Bengalis will tell you that the bite of a gooee samp is poisonous, but I can assure your readers that though not as ugly they are quite as harmless as a Russian ironclad. They are sudden death to chickens and ducklings, while as for eggs, like an I. C. S. on his travelling allowance, they can live entirely on them. Do they eat fish, and can they outswim and catch them? How do they swim, with only front feet and tail or with all four feet. Where, how, why and when do they lay their eggs? And if not in trees, why do they frequent them? Are they in any way vocal? Any information as to their habits both in the family circle and in society at large must prove most interesting. Finally, may I suggest to the fathers of the Calcutta "Zoo" that a small reservoir of clear water, having an island in its centre and stocked with a few gooee samps would enable us to acquire more knowledge of this little observed reptile.

Fourth Extra, Saturday, 3rd September 1904.

The attendance was somewhat meagre, but although fields were only fair some good sport was seen. Proceedings opened with a very sporting match between two young officers of the Essex Regiment, which resulted in a good race all the way, though the public fancied the wrong pony. A hot favourite won in Scissorman in the next event in which a new importation of Mr. Chowdhury's appeared. Blinker was of course in no condition, having only lately landed, but making every allowance for the fact it cannot be said that he impressed one as ever likely to make a race horse. Mamao, although, looking very fat, divided public favour with Firebrand in the Agram Plate, but Colonel Desaraj Urs' pony won the race handsomely from start to finish. A procession took place in the next event, De Wet establishing him such a lead that catching him became hopeless, and then the most interesting race on the card came on for decision. Of the five starters for the Arab Plate, weight of money made Syndic favourite, but he was never in the race, and King Cobweb, albeit not fit, won easily with the outsider Mintmaster, who carried 19lbs. over weight a fair second. Eva won the final event very easily. The attendance improved as the afternoon went on, but was never good. Results of the racing :—

A Match.—Rs. 100. ¼ mile.

Mr. T. G. Strickland's ch a h Baronet, 11st. 4lbs. ...	Owner 1
Mr. B. N. Abbay's ch a h Chance Shot, 10st. 6lbs. ...	Owner 2

Betting: 2 to 1 on Chance Shot and 6 to 4 agst. Baronet. Chance Shot gave trouble and there was one false start. The non-favourite then got away with a length lead, Chance Shot joining issue when approaching the turn for home. It was a race all the way, but his owner only moved once on Baronet and getting the best of a good finish won by three-quarters of a length. Time—58⅗ secs.

The Alert Plate.—Rs. 150, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 25. 5 furlongs.

Major A. C. Hamilton's b aus g Scissorman, 9st. 7lbs. ...	Lansdown 1
The Hon. Mr. A.A. Apcar's b aus g Spec, 9st.	Gerrard 2
Mr. N. B. Chowdhury's b aus g Blinker, 9st. 11lbs	Capt. Randall 3

Betting : 5 to 2 on Scissorman, 6 to 4 agst Spec, 5 to 1 Blinker.

A good start from which Spec led out and led at the home turn by a couple of lengths. Here, however, Scissorman went by and never being pressed won at his ease by a length with Blinker six or eight lengths last. Time—1 min. 8⅘ secs.

The Aliasker Plate.—Rs. 150, of which the second pony will receive Rs. 25. Handicap for ponies. 6 furlongs.

Lieut.-Col. J. Desaraj Urs' b aus m Mamao, 8st. 12lbs.	Lansdown 1

Mr. A. P. Symond's bk aus m Cleopatra II, 9st. 10lbs.	Capt. Randall 0

Betting : Evens Mamao and Firebrand, 3 to 1 agst. Mary Jane and 4 to 1 Cleopatra II.

A good start, from which Mamao quickly led out and came into the straight for home with a clear lead. A furlong from the winning post Lansdowne had to shake her up, but she was never really in danger and won comfortably by a length; half a length between second and third. Cleopatra II was last throughout. Time—1min. 34⅕secs.

THE AGRAM PLATE.—Rs. 150, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 25. Handicap for horses. 1 mile.

Major H. C V. Harrison's ch aus g De Wet, 7st. 11lbs.	Gooloo	1

Mr. D. Devaraj Urs br aus g Musketeer, 10st 4lbs	Lansdown	3

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Musketeer, 6 to 4 agst. DeWet, 3 to 1 Sacristan and 5 to 1 Knight Templar.

De Wet made the running at a great pace and slipping his field going down the hill was leading at the half-mile post by ten lengths. Thenceforward the race was a procession not the others, seriously persevering when pursuit became hopeless. De Wet won easily, and there was a wide interval between Sacristan and Musketeer. Time—1min. 49⅖ secs.

THE ARAB PLATE.—Rs. 150, of which the second pony will receive Rs. 25. 7 furlongs.

Mr. R. Moss King's b a h King Cobweb, 8st 6lbs	Gooloo	1

BETTING: 6 to 4 on Syndic, 2 to 1 agst King Cobweb, 3 to 1 Diamond Rose, 4 to 1 Rubric and 6 to 1 Mintmaster.

Diamond Rose led at a strong pace until nearing the turn for home when King Cobweb went by and with the leader in trouble Mintmaster coming up strongly also passed her. King Cobweb won comfortably by two lengths; four lengths between second and third. Time—1min. 41⅕secs.

THE ABKARI PLATE.—Rs. 150, of which the second pony will receive Rs. 25. Handicap for ponies. 3 furlongs.

SMALL fields and wretched weather conditions marred the success of the third meeting held at Tollygunge this afternoon. The rain came down in torrents after the third race and the course became a swamp. The threatening sky had kept away many people and the attendance was poor. CALCUTTA COURSE CHAT.

THURSDAY was made full use of; in fact, there was quite an old time ring about the big gallery that graced the old stand.

The first I noted was Thundercloud from Smallman's, taking Regan off on a voyage down the Golf Club way, from the culvert opening; but he later on came back to his stall quiet and subdued. But Mr. Tanner's experience on Road Metal was somewhat different, and a disagreement of opinion led to a dissolution of partnership, without much formal notice, when the black went a break neck pace through the opening to the Amateur Camp. Mr. Tanner was not to be beat, however, and got the overfrisky one round the course and through the opening all right the second time. As a set off to these exhibitions, a mem sahib put her hack over a couple of flights of the pony hurdles, followed by a Miss Sahib on one of Mr. Harold Smith's new ones, both ladies being quite at home at the game.

Bloss on Profit, from over the other side, put in a gallop all the way, finishing as fresh as a spring chicken.

Exactly the same may be said of Mr. Deakin's taking gallop on Perfect. This pair are as fit as fiddles.

Luchoo moved round on Mr. Dutton's Golden Tip. Then came Mr. Galstaun on Not Yet, and two natives in charge of Mademoiselle and Norman, smart away from the 5 furlongs, putting the half mile past them in 58 seconds. This was all Norman's.

Shelldrake shook up Daffodil, and W. White got as much as possible out of Pubna.

O'Neil on Sweet Talk, and Regan on another, starting by the 5 furlong post, came along smartly, finishing up with honours about easy as they passed the stand.

Toe on Tadmore took on Trollop (native) in a bit of a rough up, and Mr. Westmacott had out Sylvia in view of her Gymkhana engagement for Saturday.

Howie put young Rake over a few flights of the hurdles in this pony's faultless style.

Mr. Holmes on Jacinth, took full change out of Winklet (O'Neil) in their 6 furlong set to Bell Brand (Howie), Hello (native) put the same distance behind them, in useful time.

Mr. Holmes on Irish and O'Neil on Certitude put in one of the best bits of work seen this morning. Starting from beyond the 5 furlongs, they came away with a wet sail and locked level they flew past the post.

Sid White sent Florence over the sticks, a much more delectable spectacle than what we have been used to seeing when there has been a rampant native boy in charge of this peaceful mare.

The erstwhile steeplechase jockey Beazley, gave us a taste of his skill, on Parole, in the horse jump course: he went with McCallum on Bob, and though not finishing first, yet, when shaking the horse up on approaching the last hurdle, it was apparent a bit more could have been squeezed out of him; but the pace put in would not do when taking on Kittylea, Naiades, or Odin.

W. White went round on Stepma quickly: nice galloper this. Miss Beryl (O'Neil), and Regan on Whiff, put in two taking schools separately, and later O'Neil had out Footlight.

May B (native), Sunshine (Mr. Evers), and Pierette, were in evidence in their different gallops.

Mr. Raban treated Autocrat to a few furlongs up the straight, and Mr. John Gregory's tum-tum pony, completely smothered the matronly Queenie with Mr. Chater up, in a sporting little impromptu match got up on the spur of the moment.

Saturday was another very fine morning, with the course here and there a bit holding, probably the result of the rain that fell the previous day. Bloss on Profit was one of the earliest, and in this respect, beat even Mr. Bert Allen, and you have to get up pretty early to be ahead of this sporting hustler.

Natalina and Coal Queen were worked three-quarter speed, by Howie and Regan, and the former put Mr. Harold Smith's Pylara over 5 furlongs. It is probable this horse may not be pulled out again for monsoon honors, being reserved for higher game in the cold weather, by which time he'll be more acclimatised.

Regan dusted young Rake over 5 furlongs, and the going, with a rattle up at the finish, was all there. He's a perfect jumper, and can't make a mistake, so that, as he's getting into his stride, probably he'll be the first to credit his stable with a winning bracket. Gee-Bung, from the same happy family, was out gaining a bit of foot, with Regan as mentor.

Shelldrake brought along Blue Bell, and a bit later formed one of a trio, on Shylock, Mr. Deakin, Perfect, and a native on Daphne, that had a merry set to, well up the straight from the 5 furlong way, Mr. Deakin having pride of place at the finish.

Winklet did a short spin, and then Stepma (White), Tadmore (Toe), and Florence (native) put in an instructive 5 furlongs, the first-named to the fore in good style.

Mr. Galstaun on Not Yet had all his work cut out to live with Mademoiselle, (Regan,) and Norman (Howie), the two from Smallman's being in great going humour, especially Norman.

Mr. Chater put in a funny turn on a grey, with a pink dyed tail. W. White on Little Doris, appeared to beat Reveille (Walker) in a pretty strong 6 furlongs they put behind them, I should have thought Walker ought to have had the pull, but White pegged away in such resolute fashion, that it was not to be. I was left wondering why such a fight to a finish was put up in full view of the gallery.

Beazley brought Mr. Mathieson's Parole along smartly, in company with McCallum on Bob. At present, at all events, these horses are not fast enough to cope with the quality they'll be meeting when racing.

Bloss exercised Footlight, and Howie had Bell Brand out. Mr. Cowper on Actress, essayed the horse hurdle course along with Mr. Evers on Flamingo, and all went well until approaching the last hurdle but one, albeit the pace was a trifle slow. Here upon quickening up Flamingo took off very big, landed slap on the hurdle, blundered badly and shot Mr. Evers over his head.

Bloss was out on Jacinth followed by O'Neil on Miss Beryl, and Toe exercised Clynder.

Hello (Howie), Fusilier (Regan), did 5 furlongs, in 1min. 9secs.

Mr. Deakin had a good gallop on Invincible, in company with Kittylea and another one.

Mr. Dass has lost Euraylus, who died last week. This is downright hard luck, as the mare had only quite recently shown a bit of her true form, when ridden to victory by Mr. Dudley.

Daffodil (Shelldrake) and Blue Bell (native) popped over a few flights of hurdles in a business like manner, and W. White pounded by on Pubna. This slow-coach appears each morning with a different jockey in the saddle but none of them get more than a bumblepuppy scurry out of this Lower Bengal wallah.

Tuesday morning was a bit on the heavy side, owing to the recent rain, but as the course was open, plenty of work was put in, and there was a fairly good gallery.

Bloss with Profit, opened proceedings at an early hour on the far side, putting in, as usual, a good twelve-anna gallop and I like her about best for the September Stakes.

From a ragged start over by the 5 furlongs, Mr. Deakin on Perfect tried a sort of conclusion, with Shelldrake on Black Patch and a native on Golden Tip. This was followed by a spin over the same distance by Walker on Second Thought and Reinzette (native) putting the ½ mile behind them nicely under even time.

A native on Mr. Galstaun's new pony, smothered poor old Queenie (Mr. Chater) in their little argument, and Beazley shook up Cerise along the straight.

Howie on Young Rake cantered round, negotiating the two last hurdles of the pony course.

Trollop (native) blowing like a grampus, struggled along in the rear of Stepma (White) in their gallop.

Bloss had out Footlight, and O'Neil was on Certitude. If there is anything likely to upset calculations in the September Plate, it's the Nawab's gelding.

Regan galloped Gee Bung, and Shelldrake on Shylock with a native on Daphne, did the pony hurdles, followed by Fusilier on the course proper Mr. Dudley Meyers is about due a win, but he is taking on such a speedy lot in the Entally Plate, that of a certainty his horse will have to go one better than I think he can to accomplish the trick.

Not Yet, with Mr. Galstaun up, was really not in it with Mademoiselle ridden by Regan. Of course Mr. Bartlett's pony had the pull of inches; but still the gallop does not augur any too well for Mr. Galstaun's chances in the Maiden Plate.

Toe brought Tadmore along a good duster from the 5 furlongs, accompanied by Ginger (White). Then we had to beat to quarters for a brief period while a pretty sharp shower fell.

Regan worked Flash and later Uphill's pony Norman, and Beazley kicked Parcle along. Bell Brand (Howie) and Hello (Regan) came together up the straight, the latter apparently a little in advance. A well known trainer, watching the gallop, remarked what a good 'un Bell Brand was "down under," and was surprised at his not winning races in Calcutta Monsoon class.

Griffin, Mr. Barney Allen's new trainer, had Firewater and Nat Gould out early, doing exercise under the guidance of the stable jockey, McNamara. They are intended to take on high notchers in the cold weather.

O'Neil on Winklet and Bloss on Jacinth did their usual course, and Reveille (Walker) and Oom Paul (Mr. Galstaun) came along on their own, Mr Galstaun only in view, Walker being quite dwarfed out of sight. I was glad to see Johnson about again, as he has been on the sick list for a while. He did his best to rouse Macedon from sleep, and McCallum put Bob a full course and a half, whilst Pubna did ditto, and a bit over. One would think these horses were in training for endurance; at all events their preparation lends colour to the thought.

Mr. Tanner seems on better terms now with Road Metal who cantered by quite quietly.

Mr. Raban did a canter on the open with Autocrat, and Mr. Mackellar was visible to the naked eye on Orphan Boy.

STOCKTON.

SINCE the last Spring Meeting the Stockton executive have made still further structural additions to their estate, and every year signalises another stage in the march of progress. The new building in the north-east corner of the paddock, which is divided into a capacious weighing-saloon, jockeys' dressing rooms, bathrooms, etc., is the most luxuriously-appointed structure of its kind in the Kingdom, and could not fail to elicit the eulogies of all who have the privilege of using it. Another move which would find much favour with owners and trainers is the extension of the railway line to the entrance to the course, so as to obviate the leading of highly strung thoroughbreds along the slippery streets through a maze of vehicular traffic. A siding already exists, of which use might possibly be made. A huge crowd gathered in glorious weather on the 16th instant to witness the sport at Mandale Bottoms, and many of the leading patrons of the Turf were present with their guests. The riding of Maher, who steered four winners, was the feature of the racing, and he and Madden swept the board between them. It was very gratifying to see the colours of Sir Waldie Griffith to the fore on two occasions.

THE ZETLAND PLATE of 100 sovs. One mile.

Lord Farquhar's b f Princess Florizel by Florizel II—Lady Lucy, 3yrs., 8st. 4lbs.	Maher	1
Maj. Vaux's ch c Wee Macgregor, 3yrs., 8st 4lbs	Priestman	2

(Winner trained by G. Lambton.)

BETTING: 5 to 1 on Princess Florizel.

Princess Florizel waited on Wee Macgreegor till a quarter of a mile from home, when she drew to the front and won easily by two lengths.

The familiar spectacle of flocks of geese being marshalled and manœuvred to various vantage points in the market-place on the morning of the 17th instant proclaimed that the Annual Fair, which regularly synchronises with the Summer Race Meeting, was in progress. Huge crowds are invariably attracted too the Tees-side for the occasion, and it was apparent when the curtain rose at Mandale Bottoms to-day that there was no diminution in the usual big attendance. This is all the more to be wondered at, seeing that about midday a cold, drizzling rain began to fall and continued, on and off, during the period that racing was in progress, the air being quite chilly the while. The riding of Maher was again the feature of the proceedings, as he performed the "hat-trick" for the second time in succession, and has altogether steered eight winners during the two days. Sharples was twice successful, so that the honours have not so far been very equitably distributed. Country trainers were to the fore, only three of the seven events falling to Newmarket horses.

The HARDWICKE STAKES of 497 sovs. added to a sweepstakes of 10 sovs each, for two year olds. T. Y. C. (Five furlongs).

CRICKET.

YORKSHIRE vs. WARWICKSHIRE.—Played at Huddersfield on 11th, 12th and 13th August. Warwickshire won by six runs. This match was played on a bowlers' wicket, but the famous Yorkshire bowlers hardly seemed to make the best use of it. The absence of F. S. Jackson very greatly weakened the Yorkshire side and perhaps if he had been playing the reusult of the match might have been different. On the first day it was very difficult to make runs, but Hirst, after beginning in great form and securing two wickets, was harmless, and it was left to Myers, who nowadays seems the only Yorkshire bowler who can be depended on, to get most of the wickets. Nevertheless, Yorkshire at first did so well that seven wickets were down for 79 runs when Santall was joined by Moorhouse. The fortunes of the game then completely changed. Santall played one of the finest innings of his life, hitting with great power whenever an opportunity offered, and showing great command over the bowling, while Moorhouse played very sound cricket. The partnership for the eighth wicket produced 70 runs in fifty minutes, and without doubt had much to do with the ultimate success of Warwickshire. Yorkshire began their innings at four o'clock, but in a few minutes rain came down heavily, and it was not until half-past five that the game was resumed, when Yorkshire met with disaster and lost three wickets for 34. On the next day there was no play until after lunch, when Field and Hargreave bowled so well that their county had the useful lead of 48 on the first innings. In the second innings Warwickshire lost five wickets for 48 before the end of the day, and were thus 96 runs on. The tail could do very little on Saturday morning, but the wicket was so difficult that Yorkshire's task of making 131 runs to win seemed a very hard one. Field and Hargreave again bowled splendidly and were so well backed up by the field that six wickets were down at lunch-time for 66. Afterwards, Ernest Smith and Haigh made a most plucky attempt to pull the match out of the fire, and when they were separated only 24 runs remained to be made, with three wickets in hand. But although Myers made a useful score at this critical moment while Haigh survived until the total reached 120. Warwickshire managed to gain a well-earned victory at half-past three.

MIDDLESEX vs. NOTTS.—Played at Trent Bridge on 11th, 12th and 13th August. Middlesex won by eight wickets. Part of the proceeds of this match were set aside for the benefit of Flowers, the famous old Notts professional, whose benefit nine years ago was not a success. Unfortunately the weather was so bad on the first day that the game did not begin until half-past one, and only a few people came to see the play. For a time things went very well indeed for Notts, and with only one wicket down the total was 195, of which Iremonger and Jones made 83 for the first wicket. But before stumps were drawn there was a different tale to tell, and five more wickets fell for the addition of 105 runs, Bosanquet being responsible for four of the wickets. On Friday the Rev. H. Staunton, who had played exceedingly well overnight for 47, increased his total to 78 by fine cricket, but the Notts tail did not distinguish itself. When Middlesex went in Warner and J. Douglas played such fine cricket, and met with such good fortune in the way of dropped catches, that before they were parted they had brought the total to 306, which was only 37 short of that made by Notts. Douglas made his 153 in three hours, while Warner took half-an-hour longer to score his 163. The Notts total was passed before another wicket fell, and thanks to good scores by G. W. Beldam, C. Palmer, O. M. Wells, and J. T. Hearne, the score when the day's play ended was 494 for eight wickets. Thus on Saturday Middlesex resumed their innings with a lead of 151, and when the innings came to an end they were 173 to the good. When Notts went in again Iremonger played another beautiful innings, but there was no other outstanding score, and Middlesex were left with the easy task of scoring 54 to win. During the Notts second innings Bosanquet was nearly as successful as in the first. A good many runs were made off his bowling, but he got the batsmen out.

HAMPSHIRE vs. LEICESTERSHIRE.—Played at Southampton on 11th 12th and 13th August. Leicestershire won by an innings and 95 runs. For this match Hampshire had to do without Hesketh-Prichard and A. J. L. Hill, but on a soft and not difficult wicket they scored 215 for four wickets on the first day, although play did not begin until three o'clock owing to rain. Webb and Bowell made a good beginning, and Sprott and Webb added 87 runs for the second wicket. Webb was going strong for his hundred when Major Poore called him for an impossible run. The Major afterwards kept up his wicket until stumps were drawn, when he was not out 27. He and Johnston, who made a very pretty 53, were together from five o'clock until the last ball of the day. On Saturday Gill bowled very fast, and made the ball get up so much that nobody except Stone could make any resistance to him, and the innings came to an end for an addition of 29 runs. Hampshire had no bowler who could take equal advantage of the state of the wicket, and before stumps were drawn Leicestershire made 517 for the loss of nine wickets. King played a brilliant innings for four hours and a quarter, and was within easy reach of his second hundred when he was dismissed. Whitehead helped him to put up 155 runs for the third wicket, and Knight 106 for the fourth. The catch by Johnston in the long field which disposed of Gill was loudly applauded, for Johnston had to run a long way, and judged the flight of the ball to a nicety. On Saturday the Leicestershire captain declared his innings closed, and thus Hampshire, who required 273 to avoid defeat by an innings, had the whole day before them. Sprott played a splendid innings, but the bowlers always had the best of the situation, and the match was over soon after lunch.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE vs. WORCESTERSHIRE.—Played at Bristol on 11th and 12th August. Gloucestershire won by 67 runs.

Not so very long ago Gloucestershire could do nothing which was right; now their very opponents play into their hands. Thus H. K. Foster on winning the toss for Worcestershire, decided to give Gloucestershire the chance of batting first, and without much doubt lost the match because of his action. The wicket was always in favour of the bowlers, and the play was from first to last of great interest. On the first day there was very little to choose between the teams, for although Gloucestershire had a lead of 18 on the first innings, they lost Wrathall and Langdon in the second for 28. The only outstanding innings of the day was the 68 not out by C. O. H. Sewell, but this was worth going a long way to see. His runs were made in an hour-and-a half out of a total of 103 while he was at the wickets. On Friday Jessop gave his side a fine send-off by scoring 43 out of 53 in thirty-five minutes, and Brown played an admirable game which had much to do with the success of his side. Worcestershire had to make 220 runs to win, and although Bowley and Pearson put up 65 for the first wicket, four men were out for 91. From this time Gloucestershire always looked like winning. Their opponents played with too much steadiness to be able to hope for success, for what was wanted was some bold hitting to turn the scale. The match was over on Friday at a quarter past six. Dennett bowled exceedingly well in both innings.

SOMERSETSHIRE vs. KENT.—Played at Taunton on 11th, 12th and 13th August. Kent won by 210 runs. In this match Somerset won the toss, but thinking that the wicket would be very difficult at first, S. M. J. Woods put his opponents in. For a time his policy seemed likely to be successful, for half the Kent wickets fell for 40, and when nine were down the total was only 80. But Blythe and Fairservice then upset all calculations, and in the course of an hour, by some brilliant hitting, added 98 runs for the last wicket, so that when the innings came to an end it did not seem that anything had been gained by Somerset in sending their opponents in. In the time remaining for play Somersetshire at first did very badly, losing half their wickets for 34, but Robson and Woods then made a determined stand, and without being separated brought the total to 109. Thus on paper there seemed very little to choose between the two sides at the end of the day. But on Friday Woods, who had made 40 overnight, was soon disposed of, and although Robson continued to play a fine game, the bowling of Mason was fatal to the tail. Kent, with a lead of 16 lost Humphreys with the total at 3, but Seymour and Hearne brought the score to 49 for the second wicket, and then Kent began to go ahead, thanks to splendid play by Hearne, Day, Mason, and Marsham, and when stumps were drawn the score was 331 for five wickets. Day and Hearne put on 74 for the third wicket, and Day and Mason, 56 for the fourth in half an hour, while later, Marsham and Mason, without being separated scored 137 while together for an hour and forty minutes, Mason being not out 100, and Marsham not out 50. Mason's splendid innings came to an end immediately after the game was resumed on Saturday, and Marsham did not long survive him, but Hubble made a very useful 39. Somersetshire, who had to make 418 to win, began by losing four wickets in half an hour for 20 runs, and although they to some extent recovered from this bad start, and made a plucky effort to bring about a drown game, the match was over shortly after half-past five. Palairet played a beautiful innings, and Braund held out for three hours for his faultless 73; the two men between them scored 152 out of 201 made from the bat during the innings.

WORCESTERSHIRE vs. KENT.—Played at Worcester on 15th, 16th and 17th August. Kent won by nine wickets. The Worcestershire batsmen did not distinguish themselves on Monday, for although the wicket was not difficult the wind came to the assistance of Fielder, who took six wickets for 40 runs. Huish was in fine form at the wicket, making four catches. For a time Kent fared just as badly as their opponents, but after they had lost three wickets for 25 runs, J. R. Mason and Humphreys played out time, increasing the total by 126 runs. Mason was not out 72 and Humphreys not out 65. Arnold was bowling for nearly two hours without a rest, although both batsmen scored freely. On Tuesday morning Mason was soon out, but Humphreys continued to play a great game, and, with Marsham as a partner, put on 147 for the fifth wicket. Marsham was out with the total at 306, and at 310 Humphreys left after playing splendid cricket for four hours. Towards the end of the innings Blaker played a brilliant game for an hour, and Blythe made a useful score, so that Worcestershire had to go in again against a balance of 267. Bowley and Wheldon began the Worcestershire second innings and put up 114 for the first wicket, but both, as well as Caldwell, were out before stumps were drawn, with the total at 156. H. K. Foster was not out 30. Yesterday Foster played beautiful cricket on a wicket which was slow but easy after heavy rain during the night. He was not very well backed up, but Pearson and Bird played well, and the innings defeat was saved before lunch. There was no play after lunch until half-past four owning to another heavy downpour Eventually Kent had to make 81 runs to win in about three-quarters of an hour. Blaker and Day, who can both hit, made a victory just possible, and Mason accomplished the rest. It was a splendid finish

SWIMMING AND WATER POLO.

WORLD'S AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIPS.

JOINVILLE-LE-PONT, 15th August.

The contests for the world's amateur swimming championships, held here to-day, drew a large number of spectators. The English competitors were victorious all along the line, and their successes were heartily applauded.

The race for the Veteran Championship (500 metres) was won by Gray (England), Burgess being second, five metres behind, and Purot third.

For the final race for the world's championship (500 metres) eight men had been left in from four heats, which were decided yesterday. Forsyth, the English half-mile champion, came in first in the time of 6mins. 54⅘secs., beating Fayaerts, the Belgian champion, easily by twenty metres. Vasseur, the French champion, was third.

The remaining competitors who finished arrived in the following order :—Landry, France, 4 ; De Gregoire, Belgium, 5 ; Tom Wildgoose, England, 6 ; George Wilkinson, England, 7.

In the contests for the International Water Polo Championship the Libellule of Paris, beat the Football Club de Paris by four goals to three, and the Hyde Seal, of Manchester, Champions of England, beat the Brussels S. C., the holders of the International Championship, by fourteen goals to two.

The Hyde Seal yesterday defeated the Libellule by nine goals to one. The final result was as follows :—

Hyde Seal (English)	...	...	1
Brussels S. C. ...	...	...	2
Libellule of Paris	...	...	3
Football Club de Paris	...	...	4

NUTTALL BEATS MCCUSKER.

BOSTON, 15th August.

Yesterday tJoe Nuttall, Stalybridge, the British champion, easily defeated James McCusker, the American champion, in races of a quarter and half a mile on the Charles River.

THE CHANNEL SWIM.

A telegram received from Dover this afternoon states that there will be no start for the Cross-Channel swim to-day.

The arrangements for the swim have never been so perfect as this year, and every necessary precaution has been taken by Mr. Dick, who is acting as manager. Throughout last night a watcher was kept on the pier at Dover to report if there was the slightest chance of the sea being fit for the swim, and this morning a steam launch was sent out three or four miles into the Channel. On her return she reported a nasty loppy sea and an eight-knot breeze.

A similar report was made by the captain of the Calais boat crossing this morning, who stated that there was a rough sea on the French coast, but that it was going down, and that fit conditions might possibly be looked for in 24 hours.

Pilot Captain Foster, who has advised the courses, arrived at Dover this morning in charge of the Hamburg-American liner Deutschland, having crossed the North Sea since last evening. On his arrival the swimmers and their friends eagerly sought his advice. He stated that the condition of the sea was quite unfit for the swim at present. Holbein and Weidman both favour a later start on account of the strong tides.

Matthew Holbein yesterday made his first practice this season in Dover Bay, and was cordially welcomed by a large crowd of spectators. In the course of his training this year he has swum about 120 miles, and walked and cycled several hundred more. Holbein stated that he found the water very warm, but so broken as not to be fit for the long swim.

Both Haggerty and Greasley are eager for the swim, and last evening several gentlemen made a trip out into the Channel on Mr. Edge's motorboat Napier Minor. As the result of a conference later, it was decided to make a start as soon as the conditions permitted. Each of the men will be followed by a lugger for feeding purposes, and also by a tug. Arrangements had been made for carrier pigeons to bring messages, but the majority of the birds taken into the Channel for training have been lost. The master of the steamer President Leroy reports that in mid Channel a carrier pigeon bearing the marks, "No. 29 C. R. H. 20, 1904," alighted on his ship in an exhausted state.

ATHLETICS.

GRASMERE SPORTS.

The annual carnival of the Lake district attracted one of the largest gatherings on record yesterday. This was all the more gratifying to the executive, as it was thought that with the removal of the venue from the historic Pavement End, where the old English games have been fought for half a century, to Newfield, would have detracted from the interest in the event. The weather was very favourable, however, and the entry the best on record. The heavy-weight wrestling came first in the order of events, and the later stages were intensely interesting. In the fifth round Hexham Clarke, of Seaton, six times champion, came across a sturdy young opponent in W. R Yates, of Tunstall, but he won his way to the final round, in which he met J. Bowman, of Pearith. The latter is a burly, thickbuilt wrestler of 15st., but Clarke had little difficulty in winning two falls out of three and the champion prize. The light weight wrestling, for which there were no fewer than ninety entries, brought two old rivals in H. Fisher, of Harras Moor and J. Wallace, of Great Broughton, together. A great struggle in Grasmere ring was witnessed, Fisher only winning the championship belt after wrestling three falls. The winner of the local wrestling came from Helsington, near Kendal in J. Hutchinson, who threw J. Wilson. For the picked heavy-weights. W. Studolme, had no difficulty in securing the premier award, putting down J. R. Taylor twice in succession in the final round. The light-weights included that good all-round athlete, J. Wallace, of Broughton, who proved an easy winner. The two principal events of the day were the guides and the hound trail, and it was generally admitted that on no previous occasion have there been more exciting competitions. For the Guides' Race, to the summit of Butter Crag, a triple winner, J.C. Murray, of Falstone, was favourite, but there was a ding dong encounter between Murray and C. Mossop, of Borrowdale, a light-built youth who on three previous occasions has gained third place. On this occasion he was second, Murray beating him by six yards, with E. Dalzell, Keswick, third. Of the 27 hounds entered, 25 ran the course along the breast of the surrounding fells. The finishing order was :—C. Nicholson's Bouncer, Waberthwaite, 1 ; S. Bowers's Traveller, Ambleside, 2 ; O. Birkett's Raleigh, Little Langdale, 3. The results of the remaining events with those which had preceded them were as follows : Local Wrestling —J. Hutchinson, Helsington, 1 ; J. LAWN TENNIS.

CHAMPIONSHIPS OF THE HIGHLANDS.

The above championships were concluded at Pitlochry Perthshire, yesterday, when the finals of some handicaps left over from the previous day were decided. On Monday the final of the Singles Championship went to Mr. C. Wright, New York, who beat Mr. R. Hamblin-Smith, the Cambridge University player, by 6—3, 6—0, 6—2. In the final of the Gentlemen's Open Doubles a splendidly-contested match took place between W. C. Grant and Irving C. Wright, of New York, and G. M. Simond and R. Hamblin-Smith. The first and second games went to the Americans, after a very stiff encounter, but the Rose representatives pulled up and won the next at 7—5. The States players, however, by steady play, succeeded in placing the fourth game to their credit, thus winning the event and enabling America to place the Singles and Doubles Highland Championship to her credit. A keenly-contested game was also produced in the final of the Gentlemen's Handicap Singles, W. C. Grant, a veteran American player, who owed 30, proving a hard nut to crack for F. Lever, of London Scottish. The latter, however, ultimately succeeded in winning the rubber.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

THE ever popular Yerowda was the meet for the 28th ultimo and a good field turned up to support the Master in spite of the fact that gallops have been at rather a discount of late. But the continued drought has been hard to contend with as apparently scent, except of the freshest, has become an almost impossible task for hounds. There are many, however, I find who agree that art might with advantage step in where Nature fails since in this busy world the majority of men want a "gallop for their money" when they have struggled out of bed in the early half of the dawn. Moving off to the tick of the clock the Master drew the sporting country with its likely nullahs between the Jail and the Two Sisters, but if their had been any wandering minstrel, who came to sing their nightly yelps to the inmates of His Majesty's Hotel they had returned early to the high lands without leaving sufficient scent for hounds to own to, as I am told hounds could not open on line. Even on reaching one of the celebrated brace of hillocks the goddess of sport refused to aid her zealous devotees for appearently luck was all against the hardy hunters—no less than a brace of jack leaving for some unaccountable reason their rocky fastnesses on the hill where on more than one occasion they have trifled with hounds, and refusing even to to be headed by some of the field broke cover daringly past them and forced the open with stout hearts which seemed to augur a brilliant run. But by sad misfortune hounds could not be got sufficiently quick on the line and I am assured that just now every second is of importance and that even brief delay makes the difference between success and disappointment. And so all hope of a heart-gladdening gallop vanished. Depressing for all concerned and it must be truly heart breaking work for Colonel Sheringham, who has such cruel difficulties as the present drought gives use to to contend with and who must be yearning to give his hounds a taste of blood again.

On Thursday, 1st September, the meet was at Wagoli, and Mrs. Sheringham, the Master's wife, most hospitably invited the members of the hunt to breakfast afterwards. A few sportsmen I hear camped near the scene of sport over night and nearly half a hundred in all put in an appearance, a most flattering number to the master considering how small was the hope of sport. Some sugarcanes to the right of the road were first drawn, but nothing more exciting than hares (of which there were I am told an annoying number) were put up. In a sugar-cane field further on, where a stout jack was found on a previous occassion, hounds immediately began to feather and shortly gave every assurance of a welcome guest and people must have hoped for a turn of luck at last. After a hustling round a jack broke cover at the farther end and was viewed away, but so wretched must the scent have been that hounds could make nothing of it. The Master evidently had satisfactory evidence that another jack was still in cover and throwing hounds in once more they very soon confirmed the theory and a second viewed jack was breaking away into the open from the other end of the cover. But luck seems quite to have deserted the Hunt for instead of getting away on his brush hounds were occupied with a porcupine, who, I believe, sadly injured several hounds and effectually destroyed all hope of a run. It was by this time very hot and after drawing some of the surrounding country in vain the Master had to take hounds back to their cart and the field drowned dull care and sorrow in Mrs. Sheringham's hospitality.

SCARAMOUCH.

OOTACAMUND HUNT.

ON Monday, the 29th August, the meet was at Sandy Nullah Toll Bar at 7-15, quarter of an hour earlier than usual owing to the heat experienced and the general dryness of the country for want of rain The Master started by drawing all the country from Pamela's Crossing parallel to the old Pykara Road as far as Tola Coffee Shop, but failed to find. Hounds then crossed the road below Road Shola for the Yemakal Valley and found below Road Shola. They ran up the spur between it and Dormer and then back into Road Shola, where hounds got their jack to ground in a very rocky earth, where the Master left him and went down below Dormer Shola before beginning to draw again. Hounds very soon found, but this jack went to ground near the river almost immediately. However, as soon as the Master got hounds out of the earth he bolted and went down towards the river with hounds close behind him. He swung sharp to the left and turned uphill again and headed towards Chemmund, but being very hard pressed he inclined more to the left and made for Dormer Shola near the bottom of which he was killed in the open ; the same puppy, Hearty, whodistinguished himself last week was the first to seize him Yemakal Valley was then drawn without finding and hounds came home. Scent all the morning was poor, while the sun was oppressively hot and the country very dry.

On Thursday, the 1st September, hounds met at 7 A.M. at Rees' Corner. The morning was a bright one with sharp air and heavy dew and an exceptionally large field turned out. As rain had held off for so long a period it was feared that scent would be had in cover under trees where there was no dew and so the Master decided to draw the open as much as possible and trotted hounds to Mills' Cover. They got away at once on a somewhat cold scent and ran slowly to the stream in Blackmoor Vale and crossed it at the foot of the first nullah. There the body of the jack swung to the right and checked but two hounds kept on up the hill and the Master tilted the remainder of them on to this line. Hounds then ran fast up Newmarket side of Blackmoor Vale to Ballywood, through this and over the Krurmund Road to Monkey Shola, at the top of which there was another momentary check. Hounds quickly hit the line off again and hunted along the side of Monkey Shola and pass Leeds Shola to the top of Swamyar Bluegums and then up to Hecuba Cliff. They stuck to their jack among the rocks and thick cover below the Cliff and forced him out over the ridge at the other end above Karathu Galli Village and into the Shola of the same name. Coming out at the other side they ran down the spur towards the Dunganaad Valley and at this point a fresh jack took five hounds away on his line towards Sambur Shola. The hunted jack re-crossed the spur and took us back over the dusty fallows above Karathu Galli Village, where, in spite of a hare dashing through their midst, hounds hunted the line yard for yard back to Hecuba Cliff. The jack ran along the top of the Cliff as far as the spur above Swamyar Bluegums and then hunted down the spur and re-crossed the nullah to Leeds Shola ; dashed through this and ran to Monkey Shola. Scent under cover was bad and the Master took them to the other side to Monkey Shola, where they settled to the line on the grass again and hunted across the road to Jackal Shola. This brought them to their noses and a fresh jack was halloed away from the top. He went towards Baikie, but hounds never left his line and though they only feathered on it down through the cover they got on it again at the bottom and hunted steadily over Pearl Crossing to the south end of Bagman. Scent again failed and another check occurred, but hounds hit the line off again and ran down past Mills' Cover to a nullah above the Municipal stream where they followed their jack to ground. The time taken here was one hour and fifteen minutes from the start. The terrier Pindur was sent for and the Master turned him in and almost immediately the jack bolted with Pindur in hot pursuit. We had about 200 yards start before the Master could lay hounds on. He took us to the Municipal stream and then up its left bank for a short distance, but turned towards cover at Bagman just above Elmshurst. Hounds checked for a moment and gave him a longer lead but he was dead beat and hounds killed him in the open on the top of Bagman. This proved one of the best hunting runs of this season and a remarkably fine performance on the parts of hounds it was.

