2·82	10·12	1,200
	3.	2·82	10·60	1,210
	4.	2·15	10.46	1,210
	5.	2·86	10·64	1,220
	Av.	2·65	10·54	1,202

No special experiments were conducted for determining the relative accuracy of this bullet compared with others of ordinary type. Common sense suggests that the better guidance afforded by the peculiar construction adopted should give greater accuracy. A target was, however, incidentally set up at 20 yards in connection with the test of velocity, and the total of ten shots fired, two sighters and eight for velocity, covered a space about the size of a child's hand. The second target which was erected at the 50 yards distance naturally showed a dispersion relatively much greater than could be accounted for by the proportionate increase of distance. This, however, is all common knowledge in connection with balls not kept true in their course by means of rifling. The ball gun is essentially a short-range weapon, and the Lethal bullet appears to possess valuable special features. The bullets themselves are moulded around a peculiar series of interlaced steel discs, the object of which is to facilitate the spreading out of the bullet upon encountering the resistance of an animal's flesh. The precise degree of expansibility given has, no doubt, been settled as a result of practical observation; but no special test or examination was conducted in connection with these trials for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Lethal bullet has been properly adjusted in this respect.—The Field.

A NEW LARGE CALIBRE AIR-RIFLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—This letter must be prefaced with the explanation that the term "large calibre" is merely comparative; most of the air-rifles now on the market are of so small a bore, that the one which forms the subject of these notes is by comparison a large calibre. The bore of the target air-rifle is as a rule about ·177 inch: the Lincoln-Jeffries, Britannia, and Swift rifles, all being approximately of this size. The tiny pellet used with these weapons is hardly powerful enough to encourage one to lay aside the ·22 rim-fire, and substitute an air-rifle in its place for shikaring vermin, or small game. I think that the 4½ m.m. air-rifle is hard hitting enough to kill a blue rock, at short range, if the bird is struck fairly in the centre of the body. But one requires a handy miniature weapon, which is capable of a little more than that. Therefore, the air-rifle cannot hope to displace our old friend the ·22 R. F. unless it is produced in sufficiently powerful form to, say, bowl over a hare or a peafowl.

Kynoch have realized this, and so have evolved a larger edition of their Swift air-rifle. This new Swift is of No. 3 bore, that is its calibre is ·252 inch. With a 21 grain pellet, the muzzle velocity is 450 feet per second. With a lighter pellet of 16½ grains, the velocity is 500 feet per second. The rifle has a barrel 18½ inches in length, and the weight is 7lb. The sights can be either of the usual V. and bead form, or of the Lyman peep pattern.

I have as yet had no opportunity of testing the killing powers of the new rifle, but think it will certainly prove much more efficient as a weapon for killing game, than anything that has gone before it in the air-gun line. A pellet of the substantial diameter of ·252 inches, weighing 16½ grains, and travelling at the very respectable velocity of 500 feet per second ought certainly to kill a blue rock neatly, up to 50 yards or so. Also I believe that under favourable circumstances, that is at short range with the shot carefully placed, even a hare, mungoose, or peafowl might be satisfactorily accounted for. I must, however, confess, that after considerable experience of the effects of small calibre bullets on such creatures as those above, I should only use even this new No. 3 air-rifle on them under the most favourable conditions, i.e., when one can make certain of hitting them in the exact spot required The shooting of Kynoch's new rifle is all that can be desired: it will make a ¾ inch diagram at 20 yards.

I hope shortly to be able to amplify these somewhat meagre notes: meanwhile the data I have been able to supply are sufficient to show that the new air-rifle will make a most useful addition to the armoury of the sportsman in the East, and that its power is at all events ample for picking off green pigeons, and various feathered small game, while the fact that it is noiseless and does not require cleaning out after shooting, give it great advantages in two important points, over the ·22 rim-fire powder rifle.

1. During the period from the 7th to 26th December 1908, inclusive, return tickets at single fares will be issued to First and Second Class passengers for any distance over 100 miles. Similar tickets will also be issued for stations distant 100 miles or less, on payment of fare as for 101 miles. The tickets will be available for completion of the return journey up to, and including the 14th January 1909.

The outward journey must be completed within the same limit of time, after commencement, as allowed for single journey tickets, vide paras, 15 and 21, pages 89 and 92 of the quarterly Time Table and Guide. One day is allowed for break of journey for every 100 miles or part of 100 miles, but no break of journey will be allowed at a station short of 101 miles from the point the journey was commenced.

Intermediate Class Passengers.

2. Return tickets will be issued during the same period and under the same conditions as to distances and break of journey, to Intermediate Class passengers, at a charge of two third class fares.

General.

3. Tickets purchased at the Calcutta Offices (Fairlie Place and Chowringhee) will be available by trains leaving Howrah on the day of issue or on the following day. Tickets for Monday's mail trains are procurable at these Offices on Saturdays. Tickets purchased at the Barra Bazar Office, will be available on the day of issue only.

4. The return concession tickets for First, Second and Intermediate Class passengers will be accepted to secure reserved accommodation, provided the accommodation is available, on the following scale :—

Class.	Tickets required to secure a reserved compartment.
First	Four.
Second	Five.
Intermediate (lateral compartment) ...	Eight.

5. Concession tickets for children will be issued at half single journey fares.

6. The above arrangements apply to the East Indian Railway system, including the Tarkessur Branch, and the Delhi-Umballa-Kalka Railway.

By order,
G. HUDDLESTON,
General Traffic Manager.

Calcutta, 13th November 1908.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.

Xmas Holiday Express Trains.

An Express Train for Xmas Holiday passengers will leave Howrah at 22-00 (10-24 P.M. Calcutta time) on the 23rd December 1908 and run to Allahabad viâ the Main line, reaching Allahabad at 13-45 next day.

Another Express Train will leave Allahabad at 15-00 on the 23rd December 1908 and run viâ the Main line to Howrah, where it will arrive at 8-04 (8-28 A.M. Calcutta time) on the 24th.

Express Trains will also be run on the same timings from Howrah or Allahabad, as the case may be, on the 21st and 22nd December 1908 and 1st January 1909, if a sufficient number of passengers offer. Intending passengers on these dates are therefore requested to advise the District Superintendents at Howrah and Allahabad of the date they propose to travel so that it may be determined whether an Express Train may be run on either of the dates or not.

These Express Trains will have the same stoppages as the Punjab Mail trains and will carry all classes of passengers, subject to the restrictions of 200 miles for third class passengers.

At the special request of not less than four 1st, 2nd or Inter. class passengers, each travelling 200 miles or over, booked to or from other than a stopping station, a short stoppage will be arranged for their convenience. Such applications should be addressed to the undersigned only, and should reach him at least 24 hours before the train runs.

First and second class seats may be reserved in the Up train in the Booking Offices at Calcutta and Howrah; and in the Down train in the office of the Station Master, Allahabad, provided fares are paid from Howrah or Allahabad as the case may be. Passengers will be required to purchase their tickets at the time they reserve their berths.

Reserved accommodation both in the Intermediate and Third clases will be available in all the trains.

By Order,
G. HUDDLESTON,

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,
THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.

Newton Abbot, Devon.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

Odol is the first and only preparation for cleansing the mouth and teeth which exercises its antiseptic and refreshing powers not only during the few moments of application but continuously for some hours afterwards.

Odol, as has been scientifically proved, penetrates the interstices of the teeth and the mucous membrane of the mouth, to a certain extent impregnating them, and thus securing a safeguard and preservative for the teeth such as no other dentifrice can provide, not even approximately.

TO USE ODOL :—Mix a few drops with water, rinse, and then brush the teeth with it in the ordinary way ; gargle with the remainder.

	MAJOR HAYES.

Hon. Secretary :—MAJOR TOTTENHAM, D.S.O.

Thursday, 17th December 1908.

THE races this afternoon were fairly well attended, but there was not much betting as the bookie (Salamut) gave very short prices. There were several upsets. Fields ruled small and in the absence of a Military Band, things were rather dull. Major Tottenham, D.S.O. (14th King's Hussars) is, however, to be congratulated on providing some sort of sport for the public in these days of ennui, and it is hoped that the Sports Secretary of the Gymkhana Club will wake up and give us an afternoon's amusement with a Skittle Gymkhana.

ARE YOU SUFFERING FROM DYSPEPSIA OR INDIGESTION.

THEN TRY EDWARD'S PAPIYA ESSENCE.

It is strongly recommended by medical men in above complaints, and in many affections of chest and heart as asthma, palpitation, etc., which are only simulated diseases arising from disordered stomach.

Apply to—E. J. LAZARUS & Co.,
MEDICAL HALL, Benares.

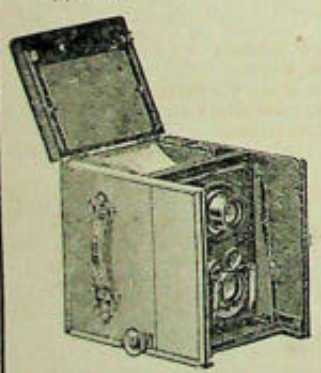
Price, Rs. 3 per bottle.

From G. A. R., Bettiah, Champaran:—"I was suffering with diarrhœa, with which I was attacked nearly nine months ago, and all known remedies were greedily taken down by me, but to no avail, when as a last resource I tried your 'Essence of Papiya.' My digestive organs which were considerably deranged are now as right as possible; the distressing symptoms attendant on indigestion have now almost entirely left me and I heartily thank you for the preparation, which through the intervention of a Kind Providence you have successfully brought before the public."

From Mrs. E. L. M., Asansol, E. I. R.—"I had very bad Dyspepsia. My food used to turn rotten and sour in my stomach, and I used one bottle of Essence of Papiya and now I am sure I could digest a brick, it has thoroughly cured me of my Dyspepsia, hence I have so much confidence in your medicines. You certainly deserve credit for introducing such a medicine to poor suffering Dyspeptics."

You may certainly publish what I have said about your Papiya Essence.



From Mrs. Elizabeth Wagentreiber, Delhi:—"With much pleasure and many thanks I beg to acknowledge the benefit I derived from your far famed 'Essence of Papiya.' I suffered from Dyspepsia in a most painful form, and found great relief after taking the first two bottles, then continued to take four more. After the sixth I felt so much better that I left off taking it regularly, but if at any time, I feel the old pain and symptoms returning I immediately take another bottle of the Essence. I am now able to eat more and can change my diet without fear of what were to me most dreaded attacks of indigestion."

Nothing better than the BEST.

¶ The great satisfaction in having the best is that there is nothing better with which to compare it. When it comes to DOG BISCUITS, the name on Dog Biscuits denotes that they are the finest, most nutritious Dog Biscuits manufactured—in fact, the apex in Biscuit production. Be sure you ask for Spratt's Patent. Of all stores, etc.

PLAYING CARDS FOR

GOODALL'S NEW "LINETTE" PLAYING CARDS.

These Cards are made with a finely grooved surface, which facilitates the dealing and minimises the possibility of misdeals.
In various floral designs or with plain backs. Per dozen packs Rs. 9-0 Per pack Re. 1-0

Special quotations for larger quantities.

De la Rue's "Pneumatic" Playing Cards.—

The Fronts of the "Pneumatic" Playing Cards are highly finished, whilst the Backs are minutely grooved or indented all over the surface, so as to provide an air-space between the cards, and a roughened surface which acts as a resistance for the thumb in dealing. This prevents misdeals, as the cards slide off one by one and can be dealt with the greatest ease and rapidity.

THE TURF.

MANCHESTER.

After a soaking wet night, on Thursday, the mists cleared towards 11 o'clock, giving the sun a chance, and with a brisk breeze to help matters, the light was good at Castle Irwell for the most part of Friday afternoon. That we might expect a big muster was presaged by the crowded state of the hotels, in spite of counter attractions at Newbury, and a tremendous crowd bore down on the big enclosures by electric car and cab, while a stream of footpassengers converged on the spacious front. Considering the time of the year, the conditions were most favourable, except in one most important element, the course, which, despite all the care and attention bestowed on it, could not but be sticky, and fast times were out of the question. Results:—

Rain threatened about eight o'clock next morning, but after a sort of Scotch mist it cleared again, and though the sun never had a chance, the temperature, with the absence of wind, was remarkably mild. Every hotel in Manchester was so crammed that many visitors sought quarters further afield—even so far away as Liverpool and Chester; and with the Newbury contingent coming in at the last minute, the city has never been so full of racing folk, familiar faces greeting one at every corner. The stands cover a vast area, but there was little standing room to spare. The going would have bettered itself, but the drizzle kept it in about as good a state as on the opening day, and it proved "No that bad" after all, fields being again of prolific dimensions. By Royal Warrant to His Majesty the King.

Formerly, the phrase, the "end of the season," carried more significance than it does at present, when a blank day in the winter season is almost as rare as were the few jumping meetings that used to give "the talent" a day out. Nowadays our flat race jockeys have perforce to rest while their more stalwart confrères, who have been standing down most part of the summer, get once more into their harness. The season that died at Manchester last Saturday has been a brisk and busy one, and from all indications the "leppers" are about to enjoy quite as good a one. It is not often at this advanced season of the year to enjoy such weather, especially at rainy, foggy Manchester, as favoured the three days, and to general satisfaction, Saturday was the most enjoyable of the three. The sun shed his genial influence on the scene, the mist of the previous days was reduced to a minimum, the air warm, without mugginess and the going having dried up, was emphatically good—a tribute to the executive's perseverance and the excellence of the method adopted by the experts who re-grassed it. In spite of football attractions, the attendance was enormous, tramcars, laden down to the gunwales, or rather to the full resilience of their springs, turning out their living freight in rapid succession, and the procession seemed to be endless. It is rather difficult to gauge the attendance here, as the enclosures cover such an immense area of ground, but by the time racing commenced—sensibly half an hour later than before—there was not much room to spare in Tattersall's and the public rings, while the paddock was crowded between races. The members' stand was not overpacked, but the fine building devoted to their comfort—large enough for a County Council Hall—is so spacious as to make the crowd look a smaller one. The handicappers had done their work so well in the big race that nearly every horse in the race had its partisans, and before racing recommenced, offers were made of 6 to 1 on the field. Results:—

LEICESTER.

On Wednesday, the 2nd instant, possibly owing to the football match, the attendance was not a good one the members' enclosure and Tattersall's being sparsely filled, while there was a small muster in the stand "across the way" a favourite pitch with the holiday folk. The fog that blurred the Aldershot heaths seemed to have been general, as the air was a bit thick over the big Leicestershire pastures, and the sky of a uniform grey; but though we missed sunshine we also missed rain, and the balance was pretty even. Well grassed, the course was in fine order for the business in hand, though fields did not come up to the usual standard. Results:—

Not many Londoners visited Aldershot yesterday and, judging by results, they were not strongly represented at Leicester, although the second day's muster was a bit of an improvement on the first, but, like Birmingham, Leicester will never take a top place in the list of fixtures. Fog was not so pronounced as on Wednesday, fields ruled well, the going was perfect, and the racing excellent, worthy of a bigger muster. Falls, as at Aldershot, were few and far between, a tribute to the going, and some smart sport was enjoyed. Results:—

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE LEAGUES.—The 1908-9 season maintains its consistency, in the provision of weekly sensations. In the Southern League the condition of things was normal, not a home club being beaten, but Swindon exploded the view that they cannot play effective football away from home by earning a point at Northampton. The convincing win of Exeter City over Portsmouth was something of an eye-opener and the defeat of the Palace at Southend, coupled with the drawn game in which Southampton took part at Norwich, has given the Sotonians a firmer grip on the leadership than seemed probable a few days ago. Severe pressure on space prevents my dealing at length with the matches.

The First Division of the Football League furnished results that cause one to gasp with astonishment. The win of Woolwich Arsenal at Chelsa is easily understandable, but what is to be said of the success of Notts County at Sunderland? It is amazing. Then there were the triumph of Manchester City, at Anfield-road, the rout of Nottingham Forest on their own ground by Newcastle United, and the division of the points between Bristol City and Aston Villa at Birmingham.

In the Second Division four home teams were beaten, and the piquancy of two of the defeats lies in the fact that the clubs were in the running for the championship. The three Metropolitan members of this division have every reason to be satisfield with their afternoon's work, as Tottenham and Clapton Orient won at home, and Fulham were successful at Barnsley, where last season they met with such a severe defeat.

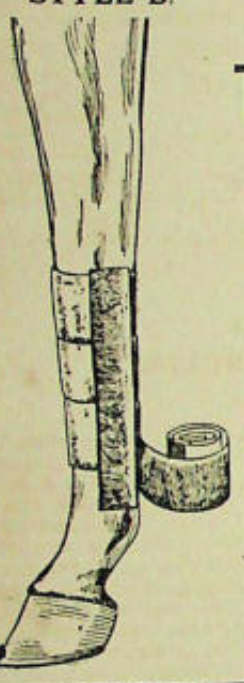
WINCHESTER CARTRIDGES SHOOT WHERE YOU HOLD

WINCHESTER



.22 Short and .22 Long Caliber Rim Fire Cartridges.

If you want to use .22 Caliber Cartridges that shoot when you want them to and where you point your gun, and strike a good, penetrating blow, buy the time-tried Winchester make, having the trade-mark "H" stamped on the head. They cost but a few pence more a box than the cheap, unreliable kind, and they are shillings better. Winchester .22 Caliber Cartridges are loaded with Black and Smokeless Powder. Those loaded with Smokeless Powder have the celebrated Winchester Greaseless Bullets, which make them cleaner to handle than any other .22 Caliber Cartridges. Special powder, made according to carefully determined and tested formulas, is used in loading all Winchester Cartridges, and every bullet is swaged by special machinery, which makes them uniform in size, weight and density. This modern method of manufacture, coupled with a rigid system of tests, makes Winchester Cartridges better than any other brand on the market. A trial will convince you.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. EALING.—With Oriel winning the Inter-Collegiate cup, it was hardly surprising to find three of their men getting a trial in the match against Ealing, which brought the 'Varsity fixture list to a close on Saturday. Ealing were the first to become aggressive, without result. Then Oxford took a turn, and Blencowe had an opening which he failed to utilise. At length Jordan dribbled right up to goal, where he was checked by Griffin. Oxford were soon attacking again, but good chances were lost by Blencowe and Burrows, and after Jordan had only just missed, half-time arrived with a blank score-sheet.

On getting to work again, the Oxford forwards were very aggressive, and from a corner Bickersteth hit the post; then Ealing pressed, and after Doll had shot over, Appleton made a splendid clearance from Etheridge. Jordan dribbled through again, and Pears secured possession. Although the latter's shot was partially cleared by Whittaker, Burrows came up and netted. Just on the finish, Grice, running down, beat Appleton with a brilliant shot. Result:—Oxford University, 1; Ealing, 1.

RUGBY RULES.

RICHMOND vs. DUBLIN WANDERERS.—In this match at Richmond on Saturday, played before an excellent attendance, a draw was the fairest result. The sides were fairly well matched. The Irishmen held the advantage in the forwards, who were a heavier lot, smarter in getting the ball, and more effective in the open than the home pack. Behind, however, McGregor, at half, and the Richmond threes were superior to the Wanderers' back division. Their passing was cleaner, and they ran more strongly and with a more definite idea of what to do. W. C. Wilson was again in fine form, and more than once saved his side.

In this first half the Wanderers got the ball on most occasions, but their backs handled badly. The Irishmen were the first to score, through Gamble, who completed a forward rush with a try. Then Brayshaw burst through a number of opponents, and handed to Wilson, who beat all opposition, and scored behind the posts for Bovet to convert.

Ten minutes after the restart Newbold ran in for the Dublin men, and Harvey added the goal points. The Richmond forwards then made several determined efforts, and once Ireland almost struggled over with an opponent on his back. Shortly, afterwards, McGregor started a bout of passing, in which all the Richmond backs except Ireland took a hand, and Watson scored. Result:—Richmond, 1 goal, 1 try (8 points); Dublin Wanderers, 1 goal, 1 try (8 points).

OXFORD vs. BLACKHEATH.—After a fast and interesting, and, in one respect, remarkable match, the University defeated Blackheath, on Saturday, at the Rectory Field, by 4 goals and 4 tries (32 points) to 2 goals (10 points). The University, (who were without Tarr and Vassall) made such an indifferent start that Blackheath scored two tries both converted) in the first eight minutes. The game then underwent a startling change, and Blackheath, thanks to the overwhelming superiority, individual and collective, of the University outsides, were completely outplayed. It was the contrast thus offered by the first fifteen minutes' play and the rest of the match which made the game remarkable.

Following the kick-off, Finlinson dribbled clear in some loose play, and picking up cleverly was over the line near the posts before the University backs had realised what had happened. Stone kicked a goal. A few minutes later Pilman made a clever swerving run through the University forwards, and once more the defence was surprised and beaten, Stone kicking a second goal. A minute later Marsden lost a certain try by knocking on after the defence was beaten. During this period the University played like a demoralised side. The forwards rallied, however, and with their improvement the game underwent a complete change, for as soon as the University backs were able to attack the defeat of the club, in spite of their ten points' lead was never in doubt. Gilray crowned the first passing advance by the University backs with a fine try, from which Cunningham kicked a goal. Martin, in spite of Poulton delaying his pass until he had drawn the defence on to his wing, scored a second try, from which Cunningham kicked a goal. Oxford maintained the pressure on the Blackheath lines, and Buchanan scored a third try, after good passing. Cunningham converted, and at the interval Oxford led by 15 points to 10.

In the second half Oxford, a rally by Blackheath towards the end excepted, were playing a winning game throughout. Gilray (2), Williamson, Cunningham, and Diggle added further tries. Roberts kicked a goal from Cunningham's try, and the University won by 32 points to 10.

CAMBRIDGE vs. OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS.—There was an excellent attendance at the Old Deer Park, Richmond, on Saturday. Forward the Cantabs were up to full strength, but in their back division more than one well-known player was missing. The game was very keenly contested throughout, but was never remarkable for any exceptionally good play, and the Light Blue forwards to lead off with were slow in their movements, whilst both teams lost opportunities. The visitors were the first to score. Ashcroft picked up from a scrum near the home goal, and K. G. Macleod converted from the easy position. The play of the Taylors brightened up considerably, the brothers Lepingwell and Parker being conspicuous in some very effective work, which at length resulted in the last-named scoring; R. A. Lepingwell kicked a goal. Interval:—One goal (5 points) each.

In the second half the Taylors went off with a fine rush. Macleod went to take a pass from Ashcroft, but overshot the mark. Parker kicked over the halfway line, and, running on, picked up cleverly. He then successfully eluded the full-back, and scored. A short time later the Taylors' three-quarters went away in the best effort of the afternoon, and passing along them the ball came back to Hodson, the half-back, who scored, R. A. Lepingwell being successful with both the place kicks. After this the Light Blue forwards played better and got possession. Taking a penalty kick near the home "25," K. G. Macleod dropped a clever goal from a difficult angle. Cambridge continued to hold the advantage to the end, and scored again through Ashcroft, Macleod once more converting. Result:—Old Merchant Taylors, 3 goals (15 points); Cambridge University, 3 goals 1 penalty) (13 points).

NORTHAMPTON vs. LONDON WELSH.—This game at Northampton on Saturday was productive of some interesting football. At the outset the Welsh invaded, and by bustling work kept the home defence busy. Fifteen minutes from the start Maddocks, intercepting a home pass, ran brilliantly, and, beating player after player, grounded behind for Harding to convert. Quickly afterwards Cook, following up, got possession and scored for Northampton, Coles adding the goal points. Up to the interval the exchanges were fairly even, but the Welsh scored again through Vivian, who got possession from Maddocks close in and scrambled over.

In the second half there was little to choose between the sides. Maddocks was the star of the Welsh three-quarter line, whilst Harding's big kicks helped his side materially. Beasley played a good game for Northampton. Result:—London Welsh, 1 goal and 1 try (8 points); Northampton, goal (5 points).

AUSTRALIANS vs. SOMERSET.—The Australian team brought the county items of their fixture list to a close with a game at Taunton on Saturday, before about 5,000 people. The resultant win for the Wallabies by only eight points was a surprise in the West, for Somerset have been looked upon as the weakest county in the south-western group of the county championship this season. The result may be partly accounted for by the sterling play of the Somerset forwards in the loose. Their frequent rushes and consistent following up did a great deal to upset the combination of the Colonials. In scrimmaging there was only one side in it, and the Australian forwards heeled well, but the home front men broke up smartly, spread out well, and made their opponents work hard for every minute of the game. The Colonials, too, had to contend against tackling of the keenest kind. Carmichael had plenty to do, and did it well.

Early on the Australians gained a good position well inside the home "25," but several good openings were stopped by the determined defence, and for a short time Somerset attacked through their forwards, Dyte missing a mark kick at goal. The Australians began passing, Venning letting the home side down with poor fielding. Russell soon afterwards received in Somerset ground, and after a good run passed in to McKivatt, who, although tackled on the line, scored a try. Carmichael's kick failed. A throw forward near the line lost the Colonials a second try just afterwards. Long kicking was all in favour of the visitors, but Dibble and Roman led the home forwards in a fine burst to the Australian "25," Carmichael having to kick over his own line. Australia were now aggressive till the interval without result.

At once assuming the offensive on the restart, the visitors were dangerous, the backs handling well, and Mandible sent in Carroll in an easy position, Carmichael this time converting. Somerset after that pressed hotly through the dashing play of their forwards, and with the game close in front of the line, Carey made a fine effort to get over. He was followed by Larcombe,, but both were frustrated, and Mandible relieved with a touch-kick. The Australians, however, could not get bevond their "25," flag, and in a loose rush Woods, of Somerset, appeared to score, but was called back, the referee ruling that he had been held outside. Dyte just missed a goal from a penalty shot in an easy position, and at last McKivatt sent Mandible off into home territory, where fine passing by the Colonial backs was nullified by Whitworth. Carroll was almost over soon afterwards from a pass in the corner by Hickey. Somerset once attacked by excellent passing amongst the three-quarters, Whitworth being tackled by Russell near the line. Gavin saved from a Somerset penalty shot. Result:—Australians, 1 goal and 1 try (8 points); Somerset, 0.

SOMERSET.—Lieut. G. E. Venning (United Services); Lieut. W. G. Whitworth, R.N., (Channel Fleet), T. B. Timmins (Bath), D. Dyte (Taunton Albion), and R. Ascott (Bath); J. Larcombe (Catford Bridge) and C. O'D. Carey (Oxford); R. Dibble (Bridgewater Albion) (capt.), F. J. Down (Bristol), H. Archer (Bridgewater Albion), P. D. Waller (Newport), T. Woods (Bridgewater Albion), W. Roman (Bridgewater), H. Gunningham (Taunton), and R. E. Hancock (Bridgewater Albion).

AUSTRALIANS.—H. Carmichael; C. Russell, J. Hickey, F. Bede-Smith, and D B. Carroll; E. Mandible and C. McKivatt; T. S. Griffen, J. T. Barnett, C. A. Hammond, P. McCue, A. B. Burge, K. Gavin, T. Richards, and Dr. Moran (capt.).

Referee, Mr. T. D. Schofield (Welsh Rugby Union).

OXFORD UNIVERSITY vs. DUBLIN UNIVERSITY.—Although lacking the services of Vassail, Tarr, and Sloan, the Dark Blues gained a brilliant victory over Dublin University at Oxford on the 30th ultimo. There was a great improvement among the forwards, who showed ability to get the ball, although in this respect Dublin were almost as good. It was behind the scrum that the superiority of Oxford was so marked, the Irishmen hardly indulging in a good passing movement during the game. Martin opened the scoring with a try that was initiated by Parker, and a lucky goal was scored by Cunningham, the ball just striking the upright. Then Martin went through in brilliant fashion, and Parker followed suit, the latter showing a fine turn of speed. In the second half the Dublin line was crossed four times, Martin (twice), Buchanan, and Cronje obtaining tries. The latter's resulted from quite the best bout of passing during the afternoon. Williamson passed to Cunningham, who shortly afterwards returned the ball to him, and the South African, seeing his confrere well marked, sent out wide to the forward, who ran in. Three goals were kicked by Turner, one being kicked from close to the touch line. Result:—Oxford University, 4 goals and 3 tries (23 points); Dublin University, 0.

ST. BART'S HOSPITAL vs. ROSSLYN PARK.—At Winchmore Hill on Saturday the ground was somewhat soft, but a close and very fast game was seen. All the scoring took place in the opening half. Following several scrums in midfield, A. T. With intercepted a pass from W. Davies, and cleverly eluding the defence, ran in. Five minutes later Treloar, receiving from Ash, scored between the posts after a splendid individual effort, and C. Dixon easily converted. The Hospital three-quarters lost several opportunities through "knock ons," with the result that Rosslyn Park, on crossing over, led by 8 points to 0.

The second half was fiercely contested, the forwards continuing to show capital form. St. Bart's on restarting, gradually worked down, but met with some good tackling, Lane and Treloar being prominent, Rosslyn Park nearly scored through Ferguson and Braemar, Result:—Rosslyn Park, 1 goal 1 try (8 points); St. Bartholomew's Hospital, 0.

UNITED SERVICES vs. ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL.—The Services divided their strength on Saturday, sending as good a team as they could get together to Portland, to lose to the Channel Fleet by five tries to a goal and a dropped goal, and those who could not get away formed a formidable team to meet and defeat St. Thomas's Hospital. Sparkes, the Hospital centre-three-quarter, had the misfortune to break his left collarbone midway in the second half. The loss of a player did not affect the result in the least. The Services were the winning team from the first scrummage, their three-quarter play being splendid. A bout of passing ended in H. P. Wilson cross kicking, and enabling Orr to score after two minutes' play; Odgers converted. The Hospital pack was a long time in getting together, and by half-time the Services had, through Coopper, Bolton, and Greenfell, registered three more tries.

In the second half the medicos had seven more tries scored against them. Wilson and Coopper divided the first four between them, and then Orr got three off the reel. Odgers kicked six goals out of seven attempts, and Bolton converted two tries. The Services did not have the superiority the score indicated, and the Hospital footwork was often good. Result:—United Services, 8 goals 3 tries (49 points); St. Thomas's Hospital, 0.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY AND O. & C. SOCIETY TIE.—There was no lack of interesting golf in the annual match between Oxford University and the Oxford and Cambridge Society, which took place on the Radley Course on Saturday, when A. G. Barry, accomplished the noteworthy performances of going two consecutive holes—the 13th and 14th—in two strokes each. Score:—

JOHN BALL'S FINE RECORD.—There were 124 players at the St. Andrews meeting of the Royal Liverpool Club, which took place at Hoylake on Saturday, when a strong breeze and bad light rendered low scoring difficult. The ex-champion, John Ball, won the scratch medal with 80, John Graham, junior, being second with 82. Mr. Ball has had a remarkably successful year at Hoylake, where he has won every scratch medal.

BILLIARDS.

STEVENSON vs. REECE.—After having the worst of the match almost from the outset, Stevenson made a wonderful recovery on Saturday and gained a victory as brilliant as it must have been unexpected. He was conceding 1,600 start in 10,000 up to Thomas Reece at Thurston's Hall in Leicester-square, and when the game was proceeded with on Saturday was, at 7,741 to 8,406, still 665 behind. The scratch man commenced the afternoon session thereby increasing an incomplete 209 to 265, to which he added breaks of 50, 81, 153, 176, and 63. Still, Reece fully held his own with a magnificent 412, in addition to runs of 69, 48, 45 and 165, until towards the close, when Stevenson eclipsed everything else done in the match by compiling a wonderful break of 534. Altogether he made 1,374 to 787, and was only 78 behind at the interval. At night both played delightful billiards, Reece exceeding the 100 on three occasions with 145, 120 and 151; but Stevenson responded with 256, 232, 130 and 87, and finally won by the narrow margin of 272 points. The final scores were: Stevenson, 10,000; Reece, 9,728.

HARVERSON vs. LOVEJOY.—The sixth heat of the Burroughes and Watts Tournament at the hall in Soho-square having, owing to the unfortunate illness of Charles Dawson, to be abandoned on Tuesday last. Cecil Harverson and W. A. Lovejoy played an exhibition game of 6,000 up to eke out the week. Harverson, who, of course, was awarded the tournament heat, allowed the ex-amateur a start of 1,000, but with the latter distinctly short of practice caught and passed him on the Thursday. On Friday Harverson reached 4,802 to 4,221 and on Saturday won by 689 points. Lovejoy during the last stage was responsible for breaks of 90, 125, 58, 62, 166 and 136, while the scratch man's highest were 81, 180, 69, 69, 79, 51 and 51. The closing scores were: Harverson, 6,000; Lovejoy, 5,311.

BOXING.

COMPETITIONS AT CAMBRIDGE.—Although superabundant science was not displayed in the annual Freshmen's and Novices' Competitions in the Cambridge Corn Exchange, on Monday, the 30th ultimo, the eight boxing contests and four exhibition rounds of fencing provided some good sport.

Most promising form was exhibited by G. O. Lily, the winner of the Public Schools heavy-weight competition, who easily carried off the "Freshers" heavies. He is a younger brother of the heavy-weight Blue, who won this event last year, and although he was only in the ring for a very short period, he appeared to be a better all round man than his brother. This remains to be proved next March, when the 'Varsity Trials take place. No Freshmen contested the middles, and the Seniors were not great, Whitehead, who kept his head well, being the best. He is fairly useful with both hands, and might be made something of.

The bantams provided much amusement, but there was no boxing shown. We should, however, like to see Linnell against a good man. The best set to of the evening was undoubtedly in the Freshmen's light-weights, Chaloner beating Pegg by what must have been a very few points. If he cultivated the use of his right he should be quite good. The novices' heavy was a farce, but Scully had strained his left shoulder at football in the afternoon, and ought not to have boxed. The novices' light-weights was practically a walk-over for Jennings. Officials:—Referee, Mr. G. T. Dunning; judges, Messrs. D. Portway and A. H. Van-der-Bly; timekeeper, Mr. G. H. Fisher; seconds, Con Griffiths, Instructor Fordham, Steve Canty, and H. C. MacPherson. Fordham also acted as M.C. Details:—

MIDDLE-WEIGHT NOVICES.—First Series.

P. N. Whitehead (Clare) beat J. M. Howlett (Downing).—After three scrappy rounds, devoid of science, Whitehead got home an uppercut just before time, which sent his antagonist to the boards.

R. D. Ross (Trinity) beat G. Ward Price (St. Catharine's).—As in the first contest, there was far too much hugging. Ross did most of the leading, very frequently getting the left home, but put nothing behind it.

FINAL.

Whitehead beat Ross.—The pair were fairly matched, although Whitehead was a little the heavier. Ross showed up very badly against the Clare man, who used both hands well, and after Ross had been sent to the boards three times in two minutes the referee intervened.

BANTAM-WEIGHT NOVICES.—Final.

H. L. Linnell (Downing) beat I. Kaplan (Trinity Hall).—Linnell was unable to get at his man, who was very much the shorter, and after chasing him round the ring for three rounds, much to the amusement of the spectators, he was declared the winner without ever being called upon to box.

LIGHT-WEIGHT FRESHMEN'S.—Final.

T. W. P. L. Chaloner (Trinity) beat J. Pegg (Clare).—This was the first exhibition of anything approaching boxing. Chaloner had a big advantage in reach, and made the most of it, especially with his left. Pegg, however, stood up well, and might have won had he done some leading or been quicker with his right. As it was, he only just lost.

HEAVY-WEIGHT NOVICES.—Final.

H. J. Higgs (Magdalene) beat V. R. Scully (Downing).—Scully had injured his left shoulder, but pluckily entered the ring and stayed to the finish, but Higgs only sparred with him.

LIGHT-WEIGHT NOVICES.—Final.

R. W. Jennings (Jesus) beat G. L. Bennett Evans (Downing.)—From the start Jennings had matters all his own way. He did a considerable amount of damage with his left, and twice floored his antagonist in the opening round. Evans made a plucky effort early in the second round, but Jennings gave him such a milling that the referee stopped the contest.

HEAVY-WEIGHT FRESHMEN'S.—Final.

G. O. Lilly (Jesus) beat R. S. Adams (Trinity Hall).—Adams had the advantage in weight, but Lilly more than balanced this by science, and was always an easy winner. Things opened very steadily, but the men soon warmed to their task, and, closing, some heavy blows were exchanged. Adams several times went down, once right out of the ring, and the referee gave in for him.

FENCING.

There were a large number of entries for the fencing, which was fought on the pool system, and resulted:—

Novices' Foils.—G. G. M. Vereker (Trinity) 1, B. C. Newton (King's) 2.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

A CAPITAL run was enjoyed last bye-day, when the Bombay Hunt met at Palra and quite a number were out. Most of the way the going was good, but, the pace being of a less break-neck order than on the last occasion, the field were able to keep in view even over bad going almost all the time. One sincerely hopes the building operations that have been in hand since last we met there, will be restricted to the portion near the railway. Though this meeting place has by no means been beautified thereby, we have as yet no cause to complain of the hunting country being encroached upon.

Jammed into a narrow lane as we were, it was fortunate hounds were not long in finding and leading us out over a space of open rice fields. From this the line led through melon ground in the direction of Chuckla. Surmounting this, the thick woods are penetrated and two luckily harmless spills were experienced owing to overhanging branches. Through the dry tank and over the road the Mango Tope is reached and entered on rounding Stacey's Tank. In the stretch from there to Goregaum the field get on good terms with hounds, who bring the chase to a successful conclusion before the station is reached. It had been a long run, so that, after the presentation of the brush to Miss Forbes, we made

The first of the extra days won on Tuesday, when the Meet was at Irla, a fair field mustering first at the Jackal Club, whence tracks were made to the former place, where a native hut or two is the only sign of civilisation. It remains nippy with a cutting wind in the early hours and the dawn breaks late so that there is usually a halt before one can get to business. The covert below Jackal Hill was drawn blank, but on the top of Chuckla Hill hounds were successful. Descending the hill to the Andheri Road, some carts turned the quarry into Chuckla Lane, and out on to Bomanwadi Valley in Sahar direction. A curious incident occurred here, the huntsman's mount becoming of a sudden quite unmanageable and tearing away madly went into a bullock. The huntsman brought off a clever move by slipping off, still holding the reins, and pulling up the animal from a mad gallop to a stand still. By this time, he was out of the hunt.

Doubling back almost the way he came, the jack came across the Andheri Road, and, there being no carts this time, entered the familiar Mango Tope. The same route is now taken as last. Bye-way, through Goregaum, but this time the quarry reached the woods beyond it, and successfully evaded his pursuers.

The field on Thursday at Santa Cruz numbered a couple of score, and a very long run was enjoyed after a jack put up in the adjoining brick field. As usual, a convenient cart track was found over the melon ground in the opening part of the run, which promised to lead through Bomanwadi Valley. It did not, however, as the quarry turned into the woods on Sahar Hill apparently in the direction of Parla. Here again, he turned towards Chuckla, and as far as the Andheri Road, there was ample lepping. Hounds lost the scent till put on to it again, and must have struck it strong so fast did they move as the road was reached again, and made through the Mango Tope. From this they drove him out on to stretch for Goregaum and the pace was very fast. After a long gallop dense woods were reached in which it was difficult to follow and in which the twistings of the quarry eventually proved too much for his pursuers.

II.

THERE was a big muster at the brick fields by the Monsoon Ride last Friday for the second chase of the season, which was again run over the Salt Lake country and was consequently taken at a fast galloping pace. Fences were bigger and more frequent than in the previous week and there was in consequence a terrible lot of grief chiefly at the first mud wall—a very big affair. Mr. Bletsoe on Spinnet and Mr. Barrow on Raffles were the first to come down, their horses charging right through the obstacle. Then Mr. Euler turned over and we much regret to hear sustained a broken arm, and more unfortunates followed till the ground near the jump looked more like the scene of an unsuccessful cavalry charge than of a peaceful sporting affair. Further on in the chase Mr. Phillips—who was right up with the leaders, came down with Necklace and then at the last mud wall Lord Chester, who was lying second to Lord Harry, pecked and was almost over but just managed to recover himself and the final order was:—

1. Captain Holden on Lord Harry.
2. Captain Stewart on Merman.
3. Mr. Winkworth on Ermine.
4. Mr. Levetus on Lord Chester.
5. Mr. Ballantyne on Fairy.
6. Mr. Corbett on Queen of Hearts.
7. Mr. Muir on Ryong.
8. Mr. Curtis-Hayward on Pardon.
9. Mr. Halliday on Rainbow.
10. Mr. Wallace Jones on Matsumata.
11. Mr. Deakin on Trilby.
12. Lord Francis Scott on Fermoy.

The Pony Chase also attracted a very fair field, but though the first five came in very close together the remainder straggled in at somewhat lengthy intervals. The following was the order:—

1. Mr. Tanner on Emerald.
2. Mr. Ballantyne on Meprise.
3. Mr. Levetus on Lily II.
4. Captain Holden on Pathfinder.
5. Mr. Stokes on Loch Lily.
6. Mr. Corbett on Pink 'Un.
7. Mr. Muir on Ungava.
8. Mr. Milton on Marconi.
9. Mr Bletsoe on Dynamite.
10. Mr. Hutchison on Guardian.

In the morning a mission worker was soliciting contributions towards helping the work along. Stopping at a house, she pulled the bell, which was answered by a sickly-looking woman. "Can you contribute anything for the drunkards' home?" she asked of the woman whom she had summoned to the door. "Yes," replied the woman, "come back next Saturday night and get my husband."

THE CONNELL CUP TOURNAMENT.

ALLAHABAD GYMKHANA "A" TEAM vs. "B" TEAM.—The tournament began on the 14th instant at Allahabad with the above game which ended after slow and sticky play in a win for "A" Team.

First Chukker.—Play was chiefly in the "B" territory. After Brind had failed to score, Bradley drew first blood. A penalty hit for offside against "B" was not improved upon and another chance to score was not taken advantage of.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play. "B" Team played up and scored their only goal. They did most of the attacking, but lost chances through faulty shooting.

Third Chukker.—Up and down play. "A" Team scored a goal.

Fourth Chukker.—Both goals were visited in turn, but it was not till just before the close of the chukker that "A" Team's score was augmented by Durack.

Fifth Chukker.—"A" Team got on and hit a goal. "B" then pressed but could not score, and Bradley getting possession shot a fifth goal for "A," who attacked for the rest of the period.

Sixth Chukker.—Midfield play was followed by an attack on "B's" goal. Jardine hit behind twice in order to save, but the penalty hits were not successful. Just before time Bradley scored for "A," who thus won by 6 goals to 1. Teams:—

Semi-Finals.

68TH DURHAM L. I. vs. 60TH RIFLES.—A very level game was witnessed between these teams on the 16th instant, the Durhams eventually winning by the odd goal in five.

First Chukker:—Up and down play followed by an invasion of the Rifles' territory. Harker hit behind, but nothing came of the penalty hit. The Durhams continued to press and Turner shot a goal.

Second Chukker.—Each team attacked in turn. Luard shot at goal and missed, but Turner made no mistake, scoring shortly after.

Third Chukker.—The Durhams pressed, but were forced back and level play followed. At length the Rifles got away. Board hit a goal and they almost got through again before the period ended.

Fourth Chukker.—The Durhams attacked and the 60th hit behind. No score resulted, but Turner added another goal soon afterwards. The 60th pressed for the rest of the chukker.

Fifth Chukker.—Luard just missed a good shot at goal. Heseltine relieved the pressure, and coming away hit a goal for the 60th, who were attacking when the bugle sounded.

Sixth Chukker.—An exciting period. The 60th made big efforts to equalise, but were unsuccessful, the Durhams winning by 3 goals to 2. Teams.—

4TH CAVALRY SUBALTERNS vs. ALLAHABAD GYMKHANA "A"—The second game on the 16th was between the above and was a slow game. The teams were level at half time, but in the last three chukkers the Cavalry walked away and won by 7 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—The Cavalry attacked but did not score, and the Gymkhana brought the ball away, but the Cavalry returned to the attack and eventually scored from a mêlee.

Second Chukker.—Both goals were visited and the Gymkhana scored.

Third Chukker.—The Cavalry scored through Harenc, but the Gymkhana were not long in equalising; Durack putting the ball through.

Fourth Chukker.—Slow up and down play till Wilson scored for the fourth, a second shot by the same player shortly after was unsuccessful.

Fifth Chukker.—The 4th pressed and Benton scored. After a spell in midfield the 4th again got away; Harenc scored with a long shot and before the close of the period added another goal.

Sixth Chukker.—A penalty for offside against the 4th was unproductive. Level play followed till the fourth carried the ball down and Benton put it through. The Gymkhana's efforts were unavailing and they were beaten as stated. Teams:—

Semi-Finals.

68TH DURHAM L. I. vs. 60TH RIFLES.—A very level game was witnessed between these teams on the 16th instant, the Durhams eventually winning by the odd goal in five.

First Chukker:—Up and down play followed by an invasion of the Rifles' territory. Harker hit behind, but nothing came of the penalty hit. The Durhams continued to press and Turner shot a goal.

Second Chukker.—Each team attacked in turn. Luard shot at goal and missed, but Turner made no mistake, scoring shortly after.

Third Chukker.—The Durhams pressed, but were forced back and level play followed. At length the Rifles got away. Board hit a goal and they almost got through again before the period ended.

Fourth Chukker.—The Durhams attacked and the 60th hit behind. No score resulted, but Turner added another goal soon afterwards. The 60th pressed for the rest of the chukker.

Fifth Chukker.—Luard just missed a good shot at goal. Heseltine relieved the pressure, and coming away hit a goal for the 60th, who were attacking when the bugle sounded.

Sixth Chukker.—An exciting period. The 60th made big efforts to equalise, but were unsuccessful, the Durhams winning by 3 goals to 2. Teams.—

4TH CAVALRY SUBALTERNS vs. ALLAHABAD GYMKHANA "A"—The second game on the 16th was between the above and was a slow game. The teams were level at half time, but in the last three chukkers the Cavalry walked away and won by 7 goals to 2.

First Chukker.—The Cavalry attacked but did not score, and the Gymkhana brought the ball away, but the Cavalry returned to the attack and eventually scored from a mêlee.

Second Chukker.—Both goals were visited and the Gymkhana scored.

Third Chukker.—The Cavalry scored through Harenc, but the Gymkhana were not long in equalising; Durack putting the ball through.

Fourth Chukker.—Slow up and down play till Wilson scored for the fourth, a second shot by the same player shortly after was unsuccessful.

Fifth Chukker.—The 4th pressed and Benton scored. After a spell in midfield the 4th again got away: Harenc scored with a long shot and before the close of the period added another goal.

Sixth Chukker.—A penalty for offside against the 4th was unproductive. Level play followed till the fourth carried the ball down and Benton put it through. The Gymkhana's efforts were unavailing and they were beaten as stated. Teams:—

Umpires:—Captains Jeffreys and Pollock.

DURHAM L. I. vs. 4TH CAVALRY.—The final was played on the 18th instant and was won by the Durhams. The Cavalry's display was disappointing and they were eventually defeated by 6 goals to 2. General and Mrs. Keir, the Brigade Staff and the 28th Battery, R. F. A., were "At Home," and the Band of the Middlesex Regiment was in attendance. Lady Hewett gave away the cup to the winners at the conclusion of the game.

First Chukker.—The Durhams pressed throughout the opening period, Turner and Luard registering a goal each. Just before the bugle, Benton got away and put in a shot for the Cavalry, but failed to score.

Second Chukker—Up and down play and then the Durhams again attacked, Turner and Luard being responsible for two more points.

Third Chukker.—The 4th pressed and Wilson just missed. The Durhams got the ball from the hit in and Turner scored Wilson once more got possession and drew first blood for the Cavalry, even play closing the chukker.

Fourth Chukker.—The 4th showed much improved form and play was up and down in this period, nothing being scored.

Fifth Chukker.—Luard got away and transferred to McCullagh, who scored. The 4th then pressed and Wilson scored from a centre by Benton.

Sixth Chukker.—Play was very level in the final period, and there was no further scoring, the Durhams winning the game by 6 goals to 2. Teams as before.

Umpires :—Colonel De Lisle and Captain Pollock.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. NATTORE'S XI.—Played on the 19th and 20th. Calcutta winning easily. The visitors had first lease of the wickets but collapsed miserably. They were all out for 70, Oghad Sankar 17 and Razak 14, being the only players to reach double figures. Fowke took 6 wickets for 36 and Stewart four for 18. Calcutta had made 19 when stumps were drawn on Saturday, and continuing their innings the next day ran the score to 178 for 8 wickets when they declared. Craik 52 not out was top scorer. Nattore went in again and put up 122 for the loss of 4 wickets. Score :—

BALLYGUNGE vs. OLYMPIANS.—Ballygunge suffered their first defeat this season at the hands of the Olympians on Sunday last, the margin against them being the narrow one of only 8 runs. The home team have only got themselves to blame, as for once their fielding was simply pitiful, catch after catch, (many of them absolute sitters) was dropped, and considerably more than the adverse margin given away in wild overthrows. It is true that the offenders only formed a small minority of the eleven, but the whole team had to suffer, and the Club's unbroken record into the bargain. Ballygunge opened with White and Mytton, and for a short time runs came at a tremendous pace, but it was too good to last, and with their departure, something very like a collapse set in, 5 wickets being down for less than 50 runs. Then Gould and Beddy came to the rescue and took the score to 129 before they were parted, the former being bowled by his brother for an invaluable 50; Beddy suffered a like fate at the hands of the same bowler, when his score was 40. The rest did nothing much and the innings closed for the poor total of 166. Shortly after the visitors opened their innings a curious incident happened, Mc Intyre being given out caught at the wicket before he had made double figures; he however, went gaily on, no one seeming to have heard the umpire's decision correctly. He was subsequently not dismissed until he had 65 to his credit, a valuable innings but lucky, as the field were very kind to him more than once. Useful contributions from Ferguson 24 and A. Gould 45 brought the total to 174, when the last man being absent the innings closed. Frost kept wicket splendidly, giving away only one leg by. For the winners A. Gould bowled very well, and met with considerable success, his 7 wickets costing only 37 runs. Scores :—

New No. 2 ·360 Bore

In comparison with the ·400/·360 the muzzle velocity of this new Cartridge is approximately 230 F.S. higher, and although the charge is increased the same low pressure, viz., 14 tons, is maintained. The increased velocity coupled with the extra weight of bullet and consequent greater striking energy gives one a rifle that has practically the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express, and is consequently an ideal weapon for deer stalking and for shooting heavier forms of non-dangerous game; moreover, in consequence of the importation of the ·303 into India being prohibited, it is well worthy the notice of Sportsmen in that country who desire to have a weapon in which is combined High Velocity, Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, Minimum Recoil, and in which, through low pressure, a greater margin of safety is given and the risk of jamming reduced to a minimum.

The next competition, which is for the Wimbledon Cup, takes place on Wednesday and Thursday, 6th and 7th January 1909.

THE following colloquy took place between a barrister and a witness who "would talk back :" "You say, sir, the prisoner is a thief?"

"Yes, sir. 'Cause why, she has confessed she was."

"And you also swear she worked for you after this confession?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then we are to understand that you employ dishonest people to work for you, even after their rascalities are known?"

"Of course. How else would I get assistance from a lawyer?"

A Scotchman wishing to know his fate at once, telegraphed a proposal of marriage to the lady of his choice. After spending the entire day at the telegraph office, he was finally rewarded late in the evening by an affirmative answer.

"If I were you," suggested the operator, when he delivered the message, "I'd think twice before I'd marry a girl that kept me waiting all day for my answer."

"Na, na," retorted the Scot, "the lass who waits for the night rates is the lass for me."

DAVIS CUP CONTEST.

THE SINGLES.

The struggle between America and Australasia for the Davis Challenge Cup began at Melbourne on the 27th ultimo. The popularity of the contest was attested by the number of spectators, and every State in Australia was represented. Two of the four singles matches were played, and it was interesting to note that in each case the left-handed player won. In the first N. E. Brookes scored for Australasia over F. B. Alexander, the American representative, and in the second Beals C. Wright restored the American prestige by defeating A. F. Wilding.

The match between Wright and Wilding was shorter and sharper than its predecessor. These players, as they stood face to face, were seen to be heavier men than Brookes and Alexander. Wright does not flit from place to place as ...gantly as Alexander. He makes heavier going of ... but he arrives. A stroke of which he largely avails himself is the lob, and how heartbreaking its continuance may be to an opponent every tennis player knows. The characteristics of Wilding's play were his long, low drives and his smashes. The New Zealander's most successful showing was in the first and second sets, in which he more than held his own. Thereafter Wright settled down to the game in deadly earnest, and by strict attention to business, placed the issue beyond doubt. Wright, who was literally gasping with the vigour of his serves, held the New Zealander in the hollow of his hand in the last set, in which the American won five games to Wilding's "love." Perhaps once or twice ...ding did not do himself justice, but it must be remembered that he was standing up to such a display of tennis as is seldom witnessed—tennis that might have momentarily shaken the morale of any player, however self-possessed; but the cheers that he shared with his opponent when the rubber was at end and he had been defeated by three sets to one showed that he had nothing to be ashamed of in having to yield to such an adversary as Beals Wright.

N. E. Brookes (Australasia) beat F. B. Alexander (America), 5—7, 9—7, 6—2, 4—6, 6—3.

B. C. Wright (America) beat A. F. Wilding (Australasia), 3—6, 7—5, 6—3, 6—1.

The two singles matches, which were to decide supremacy, were played on the 30th ultimo, and to Anthony F. ...ding, winner of the final contest, is due the honour of having placed Australasia in the position which she holds in the tennis world to-day. The issue was in doubt until the last. Those who watched were treated in the opening sets to such an exhibition of tennis on the part of Brookes as was not excelled even by Wilding's victory of three straight at the conclusion of the day's play. For a time it seemed as though Brookes was above himself. No one could have maintained to the end the standard which he set.

The first contest was that between Wright and Brookes. The quality of Brookes' play may be gauged from the fact ...at he won the first set to love, his opponent failing to score a game until the second set. In the first half of the second set the games began to alternate, and the score at one stage was 3 all. Then Brookes seemed to become irresis... once more, and won at 6—3. It was at this juncture that the brilliancy of Wright's overhead play began to tell, and after a keen and exhausting struggle, extending over 12 games, the third set fell to the American by 7 games to 5. The fourth set was a triumph for ...right by 6 games to 2, but the score does not indicate how gallantly Brookes fought every stroke of every exchange.

Brookes and Wright having each won 2 sets, the deciding one was begun. Wright won three games before his opponent scored, but Brookes drew level with him at 4 all, excited by the Victorian's display some of his admirers began to barrack for him. Then each player won a game about until Wright's score was 11 and Brooke's 10. Here Wright simply smashed his way to victory.

The score in rubbers was 2 all, and the fourth match had fallen to America, leaving Alexander and Wilding to fight out the deciding contest. The cheers which greeted Wright's success having died away, the lawn, which was playing fast and true, was rolled, and Alexander and Wilding joined issue. As compared with the play of the previous pair, much of which was cut and thrust at close quarters, the long-range tennis of these two furnished an interesting contrast. ...ault-lessly accurate drives skimmed from service line to service line, and many of the strokes were of a character which rendered it possible to return them several times in succession. ...is conduced to open, even play, so regular that it was restful to watch after the snatch and recovery of the previous contest. Alexander had not forgotten the effectiveness of his smash, which he used whenever he thought there was an opportunity, yet in the first two sets Wilding more than held his own by virtue of his masterly service and his terrific hitting from the back line. ...e score, which was a fairly accurate reflex of the merit of his play, showed that in the first set he won 6 games to 5, and the second terminated in his favour by 6 games to 4. Amid intense excitement the third set began. Alexander's keenness led him to try for everything it was possible to reach, but Wilding refused to be disconcerted by the fleetness and skill which were opposed to him. Playing fast and well, maintaining an even standard of excellence, he won 4 games in succession. Then there was a check to his progress in the shape of a game to Alexander. Confident still, the New Zealander went on, and without another reverse won the set, the rubber, and the championship for Australasia.

THE DOUBLES.

The double championship in the Davis Cup competition was won by Australasia on the 28th ultimo. Those who sat and sweltered in the sun saw the game of a lifetime, and when at last Australasia won and America leapt the net to congratulate the victors such cheers went up as had never before been heard on an Australian tennis court. Long before the first game started the stands were crowded to their full capacity. ...ach of the players was intensely keen. Alexander in particular displayed hair-trigger readiness in attack and defence. Comment has been made that hitherto the Americans have perhaps had "something up their sleeve," but on Saturday the last ounce of their reserve force was expended, and the manner of its expenditure was uplifting to watch. As for the Australasian representatives, it was equally clear that there was nothing concealed in their sleeves. The ground was playing fast and well, and rally after rally keyed the watchers to a pitch of excitement which found vent in the rattle of applause when Brookes and Wilding won the first set by 6 games to 4. An attractive feature of the play, in the second round which was repeated again and again, were the brief duels across the net in which two opponents would use their rackets almost with the rapidity displayed by fencers. In the seventh game of the set a temporary diversion was caused by the necessity for settling whether "net" or "fault" was called. The difficulty was overcome by allowing the service to be repeated. It was won by the American, who lost the next, perhaps intentionally, through overlapping. This is not the first occasion on which Wright and Alexander have shown that rather than obtain an advantage as to the fairness of which there is the faintest shadow of doubt they prefer to lose a stroke. To decide the third set 12 games were necessary, and exciting it was. Rallies at the net were frequent. Those between Wright and Wilding were marvellous in their fierce accuracy. This set was a neck-and-neck contest; indeed, each side winning game about until the Americans had scored 6 games to their opponents' 5. Wright and Alexander were working together like indispensable parts of the same machine. The fourth set was won by America by 6 games to 2.

Better tennis than had already been seen was not looked for, and although the standard was maintained there was among the spectators a consciousness of fuller anticipation of the fifth and final set. There was a tense silence, which was broken only by gasps and ejaculations, for the situation was too strained for prolonged applause. The Americans won the first two games. The next two were taken by the Australasians. Each side played superb tennis. The pace was keen. Everything was done at the charge. Only in the intervals between the games was cheering possible. Australasia drew ahead, and established a lead of 5 games to 3. In the ninth game the accuracy displayed by both sides in timing and placing balls eclipsed even their own high standard. America won. It was Wilding's serve in the tenth game. Playing with a nerve and impetus that would not be denied, the Australasian players brought the score to 40—15; but Wright and Alexander, whose brilliant skill did not fail them on such an occasion as this, when they never had greater need for it, brought the score to "40 all." Every individual in the crowd was tingling with excitement, and when the umpire called "Advantage, Wright," and the Americans were within a stroke of victory, it was hardly in human nature to repress itself. Wilding's long drive met Wright's lob at once, and as the ball was returned Brookes smashed it back, and saved the situation. Wright fell in reaching for a stroke, and Alexander kept both his opponents at bay until his partner was on his feet again, trying to explain entirely unnecessarily that he had fallen down. By this time the less stoical of the spectators were almost hysterical. The climax came with a magnificent rally, at the end of which ...exander attempting the impossible, strove to return a ball from Wilding. Striking as he fell, he rolled over and over into a corner of the court. His head wrenched up to see where his desperate stroke had placed the ball. The next stroke gave the victory to Australasia, and, amid a roar of cheers, everybody shook hands with everybody else. The defeated players—true sportsmen to the last—were the first to congratulate the men who had beaten them. The match was won by 25 games to 23, and the closeness of the play from the beginning of the first singles contest may be gauged by the fact that each side had exactly 70 games to its credit.

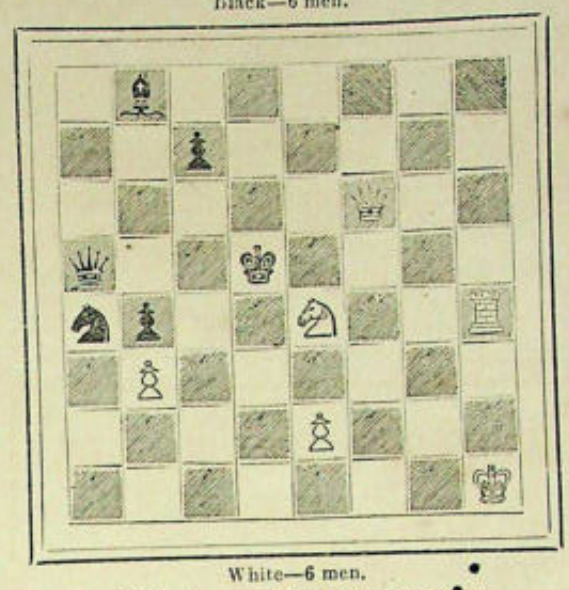
THE LONDON COMEDY COMPANY.



The Ward Company maintain their reputation for versatility with each new presentation and it is difficult to say in which play they have been seen to the greatest advantage. "The Talk of the Town," the latest production at the Opera House, is certainly one of the funniest they have staged so far, full of boisterous humour and abounding in diverting situations. The House was packed at each performance, the audience most appreciative and the laughter unrestrained throughout. Charles Fullalove, a young married man, is part proprietor of a music hall—a fact which he conceals from his wife and guardian. His constant absences and late nights arouse their suspicions, and the appearance on the scene of Tilly Duval, a music hall artiste and her jealous lover, Peter Sledge, the heavy-weight pugilist, bring about further domestic strife. Charles is anxious to obtain ...s guardian's signature to a document, which will give him control over some money left him in his father's will. To attain his ends he secures the aid of Herr Professor Franz, a hypnotist, who puts the ...fluence ... an old Fullalove, and the humour of the play hinges on the extraordinary behaviour of the old man whilst under the hypnotic treatment. Mr. Ward as Andrew Fullalove was inimitable; he kept within the bounds of farce without degenerating to clowning, and sustained the character admirably. He had his audience helpless with laughter most of the time and the merriment was uproarious when under the hypnotic influence he discloses that in his giddy youth he was a noted masher, when he bathes a baby on the stage, and finally when he takes the place of an absent pugilist in an encounter with Peter Sledge. His tornado-like exhibition of the noble art was excruciatingly funny. Miss Grace Palotta, as the merry sporting girl, with a predilection for boxing and the columns of the Pink Un was charmingly vivacious. Miss Celia Conlon, (Tilly Duval) Miss Rose Musgrove (young Mrs. Fullalove) were both excellent, while Miss Ruby Baxter made a lively house-maid. Messrs. Ryott and Eldred, the proprietors of the Apollo Hall, were seen at their best, and Mr. Robert Greig, (the heavy-weight champion) and Mr. Reg. Wykeham, as Professor Franz) were most effective, while a special word must be said for the singing and dancing of Mr. H. ... Wallace, the sprightly call-boy. A number of variety items were interpolated in the programme, Mr. Ward's eccentric dancing, and songs by Miss Palotta and Miss Musgrove were encored again and again. The company's list of holiday attractions is excellent and we would draw the attention of our readers to the programme, appearing elsewhere, of the special pantomime and vaudeville entertainment for Xmas Eve. The entire strength of the Company will appear in musical sketch and burlesque items, the feature of the evening being a representation of Mr. Hugh J. Ward's fantastic creation "The Scarecrow," as performed by him at Drury Lane Theatre in the company of such renowned comedians as Dan Leno and Harry Randall. On Boxing Night this attractive programme will be repeated and on Christmas night a sacred and classical concert will be given.

THE SEVEN STAGES.

All the world's a wardrobe,
And all the girls and women merely wearers.
They have their fashions and their fantasies.
And each one in her time wears many garments
Throughout her seven stages. First the Baby,
Befrilled and broidered, in her nurse's arms;
And then the trim-hosed School-Girl with her flounces,
And small-boy scorning face, tripping, skirt-waggling,
Coquettishly to school. And then the Flirt,
Ogling like Circe, with a business acillade
Kept on her low-cut corset. Then a Bride,
Full of strange finery, vestured like an angel,
Veiled vaporously, yet vigilant of glance,
Seeking the woman's heaven—admiration,—
Even at the altar's mouth. And then the Matron,
In fair, rich velvet, with suave satin lined,
With eyes severe and skirts of youthful cut,
Full of dress saws and modish instances,
To teach her girls their part. The sixth age shifts
Into the grey, yet gorgeous Grandmamma,
With gold pince-nez on nose and fan at side,
Her youthful tastes still strong, and worldly wise,
In sumptuary law, her quavering voice,
Prosing of fashion and Le Follet pipes,
Of robes and bargains rare. Last scene of all,
That ends the sex's Mode-swayed history,
Is Second Childishness and sheer oblivion
Of youth, taste, passion—all save Love of Dress.

CLOSE OF THE ENGLISH FLAT RACING SEASON.

THE wind up of the English flat racing season was a busy and exciting one, but the results made little or no difference in the list of winning owners, Mr. J. B. Joel's position at the head of which has for a long time been assured. The owner of the green and pink striped jacket tops the list with £26,246, which is nearly double the record achieved by Mr. L. Neumann, who comes second with £13,617. The latter has won ten races with four horses, but it took eleven of Mr. Joel's thoroughbreds to capture the nineteen races which fell to his credit.

Mr. Fairie occupies third place with £13,038, all of which was credited to him by one horse which won seven races, then come the Messrs. Clark and Robinson, the Australian sportsmen, who have shared in twenty-nine victories which have netted them some £12,017. The winnings of four other owners run into five figures. They include the Italian sportsman Chevalier Ginistrelli, whose Signorinetta caused such a sensation by carrying off the Epsom Derby, a success she followed up two days later by winning the Oaks at the same fixture, Mr. W. H. Walker, Mr. Reid Walker, and Lord Carnarvon.

As regards the number of races won the popular Jockey Club Steward Lord Durham is an easy first, his purple and straw colours having been to the fore on nearly forty occasions, mostly in plates, which accounts for his winnings only amounting to a little over £7,000. Mr. L. de Rothschild's blue and yellow has not been so prominent as that of Lord Durham, but his winnings amount to nearly two thousand pounds more as also does those of Mr. W. Raphael.

Other owners who have won between three and seven thousand pounds since the season commenced at Lincoln in March include His Majesty the King, Sir D. Cooper, Mr. Barclay Walker, Mr. A. Belmont, Mr. A. Stedall, Mr. R. Croker, Lord Rosebery, Colonel T. Y. L. Kirkwood, Mr. A. F. Basset, Lord Derby, Mr. J. Buchanan, Sir R. Griffith, Lord Ellesmere, Mr. P. Nelke, Mr. W. M. G. Singer, Lord Westbury, Mr. R. J. Farquharson, Mr. W. C. Cooper, Lord Howard de Walden, Mr. J. S. Morrison, and the Hon'ble G. Lambton.

After the number of outsiders which have cropped up this year to win handicaps and classic races, future-event wagering will be more unpopular than ever. Favourites will be at a discount; in fact, there will be an atmosphere of pessimism about important races. It is nothing new to see big outsiders successful, but certainly in this matter the past season has been one to remember.

It is true that in 1901 both the winner of the Cesarewitch, Balsarroch, and the Cambridgeshire winner Watershed, started at 25 to 1. That same year the winner of the St. Leger, Doricles, started at 40 to 1. The Stewards' Cup winner, O'Donovan Rossa, was at 66 to 1. The Jubilee was won by Santoi at 25 to 1, and the Two Thousand Guineas by Handicapper at 33 to 1. This has been such a persistent season, however, with Signorinetta, Norman III., Marcovil, Santeve and company, that backers of favourites will take a pull at themselves, and go very warily.

If the season had been an abnormal one as regards weather, the many upsets would have been more easily understood. It is, too, rather curious that there should so many outsiders successful, because the present-day follower of racing is so much better posted up than was his prototype of a generation ago. Nowadays the very latest news from training quarters or from the course, is served up hot by the morning or evening papers. Books of "form" are sold at a price within the reach of every pocket, and altogether the game of racing, so far as public form and expectations are concerned, is an open page to those who undeavour to make profit on the turf. This suggests that the present student of racing may be a little over educated, and so overreach himself.

The public does not mind an outsider when it is a good horse, for those who have the true interests of sport at heart must be pleased that they have found it repeating its previous form. This is so much better than when an equine racer at hopeless odds crops up, having given in-and-out running during the whole season. Deceivers among race-horses we have no use for. Sometimes in this connection it is to be feared that the horse may be blamed where we should abuse something on two legs.

Another feature of the season just concluded has been the remarkable success achieved by the young feather-weight jockey F. Wootton, who, but for a few months' suspension from the saddle near the end of the campaign, would undoubtedly have been champion jockey. Wootton, who did not reach his fifteenth year until the 14th instant (December), started on the last week of the season 14 points behind the American horseman Danny Maher, whose lead he reduced on the opening day to 10. This gave the supporters of Maher a fright, for whereas on the previous Saturday it appeared as if the American's position at the head of affairs was "dead sure," it now looked as though there was a possibility of his losing his place to the little Colonial. However, the latter did not maintain his excellent form, and Maher putting in one or two additional victories later on in the week he carried off the coveted honour among the knights of the pigskin.

Wootton may well be proudly satisfied with his brilliant performance, as in riding the number of winners which have fallen to his share, he has set up an extraordinary record for one of his years.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

A Happy New Year to all our friends, supporters and well-wishers: may 1909 bring them and us good luck.

The first and second days of the Calcutta big meeting provided some excellent racing, and as the favourites got home in most cases the public were well satisfied on the whole, though the Viceroy's Cup was a big upset. The chief interest, of course, centred in this race and the Trials. In the latter it was a pity that Sham Fight got away badly as it would have been interesting to see him race with Tangaroa. Fast as the latter travelled the English horse would certainly have been somewhere with him, judging from the gallop he put up in the Calcutta Plate on the 26th, when he ran the six furlongs in 1min. 14⅘secs., a record for the race, we believe. Tangaroa's time for the Trials was also a record, 1min. 41⅕secs., according to the official clocking, and private watches made it even less. It is easier to give away weight than start and with Sham Fight standing still when the gate went up and Tangaroa on his feet and away, there was nothing in the field that could face it with him at all. His time 48secs., for the first four furlongs is a criterion of the speed at which he travelled and it proves that there are still first-class sprint horses to be had from Australia.

The much-talked of Bedouin ran badly in the Trials, but the gallop brought him on a bit and he showed better form in the Cup, though a jostle early in the race gave him no chance of getting into a place. It was a real bad bump and very nearly knocked the jockey off altogether; indeed it is a miracle how young Barrett ever got back as both his legs were on the same side of the saddle. After the Trials interest in The Bedouin for the Cup fell off and his price lengthened considerably, while Tangaroa shortened up to sixes. There was, however, never any question that Mr. Galstaun, though backing both, thought he had much the better chance with Misty Morn. The Kour Sahib's stable thought they had reasonable hopes of getting placed at any rate with either or both of their two but preferred Absentee of the pair and though they backed them both and had a very good win on the race, it was Absentee that carried most of the money and he started at the comparatively short price of sixes and twos.

Robinson chose the mount on Tangaroa in preference to Misty Morn in Galstaun's stable and, as the handsome bay would require too much pulling about to keep behind, he let him go along to the front to run his own race. Unfortunately for him Mr. Apcar had deputed Auber to repeat Ballark's tactics of last year and cut out anything that was going out in consequence. Tangaroa instead of being able to go his own pace in peace, raced away with Auber and, though the latter only lasted at the game about three-quarters of a mile he had done his work and Tangaroa was "bust up" three furlongs from home. Fitzgrafton was beaten long before, about the mile post. Misty Morn began to flag at the four furlongs and The Kour Sahib's pair had the race in hand between them, Wandin winning in record time 3mins. 2secs. We offer our congratulations to that good sportsman, the Kour Sahib, who, since Cherry won in 1899, has not had the best of luck. Willy Southall had been saying for some time past that he would win on Wandin but Cassandra like was "believed by none," and it is very hard luck on him that he should have been laid up when the day came. Firth stepped in for the ride and we congratulate him heartily on his win. He is a hard working boy of the right sort who deserves success.

On looks no one would have Wandin on his mind at any price as his appearance was distinctly scraggy and not at all pleasing. They say, however, that he used to be even worse when he was winning races in Australia and Mr. Dangar, who, we believe, bred the horse, thought that Tom Scott had worked wonders with him. Absentee was glorious to look upon and on the parade was to the eye the only horse that could possibly be considered as good as or better than Fitzgrafton. What a pity that the latter's foot was not right to give us a chance of seeing him fight out the finish. It would have been a glorious struggle at the end of such a race.

Bantock ran a real good horse, finishing third. This horse was brought out for a Colombo sportsman by Mr. Ernest Day; his price being in the vicinity of £300. As Mr. Day assures us that he has now with him horses as good or even better than Bantock, all in excellent condition and going cheap, we will not be surprised to hear that his shipment will soon be snapped up.

Bar the big events the racing on Trials day was much better than on the other, when it was of a very poor description, as may be judged from the fields that went out. Pony Hurdles 5, Dealers' Plate 5, Eclipse Pony Plate 8, Calcutta Plate 8, Pavilion Plate 7. The Pony Hurdles was the prettiest race of the lot, as there was a fine fight between Captain Meynell on Recovery and Captain Charrington on Solace, and the former just got the better of it. Sutton put up a wonderful performance on Bandy Leg. The pony jumped very big at the first hurdle and the jockey lost his stirrup, then the little 2lb. saddle began to slip and eventually Sutton rode him, and rode him well, over five flights of hurdles sitting on the flap with the seat of the saddle underneath the animal. He ran wide at the last hurdle or might well have been placed. Dormant won the Dealers' Plate in a walk. Circus Girl disappointed expectation by being beaten by that wonderful pony Bonita II. in the Eclipse Pony Plate. Sham Fight just smothered his field in the Calcutta Plate (6 furlongs in 1min. 14⅘secs.), and the best part of the race was the fight between gallant old Sermon and Wise Bird for second place, which the chestnut just succeeded in securing from the four-year-old. The Pavilion Plate was fairly interesting as is usually the case with round the course races, but The Master was always lying in a good position and had it at his mercy whenever he liked, making his second win in two days.

On Trials day the sport was better, there were seven races on the card, some of them seemed pretty open and the fields in three of the flat races were good; good fields went to the post for each race: Paddock Plate 16, International Pony 7, Ellenborough Plate I 7, Grand Stand Plate 13, Ellenborough Plate II, 10. In the Burdwan Cup the field was much depleted by one or another mischance and only six started. Captain Barrett had no difficulty in winning on the favourite, Kipling, despite the big weight. Fireworks, last year's winner, was favourite for the Paddock Plate, but The Master, who is in much better form than last season, came out in the finish and beat her easily by three lengths. Lady Avon of course won the International Pony Race with ease and will probably continue to do so till "Anno Domini" begins to stiffen her, as it will be very hard to find her equal. Wakeful repeated last year's performance and ran a bad second. A very hot favourite got beaten in Uro in the Ellenborough Plate (Division I). He ran all over the course at the finish, and Morette, who was also fairly well backed, just scored by a short head. Mereworth, the second favorite, won the Grand Stand Plate; Mauvette, who was most backed, running nowhere. The other division of the Ellenborough Plate was a gift for the favourite Tana, who won it by two lengths, running away.

There was a very good day's racing for the Third Day on Thursday and on the whole the handicappers made a success of matters. It was distinctly a one stable and one jockey day, as Mumford won four out of the seven races, and Whalley, his second string, rode them all as the weights were too light for Rickaby. Sport opened with the Grand Annual for which eleven started. Cairnsmore was a very hot favourite and must have been backed for a pile of money to stand at 6 to 4 in a good betting race. As is right in hurdle races they started fairly slowly and in consequence the field were pretty well together at the last hurdle, from where Foy, whom Mr. Cowper has got in fine condition, looked all over a winner, and though Merry Elsie made a great attempt to beat him, he succeeded in getting home a neck in front of her. Marmalade III. showed nothing of her last year's form, and though she led for half the distance was never in it when it came to galloping. Cairnsmore, the favourite, seemed to lie too far out of his ground at first and made it up too quickly between the mile and the 6 furlong post and in consequence was beaten when they began to race.

The Mistletoe Plate had thirteen starters and Arabian Night, the favourite, had the race won from the word go, though Pincher stayed with him till 150 yards from home, and there was a slashing good finish between the first four. Bridge Knight in Murdison's hands showed some form at last and finished second. Sweet Lavender gave a lot of trouble at the post and was again left.

Red Tape, who looked to have a chance, was scratched in the Xmas Selling Handicap and out of the ten starters only Dulcimer and Dormant were in it, the former winning in the last half furlong. Robinson rode a very well judged race on the winner, taking a steadier when he found the pace too hot and then coming again on the outside when the other was tiring. Lipscombe broke the gate before the race and Mr. Bates effected a good start with the flag.

Another favourite won in the Sandown Park Plate, Master Theo a ¾ chance getting home comfortably in front of Mereworth; Killua, the second favourite, shut in on the rails and unable to get through.

The Cooch Behar Cup was the big race of the day and a real good field of fifteen strong went out for it. Pelargonium II, Tangaroa and Kaffirpan were backed most heavily. Tangaroa and Wandin next. The race from the distance developed into a struggle between Shamfight and Pelargonium II, the rest nowhere, and though the former looked a winner for a bit he was rolling at the finish and the favourite, proving the better stayer, managed to win by three-quarters of a length. Both Whalley on the winner and Barret on Shamfight deserve credit for riding a real good race.

The Lawn Plate had the best field of the day, sixteen starters. Prince Lyon, the favourite, ran a bad horse, and Crossbred, who stood at sixes, won pretty easily. Morette, who was the only other much backed, was just beaten for third place on the post by Metal Boy, who came with a great rush, and Rustile, who stood at any price, ran second.

The stands had plenty to amuse them in the start for the Gunny Meah Cup, the pony round-the-course race, as first Lady Vera reared up and nearly got rid of her jockey and Picaninny, who was very troublesome, eventually succeeded in dropping her's neatly over her head. However, he remounted and at last got her in some sort of position to start, but was badly away when the gate went up. Refresher, who was a piping hot favourite, won the race very easily, but Cheeky surprised most people by running into second place. Moira made the pace a scorcher for the first mile and a quarter with the result that it quite broke up the top weights Wakeful, Yankee Boy and Lady Nannie, and the time 2mins. 57⅕secs. is wonderfully good for ponies, only ⅕sec. more than Fizz and Galloping Girl's dead heat in the Cornwallis Plate

We have a very interesting card again for to-day, but as the handicaps are not out at the time of writing these notes it is impossible to comment on them. The races include a six furlong handicap for all ponies 14-2 and under, the Chowringhee Plate, a six furlong handicap for horses, the Macpherson Cup, 1 mile 6 furlongs 132 yards handicap for all horses, a six furlong handicap for small ponies, and three races for second class horses, so we may expect to see all the best animals in Calcutta running that have not had enough of it in the first three days, especially as there is now an interval of over a fortnight before there is any more racing on the flat.

On Saturday we shall all be out at Tollygunge for the Steeplechases, which unfortunately are likely to be a bit below the average this year as so many of our jumpers have crocked up. The Stewards have not included a pony hunters chase in the Second Day's programme this time, which is not surprising as the event has filled so badly the last two seasons, but we understand there are more pony chasers here now than of late, and perhaps if a good field turns out on the 2nd they may yet arrange a race for them the second day.

To-morrow the Horse Show will be held at Tollygunge: we hear the entries are quite good.

There are many English people who own racing stables and cherish the conviction that it is cheaper to buy ready-made winners than to breed them. Lady de Bathe (Mrs. Langtry) has evidently come to this conclusion, for she has given up her extensive and costly breeding stud lock, stock and barrel and sold the stud as it stood without reserve. Her one sire, Merman, also went under the hammer. He is her ladyship's favourite horse, and, although he has not made such a great name for himself as he did on the turf, there was keen competition for the Australian. Merman was a remarkable horse and the notice in the Racing Calendar that he "was the most genuine stayer known on the British turf for many a year," is by no means wide of the mark. He beat Perth, the famous French horse, in the Ascot Gold Cup, and won the Cesarewitch, Goodwood Cup, Jockey Club Cup, Goodwood Plate, Lewes Handicap, and "down under" the Williamstown Cup.

The dates of the Lucknow Extra and Spring Meetings have been changed as follows:—Extra Meeting 30th January instead of 28th January; Spring Meeting 1st, 3rd, and 5th February instead of 30th January, 1st and 3rd February.

Spratt's Patent, Limited, have sent us an attractive wall calendar for 1909. Well printed in colours, the illustrations of birds and animals depicted are excellent, while on the reverse of each page the text to each picture gives us valuable information regarding the feeding of our dogs, cats and feathered pets, together with full details of Messrs. Spratt's various productions.

The Calcutta Kennel Club Show this season promises to be a big success. The schedule is before us and is indeed a very complete list. There are no fewer than 37 classes and nearly every breed is being catered for. The Rink has been engaged for the Show; very special arrangements are being made for the benching; Mr. Hood Wright is coming to us from Colombo to judge and will be assisted by other eminent judges, and added to these special features the liberality of friends and patrons have enabled the executive to offer really handsome prizes. In addition to the awards in the various classes the C.K.C. are offering several special prizes for competition among its members, and the N.I.K.A. will present three specials for N.I.K.A. members. Entries close on the 15th January, late entries being taken up to the 20th idem on payment of an extra fee. There are already quite a number of applications for entry forms and it is generally anticipated that the Show on the 29th and 30th January will be the best the Calcutta Kennel Club have yet held. Particulars in an advertisement appearing further on.

The Rajputana and Central India Polo tournament ended on the 17th instant in a win for the 3rd Skinner's Horse, who beat the Kishengarh team by 6 goals to 2.

The open polo tournament for the Mhow Challenge Cup, presented by the 7th Q. O. Hussars, will begin at Mhow on the 25th January.

On Boxing Day Swansea beat the Australian Amateur Rugby team by 6 points to nil.

The much-talked of fight for the Heavy Weight Championship of the World between Tommy Burns and Jack Johnson, the coloured boxer, is over. A telegram from Sydney announces that on Boxing Day Burns was beaten on points in fourteen rounds. Johnson proved much the cleverer and the fight was of the fiercest description throughout. Though a pitiable spectacle, Burns showed magnificent pluck, but his condition caused the police to intervene and the fight was stopped. Jim Jeffries, the ex-Champion, announced some time ago that should Johnson win this fight he would come out of his retirement and challenge for the Championship, so it is probable that the next big encounter will be between the big boiler-maker and the coloured man.

The boxing entertainment at the Calcutta Concert Hall last Saturday organised by Jack McAuliffe was poorly attended, owing no doubt to the numerous counter attractions on that date. Nevertheless those who were present witnessed three good contests. The first, a six round bout between two heavy weights, ended in a win for Stoker Higgs, who beat Pte. Haris of R.M.L.I. The ten-round fight between the middle weights A. B. Mileham and A. B. Lewis only went five rounds when Mileham was knocked out. A welter weight contest between the Weaver R.M.S.G. and A. B. Dorney closed the programme Weaver giving in after three rounds.

Gotch, the American eye-gouging wrestler, whose match with Hackenschmidt and its utterly unsatisfactory result set two hemispheres talking a while back, is, as we have already told our readers, in England, ostensibly to arrange another meeting with the Russian Giant. Nothing definite had been fixed when the mail left London on the 11th November; but the newspaper warfare had been most extensive and acrimonious. It seems impossible for big boxers and wrestlers—the latter particularly—to meet in England, without acres of preliminary vapouring in the press. It all serves as capital advertisements, though the proprietors of the papers which publish the stuff seem never tired of playing into the hands of the squabblers. Or is it merely advertisement in the wrong place, like those traps for the unwary reader which begin so promisingly and end so exasperatingly in Somebody's Something for Corns?

A London non-sporting paper hits off the position rather neatly thus:—

Wrestling Up-to-date.

For the benefit of our readers we give below detailed and exclusive information of the great wrestling match between Clinch, the Saskatchewan Scribbler, and Whinch, the Caustic Caucasian. As our readers will be aware, the match is to be fought out under a code of rules drawn up by a joint committee of journalists and advertisement contractors, and the judge, a prominent and experienced electioneering agent, has power to disqualify a competitor in the event of his using the two prohibited grips, viz:—

(1) Reference to opponents' parentage.
(2) Words of more than four syllables.

From Our Own Reporter.

Much interest attend the opening scenes of the great contest, and great excitement prevailed when at the given signal each combatant filled his fountain-pen and plunged furiously into the fray. The Caucasian is seconded by "The Indian Ink Slinger," while Clinch is relying on a dictionary and a staff of expert typists.

First Round.

Beyond a series of short interviews in the daily papers Clinch took things easily in the first round, but "Whinch" got going in fine style, and, besides writing a three-volume biography, has been photographed in seventy-three positions. Both men have signed music-hall contracts for three years. Betting still even.

Second Round.

Clinch led off strongly by addressing a number of mass meetings, and also appeared in a three-act play entitled, "How I Beat Whinch; or, An Eye for an Eye." Whinch busily engaged, and is photographed signing picture postcards while dictating letters to the morning papers. Pace very hot. Clinch makes big impression with characteristic volley of Americanisms, but the Caucasian makes an effective response by writing Russian poems for the weeklies. Betting slightly in favour of Whinch, who is supposed to be leading by four-and-a-half columns.

Third Round.

Great consternation caused amongst the American backers by Whinch's clever ruse in changing his name to "Ctzzsto." Clinch is quite at sea with the spelling, and has already sustained a fracture of the jaw in an attempt to get in a pun. The near approach of the monthly magazines made the going extremely heavy, and both men are suffering from the strain. At the time of telegraphing it was discovered that Whinch had split five infinitives in meeting a slashing attack, and Clinch is reported to be suffering from severe confusion of the tenses.

Blackstaffe, the Olympian sculling champion, has just been honoured by the Lord Mayor of London and a band of admirers. With 215 prizes to his credit, as the result of his many successes on the river and, in several cases, at cross-country running, H. T. Blackstaffe, of the Vesta Rowing Club and South London Harriers, can scarcely be said to have had barren honours.

So wonderful has been his career, winning the Wingfield Sculls on five occasions, the Diamond Sculls on two occasions, the championship of the Netherlands, and numerous other important events the culminating point being reached when, at forty years of age, he won the sculling race in connection with the recent Olympic Games, that his many admirers thought that there should be some special recognition of his remarkable powers. A committee was formed, subscriptions poured in, and a model of the boat in which Blackstaffe won the Olympic race was the result. The presentation took place on the 8th November at the Mansion House, in the presence of a large and representative gathering, the Lord Mayor (Sir G. W. Truscott) handing over the model to Blackstaffe, who was introduced in an interesting speech by the Mayor of Stepney.

Some Calcutta golfers are not altogether unacquainted with the juvenile pest known among his dusky fraternity as a goli chor: the ball pilfering industry is, apparently, getting fairly well established in England too. A correspondent writes:—"The loafer has awakened to the fact that loitering on a common over which golfers have the privilege of playing is a very remunerative occupation. One morning recently I 'sliced' a new two-shilling ball—which I had marked. Half a dozen loafers joined in the search, which proved futile. I accepted the loss and went on playing. Half an hour later the marked ball was offered to a fellow-player for sixpence by one of the loafers." A caddie on Tooting Bec Common told me that some of the loafers make as much as five shillings a day by finding balls before they are lost and selling them again."

A series of keenly contested games was witnessed during the Native Army tournament at Quetta this month. The first game was played on the 14th instant the 121st Pioneers beating the 2-7th Gurkhas by 3 goals to 1. In the second round the 30th Baluchis beat the Sappers and Miners by 7 goals to nil, and the 1-7th Gurkhas beat the 104th Rifles by 2 goals to 1. This game was re-played owing to a protest by the Rifles and the Gurkhas were again victorious, this time by 4 goals to nil. In the semi-finals the 1-7th Gurkhas beat the 121st Pioneers by 2 goals to 1, and the 130th Baluchis beat the 14th Sikhs by 3 goals to nil. The final was played on the 23rd instant, the 130th Baluchis defeating the 1-7th Gurkhas by 2 goals to 1 after a good game.

Two athletic World's records have just been put up. A telegram from New York states that an amateur runner named Maloney has done the Marathon distance (26 miles 350 yards) in 2hrs. 36mins. 2½secs., which is a record. The best previous amateur time was 'Dorando's 2hrs. 44mins. 20⅗secs. in his match with Hayes on the 25th ultimo. Siret's time in the professional Marathon race promoted by the Evening News in October last was 2hrs. 37mins. 23secs.

R. G. Walker, the South African sprinter, who won the 100 metres race at the Olympic Games, has been credited with a wonderful performance. He won the 100 yards at the Johannesburg sports last week in 9⅘secs., which is the world's record. The previous best was 9⅖secs. standing to the credit of A. F. Duffey at Berkeley Oval, New York, on 31st May 1902, and D. J. Kelly at Washington, U.S., on the 23rd June 1906. Running at Halifax on 10th August last Walker won the 100 yards handicap starting from scratch in 9⅖secs. At Abergavenny the previous week Walker's time over the 100 yards was given as 9⅖secs. but was apparently not accepted by the A.A.A.

In the German possessions in Africa a permit to shoot big game costs £41; special permission is required to kill more than two giraffes, four rhinoceroses, and six zebras. In the case of elephant shooting, the authorities must be given one tusk from each animal killed. The hunter receives a small payment if he shoots a lion, panther, wild boar, or hyena. A permit to kill gazelles, antelopes, and monkeys costs only £2.

The game-keeping idea that game of any kind cannot increase and flourish along with vermin, furred or feathered, is not supported by the big-game shooter. He can point out that great numbers of beasts of prey, when existing unmolested, did not have any effect in decreasing the game of South Africa. The decrease came with the disappearance of lions and other beasts of prey. So in Scotland, there were swarms of grouse on the moors when vermin-killing was unknown, and the peregrine falcon, with the stoat, took toll of the weaker game birds. It would certainly appear as if the destruction of vermin everywhere can be overdone, and that a certain supply of vermin is an advantage on a shoot. Vermin, as a matter of fact, live, to some extent, on other vermin as well as on game.

The first meeting for the present session of the Indian section of the Royal Society of Arts was held at the rooms, John Street, Adelphi, recently, when Mr. Douglas Dewar, F. Z. S., a member of the United Provinces Civil Service, read a paper on "The Birds of India." The chair was taken by Sir Evan James. Mr. Dewar said that India was peculiarly rich in birds of character. It was a country of avine superlatives, possessing extremely beautiful, extremely ugly and extremely grotesque birds. If there was any characteristic which Indian birds did not possess to a degree it was, perhaps, the ability to sing. But the notion that none of them could sing, possibly derived from a generalisation of Charles Kingsley, was absurd. India possessed some song birds which could hold thhir own in any company; and were some of these to visit England in the summer they would supplant in popular favour some of our English songsters. His studies in ornithology in India, whither he went imbued with the teachings of Wallace, had reluctantly convinced him that the problem of evolution was far more complex than Wallace and Weismann would have us believe. The lecturer expressed regret that, notwithstanding restrictive legislation in 1887, and again in 1903, the exportation of plumage still continued, the law being evaded by false declaration as to the nature of the exports. The Bill to prohibit the importation of such plumage into Great Britain, if passed, would render the Indian Act far more effective. But woman—voteless woman—could if she would do more than even the British Parliament to prevent the wholesale destruction of Indian bird life.

It was at a general table in a city restaurant. One man was eating a pheasant. Presently he dropped something on his plate and asked, "What do you think of that?" "Shot!" one of the other diners inquired. "Shot? No; a bullet, an air-gun bullet," the pheasant eater answered. "Do sportsmen use air-guns nowadays?" another diner asked. "No, sir," replied the pheasant eater, scornfully; "sportsmen do not, but poachers do." And for the information of the company he explained that on dark winter afternoons, especially when there is a light fog to screen their movements, poachers "mark" pheasants to their roosting-places and bring them down with air-guns. An air-gun makes very little noise when it "goes off."

Our Bombay Correspondent writes:—Referring to the wire sent you last week, Taylor has been suspended for one day owing to crossing the field on Dhafer at the commencement of the mile race on Saturday during the Second Extra.

More stringent still, Kamad and Goolam Ali are "off" for an "indefinite" period. The former was the rider of Hullo, who ran fourth in the Selling Plate, and the latter the trainer of Good Morning, who won that race. The previous Saturday in the First Novice Plate Hullo ran third and Good Morning fourth, the former giving the latter 6lb. Now over the same distance the latter gave the former 15lb.! The race was run in identically the same time and Good Morning was carrying 3lb. more, so that he must have "come on" a good bit. Hullo's performance was less glaring, and in fact the prominent position he occupied throughout the race seemed to point to a vindication of the pony being erratic rather than the jockey as there was nothing "strong" about the finish. Run the race again and Good Morning would be a hot favourite. The owners appear not to have been implicated, and in other cases, jockey, trainer and owner are lucky not to have incurred the indignation of the Club officials!

Mr. Fred Weiss is not losing much time during his stay in Bombay, and on Monday at Pyrke's indulged in three more 300 up games in which he gave away 200. Still without making his play monotonous, he is indulging in more top-table play, and though he made no very big breaks he scored most consistently and beat all three opponents.

The victor of the last game at Byculla, Mr. Young, was the first victim, though with more care and less over-confidence he might again have won as at one time he led by 279 to 115. Weiss seems to enjoy a tight corner as a few more visits saw him catch and beat the amateur by 14. His best were 98, 49, 43, 31 and 29 unfinished, averaging 23. Young made five double figures and averaged 6·6.

Next was Mr. Carnall, who seems unable to master his nerves and whose best throughout was 5, which shows what effect an audience can have on a player. After his safety miss, Weiss's first visit produced 77, and following with 25 and 33 he ran out with 119 unfinished. He averaged 37·5 and made his 300 whilst Carnall was making 20.

Mr. Avery failed to repeat his win of the last occasion, though with a break of 19 he won the cue given by the professional for the highest effort of the evening amongst the three. He made two others of double figures but was beaten by 46. Weiss made 120 at his first visit, then 45, 76 and 22 unfinished, averaging 25.

He next visits Poona and everyone will be interested when, on his return, he plays Mr. Powalla on Wednesday and Thursday giving 1,200 in 2,000 for a side bet.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 11th December 1908.