BLUE GUM.

Rowing.

HENLEY ROWING OF THE LAST HALF CENTURY.

THE all too brief and scanty reminiscences of your correspondent "An Old Light Blue" will assuredly raise a responsive echo in many a memory. But one wishes he had not been in such a hurry to get through his recollections, and had called up (as doubtless he could have done) visions of a few more of the immortal struggles of the fifties and sixties, when, though the votaries of first-class rowing were few in number, they were of a surety surpassing in excellence, and when both among Londoners and University men there were veritable "giants in the land." I don't say there have not been plenty since, but doubtless the percentage of really great oarsmen and scullers was far larger between 1856 and 1866 than in any decade since. Your correspondent mentions the splendid L.R.C. eight of 1859, which beat an extremely strong Oxford University crew on the first day of the regatta, and a not quite as good, but still very powerful Cambridge crew the next. But he does not pause to recall the grand struggle for the Diamond Sculls which took place that year between the London stroke, Herbert Playford, and E. D. Brickwood, which the latter (about the very best sculler for form and science who ever sat in a boat) won, after such an exhibition of skill and gameness on both sides as has seldom, if ever, been equalled, and never surpassed. Playford (who, as usual, was very finely drawn) sculled himself blind—literally—for he fainted while spurting hard, and really sculled, or seemed to scull, several strokes when quite unconscious. Brickwood had another terrific race a few years later (1862) against W. B. Woodgate, unexcelled now as an all-round rowing man—oarsman, sculler, and waterman. Woodgate found himself that "finals day" morning left in for no less than four events—Diamonds, Stewards, Visitors, and Goblets. The sculls were taken first, so that both men were fresh, and he and Brickwood "went for each other" from the start, both sculling grandly. It would be rather a revelation to the fixed seat rowers of these days to have seen how those champions framed—the long swing out and back, the sharp catch, and the stroke pulled right home, without the present day mechanical aid of the side. From start to finish it was anybody's race, and both spurting hard at the finish the judge was unable to separate them. Now-a-days the dead-heat would under the circumstances probably not have been rowed off, or at any rate a long rest would have been managed somehow. But in those heroic times a dead-heat was always rowed off at once as a matter of course; so, after a short rest, down to the island paddled Brickwood (who was in no other event), while Woodgate, with his three other races in view, was rowed down in a skiff. I believe, however, he thinks he would have done better to have sculled down as his opponent did, that after the tremendous exertions he had made, sitting in a somewhat cramped position in a small pleasure boat made him rather stiff. Personally I am more inclined to think his youth was against him there. The more seasoned Brickwood recovered quicker than the stripling. Anyhow Woodgate could not make such another grand race all the way, and Brickwood sculling with a dash and power quite marvellous, considering what had only just happened, soon got in front and kept there. He was hunted home hard, but won rather comfortably just at the finish by two or three lengths, Woodgate being apparently throughly exhausted. But then came in the undoubted advantage which the severe training of those days brought to the possessors of a physique equal to it. What would the little better than half-trained Leander men of the present day (for they are never really fit) think of rowing three races over the Henley course after two such gruellings as I have described? But "Wat Bradwood" (to use his nom de plume) was equal to the occasion. He simply went on, without fuss or bother, and won them all right off the reel. What do you think of that, my masters? Isn't it a Henley record worth preserving and repeating, for the encouragement and enthusing of the younger generation of oarsmen when they begin to feel their first staleness and opine "the swot" is not worth it? Not worth it! Wouldn't a good many of you give your ears to gain such a memory as Woodgate possesses, in that day of "a white stone"? And there is nothing to stop you gaining it if you will—you, I mean (there are plenty of you) who possess strength and pluck in an equal degree with that of Mr. Woodgate in his youth. And in each of those races he had a hard tussle against first-class opposition; there was no run away in any of them, though they were all won decisively at the finish. They were B.N.C. victories. Harris, R. Shepherd, Champneys, and Woodgate (state) were the four, and Champneys and Woodgate accounted for the pairs—a very workmanlike lot all. What would be thought biggish men now, but averaging very little over 11st. The weights ran from 11st. to 11st. 6lbs., if I remember rightly, stroke being the heaviest. A very level "nippy" crew. I should like to see one like them, and trained like them, take on a Leander 12st. 7lbs. average crew next year. I think, the modern view about weight might be shaken a little. But I must apologise for profuseness and garrulity. "Twas ever thus with those who become reminiscent at my time of life. Perhaps some other less ancient veteran, say of the eighties or nineties, will quote something to outdo this feat of Woodgate, which I have taken so much space to inadequately describe. But at present it seems to me to hold the field as the greatest thing yet done at Henley. Five races over that hard course, resulting in a dead-heat, a severe beating in the row off, and then three consecutive victories. Well might Bell's Life of that day speak of him as "the everlasting Woodgate."

Anent the subject of weights, may I just refer to the Third Trinity four mentioned by "An Old Light Blue," as having beaten the crack London four in the Stewards in 1859. That was really a very remarkable crew. They were, I believe, only about 10st. 2lbs. average and not one of the men had ever rowed against Oxford. But their pace and stamina were quite first class. They won by a foot from the outside station. I wonder how many of your readers remember their stroke, the Rev. F. W. Holland—long since departed—a man of rare ability and enthusiasm in whatever he took up. I had the privilege of his acquaintance, and of working under him in a different sort of work to rowing, and it is pleasant to revive the memory of such a sterling specimen of the best kind of muscular Christian.—R.I.P. With many apologies.

CYCLING AND MOTORING AT HOME.

LONDON, 19th August 1904.

THE last of the National Cyclists' Union Championships was decided on the 13th August at the Craystal Place Rack, Sydenham, and attracted a fair assembly of spectators. It was the long distance amateur event over fifty miles, but unfortunately long distance riders are not very plentiful this year and the race in question only secured an entry of five, of which number, one, F. I. Burgess, was a non-starter. The four men who faced the starter were W. J. Pett, last year's winner; L. on Meredith, who started his successful racing career by winning this event in 1902; H. J. Harding, ex-holder of the record second, and G. L. Hopkins. By considering the form of the starters, it was apparent before the pistol fired and the men moved off, that the tussle would rest between Pett and Meredith, since the recent form of the other two competitors was not of sufficient merit to warrant one looking upon them as likely winners. No doubt Pett and Meredith would have provided some exciting racing between them, but unfortunately very soon after the start Pett collided with one of the pacing tandems and was obliged to retire. Meredith therefore had it all his own way and won comfortably in 1 hour 46mins. 3⅗secs.

It was in the two other events decided at this meeting—the 2-mile tandem championship and the one mile safety championship of the London Centre of the National Cyclists' Union—that the spectators were treated to some of the finest racing that it is possible to see. In the one mile event the race was decided in four heats and a final, the final finding A. L. Reed, R. Janson, H. D. Buck, and G. J. Calder competing against one another.

It was clear that the finish would be a close thing, but few in the crowd thought that Buck would hold his own with Reed. At the completion of the second lap Buck was to the fore, a position he retained throughout the third and last lap, he gamely responding to Reed's jump" when entering the home straight and beat him by inches. Three tandem teams started in the 2-miles tandem championship, one machine manned by the brothers A. E. and F. S. Wills, another by N. B. Casey and G. F. Summers and the third by A. L. Reed and R. Janson. This, too, proved an exciting race, for in the last lap the brothers Wills were fairly pocketed by Reed and Janson, but by some marvellous manœuvrings they got clear and raced home the winners. Casey and partner were second and Reed and Co. third. Time—4mins. 20⅘secs.

It will be interesting to watch the effect that the expiration of the two chief tyre patents will have upon the trade and pastime next autumn. There are sure to be a number of cheap tyres placed upon the market and price cutting amongst a certain section of manufacturers will be rampant. I am afraid, however, that the poor cyclists will suffer most, since they being recruited from the ranks of those who are obliged to study expenses will be tempted to purchase tyres marked at cut prices and thus learn at leisure that cheapness is but false economy. In the case of motor tyres, however, things will be different. Those who can afford to pay away some five hundred pounds or more on a car will not look out for so termed bargains in tyres, but will buy tyres known to be reliable and pay a good price for them. In motoring the enjoyment of the pastime depends even more on the quality of the tyres than in cycling, and it is therefore not likely automobilists will run any risks in this direction for the sake of a few pounds. At least this is my impression.

From the C. T. C. Gazette the official organ of the Cyclists' Touring Club, I learnt the origin of the now defunct Harrogate Camp, a camp of cyclists held annually during the first week in August on the Cricket ground at Harrogate. Away back in 1877 a meet of cyclists was inaugurated and in the following year these wheelmen decided to form the Bicycle Touring Club now known as the Cyclists' Touring Club. The first camp was held in 1880 and was brought about in this way. The hotels in Harrogate refused that year to take the cyclists in owing to rowdyism on their part at the Commercial Hotel the previous year. This rowdyism only took the form of midnight raids on the bed rooms of other members of the party, but it appears that the visitors at the hotel were unable to get any sleep before the early hours of the morning. Refused by the hotels, the organizers of the meet decided to defy the proprietors and camp in the open and so successful did the new arrangements prove that the camp was held annually right away up to last year: the old timers always making a point of being present.

Speaking of camping I might mention that cycle camping is very popular now in this country. There is a Cyclists' Camping Association which possesses a large membership roll and those who wish to enjoy this delightful way of spending a holiday are advised on all matters pertaining to it, i.e., the best form of tents, cooking utensils, and sundries to take. These articles are made to pack into a remarkably small compass.

Undoubtly one of the most prolific causes of accidents to cyclists in traffic is skidding upon greasy tram lines, and it is not at all unlikely that something will be done in order to prevent the tramway companies from constantly watering the lines in order to assist traction. Several cases of persons losing their lives have been reported from time to time owing to their machines slipping on the tram lines. The juries invariably return a verdict of accidental death, which of course in a way is true enough; but surely where so many serious and fatal accidents can all be traced to this one cause, one would have thought that the jury would, as has been suggested, adjourn and see whether there was not something radically wrong with the line.

As a matter of fact, if examination were made it would be found that in many cases the tram lines stand up sometimes half an inch above the level of the road-way, and it is quite obvious that with the metal wet and greasy it would be almost an impossibility for anyone mounted on a cycle to cross the lines with safety except at a very wide angle. The scandal is one that the National Cyclists' Union or the Cyclists' Touring Club should take up in real earnest, and it is certainly time that some vigorous policy was pursued, and the tramway companies made to understand that the proper and the safe preservation and repair of their lines is not a matter to be lightly disregarded. Indeed, I believe the National Cyclists' Union has already obtained council's opinion in respect to the legality of excessive watering of tramway lines.

The continual falling away in the membership of the Cyclists' Touring Club is, in the opinion of many, due to the selfishness of the management coupled with the high and unapproachable air adopted by some of those in authority. To this must be added the policy of the officials in running the Club on commerical lines, striving as it were to amass a large reserve fund instead of spending the surplus in the interest of wheelmen generally. If this were done, there is not the slightest doubt that the Club would receive far greater support. As an example of the narrow-minded methods of the Cyclists' Touring Club I will give the following incident that has just occurred in Nottingham. The Corporation of that town is laying flanged tram lines of a very dangerous type for cyclists and the local branch of the Cyclists' Touring Club intend taking steps to question the legality of these flanges. Well, a serious accident occurred to a local cyclist through slipping on these flanges and yet the Cyclists' Touring Club would not take the case up simply because the injured wheelman was not a member. Surely if the local branch had proceeded against the Corporation they would have strengthened their cause, as it is, in our mind, they let a glorious opportunity slip by.

CRICKET CHAT.

IT was very sporting of Khandesh cricketers to undertake a tour this year, and all things considered the team must be congratulated on its performances in the matches with Nasik and Poona. Dhulia and Bhusawal, the two stations from which the team was drawn, are, do not contain many Europeans, but if occasion demand it the district can place a European team in the field. The three Hindu players, Bhandara, Kotwal and Kulkarni, are always included in the team, however, all three being good batsmen and bowlers. These with Maitland-Kirwan, H. Pogson, C. S. Campbell, R. E. H. Elliott, and G. S. Curtis form the nucleus of a fairly good side for a district team. Against Nasik the team was seen to great advantage, H. Pogson who has played for the Presidency compiling 164 not out in which were twenty four 4's. This was his second century this season and against fairly good bowling too. The Nasik batsman proved unequal to the task of putting up a large score against the excellent bowling of Bhandara, Pogson, and Elliott, and were twice dismissed for totals of 159 and 123 thus losing the match by an innings and 37 runs. C. F. Crofton (35 and 25), C. E. Thubron (7 and 41), and V. M. Griffiths (29 and 17), all batted well for the losing side, but the other batsmen displayed very mediocre form. On the other hand nearly all the Khandesh batsmen made runs. Journeying on to Poona the team met a fairly strong Gymkhana eleven although Greig, Carroll and Kennedy were not playing Maitland-Kirwan (17 and 18), Kotwal (11 and 17), G.S. White (22 and 46), and C. S. Campbell (30 and 6), all displayed good form with the bat, but the batting on the whole was very uneven, seven men in the first innings only being able to make 18 runs between them, while five men in the second innings could only account for 19. The Khandesh totals of 150 and 159 fell just 17 short of the double effort of Poona and what lost the visiting team the match was the stand by H. R. P. Dickson and A. D Wilkins for the first wicket in Poona's first venture, these two men being allowed to put on a hundred runs before they were separated. Wilkins made 55 and Dickson 48. The other double-figure constributors were Umfreville (26), Noake (20), Rose (35), and Hartely (14). Poona in the second innings fared badly against the bowling of Bhandara and Pogson and could only total 100, Wilkins (33) being the only batsman who made over 20. Hartley's bowling had a good deal to do with the victory of Poona.

The poor show given by the Presidency team has made it necessary to entirely recast the side and this important task will be undertaken by the Cricket Committee of the Poona Gymkhana. The two Langhornes, Cadogan and Chaplin may give place to J. H. Curtis, J. Monteath (both of them old Cliftonians), Captain E. Campion, and W. E. Coppleston. Curtis I have already introduced to your readers, and he is considered by Greig to have very few superiors as a bat in India. Monteath, who played at Bombay last year, has had the proud distinction of making four centuries for Dharwar this season and is in fine form. Campion who hails from Nusserabad and played last year at Poona is a fine forcing batsman and is not bothered with nerves. Coppleston is an old Malvernian and a fine all round cricketer being equally good with bat and ball.

These four with Greig, Carroll, Deas and Coombs have already, I understand, accepted invitations to play, so that only three places remain to be filled up. Deas' ability to play in the return is an unexpected piece of good news, and if only Captain M. D. Wood could be induced to play the team would be a very fine one.

The Bangalore-Belgaum match was a most interesting one and was chiefly remarkable for two fine batting exhibitions, the heroes of which were Captain R. F. Standage, who has apparently recovered his last year's form, and W. E. Coppleston, the old Malvernian. Both men headed the scores of their respective sides in the first innings with 29 and 26 respectively, the totals being Bangalore 126, Belgaum 107. The scoring in the second innings would have been low on both sides, but for these two batsmen in particular. Standage made 73 for Bangalore out of 215 while Coppleston contributed 75 to the Belgaum's second total of 196. The latter also bowled with success capturing nine wickets in the match for 136 runs a good performance on a perfect wicket. Most of the bowlers came through the match with good figures, E. R. Udal, Cooper and Standage for Bangalore with seven wickets for 78, four for 24 and four for 40 doing extremely well, while B. E. A. Manson (six for 20) shared the Belgaum bowling honours with Coppleston.

C. H. Richards who during the past six months has shown hardly anything of his old form with bat and ball for his club, the Kolar Gold Fields, came off in both departments last week against Mr. Lefroy's XI. After being run out in the first innings for 2, he scored 102 not out in the second innings out of 163 for four wickets. He also captured seven wickets in the only innings Mr. Lefroy's XI had for under five runs apiece. Of the other Kolarites R. H. P. Bullen (38), T. A. Clarke (29), and F. G. Pierce (21 not out) did best with the bat.

Karachi Gymkhana met the local Parsees for the fourth time this season last week when neither side could claim an advantage the game ending in an open draw. The scoring was low P. D. Dastur (27) and F. G. Mobed (23) for the Parsees and Creagh (36 not out) and Captain Price (27) for the Gymkhana being the only batsman who topped 20. Barnes and Newton as usual were to the fore with the leather for the Gymkhana, the former having remarkably good figures.

Among well-known players who distinguished themselves in recent matches I notice the names of L. J. Le Fleming, the old Tonbridgian and Kent county cricketer and B. Jaya Ram, the Mysore cricketer, who returned to India a fortnight ago after an absence of a year and-a-half in England. Le Fleming, in a match at Naini Tal for the Gymkhana against the Depôt, made 96 not out when rain stopped play. Jaya Ram on the 25th ultimo in his first appearance this season for Bangalore Gymkhana against the Essex Regiment contributed 128 to the total of 304 for five wickets made by his side and captured three wickets. Captain Wall who went in first with Jaya Ram and scored 51 helped that player to put up 206 for the first wicket, 27 of this number being made from byes and leg-byes.

The team that the Poona Gymkhana placed in the field on the 29th and 30th against the Elphinstone C. C. (a strong Parsee Club from Bombay) could hardly be considered on Poona team at all as no less than six of the side—C. E. Thubron, H. Pogson, C. S. Campbell, G. S. Curtis, R. E. A. Elliott and G. S. White—were members of the Khandesh team which had played Poona on the previous two days. The five Poona players in the team were B. M. Carroll, Hon'ble D. B. Butler Captain Umfreville, N. V. Thew, and H. B. Hartley. The latter made 41 top score in the first innings and with Campbell (30) made the only stand in the innings which realised 113. The Khandesh bowlers had the best figures, Elliott taking four wickets for 29 runs and Pogson three for 37. The Elphinstone Club total of 163 in the first innings was nearly altogether due to the efforts of three men, Dubash (63), Machliwalla (45 not out) and M. Oomrigar (24), who between them made 132. Extras were responsible for 21 so that the other eight batsmen only contributed 10 between them, six of them failing to score. The second innings of Poona was only saved from mediocrity by a second fine display by H. B. Hartley (45), who again made top score, Captain Umfreville (35), and C. S. Campbell (19) and G. S. White (18) the total being 148. The Elphinstone C. C. having made 132 in their second innings (Davur 32, Dubash 20) Poona were beaten by 34 runs. Poona have been very unlucky in their matches with Bombay clubs this season, having lost against the Gymkhana, the Hindus and the Elphinstone and drawn with the Baronet Club.

A match at Quetta between the Gymkhana and the Supply and Transport Corps a few days before Captain Deas left for Bombay to play in the Presidency match resulted in a win for the Gymkhana who had a very strong eleven for the occasion by 68 runs. Deas for once in a way was quite ineffective with the ball, but made 29, top score for his side. J. H. Curtis on the other hand for the first time this season did not come off with the bat for the Gymkhana being dismissed for 8. The chief feature in the match was the excellent all-round play of A. G. Fleming, the Old Fettesian, who contributed a brilliant 60 to the Gymkhana total of 175 and captured eight wickets for 47 runs. Fleming is the best all-round player in Quetta this season, and it is surprising that his name has not ever been mentioned in connection with the Presidency eleven.

Trooper Ledger, in a match at Bangalore last week between the Carabiniers and the 12th Battery, R.F.A., was credited with a remarkable bowling feat which deserves to be mentioned. He did not bowl in the first innings of the Gunners, but in the second innings captured nine wickets for 16 runs, and did the "hat trick," the tenth batsman being run out.

RUGBY IN CALCUTTA.

ENGLAND vs SCOTLAND.—The International match was played on the Calcutta ground on the 5th instant and a splendid game was witnessed. Berridge kicked off for England and Dick returned into touch. Then a series of scrums took place, of which the Scotch forwards had the best. Newton sent the ball into touch and the Scots looked like scoring but Landon relieved. Heilgers and MacLeod were next prominent and from a scrum Todd, Gardiner and Heilgers got away, the last named crossing the line. Dick failed to add the extra points. On resuming the English team got going and the forwards gained much ground by a good dribble. Then Williams got possession and passed to Marshall, who handed on to Siddons and the latter getting in a brilliant run scored. No goal resulted and even play followed till the interval. Landon broke away on one occasion but was brought up by Newton.

On changing ends the representatives of the Rose showed better form and the threes did good work, Ismay being to the fore. He all but got over on one occasion but Newton tackled him before he could get across England continued to press and Williams picking up scored a clever try. The place failed, but soon after Barnes got through. No goal resulted and time was shortly called leaving England victors by three tries (9 points) to one 3 points. Teams :—

ENGLAND.—Greyburn, back; Landon, Siddons, Baker, and Ismay, three-quarters; Williams and Marshall halves; Berridge, Szczepanski, Cooper Barnes, Stevenson, Gribbon, Ray and Vick, forwards.

SCOTLAND.—Newton, back; Dundas, Garstin, Pierson and Dick, three-quarters; MacDonald and Maclaren, halves; MacLeod, Gardiner, Todd, Scott, Kar, Black, Heilgers and Grahame, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. E. Martelli, Ireland.

CALCUTTA vs. ARMENIAN OLD BOYS.—On their own ground on the 6th instant, a Calcutta team defeated the Armenian Old Boys by a goal and a try to nil after an even game. The first half was productive of much scrimmaging, but the work of the forwards was not of a very brilliant character. For the visitors Yakchee, Apcar, and Staynor were seen to advantage, while Barnes, Todd, and Cumberlege were most conspicuous for the home team. Barnes was instrumental in obtaining both tries for Calcutta, passing on to Schaumberg who got over. Barnes converted the first try. In the second moiety the Armenians tried hard to score but without success, Calcutta winning as stated.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

CALCUTTA vs. CUSTOMS.—This match was played on the Calcutta ground on the 31st ultimo when the visitors put up a good fight and were just beaten by a goal to a try. The home team took the ball down at the start and scrums took place in the visitors' twenty-five. Then the Customs made great efforts to get through. Rowe got away and passed to Porteous who tried to drop a goal from a difficult angle After a few runs by the home forwards, Karr got over and Martelli converted, Calcutta leading at the interval by a goal. In the second half the Customs continued to play with great dash and Maitland crossed the line, but the place failed. Play ruled very even till just before the call of time when Maitland made an attempt to drop a goal which failed by a few inches.

KING'S OWN vs. UNITED SERVICES.—This game played on the King's Own ground on the 31st ultimo was very evenly contested, the King's Own eventually winning by 11 ponits to 5. In the first half the Services had rather the best of the game. But Lieutenant Marshall got in for the King's Own, Scully failing with the place. On changing ends, the Fort team pressed hard and Morgan and Lieutenant Scott scored a try each, Scully converting the first. The Services continued to play up, however, and a passing bout led to Morris handing to Landon who scored, Szczepanski adding the major points. They were unable to put on any further score and the King's Own won by a goal and 2 tries to one goal.

WEST RIDINGS vs. KING'S OWN.—This match was played at Dum-Dum last Saturday when the Ridings defeated the visitors by 2 goals (one dropped) and 3 tries to nil. The home team were strongly represented and played a fine game. In the first half Beaumont scored one and Morris two tries, Lieutenant Gill converting the second. On changing ends, Beaumont dropped a fine goal soon after the start, then the King's Own got over but the try was disallowed. The Ridings got possession from a scrum in the visitors' territory and Roberts crossed the line. No goal resulted and the West Ridings won by 18 points to nil.

FOOTBALL NOTES.

CALCUTTA did not shine brilliantly against the Customs whom they could do no better than beat by the verdict of 5 points to 3. Probably the fact that the Customs played with such vim had rather a disquieting effect, yet on past form the Premier Club should have done considerably better. The home team was complete with the exception of Ismay, whose absence may have made a deal of difference. Where Calcutta was badly served was at half. MacClaren did fairly well, but his partner, Smith, evidently a Rugger man, made some unpardonable mistakes. Quite on three occasions when the leather was heeled out instead of opening out the game for the three-quarter line he ran the wrong side of the scrum and found touch

The forwards should watch a team like the King's Own at play and pick up a few tips from the way the packing of the scrum is done. Calcutta have the heaviest and cleverest forwards in the city, and properly managed the scrum-maging line should be a really formidable one. Saturday was a wet day when Calcutta turned out about five short against the United Services, who have retired from the League though deciding to enter for the Rugby Cup. The places of the missing members of the team were ably taken by some men from the City and Customs, among the latter was Rowe who, considering the atmospheric conditions and state of the ball, performed excellently at half.

As was to be expected, the game was a poor one, both sets of forwards having plenty to do. A few bouts of passing, however, were indulged in, in which Martelli, Schaumberg and Barnes were conspicuous. Of the forwards Curtis-Hayward, Heilgers and MacLeod worked hard, but the same cannot be said of the rest, and the display given forward again supports my contention that the scrum pack loosely and are lacking in shoving capacity.

In their League engagement with the Premier Club the Customs put up a very spirited fight and were beaten only by the narrow margin of a couple of points. As a matter of fact, Rowe got over with another try, but this however was disallowed owing to a forward pass, and Calcutta can congratulate themselves on averting defeat by a mere squeak. The Customs fifteen have always been a surprise packet and they have come on so well in such a short time that it is quite on the cards that they may lower the colours of many teams which might consider themselves immune from defeat.

Last Wednesday one and all worked hard the whole game through and those outside the scrum played with splendid dash. Anderson at back is a tough customer to get past, and his kicking was better than it has hitherto been. The best of a smart if inexperienced line of threes was Maitland. This player has weight and strength on his side, both of which qualities he made full use of; his running was strong with any amount of "swerve" and "break," which made him a difficult man to hold. Last Wednesday from half-field he got through the best defence in the town and landed a try by what I consider the finest individual effort this season. Rowe's prowess in the field is so well known that it is sufficient to say that he played as well as ever and makes a capable captain. The forwards in striking contrast to their opponents packed tight, but being on the light side were shoved off the leather a good deal.

Customs like City are guilty of the fault of making too much noise on the field and there is a tendency to disputing the referee's decision. Under ordinary circumstances the Captain's is the only voice that should be heard, excepting of course the half at the base of the scrum, who is directing operations from outside.

The Services, everyone will be glad to hear, have not broken up their combination, but have only scratched their League engagements and are entering for the Cup with a much reinforced fifteen. During the week they have played friendlies with the King's Own and Calcutta In the former game they were assisted by four of the best at Dum-Dum. Marshall played back and those two excellent little players, Reeves and Morris, played half, while Lieutenant Gill figured prominently forward. The game was remarkable for the first appearance this season of Landon, who has sportingly come to the rescue of his side, and though only having just got over a serious illness played with his customary dash and skill. As the game went, the Services had quite as much of the play as the soldiers, though the score against them would lead one to think otherwise.

What the Service men really want are two halves and a back till the Cup competition comes round, when they will be helped by the men already mentioned.

The forwards played very well together and so did the threes, and the only reason that can be assigned for their defeat was the superior speed of the King's Own three-quarters.

The Hornets have retired from the Rugger field, for this year at any rate, and with the help of a few of this Club's best the combination has been re-started which last season was known as the Old Armenians.

The latter played a fairly strong team of Calcutta in their first game and were beaten by the narrow margin of a try. It poured with rain for the greater portion of the game and made the turf sodden and slippery. These conditions militated greatly against the Armenians, preventing them from indulging in their usual passing and kicking tactics, of which they are such fine exponents.

Calcutta's forwards were too heavy for their lighter opponents, and the Armenians were unable to cope with their combined dribbles and rushes.

Seven players retired during the competition.

The first eight players in the qualifying competition contested the first round in the Championship by match play on the 25th ultimo with the following results:—

Captain A. Buist beat Captain J. Hill by 7 and 6 to play.
Captain Blois-Johnston beat Mr. B. Sinclair by 2 and 1.
Captain C. Davies beat Mr. J. Mackenzie.
Major Carruthers beat Captain H. L. Fleming by 2 and 1.

In the semi-finals Captain Buist met Captain Davies and Captain Blois-Johnston met Major Carruthers, the matches resulting as follows. Captain Buist beat Captain Davies by 7 up and 6 to play.
Captain Blois-Johnston beat Major Carruthers by 4 and 3 to play.

The final, a match of 36 holes, was played on the 26th ultimo between Captains J. Buist and G. Blois-Johnston, and an exciting struggle resulted. Captain Buist established a record for the 18 holes in the first round. His score being—

Out 5, 5, 6 4, 4, 4, 5, 4, 3 = 40.
In 4, 5, 4, 4, 6, 5, 2, 4, 4 = 38 = 78.

The par score of the links is 81.

Captain Johnston had been playing a fine game too, but he could not come up to this score and on the first half of the game he stood 7 down. In the afternoon Captain Johnston made a great bid for victory. He lost the first hole and was 8 down; two halved holes followed, then Johnston drew away and won the next five holes. Captain Buist managed to half the ninth hole and the game was then of a give and-take character and ended on the thirteenth green, Captain Buist winning by 6 up and 5 to play and thus becoming champion for the year.

LADIES' CHAMPIONSHIP.—In the first round on the 24th ultimo some good play was witnessed in the Ladies' Championship with the following results:—

Mrs. C. Davies beat Mrs. Kennedy by 4 and 2 to play.
Miss Johnston beat Miss Mansfield.
Miss Vanrenen beat Mrs. Weir.
Miss McNeill beat Mrs. MacMullen.

The semi-finals in the ladies' game were played on the 25th ultimo when a splendid contest was witnessed between Mrs. C. Davies and Miss Vanrenen. The latter led at the 14th hole by 2 up and 4 to play, but last year's lady champion played steadily and at the 17th green they were all square. The 18th hole was halved so they had to go on to the 19th hole. Mrs. Davies took the hole in 4 and secured the victory. Miss Johnston beat Miss McNeill rather easily.

The final was contested by Miss Johnston and Mrs. Davies, another splendid game resulting in Miss Johnston securing the championship. The match was most exciting and was only finished on the last green where Miss Johnston getting the best of the approach play won the match by one stroke.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

18th August, 1904.

IT is a very curious thing to take up a newspaper with golfing records just now : during August and September one recognizes names of players familiar during most of the year on a certain suburban green, now sending in a return from some Lothian Links or may be from a course in far off North of Ireland, South Wales, Cornwall or even in gay Boulogne or frivolous Dieppe. The holiday season is well on, all seaside links are teeming with visitors, and the clubs are reaping a golden harvest in Green Tees. St. Andrews, the "Mecca" of Golf, is crowded to overflowing, and the summer meeting of the members of the Royal and Ancient Club held on 2nd August and following days for the Calcutta Cup drew a large field—33 couples in all—and amongst, these the usual well-known cracks were nearly all to be found. Some very close matches were witnessed in the first round—perhaps the best game was that between Messrs. J. A. Shaw and Spencer Gollan (both ex-holders of the Cup) the game was give and take throughout the 18 holes and resulted in a halved match. Mr. W. E. Fairlie (the holder) was opposed by Mr. A. K. Seller, to whom he had to give 10 strokes : failing, however, to get the lead the holder eventually lost the match at the 14th hole.

On the 2nd round with 19 couples it was a very fine exhibition of Golf by Mr. Mansfield Hunter, who played an almost perfect game against Mr. Claude Johnston, to whom he had to concede no less than 16 strokes ; this difficult task however, W. Hunter succeeded in accomplishing by his brilliant golf and entered the 3rd round, where he encountered and beat Colonel Grant by 2 holes again playing a remarkably fine round. At the end of the 2nd round there were but three players left, all of whom succumbed before the day and the 4th round was ended. In the 2nd round Mr. J. A. Shaw was again in very fine form against Mr. W. J. Reid and going round in 78 easily disposed of his opponents but fell a victim in the next round to Captain Burn, although the match stood all square with three to play.

Meanwhile Mr. A. R. MacAllan, who had a bye in the 3rd round had beaten Mr. Mansfield Hunter from whom he received 3 strokes—the match was square on the 17th green, but with a fine 4 at the 18th Mr. MacAllan secured the match. On Thursday afternoon in excessively hot weather the semi-final was played between Mr. MacAllan and Mr. Spencer Gollan. The match was a most interesting and close one throughout and only ended in the home green in favour of the first-named competitor, Mr. Armour had a bye. The final was played on Friday morning, 5th August, and was between Mr. W. T. Armour receiving 2 strokes from Mr. A. R. MacAllan. A heavy thunder storm during the early morning accompanied by drenching rain, had rendered the greens very dead and heavy, but the weather during the game was sunny and pleasant and a large number of spectators assembled to witness the contest which proved very close and most exciting. At the turn all was level, Armour had the best of the game and at the 16th hole stood dormy two losing the 17th. the play at 18th was of a most exciting nature. Armour was well on the green in 3, while MacAllan was in water from which with a beautiful pitch he lay dead and won the hole and squared the match and eventually proved successful by 1 hole.

At Leven a large number of players assembled on Wednesday, 27th July and following days to compete for the "Dundee Evening Telegraph" Challenge Cup, a competition open to members of all Scottish clubs. It is not often that the ultimate winner can be spotted from the start, especially when the field is a large and representative one as it was at Leven, but many who knew the young Carnoustie player, F. H. Scroggie, pinned their faith, and more than their faith—even their £ s. d. to him and pinned it not in vain as was proved when he beat the local crack R. Simpson in the final by 3 and 1. At Littlestone the August meeting attracted a large entry for the Erskine Goblets, a foursome tournament under handicaps and the Darge Trophy (handicap challenge medal play). In the former competition Messrs. Wersberg and Kemp beat Weston and M. Campbell by 3 and 12, while the defeated couple tied against each in 77 for the Darge Trophy which on playing off Campbell won. The Felixstone Club held a meeting on 30th July, 10th and 12th August when some 30 players returned cards each day. It is a curious coincidence that on the first day three of the four plus players who sent in returns accomplished the round in 83 strokes, which, however, were useless, against the 87—8-79 returned by Mr. deLissa, and another curious fact is that the winning score on the Monday should also have been a 79 returned by Mr. H. G. C. Booth.

A very interesting annual foursome tournament was recently held at Kilspindie, between the various clubs in East Lothian The holders for two years, the Tantallon Club, seemed likely to win the Cup for the third year in succession, but they fell in the 3rd round to the Guilane Artisans Club (Direlton Castle) by the narrow margin of 1 hole and Kilspindie beating the Guilane Club by 8 up, the final took place between Direlton represented by H. Cunningham and P. G. Mackenzie, H. Watt and W. Black, and Kilspindie represented by J. Williamson and H. Stewart, J. H. Beattie and G. W. Walker and resulted in a win for Direlton by 8 up and 6 to play. There is a long article in the Field of 13th August about a golfer who at St. Andrews was obliged to put in an appearance at a Police Court for a breach of golfing law. The facts of the case briefly are these. At the 8th Tee of the St. Andrews Links a player failed to allow the couple in front of him to leave the green before playing his tee shot with the unfortunate result that his ball struck one of the pair in the eye a very severe blow. The striker of the ball was afterwards arraigned before the Magistrate and gave as his defence that as one of the players had holed out and replaced the flag he (coming up behind) was entitled to drive. Eventually the charge was not proven against the offender, the baillie giving him the benefit of the doubt. The article goes on to point out that although it is most exasperating and annoying to be kept back by a slow foursome or a leisurely couple still the observance of the laws in more than an actual literal sense is obligatory and incumbent upon young and old, good or indifferent alike or on a crowded green, such as St. Andrews and most of the Scotch and English sea side links are at the present season unfortunate and often dangerous accidents might and would occur. What is needed is that all golfers should combine to play the game mindful and watchful of the personal safety of others and to curb their impatience—a lesson invaluable in Golf as in other walks of life.

The Army Cup Competition is progressing, as such events do slowly but surely. At Hayburg Island in the 2nd round of the competition the 4th Division R. F. Artillery beat the 2nd York and Lancaster Regiment by 12 holes.

The 2nd Coldstream Guards defeated the 2nd Division R. F. Artillery 1st Army Corps by 18 holes to 3, the Guards, Captain Lord Newton Butler beat Lieutenant Gregory by 9 holes and Lieutenant Burton scored the same number against Lieutenant Cameron. The 1st Division R. F. Artillery very easily disposed of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders by 7 holes to 0. The Gunners all won their matches with the exception of Captain Open who halved with Lieutenant Cooper.

Just now ladies are not engaged in any very important fixtures and County Golf is in abeyance, the Championships are over and the various club teams are so scattered that to organize an Inter-Club Match would be a sheer impossibility for the next six weeks, but with October, the merry routine will begin again, and fresh from uninterrupted practice the players will return like giants refreshed and new records will be made, new handicaps allotted and many new players will come to the fore. At St. Andrews in the final round for the Queen Victoria Jubilee Vase Mrs. W. Herbert Fowler beat Miss Moir, she having previously in the penultimate heat beaten Miss Boyd, and her opponent having successfully disposed of Miss Hull.

The Honorary Secretary of the Ladies' County Golf Association, has published an up-to-date table of the position of the various counties in their respective divisions. The current year owing to radical changes in the Legislation of the Association extends from January 1904 to 30th June 1905. These radical changes are of frequent occurrence, but in time no doubt some satisfactory method will be adopted and adhered to. At present the associated counties number 18 and there are four divisions, namely, the Northern comprising Yorkshire, Cheshire, Lancashire and Northumberland. The Midlands comprising Worcestershire, Warwickshire, Leicestershire, and Lincolnshire. The Southern or Home Counties Division, including Sussex, Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, Essex, and Hampshire and the Western which includes Devonshire, Somersetshire, Glamorganshire, and Gloucestershire. It is not possible to state which county is head of each division, some having played a great many and others no matches at all, for captain, have not been in any hurry with another nine months before them in which to play off the Divisional Contests.

Admirers of Harry Vardon will be glad to hear that apparently he has quite recovered his recent illness and is playing if possible better golf than ever and the open champion Jack White has resumed his very pleasant professional duties once more and playing in good form, perhaps all the better for his temporary and compulsory retirement from the Golf Links.

33RD LIGHT CAVALRY GYMKHANA.

THE officers of the 33rd Light Cavalry gave a successful little gymkhana on the parade ground at Poona on the 30th ultimo. The rain held off and a large attendance, including their Excellencies Lord and Lady Lamington graced the proceedings. Six events figured on the programme, a round the course race being substituted for the last event, the Covent Garden Fancy Dress Cake Walk, which failed to draw entries.

At the conclusion of the sports, Mrs. Grantham, wife of the Colonel Commanding, gave away the prizes. Details:—

SECUNDERABAD, 3rd September 1904.

THE annual sports held by the Lincoln Regiment in commemoration of the Battle of Khartoum took place on the Regimental Cricket Ground yesterday in beautiful weather and before a distinguished assemblage. There was also a very large gathering of the civil and military. The sports went with a swing. The stewards knew their work to a T, and although there was a long card of 21 events they were all run off and the prizes distributed before lamp light. The band of the Middlesex Regiment enlivened the proceedings throughout the afternoon. Private Higgins, who was scratch in the 2 miles Bicycle Handicap, had to give 60 yards to his comrades, Privates Cousins, Hardinge, and Dent who were placed first, second, and third respectively. Higgins put in all he knew from the very start, but, despite his efforts, he could not get up within a quarter of lap of the others, and, contrary to expectation, gave up in the last lap. Cousins, the winner had a fairly easy win and seemed quite fresh as he passed the post. Cousins should figure fairly prominently at the next Bangalore meeting. A word must be said, however, for Higgins who has recently been a victim to fever and was never so out of form as on this occasion. The one mile Garrison Flat Race attracted numerous entries, but it was disappointing to note that only one of the Lincolns competed. After the first lap, Sones became favourite although Potter was leading until the last lap when Sones sprinted away and seemed like winning, but Potter drew on his opponent down the straight and getting well away won easily by 20 yards.

The Officers were "At Home" to their friends and the whole function was voted a complete success.

The Naturalist.

BIRDS OF PREY AND HOW TO KNOW THEM.

WITH such publications as Blandford's "Fauna of British India," in every library and on nearly every sportsman's table—volumes which leave little, if anything to be desired—for the ordinary mortal to attempt any original remarks on the subject, would be, to say the least of it, superfluous. To the beginner, however, most books on Natural History, teeming as they are with latin names and technicalities must act rather as a deterrent than an inducement to take up the subject as a hobby. If persevering enough, he will of course find plates, which will very soon explain the majority of the ordinary terms used and these, can soon be committed to memory, but even armed with this information, unless he has some idea, as to how he should go about the identification of a bird, the work will prove a labour of no small magnitude and a few false starts in the beginning will not encourage him to continue.

I have known a man with a dead buzzard, on the table, before him, wade through some 120 pages of the above mentioned book and then give it up in disgust, no nearer than when he was when he started, having found half a dozen, approximatly the same as his bird, in measurements and closely resembling it in colour, etc. This was simply because he had formed no base to start from. It is for the absolute beginner that these remarks are intended and if by their aid, any are encouraged to take up a subject, in itself most fascinating, the writer will not have written in vain.

The Diurnal birds of prey come under the order "Acciptres" which is divided into three families, viz: Pandionidæ, Vulturidæ Falconidæ. Of these three families, Falconidæ has from time to time been a bone of contention amongst naturalists, some dividing it into five sub-families and some into still more, but Blandford keeps the family intact, only taking therefrom one genus, which he thinks requires special "rank" and thus makes the two sub-families Gypætinæ and Falconinæ. Now these families are again subdivided into 35 genera, comprising in all 87 species. When a bird is brought for identification, obviously the first thing to be done is to place it in its proper family, next the sub-family, if any, then find the genus to which it belongs, thus eliminating page after page, out of over 120 that the raptores take up and finally, you confine yourself to some half a dozen species, which may or may not prove a difficult task, but it is satisfactory to have got so far even, in your first attempt. To find the family to which your bird belongs is a very simple matter, when dealing with "Acciptres," there being only three. Examine the feet of your bird. All birds of prey have four toes, three forward and one pointing back, are you able to turn the outer toe of your bird to touch or lie parallel with the hind toe without using any force, or does it naturally fall back in that position with the slightest touch? It does. Then your bird belongs to the family Pandionidæ and your search is over, there being but one genus comprising only one species (in India) the Osprey. One other genus of fish hawks can partially turn its outer toe, in a similar direction, but only to about midway between its ordinary position and the back toe and not nearly so far back as can the Osprey. Then again the Osprey alone of all diurnal birds of prey has an aftershaft to its feathers. If these characteristics are wanting, it is not of the family Pandionidæ, so you can leave that aside entirely and have another look. Has it got big feet with short blunt claws, a head either bald or covered with soft down, instead of feathers and its tarsus or shank with rough scales?

A bald head will at once denote the family Vulturinæ or Vultures of which there are five genera comprising nine species.

Having decided that the bird before you is of the family Vulturinæ the following characteristics will at once give you a clue to the genus to which it belongs.

"A fleshy neck, wattle on each side of the neck of a deep yellowish red colour, a conspicuous naked patch, on each side of the crop and a large naked oval area, in front of each thigh of the same colour" will tell you that it belongs to the genus Otogyps of which there is but one species, O. calvus. If it has not the above characteristics, count its tail feathers, if there are 14 feathers, your bird belongs to the genus Gyps of which there are four species, but if it has only twelve feathers in its tail it may belong to either the genus Vultur or Pseudogyps, each of which has one species. Measure it from tip of beak to the end of the tail. If it is over 40 inches you can put him down to be a Vultur, but if only about 35 inches or thereabouts it will most probably belong to Pseudogyps. The nostrils in Vultur are oval and in Pseudogyps and Gyps "a vertical narrow slit."

If none of these characteristics hold good, the bird must belong to the genus Neophron, the scavenger vultures.

So much for the two families and their genera. If your bird has neither the reversible outer toe, of the Pandionidæ nor the bald head common to the Vulturidæ, it must belong to the only remaining family, the Falconidæ. A large bird, with big feet and short blunt claws, as in the vultures, but not a bald head and a tuft of hair from the chin and forming a beard at once point to it being of the sub-family, Gypætinæ of which there is but one genus with one species, viz: Gypætus barbatus, the bearded vulture or lammergeyer. This disposes of everything except the one sub-family, the Falconinæ which though it comprises 77 species eliminates families and sub-families and reduces the search to genera only.

The subfamily Falconinæ comprises all the eagles, buzzards, harriers, hawks, falcons, kites, etc., etc., and it is no use to begin hunting up descriptions and measurements on the off chance of coming across something that will tally with your bird. You may find half a dozen somewhat similar and will only get confused and even if by great good luck, you hit on the right one, you have learnt very little. You will know, perhaps, if you see it again, that, that bird is we'll say, Spizætus nepalensis, but besides the name it conveys nothing to you. Not having looked up the characteristics of the genus, you don't know why it belongs to "Spizætus" at all and so if you get a young bird, whose colouring perchance is quite different, from that of the specimen you saw before, you are hopelessly at sea again and unable even to place it, in its correct genus, leave alone the species, so don't bother about the species at all, till you have grasped the genus.

There can be no doubt now that your bird belongs to the subfamily Falconinæ and being a big bird with large talons you are inclined to think it is an eagle. There are a variety of birds called eagles, such as buzzard eagles and serpent eagles which are not true eagles at all, but for our purpose, we shall leave this alone for the present and only call the following five genera eagles, viz: Aquila, Hierætus, Ictinætus, Lophotriorchis and Spizætus.

These genera all have one characteristic in common and that is, their tarsi are feathered, i.e., they have feathers running down their legs to the division of the toes and so can be identified from the rest of the subfamily at a glance. Of these five genera, Aquila may be said to contain the true eagles and the remaining four, the hawk eagles, so if your bird possesses a feathered tarsus you know he must belong to either one or other of the above five. Next examine his wings; if the primaries (the outer 9 or 10 feathers of the wing, are longer than the secondaries, by more than the length of his tarsus, he will probably belong to either Aquila or Lophotriorchis but if shorter than the length of tarsus to one of the other three. In other words if his wing appear long and not rounded, to the former and if comparatively short and round to the latter. The two former genera also have shorter and squarer tails than the three latter.

The Aquila, however, is easily distinguished from Lophotriorchis in the latter having a crest and a pronounced festoon to the upper mandible while the former has no crest and either none at all or a very slight festoon. (The festoon is a slight downward curving, in the margin of the upper mandible, almost in the centre of it, instead of it being straight)

It would probably be better to class the eagles as crested and crestless eagles which will save confusion.

Spizætus and Lophotriorchis are both crested while Aquila Hierætus and Ictinætus are without crests. If crested your eagle belongs to either Spizætus or Lophotriorchis and now examine its wings. Lophotriorchis has the long wing (as described above) and the short tail while Spizætus has the short rounded wings and longer tail. Lophotriorchis also has a great deal of chestnut colouring on the underparts and is almost black above. Of the other three crestless genera, both Aquila and Ictinætus have the margin of the upper mandible straight or very nearly so whereas Hierætus has a very pronounced festoon. Ictinætus can be at once recognised by the peculiar shape of his foot. The inner toe is thicker than the middle and very nearly as long and the outer toe is very short. The claws too are not so curved as in the other eagles and the inner claw is even longer than the hind claw. There is but one genus I. malayensis, the Black Eagle and as its English name implies the entire plumage is almost black.

In case the difference between Aquila and Hierætus, viz., the lack of a festoon in Aquila and the pronounced one in Hierætus is not sufficient to distinguish them, look at the wings and the same difference will be noticed as in Lophotriorchis and Spizætus, Aquila having the long wings and Hierætus the short and rounded.

We have now dealt with twelve genera out of the 35 and if the reader has followed me closely so far, he will have no difficulty in being able to work out the following key, which will show the differences between each genus at a glance :—

Family.	Characteristic.
Pandionidæ.—No aftershaft to contour-feathers; outer toe reversible.
Vulturidæ.—An aftershaft present; outer toe not reversible; crown of head naked or covered with down; claws short and blunt.
Falconidæ.—An aftershaft present; outer toe slightly reversible in one genus only; crown of head feathered Family.	Genera. — Characteristics.
Pandionidæ.—PANDION.	(One species only). Those of the family: (since there is only one species which cannot be mistaken a further description is superfluous.)
Vulturidæ.—VULTUR.	(One species). Tail of twelve feathers; bill stout; nostrils oval, length over 40 inches.
Vulturidæ—PSEUDOGYPS.	(One species). Tail of twelve feathers; nostrils a vertical narrow slit; length 35 inches or under.
Vulturidæ.—GYPS.	(Four species). Tail of fourteen feathers; nostrils as in Pseudogyps.
Vulturidæ.—OTOGYPS.	(One species). A fleshy wattle on each side of the neck; a conspicuous naked patch on each side of crop; a large naked area in front of each thigh.

Family.	Subfamily.	Characteristics.
Falconidæ.	GYPÆTINÆ:	Tarsus feathered claws blunt and short, a tuft of bristles on the chin.
Falconidæ.	FALCONINÆ:	Tarsus feathered or naked; claws sharp; no bristles on the chin.

Subfamily.	Genus.	Characteristics.
Gypactinæ.	GYPÆTUS	(One species) Size large; other characters as in subfamily.
Falconinæ. — Crested eagles	LOPHOTRIORCHIS	(I species) (a) Crested. *(e) Primaries exceeding secondaries by more than length of tarsus. (d) Abdomen chestnut in adults.
	SPIZÆTUS	(five species) (a) Crested. *(e) Primaries exceeding secondaries by less than length of tarsus. (d) Abdomen usually some shade of light or dark brown.
Crestless eagles	AQUILA	(nine species) (a) No crest; claws much curved, hind claw longer than inner. (b) Bill from gape longer than middle toe. *(e) Primaries exceeding secondaries by more than length of tarsus.
	HIERÆTUS	(two species) (a) No crest; claws much curved, hind claw longer than inner. (b) middle toe longer than bill from gape. *(e) Primaries exceeding secondaries by less than length of tarsus.
	ICTENÆTUS	(one species) (a) no crest; claws very little curved, INNER claw longer than hind.

N. B.—*(e) This measurement is taken with closed wings.

Having disposed of the true eagles and the hawk eagles, we now come to the so-called eagles, which have their tarsus or shank naked, as some of the buzzards and fish eagles. Among these there are still a few birds which rival in point of size the true eagles, but are not so courageous and live for the most part on frogs, lizzards, mice and snakes, etc. Later on, however, we shall come to the hawks and falcons and among them there are many very plucky species, which, when trained, will bring down birds and mammals twice their own size.

Since we have just finished with the crested eagles it will probably be better to leave the beaten path, skipping several pages and taking the next crested genus, viz., the Baza genus. Though only resembling Spizætus and Lophotriorchis, the crested eagles, in the possession of a crest, this is so singular a characteristic in the family that catches the eye at once and the novice may find it bewildering. The two genera of eagles and the Baza are the only three genera with long occipital crests, so cannot be confounded with anything else, and the following single characteristic is sufficient to separate the eagles from the bazas.

Spizætus and Lophotriorchis	Long occipital crest. Tarsus feathered to base of toes.
Baza.	Long occipital crest. Tarsus naked for half its length.

The crested Goshawk (Lophospizias trivirgatus) also has a small crest but it is very small, in fact rudimentary in comparison to the above three genera.

We shall now take the genus of Serpent Eagles as they have been aptly named, viz., Spilornis. Spilornis, too, has got a crest, but it cannot be confounded with the three crested genera above mentioned, as it is not an occipital crest of a few elongate feathers, on the top of the head like the others, but the feathers on the sides of the neck and nape are lengthened forming a conspicuous fan-shaped crest, which the bird erects at will, usually when captured or annoyed. The genus spilornis comprises three species, all beautifully marked birds. Its dark coloured upper plumage, with under parts rust coloured, covered with little white dots, together with its conspicuous rounded crest differentiates it, from all others at a glance. A closely allied genus to the above is circætus which has but one species in India. C. Gallicus, the common serpent eagle or more appropriately the short toed eagle, but is easily distinguished from spilornis in not having any crest. It also resembles Butastur, the eagle Buzzards and to some extent Buteo in point of size, but the following key will suffice to show the difference :—

Genus.	Characteristics.
Butastur. (three species)	(a) size small; the largest of them only measuring 17 inches to 18 inches from bill to end of tail.
Circætus. (one species)	(a) size large; over 26 inches (b) tarsus naked; inner and outer claws sub-equal.
Buteo. (three species)	(b) tarsus feathered in front for two-third its length; claws very unequal.

Circætus is the only genus in the whole family which has a white or whitish cere. (The cere is the naked skin in which the nostrils are placed, common to all birds of prey; it is usually of a different colour to the bill and in the generality of cases some shade of yellow.

Archibuteo. (one species) is very similar to Buteo except that it has its tarsus wholly covered in front. The single species known to visit India is a rare bird.

We have now only the fish eagles and kites to consider, before taking up the hawks and falcons.

In the two genera which comprise the fish eagles we have altogether five species; all birds of large size, easily distinguished from each other and from the rest of the family.

All excepting one species (Haliætus albicilla) have white or whitish feet and are never found very far from rivers and jheels.

The genus Haliætus. (Three species) has the claws grooved beneath, outer toe not at all reversible.

Polioætus (two species) has the claws rounded beneath, outer toe partially reversible.

Between the true fish eagles and kites there is the genus Haliætur with one species (H. Indus) the Brahminy or fish kite. Its maroon upper parts and white head, breast and abdomen alone are sufficient for its identification.

The Tenus Milvus comprising three species, all have forked tails. Two species are more or less rare, but the third (Milvus Govinda). the common Pariah Kite, is much too well known, in India, to require any description. Elanus cæruleus, the only species of Elanus, known in India, is a small bird about 13 inches long. Constantly found hovering over grassy plains and bush jungle when it has an appearance of being white below and dark grey or black above. Irides, in adults, crimson, and yellow in young birds; legs and feet deep yellow.

We now come to the Hawks which differ from falcons in having proportionately shorter and more rounded wings and from all except the Harriers by having the tibia (thigh) and tarsus nearly equal in length.

The Harriers though easily recognised as a genus, often give a lot of trouble in picking out a particular species. There are ten species and some of them are so very like each other in colouring, the male of one being very similar to the female of another, or the young of one and the female of another, that it is difficult to know, which is which sometimes. A little practice and familiarity, however, will soon dispel any doubt on the subject. The harriers unlike hawks in their habits, are always to be seen flying over fields, marshes and grass and prefer sitting, when they do sit, on the ground to trees.

The genera, Astur, Lophospizias and Accipiter may be called the typical hawks and separated from falcons, as I have already mentioned, in having shorter and more rounded wings, and the tibia and tarsus nearly equal. Astur (three species) Lophopizias (one species) and Accipiter (two species) can be thus distinguished from each other.

Astur.—Size moderate or small; tarsus scentellated behind. Bill from gape ⅔ or ¾ length of mid-toe without claw. No crest Lophopizias.—A small crest; otherwise like Astur.

Accipiter.—Bill from gape about ½; mid-toe without claw. Tarsi very slender, long and middle toe projecting far beyond the others.

The Genus Pernis (Honey-Buzzards) is at once distinguished from the rest of the family by having the lores (the space in front of the eyes) and sides of the head, like the forehead and chin, covered with small scab like feathers, without any bristles or bristly ends. Bill weak, elongate, and not much hooked at the end.

Machærhamphus, the next genus "sesembles Pernis in its densely feathered lores, but differs in having a very compressed bill and wide gape and long unequal toes and claws These two genera each have one species only, known in India.

There are now six genera, comprising 17 species left and since they in many ways resemble the next genus Falco, I shall merely quote Blandford's Key (page 332, Vol, III), to the genera.

Falco 'Bill with one tooth on each side of upper mandible" (this is to distingnish from Baza which has two).
(a) Tail ⅓ to ⅔ as long as wing rounded not graduated.
(b) Wing never under six inches.
(c) Second quill longest, first much longer that fourth.
(d) Sexes alike; foot long, mid-toe 1·25″ to 2·25″.

Erythropus (d) Sexes dissimilar; foot small, mid-toe about 1″.

Aesalon (c) Second and third quills sub-equal, also, first and fourth.

Tinnunculus (a) Tail graduated, middle tail feathers exceeding outer by an inch or more; upper parts largely brick red; sexes dissimilar.

Microhierax (b) Size very small, wing under 5″.

Poliohierax (a) Tail nearly as long as wing; sexes dissimilar.

THE PUPPIES.

HAVE you ever in a moment of mental aberration been induced to walk a foxhound pup? If not, then be warned in time—follow the immortal advice of Mr. Punch and, "don't!"

Some fine morning, in early summer, when the world seems very peaceful, very restful, and a great content pervades your being, they come and tell you that the huntsman has just stepped round and "would be glad if you will kindly speak to him for a moment—he won't keep you any time'—such a simple innocent message! Who would dream of anything sinister, any hidden danger in that little mild request! But if you have been there before, if ever you have played that game in a former state, it will be enough—you will need no second warning, but will turn a deaf ear to any request for interviews at that season of the year. If you are wise, no power on earth will induce you to face old Dan—discretion is the better part in that case most decidedly! Say you are ill—dead—gone away—anything, no matter how unlikely or improbable it may sound, but as you value your peace of mind, don't let him get speech of you, for so surely as you do you are a lost soul!

Nothing can save you, no providence will intervene on your behalf. You may struggle and protest in vain. No objections no reasons, however cogent they may appear on the surface, will have the least effect. Your fate is sealed from the moment you are face to face with the old huntsman and he knows it! Wily old varmint!

Escape you may once—twice perhaps, but in the end you will be caught—Dan is wary—Dan is cunning—Dan knows more about you and your movements than you have any idea of—he will track you down in the end with a cleverness and a tact worthy of a diplomatist.

With a friendly jovial expression on his narled old visage, he strolls into the yard where you are smoking your pipe and watching the gees being rubbed down after their journey, feeling that the world is using you very well this pleasant summer evening; the horses look as fresh as paint though they have just done fifteen miles good at a spanking pace, and there is just time for a pipe before the dressing gong goes; when upon this calm and blissfull scene the sword of fate descends!

Heralded by a chorus of barking and yelping Nemesis appears in the genial guise of old Dan with the fateful basket under his arm. and at a blow all your content is scattered. Visions of untold atrocities, unparalelled wickedness, of vice, of deceit, of immorality inconceivable rise before your prophetic eye!

Forebodings of angry infuriated gardeners, of tearful inconsolable maids, of mangled boots and gloves, of slaughtered chickens and martyred cats, the long unlovely vista of compensation, apologies, humblepie stretches away through the coming months and you harden your heart and make ready the spacious argument, brace yourself for patter, always with the terrible slinking at your heart begotten of the fore knowledge of defeat.

Old Dan comes in jauntily—he knows he's got you at his mercy, that his enemy has been given into his hand, and he means to deal gently, very gently but firmly with you.

So in the end you put up your weapons and return his cheery greeting, chat a bit on the prospects the cubbing season, enquire after the hunters, and finally ask what he has got in the basket.

"Ah! there your are, Sir, I thought you'd be enquiring after that Sir. I just picked out the very best couple of pups of all the litters and put 'em aside for you. 'No, 'ses I, 'you can't have none not till the capting be served'—and I stuck to it though they be terrible set upon havin' on 'em."

He opens the basket and lifts out the little beggars—as soft and sound and innocent a looking little pair as ever delighted the heart of a child!

As a smile breaks over your countenance old Dan beams up at you from the pup which he is vainly endeavouring to prop up on its most unsteady legs.

"As fine a couple of pups as ever I had, and a credit they'll be to you, Sir, if you'll excuse the liberty," he says, getting up and touching his hat.

"I'm sure I hope so, Dan, but there's the gong—I must be off—go into the kitchen and tell them to give you a bit of supper," and you ruefully make your way towards the home.

"Thank 'ee kindly Sir, but if I may make so bold I'd rather ask John here to draw I a mug of beer. I wont stop for no supper, thank 'ee Sir, not to-night I wont." He knows better than to show his nose inside after the scurvy trick he has just played them!

Didn't Mary Jane extract a promise from him last year that no more puppies should be brought so long as she retained her present situation—did he hot give his sacred word of honour to Mrs. Cook, only last Christmas, that never again would he persuade the Master to walk a puppy! He is not even sure that he cares much about meeting the mistress herself, though he plumes himself on his "way with the ladies!" Indeed he rather regrets for the moment that he risked the delay for the sake of the glass of beer as he hears her voice and sees her approaching from the garden.

"What are you doing, Jack? What have you got there? Oh! you promised you never would again! Oh! Jack!!"

She pauses horror stricken at the awful sight—then runs forward with a little cry and, vanquished in a moment by the confiding appealing gaze of the litte monsters falls upon her knees and gathers them up in her arms in an ecstacy of adoration.

Dan hastily puts down the empty mug and glancing whimsically at you in sympathy for a fellow culprit.

"Good evenin' my Lady, I knew you'd like to have 'em and there is no one I'd so soon trust 'em to beggin your pardon ma'am. 'No', I ses, 'no you don't touch one of 'em not till the capting be served 'so there they be, and two beauties as ever you see for sure. I come up special with 'em myself so as you shouldn't be disappointed and there shouldn't be no mistake!"

"Oh! but Dan, I really didn't want them, you know they are dreadfully mischievous. I can't tell you half the things the last couple did, and Cook says she wont stay if we ever have them again! Oh! you sweet little fat thing! do look Jack, its trying to kiss me! You angels! Oh! you little darlings—I don't believe—I really don't believe these two will be so naughty, they have such lovely brown eyes—so innocent, so trusting. Did they want a kind home, and had they lost their mother, and could they drink some milk all by their sweet selves—so they shall" and she bears them off without another protest.

'I'll be moving now I think, Sir, and I'll call in a week or two to see how they are gettin' on—but they'll do—they'll do right enough—good night to you, Sir, and thank 'ee kindly!" And this is all very fine and sounds plausible enough, but old experience points to a very different tale to follow, and it is in a chastened spirit that you follow the wife of your bosom into the house.

For the first few weeks they are "angels," "sweet darlings" "precious ducks" and bowls of bread and milk, minced chicken, and delicacies of every description are lavished upon them, the entire household become their slaves, even Mrs. Cook and Mary Jane fall under the spell of their infant charms and the baby monarch of the nursery abdicates in their favour. You take comfort from this peaceful start, and try to crush the weary suspicion that it is but the lull before the storm.

Sure enough it burst forth at last after many ominous growls and smothered mutterings.

'Has any one seen they pups?" asks John, putting his head one sunny August afternoon in the back kitchen. "I left em in the yard not half a hour ago and I can't see nothing of 'em now and I've looked all round. 'Spose they be a n't in the house be they through the side door being left open by chance? If so they be in mischief I'se warrant!"

"In the house!" cries Mrs. Cook in consternation. "Lord preserve us!' and off she flies to spread the alarm alas! too late to prevent the devastation following in the wake of those angels.

The larder has been visited, broken chins, mangled chicken, vanished cream testify to their presence there.

"Just let me catch them. I'll give them something to remember this day s work! but they had no intention of waiting there for Mrs. Cook, they had other matters on hand demanding immediate attention, so they merrily frolicked off upstairs to take a look at Mary Jane's new Sunday hat, and when they had quite done with it no one else had much use for that hat, so they ate her soap, tore up her young man's last love letter and lightheartedly pursued their course to pastures new, finally selecting madam's black velvet dinner gown with discriminating good taste as a suitable spot for their after-dinner nap!

They are brought to master for condign punishment and sentence of banishment, and imprisonment in the kennel is pronounced while they blink at him unabashed and unashamed with their heads on one side and an air of mild and hurt surprise.

From the kennel they watch the proceedings of their quandom freinds and dismally howl as Cook with irate glance ostentatiously pours out a savoury mess for the chickens and ducks, reserving a special portion for the dignified old retriever, they lift up their voices in anguish at the sight of their enemies thus regaled before their eyes while to their hard lot falls only the arid comfort of a Spratt's dog biscuit.

Bitter tears they weep, and woefully they bemoan themselves, almost calling aloud in the depths of their misery, till "Master" can bear it no longer, and steals like a thief in the night, horribly ashamed of himself and fearful of consequence, undoes the chain and sets them free. Wildly they leap upon him, covering him with slobbery caresses, almost beside themselves with joy as they rush madly before him from the yard.

"Now just you behave yourselves and don't let me catch you up to any more tricks!"

Lovingly they lay their noses on your knee, looking up with their honest doggie eyes full of affection and contrition. They do anything wrong? Not for worlds! Chase and kill chickens? Well only little ones. Steal eggs? But they were not fresh eggs, only sat on eggs!

Broke into the dairy and licked the butter and cream? But who could resist such lovely butter! Spoilt Mary Jane's Sunday hat? Yes, but it was such an ugly vulgar hat and now mistress has given her a much nicer one!

Oh! no they meant no harm, they were only living their lives as the good God meant them to when He put them into this most excellent world!

Tired of marelizing they go and "help" old Jenkins to plant out his autumn bedding. Look at them! did ever you see such a picture? One on each side they sit as grave as a couple of judges, watching his proceedings with curiosity and interest. He spuddles a little hole in the soft moist earth, takes a small plant from the box on his wheelbarrow and dibbles it in, pressing the earth firmly round its roots ever and anon casting a svour vindictie look at the watching foxhounds.

"Nice pair of beauties you are!" he remarks with withering sarcasm.

The hounds look at each other—hurt and shocked at this exhibition of an unforgiving nature, shake their heavy heads, and the moment he turns his back to fetch a rake have every one of those interesting little plants out, proceed to dig feverishly in search of hidden bones in the middle of the carefully prepared bed, finally rushing madly off in pursuit of "Master's" distant voice, feeling it of vital importance to get within reach of his protection before the return of Jenkins to the scene of their late operations

Jenkins announces that though he has "worked there man and boy for close on twenty years he wont stop—no, not another day if them owdacious rascals is not sent back to the kennels with a flea in their ear'—John, patient longsuffering John, opines that "wat they want is a taste of stick, but master he won't hear if it, so there 'tis." As for Cook she utters dark and sinister threats of a most blood-curling nature. Mary Jane is hardly to be appeased even by "that pretty hat with the pink roses I wore on Sunday, I don't want it any more, and I am sure it would suit you so well," as flushed and tearful she exhibits all that is left of her own Sunday headgear!

Poor Mary Jane! She has really tried to befriend the infant hounds for the sake of Dan's wheedling tongue and this is how they reward her. Even the Master's patience is flagging, when he finds his driving gloves a wet and much chewed mess one day, and the next his pet slippers are discovered half eaten under the water butt.

You harden your heart in vain, how is it possible to chastise such eager ardent affection, how repel such complete and trusting devotion, they follow you about with an air of innocent wisdom and a wholehearted love, very sustaining and flattering to the heart of man.

With a sigh half of relief and half of regret you hand them over at last to old Dan when their time has come to put away childish things and set out on the serious business of life. They regard him questioningly, but with friendly eyes, never did hound look upon him with other than friendly eyes, and as they are led forth they seem to know that they are saying goodbye for good to the home that has sheltered them, to the friends they love, and they hold back, straining on the couples with tears on their faces and longing piteous looks—they don't understand, they don't want to go, and they lift up their voices in a howl of protest.

Away they go, goodbye to their tricks and trials, to their blundering puppy affection. When next we meet they will greet as with the dignity befitting their age and station.

Is it more relief or regret that we feel? "Tis hard to say! Many are the attendant trials, yet one cannot but feel a thrill of reflected pride when the hound we see leading the pack throughout a fast forty minutes on the grass, or may be catching the eye of the judges at Peterborough, is the pup that we had at walk.

LUBRICATING OILS.—[2422]—It may be instructive to your numerous readers to have the experiences of a motor car experimentalist on the behaviour of lubricating oils for motor work. In the first onset I tried various sorts of oils, all of which left deposits of carbon and gumming matter in the cylinders and valves. These deposits are serious drawbacks, not only to the working of the pistons and valves, but also interfere with the proper sparking at the ignition plugs. I then tried the Valvoline Oil Co.'s oils, using "Wilburine" for the cylinders and "Valvoline" for the bearings, etc.; these being quite pure mineral oils, no deposits either of carbon or gumming matter were left. Every time the pistons, etc., have been examined they were quite bright, clean and well lubricated. The valves also keep in good condition and require very little regrinding. I have been quite free from sparking troubles since using the above lubricants. Any dust that alights on the working parts is easily wiped off, whereas with other oils dirt stuck fast through gumming.

Very much smaller quantities of these oils ("Wilburine" and "Valvoline") about one-third to one-quarter, are required, which more than balances the extra first cost. The wearing surfaces are besides in a magnificent condition. These advantages —viz., high-class lubrication, freedom from deposit in cylinders, gum in bearings, absence of sparking troubles, are too important to be neglected by any motorist.

There is a tendency to use various greases, instead of oils. Engineers have over and over again proved that greases give much greater frictional losses than oils; with motor car engines and bearings the lubricant that gives the least possible friction is the best.

I have referred to the advantages the motorist gets. I will mention another advantage these oils have to those whom the motorist passes, viz., the absence of the fried-fish-shop smell so often noted. Several persons have been very much struck by the absence of smell; even when the car has been standing for some time with the engines running, no trace of offensive odour has been apparent to the bystanders.

I mention these experiences, having no interest in the Valvoline Oil Co., that others may be benefited and save themselves trouble and their neighbours some annoyance.

ANTIDOTES FOR SNAKE POISON.

AN important communication on this subject has recently been published in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society of London by Dr. Leonard Rogers, of the Indian Medical Service, which gives promise that before many years are over a remedy will be found for snake poison of every description, and consequently that where such remedies are at hand death from this source will practically cease. We fear, however, that it will be many a long day before remedies of this description, to say nothing of the requisite surgical aid, can be brought within reach of the ordinary up-country Indian villager, and that the appalling annual list of deaths from snake-bite is not likely to show any noticeable diminution in our time.

Some time ago it was ascertained by our physiological investigators that the substance known as Calmette's antivenin, which is prepared from the poison itself is an effectual antidote against cobra venom; and it became in consequence important to determine whether the action of the venom of other snakes belonging to the colubrine family is of the same nature and consequently whether Calmette's serum would be likely to prove effectual against these also, or whether it would be necessary to prepare a special serum to suit the poison of each particular kind of snake. Dr. Rogers had previously demonstrated that the poison of the Indian sea snakes is identical in its physiological action with that of the cobra, although it is of considerably greater power, and consequently there appeared considerable hope that it might be possible to prepare a single antidote which would be effectual against the venom of all snakes of the colubrine group.

In order to test this theory Dr. Rogers obtained the dry poison of the giant cobra or hamadriad (Naia bungarus), as well as of the banded krait (Bungarus fasciatus) and certain other Indian colubrine snakes. Nor was this all, for the experimenter likewise directed his attention towards the possibility of obtaining an antidote for the venom of the noxious and formidable snakes collectively known as vipers and pit-vipers (the latter so named from depressions in the head), and for this purpose obtained the dried poison of the American rattle-snakes, of the African puff-adder, and of the Indian Russell's viper (Vipera russelli) and Trimerosaurus anamalaensis. In obtaining specimens of the dried poison of the Indian species, and likewise for the results of experiments on living animals, the author has been much assisted by Rai R. B. Sanyal, Bahadur, C.M.Z.S., the well-known, energetic superintendent of the Calcutta Zoological Gardens at Alipore.

The results of the first set of experiments went to show that the physiological action of the poison of the giant cobra (Naia bungarus), the banded krait (Bungarus fasciatus), and the common krait (B. cæruleus) is practically identical with that of the cobra and the sea snakes. The next experiments undertaken were for the purpose of testing the effect of Calmette's serum on animals into whose blood the poison of these various species have been severally received. Naturally it would be expected that the amount of serum required in each case would vary, according to the nature and size of the snake by which the poison had been produced. The hamadriad, for instance, being a much larger snake than the cobra, would naturally be supposed to inject a larger quantity of venom into a wound, which would seem to require a proportionately larger quantity of serum for its neutralisation. Actual experiment showed, however, that in the case of a single specimen the amount of venom ejected by a hamadriad was not greater than that produced by a cobra ; but the results of one such experiment are scarcely sufficient. On the other hand, in the case of the common krait although the amount of venom ejected is much less than that of the cobra, yet the toxic power of this venom is infinitely greater. Moreover it has been demonstrated that the neutralising action of Calmette's serum on krait poison is much less than in the case of cobra venom, so that the dose of the antidote has to be very largely increased in order to be effectual. In the case of the banded krait the large size of the snake is compensated by the relative weakness of its venom.

On the whole, the data afforded by the various experiments conducted under the superintendence of Dr. Rogers have turned out of a somewhat disappointing nature, in so far as they point to the present available serum not being strong enough to be of any great protective value in the case of poisoning by the Indian sea snakes and colubrines when a full dose of venom has been injected by these reptiles. It is nevertheless distinctly encouraging to find that the serum has a very definite action against the venom of all these serpents, which will doubtless make it of service when injected in large doses, especially in cases where the amount of venom received by the patient has been only slightly above the minimum lethal amount. If, moreover, the serums could be made of greater strength than has hitherto been found practicable, there is little doubt that they would prove of inestimable value in the treatment of this class of snake-bite. It is suggested by Dr. Rogers that in future it would be advisable to use a mixture of the venom of various species of colubrine snakes in the preparation of the antivenin, as this would, he thinks, be more likely to give rise to a thoroughly effectual serum.

On the other hand, as might not unreasonably have been expected, the result of other experiments is to show most clearly that Calmette's serum has no action whatever in counteracting the effects of the venom of snakes of the viperine group, and consequently that it will be necessary to prepare a special kind of serum for cases of this description. Even if such a serum could be made, the necessity for two remedies it may be added, tends to increase the difficulty connected with bringing cases of snake-bite under effectual control, seeing that it is necessary to discriminate between the different species or at all events between the two chief groups, before taking steps to neutralise the venom.

Former experiments were thought to indicate that the venom of snakes of the viperine group caused death by the production of blood-clots, whereas that of the colubrine group proved fatal by paralysis of the respiratory centres. Certain observations tended, however, to indicate that the blood-clotting was a secondary accompaniment of the injury and that there must be some other primary effect which had previously escaped detection. From the results of his experiments Dr. Rogers arrives at the conclusion that the essential deadly action of the viperine poisons as a class is a paralysis of the vaso-motor centre, that is to say of the heart, very similar to that of the respiratory centre, that is to say the lungs, produced by the colubrine venom. Accordingly, in order to counteract the effects of the poison of the former group it is apparently necessary to prepare from viper poison an antivenin on the same lines as Calmette's serum. Support to this view is afforded by the fact that some time ago Dr. D. D. Cunningham, working in Calcutta, actually succeeded in protecting a goat from the effects of a bite by Russell's viper by means of repeated subcutaneous injections of the venom of the same reptile. There is, therefore, every probability that such a serum would prove of the highest value in neutralising the effect of the venom of viperine snakes.

Till such a serum be available, all that can be done is to endeavour to mitigate the effects of the poison by means of suitable empirical measures as may suggest themselves. "The most promising of these," observes the author. "which have been found to improve the blood pressure in my experiments are, firstly, mechanical pressure such as a binder applied to the abdomen, to which might be added binders applied to the limbs so as to conserve as much blood as possible for the urgent needs of maintaining the circulation through the brain and medulla, and, secondly, such drugs as contract the peripheral vessels of which the most powerful are adrenal extract and nicotine. The former in particular has a most beneficial and lasting effect, so long as the vaso-motor centre is not completely paralysed, as in an experiment with rattle snake poison. In borderland cases there is good reason to hope that some lives may be saved by such rational lines of treatment based on the pressure of vaso-motor paresis."