There is no more popular officer in the British army at the moment than Lieutenant-General Sir H. L. Smith-Dorrien, K.C.B., D.S.O., Commanding at Aldershot. He has recently issued orders which are calculated to revolutionise our troops: he regards Mr. Thomas Atkins as a being who can be trusted, therefore he has abolished a number of irksome regulations and by this means he declares the British soldier will be converted from an automaton-like creature into a "free, responsible gentleman." In a word he has ordered the discontinuance (provisionally) of the pickets and the "R. M. P." gentry have ceased to patrol the streets of Aldershot, the men being put on their honour not to misbehave. The precedent-breaking General is sanguine of success and to an interviewer he has said, among other things, "As a matter of fact, the British soldier is a gentleman by instinct. He is a different man to-day from what he used to be. He is absolutely sober. He is more intelligent and better educated. He represents the keenest type of man in the kingdom. His one idea is to keep fit and well. You have only to let him know that he is on his honour, and he will play up for you. That has always been my experience. So long as you trust him he will play up for you. You cannot wish for finer men than British soldiers. Whenever I have trusted the soldier, whenever I have placed him on his honour, I have had an absolutely gentlemanly response."

This is the second time General Smith-Dorrien has broken away from precedent since he was appointed commander-in-chief at Aldershot twelve months ago. The first occasion was during the summer manœuvres, when he told the men they might go into any public-house if they liked—but he placed them on their honour not to betray the trust he reposed in them. The General's very many friends in India, especially military men, will watch this rather daring experiment with interest.

The Suffragettes last Saturday went one better than they have ever gone before and indulged, at the Albert Hall, in a disgusting exhibition, which cannot but still further alienate public sympathy from them. It was at a meeting of the Women's Liberal Federation, and Mr. Lloyd George was to speak. His address was interrupted by incessant disorder, he was howled down by women, some of whom produced dog whips and scourged the Stewards who evicted them. Some chained to seats, were thrown out shrieking, men and women fought like tiger cats—many men were severely scratched—women were hurled down the stairs. The scenes have never been paralleled since the Suffragettes began their agitation; it was a record riot, the uproar was simply terrific and the effect can better be imagined than described when I add that a totally futile attempt was made to drown the tumult by playing the huge organ at its loudest! An American friend, who was there, describes it to me as "little hell," and I have no doubt he puts it aptly. But the Chancellor of the Exchequer is a hard man to beat; he won in the end, and when comparative order was restored he finished his speech in which he promised a "Vote for Women" Bill and hinted that the dissolution of Parliament was by no means so far off as people supposed.

A circular I received from Calcutta the other day advised me that Old Paulines in your town were moving in the matter of celebrating the Milton Tercentenary. The poet has had ample justice done to his memory in the Press this week. There has been a big Guildhall banquet, which is not inappropriate in that he was born in Bread Street, Cheapside, almost under the shadow of Bow Church, and a beautiful and impressive commemoration service was held in this church, while varied tributes

And this reminds me to ask why you don't have an Old Pauline dinner in Calcutta; several public schoolmen keep up this comfortable tradition; Eton, Haileybury, Harrow, and others dine annually. Why do old St. Paul's boys hesitate, aren't there enough of them in Calcutta?

That virulent and pretentious apostle of temperance, Mrs. Carrie Nation, known in the States as the "Saloon Smasher" has arrived in England on an anti-drink campaign. Her methods in America, was to enter a drinking saloon with a hatchet and smash everything within reach during the time she was allowed to remain on the premises. She has opened pianissimo at Glasgow, where she has merely rebuked barmaids, demanded a sight of licenses and called landlords poisonous; but by the time she has finished with Dundee, Aberdeen and Edinburgh she may have reached the fortissimo stages and the hatchet may be produced simultaneously with the arrival of this virago in London which is scheduled for attack after her Scottish raid is over. But stay: there may be a humorous side to the business and the smasher may have a few jokes to let off on occasions; if so, she may find the weapon a handy auxiliary in the land where humour and surgery are said to be affiliated.

It seems difficult to understand how this truculent female could lay about with a hatchet in an American saloon where the bowie knife, six shooter and other checks to exuberance are popularly supposed to be lying handy: but I take it the British landlord is not likely to suffer his property to be damaged and his character to be defamed with impunity, so, like our ancient friend Agag, Carrie had better "walk delicately" and keep her little hatchet well out of sight.

A run of eighteen months might be expected to diminish the popularity of the most charming musical play, but with "The Merry Widow" at Daly's the case is quite otherwise. The passing of time seems only to add to the enthusiasm of its nightly receptions. A visit to Daly's has become a habit with many people, and there are those who boast with pride that they have basked in the dainty widow's smiles a dozen or twenty times. And, in truth, there have been few musical plays which repay a second or third visit so thoroughly. Saturday night was by way of being a special occasion for Mr. Joseph Coyne returned to take up again his original part of Prince Danlo, after playing Sir Charles Wyndham's role in "The Mollusc" in America for some weeks; while Mr. W. H. Berry also made a welcome re-appearance as Nisch, a part which he left several months ago in order to create much laughter at the Gaiety. It goes without saying that the popular pair of comedians met with a right royal reception. Indeed, it was not until Mr. Coyne had come forward and expressed his thanks and his delight at being back at Daly's that a large audience, whose expressions of delight had been frequent and loud throughout the evening, showed themselves willing to depart for home. "The Merry Widow" was too good in its original form to be ever in need of what is known as "a new edition," but several changes and additions have been made since the opening performance. Mr. Coyne and Mr. Berry had considerably "worked up" the humour of their parts, and Miss Lily Elsie —whose performance remains a thing of sheer joy —appears more wonderfully garbed than ever.

As a contemporary points out, it would have been hard indeed had Miss Evelyn Millard been compelled to interrupt the course of a management so auspiciously begun with "Idols" owing to the difficulty of finding another theatre when her term of the Garrick comes to a close. Luckily, all danger of this is removed by the fact that she has just come to an arrangement with Sir Charles Wyndham and Miss Mary Moore to take a lease of the Criterion, beginning on 1st February. There, accordingly, she will produce in course of time Mr. Robert Hichens's new comedy. For the moment, however, her attention is concentrated upon the revival, for a series of matinees, of Mr. Anthony Hope's play, "The Adventure of Lady Ursula," a revival due at the Garrick on the afternoon of 5th January. The cast, so far as the principals are concerned, is now complete. Miss Millard, of course, resumes her original part of the delightfully headstrong Lady Ursula, and Mr. Herbert Waring that of Sir George Sylvester. Miss Dora Barton is to be the Dorothy Fenton, Miss Dolores Drummond (a welcome return to the stage) the Mrs. Fenton, Mr. Charles Fulton Mr. Dent, and Mr. Arthur Wontner the Earl of Hassenden. It is practically settled that the piece will eventually go into the evening bill. If my memory is not at fault those very popular artistes, the Broughs produced this piece in Calcutta some years ago and had the assistance of some of your leading amateur talent as they did in "Lord and Lady Algy" and other pieces.

Discussing in the Graphic the causes of so many marriages between peers and actresses, Lady Violet Greville says the reasons are: (1) the glamour of the footlights and the fact that the actress's beauty is made the most of; (2) the enormous advertisement given by photographs and the Press nowadays to young actresses; (3) the fact that the girls are clever enough to desire and insist on marriage, and, lastly, the want of attraction of girls in society. The latter do not lay themselves out to please men, as they used; they are too engrossed in their own amusements and games to care, and they associate so much en camarade with their male friends that the glamour, the mystery, the aloofness which are carefully cherished by the stage, have disappeared. Her ladyship gets very near the mark, methinks.

"Some weeks ago I noted one of those tragedies in which a Hindu and an Englishwoman were the principal actors—the old story of criminal infatuation on one side and desertion on the other. The man Chetty, described as an Indian judge, had gone through some form of marriage with an English girl, subsequently left for India, had for years neglected to support her, ultimately declaring he had married a Hindu wife in India and was made the defendant in a suit for judicial separation. The judge took a long time to consider the judgment he delivered last Monday. His lordship found as a fact that both parties went through the ceremony of marriage, intending it to be a binding marriage according to our law, and as it had been defined in this country, a "voluntary union for life"—one man, one wife to the exclusion of all others. Assuming the marriage was legally binding, did the respondent desert his wife? His lordship found that there was desertion on the part of the respondent, entitling the petitioner to a decree of judicial separation. As to the marriage the respondent had not set up a general disability, but he relied upon a religious disability. His lordship said he was not able to find that it had been proved that the marriage was not valid. The petitioner was entitled to a decree of judicial separation, and his lordship pronounced such a decree. This is good enough; but will it act as a deterrent, will it help to put ignorant English girls and idiotic parents, on their guard? I fear not, judging from what I see in public conveyances and places, and seeing have to keep a severe check on my feet which positively ache in a way most of your readers will understand.

Much interest attaches to a recent gift to the Bristol Art Gallery and Museum of Antiquities. This is a splendid model of Lucknow as it appeared during the siege; it is claimed that it gives a very correct idea of the city in general while the Residency and other prominent historical buildings have been modelled with really startling fidelity. India's old friend Lord Roberts unveiled it last Saturday.

Mr. H. Barnato has just died. He began life as an errand boy, next he was doing a conjuring and acrobatic turn with a travelling show in Africa, next he was a successful merchant, financier, diamond king, etc., etc., and ultimately one of the richest men in England. His total estate will probably be not less than five millions, although it is being proved provisionally at half that figure. His daughter, Mrs. S. G. Asher, and her children are bequeathed a million, £250,000 go to found a hospital, his interest in Barnato Brothers goes to his nephews, the Joels (well-known turfites) and, after various legacies to relatives, the residue to his daughter.

Mr. Charles Hawtrey, the actor, has many friends and admirers in India, who will be sorry to hear that he has had to be operated upon for appendicitis; as I write he is progressing favourably.

IN THE WATCHES OF THE NIGHT.

There are many objections to shooting by night. There is something repugnant, perhaps, to the best sporting instincts in lying in wait for an animal over its prey, or over a pool of water to which it resorts to quench its thirst, and thus taking it at a disadvantage. But the pleasure of sitting in ambush in a place frequented by wild animals at morn and at the setting of the sun, and throughout the hours when the stars shine overhead, is undeniable, even though one may not press the trigger of one's rifle. Then it is that one sees wild life at its best in the remote depths of the forest, far from the haunts of man, where no sounds save those of nature fall upon the ear, and the wild beasts wander in peace over almost untrodden solitudes.

In such circumstances the watcher generally takes up his position in concealment in a tree overlooking a pool of water about an hour before sunset. It is probably the height of the hot weather, that being the best season of the year for this work, for the jungle is then sparse, water is scarce, and the wild animals are impatient of thirst. Throughout the heat of the day nearly all living things have slumbered, the birds sitting silent and gasping with wide distended beaks; while the voices of the forest, save perhaps for the screech of the cicada and the monotonous call of the brain-fever bird, are hushed in the noonday sun.

But as the sun sinks behind the hills or the trees in the west all things come to life. A gentle breeze, herald of the night, stirs among the trees, and perhaps a small whirlwind brings a column of dust and dead leaves through the open spaces of the forest. And as the embers of the day burn red in the west, Nature awakes. The forest is shrill with the incessant screech of the cicada; the birds awake and twitter overhead in the evergreens and fly down to the water to quench their thirst. A troop of monkeys comes swinging from tree to tree, and with fear expressed in the grimaces on their dusky countenances as they look around for the lurking feline foe, they timorously approach the water one by one, the slightest sound sufficing to send them off chattering to the topmost branches. A barking deer or a little four-horned antelope comes down, and approaching the pool with dainty footsteps, digs its soft muzzle into the pellucid depths. A peacock, trailing six feet of green and gold, approaches with stately tread, followed by a bevy of more sober-plumaged hens; a jungle cock crows defiance from the brushwood and is answered by a rival close by. Larger forms, the sambar or the spotted deer, may be seen moving in the adjacent glades.

And now night's phantom army, the shadows of the forest, advancing across the face of the waters, spreads over the spaces so recently lighted by the setting sun. Stars faintly flicker in the darkening sky. The animals and birds have disappeared as if by magic, warned by the advance of night or by the approach of the destroyer. A stealthy tread is heard among the dry leaves scattered in the bed of the empty watercourse; a panther is coming on velvet footfall; anon it pauses, then pads softly down to the margin of the water, a phantom form, a mere shadow, scarcely visible, so wonderful does its coloration blend with the deepening gloom. This is fair game for the rifle, although deer may not be shot over water.

Night watching is not by any means always successful. The first occasion on which I met with success was near a place in the Deccan where I was stationed. A panther had killed a calf about two or three miles out, and hearing of this I went out to the place and got into a tree about an hour before sunset, having tied up a goat below. In about half an hour the panther suddenly issued from the bushes close by and seized the goat by the throat. I fired on the instant, hoping to save the poor beast's life, and the panther relaxed its hold and rolled over dead, but the long canine teeth had already inflicted fatal wounds, from which the life-blood was bubbling. Not long afterwards I was encamped near a village where a panther had committed many depredations on the flocks. I tied up a goat near a pool of water where the beast was known to drink and got into a place of concealment constructed against the trunk of a large tree close by. It was a bright moonlight night, and for some hours I kept awake, but nothing came. At about 2 o'clock in the morning I woke with that indefinable feeling, so often experienced, of the close proximity of a beast of prey. The goat, which was lying down, rose to its feet and gazed intently into the shadows of the bushes. And as I watched with my rifle ready across my knees, a panther appeared as if by magic, and crouched facing me and the goat which was between us ; I fired, but, when the smoke cleared, looked in vain for any sign of the beast. It had vanished as silently as it appeared. In the morning I looked for marks of blood or bullet, but could find neither ; only the panther's claw had dug deep into the dusty pathway. I have since thought that the animal must have been mortally wounded, and died somewhere in the large extent of bush-jungle that grew around. For the flocks were henceforth free from depredation.

Three years later I was out in camp at a place where several panthers were on the prowl, but for two days nothing could be found, and I searched the jungle in vain for the whereabouts of the beast. Then one morning when sitting outside my tent after breakfast I saw vultures, mere specks in the azure sky, circling round a small hill, to which they gradually descended. Proceeding to the spot, I found a large buffalo calf that had been killed by a panther during the night and partially eaten. My orderly constructed an ambush with the branches of trees and bushes against the hillside, leaving a small hole for me to shoot through, and the buffalo being dragged some six or eight feet from it, I took up my position behind this screen just before sunset. It was a dark night, but the moon would rise at about 9 o'clock. I dozed off to sleep, but awoke a couple of hours later, between 9 and 10, with that same indefinable feeling of the presence of a feline beast of prey. And as I gazed through the aperture in front of me, I saw the carcase move, and a moment later the round head of the panther, with champing jaws, appeared from behind. The beast was looking straight at me, with its paws on the carcase. Again the head went down, and the animal resumed its feast, and then again raised its head as before. This time it received the contents of my gun, a charge of slugs, full in the face ; it disappeared, and then I saw its long tail beating the ground convulsively. When all was still I emerged from my hiding place, dragged the dead panther in behind the screen, and waited in hopes of another one coming ; but nothing more appeared. These few successes were among many weary unsuccessful vigils, and since those days I have done but little night shooting, preferring to trace the animals to their lair by daylight and drive them out with a line of beaters.

Some years ago, however, I was encamped for ten days in the depths of a great forest, where there was game in abundance, principally bison, and bears, and deer. Tigers were scarce, but one night a tigress killed and partially devoured one of my buffaloes near a pool of water a few miles from camp. Next morning I was out after bison, and the men who went to look at the buffalo were warned off by a growl from the beast which had killed it. Again they attempted to approach, but the growling increased in volume and ferocity. In the afternoon, having returned from an unsuccessful pursuit after a great bull, I went down to the place. The tigress had gone, and as the men had disturbed her, there seemed to be little prospect of her return to resume her feast on the carcase, half of which remained. There was a chance, however, so I had a platform constructed in a tree overlooking the water, and took up my position on it before sunset, sending my men back to camp, for I intended to remain all night.

Soon a barking deer barked repeatedly up the ravine, sure sign of the passage of some beast of prey. Another took up the cry of alarm, and nearer this time ; I hoped the tigress was approaching. It was now getting dark. Some large animal came out of the bushes and down to the carcase. I grasped my rifle and peered into the deepening gloom. A strong effluvium came up from the remains below, at which a heavy beast with a striped body was tugging. But it was light enough for me to see that the animal was a hyena, and I drove it away by throwing a cartridge at it. It was now quite dark, but the moon soon rose and lighted up the scene below ; only the bright light threw into stronger relief the black shadows of the forest behind me. Sometimes dozing off to sleep, sometimes wide awake, I found the hours drag slowly ; but at about two in the morning there was a crashing noise in the jungle behind me, and a great bison came down and suddenly stopped ; I feared to turn lest he should be frightened away, for he was evidently coming for a drink at the pool, and I hoped he would not be alarmed. But suddenly he stopped, and, looking over my shoulder, I could see him standing with head thrust out, looking either at me, or at the carcase of the buffalo, which he must have scented. He snorted for some time, stamping with his feet, and tossing angrily with his head ; and then he suddenly turned, and rushed back into the shadows of the forest, where for some time I heard him tearing up the ground with feet and horns.

Nothing more came near my ambush, and when dawn arrived and the gathered mists of night dispersed, my men came and I descended from my perch. And then we sought out the tracks of the great bull bison I had seen and there ensued a two days' hunt. But that is another story.

" I say, old man," said Tom Jackson to his friend Wilson, "tell your wife that I'm going to be married, will you ? " " All right, I will. Best congratulations, old fellow ! " Wilson hurried away. Next morning his friend received a letter to the following effect : " My dear Tom.—As directed by you, I informed my wife that you were going to be married, and now, in order that I may have some little peace, will you kindly answer the following questions : 1. Is it the tall, dark girl you took to the theatre one night last winter? 2. Is it the short, fair girl you met at the seaside last year? 3. Is it the girl you were engaged to once before, when the affair was broken off? 4. Where are you going to live? 5. Did you ask her personally or by letter? 6. When did you meet her first? 7. Any other particulars not included in the above. Please reply by return of post."

NEW ·465 BORE VELOPEX SYSTEM

EXPRESS "INDIA" RIFLE.

MESSRS. HOLLAND & HOLLAND beg to introduce to the notice of Sportsmen their New ·465 Bore "India" Model Rifle. This weapon has been specially designed to replace the ·450 bore, the importation of which into India having been prohibited. The New Rifle retains all the features of their well-known ·450 and has the same balance, handiness, and lightness of recoil, with the advantage of increased velocity resulting from the use of their New Patent Velopex Cartridge.

Record Target made before the Editor of "The Field."

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper,

19th January, 1907.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

First Day, Thursday, 24th December, 1908.

THE big meeting opened this afternoon in glorious weather; there was a huge gathering, fields were big and the racing excellent. The principal events on the card were, of course, the Burdwan Cup, International Pony Plate, and The Trials. The first was won easily by Kipling and Lady Avon scored her fourth win in the International Pony Plate, having previously won this race in 1904-06-07. The big race of the day proved an easy victory for Tangaroa, who came in three and a half lengths ahead of Wise Bird in 1min. 41½ secs., a record for the race. Further comments in our Sporting Notes. Results :—

BURDWAN CUP—A Cup, value £100, presented by the Hon'ble Maharaja Dhiraj of Burdwan, and Rs. 3,800 from the fund. The Cup and Rs. 2,800 to the winner, Rs. 700 to the second, and Rs. 300 to the third. A hurdle race for horses. W. A. and C. R. C. and a distance over seven flights of hurdles.

TO CONQUER MALARIA.

Words of wisdom from a Physician's Pen.

"Those who conquer Malaria conquer the tropics" is a proverb with which every resident in India is familiar. While in consequence of the onward march of scientific achievement, this disease, so depressing in its onset, so devitalising in its effect, and so disorganising in its result to the whole system is better understood than it used to be, it is still, unhappily, exceedingly prevalent and is likely to continue until the conditions which produce it have been banished.

Most people know that while Malaria may take various forms it is due to a specific germ or microbe, which destroys the red corpuscles by which the oxygen of the air is carried by the blood to every part of the body to burn up its impurities. The destruction of these corpuscles produces the marked symptoms so characteristic of the disease,—the pale, sallow, earthy complexion, the mental and physical lassitude, the depression, the morbid thoughts and feelings, the aching muscles and the tender joints.

Bad as is all this, the result of Anaemia or poverty of the blood, as it is commonly called, which makes life a burden to the sufferer, it may go considerably farther until it produces that wasted and dangerous condition of the system Doctors call "Cachexia"

For long, Quinine has been the sheet anchor of the physician, and in the acute stages it generally answers admirably, but in the later stages something else must be employed to destroy the effects wrought by the microbes.

Happily, in this conquest of the hosts of the disease germs which invade the body under the banner of Malaria the physician has been presented with a weapon as potent over them as the modern machine gun is potent against the old flint lock gun.

This weapon is Sanatogen, one of the most powerful restoratives and vitalising agents ever given to the world. Its remarkable properties are due to its two constituents Casein, the solid portion of pure, new milk, and Glycero-phosphate of Soda, a preparation containing phosphorus in the precise form in which it exists in the [illegible]. Phosphorus, as every one knows, is not only as a physician has written "intimately associated with the health of the system, and is indispensable for the discharge of the functions of the nervous centres," but is also "absolutely essential for the growth of what physiologists term the cells of the body—the microscopic bricks of which the human edifice is constructed." This cell growth is greatly interfered with in Malaria, and a supply of phosphorus which is easily absorbed by the depleted system is urgently necessary to restore it to its standard activity. Nothing does this so well as Sanatogen, as nothing so rapidly restores the vitality of the blood as this preparation, which is prescribed by over ten thousand physicians in the world because no secret has ever been made of its constituents and they realise its overwhelming value in rousing the functions of the body to do their duty.

How rapidly Sanatogen restores the blood after Anaemia may be judged from the fact that one eminent physician records that the red blood corpuscles in a patient increased eighty thousand per cubic milli-metre in a week, and the percentage of red colouring matter in them advanced from 61 per cent. to 62·5 per cent., while another patient, who was unable to take any solid food and was losing weight rapidly so improved in a fortnight that the red corpuscles increased two hundred thousand per cubic milli-metre, their red colouring matter from 48 per cent. to 52 per cent., and she was able to resume her household duties, completely cured of the terrible melancholia from which she was suffering.

Children are especially liable to Malaria and its pernicious after-effects which may delay their development and stunt their growth. When given Sanatogen they rapidly improve. One child who at three years old, in consequence of Malaria, weighed only half a pound more than it did when it was a year and a half, was given a small quantity of Sanatogen daily, and its weight at once began to go up half a pound a week.

Just as Malaria causes wasting in children it makes adults prematurely old, in consequence of the depression of the vitality of the system. This condition is rapidly cured by Sanatogen which removes the prematurely old look and soon substitutes for the feeble will and listless spirit a healthy interest in normal pursuits.

An exceedingly interesting pamphlet on the subject of Malaria has been written by a physician who had a wide experience of it in India. In order to give this momentous publication "Malaria, its Causes and Effects" the widest publicity, the proprietors of the copyright have instructed Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, to distribute a limited number of copies free of charge, to anyone who may feel interested in it, and will send them a postcard mentioning the "Indian Field."

Sanatogen, by the way, may be obtained direct from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, and at all chemists, etc.

or OBSTRUCTION OF THE HEPATIC OR BILIARY DUCTS, is

Dr. E. J. Lazarus's ESSENCE OF CHIRETTA,

In Bottles Re. 1-8, 2-8 and 4.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY OF IT.

From Mr. W.—Dear Sirs,—"I suffered from Liver complaint in its most aggravated form pain in the side, shoulder-blade and stomach; vomiting after every meal, excessive acidity in the stomach, constipated bowels and extreme debility FOR TEN YEARS, I tried all the known remedies without success and had given up hope, when as a last resource I tried your 'Essence of Chiretta.' I have taken it for some time and am now nearly quite well. Pain in the side nearly gone, in the shoulder-blade entirely so. No vomiting, little or no acidity in the stomach, bowels relaxed, no debility, being now a stronger and better man than I have been for years."

H. James Rainey, Esq., of Koolnah, Jessore, writes:—"Having derived a deal of benefit from the use of your 'Essence of Chiretta' (combined with VERY SMALL doses of Quinine) both as prophylactic and anti-periodic for intermittent fevers of malarious type, which would not yield to the usual remedies employed, and which disease is very prevalent in the Districts of Lower Bengal, in particular those parts bordering on the Soonderban, I think it incumbent on me to acquaint you thereof pro bono publico. You are welcome to give this letter all the publicity you may deem necessary in order that this excellent remedy of yours may become generally known."

From J. A. Farrell, Mooltan.—"Your Chiretta has already done me a WORLD amount of good. I had an enlargement of the spleen and fever for 9 months which reduced me to a mere skeleton. The fever I got rid of with your Antiperiodic Pills in 3 days; and the spleen I let be—thinking it could do me no harm. In this I was greatly mistaken, my complexion became as yellow as gold. Seeing your Chiretta I determined to use some of it, and see what good it did me. I have used it for about a week and already the colour is coming to my cheek and the TAN (through continued fever) has left my face. For the climate of India there is no medicine so good, for a Tonic, &c, as your "Essence of Chiretta." This is only an addition to the valuable testimonials you have so well earned through the Chiretta."

Special quotations for larger quantities.

De la Rue's "Pneumatic" Playing Cards.—

The Fronts of the "Pneumatic" Playing Cards are highly finished, whilst the Backs are minutely grooved or indented all over the surface, so as to provide an air-space between the cards, and a roughened surface which acts as a resistance for the thumb in dealing. This prevents misdeals, as the cards slide off one by one and can be dealt with the greatest ease and rapidity.

(FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 11th December 1908.

KEMPTON PARK.

NOVEMBER seems to have relegated its fogs to the last month of the year, but hitherto we have been let off lightly, and the mist that hung over the Thames Valley on Friday last was no thicker than the Leicester haze. Though the sun never had much of a chance, the temperature was mild enough for the time of year, and threatening skies gave only one drizzling shower of short duration just before the last race. The members' special was fairly well filled, and for this time of year the general attendance was about the average, with plenty of room in Tattersall's and the further enclosures, while the road division was by no means a strong one, the murky morning holding out little inducement for a drive over somewhat sticky roads. One always finds good going at Kempton with its gravelly soil, and the course was in excellent condition, falls being singularly few; indeed, the only two occurred in the last race, when Silver Bay came down in the preliminary canter, and W. M. charged the first obstacle soon after the start, and was put hors de combat. But for the objection to Razorbill all would have gone smoothly. The objection, which really should have been for boring to be more correct, came as a bit of a surprise to those who saw the finish. Results:—

MARGARET'S SELLING HURDLE RACE.—Of 100sovs. 2 miles.

Mr. H. D. Johnson's Broomstick, by Pioneer—Hag, 4yrs., 11st. 9lb.	...	Fitton 1

Won by a length and a half; four lengths between second and third.

The weather at Kempton on Saturday was a bit more like December, but the air was clearer till close on the finish, when the mists gathered again. In every department the attendance showed an increase on Saturday, and additional interest was infused into the proceedings when it became known, as surmised overnight, that Danny Maher was to make his début over hurdles on Dafila in the last event of the day. Results:—

Won easily by two lengths; six lengths between second and third.

BIRMINGHAM.

There was no racing on Monday owing to the dense fog, and though the weather conditions on Tuesday were good enough the disappointment of the previous day had rather taken the enthusiasm out of sportsmen and there was consequently a poor muster. This was to be regretted as a capital programme supplied a good afternoon's sport, with fields restricted to such proportions as to enable the different phases of the events to be appreciated—much more acceptable to the critical sportsman than a hetecacomb of horses, crowding and jostling at the jumps, with extra possibilties of accidents. Results:—

An indescribably delightful sensation is procured by those who accustom themselves immediately before retiring to rest, to take a mouth douche of Odol. This preparation penetrates the cavities of the teeth and the whole mucous membrane of the mouth, and its refreshing and antiseptic properties are felt at ever breath that is drawn—a most useful and agreeable antidote to a stale mouth in the morning.

Of all Chemists and Stores.

KING'S NORTON HANDICAP STEEPLECHASE—Of 90sovs. 3 miles.

Mr. P. Whitaker's Newsvendor, aged, 11st. 7lb. ... ... Owner 1

PLUMPTON.

Beyond a little too much wind, the weather for this one-day meeting last Tuesday was of a seasonable character, and this induced a fair-sized company to assemble on the Sussex downs. A capital card had been arranged, and although the fields ruled small, the sport proved interesting. Backers had much the best of the argument, as each of the winners met with plenty of support. Results:—

THE MIDDLETON SELLING STEEPLECHASE—Of 50sovs. About 2½ miles.

Miss E. M. Woodland's The Awakening, aged, 11st. 6lb. ... ... R. Morgan 1

GATWICK.

In town, on Wednesday, the mist was evident, but at Gatwick the sun was unchallenged, and the mere visit was a pleasure in itself to bright fields and pastures new, with its glorious course and grand condition, and the grand background of the Box and Leith chain of hills cutting a clear sky. Messrs. Pratt had issued a taking programme, and the attendance all round was worthy of the occasion, a strong contingent of visitors from the South Coast towns helping to swell the muster. Fields ruled pretty well, and sport was good all round, though no especial feature called the "Upper Ten" of cross-country fame to the post. Results :—

After the gale had blown itself out, a watery sun rose on the drenched weald of Surrey yesterday when showers were still in the ascendant, and but a temporary glimpse could be caught of distant Box and Leith Hills. Better luck, however, was in store, as fighting the swift, low-lying clouds, the sun got the mastery before the first special arrived, and visitors were treated to another glorious afternoon, which made it a pleasure to be out of doors. The temperature was mild enough for May, the light good, and the course, though a bit boldieg, was in capital order for the business in hand, thanks to the care and attention of Mr. Hook, who knows exactly what this loamy soil requires. Some day, when the avenue of elms, thinned out, has attained to the dignity of the Doncaster Road, Gatwick will be one of the nicest courses in England. Results :—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE LEAGUES.—Nothing so sensational has occurred in First League football this season as the match at Newcastle on Saturday between Newcastle United and Sunderland. Newcastle had the same side that only a week previously defeated the Forest at Nottingham by 4 to 0, and as Sunderland on the same afternoon lost on their own ground to Notts County, there seemed little or no reason to doubt the ability of the Newcastle men to pull through. In any event, the prospect of a good score against Newcastle appeared very remote, seeing that 15 matches had yielded the various opponents of that team only 13 goals in all. The first half of the game, too, if not showing the Newcastle team to much advantage, ended with the score at one goal all. Play after change of ends, however, proved absolutely astounding. Nolley at once gave Sunderland the lead and then the Newcastle defence, which had held out in nearly every match for three months, broke down so completely that when the end arrived Sunderland had run up a total of nine goals, Hogg claiming four, Nolley three, and Bridgett two. In the whole of their brilliant career Newcastle can scarcely ever have cut so sorry a figure as they did on Saturday.

If not going to pieces anything like so badly as Newcastle, other prominent clubs in the First League also fared disastrously. Sheffield, Wednesday, after winning all their home matches, were beaten on the Owlerton enclosure by Liverpool, and Aston Villa went down before Preston North End at Preston. Manchester United, too, had to admit defeat, but in this case the result carried with it no disgrace, the contest being with Everton at Goodison Park, and the Manchester team only losing by 3 to 2. As a consequence, however, of the misfortunes overtaking their closest rivals, Everton now occupy a very strong position in the competition, leading Newcastle United by 4 points and Manchester United, who have one more match to play, by 5 points. In addition to Sunderland and Liverpool, Sheffield United, Blackburn Rovers and Bradford City also won from home, visiting teams not only holding the points, but scoring 25 goals to 22 in a very heavy afternoon's aggregate. Blackburn Rovers had desperately hard work to beat Woolwich Arsenal, but in so doing they kept their record for out matches free from blemish. Unlike the Arsenal, who ran the Rovers so close, Chelsea lost by 3 to 0 to Notts County, whose last five engagements have yielded them four wins and a draw. Up to Saturday, Bradford City in fourteen matches had gained only one victory—over Bury in September—while away from home they had on no more than one occasion escaped defeat.

In consequence of the cup ties there were only seven matches in the Second Division of the League, but some striking changes were brought about in the positions of one or two of the more important clubs. West Bromwich Albion and Birmingham remain first and second, but as the latter club could only draw at home with Blackpool, the Albion, who had not a game, are now in a far stronger position than they previously were. With an equal number of engagements fulfilled, they lead Birmingham by two points. Bolton Wanderers have played an extra match and stand level on points with Birmingham, while as a result of their clever victory over Fulham, Tottenham Hotspur advanced to fourth place, and are only three points below the Albion, with a match in hand. There is, therefore, very little to choose between the clubs immediately below West Bromwich Albion, so that everything promises well for a desperately keen struggle during the latter half of the season. Suffering their third defeat at home, Fulham have dropped three places, and for the time being are somewhat out of the running. Their match with Tottenham Hotspur was quite the event of the afternoon in London and a huge crowd saw a most interesting display of football. Both sides played extremely well, the half-backs being admirable in every respect. Slightly superior forward, however, Tottenham owed their victory to that fact.

In beating the Old Westminsters by 6 goals to 1 at Queen's Club, Cambridge University showed the same strength in attack and uncertainty in defence that has marked their play on most occasions this season. The match concluded their programme this term, and their record is much superior to that of Oxford, who also have no more engagements until after Christmas. Cambridge have won nine of their eleven games, and suffered only one defeat, while Oxford, in as many fixtures, have lost three and won six matches. On the whole, Cambridge thoroughly deserve to be considered the better side, as they beat the Corinthians, whereas Oxford suffered a severe defeat from the most famous of amateur clubs, and had hard work to overcome the New Crusaders, whereas Cambridge won at Sidcup by a margin of four goals. As the University match does not take place until February, present form may not be of much value in anticipating what will happen at Queen's Club, but there is every indication of the game producing some first-rate forward play.

RUGBY RULES.

AUSTRALIANS VS. ANGLO-WELSH.—This game, at the Richmond Athletic Ground, was robbed of much of its interest by the fact that a large number of men who went with the team to Australia could not take part in the game, and at least two men, who did not make the journey, had to be brought in to complete the side. Considering that the weather was dull there was a good attendance, about seven thousand people being present. The Australians played almost their best side and had all the best of the play. They were stronger in every department of the game and were really never pressed by their opponents. They set the pace themselves and did almost as they liked, scoring three times in each half. The Anglo-Welsh forwards made one or two bursts, but as a rule they were outplayed and they were very slow all through the game. The Australians won in the end by 24 points to nothing and the result does not in any way flatter them. On the game being started the Australians at once took the lead. The kick-off was returned with excellent judgment and touch was found well in the home half.

Wood got hold from the line out, and passed to Hickey, who ran strongly, and at the critical moment passed to Dix. He scored rather wide out and Carmichael failed at goal. The game was continued in midfield where Maddocks got possession and made a good run, but was brought down by Mandible. Two penalties were given against the Australians for offside, but nothing came of them, and Ward Prentice put in a good run, but was stopped by Dyke. Chapman relieved with a good kick which found touch in the Wallabies' half, but a run by Mandible transferred the game to the home 25 line. Dyke found touch at the half-way, but Mandible, Dix, and Hickey made a couple of fine efforts, which, however, were not successful. A bad kick by Harding nearly let in the Australians, but a couple of penalties brought relief. The Australians forwards appeared to be the stronger, and more frequently got the ball, and gave their backs more chances. But the home defence held good for nearly half an hour, when Wood, getting possession in some loose play, passed to his three-quarter line, and Russell, after a good run, scored. Carmichael took the kick and placed a goal. Within a couple of minutes the Wallabies were again attacking and Ward Prentice, dodging the full-back with a swerve, scored rather wide, and Carmichael failed at goal. Maddocks made a good run up the left and play was transferred almost to the Australians' goal line. A good kick by Carmichael relieved and what looked like a strong attack was stopped by a forward pass. Nothing further happened before the interval, when the score stood Australians, 1 goal, 2 tries; Anglo-Welsh, 0.

On the resumption, the Australians found touch in kilv with a kick along the ground, and the first scrum was formed in the home territory. The Anglo-Welsh were steadily forced back and the ball being passed to Russell, he scored wide out on the right, and Carmichael placed a goal from a difficult angle within three minutes of the restart. Another penalty was given against the Australians, but a capital return kick nullified any advantage. The Australians kicked with very good judgment and they got up a strong attack which was, however, spoiled by a forward pass. Shortly afterwards they would have been in again but for a bad pass by Hickey to Dix. Then another assault was made in the centre, but was relieved by a good kick by Dyke. But the Australians were soon back again, and relief only came from a good dribble by a couple of the home forwards, who took the ball into the Wallabies' 25. Another dribble by the home forwards compelled the Australians to touch down. The slowness of the home side enabled the Australians to get away again, and after nearly all the backs had handled the ball and passed in a speculative manner, Russell scored wide out on the right, and Carmichael failed at goal. The pressure was continued, and before many minutes had elapsed Russell was in again, and Carmichael added the major points. After this the Australians continued to hold the advantage, but did not score again, and the result was—Australians, 3 goals, 3 tries; Anglo-Welsh, 0.

Old Merchant Taylors vs. R.M. College, Sandhurst.—Played at Old Deer Park before less than a dozen spectators. The visitors fielded a very poor side, and as a result were hopelessly outclassed at all points. Pound scored in the first few minutes, followed by Elderton, and then further tries were put on before the interval by Henderson and A. Lepingwell. The second and fourth of these were converted by M. J. Lepingwell, and the Taylors crossed leading by 16 points to nil. In the second half the Old Boys did even better, the brothers Lepingwell playing splendidly. M. J. scored twice and R. A. once, Hodson and Fuller also adding tries, and M. J. Lepingwell added the extra points on three occasions. The result was a runaway win for the Old Boys by 37 points to nothing. O.M.T., 5 goals, 4 tries; R.M.C., 0.

Harlequins vs. Marlborough Nomads.—Both sides started short at Wandsworth, but neither was seriously handicapped, and the home team, as was expected, proved immeasurably superior. Bassett scored a try after some ten minutes, and Lambert could not improve. A fine run by this last-named player ended in a try between the posts, and a goal resulted on this occasion, as it did on another, when Lewis got over. Lambert got a further try (unconverted) just before the interval, which enabled the Harlequins to cross over with a lead of 16 points. Continuing in this irresistible strain, they added tries by Lewis, Elmslie, Reid, and Lambert (two), and two of these were converted into goals. Harlequins, 4 goals, 5 tries; Nomads, 0.

Blackheath vs. Cardiff.—After a hard, well-fought game at Blackheath, Cardiff defeated the Heathens by 18 points to 5. The ground was in splendid condition, but the game at Richmond evidently had a bad effect upon the attendance, for there was barely 2,000 spectators. There were five changes in the Cardiff team, Daley, Smith, Ward, and Yewlett coming into the front rank, and Furniss taking the place of Nicholls in the three-quarter line. Blackheath were as advertised. The game opened somewhat sensationally, for within three minutes of the start Bush obtained the first try for Cardiff. It was a great surprise, as the Blackheath forwards had carried the game into the Cardiff territory and looked like making a good fight. Play was transferred by one of the famous combined Welsh back movements and from a line out close to the Blackheath goal flag Powell picked the ball from the melee, and giving to Bush, he (the latter) made his way through and scored behind the goal, for Winfield to convert. Following this the Blackheath backs had plenty to do, and but for the fine defence of Coopper and Tause would have got through on two or three occasions. As it was, they obtained a second try before the interval through Powell and again this was from a line out. Winfield added the extra points. Cardiff started the second half without Gibbs and Gaccow, but the latter came on shortly after the whistle blew. Even at this disadvantage Cardiff more than held their own, and further tries were added by Smith and Yewlett, the latter of which was converted by Bush. Four minutes from the finish Stone got over for Blackheath, but Tause failed with the kick. Cardiff, 3 goals, 1 try; Blackheath, 1 try.

Old Leysians vs. London Scottish.—During the first ten minutes of this match at Wandsworth the Scottish were without Stuart, and while they were thus a man short had none the best of the play, but on the team being completed they proved immensely superior outside the scrums. Quickly after Stuart made his appearance Williamson, after throwing away a certain score by missing an easy pass, received the ball again and got over, and Lockart converted. Within a couple of minutes Williamson crossed the Leysian line again, and then, just on half-time, Stuart scored. As Lockart failed at the second and improved the third, the Scottish crossed over leading by two goals and a try to nil. For the first twenty minutes in the second portion of the game the home side played extremely well, and though they seldom looked like scoring, they fairly held their own. However, toward the close the visitors asserted themselves once more, and first Buchanan—owing to a bad mistake by Hawkins—got in and next Williamson—the last-named after a brilliant run from half-way. Scottish, 4 goals, 1 try; Old Leysians, 0.

Other Matches.

Old Alleynians vs. London Irish.—Although playing one short throughout their game with the Old Alleynians at Dulwich yesterday, the London Irish put up a good exhibition and were rather unlucky to lose by 17 points to 5.

Wimbledon.—Old Merchant Taylors "B," 17 points; Lennox "B," nil.

Streatham.—Streatham, 15 points; Catford Bridge, 5 points.

West Kensington.—Old Alleynians "B," 11 points; St. Paul's School III., 3 points.

Sutton.—Sutton, 3 goals, 2 tries; Surbiton, 2 tries.

Walthamstow.—Upper Clapton "A," 17 points; Bank of England "A," 5 points.

Streatham.—Streatham "B," 17 points; Catford Bridge "B," 4 points.

Catford.—Streatham "A," 6 points; Catford Bridge "A," 5 points.

Wanstead.—Leytonstone "B," 6 points; Old Merchant Taylors "C," nil.

Wembley.—Old Alleynians "A," 8 points; Willesden, nil.

Moseley vs. Richmond.—At Moseley the home team were beaten by Richmond, who scored two goals (one dropped) and a try to a penalty goal and a try (12 points to 6).

Coventry vs. London Hospital.—The Hospital won a fine game at Coventry by 3 goals to 3 tries (15 points to 9).

Bedford vs. University College School Old Boys.—The visitors were beaten at Bedford by a goal and 5 tries to nothing (20 points to 0).

Northampton vs. Guy's Hospital.—The Hospital were beaten in a good game at Northampton by 2 goals and 3 tries to a dropped goal and 2 tries (19 points to 10).

Exeter vs. Plymouth.—The visitors won at Exeter by a dropped goal and a try to a try (7 points to 3).

Swansea vs. Newport.—A dropped goal enabled Newport to win at Swansea by 4 points to nil.

Aberavon vs. Llanelly.—Llanelly won by one try to nothing (3 points to 0) at Aberavon.

Stroud vs. Cheltenham.—Played at Stroud, the home team winning by two penalty goals to a dropped goal (6 points to 4).

Manchester vs. Leicester.—Playing at home, Manchester were beaten by four tries to one try (12½ points to 3).

CROSS COUNTRY RUNNING

Oxford vs. Cambridge.—There was a large gathering of Old Blues and others from both Universities at Roehampton on the 5th instant to witness the decision of the twenty-ninth annual cross-country race between the selected representatives of Oxford and Cambridge. In 1906, Cambridge won by a single point with the lower score of 27 points to 28 and they repeated that performance precisely last year, when they gained their eighteenth victory as against the ten successes gained by Oxford. The Dark Blues, however, were the more strongly fancied for yesterday's contest. They had won every match in which they had been engaged with London clubs. Cambridge had also proved too good for all the teams opposed to them, excepting on one occasion, when they were beaten by the Cambridge Town and County Club. The Cantabs, however, had not then their best team in the field. Yesterday, they were without two good men in E. C. Inman, last year's individual winner, and Selby Lowndes, neither of whom has this term been able to run up to form. It was also feared that their captain, F. G. Swan, owing to an injury to his knee, might not be able to turn out. With all those drawbacks, however, the Light Blues were a very useful lot, and, although not generally reckoned quite as strong as the Oxford contingent, were a team by no means to be despised. On the Oxford side the re-appearance of S. P. B. Mais, who was second man home in 1906, but did not run last year, was noteworthy, while with J. Worsley (second to Inman last year) and A. W. Clemes (the Fresher from Tasmania), M. G. Haigh, and J. W. Sainbury, Oxford was very well served.

At 3-20 the sides turned out as chosen. The weather was dull, and the course was rather on the heavy side. Oxford won with 22 points to 33, and supplied the first man home in A. W. Clemes. The order of finishing was:—

A. W. Clemes, Oxford, 42min. 30secs. ...	... 1
W. Gavin, Cambridge, 42min. 58 4-5secs.	... 2
J. F. Worsley, Oxford, 43mm. 10 1-5secs. ...	... 3
S. P. B. Mais, Oxford, 43mm. 18secs. ...	... 4
W. B. Loveless, Cambridge, 45mm. 26 4-5 ecs.	... 5
J. W. Sainsbury, Oxford, 45min. 35secs. ...	... 6
A. Hughes, Cambridge, 45min. 46 1-5secs.	... 7
M. G. Haigh, Oxford, 45mm. 58 1-5secs. ...	... 8
F. G. Swan, Cambridge, 44min. 19secs. ...	... 9
G. A. Ewart, Cambridge, 46min. 53 1-5secs	... 10

Mais was the first to show in front, and just led going across the Portsmouth road, with Hughes lying last, but had given way at New Malden Hill to Clemes, with Gavin in close attendance. Hard on their heels came Loveless and Mais, who had instructions to force the pace. Then followed Worsley, Swan and Sainsbury, the last-named rowing somewhat, Haigh, and Ewart, who was very fatigued. At the bottom of Cop's Hill Clemes still led from Gavin and Loveless, whilst Worsley had worked his way into fourth position. Next in order were Mais, Sainsbury, Swan, Hughes, Haigh, apparently very much exhausted, and Ewart.

Beginning the last two miles across the Common, Clemes had increased his lead by about 50 yards, and eventually beat Gavin, who was very tired in the last stages of the race, but ran with great pluck, by 100 yards, Worsley being half that distance behind Gavin, and Mais another 40 yards away.

The officials were: Referee, Walter Rye; judges, C. B. Gall, M.A., and G. S. Butler, Oxford, and Rev. C. T. Wood and F. M. Edwards, Cambridge; starter, Dr. J. A. Voelcker; timekeeper, J. E. Fowler-Dixon; pioneers, H. C. Rose, H. S. Tindal, J. P. Foot, G. B. Wane, A. D. Anderson, C. W. Farwell, E. L. Watts, C. Nevill, G. F. Turner, and G. H. Formby; trail-layers, C. Slack, C. Tatham, G. L. Brassey, H. D. Hodgkinson, E. H. D. Markhams, and J. D. Craggs.

Mr. Walter Rye, the Mayor of Norwich, and president and founder of the Thames Hare and Hounds, presided in the evening at the dinner given by that club at the Trocadero to the University teams.

Inter-Banks Championship.—The annual Inter-Banks' Cross Country Championship was decided over the Ranelagh Harriers' five miles course, and resulted in an individual win for F. F. Judson, of the Union of London and Smiths, in 27min. 41secs., and a dead-heat between the London and Westminster and the Union of London and Smith's Banks for the championship. The former's three scoring representatives finished third, sixth, and twentieth, while the latter provided first, thirteenth, and fifteenth men home.

The first twelve men to finish were:—

F. F. Judson (Union of London and Smiths), 27min. 41secs.	1
J. V. Beedle (London Bank of Mexico), 27min. 54 1-5secs.	2
S. F. Ayres (London and Westminster), 28min. 9secs. ...	3
T. C. Morgan (London, City and Midland), 28min. 12secs.	4
A. C. Frecker (Coutts), 28min. 50 1-5secs.	5
J. L. Churchill (London and Westminster), 28min. 55 4-5secs.	6
T. N. Dainty (Bank of New South Wales), 29min. 19 5-5secs.	7
H. S. Brenchley (Coutts and Deacon), 29min. 17 3-5secs.	8
A. H. Woodhouse (Thos. Cook and Son), 29min. 21secs ...	9
F. C. Dane (London, City and Midland), 29min. 22 2-5secs.	10
C. R. Cherry (Barclay and Co.), 29mm. 58secs. ...	11
V. J. Warren (London and South-Western), 29mm. 58 1-5secs.	12

The team placings were as follows: London and Westminster (5, 6, 29), 29 points; Union of London and Smiths, 29; London, City and Midland, 43.3; Coutts and Co., 55, 4; Thos. Cook and Sons, 56, 5; Bank of New South Wales, 59, 6; London and County, 65, 7; Credit Lyonnais, 90, 8; Lloyds, 99, 9; Glyn and Co., 120, 10.

ROWING

Cambridge Trial Eights.—A large company was attracted by the annual trial eight race which took place over the Ouse reliable waters, Ely, on Saturday afternoon. The weather was cold and foggy, with a strong wind blowing against the competitors. The course was longer than usual, being about three miles. The race provided a good deal of interest, and was exceptionally keen for more than half the course, neither crew gaining any material advantage, just before reaching Day's farmhouse, a mile from home, Arbuthnot's crew forged ahead, but a plucky effort on the part of Lloyd brought them nearly level again. Some short distance after the farmhouse Lloyd's crew appeared to lose their form, and their rivals romped away, and although Lloyd made several attempts to increase the stroke, his men failed to keep it up, and they were eventually beaten by two lengths in 17min. 6secs. The crews were distinctly above the average. Arbuthnot rowed a grand race, and instilled life into the crew, while he was well supported by Hudson, Rosher, and Gardiner. Lloyd hurried his men somewhat, but Horridge rowed splendidly, and Henslow and Perry also showed to advantage. Ainley steered an indifferent course. Order of rowing:

With the decision of the Trial Eights at the two Universities, it may be fairly said that we have seen the beginning of a rowing season in which the University Boat Race is the first great event. Fortunately, the trials were rowed at Moulsford and Ely on different days, a welcome change, so that it was possible for critics to see both, and make some comparisons between the material available for Oxford and for Cambridge in the historic contest of the spring. The first noticeable fact is that no less than nine Etonians and one Radley boy were rowing in the two Oxford crews, while only one oar from Eton, with three from Radley, were to be found at Cambridge. In that one, however, Cambridge have found a first-rate stroke, and Arbuthnot, who only led his school crew at Henley at the last moment, is now giving proof that the promise he showed at the Royal regatta is extremely likely to be fulfilled.

Almost anything can be taught an oarsman except the art of stroking, and this Arbuthnot seems to possess. With the president behind him at seven, where H. C. Stuart once did such remarkable work for the Trinity Hall crew, and with Williams at six, Cambridge should have a good nucleus, and Fairbairn and G. L. Thomson will be safe at four and three. The heavy-weight for five, and two good men for bow and two, must remain uncertain for a while, though M. A. Lloyd and C. M. Stuart both seem to deserve a trial. No less than ninety men were given a chance of showing their form before the president made up the boats, among the older choices being Baynes, Hudson, Richardson, Henslow, and Hornidge. Of the newer men, Rosher and A. J. Gardiner showed up very well, but there seems no such hard worker as H. E. Kitching proved himself at Putney last April. There was a head wind on Saturday, so the record of 15.58 (in 1899) was not approached, but a very valuable test of individual merit was given by the closeness of the struggle for over two miles.

Oxford's race also produced a very keen encounter for most of the distance, and the winning boat was stroked by the son of Dr. Bourne, of Eton and Oxford, who has for a long been associated with the coaching of his University crews in their early stages. There was a strong wind here as well, so the president was equally fortunate in being able to keep the candidates under his eye at the crisis of the struggle, the most important consideration in this race, which was also rowed considerably slower than the previous record of 9.56. Neither of the strokes appeared to show first-rate form, though Bourne won by better length. In the losing crew, Garton is a promising heavy-weight, who should repay careful attention. Newman and Somers-Smith also showed good form. Fulford, a good waterman and a sound worker, should also be sure of a trial in the spring.

WALKING.

ROAD-WALKING CHAMPION'S SUCCESS.—The Sutton H. are, for a new club, by no means lacking in enterprise, and the road walk they held on Saturday was one of the best sporting fixtures ever decided in the Surrey town The contesting clubs were the Surrey Walking Club, who for scoring purposes divided their team into two sections, and the Tooting A.C., as well as the home club. The entry included many of the best-known road walkers, among others H. V. L. Ross, the road-walking champion, and J. Butler, the record-holder. The course was from the Station Hotel, Sutton, to the Downs Hotel, Epsom, and back, and a prize was given by E. J. Clarke to the first man to reach the turning point. Splendid racing was the order of the day, the contest between Schofield, Ross, and Butler being very keen for the first four miles. Then the latter fell back, and Schofield was first at the turn, but Ross walked finely on the home journey and won handsomely. Details:—

24	G. E. Ross, S.H. ...	97 10½

There were over 30 starters, and Butler was first to break the line, with Schofield close up. At Banstead, Schofield led by 20 yards, with Butler second, Ross third; but a mile further on Ross had taken second place. At 3¼ miles Ross was up with Schofield, Butler being about 25 yards behind. Up the long hill to the racecourse Schofield went ahead, and reached the Downs Hotel first, the order being as follows:—Schofield (40min. 41secs.), Ross (40-50), Butler (41-30), Bamford (42-18), Clarke (42-19), Lang (42-50), Brown (43-21), Leatherby (43-36), Dickson (44-), Warden (44-4), Hollingsworth (44-15), Fox (44-43), Parslow (44-44), Coombs (44-48), and Smethurst (45-9). On the return journey Butler dropped out, but the remainder of the placings were almost unaltered, except that of the leader. Schofield, who had made too much use of himself on the outward journey, failed to withstand the determined challenge of Ross, who got clean away on Banstead Downs, and won by nearly 150 yards. The team placings were:—Surrey W.C. A Team, 32 points; B Team, 54 points; Sutton H. 58 points; Tooting A.C., 119 points.

RUNNING.

HOW DORANDO BEAT HAYES.—Never has such a scene been witnessed in the g amphitheatre as that which followed the victory of the Italian at Madison-square Garden, New York, says the New York Herold of 26th November. It seemed as though two-thirds of the vast gathering were country-men of the victor, and before the American could cover the last pain-racking yards the vast throng swooped over the rail that bounded the track, leaped down from boxes and seats, sweeping aside the Garden police and officials like so many straws, and made a mad rush for the stout-hearted little Italian. Dorando was mobbed by his frantic admirers, and carried off on their shoulders, while those who could not reach him cheered frantically "Viva Italia! Viva Dorando!" while in their unbounded enthusiasm they tossed their hats, coats, and Italian flags high in the air.

Dorando was never headed at any stage of the contest. He set the pace from the crack of the pistol by Richard Croker until the final mark was reached. Once or twice the American tried to pass his rival, but Dorando always fought off the spurt, refusing to relinquish his task as pacemaker. The clip that the Italian maintained was so lively that it beats the London Marathon mark of 2hr. 55min. 18secs. by nearly 11min.

On the twenty-second mile the American boy began an attempt to run the Italian off his feet. Every spurt was answered by a flash that had the crowd in an uproar. Try as he would the local lad could not pass the foreigner, and he began to look weary and puzzled by the seemingly endless store of energy that was in his opponent. During the last five miles the crowd cheered continuously as Hayes hung gamely on, and Dorando could not shake off the dogged little Yankee.

When the last mile was started Dorando was drenched from head to foot by his trainers, who tried to freshen him up with applications of cold water. Three laps from the end Dorando started his spurt, and Hayes was unable to hang on any longer. He began to fall back foot by foot, and was beaten sixty yards. Dorando's times, mile by mile, were as follows:—

THE LONDON TOURNAMENT.

E. DIGGLE vs. M. INMAN.—This, the seventh heat in the popular competition at the Grand Salon, Soho-square, ended on Saturday night, in a victory for Melbourne Inman by no fewer than 2,029 points. From the very start of the game he improved upon the start of 1,000 points Diggle was set to concede him, and matters were in most one-sided shape when the last day's play was entered upon. Inman led by 1,775 points, with the marking-board showing the two totals at 7,697 to 5,922.

For all the uninteresting state of the game, from a competitive point of view, there was yet a good attendance of spectators to witness the afternoon's play. Some interesting features were seen, notably a clever break of 339 by Diggle, who had commenced the proceedings by adding 12 points to an unfinished 122. This was the top-note struck, but the leader, if not claiming such a high individual effort, made the better progress with breaks of 247, 195 and 106. These with a few smaller items served to expand the gap between the two score-pegs to nearly 2,000 points at the interval, when the game was called—8,419 to 6,464.

In the final instalment of the play on Saturday night, Inman made his way to the winning total with highest moves of 175, 155, 66, and 65. The scoring was fairly even here, as Diggle, with chief items to the value of 129, 65, 61, 76, 49 and 47, totalled 507 to his opponent's 581. The scoring was conducted at a very good average rate throughout the day. Inman put his fu.. aggregate of 1,303 points together with an average of 50 points per innings, and Diggle averaged nearly 40½ for his total of 1,409. Closing scores:—

£200 FOURSOME ARRANGED.

It is now definitely settled that James Braid and J. H. Taylor, who have won between them seven open championships will meet those rising golfers, George Duncan and C. H. Mayo in a foursome match for £100 a side in the spring. The matter was arranged at a meeting of the principals which took place on Saturday evening at the offices of the Sportsman. The challenge of Duncan and Mayo, issued within a week of their victory over Edward Ray and Tom Vardon for similar stakes last month, was to a contest on neutral courses, and their choice was Bramshot. The supporter of Braid and Taylor, however, wanted a home-and-home match, and after some discussion Duncan and Mayo gave way on the point. Consequently 36 holes will be played at Walton Heath (Braid's home course) and 36 holes at Burhill (Mayo's course). The event will be decided in the second half of April, but the precise dates will not be fixed until March, when also the stakes will be deposited.

It is only two years since Duncan and Mayo came to the front, whereas Taylor won his first open championship fourteen years ago at the meeting at which Braid made his first appearance in the event.

Mr. Horace, G. Hutchinson, the captain of the Royal and Ancient Club, is to be invited to referee the forthcoming match.

Hunting.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

THE Bombay hounds indeed "went up one" in the estimation of those who turned out last Bye-day, as not only did they provide us with a long run, but stuck to their quarry in the most difficult undergrowth in a manner that quite opened the eyes of their followers. It was still too dark to gallop with any degree of safety when we met, so a halt was made under Bomanwadi Hill. As though only waiting the word, hounds were off immediately and, after climbing this hill, cut across the valley of that name as far as the Blackwater passing Sahar on the way. At a point, not far from the bridge, there is a check, as the jack twisted on his tracks, before the stream is crossed and a delightful gallop ensues to the foot of Hogsback Hill. Hounds make straight up one of these veritable mountains, and come down again right in front of the waiting field. The woods in the direction of Ghat Cooper, take some penetrating, and after successfully doing so and anticipating a gallop in the open, we see hounds again take a hill too steep for us to follow. Here again the pack made it too hot for the jack to remain there, and, hunting him out into Powai Valley, the other side of the range, peg at him through the brushwood till they meet with their just dues.

The extra day's sport on Tuesday needs but little description though the gallop was fast and fairly long. About a score only turned out, and it was a long trek to Jackal Hill, the selected venue, syces preceding us with lanterns, and making quite a picturesque sight. Chuckla Hill and the adjoining groves were drawn blank before a hound at last gave tongue on crossing Andheri Road. One by one hounds got on to the scent passing the Mango Tope, and it was rather a straggly line till a check occurred at Robert's Corner and they came together again. The old line towards Goregaum was again taken and this delightful stretch provided an exhilarating gallop. On reaching the woods, however, the jack managed to evade his pursuers.

The brilliant opening of this season was admirably kept up on Xmas Eve morning, when a large field met at Santa Cruz. On daylight breaking, we moved across to the dry tank on the way to Parla, and on the edge of this the first jack was put up. Away went hounds with a great burst across the rice fields, but on the other side of a nice cactus jump, we had to ease up going over bad melon ground. Near Chuckla, there was a grand bit of open country over which we fairly raced and then through the groves on towards Pereira Hill. Here the jack was apparently blown, and tried to hide, but scent was too good to give him much hope of evading the end which soon came.

Crossing Bomanwadi Valley, we had a try at the usually fruitful Sahar coverts and on the north side of them hounds early gave signs of activity. Giving tongue, they dashed away across rice fields into a dry nullah, and along its tortuous course which was crossed more than once. This gave way to a really perfect stretch of rice fields, the banks providing admirable jumps, those mounted on Arabs finding some too high to actually clear. At a cracking pace the Mango Tope is penetrated and a check occurs owing to the quarry having crossed the Backwater. Hounds are soon the line again and turning at Kurla make for Hogsback Hill. On the way up a sporting stone wall had to be taken, and then we descended to the right of Horse Shoe Valley. Another slight check before crossing the road, and eventually bowling the quarry over, after two really fine runs.

OLD CLIFF.

III.

THE Xmas paperchase was run on Boxing Day as usual and was over that particularly uninteresting country that lies between the red road and Tollygunge Steeplechase Course. About 5 miles of hard roads and soft ruk—not a particularly pleasant ride, but the best that could be got, so one mustn't grumble. The worst feature of this particular chase is the difficulty of getting back from the finish to the start again for the pony chase and three or four would-be starters in the latter had to go out for a little run on their own, as they were late in hacking across. As usual the Club put up a chota hazri at the finish and a very large crowd, both of chasers and onlookers, turned up to partake of it.

The order of the finish of each chase was as follows:—

1. Captain Holden on Lord Harry.
2. Mr. K. Robertson on Blue Bell.
3. Mr. Ballantyne on Fairy.
4. Mr. Curtis-Hayward on Pardon.
5. Mr. Muir on Ryong.
6. Captain Lord Francis Scott on Fermoy.
7. Mr. Halliday on Rainbow.
8. Mrs. Dangar on Seagull.
9. Mr. Paunlley on St. Odille.
10. Mr. Tanner on Moachim.
11. Mr. Lamotte on Benelbi.
12. Mr. Tremearne on Prince Moorfield, followed by Captain Hill on Tired Tim, Captain Walsh, and several more. The order in the pony chase, which Loch Lily won in a common canter, was:—

1. Mr. Pauntley on Loch Lily.
2. Captain Holden on Pathfinder.
3. Mr. Muir on Lady Mana.
4. Mr. Ballantyne on Meprise.
5. Mr. Tanner on Emerald.
6. Mr. Corbett on The Pink 'Un
7. Captain Macdonnell on Marconi.
8. Captain Lockett on Scarboro.
9. Mrs. Walker on Night.
10. Mr. Holmes on Miss Mac.
11. Mrs. Paris on Zig Zag.
12. Mr. Radmore on a bay, followed by Mr. Harvey on R.B., Mr. Percy Smith and many others.

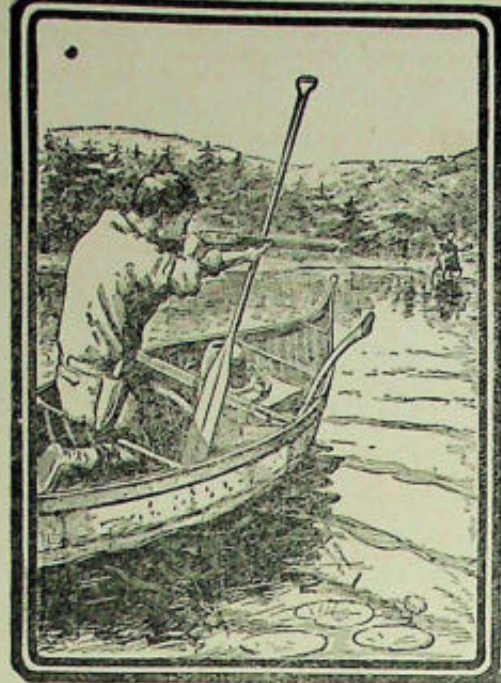
'. P. A. CHAMPIONSHIP TOURNAMENT



FIRST ROUND.

VICEROY'S STAFF vs. CALCUTTA POLO CLUB "B."—The tournament opened on the 23rd instant with the game between the above teams. There was a large and fashionable attendance including Their Excellencies and a party from Government House, but the game was a very one-sided affair, the Staff having the upper hand all through, and winning decisively by 10 goals to nil. They scored a goal in the first period, two in the second, two in the third and one in each of the succeeding chukkers. Thomas registered "B" team's solita y goal in the sixth chukker. General Pretam Singh was in excellent form and a gave a brilliant exposition of the game. Colonel Victor Brooke displayed his usual mastery skill and Captain Keighley was very sound at back. Comte Jean de Madre, the well-known Hurlingham player assisted "B" Team. Teams:—

CALCUTTA "A" vs. 15TH HUSSARS.—This game was played on Xmas Day before a very large crowd including pretty well all fashionable Calcutta and was a splendid match The battle was fought fast and furiously from the first bugle to the last and though Calcutta had the best of things throughout the result was never certain and excitement ran very high when the 15th pulled the score up from 6-2 to 6-5 in the seventh chukker. Ismay and Graham played a delightful game for the victors. Full of dash and go throughout they worked together with a combination that was irresistible and both hitting hard and true they were responsible for most of the scoring of their side. Basset and Johnston made a sound defence. The latter was particularly safe and never missed the ball, though his smiting was not too strong. Bingham and Barrett both played in great form for the Hussars, but Muir was a bit slow and uncertain and Wells was not on his man for the couple of chukkers in which he played. In the third chukker his pony crossed his legs and came down giving the No. 1 a nasty shaking and his place was taken by Captain Pollock, who played with a pair of kneestraps on his ordinary trousers till half time, when he secured a change. Pollock played a much more strenuous game than Wells and bustled Johnston pretty effectively.

Calcutta had it anything the best of the first chukker in which, however, there was no score but in the second Ismay dribbled the ball through twice. The third was a fast chukker, but neither side could get a point and then in the fourth the Hussars for the first time seemed to hold Calcutta and after a long bombardment secured a goal from a rush. However, Calcutta got going again after this and Basset put them two points ahead once more by scoring after a fine run three-quarters the length of the ground. In the fifth chukker, the 15th again started to attack and scored after missing some easy chances. Graham, however, promptly re-adjusted matters. The sixth chukker saw two more goals added to the Calcutta score by Ismay, the result of pretty combined play. The seventh period began with the score at 6-2, Calcutta leading, and now for the first time the 15th really seemed to have entirely the best of matters. They kept the game going at a terrific pace and never let the Calcutta forwards get going properly at all, with the result that they were able to add three goals to their score and the seventh chukker started 6-5. Calcutta now, however, pulled themselves together and played with great

RIFLES SHOOT STRAIGHT AND STRONG.

The name "Winchester" on a rifle barrel is the hall-mark of straight and strong shooting. This is due to the excellence of Winchester barrels, the knowledge and experience embodied in their manufacture and the great care taken in targeting them. Every Winchester barrel is shot to test its accuracy, the distance varying according to the caliber. A corps of experts devote their entire time to this work, and before a rifle is passed it must be capable of shooting seven consecutive bulls-eyes on the standard size target for the distance shot. The proper rifling or twist to give best results with a given cartridge is determined in the same careful manner, which assures accuracy and strong shooting.

VICEROY'S STAFF vs. 2ND GORDON HIGHLANDERS.—The 2nd Gordon Highlanders were "at home" on the ground for this game on Monday and their band was in attendance. The game was not, however, of a very interesting order except in the last three chukkers when the soldiers bucked-up and gave the Staff something to do with the result that we had three fast galloping chukkers. For the rest the contest needs no description. The Staff all played well, each in his respective position, but the Gordons missed the ball only too often and their game was marred by lack of combination. Cumine at No. 1, though he scored the only goal made by his side, was badly at fault in that he left his back alone a great deal and spoilt the team's chances by so doing; he would be much better at No. 2.

There was what looked a nasty accident in the third chukker, when Stewart and Carr galloped into one another and their ponies rolled over. Stewart seemed a bit dazed for a minute or two but was soon all right and both proceeded with the chukker on fresh ponies.

The game ended in a win for the Viceroy's Staff by 10 goals to 1.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. BOMBAY.—Played on the 24th, 25th and 26th instant. Bombay batted first and began badly. Stow was bowled before a run had been scored, Cooper was out l.-b.-w. at 11, Townend was dismissed three minutes later, and then Tillard joined Miller. These two batting freely ran the score to 78 before Miller was bowled. Marsden, Wright and Tillard made useful contributions and the score was 171 when the seventh wicket fell. The remainder did little and the innings closed for 188. Calcutta then went in and at the end of the day's play had lost 4 wickets for 94. Fowke and Guise were both run out for 13 and 24 respectively and Cooper bowled Lee and Turnbull. Craik and Drew who were not out over night resumed their innings on Friday. Drew made 19, Horncastle 17, and the others 6 runs between them, but Craik played a careful innings, though it was marred by two chances: he was the last man out l.-b.-w. for a very useful 91. Bombay, 23 runs behind, then went in again but collapsed. Phillips batted well, scoring 41 at a critical stage of the game, but the others could make no stand against the bowling and they were all out for 91. Twiss took 6 wickets for 11 runs. With 69 runs to make to win, Calcutta opened their second innings and had scored 40 for the loss of 3 wickets at the end of the day's play. Resuming on Saturday they soon knocked off the runs, Turnbull was given out when he had scored 3, but Craik and Drew carried the total to 70, Calcutta thus winning by 6 wickets. Score :—

BOMBAY vs. UNITED SERVICES.—Played on the Calcutta C. ground on the 27th, 28th and 29th instant Bombay winning by 186 runs. They batted first and lost Phillips, Reed and Powell for 24. Marsden and Tillard then got together and scored fast. The former making 42 and Tillard 28 before they were dismissed. Stow (59) and Farquharson (42) hit merrily and with useful scores by Stileman, Munton and Townend the innings closed for 231. The Services fared badly, and at the end of the day's play had lost 9 wickets for 92, to which Captain Logan contributed 45. Wright and Cadell added 19 runs the next day and the last wicket fell with the score at 111. With a lead of 120 runs Bombay went in again, Cooper, Marsden, and Phillips made small scores, but Powell hit vigorously and scored 62 before he was caught. Townend and Stow batted freely and took the score to 177 before they were separated. The innings closed for 190, leaving the Services 321 to win. When stumps were drawn on Monday they had lost six wickets for 103, Wood's 41 being the feature of the innings. Fifteen minutes' play on Saturday ended the match. Slater (5[illegible]) Twiss (5) who were not out over night continued their innings. Slater was bowled without adding to his score, Reynolds' wicket fell when he had put up 9, Tillard bowled Geoghegan first ball; Orr hit his first ball for 4, but was bowled by the next and the innings closed for 124, Twiss being not out 11. Bombay thus won by 186 runs. Score :—

AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP OF INDIA.

THE seventeenth annual competition for the Championship of India was held over the Tollygunge links last week. The course was in splendid order and we have to record another big success. Mr. J. Reid Kay and his committee are to be congratulated on the excellence of the arrangements. The qualifying round on Thursday last brought out thirty-six competitors, thirty-one of whom returned scores. Mr. A Mann topped the list at the close of the day's play with 83+77=160 and won the prizes for the best 36 holes and the best 18 holes. His excellent round of 77 in the afternoon, which is the competition record for the course, was made up as follows:—Out—544533543=36. In—464554454=41=77. Mr. J. C. Anderson (Rangoon) with a total of 167 won the prize for the best score by a visitor. The competition proper began on Christmas Day, and the first round provided some close matches, notably those between Reid and Brebner, Kay and Walker, Sinclair and Mitchell Innes, Scroggie and Carruthers. In the second round Townend and Drimmie had a very even match eventually won on the 19th green by Townend. Walker and Sinclair easily defeated their opponents, but the surprise of the day was Mann's defeat by Scroggie. The latter played good golf all through, was 3 up at the 10th hole and finished 4 up and 2 to play. Mann's driving was very weak. The semi-finals were played on Saturday, when Townend easily disposed of Walker by 4 and 3, but the match between Scroggie and Sinclair was very interesting. The match was all square at the turn, then Sinclair took the lead and kept it till the 17th, where Scroggie again put the match all square and Sinclair topping his drive at the home hole Scroggie won the match. The final was played on Monday between Townend and Scroggie. The former who also reached the final stage to be beaten by B. A. Collins in 1904, was defeated by 4 up and 3 to play. The morning round ended all square, but Scroggie went ahead at the 11th hole in the afternoon and increased his lead by winning the next 3 holes in succession making him dormy 4, and a half at the next finished the match.

The competition for the Asian Cup was played over the Barrackpore links last week end. There was a record entry, but only 28 cards were returned. The best handicap score was put up by Mr J. A. Dykes with 88−14=74. Mr. H. R. Landale had an excellent score of 80 and with his handicap of −2 tied for second place with Mr. C. R. Rice. The best scratch score was 82 by Mr. Drimmie, the runner up for the championship being next with 83. Appended are results:—

ANNUAL SPORTS OF "F" CO. 1st C.V.R.

A LARGE attendance graced the annual Gymkhana sports of "F" Co., and a jolly day was spent at the Botanic Gardens. Entries were good and the finishes in some of the events very close—particularly in the 100 yards and 220 yards, the walking race was keenly contested and the tug-of-war proved the most exciting event of the day. Results:—

THROWING THE QUOIT.—1, Sergeant L. Prike; 2, Colour-Sergeant J. Chaplin.

VETERANS' RACE.—1, Colour-Sergeant Greig; 2, Captain Slater; 3, Mr. Cottle.

SLOW BICYCLE RACE.—1, Volunteer Best; 2, Volunteer Winter.

SUFFRAGETTE RACE.—1, Volunteer Pinnell (nominated by Miss Vidler; 2, Volunteer Prike (nominated by Miss Roberts).

WALKING HANDICAP.—1, Lance-Corporal S. Boothroyd; 2, Sergeant G. H. F. Eatwell; 3, Volunteer A. J. Stiff.

SACK RACE.—1, Volunteer Tydeman; 2, Sergeant Nicholson; 3, Volunteer Daniels.

TUG-OF-WAR.—Colour-Sergeant J. Chaplin's team beat Sergeant B. Price's team.

SEWING THE BUTTON.—1, Lance-Corporal Slater (nominated by Mrs. A. W. Slater); 2, Volunteer Evans (nominated by Mrs. Shelton).

TEMPERANCE RACE.—1, Volunteer Taverner; 2, Volunteer Saxty.

OBSTACLE RACE.—1, Volunteer Winter; 2, Sergeant L. Prike; 3, Volunteer Pinnell.

AGGREGATE CUP.—1, Lance-Corporal Boothroyd (10 points); 2, Lance-Corporal Slater (8 points); 3, Sergeant Eatwell (4 points).

The prizes were presented by Mrs. W. T. Grice.

Little Johnny, who had been often corrected by his mother for his unmanneredness in the presence of company, poked his head in at the door of the parlour, where his big sister was entertaining her best beau. Seeing an opportunity to get even for the many rebukes he had received, he said: "Why, Mamie, I'm surprised at you. Don't you know that young ladies shouldn't sit with their legs crossed." His sister blushed with mortification and anger. "Johnny, how dare you? I have a perfect right," she exclaimed. "That's correct, Mr. Simpson," said the little devil, turning to the embarrassed best beau and addressing him confidentially, "she cert'nly has. And a peach of a left, too!"

THE TWELFTH LAHORE DOG SHOW.

(From our Correspondent.)

The above show took place on Tuesday, the 22nd instant, on the ground kindly lent by the authorities of the Lawrence Gardens, in which it has been held for the last two or three years. There were a larger number of entries and dogs than last year, in all 143 dogs were benched, and a total of 250 entries secured. As usual, the terrier classes were well filled, especially Scottish terrier and fox-terriers, while Cocker spaniels were above the average. Greyhounds were not as good as usual. All the prizes were keenly competed for. Taken as a whole the quality was above the average, while one or two stood out as of conspicuous merit, such as Mrs. Williams' Chow Chow, Confucius, Colonel Willan Dawson's Cocker Rock Heir, Mr. Muir's smooth fox-terrier Device. The coveted honour of Best in the Show finally fell to the Chow Confucius, which award evidently met with the approval of the ringside judging by the applause. The task of making the awards fell on Major Impey, who took Fox-terriers, Airedale terriers, and Irish terriers; Major Williamson Scottish terriers and Greyhounds; Major Smith Bull terriers, and Variety class over 30lbs.; Colonel Willan Dawson Dachshunds; Rev. H. W. Bush Spaniels and Variety classes under 30lbs. To the regret of the Executive Committee, the Rule of Non-exhibitor judges in the case of Spaniels and Dachshunds had to be broken through at the last moment, with the consent of the N. I. K. A. Committee. There have not been exhibitor judges at Lahore Shows for some six years, but the acute state of the "market" as regards judges forced their hand this year. The unwillingness of exhibitors to take it in turns to judge and not exhibit is one of the most important factors in the future of shows in India, for none will deny that "non-exhibitor" judges is the desideratum. To Colonel Willan Dawson Honorary Secretary of the Show, is due all praise for his arduous labours; he was ably assisted by the Committee, Mr. Bush, Mr. Atkins and Major Impey. Except the special prizes, which were given in the form of Cups, all class prizes were "by orders" on firms, a plan generally approved of by exhibitors, who can please themselves as to what they purchase. The following are the list of classes and awards:—

Class 1.—Greyhounds (Open)—1st Colonel Willan Dawson's Rock Maid, 2nd Raja of Jind's Pretty Molly. Reserve, Maharaja of Jodhpur's Lady.

Class 2.—Greyhounds (Limit.)—1st Colonel Hyde-Cates' Branksea Tim. Reserve the Maharaja of Jodhpur's Lady.

Class 3.—Greyhounds (Novice.)—Colonel Hyde Cates' Branksea Tim. Reserve, Mrs. Cuthbert Edwardes' Skeltonian Beatall

All were good classes, but Rock Maid and Pretty Molly stood well away from the rest.

Class 4.—Cocker Spaniels, Dogs (Open). 1st Colonel Willan Dawson's Rock Heir. Reserve, Colonel Hyde Cates' Branksea Don.

Class 5.—Cocker Spaniels, Bitches (Open)—1st Colonel Willan Dawson's Rock Heiress. Reserve Mrs. Cuthbert Edwardes' Skeltonian Jet.

Class 6.—Cocker Spaniels (Limit.)—1st Colonel Willan Dawson's Rock Heiress. Reserve Colonel Hyde Cates' Branksea Don.

Class 7.—Cocker Spaniels, (Novice.)—1st Colonel Willan Dawson's Rock Heiress. Reserve Colonel Carmichael's Rocket.

Class 8.—All Spaniel Puppies.—1st Colonel Carmichael's Rocket 2nd Mrs. Cuthbert Edwardes' Skeltonian Ma Tiger Lily. Reserve, Colonel Hyde Cates' Branksea Prince. V. H. C. Colonel Willan Dawson's Rock Count.

Good classes and keen competition. Rock Heir, Rock Heiress and Rocket are all above the average. Branksea Don is of a different type, and appeared large, but just the kind of dog for "work."

Class 9.—Retrievers and other Spaniels.—1st Mr. Lumsden's Springer spaniel, B. Tiva. Reserve the Raja of Jind's Retriever Jind Nip.

The Springer was a good one, just the class for India. Jind Nip was heavy on the shoulders, with not the best of legs.

Class 10.—Bull Terriers (Open)—1st Raja of Jind's Manchester Peggy. Reserve Mr. Hutchinson's Mike.

Class 11.—Bull Terrier, Puppies.—1st Mr. Erskine's John Bull of Hardwicke. Reserve, Mr. Hutchinson's Mike

Class 12.—Scottish Terrier, Dogs (Open)—1st Captain Martin's Champion Martian Thistle. 2nd Captain Lumsden's Abestay Survival. Reserve, Captain Macleod's Angus. V.H.C. Mr Rayner's Ems Banter.

Class 13.—Scottish Terrier, Dogs (Limit)—1st Captain Lumsden's Abestay Survival. 2nd Captain Hesketh's Glendale Dirk. Reserve, Major Hobbs Peter. V.H.C. Captain Boileau's Craigmullar Marquis.

Class 14.—Scottish Terrier, Dogs (Novice).—1st Captain Lumsden's Abestay Survival. Reserve Major Hobbs' Peter. V.H.C. Captain Boileau's Craigmullar Marquis.

All were large classes, and the competition was keen, a good lot taken all round. Champion Martian Thistle manages to hold his own in spite of all new-comers.

Class 15.—Scottish Terrier, Bitches (Open.)—1st Colonel O'Donnell's Martian Mallie. 2nd Captain Martin's Martian Jeannie, Reserve. Captain Hesketh's Glendale Lassie. V.H.C. Mr. Rayner's Ems Quaver.

Class 16.—Scottish Terrier, Bitches (Limit).—A repetition of the above, the only new face was Major Blakeway's Becky, who got a V.H.C.

Class 17.—Scottish Terrier, Bitches (Novice).—1st Colonel O'Donnell's Martian Mallie. Reserve Captain Hesketh's Glendale Lassie II. V. H. C. Major Blakeway's Becky.

Class 18.—Scottish Terrier, Puppies.—1st Captain Hesketh's Glendale Lassie II. 2nd Mr. Rayner's Quite a Little. Reserve, Major Blakeway's Brindle.

Martian Mallie ran through her classes with the greatest ease; she has very good legs and feet.

Class 19.—Airedale Terriers (Open)—1st Mr. Corse-Scott's Elrae Dervish. Reserve Captain Earle's Elrae Duke. V. H C. Mr. Ross' Ringleader.

The first and second reversed positions to what they were last year; both are good ones and difficult to separate. Ringleader was not straight in front.

Class 20.—Irish Terriers (Open)—1st Captain Martin's Champion Rampant Royalist. Reserve Mr. Rayner's Martian Muddler. V. H. C. Captain Martin's Martian Royalist.

Baroda Muddler, though entered was absent; we should have liked to have seen him meet Rampant Royalist, who is a wonderful laster.

Class 21.—Irish Terrier Puppies.—1st Captain Martin's Martian Royalist. Reserve, Mr. Rayner's Patrick Muddler. V. H. C. Captain Martin's Martian Mistletoe.

Black muzzles seemed to predominate amongst the puppies.

Class 22.—Smooth Fox terrier Dogs (Open.)—1st Mr. Fido's Sabine Roller. 2nd Mr. Colin Cloy's Merry Mischief. Reserve Mr. White's Typhoon. V. H. C. Colonel Montresor's Vexer II.

Sabine Roller was too good for any in the class; Merrry Mischief was a nice little dog.

Class 23.—Smooth Fox-terrier Dogs (Limit)—1st Mr. Colin Cloy's Merry Mischief. Reserve Mr. White's Typhoon. V. H. C. Colonel Montresor's Vexer II.

Class 24.—Smooth Fox-Terrier Dogs (Junior)—1st Raja of Jind's Jind Doubleman's Pride. 2nd Raja of Jind's Jind Double Pie. Reserve Mr. White's Typhoon. V. H. C. Captain Lakin's Peregrine Pickle.

Two quite nice youngsters from the Jind Kennels came into this class, but they were shown too fat, and one was decidedly coarsened in appearance by it.

Class 25.—Smooth Fox-terrier Dogs (Puppy)—1st Raja of Jind's Jind Doubleman's Pride. 2nd Colonel Montresor's Viking II. Reserve Raja of Jind's Jind Double Pie. Reserve Mr. White's Typhoon.

Viking II is a nice pup; he should have been put into more classes.

Class 26.—Smooth Fox terrier Bitches (Open)—1st Mr. Muir's Device. Reserve Mr. Paterson's Dulcie Belle. V. H. C. Mr. White's Duplex.

Class 27.—Smooth Fox-terrier Bitches, (Limit)—1st Mr. Muir's Device. 2nd Mr. Paterson's Dulcie Belle. Reserve, Mr. White's Duplex. V. H. C. Raja of Jind's Jind Tanglefoot Fly.

Class 28.—Smooth Fox-terrier Bitches (Junior)—1st Mr. Muir's Device. 2nd Mr. Paterson's Dulcie Belle. Reserve Raja of Jind's Jind Lily V. H. C., Mr. White's Duplex.

Class 29.—Smooth Fox-terrier Bitches (Puppy)—1st Mr. Muir's Device. 2nd Raja of Jind's Jind Maggie. Reserve Raja of Jind's Jind Magpie. V. H. C. Raja of Jind's Jind Lily.

Device is a particularly good bitch, and scored in head and body heavily over all her opponents If her owner had been present and handled her, instead of leaving all to the dog-boy, it is not without reason to think she might have stood a better chance for the special for Best Terrier in the Show. Dulcie Belle is dish-faced and withal, though nice, not a flyer. The Jind puppies were good ones. Taken all through the smooth fox-terriers were quite a good lot, and of the right size; beyond one or two who failed to score all were small.

Class 30.—Wire Fox-terrier Dogs (Open)—1st Mr. Jacob's Jo Hukm. 2nd Mr. White's Dusky Ploughboy. Reserve Williamson's Rassendyll V. H. C., Mr. Magniac's Vagrant.

I preferred Dusky Ploughboy to Jo Hukm, who is a big dog, sluggish in the ring, badly topped, indifferent hind quarters and not too straight in front, but he has a wonderfully good head that carried him through. Ploughboy is all-round quite a good little terrier, good expression, with no glaring fault. Rassendyll a dog of nice stamp. Not a really good jacket amongst them.

Class 31.—Wire Fox-terrier Dogs (Limit)—1st Jo Hukm. Reserve. Rassendyll V. H. C. Vagrant.

Class 32.—Wire Fox-terrier Dogs (Junior)—1st Jo Hukm. Reserve. Rassendyll V. H. C. Raja of Jind's Jind Smart Lad.

Class 33.—Wire Fox-terrier Dogs (Puppy)—1st Jind Smart Lad.

Class 34.—Wire Fox-terrier Bitches (Open)—1st Rev. H. W. Bush's Vrill. 2nd Mrs. Williamson's Ruritania. Reserve Mrs. Hyde Cates' Branksea Sparke. V. H. C. Mr. Muller's Cup Day.

Vrill is a nice sized good stamp of bitch with an excellent jacket. Ruritania a heavier sort and fails in coat. Branksea Sparks, a nicely balanced bitch, but as one hind leg bends in she failed to get higher.

Class 35.—Wire Fox-terrier Bitches (Limit).—A repeat to the above.

Class 36.—Wire Fox-terrier Bitches (Junior)—1st Rajah of Jind's Jind Gleaner. Reserve Mr. Muller's Cup Day. V.H.C. Rev. H.W. Bush's Vitriol.

Jind Gleaner, an excellent little terrier, very much of the same stamp as the Champion Dusky Gleaner, from whom she is descended.

Class 38.—Dachsunds (Open)—1st, Raja of Jind's Sweet Viola. Reserve Raja of Jind's Mimosa.

Class 39.—Variety.—1st Mrs. Williams' Chow Chow, Confucius. 2nd Captain Martin's Tibetan Spaniel, Martian Gopaju. Reserve Mrs. Cooke's Poodle, Goliy Wog. V. H. C., Maharaja of Jodhpur's Whippet, Warren.

Class 40.—Variety (Puppy)—1st, Raja of Jind's Retriever, Jind Lad. 2nd Mr. Fernandez' Dachshund, Pilgrim's Progress Reserve Raja of Jind's Greyhound, Jind Dawn. V. H. C. Mr. Ross's Airedale terrier, Ringleader.

Class 41.—Variety.—1st. Captain Aspinall's Bulldog, Dinah Doe. Reserve Captain Dawson's Great Dane, St Andrew. V. H. C., Mr. Callaghan's Bulldog, Bruiser Stone.

Shown also two Irish Wolfhounds. These Variety classes are most difficult to judge, and are never satisfactory either to exhibitors or to the unfortunate individual who is told off to distinguish between such infinite varieties.

SPECIALS.

The Dinner.

The Dinner, which it was hoped might be well attended, took place at Nedou's Hotel at 8 o'clock, when places were laid for a dozen and a very enjoyable evening accompanied with much doggy talk was spent. Probably this small beginning will result in a much larger entertainment in future years. An excellent Menu was provided to which all did ample justice after what had been a very tiring day. It was universally agreed that a one-day show was a terrible rush. Soon after 10 P.M., the advertised General Meeting of the Assocation was held and business talk lasted until nearly 1 A.M., as the list of Agenda was a long one.

DOG TRAINING.

A dog that is inordinately petted becomes a tyrant to his owner and a nuisance to friends. Profuse endearments and excessive fussing should be distasteful, yet we frequently see pampered little wretches made far more of than if they were children. Surely a happy means can be devised alike for the sake of the dog and the master. Obedience is the first essential in a properly educated animal. He must understand that the wish of his owner is paramount. Impress this upon him kindly, but firmly, and permit no deviation from the fixed rule. Remember that bad habits are much more easily acquired than eradicated. Therefore it is better to have a puppy or young dog to begin with. You can then get him into your ways at the outset. The disadvantage of starting with quite a young puppy is that some trouble must be expended in rearing him, and that he is sure to be mischievous. If, however, you have one seven or eight months old he will be still young enough to teach, while having outgrown some of the babyish ways which are apt to play havoc with your household gods.

One of the earliest lessons is to make the novice understand what coming to heel means. Always use the same expression, and let him clearly realise that when you say "Heel" or "Come to heel" he is to remain there until you give him permission to go. How ridiculous a person looks when endeavouring in vain to make a dog come in. Shouts and gesticulations only increase the determination of the culprit to remain at a safe distance. Under such circumstances a severe chastisement is useless, as the youngster may only be cowed. If he does not understand what is needed of him you must resort to a lead, and insist on his keeping behind, not dragging. You are taking him for a walk—not the other way about.

When starting out for a walk a dog that rushes madly about barking at the top of his voice, is nearly always a great nuisance. Much better is it if he is under sufficient control to keep close in. Coming to heel having been mastered, the novice must next get to understand what lying down means. This will require a little patience; but nothing can be done in this world without trouble. Repeat the words "Down," "Lie down," and press him into a recumbent position. Then draw slowly away, reiterating the injunction and signalling your meaning by holding up your hand. Probably the puppy will jump up directly you move, and you must again replace him on the ground. Do not be harsh and storm about. You will only frighten him, which is not your object. You want to gain his confidence and respect. If he is obdurate, procure a long cord and attach it to a stake or some convenient object. When he rushes after you he will be rudely checked, and then you can once more emphasise your meaning. When he shows proficiency do not stint your commendations, and a little tangible reward in the shape of a tit-bit will not be out of place. A well-trained dog should drop immediately to command.

Another useful lesson is to teach him to guard something belonging to you. If he will lie down when told he is no bother. If the dog is to live much indoors, it is quite obvious that he must aquire habits of cleanliness. Any lapse must at once be punished, and he should be immediately turned out of doors, with a sharp tap from a thin stick. A sound thrashing is never necessary, unless he should bite anyone. Then a severe lesson is desirable. The puppy must learn, too, that food on the table is not put there for his consumption. Barking at night for no purpose is obviously a fault to be corrected if he is to be a useful guard. Many dogs do this at first because they are lonely, but it will only be temporising in a foolish manner if you make a fuss of the delinquent and take him to your room. He must be firmly corrected and broken, otherwise he will keep all the household awake, and will be useless when the enterprising thief gets to work. A dog that barks and howls in the compound all the night long is challenging reprisals from neighbours; and it is quite on the cards he may be poisoned by the native servants on the premises; you should discourge his malpractices before they become deep-rooted. One has only to see the handiness of sporting varieties to realise the pleasure that accrues when one's dog is properly trained. In the field, of course, knowledge and obedience are absolutely essential.

The Theatre.

THE LONDON COMEDY COMPANY.

The Great Pantomime and Vaudeville programme presented by Mr. Hugh J. Ward and his clever Comedy Company at Christmas introduced them to us as variety artistes of extraordinary talent. The Grand Opera House was packed on Xmas Eve and the audience was most appreciative, every item being vociferously encored A long three-part programme was discussed and every number met with approbation. Space does not admit of a detailed account of each item and we must content ourselves with mentioning a few of the leading features of this excellent entertainment. Songs and dances filled the first and second parts of the bill of fare. Miss Grace Palotta sang and danced with her usual charm and grace, her song "Moon Dear" and the popular ballad in which she produces much merriment with a small mirror, and her duets and dances with Mr. Ward meeting with much favour. Miss Musgrove appeared in a new light and her dancing and singing were beyond all praise. Miss Ghiloni scored every time and her song "She's just the Girl I'm looking for" was indeed a delightful "Xmas Surprise Packet." The curtain went up disclosing the Misses Palotta, Musgrove and Baxter seated in swings prettily decorated with green leaves and coloured electric bulbs. These were set in motion in time to the refrain and the ladies and men behind the swings joined in the chorus. This charming effect fairly brought down the house and the audience demanded many repetitions.

Among the men "Hugh J." gave us of his best, his comic songs and eccentric dancing being cheered to the echo. Mr. Wykeham's comic songs, tuneful numbers by Messrs. Wallace, Greig and Beattie were all excellent, and Mr. Arthur Eldred told us some first-rate stories. The last part of the programme was "The Scarecrow," an imaginary scene from "the New Clown" in which Miss Palotta, and Messrs. Wykeham, Greig and Eldred appeared once more, and Mr. Ward gave his wonderful impersonation of a scarecrow. His make-up, dancing and "business" were marvellous and quite baffle description. To those who have not seen him we can only say that to-morrow night they have the chance of seeing one of the funniest performances put before a Calcutta audience. Indeed the whole entertainment was one of the best variety shows at which we have had the pleasure to be present: On Saturday Mr. Ward announces another Grand Vaudeville entertainment. The programme for next week will be found elsewhere in our columns.

"A client of mine had his experience of that," said the taciturn solicitor, stirred to reminiscence by a mention of Dotheboys Hall. "Anglo-Indian, and sent his boy home to live at a rectory. Paid £300 a year for it. Food, lodging, education—all told. Couldn't bring up the boy in India. Paid for two years, and then he came back to Englnad, and thought he would like to see how his son was getting on. So he went down to the rectory, rang the bell. And the bell was answered by his son in buttons."

The old major of cavalry was the owner of a pair of bow legs and a hot temper. He was, moreover, an enthusiastic golfer. But he was still only fifty yards from his first tee with his fifth stroke. The new member had been waiting to play, and at last his patience gave out. "Fore!" he cried, and drove off. He had done better to have waited a little longer. His ball bounded along the turf and rolled between the major's legs. "Here, you sir, confound you," exclaimed the latter, hotly, "that is not golf, sir!" "No, perhaps not," replied the new member slowly and thoughtfully, "but it is darned good croquet."