Although the results are not altogether quite equal to what we might have hoped, there is good reason for believing that Dr. Rogers is on the right track, and it may be hoped that no efforts will be spared to endeavour to produce the serum he advocates.

J. C. Shaw, the once famous bowler, hailed from Nottingham. During the early part of his career, J. C. proved a dreadful failure as a batsman, and the sorry figure he cut when wielding the willow often caused him to become the target for unlimited chaff. He was once engaged in a match at Trent Bridge. Prior to playing he was noticed to be trying the shape of several bats, and old George Parr eventually asked him what kind of one he required. "I wants one as 'ull coot wull," retorted Shaw, looking at the stock before him with a dissatisfied air. "Coot wull!" echoed the veteran player. "Better get hold of one as 'ull stop straight 'uns' Jim."

Sporting Notes.

THE sport at the Calcutta Fourth Monsoon Meeting was not improved by the usual Saturday downpour of rain which descended with unfailing regularity and volume. Apparently racing is not favoured by the powers that control the weather, but as a practical joke, this invariable trick of a dry week followed by a drenching Saturday is losing its novelty. The racing on the whole was quite up to the average, though the attendance was poor. The ring were very strongly represented, while the outside fraternity, to whom the guileless Aryan readily, and it is to be feared in many cases unwisely, entrusts his hard-earned dibs, were there as the sand upon the sea shore.

All six races filled fairly satisfactorily and an almost record field of nine turned out for the open hurdle race, a great improvement upon the numbers which this race has drawn hitherto. The only absentee out of the ten entered was Daffodil, for the ride on whom we should fancy there were not too many candidates, as he is by no means a safe conveyance. The rain cleared off before the time fixed for the first race and an exceedingly muggy afternoon resulted. The going was fetlock deep in mud and water and as a consequence the top weights in several cases found their burdens more than they could carry home successfully.

Proceedings opened with the Pony Handicap for which six were saddled, Perfect having the call of the market by a point from Second Thought. Irish and All Fours were the first to show to the front, the latter establishing a lead to the big tree where he was done with and Perfect assumed the lead. The mud, however, proved too much for the game little mare and she could only struggle home a length behind Second Thought who gradually wore her down from the distance.

The Belvedere Plate provided a pretty race. Kittylea looked to have the best of it on paper, but she is apparently stale as was also Naiades, the latter having also a big leg as a result of rapping the timber too flippantly in her last outing. The chestnut mare was installed favourite, but the tip among the knowing ones was Actress, who was making her first appearance this season. To a good start Bob, Gauntlet and Odin led over the first two flights, when Odin assumed a lead, the rear being brought up by Naiades who was fencing in a somewhat slovenly manner. At the fifth flight Gauntlet overjumped himself and came down, Bloss fortunately escaping undamaged. Parole then drew out in pursuit of Actress who had established a lead of some lengths, but could never get on terms with her, the grey mare winning in a common canter by ten lengths: Bob three lengths away third.

Yuletide and Shylock divided favouritism for the Pony Hurdles for which a field of five were under Mr. Bates' orders Jack Spratt made all the running to the fourth flight, where Shylock made a bad mistake which nearly resulted in a dissolution of partnership. Yuletide came to the front at the home turn and staying on won literally pulling up, by six lengths.

Eight faced the machine for the September Plate. Profit being made a hot favourite at even money, Sunshine next in demand at 5 to 2. Profit cut out the work to the 3 furlongs where Hello went to the front attended by Invincible and after a pretty race, Mr. Smith's gelding landed the verdict by a length and a half, Sunshine being beaten out of second place by a head.

A field of nine went to the post for the Entally Plate, of whom the public selected the top weight, Winklet, to carry their investments in addition to his burden of 10st. 7lbs. Had the going been dry he would probably have had no difficulty in doing it, but the mud proved his undoing.

Jacinth took the lead to the turn where Winklet with Fusilier and Morris in attendance came to the head of affairs. At the distance Fusilier looked all over a winner, but after a good race the chestnut completed a real day in the country for Mr. H. E. Smith, by landing a short head verdict. Golden Tip was the most fancied of the seven starters for the Maiden Plate, but the uncertain tempered

The Ahmednagar Horse Show will be held in the Stewart Cotton Market, opening on the 29th October. There will be ten stewards, including the Commissioner of the Central Division and the Collector of Poona, while the Judges appointed are Colonel R. Broome, A.R.D., Major Jolsen, C.V.D. Captain F. D. Hunt, A.V.D., and Captain A. Hewlett, A. R. D. The Managing Committee is also a strong body. About Rs. 2,200 will be distributed in prizes, which will be given on the last day of the show and a silver medal will be awarded for the best branded mare or filly, the owner being a bonâ fide breeder.

The programme of the Darjeeling Sky Races appears further on. There will be two days—the 17th and 19th October—with eight races on the card for each day. Entries for all races close at 6 P.M. on Saturday, 15th October.

The Southern Mahratta Autumn Races, which will be held at Belgaum, have been fixed for the 3rd and 5th November. From the prospectus, which we publish in our Turf Columns, it will be seen that this year all the races are of the value of Rs. 200 with Rs. 100 to the second and Rs. 50 to the third, whereas last year there was nothing for third horse in any race. The executive are offering a good deal more money this year, and as they have framed their programme to attract most classes, there should be a good meeting. We are glad to see Captain G. B. Marriott is Honorary Secretary again.

A notification in the last issue of the C. T. C. Calendar tells us that "Pending the enquiry into the objection to the pony Moonlight, the classing of the pony is suspended, and the determination of its class as a country-bred on the 8th of April last is no longer in force."

Final entries for the Poona Races and Steeplechases are published in the usual place. First and second entries will be found in our issues of 11th August and 1st September.

A Gymkhana was held at Annandale, Simla, on the 10th instant and was very successful though the attendance was not large. Five events figured on the programme, proceedings opening with Tent-pegging, in which Captain Jones Mortimer was first with three pegs out of four. The Bending Race for ladies came next, and was easily won by Mrs. Crocker, who was the only competitor to carry her ball to the winning post. Six couples entered for the Lloyd Lindsay—couples to jump a hurdle and break bottles with stones, best time to win. Captain and Mrs. Rivett Carnac tied with Captain Forester and Mrs. Monkhouse, the latter couple winning in the run off. Time 2mins. 9secs. Another half dozen couples competed in the Rescue Race in which the man on horseback was to lead lady's horse to the lady who would then mount and the couple complete the course. This provided an excellent race and was won by Captain Jones Mortimer and Mrs. Wormald. The Whistling Stakes brought the afternoon's sport to a close. Eleven pairs entered, Mrs. Monkhouse and Captain Jones Mortimer winning easily with the tune "Tommy Atkins."

This week's English mail brought us number one, Vol. I of The Winning Post, a penny publication edited by Robert S. Sievier. In its appearance and general get-up it bears a strong likeness to the Mirror of the Turf.

Messrs. Everett and Company, the London sporting publishers, have sent us out a specimen of their six penny packet of picture postcards. The postcards are drawn by Harrington Bird in colours from photographs and represent the principal winners on the flat and across country.

Barring the City Plate, all the races on the card for the Fifth Calcutta Monsoon Meeting have filled well: they will be found in the usual place.

We are reminded of the opening of the Bengal shooting season by the receipt of a complimentary copy of Messrs. Manton and Co.'s "Sportsman's Pocket Register" in which we have for some seasons recorded our modest bags of snipe. The book is also ruled for all kinds of game and is arranged for keeping records of the ground shot over, the number of guns out, with pages for shooting notes and big game memoranda.

From the address of the Chairman of the London General Omnibus Company we infer that the passing of the horse (at least as far as that Company is concerned) will soon be an accomplished fact, as the motor is to be fitted to all their vehicles. This will throw on the market a large number of superior animals, and though the majority are geldings and will most likely be snapped up by the military authorities for artillery requirements, there is a goodly assortment of mares in this stud, rising six or seven, that should throw foals to our selected country-bred sires eminently fitted for general purposes here. Crossed as suggested, the progeny would lose the heaviness of the Cleveland strain, while from the sires' side ought to obtain the requisite activity for cavalry purposes or general riding. The probable early sale of this desirable stock is worth the attention of Government and those private breeders who are succeeding so well on the Jhelum and Chenab irrigated paddocks. To those acquainted with both classes of animals it will strike them we ought to raise from them a breed similar to those which came down in strings from Kabul, ere the Amir Shere Ali prohibited the export.

Though Assam cannot boast of the great sea serpent or the big gooseberry as each slack season comes round, there seems no dearth of rogue hathees, each district sporting at least one. A reward of Rs. 50 is now offered for the destruction of a short-tailed 9-foot rogue haunting the east side of the Bijni reserve. Judging by the description in the Gazette the trophies are not likely to tempt the sportsman, and though the Rani of Bijni supplements the munificent (?) Government reward Her Highness omits to state the amount.

Surely it is time the authorities should wake up to the necessity of offering something adequate for the destruction of these beasts, for each cold weather furnishes proof that they are increasing in number and growing bolder in their pranks. We have the highest respect for Mr. Fuller, but are of opinion that great benefit would accrue to the cultivators in Assam were his "special" derailed or his camp raided by elephants; such an event would no doubt add an additional cypher to the amount of the reward, making it worth the while of shikaris following the brutes up.

Once again comes a wail from Rangoon and outstations in Lower Burma, that the splendid little indigenous tats are being rapidly replaced by Australian ponies. Well one cannot stem the tide of fashion and so long as riders demand taller animals the indigenous tat must take a back seat. The only remedy lies in breeding from imported mares; the other way about would not result in much increase in size the first generation, owing to the acknowledged natural law in equine breeding. There is plenty of stock in the upper province, but the worst of the matter is that, owners, finding no market for their youngsters, may become indifferent as to mating, leaving all to promiscuous intercourse resulting in deterioration such as we witness among the undersized ponies and donkeys of India.

Another Channel swim that failed! Burgess, the Frenchman, tried on the 7th instant; the sea was rough and he had to give up when only three miles from the French coast. He established a speed record for the Channel, however, by covering 22 miles in nine hours. Captain Matthew Webb swam across the English Channel, diving from the Admiralty Pier, Dover, and touched the Calais sands, France, swimming 21 hours 45 minutes, 24th and 25th August 1875, the greatest swim ever recorded. Captain Webb was drowned in his attempt to swim through the Niagara rapids, 24th July 1883.

In an attempt to swim the Channel from Cape Grisnez to Dover on 24th and 25th August 1901, M. A. Holbein reached within five miles of the English coast and within seven miles of Dover, but the water was so rough that he had then to be assisted aboard ship. He was in the sea about 12 hours and three-quarters. Next to that of Captain Webb, this is the greatest long-distance feat on record. In a further attempt to cross the Channel from Cape Grisnez to Dover, made on 27th and 28th August 1902, M. A. Holbein swam for 23 hours 21 minutes, but had to be taken out of the water when only half a mile from land. In an attempt to swim the Channel from the English side, on 1st September 1903, M. A. Holbein arrived within four miles of Calais, but was then drifted out by the tide and had to give up after being in the water 17 hours and 20 minutes.

A most appalling "gun accident" story comes from the Midlands. A gardener shot a little boy dead, in the garden with a gun which he kept in the potting shed. His story was that the child had been annoying him, and then ran away, and that he took down the gun (a muzzle loader), pointed it at the boy, and "snapped" the hammer. It had a copper cap on, the piece duly went off and killed the child. Among the obvious questions which arise is why any employer allows a servant, other than a keeper, to have a gun. It should be ground for instant dismissal. But why a gardener, of all people, should have a gun passes belief. There is no garden in which it is safe to fire a gun. Even if fired into a fruit tree, it does more damage than a dozen blackbirds, destroying the fruit-bearing branches.

Experiments on animals with music have had varying results. At the London "Zoo," says the Liecester Post, it was found that the moment the monkeys heard a lively air they were quiet and listened intently. The elephants took no notice whatever, nor did the rhinoceros seem to care whether he had music at dinner time or not. The hippopotamus, however, rose, wagged his huge head from side to side, and again sank back into his pool. The lion seemed greatly excited, rushing against the bars of his cage, and then paced up and down until the music ceased. The pumas jumped up at the first note of "Home, Sweet Home," and came forward with signs of satisfaction. A coyote came up to the bars of its cage, and when the music stopped put out its paw as if begging for more melody. The old tiger seemed to listen with pleasure to the sweet, low melodies, but roared at the louder and livelier airs. The crocodile appeared to listen with pleasure, opening his mouth and sighing or gurgling. In Paris, when two musicians played before the bears, they looked all around them, scented the air, and then walked towards the musicians, and paced up and down the pit. The condor seemed most powerfully moved by the melodies. The eagles were aroused only at the most strident tones of the flute, remaining dignifiedly statuesque at the rest of the music. The penguins immediately marched around the yard in time to the music. The kangaroo was much startled and, seating himself on his tail, immediately took the attitude of a boxer ready for all comers.

Some new regulations for the importation of sporting arms and ammunition into the Transvaal have recently been made. Cape Colony, Natal, and the Orange River Colony will allow arms and ammunition—for the importation of which into the Transvaal a permit has been secured from the Transvaal Colonial Secretary's office—to be forwarded to the Transvaal on the following conditions:—Cape Colony: That the Transvaal permit to import be accompanied by a license signed by the Colonial Secretary, Cape Town, except in the cases of Port Elizabeth, East London, and Kimberley, the resident magistrates at which places have been authorised to sign such licenses or permits on behalf of the Colonial Secretary, Cape Town. Natal: That the Transvaal permit to import be supported by a permit signed by the Controller of Arms, Pietermaritzburg. The laws of Natal do not permit of the delegation of this power to the magistrate in that Colony. Orange River Colony: That the Transvaal permit to import be countersigned by the magistrate of the district in that Colony where the arms or ammunition may be. Every person in possession of firearms must obtain an annual license for them, commencing on 1st July and ending 30th June following. The fee is 10s. for a rifle, and 5s. for any other firearm. A fine not exceeding £250 can be imposed on anyone having possession of firearms without a license.

After 75 years of captivity, a female eagle owl has just died in an aviary in England. Brought from Norway in 1829, this bird within the last 30 years has reared no less than 90 young. Although the eagle owl is reputed to live to a great age, there appear to be but few recorded instances where the age could be definitely ascertained. A golden eagle which died at Vienna in 1719 was known to have been captured 104 years previously and a falcon, of what species it is not recorded, is said to have attained an age of 162 years. A white-headed vulture taken in 1706 died in the Zoological Gardens at Vienna in 1824, thus living 118 years in captivity.

The list of dog judges at the Mussoorie Show, fixed for 30th instant, has not yet been finally settled, but we understand in all probability they will be as follows:—Greyhounds, Rampur, Foxhounds, and Bull-dogs, Lieutenant-Colonel Rennie; Fox, Welsh, Scottish, and Airedale Terriers, Retrievers and Dachshunds, Major J. H. Gwynne; Bull Terriers, and Eastern Dogs, Rev. J. P. Meik, Irish Terriers; Mrs. D'ffolliott Powell.; Pointers and Setters, Mr. Kettlewell; Great Danes and Spaniels, Mr. Clifford Batten. The remaining classes—Major Gwynne.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—The soldier men have appropriated the inside of the racecourse during the entire past week and their grand stand gay with bunting and completely obstructing the view from the Grand Stand proper has rendered racing practically impossible and the racing fraternity have accordingly had to "stand down" for a week—an enforced rest which possibly many a poor gee gee with forelegs that he "feels" is glad of. The Annual Assault-at-Arms is rather wearisome for the casual observer, but its advantages are too obvious to be gainsaid. For the general public the jumping competition for officers, the musical ride and the tugs-of-war usually the most exciting events. The first mentioned event attracted numerous entries and the jumping was on the whole admirable, and they sav of an appreciably higher order than last year. While the winner was rightly, so placed the popular verdict seems to be that the judging was not wholly above criticism. There was considerable astonishment as more than one of the lucky "leppers" passed into the second round and at the exclusion of several who were excluded therefrom. The Musical "Ride" of the 33rd Cavalry was a complicated and altogether admirable performance and was greeted with salvos of applause. The waits between many of the events seemed needlessly long, but it is possibly a difficult show to run punctually.

The executive of the W. I. T. C. have, I see, devoted an entire day to a "Captain's Meeting." Whether a series of closed races sufficient to afford an afternoon's satisfactorily amusement to the public will fill, remains to be seen. It is a sporting effort to encourage gentlemen owners and riders of limited means and it is to be hoped it will meet with the success many think it deserves.

Captain Donald Cameron, of the Imperial Cadet Corps, met with a nasty accident at polo in a practice game the pony he was riding crossing his legs and rolling over on him. Captain Cameron was stunned for several minutes and the fall was such a nasty looking one that people were for a time anxious. It has, I hear on enquiry, had no worse result than a broken collar bone, but even that is sufficiently annoying since it will persumably entirely prevent the gallant officer competing in the open tournament. The worst of luck.

The kind heartedness of sporting men in cases of genuine desert is proverbial, and there is far more real Christianity and generosity I verily believe among them than among the canting hypocrites who raise their hands and eyeballs skywards in virtuous indignation at the name of a racehorse or a bookmaker, and when a case of sore need comes in their way put their hands in their pockets and—keep them there. There are few more deserving charities in the world than our Hospitals and recognizing this Chard, the well-known and popular bookmaker, instituted a Café Chantant in the grounds of "Tattersalls" in aid of the Sassoon Hospital. A most excellent bill of fare was provided, much hitherto undiscovered talent being unearthed, and a most enjoyable evening was passed to the great benefit of the fund in question. One would think that a free and easy Café Chantant in a private compound was about the last place that military red tape need have become entangled, but an order that mess uniform should be worn by officers attending was issued, with the natural result that several kept away who would gladly otherwise have attended and many rupees were lost to a thoroughly deserving cause. Even of good things one can at times have just a little too much.

The poor Poona Gymkhana XI cannot apparently get into form and their record during the present season is far from a brilliant or epoch making one. The 10th Royal Hussars seem a peculiarly versatile regiment ready to take anyone on at anything. In this instance they put a regimental eleven into the field which was altogether too strong for the "Greigless" Gymkhana team selected to oppose them. In response to the very respectable total of 206 amassed by the horse soldiers, Poona could do no better than 94, and being put to the ignominy of a follow-on managed to secure 129. The less than a score required by the Cavalry to put a finishing touch on proceedings were knocked of without the loss of a life.

The 10th Hussar's XI is in any case evidently a pretty warm one to tackle, for they threw down the gauntlet to their brothers in arms—the men of the big guns at Kirkee, and hitting up 261 (every man barring one, and a "not outer" getting into double figures) to which the gunners could only reply with a paltry 57, and following on, did a trifle better with 96 for eight wickets.

It is a strange game cricket, and the goddess who presides over its destinies a wayward one. Poona in its full strength raised the hopes of her admirers with annual return match against the urbs prima in Indis by making the most creditable amount of 339, to which fine total two veterans were the chief contributors, Mr. Wilkins, the evergreen adding yet another century to his long list with a fine innings of 118, and that fine athlete and brilliant racquet player General Spens making three more than half-a-hundred with Carroll 36 and Greig 27 next in rank. But Bombay refused to be intimidated, and in spite a depressing start the latter half played like Trojans (assisted by the useful Mr. Extra's to the disgraceful tune of 38) and were able to put 314 on the scoring board when their last wicket fell. Mr. Wilkins, the centurian, and the usual mainstay, Captain Greig, opened proceedings in the Poona second venture and as the wicket was fast and admirably true the public looked forward to an intellectual treat. The treat consisted of Wilkins o, Greig almost bowled first ball and completely defeated by a second trimmer from Ainsworth o! Down went the Poona tail (previously so great) 3 for 1, 4 for 1, and (to cut a long story short) all out for 70. The rest of the little remaining time was uninteresting, Bombay losing one wicket for 30 when the curfew toll'd the knell of parting day.

Athletic Notes.

The South African Cricketers at present touring in England have been complaining and certainly not without reason that some of the counties have not been showing them the courtesy that they are entitled to expect, in that they have been putting anything but representative elevens into the field against them, and looking to the splendid form which they have been showing, quite apart from the question of hospitality due to such sporting visitors, their grievance is undoubtedly well-founded, and the remarks of "Truth" which as well as the sporting papers has written strongly on the matter, will be generally echoed. Lancashire and Notts appear to have been the principal delinquents, and though there may have been some excuse for the former county with the championship well in her grasp, resting her bowlers, there was certainly none for Notts putting out a mere travesty of a county eleven. The facts are obvious and so is the explanation that the county cricket championship is being gradually more and more dominated by the spirit of the Association Football League and by the all-important question of gate money. All sportsmen will, however, agree in deploring the situation, the more so that it has resulted in undesirable discourtesy towards our visitors from South Africa.

For the rest the cricket season at home is beginning to drag towards its conclusion as evidenced by the Hastings and Scarborough festivals. Lancashire are undoubted champions, and are to be warmly congratulated on having gone through the season without a defeat, though Surrey gave them a hard fight, and both Yorkshire and Middlesex would probably have beaten them in their return games but for time and weather respectively. Considering that Lancashire have probably been the next strongest county all round to Yorkshire for many years, their success cannot be regarded as untimely though one could wish that it were less due to imported talent, Poidevin and Kermode to wit. Of the others Yorkshire maintains its this season's record as champion for drawn matches to the close, Kent and Gloucestershire have made a marked and popular advance. Surrey, of the nine captains, has pursued its downhill course, and Essex, from whose side all Anglo-Indian cricketers will have been sorry to seeE. H. D. Sewell dropped out at least temporarily, is far nearer the bottom of the list than its deserts.

There are, we are glad to hear, excellent prospects of a number of visiting cricket teams being seen in Calcutta during the coming cold weather, among them the Cachar and Sylhet Planters, the Bunakers and Gurangdi C. C., who made a decidedly favourable impression last year, very possibly a native team from Dacca, and in X'mas week perhaps an United Provinces XI under General Spens, and an eleven composed of Anglo-Indian members of the I. Zingari. The C. C. C. will have to look to itself with such doughty opponents, especially now that it has lost Captain Clive Wigram, its mainstay for the last five years, but it is to be hoped that his trip home will have restored J. D. Guise to his best form.

Calcutta golfers will have noticed with pleasure that in the qualifying competition for the North of India Championship at Gulmarg, Mr. B. Sinclair headed the list, and so fully bore out his greatly improved reputation this year as a score player, though he is still somewhat apt to crack in a tight match. Second to Mr. Sinclair and only one stroke behind came another golfer who is well known in Calcutta both on the cricket field and on the golf links in the person of Major R. A. Carruthers, the popular ex-Adjutant of the Behar Light Horse, and a real good all-round sportsman to boot.

H. H. the Maharajah of Mysore has offered a new prize in connection with the motor-car reliability trials which are to come off in Bombay next cold weather. We understand that this prize is to be given to the car which goes through the whole of the trial and arrives in Bombay in the smartest condition. The prize will be given irrespective of size, horse power, or time taken through the trial, and it will be allotted to the owner of the car and not to the driver.

Among important cricket results at home last week were the following:—Surrey beat Leicestershire by an innings and 206 runs. The matches between South of England and South Africans, North and South and Warner's team and Thornton's team were drawn.

In the final of the Rampur Football Cup competition at Naini Tal the Band of the Yorkshire Regiment beat the Depôt "A" team by two goals to one.

A report of the last Calcutta Rowing Club Regatta, which was held last Saturday afternoon, will be found further on.

The Burma Athletic Association have been presented with a Cup valued at Rs. 500 by Messrs. William Younger for a Football Competition between teams representing Upper and Lower Burma. Civilians are to compose the majority of each team and the Cup is to be competed for annually on or about the 15th September, and at the end of the football season. The possession of the Cup is to be decided by the best two out of three matches.

From the Southern Daily Mail:—

"Last week a motor-car belonging to Mr. C. B. Fry, and driven by the famous athlete, was speeding through Fareham in the direction of Mr. Fry's residence at Botley, when it collided with Admiral Moresby, who was cycling slowly along the street. The gallant officer was somewhat violently knocked off his machine, but was promptly on his legs again. He did not appear much the worse for the mishap, but sustained a severe shaking. As Admiral Moresby is well past the prime of life, the effects of his spill are expected to remain with him for some time. Admiral Moresby was able to proceed to his home at Blackbrook, Fareham, unassisted, after exchanging cards with the motorist. The driver it seems, was endeavouring to avoid a dog in the road when he ran into the Admiral. The latter suffers from deafness, this, no doubt, contributing to the mishap.

It will be a matter for general regret that circumstances should have arisen to necessitate the abandonment of the match between the M.C.C. Australian team and the Rest of England arranged as the closing engagement of the Scarborough Festival, particularly in view of the indecisive character of the previous game at Lord's. Happily the cricket itself is not likely to suffer, at all events, to any great extent. The time-honoured fixture of North and South, which will take the place of the Australian and England match on the bill is indeed sure to provide plenty of interest for the sport-loving folk who will throng the cricket ground at Scarborough during the next fortnight. The charm of these later cricket gatherings is that one sees the pick of English players in friendly rivalry, freed moreover from the restraints and anxieties of the more strenuous cricket of the County Championship. In what is termed holiday cricket there is a sense of relief which is not without its enjoyment.

Who took their principal delight
In shouting at me day and night,
In language other than polite?
The coaches.
Who fattened me on endless steak,
Forbade tobacco, toast and cake,
And roused a thirst I could not slake?
The captain.
Who loudly laughed to see us pass,
As in the bows there groaned alas!
A shapeless, palpitating mass?
The spectators.
Who watched me, brutally elate,
Inclining much to over-rate
The need for shouting "Bow, you're late?"
The cox.
Who swore they would not row a race
Till Bow took off his ugly face,
And someone else had filled his place?
The rest of the crew.
Who will row Bow in this year's Eight,
Strive, gasp, perspire and objurgate,
Lose temper, self-respect and weight?
Somebody else.

We are sorry to hear that the race for the Hoare Cup, which the Calcutta Rowing Club intended holding this month, has fallen through. The old cry —"paucity of entries."

The annual dinner of the Dalhousie Football Club, held at Messrs. Peliti's hall last Saturday night, was a most pronounced success, the dinner, the decorations, the speeches, and the musical programme being of the very best quality. Mr. W. T. Grice presided and the slayers of the feast numbered sixty, including guests who represented the I. F. A., the Calcutta Football League and the principal clubs. Mr. Theo. Walsh proposed the toast of the I. F. A. and Mr. E. E. Rope responded. Then the Chairman called on the Club to drink the health of their visitors, an invitation that evoked cheers and musical honours and elicited brief responses from Lieutenant Cudlip, who spoke on behalf of the military guests and Mr. D. Baker, who was the mouthpiece of the civilians. A very good musical programme followed these oratorical efforts, and the party broke up after having passed a most enjoyable evening.

Entries for the Autumn Meeting of the Calcutta Swimming Club close to-morrow at 6 o'clock in the evening. A capital programme of seven items has been arranged for Saturday, the 24th instant. For further details we refer those interested to the advertisement among our sporting announcements.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—The Golf season opened on Thursday morning, the 8th instant, when thirty-four players turned out for the first competition for the Forty-twa Medal [details of which will be found further on. Ed.] A good deal of trouble and money have been expended in getting the course into order and those responsible for this important work can look upon the result with satisfaction, the course being in very good condition for this time of the year. Turning to play in the competition one cannot help viewing with disappointment the poor scores that were on the whole returned, but heavy rain just before play may possible have affected the form of some players.

Thursday's fancy dress soccer match between the winners of the Harwood League Cup and a team composed of officers and Civilians in fancy dress was of no importance from a football point of view, being merely intended as an amusiug travesty on the game to draw a large crowd in order that the coffers of St. George's Hospital might benefit. The match answered its purpose, over a thousand people paying for admission.

The drawing of the ties in the Rovers' Tournament took place this week, nineteen teams in all competing. The Cheshire Regiment have drawn a bye in the first round and meet the York and Lancaster Regiment in the second round. The former eleven are still warm favourites.

There was quite a large attendance at the mounted sports this week, due in a great measure to the fact that there was no counter attraction in the shape of Harwood League football. The tent-pegging competition, in which five took part, was won by the ubiquitous Mr. P.F. Fischer with Captain Macnamara second. The bending race fell to Macnamara second. The bending race fell to Mr. W. E. Crum with Mr. L. Barraclough second, while the jumping competition by sections was won by the section composed of Messrs. Hill, Greig and Johnston and Captain Macnamara. The Isaac Walton Stakes were annexed by Mr. D. N. Graham nominated by Mrs. S. M. McCausland with Mr. P. Fisher nominated by Madam Combes second. The Ladies' Calling Race was won by Mrs. Cutbush. The usual scurries were both won by Mr. P. Fischer.

An impetus will shortly be given to local polo in the shape of a Bumblepuppy Tournament for which four teams of local players have been made

The Bombay Gymkhana Athletic Meeting, which will commence on 10th October bids fair to be a greater success than last year's meeting which was rather a failure on account of the paucity of entries for the close events.

The coming visit to India of the strong man Eugene Sandow is exciting considerable interest in Bombay, where his advance agent, Mr. Robert McGreer has arranged a six nights' show.

A Rugger match last Saturday between Scotland and the world resulted after one of the fastest games of the season in a draw, each side having scored a goal. The try from which the World goal was converted was only obtained a few minutes before the whistle went, T. J. Reid, at one time Bombay's champion sprinter, getting the ball in midfield and gaining a try after a magnificent run.

The date fixed for the race for the Power Cup, with which the Calcutta Rowing Club wind up the season, is Saturday, 5th November. Entries close on the 29th October.

The Simla Cup, a very handsome trophy subscribed for by the residents of Simla, for competition in the Durand Football Tournament, has been designed and executed, by Messrs. Elkington and Company, Limited, the well-known London silversmiths, through their Agents, Messrs. Walter Locke and Company, Limited, Calcutta and Simla. On a richly moulded base of ebony, mounted in silver, are placed three figures of football players, supporting a correct model of an Association football, and surmounting this is a finely modelled figure emblematic of victory bearing in her hands the victor's laurel crown. The whole is executed in silver and is richly chased. It is without doubt the finest football trophy yet seen in India and Messrs. Elkington and Company are to be congratulated on the piece of workmanship they have turned out.

Mr. Charles Hancock, a member of the London Epee Club, has been in correspondence with M. Georges Wernert, a well-known writer of the Paris Press on matters of sport, and has succeeded in obtaining from him the following characteristic comparison and relative value of the methods of French and English boxing. Says M. Wernert :—

To proclaim the emptiness of what is called French boxing, to assert that it is inferior to English boxing, to say that our boxing professors are nothing more than dancing masters, is to draw upon my head the enmity of a great number of my fellow-countrymen. And yet I shall not hesitate to say so simply because I believe it.

Routine is killing French boxing. The Ecole de Joinville method is out of fashion, and unsuitable—that is, if fighting is meant; but if, mere sparring is understood to produce flexibility only, that is another matter. French boxing, viewed in that light, is the finest of gymnastic exercises. Practise it to develop your muscles good!—but for "self-defence" English boxing takes the palm.

Our lower kick from behind is both ineffective and dangerous. Kicks, when turning round, however neat they may appear, are impracticable in the street—particularly if it rains; the guard is not natural, and the blow with the right fist aimed straight from the shoulder, causes the loss of the whole width of the torso.

Again, how absurd is this "lowsitting guard." When the leg bears too much on the ground, how it invites breakage of the tibia, and what a fulcrum is this contracted guard for the adversary's "swing"! Take away the lower drives and the kicks—which, for some unknown reason, are forbidden—and French boxing ceases to exist. All this virtuoso and inferior stage effect collapses before a boxer who "closes" with you. Driscoll knew it well when he invited Charlemont's empty drives by feints, and, getting home afterwards, soundly pommelled his unprotected adversary. This, however, has not prevented the entire French Press from saying that Charlemont, who was virtually beaten, had vanquished Driscoll. Such is the narrow-mindedness of a patriotism "run mad."

There is not a boxer who has practised both styles who does not prefer the English style of boxing, which is so severely combative, rational, and authoritative. In this case the straight blows, the "swings," come from the body and not from the arm, are delivered with the force of a ram and seem as if shot from a powerful catapult. The "upper-cut" bruises the flesh and upsets the astonished adversary.

The guard, or rather the absence of it, does not offer any loophole for breaking through. A kick reaching the supple and swinging legs of the boxer would be ineffective. English boxers are better judges than we of distance and opportunity.

Add to all this the endurance and the knack of receiving punishment without showing it, and you will easily understand why our boxing champions who deliver blows, both good and bad—more often the latter than the former—cannot stand up to a third rate boxer.

Albert, the best of our men, who stood up for a second before Jefferies, just the time necessary to put one's self on guard, and whom I asked how his rival had knocked him down, naively replied: "I don't know; we struck at the same time, my blow had no effect on him, his knocked me down—that's all."

These words imply a condemnation of our system. When shall we have a sensible style of boxing, such as that taught by Georges Dubois—i.e., an English guard, with indispensable kicks? When will judgment and method appear at the Ecole de Joinville?

The "coming of age" of Messrs. Traill's diaries has been taken advantage of by the enterprising publishers of that practically invaluable office and desk companion to make the Indian public a handsome gift. With every one of their diaries for 1905 (except the six-anna ones) Messrs. Traill and Company include a free accident insurance policy for no less a sum than Rs. 7,500, so "order at once and save disappointment" say they, and we make no doubt the demand for Traill's Diaries will now be greater than ever. It is superfluous to extol the merits of these books, there are thirty-five forms of them ranging from pocket to foolscap size and they are the only diaries published which contain purely Indian information, brought up to date and thoroughly reliable.

Just as we go to press a wire from Poona informs us that heavy rain has necessitated the postponement of the return Presidency vs. Parsees cricket match.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 26th August 1904.

THERE has been only one topic of conversation this week: to wit Russian interference with our vessels on the high seas. The Foreign Office assured the public that it was giving the matter its most serious consideration, but the country was growing distinctly restless under repeated insult and inaction, and when there came news of the stoppage of the Comedian somewhere off Durban by a steamer which there is no room to doubt, is the Smolensk, the shipping interest rose and "went for" the Prime Minister. Mr. Balfour received the deputation yesterday. He recognised the gravity of the incident, the Russian Foreign Office having informed the British Government that the mission of that vessel and her consort the Peterburg was at an end, after the affair of the Malacca: and the most satisfactory point in his address to the deputation was the statement that Russia had asked us to convey a message in this sense to the Smolensk and that two cruisers had been ordered from Cape Town to search for her with this object.

There are features of the affair which seem far from satisfactory. Those two volunteer fleet cruisers must have called somewhere to coal since the Russians declared their "Mission" at an end, and either of the authorities at Petersburg did or did not inform the commanders that their highhanded proceedings were to cease. If they did, the Smolensk and Peterburg are nothing but privateers: if they did not it is another example of Muscovite dealing with us.

* * * * * *

In two respects at least Mr. Balfour's address will give small satisfaction. The deputation affirmed, what everyone believes, that Russia has made a special set against our vessels in order to injure Japan by handicapping her commerce with Britain Mr. Balfour would not have that: inasmuch as 90 per cent. of the carrying trade of the Far East is under the British Flag, he requires that over 90 per cent. of Russia's seizures shall be British, before he can admit special endeavours to our prejudice. Such mathematical accuracy is not to the country's taste at all: the affairs of the Allanton and the Hip Sang are too fresh in our minds to make us patient of these niceties.

Nor does Mr. Balfour seem to appreciate the depth of feeling that was stirred by the Malacca affairs. "The case of the Scandia and the Malacca I should hardly admit to be one which it is worth while either for those interested in the trade as shipowners or as merchants or as underwriters to consider. The whole episode of the Malacca was exceptional. It dragged in quite alien considerations, alien to all the other cases that have arisen." Exactly: it was the exceptional nature of the business that roused so much feeling; and Mr. Balfour shows himself deplorably out of touch with the feeling of the country when he dismisses it as hardly worth consideration. The Times publishes the report of the statement made to the deputation on one page to-day and reproduces the official log of the Malacca for 13th July and following days on another, and I venture to think that Mr. Balfour's remark on this head will cost him more of confidence and popularity than any he has made in his career.

It is difficult to get away from the idea that Russia has been trying how far she may pursue the tail twisting process with impunity. For many weeks past the Baltic fleet has been on the point of sailing for the East: to-day it is reported to have left Kronstadt for a ten days' cruise. Why, people enquire, is it dallying? Do the people at St. Petersburg think that work may be found for it nearer home? Pity it is that we do not take a leaf out of the Japanese book. Up to Wednesday night we were prepared to hear that Japan had countered Russian methods of diplomacy at Shanghai with the forceful methods Russia understands: and the preparedness of Japan to push home her claim with bombardment of the Askold and her consort, prepared us for the news that came that evening: the Czar had ordered the Askold and Grosovai to be disarmed.

The Imperial Manifesto which celebrates the christening of the Cesarevirtch offers interesting reading. Russia does not make Port Arthur over to Japan as a thankoffering for the birth of an heir to the throne, as some cynic suggested: but there are qualified benefactions in profusion: abolition of the lash; remission of arrears of taxes, hopeless of collection, forgiveness of fines, equally unprofitable to enforce, and forgiveness of sins which the police have failed to trace home to the sinners. These be large boons and regal. Finland receives special attention, but the attentions do not appear calculated to inspire gratitude at all feverish Were I a Finn who had left my country without official sanction to escape the privilege of serving under the Russian flag, I doubt whether the invitation to return and serve my term without punishment for quitting home would tempt me back. But the baby, whose advent evoked these acts of grace! His will be Russia in transition to steer: for unless the signs of the times are misleading there are big changes pending.

Those who repair our streets are deserving of congratulation. It seems to have dawned upon them that the public might suffer some inconvenience when main arteries of traffic are "up" for prolonged periods, and they have mended their ways in a double sense. A fortnight ago, Oxford Street, Regent Street, the Strand, Brompton Road and a few more much used streets were "up" and to-day the tide of traffic rolle free, or nearly free again, with such unwonted rapidity have repairs been effected. By the way the Victoria Memorial changes before Buckingham Palace, also proceed apace; they are taking down the familiar high railings which enclose the courtyard and their new position, which harmonises with the semi-circular terrace which so greatly improves the front of the Palace.