THE INDIAN FIELD.

THURSDAY, 7th January 1909.

IN DEFENCE OF STAG-HUNTING.

In the Nineteenth Century, Mr. R. A. Sanders, who was for twelve seasons one of the best masters the Devon and Somerset Staghounds ever had, makes out an excellent case in defence of the chase of the wild deer on Exmoor. His article is practically a reply to Lord Coleridge, who at the close of last season on Exmoor described a stag-hunt from the stag's point of view. Lord Coleridge narrated how he saw a stag hunted and killed, and how the onlookers, old and young, male and female, lay and clerical, all seemed to enjoy themselves. But the sight spoiled the pleasure of Lord Coleridge's walk. Mr. Sanders discusses stag-hunting from the point of view of the deer, from that of the countryside, and from that of the field. He shows that the sport of stag-hunting with the Devon and Somerset is supported by the practically unanimous opinion of the countryside. It attracts hunting-men from every county in England, and from many foreign countries and not hunting men alone, but men distinguished in politics, literature, law, medicine and the Church. The support of the countryside and the field is undeniable, and that support implies that a very large number of good men and women look on stag-hunting as a pursuit that none need be ashamed of. Mr. Sanders advances conclusive reasons for that belief. It is the custom to describe the stag as "the noble animal," but Mr. Sanders argues that his nobility is confined to appearance, and does not extend to character. "He is a selfish old fellow" Mr. Sanders observes much "addicted to the pleasures of the table and harem. He is a dreadful bully to the hinds and young deer; and, though well armed by nature, is a poor fighter, save at the season when the lust of the flesh is upon him. Now in satisfying his appetite he does a great deal of damage to crops. Not only what he eats, but what he damages has to be considered.

The hunt pays some £1,000 a year in compensation, and there are rumours that the sum does not cover all the damage done. Yet the stag, if not a welcome, is usually an unmolested guest. The farmer is very loyal to the hunt, and though he often growls he seldom shoots. And so the stags have the best of everything for years." It is important to remember that when a stag is hunted he has many chances in his favour, and if all fail him he is killed with as much speed and humanity as possible. In Mr. Sanders words "he has lived a life of luxury for years, and has a bad half hour at the end. From his point of view surely the pleasure predominates over the pain. For if it were not for the hunting he would not exist at all. Everyman's hand would be against him." This contention is supported by the fact that in the middle of last century, when stag-hunting was dropped for a few years, the deer very nearly became extinct. There is an element of cruelty in all sport, but Mr. Sanders doubts if any sport is less cruel than the chase of the deer.

Dealing with the points in favour of stag-hunting he draws attention to the great financial benefit the district derives from the sport, but apart from material prosperity, the Exmoor villager loves the hunting. The reason for this is to be found in the instinct of sport, which is almost universal in the west country. Another strong influence is that the west country people are very properly proud of the great traditions of the Hunt, and proud also of possessing something which nobody else does. "For" as Mr. Sanders reminds us "this stag-hunting is unique. In no other country in the world is a wild deer hunted over an open country.

And so people come from all over the world to see it; and the natives of the country are kind to the strangers, and delight in telling them stories of the hounds and the deer—some true, some may be not. And if stag-hunting ceased, and the deer were shot down, all these things would cease to, and much pleasure would cease with them."

Discussing the pleasure of riding to hounds on Exmoor, Mr. Sanders says it is not always an easy game. The runs are often long enough to tire the best of horses; the hills are steep; the ground is rough. Frequently one cannot ride just where the hounds go. "To see all that can be seen of a run" he goes on to remark, "you must 'bucket' your horse down hill, you must ease him up, you must steady him over rough or boggy ground just enough to save a fall but not too much or you will be left behind. In fact you want horsemanship, memory, quickness of eyesight." The keenest pleasure of all, in Mr. Sanders' opinion is reserved for the initiated few, the sporting farmers, the old inhabitants, some constant visitors, and those intimately connected with the hunt. To them the ride is a secondary affair. They love the genuine sport, the matching of the endurance and cleverness of horse and men against those of a very strong and cunning wild animal. Alluding to the trouble caused by hounds leaving the track of their quarry for that of a fresh deer, Mr. Sanders advances an interesting proposition. According to him, French hounds are better than the English in this respect.

There are in a French pack a certain number of chiens de change that will stick to the hunted deer no matter how many others may intervene. Mr. Sanders tells us that the English hounds have never got so far as that; but, then there is this drawback that the chiens de change will not hunt a second deer in a day. Mr. Sanders draws a fascinating picture of the charm of Exmoor's far famed sport. "It is" he says "the slow hunting after a deer a long way ahead that appeals to the old stag-hunter, while it may bore the hard riding stranger. Every time the line is recovered is a triumph for hounds and huntsmen; and when after long hours of patient work, sometimes under a scorching sun, sometimes in pouring rain, the occasional notes of hounds slowly working out the line suddenly change into the frantic chorus that proclaims a fresh find, the stag-hunter old or young, gets those few moments of delirious excitement which are the acme of every form of sport." In conclusion he makes bold to say that the association of stag-hunting is not of cruelty, but of good fellowship, good health, great endeavour, and great enjoyment. And this view, we are convinced, will be endorsed by everyone who brings an open, unprejudiced mind to bear on the subject.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

It was quite a good day's racing to finish up the big meeting on Thursday, and the allotments were on the whole good enough to bring a large part of the field together all down the straight and leave three or four of them fighting it out in the last few strides. The card of seven items began with the two pony races in both of which there were shocking bad starts. Fortune, Echo and The Point were all away badly among the midgets, luckily none of them backed, but in the big pony race Hughie, the third favourite, and Gladsome were in trouble when the gate went up which probably made a big difference to the result as even then the former got up to his field and was only beaten a neck for third place. Lady Leslie, who was favourite, was never in the hunt after the bend for home and Wild Boy, who stood at fours, came in a pretty easy winner from Refresher. Among the small ponies even 10-7 could not stop Bonita II and curiously enough the four top weights finished 1, 2, 3, 4 in their order on the card.

Merrworth and Rustile were backed for the Holly Plate, the other nine hardly touched. The former proved himself to be among the top sawyers in the 5 furlong class and won easily from Bundah in 1min. 1⅘secs. Pretty useful time with 8st. 5lb. up! The Chowringee Plate produced a very good race indeed. Master Theo and Picturesque were favourites, then Paddy's Darling, Vigorous, and Sermon well backed. All five of these were well together coming down the straight, Master Theo and Picturesque leading, then Vigorous came after them and just at the last moment Sermon made a rush on the rails inside Vigorous. All four seemed to pass the box in a bunch with Picturesque just standing out. The verdict was three-quarter length, head, dead heat third. Master Theo was second and Vigorous and Sermon the dead heaters.

There were nine starters for the big race, the Macpherson Cup, and except Carnival they all had supporters in the ring. A slight preference existed for Absentee, whose final price was threes, but 6 or 7 to 1 could have been got about any of them by taking one's opportunity. Devereux made the pace and that great stayer Bantock began at the tail end, and the whole way round the English horse could be seen creeping slowly, up to and through his field. At the 7 furlongs he lay sixth, at the 3 furlongs third, he was up with the leader coming into the straight and then romped away an easy winner by three lengths. He is a truly wonderful stayer, as after winning the race in record time—3mins. 11secs.—he actually ran away with his jockey and had gone nearly to the 1¼ mile post before he could be pulled. This win after running third in the cup is another feather in the cap of his importer, Mr. Ernest Day, who still has some useful ones for sale. Kaffirpan and Absentee finished second and third, then Hunting Horn and The Bedouin fourth and fifth together. Misty Morn ran badly again and is apparently an altogether over-rated horse.

The second selling handicap was a fairly easy thing for Dulcimer, the second favourite, Captain Carrington, who was most fancied, running nowhere. The surprise of the race was the running of Scamander, who came up into second place and showed better form than she has done for a long time. The consistent Umutbee got the other shop. There was no bid for the winner, but Wishart had Captain Carrington put up and bought him for Mr. Holmes for Rs. 2,600.

Sugar Apple was a very hot favourite for the round the course race, but it was no such dead cert, and Wakeful, who was lying first or second all the way round, made him gallop his hardest at the finish. The winner actually got up to the pony about the half distance, but they were neck and neck for a long way and A. Hoyt only just got clear in time to score—which is the proper time after all.

There was a very long day's racing at Tollygunge on Saturday, a card of nine items being worked through by making a start at 12-20 and having a tiffin interval after the second race. Not a bad sort of day if Tollygunge were only a pleasanter spot, but with the dust, the glare, the lack of shade, and the uncomfortable stands, most people had had quite enough of it long before the numbers went up for the last race. The day started with the Military Steeplechase, a new move and apparently not a successful one, as the race only had four starters and if it had not been in the programme at least two of them would probably have started in the Hunter Steeplechase. We should think as an experiment it will not be repeated as it will always tend to spoil the Hunter class event and there is little probability of attracting good fields for a Military Chase in Calcutta. This affair was quite a one horse show, as Idle, the favourite, was never troubled and won as he pleased from Trilby. Gerard broke a stirrup leather, a girth and cut his jockey's knee and was pulled up after the water jump. He jumps big and carefully but not too straight and loses lot of time over it. The other race before tiffin was the flat race and it was a real good one to watch. Mauvette and Wolferton, the favourite, just led into the straight and then Blix, Lady Teazle and Downland came up into line with them and there was a slashing fine finish between four, with an eventual verdict of a head in favour of Lady Teazle.

A fair field of nine went out for the Pony Steeplechase, Cracker and Matalgia favourites. They were neither of them in it, however, as the former was beaten at the 6-furlong post and the latter went badly from the beginning and was pulled up lame after one round. The race finally developed into a duel between Spec and Solace, who were neck and neck all the way down the straight with the result in doubt till the number went up when it was seen that Spec had secured the verdict by a neck. There was also a good race for third place between Killarney and Lady Knight, the former just getting it by half a length. Lady Knight had made the pace all the way and tired to nothing at the finish or she would have managed to struggle on ahead of the other. Lady Vera hit the guard rail of the open ditch and fell, breaking her back.

The field for the Hunters' Chase, was reduced to seven only. The hitherto invincible Lord Harry was of course favourite and stood at odds on and the only other one backed was a very shapely grey horse belonging to Mr. Rees called Spinnet. This proved the winner. Lord Harry contrary to his custom went to the front and Captain Bingham on the grey waited on him patiently till round the bend for home when he went away and won by ten lengths. Mr. Bletsoe was to have ridden the winner as he had worked and schooled him, but unluckily he was incapacitated by the cut on his knee received when riding Gerard in the first race and Captain Bingham accepted the mount at the last moment. The other horses in the race made no show at all against the first pair and were palpably outclassed.

The Trial Chase Plate was a very poor affair, only four started for it altogether and out of these the unlucky Dea broke her leg on landing over the water jump. Clark Hoyt, the jockey, was hit by Greenstone but escaped unhurt. The end of the race was a slow procession. Greenstone cantering in ten lengths ahead of Dangar, then Kingpin fifteen lengths behind.

The Grand National was the big upset of the day. Captain Barrett felt certain that Kipling, the favourite, would win and he gave up the ride on his own horse, Cairnsmore, in order to steer the other horse to victory as he hoped and expected. But the old, old story that there is nothing sure in horse racing was once more illustrated, and it was after all Cairnsmore who won and Kipling, who got second, amid the lamentations of both the stable and the public who were all on the wrong one. The history of the race is that Mystic Circle made the pace, Kipling lay in a nice position and Cairnsmore was last, but not too far away. Then 6 furlongs from home Kipling went away in front, got a nice lead and waited. Cairnsmore meanwhile was coming up very first, caught Kipling opposite the first stand and either the latter could not get going quick enough or was beaten and got the worst of the finish by half a length.

The Pony Hunters' Steeplechase was a very fine race as regards the first four, though the others were hopelessly out of it. Loch Lily, the favourite, who takes a very strong hold, made the pace a cracker, but the others were close upon her and she could never shake off Emerald, who stuck to her throughout and beat her by a head at the finish. To illustrate how good the handicap was as regards the first four ponies the distance between them were head, neck and half a length, and Emerald beat her last year's time (when she carried less weight) by 8 secs. Pathfinder II and Pineal were hopelessly out of a chase run at this pace and Ungava gave her jockey a fall at the last fence.

The last two items on the programme were flat races. Primrose just beat Clear Out in the pony race and Creel won on a very close finish in the 6 furlongs for horses. Marcella was placed third but was disqualified on an objection that she had won a £100 race in England and was therefore ineligible under the conditions of the race, and Spirea got the third place. Black Paint was favourite but was beaten some way from home.

The annual dinner of the Gimcrack Club, held early last month, was as interesting and well attended as usual. Lord Lonsdale proposed the health of Mr. Raphael, winner of the Gimcrack Stakes, and paid a handsome tribute to that popular owner, who in response said some things worth noting. He wondered whether they ever realised the character of the different factors which tended to the upkeep of racing in England. He divided them into two parties, one in which he included those who had a personal stake in the Turf, such as owners, trainers, jockeys, racing officials, and the like, and the other—far greater numerically, and without whose co-operation the Turf in its present state would not exist for a single day—in which he included the great racing public. He was certain they all recognised the desirability of fostering the affection for horses and horse-racing that had ever characterised them as a nation. The public were, and there was every reason why they should be, good judges of racing, and as they knew pretty well what they wanted and what they intended to have, the entertainment provided should meet the required standard. It would be a serious matter indeed if the public should be alienated by any abuses or shortcomings in the conduct of Turf affairs.

Remarking upon one or two matters which in his opinion had been cause of dissatisfaction to the racing public, Mr. Raphael said much discussion had arisen since the introdution of the starting gate into England as to its desirability. Less difficulty in starting was experienced in France with the starting gate, and this might be accounted for by the fact that there were fewer handicaps, and, consequently, fewer light-weight jockeys. Our starts were far from satisfactory. How often did they see in England long delays at the post, unfair starts, and unruly horses, and how often did it happen that the particular horse that had given all the bother at the start eventually got off on its own? If we must have a preponderance of five-furlong scrambles, he said, how essential it is that every horse should have an equal chance. He would like to see the Starters endowed with the power to start the field as they thought best, whether horses were standing still or whether they were walking up to the gate, or even if one or two horses were behind the rest of the field. Starters should make use of the power they have of ignoring such horses as absolutely refuse to face the gate, "provided, of course, that one of the delinquents does not belong to me," he added, amidst laughter.

Trainers should remember that however fit and well they brought their charges to the post, if their schooling at the gate had been neglected then the horses were still untrained. He would like to see a fine imposed upon trainers who brought their charges to the post in a condition which was as unfair to the other starters as it was to the racing public. Since the American invasion race riding had undergone a complete change, and now races were run right through from the rise of the barrier, and the critical portion of the race was after the field had gone three or four furlongs. Stewards and handicappers, huddled together as they were on the stand, saw but little of the race. He thought the time was now ripe when one or two turrets should be erected at intervals on each course, so as to enable Stewards and handicappers to obtain a better view of the intermediate stages of a race. Paid Stewards would be responsible for these duties to the Stewards of the Jockey Club. Many gentlemen would gladly undertake this work, and would not mind giving up all pecuniary interest in the races which came under their supervision.

Mr. Raphael went on to advocate the establishment of the pari-mutuel in this country (it would be a source of great revenue, which might be devoted to the relief of rates, taxes, or charity). "If horse racing," he said, "is allowed, betting must follow, because it is in the Englishman's nature." Are we such saints, and are all the European nations and our own colonies such sinners? Perhaps, we may be the greater hypocrites. (Hear, hear.) As for the benefits of the pari-mutuel, they had only to look at the sales at Newmarket, where the best buyers were agents from foreign countries.

It remained to be seen if the mutuel would be as popular and so largely used as in France. Bookmaking had been abolished in France, and even if bookmakers were not suppressed by law in England, he believed it would not be long before the public would adopt the new method and discontinue betting at the present disadvantageous odds. "At any rate," he proceeded, "the mutuel would enjoy a fair amount of popularity, and as there are more races in England, the takings from the tax would be much more than in France, I venture to think that a large percentage of the tax would most appropriately be applied to the breeding of stud horses useful for warfare." (Applause.) Was not the lack of horses a national danger, and yet one easily averted by the means which he had described? (Applause.) Their charities would also reap a considerable benefit.

The Punjab Polo Tournament, details of which will be found further on, ended in a win for the 10th Hussars for the third year in succession. They met the 12th Lancers in the final on the 30th ultimo and beat them by 4 goals to 3 after a splendid game.

The Calcutta Polo Club "A" team won the I. P. A. Championship Tournament, beating the 15th Hussars in the final on the 30th ultimo. On Monday Calcutta met the Tigers (Count Jean de Madre 1; Captain Bingham 2, Captain F. W. Barrett 3 and Captain V. Keighly (back) in a sporting match but were beaten after a good game by 6 goals to 4.

Not every British schoolboy is enamoured of the Baden-Powell scout craze it seems. The boy editor, Sidney Camm, of the Royal Free Schools, Windsor, deals with "The Absurdities of Scouting" in the second number of the School Gazette.

"This latest fad of a few fanatics," he writes, "has turned the boy world upside down, especially a few leading spirits at our own school. In the days of five-mile range cannon it makes one laugh to think of the futility of such a thing.

"They go into Windsor Park and play at soldiers. Then they walk up the street and make observations on human character A man comes along with his hat on one side. 'Oh, that man is a fool,' one enterprising youth remarks, and so develops a harmless idiocy. The days of individual bravery are over. Scouting is all right as a pastime, but it is of no value otherwise."

The agonies of a six days' cycle race—torture as sport we are inclined to regard this particular mania—are thus described by an American correspondent:—"Exhausted with intermittent scorching, continued for 110 hours, the eight teams of cyclists who are still competing in the six days' race lagged this afternoon several miles behind the endurance record established in 1899. When I visited Madison Square Garden at daybreak my eyes met a scene at once weird and obnoxious. The whole of the track was littered with cigar stumps, sandwich papers, empty bottles, and half-eaten meals. The atmosphere was filled with tobacco smoke and dust, while the 4,000 spectators, drowsy and dishevelled, lounged in all postures on the benches, many snoring and more stupidly drunk, for the eight cyclists completed at snail's pace the 2,000th mile.

"Palmer (Australia) who replaced Drobach's sick partner yesterday, after his own partner had broken his collar bone, seemed the only competitor awake. With eyes sunken and cheeks bloodless, he pedalled painfully, as though in a stupor. It was evident he could not hold out much longer.

"The competitors seem to have mastered the art of riding asleep. When the police accomplished their morning task of driving the sleepy spectators out in the streets and ventilating the hall, the cyclists dismounted, and their partners, roused from heavy slumber on mattresses in the arena, took up the weary round.

"I asked Melten, one of the foremost of the riders, to describe his sensations. He said: 'The torture is most terrible at dawn, when a feeling of awful lonesomeness and depression comes over one. You may then realise how frightful the atmosphere is. The nostrils burn, the eyes smart, and seem to be falling from your head. You desperately curse the people who are smoking. But then comes a good rub down and a substantial breakfast, and you feel ready to resume the struggle.'"

The race for the Sculling Championship of the world was decided over a three and a quarter mile course on the Wanganui River, on the 15th November, when R. Arnst beat the holder W. Webb—both men are New Zealanders. At the start Arnst dashed away, and setting a merry pace, kept Webb fully extended.

At the end of the first mile—rowed in the fast time of 5mins. 21¼secs.—Arnst led by three lengths, and the holder was well beaten. Drawing steadily away, Arnst eventually won easily by about eight lengths in 19mins. 52secs., which is more than half a minute faster than Webb's time when he defeated Tressider for the championship over the same course last February.

Richard Arnst is but a young man, having been born at Christchurch, New Zealand, 26 years ago, and until about a couple of years since was a complete novice at sculling. He had, however, won fame and considerable money as a long distance cyclist, and although a big, powerful man of some 13st. weight, is withal lithe and limber, and his make and shape led some of his sporting friends to induce him to enter a sculling boat. Soon he won an open handicap on the Parramatta, and, despite the fact that so poor a waterman was he that he once fell out of his boat when winning, his displays were so promising that he was matched with the old-timer Harry Pearce, whom he beat pretty easily, after a very rugged display. Still Arnst showed that he had good material for his mentors to work upon, and his backers suggested a match with W. Webb, which was ultimately ratified, the holder again stipulating that the 3¼ miles course on the Wanganui, over which he beat Richard Tressider on 25th Febrary last, should again be the venue.

Last month's race was the third in which Webb—who, until December 1906, was an amateur—has been engaged for the title—the first against Charles Towns, to whom the honour was conceded on the retirement of George Towns. This was decided on the Parramatta on 3rd August 1907, when Webb won easily, and thus for the first time in sculling history carried the championship title to New Zealand. He was not allowed long to remain idle, for a challenge followed from Dick Tressider, the New South Wales oarsman, and last February the race was decided on the Wanganui, New Zealand—on the banks of which Webb's boathouse and residence are situated. Tressider, an older man than Webb, had been sculling with some success for years, although not in the first class, but he was beaten easily by four lengths in 20mins. 28secs. Webb, who started favourite at 6 to 4 on, was accorded a great demonstration and there were hopes in England that he would be seen over in that country.

In both this race and in the one with Charlie Towns, Webb had shown himself to be a wonderful stayer and a finished sculler, and when Arnst's challenge was first received it was treated as something of a joke. But since then there has been a change of opinion as to the merits of the challenger.

As a New Zealand correspondent has said, Arnst soon showed that he would be a man to be reckoned with, for he showed improved watermanship and great power, making his boat run fast and far between the strokes, while his general health, always good, showed marked improvement. It was not wonderful, therefore, to learn that, with the challenger doing good time in trials, Webb should set to his training in real earnest. As a matter of fact, he did more rowing than for either of his previous races, and accomplished some really brilliant work over a mile or so, proving also in his time-trial bursts that he had improved considerably right away from his amateur days. The time—19mins. 52secs.—is 36secs. faster than that of the race in which Webb beat Tressider.

As our readers already know Longboat, the Indian runner, beat Dorando Pietri at New York last month and beat him handsomely. The time—2hrs. 45mins. 5⅘secs.—was outside that in which the Italian beat Hayes in November. Full details are given further on.

Apologists for the game still argue that bad play or the players' poor condition is the main cause of the excessive number of casualties. But considering the quantity of armour worn by the American footballer it is difficult to accept this.

An American football team looks like nothing so much as a company of divers on dry land. Enormous head protectors, ear guards, steel pads for the nose, wrist guards, thick armour for the chest, abdomen, and legs, with wooden splints for the ankles, should prove sufficient protection against the mischances of a legitimate game; but with the brutal tackling, jabbing, scrimmages, knee-jerking tactics, and the spiked boots of the players, nothing short of mediæval armour would provide adequate protection.

The Australian Cricket Board of Control have accepted the Marylebone programme and the Australian team leaves on the 17th March.

A team from H.M.S. Hyacinth and the Calcutta Police XI played a fast and interesting game of foot-ball on the C.F.C. ground last Saturday. The sailors gave a good display and won by a goal to nil.

Thirteen teams entered for the North-West Frontier Polo Tournament, which began at Peshawar on the 21st ultimo. In the first round the 23rd Cavalry (F.F.) beat the Royal Warwickshire Regiment by 5 goals to nil : 57th Rifles (F.F.) beat 37th Lancers "A" team by 3 goals to 1 : 17th Cavalry beat 5th Fusiliers by 6 goals to 1 : 3rd Brigade R.F.A. beat 37th Lancers "B" by 5 goals to nil : and the 21st Cavalry beat the 53rd Sikhs (F.F.) by 3 goals to 2. In the second round the Seaforth Highlanders beat Guides Subalterns by 4 goals to 1 : 23rd Cavalry (F.F.) beat 19th Lancers (Fane's Horse) by 5 goals to 3 : 57th Rifles (F.F.) beat 17th Cavalry by 2 goals to nil : 21st Cavalry (F.F.) beat 3rd Brigade R.F.A. by 4 goals to 3. The semi-finals were played on Boxing Day : in the first game the 23rd Cavalry beat the Seaforth by a goal to nil after a most exciting game, and in the second game the 57th Rifles beat the 21st Cavalry by 2 goals to 1. In the final the 57th Rifles defeated the 23rd Cavalry by 2 goals to one.

We regret to report that Mr. M. O'Brien, proprietor of the Rangoon Times, died suddenly from heart failure at Rangoon on the 3rd instant. Mr. O'Brien was well known in Burma and had a small string of racing ponies. He was only 37 years and only survived his late brother and partner three months.

Pressure on our space last week prevented us from acknowledging the receipt of a Christmas present from our good friends, Messrs. Swallow and Ariell, of Melbourne. But we hasten now to thank them for the good things they sent us. The Christmas family cake and plum pudding which are specialities of this enterprising firm were much appreciated and the excellent quality of these and other delicacies which we had the pleasure of sampling convinces us that Messrs Swallow and Ariell are well in the front rank of manufacturers of edible goods.

We regret to learn that Mr. Cole, D.S.P., Hoshangabad, who was badly mauled while tiger shooting the other day, has died from his injuries. The tiger, a very fine specimen, was shot and its skin is now being cured by the Central Provinces Taxidermy Co. of Harda.

The following interesting letter re Sport in Assam was recently written to the Pioneer by Mr. G. P. R. Gilman, Palasbari :—

Sir,—May I invite your attention to a letter in the Indian Planters Gazette of the 19th December, in which a protest is made against the alleged intention of H.E. the Viceroy to have a shoot in one of the game sanctuaries of Assam which were established for the preservation of the "Rhino" which are all but extinct. As one of the oldest European residents of the province may I appeal, through your powerful paper, to H.E. who has the true sporting instincts of an English gentleman, to abandon the shoot if it is true that it is to be carried out in a "sanctuary." It is inconceivable that the matter has been properly put before H.E. Owing to the wanton destruction, chiefly by natives, of the splendid big game of this province, the local Government, after ascertaining public opinion, established these sanctuaries at great expense some two years ago. They are only now beginning to attract animals, and were a large shooting party to enter the sanctuary the work of preservation would be thrown back for some years. The Government officials are naturally reticent, but I can personally vouch for the fact that not less than Rs. 15,000 will be spent on roads, so as to make them suitable for motor-cars. This is a small matter even in these hard times, but money spent on roads, which will never be utilised again, is criminal waste, especially as repairs to existing roads are urgently needed throughout the province, and more particularly in the Kamrup district, one of whose sanctuaries is to be shot over. There is not one of us planters who would not do his best to help in giving H.E. a good shoot, but I think I am voicing general opinion when I say that to shoot over a sanctuary will cause the greatest indignation among all classes of sportsmen and specially among Assam sportsmen.

His many friends in Calcutta will read with regret of the retirement of Mr. G. A. Ormiston of Messrs. Balmer, Lawrie and Co. Mr. Ormiston came out to India in the early seventies and identified himself with sport in many branches. In his earlier days he was a keen fisherman and big game shikari, but it is in connection with golf in Calcutta that his name is perhaps best known. The Calcutta Golf Club owes him a big debt of gratitude for his untiring energies while associated with the club and he has done much to its attaining the popularity it now enjoys. He was many years Honorary Secretary, and has been Captain and finally Vice-President of the Club and has presented many valuable prizes for competition. He was one of the promoters of the Tollygunge Club and the Calcutta Ladies' Golf Club also owes its origin to him. Mr. Ormiston's energies have not only been directed to the promotion of sport, he was one of the founders of the Caledonian Society, a distinguished member of the mercantile community and very popular in Calcutta social circles. His host of friends will join us in wishing him continued prosperity in his retirement.

It is estimated that the lighthouses on the Atlantic coast of the United States cause the destruction of about 100,000 birds annually. The birds, being attracted by the light, and flying against the glass, are dashed to pieces. The migratory birds are the chief sufferers, the havoc being great in April along the northern coasts, from Cape May to Maine, and in October on the Florida shores. At one lighthouse in Florida the lantern itself was broken by the repeated shocks from ducks, and an iron network had to be erected round the light. Even then the ducks struck the netting with such force as to break through it and smash the heavy outer plate glass of the lantern. From twenty to fifty dead birds are often found in the morning. The ever-memorable Longstone Lighthouse has caused the destruction of many of the winged tribe in their migration flights. The flash of this light can be seen for fifteen miles, encompassing and protecting the twenty islets which form the Farne group. It is in winter no uncommon sight for the lighthouse keeper—still a Darling—to descry in the early morning several ducks with broken necks lying on the rocks close by.

A discovery of the greatest interest touching the origin of the human race has been made by two priests, the Abbés Bouyssonie and Bardon, at Chapelle-aux-Saints in South-West France.

It consists of a skull and other remains which, when exhibited recently in Paris before the members of the Academy of Sciences, were declared by M. Perrier, director of the Natural History Museum, to be "vestiges of the earliest man in the world."

The skull is stated by scientists to be 170,000 years old. Its possessor walked on all fours, or in a very bent position, and the face retained many simian characteristics. Despite, however, the fact that the man had practically no forehead, he had a chin unlike any monkey's, and the skull, although very thick, was of greater capacity than a monkey's

The jaw is very long, and the bones of the face prove that it could have had little mobility of expression. The man could certainly not laugh. By the side of the remains were found teeth of a rhinoceros.

"My African Journey" is the title of the Right Hon. Winston Spencer Churchill's latest contribution to travel and adventure literature. The book's claims to the special attention of Indian Field readers are its many pages devoted to sport and life in African jungle and veldt, its illustrations—many of peculiar merit—its handiness and high class turnout. The pictures are from the cameras of the author and Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon Wilson, and the three maps are helpful and clear. Most of the matter appeared in monthly instalments in the pages of the Strand Magazine, what has been added was necessary in order to make the story continuous and complete. Mr. Winston Churchill evidently had an ideal and inspiring journey and he relates his experiences in a manner calculated to still further increase British interest in the recently acquired estate, in the north-east quarter of Africa, Uganda and the surrounding country.

Of the author's style of relating a shikar story here is a typical example :—"The air becomes still and hot. The sun seems in an instant to assert his just prerogative. The heat glitters over the open spaces of dry sand and pools of water. High grass, huge boulders, tangled vegetation, multitudes of thorn-bushes, obstruct the march, and the ground itself is scarped and guttered by the rains into the strangest formations. Around you, breast-high, shoulder-high, overhead, rises the African jungle. There is a brooding silence, broken only by the cry of a bird, or the scolding bark of baboons, and the crunching of one's own feet on the crumbling soil. We enter the haunt of the wild beasts ; their tracks, their traces, the remnants of their repasts, are easily and frequently discovered. Here a lion has passed since the morning. There a rhinoceros has certainly been within the hour—perhaps within ten minutes. We creep and scramble through the game paths, anxiously, rifles at full cock, not knowing what each turn or step may reveal. The wind, when it blows at all, blows fitfully, now from this quarter, now from that ; so that one can never be certain that it will not betray the intruder in these grim domains to the beast he seeks, or to some other, less welcome, before he sees him. At length, after two hours' scramble and scrape, we emerge breathless, as from another world, half astonished to find ourselves within a quarter of a mile of the railway line, with its trolly, luncheon, soda-water, ice, etc.

"But if one would seek the rhinoceros in his open pastures, it is necessary to go farther afield ; and accordingly we started the next morning, while the stars were still shining, to tramp over the ridges and hills which shut in railway, and overlook remoter plains and valleys beyond. The grass grows high from ground honeycombed with holes and heaped with lava boulders, and it was daylight before we had stumbled our way to a spur commanding a wide view. Here we halted to search the country with field-glasses, and to brush off the ticks—detestable insects which infest all the resorts of the game in innumerable swarms, ready to spread any poison among the farmers' cattle. The glass disclosed nothing of consequence. Zebra, wildebeeste, and kongoni were to be seen in troops and herds, scattered near and far over the plains, but never a rhinoceros! So we trudged on, meaning to make a wide circle. For an hour we found nothing, and then, just as we were thinking of turning homewards before the sun should get his full power, three beautiful oryx, great, dark-coloured antelope with very long, corrugated horns, walked over the next brow on their way to water. Forthwith we set off in pursuit, crouching and creeping along the valley, and hoping to intercept them at the stream. Two passed safely over before we could reach our point. The third, seeing us, turned back and disappeared over the hill, where, a quarter of an hour later, he was stalked and wounded.

"It is always the wounded beast that leads the hunter into adventures. Till the quarry is hit every one walks delicately, avoids going the windward side of unexplored coverts, skirts a reed-bed cautiously, notices a convenient tree, looks often this way and that. But once the prize is almost within reach, you scramble along after it as fast as your legs will carry you, and never trouble about remoter contingencies, be they what they may. Our oryx led us a mile or more over rocky slopes, always promising and never giving a good chance for a shot until at last he drew us round the shoulder of a hill—and there, abruptly, was the rhinoceros. The impression was extraordinary. A wide plain of white, withered grass stretched away to low hills broken with rocks. The rhinoceros stood in the middle of this plain, about five hundred yards away, in jet-black silhouette; not a twentieth-century animal at all, but an odd, grim straggler from the Stone Age. He was grazing placidly, and above him the vast snow dome of Kilimanjaro towered up in the clear air of morning to complete a scene unaltered since the dawn of the world.

"The manner of killing a rhinoceros in the open is crudely simple. It is thought well usually to select the neighbourhood of a good tree, where one can be found, as the centre of the encounter. If no tree is available, you walk up as near as possible to him from any side except the windward, and then shoot him in the head or the heart. If you hit a vital spot, as sometimes happens, he falls. If you hit him anywhere else, he charges blindly and furiously in your direction, and you shoot him again, or not, as the case may be.

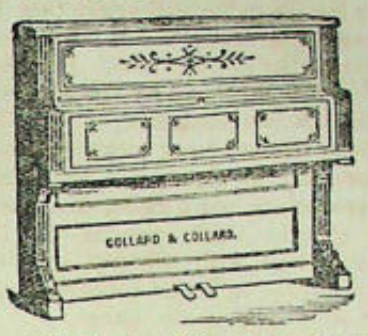
"Bearing all this carefully in mind, we started out to do battle with Behemoth. We had advanced, perhaps, two hundred yards towards him, when a cry from one of the natives arrested us. We looked sharply to the right. There, not a hundred and fifty paces distant, under the shade of a few small trees, stood two other monsters. In a few more steps we should have tainted their wind and brought them up with a rush; and suppose this had happened when perhaps we were already compromised with our first friend, and had him wounded and furious on our hands! Luckily warned in time, to creep back to the shoulder of the hill, to skirt its crest, and to emerge a hundred and twenty yards from this new objective was the work of a few minutes. We hurriedly agree to kill one first before touching the other. At such a range it is easy to hit so great a target; but the bull's-eye is small. I fired. The thud of a bullet which strikes with an impact of a ton and a quarter, tearing through hide and muscle and bone with the hideous energy of cordite, came back distinctly. The large rhinoceros started, stumbled, turned directly towards the sound and the blow, and then bore straight down upon us in a peculiar trot, nearly as fast as a horse's gallop, with an activity surprising in so huge a beast, and instinct with unmistakable purpose.

"Great is the moral effect of a foe who advances. Everybody fired. Still the ponderous brute came on, as if he were invulnerable; as if he were an engine, or some great steam barge impervious to bullets, insensible to pain or fear. Thirty seconds more and he will close. An impalpable curtain seems to roll itself up in the mind, revealing a mental picture, strangely lighted, yet very still, where objects have new values, and where a patch of white grass in the foreground, four or five yards away, seems to possess astonishing significance. It is there that the last two shots that yet remain before the resources of civilization are exhausted must be fired. There is time to reflect with some detachment that, after all, we were the aggressors; we it is who have forced the conflict by an unprovoked assault with murderous intent upon a peaceful herbivore; that if there is such a thing as right and wrong between man and beast—and who shall say there is not?—right is plainly on his side; there is time for this before I perceive that stunned and dazed by the frightful concussions of modern firearms, he has swerved sharp to the right, and is now moving across our front, broadside on, at the same swift trot. More firing, and as I reload some one says he is down, and I fire instead at his smaller companion, already some distance off upon the plain. But one rhinoceros hunt is like another except in its details, and I will not occupy the reader with the account of this new pursuit and death. Suffice it to say that, in all the elements of neurotic experience, such an encounter seems to me fully equal to half an hour's brisk skirmish at six or seven hundred yards—and with an important addition. In war there is a cause, there is duty, there is the hope of glory, for who can tell what may not be won before night? But here at the end is only a hide, a horn, and a carcase, over which the vultures have already begun to wheel."

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—After the gentle little compliment we pay Calcutta annually of closing the doors in honour of your two big events, we got busy again for the Third Extra on Saturday. Bramjee's heavy weight swelled the jockeys' ranks, Evans also returning from a most successful time in Madras, but we missed Taylor and A. Ferguson, the latter being away.

We had our first opportunity of seeing some of the new Arabs which are said to be a very good lot, but at this first outing one cannot say much beyond that Field Marshal, winner of the second New Comers' Plate, was the best out on the running. He was a warmish favourite and won all the way though Chechan and Young Achilles are the ones that want watching. In the first of them Zamorin was favourite, but missed a place; Mundoor and Murmurees, well backed, running behind the comparative outsider Sheriff. He is a little 13·1¾, almost white, and cost Mr. Newton no less than Rs. 4,000.

Amongst a poor lot in the Maiden Plate, Selection was a slight favourite but was easily beaten by Woolwinder all the way, Evans waiting in front. The Desert Plate being divided made up a seventh race, making up for the pony race failing. In the first Mumbra turned out the good thing he looked though Lookman ran him close and Derby was in something like his old form, beating the fancied Meerjan. The other saw Salanica lose us another pile, failing even to place, Rajput winning a good race from Gafal and Aden, bringing in Mr. A. S. O. a nice sum; part of which he dropped on Osborne in the Selling Plate. Moonim was actual favourite, but he also found a mile too much and Sahoon upset the pot. The "unnamed" native on his back rode a nice race, leading at the start to let Santra take it up and she came and beat him at the finish with Nagashi coming late into a "shop."



The New Year Plate was a farce, Coquette being a hot favourite in a field of three. After being fractious the favourite refused to leave the post and Hill had to get off and walk back, Sir Galahad going to the front beat Rosewater easily.

The much spoken of match between Messrs. Weiss and Powala, the former conceding 1,200 in 2,000, was entered upon at the well filled special room of "Pyrke's." With all due deference to the two professionals who paid us visits previously, Weiss gave probably the most attractive exhibition seen here since the G. O. M. of the game gave us a taste many years since. Weiss worked up to his positions in the prettiest manner possible and in doing so brought off shots which frequently called for applause. During his stay at the top of the table he piled up points rapidly by means of the alternate pot and cannon position though never pegging away at it long enough to become monotonous.

In face of play of such consistency that the Australian averaged 37·03, Powala was demoralised and at the end of play was no less than 255 behind his points. He showed flashes of form, but 12, 11, 21, 11, 15, 12, 10, 12 were his best, whereas Weiss started at his third visit with 191 and later made 51, 31, 32, 115, 126, 30, 157, 141 and 34. At his 1,000 play ceased, his opponent only having made 145.

Thursday was a contrast, in that not only was Weiss out of form but had the run of balls against him, whereas Powala played much better with a hopeless task before him. With only a little more than 300 to go Weiss caught and passed the amateur, who with a nice effort of 34 went ahead again pluckily. Breaks of just over 30 took Weiss gradually away and he eventually ran out with a flash of his real brilliance. Weiss reached his 2,000 with Powala at 1,716, his best being 34, 38, 37, 35, 31, 39, 32, 33, 37 and 169 unfinished, Powala making 25, 19, 23, 34, 16, 10, 17 and 18.

On Saturday night the professional played Mr. Young a return at Pyke's giving him 600 in 1,000. The result of the game was reversed as Weiss was in good form and Young by no means as steady as when he won in Byculla. Though not quite at his best, Weiss played his famous game in the figure of a man, hazards and top table play. He made 38, 46, 116, 68, 87, 34, 57, 109, 64, 52, 30 and 69 unfinished, Young making 14, 17, 23, 25, 15, 18, 19, 12 and 13, and losing by 125 points.

It will be well into February before Mr. Weiss visits you after touring round Delhi, Lucknow, Lahore, etc.

Friday, 18th December 1908.

Never, in recent years, have we had such an amazing December as this; the papers say so and old men of my acquaintance confirm it. An overcoat is uncomfortable, fires are quite unnecessary, it seems impossible to contemplate the fact that Christmas Day is but seven days off. We seem just now to dwelling in a sort of Alice in Wonderland atmosphere, so many things are topsy-turvey. Take, par example, the bewildered trees, hundreds of which are actually beginning to bud under the delusion that the Spring has come—horse chestnuts are almost in blossom in Watford and a few other districts around London and may possibly mingle with holly and mistletoe in Christmas decorations. Take also the housefly, who declines to acknowledge the presence of winter and continues troubling as if he were in the full tide of his summer wickedness. But—like the dear and very proper old Blackpool landlady—we shall get it anon.

Yesterday Indian affairs occupied the keenest attention in the House of Lords, when Lord Morley made his important and eagerly looked for statement to a large brilliant gathering. The House sat at the unusually early hour of half-past three, and by that time there had gathered in the chamber a number of peers such as is brought together only on historic occasions. While most of the scarlet benches were crowded, there was a little throng of Privy Councillors on the steps of the Throne, among them being Sir Edward Grey, the Foreign Secretary. Up in the side galleries peeresses looked down upon the scene. Members of the House of Commons watched the proceedings from the enclosures on each side of the Press galleries. On the floor of the House, mingled with the general body of peers, were men who have earned fame in India in peace and war. Lord Lansdowne and Lord Ripon, Lord Roberts, Lord Wolverhampton, an ex-Indian Secretary, Lord Ampthill, and one or two other old Indian administrators. It was in the middle of this picture at twenty minutes to four that, amid a dramatic scene, Lord Morley of Blackburn rose to make his speech. But I am forbidden to write on politics, and, of course, Reuter has long since given you the full text of the statement.

So many P. and O. passengers left yesterday for Marseilles on their way to the East, that the boat train had to be run in three parts. Among the travellers was Lady Lansdowne, who is going out to attend the wedding at Calcutta of Lady Violet Elliot and Lord Charles Fitzmaurice, and globe-trotters, bagmen, "wagtails," sportsmen, and the usual cold weather visitors were in platoons.

One wonders if we are getting any nearer the time when there will be no more poor old soldiers left to starve in the streets of our big towns or perish miserably in our workhouses, heart-broken at the ingratitude of their country. At any rate one may indulge in hope on reading of the proposed national plan to help ex-soldiers. A "Veterans' Club" is forming, every regiment is to look after former comrades, "Work, not Workhouse" is the motto of the movement in which your large number of military readers in India will, I make no doubt, be particularly interested. I am glad to say the scheme is practically in operation, ere long, let us hope, the stigma cast upon the country will be removed. There are two sides to this scheme:—

(1) The formation of Old Comrades' Associations in each regiment, who will make it their business to help former members of the Service, who are in need of relief or work, or both.

(2) The establishment of the Veterans' Club, which will shortly open its doors. This is designed for the benefit of ex-military or naval men residing in London or visiting London from the provinces. None but men of good character will be admitted to membership. It will afford facilities for recreation, but its serious purpose is to bring its members who are seeking work in contact with employers of labour. Membership of the club depending on personal honesty and ability, will naturally be a recommendation with would-be employers. The Veterans' Club will serve as a sort of central clearing-house or focus for the activities of the Old Comrades' Associations, and thus will link the various associations together.

Allusion to matters military suggests reference to the new Indian medal to commemorate your numerous frontier operations. It is to be known as the "India General Service Medal 1908," it will have a distinctive riband—dark blue edged with green—and it will take the place of the medal granted five years ago. The new decoration, with a clasp inscribed "North-West Frontier, 1908," will be issued to all troops, who took part in the four campaigns of last year specified in the Army Order.

Last Saturday's 'Varsity football match was attended by the time honoured undergraduate celebrations, and the liveliest scenes occurred at night in the vicinity of Piccadilly and Leicester Square. The horseplay began in the Empire Theatre. There the officials had occasionally to relieve the pressure by lifting out some of the more strenuous spirits, who headed the scrimmages in the circle and stalls. The performance on the stage was a mere dumb show, but this would not have affected the ballet much if the orchestra could have been heard. But it was overwhelmed. At times one could not hear the big drum. The restaurants were overcrowded, and at closing time great difficulty was experienced in clearing them. When this was effected the streets became noisier than ever, and thirty arrests were made before quietness was restored about 1 A.M. All of which goes to prove that the Tom and Jerry spirit of our great grandfathers' day finds ready expression nowadays, if it is given but half a chance.

Saturday evening's gathering in the Grand Hall of the Hotel Cecil, where the Savage Club held its fifty-first annual dinner, was, as usual, highly characteristic of the wide field of literature, journalism, and the arts represented amongst the members of the famous club. Mr. William Senior presided, and amongst those present were Mr. Justice Darling, Sir Robert Hart, Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir F. C. Gould, Prince Lichtenstein, Lord Tenterden, General Sir Alfred Turner, Sir Harry Maclean, Sir Charles M. Rivaz, the Earl of Clancarty, Lord Grimthorpe, Mr. J. F. S. Gooday, Mr. Yeend King, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., the Earl of Granard, Lieutenant J. Mackenzie Rogan, and Mr. E. E. Peacock (honorary secretary). The artistic menu-card—always a welcome souvenir of the club's hospitality—was this year the work of Mr. Lance Thackeray. Mr. Yeend King proposed "The Guests," Mr. Justice Darling responded as also did Sir Robert Hart, who was amusing and interesting when he dropped into reminiscences of certain ornate Chinese feasts at which he was an embarrassed and possibly uncomfortable guest. "Many of the dishes provided were very curious. A friend had told him that in one part of China at the end of the feast the head of a rat was presented to each guest, in a beautiful little porcelain cup. That was the bon bouche. Latterly, the fashion of such entertainments had changed very much with the progress of civilisation. The most amusing entertainment at which he was ever present was in 1861. First of all, he and his fellow-guests were taken upstairs to a room, in which forty or fifty young ladies were seated on sofas, and each guest was told to pick out two of these young ladies to pour out wine for him. He was new to the custom and to the people at that time, but he asked one of his hosts to pick out two for him. This was done, and the two little damsels trotted down and sat on each side of him and poured out the wine. They were very lively companions indeed—(laughter)—and played the guitar and sang very well. That particular entertainment began at twelve o'clock in the middle of the day, and ended at five o'clock the following morning—(laughter)—thus lasting seventeen hours. There were 125 courses, each of which he tasted—it was, of course, impossible to do more." I was reminded, reading the above of a few weird repasts to which I was bidden in the old days when those princely and hospitable celestials, Eng Hong and Co., of Calcutta, used to occasionally honour their friends and business connections with invitations to "Chow." These exceeding good fellows made their pile and returned to Hongkong nearly thirty years ago.

The London Zoo authorities are waking up at last over the matter of safeguarding the animals against disease risk. All future new arrivals at the Zoological Gardens will have to undergo a probationary detention in the new reception houses. The death-rate among animals in captivity is always sufficiently high without the additional risks of epidemics brought in by newcomers. Two of the larger houses which sheltered the Australasian collection last season have been adapted to quarantine purposes, and men who obtained invaluable experience in the service of the Tuberculosis Commission have been engaged to supervise the new arrivals and report upon all doubtful indispositions. The Calcutta Zoo might profitably follow suit. By the way I heard, not long ago, of the death of Mr. Sanyal, who was its Superintendent for so many years; the news was received with regret by several members of the Zoological Society in London, who either knew him personally or were aware of his excellent work in Calcutta. Meanwhile the health of the most interesting and most delicate animal in the gardens, the solitary surviving walrus, leaves little to be desired. A new and novel delicacy has been discovered for him—octopus steak. The experts at the Marine Biological Laboratory at Plymouth sent up several pounds of cut-up octopus—cuttle-fish to be exact—and the whitish pink-veined flesh is swallowed by the walrus with every sign of joy and appreciation.

Yesterday the newly-formed Actresses' Suffrage League, which is strictly non-militant gave a large "At Home" in the grand hall of the Criterion Restaurant. The ladies have chosen Mrs. Kendal for their president, and Miss Violet Vanbrugh, Mrs. J. Forbes Robertson, Miss Eva Moore, and Mrs. Madeline Lucette Ryley will act as vice-presidents. Among the speakers were Mr. J. Forbes-Robertson, Mr. J. T. Grein, Miss Cicely Hamilton, Miss Evelyn Sharp, and Mrs. J. Forbes-Robertson received the guests.

Mr. William Shore has written an entirely new and in many ways novel version of "The Cricket on the Hearth," which will be produced with a strong cast at the Cripplegate Theatre on the Tuesday of Christmas week, under the auspices of the Dickens Fellowship Dramatic Society. Mr. Shore, who "produces" the play, is one of the authors of "Isaac's Wife," which was played last week at the Court, and it will be interesting to see how so modern a writer has dealt with Dickens.

No fewer than eighteen of the new plays and revivals put on since 1st September, with the hope of getting a run, have failed to draw the public. Some of the survivals, among this year's offerings, are no better than those that failed, and not one among the successes can be favourably compared with either "Paid In Full" or "The Sway Boat." Producing plays is a game of chance, but the closer the author gets to life the less likelihood is there of making it pay.

London is to have no shortage of amusements, as may easily be gathered from the following list of pantomimes and plays specially in preparation for the Christmas holidays. Grown-ups are expected to become children at this time of the year, otherwise the young would be asked too much if they alone were expected to provide all the patrons for this list of amusements:—

Mr. Seymour Hicks and Miss Ellaline Terriss are now demonstrating how Courting by aeroplane may be successfully carried out. For this agreeable purpose they have chosen a playlet entitled "The Fly By Night" and made their first appearance therein at the Palace Theatre on Monday. It gives us a half hour of bustling fun and good class musical comedy, it is bright, the music is pretty and the scenic effects particularly clever. The story matters little—it tells how a young man wins an aeroplane race, £20,000, and the lady of his heart all in one evening; but what does matter is that Miss Terriss is provided with two very pretty songs, and that Mr. Hicks, gagging for all he is worth, is just his high-spirited, mercurial self. His love-making was in burlesque imitation of popular actors, and if most of his lines were made up of audacious puns and still more audacious gibes at the expense of the Kaiser, the Government, and other actors, his breeziness carried the worst jokes into favour. So laughter was frequent, and the Palace all the brighter for this temporary departure of the Aldwych favourites from the legitimate stage.

"Great find at the National Gallery—forty-seven new Turners" looked well enough on the contents bills of the morning papers on Tuesday, and the hidden treasures, which I started off at once to see, make a magnificent show in the Turner Room. The name of Turner has ever been associated with mysteries and surprises, and this last is as great as any we have had, while it adds a remarkable chapter to the romance of art. Three years ago practically the same thing happened—some of his finest achievements were unearthed and hung in the Gallery, and now the mere chance shifting of furniture reveals further treasures. About a year ago it was found necessary to transform the room, which contained the Eastlake Library into the Director's private room, and the bookcases were taken down and removed to a larger room on the other side of the passage, which communicates with the private offices attached to the Gallery. Mr. Hawes Turner, the Keeper and Secretary, found to his astonishment at the back of one of the bookcases a large portfolio, which, on examination, was seen to contain the water-colours which have in the last two days been placed on screens in the Turner Room at Trafalgar Square. But there is more to add. One of the store-rooms was not long ago "explored," and a mysterious bundle, wrapped up in brown paper and tied with string, was brought to light. This precious parcel, which bore Ruskin's initials, contained a few crinkled panels of mahogany veneer, apparently of no importance, artistic or otherwise. The Director, however, needed but a few minutes to see that he held in his hands some precious oil paintings by "the one man who saw nature in its relation and subjection to the human soul." These pictures have been mounted on mahogany panels by Mr. Morrill, the "liner" to the gallery, and have been restored by Mr. Buttery, the official cleaner, who has merely had to remove the dirt and cover a few accidental damages. Truly a great find!

Among the smart weddings of the week was that in which Miss Mourouz Cable, daughter of the respected ex-Sherrif of Calcutta, was led to the altar, with military honours, by Sir Lionel Alexander, Bart., of the Grenadier Guards, and a smart and well set up young fellow to boot. The ceremony was held at Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Street, the chief bridesmaid was the lady's sister, Miss Ruth Cable, there was a distinguished company and many handsome gifts. The stalwart Grenadiers, who lined the aisle, made a brave show, the "arch of steel" and the other etceteras incidental to a military wedding were not omitted.

Miss Marie Corelli's little affairs have again raised a smile in many quarters. The unfortunate lady was the involuntary heroine of a strange incident at Stratford-on-Avon. A Birmingham admirer of her works, disguising his identity under the name of "Jones," entered the novelist's garden after dark and, standing on the steps of her summerhouse, fired five shots from a revolver. This fusillade, while it failed to draw Miss Corelli from the house, attracted the police, and the armed visitor was taken before the local bench and remanded. Now, you'd hardly believe it, but there are some wicked people who have the hardihood to find in this shocking occurrence "only another advertisement" a thing for which M. C. has a distaste they tell me.

* * * * * *

I think I referred some weeks ago to the Abruzzi-Elkins marriage muddle. I see tht lady is credited with having already consoled herself, but there, bless you, you can't believe what you see in the papers, can you Mr. Editor. And the Duke, what of him? According to a Paris paper, I was looking at last night, he is bound for your parts; to be precise he aspires to conquer Mount Everest! It will be a trifle chilly up there, mayhap, for love-making, but who knows, perchance he may find on the summit, some five miles and odd furlongs above sea-level, a bride of sufficiently exalted position to satisfy the requirements of a somewhat exacting family.

THE ENCHANTED VALE.*

Many present-day tourists in the East, and others whose wanderings have not led them so far afield as this peninsula labour under the mistaken belief that the enchanted vale of Kashmir is quite a modern discovery. We might even venture the statement, without much fear of overstepping the mark, that the majority of residents in India, and the average visitor to Kashmir is supremely ignorant of its past history, and that this charming country has given rise to anything but modern literature. A glance at Kashmir, The Land of Streams and Solitudes, will quickly dispel this fallacy.

When two separate individuals set themselves the task of producing one book, the result is more frequently than otherwise, failure. The volumes, relating to Kashmir, that have appeared in recent years, would stock a good-sized library. Many of these have passed through our hands. Some have come and gone none too speedily, others have lingered awhile and then taken the same route, leading to oblivion. Few have approached perfection; none, in our estimation, have ever reached that goal.

Kashmir is the work of two hands, and the product of one mind. We say advisedly one mind, for the harmonious co-operation of two highly-refined intellects has brought forth one concordant fabric. One hand has devoted itself to the wielding of the pen, the other of the brush. The text has not been written up to the illustrations, nor have the sketches been made subordinate to the letterpress.

Kashmir is not a shikar book in any sense of the word, and for this we are truly thankful. The writer takes us back over centuries, and in a style that is faultless, natural, bright and brimful of verve, tells us of the pristine glories of the Happy Valley, relates legends that hover round many a ruined temple and sacred shrine. These stories of bye-gone feats resemble more the telling of delightful fairy tales than the repetition of stern, and sometimes cruel history. In describing the people of the country, the local types, both alien and indigenous, and in depicting its scenery, the author has caught that sympathy with her surroundings, which has enabled her to transfer her impressions to paper without the striving after effect that stamps mediocrity in letters of scorn. Every phrase has been happily chosen, every simile is spontaneous, the descriptive epithets are unlaboured and mellifluous.

We have heard it remarked that no modern book on travel can hope to prove a success without the aid of a camera. The artist in Kashmir has soared far above the possibilities of any photographic apparatus. It is said that a camera cannot lie. This statement is undoubtedly true. There is no reason to suppose that because a photograph is infallible, the brush is untrustworthy. The beauty of the brush and the etching pen is that the former blends colours to form a pleasing tout ensemble, the latter picks out the pearls and omits the dross. In every line and stroke of the illustrations and sketches, it is evident that the painter and etcher has put her soul into her colours. The outcome is a series that for skill, artistic taste, and elegance, we have never seen equalled.

Kashmir is a volume that we can thoroughly recommend to everyone interested in that land of delights, interested in its ancient triumphs or its modern entourage. To the hunter it may not appeal, but to the book-lover, it will come as a masterpiece. It has been produced in the latest of styles, picturesque to a degree, and calculated to show up to the very best advantage the grace and beauty of the coloured scenes and portraits. We have to thank the joint-authors for placing in our hands, such a charming, instructive, and highly artistic production. Another volume of this description would, we feel sure, meet with a universal welcome.

PROTECTION AND PRESERVATION OF GAME.

The Secretary, Bengal Chamber of Commerce has addressed the following letter to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Revenue Department, dated 23rd December 1908:—

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 3562-For., dated 4th September 1908, in which you invite an expression of the views of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce upon the revised Draft Bill to make better provision for the protection and preservation of game. In reply, I am to submit for the information of Government, a copy of a report, which has been drawn up by a Special Sub-Committee of the Chamber, upon the provisions of this measure. The Committee endorse the opinions expressed in the report, and venture to recommend them, together with the suggestions made in it, to the attention of His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor. Subject to these proposed modifications, the Bill is approved by the Chamber.

The Report.

The President and Committee, Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

Gentlemen,—In accordance with your request, we have examined the Bill to make better provision for the protection and preservation of game, and we have now to submit the following remarks for your consideration. The need for protecting and preserving the wild birds and game of India is, we think, generally admitted. We do not, therefore, propose to emphasise it, or indeed, to trace in detail the efforts, which have been made to attain the end in view. We may, however, mention that for upwards of thirty years the question has been under discussion, with but very little result in the way of legislation. The only Act at present in existence, so far as we know, is the Wild Birds Protection Act of 1887, which was the outcome of an enquiry undertaken by the Government of India, in 1885. It is a brief enactment, consisting of four sections, and its provisions are applicable only to Cantonment and Municipal areas. About a year after it became law, the Bengal Chamber of Commerce suggested to the Government of India that it should be reconsidered so as to provide for the more effectual protection, in the interests of agriculture, of insectivorous birds, and in 1900 a second enquiry was set on foot by Government with particular reference to birds of that description. During the course of the Budget debate of the following year, Sir Allan Arthur, the then representative of the Chamber, urged that legislation should be attempted for the protection and preservation of game generally; and after much further enquiry and discussion certain legislative proposals were published by the Government of India in 1904.

These proposals took the shape of a Bill to make better provision for the protection and preservation of game and fish. The Local Governments were to be empowered to define game, to regulate or to prohibit its pursuit or capture, either absolutely or subject to the conditions of licenses, to grant licenses, and, in short, to exercise a large measure of control. The Chamber of Commerce approved of the Bill, with certain modifications. But the general opinion of the Local Governments, and the other authorities, who were consulted, seems to have been that its provisions were much too elaborate. The Government of India have now accepted this view, and they have consequently proposed the simpler measure which is before us.

This new Bill defines game, and empowers the Local Government to declare a close time during which it will be unlawful to capture, to kill, or to deal in any specified kind of game, or the plumage of any specified bird. Contravention of this provision will be punishable by fine to the extent of Rs. 50, and, on a second conviction, to imprisonment for not more than one month, or with fine which may extend to Rs. 100, or with both. The Court is to be authorised to presume that a person who is found in possession of game recently captured or killed has himself captured or killed such game. But a general exception from the provisions of the Bill is to be permitted in favour of the capture or killing of game in self-defence, or in protection of crops, or fruit. The Local Government is also empowered to bring within the Act any kind of bird, other than those kinds specified in the definition of game, but which it may be desirable to preserve from extinction. The Bill repeals the Wild Birds Protection Act of 1887.

We incline to the opinion that a more comprehensive measure is needed, but the question is undoubtedly beset with serious difficulties. We recommend therefore that the Bill be approved by the Chamber, subject to a few modifications, which we will now detail. In the first place, we think that it might with advantage be more clearly stated that the legislation is, where necessary, for the protection and preservation of all wild birds and animals as well as game. As we have indicated, the Local Government is empowered (clause 7) to apply the Act to any kind of bird which it desires to preserve from extinction. But we do not see that there would be any harm if it were plainly stated that wild birds, which may not necessarily be game birds, may likewise be included within the scope of the measure. And we also think that the Local Government should have the power to apply the provisions of the Bill in the same way to any animal other than game, which may be in danger of becoming extinct. Clause 7 might, we suggest, be modified to this extent.

Clause 3 provides that the Local Government may declare, by notification, a close time for any specified kind of game, and that during such close time it shall be unlawful—(a) to capture or kill any such game; (b) to deal in any such game; (c) to deal in the plumage of any bird, specified in such notification, capture or killed during such close time. We believe that in most game laws the words "take, taking, or taken" are used instead of "capture or captured;" and we recommend their adoption here as being more comprehensive. This remark applies to clauses 3 (a) and (c) and 5 and 6.

Clause 3 (c) is, we think, too limited in its scope. We are unacquainted with any reason why it should not include animals as well as birds, and also the skin as well as the plumage of the latter. We suggest, therefore, that it should read—"(c) to deal in the skin or plumage of any bird or the skin of any animal specified," etc.

In submitting the Bill of 1904 to the Local Governments the Secretary to the Government of India in the Home Department mentioned that there is a general objection to the creation of new penal offences, the penalties for which must be enforced by a subordinate and often corrupt agency. Similarly, the Government of Bengal, in their comments upon the measure, expressed practically the same view. The Lieutenant-Governor thought, for instance, that it would be a good thing to prohibit the objectionable practice of sitting up over water-holes in order to shoot animals which come to drink. But His Honour doubted if it were a practicable proposal; for he agreed with the Government of India in thinking that the detection of a genuine offence would be difficult, while the fabrication of false charges would be particularly easy. In face of these authoritative opinions we naturally hesitate to make any remarks upon the penal aspects of the Bill. But it certainly does seem to us that unless the risk of false charges, black-mailing, and extortion is very great, burden of proof that game has been taken or killed in self-defence or in the protection of crops or fruit, should be upon the accused person. In making this suggestion, we are, of course, viewing the question from the standpoint of the need for preserving wild birds and game; and we recognise that it cannot be acted upon if, in the opinion of the Local Governments and the district officers, it is likely to lead to corruption and extortion.

Shooting.

THE ETIQUETTE OF SHOOTING.

It is necessary to shoot where etiquette is unregarded to appreciate its value in full measure remarks a "Country Contributor" in a Home paper.

Perhaps shooting is nowadays too formal a business. It is felt to be so by many of the men whose names stand in public recognition as types of modern sportsmen. Indeed, every year more men of this character are seeking new spheres in Spain, that paradise of rough shooting, or in our Colonies, where convention is little known, and the sportsman to excel must have something of the art of the aboriginal hunter.

But such shooting as is heard throughout England with the fall of the leaf has greater virtues than are generally allowed to it. Two guns and a loader are the instruments of the highest degree of mechanical skill ever attained by sportsmen, and whatever the corresponding losses in comparison with wilder sport, no one who has used the occasion well will be inclined to deny the thrill, excitement, and, indeed, the difficulty, of the game as played at a great November shoot.

With this highly artificial shooting precise etiquette is necessary to safety, is fine in itself, and adds greatly to the zest of the sport.

Let him who doubts it shoot a wood with rougher sportsmen. It was a favourite tag of a well-known landowner who allowed his tenants the shooting of a large and rather irregular wood that if a woodcock got up the only proper and safe course was to "shoot and lie down." Only an exceptionally courageous man would have recommended you to postpone the lying down for an instant.

I have seen a farmer, who, in the way of his class, knew no fear either for himself or others, plunge into a wood after a woodcock at which pretty well the whole company had shot from ranges up to 150 yards. I have seen a man climb up a tree for the sake of shooting a rabbit or two, and give no sort of warning to the guns surrounding the spinney. Frequently on such occasions guns are put at all sorts of angles, with little precautions.

This is often done in partridge driving by men who are otherwise careful enough, but it is seldom, if ever, justified. It is annoying to see birds break away at the side unshot at, but there are psychological as well as physical reasons against trying to prevent it. These wing guns spoil the nerve of their neighbours, the excuse for many misses, as well as the cause of a large proportion of the accidents—experto crede. Lining a road is dangerous for the same reason.

If, as I have seen, a gun shoots at a hare crossing the road behind him, the shot will ricochet at angles that no one will believe possible; and if a ricochet pellet on the calf is not dangerous it is at least discomposing.

Most accidents in shooting come from the same cause as mistakes in war—to wit, a sort of untidiness. Someone said that the Japanese were successful soldiers because they were tidier than other people; everyone knew where everyone else was and ought to be. By hedgerow or wood vague and irregular formations are the occasion not only of accidents but of bad shooting.

It is generally laid down that a man should not give excuses for misses, but if there ever was a reason for explaining failure it is when the gun is ignorant of the exact position of his neighbours. Shooting is largely a question of nerve. Many a man's shooting will be ruined for the day by some little feeling of uneasiness caused by muddle of position. It is sufficiently destructive of calm shooting to see your bird fall in front of you to the greed or ignorance of some wing gun, or that perpetual terror, the man walking with the beaters who does not content himself with the overhead shots. But it is very much worse to hear someone's shot hum in your neighbourhood or to be yourself aware of frightening either a neighbour or a neighbour's bird.

A state of nervousness, too, is the cause of as many accidents as excessive rashness. The nervous man shoots slowly, and slow shooting is an abomination. From this point of view form or style is not very different from etiquette. The first-class shot shoots at the very moment that the gun touches his shoulder. He kills his birds as far as possible in front of him, and so is never even tempted to swing the gun across the line of guns, often a manœuvre that is the cause of more accidents than any other single error.

Instinct will prevent almost anyone from pointing his gun in a dangerous direction as he puts it up. But a man who once begins to follow a bird neither knows when he will pull the trigger nor where he is swinging the circle of his lethal weapon. It happens that two serious accidents have lately occurred in partridge driving. On both occasions it was at once said that the mishap was due to falling shot.

This excuse is always given in order to spare the feelings of the offender. But the excuse is no excuse. Falling shot hurts no one if the shot be justified. But if you shoot at a bird only moderately high when it is on the same line as the guns you may blind a man at several hundred yards distance with the so-called falling shot.

The satirist who loves to scoff at the extreme formality of modern shooting misses one peculiar virtue in it. It is practically the only sport in which the fine strictness of proper form, such as distinguished the old fencing school, is still rigorous. Courtesy, style, and manners are compulsory. The hand and the tongue have to obey strict laws, and since the conditions must be formal, the only pity is that etiquette is not more widely extended than it is. The etiquette is based both on humanity and unselfishness. It is a disagreeable thing to hear, as most people have heard, a man saying with pride, "I hit that bird hard." It is generally a lie, and when it is true it should take the form of a confession rather than a claim to skill, especially if the shot was unjustifiably long. Doubtless you find some first-class shots who go to the other extreme. They never take the long shots; they object to looking for wounded birds, an affectation foolishly copied in some smaller shoots, and for the sake of their average only take the easier birds. But they at least serve the cause of humane dealing.

Again, the refusal to shoot a bird that will give a finer shot to a neighbour and in general the instantaneous selection of the right bird are not only a lesson in unselfishness, such as games and sports ought to supply, but lead to the nicest exhibitions of skill. The finest recorded instance of quickness and precision in the annals of shooting is the well-known incident when two men standing at the end of a wood killed every bird of a covey of eight partridges. But what one may call the killing skill was perhaps less remarkable than the unerring decision with which each man picked out the right birds for each shot. There was no chance there of doubling a bird, of course. All men in the first class are not above reproof. "Fine shot; killed all his own birds and mine too," was a recent comment. The offender, however, was a foreign potentate, and was privileged, and, generally speaking, the higher the class the finer the etiquette.

Some of the best men affect an almost Olympian gravity which has its ridiculous side. Like Mr. William Watson's Persian cat they stand "in majestic taciturnity, refraining their illimitable scorn." But the other extreme is worse, more frequent, and less tolerable. In smaller spheres where etiquette is less strict the company usually suffers without protest from one man of offensive egotism, who is always desiring the keeper to seek for "my towered bird" in a distant parish. He shoots a pheasant at ten yards off, covering himself with feathers, and insists on "his pretty shot at a rocketer." An appalling instance of this class of egotist was recalled recently by an old sportsman. The man who was by way of shooting on a large scale, grossly missed two pheasants which rose at his feet in some turnips, but a feather or two floated back on the wind from the hinder parts of either bird. The offender turned with ineffable complacence to his neighbour and murmured, "A right and left."

Such a man would be guilty of anything. He would be compact of shooting offences. He would fail to unload his gun at a fence, he would claim his neighbour's birds, he would swing across the line at a driven grouse, he would over-tip the keeper for sake of good stands, he would tell companions taller and taller stories which would finally make his own glorification disappear into the thinnest air. Better than that is the man who mercilessly snubs the youngster for some unaffected pleasure in a good shot or two.

LAWN TENNIS QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Kindly give me your decision, in an easily issue, on the following point of Lawn Tennis Rules: A. serves a ball to B, who is standing midway between the service line and base line. The ball before touching the ground strikes B's body. Is the service a fault, a let, or does A. score the point? I enclose my card

A well-known Judge dined at a restaurant where the man who takes care of the hats is celebrated for his memory about the ownership of headgear. "How do you know that this is my hat?" the Judge asked when his hat was handed to him. "I don't know it," said the man. "Then why do you give it me?" replied the bewildered Judge. "Because you gave it to me, sir," replied the man without moving a muscle of his face.

Poor Pattison went into the chemist's shop for some plaster for his head. "I've always tried to bring up my children to think before they speak," he said, with a sigh; "but I am convinced it is a wrong principle." "Surely not, sir," answered the chemist, sympathetically. "Yes, sir," Pattison replied. "I've told my children always to count ten before they say anything. This morning I went out for a walk with my eldest boy. We were walking near some partially-built houses, when Tom called out, 'Oh, father ——.' 'Now, steady my boy,' I said, seeing that he was excited: 'count ten.'" "Did he obey you?" "Yes, worse luck, he did; but before he had got to five the brick he had seen falling hit me on the head. Thank you. How much?"

Sport in England.

LONDON, Friday, 18th December 1908.

SANDOWN PARK.

DULL weather in town gave place to another grand day for December at Sandown on Friday, and if there was a spice of cold in the air, it was all the more seasonable. They had experienced plenty of rain in the Thames Valley, but the sandy soil could stand all that, and the ground, instead of getting lumpy, as it would if clay, became more consolidated, and with a liberal covering of grass, the going might be termed good. Sport was of a brisk character throughout, fields panning out well, but some awkward spills were witnessed during the afternoon. Results:—

'Twas beautifully bright and fine at Sandown on Saturday, with a splendid light for race-glasses, and the afternoon's sport turned out very interesting. Falls were more frequent than usual, the stand ditch proving a regular stumbling block, and the principal sufferer was that accomplished amateur, Mr. Calverley Bewicke, who got a very nasty tumble with Old Fairyhouse rolling on him; but thanks to prompt assistance further injury to the fallen horseman was saved, and after being taken to the ambulance room in an unconscious condition, great relief was felt when Dr. Woodhouse was enabled later on to report the satisfactory progression of his patient. Many well-known patrons of cross-country sport were present, and the attendance all round was an excellent one, the bright weather bringing out the holiday folk in strength. The sunshine modified the crispness of the wind, the going was first rate, while the fields left little to desire in class and quantity. Result:—

NOTTINGHAM.

Mild, but very damp, were the conditions at Colwick Park on Monday, and the recent rains had rendered the going rather holding. The sport hardly reached the usual standard for this venue, while speculation was also very tame, though the attendance was if any anything above the average for a jumping meeting here. Results:—

TO CONQUER MALARIA.

Words of wisdom from a Physician's Pen.

"Those who conquer Malaria conquer the tropics" is a proverb with which every resident in India is familiar. While in consequence of the onward march of scientific achievement, this disease, so depressing in its onset, so devitalising in its effect, and so disorganising in its result to the whole system is better understood than it used to be, it is still, unhappily, exceedingly prevalent and is likely to continue until the conditions which produce it have been banished.

Most people know that while Malaria may take various forms it is due to a specific germ or microbe, which destroys the red corpuscles by which the oxygen of the air is carried by the blood to every part of the body to burn up its impurities. The destruction of these corpuscles produces the marked symptoms so characteristic of the disease,—the pale, sallow, earthy complexion, the mental and physical lassitude, the depression, the morbid thoughts and feelings, the aching muscles and the tender joints.

Bad as is all this, the result of Anaemia or poverty of the blood, as it is commonly called, which makes life a burden to the sufferer, it may go considerably farther until it produces that wasted and dangerous condition of the system doctors call "Cachexia"

For long, Quinine has been the sheet anchor of the physician, and in the acute stages it generally answers admirably, but in the later stages something else must be employed to destroy the effects wrought by the microbes.

Happily, in this conquest of the hosts of the disease germs which invade the body under the banner of Malaria the physician has been presented with a weapon as potent over them as the modern machine gun is potent against the old flint lock gun.

This weapon is Sanatogen, one of the most powerful restoratives and vitalising agents ever given to the world. Its remarkable properties are due to its two constituents Casein, the solid portion of pure, new milk, and Glycero-phosphate of Soda, a preparation containing phosphorus in the precise form in which it exists in the body. Phosphorus, as every one knows, is not only as a physician has written "intimately associated with the health of the system, and is indispensable for the discharge of the functions of the nervous centres," but is also "absolutely essential for the growth of what physiologists term the cells of the body, the microscopic bricks of which the human edifice is constructed." This cell growth is greatly interfered with in Malaria, and a supply of phosphorus which is easily absorbed by the depleted system is urgently necessary to restore it to its standard activity. Nothing does this so well as Sanatogen, as nothing so rapidly restores the vitality of the blood as this preparation, which is prescribed by over ten thousand physicians in the world because no secret has ever been made of its constituents and they realise its overwhelming value in rousing the functions of the body to do their duty.

How rapidly Sanatogen restores the blood after Anaemia may be judged from the fact that one eminent physician records that the red blood corpuscles in a patient increased eighty thousand per cubic milli-metre in a week, and the percentage of red colouring matter in them advanced from 61 per cent. to 62·5 per cent., while another patient, who was unable to take any solid food and was losing weight rapidly so improved in a fortnight that the red corpuscles increased two hundred thousand per cubic milli-metre, their red colouring matter from 48 per cent. to 52 per cent., and she was able to resume her household duties, completely cured of the terrible melancholia from which she was suffering.

Children are especially liable to Malaria and its pernicious after-effects which may delay their development and stunt their growth. When given Sanatogen they rapidly improve. One child who at three years old, in consequence of Malaria, weighed only half a pound more than it did when it was a year and a half, was given a small quantity of Sanatogen daily, and its weight at once began to go up half a pound a week.

Just as Malaria causes wasting in children it makes adults prematurely old, in consequence of the depression of the vitality of the system. This condition is rapidly cured by Sanatogen which removes the prematurely old look and soon substitutes for the feeble will and listless spirit a healthy interest in normal pursuits.

An exceedingly interesting pamphlet on the subject of Malaria has been written by a physician who had a wide experience of it in India. In order to give this momentous publication "Malaria, its Causes and Effects" the widest publicity, the proprietors of the copyright have instructed Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, to distribute a limited number of copies free of charge, to anyone who may feel interested in it, and will send them a postcard mentioning the "Indian Field."

Sanatogen, by the way, may be obtained direct from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, and at all chemists, etc.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY OF IT.

From T. W. Geary, Jr. Exr. P., Calcutta, 30-5-95. "Just a line to inform you of the efficacy of your medicine. I had been a great sufferer from severe attacks of Diarrhœa and Dysentery for the past three and a half years, and had tried all kinds of Medicine, but only to give me relief for the time being. Only about a fortnight ago I heard of and tried your Catechu Mixture and I must say I found it a most wonderful medicine, for two or three doses have completely cured me. Thanks be to God and to your invaluable remedy, I am now as well as possible. You can make what use you like of this.

From Miss E. A. L., Lucknow. A friend of mine before going to Burma last year gave me a bottle of Catechu Mixture for the relief and cure of diarrhœa. As it has done me so much good, I will feel much obliged if you will send me a bottle of it.

From T. Otter, Esq., District Surveyor, Nellore.—Please send per V.-P. Parcel to be sent by Train addressed as below 2 bottles of Catechu.

I have to state that your medicines are very effectual and I have great faith in them. They are worth their weight in gold. You can make use of this statement as you please.

Mrs. K Ellis, Meerut.—Please send to my address 1 bottle Restringent Mixture and 1 bottle Catechu. Both these preparations are invaluable and I never will be without them.

Special quotations for larger quantities.

De la Rue's "Pneumatic" Playing Cards.—

The Fronts of the "Pneumatic" Playing Cards are highly finished, whilst the Backs are minutely grooved or indented all over the surface, so as to provide an air-space between the cards, and a roughened surface which acts as a resistance for the thumb in dealing. This prevents misdeals, as the cards slide off one by one and can be dealt with the greatest ease and rapidity.

A startling change came over the weather on the second day. The morning opened bright and sunny, but no sooner had the first race been decided than rain came down in a pitiless deluge and did not cease the afternoon through. An effectual damper was thus placed upon a good day's racing. Backers naturally fared badly, as the course had the effect of totally upsetting calculations. Result :—

NEWBURY.

En route to Newbury on Wednesday, the fast Great Western specials ran through heavy banks of fog, but ere the course was reached the canopy of haze had almost lifted. The light did not, however, remain clear after the third race, as the atmosphere became dense, and colours could not be picked out with any degree of accuracy further from the stands than the last two obstacles. Sport fell a shade below the accustomary Newbury high standard of excellence. The going was on the holding side, but, judging by the absence of spills in the steeplechases, the foothold was a fairly sound one. Results :—

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE LEAGUES.—London's First League clubs are again faring badly in the struggle for the championship the defeats of Chelsea and Woolwich Arsenal on Saturday following upon reverses for the same teams the previous week. Against a reorganised side of Newcastle United, Chelsea made a fairly creditable fight at Stamford Bridge, but the Arsenal went down very badly at Bradford before a club that could boast of no more than two victories all the season. This severe defeat came as a big surprise, for away from home, the Plumstead club have generally rendered a good account of themselves this winter, and yesterday they had a capital side in the field, but they failed both in attack and defence. Moderate as is now the position of the Arsenal, Chelsea stand in a much worse plight, having now lost four games in succession. Indeed, at the moment there is not a single First League club with possibilities of distinction this season so limited as those before the Stamford Bridge club.

Everton can still claim not to have suffered defeat since the second week of the season. They are not winning so handsomely as they were doing a couple of months ago, but they occupy a very strong position in the competition and are not likely to be overtaken until the New Year has commenced. On Saturday, they found tough opponents in Sheffield Wednesday, but, thanks to Freeman, succeeded in scoring the only goal of the match. Wednesday, after going through nearly three months' work with only one defeat, have now been beaten three times in succession, and, for the moment, Everton's most serious rivals are Manchester United, faith in Newcastle United being badly shaken after their defeat by 9 to 1 from Sunderland. Strangely enough, Sunderland yesterday, so far from following up that triumph, were beaten on their own ground by Bristol City. Other notable results were the defeat of Aston Villa at Birmingham by Middlesbrough and the bad failure of Manchester City at Sheffield. Blackburn Rovers gave Notts County a hard fight at Ewood Park, but the latter continued their sequence of victories. Practically, at the bottom of the First League six weeks ago, Notts County have since gained five victories and played one draw.

Startling changes have been brought about in the positions of some of the clubs near the head of the Second League table as a result of yesterday's matches. With a clever win at Glossop, West Bromwich Albion strengthened their position at the top, while next in order came Tottenham Hotspur and Stockport County, both only three points below the Albion. By reason of a better goal-average the London club takes precedence over Stockport County. Birmingham, Bolton Wanderers, and Fulham—all playing away from home—suffered defeats, and for the time being are out of the running ; Fulham, indeed, having dropped to eighth place through sustaining their first reverse away from home. Stockport County, who have not been beaten on their own ground, possess, curiously enough, a worse goal average than Oldham Athletic, yet the former are third and the Oldham team fourteenth on the list. At the week end, Oldham Athletic went down before Clapton Orient, who once more demonstrated an ability to show their best form against strong opponents.

Two home clubs suffered defeat in the Southern League, but both profited by their opponents' adversities. Portsmouth beat New Brompton, who had a man injured early in the first half, and Brentford overcame Coventry City, who on Thursday had engaged in two hours' Cup-tie football with Carlisle United, and have before them a third struggle in the endeavour to reach the big competition for the Association Cup. Really, therefore, the only visiting teams to do anything out of the ordinary were Crystal Palace and Leyton, who respectively drew at Bristol and Reading. Maintaining their form, Southampton and Northampton both won, and their records are far superior to those held by any of the other clubs. West Ham United were engaged in a remarkable game ; after having a penalty scored against them they led by two goals at half-time, but, following change of ends, Norwich City put on five, the London team being beaten by a margin of three goals.

THE GAME IN SCOTLAND.—Scotland on Saturday borrowed a day from spring, the weather being ideal, and the different grounds were in fine order. As a result of the day's games, positions in the League table remain unaltered, and although St. Mirren are still at the top, they dropped a point to Airdrieonians, while Rangers and Celtic got two each, and in time both look like going above the Paisley club.

All interest on Saturday was centred in the struggle at Dundee between the Northern rivals, Dundee and Aberdeen, and the match drew the best of the day in Scotland—£653. The next best was at Cathkin Park, Glasgow, where 3rd Lanark and Clyde had £225. Saturday's game between Dundee and Aberdeen, like the first fixture at Aberdeen about two months ago, ended in a draw. In the first game Lennie was injured and Muir had his leg broken. Saturday saw a player on each side—O'Hagan for Aberdeen and Lawson for Dundee—ordered off. Aberdeen's halves on Saturday rarely gave the Dundee front rank a chance, so effectively did they nip their best efforts, and Dundee's only goal was got from a penalty. Till half-time, when the two players were ordered off, it was a fine game, but the rearrangement in the second half, and both sides showing temper, spoiled the play, several incidents keeping the referee busy.

In defeating Falkirk on their own ground, Queen's Park achieved one of their best performances of the season, and on play they thoroughly merited their win. The amateurs were without Richmond and M'Coll, but their experi[ence] of playing Paul, their speediest forward, at left-back [was] out a paying one, and time and again he beat the Falk[irk] forwards in the run for the ball. All the scoring took pla[ce] in the first half, and when the home side put on the pressure in the second portion Young and Paul never failed to clear.

Clyde have not yet got over their defeat after four meetings in the Glasgow Cup by 3rd Lanark, and when they met on Saturday it was early seen that both sets of players were on their mettle. It was one of the hardest games seen in Glasgow this season, and, as in the Cup ties, Brownlie, 3rd Lanark's goalkeeper, was the outstanding man. The points were divided, and Clyde missed a penalty, then scored from a penalty, and 3rd Lanark equalised from a penalty. Clyde's front rank has been greatly improved by the inclusion of Chalmers, late of Bristol Rovers, at centre.

For their meeting with Airdrieonians, at Paisley, St. Mirren dropped Harry Ross, late of Fulham, and played White, a reserve of promise, and who on Saturday's play is likely to get another trial. Wyllie, who is a particularly plucky player, has had few chances this year owing to the great form which Brown, who was with Sunderland last season, has shown at centre. St. Mirren were kept from getting full points by the splendid back play of M'Lay and Rombach, as in all other departments they were superior to the Airdrie men.

Hearts seem to be unable to do themselves justice without Bobby Walker. At Port Glasgow the home club beat them at every point, and it was only the fine goalkeeping of Muir that kept Port Glasgow's win from being more decisive.

Since their defeat by 3rd Lanark in the Glasgow final, Celtic have improved weekly, and, although they were without Somers, the victory over Hibernians, who were without Main at right back, was easier than the score indicates, Quin at centre showing a glimpse of his International form.

Against Hamilton Academicals, who have not won a match this season, Rangers had an easy task, but the game served to introduce Rangers's latest recruit in Yuill, an inside left from a Lanarkshire junior club, and who, if he sustains his Saturday's form, is likely to be a permanency in the team. Of Rangers's seven goals, R. G. Campbell at centre had four.

The games between Kilmarnock and Morton and Motherwell and Partick Thistle were featureless, and, although Kilmarnock and Motherwell got full points, a draw would have been a fairer result in each case.

RUGBY RULES.

Although the Australians were defeated at Cardiff on Saturday, Wales beating them by one penalty goal and two tries to two tries, it is open to question whether the superior team won. Indeed, on the actual play the Australians should have been victorious, but the sides were well matched, and there seemed little to choose between them. Had their halves and three-quarters adopted different tactics, the result might easily have been reversed, for they were more often in possession of the ball than the Welshmen. Instead of following the usual methods, both Prentice, the stand-off half, and Mandible, the roving three-quarters, preferred to kick, with the result that many promising chances were thrown away. Wales were admirably served by their defence, which almost may be said to have exceeded its reputation. The Welsh forwards were seen to most advantage in the open, their footwork and dribbling being of a high order. The Australians, on the other hand, seemed more at home in scrummaging work, their quickness in securing possession of the ball being a feature of yesterday's game. It cannot be said that either side shone as regards back play. For an international fixture this department was decidedly weak, there being an absence of that mathematical precision about the passing which one looks for on such occasions and which makes the Rugby game so attractive to watch. More often than not, the onlookers were rewarded by nothing better than a rough scramble. This was probably owing to the fact that both sides were a little too anxious. The tackling was of a robust order, and little fault could be found here. The teams were well served by their full backs. Almost at the start Winfield made a couple of slips in quick succession, and let the Australians in, but good tackling prevented any mischief, and from this point the Welsh full-back could hardly do anything wrong. On the Australian side Carmichael was equally good, his fielding, and kicking being superb. The result was a triumph for individual players rather than for Wales as a side, for the game was not a great one. Their back play, as already pointed out, was by no stretch of the imagination praiseworthy. J. P. Jones, of Newport, altogether failed to do himself justice, and if not much fault could be found with Trew at centre, he scarcely distinguished himself, while the wing men, Hopkins and Williams, suffered from lack of opportunities. The same may be said of the Australian pair, Carroll and Russell, although they ran well enough on occasion.

Oxford vs. Cambridge.—The biggest crowd ever yet seen at Queen's Club witnessed the thirty-sixth annual Rugby football match. Hundreds were unable to obtain admission. It was a typically characteristic assemblage—representative of all classes. Society people (who rarely go to a football match) were to be seen by hundreds, while business people had evidently taken advantage of the Saturday half-holiday to be present. Old Blues and prominent sportsmen were to be seen on every hand discussing old-time battles over again. What a reunion of old friends that half-hour before the start provides! As usual, enthusiasm ran riot at times. Only when one has stood beside an Oxford or Cambridge partisan at this match can one form an idea of what the human is really capable. Promptly enough, the teams entered the field, both receiving an ovation. Mr. J. Crawford Findlay (Scottish R.F.U.) was referee, and Messrs. V. H. Cartwright (Oxford) and J. Daniell (Cambridge) touch-judges. All did their work well, save that (in the opinion of most) the referee erred on the side of leniency. On several occasions the ball was palpably picked out of the scrummage, and at others it was "never in." Cambridge men assert that Oxford's try was gained as the outcome of such "never-in" tactics, but that is a moot point. Happily, mishaps were few, despite one of the most strenuous games of the series.

Cambridge kicked off, and though Williamson returned into touch in the centre, the Light Blues were the first to press. There was nothing much in it for a time, but the Oxonians three-quarters threw away two or three chances. Williamson, their scrum half, made several openings, but Vassall, one centre, and Tarr, the other, both failed to gather easy passes. After a while the Cambridge forwards found their game, and once they did that, despite the cleverness of the other half-backs, the Oxford three-quarters were not allowed to play well. Indeed Williamson took to making short kicks over the scrum into touch instead of trying to pass out. In that way the match went on for twenty-three minutes, when Williamson gathered the ball, which was never properly in the scrummage, and passing it out to Cunningham, it travelled right along the line until Martin dashed over and gained a try. It was the one brilliant piece of combined back play on Oxford's part in the game. Cunningham placed a goal, and the spectators expected that Oxford would assert themselves, but within four minutes more the Light Blues went down, using their feet splendidly, and completely demoralising their opponents. Then in front of the goal Sutherland threw out to Ashcroft, and the latter, when tackled, passing to Pyman, who scored, for McLeod to convert. With the points thus equal the excitement and enthusiasm was tremendous. Directly afterwards Pyman was all but in again, but the teams changed end with the record at—Oxford, 1 goal; Cambridge, 1 goal.

In the second half the Cambridge forwards played magnificently, and it was only on very rare occasions that the others were able to break away from their own twenty-five. The Light Blue men continually threatened danger, and as they at times overwhelmed the Oxonian pack, Sutherland nearly always got the ball out to his three-quarters. Here, however, it must be said that while they had few opportunities for shining in attack, the Dark Blue division succeeded to admiration in defence. Time after time McLeod and Wright on one wing, and Pyman and Jones on the other, got very close—once or twice rather luckily, perhaps—the tackling proving equal to all emergencies. Just in the last minute Oxford broke away, and were in the Cambridge quarter when the whistle sounded, and a strenuous match, full of interest and incident, ended in a draw of 5 points each. On the play Cambridge were unlucky not to win.—Oxford, 1 goal; Cambridge, 1 goal.

Wales vs. The Australians.—The Australians played the first of their international games on Saturday, meeting the full strength of Wales at Cardiff. There was only one alteration on each side, Hopkins played on the Welsh right wing in place of Giggs, and Dix made way for Carroll at left three-quarter on the Australian side. Recent rain had made the ground rather soft, but the conditions on the whole were fairly favourable. The morning was brilliantly fine, but the afternoon was unsettled, and some rain fell, while a moderately strong wind prevailed. The match aroused much interest in the district, and the ground was packed, over thirty thousand people being present. Shortly before the game commenced the weather cleared, and the sun shone brightly. The crowd whiled away the time by singing Welsh songs and a band played selections of music. The Australians had a fine reception on entering the field and gave their usual war-cry, and the crowd, as in the case of the New Zealand match, responded by singing the "Land of our Fathers."

Wales playing against the wind and sun, kicked off. The game opened in the Australian half, and with Mandible failing to gather a kick by Winfield the play was kept in the Colonial quarters. Some passing by the Welsh right wing took the game to the Australian line, but Mandible relieved with a fine kick, and a blunder by Winfield let the visitors up to the centre. Directly afterwards Winfield was at fault again, and the Australians reached the Welsh 25. They were, however, checked by keen tackling. The Australian forwards broke away, Richards dribbling well, but he kicked too hard at the finish and Winfield was enabled to kick dead. For a time the game was confined to the forwards, but Jones and Hopkins made a good run down on the right. They were, however, stopped by Carroll, and immediately afterwards, Wales met with success. Owen started the movement and after the ball had passed through several hands Travers, with two opponents clinging on him, struggled over and scored for Wales after the game had lasted about thirteen minutes. Winfield failed with the place kick. On continuing the Welsh backs were soon active and a strong attack was delivered by J. P. Jones and Williams. There was an exciting tussle, which was ended by the Australians touching down just in time. Wales again attacked on the same wing, and J. P. Jones found touch near the Australian line. Then the Australians came away through intercepting a Welsh pass, and after some passing, in which Craig and Richards were prominent, the latter scored for the Australians. Though the position was an easy one, Carmichael failed at goal, and the score stood level at 3 points each. Afterwards, through Carmichael making a poor kick, Williams had a fine chance, having only to gather the ball to run over, but he failed to pick up. The Australians were penalised, but Winfield's kick, though well directed, fell short. The game was now in the Australian's quarters, but the visitors' backs made some headway. Winfield, however, maintained the position by a good kick into touch and some fast but scrambling play in the centre followed. J. P. Jones and Williams tried to break away, but were checked and a similar effort by Hickey and Russell for the Australians was stopped by sound collaring and Winfield got in a good kick when Wales were getting in rather a dangerous position. Mandible had a fine chance of scoring, but missed his pass. The Australians got well down through Hickey and Russell and the latter was only forced into touch just in time. In a scramble Trew, the Welsh right centre, was hurt and retired for a time, Hayward being withdrawn from the pack. Trew, however, returned shortly afterwards, but nothing further happened before the interval, when the score stood:—

Wales	...	...	...	1 try.
Australians	...	...	...	1 try.

The second part opened in the Welsh half, but the game was soon removed to the centre, where some kicking took place between the backs, neither side gaining any advantage. The play continued to be of a scrambling description. The Australian forwards obtained the ball more often, and a bout of passing was attempted by McKivatt, Prentice, and Hickey, but the last-named was well collared by J. P. Jones. The Welsh forwards, headed by Thomas, dribbled well into the Australian 25, and some long kicking ended in favour of Winfield, who found touch. Some loose passing by both sides followed, and then good kicks by Carmichael and Mandible took the play into the Welsh half. Then the Welsh forwards came away with a fast rush and the movement was ended by Hopkins gaining a try, which Winfield failed to convert. The score came about ten minutes after the resumption. A fine bout of passing was accomplished by Prentice, Mandible, and Carroll, and the last-named raced away, but was well tackled by Winfield. The movement had taken the play well into the Welsh half, but the Australians were penalised. Winfield made a poor kick and Wales gained no relief, but after a while a strong rush of the home forwards took them to the Australian 25, where Prentice made a fine save. The Australians were again penalised, and from this Winfield kicked a fine goal, placing Wales six points ahead. The Australian right wing got away, but the Welsh defence was sound. The Principality was, however, hard pressed, and only escaped by touching down. After some even play in the centre Winfield blundered in attempting to field the ball, and let in the Australians. The visitors quickly took advantage of the position, and in a sharp attack, Russell scored near the corner, but Carmichael failed in the place kick. After this success, the Australians attacked again, but two good marks by Winfield and Hopkins helped Wales. Then the Welsh backs came away and Hopkins was rather unlucky in not getting through after dodging Carmichael. However, he slipped, and was collared, with no Welshman up to help him. The game was taken into the Australian quarters, but Prentice and Russell made a strong counter attack, and Russell was only collared just outside the line. Wales, however, soon cleared from a dangerous position and as nothing further was scored the result was—Wales, 1 penalty goal, 2 tries; Australians, 2 tries.