There is so little going on in the village that one looks outside for news. If any of your readers take interest in the endeavours to convert the Thames once more into the salmon river it ceased to be early in the nineteenth century, they may like to know that Mr. Gilbey has every reason to be satisfied with the progress made by the Thames Salmon Association of which he is the working partner. Three thousand parr averaging 6 inches long were turned into the river from his hatcheries at Teddington during last year and this spring: and trustworthy reports have been received indicating that the youngsters or at any rate a proportion of them thrive as far down as Richmond whither we may presume they were bound for the sea if they could face the dirty ordeal of the Thames estuary. That stretch of contaminated water appears to be the stumbling block:

Icilma.

Icilma Natural Water is Nature's own remedy for keeping the skin soft, cool, clean, healthy, and preventing and curing irritations, and for imparting to the complexion that delicate pearly transparency and firmness which is the only true. Natural Beauty. Invaluable for sore eyes and insect bites. Use with Icilma Spray.

experts holding that migrating salmon hang about in tidal waters to get accustomed to salt after fresh or fresh after salt as the case may be, it might be worthwhile trying the dodge somebody suggested a few years ago; to wit, put a few smolts in a cage or crate and keep them anchored off Greenwich for a week or two. If they survived that, the advocates for energetic restocking would have a strong argument to back their plea for funds to further the work.

The papers do not indend to let Mr. Adolf Beck's case for an enquiry and adequate compensation drop. The Daily Mail, in whose columns Mr. G. R. Sims has been championing his cause has guaranteed to pay the victim of mistaken identity the £2,000 tendered by the Treasury, should Mr. Beck's continued efforts to procure an enquiry and fair compensation result in withdrawal of the offer. Whatever the merits of the case the Treasury did not go about the business of compensating very graciously: "We'll give you £2,000 on condition that you hold your tongue for ever afterwards" does not commend itself as the address of a department conscious that police officialdom is faultless in the matter. Everyone seems to think that the enquiry demanded is bound to come: Mr. Balfour's Government has not gained such measure of popularity that it can afford to alienate any more of its lukewarm supporters.

With the prospect of early electrification of the underground comes consideration of the "live rail" danger which is a very real one. The circumstances of three deaths caused by contact with exposed "live rails" suggest that these things ought to be guarded where there is reasonable chance of men coming in contact with them by accident as in railway stations: but the railway companies are entitled to protest when they are held responsible for fatal accidents to trespassers who, railings, walls and notice boards notwithstanding, adventure upon the lines where they have no earthly business to go. If fences are made of a character calculated to baffle the omnipresent small boy and the live rails are painted the warning red, it seems to me that the companies have done their duty. There is a section of the great B.P. which holds that it ought to be protected against its own carelessness, neglect and stupidity at any cost; a theory to which some of us cannot subscribe. If you think of it, it cannot be to the advantage of the race to relieve it of the necessity of exercising average intelligence in taking care of itself.

To-morrow night sees the opening of the autumn theatre season. Mr. Bourchier opens the Garrick with "The Chevalier" by Henry Arthur Jones, taking the name part himself: the cast has been on the posters for days, but it would not, I conceive, greatly interest you: I may remark, however, that Miss Arthur Jones is down for a part. Mr. Beerbohm Tree announces "The Tempest," and rumour is busy with the extravagant endeavours that have made to secure realism for "On a ship at Sea, Storm with Thunder and Lightning" which, you will remember describes Scene I. Mr. Isaac Zangwill's play which is to be called "Merely Mary Ann" is to be produced a fortnight hence at the Duke of York's: Miss Elenor Robson is the leading lady. If Mr. Zangwill's play has half the humour of some of his books the Duke of York's should be able to reckon on full houses for a long time to come. By the way, a company directed (from town) by Mr. Bourchier is to play "Farry's Delemma" in the provinces starting with Glasgow. What Mr. Malcolm Watson's new comedy "Winnie Brooke, Widow" which is announced at the Criterion next Thursday evening, is like remains to see; the bills promise "a little music" and from the cast one would not be surprised if there were a good deal of dancing too. The suburban theatres are all at work now; but there is nothing new at any of them. As for the "Halls" the only item that seems to call for notice is Mdlle. Genée has returned to the Empire. Miss Horniman, a lady whose name is not very familiar to me, has been granted leave or patent or whatever the instrument be called to establish a theatre in Dublin for the production of Irish plays.

If you have not read Miss Cotter Morrison's "Lonely Summer in Kashmir" I commend it to your notice. Miss Morrison, owing to unforeseen circumstances was left to her own devices at Srinagar and being a lady of enterprise collected camp kit and started out to explore the country under the sole protection of "Jones" an "Aligarh bulldog" whose portrait, hideous but natheless flattering, forms the frontespiece. Miss Morrison has spirit, a strong will and humour; and her account of her travels and difficulties with followers and natives is both vivid and amusing. Everyone who has been in Kashmir will be delighted with the book, and people who have not will obtain a better idea of the country than they are likely to get from any book of my acquaintance. The author does not take herself nor her adventures too seriously and she contrives to keep her reader both interested and amused from start to finish.

Mr. Ernest Thompson Seton whose books on the wild life of North America are among the most charming of natural history works is coming over to this country on a lecturing tour at the end of September. I heard from an acquaintance of "Buffalo Jones" that that eminent authority also contemplates a lecturing tour in England, but I doubt if there be room for two of the trade. Buffalo Jones is the Warden of the Yellowstone Park and a letter from him, which was shown me, suggests that his lectures would be exceedingly interesting. He mentioned among other things that the bears in the Yellowstone are become so tame by reason of the protection given them and the tourists' fondness for feeding them, that the brutes become dangerously rough towards humans: and to correct this tendency the Warden's men catch them, hang them up by the heels and flog them to inspire feelings of reserve towards mankind.

It has just transpired that Lord Onslow's Grouse Disease Commission has, as its primary duty to find funds for the prosecution of its work. As the Commissioners are all wealthy men, keenly interested in grouse shooting, this obstacle is perhaps less formidable than it looks at first sight: and after all the expenses should not be very great. It is a novelty in Government commissions of course, but no doubt a proper one in the circumstances.

The Ecclesiastical deadlock in Scotland continues. The Edinburgh U.F.C. Presbytery has declared its intention to stick to the Union at all costs. A lay spokesman of that Church with a few words has done more than acres of argument could do to bring home the situation to people south of Tweed:—"Were the entire fabric of the Church of England to be legally transferred to Mr. Kensit and his followers it would not produce a greater sensation on your side of the border."

It looks as though the strike at Marseilles were likely to affect homeward-bound passengers from the East: the P. and O. Agent said on Wednesday thathe should not "fail to find means" to land passengers, but the phrase seems to imply a shade of doubt. All the steamer companies' agents at Marseilles fear that a state of things is approaching which will compel vessels to avoid the port as one at which to land cargo.

The refusal of the Jersey States to provide for the Militia has resulted in the Army Council deciding to withdraw the regular garrison. This move will not be appreciated by the Jersey folk whether social or trading; for it means that somewhere about fifty or sixty thousand pounds will no longer circulate in a community where money is none too plentiful. There has been a fresh outbreak of anathema against motor scorchers: "stinkigrunta" does not grow more considerate and several fatal accidents have been reported lately. One sufferer has suggested laying half a cart load of gravel across the highroad to make a slight bank: this he says would not trouble horse traffic nor reasonably driven motors, but would serve to break the springs of the scorcher. Fines seem useless to check the curse of dangerous driving.

THE GOLDARE MANEATER.

IT was somewhere in the early sixties and towards the beginning of the hot weather, that some five of us, namely, O. M., the two S.'s and self found ourselves to be the guests of C., the worthy host of Goldare. Goldare was then one of the best known indigo concerns in Central Bengal and lay within some five miles of the then newly-constructed E. B. Railway.

The day after our arrival, an unexpected guest, suddenly turned up in the person of old Tissandier, who had come on his elephant and appeared to be in a great state of mind and it was only after he had a brandy pawnee, that he settled down to tell us of the adventure he had on his way. To the west of Goldare, and about four miles distant, was a big open maidan or plain intersected with patches of grass and rahar cultivation. Tissandier swore that he had come face to face with an immense tiger while crossing this plain. He saw at first, what in the distance appeared to be, a red cow, but as its gait seemed rather strange he made his mahoot, go towards it. But the animal disappeared in a field of rahar and was at once lost sight of in the tall crop. They cautiously approached the grass and when about 300 yards off they suddenly saw a huge, round head rise slowly above the grass and look them straight in the face. This was enough for Tissandier, who made the elephant back out at once and put his best foot forward for Goldare. We all laughed at the very idea of there being any tiger nearer than the Sunderbunds, as such a thing had not been seen or heard of within the memory of the oldest inhabitant.

The same evening while sitting round the chowbootra having our pegs, the factory gomastah, or headman, accompanied by the Police darogah turned up and reported that another villager from a village some four miles distant had suddenly disappeared. This was the third case within the past week or so and the whole thing appeared to be a perfect mystery. In this last case the victim, a lad some fifteen years old, had gone to cut grass for his cattle and was never seen alive again. The Police darogah could make nothing of it and the worst part of it was none of the remains of any of the victims could be found.

Early the following morning saw the whole lot of us on our way towards that part of the country where Tissandier said he had seen the tiger. Four of us rode out with our spears, while the other three got on the elephant. We took with us all the armament the place contained, and which consisted solely of ordinary 12-bore fowling pieces. We were not long in getting to the place where the tiger had been last seen, but of course he was not at home nor did we see signs of him. After going about for a couple of hours or so, we put up a fine boar from under a clump of babool trees: he gave us a fine run and a grand charge for the first spear, which O. secured. Those on the elephants now came up and said, that they thought there was something in one of the fields they pointed out. On getting to the covert side, we told some of our syces who had followed us, to stoop down and see, if they could spot anything. These rahar crops usually stand from 6 to 8 feet high and the only way to see through them is by stooping down and looking along the ground. No sooner, were our men down, then they were up and off at their best paces. We asked them what they had seen, but the only thing they could vouch for was that there was a huge janwar lying down inside and towards the further side of the cover. S., who was riding a grey waler mare, stood with his back turned towards the cover and at the distance of some 20 yard or so. All of a sudden, there was a tremendous roar and at the same time the tiger charged and the next instant he was on the haunches of S's. mount and the mare frantic with terror lashed out as hard as she could hitting the monster fair in his bread basket, and taking the wind clean out of him for the time being. Having got rid of the tiger, the mare dashed off at once, S. luckily for himself had managed to keep his seat or it would have gone hard with him. The mare was bleeding freely so we sent her off at once to the factory.

It was then decided that one of us should gallop off to Dulorie, a village some eight miles distant as the zemindar had a very good shikaree elephant the loan of which we were sure of. O, who was the lightest, volunteered for the job and was off at once on his fast Arab and in a few minutes was a mere speck in the distance. In order not to disturb the tiger, we thought it best to move out to some distance and well out of the way. But the tiger, who must have watched all our movements, had evidently grown suspicious, for he suddenly broke out of the rahar field and started across country. We followed keeping well in the rear, as the brute would every now and then turn round and have a look at us. We now saw that he was making for the river, about a mile or so ahead; but of course we could do nothing to make him turn or change his mind, and in a few minutes he disappeared down the bank. Thinking perhaps that he might be lying in wait for us, we made a detour to get to the water's edge, but when we got there we saw the tiger striking out for the opposite bank. On reaching terra firma he shook the water off his coat lay down on the chur or sandbank, and after having had a good roll, stretched himself at full length. Those on the elephant who were following us now came up and the tiger made up his mind to move towards the grass and tamarisk.

It was now past 2 o'clock and still there were no signs of either O or the elephant he had gone to seek and we had had nothing since the morning but a few biscuits and some beer. Suddenly there was a little cloud of dust on the horizon towards the west and shortly afterwards we could make out that it was O. returning. We were much put out on hearing that the kattee would not be available till the following morning, as it had been lent for a marriage festival. O. said that the owner had faithfully promised, that his elephant would be at Goldare early the following morning. There was nothing for it now but to make tracks for home with the hope of coming across the monster next morning.

Early next day as soon as the promised elephant turned up, we sallied forth; Tissandier, O. and M. got on to the borrowed elephant, while the elder S., C. and self were on the factory hathee. The first thing we did was to make for the place where we had seen the tiger last go in, but he was no longer there. On looking for his pugs, we found that he had re-crossed the river and had made his way towards the patch of grass where we found the remains of the unfortunate boy. As we got there we saw the tiger, break from a rather extensive piece of rahar cultivation and gallop off towards the north-west. We followed as quickly as we could and at rather long range opened fire, the bullets hitting all round our target, as the flying dust showed till suddenly the foe seemed to collapse and his discomfiture was hailed with loud hurrahs! Both the elephants approached shoulder to shoulder and at the distance of forty paces or so we got ready to administer the coup de grace. Suddenly, roaring all he knew, the apparently dead tiger charged down on us and with tail on end and ears laid back, looking the very incarnation of fury and ferocity. The borrowed hathee turned tail and bolted, but the Goldare elephant though a female stood as firm as a rock and we were able to roll the brute over dead with a couple of bullets through his head. A strange incident now took place, the elephant, that had at first bolted, was brought back and on seeing the dead tiger, made a rush forward and next instant was down on his knees, trying to pin the defunct tiger's body with his tusks. While this was going on those on the beast's back, were sent flying, guns and all, out of the howdah and it was with some difficulty the mahoot got away the maddened and enraged hathee.

The tiger was a male, very lusty and in his prime and measured 9 feet 2 inches as he lay.

Fishing.

FISHING IN THE PUJAHS.

NOW that the eastern rivers unconnected with the snow line are beginning to fall, accounts tend to show that owing to successive rushes during the abnormally heavy rains of the past season, rendering weir and netting operations difficult, fish are more than usually numerous, so that those who care to visit the Upper Brahmaputra, its affluents and the streams in the southern valley of Assam, to which the railway now gives easy and rapid access, cannot do better than take a run up to those parts in the ensuing Pujahs. The waters are not too clear nor the sun too powerful to baffle the whipper or troller, yet are sufficiently dingy for either purpose, while the light stern wheel boats that have been put on the smaller streams, though not provided with the same accommodation as the larger vessels, enable one to get up to such places as Luckipur on the Manipur border (a famous ground where two hill streams meet) or other likely spots in the Surma Valley, while the northern one is equally well served by the railway direct. The less ambitious fisherman can enjoy good sport within a short distance of the rest-houses at the foot of the hills, but is likely to lose his light tackle from some big fellow snapping at it on his way to the upper rapids. A correspondent last season gave you an interesting description of sport on the Upper Barak (Surma-Luckipur), and I trust your columns this season will be similarly embellished, while with the increased facilities for travel in those parts we hope to be enlightend as to the allurements of hither to unknown spots that can compete with it. Within easy distance of the Sylhet Civil Station, but connected with it now by a good road, lies the ancient town of Jaintiapur washed by the two streams direct from the hills—the Noagong and the Hari.

The first, as it winds round the northern end of the town, presents no very inviting aspect, but dug-outs are to be had for a trifle and a couple of miles up the fishing ground commences at a small village called Assampara, thence by water for a like distance you are in piscatorial clover and can either fish from the craft or select well-shaded spots on either bank for the exercie of what skill you possess. The stream terminates in a pool, perhaps an acre in extent, into which tumbles the feeding cascade, causing a ripple all over this basin that give the flyfisher his chance; the overflow is by one rapid split up into numerous smaller ones, affording good enough standing with but little chance of your boots being overtopped: the rough water continues down stream for fully a mile when it runs off in a series of whirls that seldom prove blank. If your prey when hooked runs, as is usual, up stream, you get a good view as he tries the jump over the natural emptying weir, though it is barely a two-foot one, and once in the deep reservoir you can play him at leisure, the bottom being remarkably free from snags or boulders. You need not be farther away from the town for above the distance mentioned, and can easily arrange for such creature comforts from the Sudder Station as you need, while there is a group of three small tea estates within a mile or two

The other river, the Hari, furnishes a much longer and inviting scene of operations, but the banks of both it and its tributary, the Rewai, affords no ground for a run, and the stream itself is, above Ps.wdr., a succession of deep pools and tumbling rapids in which it as scarcely possible to keep a small boat steady, so one has to fish from isolated spots on the bank. Here and there, especially at the unpronounceable village referred to, churs run out, with deep and well-shaded water on the opposite bank, but your cast to reach across must be a stiff one; once well hooked one has the game in his own hands, for the churs are extensive enough for a good run. There is a big rapid here, which is a certain find with a well thrown light coloured fly.

Above this rapid there is a large deep pool fed by a fall that comes over a rocky curtain, but the water is, at both intake and overflow, smooth, clear and placid, the fish lying very deep down, thus offering little inducement except to such as care to essay the cresset and spear at night, but the village people are so incessantly at work with these that the occasional visitor has but a poor chance. The Rewai affluent is a rough and tumble mountain torrent, chiefly cascades, from mouth to source, and except at the entrance little beyond pubbiah and bhasha are to be had, but the other two streams sketched, afford quite enough inducement to the fisherman. The village of Bhurghat stands to the east of the curtain and though quarters here are obtainable, all else must be brought from Jaintiapur which, with previous arrangements, can be reached from Sealdah in about 50 hours.

SYNTENG.

A few days ago a bumptious Cockney tourist went swaggering into an hotel at Stirling, and tried, as he put it, to "wake up" the waiter. The dour faced Scot regarded most of the Cockney's conversational efforts with grim and silent contempt. At last the tourist exclaimed, "Come, Sandy? What's the latest sensation in Stirling?" Then the waiter replied in a tone of cold disdain. "Man the latest sensation in Stir-r-r-ling is just the Battle of Bannockbur-r-r-n!"

Shooting.

CALCUTTA REVOLVER CLUB.

THE sixth monthly prize meeting was held at the Club Range, Ballygunj, on Saturday last. The shooting was with the left hand at 20 yards range. The first prize was won by Mr. J. E. Vallance with a score of 38.

POWDERS.

I MAY be allowed to state broadly, writes Dr. D. I. Hamilton in the Sporting Times, that the latter-day shooter has the choice of about ten or a dozen popular brands to make a selection from, and any one particular powder he picks out cannot do otherwise than give him satisfaction—which means simply that if he holds his gun straight and does his part of the business properly the powder will act in similar manner, whether it be Schultze, E. C. Amberite, Cannonite, Ballistite, Walsrode, Normal, Mullerite, Smokeless Diamond grain or either of the two or three remaining makes. It is only fair to all to state this fact, for, having used every powder on the market, and having fired scores of rounds of each brand made at game, I may, as an amateur, claim at least, some knowledge of them. I say again, then, that a shooter using any one of the present-day popular brands of smokeless powders, and making bad shooting need not waste his time in criticising the particular explosive he may be firing, for I can tell him the fault lies not with it at all. The fault for bad or indifferent shooting rests with the shooter himself—taking for granted his gun is right—certainly not with the explosive, and I am led to emphasise this fact because quite a number of gunners (especially young and inexperienced ones) are given to finding fault with their powder, it being common to hear some youngster say, "I would have shot much better to-day if I had used those cartridges I shot with last week!"

But, naturally, one man will make choice of one powder, and another one will select a different brand, just as we see one man using a 12-bore, and his companion a 16 or a 20-bore. And equally naturally when a man performs well with a certain powder, not alone does he not want to change, but he actually comes to look upon it as being really the best powder going. His success has bred a confidence in it that nothing will shake, and I say again this is only natural. A shooter, then, who has shot with Schultze—the oldest of all the smokeless or nitro powders—for 20 years or more, is not likely to swing off into any other brand, even if puffed and recommended by Sir Carnyby Jinks of the Blues himself. Of course, there is some difference to be noted in the action and behaviour of these smokeless or nitro powders, and, while those differences are not such as to affect one's shooting in the field, it may not be out of place to glance at them, if only for comparison's sake.

Now, in this connection some shooters aver that there is a great difference between the "time" of certain powders. I know a well-known clay pigeon shot in Dublin who uses Schultze invariably, and who "leads" his birds—in other words, fires in front of them. He is a deadly shot and I have often stood and watched him shoot. But if by chance he should change from Schultze to Ballistite, he finds the latter too quick for him, and his charge passes in front of his birds. You see, Ballistite is a concentrated nitro powder, very quick in ignition, and the shooter using it need make little, if any, allowance—need not shoot in front of or before his birds at all, in fact. I also know a clay bird shooter who always uses Ballistite, because it is so quick, and suits his style of shooting, Schultze being altogether too slow for him. Here, then, is a difference as between one powder and another, a difference however be it noted, that can only be demonstrated through the personal peculiarities of two or more gunners. To the great mass of present-day gunners no such difference or variation is apparent, as will, I think, be readily understood by my readers.

As regards the difference in recoil, amount of smoke, loudness of report, and so forth, I boldly take the ground that none such exists, make any comparison you will. Take Ballistite as a sample of a concentrated powder, and Schultze as one of a bulk powder, and I defy anyone to prove that a difference exists between them regarding smoke, noise, or recoil. Yet this, of all others, is the topic about which young shooters write to the papers. Tell us, they say, which powder gives least recoil, least smoke, and makes least report. Then the poor editor gets to work, and tries to enlighten them, when, if he only had the courage of his convictions, he would the more truthfully answer that there is no difference as between any of the powders of the day. Still, from time to time a controversy rages in the sporting press over these questions, and one party slangs another until the discussion wears itself out, and dies of its own inertia.

BETTING QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I back three horses, "A," "B" and "C" for the treble event, viz., "Duke of York Handicap," "Cesarevitch," and "Cambridgeshire" now the Duke of York Handicap falls through for want of sufficient entries but is re-opened again and fills.

My questions are:—(1) Would you consider my treble lost owing to the race first falling through. (2) Would you consider my treble as on owing to the race eventually filling after being re-opened. (3) Would you consider my bet off, but my stakes saved.

POONA, 8th September 1904. PUNTER.

[The bet was off when the Duke of York Handicap fell through. This answers all three questions.—ED.]

GREAT DANES AT THE MUSSOORIE SHOW.

TO THE EDITOR, OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I have received a cutting said to be from The Indian Sporting Times and as I rarely see that paper am sending an explanation in hopes that you may give it a place in your paper. The paragraph runs as follows: "I do not see why special encouragement is sought to be given to the Great Dane by the Mussoorie Executive. There are other breeds we think more popular, the prizes for which might, with advantage be increased." I am sure the Mussoorie Executive will gladly give encouragement to any other breed, if some generous donor will come forward and name the class he wishes his prize given to. Special prizes have already been promised for the following:—Smooth Fox Terrier (Novice), Wire-haired Fox Terrier (Novice), Fox Terrier Puppy bred during 1904, Setters and Pointers, Bulldogs, Retrievers, and Pekinese. I know the Executive would be quite willing to increase their prizes if funds permitted. Perhaps the Editor of The Indian Sporting Times will show his generosity by helping to increase the prize list, and also give a special or two to the more popular breeds Major Kemp, the General Honorary Secretary for the Show, will, I am sure, be most happy to send that gentleman a few subscription lists, if he will endeavour to have them filled in, and thus really to help the Show.

With reference to the passage "There are other breeds we think more popular." True Mr. Editor, there are other breeds more popular, this is the very reason I am offering, not one, but three prizes (one annually) for Great Danes, with a view to increasing the popularity. To those who do not know what an excellent dog he is, I would refer them to an article which appeared in the June number of The Indian Kennel Gazette. One has only to own a Dane to know his good points, and when once owned he is hard to give up. I have kept many kinds of dogs, but always go back to the Great Dane.

I only hope that owners will help to popularise the breed by entering at the coming Mussoorie Show. The Local Committee have undertaken to kennel, feed and look after any exhibits coming from a distance, an offer that I hope will entice many to compete who otherwise could not.

That the Show will be a good one I have no doubt, as entry forms have been applied for from many distant places including Quetta and Calcutta.

KADER.

THE Directors of the Gresham Life Assurance Society, tell us, among other matters incorporated in their 55th Report, that during the year, 5,613 Policies were issued, assuring an amount of £1,790,063, while 725 Proposals for £330 790 were declined. The New Premiums for Assurances completed amounted to £76,787 17s 4d. The Income of the Society derived from Premiums, Interest, and Rents amounted to £1,332,130 0s. 5d.

The Claims of Life Policies amounted to £474,149 12s. 6d. The Claims on Endowments maturing by age or expiration of term amounted to £172,856 1s. 0d. Fourth Day, Saturday, 10th September, 1904.

ALTHOUGH the sun shone brightly and it was very hot during this afternoon's sport, the deluge in the morning had turned the course into a swamp and disappointed the hopes of those who the day before had expected to see the races run on the dry. The sport, however, was good, and the fields were fair. Only one favourite was successful—Yuletide, in the Zeerut Plate. Mr. H. E. Smith secured two wins, Hello being an easy first in the September Plate and Morris just beating Fusilier by a head in the Entally Plate. Little Doris won the Maidan Plate and Second Thought the Pony Handicap. Actress obtained the verdict in the Belvedere Plate, steered by Mr. H. Smith, she won easily by several lengths. Details :—

THE PONY HANDICAP.—Rs. 500 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third. A High-weight Handicap for Ponies 14-2 and under.—Five furlongs.

Of John Jackson, familiarly known as "Jock o' Fairfield," no man breathing can speak so confidently as Mr. Henry Steel, the well-known bookmaker. The first time the two ever met was at Doncaster. Jackson was walking, before the decision of a race, alongside one of his horses, when Steel went up to him and asked if the horse would win.

"Yes," said Jackson; "back it!"

The cute Sheffielder did so, and won a considerable sum. The next time they met the "Blade" presented his benefactor with a handsome case of razors, bearing a suitable inscription. Jackson was so pleased with this delicate attention that he at once took a fancy to the donor, and advised him "to give up backing and take to laying" at the same time generously offering him £500 to start with. Mr. Steel accepted the offer and from that moment dates the foundation of his fortune.

THE TURF.

YORK AUGUST.

IN byegone years the York August Meeting seldom passed without exercising a potent influence upon the market for the St. Leger, but those times are no more, and nothing that can happen during the present gathering is in the least likely to effect the prospects of the last "classic" event of the season. The elimination of the French candidates has deprived the great race of most of its interest, and as a speculative medium it is now moribund. Much as the ground was in need of a thorough soaking, the heavy rain which fell throughout on the 23rd instant and the greater part of to-day came at an inopportune moment, so far as the Northern racing community were concerned, for it deterred many intending visitors from putting in an appearance on Knavesmire; but, having regard to the prohibitive conditions, the muster was decidedly good. As the afternoon progressed the weather improved, and the sun was in welcome evidence towards the close. The turf was in beautiful order, and the sport fulfilled expectations.

The anniversary of the Great Ebor Handicap in one of the most important festivals of the year in York, and it is to be hoped, for the sake of old associations, that the time when interest in the famous contest begins to flag is yet far distant. From all parts of the county of acres the sturdy Tykes bent their steps towards the ancient cathedral city, and excursion trains from the Midlands and the North landed thousands of holiday-makers within a mile of the course. Midday "finals" were selling like hot cakes in the streets before the clocks had struck nine, and the scene upon Knavesmire when the ball was set rolling was in keeping with the most glorious traditions of the August Meeting. The weather had taken a turn for the better, the wind remaining in a northerly quarter, and the air was decidedly autumnal. That the majority of those who came to see the big race were hopeful of witnessing the victory of the Yorkshire trained candidate, Palmy Days, was abundantly evident from their conversation, but unhappily they were doomed to disappointment, the gallant daughter of Trenton failing by half a length to hold her own against the Irish candidate, War Wolf. So well had the Middleham mare been tried that no more than 2 to 1 was obtainable about her chance, the victory of her stable companion, Kirkbride, in the opening event tending to still further diminish the price that was current before racing.

Betting: 2 to 1 agst. Palmy Days, 4 to 1 Hands Down, 9 to 2 War Wolf, 100 to 9 Hammerkop 100 to 8 Imari, 100 to 7 Wet Paint, 100 to 6 Wargrave, 20 to 1 Aralia, 20 to 1 Given Up, 20 to 1 Flor di Cuba.

Imari was the first to leave the paddock, and was followed in the parade by War Wolf, Given Up, Hands Down, Aralia, Wet Paint, Palmy Days, and Wargrave, with Hammerkop and Flor di Cuba bringing up the rear. War Wolf led the canter from Given Up, Imari, and Hands Down, Aralia being the last to reach the post, except Wargrave, who bolted a short way. The white flag was hoisted at 3-53, and the lot were despatched to a capital start six minutes later, Palmy Days being the first to show in front of Flor di Cuba, Imari, and Aralia, these being clear of Wargrave, Hammerkop, and Given Up, with Hands Down last for about a quarter of a mile. Then Aralia went on with a slight lead of Wet Paint, Flor di Cuba, Palmy Days, Imari, and Hammerkop, War Wolf dropping back last behind Hands Down. At the mile post Imari took second place, followed by Given Up and Flor di Cuba, these being about four lengths in advance of Wet Paint, who in turn was clear of Palmy Days till six furlongs from home, when Imari went on with a slight lead of Given Up, Aralia, War Wolf, Palmy Days, and Hammerkop, the lot being well in advance of Flor di Cuba and Hands Down Wargrave dropping into the rear. When fairly in the line for home Imari, Given Up, and Aralia were done with, and Palmy Days came on with a slight lead of War Wolf and Hammerkop, but she failed to hold her own against the Irish horse, who wore her down and won an exciting race by half a length; a length and-a-half separated the second and third. Hands Down was fourth, and, after a long interval, Given Up was fifth, Flor di Cuba sixth, Imari seventh, Aralia next, and Wet Paint last. Time, by Benson's chronograph, 3mins. 3secs.

Harvesting operations are keeping the farmers busily occupied just now, and though many of them managed to snatch a brief holiday to witness the race for the Ebor Handicap yesterday in accordance with long standing precedent, their absence was noticeable yesterday. Even so, the muster upon Knavesmire for the concluding stage of the fixture testified to the extreme popularity of the gathering with the townsfolk, and it was their privilege to assist at a capital afternoon's sport. A change of wind into the southwest during the night was followed by an appreciable rise in the temperature and storm clouds hovered overhead, threatening discomfort to racegoers, but happily the storm held off. Backers of favourites fared disastrously.

CRICKET.

Surrey vs. Middlesex.—Played at Lord's on 18th, 19th, and 20th August, Middlesex won by two wickets. There was no advantage in winning the toss in this match. On the one hand the wicket was perhaps a little less difficult before lunch on the first day than it was afterwards; on the other hand the ball travelled much more quickly in the afternoon than in the morning, while on the second day the conditions were about the same for either side, and on Saturday the wicket had vastly improved. On the whole the total made by Surrey in the first innings was good under the circumstances, and it was not at all surprising that only a few batsmen were equal to the occasion. Davis played an attractive innings, making thirty out of 45 in three quarters of an hour, but half the side were out for 93, and at lunch time six wickets were down for 106. Meanwhile Hayes had been playing a bold game, taking risks as necessary if runs were to be made, but hitting with much judgment. He survived until the total was 141. He made fifty-six out of 85 in an hour and twenty minutes, and his fine batting had a great deal to do with the excellent position held by Surrey at the close of the day. The over in which Hayes was bowled by Hearne was unfortunate for Surrey, for off the next ball (the third of the over) Lees was caught in the long field, and with the fifth Montgomery was bowled, so that Hearne took three wickets in four balls. Nice and Stedman made a very useful 38 for the last wicket. The Middlesex men who batted were very uncomfortable with Lees and Crawford. None of them looked like making runs, and when the day's play ended at a quarter-past six, owing to the bad light, four wickets were down for 69. On Friday the wicket was faster, and the ball travelled more quickly than on the previous day, but the bowlers always had the best of the situation. The fifth Middlesex wicket fell without any addition to the score; seven men were out when the total was 83, and at 84 the eighth wicket fell. In the end Surrey had the very useful lead of 70. In their second innings Surrey soon lost Davis, but Hayward and Raphael played fine cricket, and at lunch time the score was 56 for one. Afterwards the bowlers, more especially Bosanquet, began to make themselves conspicuous, and when Hayward was stumped at 78 for a beautiful innings of 53, and Raphael left for an equally good 49, no one except Hayes could do anything with the bowling. Fortunately for Surrey Hayes was again in brilliant form, and in the course of an hour's delightful batting he made 31 out of 87, and for the second time in the match played an innings which was of vast assistance to his side. Middlesex, with 250 to make, lost Douglas and Warner before a run was scored, and before five minutes past six when stumps were drawn on account of the bad light, Field and Bosanquet were both bowled by Crawford, who, so far, had taken three wickets for 11 runs in this innings. Unfortunately for Surrey the wicket was greatly improved on Saturday, and after a splendid fight they were defeated. Wells and Beldam made a stubborn resistance to the bowling, and they were not separated until their partnership had produced 88 runs in a little less than two hours. Wells was then dismissed for 38, having helped to put a far better appearance on the game. MacGregor came in and played the slowest of cricket, and when he had been in for an hour his score was only 17. Meanwhile Beldam was steadily plodding on, and at lunch time he and MacGregor were still together, with the score at 172. Thus Middlesex only required 78 to win with five wickets in hand. But soon after lunch Beldam was caught and bowled when he had brought his total to 98, after playing the most patient cricket for more than four hours. Of course his innings was of the utmost value to his side, and had a great deal to do with its ultimate success. After Beldam's dismissal the hopes of Surrey men rose, for Palmer and More were promptly disposed of, and with only two wickets in hand Middlesex still required runs to win. The game became extremely exciting, but MacGregor was playing a perfectly safe game while Trott did not seem uncomfortable, and the score rapidly mounted until when three runs were required to win MacGregor was missed in the slips off Lees, who had been exceedingly unlucky, beating his man time after time only to see the ball just miss the wicket by a fraction of an inch. It was the last straw, and Middlesex won a splendid victory without further loss. Trott and MacGregor put on 54 runs in fifty minutes, and played the only attractive cricket seen during the day. MacGregor was batting for two hours and three-quarters for his most valuable innings of 63 and once more proved himself to be one of the best men in England for a tight place.

ESSEX vs. LEICESTERSHIRE.—Played at Leicester on 18th 19th, and 20th August. Essex won by nine wickets. There was some interesting cricket on the first day of this match, Essex making 45 for one wicket against a total of 314 by their opponents. Most of the Leicestershire men played good cricket, but by far the best innings of the day was the 103 by A. E. Knight, who was at the wickets for two hours and-a-quarter. His partnership with King produced 101 runs in an hour and twenty minutes. McGahey's bowling proved very useful to Essex. On Friday McGahey and Turner took charge of the bowling, and put on 189 runs for the fourth wicket. McGahey was then run out after playing almost perfect cricket for two hours and three-quarters. Turner was three hours in compiling his splendid innings of 102. After this partnership was broken there was a surprising breakdown in the batting against the bowling of Gill, who, after lunch, took five wickets for 34 runs, while in the course of the innings he took eight wickets for 91, a very fine performance indeed. The sudden downfall of the Essex batsmen was followed by an equally surprising collapse when Leicestershire went in again, and although De Trafford and Wood batted well, six wickets fell for 79 before the day's play ended. Thus Leicestershire with only four wickets in hand, were 96 runs on. The last four men made a splendid effort on Saturday to put a better appearance on the game, and although the effort came too late, it enabled Leicestershire to give their opponents the task of making 204 to win. Fane and Carpenter played a beautiful game, and put up 133 for the first wicket in less than an hour and three quarters, Carpenter making some brilliant hits. When Fane left, Perrin joined Carpenter, and the two men played out time. Carpenter was batting for two hours and twenty minutes for his excellent innings of 108 not out, and among his hits were seventeen 4's.

MIDDLESEX vs. KENT.—Played at Lord's on 22nd, 23rd, and 24th August. Middlesex won by one wicket. Kent have done so exceedingly well lately, and Middlesex are so strong that the meeting between the two counties had been anticipated with great interest. Unfortunately the weather greatly interfered with the match. On the first day Kent, who were fortunate to win the toss, batted until lunch time on a soft and easy wicket and scored 139 runs for three wickets, but rain then set in, and although it ceased at about four and the players waited until nearly five o'clock, no further cricket was possible. Alec Hearne and Humphreys put up 71 for the first wicket in less than an hour, Humphreys playing most attractive cricket. Seymour was missed almost immediately after he went in, and then made 23 of the next 32 runs. Day did very little, but Mason remained till lunch time with Alec Hearne, who had then made 52, the result of two hours' steady cricket. On Tuesday morning the wicket was still very slow and runs were not easy to obtain. Mason was soon out, but Blaker played brilliant cricket, scoring 53 out of 67 in an hour while Alec Hearne still plodded steadily on. After Blaker was out Alec made 24 runs in half-an-hour, while Marsham was making nine or ten. At lunch time the total was 258 for seven wickets, Alec Hearne being not out 94. As soon as he had made his hundred, after batting most patiently for four hours and-a half the innings was declared closed the Kent captain evidently thinking that the psychological moment had come. But the Middlesex men batted exceedingly well, and although three wickets fell for 63, Warner, who had been playing admirable cricket, and Bosanquet, then got together and increased the score to 125 before rain stopped play. Warner was then not out 72 and Bosanquet not out 23. The next day Warner was soon run out, the partnership having accounted for 79 runs in an hour, but Bosanquet played a delightful game driving with great power, and scoring his 80 runs in an hour and-a half. He received very little assistance, and the tail broke down badly before the bowling of Mason and Blythe. Kent had a lead of 61, but it soon became a question whether this was enough, for Bosanquet was in great form with the ball, and no one except Humphreys and Blythe could do anything with the Middlesex bowling. The result was that Middlesex only had to make 135 to win, with three hours before them, a difficult task on a drying wicket. From the first it was pretty clear that there was going to be a hard fight for victory by both sides, but for some little time the batting was a little ahead of the bowling, and when Beldam and Field made 57 for the third wicket, it looked as if Middlesex might possibly win with some ease. But from this time the bowlers began to gain the upper hand, and when seven wickets were down for 90 their side had an excellent chance of winning. But Middlesex struggled on, and gained a splendid victory when the last two men were in. Wells and Payne played with the utmost pluck at very critical time. As things turned out the Kent captain made a mistake in declaring his first innings, but it was a plucky thing to do, and the result was almost worth it.