Old Merchant Taylors vs. Old Blues.—At Richmond this afternoon an interesting and well-contested game resulted in a win for Old Merchant Taylors over the Old Blues by 13 points to 5. Raphael stood out of the Merchant Taylors' team; nevertheless their three-quarter line, consisting of Parker, Fuller and the brothers Lepingwell, gave an excellent account of themselves, their clever passing and combination being the chief instruments in upsetting the Old Blues' defence. After five minutes' play Merchant Taylors scored their first try as the result of a clever manœuvre by Parker, who got over well beneath the posts. R. A. Lepingwell had no difficulty in converting. A spell of even play followed, broken by two penalties in favour of the Old Blues, McKenzie being successful with the kick on the second occasion. Merchant Taylors kept their opponents' defence busy from that point until the interval, and a very fine individual attempt by Dellschaft resulted in a second try, which Lepingwell improved. In the second half the Old Blues were again kept well on the defensive, and for the greater part of the remainder of the play the ball was kept well within their twenty-five. Their tackling, however, was very keen, and Merchant Taylors were only successful in obtaining one more try, Dellschaft scoring as the result of a fine run by Lepingwell. The point was not majorised. O.M.T., 2 goals, 1 try; Old Blues, 1 penalty goal.

GOLF.

Chas. Mayo vs. Wilfred Reid.—The 72 holes home-and-home match, for £20 a side, between Charles H. Mayo, Burhill, and Wilfred E. Reid Banstead Down, was concluded at Banstead Down yesterday, when Reid, who started the day's play with a lead of three holes, gained on the first 36 holes at Burhill on Tuesday, was beaten by 5 holes up and 4 to play.

The conditions were more against Reid than Mayo, for, although the first-named has a wider range of shots than his opponent, Reid is of very slight physique, whilst Mayo is of sturdy build. It rained hard almost throughout the game, whilst a stiff wind and mist added to the players' difficulties. It took the men nearly an hour to play the last four holes of the morning round, whilst after holing out at the fifth in the afternoon, a halt had to be called owing to a torrential downpour. It was at this point that Reid broke down, although he had long since lost his lead.

The turning point of the game was really the fifteenth hole in the morning, where Mayo, after being laid almost a dead stymie, successfully screwed round and winning the hole, secured the lead for the first time since leaving his own course. Reid was not approaching nearly so well as he did in the first half of the match, whilst Mayo's putting was considerably better. Commander Haskell, R.N., was referee. The following are the details of the scoring:—

Morning Round.—Mayo.

Out: 4 4 4 5 5 5 4 3 4—38; Home: 4 4 5 3 4 4 4 5 6—39—77.

Reid.

Out: 4 3 5 4 5 6 4 4 4—39; Home: 5 5 4 4 4 5 4 5 6—42—81.

Afternoon Round.—Mayo.

Out: 5 3 4 4 4 5 5 3 4—37; Home: 5 4 4 5 4—22—59 for 14 holes.

Reid.

Out: 4 3 4 5 4 6 7 4 6—43; Home: 4 4 5 4 5—22—65 for 14 holes.

Reid's record for the course is 70 strokes.

The first hole was halved, but at the second, where Mayo missed a five feet putt, Reid increased his advantage to four up. Mayo regained a hole at the third, but the next hole went to Reid through Mayo failing to get down a five feet putt, after a weak approach putt. From a long second shot to the sixth hole Mayo had an awkward stance beneath the branches of a small tree, and he had to take a short grip of his club. He pitched on to the green, however, with a niblick, and then, by superior putting won the hole. To the seventh Reid laid his mashie pitch dead, but Mayo, with a two yards putt, secured a half. The Burhill man reduced his deficit to two down at the eighth, and the next hole being halved Reid stood 2 up at the turn.

Reid missed his approach to the tenth hole, and was bunkered. He made a good recovery, but his putt for a half stopped on the lip of the hole, and his lead was reduced to one. The local man pulled his shot from the eleventh tee into the rough, and he was to the left of the green with his iron. Mayo was on the green with two good shots, and, winning the hole, squared the match. Mayo, in turn, pulled his tee shot into the rough, at the twelfth; was strong with his second, and Reid, winning the hole, regained the lead, only, however, to lose it again at the thirteenth, where, after a splendid approach shot, Mayo ran down a three yards putt for a win.

After his drive from the fourteenth, Mayo's ball was lying teed up, and a spectator accidentally trod it into the ground. Mayo dug out the ball with his mashie, and sent it beyond the green, but with a four yards putt halved the hole. At the fifteenth Reid pulled again into the rough, and had so bad a lie that he had to lift, and lose a stroke. He lipped the hole, however, with a long putt, and gave Mayo a more than half-stymie, but the last-named won the hole, and for the first time in the second half of the match took the lead. Both pulled into the rough at the sixteenth, which was halved, as also was the seventeenth. Mayo was on the edge of the eighteenth green in two. He played his third to within two feet of the hole, but then missed his putt, and subsequently missed a yard putt for the hole in five. The hole was halved, and Mayo stood one up on the round.

Reid squared the match, in the afternoon, at the first hole, where Mayo was short with his second shot. Reid only just missed a nine feet putt, at the third hole, to regain the lead, but that honour fell to Mayo at the fourth, where Reid missed his drive. Mayo pulled his shot from the fifth tee under a tree, but made a fine chip and secured a half.

At this point the play was delayed by a heavy hailstorm, and when it was resumed Reid lost the sixth hole through pulling his second shot into a bush. He again pulled his second, made a poor recovery, and gave up the hole. At the eighth Mayo pulled his drive into the rough near a bush, but made a fine pitch on to the green, and ran down a five yards putt to win the hole. From his tee shot to the ninth Reid was in the rough, in an awkward lie near a fence. He missed two shots, then over-ran the hole, and, losing it, became five down.

The tenth hole went to the local man, Mayo, after being too strong with his approach, missing a five feet putt to halve. At the eleventh Mayo laid a thirty yards running pitch dead, but Reid holed a two yards putt for a half.

That is why BOVRIL is so invigorating a beverage, so strengthening a food, why Cooks find it so useful, why Doctors and Nurses recommend it, why the sensible housewife will have nothing in place of it.

The match ended, however, at the fourteenth hole, Mayo was short with his approach and a run up, with his cleek left him five yards from the hole, whilst Reid was to the left of the green in two. Mayo holed his putt for four whilst Reid, who had failed to pitch dead, missed his putt to halve, and so lost the hole and match.

BOXING.

CHAMPIONSHIP WEIGHTS.—In almost every respect boxing is in a much more satisfactory condition than the sister sport wrestling, but there are one or two particulars in which both games are on a level. For one thing, one has but to ask, "Who are the champions in wrestling and boxing?" to find a dozen replies all different; and, again, one might ask, "What are the championship weights in wrestling and in boxing?" and here, also, one will get emphatic replies showing several differences of opinion.

People have asked "Who are the boxing champions?" and if there be no good matches for the championship of England at the various weights, it cannot be said that the suggestion has not been made; and now we are to consider the question of the international weights in boxing. In England there is unanimity. The A.B.A. and the professional championship weight are fixed, but when we consider the weights for the championship of the world we find a difficulty. Here are the various weights:—

	American. st.	lb.	British. st.	lb.
Bantams ...	... 8	3	8	4
Feathers ...	... 8	10	9	0
Light-Weights	... 9	7	10	0
Welters ...	... 10	2	Not recognised.
Middles ...	... 11	4	11	4
Light Heavies	... 12	7	Heavy-Weights, any weight.
Heavy Heavies	... 12	7	and over.

It seems a great pity that an International rule cannot be formed making the weights the same all the world over, as, naturally, any American coming over here would have to box at our weights, as our men do when they cross the Atlantic. In the bantam-weights, we find but 1lb. difference. Surely this is easy enough to remedy. In the feathers, we find 4lb. difference, the English weight being the heavier; in the light-weights the difference is still more marked, 7lb. being a lot to ask a man to take or give, which, supposing an Englishman and American were boxing for the world's light-weight championship, one of them would have to do, and, naturally, here again the English weight is the heavier. The American welter-weight, which we do not recognise in this country, is only 2lb. over our light-weight limit, so that really our light-weights and their welters correspond much more than the two different countries' light-weight limits do. Middle-weights alone correspond exactly, and after this it will be seen that the Americans provide for a light heavy-weight class, which we also do not recognise, as we call anything over 11st. 4lbs. a heavy-weight. There is a lot to be said for the light heavy-weight class had we more good heavy men in this country, the lightest of whom could go into the light heavy-weight class, as it seems very rough luck that an 11st. 0lbs. man should have to meet and box anybody up to 14 or 15st. for heavy-weight honours.

As things now stand, it is unfair to the men. For example, we might have an excellent light-weight champion, who could only just do the weight, and be strong and fit and quick. If he goes to America and fights for the light-weight championship, for the sake of the purse and for the honour of winning, he has to get off 7lbs. in weight, and thereby must be handicapping his chances, as so many men in trying to do certain weights do, at the expense of their strength and staying powers. In fact, Tommy Burns ascribed his defeat by Twin Sullivan to this very reason, that he had to take off so much weight in a required time, that he got in the ring as weak as a rat. There is a good deal in this argument, as many who have tried know too well.

Irrespective of the discrepancy in weights between England and America, we are treated over here to all sorts of ridiculous challenges by men, who call themselves the 7st. 12lbs. champion of Wapping, the 9st. 1½lb. champion of London, and the 10st. 10lbs. champion of the Devil's Dyke. No, no; we want no half-ounce champions, and the men and their managers had better appreciate the fact that if men cannot win competitions at the recognised weights, the sooner they leave off advertising themselves at ridiculous and unrecognised weights, the better. We have known men who, having won middle-weight championships, refused to fight recognised middle-weight but had the impertinence and audacity to call themselves 10st. 2lbs. and 10st. 4lbs. champions respectively.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.—The occasion of the popular Mr. Bettinson's Eleventh Complimentary benefit was honoured with a very select programme and a crowded house. The big item on the card was the ten rounds contest for £290 between Ian Hague, the Yorkshireman from Mexborough, and Ben Taylor, better known as the Woolwich Infant. But it turned out almost a farce. Taylor had no chance at all, and in less than two rounds was the recipient of a tremendous hiding, while Hague came through without a mark. The Mexborough man impressed good judges a deal more than when he met Charlie Wilson. He is quicker all round, and that right-hand punch of his is a terrible thing. Taylor met it almost immediately they came to close quarters, and the end was at once presaged.

Hague was seconded by Charley Hague, Geo. Law, and Dick Parkes, and Taylor was attended by Steve Smith, Arthur Gutteridge, and Fred Ellingham.

Round 1.—It was at once seen that Hague was twice as quick as his opponent, and after landing twice on the body in the first minute, Hague landed squarely on the point, and Taylor fell to the boards. He was up in eights second, only to be knocked through the ropes in his own corner a minute later. He was beaten to the world when he was helped upon his feet, and then Hague, following up his advantage, again had his man on the floor and through the ropes. Only the gong saved Taylor.

Round 2 and last.—Taylor could put up no semblance of a fight when the men left their corners again. Once, twice, thrice, Hague drove home terrific blows, and then came the end, a right-hander delivered with tremendous power giving Taylor his conge.

BILLIARDS.

T. REECE vs. J. HARRIS.—The eighth heat in the London tournament ended at the Soho-square saloon last Saturday in an easy victory for Reece, (received 1,555,) who defeated Harris (received 3,000) by no less than 1,659 points. On the final day the chief breaks were 439 (full from 257 unfinished), including runs of 55, 37 and 41 consecutive cannons, 287, 93, 129, 122, 150 and 85 by Reece, and 52, 119, 123, 59 and 88 by Harris. Full scores: Reece, 9,000; Harris' 7,341.

E. DIGGLE vs. T. AIKEN.—This exhibition game of 9,000 up, Diggle conceding 1,500 points start, ended at the Leicester Square Hall in a win for Aiken by 1,782. During the day the best breaks were 315, 193, 152, 200, 95 and 130 by Aiken, and 116, 200 last 185 off the red by Diggle. Final scores: Aiken, 9,000; Diggle, 7,213.

H. W. STEVENSON vs. M. INMAN.—This heat in the Provincial tournament ended at Birmingham in an easy victory for Stevenson, who conceded 2,200 points, by no fewer than 3,091. Stevenson made breaks of 152, 144, 109, 108, 150 and 241, while Inman's chief break was 135. Full scores: Stevenson 10,000; Inman, 6,[illegible].

ATHLETICS.

MARATHON AT HASTINGS.—Thousands of people witnessed the Hastings Marathon race last Wednesday afternoon. The race for days past has been the one item of interest locally. The distance was twenty-five miles.

The fifty-one entrants, however, came from all parts, and included W. T. Clarke, of the Sefton Harriers, winner of the Edinburgh Marathon race, J. Price, Small Heath H., winner of the Bristol Marathon. F. Lord, Wibsey Park A.C., J. G. Beale, Polytechnic H., and R. H. Backshall, South of the Thames champion.

Following a bright and warm morning, the afternoon turned out dull. For all that, thousands of people lined the streets and assembled on the Central Cricket Ground, where the 41 runners covered three laps, and then left for Silverhill and the country roads. As they quitted this heavy ground Clarke had established a useful lead, having covered his first mile in 4mins. 54secs. At the Harrow (4¾ miles) the order was: Clarke (time, 25mins. 51secs.), Dixon (27.35), White (27.45), Brown (27.46), L. G. Newton, H. Backshall (Eastbourne A.C.), then came Price, Barrett, Beale, Ledwood, and Catt together. At 6½ miles Clarke had increased his lead, his time being 36mins. 13secs. Behind him came Brown and Dixon, together in 38mins. 55secs., followed closely by White. Battle Rly. Station (8 miles 1 fur.) was passed by Clarke in 44mins. 46secs by Brown and Dixon, still together, in 47mins. 49secs., and by White in 47mins. 55secs. A mile further on the order of the first four remained the same, and Backshall was fifth. Continuing to stride out nicely, and keeping up the pace, Clarke had drawn farther away at the half-distance—12½ miles. The order and times now were:—Clarke first (71mins. 1sec.), Backshall second (74.49.), Brown third (75.20.), Catt Lord Dixon, and Beale, all level, in 75.34. Fourteen miles saw Clarke still ahead in 80mins. 34secs., Backshall coming next in 84mins. 57secs., with Brown and Dixon losing ground. The latter was now over 5mins. behind the leader. Sixteen miles were covered by Clarke in 92mins. 22secs. Positions had changed when the eighteenth mile was reached, and here the order and times were:—Clarke (1hr. 46mins. 21secs.), Catt and Lord (1.50.27.), Beale (1.50.40.), Price (1.50.58.), Barrett (1.51.57). Clarke's time for twenty miles was 2hr. 1min. In the next mile Clarke was in trouble with his feet, and rapidly came back to his opponents. His time for 21 miles was 2hr. 8mins. 45secs. At 22 miles (2.16.11.), he was only 44secs. ahead of Lord and Price. Along the Marine Parade, however, Clarke recovered. He passed the 23rd mile-post in 2.24.43. Meanwhile Beale's chance had become hopeless, through a swollen foot, but Barrett came quickly towards the front. In the last mile Lord dropped Price, who was suffering from cramp, but the Wibsey Park runner lost ground on Clarke, who made his final effort, and drew right away. As he entered upon the half-lap of the Central Cricket Ground, where the finish took place, the band struck up "See the conquering hero comes," and the Sefton harrier won a gallantly run race by some 300 yards.

Hunting.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

WITH a splendid morning's sport last Bye-day including two kills, we had to thank our M.F.H. for the fourth run during the week. The way in which hounds have done their work is a credit to them as well as to those in whose charge they are. On this occasion, they seemed irresistible, and, after keeping the quarry at top speed throughout, eventually disposed of him on each occasion.

We met at Sahar Hill, round the base of which there is good cover for the varmints, and after going half round it, one of them is dislodged. A rousing gallop for a prelude, we crossed Bomanwadi Valley, and turn across some melon ground before clearing the Tulsi Main, and tearing across grass fields. It was a case now for the jack as he could not be expected to keep up the pace and scent was too good for any hope of hiding, so that after a sharp gallop, he was run down.

Near Sahar Village, we went away after another on good terms with the pack, but the run was such a fast one that it was difficult to keep with them as it progressed. Cutting through the familiar nullah and crossing the Andheri Road, we skirt the Grange and make away towards Marok. The one and only check occurred as the jack twisted down the valley and eventually mounted that very steep hill of the same name, but ignored possible shelter in the caves. On reaching the plain again, he enters the Goregaum woods, where many have escaped, but his fate was sealed and after a desperate rush, he is added to the number of victims. For a lady to be able to keep up at such a speed and through such woods does her the greatest credit, and Miss Forbes has to be complimented on being the recipient of the brush.

There was another extra day on Tuesday, which was well attended, when Chuckla Hill was made for as soon as light permitted. No jack appeared to have taken up his quarters there, so a move was made over the Andheri Road on to the Mango Tope, where we were more fortunate. With the quarry refusing to leave the Tope and the scent being bad he got away. Drawn off, hounds were next put into the covert, north of Marok and here they found again. Scent was very catchy and several checks occurred as they drove the quarry through the Mango Tope and eventually had the satisfaction of bringing him down.

Hounds made up for this poor run by effecting two kills as a wind up to the [illegible] after invigorating runs. Hacking across to Chuckla, it was discovered that a jack was in the brick-fields and we were soon away after him over a varied line of country past the Cross Road towards Vakola. After crossing the nullah, however, the quarry turned for Sahar Hill and climbed it. A chain of hills run along here and after surmounting another, Bomanwadi, he is eventually run down in that village.

It was still early enough to put hounds at it again near Sahar and they soon gave tongue, following with a dash over some sporting country to the Backwater. Cutting through the familiar Tope, they cross the Backwater later giving the horses a troublesome time at the steep banks. Making away across the main road, the beautiful Horse Shoe Valley heaves in sight and Hogsback Hill is reached. The usual plan is taken of skirting it whilst hounds hunt the jack over it into the valley again. He makes for another hill, and takes refuge on the slope, but hounds are much too hot on the scent to overrun this hiding place.

OLD CLIFF.

THE COST OF FOX HUNTING.

THERE are 170 packs of hounds kept for the purpose of fox hunting in England and each fox that is killed costs some £400, possibly more if the total expenditure were divided by the number of foxes slain.

The natural inference from such facts as these is that fox hunting is a very expensive sport. Yet, writes padré Dale, it is not, therefore exclusively, or even chiefly, a rich man's sport, nor is it the wealthy sportsmen who find the money, as they do in yacht racing or covert shooting.

The subscribers to fox hounds are in a great majority men of very moderate means indeed. Anyone can test the truth of this by examining the balance-sheet of a hunt. Except in a few favoured or fashionable hunts the great majority are those who pay £10 or even less to the funds of the hunt.

Hunting is, and always has been, the chosen sport of country residents of moderate means. So fascinating is the sport that if a man has once entered into hunting he is willing to make considerable sacrifices rather than give up a share in the sport. By far the larger proportion of every field is made up of men who keep one horse, though some own two or three. Many a useful country hunter, like the horse of Leech's undergraduate, takes its rest in a dog-cart. Working horses, like their masters, often take a day off in the hunting field. Indeed, we may often be tempted to wonder how many people whom we see in the hunting field manage to be there at all. The truth is that although hunting on a small scale costs something, it does not cost so much as people outside are tempted to suppose.

When we see a man neatly dressed and mounted on a well-groomed horse, trotting gaily towards a meet of the hounds, we think that there must be a considerable expenditure involved. But the looker-on does not see everything, and there are stable secrets of which we know nothing.

First and foremost, there is the keep of the horse. A resident in the country, with a stable and paddock to his house, can keep a horse for a comparatively small sum. I take the cost of feeding and grooming one horse for a period of five months of four weeks each:

Ton of old hay	4	10	0
Bedding straw or peat	1	10	0
Bran and sundries	2	5	0
Shoeing	1	0	0

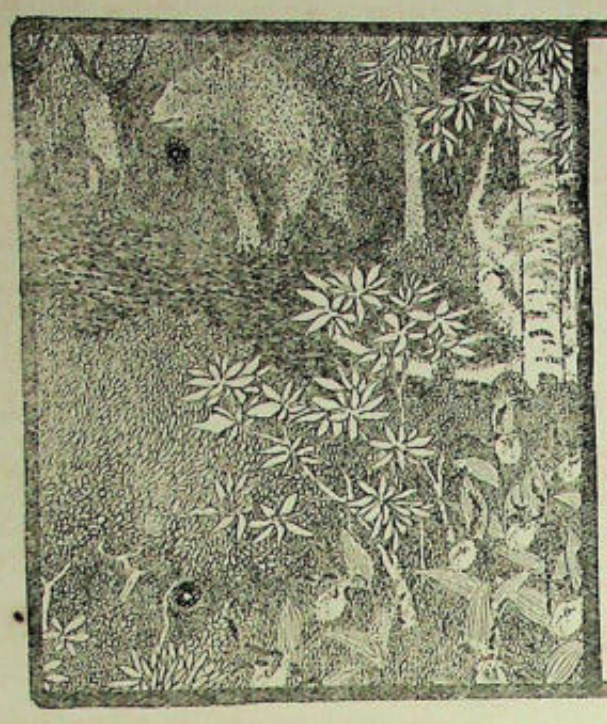
Thus we may say that £30 will keep the horse for the season, provided the master keeps a careful eye on everything. If he is not prepared to do this at least £7 must be added to the wages. However, in practice, if a lad or groom-gardener is fairly intelligent or fond of horses he can easily be taught everything that need be known.

Of course, the master cannot swing off his horse, call for a bootjack, and tumble into a warm bath with no thought but for his own comfort. If he is not sure of his man he must see that the horse is made comfortable before he leaves the stable but this is no more than our grandfathers did as a matter of course. They considered it one of the duties of a true sportsman to see his horse comfortable before he looked after himself. A horse is made or marred in the stable and especially perhaps in the half-hour after he reaches home at the close of a hard day's hunting.

Moreover, the above estimate implies that the master is able and willing to study a horse's appetite and to find out exactly how much corn he can eat with advantage. If he cannot, or will not do this, he must be prepared for a larger outlay on oats.

The next point to be considered is the cost of buying the horse. No one can lay down rules for this. So much depends on the purchaser, his powers of horsemanship, his weight, the country in which he hunts. But although no one can tell a man what he must give for a hunter yet it is possible to calculate the sum which the hunting man will be out of pocket on the purchase and sale of his horses one season with another.



This sum I take to be about £35 for the season, and I base the estimate on figures actually drawn from a personal experience. Being on leave from India, I bought three Irish horses. For one I paid £75, for the other two £40 apiece. I hunted them hard for a season in a first-rate provincial country. One horse, the most costly, was lamed for a time by an injury and slightly blemished. In March, on the expiration of my leave, I sold the horses, which had cost:

Railway fares	10
Veterinary and sale expenses	5
	£170
Less proceeds of sale at Tattersall's	65

or £35 loss on each horse, and I think, looking back over many seasons, that this a fair estimate of the cost in horseflesh of mounting one-self if economy is to be studied. Thus the total keep of the horse comes roughly to £30 for the season, and we shall pay £35 for the use of the horse in the hunting field, making a total of £65 for the five months. So far we have dealt with personal expenses.

Now we come to the contribution to the hunt. Some years ago I should have written that a man who keeps one horse would have discharged his obligation to the hunt by sending five guineas to the secretary. But the cost of hunting a country has almost doubled in the last quarter of a century. Writing in 1888, "Stonehenge" put the cost of hunting a country at £600 per annum for each day in the week hounds went out; now the expenditure is much more nearly £1,000 per annum for each hunting day. I am afraid ten pounds is the least the one-horse man ought to give, though customs vary. He will like to give the huntsman and whipper-in some acknowledgment at Christmas; for he will be very unlucky if he has not had an immense amount of civility and kindness from them. This will come to two pounds at least. Then there are the "caps" for charitable purposes, which will take another £1 1s.— i.e., 10s. 6d. for the Royal Agricultural Benevolent and the same sum for the Hunt Servants' Benefit Society.

A man who has done this may hunt with a clear conscience, knowing that he has paid his share of the sport, and he may be permitted to feel that if everyone did likewise in proportion to his means the finance of hunting would present no problems to the careworn secretary and harassed master.

And, after all, he will find that he has enjoyed the finest sport in the world for less than £80 for the season out-of-pocket expenses.

Lastly, how much hunting will he get? On an average in a season of twenty-five weeks he will, if lucky, have eighteen to twenty days' hunting out of his one horse. Say he will have paid £4 for each day's amusement. Supposing he has £500 a year, he will have spent one-fifth of his income for five months' pleasure. But then the enjoyment of hunting is so much greater than any other—at least to the man who is bitten by the sport—that he will gladly make any reasonable sacrifices rather than miss the music of the pack.

I. P. A. CHAMPIONSHIP TOURNAMENT.

Final.

CALCUTTA vs. STAFF.—This was a very curious sort of a game. In the first half Calcutta seemed able to do just as they pleased with their opponents and ran up a score of 8 goals to 2; in the second part of the game, the two sides appeared to be well matched and a long series of up and down play resulted in no score to either side in the last four chukkers. Calcutta, who seem to have in a superlative degree, the faculty of getting going at top speed the second the ball is thrown in for the first time, quite took the Staff off their legs in the first period, and playing with an irresistible dash and brilliancy scored 4 goals in the opening chukker. Then in the second and third, though Calcutta continued to have the best of things the Staff were able to score twice, thanks to pieces of brilliant individual play on the part of Pretam Singh and Victor Brooke. Again in the fourth chukker, Calcutta had matters entirely their own way and piled up another 3 goals, and half time came with the score, 8 to 2. So far the great weakness of the Staff lay in the poverty of their combination, but they seem to have spent the interval in discussing matters, as after that they worked together much more effectively, and the rest of the game was very evenly contested. The pace slowed off in this second half and probably that also had something to do with the ability of the Staff to hold their own. Ismay, as usual, played the most dashing game for the victors, but Graham worked with him in perfection of combination, and Bassett and Johnston were very sound in defence. Pretam Singh and Victor Brooke did best service for the defeated side. After the match, Lady Minto handed the cup to the victorious team, and rounds of cheering for Her Excellency, the winners, and the runners-up brought the 1908 Tournament to a conclusion.

THE PUNJAB TOURNAMENT.

No less than eleven teams entered for the Punjab tournament this year and some good games were witnessed. The first round opened on the 23rd ultimo when two games were played. In the first of these the 14th Lancers, showing superior combination, beat the 32nd Lancers by 7 goals to 3. A fast and well contested game between the 12th Lancers "C" team and King's Dragoon Guards ended in a win for the K. D G. by 6 goals to 2. "B" team of the 12th Lancers were to have met the 10th Hussars the same day, but accidents in the Lancers' team necessitated their retiring from the tournament. The second round was fixed for the 24th, but rain caused a postponement, the four games being played off on Christmas Day. The first was between the 12th Lancers "A" team and the 11th K. E. O. Lancers and it was unfortunate that the ground was in such a slippery condition. Play nevertheless, was of a high standard, the 12th scoring 5 goals and keeping their charge intact. The match between the 10th Lancers (Hodson's Horse) and the Black Watch ended in an easy win for the Lancers' who outplayed their opponents. In the afternoon the 14th Lancers beat the King's Dragoon Guards after an exceptionably well contested game. Play was fast and up and down throughout, the Lancers scoring three goals and the Dragoon Guards two. The game between the 10th Hussars and the Q. O. Corps of Guides was looked forward to with interest and a keen struggle was witnessed. The Guides led by a goal at half time, but the Hussars equalised and the subsequent play was fast and exciting. The Hussars managed to score again and thus won by 3 goals to 2.

SEMI FINALS.

10TH HUSSARS vs. 14TH JAT LANCERS.—Played on the 28th ultimo, the 10th winning as was anticipated.

First Chukker.—The 14th pressed at the start, but their shot at goal went wide. The Hussars got possession and scored, and attacking for the rest of the chukker put on two more goals.

Second Chukker.—The 14th showed improved form and registereda goal from a penalty for a foul against the Hussars.

Third Chukker.—The 14th played brilliantly; they scored and a good run by Sutherland followed, the shot just going wide. They were not long in equalising but the 10th got away again towards the end of the period and scored. Score: 10th Hussars 4 goals, 14th Lancers 3 goals.

Fourth Chukker.—The 10th scored from a penalty against the 14th and shortly after registered another goal. A penalty against the 10th enabled the Lancers to score.

Fifth Chukker.—Each team scored a goal, and play ruled very fast throughout.

Sixth Chukker.—Level play till the 10th rushed away and scored; then the 14th attacked, but nothing resulted and the Hussars scoring once more won a good game by 9 goals to 5. Teams:—

10TH HUSSARS.		14TH LANCERS.
Capt. E. B. Meade	1	Mr. P. D. C. Eliot	1
Mr. E. A. Fielden	2	Mr. R. O. Sutherland	2
Col. J. Vaughan	3	Capt. E. A. Hewlett	3
Mr. E. W. E. Palmes	(back)	Jem. Mansa Ram	(back)

12TH LANCERS "A" TEAM vs. 10TH LANCERS (HODSON'S HORSE).—A hard fought game, the 10th caused general surprise by the excellence of their play and were only beaten by the narrow margin of one point.

Firt Chukker.—The 10th did most of the attacking, but there was no score.

Second Chukker.—Even play till the 10th got on and hit a goal which they followed up later with a second.

Third Chukker.—The 10th scored from a penalty hit; then their territory was invaded and they hit behind, the 12th registering their first goal from the penalty. The 10th were attacking when the chukker closed.

Fourth Chukker.—The 10th were forced to defend, and the 12th scoring twice brought the scores level.

Fifth Chukker.—The 12th got away and scored; up and down play followed and then the 10th rushing down equalised.

Sixth Chukker.—A most exciting period, both teams doing their utmost to get the lead. The 10th attacked and narrowly missed scoring. But the Lancers were more successful and getting possession they ran down and hit a goal, the final score reading: 12th Lancers 5 goals, 10 Lancers 4 goals. Teams:—

12TH LANCERS.		10TH LANCERS.
Mr. C. E. Bryant	1	Mr. G. D. Beresford	1
Mr. E. H. Leatham	2	Mr. P. R. Chambers	2
Maj. F. Wormald	3	Mr. W. M. A. Foster	3
Mr. R. B. Wood	(back)	Mr. K. O. Goldie	(back)

FINAL.

12TH LANCERS "A" TEAM vs. 10TH HUSSARS.—A large crowd of spectators lined the field on the 30th ultimo, when these teams met in the final. The Lieutenant-Governor and Lady Dane were among those present, Lady Dane handing the Cup to the winners at the conclusion of a splendid game. The ground was in excellent condition and an exciting struggle ended in a win for the 10th by 4 goals to 3. This is their third successive victory in the tournament.

First Chukker.—The Hussars did all the attacking, Vaughan opened the scoring and Fielden put on a second goal.

Second and third Chukker.—Good play by both teams. No score.

Fourth Chukker.—Wood got away and nearly scored. The Hussars hit behind and from the penalty the Lancers scored. The 10th then attacked and put through in a mêlée in front of the Lancers' flags. On resuming the 12th hit another goal.

Fifth Chukker.—Wood got possession and equalised after a brilliant run. The 12th pressed but Palmes met the ball and transferred to Fielden, who put the Hussars ahead.

Sixth Chukker.—Play was up and down, the Lancers made great efforts to get on terms again put without success and they retired beaten by 4 goals so 3. Teams as before.

LONGBOAT BEATS DORANDO.

The triumph of Dorando Pietri over John J. Hayes, at Madison-square Garden, New York, on 25th November may truly be said to have placed the Italian athlete on the topmost rung of the ladder, but he has not been allowed to remain there long. At the same venue on Tuesday the 15th ultimo. Tom Longboat, the Canadian Indian of whom we have lately heard so much, beat Dorando over the Marathon distance, 26 miles 385 yards.

The interest in the match was fully equal to that evinced in connection with the Hayes-Dorando contest. The New Yorkers, almost to a man, fancied Dorando. He had beaten their best whereas Longboat was said to have made no show against him in the Olympic Marathon, although at 17 miles the pair were together. On the other hand, the Canadian contingent, present in full force, refused to believe that there could be a better Marathon runner in the world than the Indian. Had he not beaten the whole of the American runners with ease in the Boston Marathon when last he ran? The Canadians believed that Longboat had the pull over both Dorando and Hayes, for speed, and would run away from them at the finish of any race in which he was on terms near home.

The crowd at the Garden was larger than at the last match, and many thousands were turned away. When the men got on the track they appeared to be in the pink of condition. The race was of a different character from the Hayes match. Dorando made the pace, it is true, but Longboat was continually forcing him along. The pace was consequently a deal faster, although the path was not in such fine condition, and got very loose as the race progressed. Five miles were covered nearly a minute ahead of the November race time, then the pace dropped, and the gain over the succeeding five miles was only 12secs. A little after the half-distance, Longboat went away with one of his bursts, and for nearly a mile Dorando plugged along in the rear, only getting on terms in time to lead at 15 miles—1min. 41secs. ahead of the previous match time. This spurt evidently took the steam out of Dorando, who was now allowed to set the pace, which for the next five miles was slower than the November race. At 20 miles, Longboat spurted again for several laps and though Dorando plugged along and set the Indian back, he was clearly feeling the effects of the faster pace in the earlier stages, and the miles with Dorando leading got slower and slower. Several times Longboat spurted for a lap or so, and then let the Italian up to set the pace again, but while the Indian looked fit and able to get away at any time, his opponent was evidently groggy. The fifth five miles occupied 33mins. 55secs., as against 32mins. 34secs. last month, and with a mile to go, off went Longboat with another spurt. Dorando tried to hang on, but was soon in "queer street," and after an unavailing effort to keep on terms with the Indian, he was seen to collapse on the track. It is said that his foot caught the inner edge of the track, but let that be as it may, he was clearly exhausted, and falling heavily, wrenched his ankle. Meanwhile, Longboat raced around in splendid style, seemingly as fresh as when he started, and cantered home in 2hr. 45mins. 5 2/5secs., just 1/5sec. slower than Hayes, the second man, took in the last match, but 45secs. slower than Dorando's time on that occasion.

But, to use the old saying, it is the pace that tells. The faster men go in the earlier stages of one of these contests, the slower are they likely to go in the later part of the race. Thanks to Longboat's forcing tactics, Dorando had to run a minute faster in the first five miles than against Hayes; then when the Italian crack began to slacken down at half distance, Longboat gave him a rousing mile which brought the 15 miles time nearly 1½mins. ahead of the previous time. Obviously, had this not affected Dorando, he would have maintained the gain set up on the former events, but this he signally failed to do. Longboat gave him no rest, and, instead of waiting for the last lap or so, set out to beat his man a mile from home. No tired runner could stand against such tactics, and it seems that, plucky little fellow as Dorando is, his legs would not carry him any further.

The principal times, compared with those of the last race, are as follows:—

	15th December. H. M. S.	25th November. H. M. S.
5 miles	0 28 27 4-5	0 29 24 1-5

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. BHARATPUR STATE XI.—Played on the 2nd and 3rd instant. Bharatpur batted first and at the close of play on Saturday had lost 7 wickets for 186 runs. Mugni, Ali Hyder, Burkett and Angelo making useful scores. Usiff batted well and was not out, 49. The next day he carried his score to 83 before he was bowled by Beachcroft and with a useful 39 by Mohsin the innings closed for 262. Calcutta were dismissed for 143, Burkett taking 7 wickets for 30 runs. In their second innings the visitors made 92 for 4 wickets when stumps were drawn. Bharatpur thus won on the first innings by 119 runs. Score:—

BALLYGUNGE C. C. vs. BOMBAY.—It was unfortunate that the visiting team were not quite at full strength for their fixture with Ballygunge on 31st December and 1st January. Cooper, Stow, Townend, Farquharson and Powell, all having had to return to Bombay before the match, and Miller being still on the injured list; excellent substitutes, however, were forthcoming in the persons of Wright, Cooke, Kitson and Arbuthnot of H. M. S. Hyacinth, and P. R. Cadell of the Customs.

Winning the toss, Bombay decided to take first knock, but the start was disastrous in the extreme, Tillard being bowled by White's first ball, and Cooke, who only the previous week had taken 71 against the home team, following him when only 6 runs had been scored. Kitson and Marsden improved matters somewhat, the two taking the total to 47 before the former was smartly stumped by Frost; the latter did not long survive him, leaving 9 runs later. His share of the runs was a very steady 32, no less than 22 of which were singles. Phillips, with an invaluable 40, was, however, the highest scorer, and after his departure at 115, the innings soon came to a close, the last wicket falling at 131, a much smaller total than had been looked for. F. Gould with 5 for 44, had the best analysis, White's solitary wicket costing 34 runs; he, however, bowled with most extraordinarily bad luck, the ball beating the batsmen and missing the wicket by a fraction of an inch over and over again.

The start of the Ballygunge innings rather resembled that of Bombay, inasmuch as the first ball sent down claimed a victim, Yeoman being clean bowled by Tillard's opening delivery. D. S. Shallow, the next in, did nothing, being beautifully caught in the slips when he had made 4, and Studd, who followed him, returning an easy one to the bowler when the total was 23. At this point, A. W. Shallow joined White, and between them, they put a better complexion on affairs, the fourth wicket realising 41 runs, and the fifth (A. Gould and White) a further 52. Useful contributions by Horncastle (18), Frost (27), Quin (22) and Taylor brought the total up to 233 before the last wicket fell. White's 78 was a really good knock, and although he was badly missed once, it was the only time he was at fault; he had received a very nasty blow on the fingers early in the proceedings, and must have been in considerable pain throughout the whole of his innings.

Of the six bowlers tried, Arbuthnot with 5 for 50, had much the best analysis, Tillard's 3 costing 70, and Stileman's 2, 51.

In a minority of 192, Bombay went in on the morning of the second day, and fared very little better than in their first innings, being all out in about a couple of hours for 147. Another disastrous start was made, Reid being neatly taken at short leg by McIntyre, who was fielding substitute, before he had scored. Tillard and Kitson took the total to 40 for 2, and Wright and Marsden put on 32 for the fifth wicket, but the rest (if we except Stileman and Cadell, who added 32 for the last wicket by some fairly lively hitting) did nothing much, and Ballygunge were left with only 46 to get to win, a task they accomplished for the loss of Studd's wickets.

The fielding on both sides was good, the catch with which A. W. Shallow dismissed Phillips in the long field in the second innings being brilliant in the extreme; he took the ball when going at full speed, right on the boundary, and brought off the best catch seen on the Ballygunge ground this season. Scores :—

BALLYGUNGE C.C. vs. NATTORE'S XI.—After their 9 wickets victory over Bombay, it was hardly expected that Ballygunge would go down so completely as they did on Saturday and Sunday last, but the fact remains, and they lost, for the second time this season, the adverse margin on the first innings being 128 runs. It is true that the home team were without the services of White, Studd, A. W. Shallow and Mytton, but they had out quite a fairly representative eleven, and the miserable show they put up on Saturday afternoon, is all the more inexplicable.

Ballygunge won the toss and had first use of an excellen wicket, but in the course of a little over an hour were a dismissed for the miserable total of 52, there being only two double figures in the score, and one of these was caught at the wicket before he had scored, and was given not out! The 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th wickets all fell at 33, and the 9th at 36, it being reserved for Frost and Coulthard to make the only semblance of a stand by putting on 16 for the last wicket. The innings needs no description beyond that it was a painful procession of men, beaten, bowled and caught before they went in; Baloo and Shivram certainly bowled well, but there was absolutely nothing in them to account for the whole side getting out to 52! The former got 7 for 25 and the latter 3 for 27.

When the visitors went in, they were aided with wonderful luck, Razak, who eventually made 49 being missed at the wicket off his first ball, and Mehta, who was not dismissed until he had got 44, being very badly missed indeed at square leg when he had made about a dozen; profiting by these escapes, the pair put on 77 for the second wicket, the score reading 97—2—44, when Mehta left, being bowled all ends up by Coulthard, who had just gone on.

Razak was not disposed of until the total was 159, of which his share was 49—a painfully slow and tiring exhibition of stonewalling against some very ordinary bowling; of the rest, no one but Shivram did anything, the innings closing for 180. Stafford with 4 for 21 and Coulthard with 2 for 18, had the best analysis. On going in again, Ballygunge did what they ought to have done in the first innings, the score when stumps were drawn being 222 for seven wickets, Stafford's contribution being a stylish 50, D. S. Shallow's a more than usually careful 47, and Frost's a characteristic 40. Had it been possible to play the match out, Ballygunge might quite possibly have pulled the game out of the fire, as when time was called on the second day, they were 96 on with three wickets in hand, and two batsmen in who were just getting set and scoring freely. CRICKET AT LAHORE.

PUNJAB vs. NORTH WEST FRONTIER PROVINCE.—Played on the 25th and 26th ultimo, the match being decided on the first innings. The Frontier Province batted first and made 165, Evans, Craig and Brownfield being the chief contributors The Punjab team put up 80 for the loss of two wickets on the first day, but on Saturday took the score to 356 before they were all out. Collins made 102. Bulloch, Manning, Tenant, Cumberlege and Henderson all made useful contributions and 48 extras helped the score. The Frontier Province went in again and when stumps were drawn had lost 6 wickets for 206. Had the Punjab fielding been better they might have had an innings victory, but many catches were dropped, and they won on the 1st innings by 191 runs. Score :—

CRICKET AT PATIALA.

PATIALA vs. ELPHINSTONE COLLEGE, BOMBAY.—On 20th December the team of the Elphinstone College, Bombay, arrived at Patiala, and played a cricket match on the two succeeding days. This team, which is touring in Northern India, comprises one Hindu and ten Parsees, of whom two are members of the Parsee representative eleven. On Sunday there appeared to be every chance of heavy rain, but, fortunately from the cricket point of view, the weather next day was perfect, and the match was played under ideal conditions. The wicket, thanks to the trouble expended upon it by our zealous president, the Kour Saheb, was beautifully fast and true, and though it showed slight signs of wear during the last innings of the Parsees, it is doubtful whether it could have been surpassed or even equalled anywhere in the Punjab. H. H. the Maharaja satisfactorily performed his first duty as captain in winning the toss, and naturally elected to bat. Tarrant and Gokal Chand, who opened the innings, played very carefully, but after a dozen overs, the latter succumbed to Driver, who also caught Tara Chand in the slips off Parakh. The Maharaja now joined Tarrant, and some first-rate batting ensued; the Parsees were fielding with their usual brilliancy, and the bowling was worthy of all respect, but runs came steadily, and the hundred was reached comparatively soon. At last Antia succeeded in dismissing Tarrant, who had played admirably for 64. Major Thomson helped to carry the total to 167, at which point the Bombay captain got through the Maharaja's defence; the Maharaja's innings included 8 boundaries, and was a brilliant exhibition of vigorous but stylish cricket. Major Thompson continued to play well, till baffled by a yorker, just before lunch. On resuming, the Patiala tail wagged feebly, and the innings closed for 183. The College started badly, losing 3 wickets for 18, but Mulla and Gimi put a very different complexion on the game by playing out time, and remaining together next day till 137 was on the board. Both were somewhat unlucky in playing on, when they seemed to be well set. Mulla played in very determined fashion, and had powerful strokes all round the wicket. Gimi made several beautiful hits on the off side, and batted very prettily. The rest of the side could make but little of Tarrant's bowling, and the last wicket fell with the Bombay total one run short of Patiala's.

The home team's second venture opened disastrously, and 4 wickets fell in an hour for 34 runs. Once more, however, the Maharaja and Tarrant made a valuable stand and added 59 by dint of very sound cricket. The Maharaja was the first to leave; he is to be congratulated on having in each innings given such an excellent account of himself. He dealt carefully with some very accurate bowling, and punished all loose balls with severity. Major Thompson and Tarrant added 29 to the score when the latter was unfortunately run out. His play on the leg-side was particularly good, and he played the bowling with great confidence. The last 5 wickets again fell with a run and the total reached 139, of which Major Thompson made a useful 21 not out.

The College team were left with 90 minutes in which to make 141 runs, and at the start they made a sporting bid for victory. When, however, Mulla had been bowled round his legs by Tarrant, with the score at 29 for 3 wickets, a defensive policy was rendered necessary, and a keen struggle ensued Watcha and Driver played most pluckily and kept up their wickets till stumps were drawn the score being 52 for 6. Abdul Ghani bowled very steadily, 12 of his 17 overs being maidens. A capital game from start to finish, full of variety and reversals of fortune: at one time it appeared that the visitors might snatch a victory: at the end they had to struggle for a draw: throughout they played a fine sporting game, and their fielding and throwing-in were admirable. They had the satisfaction of securing victories over the home representatives at both tennis and billiards: we wish them all success in the remainder of their tour.

THE TOLLYGUNGE HORSE SHOW.

Friday, 1st January 1909.

THE fourteenth annual Horse Show at Tollygunge on New Year's Day, attracted a huge attendance to the Club grounds. Entries were good and the class of a high standard throughout. In the Harness Classes, Major H. B. Peacock's pair Electric, and Rainbow carried all before them, winning three first, two seconds and a third prize. It is with regret, we report that Electric met with an accident on being led back from the show and had to be destroyed. Mr. Galstaun's Shirley Defiance, and Mr. Rodocanachi's Lady Gray won two prizes each. Cornoob, Capt. F. W. Barrett's arab polo pony scored for the third year in succession in the class for best gb or arab pony that had been played regularly up to time of entry. Col. E. C. Apostilides' Nicotine added another to previous victories in the Charger Class. The jumping competitions were good. Musette and Lady Lovelace winning in their respective classes. The show was brought to a successful conclusion with a parade of winners and distribution of prizes by Her Excellency Lady Minto.—Appended is a list of the awards :—

THE following were the prize-winners :—

The Naturalist.

GOSSAMER.

FINE as gossamer! Town-bred folks never see it, and do not believe in its existence; they think it is a poetical figment, like "honey-dew." That, too, is nevertheless a real thing—a honey-like juice poured out by the little plant-lice or aphides. Gossamer is a very real and a most beautiful thing. You may see it on the hill sides in fine October weather, when the sun is bright but low enough to illuminate the delicate threads and reveal the "veil of silk and silver thin" spread over Nature's loveliness, writes Professor Ray Lankester. The innumerable threads glisten, and are so fine that they shine with iridescent colours, as do the equally delicate soap-bubbles fabricated by men and boys, and for the same cause. When the eye gets accustomed to them and traces them—gently rippling and glimmering over acres and acres of grass-land, one feels disconcerted, almost awe-struck, by the revelation of this vast net-work of threads. Sometimes the gentle currents of air break them loose from the herbage, and they float at a higher level and envelope the puzzled intruder in an almost invisible entanglement of fairy lines. Sometimes they become felted together in flakes and float or rest as incredibly delicate tissue, woven by unseen mysterious agency.

A week ago the slopes of the new golf course at Wimbledon were covered with gossamer, and my friends were asking what was its origin, some boldly asserting that it was impossible that such a vast acreage of threads could be produced, as others maintained, by tiny unseen spiders! Yet that is the true history of gossamer. Hundreds of thousands of minute spiders, young, and of a small kind, are present in grass fields in autumn, and throw out these marvellously fine threads from their little bodies. Those who at first sight doubt this origin of gossamer are only in accordance with their forefathers. The French peasants call it "fil de la Vierge"; old English writers held it to be "dew evaporated." A great discoverer and leader of science in his time, Robert Hooke, who was elected with Nehemiah Grew, as secretary of the Royal Society in 1677, and published a wonderful illustrated book called "Micrographia," wrote of gossamer. He was so far from recognising its true nature that he says: "It is not unlikely that those great white clouds which appear all the summer time may be of the same substance." Yet it is now a simple and certain fact of observation that the countless threads in question are the work of minute spiders.

The pretty name "gossamer" has puzzled the etymologists and led to some far-fetched suggestions. That favoured by the authority of the great Oxford dictionary of the English language is that it is a corruption of "Go-summer," because it appears in autumn and is associated with St. Martin's summer. This is like saying that the word "cray-fish" refers to fish that live in a "cray" or brook instead of deriving it from the French word "ecrevisse." The Germans call gossamer "Sommerweben." But the Latin word for cotton is "gossypium," and there is an Italian word, "gossampino," which occurs in an English form "gossampine," in the sixteenth century, and means a kind of silk or cotton obtained from the fluffy hairs of a plant called bombax. We also find "gossamer" spelt "gossamire" in English of that date, and it seems to me most likely that an Italian "gossamira," signifying "fairy-cotton" or "magic goose-down," is the origin of our word.

There are 500 different kinds of spider carefully described as occurring in the British Islands, and about 2,000 others from remoter regions. Precisely which of them forms the "gossamer" of our meadows it is difficult to say, as all have the habit of secreting a viscid fluid from one or two pairs of projecting spinning knobs or stalks, which are seen at the hinder end of the body. The viscid fluid is poured out by a great number of minute tubes, and hardens at once into a thread, which is wonderfully fine, yet strong. Different kinds of spiders make use of these threads for different purposes, hence their name "spinners." Some make burrows in the ground and line them with a felt of these threads, others enclose their eggs in a case formed by winding them round the eggs, others form "snares" of the most marvellous mechanical ingenuity with these threads, by which insects are entangled and are then paralysed by the poisonous stab of the spider's claws, and have their juices sucked out of them at the spider's leisure. The snares of spiders are in some species merely irregular webs fastened and suspended by threads, in other cases they are gracefully-modelled funnels or cups, whilst a third kind, the disc-like webs made up of radiating and circularly-disposed threads fixed in a geometrical pattern, excel—in the mechanical precision of their workmanship and the masterly treatment of engineering difficulties—the constructions of any other kind of animal. It is amongst this kind of spiders that the formation by the spinning knobs of threads or lines and their use in various ways is most general and frequent. The smaller spiders allow the viscid thread to exude, drawing it out from their bodies by their own movement away from the object to which it at first adhered. When it breaks loose from that support it is carried upwards by air-currents and drawn out from the spinner's body to many yards' length. It then becomes a "flying-line," and the spider may sail away on it or run up it and disappear. The celebrated story of the Indian juggler's performance—traditional and even solemnly attested by witnesses, but failing to pass the test of photography—must have been suggested by this common, yet wonderful, proceeding of small spiders. The juggler, standing in an open place, surrounded by a ring of spectators, uncoils a rope, 50ft long, from his waist, and holding one end, throws the other up into the air. The rope, without any support, remains stretched and upright. A small boy now enters the ring and climbs up the rope, draws it up after him, and disappears with it in the upper air! That is an illusion, but it is precisely what thousands of small spiders are continually doing. A big spider—the well-grown female of the common garden spider, for instance, cannot do this—her thread is not strong enough, and her weight is too great. But the male of the same species, who is much smaller, fortunately for him, can safely run on a hanging line—and thus can rapidly escape from the side of his mistress, who, after receiving his caresses, has an unpleasant habit of seizing, killing, and sucking the blood of the adventurous male, should he linger longer in her company, and fail in the agility and rapidity of his exit.

The threads of the garden spider (the Porte-croix of the French, white-cross spider, Epeira diadema) are fixed by astronomers in their telescopes for the purpose of giving fine lines in the field of view, by which the relative positions of stars may be accurately measured. For a century astronomers desired to make use of such lines of the greatest possible fineness, and procured at first silver wire drawn out to the extreme limit of tenuity attainable with that metal. They also tried hairs (1-500th of an inch thick) and threads of the silk-worm's cocoon, which are split into two component threads each only 1-2,000th of an inch thick. But in 1820 an English instrument maker named Troughton introduced the spider's line. This can be readily obtained three or four times smaller in breadth than the silk-worm's thread, and has also advantages in its strength and freedom from twist. In order to obtain the thread, the spider is carefully fixed on a miniature "rack," and the thread, which at the moment of issue from the body is a viscid liquid, is made to adhere to a winder, by turning which the desired length of firm but elastic thread can be procured. It has been proposed to use spider's silk in manufactures as a substitute for silk-worms' silk, and pioneers have woven gloves, stockings, and other articles from it. It appears that there are species of spider in other parts of the world whose thread is coarser and more suitable for this purpose than that of any of our British spiders. But it is estimated that the expense in feeding the spiders—which require insect food—would make the thread obtained from them far too costly to compete with silk-worm silk.

A number of different kinds of the lower animals besides spiders have the power of producing threads. The caterpillars of some moths are especially noted for this, since their thread is familiar to us all as "silk." It is secreted as a viscid fluid by a pair of tubes opening at the mouth, and hardens on escape. Even some marine creatures—the mussels—produce threads, in this case from a gland or sac in the muscular foot, by means of which they fix themselves to rocks. A very big mussel—the Pinna—called "Capo lungo" by the Mediterranean fishermen and "Capy longy" at Plymouth, where they are also found, produces a sufficient quantity of fine horny threads to be used in weaving, and gloves have been made at Genoa from this shell-fish silk.

The threads produced by the hardening of the tenacious fluid exuded by these various animals were probably simply protective in origin. The curious caterpillar-like creature Peripatus spits out a viscid fluid when it is disturbed, which hardens into threads, and hopelessly entangles any small enemy which may venture to attack it. Threads of a poisonous nature are thrown out by jelly-fishes, polynes, and sea anemones, and serve them both as defence and as means of paralysing and capturing prey. A later stage in the use of such threads is their "felting" to form a case or tube (as in the sea anemone called Cerianthus), and so their application has gradually developed to the formation of egg-cases, snares, and the wonderful web of the geometric spider, and the countless "flying-lines" of smaller spiders, which make up the mysterious thing we call "gossamer."

As to the limits of the tenuity of the threads of gossamer there are no direct observations. Probably they are often as fine as the 1-15,000th or 1-20,000th of an inch in diameter. The condensation of a very minute quantity of moisture on gossamer threads and spiders' webs no doubt helps to make them more readily visible to us in October weather than they are in full summer, when such moisture would not condense except in early morning or at sunset. It seems strange that man should have been unable to produce a thread so fine as that of the spider, but this reproach has now been removed. Spun glass is easily obtained 1-1,000th of an inch in diameter, but Mr. C. V. Boys, F.R.S., has, by fusing quartz (rock-crystal) by the oxy-hydrogen flame, and drawing it out by means of a small arrow (a straw), discharged from a bow—the near end of the arrow being adherent to a fused droplet of quartz which is held fast—produced threads of great strength and of extraordinary tenuity. The fineness can be regulated by the rapidity with which the drawing is effected. They are prepared (for use in suspending swinging bars in delicate measurements of force) of a thickness of 1-10,000th of an inch. Some have been made so fine as to be not only invisible to the naked eye, but to be only vaguely indicated by the highest powers of the microscope. They are estimated to be only one-millionth of an inch in diameter. It is difficult to form any mental picture or conception of these fine quartz threads spun by Mr. Boys. But the following facts helps us to realise how delicate they are. A grain of sand just visible to the eye—that is to say, one-hundredth of an inch long, the same in breadth, and the same in height—would make 1,000 miles of such thread.

"I am a swift runner," said the man who was telling a snake story, "and as I fled down the mountain I out-distanced the huge python that was so relentlessly pursuing me. But these creatures are cunning. To twist itself into the shape of a cartwheel was the work of a moment, and now the python had gained. Faster and faster it rolled down the steep incline. Then, bang! The serpent had struck a sharp jagged rock, and punctured. I was saved."

There was an ominous silence in the house as the great physician entered and made his way to his patient's room. Hastily he made his examination, his looks showing the deep sympathy he felt. "Madam," he said, "I am indeed sorry to see you in such a condition as this. What has happened? Have you been run over by a motor-car." With infinite difficulty and obvious pain the patient roused herself: and the white lips slowly moved. "No, doctor," she moaned, but I fainted in church, and was brought to by some friends who have been studying first aid to the injured." Then the great physician took out his note-book and entered her in the "very serious" column.

THE LONDON COMEDY COMPANY.

That delightful comedy, "The Bachelor's Honeymoon" was staged by the Ward Company this week, and we have not yet heard of a claimant for the prize offered by the management to anyone, who can conclusively prove after seeing this extremely lively play that he or she did not say, "I never laughed so much in my life." The piece is clever, lively and mirth provoking and will rank with the best in the company's repertoire. Benjamin Bachelor, an elderly widower with two daughters, is a giddy old boy. His first marriage did not turn out a success and his sister Minerva was appointed by their late father to be Ben's moral adviser, with the control of the finances and power to withold his inheritance should his second venture in the matrimonial field not meet with her approval. While supposed to be at Scarborough recruiting his health Bachelor slips over to Paris, where he falls in love with and marries an actress named Juno Joyce. The pair return to town for their honeymoon. There follows the unexpected arrival of Minerva and his daughters and his efforts at explaining the presence of Juno in the house lead to complications, which last through three acts. Juno is by turns, housekeeper, governess, the wife of a friend the fiancee of Doctor Schwartz, till finally the secret is out, the marriage condoned by Minerva and all ends happily. Mr. Hugh Ward is always at his best in old men's part and his impersonation of gay old Benjamin added another to his many triumphs while he has been with us. Miss Palotta was well suited as Juno Joyce and acted with all her usual charm and grace. Miss Ghiloni as the "dragon" Minerva was capital, while Miss Musgrove once more showed her versatile talents. As Marianne, the maidservant imbued with detective stories and a delight in mysteries, she gave us a remarkably clever character study. Her make up, was excellent and her songs, "I could not come home in the dark," and "My Boy Bill," were enthusiatically received. Miss Alice Elmhurst appeared for the first time, and she and Miss Ruby Baxter took small parts Schwartz, the German doctor and Stephen Houstan, the busy man were well played by Messrs. Eldred and Wykeham, and the other parts were ably filled by Messrs. Greig and Wallace. The sounding board which is being erected is not yet complete, but has already made a big improvement in the acoustic properties of the theatre. To-night and to-morrow "The Social Highwayman" will be staged and on Saturday, we are promised a dramatic treat, when "The Test Supreme" and "Young Mrs. Winthrop" will be repeated.

(a) A new move; the usual continuations are Q–K 2 or Kt–K 2.

(b) The question arises why Dr. Tarrasch did not play to win a pawn here by 10. B×K Kt, Q×B; 11. Kt×Kt, P×Kt; 12. B×P, but probably he did not like the look of the following variation—12....., Q R–Q Kt sq.; 13. Q–Q 3, B–R 4!; 14. Kt–Q sq. (there is no other move to hold the pawn), R–Kt 5! threatening amongst other things B–B 5, and white's position would not at all be desirable.

(c) Of course it was tempting to win two pieces for the rook, but the resulting position after the 22nd move, is not comfortable, as the white king is too exposed and the two black rooks threaten at once to take possession of the seventh row. But I think white would have kept his advantage by playing simply 12. K–R sq.

(d) Perhaps K–Kt 2 was better.

(e) Of course a blunder; but black appears to have the best of it now, as he threatens to advance his K R P, and then double his rooks on the seventh row.

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

Original and Otherwise.

London, Friday, 18th December 1908.

An interesting addition to the possibilities of the motor world has been made by the introduction of the Humber motor-cab—a type of vehicle which has recently become popular both in town and country. Although nominally of 12-h.p., the Humber cab in reality gives considerably more power. The four-cylinder engine with which it is fitted possesses advantages which cannot be obtained with a two-cylinder. Not only do the additional power and elasticity assert themselves wherever hills, however steep, have to be negotiated; but they also give much greater smoothness of running. Every detail in connection with the mechanical parts has been very carefully thought out for the special work the cab is called upon to perform, and especially noticeable are the accessibility of these parts, and the low cost of running—two features which are of the most vital importance in this class of vehicle.

The body-work reaches the acme of comfort, every part being beautifully finished, and in every way most luxurious. The type of cab which Humber (Limited) manufacture is eminently suitable for town work, both for private and professional owners, while it is evident that, as the now popular taxi-cab, it possesses claims, which are of the strongest. In addition to its immense and growing popularity on the streets of London and other large towns, the taxi-cab is designed to take a prominent part in long journeys, holiday excursions, etc., a part in which the Humber cab undoubtedly scores heavily. Some six months ago, Mr. E. Lockwood, of the Eccentric Club, who was a member of a party who engaged a Humber taxi-cab for a journey from London to Plymouth and back foreshadowed the coming of this state of things in the following letter: "The journey from London to Plymouth and back was successfully accomplished by three gentlemen, members of the Eccentric Club, who, having business in Plymouth, agreed to cab it by way of a change. The journey both ways, of 414 miles, was performed in 21hr. 10mins. including stops for meals and refreshment. The cab (No. 19,672), a 10-12 h.p. Humber, working on the London streets, did the journey magnificently, carrying five persons and their luggage. Some of the hills met with were exceptionally severe, especially between Chard and Honiton and Exeter and Ashburton, but the taxi negotiated them as easily as if running up Regent Street. The machine registered £16-0-8 on the journey." This is indeed excellent testimony to the capabilities of the Humber cab.

It is not at all certain that a Grand Prix motor race will take place next year. The event has not altogether been abandoned, but there is such a strict proviso that it will be surprising if the preliminary condition to the race be fulfilled. On Wednesday last, the Sporting Committee of the Automobile Club of France sat and discussed the race in question, and it was resolved to let the matter be decided by the prospective competitors themselves, who, if they wished to hold the event in 1909 must muster between them, by the last day of the year, forty entries.

Had the manufacturers been given longer, it is probable that the required number of entries would have been received. Many of the firms will be a long way from having cleared up this year's business, and will surely not be in a position to get their plans laid for 1909. With no Grand Prix the voiturette race would be dropped, but one can hardly imagine France going through the year without a big road race of some sort; in fact, even now there is talk of an event being promoted outside the National Club. At the present time there are less than three weeks to go, and at the time of writing there are but three entries, these being for three cars of the same make, viz., Cottin-Desgouttes.

A Johannesberg telegram, published by a London paper this week, says—"Lieutenant Graetz, the German officer who is motoring across Africa from Dar-és-Salaam to Swakopmund, has arrived here in the best of health and condition. It had been supposed in certain quarters here that the journey might have a political significance, but Lieutenant Graetz, in a conversation with Reuter's correspondent to-day, stated that his sole idea was to demonstrate the possibility of motoring across Africa.

He left Dar-es-Salaam in August 1907, but was delayed a year through having to cut roads and make bridges, besides making stops to repair the car and to wait for petrol. He has covered 3,700 miles in eight months, including many miles of virgin veld. Crossing Lake Tanganyika with the car was a difficult business, owing to the smallness of the steamer. Lieutenant Graetz had to make a detour of 600 miles and cut a road through the bush in North Nyassaland owing to the impossibility of bridging the river. Fifteen days were occupied in cutting the road, and when it was completed the car traversed it in two days. Continuous delays were incurred through the shortage of petrol and the necessity of sending great distances for supplies.

The greatest friendliness and assistance was displayed by the natives in the uncivilised districts. In one instance, natives brought water and food twenty miles for Lieutenant Graetz, who was then in dire need, his own natives having vainly searched for water. But for the devotion of the East African boys who accompanied him, Lieutenant Graetz would have had a far worse experience. The Lieutenant tersely remarked that the raw natives did everything possible to help him, but directly he approached civilisation and mission stations the natives were "no good." They walked away when asked for help, and the closest watch had to be kept on the motorist's kit.

[How like India! With the first lamp post which indicates that one approaches the comparative civilisation of an Indian town, the motorist or cyclist encounters dishonesty and incivility, if not down right insolence—Ed.]

Lieutenant Graetz so far has employed five chauffeurs. He proceeds in a week's time through the Kalahari Desert. He proceeds in a week's time through the Kalahari Desert to Swakopmund, over 2,000 miles. A year ago, he sent ox-wagons through the Kalahari Desert, carrying supplies, which were buried every fifty miles.

The car presents a picturesquely worn appearance. It conveys 300 gallons of petrol—enough for the remainder of the journey—Lieutenant Graetz having found that his previous supplies evaporated before they were picked up.

Owners of motor-cars anxious to reduce their motoring expenses to the very minimum should beware of the portly chauffeur: remarks a London paper.

Pounds avoirdupois tell to a very appreciable extent upon the cost of upkeep of a car and its tyres, especially on the latter, and from data supplied by the Napier Motor-car Company, it was discovered that a 15st. chauffeur takes about 253 miles off the life of each tyre of a light runabout car of the type most popular with the motorist of more restricted means.

As the result of competitions carried on last year, Mr. S. F. Edge, of Napier car fame, has accumulated a mass of statistics concerning wear and tear on tyres.

The results of these trye tests organised by his company last year are all reduced to ton miles—that is, the number of miles that the tyres would have run had the weight of the cars been exactly one ton. The winning car had a record of 10,638 ton miles.

But most of these cars were of the heavy touring type, and for a light 8-h.p. runabout, weighing about 13cwt. the average life of a trye is computed at 7,000 miles. Working on this basis, the paper computes that a 10st. chauffeur would reduce that distance to only 6,426 miles, whilst a 15st. driver would reduce it to 6,173 miles.

Thus, a 15st. man makes the life of the trye some 250 miles less than his lighter colleague, and, since tyres for such a car cost each approximately £1 for 1,000 miles, it will readily be seen that on the four tyres of a car the heavy chauffeur costs his master £1 per set of tyres more than the light-weight.

Nowadays, when a would-be motorist is thinking of buying a car, his first question is, how much will it cost him each year to run it. In order to give their customers every inducement to purchase De Dion cars, with full knowledge of their cost of upkeep, Messrs. De Dion Bouton (Limited) have written to a large number of their clients, chiefly doctors, asking them what their De Dion cars have cost them in running expenses. These have been collected in an excellent little book, which should be studied by motorists generally, irrespective of the car they drive. Summarising these reports, the single-cylinder car averages 21½ miles to the gallon of petrol, mechanical replacements average a third of a penny per mile, tyres a halfpenny per mile, and lubricating oil, grease, and sundries under a fifth of a penny per mile. This means that the cost of unkeep, including licenses and insurance, and all running expenses, equals about £46 per annum for 5,000 miles. In most cases the gardener or boy cleans the car, but when a chauffeur's wages are added the cost is considerably less than what a horse vehicle would involve its owner in.

A correspondent writes to a London daily:—That somewhat remarkable case of the Eton boy and the dachshund which appeared in yours of the 4th instant is not without its importance to the general public. To think that a boy can obtain license to drive a motor on the highway and be repeatedly fined by the magistrates for breaches of the law must demonstrate clearly that the exercise of such a power in such hands places public saftey in an extremely precarious position. All who live in the country know that the life of everything on the highway is in the hands of the motorists, and when we read the daily list of deaths and injuries caused by negligent driving, the time has come when some radical change in the granting of licenses should be brought about. To that end, I would suggest that no one under the age of 21 should be allowed to drive a motor on the highway, and that the knowledge, fitness, and ability to drive efficiently must be tested by an authorised official before a license is granted. To-day the motorist contributes nothing towards the maintenance of the highway, and has practically taken possession of it. It is time that both the ratepayers and public should not be denied their rights and have their lives continually endangered by them."

Though one cannot agree with the statement of the correspondent that motorists do not pay anything for the upkeep of the roads, it is quite true that the present system of granting a license to drive a car to all and sundry who apply provided the applicant is over 16 years of age requires some amending. In France, the applicant for a driving license is asked to demonstrate that he can steer a car under traffic conditions. Here in England the payment of the fee is the only test. The chief objection to the driving test from the Inland Revenue point of view is that a certain amount of money would be required to pay the inspectors who conducted it. But even if it cost the whole of the first year's fee it would be a great benefit to the general public, as well as to the motorists themselves. While writing on the license question, the law requires amendment in the practice of renewing the old endorsements on existing licenses. It is approaching a scandal that a motorist, who has had his license endorsed four or five years back should have it repeated all his life on his permit to drive.

Chukker.

A city gent was having his first day with the birds on Loch Tayside, when his shooting was not remarkable for its accuracy. "Dear me!" exclaimed the sportsman, "but the birds seem exceptionally strong on the wing this year." "Not all of them, sir," came the remark. "You've shot at the same bird about a dozen times. He's following you about, sir," "Following me about? Nonsense! Why should a bird do that. "Well, sir, I don't know, unless he's hanging round you for safety."

As a specimen of what candidates for Parliamentary honours have occasionally to put up with from their "supporters," the following little incident is worthy recalling: Visiting a North Country colliery during the men's dinner hour, a certain candidate was advised by his agent to ask "Old Ben," a supporter who happened to work at the pit, to say a few words to his mates. After some persuasion, the old man agreed to address his fellow workmen on the candidate's behalf, and this is what he said: "Wheel, mates, I ain't a goin' ter tell ye as we've gotten a real, straight, fair, honest candidate. You knows as well as I does as theer ain't no sich thing as a honest politician breathin'. Howsumever, I've heard both candidates and I've picked out wot I think is the best of a sorry pair! Ye'd better vote for him chaps! This"—indicating the by no means comfortable candidate—"this is 'im!" That was all.

MR. RAPHAEL'S GIMCRACK SPEECH.

MR. W. RAPHAEL may not have been breaking much new ground when dealing with British turf topics at the recent gathering of the Gimcrack Club, but his speech, like his racing policy has always been was that of a man, who plays for the best, and he was voicing opinions to which a large number of the class of owner to which he belongs and a great majority of the British racing public heartily subscribe.

The chief points of Mr. Raphael's address may be briefly set out:—

(a) Starters should be empowered to start a field as they thought best—whether horses were standing still, or whether they were walking up to the gate, or even if one or two horses were behind the rest of the field.

(b) Trainers, who brought their charges to the post in a condition, which was as unfair to the other starters as it was to the racing public should be fined.

(c) Stewards and handicappers, huddled together as they were on the stands, saw little of the race. He would suggest the erection of turrets at intervals on each course, so as to enable stewards and handicappers to obtain a better view of the intermediate stages of the race.

(d) Paid Stewards . . . . Many gentlemen would gladly undertake this work, and would not mind giving up all pecuniary interest in the races which came under their supervision.

(e) The establishment of the pari-mutuel. It would be a source of great revenue, which might be devoted to the relief of the rates and taxes, or charity. . . . or a large percentage of the tax could most appropriately be applied to the breeding of a stud of horses useful for warfare.

These are by no means original ideas, although supported as they are from such a quarter they carry additional weight.

The difficulty of saddling the faults of an unruly or restive horse upon a trainer, however, is, we imagine, more than Mr. Raphael realises, although we are one with him in his opinion, as reading between the lines, that the schooling of some animals which come under the starter's orders has been neglected, or, at all events, is not complete. To inflict fines broadcast, however, would be to impose hardships in some cases, as the Jockey Club of Great Britain recognised when framing a rule some time ago, which was speedily dropped, and a happier solution was arrived at when giving the starter power to place unruly horses withersoever he willed or to ignore them.

Experience teaches, and particularly on a straight course, that the best view of a race is not obtainable from the stand, and Mr. Raphael's suggestion as to turrets, if carried out, would certainly give officials less occasion for that "huddling together" of which he speaks, and which has for long been a topic of discussion in English racing circles. The idea has been tabooed in certain high quarters on the ground that it would place a noble sport under espionage, as it were, but it might just as well be argued that if the sport will not bear looking at closely from any point or part of the course it is not worth carrying on. Any intelligent student of racing can make handicaps on what takes place between the distance and the winning posts. The keen, conscientious handicapper wants to see more than this, and should have every facility given him.

On some courses there are facilities available which are much better than are to be found in the club enclosure, but it cannot be said that handicappers take advantage of them.

Perhaps they do not know of them. Some professional backers, however, would never think of watching a race from anywhere else. So far as the big races are concerned, handicappers have had quite a triumph for a year, although some of their work has been disfigured by blots, and, in any case, Mr. Raphael's suggestion would be helpful to them, as well as to local stewards, and, through both parties, to owners generally.

As for paid stewards they appear almost as much a necessity as paid judges or paid clerks of the course. Many gentlemen find the duties of honorary stewardship irksome; others would not deny that their qualifications are faulty. The Jockey Club is quite satisfied with the present system, which is finding fewer friends amongst owners and the public every year. If you could have Jockey Club Stewards in authority at every meeting, well and good, but—!

Mr. Raphael's observations with regard to the pari-mutuel will be cordially echoed by a vast number on the old country, but as a ruling body hold to the anomalous position they have taken up with regard to betting we may not look for any move in this direction from them, although the racing peers who sat on the Lords' Committee did find words of hearty recommendation for the system.

The Jockey Club publishes the betting returns in its official "Calendar," and has the power to warn defaulters for bets off all courses under its jurisdiction, but otherwise it professes to hold no recognition of betting, although well aware that without the latter racing would speedily sicken and die. The trend of things politically, however, is that betting on English racecourses may not escape being taxed as a luxury for the benefit of the national exchequer, which is thirsting so for further sources of replenishment. It might be revolting to the consciences of the present Chancellor and his colleagues thus to legalise what a certain percentage of their supporters are so wishful to destroy, yet these are just as loud to declaim against intoxicants and cards and profess no horror at the idea of obtaining revenue from the sale of either. The necessities of some near budget—it may not be next year's—will probably mean putting racecourse betting on a level with other luxuries, and it would after all, only be a voluntary tax, although of the largeness of its yield, and the advantageous application thereof there could be no question. Nor can one think of any sound argument to be advanced against the introduction of the pari-mutuel being for the benefit of racing itself.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

Last Saturday at Tollygunge, the second day of the meeting, gave us a very disappointing day's racing. To begin with the Military Steeplechase was not a success. Only three animals went to the start and of these Tired Tim in spite of the most plucky persistence on the part of his rider, Mr. Blanford, could not be persuaded to take the penultimate jump and had to be pulled up without completing the course. The horse refused three or four times at each fence and it speaks volumes for Mr. Blanford's patience and perseverance that he got him so far. The other two starters were Idle and Jasper and the former going at a nice exercise pace the whole way round won absolutely as he pleased.

These two Military Chases have cost the Turf Club something over Rs. 3,000 in stakes (after deducting entrance fees and forfeits) and have produced fields of four and three respectively with the event "a certainty for one" in each case, so we presume the experiment of having such events is one that will not be repeated next season.

The Pony Handicap Steeplechase was the best chase of the day. The issue was supposed to lie between Spec and Solace, the latter having the public preference. Morrison on Spec wisely determined to kill his heavily weighted rival's chances by making it a fast race and he let this pony run along nicely in front with Lady Knight. In so far as the top weight was concerned Morrison proved his judgment absolutely correct and Solace found the pace too much for her, but the winner turned up in Little Dolly, who was not in the race the previous week and whose chances were quite overlooked by the public. Her bad jumping over this course last season were also remembered against her, but there was no sign of anything of the sort this time and she took everything in real good style. Spec was leading from Lady Knight, Perquisite and Little Dolly, all pretty well together as they came into the straight and there was a really fine race between Spec and Little Dolly at the end, the mare only just succeeding in scoring.

The Tollygunge Plate was marred by some unfortunate accidents which spoilt what otherwise would have been a very interesting race. Firstly Seclusion when going strong and looking to be well in it blundered at the open ditch the second time round and slid along on her nose for many yards. It was only clever jockeyship on the part of Clark Hoyt that caused her to recover; but, by the time she was on her legs again, too much ground had been lost for her to have any hope of winning the race. Then at the last jump Cairnsmore coming up with a fast run for the finish came down, bringing Greenstone, who also looked to have a chance, to grief with him and Mystic Circle, was able to struggle on a winner from Kipling. Every one was glad to see Mr. Holmes get a bit of luck again as he has certainly had none of the best of late.

The Suburban Plate was also a poor race. There were only four starters, of whom Spinnet was favourite, but he hit the mud wall the first time round and would never gallop at all afterwards and Kingpin won easily from Dangar. The Hunters' Handicap Chase gave promise of a very interesting contest, but this was disappointed by the mistakes made by Mr. Tanner on Moachin and Captain Gibbs on Trilby respectively. The former leading his field some fifteen lengths at the mud wall took the pony half of it and then the latter, who was lying second, made the same mistake at the water jump! Mr. Tanner apparently realised what he had done, as he went back on to the right course over the water jump but eased up his pace and let the whole field catch him eventually finishing last; but Captain Gibbs sailed on merrily apparently oblivious of any error and came in an easy first four lengths ahead of Lord Harry, who, of course, got the race.

The card finished with two divisions of the Kiosk Plate (6 furlongs). Captain Carrington was favourite for the first, but could get no better than fourth and his stable companion, Craigendorrie, who started at 12 to 1, won by half a length from Devil's Limit.

The favourites were also out of it in the second division. Lefterin and Downland were backed as if the race were over, but they could neither of them get into the first four. The finish produced a great tussle between Killorn on Lady Teazle and Firth on Marcelle and the former just got the best of it. Marcelle put up a great race considering she was carrying 10st. 2lb. The winner is reported to have been pretty well backed by her stable.

The prospects of the second meeting, which begins on Saturday, are excellent, and we shall get three real good days' racing. There are seven events on the card for Saturday and with the January Plate divided it will make eight in all. The handicaps are excellent, that of the Metropolitan in particular, and of the 27 entrants in the race several appear to have real good chances. It should be as pretty an affair to watch as we have seen this season. Altogether the prospect for Saturday is big fields, open racing, and close finishes. The entries for the second and third days are also well up to the mark, and if the handicappers continue to do their work in their present efficient style, fields will no doubt be very good.

Mr. Ernest Day returns to England shortly. He still has several good horses for sale and before he goes he would be pleased to hear from sportsmen looking for likely winners.

The annual meeting of the Indian Polo Association will be held at Umballa on the 11th February; the following is an extract from the business to be brought forward:—

Proposed by Lieutenant-Colonel J. Vaughan, D.S.O., 10th Hussars:—That the constitution of I.P.A. Committee be:—

(a) One member from each of the nine Military Divisions elected by the Local Polo Secretaries in those divisions.

The names of those elected to be sent to the Honorary Secretary, Indian Polo Association Meerut, before the 1st February, 1909, by the Existing Committee Members.

(b) One Civilian member for Calcutta.

One Civilian member for Bombay.

All proposals regarding rules, constitution, etc., from individuals must be made through Local Secretaries, who will forward them to the Divisional or Civilian Member of Committee.

The latter will circulate such proposals to the various Secretaries of local Clubs, and, should there be a majority in favour of the proposals, will forward them to the Honorary Secretary, I. P. A., two months before the annual general meeting.

(4)—No funds are available for disbursement this year.

(5)—Proposed by Lieutenant-Colonel J. Vaughan, D.S.O., 10th Hussars:—That the Official Measurer be authorised in Calcutta, Bombay and Madras to grant life certificates as under—To 6-year olds and upwards 14-1 and under. To 5-year olds and upwards 14-0½ and under. To 4-year olds and upwards 13-3½ and under.

There used to be a theory among big game hunters that a tiger was unable to jump off the ground with all fours to any height. But we believe the idea has long since been dispelled. A recent incident, at all events, would clearly prove the idea to be erroneous. A wounded tiger sprang into the tree in which one of a shooting party was stationed, fully eleven feet from the ground, and all but tore him from his perch. The officer received the tiger with his right barrel full on the head, but without immediate effect, then pushed his weapon into the tiger's mouth and tried to give him the left, but unfortunately the trigger was only on half-cock. The struggle in the tree looked like ending disastrously. At last, however, a bullet from one of the other shooters brought the tiger down, carrying the wounded sportsman's rifle, through the barrels of which the brute had nearly made his teeth meet, besides smashing the stock. It is humbug, therefore, to say that tigers cannot jump all fours off the ground to any real height. The one in question went up with a bound—as one of the party put it, "like an india-rubber ball"—a good seven feet clear, and scrambled on to the branch close to where the hunter was stationed. The latter was only slightly mauled, and but for his presence of mind in first letting go with his right and then ramming the barrels of his gun down the tiger's mouth, would have had a very bad time of it. It would be as well, therefore, if big game hunters, who do not want to take unnecessary risks, were duly warned by this incident. They are not absolutely safe in a máchan or tree under sixteen feet from the ground. If you want to shoot a tiger on foot, and are confident in your ability and your weapon, by all means do so, as you know what to expect. But if doubtful of your nerve or skill, then get up into a tree, and be not lower than sixteen feet from the ground, as it is quite possible for the tiger to reach you at a lesser height.

H.E. the Viceroy will spend a few days shooting in Assam next month. The Maharajah of Cooch Behar is superintending the general arrangements for the shoot and, as at present arranged, Lord Minto will leave Calcutta on the 10th February.

The final game in the Native Army Polo Tournament was played on the 8th instant at Peshawar when the Q.O. Corps of Guides Infantry beat the 59th Rifles by 6 goals to 1.

The celebrated "Golden Oval" race track at Glenville, near Cleveland, Ohio, over which some of the most sensational "marks" ever achieved by trotters and pacers have been made, has been legislated out of existence, and is now being sold for town lots. But Cleveland horsemen were not to be done out of their sport, and they have actually bought, or rather founded, a village where they could eliminate the possibility of outside police interference with book-making. The Forest City Line Stock and Fair Company was organised and it bought 286 acres of land at Randall, and on this erected the village of North Randall duly incorporating same and electing a mayor, justice of the

LONGFELLOW ON LONGBOAT.

Then strode forth the lissom Longboat,
Hiawatha's great-great-grandson,
In his running-shoes of wampum;
And he stood beside Dorando,
Lithe Dorando who'd been training
On potations of chianti,
And they started swiftly racing.
For two hours and forty minutes
They kept going pretty level;
Then the legs of the Italian
Showed decided signs of giving;
So friends squirted them with Vichy,
Vichy water from a syphon.
But, alas! the race was over,
Most emphatically over,
And the Sunny South was beaten
By the Red Man in a canter.
So Dorando is returning
To a dolce-far chianti.
In his pleasant little sweetshop,
'Tis not "Veni, vidi, vici,"
Only "Veni, vidi, Vichy."
But he'll make more out of shortbread
Than he'll e'er make out of Longboat,
Hiawatha's great-great-grandson

BOB FITZSIMMONS, the pugilist, is now contributing a turn at the Oxford music hall in London. There is nothing novel in the prize-fighter actor. The combination is met with more frequently in America than in England where the British boxer has not taken kindly to a method of advertisement and money-making devised by his brother bruiser in the States. It may be that the home-bred fighting man is more a man of action than of words, but he is apparently missing a golden opportunity. Have not J. L. Sullivan and Corbett been the bright particular stars round which plays or playlets have been written, not so much with the view of displaying their histrionic ability as of showing their athletic powers? The wrestler—also from the States—has taken a leaf out of the Yankee boxers' profitable book, and has doubtless found the experiment as remunerative as a victorious career on the mat. These gladiators are cute. They cannot always be boxing or wrestling. To fill in their time they adopt a plan whereby they amuse themselves, while pleasing others, and, as we seen at the Oxford, they have the satisfaction of obtaining a welcome only slightly less cordial than the greeting accorded to a success in the ring. Fitzsimmons, the erstwhile heavy-weight champion, appears in a trifle entitled "A Man's a man for a' that," which enables him to recount some incidents in his fighting career in the Antipodes and America. No sparring bout is introduced, but Fitzsimmons gives a remarkable exhibition of clean, hard, quick hitting at the punching ball, and the turn, in which the pugilist is assisted by Mrs. Fitzsimmons, who has an excellent voice, is one of the most popular in a very good programme.

POULTRY fanciers in India may care to have details of what is, we should say, the record Christmas turkey. Smithfield market was uncommonly proud of it when the last mail left. It hailed from Sinfold, in Sussex, and weighed 40lb. 8oz. Stripped of its feathers, it measured 32 inches round the chest, so that when it strutted about the farmyard its girth must have been sufficient to pass the military recruiting standard. From beak to claw it measured 5 feet 3 inches, and the breadth of its wings from tip to tip is 5 feet 10 inches. It had a pair of spurs that would not have disgraced a cow-boy from the Wild West.

EVERYONE knows, of course, that the bite of the Indian cobra is fatal, writes the Rangoon Times. But what Europeans do not actually know is whether or not the natives of India really possess the cures they claim to have, both for cobra bite and for hydrophobia caused by the bite of a mad dog. A few years ago an Indian civilian in Burma strolled out with his gun in the evening. When scarcely a hundred yards from the zayat (or shelter) in which he was camping, S— was bitten in the leg by a cobra which he promptly shot. He at once returned to the zayat and scrawled a pencil note to be carried by his orderly to his chief, the Deputy Commissioner, and then resigned himself to the attentions of a couple of Burmese medicine men who happened to be passing the night there, and to the death which he accepted as absolutely inevitable. Meantime, his superior officer proceeded direct to headquarters on receipt of the news to seal up the unfortunate man's effects, after which he set out for the zayat to see to the burial of his subordinate. On the road he met the "dead man" comfortably jogging along towards headquarters quite recovered. The Burmese medicine men had scarified the wound and rubbed a certain paste into it. They had also given the patient certain infusions to drink and had cured him. Nothing, however, would induce them to give away the secret of their treatment.

Our own medicine men may have cures of hydrophobia to their credit, but cures of cobra bites are almost unknown. An English officer in the Shan States kept a number of dogs, one of which recently went mad and bit one of the sahib's servants. The station was an isolated one. The services of a Shan doctor were called in, and the servant, after passing through all the severe stages of the terrible disease, was absolutely and completely cured by the Shan doctor. The English officer offered 1,000 rupees for the secret of the treatment used, and, to a Shan, this would, of course, be a large sum of money. But the secret was never divulged.

AT the annual meeting of the Lawn Tennis Association two matters of real importance to the game were dealt with. The first of these was an alteration of the wording of the rule as to the method of service, which, though the spirit of the old rule was maintained, will make it easier for umpires and line-umpires to judge whether an infringement of it is taking place. This should result in much improvement in a matter in which many players undoubtedly transgress, especially if umpires do their duty and call a fault in every case where they are not satisfied that the rule has been strictly observed. If this is not done, of course, there might just as well be no service rule at all; and it is hoped that, after the earnest appeal made at the meeting to players to see that umpires do their duty, there will be but little occasion in the future for complaint on this score. It would perhaps be a good thing if umpires and line-umpires at the championships would set others an example in this respect, for it is at Wimbledon itself that some of the worst offenders against this rule are allowed to continue their infringements absolutely unchecked. No man ought to be allowed to take a line in a championship match who cannot be relied upon to keep his whole attention on the play, and both know and enforce the laws relating to his line.

The second matter of importance was the passing of a resolution, with very few dissentients, that the committees of all clubs and tournaments in which the holders of challenge cups now stand out, be requested to consider seriously the advisability of adopting at the earliest possible opportunity the principle of the holders playing through the event. This certainly ought to be done in any competition other than "the" championships; and logically, of course, in them as well. But tradition has to be considered, and it was quite evident that the All-England Club, which has control of the two singles and the men's doubles championships, would not at present alter their rules on the point. There was a fine opportunity last year, when both championships were undefended by their holders, but the chance was allowed to slip by. However, if all other holders are obliged to play through (and there are only some half-dozen who do not), it will add additional weight to the arguments of those who wish to see the system adopted at Wimbledon, though the reform will have to come from the club itself, the Association being powerless in the matter so long as it allows a single club to manage the championships as it pleases.

THE International Rugby Football Match between England and the Australian XV was played on the 9th instant and resulted in a win for the Wallabies by 9 points to 3.

THE annual Rackets tournaments of the Bombay Gymkhana will be held during race week beginning on the 15th February. The events will be open singles, handicap singles and handicap doubles, and if sufficient entries are forthcoming open doubles and public schools or service doubles will be included.

A MEETING of the Bengal Presidency Amateur Athletic Association was held at the Calcutta Cricket Club Pavilion on the 6th instant, with the Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar, President of the Association, in the chair. The difficulty experienced last year in securing an Honorary Secretary has now been overcome, Dr. Craik, Physical Director to the Y.M.C.A., having expressed his willingness to run the sports. He has had considerable experience in the management of athletic meetings in America and under his direction the Presidency Sports of 1909 should be a complete success. It was agreed to hold the meeting on the 20th February, entries closing on the 10th February. A large general committee was appointed and the executive are now busy with their multifarious duties.

AT the Regimental Sports of the 91st Punjabis on the 24th ultimo, Naick Mirza Khan is credited with running the 100 yards in 10 seconds dead. It will be remembered that this fine athlete at the last Presidency Sports won the 100 yards for Native Troops in 10⅘ seconds, and put up a record for the quarter mile for Natives, winning in 52⅗ seconds. He will again be one of the 91st Punjabis' representatives at the Presidency Meeting this year, and if he can reproduce his form the Regiment should have no difficulty in retaining the Allan Arthur Challenge Shield, which they now hold.

THE final game in the 1st P.V.R. Hockey Tournament at Lahore ended on the 9th instant in a draw of 2 goals each. The competing teams were the 1st P.V.R. and the Munster Fusiliers.

AN All-India Boxing Tournament will be held at Umballa between the 8th and 13th March; an advertisement appearing elsewhere gives further details.

THE Ladies' Amateur Golf Championship ended last Friday in a win for Mrs. Holdsworth Hunt, who beat Mrs. Windsor in the final by 1 up. Last year Mrs. Hunt was runner up to Mrs. Youngson.

THE Sussex cricketers Cox and Vine, and Arnold of Worcestershire are on their way out to India. They have been engaged by H. H. the Jam Sahib of Nowanagar for "coaching" and will take part in Indian cricket fixtures this season.

INTERVIEWED by a representative of the Standard, Dr. E. M. Pavri, captain of the Bombay Parsee cricket team, who is on a visit to London, makes some interesting remarks anent the game in India. "Of course," he observes, "we have no single team in India that can compare with any first-class county eleven here. Still, we have some remarkably good players. In all we have three teams—the Parsee, the Hindu, and the Mahomedan—all of whom possess distinguished players. In the Parsee team we have K. M. Mistry, a left-handed batsman and the finest all-round man in India. If he only had a chance of coming to England, where he could play first-class cricket, he would make a name for himself second only to 'Ranji.'

"Then we have Dr. Kanga, now in England, preparing for admission to the Royal College of Surgeons. He played in Dr. W. G. Grace's team at the Crystal Palace, and made over a thousand runs including, I believe, seven 'centuries.' I hope to arrange with Mr. P. F. Warner for the inclusion of Dr. Kanga in the Middlesex eleven next year. The Hindus have several fine players, chief of whom I place Balu, one of the best bowlers I know, a left-handed player, and considered to be the Rhodes of India. The Bombay Mahomedan team are excellent all-round men."

"Has the Indian play improved much of recent years?"

"In batting, yes. In fielding, however, the game has fallen off considerably. This I attribute to the fact that in Bombay we are badly placed for a ground. All the practice is at the nets which makes for good batting, but gives no practice in fielding. Even then, I must confess our batting is second-rate compared with a first-class English county team. I would except Mistry, Meherhomji, and H. D. Kanga from this category, however, for they are really first-class men, as good as any of your best English players.

"As regards supremacy in Indian cricket, I think I must say that up to the present the laurels remain with the Parsees, but I can't help thinking that in five years from now the Hindus will be ahead of us, and will from that time onward produce the finest Indian cricketers. Why? Quite simple. The Hindu population is 300,000,000, whilst the Parsee is but 90,000 all told; by the law of average alone they should be able to do it easily."

"Whom do you consider the best batsman in India?"

"Captain Greig, undoubtedly, although Mistry runs him close. Greig is the Military Secretary to the present Governor of Bombay."

"And the best bowler?"

"Warden, the Parsee. Warden is a magnificent fellow; stands 6 feet 2 inches, and has a left-handed high delivery that takes some standing up to, in addition to which he can 'break' both ways."

Cricket in India, added Dr. Pavri, owed much to Lord Harris, one time captain of the Kent eleven and ex-Governor of Bombay. He gave a real impetus to Parsee cricket by arranging the Presidency match fixture.

"Why," asked the Standard's representative, "do you not bring over an Indian eleven?"

"One reason is that the Parsee team per se is not good enough to face a first-class English eleven. The same applies to the Hindu and the Mahomedan teams. But this I am prepared to say; if we can get the pick of the three teams captained say by Ranji, we should probably startle the English cricket world.

"The difficulties are two: first that of finance, and second, that of getting sixteen men out of the country for six months clear. Four years ago we had it all arranged; we had the money, but at the last moment Mistry was detained at the Royal Palace, where he is physician, and as it was useless to come away with even only one man short we stayed at home. Personally, I think it quite possible to bring over a first-class composite team, as I have suggested next (this) year, if 'Ranji' would only make up his mind and use the great influence he has to get the leave requisite for the players. Everybody would be delighted to send a team from India, for there as here, it has become a great national game, one taught in all the schools and colleges of the Empire, and ranking first and foremost as the sport of the country."

OUR Bombay correspondent writes:—There was quite a good day's sport on Saturday, our Fourth Extra, when all seven races, with the exception of the horse race, filled very well and a dead-heat prolonged the card. Alf. Hoyt arrived with Bleach from Calcutta and both he and Evans rode two winners each, whereas Fahab bin Saif continued his luck as a trainer, with Tommy Kendal bagging a brace.

IN the initial event, the First New Lilliput Plate, the dead-heat occurred between Patras and Prime Minister, on the last run Field Marshal being a hot favourite but only getting into a shop. The run off at the finish was a desperate affair, and only the fact that Patras had inside berth got him there as they were locked together all the way. It was run in better time than the first, the winner proving a cheap investment for six hundred.

IN the second division it was generally thought that with six pounds in his favour Mundoor would reverse the former order on Sheriff. The little grey, however, was never troubled and bears out the fact quoted last week, that he had had a bad run.

OUT of a dozen in the Midget Plate four monopolised the betting and the running, Grey Falcon, Darby, Creditor and Sir Jamal. After unwisely being taken away to the front, carrying 9st. 10lb. Creditor failed on reaching the straight, where Grey Falcon and Darby led, only to be comfortably passed by Sir Jamal.

THE Strangers' Plate was divided, Royal Standard being better fancied at the finish than Hyder, who is said to have been sold for Rs. 7,000. He followed Zoobair Flag to the run in when he came away followed by Zamorin and Royal Standard. There is no doubt about the winner's quality and Zoobair Flag will improve. Rubio, said to be as good as Vedas, was served up for the other batch, but failed badly, Burtho winning easily from the best-looking one of the bunch in Beyhazar.

A VERY interesting and open race was the Marine Lines Plate of nine furlongs, with Dilerjung, Gladiator, Meazer and Dhafer in demand. As usual, Gladiator was sent away with a six-length lead, oblivious of 9st. 3lb. on his back, and came back at the turn. Here Colaba and Meazer caught him, and at the distance Taylor came through on Dhafer to win looking back.

FINALLY the Auction Plate with four runners, Manjess a quarter point shorter than Manlock with Rosewater and Child's Guide the outsiders. Manlock's recent form has not been brilliant, and though he now won from pillar to post the time was very poor, 1min. 17secs. He, however, moved much better and may be coming on again. Manjess ran second for half the journey, but was then romped over by Rosewater.

PROBABLY the last game Weiss will play in Bombay took place on Thursday, Friday and Saturday at Grant Road, when he gave Mr. Dastoor 1,700 in 3,000 and beat him by over 4,000. The professional has struck form and, as well as four three-figures put up a beautiful effort of 298 at the end of the game.

Dastoor was in very fair form and, amongst minor efforts, made 41 and 35 twice.

Telling a batch of excellent stories at a Dover dinner, not long ago, Mr. George Wyndham would seem to have missed the point of one of the best of them. As an instance of forgetfulness, he stated that a friend of his, finding in a French cemetery a group of mourners seated upon tombstones and waiting, pipe in mouth, asked them why the funeral was not going on. "This," said the chief mourner, "is the funeral of the president of the Plumbers' Association, and they have sent a boy back for the corpse."

Now this was no forgetfulness, but the solemn following of an etiquette never broken by the plumbers' guild. Every householder could tell Mr. Wyndham that, on entering a house, the plumbers begin their job by dispatching a boy back to their shop for certain essential tools, the [redacted] for a purposeful hour or so. (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT)

Christmas Day 1908.

A CHRISTMAS more unreal, uncomfortable and unprofitable than this it would be impossible to imagine. Shades of Dickens, what have we done to deserve this? It is damp, pitch dark without and miserable within, and as I address the cover that contains these lines I muse enviously on the brightness which in Calcutta and elsewhere in India you (not always unfortunate) exiles are enjoying. Well, if it is denied me to share it, I may at least be permitted to offer congratulations and wish all readers and supporters of the Indian Field the best of good luck throughout 1909.

* * * * * *

APPARENTLY there are some, however, who find little attractions in the gaieties of Indian life. To this unenviable minority must belong the poor lady who in the current issue of Madame presents us with her view of the subject. She explains that she recently paid a year's visit to the Punjab, and confesses that she was very glad to return to the roar and bustle of London. The writer asks, "Why will girls in a happy home and a temperate climate continue to believe that India is the land of their dreams, and never rest contented till they get there? Fever awaits them, and this terrible heat in the plains that dissolves any energy they may possess, and the only certain thing they reap is experience. It is well said, "What we gain in experience is not worth what we lose in illusion." Well there are fever and heat in the plains, but there are other places than plains, and other climates than that of Scinde or the Terai in India methinks, and many, many good things that this correspondent seems to have had the bad luck to miss. What?

IN the midst of the Christmas festivities—for we will try to be festive in spite of the maddening weather—there is one section of the public who can't get much satisfaction out of it, the much to be pitied Post Office people, who work at a hundred extra horse power pressure while the rest of us take our pleasures more or less seriously after the manner of Britishers. England looks this week to the General Post Office, and demands that it shall once more achieve the feat of delivering everybody's Christmas card and present by Christmas morning at latest. No quarter is given and none expected. The postal officials ask that the public shall post on 23rd December, but that is a mere matter of form. They know perfectly well that the great mass of people will wait till the afternoon of the 24th.

Each year recently has outdone its predecessor in the returns, and even if depressed trade means reduced expenditure, it will not necessarily mean fewer letters and packages. This is proved by the fact that in each case the Colonial Christmas bags were larger. Over 600,000 letters, newspapers, and book packets were sent to Australia and New Zealand—about 90,000 more than last year, and 440,000 to South Africa as compared with 400,000. There was not much difference in the figures for India, China, and Ceylon, but the enormous total of 745,000 was reached.

MR. HORATIO BOTTOMLEY, M.P., sportsman, journalist and City gent, continues to loom big in the public eye and will, I suppose, pervade the contents bills of the evening papers till that rather distant day when the serious case against him is decided in the law courts. Additional interest was lent to these proceedings last week, when he was called upon to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of court in connection with a breezy article and cartoon referring to this litigation which appeared in his paper, John Bull, while the case was sub judice. Conducting his own case, Mr. Bottomley made a long statement, in which he explained his motives in placing his view of the police court charges before the readers of his journal. The sum total of his offence, he urged, was to have made the statements complained of prematurely, for these statements were no stronger than those which he would make before the Alderman. As to the cartoon, he had no thought of suggesting that the administration of justice was besmirched, but that the prosecution itself was "dirty." In regard to the various matters, which were regarded as constituting an offence, he expressed unreserved regret and offered a full apology. In these circumstances the Attorney-General, who admitted that every defendant in what promised to be a very protracted litigation suffered some hardship, had no desire to press the case unduly. The Court, while approving the course taken by Mr. Bottomley in expressing regret, held that a serious contempt had been committed, and that a writ of attachment must issue failing the payment in a month's time of a fine of £300 and costs.

PARK LANE was the scene of an unusual excitement, caused by the brawling of an irate and vengeful mother and a Society beauty. The case is not of particular public interest; but as the Society lady is possibly not unknown in India I mention the matter here. Mrs. Atherton (who has figured in more than one remarkable case in the Courts) was prosecutrix and Mrs. Taylor, an American, whose methods have a refreshing out—west smack about them, was the accused. She is also the mother of a Mrs. Stirling whose husband is being proceeded against for divorce in which case Mrs. Atherton has been named. Mrs. Taylor, inflamed with anger and motherly solicitude as understood in the States, entered Mrs. A.'s house by subterfuge, accused that beautiful lady of slander, and, as it was alleged, abused and threatened her. A scratching and slanging match ensued and when the police arrived Mrs. Taylor, who was hanging out of a window and shrieking—as you may imagine to the intense edification of Park Laneites—was rescued and charged. In the result a discerning magistrate found it was a case of "six of one and half a dozen of the other" and bound over both parties. Mrs. Atherton's life story may be briefly outlined thus:—

1892.—Married to Colonel Atherton at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge.

1906.—Divorced by her husband on the ground of misconduct with the Honourable John Yarde-Buller, heir to Lord Churston.

1907.—Sued the Hon'ble John Yarde-Buller for breach of promise. He had in the meantime married Miss Denise Orme, the actress. Mrs. Atherton did not ask for damages, and judgment was entered for her, with costs.

1908.—Named in the pending divorce suit instituted by Mrs. Stirling (formerly Clara Elizabeth Taylor, an actress in "The Earl and the Girl"). Mr. Stirling has filed a cross-petition, in which Lord Northland, heir to the Earl of Ranfurly, is named as co-respondent.

THE first half of the dramatic year ends in the last day of the present month, and with the exception of pantomimes no new production will swell its list. The most interesting thing that can be said of the output since last August is that it has contained several very poor-class plays that have made money and two really good plays that failed to draw. Not one new play, with the exception of "What Every Woman Knows," that was produced this autumn is ever likely to be heard of again once the run terminates, and none of the authors who have had a chance given them show anything like the genius for observation, the wit, or the invention possessed by Mr. W. Somerset Maugham, the discovery of the autumn before.

* * * * * *

HOWEVER let us leave the consideration of these matters and turn our attention to the Yuletide bill of fare the West End houses provide us with at the moment. This week King Pantomime assumes jocund sway over all theatredom. There are no rivals (in the shape of new plays) to dispute his precedence, and even if there were they would obtain few adherents, so bent are all playgoers upon enjoying the merry monarch's bright hilarious winter reign. He may have his enemies, as have Christmas pudding, roast beef, and other seasonable institutions; but they pass, and he remains year after year to delight us with his ingenious humour and his boisterous singing.

* * * * * *

"DICK WHITTINGTON" at Drury Lane, with its company of 670 performers, easily comes first of the new productions in point of magnitude, to-morrow night the old theatre will throw open its doors for the first performance. The comedians who will then start their mission of making the huge audience laugh are Messrs. Neil Kenyon, Arthur Conquest, Aubrey Fitzgerald, Bert Monks, and Wilkie Bard; Miss Queenie Leighton is principal boy; Miss Truly Shattuck the prince; Miss Marie Wilson, Dick's sweetheart, and Miss Marie George, in the "star" feminine role. Mr. George Ali, an American newcomer, is to play the Cat.

* * * * * *

"CINDERELLA" at the Adelphi Theatre is a smart, artistic, and very amusing pantomime. With such a quartette of clever comedians as Messrs. John Humphries, Stephen Adeson, Fred Leslie, and Dan Rolyat, it must have fun. Messrs. George Edwardes and Robert Courtneidge have secured dainty Miss Phyllis Dare for heroine, and Miss Carrie Moore for principal boy, so there they have left nothing to chance. Miss Marie Rignold and Miss Mabel Ruscell will be Cinderella's sisters, and Miss Dorothy Lorne and Miss Billie Sinclair, the princess and fairy godmother respectively. The first performance took place last night, but with an early closing mail to catch I can this week do no more than refer to it and certify to a most pronounced success.

MANY have been looking forward to Mr. Tree's Christmas play, "Pinkie and the Fairies;" it was produced last Saturday night and in a word it is delightful and worthy to rank among the best of Mr. Tree's stage triumphs.

What a feast of delights the piece is! It is a "Midsummer Night's Dream" for children! It makes a play of the idea that fairies really live, and that it is only grown-up people who cannot see them; it turns an ordinary wood attached to an ordinary house which is inhabited by ordinary people into the most wonderful of all fairy lands. Tommy and Pinkie discover the magical fairy people who live in the wood, and then at the most wonderful tea-party ever heard of meet Cinderella and the Sleeping Beauty, and Jack the Giant-Killer and a host of other heroes and heroines that they have known, in story books all their lives. Only, how changed they are! Cinderella is now a society lady, all boredom and cynicism, who complains that the Beauty who owns the Beast is not in her "set," and therefore should not be invited. Sleeping Beauty is a smart lady, whose conversation and manners are "so restful" that when she is at a dinner party the whole company is asleep before the soup; who is always asleep herself, if she is not pinched; and who from sheer force of hab't can only be awakened when a gentleman kisses her. Jack the Giant-Killer and Jack of Beanstalk fame are two silly, jealous little boys who are always going to fight each other, but who are always afraid to start; and the Beast, who follows Beauty about, is now called Algernon, and is really perfectly tame.

Aunt Imogen is delightfully impersonated by Miss Ellen Terry and the other grown ups in the cast seem to catch the fever and become giddy, irresponsible and springlike again. Miss Elsie Craven, the child actress and phenomenal dancer, is a firm favourite already as the fairy queen, and never surely have we seen so many clever kiddies in one play. "Pinkie and the Fairies" is without doubt one of the most charming children's plays this country has ever seen.

* * * * * *

THE production of the first play for 1909 will take place on 7th January on which date Mr. Fred Terry and Miss Julia Neilson will produce William Devereux's "Henry of Navarre." That piece and "Penelope" at the Comedy Theatre and the musical comedy in rehearsal at the Gaiety Theatre are the only new events so far announced for January.

Which reminds me to observe that when one sees announcements of a new play made and no date given one may always take it for granted that it is ten or perhaps fifty to one against that play ever being produced. The number of plays announced in this way is prodigious, but no one takes them seriously. When I read such announcements I know the manager means to do something quite different from what he is credited with, because he knows that it does not help him to have his business talked about too soon.

"PETER PAN," which has become one of the cherished institutions of Christmas time, was staged for the fifth year at the Duke of York's Theatre last Wednesday night.

All the delightful scenes of enthusiasm and pleasures were enacted over again. Everyone seemed carried away with the exquisite charm and quaint fancy of it all; everyone vouchsafed for his belief in fairies with the usual heartiness, and so saved Tinker Bell's life once more; and a glance round the crowded house showed grey-haired men and women as completely under the spell of each of the nine wonderful scenes as small boys in Eton suits and small girls in short frocks.

Little change has been made in the play, and most of last year's cast remain. Miss Pauline Chase appears as Peter for the third time, a joyous, boyish, charming Peter, and delightful to the eye. Mr. Robb Harwood is all a boy could wish for in a bold, bad pirate as Captain Hook, a perfect piece of caricature; and Miss Gertrude Lang, who succeeds Miss Hilda Trevelyan as Wendy, is deliciously motherly. There is a new Mr. Darling in the person of Mr. Reginald Owen, and all the rest of the cast leaves nothing to be desired.

THE revival of "Dorothy" at the New Theatre last Monday night went with great eclat and had a reception of boisterous enthusiasm. And one felt grateful for it, for the old music seemed as fresh as ever; the symmetry of the thing, operatic in theme and treatment, came to one as a pleasing relief after the chaotic "turn" business of its modern counterpart; and it was taken quickly and went with a full vigour and swing.

This was due largely to an excellent cast—and a cast of players who can sing. There was Mr. Hayden Coffin in his original part as gay and debonair as when he played it twenty years ago, and his great song, "Queen of my Heart To-night," was as finely pointed as of old, and was, of course, trebly encored. Then Mr. Arthur Williams was there, also in his original part, dry and droll as in his palmiest days; and the others, too, were excellent, especially Miss Constance Drever as Dorothy, singing with power and charm, and Miss Louie Pounds, who likewise is an artiste who has received a real training. Mr. Bardsley was admirable, too.

People all enjoyed it immensely, and, to be sure, it is a good thing, very well worth seeing for its production, very well worth hearing for the music of Messrs. Stephenson and Collier, and an interpretation which deserves full meed of praise. It was an excellent idea, this revival.

WHEN THE WOLF-PACK HUNTS.

Have you ever heard a wolf-pack? No? Then you have never lain awake and wondered what they were chasing and if they would be successful. You might if you should lie flat on your back in a bunk in some northern logging camp to-night, listening to the many noises—noises so strange that unless you were accustomed to them sleep would be long in coming.

Little spots and patches of light coming through cracks in the top or sides of the great box heater, crowded full of green wood, dance and flicker on the roof boards, dying in one place to appear in another. You lie and listen to the heavy breathing of many tired men; some of them are snoring or even talking in their sleep, driving horses in dreamland. You hear the horses in the stables; one is kicking, perhaps, but you feel sure he will do no harm. An owl in a nearby tree hoots and is answered from the distance. A screw worm is diligently boring in a log near your head. He has been there every night for so long that you would really miss him should he not work.

Then there is a lumberjack who has been in camp just a day; he came in with that dry, brown taste in his mouth which usually follows a visit to the thirst parlors in town. He is awake and rolls from his bunk to the deacon seat, where he sits for a moment, then moves quietly to the water keg, where you can hear him drinking with great noisy gulps, followed by a sighing "Ah!"

You begin to feel that sleep will soon come to you, and you are less conscious of the noises, when from just back of the cook camp, in the alder thicket, comes that long-drawn shriek—it can hardly be called a howl. There is no echo; only stillness follows. Even the heavy breathing of your companions seems to cease, and you find yourself holding your breath. In a few moments another cry, almost human, sets your heart pounding. You don't wonder what it is, even if you never have heard it before; instinctively you know it is the cry of the great gray timber wolf. He will not hurt you, would not even should you meet him face to face on the trail; he would simply show his teeth and slink off into the brush. Should he be out of your sight he would sit quietly and let you pass, then noiselessly follow you, perhaps for miles, now and then getting ahead so he might sit and grin as you pass.

The lone gray wolf, who was trotting down the tote road, miles away, when you climbed into your bunk, scented a deer that lately crossed. A wolf can tell just how long since the deer passed by sticking his sharp muzzle deep in the tracks. Should they be quite fresh he will not follow, but instead will start off at an angle, trotting along as though he has no destination in mind. But he will soon strike the trail, and again crowd his big black nose deep into two or three of the tracks. Then he may sniff the air and whine as if in doubt. But a timber wolf is not long in doubt.

If the snow were loose and deep it would be useless to follow. To-night, however, the crust is firm enough to bear him; the wolf swung off at a lope, covering ground fast. His chase led him into swamplands, among thick young spruce and balsam, their branches bent far down with the weight of snow, and large tamarack trees thrown in a tangled mass by strong wind after having been killed by fire during a dry spring.

On top of a snow-covered hummock, almost as white as the snow itself, a rabbit squatted; it bounded away in terror. No time now for rabbits; this big wolf was after big game. His progress was slower here and more difficult. The crust was not so strong, and continually breaking through worried him, and, whining like a dog, he spread wide his toes, taking advantage of sticks and fallen trees, his bushy tail jerking from side to side in an effort to balance himself. Jumping from one fallen tree toward another, he landed short, and disappeared in the snow, crawled out, shook himself and resumed the chase. The footing improved as he neared the edge of the swamp, and swiftly passing through thick alders he was surprised to find himself in the very dooryard of the logging camp. What did he care, though. Stopping quickly he again sniffed the air, then voiced his defiance, to you and all the others with you so warmly housed.

Just now you heard that blood-curdling cry go booming out across the wintry night. And if you could peep out you might see the wolf standing motionless, contemplating your stronghold. You hear his cry answered far to the north. This means assistance in his chase—and again he thrills and chill you with his wild, savage call. Immediately he takes up the trail, for he is out for meat, not to serenade a lumber-camp. Running fast, but with caution, pausing now and then to catch the scent, he is soon joined by a companion. The chase is on in earnest, and they send forth cry after cry—wild music it is which comes to you, mellowed by distance as the pair draw away.

No necessity for stealth now, for the deer knows the game and how to conduct his part. He also runs easily and with speed, even though the crust does bruise and cut his slender legs. But he thinks only of the two pursuers; he has no thought for others who might soon join them. And so terror fills his heart as he now hears ahead of him the eager yap, yap of another enemy.

The deer changes his course and is now running his best. Coming out upon a marsh where footing is good he makes great headway. If only this would last escape would be easy, and with new hope he bounds along to the north. At the end of the marsh is a logging road leading back into the heavy timber—unexpected luck. Looking back he can see his pursuers running fast and silently up the frozen meadow. They seem to drift along as though blown by the wind, now close together, now spread out, but surely coming, and with but the desire to kill.

Pausing only for a moment the deer leaves the open and dashes up the logging road into the dark and silent forest. After a short run he comes to a fork in the road; here he hesitates; if he turns to the right it is toward the logging camp, so north he goes. Just around a sharp bend he comes to the end of the road. No use to stop, and worse than useless to turn back now, so bounding into the thick brush and deep snow he makes all possible speed—poor speed at best. Suddenly his enemies appear on all sides. He can see their shadowy forms and bright eyes, and hear their whimpering and whining and the clacking of their ivory-set jaws. They have taken the straight course while he followed the road. In a very few minutes it is all over except the feast.

You no longer hear the wildering chorus of the wolf-pack, so sleep comes to you at last. And in the course of a few hours you awake with a start, wondering if you have really been asleep. The unlovely music of a five-foot tin horn, blown by an early rising cookee, is not the most pleasant awakening a tired man can imagine. The men tumble out of their bunks with scarcely a word. Dressing is a short task, for the lumberjack removes but few articles of clothing upon retiring. As soon as dressed they dip a tin wash basin full of warm water from a large can on the stove, place it in the long wooden sink, and their toilet is soon completed. About 6 o'clock, or half an hour after the first "horn," comes another—the call to breakfast. The first man to the door throws it wide open, and they pour out into the crisp morning air, to be greeted by the light of many lamps, streaming through a cloud of steam from the open door of the cook camp. Suspended from the roof are lamps with large tin reflectors, shedding an abundance of light on long tables covered with oil-cloth, and set with tin dishes, tin spoons and iron knives and forks.

Sitting in places assigned them by a cookee upon their first entrance to camp, they immediately proceed to devour coffee, flapjacks, beefsteak, fried potatoes and pastry in silence, except for the clatter of the dishes. This morning, as every other morning, you read the two signs: "No Talking at Meals" and "Oleomargarine Used Here," and whimsically you imagine another fitting notice which might also be pertinent, posted on this backwoods bulletin board: "God Help Those Who Don't Help Themselves." And this you proceed to do.

In fifteen minutes most of the men are back in the bunk shanty. Caps are drawn down over ears, mittens pulled on, and out they go, under the bright stars, their breath giving forth little puffs of white steam and their boots squeaking on the frosty snow. Many are axmen and carry their bright two-bladed tools, sharpened the evening before on large grindstones in the bunk shanty. There is no conversation, for the lumberjack does but little talking in the morning. When the sun peeps over the tree tops at the camp, almost deserted, the men are far away in the timber, hard at work.

Going north from the camp, about two miles along the main logging road you turn in to a short branch road on your left, and with four or five men begin cutting brush and trees to extend the road farther into the tall pines. The men begin where they quit the night before, and you go ahead, wading through the deep snow to see which way the road is to go. You notice the fresh track of a deer, but that is not unusual, for when the snow is deep they often travel on the roads. A few rods in you come to a place where the crust is broken and the snow tramped as though some animal had been digging; you kick about and up comes a bone stripped of every particle of flesh. "Wolves," you say to yourself; there are his tracks. You follow two or three rods through the thick brush, and suddenly you come upon a sight not often seen even in this north country.

The snow is tramped down hard and smeared with blood and hair, all that is left to tell of the tragedy enacted here but a few hours ago. Single trails lead off in every direction; you follow some of them. They are all short and at the end of each you kick out the bone buried there. Not a bone was left where the killing was made. Such is the custom of the great gray timber wolf. He buries the bones for the same reason that the dog does. I cannot tell why. Can you? There is nothing left on them to eat, and anyway, he never returns to dig them out.

So this is where the music stopped last night, as you lay safe and snug in your bunk, wondering, vainly straining your ears to catch still another faint whisper of it from far away across the forest, in the hope of detecting a note of disappointment. Sad? Indeed it is; and still it is only evidence of the enactment of a law of Nature. It is simply Life and Death, and something to think about, if it will do you any good.—H. A. B., in Recreation.

Fishing.

A BIG CONGER.

In all parts of the ocean there are fish which, either from their repulsive appearance or ferocious character, are designated the Devil Fish, and if any of those denizens of the deep, who frequent the British shores deserve this title, the conger is surely the most fitted for the questionable honour. A scavenger by nature, he is as fierce as the largest shark, and although no known case of his attacking a man in the sea has ever been chronicled, it is extremely probable that a very large specimen would attempt to make a meal off a human being should a bather happen to pass his haunt at night time when the conger is on the prowl.

The conger is found in large numbers all round the British coasts, particularly in spots where rocks abound, in the crevices of which he makes his home, but where natural cover does not exist he will take up his quarters in a hole in the sea wall or any other masonry that will provide him with a home. For instance, on the open sandy shores between Worthing and Littlehampton there is an old ruined church, overtaken by the erosion of the sea, and in the hollows in the walls many congers have taken up their abode which the fishermen drag out by means of hooks on the end of sticks when the tides are low enough to permit of the sport.

Some years ago when fishing for pollack in the vicinity of Inishowen Head in the north of Ireland a small fish I was landing was suddenly seized by a forbidding grey shape that arose with a swirl from the depths, and before I could recover from my astonishment the line and frame to which it was attached were dragged from my grasp over the side of the boat. I was under the impression that a shark was responsible for the outrage, but the fisherman informed me that it was a conger, and that they positively swarmed all along the coast. Some of them, he said, reached enormous size, but people very seldom took the trouble to catch them as they were considered unfit to eat. One he knew of lived under the Soldier's Rock, so called because an unfortunate soldier was dragged off it when fishing and swept away by the tide. This conger, he assured me, had been hooked by many people, but no one had been able to hold him.

Having ascertained that congers feed at night and that herring was the best bait, on account of the oil it exudes attracting the fish, I obtained some of Farlow's tarpon hooks on piano wire, and with three chosen spirits sallied forth the following evening to try conclusions with the monster of Soldier's Rock. Having heard that a conger in a boat is about two degrees worse than a bull in a china shop, we made a resolution that the quarry when hooked should be drawn up till his head rested on the gunwale, when the tent mallet that we had provided ourselves with was to be brought into play till the conger showed signs of shuffling off this mortal coil. We then decided on a half-crown sweepstake, the total to be handed to the captor of the first fish, and having dropped anchor under Soldier's Rock, which raised its eerie black shape from the dark swirling waters, we put our lines over the side.

For some minutes nothing happened, and we sat in silence, the washing of the waves round the crevices in the rock being the only sound heard. Suddenly I felt a tug, followed by a long, steady pull that dragged the line through my fingers, but, getting a grip on it with both hands, I brought it in hand over fist till I could discern a long whitish streak by the side of the boat. Next moment the conger was lashing about on the surface, twirling round and round in his efforts to escape, so that had it not been for the swivels on the trace there is not the slightest doubt that he would have kinked the wire and broken loose. Disregarding in my excitement our carefully made resolution, I gave him a mighty heave, and the conger promptly took command of the boat.

The scene of confusion that ensued beggars description. By some unlucky chance the hook broke its hold and five feet of ferocious fish careered about the bottom of the boat like a fiend possessed. At one moment he would be up in the bows where the occupants, dropping their lines, scrambled up on to the thwarts to escape his awful jaws; the next moment he was down in the stern sending bait and lines flying with his powerful tail, while the fisherman with the tiller and a plucky soul with the tent mallet aimed frantic blows that landed anywhere but on the cause of the trouble.

At last, as if wearied with his travels, he paused with his head against the side of the boat and gave the fisherman a chance of sticking a huge knife through his neck and pinning it to the boards. This did not prevent his tail from coming into action with renewed vigour, and it was only after three minutes' constant hammering with the mallet that we managed to quieten the brute at all.

On inspection of our casualties, it was found that all our bait had gone by the board with the exception of two herrings; one line was lost, possibly carried over the side by another conger during the confusion; and the heel of my gum boot was bitten off clean. It was unanimously decided that I had forfeited all right to the prize money owing to my impetuous and foolish conduct, and we again settled down to fish.

In a very short time another conger made the mistake of his life and went to join his brother in the bottom of the boat, but the fisherman assured us that neither was the monster we had set out to catch.

The sport was certainly good, and in less than an hour we had far more congers than we cared to contemplate, considering the darkness and the exposed positions of our feet, but the giant had so far disregarded our bait.

Suddenly C———shouted: "I've got one—a huge fellow," and at the same moment F———on the other side of the boat started to haul in his line hand over fist. For some seconds they pulled in, till gradually the strain increased so that neither could gain an inch, but in each case they could feel the frantic tugs of the fish, which proved that they were not caught up in the bottom.

"Faith," remarked the fisherman, "there must be two monsters and ye've both got one. Haul away at them."

And haul they did, till a muffled thump on the bottom of the boat disclosed the true state of affairs: they were both in the same fish, which was jammed underneath the boat and unable to move either way till one or the other slackened off his line. This was promptly done, and the fish of the evening, after a tremendous struggle, was hauled aboard and found to have swallowed both baits, for both hooks were stuck in his mouth. He turned the scale at 35lbs. and was nearly 6ft. in length, but our fisherman cornfully denied that he was the monster we were after. "Shure," said he, "this wan wouldn't make a breakfast for that same conger."

However, none of us was disappointed, for if the fisherman spoke truly we had no desire whatever to catch the fish in question, preferring to leave him to some more daring person to whom the loss of a limb or so was a matter of no consequence.

This finished the evening, and leaving some two hundred pounds' weight of conger to be sent up to the military camp, where they provided a more or less succulent breakfast, we wended our tired way homewards, resolved that as a sport conger fishing was certainly not lacking in excitement.

CALCUTTA DOG SHOW JUDGING.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Considerable misconception still reigns in the minds of many dog owners as to their animal's chance in the show ring. Perhaps they think it will not get a prize as they do not know its pedigree, or what is far worse, are under the impression that they themselves are not sufficiently well known to secure the judges' attention.

At home shows, dogs owned by the very humblest vie with those of the highest, in the show ring, all knowing their animals have equal chances. I wish to inform the dog owning public that at the Calcutta Kennel Club Dog Shows, the same conditions are in force as at home.

It does not matter who you are or what the pedigree of your dog is like, it is the quality, the points and the condition of your exhibit that is taken into consideration by the judges.

The method of judging is this—the judge has a judging book, which contains no information beyond the number allotted to each dog. When he has decided as to the merits of the different animals in the class, he marks against the numbers first, second or third as the case may be.

Judges, by the rules of the Northern India Kennel Association, which are practically the same as those of the English Kennel Club, are not allowed to refer to a catalogue, whilst judging, and the Club Committee are responsible that this rule is not transgressed.

The judges who will make the awards at the Show being held on the 29th and 30th instant, are all of them strangers to Calcutta, and know neither owners nor the dogs likely to be exhibited. And all are moreover first class judges who have officiated at English Shows.

The above information will, I trust, be sufficient guarantee for those who have not yet entered their dogs.

Entries to date are not as large as last year, but there are evidently many, who intend to exhibit; will these please note that first entries close Friday the 15th instant, but late entries with an extra fee of eight annas per entry will be taken up to Wednesday 20th.

ESTUARY FISHING.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can any of your numerous readers give me any information concerning the estuary fishing for bamin, cock-up, seer, perch, etc., to be had in the vicinity of the Gulf of Cambay.

In Thomas' Rod in India a whole chapter is devoted to estuary fishing, but though it contains many useful notes, yet to the novice in this particular line there are many points that call for elucidation.

First and foremost what constitutes an estuary. The dictionary defines an estuary as follows:—"The wide mouth of a river where the tide meets the current, or flows and ebbs."

Let us take the mouth of the Nerbudda. The tide reaches or at any rate is felt, if I am not mistaken, as far inland as Broach. Should I look for bamin round the piles of the railway bridge at Broach or are these fish more likely to be found 30 miles east on the Vagra promontory

Does the bamin take in muddy water? I paid a visit to Broach a few days back and the water was pea-soup. It would seem next to impossible for any fish to see a bait in such coloured water except by an absolute fluke.

Would it not be possible to fish for bamin from an anchored boat in preference to the piles of a bridge?

Better still, when you have located a shoal of bamin, would it not be an efficacious plan to follow with the tide trolling the bait in zig-zags, cross-ways to the stream?

There are other rivers that empty their waters into the Gulf of Cambay and in all cases the tidal stretch extends for miles. One and all should contain good fish if one only knew the most likely spot within 15 miles in which to strike them on the feed.

NEW BULLETS FOR SHOT GUNS.

The "Lethal" Spherical Loaded Cartridges, per 100 Rs. 17-0.	The "Rotary" Cylinder Loaded Cartridges per 100 Rs. 25-0.

On account of the unmerciful condemnation by many of our clients on the cylinder bullets for "Keyholing" and inaccuracy at distances over 20 yards, we can only recommend this type for machan shooting at a short range from 15 to 20 yards.

The following from a sporting medical officer in the Central Provinces on Saturday last is the latest :—

. . . . . I missed one of the chances of my life shooting at a huge Tiger the other day from cartridges loaded with the cylinder bullets. I had a splendid view of him at 20 yards or so but was disgusted to find the bullet dropped quite 8 inches and was ineffective. On returning to the Bungalow I tested a few from 25 yards, with the result that I found that not only are they inaccurate at that range, but two out of six reached the paper target broad side on.

In future I shall use nothing but the "Lethal" etc.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

EXPRESS "INDIA" RIFLE.

MESSRS. HOLLAND & HOLLAND beg to introduce to the notice of Sportsmen their New ·465 Bore "India" Model Rifle. This weapon has been specially designed to replace the ·450 bore, the importation of which into India having been prohibited. The New Rifle retains all the features of their well-known ·450 and has the same balance, handiness, and lightness of recoil, with the advantage of increased velocity resulting from the use of their New Patent Velopex Cartridge.

Record Target made before the Editor of "The Field."

AUTHENTICATED DIAGRAM. See "THE FIELD," 19th January 1907.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper,

19th January, 1907.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seems likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

THE NEW ·375 BORE 'HOLLAND-VELOPEX" MAGAZINE SPORTING RIFLE.

PATENT SYSTEM.

As a Sporting Magazine Rifle, this weapon is the latest development of our well-known 375 bore, and is constructed to carry our New Patent Velopex Cartridge, giving a muzzle velocity of 2,500 feet per second with hollow point or solid bullets.

With the exception of the Magazine, which is specially made for us, the whole of the Rifle is our own design and manufacture.

The perfection of a Magazine Rifle.

Some of the Leading Features. Very High Velocity (2,500 feet), Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, and Accuracy. Simplicity of mechanism, an improved system of Detachable Barrel, facility of loading with Clip or Single Cartridge. LANG

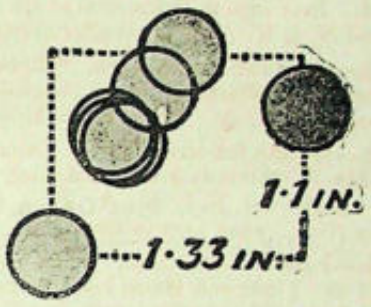
NEW ·470 BORE.

Expressly designed to replace the prohibited ·450 Bore



VELOCITY 2,250ft. sec.

This cartridges originally designed did not, in our opinion, come up to a sufficiently high standard, and in consequence our expert visited Messrs. Kynoch's Works, and in conjunction with their experts conducted a series of experiments extending over three weeks, ultimately designing the bullets now in use for this popular rifle.

LANG'S therefore confidently claim that in collaboration with Messrs. Kynoch they were the first to introduce the ·470, and as evidence submit the following extract from the Field, and illustration of the actual diagram made before the editor of that journal.

"FIELD," 23rd March 1907: ". . . . A very valuable advance has been achieved, and Messrs. Lang are to be congratulated on their enterprise in so promptly bringing forward a rifle and cartridges complying with the two most pressing demands in sporting rifles, viz., a weapon to take the place of the prohibited ·450, and a cartridge which shows an advance in flatness of trajectory, with a piminution of recoil and pressure."

THE BEST DIAGRAM made before the Editor of the "Field" with a Rifle of this bore.

7 Shots at 100 yards with Lang's ·470 Sporting Rifle

Full particulars on application.

Price From 20 GUINEAS.

HOW GREAT MEN RECOUP THEIR ENERGIES.

SOME STRIKING TESTIMONY.

Eminent men are the authoritative exponents of a nation's thought. Their views, given with the sense of responsibility which rests upon those who mould public opinion, must command the most earnest attention. When the subject for consideration is the creation and preservation of those physical and mental attributes which so largely enter into the sum total of human success, then, surely, the opinions of those who have risen to the proud position of leaders of men will be all-convincing.

The unanimity with which the most distinguished personages proclaim Sanatogen to be the ideal tonic food remedy, affords striking evidence of the high esteem in which Sanatogen is held as a restorative and a tonic.

Sanatogen is proclaimed as being the most powerful restorative known for renewing and sustaining the vigour of health. When run down and in conditions of lassitude, nervousness, metal inertness, as well as debility, and all the ills foreshadowed by that danger signal depression, Sanatogen is unrivalled. It speedily and permanently restores that buoyancy and elasticity which are the very essence of well-being.

Sir Gilbert Parker, equally famous as a gifted author and an intrepid traveller, is full of enthusiastic praise:

"20, Carlton House Terrace.

"I have used Sanatogen with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigour to the overworked body and mind."

Gilbert Parker

Sir John Hare gives us a peep into the means employed to sustain the wonderful vitality which is one of his distinguishing characteristics:

"Upper Berkeley Street.

"I have found Sanatogen a most valuable tonic and stimulant during a period when I had to work very hard under conditions of great weakness and ill-health."

John Hare

Lord Sutherland Gower, the creator of the noble Shakespearian memorial at Stratford-on-Avon, says of Sanatogen:

"Hammerfield, Penshurst, Kent.

"I feel it only due to the benefit conferred on my general health by Sanatogen to write to inform those interested in that wonderful medicine that in a couple of months' time it has cured me of all gouty trouble. Sanatogen has done me far more good than all the waters of Bath and Harrogate."

Sutherland Gower

The Venerable Archdeacon Sinclair expresses his opinion as follows:

"The Chapter House,
St. Paul's Cathedral,
London, E.C.

"Sanatogen appears to be an admirable food for invalids and those who suffer from indigestion."

William Sinclair

Madame Sarah Grand, the gifted authoress of "The Heavenly Twins," says she has found in Sanatogen renewed vigour of body and brain.

"Grove Hill.

"Sanatogen has done everything for me which it is said to be able to do for cases of nervous debility and exhaustion. I began to take it after nearly four years enforced idleness from extreme debility, and felt the benefit almost immediately. And now, after taking it steadily three times a day for twelve weeks, I find myself able to enjoy both work and play again, and also able to do as much of both as I ever did."

Sarah Grand

Conclusive proof is forthcoming also in the testimony of over 9,000 physicians as to the superlative merits of Sanatogen as the ideal tonic food remedy.

Amongst the many who have written in praise of Sanatogen, Dr. Andrew Wilson expresses golden opinions in that striking publication, "The Art of Living," a copy of which will be sent gratis and post free on forwarding name and address to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, mentioning the Indian Field.

Sanatogen is sold by all chemists, etc., throughout India.

THE GREAT EASTERN REMEDY.

The PLAGUE of INDIA is SKIN AFFECTIONS, such as Herpes, Scabies, Eczema, Scurvy, Rupia, Pustular Eruptions, Acne, Ringworm, Lichen, Scaldhead, Scaly Eruptions, Lepra, Elephantiasis, Freckles, Syphilitic Eruptions, &c., Boils, Blanes, Pimples, Blotches, Foul Ulcers, Indolent Tumours, Cancerous Tumours, &c., &c.; for these Dr. E. J. LAZARUS'S ESSENCE OF NEEM is the remedy.

The Baids and Hakeems of Hindustan have employed the MELIA AZADIRACHTA for very many centuries in the above diseases, and astonished the world by the wonderful cures they effected, but it was left for Dr. E. J. LAZARUS to make a preparation containing all the valuable therapeutic properties of the tree, in a PLEASANT, POTABLE and EFFICACIOUS FORM. We have a host of unscrupulous imitators [as indubitable proof of the value and efficacy of the above preparations] against whom we beg to caution our friends.

In bottles Rs. 2 each.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY OF IT.

From PANDIT KOILAS NATH SUKUL, Physician to H. H. Maharaja of Bulrampore:—"Anything that can be said in praise of your newly-invented 'Essence of Neem' is insufficient to describe its merit as a Purifier of Human Blood. I have much pleasure to let you know, that within the short space of the past six months I have given it ten different trials in some of the most obstinate skin diseases, three of which were advanced cases of Indian Leprosy, and your Essence has in all of them effected most admirable cures, the like of which I have never noticed during my practice of last twelve months."

From MRS. A. R. B., Allahabad:—"Please send me by return post six bottles more of your invaluable 'Essence of Neem'; it is doing me more good than all the Doctors have done for me."

From MR. B. L. D. A.:—"I am happy to say that the 'Neem' is doing a great deal of good to the patient and I think he will ask me to write in a day or two for some more."

PLAYING CARDS FOR CLUB & MESSES.

GOODALL'S NEW "LINETTE" PLAYING CARDS.

These Cards are made with a finely grooved surface, which facilitates the dealing and minimises the possibility of misdeals.

In various floral designs or with plain backs. Per dozen packs Rs. 9-0 Per pack Re. 1-0

Special quotations for larger quantities.

De la Rue's "Pneumatic" Playing Cards.—

The Fronts of the "Pneumatic" Playing Cards are highly finished, whilst the Backs are minutely grooved or indented all over the surface, so as to provide an air-space between the cards, and a roughened surface which acts as a resistance for the thumb in dealing. This prevents misdeals, as the cards slide off one by one and can be dealt with the greatest ease and rapidity.

Sport in England.

LONDON, Christmas Day, 1908.

LINGFIELD.

A BRIGHT sunny morning was an incentive for a visit to this pretty Surrey enclosure, and full advantage of the genial conditions was taken by a representative number of National Hunt votaries. The contingent of sportsmen who journeyed from Croydon would have done infinite credit to a flat-race fixture. However, the morning promise of a fine day was not altogether fulfilled, a sharp shower falling after the decision of the second race. It was an afternoon for mud-pluggers, for only those horses that could plough their way through the deep going ran with any hope of victory. And it was heavy! Backers did not, after all, fare so badly with three favourites to wipe off some of their Newbury losses. In the main, the class of the competitors was deplorably poor, though this stamp of animal has to be catered for as much as their superior contemporaries the while owners keep them in training. Nevertheless, the programme admirably fulfilled its mission. Results:—

Do you realise the immense importance of the unique superiority of Odol? While all other preparations for cleansing the mouth and teeth are effective only during the few moments of application, the antiseptic and refreshing power of Odol continues gently but persistently for hours afterwards. Odol penetrates the interstices of the teeth and the mucous membrane of the mouth, to a certain extent impregnating them, and thus securing a safeguard and preservative for the teeth such as no other dentifrice can provide, not even approximately.

The attendance here on Saturday last was an excellent one, but the weather was of the most dismal character throughout the afternoon, while the day's card did not brighten matters to any extent, as the class of animals competing was very poor. The executive, however, registered a financial success, and although the going was fetlock deep, the majority of the results worked out very much in accordance with anticipations. Results :—

Won by four lengths ; six lengths between second and third.

FOLKESTONE.

The up-to-date methods Messrs. Pratt and Co. adopt to popularise their meeting at Westenhanger are deserving of success. Indeed the race executive at Folkestone holds out every inducement to owners, trainers, and jockeys to attend, therefore it is no matter for surprise that I have to record a larger assembly than at the corresponding fixture last year. Medium fields made up of horses moderate in point of class, and runaway victories in the majority of the events were the features of the day, backers managed to hold their own with the pencillers. The course was in good order if the going was a trifle on the yielding side. Results :—

GUILDHALL SELLING STEEPLECHASE—Of 40sovs. 2 miles.

Mr. H. Hartland's French Palm, 6yrs., 11st. 9lb.	Mr. A. W. Wood	1

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE LEAGUES.—Chelsea, meeting last Saturday at Bristol with their fifth consecutive defeat, find themselves with half their First League programme fulfilled and only 14 points standing to their credit—a truly deplorable position for an organisation which commands greater public support than any other Association club in England. Although one point ahead of Bury and two points in front of Bradford City and Leicester Fosse, they are very little better off than these unsuccessful teams, and unless their fortunes mend in the immediate future, may very possibly find themselves at the bottom of the competition. Why the Stamford Bridge team should have fared so badly during the past two months it is difficult to understand, for there can be no question as to the individual ability of their forwards whatever opinion may be entertained as to the skill of some of the backs. Yet the dismal fact remains that of their last nine matches they have lost six, drawn two, and won only one, and averaged in these engagements no more than a goal a game. For all that, it may be recalled that during this disastrous period they have beaten Manchester United and drawn with Everton. The side thus cannot be regarded as in any way hopeless, but there can be no possibility of escaping the conclusion that, in the absence of some pronounced improvement, the club may have to struggle very hard to keep their place in the First Division. Should a danger of that description threaten a month or two hence, no doubt means will be found to strengthen the team sufficiently to escape from reduction to Division II., but the chance of such an experience is a sorry outlook for a side that started with such high hopes as did Chelsea a few months ago.

Woolwich Arsenal also have struck a vein of failure, the defeat sustained being the fourth in succession inflicted upon the side at Plumstead. With the Arsenal, however, matters are not quite so desperate as with Chelsea, thanks to some creditable work accomplished away from home—and it may be recalled that the Plumstead team started the season in such disastrous fashion as to hold out little hope of even the moderate measure of success already achieved. Like Chelsea, the Arsenal on Saturday went down by 1 to 0; but while Chelsea just lost after a big struggle, the Arsenal had chances enough to have ensured a victory. Apart from the Arsenal only Leicester Fosse suffered defeat at home yesterday, visiting clubs faring worse than on any Saturday for a long time past. Winning at Leicester, Everton maintained their position at the head of the League despite the successes of Newcastle United, Manchester United, and Sheffield Wednesday. The Newcastle match provided the first defeat of Blackburn Rovers away from Ewood Park this season. Sheffield Wednesday—beaten on the three previous Saturdays—only just got home against Bury who, behind at the interval, afterwards assumed the lead, and only lost in the last minute of the game. Apart from this match and that at Middlesborough, where, despite the absence of Bloomer, the home side defeated the Forest by 4 to 0, the scoring yesterday proved extremely poor, the other eight contests yielding only 14 goals in all.

Except in three instances, home clubs enjoyed a complete measure of success in the Second Division League matches. Those to go down on their own ground were Fulham, Birmingham, and Bradford, the defeats suffered by the first two being quite unexpected. Bradford, however, could not, in view of the form they have recently shown, have been at all hopeful of escaping a beating from Tottenham Hotspur. The Tottenham Club do not approach any nearer to West Bromwich Albion, who, in a hard game, overcame Stockport County ; but they now stand second on the list by themselves, their nearest rivals, Bolton Wanderers, being a point behind with two more matches played. Hotspur possess, therefore, an excellent chance of securing promotion, but much will depend upon how they get through the heavy holiday programme. For the moment, they are playing splendid football, and their good goal average may stand them in good stead later on. Fulham have dropped completely out of the running, their loss yesterday being the third in succession. Beaten for pace, they seldom looked like getting the better of Derby County. Birmingham, too, appear to have destroyed their chances which, a few weeks ago, were quite bright. Everything, therefore, is in favour of Tottenham Hotspur, at their first attempt, reaching the leading division.

Southampton had a narrow escape on Saturday, only failing light saving them from defeat at Leyton. They will have to visit the Essex ground again, and are scarcely likely to find the Leyton side in such form as on the occasion that so nearly made Southampton's record inferior to that of Northampton. To lead by two goals within ten minutes of time, and yet gain no reward entitles the Leyton team to much sympathy. In a lowly position they have recently improved, and it would have been a great triumph, as well as a very valuable help, to have vanquished the leaders. Winning handsomely at Plymouth against a rather weak Argyle eleven—Sutcliffe being among the absentees—Northampton are now within two points of their great rivals in the struggle for the championship, and have a match in hand. New Brompton, also winners away from home, rise steadily in the competition, while Bristol Rovers, who drew at Brentford, are also creeping up ; but for some time to come the fight for premier honours must rest between the two clubs which at present head the competition.

Association football was seen at its best at Vincent-square in the Dunn Cup tie between the Old Westminsters and Old Malvernians. On treacherous ground, very bare of grass, the dribbling, control of the ball, and passing were wonderfully precise. Rare pace, clever tackling, and honest charging were other characteristics of a game that had not a dull moment. The Malvernians won on their merits, and in accordance with expectation, for they have beaten both Oxford and Cambridge this season ; but, though always conveying the impression of being the better team, they had to wait long before assuring themselves of victory. S. H. Day and W. W. Lowe—still very fast—had most to do with the victory, that would have been more decisive, but for the fine goalkeeping of K. B. Anderson. Really, however, the Malvernians were chiefly indebted to their defence, R. N. Balfour, and E. H. Cuthbertson being perhaps the best among a remarkably capable set of halves and backs, who often spoiled the efforts of Stanley Harris and R. N. R. Blaker.

RUGBY RULES.

NORTH vs. SOUTH.—The South fifteen defeated the North in most decisive fashion at Franklin's ground, Northampton on Saturday by 4 placed goals and 3 tries (29 points) to 1 penalty goal and 2 tries (9 points). The ground was heavy and a drizzle having made the surface wet during the first few minutes, one can only describe the game as the fastest and most open one under conditions which three years ago would have produced an unsatisfactory mauling match between forwards that it has ever been my good fortune to witness. Much of the play was characterised by cleverness of a sort we used to expect from the New Zealand or the best national Welsh sides of a few years ago. The South tries were scored by Tarr, Bennetts, Mobbs, Bolton, Bolton, Assinder, and Assinder in the order named. Mobbs converted Tarr's try, and missed goal from Hobb's try, while Lyon converted both of Bolton's and also Assinder's first try. Carter and Mather scored for the North, while Pickering dropped a penalty goal from near half-way. The South scored thrice during the first half, while the North made all their points during the second portion of the game.

For the first twenty minutes the North pack got the ball four times to South's once, but, though Pinion and Ogletlorpe got it away frequently in good positions, both centres, Pickering and Greathead, were much too slow and clumsy, so that only once in some ten occasions did the ball reach either wing. Then Mather got away, but Mobbs came across and tackled well. The first score was due to a clever cut-in by Assinder, followed by Tarr's superior pace. The second was due to accurate passing by the Southern backs of the obvious order, Bennets finishing strongly, while the third followed a scrambling forward rush. The North's first try also followed a rush and then came Bolton's two scores, both clever ones for all concerned, especially the second. Pickering then dropped a splendid penalty goal from near half-way. Smart interception by Bennetts and in-and-out work down the right touch-line produced Assinder's first try and and similar play resulted in the second, after Chapman had made the dodging run of the match. Mather got over shortly afterwards after good passing right through by the North backs. That completed the scoring.

There was on the whole very little difference between the two packs. The North heeled much more quickly when they did heel, but their centres were quite unequal to the task before them. Most times when the South heeled a score seemed probable, while with the North the reverse was the case.

It only remains to add that at the last moment the Yorkshire captain, E. D. Ibbitson, came in for Singleton in the North pack, and that the attendance did not attain anything like the anticipated proportions. This cannot be ascribed to the weather unfavourable though that was. The fact is that the time has come to consider whether this annual fixture should not be played purely as a concession to tradition or as a territorial as opposed to a "trial" affair. The ideal way to select an England fifteen is to build it up with the Calcutta Cup fifteen of the previous year as a nucleus. The obvious objections to this arrangement on the score of the distance some players would have to travel would soon be overruled by the result obtained.

NEWPORT vs. AUSTRALIANS.—From the side beaten by Wales the Australians made four changes in the match at Newport, Dix, Wood, Middleton, and Row taking part instead of Carroll, Prentice, McCue, and Craig. The game took place on a wet ground before 9,000 people. Row kicked off, Thomas making a mark in reply, but the Australians quickly attacked. Williams mulling the ball Newport were hard pressed, and on several occasions their backs saved, but eventually the home defence was beaten, Dix receiving a swinging pass on the left wing, and scoring a try, which Carmichael converted with a splendid kick from the touch line. A free kick against the visitors enabled Newport to get into their opponents' quarters, but although Vile made a clever mark they failed to reap any real advantage, some scrambling play ensuing. Both sides worked with keenness, and at length Jack Jones was given a wide pass which he failed to reach. He kicked on, however, and then, picking up, passed to Baker, who scored a corner try, Stanley Williams failing with the place kick. The Australians afterwards pressed. In the ensuing play Mandible made a fine effort, from which the Colonials initiated a promising bout of passing, but Birt tackled cleverly and Stanley Williams relieved. The Newport forwards then dribbled into their opponents quarters, where Carmichael got his side out of an awkward position in a skilful manner. The home side, however, returned to the attack. Martin failing in an attempt to drop a goal. Both sides were penalised, and then Mandible, intercepting, had an opening, but lacked sufficient speed. At half-time the Australians were leading by one goal (5 points) to one try (3 points). On play being resumed Newport attacked, but the visitors soon took the play to the other end, their forwards bringing off short, sharp rushes in which plenty of vigour was imparted. Dix missed in trying to drop a goal, and Hickey blundered in a passing movement. After repeated attacks by the Australians J. Jones and Vile relieved by kicking. Newport spoiled their opponents' tactics by breaking up quickly, and although the Australians were always pressing they could not score in this half. Result:—Australians, 1 goal; Newport, 1 try.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY IN IRELAND.—Cambridge continued their Irish tour on Saturday when they met Monkstown, at Sydney Parade, in mild and damp weather, and on a pitch rendered soft by overnight rain. The visitors began in aggressive style, a run by Powell on the left looking dangerous until Parke tackled him splendidly and punted back to beyond half-way. The match had not been long in progress when Campbell burst across for a try, Wright missing what appeared to be an easy shot. Play settled at the centre from the restart, but eventually Cambridge worked their way to the vicinity of the Monkstown line, and the scores might have been equalised had Currie not missed a fairly easy pass. Play continued fast, but was by no means up to a high standard, errors of judgment being frequent on both sides. A free to Cambridge gave them a footing in the home territory, but they could not score, and at the interval were still 3 points to the bad.

The bustling methods, which Monkstown adopted after the restart were bound to tell, and after the ball had been bobbed about in the loose for a time Deane picked up and ran strongly for the Cambridge line. Here he passed to Overend, who went across for a try, to which Wright added the major points. An exchange of kicks by the backs was followed by the ball being kicked over the Monkstown line, and after this the Cambridge forwards were seen to much advantage. Holloway gave his backs plenty of opportunities, and from one Currie was only pulled up in the nick of time, after a clever run. Then, following a slight attack by the home lot, Ashcroft opened up nicely for Pyman, and the latter got over for a try, which remained unconverted. Play fluctuated for a time till Parke dribbled to within a few yards of the Cambridge line, kicked high, followed up, and beating the backs for speed, scored a try. Wright struck the upright in his effort to convert. Result:—Monkstown, 1 goal, 2 tries (11 points); Cambridge University, 1 try (3 points).

CAMBRIDGE vs. NORTH IRELAND.—This match, which concluded the Light Blues' Irish tour, was played on Monday at Ormeau, Belfast. The Irish fifteen are the champions of the North of Ireland Province, and are a capital combination, having beaten two of the strongest teams in Dublin, and they have an unbeaten record for the Northerner district.

The ground was in splendid order, and there was a large attendance of spectators. The opening exchanges favoured the home team, but they were not allowed to get dangerous, Atkinson clearing his lines with splendid kicks, and invariably finding touch. The Cambridge forwards, playing well together, got away in the loose, and Sutherland, picking up, sent out to Holloway, who transferred to Currie, when Gardner brought off a marvellous save right on the line. The home side were kept on the defensive, and fine tackling alone kept Cambridge out. Some neat work by Stewart and Miscampbell, and later by Pollock, put the Light Blues' line in danger, and but for Currie coming to the rescue when a try appeared certain, Cambridge would have been three points down. Eventually the 'Varsity backs got away, Sutherland putting them in motion, and after a run by Holloway, Pyman, and Powell, Fraser rushed in and scored, Morton failing at goal. This was all the scoring in the first half.

The second half found the Light Blues on the line immediately after the resumption, but although having three-parts of the play, it was not until ten minutes from the close that the 'Varsity increased their score, Powell going over after a pretty bout of passing. Morton landed a goal. The North were badly beaten at this point, and breaking away from midfield, the visitors' forwards carried all before them, with the result that Purvis scored the third try, Morton failing to improve. A good and fast game, in which Cambridge had much the better of the play, ended with the score:—Cambridge University, 1 goal, 2 tries (11 points); North of Ireland, nil.

ROSSLYN PARK vs. OLD UPPINGHAMIANS.—The forwards assumed command of most of this game, at Richmond on Saturday, played before a very fair attendance. The softness of the ground and greasiness of the ball militated against anything like accurate passing, and the game, for the most part, consisted of a series of dribbles by the forwards, though at times there were some very good individual efforts, notably by the Park, in the second half. As a matter of fact, however, there was only one score, that by Bryning for the Uppinghamians, which came some ten minutes after the start, as the result of a capital opening made by Philcox. The kick at goal was unsuccessful. Following this, the game to the interval was fairly even, and the teams crossed over with the Old Boys leading by 3 points to 0.

For some time in the second half Rosslyn Park had the best of matters, but just lacked the finish necessary to score. Treloar had very hard luck on one occasion. The Uppinghamians made great efforts to increase their lead, but were kept out by a really good defence, which, though they were pressing right to the end, they could not pierce. Result:—Old Uppinghamians, 1 try (3 points); Rosslyn Park, 0.

ST. THOMAS'S H. vs. U.C.S. OLD BOYS.—At Chiswick, on Saturday, St. Thomas's Hospital, who were better represented than usual, gained an easy victory over the U.C.S. Old Boys by 3 goals and a try to nothing. The game started late, and the Old Boys played one short in the first half. The Medicos soon showed their superiority and after a nice combined run, Dallschaft, who figured in the "threes," scored in a good position, and Meakin goaled. The home team continued to monopolise the play, and before half-time Bowring got over on two occasions, Meakin adding the extra points each time.

The second half was more evenly contested, with the Hospital doing most of the pressing. The Old Boys' defence, however, held out until near time, when Bowring again got over at the corner after some nice passing amongst the "threes." Meakin made a good shot at goal, the ball just going wide. Result:—St. Thomas's Hospital, 3 goals and 1 try (18 points); U.C.S. Old Boys, 0.

GUY'S HOSPITAL vs. BEDFORD.—The turf at Honour Oak Park was very heavy for this match on Saturday, and the visitors never settled down. The home side played a fine open game, and well deserved their victory by 18 points to 0. Quite early in the play Mullins, who played a sound forward game, gained a try, which Stokes converted splendidly. The Hospital pack then took charge of the game, and, heeling out constantly, Monaghan and Medlock sent several passes out, so that the Hospital three-quarters were constantly moving, and a round of handling saw Stokes gain a try near the posts. A conversion by the same player put Guy's 10 points to the good. From this on Guy's halves and three-quarters were perpetually passing and repassing, one round of which ended in Stokes grounding a try in the corner; he made an excellent attempt at goaling, but the ball fell short. At half-time Guy's led by 13 points to 0.

After the interval, Bedford were a little more aggressive, but they never appeared dangerous. Guy's were the stronger at all points of the game, and their forwards, especially Stranach and Roberts, must be awarded praise for their display. With about ten minutes to go, the last-named added a try, from some scrambling play near the line, and Guy's were 18 points ahead. Stokes converting Roberts's try with a magnificent kick. There was no further scoring, and the game ended, as it commenced, with Guy's attacking strongly. Result:—Guy's, 5 goals and 1 try (18 points). Bedford, 0.

AUSTRALIANS vs. ABERTILLERY.—Before a crowd of 10,000 spectators, the Australians met Abertillery on the 21st instant on turf which proved to be the worst they have played on during the tour. The ground was very heavy, and most of the grass had been worn off. The home forwards played splendidly, and except that they had the worst of the [illegible]ng, they beat the Colonials' pack everywhere. A [illegible] represented the run of the play, although the [illegible] lucky in their score.

The homesters started well, and Russell [illegible] the heavy ball, the home forwards led a dri[illegible] visitors' line, and forced a minor. Fine kicking by [illegible] helped them to attack, but the rushes of the Aber[illegible] wards were giving the Colonials a lot of trouble. [illegible] held on a trifle too long, and should have scored. Carmicha[illegible] failed with an easy shot from a mark by McKivatt, and then Moran led a rush, which was just stopped by Hodges. Towards the interval the Australians had a few chances to score, but the heavy ground was against them, and at the interval there was no score.

The homesters resumed in great style, and carrying play into the Australians' "25," the ball was kicked out to Bowen, on the left wing, who just failed to score. Directly afterwards, Thomas was just stopped by Carmichael. The game was at this point being contested in semi-darkness. The Colonials tried several passing movements, each of which was stopped either by faulty handling or good tackling.

The Australians had their best chance of the match when a long pass was thrown out to Russell, but he failed to take it with the line at his mercy on the extreme left wing. Abertillery were penalised, and Carmichael placed a goal with a brilliant kick. Nothing daunted, the homesters set to work, and Bowen scored after a rush, Webb failing to convert. Nothing further was scored, and the result was:—Australians, (1pg), 3 points; Abertillery (1t), 3 points.

AUSTRALIANS.—P. Carmichael, C. Russell, E. Mandible, [illegible] Dix, and J. Hickey; F. Woods and C. McKivatt; J. Barnett, T. Griffin, C. Hammond, P. McCue, A. B. Burge, N. Rowe, S. A. Middleton and Dr. H. M. Moran (capt.).

ABERTILLERY.—C. Hodges; W. Bowen, C. James, D. J. Boots, and L. Thomas; W. Hodges and W. Richardson; J. Winmill (capt.), J. Webb, J. Blakemore, T. Dykes, J. Webb, W. Powell, J. Howells and T. Williams.

CRICKET.

RANJITSINGHJI'S FAREWELL.—Now that H. H. the Jam of Nawanagar has left this country for India, it will probably be some considerable time before he is again seen on an English cricket field, and, in view of the fact that he is now in his 37th year, it may be that we have seen the last of that great batsman in first-class cricket.

As a batsman, "Ranji," was unique. The easy grace which marked his batting, and the leg glance, which became so famous, were alike characteristics peculiarly his own. On a fast wicket he was probably the most feared batsman in England. Keenness of eye and flexibility of wrists played a great part in his success, but his style was so distinctive, and his strokes so original and varied that it would be difficult to place him in any particular class as a batsman—it can only be said that he was unique. He has been described as the "Wizard of Cricket," and he justified the title not only in his methods as a batsman, but also in the field.

Kumar Shri Ranjitsinghji was born on 10th September 1872, at Sarodar, India. He first played cricket in his school days in India, but until he came to England — knowledge of the game was, naturally, extremely limited. Going up to Cambridge University, he was very successful in college matches, and it was generally considered that he should have been given a place in the eleven of 1892. Recognition, however, came in 1893, when he played 15 innings for his University, scoring 386 runs and averaging 29·9. He played against Oxford's at Lord's, but did nothing of note, making 9 in the first innings and 0 in the second. Having left Cambridge and not being as yet qualified for Sussex, he did little in 1894, but in 1895, he made a sensational first appearance for the South Coast county, scoring 77 not out and 150 in the match with the M.C.C. at Lord's. This was his first century innings in important cricket. In the same season, he headed the Sussex averages, and this feat he repeated in 1896, 1897, 1899, and 1900-01-02-08.

In 1896, he first played for England against Australia, and in his first Test match he scored 62 and 154 not out. That year he headed the English batting averages against Australia in Test matches, and he also made his first appearance for the Gentlemen against the Players at Lord's. In this match he made 47 and 51 not out. He also performed the unique feat—and it is still unbeaten—of making two separate centuries, not only in the same match, but on the same day. This, too, against the Yorkshire bowling. This was the only occasion on which he made two centuries in the same match, although he came very near to repeating the feat some years later—against Lancashire in 1904, to be exact. In the Sussex first innings he had made 99, when he commenced to take the spectators' breath away—as he delighted to do at critical moments—by making a series of palpably fluky strokes. One of these proved fatal, and with his score one short of the century the Indian retired. Perhaps he subsequently wished he had taken no risks, for at his second attempt he made 207 not out!

At the end of season 1897, he accompanied Stoddart's team to Australia, and in the first Test match at Sydney compiled a masterly 175. This innings was one of the greatest of his career, as he had been very ill until just before the match, but this notwithstanding he played beautiful cricket throughout. He was very successful during the tour, doing particularly well in the big matches.

In 1898, he visited India and took no part in English cricket, but in the following season he set up a record which stood for a long time by scoring 3,159 runs in first-class cricket alone. He played for England in all five matches against Australia, and came out second in the Test match averages. In September of the same season he took a team to America, where, during a short tour, matches were played in Philadelphia and Canada. In 1900, he maintained his form of the previous season, and again topped 3,000 runs. For Sussex against Leicestershire, he made the huge score of 275. This innings occupied him 5 hours and 5 minutes, and he gave only one chance. In the following season, however, he exceeded ...is score by ten. Somerset were the victims this time, and when play started on the last day of the match, Sussex had so much the worse of the position that it seemed long odds on the Westerners winning. But Ranjitsinghji saved the game for Sussex, and was not out at the finish. This was the ... score of his career.

...he did not play so much as in former years, but ... 1,000 runs, and in one memorable match at ... the Surrey bowling for 234 not out. In the ...s of that season he was singularly unsuccessful. ... again made a double-century against Surrey.

...ther peculiar that, though he had played in Gentle... Players matches since 1896, it was not until 1904 ...at he made his first and only century in these contests. In that season he made 121, which did not include a single chance, in the Lord's match.

After 1904, no more was seen of him in English cricket until last season. Going to India originally on a motoring and shooting expedition, his return was from time to time postponed, and when the then Jam of Nawanagar died, "Ranji" eventually succeeded in proving his claim to the succession. His return last year, and his reappearance in English cricket last season are events of too recent occurrence to require more than a brief reference. Though not so active as in earlier days, he showed that he is still a great batsman, and the scenes at Lord's, when he made his first century of the season, against Middlesex, showed that his popularity with the English public is still as great as ever.

GOLF.

EX-MINISTERS AND PROFESSIONALS IN A FOURSOME.—Yet a further addition to the number of golf courses within easy reach of the metropolis was on Saturday introduced to the public. It is the green of the Knebworth Club, laid out on the estate of the Earl of Lytton, at Knebworth, Herts, and, situate so conveniently as to enable the London golfer to be on the first tee within an hour of his leaving King's Cross. The programme for the opening day was of a very interesting character. In the morning James Braid (the open champion) and Harry Vardon contested a single, which Vardon won by 2 and 1, while in the afternon Mr. A. J Balfour, M.P., and Braid met the Hon'ble A. Lyttelton, M.P., and Vardon in a foursome. Mr. Balfour and the famous Walton Heath professional were partners on the occasion of the opening of the Warminster course last year, and they beat Mr. J. H. Aitken (the captain of the Warminster Club) and Vardon by 2 and 1. However, at Knebworth, they putted badly, and Mr. Lyttelton and Vardon gained an easy victory by 5 and 4. Vardon was right on his short game, and he putted with something like his old-time confidence. In the morning there was an accident, which might have been serious. Vardon's tee shot to the ninth hole striking on the face a lady who was standing close to the line of play. Fortunately, the ball just missed her eyes, and no great harm resulted.

At the inaugural luncheon, Mr. Balfour proposed the toast of "The Knebworth Golf Club." He said that the occasion was not an appropriate one for oratory. As a fact, the persons who made speeches or listened to speeches instead of playing golf, hardly appreciated the possibilities of life. He thought that they ought to thank Lord Lytton for promoting a club which would doubtless be a boon to Knebworth, and to many golfers resident in London.

In the single, Braid and Vardon began indifferently by taking 6 each to the first hole, which measures 520 yards. Vardon, after being bunkered from his tee shot, halved the second in 4, but he lost the third, where he was in the rough. A pulled tee shot by Braid saw the game again become square at the fourth, but the champion regained the lead at the sixth. He missed a two-yards putt for a half at the seventh, but won the eighth, where Vardon failed to get down from a distance of four feet. Turning 1 up, Braid lost the tenth, where he was short with his approach, and, although he went to the front again at the twelfth, Vardon drew level by holing a three yards putt at the thirteenth. Another successful putt of about the same length gave the ex-champion the lead for the first time at the fifteenth, and he secured the match at the seventeenth, where Braid pulled his second shot into the bunker. The scores were:—

BRAID.

Out: 6 4 5 4 5 4 4 5 4—41; Home: 5 3 5 4 4 5 4 5 5—40; total, 81.

VARDON.

Out: 6 4 6 3 5 5 3 6 4—42; Home: 4 3 6 3 4 4 4 4 5—37; total, 79.

In the foursome the first hole was halved in a steady 5, but Mr. Lyttelton and Vardon won the second in 4. Both sides were weak on the green at the third, which was divided in 6, but Mr. Lyttelton and Vardon became two up at the fourth, Mr. Balfour missing a holeable putt for a half, and three up at the fifth, where the ex-Premier was again weak on the green. At the sixth, Mr. Lyttelton and Vardon were in trouble and the former missed a two-yards putt for a half, but they again became three up at the seventh. Vardon negotiating a half stymie, and increased their lead to four at the eighth, where Mr. Balfour's tee shot was bunkered. At the ninth, Vardon left his partner a stymie, and as Mr. Lyttelton could not get round it, they lost the hole and turned three up.

Coming home the tenth hole was halved, but Vardon ran down a putt of two yards for the eleventh, where Braid drove into the bunker. The champion missed a yard putt for a half at the twelfth, but he and his partner won the thirteenth, where Mr. Lyttelton's second shot was bunkered. On the next green, Mr. Lyttelton holed a putt of three yards, which gave his side the match. The bye was halved. Appended are the approximate scores:—

MR LYTTELTON AND VARDON.

Out: 5 4 6 4 4 7 3 5 5—43; Home: 5 4 6 5 3 6 4 5 4—42; total, 85.

MR. BALFOUR AND BRAID.

Out: 5 5 6 5 5 6 4 7 4—47; Home: 5 5 7 4 4 5 4 5 5—44; total, 91.

The course, which was laid out by Willie Park, was naturally a trifle heavy; but, with its subsoil of light gravel and other advantages, it promises to be an excellent green at all times of the year. Its length is nearly 6,000 yards.

ROWING.

LONDON, R.C.—On Saturday, the London R.C. held their winter eights at Putney, the course being from the Crabtree to the boathouse. Result: Centre station—A. N. Cameron (bow), R. H. Billinghurst, L. A. Durrant, F. S. Bond, C. R. Towers, H. W. Stout, H. Wallington, J. E. Dewar (str.), J. Ward (cox.), 1; Surrey station—P. H. Russell (bow), W. H. Levy, M. H. Meltzer, E. B. Allnut, E. L. V. Johnson (cox.), 3. Won by a quarter-length; one and a half lengths between second and third. It is worthy of note that H. J. Rust, who was No. 5 in Smallgrove's crew, rowed in the winning Thames Grand crew as far back as 1878.

BILLIARDS.

H. W. STEVENSON VS. M. INMAN.—The ninth heat in Messrs. Burrough's and Watt's Great American Tournament was the most important of the series, as it brought together the only undefeated candidates in the competition, namely, Stevenson (scratch) and Inman (receives 2,000 points start). At every sitting the Soho-square saloon was crowded to excess, and a great struggle was witnessed during the first four days, and it was not until Friday that the scratch man was able to get in front and when play was continued on Saturday afternoon he led by 430 points with the scores reading Stevenson 7,150, Inman 6,720. At the afternoon session the former quickly placed the issue beyond doubt, as after increasing an unfinished break of 164 into 458, the highest of the game, he compiled 76, 182, 117 and 139, against Inman's 213, 68 and 118. At the adjournment Stevenson led by 923 points, the scores being called:—

STEVENSON (in play)	6,207

At night both men played well, but Stevenson had no difficulty in retaining his unbeaten certificate, for when the end came the margin between them was no less than 935. His chief breaks were 86, 105, 116, 222 and 99, while Inman was credited with 78, 124, 67, 109 and 141. Result:—

STEVENSON	9,000
INMAN	8,065

Hunting.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

THOUGH there was no actual "kill," a long and enjoyable run was experienced last Bye-day, when a big field met at the Cross Roads, melon ground. Travellers from Bombay had ample time to come up and join the Bandra residents owing to a longish wait before light sufficed.

It is curious sometimes that scent is good when unexpected, the morning seeming warm and dry, but hounds having apparently no difficulty in finding as soon as they were put to it. First heading for the railway crossing, our quarry was good enough to turn and give us a good gallop along Bomanwadi to the Backwater. On the other side of the stream the growth was rather dense, and moreover a regular "Grand Nash" stone wall with a deep pit on the landing side had the effect of making nearly all turn and meet the pack, after going round, at the main road. Making for the Powai range of hills, we are led straight up a stiff one, most people electing to keep to the valley. The jack was hard pressed but turning sharp managed to get a lead and eventually found safe concealment amongst the rocks on the slope.

A similar sort of run occurred on Tuesday when we met at the foot of Jackal Hill. It was again a still morning and very dark, the field making its way by the light of lanterns through the huts at Parla. The first attempt was made half way to Chuckla Hill without success, as also the Groves so a move was made along the lane to the Mango Tope. In the very thickest part of it, hounds at last gave tongue. Skirting the plantation, we get into full view round Robert's Corner and enter upon a delightful stretch towards Goregaum. Travelling very fast, we reach the dense woods which once more come to the quarry's assistance. Whether owing to embarras de richesse or some other cause, hounds split up and had to be drawn off after a bloodless run.

A longer run, but with the same sort of termination, was that of Thursday when the return of those who had been out of town for the holidays made up a big field. It was cooler and altogether more promising at the rendezvous near the Kennels, the dry tank by Parla being first tackled. We were soon pounding away over the adjoining rice fields into the open ground beyond as far as Sahar Hill. Turning away from the village, we enter Bomanwadi Valley at a gallop and then on to the Andheri Road. Reaching Marole, a mango tope fenced in by cactus and a stone wall faces us, those entering having to negotiate the latter obstacle, a stiff lep. Crossing the Backwater, we reach a steep hill with distinctly unpleasant, prickly plantations of aloes on its slopes. A check on the summit enables the field to skirt a factory at a time when the whistle was at its full. On the Vehar Road hounds get on again pushing through the woods, but after twisting about in them, the jack had at last to be given up.

OLD CLIFF.

Paperchasing.

CALCUTTA PAPERCHASES.

MESSRS. ALLEN AND DALGLISH were particularly happy in their choice of a course for the paperchase on the 6th and provided the chasers with good going, interesting country and lots of nice jumping. The start was just at the side of the red road, and the paper went through the old man's crossing and, after a circuit of something over three miles, came back through the far railway crossing to the finish in the open near the start. Fields in both chases were a bit below the mark and spectators and those who "follow round slowly" were a much reduced body, no doubt due to the jading effects of Xmas week festivities, and we shall see as big a crowd as ever out at Jodpur Thana to-morrow. In the horse chase the leaders all ran off the paper at one rather tricky bend and consequently Captain Hill, who stuck to the trail, was able to come in on Tired Tim. The pony chase was a chapter of accidents. First of all there was a false start as the level crossing gates were shut at the first time of asking and the field had to be sent again. Then Mr. Muir, who was leading half way round by thirty lengths, disappeared and didn't turn up again and at the finish Mr. Ballantyne coming in unattended took a purler, at the very last jump! He luckily managed to scramble on his mare again, broken reins and all and just jogged between the flags in time to save his place. There was a good deal of grief in this chase and among others Bandy Leg gave Mr. McDonnell a bad purler at a sort of open ditch and brought Mr. Hutchison down at the same jump.

The following was the order in the two chases:—

HORSES.—1 Captain Hill on Tired Tim; 2 Captain Holden on Lord Harry; 3 Mr. Ballantyne on Fairy; 4 Mr. Curtis-Hayward on Pardon: 5 Mr. Laing on Rainbow; 6 Mr. Robertson on Solanus; 7 Mr. Muir on Ungava; 8 Mr. Dudley Myers on Sir Walter; 9 Miss McCrae on Honesty; 10 Mrs. Dods on Dainty; 11 Captain Gibbs on Trilby.

Mr. Morris, on Blue Bell, finished fifth but made some mistake in the course and was unplaced.

PONIES.—1 Mrs. Lamond Walker on Night; 2 Captain Holden on Pathfinder; 3 Mr. Tegart on Shiela; 4 Mr. Corbett on Pink 'Un; 5 Mr. Hilliard on Tiska; 6 Mr. Ballantyne on Meprise; 7 Mr. Lamotte on a Bay; 8 Mr Allan Harvey on Starboard Light; 9 Mr. Radmore on a Grey; 10 Mr. Tremearne on Ruling Passion; followed by Messrs. Deakin, Milton and a few others.

Polo.

POLO IN POONA

THE Polo ground being the only place where there seemed any signs of activity on the afternoon of New Year's Day, there was a big attendance when the Alderson Tournament was continued after a considerable interval. Only one game was played, this being between the Divisional Staff, scratch, and the R.F.A. No. 1, plus 4. It was an exciting game, as after a blank chukker, the Staff could only score once in the second. The third, however, they had all their own way and scoring three times, drew level for the General himself to hit the winning goal in the next.

ANOTHER big crowd on Monday, when the M.I. No. 2, plus 4, and Miners, plus 3, met. The Miners immediately took the lead with two goals in the first and in a similar number in the second. The M.I. played pluckily throughout and hit a goal in the third, but the Miners adding one in the last ran out winners by 8 goals to 5.

THE NATIVE INFANTRY TOURNAMENT.

THE Native Infantry Polo Tournament began at Peshawar on the 4th instant when the preliminary round was played off. Seven teams had entered, the ground was in excellent condition and the weather perfect. The first game was between the 53rd Sikhs and 2-5th Gurkhas, the Sikhs having the best of the play and eventually winning by 4 goals to 2. The next was an exceptionally fast game and a hard fight all through. The 57th Rifles were expected to win, but their opponents, the 59th Rifles, gave a splendid display and ran out victorious by 4 goals to 1. The match between the 26th Punjabis and the Guides Infantry was the last down for decision: the Guides had the upper hand all through and won by 6 goals to 1.

Semi-Finals.

The semi-finals were played on the 6th instant. In the first game the 53rd Sikhs met the 59th Rifles. The 53rd's goal was besieged during the first two chukkers, but they defended well and helped by misses on the part of the Rifles kept their charge intact. The 59th drew first blood in the third period and on resuming the 53rd immediately sent the ball through the posts but they were judged off-side and the Rifles scoring again in the last chukker won by 2 goals to nil. Teams were:—

Capt. T. J. Williams	(back).	Maj. A. F. Ferguson Davie	back.

The second game was between the Guides Infantry and the 22nd Punjabis, who had drawn a bye in the first round. The Guides were better mounted, and though the 22nd played hard, they were beaten by 4 goals to 1. The first period was pointless, but the Guides scored twice in the second chukker, and once in each of the remaining periods. The Punjabis' only goal being in the final chukker. Teams:—

"Good gracious me!" said the local ironmonger, as Mr. Carpottle entered the shop. "However, have you managed to get your face torn like that? Have you been trying cross-country running by night through thorn hedges, or have you been using a piece of barbed wire for face massage. Or has your wife——"

"Jest not," said Mr. Carpottle. "You remember supplying me with a luminous plate to fit over the front door keyhole, because when I happen to be detained at the office and come home late, I find it difficult to get my latchkey into the right place. Well, this is the result of using that invention."

"Didn't you see it glowing distinctly in the darkness?"

"I did," replied Mr. Carpottle, "and I plunged the key into it, but it happened to be the one remaining eye of our old cat, who was sitting on the doorstep."

WINCHESTER

HIGH POWER BIG GAME RIFLES.

When you want to drive a ten-penny nail you don't use a tack hammer. For the same reason when you set off to hunt big game generally shot at fairly long range don't take a medium or low power rifle just because you happen to have one, but carry a long, strong shooting rifle—one that hits a smashing, knock-down blow. Such rifles as the Winchester Model 1886 .33 caliber; the Model 1895 .30 Army, .303 British, .35 and .405 calibers; and the Model 1907 .351 caliber, using High Power Smokeless Powder Cartridges with metal patched soft pointed bullets. The bullets used in these cartridges have a good-sized cross section which gives them great killing power at the distances most big game is shot. The accuracy of these rifles and cartridges has been thoroughly established and if you sight right the game is yours.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA C. C. vs. NATTORE'S XI.—The return match between these teams was played on the 9th and 10th instant the Nattore XI winning by an innings and 26 runs. They batted first and at the close of play on Saturday had scored 174 for five wickets. The remaining batsmen could only add 20 the next day and the innings closed for 194. Calcutta were dismissed for 95 in their first innings. Craik gave a sound display and made 43, Reid, Horncastle and Stewart being the only others to reach double figures. Following on, Calcutta fared even worse and were all out for 73. Baloo bowled very successfuly, taking 6 wickets for 84 runs in the first innings and 6 for 25 in the second. Score :—

CRICKET AT PATIALA.

PATIALA C.C. vs. MAJOR FOLEY'S TEAM.—A very interesting match from start to finish was concluded in a draw on the 28th and 29th of December, between Major Foley's Team and the Patiala Cricket Club. In the first innings Patiala made 172 with the Maharaja's contribution of 32, and Tara Chand's 60, while, Major Foley's Team carried their total to 231; the whole eleven bar two made double figures. Captain Moore specially played a beautiful innings of 71. In the second innings Patiala gave a grand display, gaining 253 for two wickets only. Tarrant and the Maharaja made a brilliant stand, and scored 80 not out and 98 respectively. They were warmly cheered for their capital innings. Little time was left for Major Foley's Team; and in about 40 mnutes they scored 49 at the expense of 5 wickets of which Mistri took four for 15 runs. The following is the score :—

Messrs. A. L. S. Roberts and R. D. England, who tied for the St. Andrew's Gold Medal, played off their tie in the above competition, Mr. Roberts beating his opponent by 2 strokes on the 18 holes.

The tie for the St. George's Gold Medal between Messrs. E. Comber and Aitken was played off last week. Mr. Aitken defeating his opponent.

LADIES' AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.

THE Championship was continued on the 6th instant, when the semi-finals were played. The match between Mrs. Begg and Mrs. Holdsworth Hunt was very even. They were all square when they started on the return journey, the next two holes were won in turn, Mrs. Holdsworth Hunt won the 12th and 13th, and Mrs. Begg the 15th: the next two were halved leaving Mrs. Hunt dormy one: she won the last hole and the match by 2 up. Mrs. Windsor met Mrs. Lamond Walker on the same day and won the match by 4 up and 3 to play. She won the first two holes, halved the 3rd, 4th and 5th, won the 6th, and halving the next three was 3 up at the turn. She also won the 10th, the 11th went to Mrs. Walker and the 13th and 14th were halved; Mrs. Windsor won the 15th, and halving the next won the match by 4 up and 3 to play. Her score for the 18 holes was 98.

The final round between Mrs. Holdsworth Hunt and Mrs. Windsor was played on Friday last, and produced excellent golf and a close and exciting finish. The first hole fell to Mrs. Holdsworth Hunt, but she lost the second: the next two holes were won in turn and Mrs. Windsor secured the 5th and 6th holes. The 7th and 8th went to Mrs. Hunt and the ninth being halved, they were all square at the turn. Mrs. Windsor won the 10th and 11th holes, the 12th fell to Mrs. Hunt and the 13th was halved. Mrs. Windsor won the 14th and was 2 up at this stage and the excitement was intense.

Mrs. Hunt won the 15th hole and also the sixteenth making the match all square and 2 to play. The 17th was halved in 6 and amidst great enthusiasm Mrs. Holdsworth Hunt took the next hole and won the Championship by 1 up.

GOLF IN SHILLONG.

DURING the Xmas week, there have been several "golfing enthusiasts" visiting Shillong. They are all more than satisfied with the links though they rightly urge the greens might well be better. The usual monthly medal competition was played on 18th December with the following result. It was not a day for good rounds as a nasty cross wind was blowing all the time.

Padgett and Tindall played again on 1st January, when the former won with 102−24=78.

"I understand," said the Manager, "that you have had a half day off to attend your aunt's funeral?"

"Yes, sir," said the Junior Clerk.

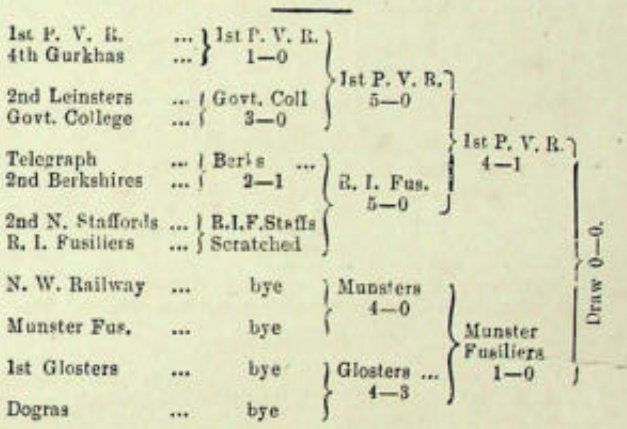
"And did all go well at the final ceremony?" asked the kindly employer.

"Oh, it wasn't the final sir. It was only the semi-final," said the absent-minded enthusiast.

"Directoire dresses," says a ladies' paper, "show the influence of that period." That's quite a sweetly delicate way of putting it.

Hockey.

ALDERSON TOURNAMENT.



POONA is at present enjoying a further bit of sport as well as the Alderson Polo Tournament, the General having given a handsome Challenge Cup for a Divisional Hockey Tournament.

Play commenced on Tuesday, when a very exciting game was seen between the Lincolns and Northamptons. Each scoring once, the match replayed on Wednesday, before a big crowd, the Northamptons winning by 2 goals to nil.

On Thursday two games were played and both proved interesting. The Bombay Volunteer Artillery received their quietus at the hands of the Worcesters by 3 goals to nil.

In the other, the 3rd Sappers and Miners beat the 127th Baluchis by a goal to nil.

The Naturalist.

THE BALUCHISTAN NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

PROCEEDINGS of a meeting of the Baluchistan Natural History Society held in the Quetta Museum and Library Building on Thursday, the 26th November 1908.

PRESENT.—President:—The Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.

Members:—Mr. A. Anderson, Mr. W. G. Chapman, Mr. E. G. Foley, Major F. H. Goodwin, R.A.M.C., D.S.O., Mr. K. S. Marker, A.D., Dr. D. S. Otto, Mr. K. B. Patel, B.D., Mr. Shiawakshaw Pherozshaw.

Honorary Secretary:—Mr. J. W. N. Cumming.

Read communications from Messrs. Smith and Flynn expressing regret at their inability to attend.

Read letter, dated 23rd October 1908, from Lieutenant S. J. Bhathena, I.M.S., resigning his membership owing to his transfer to Poona.

Read extract from a letter, dated 16th November 1908, from Mr. Edward Comber, Karachi, to the address of the Hon'ble President, stating that the British Museum would be glad of specimens of Jackals and Foxes from Baluchistan and that flat skins with measurements and skulls would do.

The Hon'ble President expressed the hope that Members would endeavour to collect and send in skins of as many Jackals, Foxes and also Wolves as they could get as to be able to send some on to the British Museum and again strongly emphasised the necessity for collecting and preserving anything and everything, even the commonest animals and insects. He also invited Dr. Otto's special attention to the necessity for making a collection of the snakes procurable in Sharigh.

The Honorary Secretary placed before the Meeting a list of the specimens donated to the Museum since the last Meeting with the specimens themselves. The more important of these were :—

A fine Wolf, Canis lupus, Linn., from Quetta, presented by Captain G. H. Wedgwood.

A Marten* from Quetta, presented by Mr. W. C. Wichmann.

A pair of horns of the Persian wild Goat (Ibex.) Capra aegagrus, Gmel., obtained by purchase.

A fine young Cinereous Vulture, Voltur monachus, Linn., from Ziarat, presented by Captain A. D. G. Ramsay.

A Bittern, Botaurus stellaris, Linn., from Sind, presented by Mr. F. M A. Beaty.

Two Rose-ringed Paroquets, Palæornis torquatus, Bodd, from Jhatpat, presented by Mr. T. Clear.

A Green Shank, Totanus glottis Linn, from Bostan, presented by Mr. A. A. Flynn.

*This has since been identified as the Beech Marten.

A White-headed (or Stiff-tailed) Duck, Erismatura leucocephala, Scop, from Quetta, presented by Major C. M. Moore.

Read letter No. 7064, dated 19th November 1908, from the Director, Geological Survey of India, forwarding a list giving particulars respecting the geological specimens sent to him by the Museum for favour of identification and advising return of the specimens in question excepting one which had been retained for further examination and regarding which he desired further particulars.

Resolved that the receipt of the identified specimens be awaited and that meanwhile, further particulars in respect of the specimen retained by the Geological Department be asked for from the donor.

Read letter, dated 22nd November 1908, from Captain J. D. Richmond, R.A.M.C., thanking the President and Members of the Society for electing him a member of the Society.

The names of the following gentlemen were next brought up for election as members :—

Lieutenant B. G. Bignell, R.G.A., proposed by Mr. J. W. N. Cumming and seconded by the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon.

Captain Terence Keyes, I.A., proposed by the Hon'ble Sir Henry McMahon and seconded by Major T. H. Goodwin.

Carried.

There being no further business the meeting adjourned.

J. W. N. CUMMING,
Honorary Secretary.

THE LONDON COMEDY COMPANY.

THE Ward Company gave us a real dramatic treat last week when they presented "The Social Highwayman" on Thursday and Friday and followed it up with "The Test Supreme" and "Young Mrs. Winthrop" on Saturday. In such a brilliant repertoire as that possessed by this talented company it is difficult to select any piece as being better than the others, but we think we might say without fear of contradiction that the powerful drama "The Social Highwayman," which is somewhat reminiscent of "Raffles," ranks among the best things the Company have staged so far. Courtice Jaffrey, unsuccessful in Life's battle as an honest man, is impelled by the penury of his widowed mother to acquire wealth by dishonest means. He takes advantages of his position in society to rob his wealthy friends, and is soon prosperous, while his lovable disposition gains him numerous friends. As in "Raffles," a woman, possessed of his secret and jealous of his love for another, seeks the highwayman's undoing. Leila Capricesi threatens to expose him but is prevented from doing so by Jaffrey's servant, Hanby, an ex-convict who, possesses an important page of her life's history. He knows she has committed bigamy and threatens to expose her in turn, and thus secures his master's safety. At length Martin Harley, one of Jaffrey's friends, is suspected of the robberies, and to clear his friend of the charge Jaffrey confesses. While his auditors are speechless with astonishment he meets with a tragic end, being killed by falling masonry while rescuing the girl he loves. Mr. Wykeham as Courtice Jaffrey gave an admirable rendering of the part, playing with an easy restraint that carried everyone with him and proved him a finished artiste. Mr. Ward as Jenkins Hanby, the faithful servant, was a capital study. The parts of Jaffrey's friends were all well taken by Messrs. Ryott, Beattie, Eldred, Greig and Wallace. Miss Palotta was excellent in the difficult role of Leila Caprices and Miss Musgrave, as Elinor Burnham, with whom Jaffrey is in love, gave further evidence of high histrionic skill. Miss Ghiloni was well suited as the Duchess of Clayborough and Miss Baxter was realistic as a clairvoyant. The piece was exceptionally well staged.

On Saturday a double bill was presented. The one act American dramatic episode, "The Test Supreme," which had been so well received the previous week, was repeated and was followed by a revival of "Young Mrs. Winthrop." In "The Test Supreme" Miss Palotta and Messrs. Ward and Wykeham gave us a piece of emotional acting such as has seldom been seen in Calcutta, and in Bronson Howard's four-act drama, Mr. Wykeham and Miss Musgrove repeated their former success and once more proved themselves front rank actors. The part of the kind-hearted old lawyer who unravels the matrimonial tangle could not have been better played than it was by Mr. Ward; and Miss Grace Palotta as Mrs. Dick Chetwyn, the society butterfly, was a triumph, while her dresses were the admiration of all present. The other parts were all excellently played. Some of the old favourites are being staged this week and on Monday we are promissed an entirely new play, entitled "The Fencing Master."

The following extract from a letter of thanks is cherished by its recipient:

"The beautiful clock you sent us came in perfect condition, and is now in the parlour on top of the bookshelves, where we hope to see you soon, and your husband, also, if he can make it convenient."

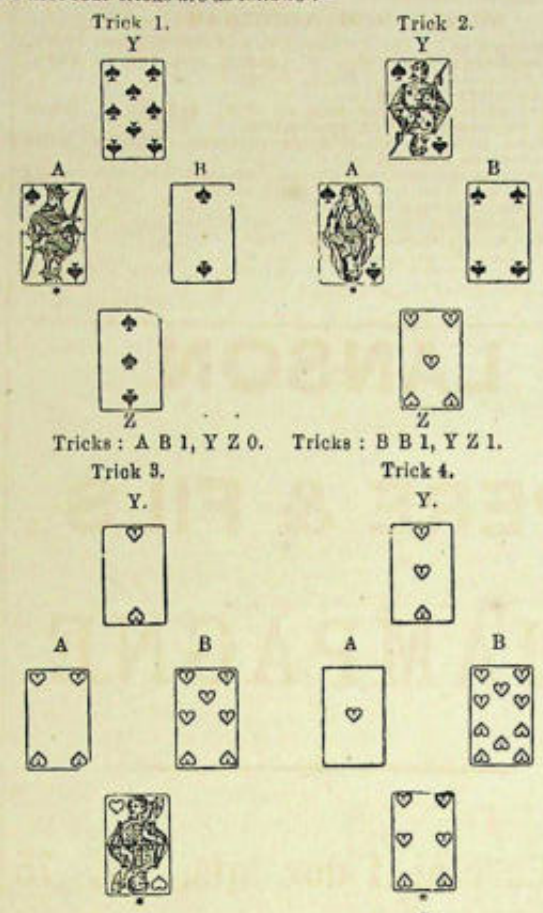
Solution to Problem No. 79.

A evidently led from five hearts, as Z cannot have had six, or he would have made them trumps. To justify his make, Z must be very strong in clubs. He must hold six, or possibly only five with great strength in honors, and consequently A can be tried for just one trick, and no more, in trumps, as he may hold the ace, or possibly the king guarded. To save the game, therefore, B must work in a ruff of diamonds, and his best chance of doing so is to lead a small spade. Z may not put on the knave if he has it, and if A gets in he will see that B has played a coup to give him the lead, probably with a view to ruffing. If A and B each make a trump they will keep the game alive for another deal.



Problem No. 80.

Score: A B, 0; Y Z, 0; Z deals, and declares hearts. A's (the leader's) and Y's (dummy's) hands are as follows :—

A's Hand (Leader); Hearts, ace, 4; diamonds, 10, 8, 3; clubs, 10, 4, 2; spades, ace, king, queen, 10, 5.

Y's Hand (Dummy): Hearts, king, 9, 3, 2; diamonds, king, knave, 4; clubs, 9, 7, 6, 5; spades, knave, 8.

The first four tricks are as follows :—

What ought A to lead, and why?

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

ORIGINAL AND OTHERWISE.

LONDON, Friday, 25th December 1908.

THERE are so many motor-cars on the market that are offered to the public at such various prices for the same approximate horse-power that the would-be purchaser is often placed in a dilemma in making a final decision. It is interesting, therefore, to consider how the cost of a popular and standardised car of moderate power is proportionately arrived at, especially at the present time, when the demand is for cheap cars rather than expensive ones. In arriving at the cost of a car it is necessary to discard the cost of experiments, tools, patterns etc., necessary to establish the actual model supplied by any manufacturer, as these items of initial cost are practically written off when a type of car is standardised, and the output is in considerable quantities. When a powerful car is taken with naturally a more limited market, these initial expenses have to be considered, as they amount to a sum that the comparative small sales are insufficient to wipe-out or reduce to insignificance per car. For that reason, a 14-h.-p. live-axle model is taken as an example for illustrating how the manufacturer's cost is arrived at, as this size is sold in hundreds to the tens of larger and more powerful models.