SURREY vs. SOMERSET.—Played at Taunton on 22nd, 23rd, and 24th August. Somerset won by seven wickets. There was no play in this match on Monday on account of previous rain. Surrey won the toss on Tuesday and batted on a wicket which seemed likely to become very difficult before the end of the day. Hayward and Raphael played excellent cricket, Raphael hitting very hard at times, but the ball had such an advantage over the bat that at lunch time seven wickets were down for 100 runs. Afterwards Baily and Lees played fine cricket, the former showing sound defence, and the latter hitting boldly. For such a difficult wicket the Surrey total of 156 was by no means bad, and when Somerset went in they could do very little indeed with Crawford, who, bowling with excellent judgment, had all his men in difficulties from the first. Lees also bowled well, but with very bad luck. Surrey had the very useful lead of 87. Davis, who went in first with Hayward, hit very hard and well when Surrey went in again, and when stumps were drawn the two men had made 64 without being separated, so that Surrey, with all their wickets in hand, were 151 runs on, and decidedly in a winning position. But of the last day's cricket there is a sad tale to tell as far as Surrey is concerned. The partnership between Hayward and Davis was broken after the latter had increased his score by five, and this was the beginning of the end. Raphael, McDonell, and Lees all made useful scores, but Braund was admirably suited by the wicket and the result was a break down in the batting. Somerset had after all only to make 243 to win, and by lunch time Lewis and Daniell put up 53 for the first wicket without being separated. It was not until the total was 141 that the first wicket fell, Daniell being out after a stay at the wickets of an hour and three-quarters for an excellent 50. From this time Somerset went ahead, and a fine partnership between Palairet and Lewis settled the matter, Lewis played a very fine game for his side.

SWIMMING.

TRIPLE CHANNEL SWIM.

DOVER, SUNDAY.

On 24th and 25th August 1875, the late Captain Webb swam the English Channel in 21hrs. 45mins.—a performance that still stands alone, for on Saturday and the next day Holbein, Haggerty, and Greasley all failed in their attempts to emulate his wonderful feat of endurance. Indeed, all things considered, the failure of these men to accomplish performances that could be placed side by side with that of Webb's was all the more accentuated, owing to the fact that it was thought that on the present occasion the chances of doing so were better than ever. Three men famous in the world of sport, but altogether dissimilar in their methods, had been selected for the trial. The first, Jack Haggerty, of Stalybridge, was at one period a champion at both sprint swimming and running. A careful liver and one who has been most abstemious throughout his career as an athlete, he can be described as a thoroughly sound man. It is true that he was setting himself a task that, compared with his other performances, was quite gigantic, but a three months' training to build himself up for the attempt was expected to give him ample time for getting ready. Then the next to be chosen was Sam Greasley, whose splendid record as a swimmer at every distance up to a mile made him a most likely candidate. In his prime he was certainly the best amateur in England, his victories in the Mile Championship, in which he once beat Horace Davenport's record, and other events, being quite convincing. Then when he turned professional, his successes year after year more than emphasised that he to a great extent retained the form that had made him famous as an amateur. Then the last to be picked, but by no means the least, as subsequent events proved, was the stout-hearted Monte Holbein. There is no necessity to refer to his record. Here it is only necessary to say, and, as is generally known, that famous as a long-distance cyclist and a capital walker and cross country runner, he had previously endeavoured to swim the Channel four times and failed, on one occasion, in August, 1902, getting to within a mile of finishing, after staying in the water for 23hrs. 21mins. All through his career he has proved that he possesses stamina of a most exceptional character, and thus, although a slow swimmer, was an eligible candidate. Indeed, there were many who averred that of the three men he possessed the best chance, owing to his previous experiences having taught lessons that were of value, an estimate that proved correct.

All three were failures, but the least that can be said of both Holbein and Haggerty is that although unsuccessful, they came through with the greatest credit to themselves and made gallant efforts to win the honours. Unfortunately enough, they were both taken ill, although no such excuse can be advanced in favour of Greasley. Holbein, who was the first to start made such good progress that those on the tug became quite enthusiastic over his chance. However, they did not know what the plucky fellow was undergoing for after the first few hours he was affected by enteric catarrh that pulled him to pieces. His magnificent constitution and indomitable pluck caused him to continue, and not until he had been in the water ten hours did he make one complaint, and then he came out of his own accord—a state of affairs that indicates how bad he was, for in all his previous efforts those accompanying have always been the first to ask him to desist. Haggerty started well, and went for twenty minutes in that graceful style of his own that causes his body to cut clean through the water like a fish. Then the low temperature of the water was all against his highly-trained condition, for he had worked off all the fat from his body, a state of affairs that caused him to take cramp in the kidneys. This was so violent that he became quite rigid, and but for the expedition of those in the boats would have sunk. Consequent upon this he had to be pulled out almost senseless, after an immersion of fifty-five minutes. Greasley, was in an hour and 31 minutes, and swimming about five miles he stated that the water was too cold for him to swim and came out without being asked.

Thus the three trials ended in an unsatisfactory manner, two of the men being taken ill and the third not extending himself. Out of this, little can be gleaned. However, in the light of these happenings there is no doubt that Webb's accomplishment was superhuman. There are people living to-day who aver that he swam the Channel honestly enough, but there are others of experience in swimming and nautical matters who look upon it with suspicion. There is no intention here to cast the least breath of doubt upon what has been an accepted performance for many years past, yet it is difficult to comprehend, in the face of the elaborate and perfect arrangements that have been made for more recent tryers in the way of feeding, training, and facilities, that Webb, who wore no mask, was not oiled round the body, and had but crude arrangements for taking food was successful. There is no doubt whatever that the men were greatly handicapped by the temperature of the water, for, although it was comfortable enough at Dover, out in the Channel itself it was very cold indeed. As a matter of fact, they would have been better served had they gone on the last neap tide a few weeks ago, for then its condition was most desirable.

CYCLING.

THE SOUTHERN ROADS HUNDRED.

The first open 100-miles unpaced time trial on Southern roads proved an unqualified success. It was organised by Southern Cycling Club, and the fixture evidently filled a vacancy for the sporting interest was very great. Starting from a lonely spot in Sussex about 4 A.M., and amidst a very cold fog, the fastest men were despatched first, at intervals of five minutes, and resulted in a wonderful performance by T. A. Fisher, of the Unity C. C., who completed the journey in 5hrs. 21mins. 45secs. which is only 2mins. 49secs. outside record. J. J. Ayden, another Unity man, did 5 hr. 27mins. 49secs. thus scoring first and second places and two fastest times to the popular northern club. Details (handicap made from R. Shirly, Polytechnic C. C., owing 15mins.):—

CHAMPION CYCLIST'S TRAGIC END.

George Leander, the crack American cyclist, who met with a terrible accident in Princes Park on Sunday, died on the 24th instant

Leander was riding in the chief cycling event at Princes Park on Sunday, being paced by Cissac on a motor-cycle, when riding at the rate of 92 kilometres (57 miles) an hour, he attempted to pass the French rider Bruni. Unfortunately, however, his machine slipped, and he fell with a terrible crash on his head. He was carried to the Beaujon Hospital, where he died this morning without regaining consciousness.

Leander, who was born in Chicago in 1882, made his debut in New York in 1901, and repeatedly gained such remarkable victories that his fame spread to Europe, and he received brilliant engagements. He came to Paris in June last and succeeded in gaining victories over several prominent champions in Princes Park. He was a superb athlete, and gave promise of becoming one of the greatest cycling champions of the world.

Hunting.

OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

THE meet on Monday, the 8th September, was at Sheffield Corner at 7-30 A.M. The Master first drew the cover beyond Audy Plantation blank and went down Parson's Valley for a good distance. Here hounds touched two stale lines, but could make little of them. They then crossed the Krummund path and went down Yemakal Valley at the head of which a line was picked up, but hounds failed to hunt it. A find was made near the Pykara River and the field had a very fast 15 minutes in the course of which we took to the Yemakal stream which was crossed in the direction of Ootacamund, but the jack turning round re crossed it higher up and ran a complete figure of eight. We sought refuge in a water course, was rooted out and turned down again with a long start, but soon went to ground again and was killed by the terrier pup Billy before the field could come up.

On Thursday, the 8th September, the meet was at the kennels at 7 A.M. The morning was again cold and windy, but the country was very dry. Hounds were first trotted to Gascoile's Cover from the top of which they got away on a cold scent and went slowly across the road towards Double Crossing. They crossed the Pykara Road and came down to the Municipal stream above Treble Crossing. Scent on the other side of the stream was much better and the pace increased. We went straight up the Blackmoor Vale to Buck Kiln Crossing and turned into Rallywood. Hounds emerged on the top towards Bluegums and running to the left along Porlock and almost reached Sheffield Corner. Another turn to the left and Sheffield was skirted and we went round the hill to Monkey Shola. Here the jack was viewed away at the top. He re-crossed the Krummund Road, left Jackal Shola to the left and swung round to Rallywood on entering which hounds were a couple of hundred yards behind them. A hat held up above the potato field showed that he had gone that way. Hounds checked at Porlock for a moment. They hit it off again and turned towards Sheffield Corner before reaching which they turned into the Nullah below Porlock, where there was another check. Coming out over the hill opposite, hounds streamed away down into the valley below Governor's Shola and ascending the opposite slope they ran through Road Shola and turned into Martyn's Shola without a pause. On the opposite side we ran up the Nullah to Shaw's plantation where a fresh jack took four couple of hounds off the line towards Hungerford, the remainder hunted steadily back below Shaw's plantation, past the Toda School and into the lower part of Governor's Shola. On account of the high wind it was hard to tell what happened here. The run certainly ended and some are of the opinion that hounds killed in cover. The Master then collected hounds and went after the others which had been stopped by Captain Kennard at the Krummund path. We went back and drew from Bluegums down Newmarket, but did not find again. It was a capital run with fair scent, in spite of the unfavorable conditions. The distance from points was about seven miles and for the most there was a momentary check

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

PAST drought has led to such a succession of indifferent sport that the attendance of late has been, not unnaturally, growing sadly less, and it was a small field apparently that were staunch to their Master and proved their loyalty to him and their keenness in sport by putting in an appearance at the bridge over the canal on the Salara road. My own informants being, I regret to have to state, laggards in sport of late, I have had to depend for my facts regarding this and the subsequent day's sport to the local reporter (to whom I offer my thanks) and to stray scraps of information. The gallant few who came hoping for good luck, despite previous sad disappointments were Mrs. Beatty, Miss Anderson, Lieutenant-Colonel Bull, I.M.S., Lieutenant-Colonel Channer, I.M.S., Mr. Harter one of the officials of the Bombay Hunt, Captain Denison, R.A., Captain Holbrook of the Gallant Mounted Infantry, and of course Colonel Sheringham with his brace of hard riding whips Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Casson. After moving off the Master turned right-handed over I hear not very savoury country—more "scent" then was required just then—and crossing a large rocky nullah made for the neighbouring hill range. Half way up hounds began to feather and promptly owned to a line and with great confidence ran at what seems to have been a fast pace over some very rough stone-clad hillocks. For ten minutes the pace was quite enchearing and finally hounds got a view and rolled a speedy but apparently not very stout jack over. Quite a pleasant little breather it must have been After this the Master moved on and a hare jumping up right in the middle of hounds proved a temptation too strong to be resisted and the whips were then kept busy for some little time. When hounds were collected and the rioters duly rated, Colonel Sheringham went on to where he had received information of a wandering jack, and the information proving veracious, for the varmint was viewed in the distance close to the canal bank, hounds were put on the line and scent being evidently unexpectedly good they raced at a great pace over some capital country, and after that must have been a most enjoyable gallop killed their jack near the ninth mile stone on the road to Karakwasla. The Master presented the brush to Miss Anderson as an acknowledgment of the excellent way she went. The few sporting people who were present must have been well compensated, virtue indeed rewarded and they probably "rubbed it in" to the faint-hearted majority. But indeed after the series of poor warnings people can scarcely be blamed for being a trifle shy of sterling restful hours from the night with no result.

The following hunting day when the meet was at Pashan, was unfortunately scarcely so successful. The field though slightly larger (tempted by the self satisfied scoffings of the lucky few who enjoyed the gallops above narrated) was not of any great magnitude. Among those out were Mrs. Lucas, Mrs. Sheringham, Miss Anderson, Colonel Channer, Colonel Bull, Mr. Enthoven and a few other regularly attendants.

Some likely looking cover was passed by without drawing, to everyone's surprise, but the Master evidently had news of a wandering one, for hounds later on opened on a line and a short run ensued, but when hopes began to rise high the hapless jack through ill luck in sore desperation went over a well wall. This quenched effectively any sporting ardour that might have been in him and after one of the whips rescued him from a watery grave he was not given much a chance to run again and his death was more speedy than noble. Not a very stout jack or of a galloping description. After a little desultory drawing over the surrounding fields in vain the Master wisely took hounds home. A disappointing morning and everyone is fervently praying for rain.

This regatta was not a success. The Senior Fours attracted but three crews out of whom only two crews were left in after a process of elimination; and their preparation did not inspire much hope that they would be fit to row the full course in anything approaching the Club's standard of rowing in Senior events. So it turned out that this afternoon. After a wonderful exhibition of rolling, splashing, and crab catching one boat stopped after turning the corner and the other paddled in alone over the last 300 yards of the course. There were two bumblepuppy events with which to fill in the afternoon—a Canoe scramble and the time-honoured Scratch Fours. Only two crews were in for the latter; but they were so level that, after rowing a dead-heat, there was barely a yard between them in the deciding heat. Appended are results :—

THE MADRAS BOAT CLUB.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE annual hot weather Regatta of the Madras Boat Club took place on Saturday afternoon on the Adyar. Recent rains have provided a good depth of water in the river and there was not so much trouble in regard to shallows and sandbanks as there was on the previous occasion. The day being a public holiday there was a large attendance, the picturesque grounds of the Adyar Club being full of spectators who watched the various competitions with keen interest. As usual with these functions, there was a good deal of unavoidable delay and darkness set in before it was possible to finish the programme. Instead of the sailing race being put first on the programme, the usual thing at these Regattas, the first event decided was the Pairs Oars (without coxswains) over a half mile course. The result of the previous heats left Goddard and Steele, and Ball and Sandeman in, the other crews being Sharpley and Leugard and Warren and Thornton. The two first-named crews met in the finals: but there was something radically wrong with the steering, the boats at one stage appearing to have fouled; it was finished, however, when Steele and Goddard were declared to have won by a length. Five boats went out for the Sailing Race (lady coxes) over half mile. It provided a very close finish, three boats sailing up the river "prow and prow,' but Mrs Josselyn's boat with Mr. Josselyn and Mr. O'Reilly just won with Mrs. G.W. Mitchell's boat (G.W. Mitchell and W. A. Turner) next.

The race of the day, of course, was the Challenge Fours in which the following crews competed :—

It was rowed over a half mile course and the pace set was very fast. Blue, rowing a quicker stroke than their opponents, early took the lead and kept it throughout. The Whites made a good race of it all through, but their final spurt came too late, Blues winning by nearly three-quarters of a length. The pace was altogether too fast for the Reds who were never in the race.

The finals in the Junior sculls were between A. H. Steele and W. H. Johnston, who had in the preliminary heats beaten R. E. Firth and E. P. Wilett respectively. The race was rowed in the dark and little could be seen of its earlier stages. Steele maintained his lead throughout and won, his opponent, it is said, losing too much ground in the beginning by missing his stroke.

The quarter mile Tub Race for Mixed Pairs (post entries)—always a popular event in these fixtures, was won by Mrs. Bell Scott and Mr. H. N. C. Campbell coxed by Mr. R. C. M. Strouts.

The Scratch Fours (lady coxes) had to be abandoned owing to darkness.

The prizes were distributed by Mr. A. J. Yorke.

LONDON, Friday, 26th August 1904.

THE most important motor cycle event ever held in this country was brought to a successful close last Saturday. It was the thousand miles Reliability Trial organised by the Auto-Cycle Club and in which some forty-five machines started on the previous Monday. Of this number twenty completed the run in official schedule time having in the six days travelled from London to Yarmouth, Stamford, Scarborough, Doncaster, Oxford, and back into London surmounting all the hills encountered on the route. On the whole, the weather was favourable, but on the Wednesday 180 miles were covered in heavy rain which made the roads anything but easy going and proved very trying for the motors. The result of the trials proves the efficiency of the motor cycle and since the trials took place over a wide area extending well out into the provinces it is fully anticipated that they will result in many recruits to the pastime. Naturally this will be to the good of the trade, and the experience that the industry gained will tend towards the introduction of a perfect motor bicycle, for although great strides have been made during the past year or two, the motor bicycle of to-day is some way off finality, there being several points where improvements can be made.

Perhaps in the question of weight, the makers will find the most difficult nut to crack, but still it is a point that should receive their most earnest attention as there is not the slightest doubt that many would—be motor cyclists are frightened off the pastime on this score. A motor bicycle built on present day lines is colossally cumbersome and might well dishearten the tyro and finally disguest him. In this connection it is satisfactory to learn that in the above trials a comparatively light machine only scaling a little over 100lbs. came through without experiencing any trouble and although only equipped with a two horse-power engine mounted every hill encountered. It is a record that many heavier and more powerful motor cycles cannot boast of.

It is with the deepest regret that we hear the announcement of Mr. S. F. Edge's retirement from racing. On the motor car and the motor boat he has done yeoman service to this country having once won and thrice competed in the Gordon-Bennett Cup and thrice won the International Cup race for motor boats. These are his principal performances in competition but he has won numerous minor races, besides practically making the British motor industry by being first to put on the market an English-built machine that could compare favourably with French production. His retirement is due to the indifference displayed by the Automobile Club in looking after its representatives in International events. The Club leaves all the worry and anxiety of making arrangements in International contests to its representatives and take the credit if they are successful. In France and Germany the Automobile Clubs act very differently; in fact, they act as befitting institutions founded to encourage the industry and promoting pure sport. His cars and motor boats will still be entered in leading events but they will be driven by others, Mr. Edge intending to look after his substitutes since the Club fails to do so.

Cyclists travelling about the country hear many amusing sayings from natives of quiet out-of-the-way villages and have many favourable opportunities of studying human nature as it is found. The other week a wheelman touring in Wales had the misfortune to damage his machine one Sunday morning, so ferreted out the local repairer in order to have the damage put right. The repairer considered the matter for some little while and then addressing the cyclist, said: "I can't do it, Sir, to-day is Sunday," and then taking out his watch and looking at the time, he said, "besides its too long a job, the people will be coming out of chapel before I could finish it." This is on par with the boatsman on Loch Lomond who declined to let out a boat on hire on Lord's Day but suggested to the tourist that he might take it without leave and come and pay for the hire on the Monday.

The Crystal Palace track, Sydenham, whereon the World's Championships will be decided early next month can scarcely be described as a modern track since it was erected some ten years ago when cycle racing was enjoying far greater popularity than it is now. Yet it is still a good track, especially for sprint events, but in paced events the banking is not sufficiently high to allow of any speed beyond 45 miles an hour. The track which is built of cement, measures 586⅓ yards in circumference thus being exactly three laps to the mile. It is 30 feet wide and banked at the bends a matter of eight feet, the home and back straights measuring 140 yards. The feature of the track is its suitable site: built in a hollow the rising banks all round provide ample accommodation for quite 50,000 spectators.

Although motorists have been called upon to pay heavy fines from time to time for some offence they may have committed under the Motor Car Act, one cannot, however, say that the Magisterial bench is antagonistically inclined towards them, indeed, motorists are frequently given the benefit of the doubt or are let off on some slight technicality. For instance, at Chorley recently, a motorist was charged with driving at an excessive speed, but the solicitor who appeared for him claimed that the prosecution was irregular, because the constable when he stopped the defendant and took his name and address, never stated that he would be prosecuted, but only that he would be reported. After the Bench had debated amongst themselves whether the policeman's statement was sufficient notice, the charge was withdrawn. In another case, however, a similar objection was overruled by the Magistrates, but as the defendant intends appealing against this ruling to the higher courts, it will be seen which bench acted correctly.

Bicycle Polo, which some few years back promised, for Ireland at any rate, to become a standard game, appears to have quite died out. In England, too, there at one time appeared to be a chance of its occupying a fairly prominent place amongst cycling pastimes but now it is absolutely without an existence; and the same state of affairs appears to exist in Ireland. Dublin was the home of cycle polo, and at one time the game was all the rage. It is certainly a pity that the game has not survived: it was interesting, and by the manner in which it was taken up at one time promised well for success. However, it is not the first good game that has died for lack of support.

A feature of this season's riding, has been the number of serious and fatal accidents that have befallen wheelmen. Every week sees more fatalities reported and one might well be afraid that the effect will be disastrous to the continual advancement of the pastime. Before me now, are two reports, one from Tunbridge Wells and the other from Brighton. In the first an account is given of a cyclist meeting with his death through a defective brake that was fitted to a hired machine, and in the other, the same old story of a runaway machine, a heavy fall and fatal injuries, is recounted. The pastime is no more dangerous than it was ten years ago, but those who indulge in it are less expert, indeed, almost careless in the way they ride, and in many cases court disaster by riding on their wrong side or rushing round corners at full speed.

CRICKET CHAT.

THE Poona Gymkhana have found an effective bowler at last in the person of E. R. Udal, the old Wykehamist, who has been transferred from Bangalore where he had a fine average for matches during the last two months. He is a fast bowler, in fact one of the fastest in India and in the two matches that he has played for the Poona Gymkhana since his arrival, has taken 15 wickets for 135 runs. Both these matches were particularly interesting, especially that against the Indian Civil Service. The latter team was by no means as representative as it might have been and among the most conspicuous absentees were H. D. Randall and E. L. Sale, who are both in England on leave C. A. Kincaid, C. W. M. Hudson, J. E. C. Jukes, and L. C. Crump. The inclusion of Udal in the Poona team proved fatal to most of the Indian Civil Service batsmen in the first innings his fast deliveries accounting for six wickets (five clean bowled) for 39 runs. He was well supported by Colonel C. F. Stevens, who will also be recognised as a well-known Bangalore player, the other four wickets falling to this bowler for 20 runs. The batting of the Indian Civil Service was very feeble, only one player, R. E. A. Elliott who made 13, getting into double figures. Thew, the Poona wicket-keeper, was rather expensive in the matter of byes and in all there were 30 extras in the small innings of 89. By far the best exhibition for Poona was the innings of B. M. Carroll who contributed 57 to the total of 220. The Hon'ble B. D. Butler (46), H. S. Kaye (25 not out), and Colonel Stevens (23) also did well. M. C. Gibb, the Dharwar player, was the most successful bowler for the Indian Civil Service with three wickets for 32. In their second innings, although Udal was again in great form with the ball and captured six wickets for 50 runs, the Civil Service gave a very much better account of themselves and ran up the respectable score of 229. For this excellent display they had mainly to thank three men, W. C. Shepherd (63), who is an old Sedberghian, M. C. Gibb (51), and C. S. Campbell (38), who between them were responsible for 152 of the total. J. Monteath who has been batting so well for Dharwar, I am sorry to notice, failed in both innings, but the old Cliftonian is none the less a fine batsman. Udal, as in the first innings, clean bowled five batsmen, Monteath, Curtis, Sladen, and Carmichael falling victims to his deliveries in both innings. Poona knocked up the 99 runs required to win for the loss of three wickets, Carroll (32), and Major Leslie (23 not out) doing well. The second match which was against the local Hindus was drawn. Major Leslie (41), Hon'ble B. D. Butler (24), and H. B. Hartley (22) were the principal scorers for the Gymkhana for which Greig and Monteath were only able to make 12 and 14 respectively. In the uncompleted innings of the Hindus Udal and Greig each took three wickets, the former for 46 runs and the latter for 38 runs.

The annual match between Belgaum and Dharwar played at Dharwar provided some very interesting cricket and the principal feature in the two days play was the success that attended the efforts of W. E. Copleston, the old Malvernian for Belgaum, and J. Monteath, the old Cliftonian, for Dharwar. Both men should, if form goes for anything, be given places in the Presidency team which at the time of writing has not been selected.

The game between Bangalore and Madras ended in a hollow victory for the home team and few if any will be surprised at the result. It is unfortunate that this annual match should be played at a time of the year when Madras cricketers are out of form for want of practice and still more so that there is no apparent solution to the difficulty as were the dates changed to December, Bangalore cricketers would be at a disadvantage owing to its being the off season for them. The game was principally remarkable for the complete mastery that B. Jayaram and B. E. A. Manson obtained over the Madras bowling, the former who has evidently greatly benefited from his eighteen months' visit to England for the second time in ten days putting up a century—133—and the latter also compiling three figures—104. These two batsmen between them were responsible for 287 of the total of 333 for five wickets.

A match at Ootacamund now-a-days is such a rare thing that the game between the Gymkhana and the Secretariat last week will have some interest for Madras Presidency lovers of the game although the cricket shown was very mediocre in character. Two good innings were played, R. Simpson's 44 for the Gymkhana and J. N. Atkinson's 34 for the Secretariat, and these were the only scores in the match that exceeded 20. No one else reached double figuers for the Secretariat, but for the Gymkhana Captain Milner (15) and Amirtham (14 not out) accomplished the feat. The latter bowled well taking six wickets for 29 runs. C. T. Studd never plays now and Ooty cricketers must look back sorrowfully to the halcyon days of E. H. D. Sewell, T. B. Nicholson, E. B. Kindersley, A. Edgington, C. D. McArthy, P. A. Turner, Major Reay, and Captains Hazelton and Bradford when matches were played at intervals all the year round.

Poona cricket has received a further acquisition in the person of Brigadier-General J. Spens, the old Haileyburian and Hampshire Cricketer, who is on a short visit from Allahabad and who unfortunately like the other visitor E. R. Udal is not qualified to play for the Presidency. He played for Ganeshkhind vs. the 10th Hussars who very sportingly brought a team from Mhow last week, but was not in luck's way, only getting a single. The Ganeshkhind team included Greig, Hon'ble B. D. Butler, Hartley, Du Boulay, and Bayford and the only batsman on the side who was able to make any headway against the bowling of Sergeant Mitchell was Greig who scored 80 out of the total of 145. This was really very fine effort and coming just before the return Presidency Match augurs well for the form the Western India Champion is in. The match which was the first played at Ganeshkhind this season was a most exciting one and ended in a victory for the Hussars by 2 runs. Sergeant Mitchell who is believed by Mhow cricketers to be a better bowler than any other in the Presidency certainly bowled up to his reputation and captured eight wickets for 82 runs and did the hat trick.

The Karachi Gymkhana inflicted a defeat on the Islam C.C., and the match was remarkable for the wonderful bowling of O. M. Barnes whose feat of taking 8 wickets in the first innings for 7 runs and 5 in the second for 6 runs or 13 wickets in the match for 13 runs has never been surpassed in Indian cricket and is an easy record.

It never rains but it pours is a true saying in connection with cricket matches in India and last week there was hardly a station where cricket is possible at this time of the year that had not an important match. Perhaps the most important and at the same time interesting match was that between the Poona and Bombay Gymkhanas at Poona. The meeting was the second between the two Gymkhanas this season the first game at Bombay having resulted in a ten wickets victory for Bombay, an altogether unexpected result. If the first game was, however, a surprise the return one was still more so. Bombay were without their fast bowler Coombs and comparing the side they brought up to Poona with that which represented the latter Gymkhana it must be confessed that their chances of escaping defeat much less winning looked none too rosy. Besides Captain Greig and General Spens, the two Hampshire county players, the Poona team included B. M. Carroll, Major Leslie, Hon'ble B. D. Butler, A. D. Wilkins, H. B. Hartley, and Colonel C. F. Stevens. With this array of batting talent it is hardly surprising that Poona ran up a first total of 339. The innings was a personal triumph for the veteran A. D. Wilkins who scored 118, his third century this season for Poona. General Spens contributed 53, while Carroll with, 38, Greig with 27, and Butler with 21 all made over 20. Bombay started so badly, losing Acton, Powell, and Major Carnegy three of their best bats for 70 runs, that there seemed very little hope that the follow on would be saved. The unexpected, however, happened and A. P. Langhorne and Captain J. A. D. Langhorne getting together laid the foundation of a total that left the visitors only 25 runs in arrears. The younger Langhorne made 86, his highest innings this season, Captain Langhorne 28, J. L. Ainsworth 35, J. S. Milne 30, A. B. Burney 25, A. F. West 20, and M. L. Carroll 32, while there were 38 extras against 6 in the Poona innings. So far the game had been even, but the second innings of Poona, who were minus two of their players, Dickson and Thew, who had to attend the assault-at-arms, provided a sensation the whole side collapsing before the bowling of Milne and Ainsworth for 70 runs. But for General Spens who made 40 out of the 64 runs from the bat the display of the home team would have been worse still. Four men including Greig failed to score and two others made one run each. Left with only 96 runs to get to win and fifteen minutes to get them in Bombay did well to knock up 30 for the loss of a wicket. This match will long be remembered as the most sensational ever played by the Bombay Gymkhana at Poona.

C. F. C. PLACE KICK COMPETITION.—The competition for the Challenge Bowl took place on the Calcutta ground on the 9th instant. The conditions were each competitor to kick from five different positions at each goal. Mr. E. Martelli was again successful, repeating his victory of last year. His total of 8 out of 10 goals was very good. Details :—

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

CUSTOMS vs. KING'S OWN.—The match between these teams provided an excellent game, the King's Own being ultimately victorious by a try to nil. The Regiment kicked off and after some exchange kicking Rowe got away for the Customs, a pass forward spoiling the opening. The Customs pressed but Viers lost two opportunities of scoring. The King's Own then worked the ball down and Basonett getting possession raced over with a try. No goal resulted and scrums in midfield followed till the interval. On changing ends play was principally of a forward character. Both teams broke away on occasions but no material advantage was gained and the game ended in a win for the King's Own as stated.

CALCUTTA vs. KING'S OWN.—This was the last match in the League and was played on the Calcutta ground last Saturday. The home team had rather the best of the first half scoring two goals but the Fort team played hard in the second moiety when they kept Calcutta from crossing their line. After the opening exchanges Ismay got away but was brought down, but the forwards had the best of the scrums and Macdonald getting the leather handed on to Martelli. A good bout of passing ending in Ismay scoring a try. Martelli converted. Shortly after Barnes nearly got over, the ball going into touch near the corner flag. The King's Own broke away from the line out but Newton got possession and transferred the play to the visitors "25." Following on some scrums in the King's Own territory Cumberlege picked up and transferred to Ismay who scored once again. Martelli being successful with the kick. After the interval the game was very even and keenly contested to the end but neither team could score and Calcutta won by two goals (10 points) to nil.

RUGBY UNION CHALLENGE CUP.

FIRST ROUND.

CALCUTTA vs. UNITED SERVICE.—Played on the Calcutta ground on the 12th instant, the home team winning by 5 goals and a try (28 points) to a try (3 points). The score does not represent the play, for though beaten behind the scrum the United Service played hard and gave Calcutta lots to do. The Services went away at the start but Macdonald relieved, and after a series of scrums Cumberlege picked up and passed to his threes who got through Ismay getting over. Martelli converted. Forward play followed then the home backs got going once more and Barnes scored a try. The place just failed, hitting the cross bar. This was the only place kick missed by Martelli during the match. On the drop out the United Service broke away but were unable to get through, and Siddons getting the leather ran in with another try, Martelli adding the extra points. Play was confined to the home territory and Landon ran through and punted, but a race for the ball ended in Greyburn touching down. Just before half time Ismay scored another try which Martelli converted. On resuming the Services showed improved form and a good dribble by Wilson and Moberly resulted in a try, no goal resulted however, and Calcutta pressing once more put on two more tries, Berridge and Martelli being responsible. The latter added the major points and Calcutta won as stated. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Greyburn, back; Barnes, Siddons, Martelli, and Ismay, three-quarters; Macdonald and Cumberlege, halves; MacLeod, Heilgers, Todd, Kerr, Bishop, Curtis-Hayward, Berridge, and Carroll, forwards.

UNITED SERVICES.—Godwin, back; Spry, Marshall, Garstin, and Landon, three quarters; Reeves and Grimshaw, halves; Captains Gardiner and Moberly, Dr. Wilson, Szczepanski, Stevenson, Thorburn, Gill, and Haughton, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. E. A. Smith.

CUSTOMS vs. KING'S OWN.—Another well-contested game was the result of the meeting of these teams on the Customs ground on the 12th instant. Play was mostly among the forwards. The Customs kicked off and had the best of matters for a time, Hollow very nearly scoring. Then the King's Own took the ball down and Basonett got a run in and crossed the line. The place failed. The home team tried hard to score, Rowe being most conspicuous, but without success and the visitors led at the interval by three points to nil.

On resuming the weight in the Fort team told the forwards had the best of the scrums but the home backs tackled well. Walker and Lieutenant Scott, however, managed to get over and Scully converting both tries, the visitors won by two goals and a try (13 points) to nil. Teams :—

KING'S OWN.—Scully, back; Basonett Ashworth, Lieutenant Baker, and Walker three quarters; Marsden and Lieutenant Marshall, halves; Lieutenants Scott, Ray, and Gibbon, and Lee, Waite, Fowler, Morgan, and Marshall, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Viers, back; Harris, Maitland, Porteous, and Hollow, three quarters; Simpson and O. Rowe, halves; Fitzgerald, Price, Royle, Petty, Fedricks A. Rowe, Nicols, and Adams, forwards.

Refree:—Lieutenant Ellis, West Ridings.

CITY vs. WEST RIDINGS.—This match was played on the Calcutta ground on the 13th instant and resulted in a win for the Dum-Dum men by a penalty goal and five tries to nil. Following the exchange kicks at the start some good scrums in mid-field took place. Then the City broke away and all but scored. The Ridings took the ball back to the centre, here they punted, but Hemmingway made his mark. Play ruled very even for a space, the City checking all runs by the soldiers. At last the Dukes' backs got away and Davey crossed the line. No goal resulted and from the drop out the City men took the leather to their opponents' 25, where an attempt to drop a goal by the City captain was unsuccessful. Then the Ridings went away and Beaumont ran down the line, but in getting over went out at the corner flag. Just before the interval a free to the soldiers gave Robinson the opportunity of dropping a goal, which was successful. On changing ends the City men did not show up so well. The ball was kept in their territory and the West Ridings put on four more tries, Coldwell, Flaharty (2) and Davey being responsible. They failed to add the extra points on each occasion. The City got going towards the end and playing hard had the best of the closing staves. Team :

WEST RIDINGS.—Quinn, back; Beaumont, Harrison, Coldwell and Davey, three-quarters; Holgate and Morris, halves; Garside (Captain), H. Robinson, A. Robinson, Flaharty Newbold, Newman, Joddings and Leister, forwards.

CITY.—Lees, back; George, Warden, Hemingway and Brown, three quarters; Williams and Schaumberg, halves; F. Cunliffe, Oakley Roberts, Grieff, Street, Clayton, Watling and Powell, forwards.

REFEREE.—Lieutenant Baker, King's Own.

FOOTBALL NOTES.

THE annual struggle between the representatives of the Thistle and the Rose, which took place last Monday evening, was productive of a hard, though, from a spectator's point of view, a somewhat uninteresting match. Both teams suffered through defections at the last moment Scotland being weakened by the loss of Moberly, while England took the field minus Curtis-Hayward and Cumberlege, which, however, let in Williams, the Welshman. Forward packs were evenly matched, and for the first quarter of an hour the Scotsmen had distinctly the best of the argument, but after this it was a case of bellows to mend with two or three of them. Of the Scottish forwards Kerr was far and away the best, his following up and tackling being the finest seen in Calcutta for a long time. He was well supported by Heilgers, MacLeod, and Todd who all worked hard throughout, while Scott was prominent in the open. For England in the front rank Barnes and Cooper were most conspicuous in the loose though only their confrères in the pack could say if they used their weight to equal advantage. Of the others Ray, Stevenson and Vick seemed to be doing most work. At half Williams and Marshall overshadowed the Scottish pair, indeed the former was the best back on the field and to him was England's victory greatly due. Macdonald did well and had the honour of scoring Scotland's try and Maclaren played very pluckily. At three-quarter England were vastly superior, but only got the ball sent out to them twice (be it said to the opposing forwards credit), and from the first chance Siddons put in one of his typical runs and scored the best try of the evening. Of the other three Landon caught the eye oftenest. Among the opposing four Dick and Dundas did a lot of useful saving, the former once tackling Ismay when the latter was seemingly well away, it is a great pity we have not seen more of Dundas this season. At back Greyburn had less to do than Newton who showed that his foot has lost none of its cunning.

The match between Calcutta and the Armenians on Tuesday evening calls for little comment. Calcutta being weakly represented, most of the second XV making up the team. The Armenians, who are generally seen at their best on a dry ground, were rather handicapped in this respect as the ball was slippery and the going heavy. Schaumberg scored twice from openings made by Barnes, who along with Cumberlege were the most prominent players on the home side, while for the visitors Apear and Yakchee were best, the latter's tackling and kicking being decidedly good.

The King's Own played their League match with the Customs on the latter's ground and were lucky to win as they did by a try to nothing. Rowe as usual was the most prominent of the Custom's lot but, he was well supported by Fitzgerald and Anderson. If they could only introduce a little combination into their play, the Customs would be a most dangerous combination for any team in Calcutta to face, and taking their recent performances against the C. F. C. and the King's Own they are a vastly improved lot from the beginning of the season, a state of affairs which must be very pleasing to Mr. Stevens, their energetic secretary.

King's Own and Calcutta brought their league engagements to a close on Saturday last when Calcutta after a really interesting game proved victorious by ten points to nil and thereby established themselves undisputed winners of the Indian Field Cup. The game was one of the best contested of the season, and it was only the superiority of the Calcutta back division that gave the homesters the victory. Ismay scored both tries and he along with Cumberlege and Martelli, who as he always does, played a most unselfish game, were the pick of the backs, while Newton at full-back, gained frequent applause by his fine kicking into touch. Of the forwards, Kerr was always in the van and the rest might with advantage imitate the way he and Curtis-Hayward drop the ball immediately they get it out of touch, of the others Bishop and Heilgers were most frequently in evidence. Taking the Fort team the forwards led by Lieutenants Scott and Ray pl yed well together, packing well together and getting the ball in the scrums quite as often as the opposing eight. At half Lieutenant Marshall was very nippy and Lieutenant Baker in the third line did a lot of excellent saving, and Scully at back fielded and kicked alike with precision and accuracy.