In the cost of a motor-car there are three important factors that have to be considered in arriving at the final retail cost to the public. These are (1) the raw materials, (2) the workmanship, and (3) the general expense and normal profit of the makers and retailers. The "Germain" works have made the following table showing the cost of raw material and parts which have to be purchased before building a series chassis of their principal type of the Germain 14-h.-p. chainless car:—

Table of comparative costs of raw material used in construction of a 14-h.-p. live exle Germain car:—

Tyres	21·7 per cent.
Steel	10·6 ,,
Aluminium castings	9·2 ,,
Axles	8·4 ,,
Rubber tubing, aprons, nuts, bolts, etc.	8·2 ,,
Magneto and fittings	8·2 ,,
Ball bearings	7·4 ,,
Radiator	6·4 ,,
Chassis frame	3·8 ,,
Bronze castings	3·4 ,,
Forgings	2·8 ,,
Springs	2·6 ,,
Cast iron	1·8 ,,
Steel tubing	1·5 ,,
Paint work	1·4 ,,
Lubricating materials	1·4 ,,
Wood work	1·2 ,,

An examination of this table of costs will doubtless astonish many by the proportionate expense of the tyres, and brings forward the reason why motor-car manufacturers have to bear in mind as a consideration of the first importance the total weight of a car. For it is this load that is the factor that governs the size, and therefore initial cost of the tyres, as well as their upkeep afterwards to the purchaser of the car. The next greatest proportion of cost is the steel employed for the four cylinders of the engine and various component parts. In a car of the 14-h.-p. Germain type, 1,000lbs of steel of various types and qualities in the rough are required, though this, in the process of manufacture, is reduced in weight to 500lbs. or 600lbs., the remainder being cut to waste. The price of steel varies from a few pence per lb. to 2s. and more per lb. according to the quality used, so the cost of this item can make a considerable difference in price and by quality in the actual value of a car as a soundly constructed machine. This can be easily comprehended as regards cost when a penny per lb. saved means a reduction of £5 8s. 4d. per car. With regard to the 9·2 per cent. of aluminium castings used in the construction of gear-box, crank, case, etc., this material is expensive but of light weight, and though it could be replaced by cast steel or cast iron, the added weight would increase the tyre cost not only to the manufacturer, but also the running costs to the buyer of the car.

Axles are responsible for 8·4 per cent. of the total cost of raw materials. But the axle is the most important portion of the car with regard to the safety of the driver and its occupants, only equalled by the steering gear. In fact, the front axle breaking suddenly when a motor-car was proceeding at even a moderate speed would probably mean death to some, if not all, of its passengers. A good axle costs anything up to £20, while some racing axles cost £70 or more, whereas a cheap axle can be purchased for £2 or £3. To all outward appearances the cheap and the expensive axles are identical, and few would be able to recognise the good one from the cheap and worthless article. Consequently, when writers on motoring topics a few years ago always made a point of referring to the axles of the cars they described, though making perhaps dull reading to the uninitiated, they were doing the public a far greater service than the latter realised at the time. There is no economy to be effected by cheap axles, either to the manufacturer or to the purchasers of cars.

There is one point that deserves special mention before dismissing the subject of the cost of a car for the present. This is, that the public have little to hear from buying any of the cars that emanate from the works of the present factories that are known for their experience and stability. Although two cars may be absolutely identical in outside appearance and running when new, they may vary in value and price as much as 40 per cent. Most buyers are not able to realise the difference between the two cars, and a trial run cannot give them any guarantee. The standing of the manufacturer is their sole recommendation for confidence in their choice.

The committee of the Royal Automobile Club has decided on the Georgian period for the architectural design of the new club house in Pall Mall, which, it is hoped, will be ready for occupation in two years' time. When completed the building will face Pall Mall in a straight line with the Carlton Club, and the skyline the same height as that of its future neighbour. The front and back will be built of Portland stone. The length of the frontage will be 228 feet; the height of the cornice, from the pavement, 61 ft. 11 in.; the height, to the top of the balustrade, 68 ft. 6 in.; and the height to the top of the roof facing Pall Mall, 79 ft. 9 in.; whilst the back elevation of the roof will be 90 ft. from the terrace level.

The front of the building, classical in aspect, will suffer nothing in comparison with the other edifices in Pall Mall. There is, in the present club house, in Piccadily, a model of the club's new home, constructed to a scale of eight feet to the inch. This model is practically correct in detail, the principal difference being that the flat roof, at the back, will be extended a little farther outwards, the roof having an ornamental balustrade added to it. In the real building the roofs will be invisible from Pall Mall.

For those who have an appetite for figures there is much interesting matter in the Royal Automobile Club's table of the number of motor vehicles registered in the United Kingdom, which is divided under the headings of private cars, trade cars, public conveyances, and motor cycles. Without going into the details (the figures are also set out under the headings of England and Wales, Scotland, and Ireland, and subdivided into counties), it is a point of great interest to compare the totals with those available for 1905. This comparison shows that in the three years motors have more than doubled their numbers. Whereas in 1905 the total was 74,308, it had reached, by 30th September last, 154,391. Another fact worthy of note is the great contribution made to these figures by motor cycles, the number in 1905 being 37,665 and in the present year 65,026.

M. Georges Parade, a well-known motoring expert, gives some striking figures concerning the vogue of the motor-car in England and France.

"England," he says, "and not France, as most Frenchmen suppose, is now the land of the motor-car. Paris is no longer the chief motoring city in the world, for in the French capital and its surrounding there are only 10,706 motor-cars, while London and its environs count 34,373, more than three times as many. The total number of cars in France is 37,586. In Great Britain there are more than twice that number."

CHUKKER.

"Who had this place last year?" asked a Southern shooting tenant of his keeper.

"Well," said Donald, "I'm not denyin' that he wass an Englishman, but he wass a good man, whatever. Oh! yess, he went to kirk and he shot very well, but he was narrow, very narrow."

"Narrow," said the other in amazement, for he supposed he meant bigoted, and the charge was generally the other way about. "What was he narrow in?"

"Well," said Donald, "I will be tellin' you, and it wass this way. The twelfth (the beginning of the grouse shooting) wass a very good day, and he had fifty-two brace. But it was warm, oh! yess, very warm, and when we came back to the Lodge, the gentleman will say to me, 'It is warm,' and I will not be contradicting him. Then he will be saying, 'Maybe you are thirsty,' and I will not be contradicting him. Afterwards he will take out his flask and be speaking about a dram. I will not be contradicting him, but will just say 'Toots, toots.' Then he will be pouring it out, and when the glass was maybe, half full I will say, just for politeness, 'Stop-' And he stopped. Oh! yess, a very narrow man."

"I can see you're worried about me, dear," said the very sick man.

"Oh, not at all," replied his wife promptly

"But why do you look so gloomy, then?"

"I was thinking whether my sealskin saeque would be considered mourning."

THE FEEDING OF SNAKES AND "FASCINATION."

In the latest issue of the Society's Proceedings the Secretary and Protector of the "Zoo" have taken the public into their confidence in regard to the matter of snake-feeding, and have thereby been able to show that even the most rabid of humanitarians have very little basis for the great outcry which have of late years been raised with regard to this matter. For they state that during a number of years it has been the practice in the menagerie to feed snakes on dead animals whenever possible; and there appears to have been comparatively few cases in which this mode of feeding was found to be impracticable, although it must be confesed that the report is not quite so explicit with regard to this point as some persons might consider desirable.

It is, however, definitely stated that no kind of snake, either venomous or otherwise, has been met during a very long experience which would not take dead food; although in this respect it is mentioned that the authorities of other establishments have been less fortunate. Thus private owners of reptiles and the directors of Zoological Gardens on the Continent and in America have reported that, with all their efforts, they could only induce, on an average, one out of every four snakes to take dead food, while poisonous species could not be induced to feed in this manner at all. The observers, therefore, set it down not that all snakes can be persuaded to feed in this unnatural manner, but that in the care of the large collection in the Zoological Society's Gardens the keepers have been, and hope to continue to be, more uniformly successful in this method of feeding serpents than have been the owners of any other private or public collection of which particulars are obtainable.

This is distinctly a feather in the cap of the executive of the "Zoo," and merits the highest praise.

Doubtless this success was in some measure due to the manner in which the carcases of the defunct animals were introduced to the notice of the snakes. The carcases were, for instance, in some cases thrown suddenly into the cages; while in other cases a wriggling motion was communicated to them by means of string or wire. No difference in the readiness of the snakes to take food of this nature was noticed if the animals were freshly killed, warm, or bleeding, or if they had been dead for some time; and it was observed that in not a few instances the prey was not actually seized until night, many hours after its introduction, this being especially the case when pythons were fed with the carcases of large animals such as goats.

As we have seen, the authorities report that every species of snake in the collection has been induced to take dead food. This, it may be noted, is by no means equivalent to saying that every individual snake has been made to take food of this nature, or that those which have taken it once have continued to do so afterwards as a regular thing. Doubtless there are species among snakes as among human beings, and probably some individuls refuse to eat anything but live meat. On this somewhat delicate matter the authorities of the Gardens are, however, discreetly silent, and we will therefore follow their example.

Incidentally the investigation has led to some important increase in our knowledge of the feeding habits of snakes; one point being that all snakes but more especially pythons, feed with much greater regularity and at considerebly shorter intervals than had previously been reported to be the case. This can hardly be a peculiarity induced—in the case of all species be it observed—by confinement in the Regent's Park, and may therefore be apparently taken as a natural habit.

Pythons and anacondas usually exhibit their readiness to feed by special activity and restlessness, the former often leaving their tanks, while the latter will stretch their heads and a considerable portion of their bodies out of the water. Sometimes, however, a python, although hungry, will remain sluggish, and not touch food, even when dangled close to its nose, although after nightfall it will seize it greedily enough.

"If the snake is eager," runs the report, "it makes a sudden dart at the prey, striking at no special part of the body and seizing and retaining hold with a violent bite. An anaconda taking hold of a duck in this way almost at the same moment surrounds it with one or two tight coils and takes it under water. A python without letting go throws a coil over it, holding it down; if the prey is of small size and motionless there is no attempt to wind the body round it, but if it is bulky or moves more coils are pressed over or round it. There appears, however, to be no special attempt to crush the prey, to suffocate it, or to break its bones. The amount of pressure or constriction exerted is, so to speak, a reflex action directly proportioned to the struggles or size of the prey. After some time, during which an originally living prey would have been suffocated, or in the case of the anaconda drowned, the snake usually lets go its hold. It then passes its head all round the prey, playing over it with its forked tongue, and by some means other than that of sight, as the choice is made equally in the dark, perhaps by the sense of touch in the muzzle or lips, selects the head of the carcase to begin the process of swallowing. A snake that comes across a dead body behaves in the same way. We have never seen a snake of the python group make a mistake in its selection of the head and snout to begin on, and it is plain that the lie of hairs, or feathers, the position of horns and the general shape of the body of vertebrates, justify the snake in its choice. Occasionally in the process of swallowing, a coil of the snake appears to push against the posterior end of the prey, but this appears to be simply a means of holding the prey steadily. The mechanical process is one in which the snake pushes itself outside the carcase; it gives a huge gulp and fixes its teeth as far back over the body as possible, and then slowly, in big wrinkles, pushes a portion of its mouth and gullet forwards; then with another gulp it gets its teeth fixed still a little further on to the prey and repeats the forward bringing up of the body, the general appearance of the motion being similar to that of the progression of an earthworm. Frequently when the prey is large, the process of ingestion is not straightforwards, the jaws being moved first to one side and then to the other, alternately."

Ordinary non-poisonous snakes behave in much the same manner as pythons when food is presented to them, seizing the prey with a straightforward dart of the head, and "freezing" on, while they sometimes coil themselves round the carcase, or at all events lie upon it. Cobras, on the other hand, very seldom strike at the food thrown to them; but take their food readily in the fashion of vipers, never lying upon it or coiling round it in the fashion sometimes affected by ordinary harmless snakes and habitually by pythons.

The deadly snakes of the viper group, on the other hand, invariably make a sudden dart at their prey, and as rapidly relinquish their hold. In the case of smaller animals they may polish off the meal right away, but in the case of larger carcases they frequently do not devour them for several hours after they have been introduced into the cage. It is, moreover, quite immaterial to them which end of the carcase is seized; the prey being swallowed altogether irrespective of the lie of the hair of feathers. It was observed that these serpents salivate much more abundantly than is the case with pythons; a circumstance which may account for their indifference as to the end of the prey they seize.

Another result of the investigation is to give the death blow to the prevalent and ancient idea that serpents are enabled to capture active prey by "fascinating" or, so to speak, paralysing it by their stony unthinking gaze. It is sad to think that we must give up another idea instilled into our minds from earliest childhood, but there seems no help for it.

The authors of the report state confidently that there is no such thing as a power of fascination possessed by snakes; while in most instances there is not even a pretext for imagining the existence of any such subtle power.

"A good many animals, however, are inquisitive, and this in the case of many small and feeble creatures, such as the smaller birds and mammals, is associated with the power of attention. If a movement is sudden or noisy, they may start off at once; if it is slow, silent, and stealthy, they remain motionless but intensely watchful. If a snake is quick enough, it may secure its prey in that brief moment of motionless watchfulness, but a human hand slowly and carefully advanced has just as much power of fascination."

Another point on which the observers have satisfied themselves is that, with one significant exception, animals—and here again contrary to popular opinion—exhibit no instinctive dread of serpents. According to the words of the report:—

"The vast majority of animals, including, of course, frogs, rats and mice, guinea-pigs, rabbits, ruminants, and birds, are totally indifferent to their presence, and even when a snake approaches them directly avoid it, just as they would avoid a stick thrust at them. In the case of such animals, the problem involved in giving them alive to snakes is no more than whether they are killed more painlessly by snakes or by human beings. In their recognition and fear of snakes, however, the Primates are in marked contrast to all other animals. Many naturalists have recorded that monkeys display an instinctive fear of snakes, and we have made a number of experiments on this point, displaying live and active snakes such as the brightly coloured corn snakes, a tree boa, and a small reticulated python, to the monkeys in the Society's Collection. We assumed that it was unnecessary to select poisonous snakes, as probably monkeys, like most savages and many civilised persons, would make no distinction between poisonous and harmless snakes. We wish first to record the extremely interesting fact that lemurs differ markedly from true Primates, inasmuch as they exhibit no fear of snakes whatever. It was most curious to notice how, when we approached adjoining cages, the one with lemurs, the other with monkeys, carrying with us writhing snakes, how the monkeys at once fled back shrieking, whilst the lemurs crowded to the front of the cage, displaying the greatest interest and not the smallest perturbation when a snake was brought so close to them that its tongue almost touched their faces. We got the impression that had the lemurs been given the opportunity, they would at once have seized and tried to devour the snake. The South American monkeys showed fear in irregular and sometimes slightly marked form. Spider-monkeys were quite as excited and alarmed as any Old World monkey. Some of the larger Cebidæ did not retreat, but uncovered their canines and looked as if they were ready to show fight."

From this the observers infer that the innate dread of snakes characteristic of mankind throughout the world is an inheritance from Simian ancestors.

UNIVERSITY RUGGER.

The result of the annual football match between representatives of Oxford and Cambridge Universities was a draw, the ninth that has occurred in the thirty games played. To those who had set their judgment of Oxford winning the latest encounter on the real form of the trials the play came as a surprise. It was the recurrence of the old story of high expectations leading to disappointment; but then the opinion was formed when Oxford was at the zenith of its game. In thinking of the greatness of a side it is not common to be creating saving clauses for possible injuries. The great Harry Vassall's team in the second year of captaincy only scrambled home (owing to injuries and other things) against Cambridge by a try to nothing; had Harry Vassall's nephew been sound in the match under notice Oxford would probably have won comfortably. This is the natural inference from the fact that Oxford with its three-quarter line crippled was yet able to draw the match. The policy of both Oxford and Cambridge in taking into the field unsound men may perhaps serve as an object lesson for future 'Varsity or other captains.

For the first twenty minutes of the game the dark blues had been having matters all their own way and a great manœuvre that extended from the base of their scrummage and extended along the whole of the half and three-quarter lines ended in their being a goal up. Was this the beginning of the end for Cambridge? might well have been asked by those familiar with the play of the trials. But then the thing most feared by Oxford men occurred; one of the "invalids" broke down and this completely disorganized the Oxford defence and attack. The effects were made at once obvious, for within five minutes of the Oxford score the Cantabs had made the match even; and it remained "one goal all" at "No-side."

That the light blues with all its superiority in scrummage science, could not win when, before a quarter of the game had been played, the most dangerous of its opponents was disabled, rather went to show the great difference in skill between the two back divisions. Here was Cambridge getting the ball on an average in four scrummages out of five and yet unable to finish its attacks; the forwards often held the ball, and finally forced their way through the Oxford pack, or they let it hang for a long time in the back row of the scrummage; it was never heeled quickly. Better not heel at all than heel slowly and so the Cambridge halves were much handicapped by the way the ball filtered from the third line; it was as much as they could do to get in a pass of any sort without thinking of making a little progress for an opening. Moreover, they had little chance of moving onwards against the opposing half-backs. Except in the one instance when Cambridge scored neither of the light blue halves ever stepped out of the groove of mechanism; and even in their mechanism they were slow. And much the same can be said of the three-quarter backs. As the Cambridge forwards played in the second half the backs ought to have won the match over and over again. Instead of keeping a mobile formation the three-quarter line in its anxiety to smash up the Oxford centres (and after the first twenty minutes or so there was virtually only one centre to mark) usually stood level with the scrummage. When the half backs set the line in motion the inevitable occurred; the man with the ball was over run and the ball was either passed forward or fumbled. The tactics may have had some efficacy in the matter of spoiling; for the purposes of finishing an attack they merely invited failure.

Cambridge at first had only one chance of winning; that was for the forwards to keep the ball as close as possible, except when they were near the Oxford line. They did their best for a long time; but it was a rare fight, and for the first twenty minutes or so Oxford were hovering about the Cambridge "25." Even before Vassall broke down it was apparent that that player was not himself; the half-backs and Tarr made two great movements and Vassall had only to field the ball to put Martin in; the ball was not fielded, and Cambridge thus escaped. These early mistakes very probably cost Oxford the victory; for Oxford when it has been itself has usually won its matches in the first few minutes. Vassall had his share in the try that was scored, and then he renewed the strain in the leg muscles, and was ever afterwards a "passenger."

It was right through the second part of the match that the real struggle was seen. Before "change" half-an-hour had elapsed when Cambridge made its first attack; in the second "40" Cambridge was usually fighting the match in the vicinity of the "25" or on the Oxford goal line. The Cambridge forwards were tremendous. Now and again they were driven back by the footwork of Oxford as the scrummage broke; but mostly they commanded the ball in the pack, and had they executed some quick heeling the game might have been won. But as already said, they rarely did more than let the ball dribble out; they were unable to rid themselves of the fear of the Oxford backs. When the Cambridge half and three-quarter backs did get the ball they made but little use of their chances.

In all this criticism of the Cambridge play outside the scrummage the nature of the defence opposed to it must not be forgotten. The Oxford forwards, although beaten in scrummage footwork, played on unflinchingly; their shoving was good, they broke quickly, and got back on the ball, tackling and stopping rushes with intense courage and strength. But the players who saved Oxford were Williamson and Cunningham, particularly Williamson. Over and over again Williamson by his intense quickness thwarted not only the Cambridge halves, but the forwards as well as they swept on in almost irresistible rushes; Williamson destroyed their irresistibility and Cunningham was continually fielding the ball from the feet of the forwards and finding touch in the grand manner that used to distinguish another famous Oxford Scotsman—P. R. Clause. These Oxford half-backs did lions work; they went through the thickest part of the whole play without a moment's relaxation, and came out of the match scathless and fresh.

MacLeod's huge touch-finding kicks for the Cantabs set up many attacks; two of his cross-kicks would have probably meant a score had there been any extra pace on the wings; there was a nice right foot drop at goal by him that only just failed to win the match. MacLeod did his best; but he had not adequate support. Had he received the assistance he ought to have done his side would no doubt have received a full point instead of only a half.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

SATURDAY'S racing in Calcutta was one of the best days we have had this season and the only blot on the afternoon's sport was the pair of unfortunate accidents. Eileen was bumped by Echo in the Scurry Handicap and came down knocking Murdison senseless for a few minutes and giving him a nasty shaking and Scamander broke aleg as she was pulling up at the end of the January Plate. Of course she came down and poor McNeilage, who was riding, was rather badly knocked about, the principal injury being to his tongue which was bitten almost through. Mr. Galstaun's stable had a long way the best of the day. He won the two big events, the Metropolitan and the King's Plate, with Paddy's Darling and Misty Morn, got a third in the Kidderpore Plate with Our State and wound up the day by winning again with Naughty Boy in the New Plate!

THE Tally Ho Plate furnished a very fine race, as the nine starters were pretty well all together at the last jump and there was a fine struggle home between the two favourites, Cairnsmore just beating Foy by a neck at the finish. The Scurry Handicap was a good thing for The Point, though Circus Girl was backed down to equal figures. The latter could only get fourth, however, and The Point lead all the way and won very easily from Devon. The January Plate I was a very big surprise. Crossbred was thought such a good thing that in a field of ten he was eagerly backed at 6 to 4 on. The winner, however, turned up in Metal Boy, who, with 9st. 6lb. up, ran the 6 furlongs in 1min. 15secs., leaving Crossbred a bad second four lengths behind. Metal Boy could be had at 16 to 1 at one time and started at twelves.

THERE were three equal favourites for the second half of the January Plate, Craigendorrie, Bundah and Marcelle, all of whom stood at 4 to 1. The steadily improving Craigendarrie won it with considerable ease, the other two being unplaced and not showing up at all in the race. The winner is another of the good horses brought out by Mr. Ernest Day, the importer of Bantock, Morino and others. There were thirteen starters for the Metropolitan and it was a beautiful race to watch. The start was perfect and at the end of the stands there was hardly anything to choose between the whole thirteen of them, Paddy's Darling if anything had a slight lead, with Lovania, who was right on the outside of the line, next, while Stirabout's colours were also a little prominent. Paddy's Darling won a great race by a short head. The surprise of the race was undoubtedly the running of Stirabout, who was the least fancied of Mumford's three and started at 20 to 1: to run third in a race like that looks as if he had recovered some of his last season's form.

THE King's Plate was another very interesting affair. Sacricomar was favourite, then Bantock, then Misty Morn at fives. The race, was run slowly. Sacricomar waited in front but could not get the distance and was beaten a furlong from home; it was not far enough for Bantock, and Misty Morn just came up on the post and snatched the race from The Master by a neck. The Kidderpore Plate was an easy victory for the favourite Fizz, and Naughty Boy gave Mr. Galstaun his third win of the day by just beating Lorraine by a head after a very tight race.

THERE was naturally enough a pretty poor attendance for the second day on Tuesday as very few people in Calcutta can get away on an ordinary working day for a race meeting, even when a start is made as late as 3 o'clock.

THE most interesting event of the afternoon was the Prince of Wales' Cup won by Melbourne in 1min. 40⅗sec. breaking all Indian records for the mile and upsetting all the "good things" in the race. He started at two to one! Indeed it was not much of a day for favourites, though Hughie made a good start for the punters in the first race. He was backed to even money and this great big pony justified his price by cantering in hard held a winner by four lengths. He ran the six furlongs in 1min. 15sec. which is fair time for horses.

THE next race was a big upset as St. Patrick, the hot favorite ran nowhere, and the wayward, unreliable Bucolic took it into his head to gallop kindly for once and won easily from Fizz. Lady Teazle scored her third victory in succession by winning the St. George's Plate in a big field.

STIRABOUT was made favourite for the big race, as on his Saturday's running it was hoped he was about to strike form, though his stable were nervous and preferred their other string Bull Dog. Paddy's Darling was also backed for a lot of money. Stirabout as a matter of fact only lasted between six and seven furlongs and Melbourne won pretty easily by half a length from Bull Dog.

THE Sealdah Plate was a fine race, as they came into the straight all in a bunch and there was a very hot finish between half a dozen of them, Mr. DeSoysa's game little mare just getting the better of a tight finish in spite of her 9st. 6lb. The Prinsep Plate (R. C.) brought the afternoon to a conclusion. There were only four starters, but it was a nice race to watch, as all four were together in the straight and Hunting Horn just beat the favourite, Our State at the finish.

THE final entries for the Civil Service Cup are three in number. Mr. T. J. Sullivan's Hopscotch and Winnie R. (late Belgonie) and H.H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar's Fabiana.

WE cull the following remarkable hunting incidents from a London contemporary:—

A deplorable accident marked the close of a run of the Eastbourne Hounds on Saturday, the 26th December. A stout fox, found at Folthington, was pursued on to the downs, and hounds crossed the Seaford Golf Links straight for the cliff. Mr. Stapley and Turner, the first whipper-in, were close up, but unfortunately they could not stop them until two and a half couples of the leading hounds had gone over the cliff and were killed.

A most exciting run occurred with the Earl of Yarborough's Hounds. They chased a fox in determined fashion from Weelsby Woods, and in the course of his flight the fugitive crossed a field in which a Christmas football match was in progress. Hounds followed, and scattered both players and spectators in all directions. Eventually the fox ran into a fish house at Grimsby, to the consternation of the girls who were engaged in the curing process. Hounds followed, and killed him in the unconventional surroundings he had chosen.

A JOHANNESBURG telegram says:—The South Africans will very probably accept the terms of the offer of the Australian Board of Control to visit Australia if the date is altered to the season 1910-11, together with a minimum guarantee, owing to the invitation sent to the M.C.C. to visit South Africa in 1909-10.

THE International Rugby Football match between Wales and England on the 16th instant ended in a win for the Principality by 8 points to nil.

The Scottish Rugby Football Union has refused to play the international match against England on the 20th March, owing to the English Union approving the payment of one guinea weekly above all possible expenses to each member of the New Zealand team in 1905 and to the present Australian team. The Scottish Union affirms that this sanctions the professionalist.

THE Calcutta Police Football team met the Corporals of the West Kent Regiment in a friendly match on Monday evening and beat them after an excellent game by a goal to nil.

THE Calcutta Ladies' Golf Club arranged a match to be played in connection with the recent Championship—Visitors vs. Calcutta, teams of four aside made up from the eight, who headed the list in the qualifying round of the Championship. The departure of two of the visiors caused the reduction of the teams to two aside. Mrs. Begg and Mrs. Lamond Walker upholding the honours of Calcutta against Lady Maud Warrender and Mrs. Holdsworth Hunt. Mrs. Begg beat Mrs. Hunt by 4 up and 2 to play and Lady Maud Warrender beat Mrs. Walker by 2 and 1. Lady Maud Warrender then beat Mrs. Begg and Mrs. Holdsworth Hunt won the bye against Mrs. Lamond Walker. Victory thus going to the visitors.

THE final in the 1st P.V.R. Hockey Tournament at Lahore having ended in a draw on the 9th instant the match was replayed on the 11th. Play was level all through, the Munster Fusiliers eventually beating the 1st P.V.R. team by a goal to nil.

AN extraordinary story of a pigeon's record flight is furnished by the captain of a steamship which has recently arrived at New York from various South American ports. He reports picking up off the Brazilian coast a pigeon bearing a note which indicated that it had been liberated at Antwerp, which would mean that the bird had covered a distance of more than 3,500 miles.

AS our readers know the great prize fight at Sydney, between Burns and Johnson for the heavyweight championship of the world ended in a most decisive victory for the negro. In the fourteenth round, when the self-assertive Burns was almost dead to the world, the police stopped the fight and Johnson was proclaimed winner. From the first round Burns was in a hopeless plight. He was nearly counted out at the outset, and suffered terrible punishment throughout. Though displaying rare grit, he was absolutely outclassed. Johnson's superior strength and reach were undeniable.

The men took into the ring with them to an extraordinary degree a violent personal animosity and hatred which was manifested throughout in insulting cries whenever damage was inflicted, as well as by continual insults and gibes. With the racing on, great crowds of sportsmen came to Sydney from all parts of the Commonwealth, and, although the price of admission was very high, from eighteen to twenty thousand people paid to see the match.

Johnson showed himself quicker and cleverer than his opponent, took full advantage of his superior height and weight, and kept his temper much better than did the champion. The fighting was fierce throughout and over and over again the referee had to exercise his authority to get the desperate men apart. As early as the fourth round it became apparent that, barring accidents, Johnson could not fail to win; and from that point forward Burns did not get in a single really effective blow, while in every round Johnson battered the face, stomach, and ribs of his adversary, who, by the end of the eighth round, presented a shocking figure. He continued to fight gamely, however, and was really never knocked out.

In the eleventh round a sneering remark by the negro seemed to drive Burns to madness, and he rushed at his opponent with the recklessness of a wounded wild beast. The round was about the severest of the fight, both men hitting out and snarling with the utmost ferocity. Burns, as usual, got by far the worst of it, and was as near being laid out as at any time during the fight. How long Burns would have continued to receive punishment will always be an open question, for the fight was not fought to a finish. At the fourteenth round, as already stated, the police, represented by several officers, who had been closely watching the proceedings throughout, intervened in the interests of public decency, declaring that it was impossible to allow Burns to be further knocked about; and the referee then stepped in and declared Johnson the winner on points.

JOHNSON was born on 31st March 1878. He is just over six feet in height, and he turns the scale at just under 14st. Before this great victory he has had sixty-three battles, and of these he has won forty-three, lost three, and drawn six, while in nine cases no decision was given. He has beaten Sam McVey, the black, who has been doing so much boxing in Paris, three times, in twenty rounds.

In 1895 he lost to Marvin Hart after twenty rounds at San Francisco. He beat in fifteen rounds Sam Langford, another black, who will be remembered over here as being the easy winner at the National Sporting Club over "Tiger" Smith in 1906. Eighteen months ago he knocked out Peter Felix in a single round at Sydney, and J. Lang in nine rounds at Melbourne. On 17th July, 1907, he knocked out the old champion, Bob Fitzsimmons, Philadelphia, in two rounds, while at the end of that year he stopped Jim Flynn in eleven rounds. Just before leaving for Australia Bob Taylor, the "Woolwich Infant," went eight rounds with Johnson at Plymouth, though on this occasion it is considered that the black stayed his hand a little to give the spectators a show.

TOMMY BURNS or Noah Brussau, as is his real name, is a French Canadian, of Alsatian descent; he was born on 17th June 1881, at Hanover, Canada. He is 5 feet 7 inches tall, and he weighs 12st. 7lb. Thus it can be seen at once that his girth and breadth must be considerable in order to make up so much poundage in so short a man. His limbs are enormously strong, and he has an exceedingly long reach. His important battles up to the present number over fifty, and of these he has won forty-one, lost three, and drawn eight. Among his past opponents are Billy Walsh, whom he knocked out in five rounds; Dick Smith, whom he knocked out twice in ten and nine rounds respectively. He lost to Mike Schreck in ten rounds in 1902, and drew with him in six rounds, 1904. In 1905 he had two encounters with Twin. J. Sullivan, the first of which he drew, and lost the second. Twice he has beaten Barry, the big heavy-weight.

His victory in twenty rounds over Marvin Hart on 23rd. February 1906, at Los Angeles, placed him in the very front rank, and since then until now he has not been beaten. He has administered a knock-out to Jim O'Brien, Jim Walker, Jim Flynn, Bill Squires (twice), Gunner Moir, Jem Roche, Jewey Smith, Jack Palmer and Bill Lang. All these fights have taken place during the pust year and a half.

THE "lady" boxer has appeared—in America, of course—and created one of the athletic sensations of the year. It was at Massachussetts on Christmas Eve that Evangeline Carring and Daisy Frenier, two well nourished eighteen-year olds, fought a rattling bout before the Winchendon Athletic Club for a purse of £50. Both are described as "experienced boxers" and in the present case rivalry was accentuated because it was understood that both aspired in the direction of the same sweetheart.

There was a twelve-foot ring nicely roped in, a sanded floor, sponge-holders, referee, and all the other accessories of the prize ring. The girls faced each other manfully, and fought four spirited rounds, when Carring, who seemed over-excited, declared her readiness to quit. Being savagely taunted, however, by her opponent Carring jumped into the ring again, and agreed to a second fight of eight rounds to settle the question of supremacy.

Carring battled like a vixen, and was going strong at the end of the eighth round, when the referee, fearing that Frenier might be knocked out, and the police might seize an excuse for proceedings to-day, declared the bout finished and gave a decision for Carring. The girl fighters wore white peek-a-boo sweaters, white skirts to the knees, and openwork black stockings and tennis shoes. Blood was drawn, and several times each woman was sent crashing into the ropes.

THE Olympic sprint champion has shown many sensational performances since he went to England last June to do duty for South Africa in the Olympic Games, but on Saturday, the 26th December, at Johannesburg, he was credited with records which eclipse anything he has previously shown. Competing at the Wanderers Sports R. E. Walker is said to have recorded 9⅘secs. for 100 yards, and followed this up with 11⅘secs. for 120 yards, both performances being, if correct, absolute world's records.

While one may reasonably await further particulars as to the character of the course and the efficiency of the watch-holders before placing implicit reliance upon the performances with which Walker is credited, it does not appear to be beyond the range of possibility that the times suggested would not be within the range of his capabilities. At Abergavenny he was credited with 9⅘secs. for 100 yards on a course with a 4 ft. fall, and at Darlington with 11⅘secs. for 120 yards, and there would appear to be every reason for believing that he could do better in South Africa, especially in a place like Johannesburg, where the atmosphere is so favourable for sprint running.

T. F. Keane was timed to run 120½ yards in 11⅗ secs. at Ball Inn Grounds, Sheffield, on 5th September 1898, but he ran with the wind and the track in his favour. T. M. Malone, the Irish Australian, was credited with 11½secs. for 120 yards in Australia on 12th August 1883. Of course, Harry Hutchens did a better performance than these on more than one occasion, and his 131½ yards in 12⅘secs. stands as the fastest piece of running ever shown, but there are many who doubt whether he ever got as much as six yards inside evens at 100 yards, which is the value of Walker's performance. There seems no reason to doubt A. F. Duffy's 9⅘secs. for 100 yards at Berkeley Oval, New York, in May, 1902, now removed from the A.A.A. records because of Duffy's avowal of semi-professionalism, and replaced by a similar time credited to Dan Kelly, at Spokeane on 23rd June 1906, but not generally accepted as within the latter's capabilities.

Excepting Walker's Darlington and Halifax performances, neither of which have passed muster, the amateur best for 120 yards is 11⅕ secs. by B. J. Wefers, C. A. Bradley, A. R. Downer and Duffy, so that if the records are duly passed the South African youth will have knocked a big corner off the amateur record for that distance.

ABOUT this time in the season there arises the annual outcry against the "four-half-back" game, in hockey and a sort of indefinite appeal to the Rules Board to take strong steps in the matter, so that it will not be out of place, says the Times, to deal with the question now.

In all divisions of England there is a consensus of opinion at the present time that to play with or against a team adopting this arrangement is far from satisfactory, and that good hockey is very rarely seen in such conditions. What are the reasons of this? First and foremost, a team playing two backs and no goal-keeper obtains a great advantage under the "offside" rule which was certainly never intended, with the result that the opposing forwards are pulled up time after time; and much frequent stoppages always spoil a game. Two years ago things were so bad in this direction that the Rules Board very wisely made it impossible for a player to be offside in his own half of the ground—an alteration which has been extremely beneficial; but even now a predominant feature in games where no goal keepers are played and there are four halves in the blowing of the whistle for offside. Secondly, there is very little open play in mid-field, owing to the fact that the width of the ground is not enough to allow for the extra men up among the forwards, and in consequence the players bunch together, and, being continually hampered, tend to "obstruct" their opponents and "turn on the ball" far more than in games where the correct formation is adopted.

The question then arises:—Why do teams play four half-backs? Is it generally successful? Without doubt, this formation was originally started owing to the difficulty, some years ago, of obtaining goal-keepers. But at the present time, speaking of first teams in club hockey, there are hardly any who could not find a goal-keeper if they wished. But in certain conditions the four-half-back game is so successful that the desire to win matches outweighs the enjoyment of good hockey. It is essential for a team adopting this formation to have two very good backs who are fast, and four very level, hard-working halves. One slow back will spoil the whole thing. If proof of this were needed, one has only to watch a team who have been accustomed to this formation playing rather below their form, or numbering in their side two uncertain backs, and see what very cheap goals are scored against them. At the present time one could mention at least three teams in the South who still keep to the four-half-back arrangement with weaker players than in former years, with the result that almost each week brings disaster.

Taking it for granted, then, that the general body of hockey players would like to see this formation crushed, how is it possible for the Rules Board to deal with it? In the first place, every one must be aware that it is out of the question to make a rule that so many back, half-backs, etc., must be played; because, first, it would then be necessary to define a back, half-back, etc., which could not be done satisfactorily, and, secondly, it would not be at all advisable to do so. A captain of a team ought to be allowed to dispose of his players in the way he thinks best, and it would be a very poor compliment to the "correct formation of a team," as enunciated in Rule 1, to suggest that it could not overcome an incorrect formation.

A common suggestion is that, when a team plays four half-backs, the offside rule should be made to refer to two instead of three; but this is quite impracticable. How is it possible to know if a team is playing four half-backs or three backs, one of whom keeps well up the field? The question of definition again crops up in a more acute form. The only way of getting to the root of the matter is for a rule to be passed that in every team one man's play shall be confined to the striking circle. This would settle the question once and for all; but its seems very doubtful if this would be a fair law to pass. As far as the first teams of Clubs are concerned, probably no difficulties would arise; but one has to remember that a rule operates on every team, and it is a well-known fact that second, third, and fourth teams find great trouble in getting a player to keep goal. Apart from this, even when the correct formation is adopted a goal-keeper may want to stop outside the circle at certain times, which such a rule would prevent.

Taking everything into consideration one is forced to the conclusion that things had better remain as they are. There is no great increase in the four-half-back game; only a few Clubs in the South adopt it, and in other divisions of England it is hardly known; and as long as Counties, Universities and divisions keep to the correct formation, there is very little fear of its spread. Public opinion will kill it sooner than anything else.

ANGLER'S tales of the amusingly amazing order once so fashionable, are in danger of losing their pride of place. Tall doggy stories are coming rapidly to the front. What the modern system of free education may eventually bring forth, indeed, is almost impossible to contemplate. Let us take as an example the composition exercise recently given for the boys in a Romford elementary school. A "gentleman," the veracious paper ran, "had trained his dog to go to the village shop to fetch his newspaper. One morning the shopkeeper gave the dog the previous day's copy whereupon the intelligent animal promptly tore up the copy, and went back for the correct one." After this who can refuse to believe the story of the smart terrier which belonged to a briefless barrister, with expectations, and which religiously every morning cast a knowing eye down the obituary column of the Times?

Dogs have always been credited with great powers of discrimination, and we have all read of the mastiffs of the Knights of Rhodes who could distinguish an artfully disguised Turk from a Christian by the very smell of him. Yet this is, perhaps, not so very wonderful, and might not prove an insuperably difficult achievement to keen scenting dogs of the present day! At all events, it is less marvellous than the performance of the hero of the Romford story. Another favourite theme is the tenacity of canine will and purpose. There used to be many tales similar to that of the pointer bitch who for three mortal hours stood with her hind legs upon a gate with a nest of partridges close to her nose. She had caught the scent in the act of jumping the gate. When relieved by her master, who disturbed the game in coming back to search for her, he found that she was so stiff that it took another hour before he could chafe sufficient life into her numbed limbs to enable her to move!

Such stories as the above, however, fade into insignificance when placed by the side of the anecdote of the shooter who, one November afternoon, inadvertently left his dog pointing a bird whose leg had been imprisoned in a cleft stick. On getting back to the lodge an important telegram called him immediately up to town; the business took him abroad; and poor Fido, on the lonely moor, was utterly forgotten. Ten months afterwards, on the opening of another shooting season, our remiss friend was back on the same moor in eager anticipation of the sport awaiting him. Suddenly both memory and conscience were rudely awakened by his preparations for the first day. Hurrying to the scene of his last sporting exploit, he discovered poor faithful Fido still pointing the imprisoned grouse, one forefoot slightly raised from the ground, nose stretched out to the fullest extent in front, and tapering tail gracefully poised behind. Alas! there was no covering to the frame. Fido was a skeleton pure and simple, a model for the sculptor, a monument to fidelity and inflexibility of purpose! Real pathos in this story, is there not? Judging from the progress in doggy lore under up-to-date Board School education, however, even this will be relegated to second rank very shortly.

There is something singularly fascinating in learning all that is to be known about the carnivora and fauna of antediluvian times. Siberia, particularly in the region of the mouth of the Lena, has yielded us the remains of several mammoths and other prehistoric animals in a state of excellent preservation by reason of the fact that they have been frozen; and thus we have come to think that the beds of rivers flowing into the Arctic are the most likely means of furnishing us with evidences of what the world was like before the Deluge. Still many specimens (in fossil state) of gigantic prehistoric animals have been found from time to time in America and other parts of the world; and now it is German East Africa that has provided a sensational discovery of antediluvian relics. Masses of dinosaurian remains, far greater than those dug up in the United States, have been found during the present year; and many of the bones were so enormous that the native bearers were unable to carry them. Professor Fraas, who made the discovery, has related that the bones of the hind leg of one animal (which he has called Gigantosaurus Augustus Africanus), measured 11ft. 6in. Prodigious! We shall all be on the tip-toe of excitement until the expedition, which is being despatched to the spot by the German Government, has reported upon its further researches.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—Mr. Weiss, the Australian Billiard Champion, left us on Tuesday on his way to the North by gradual stages. Arriving in Igatpuri on that evening he played Evans, with a start of 500 in 800. His opponent, who used to be connected with the Taj Mahal Hotel here, is no mean opponent but found the professional in too good form.

Giving a taste of his ability with 102 he improved upon this with a great break of 241. The particular beauty of this bit of play consists in the fact that all but four points were made off the red and that he made a run of seventy-nine consecutive losing hazards. He ran out by 173 points.

The Fifth Extra produced very much the same sort of racing as on the previous two Saturdays, a poor field of horses and large numbers of Arabs with the event for new ones divided. Books enjoy fine betting and even had five out of six favourites not gone down they would not have done much harm with several finding money in each event. Big strides have been made with the new totalisator, the front having been fixed.

We began with the first division of the Hopeful Plate with Burtho and Sheriff scratched leaving Royal Standard of the same stable favourite, Winchester and Malta next. Winchester made practically all his own running, and, though any of the three might have won at the bend, he stayed on comfortably. On his second to Hyder, Zamorin was made a warm favourite for the next from Mundoor and Field Marshal. The last named failed to stay, whereas Zamorin came strong in the straight to beat Mundoor with Thuvil coming late. This last will need watching.

Of all good things Real Blood looked best in the Old Maiden Plate though Mutlag with his 10st was fancied. The former was the only one to make any show at all. That two squibs like Orby and Sanjakdhar should make the running and stay out all others in a six furlong race is extraordinary. They did so, however, and the latter won anyhow, Woolwinder bringing in plenty of place money.

Considering the poor lot he was meeting in the January Plate, Admiral Crichton was odds on, but could not gallop with them at the start and was badly beaten at the finish. Moonlight, a 14-1½, won from pillar to post from Lady Metal with Melsom waiting nicely in front. Rosewater and Chevalier came up at the finish which was a pretty one all in line across the track.

The scratching of Creditor in the Midget Handicap was disappointing, Mountain King and Saree being made equal favourites. The former was taken streaking away to the front in the usual ridiculous fashion, with the result that he only lasted to the distance where Sahoon and Plassy came out to fight a great finish in which the latter got there. Saree was third and with another thirty yards to go would have won.

Colaba and Merrily fought for favouritism in the Prongs Plate, the latter eventually expanding to threes, to which Dhafer contracted. Taylor, who is in again with Ali bin Talib stable, early got bumped off Merrily and Hazza, Multiform and Transfer made the running in turn till Colaba took it up at the three furlongs. He looked all over a winner when Hazza came up and tackled him and Dhafer later with a great rush on the outside snatched a neck victory, the other two dead-heating. The winner is showing remarkable form, having won for the third time in succession after being bumped out of a win on the first day. Plassy also shares his success, in fact improves upon it with three out of three.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 1st January 1909.

I have practically no news to purvey this week. The weather, the terrible weather since Monday has spoilt everything sporting, social and theatrical and clogged the wheels of everything else.

When I wrote my last letter the weather was about as unchristmaslike as could be imagined; that missive had not been many hours on its way to Calcutta before the clerk of the weather relented and behold on Boxing Day most parts of England were covered with snow. Since then somewhat better conditions have prevailed, but we have had no wet—which is a great deal to be thankful for. It was an ideal Boxing Day. The keen, crisp frosty surroundings made for exhilaration out of doors, everything was seasonable to a degree; it was good to feel the hard ground underfoot, to feel the sharp, biting wind and the blood mantling to the cheek, it made one reflect that, perhaps, after all there were some slight compensations for missing Viceroy's Cup Day, even if one had backed Wandin at long odds. Everybody seemed to be out and about, and at night the magic word was "pantomime." I read that the satisfying sign, "house full," which delights the managerial heart, hung outside every theatre and music hall in London. Nearly 50,000 persons passed the evening in the various places of amusement of the metropolis. Those who had refrained from buying seats until the last moment were sadly disappointed when they inquired at the box offices for tickets.

All the same it is borne in on one with each succeeding Christmas that the modern holiday maker with money to burn appears more and more disinclined to spend it at home in the good old-fashioned way. Merry-makers nowadays fall willing victims to the attractions of the big restaurants and the alluring programmes offered by out of town and seaside hotels, distant golf links and sporting centres. But though the older order changes, giving place to new, there is one institution which still holds its own. Even in the elaborate menus put forward by the Savoy and the Carlton can be discovered the historic turkey. This ornithological despot has not yet been dethroned, and I have been much interested in reading its life-story in a morning paper. From this it can be gathered that from the moment of the bird's appearance in the light of day its whole existence is devoted to the task of rendering itself fit for the destiny to which it was hatched—i.e., its immolation in the interests of humanity. Never for a moment does it swerve from its great purpose, and this whole-hearted devotion to duty should have a valuable lesson to teach to the mere seeker after pleasure and excitement.

But to revert to the weather. Alas! we shouted too soon, our rejoicing was short lived. The "nice seasonable" conditions of the week end gave place on Monday to something a little less than Arctic, with the heaviest snowstorm experienced for almost twenty-eight years. There were twenty degrees of frost in London, snow fell continuously for over 48 hours, vehicular traffic—unlike the snow—melted away to nothing, roads were blocked, and, barring those who can honestly enjoy being out in a snowstorm, the only people who appeared partially reconciled were the 20,000 "unemployed" engaged by the L.C.C. to clear the footpaths and thoroughfares. There was a severe blizzard in Scotland and the Midlands, trains were snowed up in fifteen feet drifts near Aberdeen. In the far north the snowstorm blocked the railway lines, broke down telegraphic communication, and wiped out the mountain paths and many country roads. North of the Grampians the railway lines were only kept clear by the incessant use of snow-ploughs, and even with this device all the trains were several hours late. In London tram and 'bus traffic was unhinged, cabs and taxis were scarce and their drivers as indifferent as a Calcutta ticca ghari wallah at Mohurrum time or for that matter, on any occasion when his services are urgently needed. A good deal of havoc is reported already and the four days' list of those frozen to death totals fifteen.

It will hardly be necessary to add that the skaters' opportunity has arrived. The championship looms in the near future, skating is in full swing in the Fen country and every stretch of water around London will soon be alive with those enthusiasts whose chances come by no means too often. Seeing what few opportunities our average winter offers it has often surprised me what good skaters Britishers are. It is a dearly loved pastime and be it noted we provide champions on a liberal scale: a good British skater can hold his own in any company n'est ce pas?

New Year's Eve was kept up with rather more than usual jollification. Though the passing of the Old Year is usually a solemn moment, no one, when midnight struck and proclaimed the end, appeared sorry to see the last of 1908. On the contrary, the New Year was everywhere ushered in with lively rejoicings. In the great London restaurants gaiety reigned supreme, and surprises of every kind were provided for the guests. The brilliance within contrasted signally with the snow and slush of the streets. But outside were not less cheerful crowds, and some thousands of brither Scots, as of old, carried out the "Hogmanay" celebration with spirit in St. Paul's Churchyard. This morning we have the New Year's honours list served up with chota hazri. The India Jubilee Honours have already been telegraphed to you. The Knighthoods conferred on Mr. E. J. Trevelyan, a former Calcutta High Court judge, Mr. W. E. Bigge, erstwhile of Calcutta and lately a Burma Chief Court judge (and an amateur Thespian in days of long ago), Mr. F. C. Halliday and Mr. Basil Scott, C.J., of Bombay will, I take it, be matter for congratulation to many old friends in India.

"Charley's Aunt" is always welcome, and London has reason to thank Mr. Brandon Thomas for reviving a play that has probably caused more laughter than any other during the past fifteen years for a short season at the Aldywch Theatre. On Boxing Night the familiar scenes were the cause of as much merriment as ever, and a large and delighted audience had the curtain up time after time at the end of each act.

The success of the revival was largely due to the excellent interpretation given by the cast. Mr. Stanley Cooke is a familiar figure to all London playgoers, and as Lord Fancourt Babberley in petticoats he achieved his usual triumph. Mr. Brandon Thomas scored heavily as Colonel Chesney, and it would be difficult to imagine a more charming Kitty Verdeen than Miss Amy Brandon Thomas.

"Charley's Aunt" was preceded by Mr. Brandon Thomas's pleasant little one-act play "A Highland Legacy." The author gives a magnificent rendering of the part of Tammy MacDonnel, and Miss Amy Brandon Thomas is a winsome Clara. It was a delightful little curtain raiser, delightfully acted.

Plenty of fun and just sufficient spectacle to introduce a pleasant contrast—such, in brief, is the character of the Adelphi pantomime, "Cinderella," written by Messrs. A. M. Thompson and Robert Courtneidge, and produced amidst every sign of satisfaction last Saturday night.

The bare lines of the familiar story of "Cinderella" have been preserved, and there is the usual pantomime excursion into the realms of mistaken identity occasioned by Dandini and the Prince exchanging names and costumes. But, in truth, the story is quite a minor consideration; the performance has all the inconsequence of musical comedy. The principal characters wander on and off the stage without any excuse whatever. It is all a disconnected concoction of songs and "cross-patter" and comic business.

Now one does not look for subtle wit in pantomime, and the production at the Adelphi does not provide the exception to the rule. But there is plenty of fun—fast and furious fun in fact—of the broad and tumble kind, and (this is what really make the pantomime the big success it is bound to be) there is such a very clever company.

To consider first the funny side of the production, there is Mr. Dan Rolyat as Archibald, Cinderella's father. Mr. Rolyat does not require a funny line in order to be funny. His face and his limbs are sufficient to raise any number of laughs. Then Mr. Stephen Adeson is particularly funny as the Baron's retainer, Choddles; and Mr. John Humphries gets much humour out of the character of the Baroness.

And then it would be impossible to imagine a sweeter or a prettier Cinderella than Miss Phyllis Dare, who is not only an effective singer of light songs and a pleasure to the eye, but an actress of ability. Other principal parts are filled by Miss Mabel Russell, Miss Marie Rignold, Miss Carrie Moore, Miss Dorothy Laine, Mr. Fred Leslie, and Miss Gertrude Sinclair.

The American story-teller is a common object of the Indian landscape in the cold weather. There I am told he is dreaded by some, shunned by most; but Miss Helen Mar is an American story teller of quite a different sort and judging by her reception at Wyndham's on Monday night, she is going to attract rather than repel. I should think it is no small ordeal for a lady to reel off little stories for the best part of an hour and to keep an audience amused all the time, but that is what Miss Mar succeeded in doing. It must be confessed that there were included in her entertainment one or two chestnuts, and that we did not often discover anything exactly original. "The Curfew Bell," given in its entirety in burlesque imitation of a small schoolgirl reciting is decidedly too long, however cleverly done, to make for continuous laughter; but, on the other hand, few moments passed without Miss Mar gaining a smile, and she raised laughs with the regularity of minute guns.

She served very successfully, in short, to keep amused early arrivals before the appearance of the real meat of the evening, which is, of course, Mr. C. Haddon Chambers's delightful three-act comedy, "Sir Anthony."

The first "Chauffeuse" has appeared on the scene, I caught a fleeting glimpse of her on the embankment yesterday. This pioneer of female professional motor-car drivers is a young, rosy-cheeked, not ill looking Irish girl, who drives under the assumed name of O'Neill. She pilots a small but elegant 14-h.-p. car, which seats three passengers, one beside the driver. The car is covered with a green cape hood, and has affixed to its bonnet a tin policeman, which may be construed as a trade mark, a mascot, a challenge, or what you will—obviously, however, a feminine touch. The girl is said to drive well and if she sticks to it her example may be followed by others, but I "hae ma doots," the woman cabby was a rank failure in Paris, if I recollect aright.

REMINISCENCES OF SOME LEOPARD HUNTS.

V.

The sportsman who has had the good luck to hunt the lordly tiger in his native haunts may have had the opportunity of observing the great facility with which an animal of such ponderous bulk can conceal itself from view. It is almost inconceivable, until personal experience has actually proved the correctness of the assertion, how felis pardus will, without any inconvenience, practically disappear from sight in an open piece of ground covered here and there by tufts of grass. This power of evasion was admirably illustrated on one particular occasion when the writer was in quest of a certain leopard. Camp had been pitched near a small hamlet about half a mile from the left bank of the Godavery River. When everything had been made ship-shape a tour was taken of the forest-land in the immediate vicinity, in order to obtain an inkling of what animals were to be found in the neighbourhood. A pool of water which, I was creditably informed, was the only one within a radius of many miles, was carefully examined. The fresh imprints of a sloth bear were plainly visible in the moist sand, and the pugs of a leopard along a small path were easily discernible, leading down to the precious fluid. The margin was dotted here and there with the cloven tracks of the graceful cheetul and its tiny cousin, the four-horned antelope. In one spot the deep-sunk slot of a large blue bull arrested the eye. If the two villagers who were accompanying me were speaking the truth, that leopard was practically already in the hollow of my hand. Thirst, and more especially that acquired in the middle of the hot weather, would drive the feline to this pond every night, and a goat picketed near its edge would prove far too irresistible a morsel to pass by untasted. For two days the bait remained untouched, and from this fact alone it was manifest that my unwilling guides, who had to be literally forced into my services, were following the precepts of Ananias. Patience brought its due reward for on cautiously approaching the pool it was seen that the goat had been slain, and the carcase half devoured. The inhabitants of these parts were renowned for their lack of fastidiousness in the consumption of flesh. It was consequently deemed advisable to leave one man to keep watch over the remains, to ensure that no two-footed prowler would abscond with the pièce de résistance. In the early afternoon a move was made from camp, and to guard against possible misfortunes a small kid was included in the outfit. On rounding a bend in the dry bed of the water course, the pool came into sight, and it was at once noticeable that the meat had vanished in its entirety. Leaving my attendants an advance was made with rifle at full cock. There was no room for doubt; not only had the unfinished portion of the goat disappeared but the sentry was also absent from his post. A careful scrutiny was made of the immediate environments, but no trace of felis pardus was visible. My retainers were signalled up, and my wrath at the iniquities of the human race in general, and this one specimen in particular, was poured forth in phrases terse but emphatic. At one time a platform had been erected by a local hunter from which to murder the cervidæ when they came to water. This appeared the most suitable place in which I could ensconce myself. The rifle was leant up against a rock and I began to climb up into the refuge. In doing so a bunch of dry leaves was accidently trodden upon, and an exclamation from the henchmen below brought me to ground and to my weapon precipitately. But the opportunity, fleeting as such invariably, are, had gone. About twenty yards from where we were all assembled was a small patch of green grass, scarcely a foot in height, and bordering on a stretch of sand with some rocks beyond. It was near the centre of the channel, and no lustres were in close proximity. The area of this plot was so insignificant that the idea of the quarry sheltering within its limits never entered the mind, and even if it had done so it would have been instinctively dismissed as being beyond the regions of possibility. The leopard had become thoroughly gorged, and the affects of the sun and heat on a loaded stomach had evidently thrown it into an unwontedly heavy slumber. On being suddenly startled it had jumped up and, being still in a dazed and torpid condition, it stood and gazed at the intruders for a few seconds, and on realizng the imminent danger in which it was situated, the beast darted up the dry watercourse, and had disappeared from sight before I had time to lay hands on my firearm. The feline had been severely scared—there could be no doubt on that point—there was a possibility, however, that the bleeting of the kid, might prevent the creature from roaming far afield. Hastily I took up a position in the elevated hiding-place, and with equal promptness the kid was picketed out to a stake driven into the sand at the foot of my retreat. These operations were still being conducted when a series of agonized shrieks, emanating from a spot not more than 200 yards up the channel, indicated that some unfortunate denizen of the forest was in extremis a victim to the wiles of this feline terrorist. The preparations were speedily completed, and the attendants moved off to a safe distance a quarter of a mile or so down the watercourse. The solitude evidently struck horror into the mind of the kid, for it poured out its woes in a continued wail of trepidation. If the leopard were still in the neighbourhood such plaintive bleatings could hardly fail to attract attention. The vigil had scarcely lasted a quarter of an hour when "spots" was observed sneaking towards the pool. Disappearing round the edge of a large mass of rock, a matter of a few moments, would probably witness the final rushing pounce on the lure; but as the seconds ran into minutes, and still no sign of the marauder was vouchsafed it became evident that the creature had absconded. The fleeting eastern twilight rapidly changed into shadowy night, and there being no moon, objects became merged with the general obscurity. Anon, a spectre-like form is barely distinguished creeping foot by foot nearer the prey. The weapon is raised and the erstwhile slumbering forest reverberates to the discharge. A crash follows and then silence, intense, unbroken by the smallest sound. Pursuit at that hour would be courting death. On the following morning a blood trail carries us on step by step for over a mile, but eventually defeat has to be acknowledged and the pursuit abandoned. Truly it would seem that that cat was charmed with the proverbial nine lives.

"Morven."

A physician who had had scarcely any sleep for two days called upon a patient—an Irishman—who was suffering from pneumonia. Sitting down in a chair beside the sick man, he bent his ear to his chest to hear the respiration, calling upon Pat to count.

The doctor was so fatigued that when the patient had counted up to ten, he went to sleep, with his ear on the sick man's chest. Awaking, he heard Pat still counting, "Tin thousand an' sivinty-six, tin thousand an' sivinty-sivin."

"More than five thousand elephants a year go to make our piano keys," remarked the student boarder, who had been reading the scientific notes in a patient-medicine almanac.

"For the land's sake!" exclaimed the landlady. "Ain't it wonderful what some animals can be trained to do?"

Guide: "This is the world-famed Sistine Madonna, which is worth a million."

American Tourist: "Does that include the frame?"

"Do you ever dance the 'Lancers,' doctor?"

"No, but I often lance the dancers!"

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—With reference to "P's." letter on this subject in your issue of the 3rd December, spherical bullets properly fitted to cylindrical barrels specially bored for the purpose can make wonderfully accurate shooting even up to one hundred yards as can be seen in the "Ideal Handbook" in which a group of several successive bullets, well within a six inch ring at one hundred yards, is shown as the result of an experiment with a specially bored 12 gauge barrel. Though, of course, shooting like this could not be expected from an ordinary double-barrelled cylinder shot gun, the bore of which varies slightly from the true cylinder in order to obtain a good pattern with shot, yet specially constructed ball guns with properly adjusted bullets will shoot fairly accurately. I once put six successive shots, right and left from a "jug" choked barrel, which I expect was a true cylinder except for the enlargement near the muzzle into a six inch bull's eye at fifty yards. The bullets were wraped in linen patches, well greased. Naked bullets of 13 gauge could not be depended on in this gun. I have made remarkable good practice with a 16-gauge smooth bore muzzle loading musket (the Enfield ·656 smooth bore Government weapon of the period) at 80 yards at which distance it put several bullets in succession into the bull, I believe, six inches square.

Pistol practice seems to be coming into vogue among the Miniature Rifle Clubs. It affords a pleasant change from the monotony of firing continually at fixed targets in the prone position which, though it is excellent for bringing out the possibilities of the shooter and his weapon, is not the all in all of rifle shooting: and pistol shooting in which only one arm is used is excellent training for the eye and hand besides being exceedingly useful.

Hitherto the only serious target pistols have come from abroad. The Stevens and Smith and Wesson American single shot pistols are excellent and in the hands of a real expert give results very little less than the rifle up to one hundred yards. They are single shot weapons of ·22 calibre shooting the "Long Rifle" rimfire cartridge. Similar weapons of French, German and Belgian make are also obtainable but our own makers are just beginning to place on the market weapons which will quite hold their own against the foreign ones in efficiency, appearance and cost. The Tranter Target pistol is an improvement on their well known saloon pattern which has been in use for the last forty years, it has a long barrel and a trigger guard. Webley and Scott, the well-known revolver makers, have also an excellent long barrelled target pistol. Morris tubes can be fitted to service calibre revolvers to take the ·22 R.F. cartridge but I doubt if the accuracy of the single shot pistol would be obtained from them.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

RIFLE NOTES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—With reference to "P's." letter on this subject in your issue of the 3rd December, spherical bullets properly fitted to cylindrical barrels specially bored for the purpose can make wonderfully accurate shooting even up to one hundred yards as can be seen in the "Ideal Handbook" in which a group of several successive bullets, well within a six inch ring at one hundred yards, is shown as the result of an experiment with a specially bored 12 gauge barrel. Though, of course, shooting like this could not be expected from an ordinary double-barrelled cylinder shot gun, the bore of which varies slightly from the true cylinder in order to obtain a good pattern with shot, yet specially constructed ball guns with properly adjusted bullets will shoot fairly accurately. I once put six successive shots, right and left from a "jug" choked barrel, which I expect was a true cylinder except for the enlargement near the muzzle into a six inch bull's eye at fifty yards. The bullets were wraped in linen patches, well greased. Naked bullets of 13 gauge could not be depended on in this gun. I have made remarkable good practice with a 16-gauge smooth bore muzzle loading musket (the Enfield ·656 smooth bore Government weapon of the period) at 80 yards at which distance it put several bullets in succession into the bull, I believe, six inches square.

Pistol practice seems to be coming into vogue among the Miniature Rifle Clubs. It affords a pleasant change from the monotony of firing continually at fixed targets in the prone position which, though it is excellent for bringing out the possibilities of the shooter and his weapon, is not the all in all of rifle shooting: and pistol shooting in which only one arm is used is excellent training for the eye and hand besides being exceedingly useful.

Hitherto the only serious target pistols have come from abroad. The Stevens and Smith and Wesson American single shot pistols are excellent and in the hands of a real expert give results very little less than the rifle up to one hundred yards. They are single shot weapons of ·22 calibre shooting the "Long Rifle" rimfire cartridge. Similar weapons of French, German and Belgian make are also obtainable but our own makers are just beginning to place on the market weapons which will quite hold their own against the foreign ones in efficiency, appearance and cost. The Tranter Target pistol is an improvement on their well known saloon pattern which has been in use for the last forty years, it has a long barrel and a trigger guard. Webley and Scott, the well-known revolver makers, have also an excellent long barrelled target pistol. Morris tubes can be fitted to service calibre revolvers to take the ·22 R.F. cartridge but I doubt if the accuracy of the single shot pistol would be obtained from them.

BLAIR'S GOUT PILLS,
GOUT, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, LUMBAGO, NEURALGIA.

TESTIMONIAL FROM SIR SAMUEL BAKER,
THE FAMOUS NILE EXPLORER.
Newton Abbot, Devon.

DEAR SIRS,—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effects of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout, and life had lost its attraction, owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitation of the enemy, which prostrated me for months or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

a civilised country in the world in which Odol is not known as the greatest preparation for cleansing and preserving the teeth and mouth, and the millions of bottles of Odol which are sold every year are an irrefutable proof of the universality of its use and of the favour with which it is received. These two facts, indeed, speak louder than anything else of the excellence of the preparation, which can only be compared to itself, for it has no parallel.

White Rose, Ngwe Sein and Zaw Byan tied for first place. The run off resulted in a win for White Rose by a head from Ngwe Sein, with Zaw Byan third, a neck away. An objection to Zaw Byan for carrying wrong weight was not sustained.

a civilised country in the world in which Odol is not known as the greatest preparation for cleansing and preserving the teeth and mouth, and the millions of bottles of Odol which are sold every year afford an irrefutable proof of the universality of its use and of the favour with which it is received. These two facts, indeed, speak louder than anything else of the excellence of the preparation, which can only be compared to itself, for it has no parallel.

Sport in England.

London, Friday, 1st January 1909.

KEMPTON PARK.

The chilly easterly breezes that swept the Sunbury enclosure last Saturday were highly suggestive of an imminent fall of snow. Happily, for the holiday-makers that thronged the park and minor rings, no such wintry visitation came to veto sport. Nevertheless, many sportsmen considered it the coldest day of the present season, finding it absolutely imperative to keep on the move to sustain circulation at all. The attendance of the regular followers of the National Hunt sport in Tattersall's fell somewhat short of average dimensions, and the muster of members was but a thin one. Nor did the racing provide any incidents calculated to stir the pulse; in fact, with only 23 horses contesting the half-dozen events the holiday sport was of an exceptional commonplace order as compared with the high standard usually to be expected at Kempton Park. Despite the unlooked-for paucity of competitors, backers fared badly, Desmond's Gift and Jealousy being the only two first favourites to score, and odds were asked for about both of them Results:—

Hounslow Selling Steeplechase—Of 100sovs. 2 miles.

Mr. J. Rogers's Desmond's Gift, by Desmond—The Gift, 6yrs., 10st. 4lb. H. Cooper 1

HOOTON PARK.

There was a very large attendance at Hooton Park Bank Holiday Meeting, the weather being fine though cold. Some good sport was witnessed, though it was a bad day for backers, only one first favourite winning during the afternoon, that being Mr. Bower Ismay's Prieska, who was backed against the field for the first event. Ards Rover, who won here in November, and previously at Haydock Park, was very warm for the Westminster Steeplechase, but after making the running until three fences from home, he gave way when tackled by Springmount, also a winner at the November Meeting here, and who very easily repeated his earlier victory. He was steered on both occasions by his owner, Mr. Sanday, who trains his own horses at Puddington Hall, about two miles from the course. Another of Mr. Sanday's horses won the last race—a maiden steeplechase—capably steered by M. Hehir. Results:—

Maiden Hurdle.—Mr. L. H. Jones's Prieska (S. Chadwick), 1; Click Clack, 2; Fortune Bay, 3. Also ran: Des Essars, Glassgauge, Spirit Sail, Maritzburz. S. L. Prices: Evens, 9-2, 9-2. Five lengths; ten

WINDSOR.

With snow lying thick around a wide Metropolitan area, and a freezing, nipping wind, it looked any odds against racing at Windsor on Monday morning. It was in a hoping against hope frame of mind that sportsmen wended their doubtful ways to the London termini, and as a most welcome surprise came the authoritative announcement from the railway staff that racing was certain. Of the few hardy spirits who ventured the journey on this warranty, many came unprovided with necessary impedimenta in the shape of race glasses, etc., but, being on the premises, promptly booked and made the best of the occasion. The country behind Slough was by no means so wintry as nearer home, and but a powdering lay on the thickly-grassed course, on which a wintry sun poured his full effulgence, but failed to evaporate a drop of moisture on road or path, and when we left the ground was more iron-like than before. Under the circumstances, a big muster was not to be expected, the attendance proving inadequately small. Though fields did not reach double figures quality was well represented, and backers left off on good terms with themselves.

Windsor Maiden Hurdle—Of 100sovs. 2 miles.

Duke of Portland's The Loaf, by Baker—Oryx, 4yrs., 11st. 9lb. ... ... Cowley 1
Chev. Ginistrelli's The Baronet, 4yrs., 11st. 9lb. ... ... G. Sadler 2

Mr. R. H. Hall's Odor, aged, 11st. 7lb. ... Owner 2
Also ran: Ruby Light (Smyth, ran out).

(Winner trained by Martin.)

Betting: 9 to 4 on Cross Question, 3 to 1 agst. Ruby Light, 8 to 1 Odor.

Won very easily by a neck.

SNOW STOPS ALL RACING.

The blizzard, which included almost every district and certainly every sport producing centre, effectually put a stopper on all racing, and since Tuesday all meetings, including—Windsor, Hurst Park and Manchester have either been abandoned or postponed.

FOOTBALL.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

Favoured as they have been by most seasonable weather, the holiday matches in the three important league competitions have drawn exceptionally large attendances and, as Boxing Day this year fell on a Saturday, bigger crowds than usual watched the various struggles. Indeed, it is no exaggeration to estimate that fully a million people visited the games during the last two days. At this period of the year upsets of form almost invariably take place, clubs that have been enjoying a long run of success coming to grief, while other lowly-placed and unfortunate teams gain victories or effect draws in unexpected fashion. Followers of the game have become so accustomed to this sort of thing that nowadays little more than passing surprise is occasioned. The two days just gone by have proved no exception to what has become almost a rule, and in the first division of the league the most striking example is afforded by Everton. This club had not known defeat since the second Saturday of the season, and yet playing home and home matches with Notts County they lost on their own ground at Goodison Park and only drew at Trent Bridge yesterday. Having already secured a strong lead at the head of affairs, however, their advantage is only a point less, as Newcastle United, meeting Manchester United, lost at Clayton after winning at St. James' Park. Newcastle were unfortunate in the return engagement, as early in the game they were deprived of the services of McCracken, their famous back, who fell and injured his head. The two Sheffield clubs met twice, and so did Bristol City and Bradford City, and as each gained a victory and lost the other match, the positions of the more prominent clubs in the competition remain the same. Bristol City's reverse at Ashton Gate came after the team had won six and drawn the other two of their previous eight engagements.

On Christmas Day Chelsea brought to an end a long run of ill-success by gaining a clever victory at Hyde Road over Manchester City. Inconsistent as ever, they failed to follow up this fine achievement yesterday, the return match at Stamford Bridge—watched by fully forty thousand people—ending in another reverse. Chelsea, however, have certainly improved their prospects, which were indeed gloomy, and they are no worse off than either Bradford City or Leicester Fosse. The other London Club, Woolwich Arsenal, have come through very well indeed. Meeting Leicester Fosse, the last on the list, they drew at Leicester, and won at Plumstead, their victory yesterday being all the more satisfactory as they were a goal to the bad at half time. In this game Fitchie showed excellent form. Leicester Fosse are going through a bad time, their last six matches having yielded them only one point.

Aston Villa, too, have enjoyed success. Both their holiday games were at home and, after drawing with Bury they beat Liverpool decisively, all their goals in the second match being obtained by their new centre-forward, Travers, who was making a first appearance. Thus the Villa gain three points in two days after losing six in three weeks. Notts County, with three points gained, have now secured fifteen in nine matches.

Any chance Fulham may still have had of gaining promotion has been ruined during the past two days, a draw at home with Chesterfield being followed by a defeat at Blackpool. Tottenham Hotspur, on the other hand, can feel satisfied in dividing the points in the two engagements with Oldham Athletic. The brilliant football of V. J. Woodward, who did not go North on Christmas Day, largely contributed to the side's success yesterday, and one of the biggest crowds that ever assembled at Tottenham had the pleasure of seeing the Hotspur keep well in the running for chief honours, despite the fact that Bolton Wanderers now hold the second position. West Bromwich Albion could only draw with Birmingham, but are three points ahead of the Wanderers with a game in hand, while the Hotspur, a point further behind, have one more fixture to fulfil.

Northampton, who for some time have held as good a record as Southampton, have secured premier position in the Southern League, Southampton being deprived of the place they have occupied throughout the season by defeats sustained at Upton Park from West Ham United, and on their own ground from Queen's Park Rangers. These reverses on Christmas Day and Boxing Day, while Northampton beat Southend United, bring the leading teams together in the matter of points; but Northampton have a couple of games in hand with a far superior goal average. It is somewhat curious that Queen's Park Rangers, after losing all chance of retaining the championship honours, should have brought down the team apparently most likely to succeed them. Southampton, if somewhat unlucky in losing the services of a few of their best players, would be the first to acknowledge their depreciation—noticeable for a considerable time and very apparent in the games at Leyton and West Ham, which preceded their yesterday's defeat. Crystal Palace and Bristol Rovers are now very little behind Southampton, and the struggle between the first four clubs promises to become very interesting.

Arsenal vs. Leicester Fosse.—The visit of Leicester Fosse to Plumstead for the return League match with Woolwich Arsenal attracted a gate of 25,000 people, who saw the Arsenal score their first victory at home for over two months by two goals to one. The result of the game between the same teams at Leicester on the previous day excited hopes at Woolwich that the draw on that occasion could be improved upon, and although the play in the first half did not justify these hopes, the Arsenal made a fine recovery after the interval, and, chiefly owing to the brilliant form of T. T. Fitchie, the Woolwich amateur, they achieved a deserved success. Both clubs had several changes from the Christmas Day sides, the Arsenal including T. T. Fitchie and G. Hoare, the amateurs and Cross at back in place of Gray (injured). The Fosse rearranged their half-back line and had Walker forward in place of A. S. Owen, the amateur. The Arsenal started the game with great vigour, but the finishing was weak, and though the Woolwich forwards were generally in the neighbourhood of the Leicester goal, the visiting forwards were much more dangerous when they broke away. In one of these raids Ducat fisted the ball, and from the penalty kick Pollock opened the scoring for Leicester. Woolwich did not deserve to equalise before the enterval; afterwads the forwards played much better together, and Fitchie showed much individual brilliance. At the end of 20 minutes Fitchie headed a clever equaliser from a corner placed by Satterthwaite, and fifteen minutes later the same forward scored a splendid goal with a fast and clever shot. This was all the scoring. Near the close Walker (the Leicester forward) was brought down heavily. He was carried off badly injured, and it was at first stated his leg was broken, but later the injury was reported to be a severe twist. Woolwich Arsenal, 2; Leicester Fosse, 1.

CHELSEA vs. MANCHESTER CITY.—After beating Manchester City at Hyde Road on Christmas Day, Chelsea quite failed to overcome the same club at Stamford Bridge yesterday. They lost by two goals to one, after a game which was far superior in point of quality to that usually associated with the holiday season. Forty thousand people, including the two little sons of the Prince and Princess of Wales, were present. Chelsea relied on the side which succeeded at Manchester, but the City made changes. Ross and Conlin were on the left wing in place of Dorsett and Wilkinson. Dorsett displaced Stewart at outside right and Jackson was at right back in place of Burgess, injured. The first half produced some splendid football, in which the Manchester forwards and half-backs were brilliant. Dorsett and Thornley both shot well, and at the end of 27 minutes Dorsett placed a corner so well that Ross headed a clever goal. Ten minutes later Jones broke through and scored brilliantly, and just on the interval, Windridge had wretched luck, after a gallant effort. Humphreys, too, hit the post with a fine shot. In the second half Chelsea improved, particularly after Humphreys had scored with a clever surprise shot. For a time the Chelsea men swarmed on the City goal, and it was lucky for Manchester that a fine low centre by Brawn was missed by Humphreys and Windridge. The two last-named players both tested Smith, who played a smart game. Warren worked gallantly to get the equalising goal, but met with a stubborn defence, and Manchester City just deserved to win. Manchester City, 2; Chelsea, 1.

THE GAME IN SCOTLAND.

Keen frost considerably spoiled play in the Scottish League games on Saturday. The Partick Thistle and Hibernians match was declared off, and the circumstances in connection therewith will probably be made the subject of enquiry. As Partick Thistle have at present no ground, the match was to have taken place at Ibrox Park: but, in view of the Rangers' great League game with Celtic on New Year's Day, the ground on Friday was covered with straw, and the Rangers offered their practice pitch for the League match. This was refused, hence the abandonment of the game.

Clyde gave their supporters a pleasant surprise by defeating Celtic on their own ground. As both clubs have their headquarters in the east end of the city, partisanship was at its height, but the Celtic's supporters got little to enthuse over, as they fully expected to their club to secure their eleventh successive win. On the day, Clyde were the superior lot, and in Chalmers, late of Bristol Rovers, they have secured the centre they were much in need of.

At Hampden, Queen's Park looked like getting full points from Aberdeen, as they got two goals early in the game, but Lennie, as usual, then came into the picture, and before half-time he equalised matters. With the second goal he had great help from Niblo, the old Aston Villa player, who made his first appearance for Aberdeen in a League engagement.

Another old Aston Villa player, Templeton, was mainly responsible for Kilmarnock's win over Dundee, the Northern men throwing away all chance of the championship in their two Christmas matches against 3rd Lanark and the Ayrshire team. Templeton's play throughout was up to his best International standard.

St. Mirren opened well against Rangers, but the Ibrox men fell in better to the conditions of the hard ground, and Rangers, without James Sharp and R. G. Campbell, had a rather easy win. This game had the biggest gate of the day in Scotland—£270. The lowest was at Port Glasgow—£47—where the local club divided the points with Airdrieonians.

Bobby Walker got the only goal of the game for Hearts against Hamilton Academicals, while Falkirk were beaten by Motherwell through taking matters too easily at the start. Clyde D. Skene reappeared in the centre for Falkirk, and was the best forward on the field Morton and 3rd Lanark divided the points at Greenock, after an uninteresting game.

RUGBY RULES.

SWANSEA vs AUSTRALIANS.—The Australians suffered the fourth reverse of their tour on Boxing Day; Swansea beating them by a penalty goal and a try to nothing. They had had hard games in Wales on Wednesday and Thursday, and on this occasion were defeated on their merits. Two previous beatings had been sustained in Wales—from Llanelly and in the International match—while Abertillery drew with the Australians three days before; the other team to win against the tourists being the Midlands. Great interest was taken in the match at present under notice, no fewer than 40,000 people assembling on the Swansea ground. The conditions were good, except for a strong wind, and the Australians kicked off in face of this. Breaking away from the first scrimmage, Swansea soon became dangerous, Harvey Thomas kicking well. A penalty was given against Wood, but Bancroft failed with the kick. Directly, afterwards, however, Bancroft utilised a similar opportunity to place a goal and gave Swansea the lead. Great enthusiasm prevailed, and Swansea continued to show fine form. Owen and Jones opened the game, and Hayward got to the corner flag. Wood put in a grand piece of work, which afforded temporary relief, but the home forwards quickly set up another attack. After a kick by Bancroft, Carmichael saved smartly and then had to touch down. Receiving the ball from a scrimmage, the Australian three-quarters put in some clever passing that gave a prospect of Russell crossing the home line. They, however, managed to get in a splendid kick to the visitors' twenty-five. There Griffiths dashed away and was almost in, being held in the line. Hard play between the forwards ended in the Australian pack breaking away and Mandible put in a rare burst. The referee cautioned Wood and awarded Swansea a free kick. No goal resulted, but from a forward rush Edgar Morgan crossed the visitors' line with a try that was not converted. The referee found it necessary to again caution the Australians and Swansea forced the play. Toft almost adding a try. A free kick for the Australians came to nothing and other penalties proved of no avail, Swansea leading at half time by 6 points. Swansea maintained their form after change of ends. Jones, Morgan, and Toft, showing up very prominently. Clever passing nearly led to further scoring. Penalties were frequent, several being given against the home team, who, however, more than held their own in many attacks. The visitors scarcely ever got within the home twenty-five and displayed such roughness that one of them, Griffin, was ordered off the field. Swansea often opened the game, their passing being excellent, while they excelled in defence. The Australians could not score, and amidst tremendous enthusiasm Swansea kept their lead and left the field victorious by 6 points to 0. Swansea, 1 penalty goal, 1 try; Australians, 0.

AUSTRALIANS vs. NORTH GLAMORGAN.—Assisted by four Cardiff players, eleven of the Australian tourists played at Merthyr on the 26th ultimo, when a strong North Glamorgan team was met. The largest crowd of the season for Merthyr attended. The home side were the first to attack, and Crocker looked dangerous. Bede-Smith intercepted a pass, and looked like scoring for the visitors, but Thomas was safe. From a scrum near the line the ball came out to the Australians, and after grand passing Carroll scored a try wide. Carmichael failed to convert. Just before the interval Parkinson broke through with a splendid try, which Carmichael improved.

The second half started in favour of the Australians, and Carroll soon scored, and Carmichael converted. Vaughan, a North Glamorgan forward, was injured, and went off. The home side worked their way down to within a few yards of the Colonials' line, and from a scrum James scored, Thomas converting. Result:—Australians, 2 goals 1 try (13 points); Glamorgan, 1 goal (5 points).

AUSTRALIANS vs. CARDIFF.—At Cardiff on Monday, before a crowd of 25,000 spectators, and on a ground which was hard-crusted in places, yet slippery in others, the Cardiff team once again played well against a Colonial side, and the Australians sustained their fourth and heaviest defeat of the tour on Welsh soil. With only one exception did the Colonials look like a side which would pierce the defence, and that was when Middleton gave his captain a try. Undoubtedly, Cardiff were in every department a superior side. The fact that the referee, Mr. Gil Evans, had to order off Burge was regrettable, but Mr. Evans wishes it to be stated that he has referred in five matches in which the Australians have been engaged, and in each he has had occasion to caution Burge. For the second offence yesterday, he says, he had no option under the rules but to order the offender off. It may be mentioned that the Colonials were awarded seven penalty kicks and Cardiff four. The gate amounted to over £1,100.

Brown started play for Cardiff. Russell was well tackled after receiving the ball from the first scrimmage. Clever play by the Cardiff forwards, followed by a smart bit of passing by Dyke and Williams, took play to the Colonials' "25." A useful kick by Hickey sent play over the centre line, where, from a scrimmage, Morgan passed out smartly to Bush, who beat Bede-Smith, and then threw to Gibbs. The latter ran up to Carmichael when he was finely tackled. Cardiff were given a splendid chance of scoring by their forwards heeling out close to the line, but in a round of passing which followed Spiller held on a moment too long. The Welshmen continued to attack, and after Bush had got in a useful free kick the forwards broke away in great style, and Morgan, being up, scored. Bush failed to convert. Brilliant passing between Bush, Dyke, Spiller, and Williams took the ball too near the Colonial line. Wood got offside, and from an easy position Bush placed a goal.

The Australians showed improved form after these reverses, but Mandible spoilt a couple of fine chances by failing to take the ball. Carmichael missed an easy chance from a mark, and then Russell cross-kicked to the mouth of the goal, but Bush conceded a minor. Some hard play took place in the Colonials' half, and Casey, securing in the loose, passed to Gibbs, who scored. Bush failed to convert. Just before the interval the ball went into touch fifteen yards from the Cardiff line, and Hickey threw out quickly to Woods, who repassed for Hickey to score. Carmichael failed to add the extra points. Interval scores:—Cardiff, (1p.g., 2t.), 9 points; Australians, (1t.), 3 points.

Cardiff at once attacked on resuming, but M'Cue saved by making a mark. Burge injured his knee, but resumed, limping. Play settled down for a time in the centre until Spiller put in a big punt to the Australians' "25." Bush failed with an easy penalty kick.

Burge was at this point ordered off for foul play, Westacott being injured. On examination by Dr. Williams, Westacott was found to be suffering from a kick in the groin. He soon resumed, and the Cardiff forwards broke away in splendid style, Gibbs securing, and cross-kicking to Brown, who tried to ground the ball but failed, and then passed to Williams, who scored. Bush converted from a fairly easy angle. Shortly after this the Cardiff backs passed in splendid style, and Williams was just stopped by Carmichael. The Australians, headed by Middleton, broke away, and Mandible had a fine chance, which he spoilt by kicking into the open. Shortly afterwards he twisted his ankle, and limped badly. Middleton secured from a lineout in the Cardiff "25," and after a strong run passed to Dr. Moran, who scored under the cross-bar, Carmichael converting. Directly afterwards Bush broke clean away, and then passed to Spiller, who sent on to Dyke, and he scored in the corner. Bush failed with a difficult kick. Within a minute Bush secured the ball between the Australians' "25" and ten yards line, and dropped a splendid goal, and a minute later Westacott broke away after taking the ball from a rebound, and passed to J. L. Williams, who scored in the corner. Bush failed to convert. This was all the scoring, and the Colonials retired a thoroughly beaten side. Result:—Cardiff, (1g., 1d.g., 1p.g, 4t.), 24 points; Australians (1g., 1t.), 8 points.

ENGLAND vs. WALES.—In the Northern Union International match between England and Wales, played before 4,000 spectators on the Broughton Rangers' ground on Monday, the Welsh side were rather outclassed, and suffered a crushing defeat. During the first half there was not a great difference between the sides. Forward, Wales heeled out to advantage, but behind the pack Hopkins and Thomas played in feeble fashion. On the other hand, the English halves quite dominated the situation, Brook, of Warrington, in particular playing a sterling good game throughout. England's three-quarters ran more strongly, while their passing was better timed and more effective than that of the opposition. There was no resisting the continued rushes of England, and after a quarter of an hour Brook scored from a pass by Hilson, Lomas placing a goal from a difficult angle. Paddison, the Welsh full back, twice saved cleverly, but another success for England was not long delayed, Longworth dashing over at the corner, while Lomas added a grand goal. Wales rallied, and after Williams had been tackled close to the line, Jenkins would undoubtedly have scored had not Brook pulled him down by the heel. Half-time score:—England, 2 goals and 2 tries (10 points); Wales, nil.

On resuming, England immediately added to their score, Rees blundering and letting in Robinson, who ran over close to the posts. Brooke failed at an easy place. Thomas (Wigan) kicked a penalty goal on behalf of Wales, but soon afterwards Lomas registered another try for England, the same player goaling. Intercepting a pass well inside his own half, Thomas (Halifax) eluded Gifford, and after having run three-parts the length of the field, scored the finest try of the afternoon for Wales, his namesake of Wigan adding goal points. Thereafter the Welshmen fell to pieces, and Paddison at full back mulling badly, Mann dribbled over, but the place proved abortive. From a pass by Brook, Mann scored again, and a further try was credited to one of the English forwards, Lomas in each case kicking a goal. Gifford played superbly at full back for England. Result:—England, 5 goals and 7 tries (31 points); Wales, 2 goals and 1 try (7 points).

WALES.—Paddison (Merthyr); Thomas (Halifax). Llewellyn (Oldham), Jenkins (Wigan), and Williams (Halifax); Thomas (Wigan), and Hopkins (Aberdare); Ruddick (Broughton Rangers), Foley Ebbow (Vale), Davies (Merthyr), Rees (Salford), and O'Neill and Dowell (Warrington).

ENGLAND.—H. Gifford (Barrow); W. Batten (Hunslet), G. Dickson (Warrington), J. Lomas (Salford), and G. Tyson (Oldham); E. Brook (Warrington) and J. Hilton (Halifax); W. Jukes and J. W. Higson (Hunslet), A. Smith and W. Longworth (Oldham), A. Robinson (Halifax), and A. Mann (Bradford Northern).

Referee, Mr. W. McCutcheon (Oldham).

SCOTTISH INTERNATIONAL TRIAL.—At the Scottish Rugby Union field, Inverleith, Edinburgh, on Saturday, the last but one of the series of international trial matches prior to the selection of the Scottish team against Wales was played. The weather was delightful, and 5,000 spectators watched the game, which proved very exciting and fast. There was an interesting change in the Provincial side. Tom Elliot going out, and Wattie Forest, the brilliant full-back of Scotland of three seasons ago, coming in.

The Provinces started, and play settled down inside the Anglos' line, and Forrest early enlivened matters with a clever run. Gilray twice broke to centre, but in the early mauls Provinces proved more capable, and the game was for a time well inside the Anglo-Scots' quarters. Abercrombie led the latter side down, and a good deal of scrambling forward work was seen. The game was carried back to the middle line, the Provincial three-quarters doing very well indeed. Maclean almost got in Schulze bringing off a capital save. The Anglos' three-quarters, from whom much was anticipated, at last got fairly going, and, following a run, Douglas-Brown passed to McIntyre. The latter cross-kicked and Gilray, picking up cleverly, made further headway, and finally passing to Macpherson, the United ---ospital player scored. The place was taken by Cunningham, who failed. The game was fast until the interval, when the score stood:—Anglo-Scots, 1 try (3 points); Provinces, 0.

The Provinces had the better of the opening stages of the second half, and in a couple of minutes a penalty came to them, off which Forrest kicked a goal. From the centre the Anglo-Scots got down, but a long kick into touch by Forrest turned the tide, and smart dribbling by Kyle led the home division dangerously near the Anglo-Scots' lines. Schulze had a huge punt, which found touch, but the advantage was nullified by capital work amongst the Provincial third line, Forrest being prominent. A magnificent bit of work, quite the finest in the match, occurred just after this. Forrest from well inside his own "25" punted, and Lindsay Watson, dashing up, gathered the ball, and sped on towards the Anglo-Scots' line. He swerved past Macpherson and Schulze, and, going on, planted the ball between the posts. It was a superb individual effort. The kick was a very simple one, but Forrest failed. The game continued on the most interesting of lines, and towards the finish ran strongly in favour of the Provinces, who were distinctly the better side. Result:—Provinces, 1 penalty goal, 1 try (6 points); Anglo-Scots, 1 try (3 points).

TROPICAL DEBILITY.
HOW TO FIGHT IT.

Of all the evils which the inhabitant of the torrid zone is called upon to endure, the greatest are, perhaps, the deadly debility and nervous depression which are the forerunners of the more serious ills so rife in warmer latitudes. Physical fitness should be the constant watchword; healthy nerve force must be the subject of the most earnest consideration. Happiness, nay life itself, hangs in the balance.

When exhausted Nature fails readily to respond to the extraordinary demands made upon the system by the exigencies of climate, Science once more comes forward with precisely the needed remedy. Sanatogen, the tonic food, is the means discovered whereby impaired vitality may be safely and rapidly restored.

Sanatogen has a singular effectiveness. It is not as a tonic only that it stands unrivalled; it is, besides, a perfect food, extremely rich in just those properties necessary to the perfect nourishment of the depleted system. The basis of Sanatogen is the casein or "curd," the nitrogenous principle of milk. Nitrogenous foods are our bodybuilding ones. They are demanded constantly by the body for the formation, and for the repair of its tissues. United with the casein, we find glycero-phosphoric acid, which is an all-important constituent of the brain and nervous system. This is the reason then, why Sanatogen has obtained its high reputation. It repairs the wear and tear of the most vital parts of our frames, and above all it gives to brain and nerve their essential food in precisely the form in which they are capable of readily receiving and assimilating it.

Doctors in India have not been slow to see the wonderful advantages in the use of Sanatogen among their patients, and a great many of them have written setting out the success that has attended the use of this preparation. They have used it with the greatest success in Malaria, Dysentery, Enteric Fever, cases of Plague and Cholera, as well as amongst those who are suffering from ailments due to disordered liver, spleen or digestive system. One or two of their opinions are worth considering.

Thus Dr. H. H. W. HART, Hapur Remount Depot, Babugarh, United Provinces, India, writes:—

"I have much pleasure in certifying to the value of Sanatogen in cases of Malaria, Enteric Fever, Dysentery, and other exhausting diseases. I have used it regularly now in my practice for the past two years, and in no single instance have I been disappointed with its results. I can honestly affirm that many of my worst cases owed their recovery to Sanatogen. I could quote numerous cases where the administration of Sanatogen was followed by immediate and marked amelioration of the symptoms. I cannot speak too highly of its value, and I certainly consider it the best of artificial foods."

Whilst Dr. C. R. NAYLOR, Bangalore, South India, writes:—

"It was through my influence that your excellent medium of nutrition—Sanatogen—was introduced into South India, and I have reason to be proud of my success in doing so, for I consider that I have thereby conferred a benefit upon suffering humanity. I have found it unequalled by any other food when the internal arrangements of the body (whether in children or adults) are in want of a stimulating nutrient. When milk, diluted to any degree, cannot be digested, Sanatogen will be greedily assimilated. In many almost hopeless cases of plague, where heart failure has been threatening, I have found Sanatogen helpful in getting the patient to turn the critical corner, and it has admirably aided my treatment of this fell disease. I have no hesitation in stating that by the discovery of Sanatogen you have added a most powerful weapon to those already in the possession of every physician."

And Dr. R. F. BOWERS, Bhaptiahi, P.O., Bengal and N.-W. Railway, N. Bhagulpore, India, writes:—

"I was able to try Sanatogen in a patient who had passed through the acute stage of Asiatic Cholera (in a severe form) but was utterly prostrated. That woman, I consider, owes her life to Sanatogen."

A physician has written a remarkable treatise entitled "How to Keep Well in India," a copy of which will be forwarded, post free, to all who apply to Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, mentioning the Indian Field.

Sanatogen can be obtained from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Co., Calcutta, and of all chemists, etc., in India.

From G. A. R., Bettiah, Champaran:—"I was suffering with diarrhœa, with which I was attacked nearly nine months ago, and all known remedies were greedily taken down by me, but to no avail, when as a last resource I tried your 'Essence of Papiya.' My digestive organs which were considerably deranged are now as right as possible; the distressing symptoms attendant on indigestion have now almost entirely left me and I heartily thank you for the preparation, which through the intervention of a Kind Providence you have successfully brought before the public."

From Mrs. E. L. M., Asansol, E. I. R.—'I had very bad Dyspepsia. My food used to turn rotten and sour in my stomach, and I used one bottle of Essence of Papiya and now I am sure I could digest a brick, it has thoroughly cured me of my Dyspepsia, hence I have so much confidence in your medicines. You certainly deserve credit for introducing such a medicine to poor suffering Dyspeptics."

You may certainly publish what I have said about your Papiya Essence.

From Mrs Elizabeth Wagentreiber, Delhi:—"With much pleasure and many thanks I beg to acknowledge the benefit I derived from your far famed 'Essence of Papiya.' I suffered from Dyspepsia in a most painful form, and found great relief after taking the first two bottles, and continued to take four more. After the sixth I felt so much better that I left off taking it regularly, but if at any time, I feel the old pain and symptoms returning I immediately take another bottle of the Essence. I am now able to eat more and can change my diet without fear of what were to me most dreaded attacks of indigestion."