The League table stands as follows :—

Club.	Played.	Won.	Drawn.	Lost.	Pts. For.	Pts. Ag.	Points.
Calcutta F. C. ...	4	4	0	0	65	7	8
King's Own ...	4	2	0	2	19	33	4

The Final for the Junior Challenge Cup was decided on the Calcutta ground where the contestants were the Armenian College (holders) and La Martiniére. The latter were no match for their opponents who were superior in all departments of the game and won by three goals (two dropped) and 4 tries to nil and thus hold possession of the trophy for the second year in succession.

The United Services, who were assisted by one or two of the Dum-Dum XV, gave us a foretaste of what may be expected of them in the cup ties, by beating the West Ridings by 8 points to nil. They gave a refreshing display, Morris, of the West Ridings, playing a magnificent game against his clubmates, while Garstin showed to advantage, his try being the outcome of a good piece of play. The forwards all played well, Gardner, Szczepanski and Moberly particularly so.

The annual place kicking competition took place on the 9th instant, when Martelli, the holder, retained possession of the bowl presented last year by "A lover of Rugby." Martelli kicked in great style and won easily, though up to certain point Heilgers ran him close out failed through nervousness. Appended will be found the scores :—

BOMBAY ROVERS' TOURNAMENT.

The opening match in the first round of the Rovers' Football Tournament, in which the Bombay Gymkhana met the Seaforth Highlanders from Nusseerabad was played on Friday, the 9th instant. Although the local team was not considered to have a ghost of a chance against the powerful combination of the Highlanders and as a matter of fact eventually suffered defeat by 5 goals to nil, there were one or two redeeming features in the display they gave which, as far as they were concerned saved the game from mediocrity. Towards the close of the first quarter the civilian forwards pulled themselves together and put in some of the best play that was witnessed by their line during the match. One of the best forwards on the field was Lieutenant W. R. Coningham, an old Bath College player, who was fortunately able to turn out for the Gymkhana. Time after time he led attacks on the Highlanders' goal and had he been better supported the Gymkhana must have scored on more than one occasion. Dawson, the goal-keeper, was a source of weakness to the Gymkhana and gave a wretched display which was in huge degree responsible for the heavy defeat sustained by his side. Had it not been for the determined opposition offered by the backs Griffiths and Haines, the Highlanders would have found the net every few minutes especially in the second half. The Highlanders were never once extended and their goal-keeper was only called upon to clear once in the first half. Their backs played a brilliant game while the forwards showed grand combination the result evidently of very careful training. Their chances of entering the final are fancied.

THE second match in the Rovers' Tournament was played on Saturday evening between the Shropshire Light Infantry, from Ranikhet, and the Middlesex Regiment, from Secunderabad. The game was witnessed by a big crowd and was very even and exciting, the sides being equally matched. During the early part of the game the Shropshires had the advantage and a pass from Graham enabled Humphreys to score within the first minute. In the second half the Middlesex proved equally strong in combination and individual play, and just before time they equalised from a penalty kick by Snooks. Extra time was played amid great excitement, but the score remained unchanged—one all.

The tie was re-played on Monday morning. The heavy rain on Sunday had made the ground slippery. While on Saturday both sides appeared equally matched the Ranikhet team, this morning, were in excellent form and from the beginning showed superior combination. Though the Middlesex played for all they were worth and made a game fight, the Shropshires had matters their own way throughout. Terrant the Middlesex goal-keeper, had a peppery time and but for his sterling defence the margin against the Middlesex would have been a wide one: as it was he successfully resisted all but one attempt to score by the Shropshires who won by 1 goal to nil. As the result of a shot from Olliver who took a pass from Skyrme the latter found the net ten minutes from the start, no further point being registered. On the form displayed the chances of the Shropshires reaching the final appear favourable.

The South Lancashires, from Jubbulpore, and the Lincolns, from Secunderabad, met on Monday evening. The game was exceedingly fast, but was marred by undue feeling and a quarrel between two of the players. Play was even until Gibon, after a clever dribble, passed to Neill who scored for the Lincolns. Later Gibon made another attempt narrowly missing the net and then the Lancashires livened up and shortly after changing ends Cook scored for them from a penalty kick. Keeping up the pressure Lancashires quickly added another goal, but Neill for the Lincolns soon equalised. Lively play ensued, the Lincolns attacking vigorously, but another penalty gave the victory to the South Lancashires, Cook registering the winning point. The teams seemed to be well matched, the Lancashire men being lucky in turning their penalties to account. Result:—South Lancashires, three goals; Lincolns, two.

Two games were played in the Rovers' Tournament on the 13th instant. The ground was slippery after the recent rain. R. F. A. from Kirkee defeated the Yorkshires from Cawnpore by three goals to two after a hard game, the Warwicks beat Bombay Rovers by two to nil, the first goal being scored from a penalty; the Rovers had hard luck and there was some murmuring at the Warwicks' second goal, scored just before the finish, being allowed

The Dog.

DISTEMPER.

EVERYONE who has had any experience in breeding and raising well-bred dogs has seen the "most promising pup he ever had" die from distemper, or from the infectious gastroenteritis of puppyhood, called "dog plague" by the Germans, which is a disease somewhat similar to the stomach and bowel type of distemper. And this in spite of the most strenuous "doctoring."

In human medicine we have doctors of medicine, pill-pellers, and grandmothers. In veterinary practice we find grandmothers, "hoss doctors," and doctors of veterinary medicine. The dog has a strong constitution indeed who can survive the well-meant but terrible services of the two classes first named.

Utterly regardless of pathology and therapeutics, sulphur, an irritant, must be forced into stomach and intestine already inflamed to such an extent that the mucous membrane is on the verge of sloughing. This is done because sulphur (or gunpowder) is "good medicine for a dog's 'stumick' and bowels." By this same logic, if the sufferer has that form of distemper in which the nasal and respiratory passages are most involved, he is "smoked" with tar, feathers, old rags, leather, gum shoes, etc. In fact, the worse the smell the better the remedy—who would be so foolish as not to give "strong medicine" to a dog? If the dog gets pneumonia, it is because the treatment was too late. If he gets well, the stink did it.

In the nervous form the proper remedy is to rip a slit in the back of the patient's neck (the more filthy the knife used the better); put in plenty of red pepper and salt, and finish the treatment with a strip of red flannel well soaked in tar as a seton. I have seen a tallow candle inserted into the rectum for the same condition. These are effective treatments, for they make the dog forget that he has nerves.

I do not doubt that some of my readers have tried these remedies and that it has never occurred to them that they are cruel and ridiculous until they see them in print.

In treating a dog with distemper we should remember that it is a specific disease always caused by contagion. It is like measles or diphtheria in this respect. Every cough is not distemper any more than a child with a cough is always a victim of whooping cough. Therefore, the first step in its treatment is to prevent it. This seems to be practically impossible in the city, for like a Kodak, an instantaneous exposure is all that is needed. It would seem that more real disinfection and less odour at bench shows would be desirable. The object of dog show "disinfection" seems to be similar to that of my coloured man when he puts a lot of perfume on his Sunday duds before he goes to a dance. Then, too, each stall should have its own feed pans, and these should be thoroughly scalded between shows. Dogs are carnivorous animals by nature, and a little raw meat twice a week from weaning time until a dog is grown will do wonders for a pup's constitution. If, like Alkali Pete we have "done our damndest, angels can do no more," and if a dog gets distemper the first step is to isolate our patients.

The dog should be placed in a warm, dry room, with plenty of fresh water. There should be good ventilation and changes of temperature are very dangerous. The usual case of distemper is accompanied by a peculiarly offensive diarrhœa; the odour is wonderfully similar to that emanating from a case of small-pox. Therefore, the first indication for treatment is to clean out and purify the stomach and intestine. Castor oil is my choice for the initial cleaning, although some good men prefer calomel. If the oil causes vomiting it is not a disadvantage. The remedy I prefer for disinfection is medicinal methylene blue. The dose is one grain (a half grain for a pup), three times a day. It should be given in capsules or uncoated tablets. This drug is a fair germicide, penetrates deeper than most, antiseptics, and is, to a certain extent, taken up by the circulation. It is harmless in the dose mentioned. When we consider that distemper is an infection of every part of the dog's body, the reason for the use of a drug of this character is clear. Post-mortem examination of a dog which has taken methylene blue shows that the nervous system is blue in colour; the urine is also blue. This indicates that the drug passes through the blood, and reasoning from the resemblance between distemper and diseases in which bacteria are found in the blood, we are justified in believing distemper to be a blood infection with local manifestations. This is a favourite drug with many physicians in the treatment of typhoid, septicemia, and malaria. Under its influence the stool becomes much less offensive and blue in 24 to 48 hours. It seems to control the fever to a certain extent, although, per se, it has no effect on temperature. It should be continued for about a week or a little more, or until the acute infection is over.

A certain degree of fever is Nature's method of combatting infection; but if the temperature goes above 104deg. it is well to give phenacetin. I like to give it in the combination known as a migrain pill. Phenacetin is a heart depressant, and in this pill the combination with other drugs counteracts this disadvantage.

The eyes should be kept clean; plain boiled water is as good as any antiseptic, but a rag should never be used more than once. A dirty rag filled with infection is too much like the man and the bramble-bush. A little lanolin around the eye will aid in preventing the ulceration which I have seen from the discharge coming in contact with the skin.

The nasal discharge is a difficult problem. A dog will insist on licking the discharge from his nose, and absorbs a large quantity of filth and poison in this way. A feather inserted into each nostril and left there for a brief time is very effective in causing him to sneeze and expel much of the mucous and pus with the feather. I have just tried in a severe case the use of five, and only five, drops of adrenalin chloride solution (made by Parke, Davis, and Co.,) in each nostril, three times daily. The result was remarkable; but one swallow does not make a summer. The head should be thrown well back and held there for a time, so that the drug will reach as much of the nasal mucous membrane as possible. The feather should be used first. A drop of the same solution in each eye twice daily will "perform a miracle."

Convulsions, etc., require bromides, but when these occur it is almost useless to continue the fight, as such a large proportion of the victims die and so many of those that live are paralytics and idiots. To be sure, an idiot may win prizes and be sold for a good figure, as I know from the purchaser's end of the line; but this does not benefit either the dealer or the business.

The question of diet remains. When there is absolute loss of appetite, forced feeding with broth is a necessity. Milk is bad for cases during the time in which there is severe diarrhœa. It curds in the stomach and passes through the intestine unchanged. Later it is good. When the patient will eat, raw meat, eggs, broth, etc., should be given. A moderate quantity of brandy is very useful in the broth or milk, as alcohol is a food and prevents waste of tissues. Brandy is not laxative, like whiskey. The use of direct stimulants like strychnia and digitolis is poor policy unless it is near the end of the acute stage of the disease. This kind of medication is like a mile runner starting at a hundred-yard clip.

For a long time after convalescence the dog is best kept as quiet as possible. Exercise is liable to cause a relapse, and also to lead to dilatation of the heart muscle already softened and degenerated by fever and poison. I lost a good one in this way. Of course, dilatation leads to permanent heart disease. Don't wash a convalescent unless you wish to learn the treatment of pneumonia.

Even by scientific treatment one will lose a large number of dogs, either in the acute stage or from complications which follow, but this kind of treatment is humane, and will give much better results than the prevalent "good medicine for dogs" treatment.—Field and Fancy.

INDIAN BRANCH OF THE SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF BIRDS.

THE results of the past year have on the whole been eminently satisfactory. In consequence of increased professional duties at Meerut, the Honorary Secretary has had even less time than ever to give to the cause of Bird and Game Protection. A glance at the sum expended in stamps will, however, show that a considerable amount of correspondence has been carried on in the past twelve months. It is no small satisfaction to be able to feel that the Society's Branch in India has borne its share—a small one no doubt—with such important bodies as the Game Preservation Associations of the Nilgiris, Mysore, Rangoon, etc., in bringing to the notice, both of the public and the authorities, the need that exists for further action in the matter of preserving our Indian fauna. Subscriptions showed a considerable increase over the previous twelve months, due in a great measure to the generous donations of H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore, H. H. the Maharaja of Kuch Behar, and the Nilgiri Game Preservation Association. At the same time the funds do not admit the employment of a paid clerk, and the Secretary has to carry on the correspondence during his spare time. Further aid in subscriptions is therefore earnestly solicited. Bird Notes and News, issued by the "Home" Branch and obtained and distributed gratis to annual subscribers of Rs. 3 and upwards.

The results of the Act recently passed by Lord Curzon's Government appear on the whole to be satisfactory: nevertheless there is no doubt whatever that efforts are being made—and unfortunately with some measure of success—to evade its restrictions.

Need for such an Act is clearly shown by a cursory glance at a sale of birds' feathers held in the Commercial Sale Rooms in London on 16th February 1904

No less than 291 packages of herons' and egrets' plumes (Ospreys) were disposed of, the majority being "from India, others from south America and China. The lowest price was 24s. 6d. per ounce, 26s. to 36s. being a fair average, and a few special lots fetching as much as £5, £7, and £9. 12s. 6d. per ounce; while some grey heron's plumes went as low as 1s. 9d."

Of other Indian birds were 1,828 so-called "Impeyan" (Monal) pheasants realising from 1s. 9d. to 3s. 4d.; "Japanese Argus" (Himalayan Tragopan) pheasants 21s. to 26s.; various Hawks and Eagles (many Spizaetus) 2s. 7d. to 5d.; Ravens 1s. 4d.; 400 small Indian Owls 1d.!!!; 50 larger ones (including ketupa, the Fish Owl) 8d. each !!!; 2,600 Paroquets (chiefly P. torquatus) 1s. to 1s. 0½d.; and about 3,000 rollers (Indian Blue Jay) which averaged 1s. Flat Jungle-cock skins without the necks (probably taken for fishing-flies) realized 1s. 7d. to 2s. 2d.

This will give some faint idea of the efforts of India to meet the demand in London—and doubtless on the Continent and elsewhere—for birds' plumage.

The indignation of "Trade" at Home proves that the Act is making itself felt, but, nevertheless it is to be feared that many skins find their way out of the country.

Communications with the Customs Authorities pointed to the probability of the post being used for the purpose of evading the Act. It is to be hoped that the Postal Officials may be able to aid Customs in this matter.

Furthermore during the spring, an advertisement for feathers of herons and paddy birds appeared in the Pioneer. The advertiser was promptly communicated with, but as there is nothing to prevent a dealer from carrying on his trade, provided he does not export, it is most improbable than any good resulted. A circular letter sent round some months ago, elicited the fact that many feathers and skins are supposed to find their way out of India through French and Portuguese ports, but no definite information was forthcoming.

A correspondent in Assam writes regarding the destruction of peacocks in certain districts, due to a demand for the feathers.

It would appear from his account that, in the Darrang District where it was formerly abundant, the bird has been practically exterminated.

It is gratifying to see that not only Europeans, but natives, are being aroused to a realifation of the state of affairs. Recently the Jains in Guzerat have started a movement having for its object the abolition of the use of egrets' feathers in the head dresses of native princes.

While the cause of Game Protection has always been strenuously kept to the front, the Society's first object has been the protection of birds against the destruction of the plume hunters The various Game Associations have always readily assisted this Society in its efforts, and the Nilgiri Game and Fish Preservation Association has in addition most generously given monetary support.

Game laws are now in force in Cashmere, Jammu, the Nilgiris, Mysore, Travancore, Bombay, Sindh, Bengal and Raipur (C.P.), but in most instances, though better than nothing, they are respected mainly by the European. The restrictions regarding the importation of birds and animals into Municipalities at certain seasons too often remain a dead letter.

The unremitting efforts on the part of societies and individuals have at last induced Government to draft a Bill for the better preservation of Game and Fish, which has been sent to the interested parties for our expression of opinion. The speeches of Sir Frederick Price and the Honble Mr. H. P. Hodgson at Ootacamund on 25th July, are well worth the persual of every one who is interested in the matter. In regard to guns for crop protection, it is probable that the cutting down of the barrel to 12 or 14 inches would have an excellent effect. It would be quite as useful for such purposes as a longer weapon, while at the same time its powers as an exterminater would be almost nil. The distinction made between officials and non-officials seems unfair, and a much better one would be residents and non-residents. The latter, being tourists, and therefore presumably men of means, could afford to pay a considerably enhanced fee for a license.

Whatever regulations are finally passed, it is to be hoped that they will not be allowed to remain a dead letter or merely to control European and Indian sportsmen, while leaving the wandering and criminal tribes, low-caste native shikaries to carry on their methods of extermination unchecked.

In the United Provinces for instance enormous destruction is carried on by Aheryas, Bheriahs, Kunjars, Pasis and Chamars, particularly after the cutting of the spring crops. As the heat increases, and the fields of the corn are harvested the game fur and feathers take shelter in the few khets left uncut, or in patches of Dhak Jungle. A wandering party of one of these castes, takes up its abode in the neighbourhood, and proceeds to surround every piece with nets. When ready a "hank" is made, with the result that practically everything in the patch, pig, buck, does, fawns, hares, partridges, quails, etc., are caught and killed. A friend informs me that on one occasion he counted over 200 black partridge skins in an encampment!!! It surely should not be difficult to put a stop to wholesale netting, at any rate during the hot weather, when the practice, if systematically carried out, means the practical extermination of the small game in the district.

Once more our warmest thanks are due to Messrs. R. A. Spence and E. Comber for their aid in Bombay, and to Mr. Laxmidas who similarly represented the Society in Guzrat. The Press throughout India has also given invaluable aid.

Finally an earnest appeal is made for financial assistance. As in previous years certain subscribers have omitted to forward their subscription.

It is doubtless not the amount that is the cause, but the little trouble that must be incurred in sending it. Will those who have so kindly supported the Society's efforts in the past, continue their aid? An appeal is especially made to the native nobility and gentry. Their feelings and religious predelictions are in favour of the protection of animal life. Yet but few of their names appear on the list. Money is wanted for publishing, advertising, postage, and for the usual expenses attendant on carrying or a work of this kind. It was found that a large number of persons were deterred by the idea that the Society looked askance at followers of sport and Natural History, and it has been no easy matter to eradicate this impression.

The only rules that are binding on members are:—

(i) That they shall discourage the wanton destruction of birds (and animals) and interest themselves generally in their protection.

(ii) That they shall refrain from wearing the feathers of any bird not killed for food, the Ostrich only excepted.

(iii) That they shall endeavour to recognise fully the breeding seasons of the various species and refrain from sport at those times. (This is not intended to prohibit Naturalists from indulging in their several pursuits, but it is taken for granted that their innate sense of what is right and proper will cause them to act with moderation.

(iv) That they shall endeavour to act as becomes true sportsmen and lovers of nature and to induce others to do the same.

MEMBERS.

Any person may become a member of the Society, on paying the sum of two annas as registration fee and agreeing to the objects of the Society as stated in the rules.

ASSOCIATES.

Members may become Associates of the Society on agreeing to pay one rupee or more annually, and Life Associates, a donation of one gold mohur.

Associates who subscribe five rupees and upwards annually and donors of five gold mohurs, will receive a copy of each new publication as issued.

Subscribers of one gold mohur annually will be designated Fellows.

It is to be hoped that all sportsmen, naturalists, and lovers of bird and animal life, will be induced to lend their influence and financial aid—the smallest subscription and donation—to enable the Society to defray the few necessary expenses.

The number of letters and communications that have to be written, before individuals make up their minds to join is very great, and numbers of circulars and letters have to be despatched to which no answer is vouchsafed Such work should really be carried out by a clerk, but until further funds are forthcoming, it is impossible to employ one. In the meanwhile every advantage possible must be taken of the means at our disposal.

It is to be hoped that those who had supported the Society this year will not only not withdraw their aid, but will endeavour to further its aims and objects by inducing others to join. The Society for the Protection of Birds, which in India also includes wild animals generally, does not propogate the views of a few faddists, but endeavours to prevent by reasonable means the extremination or undue diminution of our Indian fauna.

Subscriptions and donations may be paid to the Honorary Secretary.

JOBKINS TRIUMPHANT.

MY old crony Jobkins, trainer, is a bit of a philosopher in his way, also facetious by inclination, and he often talks at great length not because he has anything to say, but for the purpose of airing his vocabulary Flow of speech is what he cultivates, heedless of less picturesque considerations. It would not make the slightest difference if there were no persons present to hear him: I mean that it would make no difference to them. Their waste of time might be registered in another direction with equal futility.

As to the subject of his racehorses, Jobkins is eloquent when he is allowed to express his opinions in extenso. "Pace," he said, "is, on the racecourse, a relative term. We may think that we are going fast in the society of moderate competitors—I do not refer to those of the opposite sex—when actually we are not beating the slowest time on record. Pace," he raised his voice, "is like scent: we chatter about it, knowing next to nothing."

"But the fox and the jockey know next to something," I observed, with a frivolous air intended to disarm criticism. "They are assumed to have a little sense between them."

Jobkins pulled himself together. "Whatever they may know," he replied, "the fox and the jockey usually keep their mouth shut. They do the work, and let others do the talking It is not easy," he added, with a flourish, "to combine those two accomplishment."

Having selected a comfortable armchair near to a table whereon decanters were arranged temptingly, for my old crony loves to go the whole course when it is irrigated, Jobkins sat back in a luxuriant manner, and, indubitably, he could not have sat stiller if at all, on a two-pound saddle. He began to speak again as though he had never said a word for hours. I could scarcely get a remark in edgeways—a cruel punishment for me. It was necessary to punish the decanter in exchange.

"Pace and scent," so he ran on, "are subjects of vast sporting interest. They fire our imagination, thrill our pulses, absorb our money, and we are never happier than when we are engaged in their pursuit. They go to the root of all things, as may be said; if there is no scent, pace is sure to be bad; without pace we cannot expect to keep ourselves warm."

"Not if you say so." I returned, modestly. "Your ultimatums are generally exhaustive."

"I won a race once, only once," he declared "by peculiar tactics, which greatly astonished the natives. Men applauded me before I had drawn my money a touching proof of their confidence in my ability."

"You promised to tell me all about it when the sun went down." I beamed at him encouragingly. "So far you have indulged in a few inglorious skirmishes, and the sun disappeared some time ago Get along with you, do." I assumed a severe aspect. "Have you no trace of Christian principle?"

"I intend to give you a taste or two of my quality as we make progress," said Jobkins, returning my persiflage in the same genial spirit which inspired it; "and I am sure you will agree that the story is very interesting. It has also the merit of truth, and that is an unusual feature calling for instant recognition in connection with sporting narrative. Who said 'rats?'"

He cocked his ears, so to speak, in a suspicious manner, and sniffed with an air of aggression. If he had been a terrier in the pit he could not have looked more dogmatical or alert; and I denied all thought of rats in this relation. Why bring in vermin irrelevantly?

"Though we have not assembled," I put in, 'for the express purpose of hearing you talk to the point of distraction it is just as well now you are here"—he squirmed slightly in his chair—"to listen to your diatribes. How does number one go?'

"It is amusing," Jobkins answered, and raised his glass Heavenward—that is, mouthward. "I was training a few horses at that time for an owner of the old-fashioned school many of whose ideas were obsolete. He cut a quaint figure in the paddock, with shambling gait and clothes that fitted where they stuck, while a fair Sunday's School teacher would have been demoralised by the strength of his verbiage. He fired off a series of terrible volleys and never lacked ammunition. A perfect hero he was in the firing line. His soul rose in arms when he heard the familiar battle-cry of 'Evens the field, two to one bar one, and any price the perishers!"

Moistening his lips for a further magnificent effort, Jobkins glanced at me appreciatively as at a fountain of whisky, and resumed:

"I could never find out really what that ancient owner knew about racehorses or what pleasure he derived from them, save in the betting market. He did not converse about them if other topics were instituted. His practical judgment was not often displayed to advantage, least of all when he opened his mouth, except to put a slice of fat into it. He had a way of opening his mouth rather close to one, which was objectionable, since his breathing apparatus seemed to have been poisoned at its source. I hated to go near enough to receive his unsanitary instructions"

Then it was that Jobkins sighed as if with remorse for some of the sorrows he had gone through in a fiduciary capacity, and for which he had received no extra remuneration. He sat back in his chair again and caressed his chin fondly, with goblet in the other fist. I had no idea what he was thinking about, which was, perhaps, as well for me, if not for him. What some trainers think about after business hours is not fit for the contemplation of ordinary burghers. So I said:

"And now as to the race you won by unrighteous tactics, taking the bread out of the mouth of a stranger. He subsequently expressed a wish, I believe, to make your acquaintance in a twelve-foot ring."

"He threatened to punch me round the paddock at first with incredible violence," my old crony admitted. "But it was not my fault by any means; it was the work of that venerable humbug of an owner for whom I trained. We had a speedy non-stayer running in a mile and a half race, and my patron had sketched out what he called a map of the riding orders. The jockey was to do something special at every small coloured dot marked at various points of the journey. At one place there were two larger red dots, when he was ordered to hit his mount twice and lean more forward than had hitherto been accomplished on the English Turf. Besides, that owner said:

"We must have no blessed dawdling or hanging back or "waiting for the whisper" in the race. If the prize were only fourpence halfpenny I can do with the fourpence and you"—he nudged his trainer—"can have the halfpenny. But our jockey must come along all the way, especially round the corners. Steam ahead, my boy, that must be his motto, and Heaven speed the plough! Tell him what I say—no messing behind until it is too late to capture my fourpence, and no coming with a final spurt to secure the halfpenny for you. D'ye hear?"

"I told him that I heard all right," continued Jobkins, striding out freely; "though I also mentioned that our horse was a non-stayer who was not likely to be suited by a strong-run race, and that nursing tactics might be more judicious. He paid no attention to my arguments. 'Mine will stay as well as the others in this race,' he averred, 'because he is the best of a bad lot, and they cannot stretch him out at the top of his speed. Most of 'em,' he added, with a chuckle, 'are stickers if you give 'em stick enough, and I don't mind how much of that my champion gets if we'—he waved his arms as if he were going down for the last time and knew it—if we get the fourpence-halfpenny.

"That was conclusive, of course," thus the brave Jobkins went on," and if it had not been conclusive I should have declined to argue the point with an owner who possessed such a double-barrelled breath as that described. I gave our jockey, therefore, his riding orders without modifying them to suit my private exigency. He cantered to the post with as much assurance amongst the others as if he had already got several of them partly whacked and had the rest virtually beaten. He was a sanguine youth, or he would not have been there on that occasion—at least, not in such a position of precarious emolument. He was to receive an extra 'fiver' if he won, but if he lost—"

Here poor Jobkins tried his flowing beaker for another coup, just as if the vision conjured up in his mind were too horrible for endurance without the aid of stimulant Story-telling is certainly thirsty work. That is a reason, perchance, why many professors of this art fail to achieve distinction apart from their powers of absorption during a carousal. Constant irrigation of their system produces sloppy results. Yet my old crony simply dipped his beak twice or thrice as intimated—I cannot swear to a time or two—gurgling affectionately, as if in response to words of tenderness and passion, and then he muttered, "Where are we now?"

"We are cantering to the post with our toes out," I reminded him, "and with a rapt expression of countenance just as though we had already won more than we expected and were on the point of drawing our 'brass.'"

"Very well," said Jobkins. "Our horse jumped off in front when the flag fell (it was before the starting-gate was thought of), and his jockey began to rouse him up with vigour. He rode him hard with his hands from the outset, whilst tickling his ribs in the orthodox manner to show that business was meant. The noble racehorse responded to the best of his ability, for he was game enough even if mediocre in other respects, so that he was soon out by himself, several lengths to the good. Hopes of victory blurred my vision to some extent, and I was too excited to see straight, as had happened"—he coughed modestly—"on previous occasions. To win a race at last!—such, undoubtedly, appeared to be my glorious fate."

"Our runner kept pegging away in front till the last quarter of a mile, when his stride shortened and slowed; he was very tired. The worst part of the expedition was over, the nicest bit had to come, whips were being used freely, and yet—" The orator grunted and paused.

"Well, and how did the play end?" I asked, anxious to reach the dénouement in Act VI.

"My candidate was stone-beat, and so were the others. He had strung 'em out for speed, and when it came to 'sticking' he had them at his mercy, albeit no 'sticker,' since he had established a lead and they were too much exhausted to reduce it. He had won by the length of a street, say Queer-street, which often seems interminable. In fact, they were all non-stayers who took part in that competition, and whether ours was the best or the worst of the bunch I have not been able to determine. His winning proved nothing."

"No?" I murmured, feeling my way into deep waters.

"No," retorted the trainer, emphatically. "Because the race was falsely run on a map of the-world sort of course, and without those coloured dots my jockey would never have got home. And there was," he winked, "another thing."

"Yes?" I ventured changing my form of salute.

"Yes—yes!" he cried, with flashing eyes. "Not only were they non-stayers in that race but they were also 'welshers' of the deepest dye and before they went to the post I had sneaked the last bottle of whisky in the paddock for mine—for me and for mine!"

TO MOTORISTS

THE BEST OILS FOR MOTOR CARS

Wilburine for cylinders .. Rs. 6-8 per gallon Tin. | Valvoline for Bearings, etc. ... Rs. 5-0 per gallon Tin.

Extract from the "Autocar."

LUBRICATING OILS.—[2422]—It may be instructive to your numerous readers to have the experiences of a motor car experimentalist on the behaviour of lubricating oils for motor work. In the first onset I tried various sorts of oils, all of which left deposits of carbon and gumming matter in the cylinders and valves. These deposits are serious drawbacks, not only to the working of the pistons and valves, but also interfere with the proper sparking at the ignition plugs. I then tried the Valvoline Oil Co.'s oils, using "Wilburine" for the cylinders and "Valvoline" for the bearings, etc.; these being quite pure mineral oils, no deposits either of carbon or gumming matter were left. Every time the pistons, etc., have been examined they were quite bright, clean and well lubricated. The valves also keep in good condition and require very little regrinding. I have been quite free from sparking troubles since using the above lubricants. Any dust that alights on the working parts is easily wiped off, whereas with other oils dirt stuck fast through gumming.

Very much smaller quantities of these oils ("Wilburine" and "Valvoline") about one-third to one-quarter, are required, which more than balances the extra first cost. The wearing surfaces are besides in a magnificent condition. These advantages —viz., high-class lubrication, freedom from deposit in cylinders, gum in bearings, absence of sparking troubles, are too important to be neglected by any motorist.

There is a tendency to use various greases, instead of oils. Engineers have over and over again proved that greases give much greater frictional losses than oils; with motor car engines and bearings the lubricant that gives the least possible friction is the best.

I have referred to the advantages the motorist gets. I will mention another advantage these oils have to those whom the motorist passes, viz., the absence of the fried-fish-shop smell so often noted. Several persons have been very much struck by the absence of smell; even when the car has been standing for some time with the engines running, no trace of offensive odour has been apparent to the bystanders.

I mention these experiences, having no interest in the Valvoline Oil Co., that others may be benefited and save themselves trouble and their neighbours some annoyance.

GROUSE DISEASE.

WITH the advent of another grouse season the Commission of eminent sportsmen appointed a few months ago by Lord Onslow, to enquire into the mysterious malady which periodically depopulates large areas of moor, has no doubt begun its labour. The appointment of the Government Commission is interesting in itself: the "Grouse Disease Commission" is entrusted with the duty of enquiring into a certain phase of sport in the interests of that sport. Previous Commissions have enquired into sporting matters, or into matters in which sportsmen were closely interested: the various fishery enquiries and the deer forests enquiry appealed very closely to the salmon angler and the stalker, but the former were instituted in the interests of the netsmen and the consumer, while the latter was almost an avowed attack upon the deer forest in the interests of the sheep farmer. The Grouse Disease enquiry is of a totally different character: it has peculiar interest, if only because it represents for the first time recognition of a Government Department at home that a sport deserves the care of the State. That, however, is a minor point of interest: we are far more concerned with the practical side of the business, the organised endeavour to discover the cause or causes of the disease and, if possible, the remedy.

It is rather curious that the first mention of Grouse Disease enquirers have been able to find occurs in the old Oriental Sporting Magazine of the year 1829. The passage we have in mind referred to an outbreak of a similar disease "some years ago" and states that in the birds then examined, as in those immediately under notice, a medical man had pronounced the malady to be tapeworm. Grouse Disease as a malady peculiar to that species was not recognised at this period: but the description of the symptoms given by Dr. Wallace in 1828 leaves no room for doubt that the disease he attributed to tapeworm was identical with that which causes such ravages on the moors in our own time. For very many years no practical steps were taken to solve the mystery of the disease: sportsmen of a past generation were much concerned with it: St. John in his classical work on Highland sport has a good deal to say about it: and we glean from his pages that when the disease made its appearance in the forties it was not less destructive in its effects than it is in modern times. Until, however, grouse shooting took the place to which its merits entitle it among our national sports, no very real endeavour, no organised endeavour was made to fathom it. From time to time, as an epidemic occurred and ruined large areas of moor for two, three or even four, seasons, owners applied themselves to the question, and by dint of study of conditions and comparison of notes acquired a certain bases of knowledge. Probably the disinclination of owners and lessees to admit the existence of disease on their grounds threw an obstacle in the way of enquiry, but eventually sufficient information was gathered to furnish what may be considered a starting point.

Thus it is recognised that the epidemic makes its appearance generally after a particularly good season: that there is some relation between prolonged wet weather and the disease: and, clearest testimony of all, that when the epidemic appears it always sweeps across the cruntry its ravages demonstrating a clearly definable course. So well defined is the course of the disease that in some cases it has been traced along the course of a brook, the birds on one side suffering seriously, while those on the other escape completely. The path of the disease seems to be preordained, if we may use the expression: its progress is not necessarily arrested or checked by the absence of grouse: for it has been observed to ravage the moors up to a point where hill and heather gives place to lowland pasturage, and recommence its work on the moors beyond the valley, there continuing its track in a line continuous with that by which it travelled before: even as a forest fire may leap a stretch of naked ground and pursue its destructive course beyond. As regards the connection between a good season, or let us use the more appropriate equivalent phrase and say, a heavy stock of birds and grouse disease, the obvious inference is that overstocking predisposes a tract of moor to the pestilence. Nature has ordained that the grouse shall enjoy space if he is to thrive, and probably he needs more ground than any bird of his size. When we consider that a moor which carries a single grouse to every acre of its area, is a well stocked moor, we realise what "wing room" is necessary: this, however, is a particular detail of the general case. The point to be made is that there is reason to connect the disease with the existence of a large head of game: and this indicates an effort of nature to reduce the stock to the limits the ground can support. This is satisfactory enough in theory, but unfortunately it does not help us forward in practice; for experience shows that thinly-stocked moors suffer, in proportion, equally with well-stocked moors.

Much was hoped from the careful and able investigations conducted by Dr. Klein, who in the autumn of 1887 studied the disease on the spot; he made post-mortem examinations, kept living invalids under observation, cultivated bacteria and made series of interesting experiments to ascertain how far and in what fashion the disease is communicable between one bird and another. It would be wrong to say that Dr. Klein's labours did nothing to solve the mystery: but it must be allowed that the conclusions at which he was able to arrive did not of themselves go far towards a better understanding of it. That they may yet prove of great value and importance to Lord Onslow's Commission of sportsmen, or to future investigators, is more than probable: it is one of the hardships of science that one should sow the seed while a successor reaps the crop. Dr. Klein's investigation showed a certain variety of symptom internally, though the well-known external indications differed only in degree: the plumage of the back and throat lustreless and ruffled, the legs denuded of feathers: the call hoarse and weak and the flight slow and laboured. The internal symptoms usually showed congested liver, often congested kidneys and in some cases the lungs similarly affected: tapeworms were often present in great numbers: but Dr. Klein attached comparatively little importance to this last symptom for the good reason that birds which did not exhibit the characteristic indications of the disease, were often found suffering from the parasites. After close study he discovered certain fungi in the liver which he held accountable for the state to which that organ was reduced in diseased birds: and eventually he succeeded in isolating bacteria which he had reason to believe might be the responsible organisms. He proceeded to make a series of experiments accordingly: and the result of these was such as to convince him that he had not tracked the offender home.

The results obtained were somewhat curious. He administered bacilli to mice and birds in their food without effect: the microbes were successfully digested; this seemed to disprove the theory cherished by many authorities that bad food was the primary cause of the disease and that the crop was the assailable point. The next experiment was with the respiratory organs: a small bird, a yellowhammer, was successfully inoculated, and by placing the bird in a cage with others and beside another cage containing six healthy birds, the two cages being covered in with a cloth for a night, the malady was communicated, proving fatal to all the birds within three days. Up to this point the experiment seemed to promise ultimate success, though there is a very wide difference between the conditions of infection in cages placed in close juxtaposition, and those prevailing on the open hillside. Nevertheless, the peculiarity of the disease in travelling over well-defined belts of country suggested that it is communicable through the atmosphere and that infection is through the lungs; and further experiment was fully justified. Experiments were now made not with mice or finches, but with healthy grouse: it is manifest that if the disease which Dr. Klein had propagated with fatal results in yellowhammers were grouse disease, the grouse should have fallen an easy prey to the infection. Here it was that failure occurred: it proved impossible to infect healthy grouse with the cultures: and the disappointing conclusion was that the bacilli which had been isolated were not the cause of the disease. There the matter stands. What Lord Walsingham, Lord de Grey and their colleagues have to discover, if they can, is first the cause of the disease, and next the manner of infection or contagion. These things made clear, there will be time to consider remedies or, better, preventive measures.

Sporting Notes.

FOR a wonder last Saturday the long-suffering monsoon race-goer was vouchsafed a fine day, and the going was as near perfection as can be obtained at this season of the year in the land of regrets.

As a set-off to the excellence of the going, however, we were treated to a real hot afternoon, and at 3-30, the time fixed for the first race, the temperature was far more suggestive of a long chair and a punkah, than hedging and ditching around the paddock in search of winners. All the same, the attendance was well up to the average, and the ring was strongly represented.

The entries were good, but a terrible falling off ensued upon the publication of the weights, and it is not too much to say that though a certain amount of grumbling is inevitable over handicaps—more especially in the monsoon, when this branch of the business is in the hands of an amateur—still we never remember to have heard such general—not to say audible—dissatisfaction expressed before. Indeed we are only surprised that even more horses were not withdrawn.

All three jump races produced fields, which is all the more creditable since two of them looked on paper to be presentations.

One of them, it is true, went wrong, but when a horse persists in running a couple of miles in a mile and-a-half race, in addition to galloping through stiff hurdles as if he were out for a spin on the flat, well—he wants a bit of weight in hand in order to win.