De la Rue's "Pneumatic" Playing Cards.—
The Fronts of the "Pneumatic" Playing Cards are highly finished, whilst the Backs are minutely grooved or indented all over the surface, so as to provide an air-space between the cards, and a roughened surface which acts as a resistance for the thumb in dealing. This prevents misdeals, as the cards slide off one by one and can be dealt with the greatest ease and rapidity.

BOXING.

FITZSIMMONS vs. JOHNSON.—Although nearly forty-seven years old—he was born at Helston, in Cornwall, on 4th June 1862—Bob Fitzsimmons is anxious to make another attempt to regain the heavy-weight championship. As soon as he heard that Johnson had defeated Burns the Cornishman declared his readiness to meet the winner, and he now reiterates his desire for a match with the coloured champion.

Johnson's agent in this country is confident that his man will accept the challenge, so that there seems every prospect of the affair coming off

Bob Fitzsimmons, gained his first important victory, in 1891, when he defeated Jack Dempsey, of Brooklyn, for the middle-weight championship of the world at New Orleans.

In 1896, he beat Peter Maher at Mexico, and a year later came his famous match with J. J. Corbett at Carson City for the heavy-weight championship, which ended in Fitzsimmons' favour after a most exciting contest. In 1899, however, Fitzsimmons was himself defeated by James J. Jeffries at Coney Island, New York, and when the two met again at San Francisco three years later, the Cornishman for the second time met with defeat.

When Fitzsimmons had his first contest with Johnson, he laboured under a considerable disadvantage, as he had his right elbow badly damaged in a practice bout on the day before the match, and practically had to box the black with one hand.

In the second round he was cross-buttocked and thrown on the floor by his opponent, and before he could recover himself was counted out. He, therefore, does not consider this defeat a fair test of their respective abilities, and is consequently issuing this second challenge.

GOLF.

A SCHOOL FOR GOLFERS.—"Man," said the Scottish professional at the new Chelsea Golf School to a Daily Mail man last month, "ye may learn to play cricket or fitba, or yon funny kind o' hop-skip-and-jump they ca' lawn tennis by the licht of nature, but gowf ye maun be learrnt, and, mindye, learrnt accordin' to the best principles."

"I suppose," I ventured, "you don't consider that most English players have been properly taught?"

He threw up ...s hands. He almost snorted.

"It's just deplorable," he assured me. "There's many think if they put on a red jacket and hire a wee boy to carry their clubs, and hit a ba' anyhow or nohow over a few fields, that they're playing golf. Ye should see the links at Musselburgh, where every player has been taught from his earrliest yearrs. Not that I'm saying it's a necessity to begin so young. One of the best golfers I ever knew didna start till he was thirty-five. But he was taught by my brither. I doubt he would have been just a foozler if he had tried to learrn by himself."

Then this excellent man proceeded to enlighten me as to how the beginner at the school would be taught. But first I must explain what the school looks like.

On the Embankment, between Oakley Street and Cheyne Row, which is stil haunted by the shade of Carlyle, there has been for a long time a vacant building lot covering a pretty big piece of ground. Enterprise has secured this land, levelled it, covered it with ash and sand, so that it will remain dry, whatever the weather, erected various nets for tuition and practice, and engaged two professionals to teach.

The idea is to give the beginner an opportunity of learning how to drive and "loft" and putt and so on before they venture on the links and without exposing themselves to ridicule or making themselves a nuisance to more competent players. Every golfer knows that in these days when all courses are so crowded it is exceedingly difficult for new hands who can only play on Saturdays and Sundays to get any practice at all. It is unpleasant to feel that you are blocking the way for an impatient crowd who are all asking angrily why "rotters like that" are allowed to spoil other people's play. Only those who are gifted with an unusual amount of "nerve" can do it.

It is also expected that the school ground will be used by a good many expert golfers who have not time to practice as much as they would like. To turn in here for half an hour or so on the way to or from work is a means of keeping one's "swing" supple and one's eye "in" without giving up half a day to a regular game.

For the benefit of those who can drive and who merely want practice at it, a huge net, 24 ft. by 20 ft., is being erected against a high wall. In front of this is a teeing ground with plenty of room for three players to tee off at once. Here they can go on driving to their hearts' content and always get their ball gently returned to them by the patient net.

But to return to the Scottish professional and the beginners.

"Firrst," he said, "we shall teach them to drive not wi' a wooden club, but wi' an iron. Not to speak of the expense of breaking them, 'drivers' are apt to discourage the young. A lady will drive and drive and never raise the ba' all morrning. Wi' an iron she lifts it easy and feels hopeful."

"Next they will be allowed to use a 'cleek' and taught how to 'approach.' Over yonder is a bunker wi' a net over it. The supposeetion is that there's a green beyond the bunker. A little practice every day at that will soon make a beginner handy wi' his approach shots. Then, here in the middle are three holes, also for approaching and for putting. Man, after a dozen lessons here, ye'd no ken your ain game."

Anyhow, it is an interesting experiment. The long tunnels of nets and sail-cloth into which the beginner is taught to drive seem admirably adapted to their purpose. It is a quiet spot, very little overlooked. And, as the Scottish professional says, one can no more play golf without learning a good style and the correct positions than one could acquire fluency in French or German without being taught how they are pronounced.

NEW RULES OF GOLF.—To-day the new rules of golf, which constitute the issue of some of the most important and protracted legislation which has taken place on the game, will come into force, and in several details of moment the golf of this morning will be very different from the golf of yesterday afternoon.

Perhaps the most important alterations are those affecting the procedure on putting greens. The new rule regarding casual water comes into existence at a particularly opportune time. Hitherto, a player lifting out of casual water on the green has been obliged to place his ball immediately behind the water. Now, if the latter interfere with his putt he can place the ball in any spot on the green so as to obtain a clear putt to the hole, always provided that he do not place the ball nearer to the hole than the spot from which it was lifted. There will possibly be plenty of casual water on golf courses to-day, and this important concession will doubtless be welcomed.

Retrenchment in the rules is found in the fact that no longer can a player touch the line of the putt with the back of his hand. The old habit, which has grown upon many golfers, of brushing aside earth, sand, wormcasts, snow, and the like with the back of the hand will need to be forgotten. Dung, wormcasts, snow, and ice may be scraped aside with the club, or any loose impediment may be lifted; but the line of the putt must not be touched with the hand.

When a ball has been driven out of bounds from the teeing ground, another ball may be teed. Previously, it had to be dropped. When struck out of bounds from any place except the teeing ground it must still be dropped. A ball has now to be dropped over the shoulder instead of from the head. When a ball is in sand, sufficient of the latter may be removed to enable the player to see the top of the ball; if the ball be touched in removing the sand, no penalty shall be incurred. If a player play before his opponent's ball is at rest on the green he will lose the hole, instead of, as formerly, a stroke. Railways and rabbit-scrapes are no longer defined as hazards, being left completely to local legislation, and the former provision that "permanent grass within a hazard is not part of the hazard" has disappeared.

In regard to stroke competitions it has been decided that the committee in charge of an event shall now be responsible for adding up the scoring cards (not the secretary, as previously), and that players must play in couples, three competitors, no longer being allowed to go out together. The penalty for driving from outside the limits of the teeing ground is, instead of disqualification, one stroke, the second shot being played inside the limits. Except when in a hazard, a player who plays two consecutive strokes with a wrong ball will be disqualified; if, in a hazard, he plays more than one stroke, with a wrong ball, and discover the mistake before he has struck the wrong ball from outside the limits of the hazard, there will be no penalty provided he then play his own ball. It is no longer a rule that a competitor shall lose a stroke for playing within twenty yards of the pin without having it removed, but if, playing within that area before the flagstick has been removed, the ball hit the stick or the person standing at the hole, the competitor will lose two strokes.

These are the chief alterations that become law to-day.

SURREY ATHLETIC CLUB, MARATHON RACE.

It was a full day's programme of foot-racing which the Surrey Athletic Club, under the honorary secretaryship of Mr. E. F. Vowles, carried out at New Malden (Surrey) on Boxing Day. Proceedings opened with a members' 6½ miles walking handicap, the result of which was as follows:—F. E. Roberts, scratch, 1; A. Alderton, 3mins. start, 2; W. Ward, 2mins. 10secs., 3; and A. J. Spackman, 2mins. 30secs., 4. Roberts took the lead about a mile from home, and won by 32secs. in 54mins. 43secs. This event, after a brief interval for luncheon, was followed by a 22 miles open Marathon road race. Eighty runners competed, and about fifty finished. A fast pace was maintained throughout, H. Cale, of the Sparkhill Harriers, Birmingham, leading for more than two-thirds of the distance, with E. Shepherd, of the Epsom Harriers, figuring most prominently and keeping second place for several miles. The latter, however, was deprived of his position by a local athlete, H. Green, of the Sutton Harriers, when about fifteen miles had been covered, and had also, in turn, to give way to A. Williams, of the Kent A.C., and the veteran, J. J. Burgess, of the Shaftesbury H., the last-named of whom eventually ran into third place. Green, who is quite on the small side, finally won by about 600 yards from Williams in the fast time of 2hr. 7mins. 50secs., with Burgess about another 700 yards off and Cale fourth. Green, with 24mins. start, won the sealed handicap. G. Dixon, of the promoting club, who finished seventh, took the second handicap prize, and also two other prizes—one as first novice and the other as first Surrey Athletic club-man—and J. V. Farrell, Gainsford, A.C., with 36mins start, won the third handicap prize; T. H. Blake, of the Shaftesbury, H., with 18mins start, the fourth handicap prize; and G. Still, of the Highgate Harriers, secured the prize for first representative of the club sending the largest entry. Prizes were also given to the first four men in the scratch race and medals to all others beating the standard time of 2hr. 40mins.

The positions and times of all who beat the standard time of 2hr. 40mins. are appended:—

TRANSFORMATION SCENES.

Your divinity at twenty—and at forty.

Your discovery that your chic fellow traveller was your wife's new French maid.

The ripping "rag" at the 'Varsity followed by that at home in your Governor's study.

The occasion when you surprised your cook entertaining her relations in the drawing room.

The substitution of your visiting card for the cash you were unable to find when requested to pay that theatre supper bill.

The quick change you effected in the theatre stalls, when, on arriving late, you hurriedly sat down on the knees of a fair incognita.

The shooting that was not all your fancy painted it on the arrival of your guests.

Hunting.

THE BOMBAY HUNT.

THE two previous blank runs were made up for last Bye day by the Bombay hounds, when they accounted for two jacks, in view of close on four score followers. It was somewhat unusual to be met at the club by a regular fog which gradually rose as we made our way to the coverts at Sahar and put hounds to work on the edge of the familiar valley. Losing no time, we were soon at full swing across the banked rice fields and then along the firm cart track which provides an escape from the treacherous melon ground. Crossing the water main, we have to negotiate a regular stone quarry nullah before meeting more open country as far as Marole. The quarry twice attempted to hide on the hill here, but finally had to submit to the inevitable.

With time in hand we struck luck at the start, near Sahar and dashed away down and up more than once the tortuous Bapuala nullah. Instead of crossing the Backwater we are led through some woods and over a big stone jump, the piece de resistance of the point-to-point races held by that veteran horseman Jack Symons. We eventually cross the water and find the jack take to the Powai Hills and set a very unusual course towards Kurla instead of the woods as customary. Finding it useless to try and shake hounds off here he descends into the valley and after a sharp burst is pulled down. It had been a fine run, but of such a circuitous nature that a number completely lost the fun.

Though at one time it looked as though we were not going to have a run at all, we eventually had the satisfaction of seeing hounds place another varmint to their credit on Tuesday morning. It was a cold morning, a regular Indian cold going right through one, and either for this reason or for the fact that scent was bad, hounds had to be hacked from Chukla Hill and the grove, through the Mango Tope on to Andheri Road before they announced the presence of a jack.

From there they led us with a merry burst back into the aforesaid Tope and through the woods in which the presence of barbed wire called for universal indignation. Thence into the open woodlands straight for the cave-topped Marole Hill and up it. The steepness of the ascent left us some way behind and we only arrived at the summit after hounds had accounted for their quarry.

The run was well worth going out for, but on such a cold morning one might have expected more.

Scent was far stronger on Thursday, when a large field met at Santa Cruz, with the consequence that hounds never hesitated and gave us two fine, long runs. On the outskirts of the graveyard we found our first and went away with a confident burst across varying country as far as Sahar. From there to the Backwater the finest stretch of banked rice fields lies and we had a great gallop. Fording the water we cross Vehar Road and make through the Powai Valley on to Horse Shoe Valley. One of these big and steep hills is chosen by the quarry with hounds hot on his tracks whereas the majority of us prefer keeping to the plain. That jack is feeling none too comfortable was certain, as, after going some way along the range, he retraced his way down to the valley and was caught as he reached it.

It was deemed early enough to give hounds another chance, so the covert to the north of Sahar was prospected. It proving tenanted, we went away for the second time across the Backwater and Vehar Road at almost identically the same spots. Here the quarry veered away right over Hogel ack Hill but turned again into Horse Shoe Valley. Mounting the range, he made straight along towards the woods beyond, and though many climbed after hounds they were too far back to be able to be sure of what eventually transpired.

Whereas the latter jack had taken the same course practically as the former, he had not had the run from the meet to Sahar and consequently had more go in him to enable him to proceed along the hills to a place of safety in the dense woods.

OLD CLIFF.

Paperchasing.

CALCUTTA PAPERCHASES.

THERE was a very good chase last Friday, 3½ to 4 miles out in the country which lies between the railway and the bund country. The start was by the Nullah flat road and the paper went along the Tollygunge Lane to the railway, then back again by wide sweeps over the ladies' wall and the first hurdle to the finish. There were about twelve jumps in all and we could have done with one or two more in such a long course. The going was good in parts but occasionally very sticky and it had also been spoiled a good deal by recent ploughing, leaving heavy lumps of hard earth—very trying to a horse's feet. Grief was less plentiful than in most of the chases hitherto, but unfortunately it was in one case rather serious. Mr. Kenneth Campbell's horse, Peter, came down heavily at the first mud wall and though he picked himself up and trotted away unhurt his unfortunate rider was badly cut about the face and suffered a slight concussion. He is, however, getting on well now we are pleased to say. Later on in the chase Tired Tim refused a wall, and gave Mr. Ballantyne a fall on Fairy and drove Captain Holden and Lord Francis Scott over a wing. They came back, however, and took the fence again and Mr. Ballantyne remounted. Mr. Robertson was leading on Solanus at the last mud wall, but the horse hit the obstacle heavily and brought his rider down and Lord Francis just beat Captain Holden in a tight finish.

The following was the order in the two chases:—

HORSES.

1. Lord Francis Scott on Fermoy
2. Captain Holden on Lord Harry
3. Mr. Winkworth on Ermine
4. Mrs. Dangar on Benalbi
5. Mr. Ballantyne on Fairy
6. Captain Gibbs on Trilby

followed by Messrs. Halliday, Symons, Studd, Muir, Myers Misr. Mscrae and Mrs. Dodds.

PONIES.

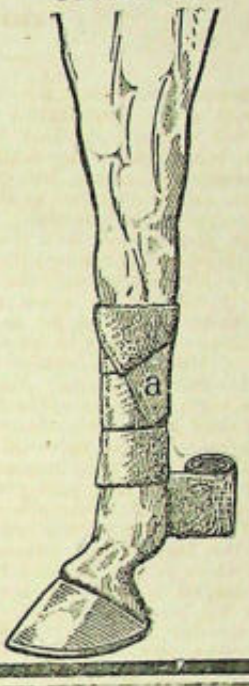
1. Captain Holden on Pathfinder II
2. Mr. Muir on Lady Maria
3. Mr. Corbett on The Pink 'Un
4. Mr. Stokes on Loch Lily
5. Mr. Ballantyne on Meprise
6. Mr. Cowper on Envious

followed by Messrs. Glen, Tegart, Milton, Mrs. Paris, Miss Hutchinson, Badmore and Holmes.

WINCHESTER.

Rifle and Pistol Cartridges

It's the careful and scientific manner in which Winchester cartridges are made and loaded which has earned for them a reputation for accuracy, reliability and uniformity which no other brands can approach. Winchester cartridge shells are carefully inspected before loading for size, length and conformity. All Winchester bullets are swaged by machinery which makes them exact in size, contour and density. Then the loading is done by automatic machinery which not only insures a uniform charge, buts seats the bullet in the shell so that its axis coincides with that of the shell; hence with that of the barrel of the arm. These are a few of the many reasons why Winchester cartridges in all calibers are the most satisfactory on the market.



THEY SHOOT STRAIGHT AND STRONG.

POLO IN POONA.

After proceeding by fits and starts the Alderson Polo Tournament has come to a conclusion at last. On Saturday, the 9th instant three games were played before a crowded pavilion, one being particularly close. First the Miners met the M. I. No. 1, each plus 3, and the former had matters pretty well their own way. Scoring three in the second and one in each of the others they ran out by 9 goals to 3. The 20th Cavalry No. 1 continued in winning vein giving the R.F A. No. 2 three goals and a bad beating. After the second chukker they were in the lead and with everything in their favour from them won by 9 goals to 3. With a desperately exciting finish the 12th Baluchis plus 3, and Lincolns, plus 2, had a great fight. The Lincolns drew level in the first, the second was blank and in the third the Baluchis scored. The fourth saw the Lincolns at once equalise and then hit the winning goal, 5 to 4.

Only one game was played on Monday, but this was a very level description between the R F.A. No. 2 and M. I. No. 1, each plus 3. In the first chukker the R.F.A. second and took the lead to be equalised in the second with none in the third, the fourth was exciting. When within an ace of scoring the M. I. were driven back and after twice hitting behind, the Gunner eventually got through and won by 5 goals to 4.

The concluding two games of the Tournament were played on Wednesday, both hotly contested. In the first, the Lincolns with plus 2 failed to give the R. F. A. No. 1 two goals start. The Artillery were first to score in the second chukker and all their opponent could do was to hit one in the next and lose by 5 goals to 3. One of the best exhibitions in the whole series was that between the 26th Cavalry No. 1 and the Divisional Staff, had the latter won they would have been equal first with the former. The Cavalry, however, were on their mettle and began by scoring twice. Play after that was very level till in the last chukker the Cavalry added a third.

The net result is that the 26th Cavalry No. 1 finish first with 10 wins; then the Staff with 8; 26th Cavalry No. 3, 7, 26th Cavalry No 2 R. F. A. No. 2 Sappers and Miners 5 each; R. F. A. No. 1, 127th Baluchis 3 each, M. I. No. 2, 1, and M. I. No. 1 none.

After the game, General Alderson complimented the winners remarking that it was a peculiar fact that the youngest team had won and the oldest been runners up. He wished his team had won naturally, but admitted the superiority of the winners. After a few words Mrs. Alderson then presented the Cups.

A word of praise and thanks is due to Major Hocken for the success achieved by his efforts.

EZRA CUP TOURNAMENT.

The competition for the Ezra Cup for which five teams have entered, began on the Calcutta Polo ground on Monday, the 18th instant. There was a small attendance and the opening game between the Viceroy's Staff and "The Rest," was a runaway victory for the Staff by 10 goals to 1.

First Chukker.—The Staff early asserted their superiority and hemming their opponents in scored 2 goals.

Second Chukker.—Captain Meadows got away but lost an opportunity through a miss hit. Thereafter the Staff pressed and registered 2 goals.

Third Chukker.—The Rest showed up for a short space but were driven back to their goal again and the Staff put on 2 more goals, but lost several other chances owing to poor shooting.

Fourth Chukker.—Colonel Brook was conspicious for a good run but Captain Holden saved. The Staff's No. 2 however, brought the ball down again and scored.

Fifth Chukker.—Lord Francis Scott rushed down and notched another goal and then The Rest attacked and scored their first and only point.

Sixth Chukker—The Staff pressed throughout and scoring 2 further goals won as stated by 10 goals to 1. Teams:—

TRADESMEN'S CUP TOURNAMENT.

The tournament at Rawalpindi drew eight teams this year. In the first round the 14th Jat Lancers beat the White House team by 9 goals to nil. The Lancers, for whom Sutherland and Mansa Ram were conspicuous, had the upper hand all through. Martin played a strong game for the losers. The game between "A" squadron, 10th Hussars and the 17th Cavalry ended in favour of the 10th by 6 goals to nil. The first two chukkers were very level and there was no score. The Hussars scored twice in the third period, the fourth was pointless, but the 10th registered 3 goals in the fifth and 1 in the last chukker. The 11th K.E.O. Lancers next met the 12th Royal Lancers, the latter winning by 7 goals to 2. Wood was as usual very conspicuous with good work for the victors. The game between the Tigers and the Bull Pups ended in a win for the Bull Pups by 4 goals to 3. Captain Gibbs came down during the game, put his thumb out and had to retire, Sergeant Ward taking his place.

The first game in the semi-finals brought together the 14th Jat Lancers and 10th Hussars, an exciting struggle ending in a win for the 14th by 5 goals to 4. The first chukker was devoid of score; in the second the 10th put on 2 goals and the 14th 1, but the Jats added 3 to their score in the third period. Each team scored a goal in the fourth and the Hussars one in the fifth. Still a goal behind the 10th pressed all through the last chukker, but were unable to draw level and the Jats won as stated by 5 goals to 4. The other game between the 12th Lancers and the Bull Pups was very level for the first two chukkers, but subsequently the Lancers asserted their superiority and won by 7 goals to 1. Messrs. Wood and Badger played well for the winners, while Captain Mathew Lannowe did good work for the Pups.

BECHTLER CUP TOURNAMENT.

This tournament was recently played at Jhansi and resulted as follows:—

Rowing.

THE ENGLISH ROWING SEASON REVIEWED.

The year 1908, will go down in the records of rowing as one of the most important in the history of the sport. The first international amateur regatta was held (in connection with the Olympic Games) at Henley, and later in the year Ernest Barry revived the interest in professional sculling by winning the championship in record time and bringing back to the old-country a championship that had been held by an Australian for ten years. The sport flourished exceedingly during the year. The up-river regattas were well supported, and the Amateur Rowing Association claimed a record number of clubs in membership.

The University Boat Race.

The University boat race on 4th April was the first big event of the year. The Cambridge crew, with the valuable services of D. C. R. Stuart at stroke once more, were made favourites directly the crews appeared on the tideway. Much unfavourable comment was caused by the secret trial rowed by Oxford, for which extraordinary precautions to ensure secrecy were taken by those in charge of the crew. It is to be hoped that the experiment will not be repeated. The Dark Blues were stroked by A. C. Gladstone, who was not altogether a success in that position, and there were three "old blues" in each boat. In the race Cambridge led from the start, and after being three lengths ahead at Hammersmith Bridge won by two and a quarter lengths in the good time of 19mins. 19secs.

Henley Royal Regatta.

The general interest in Henley Regatta suffered by the "barring" of foreign crews in the interests of the Olympic Regatta. This prevented the Belgians defending the Grand Challenge Cup, and the Leander oarsmen engaged in the international racing took no part in the meeting. There was, however, a big list of entries, the Oxford and Cambridge colleges sending a record number of crews, and the racing extended over four days (commencing 30th June) in magnificent weather. Christ Church Oxford) won the Grand with a smart and lively crew—their first success in the big event. Wadham College, stroked by a "feather-weight" of 8st. 12lbs. in R. W. Walker, secured another win for Oxford in the Thames Cup. This did not complete the Oxonian triumphs, for the neat Magdalen four which won the Visitors' and Wyfolds in 1907, carried off the Stewards and Visitors' trophies and set up a new record for the course in each event, and Barker and A. C Gladstone (Christ Church) took the Goblets. The only Cambridge success was in the Ladies' Plate, which Jesus College won (for the first time for thirty years) in faster time than Christ Church took for the Grand half an hour before. Thames R.C. won the Wyfold fours. In the Diamonds a mild sensation was caused by the disqualification of the veteran Blackstaffe in his heat with A. A. Stuart on a foul. In the final the latter was easily beaten by A. McCulloch (Leander). Throughout the meeting the racing was keen and exciting.

The Olympic Regatta.

Although late scratchings reduced the entries for the Olympic Regatta at Henley, the racing was spread over four days, commencing 28th July. The attendance was not so large as expected, but the brilliant weather made the attendant festivities a great success, and to some extent compensated for the uneven quality of the racing. The countries represented were the United Kingdom, Canada, Hungary, Belgium, Norway, Holland, Germany, and Italy. In the end of United Kingdom swept the board. Chief interest centred in the eights, in which the United Kingdom was represented by Leander and Cambridge. Leander got together a crew of big veterans, stroked by H. C. Bucknall, and they settled down into a magnificent combination In turn Leander defeated Hungary, Canada (Argonauts), and Belgium, the latter having previously beaten Cambridge. The final between Leander and the Ghent crew produced an historic struggle and a triumph for English style, Leander winning by two lengths after a grand race. The other three finals were left to the United Kingdom representatives. The Magdalen crew won the fours, and Fenning and Thompson (Leander) took the pairs. The foreign scullers were disappointing, but there was a wonderfully fine struggle in the final of the sculls between the veteran Blackstaffe and McCulloch. The former sculled the race of his carreer and his victory in the fast time of 9mins. 26 secs. aroused tremendous enthusiasm.

Just prior to the Olympic meeting Blackstaffe won both the London Cup at the Metropolitan Regatta and the Wingfield Sculls (amateur championship) defeating J. de G. Edye (holder) and R. C. Bourne in the latter. At the up-river regattas the Thames R.C. crews carried off most of the honours, but London R.C. had a very good second eight, which won practically all the events of the Thames Cup class. The Hungarian eight appeared at Molesey and gained a popular win, and Von Gaza, the German champion won the senior sculls at Staines and Molesey from moderate entries. On the upper river the Maidenhead R.C. won many races.

Professional Sculling.

A marked revival of interest in professional sculling resulted from the match for the championship of England and £200 a side between George Towns, of New South Wales, the holder of the title, and Ernest Barry, of Putney. A number of prominent amateurs interested themselves, in the match, which produced a fine sporting contest, and there was considerable enthusiasm when Barry won (under perfect weather and water conditions) by two lengths in the record time of 21mins. 12secs. Two matches for the championship of the world took place in New Zealand during the year. W. Webb, of New Zealand, had beaten Charles Towns for the title in 1907, and early in the year he was challenged by R. Tressider, of New South Wales. The latter was easily beaten, but in December, Webb lost the title, being outstayed and outplaced by R. Arnst, a New Zealander of powerful build, who has come on rapidly as a sculler.

The Coming Year.

The coming year bids fair to provide plenty of interesting racing. The recent trial eights at the two Universities point to Cambridge having an eight of more than average merit for the boat race, a promising stroke having been discovered in Arbuthnot, who stroked the Eton eight at Henley last July. After the boat race Cambridge will probably go to Belgium to row a sporting match against the Club Nautique of Ghent. Henley Regatta will take place on 6th, 7th and 8th July, and it is hoped that theBelgians will once again compete for the Grand.

There is likely to be a great revival of professional sculling. The supporters of Ernest Barry intend to make every effort to get Arnst to visit England to row Barry on the Thames for the championship of the world, and if the New Zealander agrees there will be no difficulty about finding the stake money. The chances of the match taking place are enhanced by the fact that an international sculling handicap has been arranged to take place over the championship course at Putney at the end of July, and the big amount of £500 in prize money provided by a London firm should attract not only Arnst, but other prominent Colonial scullers. In addition, a sculling handicap open to the United Kingdom will take place in April, with £100 in prize money, and it is hoped that this will bring out young native professionals who have had few opportunities to distinguish themselves. The professionals will, in fact, have opportunities that have not fallen to their lot for many years, and they have only to treat the events seriously by racing in a straightforward and sporting manner to ensure the support of the public.

ENGLISH vs. INDIAN SCHOOLS.—This annual match was played on the Calcutta C. C. ground on the 16th and 17th instant. The Indian Schools had got together a very strong side and had first lease of the wickets, Razak and McCready opening the innings. McCready was dismissed when he had made 2 and Quiterio joined Razak. The latter played good cricket and was not out with 62 to his credit at the end of the day's play. He gave one chance early in his innings to Paine, who cut his finger badly in the attempt to hold the catch and was compelled to retire. Rosser 33, and Quiterio 20 made useful scores and when stumps were drawn on Saturday, the Indian Schools had lost 5 wickets for 36. The next day Razak took his score to 75 before he was bowled, Mehta who was not out 5 overnight compiled 58 and with 32 from Mookerjee and 47 extras the innings closed for 287. The English Schools then went in and to the general surprise made a very poor show. Mehta bowled with great success taking 5 wickets for 18. The innings closed for 97, Fowke being top scorer with 28, Stafford 19 and Quin 18 not out, the only others to reach double figures. They followed on and when play closed had made 75 for 4 wickets. JOCKEYS AND TRAINERS vs. GENTLEMEN RIDERS.—On the 17th instant a very sporting event took place at Woodlands, Alipore. This was a cricket match, Gentlemen Riders vs. Jockeys and Trainers and so entertaining did the contest prove that it was resolved to make an annual fixture of the match. The Maharaja of Cooch Behar gave his charming grounds for the game and was hospitably "At Home" to the two teams besides numerous other guests.

Play commenced soon after 11 A. M.: the jockeys winning the toss, elected to bat first: they made a good start, and were eventually all out for 125. Then came the tiffin interval, after which the G. R's had their innings but didn't get into their stride for some time. However, they overhauled their opponents after the fall of the fifth wicket and then ran clean away. The innings was declared closed at 230 for 9 wickets, and then the Jockeys were sent in for another knock, at which they fared so badly that it was only the drawing of stumps which saved them from an inning's defeat.

CRICKET IN MADRAS.

MADRAS C. C. vs. MADRAS U.C.—Played at Chepauk on the 13th and 14th instant. The Madras C. C. went in first and at lunch time on the first day had lost 9 wickets for 144. Eleven more runs were added for the last wicket and the innings closed for 155, to which Harrison contributed 55, Low 28 not out and Dewsbury 25. The M.U. C. made 128 for two wickets when play was concluded on the first day, Subramaniam being not out 81 and Kulasakaram not out 29. The next day the M.U.C. took their score to 284 for 5 wickets and declared their innings closed. Subramaniam being not out 147, and Ranganathan and Kulasakaram making useful scores. With 130 runs behind the Madras C.C. went in again but were quickly dismissed for 91, the native team thus winning by an innings and 38 runs. Score:—

THE ALDERSON TOURNAMENT.

Two games were played on Saturday and both proved interesting to the numbers lining the Gymkhana ground.

The Worcesters had a tough struggle with the Leicesters before they could win by a goal to love.

Also close was that between the native troops, the 3rd Sappers and Miners and 107th Poineers, the former winning by 2-0

On Monday the Northamptons met the Sappers and Miners and beat them by 4 goals to nil.

A closer game was seen on Tuesday with the 114th Mahrattas and 3rd Sappers and Miners. It was a ding-dong struggle throughout ending in a draw of a goal each. Extra time was played and during this the Mahrattas hit the winning goal.

Stoney: "Can you spare me a half-crown, old man?"
Cleverman: "Yes, certainly. Catch!"
Stoney. "Thanks, but it's a bad one."
Cleverman: "That's why I can spare it."

Young Medico: "Just think! six of my patients recovered this week!"
Old Medico: "Serves you right. You spend too much time at the club!"

The Kennel.

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

THE question of preparing the coat of wire-haired terriers for exhibition is not to be allowed to remain quiescent in England. Mr. Walter S. Glynn, a member of the Kennel Club Committee, and a very old breeder of terriers, writes: "A few of the best-known wire-hair fox-terrier exhibitors have come to the conclusion that for the benefit of our terrier a conference of all persons interested might with advantage be held at Cruft's Show. They think that something should be done to get the different judges of the breed, and, if necessary, of other wire-hair breeds, to realise their duties when officiating, and steadfastly to refuse to judge terriers which in their opinion are over-trimmed or unfairly shown, or which have a really soft, woolly coat. If this were done, there can be no doubt the breed would be much benefited, and exhibitors would soon understand that dogs must be fairly shown, and that more care must be taken not to breed from animals who are bound to get the coat which cannot be exhibited without a great deal of trimming, and, maybe, unfair manipulation. . . I have been asked to set the ball rolling. Feeling as I do upon this subject, I am only too glad to do so, and to arrange for the preliminary meeting of what some would like to call 'The Wire-hair Terrier Association.'" As Mr. Glynn always advocates his views fearlessly, we are likely to hear a good deal more about the matter, and quite rightly so, too. It would certainly be a mistake to let the inquiry rest with the fox-terriers, for Airedales, Bedlingtons, Welsh, Scottish, and Dandie Dinmont terriers might very well be included. The whole subject is full of difficulties, and will continue to be so if we throw upon judges the onus of saying whether they consider a dog is over-trimmed or not. The Kennel Club regulations as to the preparation of dogs for exhibition are at present quite clear enough as they stand, for, among other things, they say that a dog shall be disqualified if it be proved to the committee of a show that any part of the coat or hair has been cut, clipped, singed, or rasped down by any substance or that the new or fast coat has been removed by pulling or plucking in any manner. It is not too much to say that these regulations are more honoured in the breach than in the observance, and if they were but carried out, there would be an end to faking of this particular description. Still, it is satisfactory to find that terrier men themselves are at last seeking to put themselves within the law. The British Bedlington Terrier Club has decided to expel any member found guilty of dyeing or colouring the coat of a Bedlington. One would like to have seen something said about trimming, too, as no breed suffers more from such malpractices; while the Kennel Club has never been backward in punishing anyone for improperly colouring a dog's coat.

ALMOST a book could be filled with stories of dogs owned by eminent men. Lord Brampton and his fox-terrier would no doubt add several pages. Sir Henry Irving had a little dog named Fussie, who was his inseparable companion. Mr. Lucy, in the Cornhill, tells how Fred Archer, the jockey, presented him to Miss Ellen Terry. At those pleasant supper parties on the Lyceum stage after a first night, Fussie was for long a familiar figure, and where the great actor went he went. When Irving was going to the United States on one occasion Fussie reached Southampton all right, but was missing when the boat sailed. Six weeks later he turned up at the Lyceum door, another exemplification of the remarkable homing instinct possessed by some members of the canine race. Fussie at last came to a violent end, much to the grief of his master, falling through a trap-door at Manchester. His body lies in the dogs' cemetery at Hyde Park.

As most people know, the King and Queen are confirmed dog-lovers, and their kennels at Sandringham are extensive and well equipped. When at the Norfolk residence Queen Alexandra pays frequent visits to her pets, who are much attached to her. They form a miscellaneous assortment, but the varieties best known to the public are borzois, or Russian wolfhounds, and basset hounds. With these her Majesty has won many prizes at leading shows. For some reason or other, the basset is not as popular as he was ten years ago. Then classes for this variety were always well filled at any big exhibition. The breed suffered a great loss when the late Sir Everett Millais died. He, with Lord Onslow and the late Mr. George Krehl, were the first to import these handsome little hounds into the country from France, where they had been used for sporting purposes for many generations. Last year Lord Conyngham sent his pack to the boys at Osborne College, and little Prince Edward of Wales was initiated into the joys of hare-hunting. Of course, owing to the shape of their legs and their weight, bassets are slower than beagles, but a good pack will account for quite a fair number of hares in the course of a season. They have very fine noses, and their music is most exhilarating, being nearly as sonorous and deep as that of a pack of bloodhounds. In the North, Sir M. Bromley-Wilson hunts from Dallan Towers, and there are various other packs in different parts of the country. Mr. Dudley Carleton had one at Winchfield before he went to India with his regiment, and another used to be located at Hever, in Kent. Bassets are quite fast enough for the man who wants to follow hounds, on foot especially, if the country has not many fences.

FEW people recognise the importance of keeping dogs free from internal parasites, yet innumerable ills may be traced to these pests, which are nearly always present in the canine host. If a dog is listless, disinclined, to food, with a dull eye, and starling coat, worms may frequently be diagnosed. Eczema, that most troublesome of complaints, is often attributable to the same cause. It is, therefore, a useful thing to make a practice of dosing a dog with a vermifuge in the spring and autumn, and oftener if the necessity is apparent. Messrs. Spratt and Naldire have some excellent preparations for this purpose, which are really much handier than making up one's own physic. The directions given should be carefully followed, as the dose is regulated according to the weight of the animal. To obtain the best results the patient should be fasted overnight, and the medicine administered early in the morning on an empty stomach. It should be followed in an hour's time with a draught of castor oil, and in many cases it is advisable to repeat in a fortnight's time. Where tape worms are present the head of the parasite does not always come away at the first attempt. Young puppies require frequent dosing if they are to do well. It is a rare thing to find one that is not infested with the round worm, which frequently causes death.

IT is almost impossible for a novice to choose a puppy out of a litter with any assurance that he is getting the best. The little creatures change so in appearance as they grow to maturity that one needs, considerable experience in breeding before he can tell with any certitude what a puppy is likely to make. If you cannot get a friend to advise you the only thing to do is to buy from a reputable person, and put yourself in his hands. This calls to mind the story of a clever young man, who set out to buy a bloodhound puppy, for which he was prepared to pay a stiff price. First of all he sought the advice of the vendor as to the points most esteemed in an adult hound. Several champions were paraded for his inspection, and it was pointed out to him that a long, narrow head was considered most desirable. Equipped with this knowledge, he at once selected a puppy with the narrowest head, and decided upon that, although the owner did his best to dissuade him. As the experienced man knows, puppies of this breed, if very narrow in head, are apt to grow up mean and snipy. He would naturally pick one that had a lot of substance in head provided it were not actually coarse.

ONE story leads to another. A man was once under an obligation to give another the first choice of a litter, and his heart was sore within him, for there was a veritable beauty, a youngster that could not fail to be the best of his kind if he lived. What was to be done. The owner could not be dishonest, and put the valued puppy on one side, but he resorted to a little subterfuge, which gained his end. He put on one side an indifferent whelp, and showed his friend the remainder. "Are these all you have?" was the final query. "No," he said, "I have one in the stable here, but he is so bad that I did not think you would want to see him." That was quite sufficient to decide which puppy should be taken, and the breeder remained in possession of his treasure. Of course, there are a few elementary rules which should guide anyone in buying a puppy. It is easy to see if the whelp is in good health. He should handle well, his eye should be bright, and the skin should be loose to the touch. The eye of the uninitiated can tell, too, if the coat is in good condition, and whether or no there are signs of eczema or skin trouble of any kind. The front legs should be straight, although all big dogs show a bony protuberance at the pasterns when young. The hind legs should be free from weakness, and have no tendency to being cow-hocked. This is a bad fault.

EXHIBITS.

The Secretary drew the attention of the members to the tiger's head which had just been mounted for the Society by Rowland Ward. The specimen was presented to the Society by Major A. Stables, R.A.M.C. The head was greatly admired by all present.

The Rev. E. Blatter, S.J. said that it might interest members to know that a specimen of the Talipot Palm (Corypha unbraculifera) was to be seen at the present moment in flower on the north side of Elphistone Circle Gardens. One of their members, Mr. R. Reeve, was the first person to draw the Society's attention to it and as it was apparently about 20 years since the last Talipot palm flowered in Bombay, it was a most interesting event. Some members might remember that one of these palms flowered in the Grant Medical College Garden in 1885 and another at the foot of Malabar Hill about 1887. Mr. Mahaluxmivala mentioned that one of these palms was also now flowering in the Victoria Gardens.

The following papers were then read:—

1 On airtight boxes and cases for Natural History specimens with experiments by Mr. John Wallace, C.E. with some remarks on the same subject by Mr. H. Maxwell Lefroy, M.A., F.E.S., F.Z.S.

2. Note on a new Alga ("Chara sp.") found in Bombay Island, by Mr. Vinayak Nanabhai Hate, B.Sc.

3. The fear of man in wild animals, by Major R. G. Burton.

A vote of thanks was passed to the authors of the different papers all of which will be published in the Society's Journal.

BALUCHISTAN NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

PROCEEDINGS of a Meeting of the Baluchistan Natural History Society held in the Quetta Museum and Library Building on Thursday, the 24th December 1908.

Read letters, dated 24th November and 12th December, from the Honorary Secretary, Bombay Natural History Society, (1) stating that the Marten sent to him was not the Pine Marten but the Beech Marten (Mustela foina leucolachneca, Blanford, and (2) forwarding extracts from Blanford's (second) "Yarkand Mission" and from the "Annals and Magazine of Natural History" containing descriptions of the same.

Resolved—That the letters be recorded.

The Honorary Secretary placed before the Meeting a number of Zoological specimens donated to the Museum since the last Meeting, the most important of which were:—

A Common Fox, from Mastung, presented by Mr. W. G. Chapman.

A Water Beetle, from Sibi, presented by Mr. W. Shaw.

A Woodcock, from Sinjawi, presented by Mr. S. D. Turner.

A Long-eared Owl, Asio otus, Linn, from Quetta, presented by the Hon'ble Mrs. Williams.

A Golden-backed Woodpecker, from Sind, presented by Mr. F. M. A. Beaty.

A Striped Hyaena, from Nushki, presented by Mr. DeMello.

Three Persian Wild Goats, Capra aegagrus, Gmel., from near Nushki, presented by Major F. C. Webbware, C.I.E.

A Crow-Pheasant, Centropus sinensis, Steph., from Jhatpat, presented by Captain F. McConaghey.

A Sheldrake, Tadorna cornuta, S. G. Gmel., and a Coronetted Sand Grouse, Pterocles coronatus, Licht; from near Saiyad Hamid, presented by Mr. E. J. Hooper.

The Honorary Secretary also placed before the Meeting a number of geological specimens from Baluchistan which had been kindly classified for the Museum by the Director, Geological Survey of India.

The method of arranging these specimens with the collection from England presented by Colonel J. Day, R.E., in 1907, was discussed and it was agreed that it would be a good plan for foreign and local specimens of the same class to be arranged side by side for convenience of comparison and that the distinction between them be made conspicuous by using red labels for the former and black for the latter, as done in the Indian Museum.

The Hon'ble President then remarked that, while out shooting near Nushki on the 15th December, his party shot no less than eight White-headed (or Stiff-tailed) Duck, Erismatura leucocephala, Scop, which had hitherto been regarded as extremely rare even in Baluchistan, but is evidently rather common.

While discussing the question of obtaining more specimens of wolves, foxes, jackals, etc. the Hon'ble President said that it might be of interest to record that, while at Khushdilkhan, in April 1901, he saw early one morning no less than six wolves all together in one pack just outside his tent.

In conclusion the Hon'ble President suggested that the Political Agent, Zhob, be asked to try and send the Museum a skin of the Bear obtainable near Fort Sandeman.

There being no further business the Meeting adjourned.

J. W. N. CUMMING,
Honorary Secretary.

The Story Teller.

THE TWO-HEADED SNAKE.

NOTE—There is a snake in India which the natives firmly believe to be furnished with a head at each end! This is the Indian Sand Snake (eryx johni), a dark coloured sombre looking reptile, five feet or more in length. Its body is almost of the same thickness the whole way along, the tail being blunt and of practically the same diameter as the small and inconspicuous head. Native jugglers sometimes take advantage of the superstition prevalent regarding this creature, and alter the tail with a sharf knife, so as to make it look still more like a second head.

Roddy Fairfax was on the eve of leaving the Hills to rejoin his father in Agra for the cold weather. His school at Mussoorie, like many other educational establishments for English boys and girls in India, had only one long term in each year, lasting for the whole of the hot season. With the beginning of November came breaking up time, when the boys all left the Hills for their tremendous four and a half months' holidays. Twenty delightful weeks to look forward to, with riding and shooting galore in the crisp air and bright sunshine of the North Indian winter.

Roddy was one of the lucky ones, for down at Agra his pony and gun were waiting for him, and there too there was Kassim Khan, his father's orderly and his own especial crony. These holidays were to be particularly important ones, for Kassim had promised that this cold weather, his little Roddy sahib should have an opportunity of shooting his first buck antelope. The boy could hardly control his impatience as the train crept slowly away from Dehra Dun. He derived, however, a certain modicum of second-hand pleasure by gazing into the green woods, through which the train steamed leisurely, and thinking of the feats he was going to perform in the jungle. Once as he hung out of the carriage window, he caught a glimpse of the dappled side of a spotted deer.

When it grew dark the servant, who had been sent to look after him, brought some supper, and afterwards arranged a bed on one of the long seats. In spite of excited anticipation Roddy fell asleep almost directly he was between the blankets. Next morning there was only just time to wash and dress before the train steamed into Agra; and there on the platform were his father and Kassim Khan, looking out for him. A broad and kindly smile lit up Colonel Fairfax's weather-beaten face, as Roddy, flushed and radiant, sprang from the carriage, and flung himself into his arms. Kassim's hawk-like visage was wrinkled with a grin of welcome, as he drew his lithe figure erect, and saluted the little sahib with military precision.

"Well, my boy, I am awfully glad to have you back, and so is Kassim too, I'll warrant!"

Roddy by way of answer pounced on the lean brown hand which had just dropped to the orderly's side, after a smart little outward wave, and was wringing it affectionately.

The boy was motherless, and Colonel Fairfax had not had the heart to send his only child away to England to be educated, but had kept him at school in the Hills instead, where if the education was not quite so good, at all events they were always within easy reach of one another. . . . . .

The rest of the first day at Agra was spent in visiting the stables and greeting the ponies, in petting the dogs, in looking over guns and rifles, and in a minute inspection of every corner of both bungalow and compound!

When at home, Roddy always had late dinner with his father and at half-past seven the old butler, Fakir Mahomed, having laid out the Colonel's clothes, came and arranged Roddy's for him, talking unceasingly all the while, and giving full news of the various servants. . . . Adhoo, the grass cutter, had gone away to his village near Jagner, for his father was but lately dead. The manner of the old man's death had been very terrible: while working in his field he had by chance trodden on a two-headed snake, which had bitten him in two places. On the small toe of the left foot with one mouth, and on the ankle of the right foot, with the second mouth. Adhoo's father had only just strength to creep slowly to his house. Directly he reached the threshold he fell down, and that same night he died in great agony.

Roddy was full of wonder and horror at the tale.

"Two-headed snake," he cried, "what on earth is that? I have never heard of such a creature before?"

"Oh, Roddy sahib, it is a well-known and very evil beast. It has no tail, but a long body with a head at each end. The bite is so deadly that it will even kill a bull of full size and strength. Many poor people in Bandelphand die each year from the bite of two-headed snakes"

"Why, we are going to Jagner within a few days, Fakir Mahomed" said Roddy; "my father has work to do in that district—Kassim and I will hunt for these strange snakes, and catch one to send to the Museum."

"The little sahib must have a care" said the old butler anxiously: "it is said that these creatures will even dash at people from afar; so fierce are they."

"Ah, but we will have gaiters on and carry guns" answered the boy: "small shot will kill even a large snake easily."

At dinner Roddy was full of the coming snake hunt, but the Colonel who was a bit of a naturalist seemed vastly amused at the idea of a snake with a head at each end: nor did he view the quest with any of the apprehension exhibited by Fakir Mahomed.

A week passed like a happy dream. There was the early morning gallop round the maidan on Skylark, Roddy's brown Arab. Then came breakfast, after which the Colonel used to go off to his office, while Roddy practised on a target in the compound with the little rifle which his father had got from Bombay for him.

At lunch the boy would be alone, for Colonel Fairfax had much work to get through before going out into the district, and so used never to get back until well on in the day.

In the evening they always went for a drive together in the high trap, behind Peter the big fast trotting country-bred; and Roddy's little rifle would be under the seat, so that he might get out and have a shot, if any game happened to be seen.

One afternoon they found a flock of green fruit pigeons, feeding on the ripe fruit of a pipal tree beside the road, and feeding on the ripe fruit of a pipal tree beside the road, and Roddy covered himself with glory by killing two out of the flock in two consecutive shots with his ·250. The Colonel complimented his boy warmly on this exhibition of accurate shooting, but Roddy modestly ascribed all the credit to Kassim and his patient coaching every morning in the compound. At the end of the week they started for Jagner. Two bullock carts containing tents and supplies, with two saises, several grass cutters and four other servants, had gone on ahead. Skylark and the Colonel's favourite Arab "Said" also went with them. Father and son drove out later in the trap behind Peter, while a fourth pony Paul, was posted half way as a relief; for the distance, 35 miles, was too great to drive one animal right through. For the first couple of miles there was an excellent metalled road, after that the track was unmetalled, or kutcha as it is called in India, the sand being so deep in some places that even strong Peter had a difficulty in keeping the trap moving. In a few extra bad places they had to get out and walk. A little beyond Kagerol they found a sais with Paul waiting for them in a mangoe grove. Here they sat down, and had sandwiches and iced limes and sodas, which they had brought with them in a lunch basket.

Meanwhile, steaming Peter was being rubbed down and dried in the shady grove. Later on in the afternoon after being fed and rested, the sais would bring him leisurely on to Jagner. After a half hour's halt, they were on their way again with Paul now between the shafts, and they reached Jagner at tea-time, to find their camp ready pitched under some fine trees; while Fakir Mahomed, trim and neat as at home, and Kassim in a workmanlike suit of khaki, stood outside the tents awaiting them.

The camp life was so exciting and novel to Roddy, that two-headed snakes were not even remembered for several days. The fourth morning proved a memorable one for the boy, for he succeeded in shooting a fine buck antelope, with horns twenty-one inches in length. Blackbuck swarmed all round Jagner, and the first three days Roddy had several chances, all of which he spoilt by his uncontrollable excitement. This nervous over-eagerness which at first overpowers every young hunter, is known as "Buck Fever." Roddy, however, had naturally a good eye and steady hand, beside being well practised in target shooting, so that he soon got over his nervousness, and made a completely successful stalk on his fourth morning, and having got into position brought off his shot with the coolness of a veteran! After he had once been initiated, buck shooting seemed to come easily to him, and so the novelty of the sport commenced to wear off. Then it was that Roddy recalled his original plan for hunting two-headed snakes, and thereafter he kept a sharp look out for the mysterious reptiles during his daily exploration of the country round Jagner.

One evening while approaching one of those clay banks, which serve to divide the fields from one another, Roddy suddenly espied a dark coloured snake gliding slowly towards a rat hole. He happened to be carrying a bamboo stick in his hand, so dashing after the reptile, he pushed the cane under the middle of the creature's long body, and flung it back towards the open ground. Then he stamped in the mouth of the rat hole with his heel, so as to cut off this retreat.

Kassim, who was following close behind, yelled out in a terrified voice to take care, as it was a two-headed snake.

Roddy full of excitement proceeded to examine the reptile which in a seemingly half stupid condition, had remained in the open where it had fallen. The snake was just over five feet long, and of a dingy dark brown colour; but the peculiarity about it was that it was like a piece of rope, the same thickness all along. The sun had set and the light was not very good, and certainly it seemed to Roddy very difficult to decide which was the head end. Indeed after looking at the creature for several minutes in the fast waning light, and hearing Kassim's reiterated "look at the two heads sahib? This is the very snake I have told your Honour about. Doubtless this is even the very one which killed Adhoo's father." The boy began to think that there was really something in the native belief about this snake, contrary to all natural laws though it might be.

A coolie who was with them had a cloth, which they spread out on the ground, and then Roddy rolled the snake into the middle of it with his bamboo, and gathering up the ends of the stuff into a neck, tied a strong cord round, so that the snake was safe and fast as though in a bag.

Neither Kassim nor the coolie would touch the cloth with its uncanny contents, so that Roddy carried it home at arm's length himself!

Colonel Fairfax was unable to examine Roddy's snake that evening, as he had a quantity of correspondence work to get through. They decided therefore to consign the cloth and its contents to a safe place for the night, and defer the examination until the following morning.

There happened to be in the dining tent a large wooden box with a hinged lid, used for carrying odds and ends.

New No. 2 ·360 Bore

In comparison with the ·400/·360 the muzzle velocity of this new Cartridge is approximately 230 F.S. higher, and although the charge is increased the same low pressure, viz., 14 tons, is maintained. The increased velocity coupled with the extra weight of bullet and consequent greater striking energy gives one a rifle that has practically the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express, and is consequently an ideal weapon for deer stalking and for shooting heavier forms of non-dangerous game; moreover, in consequence of the importation of the ·303 into India being prohibited, it is well worthy the notice of Sportsmen in that country who desire to have a weapon in which is combined High Velocity, Flat Trajectory, Great Striking Energy, Minimum Recoil, and in which, through low pressure, a greater margin of safety is given and the risk of jamming reduced to a minimum.

ESTABLISHED 1821.

The contents of these were turned out and the cloth bundle with the snake in it dropped inside: the lid was then closed down, and a heavy stone placed on top to make all safe. Colonel Fairfax wrote on in the dining tent until about 11 P.M.; then with a sigh of relief he gathered together and put away his papers, and went off to his sleeping tent next door. A quarter of an hour later he was in bed, and fast asleep. As for Roddy he had gone to bed over an hour earlier . . . . .

Both father and son would have been enormously astonished had they known what was going on while they were plunged in slumber.

Among the Colonel's retinue was an odd looking grass cutter named Sulloo. This boy, for he was little more, kept almost entirely to himself, seldom if ever mixing with, or talking to the saises, and other grass cutters.

Sulloo's most startling peculiarity was his eyes, which were a strange golden yellow, shot with red-brown. Looking at him full face one felt the same sensation, as when gazing into the wild visage and great yellow eyes of a lion or tiger. All the servants were more or less afraid of Sulloo and his eyes, ascribing weird and uncanny powers to their owner. This strange grass cutter had rather a fair skin for a native: he used to always wear a cloth of a peculiar sulphur coloured hue, while he also invariably carried a small blanket of the same shade, with a hole through the centre. In bad weather he would put his head through the hole, and wear the blanket like a poncho, to keep himself warm.

That night the whole camp being plunged in sleep, Sulloo crept like a cat from somewhere in the darkness towards the dining tent. Having arrived there he lifted the stone noiselessly off the box, opened it and having taken out the bundle containing the snake, crept as silently away again. He made his way unerringly by the faint starlight to a large hollow tree, at a considerable distance away, and disappeared within it.

The interior of the trunk was dry and clean, like a small round room. Here quite safe from observation, Sulloo produced and lit a candle; also from a small piece of cloth he unrolled a collection of curious looking native made implements, and various pigments. Everything being in readiness, the snake was taken out of the cloth, and its tail converted with marvellous skill into the semblance of a second head. With such perfection of imitation was the work carried out, that a most minute examination would have been necessary in order to discover the fraud.

Time is never of any object to a native, and Sulloo worked away, perfecting his deception, for nearly three hours.

The work done, the snake is carefully tied up again in the cloth, and the bundle returned to the box in the dining tent and the stone on the lid replaced . . . . .

Next morning after chota hazri, Colonel Fairfax turned out the snake on to a mat for examination.

His astonishment may be imagined, when the creature was discovered to be to all appearances provided with a head at each end!

However on looking very closely, in the bright morning light, it became apparent that only one head had a mouth which would open; yet otherwise the tail was so similar to a head, that at last the Colonel came to the conclusion that it was a case of natural imitation, and that for some unknown reason this snake simulated had a head where its tail ought to be! Greatly puzzled he packed the creature carefully up, and sent it off to the Bombay Natural History Society, together with an explanatory letter.

The messenger who took the package to the post office in Agra, thirty-five miles away, happened curiously enough to be Sulloo; for this grass cutter told the Colonel that he had left his mother seriously ill with fever, and he was most anxious to take the first opportunity of seeing how she was getting on . . . . Some ten days later a letter arrived from the Secretary of the Bombay Natural History Society, acknowledging Colonel Fairfax's letter and the parcel, but saying he thought some mistake must have occurred, as the package when opened was found to contain a cobra!

This last strange piece of news added the culminating touch to the mystery, especially so as the Secretary had mentioned in his letter, that to all appearance the seals of the package had not been tampered with.

Two-headed snakes are now somewhat a sore point with the Colonel, for priding himself as he does on his Anglo-Saxon shrewdness and common sense, he hates to be confronted with phenomena which cannot be explained.

Roddy being a boy and therefore not too sceptical, has come round to almost believing Kassim and Fakir Mahomed's view, that the two-headed snake really does exist, and that it is a strange and mysterious reptile with extraordinary powers. Sulloo, the only being really behind the scenes, neither smiles nor speaks, but clad in his sulphur coloured cloth, spends his days in the usual way collecting root grass for Said.

The Theatre.

THE LONDON COMEDY COMPANY.

It has at length been the good fortune of Calcutta to witness the first production of a new play, and if the enthusiasm at the Grand Opera House on Monday night may be taken as a criterion, we predict a long and successful run for the "Fencing Master" at home and in the Colonies. Unfortunately, Mr. Ward's season comes to a close, amidst general regret, on Saturday, and we shall not have the opportunity of seeing this piece again. The stage equipments at his command will not bear comparison with those of the big theatres in London and in America, and one cannot but admire the enterprise of Mr. Ward, while Calcutta is honoured by being the scene of the "Fencing Master's" debut. It is a play in three acts by Herbert Hall Winslow and is full of pathos, humour and dramatic situations. It was admirably acted, and forms a notable addition to the London Comedy Company's already strong repertoire.

The story is that of an Italian nobleman, whose home is ruined by an American diplomat. Bereft of title and estates, he flies to New York with his infant son, and as Angelo Rossi, becomes a fencing master. His sole care in life is the bringing up of his son and all his earnings go towards Carlo's education and the promotion of his career as an artist. By a singular coincidence one of Carlo's friends is Philip Grayville, son of Rossi's enemy. To him Carlo loses 200 dollars at poker and Philip tries to induce him to forge his father's name. On his indignant refusal young Grayville counterfeits the signature himself. Carlo, assisted without his knowledge by Lilian Montgomery, an heiress with whom he is in love, completes his studies in Paris and returns to New York with a reputation. Then the forged note turns up and he is confronted with it by the villains, Philip and his father, who think they will thus break off Carlo's engagement to Lilian. In an intensely dramatic scene old Rossi declares himself to his enemy and denounces him. All, however, comes right in the end, Lilian and all his friends stand by Carlo and the fencing master, the plot falls through, the bill is proved, Carlo vindicated, and Rossi restored to his title and estates.

Mr. Ward, as the fencing master, was splendid, playing with a feeling and restraint in the character of the lovable old count. He was again seen at his best in one of those delightful old man parts in which he excels. Miss Palotta was enchanting as Lilian Montgomery and her posing as the picture in the scene in which Carlo unveils his chef d'œuvre was most artistic, the charming tableau being greeted by enthusiastic applause from the audience. Miss Ghiloni and Miss Musgrove as Mrs. Dexter Brown and her daughter were well suited and were responsible for much of the humour of the play. Mr. Ryott was a manly Carlo, and Messrs. Wykeham and Beattie as Grayville pere et fils were excellent villains. Messrs. Eldred, Wallace, Greig and Knight sustained minor parts with credit. The piece went with a swing from start to finish and at the fall of the curtain the performers were warmly applauded.

To-night the Company revive "The Man from Mexico," to-morrow "Tipping the Winner" and the farewell performance on Saturday will be "Brown's in Town" another new piece.

VALUE OF THE CYCLE IN WAR.

MEMBERS of cycle corps in India may like to hear something about the very interesting experiment now being conducted in England and on the Continent with a view to discovering the right metier for the trained cyclist, and how the remarkable mobility of a cyclist battalion can be put to the best use. On the whole, it has taken an unconscionably long time for the recognition of its military uses to come round. All the world, with the exception of the military scientists, concluded years ago that the cycle is the most serviceable means of locomotion yet invented. The cheapness of the modern machine, its reliability, and its suitability for covering long distances are factors which cannot reasonably be disputed. It can be shown that the cyclist can keep up an average of eighty miles a day in full marching order, and finish with less physical exhaustion than the infantryman with his twenty miles or the cavalryman with his forty.

Probably the expert military opposition to the use of the cycle, or, rather, since opposition may be considered too sweeping a term, its reluctance to consider it an essential factor in Army equipment, may be traced to the idea that tyres are consistently unreliable. This idea has many adherents among people of the non-cycling sort, and probably they consider the pneumatic tyre is, by its nature, more likely to be in a punctured than a non-punctured state. Where the impression is got from is not very clever. Possibly from the reports of races on the track, for the fact that a rider was forced to retire through a punctured tyre never fails to form part of the chronicle. Of course, punctures do occur on the track with marked regularity; but few people realise that the tyre used on the track is very different in construction from the one fitted to the military bicycle. In the course of a very interesting paper read before the National Service Institution, a few weeks ago, Captain Trapmann stated that puncture statistics, carefully compiled during several years' experience, tended to show that a man had a puncture on the average once in every 210 miles. That is not very disastrous, considering that the expert hand can repair the damage in ten minutes. The puncture question is a very insignificant one and can be omitted from consideration.

The real value of the military cyclist, is that he assists the elucidation of the greatest of all military problems, one manner and the means of feeding the Army. Captain Trapmann, who is the adjutant of the 29th (Cyclist) Battalion, County of London Regiment, claims that the cyclist can carry, without undue inconvenience, three days' rations in his valise. It is obvious that no cavalryman can hope to equal such a performance. Cyclists, too, are well equipped for securing food from the country-side, it being no great hardship, even after a fatiguing day, to ride another five miles in the search for food. It is apparently recognised by the authorities that even in the most rural parts of England a cyclist unit is able to live on the country in which it is operating, irrespective of supplies carried by its own motor transport.

Apparently the claims of the cyclist soldier are receiving full recognition abroad. France, which holds the lead, has a permanent battalion of riders, in addition to a liberal supply of orderlies and scouts in every regiment. During the past year the Italians have turned their companies of bersaglieri into cyclists and increased their number. The operations of cyclists at the Belgian manœuvres were a feature of the proceedings. In the case of our own cyclist corps, this year has seen a thorough reorganisation. Companies have been abolished, and in their place, we have ten battalions of cyclists, each battalion consisting of eight companies of sixty men and a machine-gun section. This means 512 men and twenty-one officers—533 altogether—in each battalion, the total including twenty-two motor drivers for eleven motor transport vehicles. In addition to this, infantry battalions are still permitted to retain a cyclist section, consisting of one officer, one sergeant, one corporal, and twelve men. The reorganisation of our services has been too sweeping and revolutionary for one to judge whether the cyclist section or any other will benefit by the change; but it is devoutly to be hoped that an opportunity will be given the cyclists of demonstrating their great utility in a modern army.

COVETOUS CRICKETERS.

THERE is trouble in the camp of the Australian cricketers who are due to visit England this coming summer. They are quarrelling with their own Board of Control as to money matters. It is a pretty sordid squabble on the part of men who pose as amateurs and desire greater emoluments than are given to English professionals. Owing to perpetual internecine strife and the necessity for some central authority to regulate the relation of English and Australian cricket, a Colonial Board of Control sprang into existence. The Board consists of representatives from all the federated States of the Commonwealth and has been recognised by the Marylebone Cricket Club, which by universal consent acts for England. The Board of Control "down under" transacted all the business in connection with the last English team who visited Australia.

The Board in dignified fashion fought against England and South Africa in opposition to the projected Imperial triangular tournament of Mr. Abe Bailey. The Board arranged with the M.C.C. for a Colonial combination to come to Great Britain in the present year. In all these matters the new power fought the battles of the cricketers, and then when all arrangements are satisfactorily completed the Board of Control propose to take all the share of the profits of the forthcoming English tour, and after deducting 5 per cent. of the first £6,000 and 12½ per cent. of the remainder to divide the surplus equally among the members of the team.

The Australian players are up in arms. Alfred Noble and Clem Hill have declared the terms prohibitive. The captain elect of Australia, Noble, has even said that if the Board decline to modify its financial scheme the leading Australian players will not visit England.

Some years ago when a Test Match was in progress at Kennington Oval, the English professionals virtually struck for £20 per man. What was the attitude of the Cornstalks then? Did not Harry Trott and others express opinions that this was an exorbitant demand? Virtually they objected to the English players receiving the fee which has since been recognised and granted. The Australian players are engaged in a game of grab, and it is clear that their "love" of cricket is very subservient to their greed of gold. The players seem to object to anybody making anything out of cricket except themselves.

It is deplorable to see a man like Noble taking such an attitude. Originally a bank clerk, he has by his commanding abilities as a cricketer gained world-wide renown and converted himself into a prosperous man, with the professional status of a dentist. Undoubtedly Noble has enriched himself by his trips to England. But only this year he was presented with a public testimonial of £2,000—handed to him by the Governor of New South Wales. This was an expression of appreciation of his powers as a cricketer and a man.

And yet Noble, the captain elect, the man who has been pelted with presents, is the first to turn round, threaten the Board, and stand out for his pound of flesh. That is really what the position amounts to if one looks at the situation fairly and express one's opinions with brutal frankness.

Hitherto, the Australian cricketers have taken all the profits and divided them. Hence their objection to the percentage deductions by the Board of Control. In the past, some of the Australian celebrities have enriched themselves out of these excursions to England, while other men have received too little. But the whole of the profits have been swallowed up. Not a penny piece of the profits in England have ever been set aside for the benefit of the game in the Colonies. Now says the Board of Control:—"We will pay all men alike. There shall be no distinction. But we shall probably allocate £1,000 to ourselves." What will the Board of Control do with this money?

It is impossible to exactly answer this question but as the board has no establishment to keep up, no salaries to pay, and no ground to maintain, it is assured that the representatives of all the States will see that almost the whole of this sum is expended on the development and culture of cricket in the Colonies. Possibly the deductions may make a difference of £60 or £70 per man to the tourists, but even then they will, judging by previous experiences, be well paid. The net profit has been known to be £800 per man! But, for the sake of argument suppose that £600 per man is the reward, or that it is reduced to £530 a piece. As these men have all their expenses paid, £530 as a solatium for absence from business during eight months does not appear a miserable pittance.

The English professionals are expected to go to Australia for £300 and expenses. If £400 had been offered by the M.C.C. for the last trip there would have been few refusals. Now, why is an Australian cricketer entitled to so very much more renumeration than to an English professional? We know of no adequate reason why he should be so much more handsomely compensated.

Sporting & Athletic Notes.

A very interesting and lengthy afternoon's racing brought the second meeting to a conclusion on Saturday, and though there were one or two runaway affairs, close and exciting finishes were the order of the day and in two instances they were quite sensational. Perhaps the most noteworthy race of the day in this respect was the Lawrence Plate. Only five started for this and as soon as the gate went up Winkfield's Melody carrying 6st. 13lb. went off at a terrific pace, Hunting Horn, the favourite, carrying 9st. 6lb., lay next, but at the four furlongs the light weight's lead was so great that it seemed impossible that she would ever be caught. Slowly from here Hunting Horn began to decrease the distance between them; at the distance the interval was nearly 8 to 10 lengths, and the task still looked impossible, but Hill never gave up hope and keeping on riding with the utmost determination brought his little horse along at a great pace and just caught and beat the other by a short head on the post. It was as fine a piece of "finishing" as it has ever been our good fortune to witness and we offer Hill our heartiest congratulations on the successful conclusion of his efforts.

We were treated to another pretty exhibition of horsemanship in the Merchants' Plate, which was won by Fizz cleverly ridden by Colin Barrett. Melbourne, Sacricomar and Retort were favourites, Bantock next most backed. Melbourne and Sacricomar made the running very hot. Bantock and Misty Morn lay up in a nice position Fizz and Retort more wisely pulled out of the pace and remained last. Then after a mile, when the others had more or less run themselves out, Fizz and Retort began to come up and the finish was fought out between these two, Barrett, who rode a really good race, just bringing Fizz's head in front at the end. That the pace was a cracker is shown by the time—2mins. 34 3/5secs. a record for the distance in Calcutta and there is no doubt that it was trying to keep up in a good position that "bust up" Bantock and Misty Morn carrying such heavy weights.

Again immediately after the Merchants' Plate came another sensational race for the Hooghly Plate. Mereworth was favourite at 2 to 1 and Mr. Galstaun had backed his pair, Tangaroa and Paddy's Darling until they stood at fives, though fifteens could be had about the former at one time. The finish was great, as Tangaroa and Mereworth were neck and neck all down the straight and the judge could not separate them at the finish, while Paddy's Darling, who began slowly, came up very fast at the end and just beat Picturesque a short head for third place. In the run off the pair were absolutely together till the last twenty or thirty lengths when Mereworth began to tire and Tangaroa got ahead and won by half a length.

The other great struggle of the day was the last item on the card The City Plate. Five started for this round-the-course gallop, and at the distance post Black Duke, Carnival, Cairnsmore, and Bridge Knight were all three abreast. Carnival dropped out, but the other three kept on together, and the closeness of the struggle may be imagined when the judge's final verdict was a win for Black Duke by a short head, dead heat for second place! The remaining races were not of very great interest. Russley Rose was a hot favourite for the Belvedere Pony Plate and won pretty easily by three-quarters of a length from Wild Boy, the second favourite.

The Bhowanipur Plate was a pretty wide betting race, Galley Slave, Lefterin and Flotsam all standing at five to one, but in the end it proved to be a pretty good thing for Galley Slave, who comfortably won by two and a half lengths. Morette was favourite for the second half of the Bhowanipur Plate, Prince Lyon and Craigendorrie well backed. Morette swerved all over the place under the whip in the straight and the top-weight Crossbred came through in great style and beat Prince Lyon and Craigendorrie. The Laird Selling Handicap was a gift for the second favourite, Singleton, who won by four lengths running away from Captain Carrington, the favourite Blue Flame nowhere.

Penton's, Ramshaw's, Byramjee's, Mumford's, Tom Scott's and Thomas' lots all went away after the meeting and the course on Monday morning presented quite a mournful appearance with so many familiar faces missing. However, the entries for the Fifth Extra on Saturday, which we publish elsewhere, show that there are still plenty of horses here and the February and March extras will probably flourish as strongly as ever. Among the jockeys Hill, Whalley, Rickaby, Blades, and Bray have already left us. Barrett, however, is staying to ride at the extra on Saturday and will go to Bombay afterwards. We hear that Blades is not accepting a retainer for Mr. Apcar again next season as he cannot agree to stay out to ride in Poona and Bangalore and the Senior Steward wants to keep the one jockey throughout the year in future. The billet has been offered to Hill and if he accepts it Killorn will most probably ride for Byramjee next season.

Mr. Thaddeus has leased The Bedouin to Mr. Apcar and he has now gone into Watson's stable. The horse, who has proved a bit of a disappointment this season, is to go to Bangalore and will be gelded as it is thought he is likely to do better out in this country in that way than if he remained an entire. Mr. Apcar is reported to have offered Rs. 7,500 for Bantock, who won the Macpherson Cup, but if so it has been refused and the horse is going up for auction at Cook's to-day. He will make a magnificent animal over fences and is worth Rs. 10,000 of anybody's money to secure the big hurdle races and steeplechases next season.

We are sorry to have to record that Mr. Leigh, who has been so successful as Handicapper, has been compelled to resign his appointment owing to ill-health. His place is to be filled by Mr. Griffiths, who for many years was handicapper to the Western Australia Turf Club and is said to be very good at the work.

We publish to-day full entries and weights for the Civil Service Cup. The following were the quotations on the race when we went to press:—

Entries for the English Spring Handicaps are to hand by last mail and compare most favourably with those of last season, whilst in point of class a great improvement is to be noted. As was expected the American horses of Messrs. Whitney and Keene figure amongst the nominations for the principal events. There is no falling on in point of numbers to be noted, except in the case of the two Epsom handicaps, and for these the difference is but trifling, both the Great Metropolitan Stakes and the City and Suburban having closed with two less nominations than last year, the popular long-distance handicap having an entry of 49 now, as against 51 last spring; while the equally popular "City and Suburban" has 48 instead of 50 entries. All the other races have done well, and show an increase on last season's entry, the Lincolnshire Handicap having now 56 nominations, as against 48 last year; the Liverpool Cup 26, as against 25; the Newbury Spring Cup 39, as compared with 37; the Nottingham Spring Handicap 26, as against 24; and the Queen's Prize at Kempton Park has 32 entries, as against 31 last year. The Great Jubilee has come out well this season, for, in contrast to the 37 entries of last spring, we now have 52 nominations, with Mr. J. R. Keene bobbing up with the American crack, Colin, and three others, to help a really splendid entry.

Racing, as carried on in Manila, is novel and interesting, as it is strictly confined to country-bred ponies. The Jockey Club is in the hands of the natives themselves, and racing is held on an average one Sunday in each month. The racecourse is a heavy sand track, about 6¾ furlongs round, and this is well cared for. There are three stands on the course—wooden structures, capable of holding about 5,000 people, and as there is no charge for admission, these are well filled, unless a particularly interesting cock-fight is on at the San Lasaro cockpit, which is only a couple of miles distant from the race track.

The starting-gate is in use, and the little ponies are very smart at getting away well, and directly they are on their feet they are galloping. The lowest sum that one can invest is 5 pesos (equal to 10s.). The saddling paddock and weighing room are of the most primitive kind, says an Australian writer, and it would cause some of our racing men much enjoyment to see the casual way the native Poseidons and Mountain Kings are brought on to the course. One I saw was dragged on to the course accompanied by three native stable-boys, two of whom had hold of his head with chain and rope leads, while the third persuaded this countertype of Surefoot's from behind with a long whip. Most of the ponies are good tempered enough, and it is not to be wondered at that a few turn "dirty" from the maltreatment they receive. All the ponies are hogged close, and have their tails banged up fairly short, making them look like polo ponies to the Australian eye.

The native jockeys, most of whom adopt the forward seat, are adepts at getting their mounts out of the barrier, but are poor finishers, being very excitable, too fond of the whip, and ride with little or no judgment. Their sole aim seems to be to get to the front, and stay there—not always a good policy on heavy tracks. These black knights of the pigskin have very little to learn from their white brethren as regards the use of "Johnny Armstrong," though they are allowed to catch hold of their mounts in a very open way.

The racing is held one Sunday a month, starts at 10 in the morning, and is continued all day until dark, as many as 11 events being got through in the day. The distances range from 4 furlongs to 2 miles, and the value of the prizes from 120 pesos to 300 pesos. The ponies are classified according to their performances, and the form they have shown, and no first-class pony, once he has been classed as such, can compete out of his class, the same rule holding good for the other class. The preparations that the average racing pony does would astonish some of our most severe trainers. During the last ten days of a preparation prior to a race meeting he is galloped at his top every morning, and in addition to this does long, strong work in the afternoon with the thermometer at 93 degrees or thereabouts. The softness of the track is, however, a great saving clause to these hard-worked racehorses, save the mark! Despite these severe measures some of the ponies look really well, and carry a fair amount of condition.

The following is an additional list of business to be brought before the annual meeting of the Indian Polo Association at Umballa, on 11th February:—

Proposal by Mr. R. W. Manderson, 3rd Skinner's Horse.

1—That, below penalty 8 insert penalty 8A. "The side fouled may designate any of the players on the side fouling, who shall retire from the game, they shall then call upon the side fouling to bring in their fifth man. The game shall then be continued with four players aside."

The side fouled have the option of choosing either penalty 8 or 8A.

2—That the polo calendar from pages 19 to 61 inclusive be translated into Hindi, Nagri, Gurmukhi and Urdu officially by the Indian Polo Association Committee, and sold, if possible, at Re. 1 per copy to the Polo playing community, who do not understand the rules of Polo in English.

After all Rs. 32 per doz "WHITE HORSE" WHISKY IS THE BEST.
AS SUPPLIED TO HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Sole Proprietors:—MACKIE & CO., DISTILLERS, LD. LAY, GLENLIVET and GLASGOW.
Agents:—DEVEREUX & CO., Limited, High-Class Wine Merchants, 4, BANKSHALL STREET, CALCUTTA.

Proposals by Lieutenant-Colonel P. N. Edwards, D.S.O., 33rd Q.O.L. Cavalry.

3—That the annual meeting of the I.P.A. be held in alternate years at Umballa and Secunderabad or Poona, as under present arrangements Officers serving in the Southern Army have little or no opportunity of attending meetings of the I.P.A., and so are unable to have a fair share of representation.

4—That no official measurers be appointed, as it only entails extra expense which is quite unnecessary. The present system of measuring ponies by local officials is sufficiently satisfactory, and is much more convenient to officers generally than the system of official measurers.

5—That no pony under six years of age be granted a life certificate, as giving life certificates to young ponies will only be increasing the height of polo ponies. There is no certainty that a pony which measures 13-3½ as a four years old will not grow to 14-2 or more, especially in the case of Arabs and C.-B's.

6—That in order to increase the income of the I.P.A., no racing certificates should be accepted for polo, and that all ponies should be required to have a polo certificate before being played in a tournament. The above only to apply to ponies which have not been already registered as polo ponies.

7—That the "Form List" be abolished as it is absolutely absurd and misleading, and is moreover quite unsuitable to a country like India, where polo is played at so many stations that it is impossible to gauge the relative merits of players.

8—That the definitions of a first-class tournament, as defined in "Rules for the regulations of Tournaments," para. 13 of Polo Calendar 1906-1907, be reinstated.

The Polo tournament for the cup presented by Mr. Edward Ezra was brought to a conclusion on the Calcutta Polo Club ground on Monday last, when the Viceroy's Staff beat the Calcutta Polo Club in the final by 4 goals to 3. Details further on.

The Punjab Frontier Force Polo tournament began at Peshawar, on the 16th instant when the Guides Cavalry beat the 23rd Cavalry in the opening game. The 93rd led by 5 to 3 within two minutes of the close but their opponents equalised and in an extra chukker scored the winning point. The first round was continued on the 18th instant when two games were played. The 59th Rifles had an easy victory over the 2-5th Gurkhas by 7 goals to nil but the match between the Guides Infantry and 21st Cavalry was fast and level. The game ended with the score two all but in the extra period the Cavalry hit a goal and so won. The 57th Rifles having watched the 53rd Sikhs had a walk over. In the semi-finals on the 20th instant the Guides Cavalry met the 53rd Sikhs and easily defeated them by 8 goals to 2. The other game between the 21st Cavalry and 59th Rifles was well contested and an additional chukker had to be played before a decision was arrived at, the 59th Rifles winning by 4 goals to 3. The final was played on the 22nd instant when the 59th Rifles, who were without Colonel Carruthers, were beaten by 7 goals to 1 by the Guides Cavalry.

The shooting season in France, from all reports, appears to have been a most disappointing one, due, it is said, to the scarcity of game caused by the increase of poachers and vermin. It is, however, suggested by thoughtful sportsmen that the deterioration in sport is due to the increase of shooting men and the limitation of sporting lands. Some years ago the number of shooters was not more than 50,000, and now it is estimated at over 600,000. The conditions are very different to those in England, and by obtaining a permit a sportsman over there has the run of a large area which is practically skinned of fur and feather. Nothing appears to be suggested for the improvement of this state of things, but on the contrary it seems likely to be aggravated by a Bill now being considered to issue Sunday shooting licences at 2½d. for the day. In addition to this absurd piece of legislation, the draft of another Bill—if possible, more foolish and wicked in its scope—has been introduced for permitting the capture of wild birds by snares and nets during the close season, thus abolishing the protection that exists at present.

"Colonel Bogey" writes in a London contemporary:—"It is, perhaps, a commentary on public opinion as to whether golf is a game to be pursued individually or in attempted combination that foursomes and team matches receive very short shrift when a year's doings are under discussion. The simple truth is, one fears, that even the most important inter-team contests are easily forgotten by the populace within a few days of their decision, and that, despite an occasional amateur tournament or professional match, the real foursome raises but a faint flicker of enthusiasm in the breast of the average golfer.

"It may be that he is selfish. Some critics declare that his regard is wholly for his own enjoyment, and that whereas the cricketer or footballer aspires to help a cause that is common to a number of men, the golfer is not happy unless he personally is playing all the shots for his side. This is, perhaps, true; but it is equally honest to allege that the cricketer would rather be batting than sitting in the pavilion, and that the footballer would rather that the ball were passed his way instead of in another direction.

"Their faith compels them to spend periods of inactivity; the golfer declares that his game is for the individual, and, on the whole, he is perhaps, none the worse for the fact that he likes to carry all the responsibility. And let us, at any rate, disillusion the writer who says that the golf player is never happy unless he is constantly hitting. With all his selfishness, he is governed by a firm determination to strike the ball as seldom as possible. And yet he does not want anybody else to share the hitting—truly a paradoxical person.

"There were never so many golfers as there are to-day, and yet it would not be far wrong to say that the foursome never had fewer devotees. When the after lunch event is not a single it is almost invariably a four-ball match. There is no logical reason why the proper foursome should not be relatively as popular as the doubles game at lawn tennis; but in championships and other important walks of golfing life this form of the game is left very severely alone. The Royal and Ancient Club makes rules for it; but never uses them—at any rate, for the purpose of competitions."

Dorando Pietri has apparently had his day, or he is trying to compress too much into too short a time. He has again met "Longboat" in a Marathon and was run to a standstill. It took place on Saturday, the 2nd instant, at Buffalo, before an enormous attendance when the history of the similar struggle at Madison Square Garden was repeated in almost every detail. The Italian led at the start, and endeavoured to force the pace, while the Indian repeatedly demonstrated that he could pass his rival whenever he chose.

Once Longboat, upon entering the third mile, fell, but sprang to his feet immediately and Dorando had secured an advantage of but twenty-five yards. At the nineteenth mile the Italian was in distress. He suddenly stopped running, and his trainers rushed to his support, but he declared his heart was failing and was led from the track. Up to the end of the eighteenth mile the time was 1hr. 46mins. or 4mins. better than that made in the New York contest.

Longboat, who received an immense ovation partly because Buffalo is on the Canadian border, meets Shrubb towards the close of the month in what is likely to prove the greatest long-distance running race ever seen in America.

That phenomenal sprinter, R. E. Walker, the South African, is evidently on a record smashing campaign. His latest achievement is 12⅗secs. for 130 yards, done at the Wanderers' Club, Johannesburg, on the 5th instant. This is the amateur best so far.

Indian Motorists, especially those who took part in or were connected with the Delhi-Bombay reliability trial, will remember Mr. Huntley Walker, the racing motorist, who was a prominent competitor. They will be sorry to hear that his country mansion near Beckenham, Kent, was damaged to the extent of £20,000 and fourteen of his cars were destroyed by a big fire early this month. The outbreak occurred at a quarter to five, the first intimation being a gas explosion in the library. With great rapidity the flames spread, reaching a garage in which fourteen valuable cars were stored, including four "racers." All these were destroyed and eight or nine rooms of the mansion burned out.

It is interesting to recall some of the big fish caught in England during 1908. The past year, while not yielding good sport generally, has nevertheless been associated with the capture of some remarkably large or "specimen" fish by anglers. In the Thames and Lea splendid barbel, bream, perch, roach, and carp have been taken. The salmon caught have included a fine fish of 46lb., taken by Mr. J. L. Ingham in the Shannon, at Castleconnell; a 43lb. Tweed fish, by Major Gerald F. Trotter; and salmon of 41lb. (Tay) and 36lb. (Hampshire Avon).

Mr. A. E. Hobbs (Henley) captured the largest Thames trout (8½lb., taken at Caversham); Mr. G. Lyne, a New River trout of 8lb. 9oz., at Hoddesdon; and trout up to 5lb. have been taken in the Lea. But the largest trout hailed from the Irish loughs, where fish of 17lb. and 14lb. are reported.

Pike have been caught scaling 27lb. (Norfolk Broads), 27lb. (Lough Conn), and 25½lb. (Wye, Herefordshire). Some unusually large roach have been taken—one of 3lb. by Mr. W. Stenton, at Elsecar, Yorkshire; one of 2lb. 13½oz. by Mr. W. B. Firmin, at Hatfield; one of 2lb. 12oz. by Mr. F. L. Pearce, in the Dorset Stour, at Sturminster Marshall; one of 2lb. 10oz. by Mr. J. F. Wieland, in the Sussex Arun, at Amberley; and one of 2lb. 3oz. by Mr. R. Smith in the Thames at Shepperton.

Racquet players will be interested to learn that the executive committee of the Tennis and Racquets Association have recommended that for the amateur championships of 1909 balls slightly smaller and lighter than those which have been in use during the past few years shall be employed. It is much to be hoped, says the Times, that the ball will prove successful. The present generation of first-class players may feel some slight regret at the small loss of pace; but they will be willing to make a little sacrifice for what should undoubtedly be a real benefit to the game. The next generation will not have "tasted the blood" of this abnormal pace, and will be quite content with great pace. There are many, as it is, who find racquets too expensive. Any lessening of the price would be most welcome, and would induce many public school players to keep up the game after they leave school, while the merit of the players will be more truly tested by taking away some of the advantage of service and putting more of the crux of the battle on rally play.

Mr. H. D. McIntosh, who promoted and refereed the Burns-Johnson fight, was in Colombo last week on his way home to exhibit his celebrated cinematograph film of the fight. Colombo was given an opportunity of seeing this remarkable picture which was the only one taken. Interviewed by a representative of the Ceylon Independent Mr. McIntosh made some interesting comments on the fight. When questioned regarding Burns' telegram to the Sporting Life, London, to the effect that he would have knocked out Johnson had not the police come on the scene. Mr. McIntosh smiled, and said, "Oh no, Burns would never have knocked out Johnson. In fact, the police saved Burns in time, otherwise Johnson would have knocked him out." Regarding the fight, Mr. McIntosh said the colour question did not arouse so much feeling as the world was led to believe, but the enormous attendance at the fight, and the 20,000 people, were in a measure due to the enhanced prices, the seats being sold from £10 to 10 shillings each. Naturally, everybody expected a great fight and they all came in, but thousands could not find admission owing to the house being packed.

"Before the fight," continued Mr. McIntosh, "Burns had said some nasty things about Johnson, and Johnson had retaliated. But people did not take much notice of what was said about Johnson, though they felt to a certain extent what Johnson said about Burns. There, I think, the colour question was in evidence, and besides that, nothing more."

"Johnson, after the fight, was unpopular in Australia, owing to his gloating over his victory, and in addition, making matters worse for him, he was misunderstood by the Australian public. The Australians were not used to that sort of fighting as exhibited by Johnson, though it is very common in America. But now, he was glad to say, Johnson was getting popular and receiving splendid receptions everywhere he went owing to his gentlemanly conduct and quiet behaviour."

The attention of Mr. McIntosh being drawn to the statement made by Johnson that he could have knocked out Burns much earlier, but he prolonged the fight simply to punish Burns, Mr. McIntosh said that it was not so. "Johnson could not have knocked out Burns earlier." Johnson, it is true, is a severe punishing man, but Burns, he thought, was the stronger man of the two, as no other man would have taken punishment in such a way as Burns did. Burns is a puncher, and while on his feet he had a chance, but, had the fight not been stopped, he would have been knocked out in one more round.

The conversation was then turned to the remarks made by Johnson in the ring, and which had created some criticism, Mr. McIntosh said that Johnson's remarks were all made in good humour, and none were insulting. If any insulting remarks were made, they were by Burns and not by Johnson.

"Johnson won," continued Mr. McIntosh, "fairly and squarely, and all the critics were agreed on that point. He won from the first round and led all the way and won as he liked. Burns would have appeared to better advantage had he not received a nasty upper cut on his jaw at the very commencement, and a little later, sprained his ankle."

Asked as to how Johnson came to get so much less of the stakes, Mr. McIntosh said that it was the usual practice for the champion to get the larger end of the purse, win, lose or draw. With regard to this fight, Burns had said that he would not fight for anything under £6,000, and his terms were agreed upon. The total takings amounted to £26,200, and Johnson was paid £1,500 and his first-class return passage from London. Large sums of money changed hands on the result of the fight in betting, and as Burns was the greater favourite, the betting on him was 3 to 1, Johnson was now appearing under Harry Rickards for £200 a week, and Burns, also under Rickards, is getting £225 a week.

Regarding a second fight between the two, Mr. McIntosh said there were no prospects at all, Johnson now demands £6,000 in turn to fight Burns, as he has every right to, and as it is a foregone conclusion that Burns will be beaten every time he fights Johnson, there is no likelihood of a second fight even coming off on those terms.

Johnson is proceeding to London in a month or so to fight Langford. The return encounter between these two darkies will take place in April next at the National Sporting Club, London.

That enterprising firm Messrs. W. Leslie and Co., Hardware and Metal Merchants of this city, have just sent us one of their mammoth catalogues. This elaborate volume is the most complete list of its kind ever published in Calcutta. Messrs. Leslie and Co. claim to be the largest Hardware establishment in India and a glance through the contents of the compilation under notice shows us that they stock every description of goods from a steam roller to a tin tack, from a saucepan to a motor-car. All the latest novelties are listed, the catalogue is profusely illustrated and it makes an important addition to the household library.

The annual regatta of the Madras Boat Club will be held on Saturday, the 6th March; the programme includes Scratch Fours, Challenge Sculls, Junior Sculls, Senior Pair Oars, Junior Pair Oars and a Tub Race.

The Southern Indian Lawn Tennis tournament will begin on the 1st February. The date of the Punjab tournament has been put forward from Thursday, the 11th, to Monday, the 8th February.

The Madras Gymkhana Association Football tournament will commence on the 22nd February.

The Annual General Meeting of the Calcutta Referees' Association was held at the Y. M. C. A. Hall on the 25th instant. Mr. P. C. Margrett, of the Rangers' Club, presided and the following representatives of affiliated clubs attended: Messrs. E. Studd (C. F. C.), E. M. Slane (B.-N. R.), D. McKinnon (Chowringhee), E. Watson Pedroza (La Martiniere), H. C. Claridge (Wanderers), A. C. Mookerjee (Sovabazar), S. N. Bose, (Mohan Bagan), D. Penfold (Sibpur College), D. Sen (Sporting Union), A. R. C. Miller (Y. M. C. A.), representative Oriental Sporting, N. R. Bhattacharjee (Rovers), and Father Harris (St. Xavier's).

The accounts for the year 1908 were passed and a discussion followed as to the difficulty of securing the services of competent referees. The following office-bearers were then elected for the coming season:—

Hockey.—Messrs. E. Studd, T. H. Richardson, A. B. Rosser, P. S. Dixon, M. Remfry, J. A. Stevens, P. C. Margrett and S. N. Bose.

Football.—Messrs. M. Remfry, A. B. Rosser, J. A. Stevens, H. McGee, A. C. Mookerjee, H. C. Claridge, S. N. Bose and a military member (to be named hereafter).

Mr. N. R. Bhattacharjee was re-elected General Secretary and Treasurer and Mr. A. R. C. Miller, Committee Secretary (hockey and football).

With the usual vote of thanks to the chair the meeting separated.

Old Boys and friends of St. Joseph's College, Darjeeling, will hear with regret that no issue of the Annual will be published this year. The manuscript for the magazine was indeed ready but while the bundle of papers was on its way to the Press it slipped from the saddle of the bicycle to which it had been attached and was lost in the street. Diligent search and careful enquiry were in vain and no trace of the missing papers could be discovered. In place of the annual, however, the school lists have been published, together with some interesting photographs.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 8th January 1909.

The New Year in London opened with three striking features. First there was the sudden and complete thaw which set in early on Friday and soon reduced the city to the ocean of chocolate-coloured slush appropriate to the occasion; and when on this descended a brown fog, as near to "London particular" quality as made no difference, one felt—like the coster with the overturned barrow—that there was no word for it, and that a new set of adjectives was badly needed. Since then it has been a succession of pea-soupers and showers with a suspicion of a little cold sandwiched between.

* * * * * *

Another striking feature, and one satisfactory to contemplate, was the sudden drop of over 2,500 in the number of paupers on the lists, and a third was the quiescence of the unemployed agitation, threatened manifestations of which had led many people to the approach of the Christmas holidays with feelings of apprehension.

The increase in London pauperism during the past year has been the most alarming since 1874. All through the year there has been a steady rise, mainly in those districts where guardians have a notion that Poor Law relief is a thing, which every Tom, Dick, and Harry is entitled to receive if only he tells the right story. At the present moment more than twenty-seven persons in London out of every thousand are paupers. In Poplar the number is actually 60 per 1,000.

* * * * * *

To those who have followed the course of events it will be seen what the unemployed demonstration of 13th October did for the ratepayers. In the week that followed it, when the Government were threatened by a huge army of loafers congregated in Trafalgar Square and Whitehall, we had the greatest increase of paupers—2,787—in any one week. When it was seen that the Government were firm and that the President of the Local Government Board declined to be bullied into panic remedies for the unemployed, the agitation subsided, and with it the rising tide of pauperism, until in Christmas week it receded further than it had ever done before during a Christmas week.

* * * * * *

It is pleasant to turn from the subject of the poor rate burden to that of the health of the people of London, which has never been so good as it is at present. The death-rate has gone down to a level never known before, and the last week of the year shows the extraordinarily low figure of 11·3, which is about 5 per 1,000 below the rates for the corresponding weeks of the five previous years.

This is not the place in which to write of the terrible earthquake calamity in Italy. Your readers will have had full details set before them by Reuter, but it may be interesting to some people, especially to those whose attitude towards astrology is one of unrelieved scepticism, to learn that, ridiculous though its pretensions may be to the modern man, yet every now and then Old Moore, Zadkiel and others in England, and Mr. Jyotishi in Calcutta, astonish sceptics with the approximate accuracy of their prophesies. It is certainly interesting at a time when the world's attention is turned to the unspeakable horrors of this earthquake to find that "Zadkiel," in his Almanack for the past year, came within an ace of predicting accurately the terrible cataclysm. Among the "General Predictions" occurs the following extract:—

"About the tenth degree of East longitude—in the north of Italy, Tunis, Switzerland and Wurtemburg, probably—underground troubles or shocks of earthquake are threatened, about the 25th and 30th of December, 1908."

By specially mentioning the north of Italy, "Zadkiel" lessens the significance of his prediction, but he is quite right as to the date. The choice remains of regarding the forecast as a mere coincidence or of falling back on the theory that there are more things in Heaven and earth than the orthodox scientist dreams of.

The Women's Enfranchisement Bill represented by a roll of linoleum labelled "Killed by the Government," was honoured last Saturday afternoon by a number of funeral orations at Trafalgar Square, which were delivered by a few members of the Women's Freedom League to the intense amusement of a small crowd which included your scribe.

Mrs. W. Nevinson, addressing the audience, said the Government had let the Bill die. The poor little innocent had been overlaid, although the Government professed such an antipathy to the overlaying of children. The Women's Freedom League, however, believed in a resurrection. Mr. Stanger's Bill would arise again, like Phœnix from the ashes, next session. There were 420 members of the House pledged to support the Bill, and yet on its introduction they jeered and laughed at it until it died. There was one honest man in the House, she was glad to say, Lord Robert Cecil, who reprobated such conduct as inconsistent with the honour and dignity of the House.

Mrs. Despard moved the following resolution, which was declared carried: "That this meeting condemns the Government for not carrying Mr. Stanger's Bill into law, and calls upon the Government to put Women's Suffrage into the King's Speech, and carry the Women's Enfranchisement Bill next session."

Mrs. Sproson, in supporting the resolution, said that unless a new Bill was brought in next session, they were determined to kill the Government because it no longer represented the voice of the people. They were going to concentrate their efforts upon those who had the power, but had not the will to carry their pledges into effect. These funeral orations were interrupted by ribald laughter and sympathetic applause in about equal proportion and served well enough to fill in the time while waiting for a tardy motor 'bus.

Mr. Punch's Pageant, which opened at the Leicester Galleries, on Saturday, the 1st instant, commands universal interest and is drawing Londoners in their thousands. Here we have nearly seven hundred drawings, cartoons, etc., from Punch arranged in Chronological order from the commencement of the journal in 1843 to the present time. Also there are other interesting exhibits connected with Punch, one of them the historic dinner table around which visitors linger, rubbing their fingers over the initials cut by the knives of Mark Lemon, Tom Taylor, Leech, Tenniel, Burnand, Thackeray, Phil May, and other Punch contributors. The hundreds of drawings make a concise story of Victorian manners, costumes, and politics. They help visitors to decide whether the paper is "as good as it was." Some of the most interesting exhibits are from Thackeray's hand. In his firm, regular writing, there is an explanation why he left the staff. He disagreed with its "abuse of Prince Albert and the Crystal Palace, its abuse of Lord Palmerston, and its abuse of Louis Napoleon," and when finally it had a cartoon, "A Beggar on Horseback," in which "the Emperor is represented as galloping to hell with a sword reeking with blood," Thackeray retired. He remarked, too, that its "rates of remuneration were less than I'd been accustomed to." In another letter, acknowledging a cheque for £25, he says he is sorry the proprietors are "dissatisfied with my contributions," and gladly offers to close the Tickletoby lectures immediately. Thus it is shown that the Punch men had their troubles. Mark Lemon's patched clay pipe—which would be rejected by many a navvy in these less Bohemian days—seems to prove, however, that they were an easy-going, happy little band.

The Winter Exhibition at the Academy opened last Monday and is composed of modern pictures from the collection of the late Mr. George McCulloch, an opulent gentleman, whose hobby it was to acquire the most talked-of pictures of each Academy, consequently the collection inclines rather to popularity than to greatness, though there is much really fine work on view. There are a few pictures which must arrest the attention of sportsmen and they are of distinct merit, though the best does not treat of any British sport. F. Rouband's "The National Game, Samarkand" is remarkable for the intense life with which horses and men are invested in the game of Koup Kare, which is in progress: the eagerness of the Central Asian horsemen, the straining ponies, the dust and rattle and shouting are all felt, while the colour treatment is superb. There are a few fine hunting pictures. "Gone to Earth" by John Emms shows us a terrier about to be put into the earth, and the quivering pack are very cleverly drawn. A small canvas by Thomas Rinks, entitled "Tally Ho! Away" is fairly good, though a grey horse on the foreground is drawn with a certain photographic hardness that rather mars the effect. "Steady"—a pointer and a setter working a thicket—is a much better example of this artist's well-known style. A polo picture by John C. Dollman merits mention, as does "On His Holiday" in which amidst wild Norwegian scenery we have a tired lad lying on rocks after fishing: the pose of this boy, suggesting fatigue, is most effectively rendered. Beyond these pictures the sporting interest in the collection is little enough.

All Dickens' lovers and every one who reads of the disappearance of old London landmarks and historic relics with a pang of regret, will be relieved to learn that the "Old Curiosity Shop" at the corner of Lincoln's Inn fields, recently threatened with demolition, is to be allowed to stand yet a while. Whether its legend, "immortalised by Charles Dickens," be precisely true or not, the quaint, tiled cottage is fairly entitled to preservation as one of those links with Old London which are rapidly diminishing. For some period at least this precious little tenement, beloved of the American tourist, is to survive the general demolition of the adjoining houses.

The Hindu gentleman, masquerading in frock coat and tall hat, continues to grow in unpopularity among Londoners. In certain quarters there is quite an outcry against his intrusion, he is regarded as a pest; how he escapes getting his neck broken occasionally puzzles me. Certain filthy cases in which he has lately figured have given him the newspaper notoriety which has set people thinking and wondering what should be done to keep him in his proper place. A well known London weekly, in the course of an article on "White women and coloured men" writes:—

Undoubtedly much greater restraint should be put by the people of this country upon their social relations with the people of the East. The absolute prohibition of intercourse between our own women and these crafty and cunning heathen cannot be too strongly urged. I speak as one who, unfortunately, has lived in the same house with many of these coloured gentlemen (?) (save the mark) and so have had experience of them.

It is positively nauseating to see on the tops of buses, in the streets, at the theatres, and almost everywhere one goes, a coloured man with a white woman. These women have not the slightest idea of what grave risks they are running, neither have they any knowledge of the cunning and morals of the men with whom they are associating. The latter may, and generally do, possess charming manners, dress well, and to all outward appearances be gentlemen, but underneath all this veneer lies a crafty and half-civilised nature to which unfortunately too many of our simple women fall easy victims.

Most of these coloured persons have money, and many of them are the sons of wealthy persons, but blood always tells. I speak more particularly of the Hindus and Japanese now in this country.

It is difficult to say which of the two is more to be shunned but the morals of both are so low that it should be possible for the police to interfere should a white woman be seen out with a coloured man, and certainly they should be shunned by all decent English people.

Our missionaries must know full well the grave danger that is run by our women folk in mixing with these coloured people, and yet none seems to have the courage to come forward and state boldly the facts. With their experience and knowledge of the life likely to be led in an Eastern country by a white woman with a native husband they might do much good.

The people in the provinces, with the exception, perhaps those in some of our University towns, do not know the extent to which the evil has gone, but in London it is so constantly thrust on our notice as to sometimes make one feel almost ashamed.

Now, before the evil reaches any larger proportions, is the time to insist on these Asiatics being placed in their proper positions. They should not be allowed to communicate with or go through any form of marriage with a white woman.

What I have written may appear strong, but after sitting, as I did once, and hearing half a dozen of these Asiatics (four of whom had been to Cambridge) discussing our Englishwomen, no language could be too strong to condemn or to protest against these heathen being allowed the freedom they have in this country.

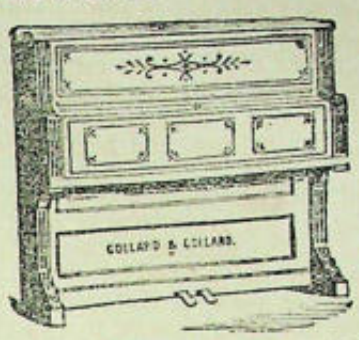
For my dramatic diary of the week I have but few notes. Nothing could have been worse for the theatres than the weather we have had, though, luckily for managers, this week is not regarded as one of their best. The big volume of business is expected to begin to-morrow and it is to be hoped a spell of tolerably fine weather will assist in sending them full audiences for their attractions. I do not allude to the houses given over to pantomime, these have done and continue to do, the business that maketh glad the hearts of all concerned. That shrewd and clever actress, Miss Lena Ashwell, has decided to revive Miss Cicely Hamilton's delightful comedy "Diana of Dobson's" at the Kingsway tomorrow week. Miss Ashwell had to withdraw this piece at the height of its success last summer owing to her medical advisers insisting on rest before she undertook a long provincial tour. Fortunately she is able to present the piece with practically the original company, and it will be preceded each evening by Mr. Edward Parry's clever little play "Charlotte on Bigamy," produced last year at the one-act play matinees.

* * * * * *

The revival of "Lady Ursula's Adventure" at the Garrick last Tuesday night conclusively proved that Mr. Anthony Hope's effective, artificial comedy has lost none of its attractiveness and can still move to laughter and tears. It is quite ten years since the play was first produced and I can say at once it bears its added years with vivacious spirits and in spite of its rather pronounced artificiality it claims the strong sympathy of the public. Sketchy and unreal it may be in parts, but it has an abundance of good points, and the enthusiasm after the descent of the curtain at the end of the piece is the best proof of the popularity of the revival. Miss Evelyn Millard is provided with a good part. Lady Ursula is not an exacting acting part, but it serves to bring out many of the actress' most engaging qualities. She has the true sense of light comedy, and is delicious as a girl in breeches. Mr. Herbert Waring, too, is very welcome in his original part of Sir George Sylvester. So, also, Mr. Charles Fulton as Mr. Dent; while Miss Dora Barton, Miss Dolores Drummond, Mr. J. L. Mackay, and Mr. Lytton Grey, among others, all do credit to an agreeable revival.



* * * * * *

Another popular revival is "Mrs. Gorringe's Necklace," at the Criterion, and it has come back with every sign of public enjoyment. The play, however, is still chiefly attractive because Miss Mary Moore is fitted with a part that suits her talents to perfection. In her original character of Mrs. Gorringe she is the same shallow, vain, gushing, deliciously real and ridiculous person that made London laugh so heartily when the play was first produced. To see her explain to the detective how she entered her room to find her necklace gone is to see the essence of comedy. Sir Charles Wyndham is not this time in the cast, but Mr. Yorke Stephens, adopting the Wyndham manner, acts very finely as Captain Mowbray, and Mr. Fred Lewis, Miss Maud Illington, and Mr. Leslie Faber are admirable in the other chief characters. If I remember right both these pieces were among the repertoire of those very popular people the Broughs, when they played in Calcutta.

* * * * * *

The British public are soon to see John L. Sullivan in a new role. The one time fighting man has signed contracts with certain West End variety theatre managers to star at their halls as "The Village Blacksmith"—not, be it understood, in a musical manner, but in a sketch with that title. I am given to understand that "Jawn L." is an excellent actor, having run his own dramatic companies in the States for more than two years with the greatest success, and "The Village Blacksmith" gives him an opportunity of doing a strong man act besides, for unlike the simple brawny hero of the song, Sullivan will portray a character who makes things hum, and who breaks steel bars and tears horseshoes asunder with the greatest ease.

Jack Johnson, who, on Boxing Day, was victor in the great Sydney boxing match, opens at the Holborn Empire on 8th February.

Mrs. "Saloon Smashing" Carrie Nation will commence an engagement at the Canterbury on the 25th of this month. The fearsome old lady will be accompanied by her niece and "1,000 souvenir hatchets," which she will sell to all who want to buy at sixpence apiece. The tomahawks bear a Yankee imprint, as also does a book of "Carrie Nation Memories"—also to be sold for the nimble sixpence—so it would seem as though this sudden music hall engagement and campaign has been a cut-and-dried thing a longer time than Mrs. Nation's managers would have us believe. After London, "the loving home defender" is booked for Wales, the Revivalists in the Principality having moved heaven and earth to secure her even at £100 a week. All of which shows that the non-alcoholic, non-smoking advocate has as keen an eye on the main chance as on the snatching of brands from the burning.

THE SPORTSMAN'S BIRD.

MYSTERIOUS SNIPE.

THE wildest, most elusive, most delicate of all our English birds is the snipe, observes Mr. W. Beach Thomas in a home journal. It comes to dwellers in the west as tidings of winter flashed from the north-east almost as rapidly as a telegraph message. The bird will make the journey from North Russia in one unbroken ecstasy of flight, covering a thousand wintry miles without pause.

When seeing and hearing snipe rise in the marshes in the wintry weather a keen shot may be allowed to think of Shelley's lines to the skylark rather than of the more immediate delights of the hunter. The bird is more like a "spirit" than the lark, which, except for its song, is almost domestic. See a snipe rise in the teeth of a high wind, to which the gusty waywardness of its flight has some affinity—you might take the bird for a white and yellow aspen leaf jerked about in the high air, as if it had no active part of its own in the windy dance. Yet, in a sense, the flight—this time like Wordsworth's, not Shelley's, skylark—is very true to "the kindred points of heaven and home." The little fat jack-snipe, who is near akin to the larger varieties, will chasser to and fro like a bat before he stops, time and again, within a few yards of the interrupter; and, like him, the full snipe, in spite of the dash and height of his first flight, generally swings in a short circle and dips hawk-like from his altitude into a neighbouring marsh.

Strange tales are told of the bird. Of one, which is generally disbelieved, I have recently come across an authentic instance. Two men were shooting along a stretch of water some mile or more in length. They stopped for some time at the end of the water before they came back along the other shore. In the bank of reeds their spaniel caught and retrieved a snipe which, they inferred, they had wounded in the morning. At any rate, it had suffered from a recently broken leg. This limb the bird, in exact accord with the old belief, had bandaged with neat surgical skill with a splint of its own feathers. One cannot but think that if the poets had seen as much of the marshes as of the fields they would have found all manner of mystic meaning in the ways of the snipe. Its springing flight up and down, to and fro like a bat, quick in ascent like a pigeon, and sudden in descent as a hawk, is the wildest dance in nature moving to the drumming note of the vibrant feathers, which has no parallel in the records.

It is curious how many people, sportsmen and others, regard the snipe as a migrant, a bird that is only to be found when autumn is over; and there are certain appearances, which naturally create the impression. But a very large number are native born, and may be found when autumn is young. No doubt the snipe shooter, who seeks a large bag, goes westering as winter grows severer. I know wild marshes on the coast of Wales where you may get on occasion in hard weather thirty couple of snipe and many woodcock, in spite of a horde of local sportsmen. I have shot a snipe there from the road as he flew over the back of an old white horse feeding just outside a cottage.

Snipe in greater numbers and of more certain movement may be had in Ireland and in the western isles. But the number to be found in South England early in the year is very much larger than is generally thought. A wet Surrey meadow, not so far from London, was haunted in September by at least eighty, which, when flushed, left behind enough to provide good sport to a number of guns. Again, a party of guns walking potatoes in the Fens before harvest was quite completed were astonished—though the appearance is perfectly normal—to find snipe rising perpetually in front of them, sometimes simultaneously with the partridges.

Perhaps the partial failure to reckon with the native birds and their peculiar movements has made every writer on the subject discourse on the inexplicable nature of the movements of the whole species. Are they so irregular? It is true that you may go out one day on a Welsh marsh and bring home forty couple; you may go out on the next and have trouble to shoot two. But this only means that a large group of westering birds has stopped en route at this point, though they may confuse the issue by retiring there for a day or two if the wind changes.

But it is still true that the bulk of the birds move regularly. The home birds move south in regular enough marches when breeding season is over and the weather is open. In the Fens you can tell to a week, if not to a day, when the time for the inroad of migrants is approaching. The same birds also leave the district at a regular date, and you are as certain of finding none towards the end of January as of finding plenty in the third week of November. But as the bird inevitably dies if it misses a soft and pulpy feeding ground even for a few days, its movements are necessarily sudden and its journeys long.

The snipe is looked upon as above all others a sportsman's bird. Doubtless, like many others, it would have been little observed apart from the sportsman, and there is a peculiar satisfaction in adding a good number to the bag, though the difficulty of shooting it is often exaggerated. Nor is any bird more widely distributed.

But those who care to haunt moist ground in winter or autumn may watch the snipe without difficulty; and from a cache in the reeds see him at his antics or his normal task of spearing with his sensitive beak into the soft mud. In old days, six centuries and more ago the Fen people found snipe easy to snare, and still, in places, a good many are so caught. But snaring is almost a lost art, and in few places are the birds of the locality looked upon, as they were in the undrained fens, as a form of local harvest. It is strange that it should be so. There are to-day crowding into England vast quantities of pigeons and fieldfares, the pigeons falling to on the acorns that are left, the fieldfares on the hips and haws and other berries.

Both birds, especially the second, are easy to catch and very good to eat, yet people will almost starve in sight of this food without troubling even to turn to use for themselves the berries on which the birds fatten.

Such neglect of the natural food of men has struck one, especially when shooting snipe and duck in the Isle of Skye. The people there are poor and the land very barren, but they utterly neglect the country's compensating wealth. On many of the lochs they have quite given up even the more elementary forms of fishing. The rough walls built by more energetic forefathers to cut off, save for a narrow outlet, fish pools at the heads of the lochs are tumbling down, boats are a rare sight, and duck may fall as manna along the shore of some poverty-stricken township and not a man will have enough ingenuity to trap them.

If there were any humane feeling in the abstinence one could admire it, but the lethargy is due to the loss, growing completer every year it seems, of the old independent, vigorous hunting spirit found in men whose eyes and ears were sharp and their fingers apt.

What trapping there is in England is of the most debased type. It is odds that you will find, if you know the lie of the land wherever woods are preserved near the towns fish-hooks baited with raisins for the half-tame pheasants. But the legitimate making of "springles" for the winter birds that once fed half the countryside is as little thought of as to take advantage of the kindly fruits of the earth surviving in the hedgerows. Doubtless the gun has helped to destroy the other art of the hunter, even in those who do not use it. But if a good shot is a man to admire, there is still left a degree of credit due to the man who, like some Norfolk men one still knows of, snare for their livelihood and make their successes by a naturalist's knowledge of the ways of animals and a hunter's ingenuity in pursuit.

It is becoming a popular theme to scoff at the modern sportsman, who doubtless is not above reproof and often has little of the real hunter in his make-up. But a great number of sportsmen prefer their day's rough shooting among snipe and woodcock and the wilder birds to all other forms of sport; and in these men you will find a fund of knowledge and observation and affection for the life of the wild as keen as in the primal hunter who killed to live. Some of our greatest sportsmen are among our greatest naturalists.

SKIN COLLECTING.

NEXT to horns and heads, there are few trophies more interesting than skins, and if the reports of the large furriers are to be believed, it is skins now that are being sought after. To obtain a representative collection of the skins of the world's fur-bearing animals is the aim of naturalists and sportsmen. Whereas a few years ago they were content with horns and heads they now desire to possess the skins as well. Hence hunters to-day visiting Africa, the jungles of India, the forests of Newfoundland, and the wilds of Siberia make arrangements for bringing back the skins of the animals they shoot.

This desire on the part of the big game hunter to possess the skin of the animal he brings down is a worthy one, for, after all, a skin nicely mounted is a trophy of the chase and an ornament as well. Indeed the uses to which skins can be put are certainly many. They can be converted into rugs for drawing-room or library, turned into attractive wall decorations, used to ornate all kinds of furniture, or made into charming knick-knacks. The beautifying of the house and home by trophies of this description naturally appeals to the ladies, and I fancy, if one told the truth, it is they who are largely responsible for the present craze to possess rugs and furs of the rare animals.

Attention has recently been called to this desire on the part of many to possess specimens of the rarer skins by the intention of the animal exhibitor, Mr. Frank Bostock, to dispose of what is declared to be the finest private collection of skins ever got together by a single individual. For a period of twenty-five years now Mr. Bostock has made it a hobby to collect skins from all parts of the world, with the result that he possesses over 1,000, among them being many rare and valuable ones. Indeed, the total value of the collection is put down at £20,000. Naturally, a man who has been dealing in wild animals all his life and has come in contact with hunters almost daily has had a unique opportunity of gratifying this hobby.

There are, for instance, over fifty magnificent lion skins, and as many of the great Polar bear, the majority of them having been made into rugs. The converting of a raw skin to a rug demands the services of the tanner, furrier, and taxidermist.

Curiously enough, a lion skin is larger than that of the Polar bear, though many of the latter will reach from 10 feet to 12 feet in length. It is also the most expensive, and rightly the most prized. A lion skin with a mounted head is a trophy worthy of the place of honour in any mansion. It makes an admirable rug, and, if properly dressed and well mounted, will last for many generations. Like horns, skins are valued according to their rarity and points. A really first-class lion skin is worth from £100 to £120, while lately many have changed hands at as much as £200 apiece. Still, they are obtainable also at £35 to £50 each. It depends upon the species of the lion, if it is a full-grown one, and a perfect specimen. The most valuable lion skins to-day are those obtained from the Barbary species. The manes of the male when full grown are quite dark, very full, running well down the centre of the back. The head, too, is very massive, and the paws or claws spread out to an enormous width.

To dress and mount such a skin would occupy more than a week or two. When first received it is "pickled"—that is to say, placed in a kind of vat containing certain chemicals, where it remains for two or three days. It is then removed and scraped with large knives, this work being done by strong men. Very quaint is the next process. Having been scraped clean of all superfluous flesh and skin, it is placed in a tub and beaten underfoot in sawdust. It has now to be dried, and this is accomplished by allowing it to hang for several hours, or it may be a couple of days, in a room heated to a high temperature by stoves. It is now removed, beaten, and put through the sawdust process again. It receives a further beating from canes by two men when it passes into the factory.

Here it is critically overhauled, cut to the form of a rug, and all damaged parts, such as bullet holes, openings in the skin caused through spear thrusts or wounds, repaired. Occasionally quite large pieces have to be inserted, and these additions, of course, are obtained from the clippings of the actual skin. They are so cleverly inserted as to be practically unrecognisable. By placing it taut over a large board the skin is flattened or straightened, when it passes into the liner's hands, who virtually finishes the article. Should it be desired to mount the skin with head, the naturalist calls to his aid the taxidermist, for it is absolutely essential for the head to be life-like and natural-looking. Most of the heads used nowadays are made of papier mache, with occasionally the original teeth of the animal. The heads, of course, are covered with the animal's own skin. Making good the whiskers and the hair of the eyebrows, and getting a life-like pose about the face, is a task, which only an artist in this line can undertake. From start to finish the skin passes through eight to ten different hands before it is converted into a rug.

Much the same processes have to be followed with Polar bear skins and those of the big cats. Next to the lion skin, the Polar bear probably makes the handsomest rug, on account of its size and its beautiful white fur. The fur of a full-grown specimen ranges from 1½ inches to 2 inches in depth, and its value depends entirely upon the whiteness of the fur. A specimen with a pure silvery-white gloss is rare, and may be worth as much as £100. Unfortunately, most of these furs contain a slight shade of brown, which deteriorates their market value. Occasionally the skins of this giant of the Far North will run up to 14 feet in length, but one 10 feet in length is considered a large size. The head on such a rug would measure 28 inches from the tip of the nose to the base of the skull, and go quite 30 inches round the full spread of the neck.

The best skins now are those obtained from Northern China and Southern Siberia. They are thicker, more glossy, while the animals are larger than those found in more southern latitudes. From Siberia quite a number of skins of big game are exported, in addition to a host of skins of the smaller animals found there. Indeed, it is generally acknowledged that China will, in the near future, beat Canada as a fur-producing country.

A decidedly pretty and rare skin is that of the Colabus monkey, from Abyssinia. It is converted into a delightful little rug. Indeed, it is surprising the variety of animals whose coats are now transformed into this article. Only the other day a well-known furrier was instructed to make the skins of a couple of giraffes, shot by their owner in Central Africa, into a carpet for a room. Even the thick hide of the elephant is converted into various articles of furniture. Its massive feet are turned into useful umbrella stands, and its great head mounted as an ornament. It is the same with the alligator.

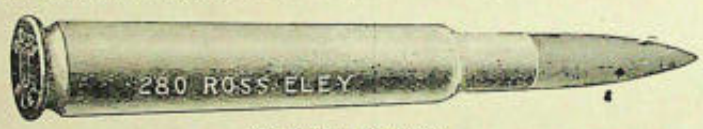
CARTRIDGES AND ACCESSORIES.

SOME "ELEY" INNOVATIONS.

MESSRS. ELEY BROS., LTD., who are now the sole manufacturers of the "Lethal" bullets, introduced by Messrs. Lyon and Lyon of Calcutta, have found that quite a large demand for these projectiles exists not only in India but also in many other parts of the world. The chief objection urged against round balls, for use in smooth bore shot-guns, resolves itself into a complaint that they do not produce the same results as are obtained with elongated bullets in barrels that, in one way or another, are rifled. It should not be suggested that they do. The whole purpose of a globular bullet intended to be fired from a shot-gun is to make the smooth bore serviceable with ball. With a spherical, instead of a cylindrical, projectile friction on the bore is greatly decreased, and although with a "ball" of this kind the range and close shooting of a cylindrical bullet fired from a rifled tube is not obtainable, it is perfectly efficient for its own particular purpose. Probably the general use of choke-bored shot-guns, all very properly marked "not for ball," and the introduction of ball-and-shot guns of the "Paradox" and other kinds, are the two factors chiefly responsible for the decreased use of bullets in ordinary shot-guns. The "Lethal" bullets have obviously been designed with a view to obviating the real disadvantages which are encountered in shooting a 13-gauge ball from a shot-gun. They are not intended by art magic to convert a smooth bore into an Express.



Perspective and Sectional view.

The bullets are furnished with projecting ribs on the peripheral surface, and by this means the danger of bursting or bulging a choked barrel is overcome. At the same time the projectile fits the tube, taking a bearing on one or other of the raised rings. The internal arrangement of steel vanes is designed for expansion —to increase shock on impact. The qualities of "stopping power" the "Lethal" bullets appear to possess in a most satisfactory degree. They are not in any sense designed as equivalents either for elongated rifle bullets or for the cylindrical projectiles used in modern ball-and-shot guns. They are designed for a particular purpose which other bullets do not fulfil. A spherical ball fired from a smooth tube, has its definite limitations. This is fully admitted, and within those limitations the improvement secured by the substitution of the "Lethal" bullet for a 13-gauge ball of hardened lead is evidently widely appreciated. Particularly is this the case in India, where the ready handling of a weapon familiar to its user, may be of so much importance in jungle shooting. The shot-gun, used with "Lethal" bullets, is essentially a weapon for short or moderate range.

Messrs. Eley Bros. have just taken up the manufacture of the series of capped bullets introduced by Messrs. Westley Richards & Co. To readers of the Indian Field these bullets are already familiar in many of their forms. The capped elongated L. T. projectile introduced for use in the latest pattern Westley Richards ball-and-shot gun affords a conspicuous example of the accuracy, range and power, that can in a weapon specially constructed for that purpose, be obtained without destroying the utility of the arm as a shot-gun. These capped (hollow-fronted) bullets are, of course, used also for Express rifles of many kinds, and they combine with a minimum weight in relation to diameter and length, a maximum of expansibility, which probably accounts for the extremely high velocities, marked accuracy and excellent stopping power associated with the series.

Another of Messrs. Eley Bros.' productions which has been very prominently brought into notice of late is the ·280 Ross-Eley cartridge which won so many places,—and afterwards lost so many prizes—at Bisley last summer. The disqualification of the Ross Match Rifles used by the most successful of the M. B. competitors, through an excess of weight in the barrels, is now ancient history to which there is no need to refer in detail. Obviously, the error of the rifle manufacturer, who through an oversight exceeded the 3½lbs. maximum weight of barrel allowed by the National Rifle Association, does not detract from the credit due either to the ammunition or the competitors in these M. R. events. As the N. R. A. has now revised the weights, allowing a maximum barrel up to 4lbs., these same cartridges and similar rifles will be available for use at the Bisley Meeting next July. The Ross-Eley ·280 cartridge, as shown in the illustration, is of the rimless type.

·280 Rimless Cartridge.

Messrs. Eley Bros. has just produced a ·280 rimmed cartridge. This is loaded with the same special powder, has the same sharp pointed bullet, and gives the same ballistic results as the rimless variety. With ·280 rifles chambered for the rimmed case it is confidently anticipated that long range shooting of the very highest accuracy will be obtained.

To turn to another description of ammunition, one with which the name of "Eley" is always so intimately associated, it may be mentioned that within the past year the firm has brought out a full series of "Proprietary" shot cartridges, each cartridge being branded with some distinctive name. These range from the "Ejector" brass covered paper lined cartridge down to the "Eley Smokeless" a cerise coloured case with narrow brass head, and the "Vulcan" a similar case loaded with a reduced charge of 1⅛oz. of shot. These latter cartridges are both of an inexpensive quality, but may be relied on as loaded with the utmost regularity. The reduced shot load in the "Vulcan" is very pleasant to shoot, but is, of course, only to be recommended when a full charge is not required.

Eley Proprietary Cartridges.

The Eley loaded "Proprietary" series comprises the best quality "Ejector" brass-covered; the "Eloid" waterproof paper and deep brass shell; the "Achilles," deep shell gastight; the "Comet," also with deep head; the "Mars," E. B. nitro quality case, and the "Rocket" and "Pluto", "Grand Prix" quality. There are others, including the "Fourten" an Eley loaded ·410 bore, and the well-known "Eley Smokeless" 12-bore cartridge. The illustrations show the general appearance of the "Achilles," ⅞ inch deep shell, dark blue case loaded with 42-grain powder; the "Eley Smokeless," a cerise coloured low priced cartridge; the "Mars," a light blue E. B. case loaded with 33-grain powder, and the light charge "Vulcan" a pale green case with 1⅛ ozs. shot charge. The particular grounds upon which these cartridges in their several grades, are recommended is that being loaded by the makers, regularity and reliability is assured. They represent the highest grade of factory loading to standard charges.

In concluding this brief survey of some of the latest accessions to the cartridges and accessories which have received the Eley imprimatur, mention must be made of the new gun stock pomade "Maxwax." In a number of the old time shooting books will be found recipes for substances intended to impart a permanent polish to gun stocks, keep out wet and preserve some of the pristine brilliancy the weapons have when they first come into the hands of their owners. All these polishes require making up, and as the recommended ingredients vary, one never knows which may be the best. "Maxwax" is a polish put up in collapsible tubes, like oil paints, convenient to apply, ready for use, and in ingredients and composition the last word on polishes. It contains waxes, oils and other substances selected and proportioned so that the "pomade" when applied penetrates skin deep into the wood. Hardening as time goes on it imparts a filmy transparency bringing out the natural figure of the wood. Unlike linseed oil it does not sink deeply, with subsequent probability of exudation, but remains as a permanent waterproof surface, waxlike and brilliant. In heat and damp it is of great importance that the wood of the stock and fore-end should be protected from warping, and the property or excluding moisture which "Maxwax" possesses is therefore of great practical importance apart altogether from the desirability of preserving on a gun or rifle stock the smooth surface which it possesses when it leaves the finisher's hands.

"Maxwax" in the tubes as prepared at the factory, is obtainable from gunmakers and dealers ready for use. In cases where a stock requires re-buffing it is advisable to employ a gunmaker to do the work and apply the polish. In other cases, the polishing can be done at home. "Maxwax" will not restore the brilliancy of a stock once roughed up, but the surface may be resmoothed by rubbing the wood work with pumicestone powder, applied by means of a buff stick, a pad of felt, or even a piece of india-rubber. When the surface of the stock is quite smooth an application of "Maxwax" will produce permanent immunity from the effects of weather. The polish is equally effective as a dressing and preservative for gun cases, kit bags and other similar leather goods.

At the Franco-British Exhibition in London last summer Messrs. Eley Brothers, Ltd., for their exhibit, received the highest recognition of excellence bestowed, namely the Grand Prix, thus adding another to the long list of highest awards the firm has gained at the International Exhibitions of the past and present centuries.

Extract from "THE FIELD" Newspaper,

19th January, 1907.

As sporting rifle Makers Messrs. Holland and Holland attach very great importance to achieving a high standard of accuracy in target results. A notice in this journal of a new rifle and cartridge has, by long custom included shooting results at 100 yards, firing from the table rest, and year by year for a long time past the closeness of grouping has shown a marked tendency towards improvement.

"The group illustrated was made with the 365-grain bullet as fired from the ·465 cartridge. It was produced at the very first attempt, and it constitutes what seem likely to stand for some time to come as a record amongst properly authenticated targets. The centres of the whole seven shots lie within a space practically 1 in. square (actually 1·00 in. by 1·05 in.), and the reader may satisfy himself from the reproduction of part of the actual target that all the shots would have hit a postage stamp. It is interesting to know that the sights used were of the open variety, and that orthoptic spectacles were not employed.

GREATEST ACCURACY and HIGHEST VELOCITY yet obtained (2,282 feet per second).

KARACHI PORT TRUST.

Final Issue of 7 Lakhs

OF THE

4 per cent. DEBENTURE LOAN, 1906,

OF

Rs. 45 LAKHS.

With the sanction of the Government of India, the Trustees of the Port of Karachi invite tenders for Karachi Port Trust Debentures to the extent of Rs. 7 Lakhs only, being the final issue of a loan of Rs. 45 Lakhs.

Debentures will be issued for Rs. 500 or multiples of Rs. 500 as may be required, and will bear interest at the rate of four (4) per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly.

The loan will be repayable in 30 years.

Instalments will be payable as follows :—

First 5 per cent. on application.

Second Balance within one month from date of allotment.

Interest will be calculated on the first instalment due on application from date of allotment and on the balance from date of payment.

The deposit of 5 per cent. will be returned if no allotment is made, and it will be forfeited if an allotment is not paid up on due date.

Tenders will be received up to 12 o'clock noon (Standard Time) on Friday, the 5th February 1909, by the Chairman, Karachi Port Trust, at the office of the Karachi Port Trust, Karachi.

Tenders should be submitted in a sealed cover addressed to the Chairman, Karachi Port Trust, Karachi, and superscribed "Tender for Port Trust Loan."

Forms of tender can be obtained on application to the Manager and Secretary, Karachi Port Trust, and to the Bank of Bombay, Bombay or Karachi.

Tenderers may pay their instalments into the Bank of Bombay, Bombay or Karachi, to credit of the Karachi Port Trust, and forward the Bank's receipt for the amount so paid.

N.B.—Trust Funds.—In accordance with the power contained in Section 20, Clause (f), of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, the Sadar Court of the Province of Sind has passed a rule declaring that Trust property consisting of money may be invested in Debentures issued by the Trustees of the Port of Karachi under the Local Authorities Loan Act, XI of 1879, or other law for the time being in force, until further order. Orders to the same effect have been passed by the Chief Courts and Authorities of Bombay, Madras, Punjab and Lower Burma.

Sport in England.

LONDON, Friday, 8th January 1909.

MANCHESTER.

RACEGOERS, snowed out since Windsor on the previous Monday, received a "call to arms" at Castle Irwell on Saturday the 2nd instant, but such a decree of uncertainty existed in the minds of owners and trainers, that their response in the shape of supplying runners was of faint-hearted character, and very few horses indeed turned up to give battle, and this in spite of all the pains the executive had taken in notifying everyone with an interest in the fixture that nothing short of a dense fog could prevent the first half of the programme from being worked through. Fourteen horses, all told, did duty during the afternoon—sufficient only to have made one fair field—while the attendance was meagre in the extreme. Nor could any enthusiasm be instilled into the sport, including as it did a couple of matches and a walk over, to say nothing of the curtailing of the card by an overnight event failing to fill. To make matters worse than they otherwise would have been, there was a murkiness about the atmosphere that not only added to the general discomfort of visitors, but rendered the light so bad that only the last two obstacles could be seen from the stands. Under these circumstances the details of the racing appended can be left to speak for themselves :—

TO CONQUER MALARIA.

Words of wisdom from a Physician's Pen.

"Those who conquer Malaria conquer the tropics" is a proverb with which every resident in India is familiar. While in consequence of the onward march of scientific achievement, this disease, so depressing in its onset, so devitalising in its effect, and so disorganising in its result to the whole system is better understood than it used to be, it is still, unhappily, exceedingly prevalent and is likely to continue until the conditions which produce it have been banished.

Most people know that while Malaria may take various forms it is due to a specific germ or microbe, which destroys the red corpuscles by which the oxygen of the air is carried by the blood to every part of the body to burn up its impurities. The destruction of these corpuscles produces the marked symptoms so characteristic of the disease,—the pale, sallow, earthy complexion, the mental and physical lassitude, the depression, the morbid thoughts and feelings, the aching muscles and the tender joints.

Bad as is all this, the result of Anaemia or poverty of the blood, as it is commonly called, which makes life a burden to the sufferer, it may go considerably farther until it produces that wasted and dangerous condition of the system doctors call "Cachexia."

For long, Quinine has been the sheet anchor of the physician, and in the acute stages it generally answers admirably, but in the later stages something else must be employed to destroy the effects wrought by the microbes.

Happily, in this conquest of the hosts of the disease germs which invade the body under the banner of Malaria the physician has been presented with a weapon as potent over them as the modern machine gun is potent against the old flint lock gun.

This weapon is Sanatogen, one of the most powerful restoratives and vitalising agents ever given to the world. Its remarkable properties are due to its two constituents Casein, the solid portion of pure, new milk, and Glycero-phosphate of Soda, a preparation containing phosphorus in the precise form in which it exists in the body. Phosphorus, as every one knows, is not only as a physician has written "intimately associated with the health of the system, and indispensable for the discharge of the functions of the nervous centres," but is also "absolutely essential for the growth of what physiologists term the cells of the body, the microscopic bricks of which the human edifice is constructed." This cell growth is greatly interfered with in Malaria, and a supply of phosphorus which is easily absorbed by the depleted system is urgently necessary to restore it to its standard activity. Nothing does this so well as Sanatogen, as nothing so rapidly restores the vitality of the blood as this preparation, which is prescribed by over ten thousand physicians in the world because no secret has ever been made of its constituents and they realise its overwhelming value in rousing the functions of the body to do their duty.

How rapidly Sanatogen restores the blood after Anaemia may be judged from the fact that one eminent physician records that the red blood corpuscles in a patient increased eighty thousand per cubic milli-metre in a week, and the percentage of red colouring matter in them advanced from 61 per cent. to 62·5 per cent., while another patient, who was unable to take any solid food and was losing weight rapidly so improved in a fortnight that the red corpuscles increased two hundred thousand per cubic milli-metre, their red colouring matter from 48 per cent. to 52 per cent., and she was able to resume her household duties, completely cured of the terrible melancholia from which she was suffering.

Children are especially liable to Malaria and its pernicious after-effects which may delay their development and stunt their growth. When given Sanatogen they rapidly improve. One child who at three years old, in consequence of Malaria, weighed only half a pound more than it did when it was a year and a half, was given a small quantity of Sanatogen daily, and its weight at once began to go up half a pound a week.

Just as Malaria causes wasting in children it makes adults prematurely old, in consequence of the depression of the vitality of the system. This condition is rapidly cured by Sanatogen which removes the prematurely old look and soon substitutes for the feeble will and listless spirit a healthy interest in normal pursuits.

An exceedingly interesting pamphlet on the subject of Malaria has been written by a physician who had a wide experience of it in India. In order to give this momentous publication "Malaria, its Causes and Effects" the widest publicity, the proprietors of the copyright have instructed Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, to distribute a limited number of copies free of charge, to anyone who may feel interested in it, and will send them a postcard mentioning the "Indian Field."

Sanatogen, by the way, may be obtained direct from Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet & Co., Calcutta, and at all chemists, etc.

WHAT PEOPLE SAY OF IT.

From Mr. W.—Dear Sirs,—"I suffered from Liver complaint in its most aggravated form pain in the side, shoulder-bladé and stomach; vomiting after every meal, excessive acidity in the stomach, constipated bowels and extreme debility FOR TEN YEARS, I tried all the known remedies without success and had given up hope, when as a last resource I tried your 'Essence of Chiretta.' I have taken it for some time and am now nearly quite well. Pain in the side nearly gone, in the shoulder-blade entirely so. No vomiting, little or no acidity in the stomach, bowels relaxed, no debility, being now a stronger and better man than I have been for years."

H. James Rainey, Esq., of Koolnah, Jessore, writes:—"Having derived a deal of benefit from the use of your 'Essence of Chiretta' (combined with VERY SMALL doses of Quinine) both as prophylactic and anti-periodic for intermittent fevers of malarious type, which would not yield to the usual remedies employed, and which disease is very prevalent in the Districts of Lower Bengal, in particular those parts bordering on the Soonderban, I think it incumbent on me to acquaint you thereof pro bono publico. You are welcome to give this letter all the publicity you may deem necessary in order that this excellent remedy of yours may become generally known."

From J. A. Farrell, Mooltan.—"Your Chiretta has already done me a WORLD amount of good. I had an enlargement of the spleen and fever for 9 months which reduced me to a mere skeleton. The fever I got rid of with your Antiperiodic Pills in 3 days; and the spleen I let be—thinking it could do me no harm. In this I was greatly mistaken, my complexion became as yellow as gold. Seeing your Chiretta I determined to use some of it, and see what good it did me. I have used it for about a week and already the colour is coming to my cheek and the TAN (through continued fever) has left my face. For the climate of India there is no medicine so good, for a Tonic, &c., as your "Essence of Chiretta." This is only an addition to the valuable testimonials you have so well earned through the Chiretta."

PLAYING CARDS FOR CLUB & MESSES.

GOODALL'S NEW "LINETTE" PLAYING CARDS.

These Cards are made with a finely grooved surface, which facilitates the dealing and minimises the possibility of misdeals.
In various floral designs or with plain backs. Per dozen packs Rs. 9-0 Per pack Re. 1-0

Special quotations for larger quantities.

De la Rue's "Pneumatic" Playing Cards.—

The Fronts of the "Pneumatic" Playing Cards are highly finished, whilst the Backs are minutely grooved or indented all over the surface, so as to provide an air-space between the cards, and a roughened surface which acts as a resistance for the thumb in dealing. This prevents misdeals, as the cards slide off one by one and can be dealt with the greatest ease and rapidity.

WYE.

The keenness of South-country racegoers to get into harness again was manifest by the capital attendance at this quaint little venue on Tuesday, while the strength of the fields showed that owners and trainers were anxious to extend a patronising hand to the winter sport. The weather was cold and cheerless, though fine overhead; but the old turf yelded better going than was expectd. Incidents were numerous enough, and many falls have to be recorded, but although, no serious injuries resulted to the jockeys, Mr. R. Bingley's five-year-old gelding, Worsted Stockings, ended his career by falling and breaking his back at the water. In the other minor happenings Zingarella, Nirvana II., John Baliol and Bob Sawyer were involved, and M. Walsh, the pilot of the first named, received a severe shaking. Results:—

GATWICK.

On Tuesday night it looked as if frost had resumed its sway but early next day the balance was restored, and the roads were once more in a loose condition. Despite the murky outlook in town, a goodly muster took train to Gatwick, and found better weather, as usual beyond the second ridge of the Surrey Hills—where the sun had a chance, and took that same by dispensing a beautifully mild and bright afternoon. The attendance was a good one. The course, though a bit on the sticky side, afforded good going, and, the fields panning out well, an interesting afternoon's sport resulted. Results:—

Winter, foiled at all points, had only left a legacy of slush in the country lanes of Surrey. The effects of the thaw were but evanescent at Gatwick yesterday, when a spring-breathing morning brought sunshine to the Surrey Weald. We did not expect to see primroses yet, although the woods at Poynings, on the Dyke Bottom, could have supplied panniers full on Christmas Day, but they would not have come as a surprise on the banks of the Mole. The grand weather brought a splendid muster from both ends of the line, and, with a big market in Tattersall's, sport was brisk, as notified by the big amounts invested, and accepted, quite in the old-time style. All the enclosures were well filled, the going was excellent, and fields ruled well, so that the executive may be congratulated on their efforts to please. Results:—

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE LEAGUES.—A heavy holiday programme of First League matches, entered upon on Christmas Day, came to an end last Saturday. No startling changes in the leading positions have to be noted, as the issue of the many games contested during the nine days, Everton still standing at the head of the competition with Newcastle United second, but the general result has been to render the struggle for the championship much more open than it appeared a fortnight ago. At that time Everton held an advantage of 4 points over Newcastle United, of 5 over Manchester United, and of 8 over Sheffield Wednesday, whereas now Newcastle are within one point of Everton, with Sheffield Wednesday only three points behind the leaders. Manchester United, beaten most unexpectedly on their own ground by Preston North End yesterday, have not made up so much leeway as Newcastle and Sheffield, but even they are slightly better off in relation to Everton than when the holidays commenced. Thus, whereas at a similar period of last season Manchester United held such a pronounced lead over their nearest rivals—8 points ahead with two matches in hand—that the issue of the competition was practically a foregone conclusion, this year there exists every probability that the result will remain comparatively open for a month or two to come.

Having been beaten twice on their own ground in succession, Everton must have been somewhat apprehensive of how they would fare against Bristol City. Obviously the directors of the club had no great confidence in the side as constituted on Friday, for they decided to make four changes. The course adopted was crowned with complete success, Everton leading by 4 to 1 at the interval, and running out easy winners by 5 to 2. Newcastle United naturally experienced no difficulty in adding to their list of victories at the expense of Leicester Fosse, and Sheffield Wednesday, overcoming Aston Villa at Owlerton, registered their fifth success in six engagements. Although showing obvious signs of the hard work they had recently gone through, Manchester United up to the interval seemed in no particular danger of losing to Preston North End, but on a change of ends a couple of goals were scored against last season's champions. For the first time for nearly three months both London clubs proved victorious on the same afternoon, Woolwich securing a narrow, but thoroughly deserved, win against Notts County, and Chelsea—despite a journey from Middlesbrough, where they had pulled through by 4 to 1 on Friday—scoring 3 goals to 0 against Liverpool. Beaten at Manchester on Friday and at Plumstead yesterday, Notts County had not previously suffered defeat since October. Notts Forest, losing on their own ground to Sheffield United, have sustained eight reverses in their last ten matches.

West Bromwich Albion continue to strengthen their position at the head of the Second Division, and, while they [illegible] no cause to fear any rivals for some time to come, Bolton Wanderers and Tottenham Hotspur are engaged in a close race for second place. Derby County are almost up with the London club, who want three points to catch the Wanderers and have two outstanding fixtures in which to make up the deficit. It is a nice position, with something in favour of the team who have the points in hand. Both the Wanderers and the Hotspur won at home by identical scores: Derby County had nothing to spare against Barnsley, but West Bromwich Albion put on seven goals at the expense of Grimsby Town. The Albion's chances of taking a prominent part in the Cup competition seem quite as rosy as the prospect of regaining a place in the First Division; and, after their threatened dissolution a few years ago, their return to the forefront of professional football would be extremely popular. Fulham, in gaining a victory at Stockport, accomplished one of their best performances, but it is impossible for them to atone for their poor form during the past four weeks.

Having at last secured the first position in the Southern League, Northampton have quickly made their lead a commanding one. Southampton's loss of form was necessary to aid them in this, and now the team that held pride of place for almost half the season are seriously challenged by Bristol Rovers. Deterioration just as the competition for the Cup approaches is a serious matter for Southampton, who have still a depleted side. A bare victory at home over Brentford, while Northampton were putting on 4 goals to 1 at Coventry, shows Southampton in rather a poor light when the question of the championship is considered, and only an immediate recovery can reassure their supporters. The much-despised Leyton beat Crystal Palace, and, having no interest in the Cup, they should rise steadily in the League. In beating the Argyle at Plymouth by 3 goals, Millwall stood out by themselves, and this success is the more surprising as pecuniary difficulties had forced them to part with Hunter their best forward. Millwall may retrieve their fortune in the Cup ties.

CHELSEA VS. LIVERPOOL.—Chelsea have commenced the New Year in brilliant style, for a victory at Middlesbrough on New Year's Day was followed by another, though less meritorious, success at Stamford Bridge, where Liverpool were overcome by 3 goal to 0. Both sides had one change, Fairgray taking the place of Mair in the Chelsea eleven, while Goode superseded Robinson for Liverpool. There would be nearly 30,000 people at the match, and the ground was in fair condition in view of the recent thaw, Chelsea started strongly, and Dunlop several times helped his side with timely clearances. The Chelsea half-back line, however, was stronger than that of Liverpool, and with the home defence playing steadily, Whitley was not troubled so much as Hardy, who saved from Hilsdon, Windridge, and Brawn. Orr got an offside goal, as did Rouse at the other end. Hilsdon was hurt, and played outside right, where he did excellent work. It was from his centre just before the interval that Windridge shot a lovely goal and gave Chelsea a well-deserved lead. Brawn opened the second half with a great run more than half the length of the field, but Hardy cleared his shot. A few minutes later, however, Brawn went through, and when he and Dunlop got together the Chelsea man came down and a penalty was awarded. From this Hilsdon scored. Whitley made a grand save from Goddard, and Hardy cleared a smart shot from Windridge. Twenty minutes from the end the Chelsea forwards made a strong attack, and Rouse, when clearly offside, netted, and the goal was allowed. Liverpool fought pluckily, and twice in the closing moments Goode made good attempts to score. In the end, however, Liverpool were well beaten. Chelsea, 3; Liverpool, 0.

WOOLWICH ARSENAL VS. NOTTS COUNTY.—After a hard but rather scrambling game Woolwich Arsenal defeated, Notts County at Plumstead by the only goal scored. The Midlanders had been engaged in a strenuous game on the previous day with the League championships, and although they brought their best side their New Year's Day exertions may account for the very poor show they made against the Woolwich side, whose superiority was more pronounced than the score would suggest. Although still without Gray and Neave, the London side had Raybould inside right and the two amateurs, T. T. Fitchie and G. Hoare, again among the forwards. The Arsenal were the more aggressive in the first half, but the forwards met a defence that did not stand on ceremony and hustled the opposition unceasingly. The result was that there were few chances of shooting, and all attempts were easily foiled by Iremonger, the Notts goalkeeper. The Midland forwards were often dangerous when they broke away, but they also found it impossible to get through. In the second half the Notts team went all to pieces, and the play was almost always in their half of the field. The Notts goal escaped marvellously several times, but after fifteen minutes Hoare scored a fine goal with a fast long shot that went into the net off the post. Despite a continuous bombardment, Iremonger and his backs prevented further disaster, although Hoare again got through from an offside position. The visitors themselves never looked like scoring, and in the end were deservedly beaten by 1 goal to 0. There were 15,000 spectators. Woolwich Arsenal, 1: Notts County, 0.

HOTSPUR VS. LEEDS CITY.—After a keenly contested game at Tottenham, the Hotspur beat Leeds City by 3 to 0. The score rather flatters the winners, who, if anything, had a trifle the worst of the actual play in the first half, and yet found themselves a couple of goals to the good at the interval. There were about 20,000 people present, and the weather was mild and inclined to be misty. Leeds have had bad luck in their holiday games, no fewer than four of their first eleven men being incapacitated by injuries, Gemmell (inside left), Joynes (inside right), Kennedy (centre half) and Watson (right back) giving place to Rogers, Burnett, Hamilton, and Bates respectively. Bates is the Yorkshire cricketer, and gives promise of being a good back. He only lacks a little steadiness in his kicking. Tottenham had the side which had done so well up to the Christmas holidays. Woodward playing at centre forward. Leeds were the first to find their feet on the somewhat treacherous turf, and Hewitson had to save a stinging shot from Burnett quite early on. It was fast but scrambling, the defence on both sides being pretty good. A capital opening made by Walton enabled Minter to open the score for Tottenham after half an hour, and before the interval Middlemiss got another goal from a cross by Minter. In the second half the Hotspur were easily the better side, and the Leeds goal was subjected to severe pressure. A great many corners were forced, but only one goal was scored, Minter shooting through from a pass by Woodward towards the close of the game. Tottenham Hotspur, 3; Leeds City, 0.

CLAPTON ORIENT VS. HULL CITY.—Despite the fact that the ground was in a slippery state there were times when the football at Millfields, Clapton, was of really high-class. Liberally sanded in the centre and round the goals, the turf gave the players a good foothold in those parts of the field, but in many other places they had some difficulty in manœuvring the ball. Hull City were without Roughley, Mavins, Campbell, Shaw, and Stanley Smith, but they played a plucky game, and though they were rather lucky to win they are to be commended for the admirable manner in which they persevered to the end. The Orient had a new left wing in Beales and Oliver, while Louch, the old Shepherd's Bush and Portsmouth amateur, was in the centre Parker, on the right wing, found Gordon too robust for him to show as prominently as usual. Scott appeared at centre-half back and did some capital work, and the backs also performed creditably, but Bosser was uncertain in goal, and he might have prevented the point that equalised the scores just before the interval. The opening goal of the match came a quarter of an hour following the start, a clever piece of play by Parker enabling Louch to beat Storey. Three minutes from half-time, John Smith equalised, and a similar period after the interval Gordon put Hull City in front. Louch was hurt and had to retire after about half an hour had elapsed of the second half, and with no more scoring taking place Hull City won by two goals to one. The weather was dull, but there were 7,000 spectators. Hull City, 2; Clapton Orient, 1.

THE GAME IN SCOTLAND.

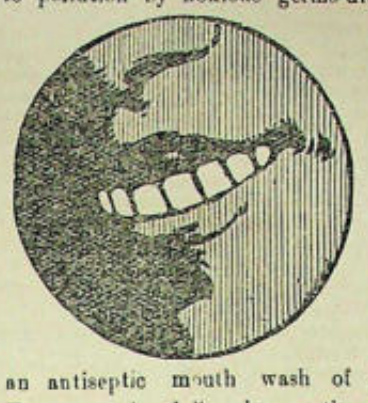
So far as weather was concerned, the New Year made a splendid start in Scotland, and games were witnessed under the best conditions from a spectator's point of view. Grounds, on the other hand, were soft and muddy, but the crowds were there, and at Ibrox Park, Rangers and Celtic had a gala day, the drawings reaching £1,725. It takes an England vs. Scotland match to beat the drawing powers of these two teams, the rivalry between them being healthy, and wonderfully keen. On the day Celtic were the superior at all points, and after their fine victory over St. Mirren the previous week, the Rangers' display was unaccountable. As has been repeatedly stated, Rangers are like Newcastle United. They have too many players, all good, but woeful when it comes to combination, and it is this failing that has cost them all the points they have lost. Sharp was badly missed, and, great player as he really is, he has disappointed his Glasgow admirers. He should prove a great catch for Fulham, as for long he has been anxious to return south; in fact, Glasgow had few, if any, attractions for him and he seemed to have regretted leaving the London district.

Queen's Park had Northern Nomads as their New Year guests at Hampden Park, and considering the counter attraction at Ibrox, did very well, the attendance numbering 20,000, with drawings £610. The feature of the game was the magnificent play of the Queen's left wing—R. S. McColl and H. Paul, and the former's winning goal was one of the best ever scored in Hampden Park. Nomads made a good show, but although only beaten by a goal they were outclassed throughout.

Saturday's League games were surprising, Celtic most unexpectedly coming a cropper at Kilmarnock, where the local club stood up to them in the gamest style, and won both points deservedly. It was the surprise of the day, and Celtic's experiment of playing their half-back, Young in goal (owing to the illness of Adams) was anything but a success. The drawings were £328—wonderfully good for Kilmarnock.

Rangers had a walk over against Partick Thistle, but it was a result that would give as much pain as pleasure. Livingstone, the old Manchester City forward, was reintroduced in the front rank, and it was early seen that his brainy work was just what was wanted on the previous day against Celtic. He had no fewer than four of the six goals. It is these continual changes in the team that annoy the Rangers' supporters and make them criticise the directors rather severely. If Livingstone had been playing on Friday, the result might have been different.

Queen's Park, against St. Mirren, had the best gate of the day—£407—and the game was keen from start to finish. The points were divided, but it was only Grant's fine goalkeeping that kept the amateurs from getting two.



Clyde are the team of the moment, and they followed up their sensational win over Celtic the previous Saturday by beating both Aberdeen and Falkirk on the first two days of the year. Chalmers, late of Bristol Rovers, was again among the goals, scoring two against Aberdeen and three against Falkirk.

On their own ground Airdrieonians lost two points to Hamilton Academicals, who thus secured their second win out of twenty matches. Airdrie had seven-eighths of the play, but were beaten by the magnificent goalkeeping of Mason, the Hamilton man being one of the best in Scotland this season.

Edinburgh's luck is still out, Hibernians being beaten at Greenock by Morton after a hard game, while Hearts had to thank their bad shooting for the loss of two points to 3rd Lanark at Tynecastle. Dundee's victory over Motherwell was decisive, and on play thoroughly merited.

is too often paid to keeping the mouth pure. The mouth is to the body what the entrance hall is to the home, and the mouth is consequently particularly exposed to pollution by noxious germs drawn in with the breath, or arising from small fragments of food remaining in the mouth and becoming foul. To counteract these evils, which lead to various disorders of the mouth and to decay of the teeth, the mouth should be regularly rinsed with an antiseptic mouth wash of a solution of Odol. Everyone who daily cleanses the mouth and teeth with Odol will soon discover, from a general sense of freshness and stimulated energy, how beneficial is the purification of the mouth with this preparation.

RUGBY RULES.

RECENT events have made it quite clear, even to the most ardent admirers of the Australian Rugby team, that our present visitors cannot be classed with either the New Zealanders or the South Africans. Those who closely and impartially watched their opening engagements knew quite well that not only would the Australians lose several matches, but also that there would be trouble. The defeats have come along—they have with one exception been encountered in Wales—and the trouble has arisen and resulted in three Australians being ordered off the field. The latter fact does not constitute pleasant reading. One may safely assume that a long period will elapse before another Colonial Rugby team tours this country, unless the players come from South Africa. The band under the leadership of Paul Roos, left behind them delightful memories of skilful play and good sportsmanship, and any South African side imbued with the same ideals will always be assured of a hearty welcome in this country. The Rugby games during the past few days have been of a purely holiday kind, and do not call for any particular comment. The Fettesian-Lorettonians—mostly Fettes boys—are in town on their usual tour, and on Saturday defeated Blackheath. Williamson and Ashcroft, the halves, came very near pulling the club through, but the clever footwork of the school's forwards was a little too much for them, and besides, they had no three-quarters worth playing up to. The halves had to work on their own, and between them obtained the best try in an indifferent match. Schulze, Scotland's full-back, was in fine form, but Fettes and Lorretto have often sent a better side south than the present one.

ENGLAND VS. AUSTRALIA.—Only a moderate company assembled at Fartown, Huddersfield, to witness the Northern Union match under the above title. Considerable local interest, however, prevailed from the presence of two Hudders fieldmen—Wagstaffe and Holroyd—in the England team. Unfortunately, Messenger could not turn out for the Australian professionals, the place of that brilliant player being taken by Frawley. On the English side Newbold, of Wakefield, appeared instead of Brooks, of Warrington. On entering the field the home team gave three cheers, the Australians responding with the "Kangaroo" war-cry. There was a startling opening to the contest, as Lomas having kicked off, Bolenski made his mark, and, following some brilliant passing by the Colonials, Neidke gained a try. The place failed, and Lomas kicking a penalty goal for England, the home side were only one point to the bad. In the course of some open play there came big kicking on both sides. In the scrummages, the Australians generally secured possession of the ball; with the result that the English backs had very few chances of displaying their powers of attack. Despite the heavy state of the ground, the game continued fast, and chiefly in favour of the Colonials, for whom Coalon obtained a second try. England were still hard pressed when a free kick brought welcome relief, and, following some passing between Wagstaffe and Lomas, Tyson scored for England, Lomas only just failing to place a goal. Ten minutes later Batten, taking a pass from Holroyd, gained a further try, which placed the home team in front. Lomas was not successful with the place kick, and missed from a penalty right in front of the posts. Just before the interval Frawley added another unconverted try for the Colonials, the game at half time standing: Australia, three tries (9 points); England, 1 goal, 2 tries, (8 points).

By the time the players entered upon the second portion of the struggle the company had increased to about 7,000. The Australians brought off some pretty bouts of passing, but somehow gained little ground thereby, and offside spoiled a promising dribble by the forwards. For a time the play ruled fairy even, but, Wagstaffe dribbling down in great style, Holroyd secured a try, which placed the Englishmen once more in front. Having thus regained the lead, the home side went to work with great spirit, and, Batten dribbling half length of the field, was only robbed of the ball on the line. The Australians had several narrow escapes, the Englishmen continuing to show brilliant form. Tyson meeting with an injury, had to retire for ten minutes, and later on Wagstaffe was badly obstructed after taking the ball down very cleverly. However, with Holroyd, Wagstaffe, Batten and Lomas all acquitting themselves admirably there came, before the end, another try by Tyson. Once again the place-kick failed, but the home side were left with a well-earned victory, the final score being:—England, 1 goal, 4 tries, (14 points); Australian, 3 tries, (9 points).

SOMERSET vs. DEVON.—Unfortunately, Somerset could not put their best team in the field at Bridgewater, but Devon had to make only one alteration in their chosen fifteen, The home side began well and kept the ball chiefly in the Devon half, but their attacks lacked finish. At length the Devon backs got going and passing capitally a try resulted, Matthews crossing the line. Somerset again forced matters, but failed to utilise a clear chance of equalising, and at half time Devon still led by 3 points to 0. On resuming Somerset forced the pace, and Roman got a try, which, made the record 3 all. From that point, however, Devon assumed the upper hand. Playing well together they had matters all their own way. Gilbert and Mills each cleverly dropped a goal. Matthews and Kelly obtained tries that were not converted, and then Butcher ran in splendidly. Roberts kicked a goal. Devon easily held their own, despite a great effort by the home team, and they won decisively by 3 goals (2 dropped) and 4 tries to 1 try. Devon, 25 points; Somerset, 3 points.

LONDON HOSPITAL vs. ROSSLYN PARK.—With a full side representing them at Hale End, London Hospital proved too strong for Rosslyn Park on turf rendered exceptionally heavy by the recent thaw. Even forward, the Park pack, though doing much useful work, could not hold its own, while outside there was no comparison. The consequence was that the visitors had their line crossed on nine occasions—five in the first half and four in the second—while they not only did not score, but seldom looked like doing so. Palmer opened the Hospital series of tries within five minutes of the start. and Lloyd quickly obtained a second try. Each of these Palmer converted, but he was unsuccessful with the tries subsequently gained by Adams and Faircloth (twice), before the change of ends. In the second portion Lloyd scored twice in rapid succession, and his example was followed by Palmer and Faircloth. Only one of these was improved, so that London Hospital won by 33 points to nil. London H., 3 goals, 6 tries; Rosslyn Park, 0.

LONDON IRISH vs. LONDON WELSH.—This game was played at West Ham, where, on heavy going, the Irishmen failed to stay to the end, and were beaten by 20 points, 16 of which were scored in the last half hour. The only score of the first half was a capital dropped goal, secured by Richards, the Irishmen's defence being otherwise equal to all the demands made upon it. These demands were continuous and constant, and it was meritorious on their part to cross over so little in arrears. Ten minutes from the restart Maddocks and Alderman carved a clear passage for Alexander, who scored behind the posts, and Harding converted. For some time after this the dash of the Irish forwards kept play on the Welsh line, and a score for them seemed a certainty. Right on the line, however, a bad Irish pass was intercepted by Maddocks, who ran the whole length of the ground and scored under the bar. Harding again goaled. After this the Irish were a badly beaten side, and J. S. Williams was left with a clear run in, while subsequently Alexander again got over and scored behind the posts, but neither of these tries were converted. There was rather an element of doubt about each. The final passes, given immediately in front of the Press-box, certainly appeared to be forward ones. Welsh, 3 goals (1 dropped), 2 tries; Irish, 0.

RICHMOND vs. MARLBOROUGH NOMADS.—At Richmond.—The Nomads gave a very poor exhibition at back and met with an easy defeat. Forward there was not much to choose between the teams and the opening minutes gave promise of an even game. Richmond, after a time, gave a very fine display behind, and meeting a very weak defence they scored pretty much as they liked. A feature of the game was the capital display of W. C. Wilson and Gray who between them brought off some brilliant runs. Richmond led at the interval by 16 points, C. W. Wilson, Gray (2), and Brayshaw crossing the Nomads' line while Horsfall goaled on two occasions. Except for an occasional breakway by the Nomads forwards, play in the concluding half was mostly in the vicinity of the visitors goal line, and Gray, besides scoring two tries, was responsible for four capital placed goals, two from his own tries and one each from Bryning and Water. The first try after the interval obtained by Bryning was not improved upon and a one-sided game ended in a win for Richmond by 39 points to nil. Richmond, 6 goals, 3 tries; Nomads, 0.

GUYS HOSPITAL vs. CATFORD BRIDGE.—Owing to the sodden state of the ground play in this match at Honor Oak Park was of a scrambling character. Though Guys were without several of their best players, notably, Duke, Sauer, Lee, and Stringer, they somewhat easily defeated Catford Bridge. The latter were the first to attack and the game was still young when Helder gave them the lead with a try which Albery could not improve. The Hospital, however, retaliated in the first half with a try which Medlock scored, following a forward rush, and this was improved by Stokes. At the outset of the second half Catford held their own, but later Guys, lasting better than their opponents, got going and their three-quarters did good work. Stokes ran over with a try, and after a short space of time Medlock added another. The first of these players failed in each of his attempts to convert from difficult angles and Guys therefore won on their merits by 11 points to 5. Guys, 1 goal, 2 tries: Catford Bridge, 1 try.

BLACKHEATH vs. FETTES LORETTO.—At Blackheath, before a moderate company. The turf has been protected, but the surface was soft and the ground soon became very heavy. The Scotsmen did not bring up so strong a team as usual and were very weak behind, while Blackheath had by no means a strong fifteen, but had the assistance of Williamson at half-back, where he played a great game. The Scots were the first to score, McKenzie taking a pass from Sivwright and finishing behind the posts after a good run. Cunningham placed a goal and for a long time the Scots kept the lead, but just before the interval the best bit of play of the match resulted in a Blackheath score. Williamson got hold just outside his own 25 and passed to Ashcroft, who made considerable ground, and then re-passed to Williamson, who scored behind the posts. Stone easily added the major points. At the interval the scores were level, but in the second half the Scots had the better of the game. Grant scored wide on the left after some good passing by the backs and Cunningham failed at goal. For a time the game was fairly even, but at length the forwards worked the ball up the field on the right and Grant scored in an easy position. Ward placed a goal, and the Scotsmen won by 13 points to 5. The tackling on both sides was the feature of the game. Fettes Loretto, 2 goals, 1 try; Blackheath, 1 goal.

OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS vs. OLD LEYSIANS.—The Taylors had a rather weak team out at Richmond against the Leysians, but they managed to secure a good win. Vigour was not wanting on either side, but where the Leysians failed was in the finishing up of their movements. Several times their three-quarter line carried out some splendid passing bouts which failed to produce anything. The Taylors, on the other hand, though their standard of play was not high and was often ragged, showed more resource both in the loose and in the scrum and combined better. The game was fairly even during the first half, at the end of which the home team were seven points ahead, but in the latter portion of the match the Taylors generally had the better of matters and won by 25 points to 6. O.M.T., 4 goals, 1 try; Old Leysians, 2 tries.

BOXING.

BURNS YELPING.—Echoes of the great fight continue to arrive from Australia, and all confirm the first impression that there was only one man in it from the fighting point of view, and his name was not Tommy Burns. I have read, I believe, every account transmitted from the scene of action, and all agree in stating that Burns was utterly and hopelessly outclassed and beaten from start to finish, and that it was only in the interests of humanity that the police finally interfered.

In common ring parlance, Jack Johnson "made a monkey" of his opponent without in any way distressing himself, and at no time during the contest did Burns have even a thousand to two chance of winning. At the finish of the bout Tommy admitted that he was fairly and squarely beaten. To quote his own words, he said:—"I did my best and fought hard, but Johnson was too big for me and his reach too good."

So far all is well. Burns had fought a good, game fight, had been well beaten, and had acknowledged it. Sportsmen all over the world were ready to congratulate him upon his gallant display, and he would have lost little in popularity if he had only had the common decency to have kept quiet.

There is, however, apparently a kink in the man's temperament. His acknowledgment of defeat made on the spur of the moment was repugnant to the real Tommy and after a day or two in which to nurse his bruised face and soothe his wounded spirit he evolves something worthy in every way of the Tommy Burns we knew in England.

His defeat, if you please, was due to the undue influence of Johnson's seconds with the police. In a cable message to the Sporting Life, he thus sums it up:

Johnson's seconds influenced police stopping contest.
Was strong. Always had chance, as Johnson was tiring.
Pictures show everything.
Willing fight Johnson again; can beat him. TOMMY BURNS.

Anything more contemptible has surely never been penned by a member of the boxing fraternity. It was agreed on all hands that Burns was hopelessly beaten, his condition being such that the police had to interfere. But Burns, after thinking the matter over, states that the interference was prompted by Johnson. Were it not that the suggestion is scandalous it would be laughable.

Then, again, he says he was strong and always had a chance. How he could have been strong after the drubbing that Johnson gave him passes all understanding, while his "chance" could hardly have been a dog's one.

With regard to the pictures showing everything, it may be well to quote Jack Johnson. "He's welcome to the biggest share of the pictures," said the champion; "let him take them around the country and show the people what a hiding I gave him." Unless Burns has got a set of pictures sub-edited by himself, a lot of explanation will be necessary to show his chance.

As to his willingness to meet Johnson again, I may remark that it took nearly two years and a guarantee of £6,000, "win, lose, or draw," to get Tommy's courage up to the sticking-point on the first occasion. I tremble to think of the amount of money and the number of wild horses it would take to drag this boaster into a ring for a second fight with Jack Johnson.

To sum up the matter, I regard Burns' challenge as a mean and spiteful attempt on the part of a beaten man to belittle a victorious opponent. Johnson is a man of colour, a nigger; yet both in and out of the ring he can teach Tommy Burns something. Physically the champion is a splendid specimen of humanity, and his behaviour both before and since the fight has been all that a sportsman's should.

BILLIARDS.

C. HARVERSON vs. W. A. LOVEJOY.—At the Leicester-square Hall last night the match of 8,000 up for stake money amounting to £70, which these players have contested, ended in a splendid victory for Lovejoy, who received 1,250 points start, by 190. During the day Harverson made breaks of 86, 106, 138, 77, 73, 106 and 82, while the ex-amateur 131, 73, and 161. Full scores:—

Lovejoy	8,000

Paperchasing.

VI.

THE start for the sixth paperchase was on the East of the Garia Hat Road just by Jodhpore Thana, and the paper went over a hurdle and a low bushed wall and then crossed the road skirted round the bund country and finished by the Molla Hat Road at the same place as last week. It was a long chase about 4 to 4½ miles and the mere fourteen jumps besides a raised road or two and lots of drops and scrambles —a real good sporting ride. Horses are beginning to show the effects of all the schooling and there was very little grief to record though fairly good fields went out and the thrusting contigent were in fierce competition for places being very keen. The first five or six were all together in a bunch at the end, but Lord Harry came out and won very easily at the finish. In the ponychase Emerald won in a canter, Mr. Ballantyne on Meprise being next up. The following is the official order in both chase:—

HORSES.

1. Captain Holden on Lord Harry
2. Lord Frances Scott on Fermoy
3. Mrs. Dangar on Benalbi
4. Mr. Winkworth on Ermine
5. Captain Gibbs on Trilby
6. Mr. Ballantyne on Fairy followed by Messrs. Symons, Corbett, Levetus, Robertson, Morris, Perkins, Mrs. Dods, Messrs. Glen and Myers.

PONIES.

1. Mr. Tanner on Emerald
2. Mr. Ballantyne on Meprise
3. Captain Holden on Pathfinder II
4. Mr. Cowper on Envious
5. Mr. Glen on Marconi
6. Mr. Deakin on Scarboro followed by Messrs. Tegart, Corbett, who had a fall, Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Paris, Messrs. Radmore and Stokes.

EZRA CUP TOURNAMENT.

CALCUTTA vs. GORDON HIGHLANDERS.—The match between these teams on the 21st instant was keenly contested and full of incident. The game was interesting right up to the last moment and the winning goal was scored by Calcutta in the last chukker.

First chukker.—The Gordons pressed at the start and Stewart just failed to score. Calcutta attacked for a spell and lost chances through indifferent shooting. Just before the close the Gordons also missed opportunities of scoring.

Second chukker.—The Gordons got away and Stewart and Cummie scored goals. Thereafter, Graham did good work for Calcutta but they could not score.

Third chukker.—Calcutta attacked and Muir hit a goal.

Fourth chukker.—Calcutta continued to attack but the Gordon's defence was impenetrable. Graham was again conspicuous for a good run.

Fifth chukker.—Calcutta got through and scored the equalising goal. Visits to both goals followed, but were unsuccessful.

Sixth chukker.—With the score 2 all, both teams were playing at top pressure. Scott scored a goal for Calcutta and though the Gordons strained every nerve to get on terms they could not break the Calcutta defence, Final Score: Calcutta 3 goals; Gordon Highlanders 2 goals. Teams:—

VICEROY'S STAFF vs. BRITISH INFANTRY.—This game last Friday proved a run-away victory for the staff, whose combination is splendid. They piled on 14 goals and the Infantry only got through twice.

First chukker.—The Infantry rushed away and drew first blood but the Staff equalised immediately and before the end of the chukker had scored three more goals.

Second chukker.—Kerr put in a good run and scored for the Infantry and the Staff replied with three more goals.

Third chukker.—The Staff pressed and scored twice.

Fourth chukker.—The Staff continued to attack and registered two more goals. Then the Infantry, who had been kept on the defensive, got away but were stopped by Keighley.

Fifth chukker.—The Infantry showed up for a space but were driven back and forced to defend again, the Staff hitting two more goals.

Sixth chukker.—The Staff scored their last goal and rode off victorious by 14 goals to 2.

Final.

VICEROY'S STAFF vs. CALCUTTA POLO CLUB.—A large gathering witnessed the final match on Monday, a fast and well contested game ending in a win for the Staff by 4 goals to 3. This is the second time the Staff has won the trophy, and this year the winners received four small cups presented by Count de Madre.

First Chukker.—Calcutta attacked but the Staff cleared. They took the ball down to the Calcutta post and scored with a long shot.

Second Chukker.—The Staff pressed till Graham relieved and up and down play followed: no score.

Third Chukker.—Play was all over the field; Scott eventually got in a good run and scoring, put the teams on terms.

Fourth Chukker.—The Staff hit a goal and Graham replied another for Calcutta.

Fifth Chukker.—The Calcutta goal was besieged and the Staff put on two points.

Sixth Chukker.—The Staff were kept on the defensive all the time and Calcutta just missed scoring on two occasions: at length, Graham, who had been playing a great game throughout, rushed away and scored just on time. Final Score: Staff, 4 goals; Calcutta, 3 goals. Teams:—

WINCHESTER
.351 CALIBER HIGH POWER.

Before deciding upon a rifle for your next hunting trip, don't fail to investigate the merits of this new Winchester, which is reloaded by the recoil of the exploded cartridge. There is nothing complicated, cumbersome or freakish about it. It is a reliable, handy gun from butt to muzzle. The .351 Caliber High Power Cartridge which it shoots represents the latest development in powder and cartridge manufacture. Although small in size it develops tremendous velocity and energy, making it powerful enough for the largest game. This most modern type of cartridge also possesses the added advantage of economy. Owing to the comparatively small amount of metal used in the shell it costs much less than old style cartridges no more powerful.

BALLYGUNGE vs. NATTORE.—Ballygunge had their revenge for the defeat inflicted on them three weeks ago by the Maharaja of Nattore's team, when they beat them on their own ground on Sunday last by 47 runs.

Winning the toss, the native team had first use of an excellent cricket, and were not dismissed, until they had put together 179; not at all a large score considering the size and pace of the ground, but still, useful. Towards this total, Zillani contributed a stylish 64, K. Roy 31, and R. L. Roy 24, but Razak for once was got rid of before opening his account; the wickets were shared between White, F. Gould and Guise, who captured 4 for 46, 3 for 38 and 3 for 74, respectively.

When the match was resumed on Sunday morning, Ballygunge made a most disastrous start, White being cleaned bowled by Himoo's first ball, but Stafford, Shallow, Frost and Guise all made runs, and the opposing side's total was passed with only 4 wickets down. The fifth fell at 186, the sixth and seventh at 191, the eighth at 198, and the ninth at 226, when A. Gould being absent through illness, the innings closed, Mistry with 7 for 69 having by far the best analysis.

As about two hours still remained for play, Nattore's team went in again, and by the call of time, had put together 116 for 4, R. L. Roy being not out with 40 to his credit and Purshottam with 19. Score:—

CRICKET AT PATIALA

PATIALA vs. KAPURTHALA.—The Patiala cricket ground which was all under water last week owing to the heavy downpour of rain on the 10th and 11th, presented a fine spectacle during the ensuing week when the neighbouring State of Kapurthala very by sportingly got up a team and sent it down to Patiala on the 18th and 19th. Kapurthala team, vastly strengthened by the Kashmir trio, Noor Elahi, Salamat Rai and Ram Kishen, who showed fine form from been points, had very nearly carried off the palm, had it not for the remarkable coolness and pluck of the Patiala bowlers Mistri and Tarrant, who turned the scales at the very last moment.

Patiala had the good fortune to win the toss, but they made very little use of their opportunity, as they were all dismissed for 130. Mistri and Tarrant being the chief contributors.

Kapurthala opened successfully, making 75 for 4, but failing to find worthy supporters of Noor Elahi and Salamat Rai, who rendered an excellent account of themselves, their innings ended at 106.

In their second venture the home team gave a still poorer show, compiling only 94, of which the lion's share was that of Tarrant (60) his cricket as usual being most correct and elegant. Kapurthala now required 119 to win and it was a question what would be the issue. They met with a disastrous start losing three of their good wickets for 20, as Mistri and Tarrant were bowling admirably well, and the ball with which Mistri captured Salamat Rai was a real good one, curling in the air it completely beat the batsman in pace. At this stage of the game when our visitors were despairing of victory Noor Ilahi came in and joining Harnam Dass who was already playing a defensive game, lifted the score to 67. Harnam Dass falling to Tarrant, Noor Ilahi was left alone for the uphill fight. However, with characteristic pluck and dashing good play he succeeded in altering the aspect of the game, carrying the total to 100 and 110, losing in the meanwhile two of his comrades. With 110 for 6, he kindled renewed hopes of victory in his partisans who enlivened the game with constant and hearty cheering at each and every run. The more experienced and skilful bowlers of Patiala would not give in and tried their level best to turn victory to their side. Their attempt was, however, met with success in disposing of Noor Ilahi at 111, and his follower Bhagwan Dass at 115. Shortly after, Mistri got Chunni Lal at 117. The last pair being left with the responsible task to cross the barrier 117 and bring it to a favourable issue, but in extreme eagerness to make the most of even the very little chance, they ran a short one to leg which Gokal Chand picking up fast returned to Mistri, who put an end to a most interesting and finely contested game with one run in favour of Patiala. An especially gratifying feature of the game was the admirable bowling and fielding of the visitors.

The Naturalist.

A SHORT COLLECTING TRIP ON THE SINGALILA RANGE AND IN PART OF SIKKIM.

ON the afternoon of 31st July 1905 I started off my boy, sweeper, shikari, syce, pony and five coolies so that they could reach Singla Bazaar by the evening and make an early start for Chakung on the 1st. Chakung is 20 miles from Darjeeling, and is too long to make one march of for the coolies.

1st August I left early in the morning riding as far as Singla Bazaar on another pony. I got to River View below St. Joseph' School, where my friend Mr. Masson stays, early in the day and passing through Tukvar and the other gardens in that neighbourhood reached Singla Bazaar at about 11-30 A.M. After leaving St. Joseph's the road leads down hill to Singla Bazar. It was very hot there, the elevation only being some 900 feet. It was so hot that though I had intended halting there and having some breakfast I only swallowed one sandwich and got on to the pony that had been sent on the day before and which I rode all through my trip. My boy unfortunately had got a touch of fever but we managed to get him a bazaar tat to take him at any rate as far as Chakung. It is a fairish climb from Singla Bazaar to Chakung, the latter place being at an elevation of 5,100 feet. Near Singla Bazaar the Rangneet was crossed by a suspension bridge and we found ourselves in Sikkim. There was nobody there either to take toll or to ask for one's passes, the latter I had already procured through Mr. Garrett the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling. The Political Officer of Sikkim, Mr. Claud White, had kindly given me a permit to collect within his jurisdiction and I had also procured through the kindness of Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Jacob, both of the Indian Forest Department, another permit to shoot in the forests on the Singalila Range. There is not much jungle passed through from Darjeeling to Chakung and what there is, is principally small stuff, nearly all the hillside was covered with ripe Indian corn (boota) and unripe murua (millet), but nearer Chakung the Indian corn was still green and the murua being planted. Near here I passed some clumps of fine bamboos, the girth of one taken at about a foot from the bottom was over seventeen inches; they are used for carrying water and milk. The weather was misty most of the time, but a short shower came down after leaving River View and another one near Chakung. The coolies, who had left Singla Bazar before I arrived there, were passed about three miles from the suspension bridge and did not arrive at our destination till 5-30 P.M. I myself arrived at 2-40 P.M. About half way up the hill I got off my pony and sat on a boulder near a jhora (hill steam) and washed my hands and face and found the water delightfully cool and refreshing and here I ate the balance of my sandwiches. There seemed to be a dearth of bird life on this day's journey. I only noticed a few grey bush chats (Oreicola ferrea) spotted doves (turtur suratensis) green backed tits (Parus monticola) and magpie robins (Copsychus saularis). Near Tukvar some spotted munias (Urolonchа punctulata) and at Singla Bazar some common mynas (Acridotheres tristis) were also seen and that was all. After reaching the bungalow a pretty heavy shower came down and lasted till the coolies arrived. After their arrival I amused myself by sketching a small temple and cairn which are close to the bungalow. The only bird the shikari brought in was a grey-headed flycatcher (culicicapa ceylonensis.) The leeches near here were pretty bad but nothing like what they are at Jorpokhri. The Chakung bunglow is not a bad one, but they don't seem to keep a tablecloth or table napkins, otherwise it is supplied with plates, cooking utensils, knives, forks, lamps, etc. Here fowls, milk, butter, etc., may be procured, which is a great advantage.

2nd August. There was a little rain during the night but not very much. We got up at 5 A.M. to find a beautiful morning and a lovely view. Early though we got up we didn't get the coolies off till 7 A.M. The road led down for some distance till a jhora is reached, called, I believe, the Rhoto jhora. About half way down we came across a lot of mint growing wild. We must have dropped some 2,000 feet in reaching this jhora. At this time of the year the stream is a fine broad torrent full of large boulders and smaller stones. It was a splendid sight to see it rushing down full of froth, but whilst bound to admire it, I wished it was not so grand, as it appeared to me impossible to get our ponies across it, forunately some coolies had been sent that morning to make a rough bridge over it, the said bridge consisting of two bamboos and a sapling tied together and a handrail too low to be of any use. It was not quite ready when we reached the place, so I scrambled about the rocks to try and get a nice spot from which to make a sketch of it. I could not get as nice a spot as I wanted so had to content myself sitting on a large boulder and sketching it from there. It was with the greatest of difficulty that we got the ponies through the water; as it was running over waist high and very swift and it was ticklish getting them over the stones and boulders. I don't believe we would ever have managed to cross them had it not been for the bridge coolies who waded into the stream and got them across. After crossing the jhora I pushed on ahead and let the shikari and my servant come along behind. On the way down to the aforementioned jhora there were few birds seen, the only species noticed being the white-eared bulbul (Molpastes leucotis) and the Indian scarlet minivet (Pericrocotus speciosus), and a few monkeys were also come across. After leaving the jhora the road mounted up and there was a fair amount of jungle and beautiful selaginella. After going up a good way the road led down again and the jungle got a bit thinner, but further on it got better, and another biggish jhora was crossed by a plank bridge, which shook, being minus nails. I rested here a bit and had a sandwich. Many small jhoras were crossed and some fine waterfalls seen. Some beautiful bits of scenery delighted the eye and would be a joy to a landscape painter Again the road led up, in some places there being jungle, and in others Indian corn or murua. I also saw in one place some paddy; this was planted on the hillside along terraces which had ridges to keep in the water, the latter being supplied by a small jhora. A good number of cattle were noticed, mostly either black or black with white points. The road ran up to a cairn and then branched off. I did not know which turning to take and very nearly took the wrong one. From here it was fairly level going and I cantered part of the way having walked my pony up till now. He once nearly came down on his head and another time succeeded in doing so. Not far from Rinchingpong was a big landslip and the road crossed it. The first piece of the road was difficult and dangerous as a piece of it had slipped away and only left about a foot and a half of not very firm earth and shingle to cross by. I tried it first myself and then led the pony over and was glad to get safe on the other side. I noticed the following species on this side of the Rhoto Jhora: The Himalayan whistling thrush (Myiophoneus temminckii), the Himalayan tree pie (Dendrocitta himalayensis), the Himalayan black bulbul (Hypsipetes psaroides), the Himalayan greenfinch (Hypacanthis spinoides), the long-tailed broadbill (Psarisomus dalhousiae), the bronzed drongo (Chaptia aenea), the white-throated fantail flycatcher (Rhipidura albicollis) and a number of smaller fry which I could not indentify at sight. I arrived at the Rinchingpong bungalow at 1-15 P.M. and was tried and thirsty, having had nothing to drink since chota hazri. The bungalow was a queer looking structure made of small flat stones and mud; the floor, which was raised, was made of wood. There was a sort of double roof with a space between, this latter was necessary as there were no fireplaces and the fire presumably burnt on a small stone space placed near the wall of the rooms. Above the rooms was a loft, the roof was made of iron and coloured red. Near it was another bungalow in which a khazi lived. There was a no wick for the table lamp and the lantern could scarcely be got to keep alight. Here I saw some tree sparrows (Passer montanus) and some green-backed tits (Parus monticola). My servant, shikari and sweeper arrived at 5 P.M. but the coolies did not appear till 6-30. When I arrived at the bungalow the chowkidar was not there, but his wife had the key and opened the bungalow for me. She also brought up water and on spotting the servants boiled some, so that I could have a cup of tea when my things arrived. The shikari brought in the following birds: The Himalayan black bulbul (Hypsipetes psaroides) ♂ ♀, the striated green bulbul (Alcurus striatus) ♂, which showed signs of breeding, the bronzed drongo (Chaptia aenea) ♂, the black-headed shrike (Lanius nigriceps), the short billed minivet (Pericrocutus brevirostris) ♀, the Himalayan tree pie (Dendrocitta Himalayensis), the large yellow-naped woodpecker (Chrysophlegma flavinucha) ♂ and the cuckoo (Cuculus Canorus). There was a fairly sharp shower before my servants arrived, my boy had managed with some difficulty to get the owner of his tat to let him have it from Chakung here and now as he has got it so far on our way I don't fancy there will be any difficulty in keeping it for the whole trip. There were a few mules here.

3rd August. It rained a little during the night and was raining when I got up at 5 in the morning. I didn't feel inclined to go out tramping in the jungle to collect myself so sent the shikari out, made myself comfortable by having a shave and a good bath, but before getting up I skinned three birds. After chota hazri I skinned another three birds. The Himalayan tree pie and the cuckoo were too badly damaged to skin and made a sketch of the bungalow. The shikari brought in three rufous necked laughing thrushes (Dryonastes ruficollis), one too bad to skin, a warbler too much damaged to identify, two black throated babblers (Stachyrhis nigriceps), one of these also too much knocked about to do anything with, two rufous necked scimitar babblers (Pomatorhinus ruficollis) ♂ ♀ one ferrugeneous flycatcher (Hemichelidon ferruginea) ♂ rather badly damaged but I was able to dodge it up and one pale blue flycatcher (Cyornis unicolor) ♂ showing signs of breeding. My boy having got a touch of fever and the shikari being useless, I had to skin and stuff all the birds myself, which took me till 6-15 P.M. The shikari also brought in a nest of the black-throated babbler with five incubated eggs and also found one with two young ouzels in it, but not having seen them I couldn't tell what they were. There were nests of both Hodgson's striated swallow (Hirundo nepalensis) and the swallow (Hirundo rustica) in the verandah of the bungalow.

4th August. We started off at about 6 A.M. I had intended going on to Pemionchi from here, but was told the road was not passable and that I would have to go there from Dentom, so we made tracks for the latter place, which is 12 miles away. We had to retrace our steps a little and then branch off at the turning I nearly took when going to Rinchinpong. I walked a good deal of the way. The road or rather path is in most places bad and at one place near a jhora some coolies cut a foothold in the rock, there being no path at all. The ponies were led a long way down the khud and across the jhora as best they could. At another place the coolies had to make a path over a rushing jhora, practically a waterfall; this they did by levering big boulders and getting them into position. They managed to do this after a lot of trouble and hard work; even then it was only fit for human beings to cross and the ponies had to make a big detour and cross lower down amongst boulders and smaller stones, where it was less precipitous. The path was either very stony or very slippery. In some places not a bird was heard or seen. The scenery along the road was fine as far as waterfalls and rushing torrents were concerned, most of the jhoras were narrow, one unusually broad was crossed by a rough wooden bridge and the last one we crossed was like the Rhoto jhora and had the same sort of flimsy bridge over it. Fortunately for me the overseer in charge of the coolies who repaired the road as we went along was with me and he went to a busti close at hand and brought back a man with a rope which, being too short, was supplemented by some split bamboo. He, with the help of a neighbouring khazi, swam my pony across, the latter was carried down stream a bit as the current was very strong. There was a policeman as well as an overseer in charge of the road coolies and it felt quite like going in state, having these men to go on ahead doing up the road where unpassable. I could never have got to Dentom had it not been for these coolies as my own pack coolies hadn't the impliments with which to lever boulders, etc. Near Dentom is a fairly big busti and the ticcadar of the land about these and others came up to the bungalow in the evening to see if I had any order to give. I arrived at Dentom at 3-30 P.M., but my servants and coolies didn't turn up till after 6. They ought to have arrived shortly after I did, as I kept with them most of the way, and the overseer, who was on foot, was with me the whole time. The reason they were so late was the difficulty they had in crossing my servant's tat over the jhora, the water being up to a man's chest and the current as I said before being very strong. The tat I believe was submerged several times in crossing. It was a beautiful day with a fine blue sky till I got close to Dentom, when a sharp shower came down; after my followers arrived it started to pour. The overseer remained the night at Dentom and said he would see if the road to Chua Bhanjan was all right. He put men on to do up the road to Pemionchi, and said he would send three coolies on ahead of us in the morning in case it got damaged at all. The following birds were collected during the day. Near Rinching-pong some grey-sided laughing thrushes (Dryonastes caerulatus) were seen and two shot, one of which was got and of the other only one leg was found. The cuckoo (Cuculus canorus) ♀ the crested bunting (Melophus melanicterus) ♂, which showed signs of breeding, the ashy swallow shrike (Artamus fuscus) ♂, two dark grey cuckoo-shrikes (Compophaga melaneschista) ♀ ♂ two red billed liothrix (Liothrix lutea), the magpie robin (Copsychus saularis) ♀ the black-throated hill warbler (Suya atrijularis) ♂. There were a number of swiftlets (Collocalia sp.) flying round the bungalow but no spinetails (Chaetura) were seen; Hodgson's striated swallow (Hirundo Nepalensis) had a nest with young in the verandah and I also saw a dark grey bush chat (Oreicola ferrea) taking food to its young. I came across quite a lot of gold ferns to-day but didn't take any as my shikari said we could get them when we returned to Darjeeling. I skinned the grey-sided laughing thrush (D. Caerulatus) while our ponies made a long detour to cross a jhora and did four others before dinner. After dinner I busied myself making some half charged cartridges and we finished skinning all the birds by 11 P.M. and left the filling out till next morning. The bungalow overlooks a nice stream called the Kulhait, which had to be crossed going to Pemionchi. It was warm till I got here, but here it was beautifully cool as a nice cold breeze had started.

The Theatre.

THE LONDON COMEDY COMPANY.

THE news that the Ward Company were to leave us at the end of last week brought forth a number of letters in the daily papers asking for an extension of their short season. It was, indeed, a compliment to Mr. Ward and his talented company and he generously acceded to the request and has prolonged his stay in Calcutta another week. That the public were prepared to back up the letters by giving their patronage too, was proved on Friday and Saturday last week. There was a bumper house at the "Fencing Master" on Friday, Her Excellency, Lady Minto, Lady Lansdowne and a large party from Government House being among those present. On Saturday, the Opera House was again packed and that boisterous farcial comedy "Brown's in Town," was played for the first time in Calcutta. The plot as is usual in broad farce is slight, but the fun was fast and furious throughout and the audience laughed uproariously from start to finish. Dick Preston has married secretly and under the name of Brown is spending a quiet honeymoon in the country with his wife Letty, when the happy couple's peace is disturbed by the advent of Arthur Howard, a suitor for Letty's hand, followed by the arrival of Dick's father, who has threatened to disinherit him should he marry without his consent. Suzanne Dacre, a young lady, "who knows a thing or two" also appears on the escene and the efforts of the married couple assisted by Suzanne to keep their secret from Howard, and old Preston, lead to hopeless tangles A German heiress, who claims Arthur Howard as her affinity and a brainless wooer of Suzanne Dacre, also add to the complications, but a full confession sets all right in the end. Arthur Howard transfers his affections to Miss Dacre and old Preston blesses the union of his son with Letty.

Miss Musgrove scored another success as Letty, and Miss Grace Palotta as Suzanne Dacre was vivacious and charming, as she always is. Both sang and were enthusiastically encored. Miss Palotta being recalled again and again. Miss Ghiloni had a small part as the German heiress. Among the men, the brunt of the work fell on Messrs. Eldred, and Wykeham as Dick Preston and Arthur Howard, who played capitally, while the part of old Preston as taken by Mr. Greig, is one of the best things we have seen him do. Minor parts were taken by Messrs. Ryot and Wallace and Mr. Ward gave us another excellent character study as Primrose. the negro cook.

The three last nights of the season are now advertised. The "Fencing Master" is billed for to-night, while to-morrow night another new play, "Vivian's Papas," will be staged and repeated as the farewell performance on Saturday, on which day there will also be a special children's matinee of "The New Clown."

Indignant Artist (after rather severe criticism): "You talk about a picture! Why, man, you never painted one! How on earth do you expect to know one."

Candid Friend: "But, my dear friend, I know a bad egg, when I see it, and I never laid one!"

"Any complaints, corporal?" said the colonel, making one morning a personal inspection.

"Yes, sir. Taste that, sir," said the corporal promptly.

The colonel put the liquid to his lips.

"Why," he said, "that's the best soup I ever tasted!"

"Yes, sir," said the corporal, "and the cook wants to call it coffee."