The three flat races filled, but that is about all that can be said of them, except the Harington Plate, for which a real good field turned out, and which also provided one of the prettiest races of the day.

Proceedings opened with the City Plate, for which there were five starters. On paper this looked like a gift for Daffodil, and had it been a flat race of the same distance, run between high rails, there would have been no doubt of the result. The monsoon hurdle course, however, takes a little doing, and the second favourite, Parole, admirably ridden by Beasley, proved equal to the occasion. This is a real good horse, but one that wants knowing, and Beasley is the first who has grasped the true method of riding him, which appears to be to give him a couple with the flail between each flight, as a hint to keep going. Bob ran a real game little horse, and made the winner hurry in earnest to get home in front of him. Naiades is evidently right off colour and badly in need of a spell.

Eight went to the post for the hunters' hurdle race, and Blue Bell II, the previous winner, whose weight had, for some occult reason, been reduced 7lbs., was correctly installed an even money favourite, Cheer Up being generally fancied for a situation. The latter, who is a bit green at the game, was going strong up to the fifth flight, where, apparently dismayed by finding himself without a lead, he made a determined attempt to cut it, and floundered through the hurdle on his head, displacing Mr. Barrow and thereby destroying a good chance of landing the place money. Mr. Harold Smith rode a really artistic race on Blue Bell II, waiting until the last possible moment. When she was asked to come, however, the mare romped through her field as though they were standing still, and scored cleverly by a length, which after all is just as good business for her backers as the twenty or thirty lengths she could equally easily have won by. Another warm favourite got home in the pony hurdle race in Good Chap, who was ably piloted by Mr. Evers. Moss Rose, who shows to better advantage in her former pilot, Mr. Barrow's hands, than in any other, was chiefly backed for a place; she was never really on terms with Good Chap, but had little difficulty in disposing of the rest. The Owl was unlucky in standing off the fourth flight a bit too far and coming down, as she was going strong at the time, and though she would probably not have interfered with the winner, she would undoubtedly have made a good race for second place.

There were six starters for the Farewell Handicap, a so-called selling race. We have frequently hinted at the futility of a selling race in which the upset price is double the value of the stakes, and this proved yet another instance in support of our view, as of course there was no bid for the winner. There is, so far as we know, no necessity to have selling races at all, but all we can say is, if we are to have one, why let it be a selling race. Had the race been five furlongs the public would have been right in backing Profit, but not even the comparatively dry going enabled her to remain in front for six, and the result was a positive cake walk for Kittylea.

The Plassey Plate just missed drawing a field sufficient for 1, 2, 3 betting, and Mignon, Blue Bell and Black Patch were the three selected. The last named looked to have the best of the allotment, and he very nearly got there, but that uncertain quantity, Little Doris, got well away, and leading throughout was never quite caught, Black Patch, who was a close second, having lost a lot of ground by coming badly round the turn.

An almost record field of twelve faced the barrier for the last race, and Winklet was made favourite at two's. He ran a real game little horse and won a very pretty race from Fusilier by a length and a half, with Morris half a length away third. The faint-hearted Invincible was in front for five furlongs, but chucked it on commencing the sixth.

As an instance of the peculiarity of the handicapping, we would draw our readers' attention to the weights to be carried by Oom Paul and Step Ma in the Farewell Handicap and the Harington Plate, respectively. In two six-furlong races on the same day, Oom Paul, we are told, is 14lbs. better than Step Ma in one, and 2lbs. her superior in the other!!! Comment on this appears to be superfluous.

Appended was the betting on the two big autumn handicaps on the evening of the 2nd instant:—

and with racing also in progress at Leopardstown and Phœnix Park, there were high jinks in the vicinity of the Irish capital the last week of August. In addition to all the leading sportsmen of Ireland and many from England, Scotland, and the principality of Wales, visitors were to be seen from all parts of the Continent and even more distant countries, and long before the date of the show the proprietors of the hotels and private apartments in Dublin had every available room engaged. The number of horses exhibited was not quite so large as last year, the 1,156 (independently of the jumpers) that were entered being something like 150 less than in 1903, the chief falling off being in the class for thoroughbred stallions calculated to get weight-carrying hunters, which only mustered eleven, showing a decrease of twenty-four. The quality, however, did not suffer, as amongst those that failed to get into the prize-list were Red Prince II, who was second last year and won the Croker Challenge Cup the year before, and Crotanstown, also a previous winner at Dublin, while Royal Mask, the winner in 1903, could only get second to Mrs. A. M. O'Callaghan's General Peace. Mrs. O'Callaghan had a great time with her thoroughbreds, as in addition to her victory with General Peace, she was first, second, and third in a lot of twenty-two brood mares and foals with Curlew, Erin, and Irish Girl, the foal of the last-named, a magnificent chestnut by Abercorn, taking the prize of £10 for the best filly-foal, and her foal out of Card Cutter, by General Peace, taking that of the same value for the best colt-foal.

We draw attention to the announcement among our Sporting Notices regarding the movements of the C. T. C. Official Measurer, whose tour begins at Rawalpindi about the 20th October and ends at Lucknow on the 3rd November.

The Dibrugarh Race prospectus is published to-day. The meeting extends over the 21st, 23rd and 25th January 1905, and there is to be a Polo Tournament and a Lawn Tennis Handicap between whiles, as per details in the programme which is practically on all fours with that which was so successfully carried out last year, save that this year the value of the Trial Plate, on the second day, has been raised from Rs. 250 to Rs. 500. Entries close on the 1st December, 1st January, and the day before the races. Our old friend, Mr. Stuart Baker, continues at the helm we are glad to see and we will trouble you to show us his superior as an Honorary Secretary.

An Open Gymkhana Race Meeting will be held at Meerut on the 15th and 17th October.

Entries for the Civil Service Cup so far number eleven, the third entries having brought in Parlour Maid and Ruin, as per details further on. Fourth entries close 1st December.

The programme of the Rawalpindi Sky Races will be found in the usual place. The card is an attractive one. On the first day there are five races for ponies and one for maiden horses. Six races for ponies figure on the second day's programme, while four flat races and a hurdle race for ponies and a steeplechase for horses are the items on the third day. All the events are for Rs. 200. Entries close on the 25th proximo, 19th November, and 5th December.

Seemingly those who go a-racing in America, occasionally carry their lives in their hands. We read that on the 26th August an outrage was perpetrated on the Hawthorne Racecourse whilst sport was in full progress. During one of the races a number of dynamite caps were scattered in the betting ring. Directly they were stepped upon explosions ensued, and, as these were frequent, a panic took place. Two persons had their feet badly lacerated and a third was thrown down. Thieves perpetrated the outrage.

Doubtless one of the chief attractions to sportsmen at the Saint Louis Universal Exhibition is the magnificent collection of guns, small arms, and accessories contributed by the world-renowned firm of Messrs. Charles Lancaster. Among those who handle guns, especially in this country, it is no mere façon de parler to say the name of Charles Lancaster is "a household word" in connection with everything that is superior and reliable in sporting weapons. We understand that the weapons in this exhibit are similar to those generally manufactured, supplied and sold by this firm, and nothing has been specially made as an exhibition sample. This is highly to be commended, being an endeavour to obtain patronage from visiting sportsmen on the actual article, so that purchasers can be certain of getting similar quality of weapons to those which are used by the leading sportsmen, and which have, in many cases, stood the test of 30 years' hard work, a convincing proof of the excellence of the productions of the firm of Lancaster. The enterprise of British gun-makers in getting prominently represented at St. Louis is deserving of success, and in this instance we trust to see it recognised by the highest awards.

The shooter of small game has already begun his operations for the season or is only waiting for the "sun's perpendicular ray" to be a little less scorching to do so. To him comes opportunely the latest catalogue of guns, rifles and ammunition issued by Messrs. Oakes and Co., Ld., Madras; and a rare good book it is. Well turned out and lavishly illustrated it takes us through the entire range of sporting weapons and accessories and makes us break the 10th commandment at almost every other page. There are several useful items and some novelties in this catalogue which we do not remember to have seen figured before.

It is announced that H. E. the Viceroy may make a short shooting trip to Dhami, a neighbouring Hill State near Simla.

It is frequently one of the most important questions when one has only a limited space of time at one's disposal for recreation and for the purpose of building up one's constitution, where to go; and this is of quite special importance for the many who yearly leave India after some years' residence here and who need, above all, a salubrious and invigorating climate.

There is no doubt that mountain air effects miracles in the restoration of shattered health, and among the various places which have been recommended there is none spoken of with more enthusiasm than the various health resorts in the Eastern, Austrian Alps.

We think we can do no better than to reproduce a short letter written to the Manager of the Austrian Travel and Information Bureau in London, by a well-known medical man in India who has already spent various winters at the charming Capital of the Tyrol.

Innsbruck, Hotel Tyrol.

"Innsbruck in point of situation is one of the most picturesque, and in point of salubrity one of the most restorative cities in Europe.

Unlike the higher stations its moderate elevation, under 2,000 feet, places no strain on heart or lungs in persons arriving from sea levels.

There are no lakes or marshes to breed fogs and destroy the crisp tone characteristic of air whose sovereign quality is dryness.

Forests of pine and larch cover the mountains that reach down to the streets, offering delightful weeks in infinite variety and in every shade of gradient.

The water is irreproachable.

The absence of winds, the purity of the mountain air, the brilliancy of the cloudless sky, the generous warmth of the sunshine make it a truly invigorating spot for a stay in winter.

Those who are inaccessible to improvement after spending some time at any season of the year, summer or winter, in this mountain city may be truly said to be unsuitable subjects for a health resort anywhere."

The Quetta Open Polo Tournament was won by the 3rd Lancers who beat the 35th Scinde Horse in the final by 14 goals and 13 subsidiaries to 3 goals 1 subsidiary.

Among the very many illustrated catalogues, Indian and English, that have been submitted to our notice this year we cannot recall any that have presented higher claims to novelty and artistic merit than two we have recently received from our friends the Elgin Mills Company of Cawnpore. All sportsmen are familiar with their tents and the firm's illustrated lists thereof; but in these two publications—one devoted to durries and the other to floor cloths and farash—we have specimens of the best class of colour printing which render these books, in their way, practically unique. Dwellers in the mofussil, where floor cloths and tent linings are more in general use than in the presidency towns, will have not the slightest difficulty in selecting what they may need, unless it be that the variety and beauty of design and colouring here exhibited render the task of selection a matter that calls for more consideration than usual. The same remark of course applies to the catalogue of durries, which, by the way, should be far more in evidence in our Calcutta offices, dining and living rooms than they are.

These catalogues are furthermore interesting, in that they give us specimens of one of the most interesting and ancient indigenous arts of India —farash printing, a process which we note the Elgin Mills Co. will be glad to show and explain to bonâ fide customers.

Meeson should also have a black spot in her past, and why a chance remark of the chevalier should lead her also to think he knew all about it: but so it transpired. Mrs. Fulks Meeson eagerly promises to support the application which Sir John, under stress, is prepared to grant. The rest is clowning and patter, punctuated at intervals with the clash of "roundabout" music off. One grew a little tired of it before the end of Act III. The chevalier was amusing, but he was oppressively boisterous; and one came away with the feeling that a music hall "turn" had strayed into a theatre and expanded itself. One thing it did do: and that was to show Mr. Bourchier's untiring vitality: he carried the whole thing through and was seldom off the stage for three minutes together.

* * * * * *

Much more to my taste was the New Theatre bill on Tuesday. I pass lightly over "That Brute Simmons," a dramatised version of that clever little story by Mr. Arthur Morrison. You may remember it: Thomas Simmons deserts a shrewish wife and she, believing him dead, marries Bob Ford. Thomas turns up and tries to extract hushmoney from Bob on the mistaken supposition that Bob wants to keep the termagant wife; but Bob has had too much of her already and snatches at the opening of escape. The play follows the story very closely: clear proof of the dramatic character of a good Morrison tale. It makes a capital curtain raiser, and was very well received.

The staple meal is "Beauty and the Barge" by W. W. Jacobs and Louis Parker. It is noisy, but in a manner different from "The Chevalier:" Mr. Jacobs' people are noisy because "it is their nature to;" the chevalier because his calling required blatant noise: and the difference is marked, for Mr. Jacobs' people do not weary you. For one thing the play is pure Jacobs: excessively clever dialogue bristling with wit and sharp retort which, however, is of that peculiar brand that seems natural on the lips of Mr. Jacobs' waterside characters. There is plot; but I shall remember it, and go and see it again, as a character piece that kept the house in roars of laughter from start to finish. It is less of a one-part piece than "The Chevalier," but Captain James Barley, master of the barge "Heart in Hand"—bulks large throughout. Captain Barley is a creation, and Mr. Jacobs was fortunate in having him presented by so ca able, sympathetic and versatile an actor as Mr. Cyril Maude. Captain Barley is amorous ashore and adamant afloat: he has "a way" with women and he keeps himself in practice at Coastham, where dwells Mrs. Baldwin, Major Smedley's housekeeper, who is the adored of the gardener; Mrs. Porter of the Old Ship Inn, who has a small but fiery husband; and Ethel Smedley, the Major's daughter, who is pursued by a young man in the person of Mr. Herbert Manners, whom her masterful papa has chosen for her while she loves Mr. Seton Boyne, R. N. All these, or whichever happens to be on hand, Captain Barley makes love to in his pleasant way: he will, he says, be six and thirty come Monday week, but I think he was transposing the figures. No matter: Captain Barley is a nautical Don Juan to whom love making is quite as essential, on shore, as breathing. On board the Heart in Hand, coasting trader, he is another being. An iron fisted autocrat before whom Tom Codd, the mate, and Augustus, the third hand, are almost abjectly submissive. There are two Captain Barleys, him seen of woman and him seen of the Third Hand, I warrant you.

Well, the plan of the play rests on Miss Smedley's unwillingness to marry Mr. Manners. He is expected at Coastham, and Captain Barley, meeting her in the garden, wins her confidence in his own inimitable fashion and persuades her to accept a passage in the Heart in Hand to London. Mrs. Porter finds her way on board the barge to play propriety. Seton Boyne had a hand in that and it struck me that if the Major's jealous gardener, Dibbs, had not brought Mrs. Baldwin to believe that Captain Barley was only "after" her house property, Mrs. Baldwin would have been on the barge too. She was not: but we have quite enough confusion and perplexity without her. Mrs. Porter escapes from the nether regions in a state bordering on frenzy and she "makes things hum." Mr. Boyne is aboard in place of Tom Codd who he had bribed to sham sick and stay ashore. How Captain Barley makes the most of his embarrassing opportunities on board would take too long to tell. The thing is all dialogue: one can't do justice to it, any more than to "Little Mary." Mr. Maude was really wonderful: the "affable" skipper ashore and the iron man aboard. Mr. Lennox Bawle's Tom Codd was no whit behind his skipper, and the several sailor men were real sailors as Mr. Jacob knows how to make them. Miss Jessie Bateman was quite in her element as Ethel and Mrs. Baldwin (Mrs. Chas. Calvert) and Mrs. Porter (Miss Mary Brough) were as good in their rôles as the rest. I never saw a piece better acted all round. It was uproariously received and deserved its welcome, for there it brought an entirely new atmosphere behind the footlights and the freshness of the thing delighted apart from its intrinsic humour.

"Minnie Brooke Widow" is rather feeble: it is once again an example of the inability of the musical comedy "book" to stand without the music and its very slender attractions need not detain us.

"The Duke of Killierankie," transferred from the Criterion, was given at Wyndham's on Monday when that theatre re-opened its doors: it is a clever piece and wears well. I forget if I mentioned that Mr. Tree is restoring the pit to the Haymarket: the abolition of the pit was not well received when the innovation was made and discretion advised its restoration. "Miss Elizabeth's Prisoner" is the piece with which the Imperial opened yesterday: the author has added a prologue, which treats of a period three years before the action of the play. "The Orchid" reached its 300th performance on Tuesday, and is going as strong as ever.

There is a new ballet at the Alhambra inspired by our agreement with France. The scene is a terrace before a palace. Knights with standard bearers represent the Great Powers who have assembled to do homage to Progress, Peace introducing the deputation. Enter Progress who begs the Knights to disarm and follow her and her friends Science and Industry. Knights hesitate, till Russia (!) leads off and throws down his sword. All have followed his example when a really excellent Demon comes on: he is the Demon of War and the Knights hurriedly pick up their weapons again. Drop scene to show clowns of war and the Knights quit. After this we have Ambassadors and their advent leads up to the Temple of Peace where the nations assemble and celebrate the occasion dancingly. It is all dancing from this point with an upper current of significance. Italy and Austria are on the verge of trouble when Germany dances in: France coquettes with Russia and renounces flirtation to chum with Britain; and so on. Very pretty and ingenious and much to the taste of faithful Alhambra patrons, but the music was less suggestive of peace than war in places. The new turn at the Pavilion is good, a lady who adopts the appropriate stage name of Arabella Allen is giving impersonations from Dickens' Rosa Dartle, Sairey Gamp and Grandfather Smallweed, among them. The last was the best: Sairey Gamp the least successful, oddly enough. A certain piquancy is lent to the business by Miss Allen's preference for "making up" on the stage.

Dean Hole's regretted but hardly unexpected death early on Saturday morning removes a somewhat prominent figure. He was not often in London: the last time I saw him was in the window of the club on the memorable day of Queen Victoria's funeral. A humourist in a quiet way, the old man with the long white hair was immensely popular: he was blessed with that personal magnetism which made a total stranger feel his friend after five minutes of his society. He had been a keen man to hounds in his earlier days, and never lost his interest in hunting matters. To the world at large he was of course best known as a rose grower and an authority on rose culture: but he never touched upon flowers unless somebody led him on to the subject. He was a charming old man of the old school of ecclesiastics which is none too numerous nowadays.

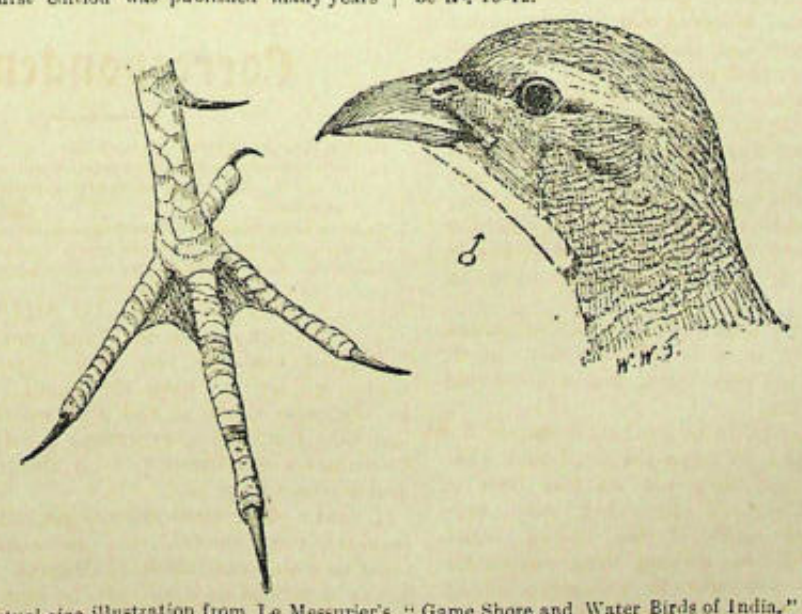
Various Items: Truth says that Grafton Home, Newmarket, has been sold to the King who wants more accommodation than his rooms in the Jockey Club afford. Labby is not on the Buckingham Palace visiting list, as he has found occasion ere now to tell his readers: but his opportunities of discovering things about the social leaders of whom he entertains such a low opinion are extensive if not peculiar.



Mr. Wilson Barrett's will has been proved at £30,862. A place in the members' waiting room at the House of Commons must be a soft thing. Mr. Cove, who occupied it, died at the age of 85 years and left over £44,000, chiefly to London hospitals. Tips I presume.

LE MESSURIER'S BIRDS.

THE virtual famine in books on the subject of the game birds of India has only been partially dispelled by the Indian Field Shikar Book. Much as we desired to introduce illustrations, we had to abandon the idea mainly on account of the urgency of the public demand and the delay consequent on preparation of drawings. Such being the state of affairs at the moment, the announcement that a new edition is approaching completion of Colonel Le Messurier's most excellent and useful handbook on the Game Birds of India comes as a piece of welcome intelligence. The first edition was published many years ago and almost immediately ran out of print and has never been re-published since. The publishers inform us that very great improvements have been effected in the forthcoming volume, which is practically double the size of the old one and contains upwards of 180 illustrations. Personally we await the arrival of Colonel Le Messurier's book with considerable impatience, and we would urge the publishers to have it ready before the cold weather sets in. The publishers are Thacker, Spink and Co., and the price, we understand, will be Rs. 18-12.

Actual size illustration from Le Messurier's "Game Shore and Water Birds of India."

A BIT OF BAD LUCK.

WHEN I come to think of it, I am not at all sure that I ought not to add to the above heading, "and bad shooting"; however, let it stand, and let me unburden my soul. It happened thusly:—

A few months ago, some coolies who had been sent to cut timber, disturbed an elephant, who had taken up his temporary abode in a small jungle, about half a mile from my house. The coolies, however, did not see him, and were in happy ignorance of his being anywhere in the neighbourhood, until on their return with the timber, they came across his fresh marks on the path, they had gone down in the morning. In the meantime, however, I had spotted him making off at his best pace over a big grass hill, across which ran a track which would eventually land him in the big valley which always holds elephants, but from which they seldom emerge at this season of the year. He was a big beast, but as I could not, even with the help of my glasses, detect any signs of tusks, I resolved upon letting him go.

Just as I had finished breakfast, one of my coolies came rushing up in a great state of excitement with the news that the elephant was coming back, and thinking that his fears had probably magnified one of the numerous rocks on the hillside into the beast, that of all beasts of the Forest my coolies seem to be most afraid of, in a very few minutes I got sight of him, and sure enough he was making straight in the direction of the jungle from which he had been previously disturbed.

I was now able clearly to distinguish his tusks, and after seeing him enter the jungle, I left pretty sure I should get a shot and was already calculating as to what it would cost me to purchase his tusks,—for here in Travancore, the tusks of all elephants are the property of the Government,—never dreaming for one moment of the possibility of failure, for had I not succeeded in bagging a tusker only a couple of years before in this very spot? But I must not anticipate.

And now occurred the first bit of bad luck, though at the time it did not bother me much, I found that I had only four cartridges, and two only of these were loaded with 4½ drachms of powder, the other two with about three drachms, and unfortunately, I had quite run out of powder, having only a few days before, in a fit of idiotic liberality, bestowed all I possessed on some of my hillmen who were going out for a big monkey shoot.

Half way down the bungalow hill, I stopped a few minutes to reconnoitre and decide on my plan of attack, when a scream from the elephant arrested my attention, and, to my astonishment, I saw another elephant standing on the edge of the jungle about twenty yards from the big one.

I should mention that this jungle was right at the bottom of a valley surrounded by grass, the greater proportion of which was eight to ten feet high, which made it next to impossible to approach the elephants with any chance of success, so I decided on trying to beat them out.

Having given all necessary instructions to the coolies and shown them exactly where to go and what to do, I started off for the opposite side of the valley, and posted myself on the grass hill behind a rock within fifteen yards of the track by which the big tusker had come, and by which I meant him to be driven.

As soon as the coolies saw that I had reached my position, they started off, and I could see had the greatest difficulty in pushing their way through the long grass

In the meanwhile, the elephants had moved to my side of the jungle the smaller one was standing in the open, and I saw that he was a tusker also. This now accounted for the peculiar behaviour of the big one; they were evidently a pair not unknown to these parts, which always kept together, seldom, if ever, join a herd, and are known to the hillmen by the name of Iruttilla.

Some years ago, I came across a similar pair, a very old tusker, and a comparatively young one, but only managed on that occasion to get a shot at the smaller one

And now for the second bit of bad luck

My beaters having got down only about half way to the jungle, began to beat the tins they had taken with them and shout and make a most unearthly row, which at once had an alarming effect on the small tusker, who began to turn about, and at length made a start along a track that would take him right away from me, and which track, would, if my beaters had only carried out my instructions, have been effectually stopped.

It may be imagined that I did not bless those beaters, for I felt almost certain that all hopes of a close shot at him were now at an end.

The big tusker, however, had not so far shown himself outside of the jungle, so in hopes of turning the smaller elephant, I ran down the hill as fast as I could and tried to cut him off, but he had the legs of me, and I could not get nearer than about forty yards, when I was obliged to fire. He turned right round at the shot and nearly fell over, when I gave him the second barrel, with a similar result, but he managed to get away into a strip of jungle, where I had to leave him, as I saw the big tusker coming out of the jungle and making along the path at the head of which I had been posted.

Making my way back and up the hill as fast as I could go, I succeeded in reaching my post before the big fellow had got more than half way up the hill. He appeared rather undecided at first what to do, but eventually made up his mind to stick to the track, and as he came nearer and nearer, I had a splendid opportunity of watching him and admiring his tusks, which I now simply looked upon as my own, for I never dreamt that he could possibly escape me.

His tusks were of a dirty brown colour, which accounted for my not having seen them in the morning, about two feet and a half out, not very thick, but which would weigh probably about 80lbs

To make a long story short, at last he came up to the shoulder of the hill, and as he passed me, I took what I thought was a very steady shot and let him have it between the eye, and ear but the shot only staggered him a bit and the result of the second barrel was apparently nil except in making him reduce his pace, and when last I saw him, he was going along very groggy indeed, and I began to hope, that after all, I should get him.

Next day I sent out hillmen on the tracks of both, but they returned, after having been out the whole day, with the very unsatisfactory news that they had failed to come up with either. And so ended a most disappointing day's shoot.

What I most regret is, that in the excitement of the moment, I did not draw the two cartridges with the heavier charger, and keep them for the big tusker, for if this had been done. I cannot help thinking I should have bagged him, and done less damage to the smaller one.

Fishing.

A FEMALE FISH DECOY.

"WE hear about hunters decoying the bull moose to his fate by the sound of a birch horn imitating the love notes of the female; but it is reserved for the Chinese to employ a female fish as a decoy to attract the male within reach of their spears," said my friend, Mr. R., as we sat lately before a fire of blazing logs in his island cottage up in the Adirondacks.

Above the fireplace and in the ingle nook were various sorts of Chinese guns and bows and arrows of native workmanship, the latter resembling those of the American Indian, only somewhat larger. On the floor was a beautiful silken rug, which had been cut in two by the widows of a prosperous Canton merchant on a division of their husband's personal property.

"You must know," continued my host, "that the Chinese are great hunters and fishermen in their way, using methods handed down by their ancestors to capture their game, and, I may say, that we Europeans are mere children compared with them in knowledge of the habits of birds, beasts, and fishes, and in the ability to effect their capture. One day, while floating along in my houseboat, I noticed a craft, containing a Chinaman and his wife, anchored on the shallows at the bend of a small river near Shanghai. They were evidently fishing, and I became at once interested. The boat was a small one and served as a home for these people, their cooking being done in the extreme stern. Above the boat a bamboo platform had been erected, about five feet high, and the man was quietly couched on this, spear in hand From time to time, after telling his wife to make no noise, he would spear a large fish—often of fifteen pounds weight—and float it to the side of the boat where his better half, who was at work would loosen the captive and stow it away inside.

This performance went on for some time, and I finally questioned my coolies as to the method employed. The boy said: He gotte she fish; bimebye catchee man fish.'

My barge had now drawn nearer, and I was able to investigate. From the roof of the platform a stout bamboo pole extended out about fifteen feet, parallel with the water From the end of this hung a stout cord having a small triangle of bamboo hanging from its extremity. This triangle was just above the water. From the angle nearest the bow of the boat hung another cord with heavy weight attached, resting on the bottom From the adjacent angle hung a cord, and from this was suspended a second and smaller triangle, anchored, like the larger one, from the extremity of the base line nearest the boat, while a small female fish about to spawn was 'haltered out' from the other angle, by running the cord through a sort of collar passing around the body.

The fish was on or near the ground, and could swim about freely to the extent of her tether. Whenever a strolling member of her species happened along, the little siren would use gentle arts to attract his attention, and by subtle flattery coax him within reach of her master's spear. At the conclusion of the day's sport, the decoy would be carefully fed by her owner and protected from attack of enemies by a stout bamboo basket, into which she would boldly swim. Of course, this method of angling is employed only during spawning time."

AN APPEAL TO SHIKARIS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I shall be very glad if you or any of your readers will let me have the benefit of their experience in big game shooting and give me the following information. I am trying to arrange a trip somewhere next Christmas with a friend, possibly two friends, but cannot decide where to go to.

I want a place where one can get all-round big game (sambur, tiger, cheetal, etc., not elephant), and which must be within easy reach of Madras, that is 14 to 20 hours by rail, as we shall only be able to get away for about 10 days to a fortnight, and naturally wish to spend as little time as possible in travelling. I shall also be very glad to have any tips and other information which you or your readers may be able to give as to outfit, provisions, shikaris and, if possible, the approximate cost of a fortnight's shooting.

VERY KEEN.

MADRAS, 16th September 1904.

[Perhaps some fellow-sportsman may give the information asked for, though we are not sanguine on the point. Shikaris, as a body, were never keen to give away their grounds, and nowadays, with the much increased competition in sport (which, alas! has shared the fate of nearly everything else in this respect) men are to be found by the score who would as soon contemplate the presentation of a limb as think of giving away what they know.—ED.]

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Shall we ever arrive at some practical method under which the multitudinous cases of cruelty to dumb animals that are daily paraded under the public eye in Calcutta shall be minimised? I use the world "minimised" advisedly. I had intended writing you on this subject some days back, and the report of the annual operations of "The Howrah Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals," as published in the local papers of the 16st instant has reminded me forcibly of the public duty we all owe to the furtherance of this important branch of humanitarianism. The word itself "Prevention" strikes one, upon reading the report mentioned above, as a humourous solecism! And this branch of the S. P. C. A. is but a subsidiary to the general movement in Calcutta proper. Is the fact that "the total number of convictions obtained during the year was 2,274, being an increase of 659 cases over those of the preceding year, "a matter for congratulation? Is the fact that those 2 274 convictions represented Rs 6,977 in fines, or an average of a little over Rs. 3 only for each offence of so dastardly a nature as cruelty to dumb animals, a matter for congratulation or one likely to be regarded by those of the public whose genuinely heartfelt sympathies are constantly centred upon our beasts of burden likely to be regarded as a deterrent? Does not the very increase in the number of cases inferentially prove that it is neither?

Anyone whose duties take him into the business parts of Calcutta, where the heavy traffic consists almost entirely of loaded bullock-carts, knows—for he can't help seeing—the extent to which overloading, combined with palpable starvation and consequent physical weakness and incapability, is allowed to be practised apparently with impunity. The other day, I saw one of a couple of bullocks yoked to a loaded cart fall down from sheer exhaustion. A police sepoy calmly watched the incident. The usual apathy and indifference! I watched also, but wishing to make sure of facts, I waited. The poor brute (whose ribs showed a sharp corrugated outline under the skin, painful, in itself to look at, to say nothing of the beast's pathetic pleading eyes!) was viciously prodded with the whip handle on to its feet, and made to move. It proceeded—literally staggered—a few feet, and then again collapsed. Of course, I then interfered, and forced the sepoy who had callously also "moved on," to take the driver in charge, taking the constable's number, and sending a note to the nearest police-station, whither I know for a fact he went. As a matter of fact, that bullock was incapable of helping to draw even an empty cart. The case was not reported in the daily papers, so I don't know what the issue was, but I had served my purpose!

The public do not appear to be acquainted with the fact that in cases of cruelty coming under their personal observation, it is not necessary, in order to obtain a conviction, and thus assist in furthering the humane—manly would be a better term—object aimed at by the S. P. C. A. for them to waste time and money by appearing in Court. Handing over the delinquent to a constable, and taking the latter's number, giving him at the same time one's name and address, is, in 99 out of 100 cases, quite sufficient; for the culprit can have no valid defence, and moreover the corpus delicti is, at any rate in the case of physical incapability, present, and the policeman's evidence is in such cases accepted as trustworthy. In the name of all the religions in India that so tenaciously fight for supremacy, let us unite in this one matter at least. There should be no conflict here!

I know, and you sir know, and no doubt the S. P. C. A. know equally well why there is no appreciable or noticeable diminution in the cruelty to animals practised in Calcutta. But let the public individually try to circumvent circumstances over which, amongst many others, even the Government appear to have no control, and good must result. It has been stated that the petty fines usually imposed by the magisterial benches are deemed to be adequately deterrent by reason of the impecunious position of the carters. Pshaw! What about the owners of the carts in the first place, and those whose goods are loaded on to the carts in the second? Are they not far more responsible than the drivers, who, besides being, probably in the majority of cases, ignorant men, are accessories to the cruelty merely by compulsion of circumstances? I have seen bullocks that have been temporarily turned loose from loaded carts greedily lick up stray wisps of old straw that have been scattered about from English packing-cases outside warehouses; and I have been compelled to listen many a time to the sickening sound of the dull heavy thud of a carter's whip stick upon the almost naked bones of a debilitated bullock's back, until I have been tempted, to the utmost limit of endurance, to illustrate my indignation upon the fellow's jaw-bone in a manner which, unfortunately in this case, the Law does not sanction or condone. What I have detailed, most people know. And yet the crime continues, and we read of increases in the number of convictions, and concomitant trivial fines! A greater number of convictions may be taken to argue greater vigilance on the part of the Agents of the S. P. C. A., and not an increase in the crime itself It may—but it undoubtedly argues a greater need for a more general individual and independent activity on the part of the public.

WAVERLEY.

19th September.

A sturdy sergeant of one of the Lancashire regiments, being obliged to submit to the amputation of his hand, the surgeon offered to administer chloroform as usual, but the veteran refused, saying:

"If the cutting is to be done on me I want to see it," and, laying his arm on the table, submitted to the operation without a sign of pain, except a firmer setting of the teeth as the saw struck the marrow.

The operator, as he finished, looked at his victim with admiration, and remarked:

"You ought to have been a surgeon, my man."

"I was the next thing to one before I enlisted," said the hero, drily, as he complacently examined the stump of his arm.

"Ah, indeed; what was that?" said the surgeon.

"A butcher," came back the soft answer.

THE BANGALORE RACES.

Sixth Extra Meeting 17th September 1904.

THE last of the series of six extra meetings in Bangalore was considerably the best of the lot from a racing point of view. Rose II. won the first race easily and deserved it, for the mare has been unfortunate in running second on several occasions. Then came a great finish in the Scurry for which seven starters went out. Baronet won by a short head and the result confirmed my former opinion that Jack Horner, although a good pony, does not like being tackled at the end. But he had a crushing impost on this occasion A dead heat followed, and it was agreed to divide. (By the way it is a long time since Fergusson has been seen in the saddle). An objection to the winner of the next race was upheld, and subsequently the Chargers' Race produced a very close struggle, a very hot favourite in David only just struggling home. In the Chester Plate Burns rode a good race on Massachusetts. He seemed to be lying a good way off, but could do nothing else when giving the leader no less than 45lbs.(!) and eventually he won comfortably. On the whole it was a good day for backers, but there were three excellent finishes. Might the Stewards not manage even one or two more meetings as these have gone so well? Details:—

WE had a most successful day's racing at the Hobart Park Race Course on Thursday, the course was much improved by the previous two days' rains and a fine card of five races was provided. In the second race three faced the flag including Viking. Mr. W. Morey, the well-known Bengal sportsman and a great rider after pig, took advantage of the country-bred's weight and after a great race won by just a neck. This win was most popular and our veteran sportsman was received in the Pavilion amidst quite an ovation. There were two other close finishes. The attendance was large and representative. The following are details:—

(Winner trained by G. Dally.)

Amount in totalizator, £1,395 15s. Dividends—Convoy, £3 Idalia, £2 13s.

The start, which was without the aid of a barrier, took place near the two-furlong post. Nickola, Burlaway, and Emilene took up positions on the rails, Coleon, Coalbox, and Hornpipe in the centre, and Blue Rock and Aeneas on the outside. The first jump was the initial obstacle of the treble, and this was taken by Emilene, Convoy, Nickola, Coleon, Edalia, and Burlaway, with Aeneas and The Sheik in the rear. At the stone was Convoy and Emilene were in command from Coleon, Burlaway, and Idalia. Taking the jump and the turn Emilene was showing the way to Nickola, Convoy, Idalia, Burlaway, and Blue Rock, while The Sheik, who was labouring in the rear, stopped. The field closed in as they swept around the turn, and at the jump on the far side Convoy held command from Emilene, Idalia, Burlaway and Nickola, with the others in a bunch and Blue Rock bringing up the rear. Jumping the South terrace double Convoy, Nickola (who struck the second heavily) and Emilene were out several lengths from Idalia, Aeneas, Coalbox, and Burlaway, with Coleon and Blue Rock half a dozen lengths further back. The field was fairly well bunched on the hill, and at the fence there the order was Convoy, Aeneas, Idalia, Emilene, Nickola, Hornpipe, Coalbox, and Burlaway, with Blue Rock last. Coleon toppled over. There was no change at the jump at the top of the straight, but taking the first of the treble Convoy and Emilene were four or five lengths out from Aeneas, Idalia, Nickola and Coalbox while Hornpipe fell. At the next obstacle the field was reduced by Nickola, and Aeneas coming to grief. Emilene piloted the remaining horses up to the stone wall, but the jump brought her down, and left Convoy to go on with the lead. At the obstacle on the far side Mr. Dally's gelding had a couple of lengths' advantage over Idalia, a dozen lengths behind whom followed Coalbox, with Blue Rock 100 yards further astern, and Burlaway absolutely last. Convoy had a slight lead from Idalia at the double. Coalbox was next, but the others were practically out of the hunt. Convoy increased his advantage approaching the last jump, and landed over it about three lengths in advance of Idalia. Coalbox was close to Mr. Ferry's mare, and then followed Blue Rock; but Burlaway refused to take the obstacle. Convoy had a nice lead into the straight, and, running on, won by nine lengths from Idalia, who beat Coalbox for second place by 11 lengths. Blue Rock was about 20 yards away fourth. Time—6mins. 30secs.

THE TURF.

GATWICK AUGUST.

IT is satisfactory to note that the Gatwick authorities have thoroughly reconstructed the programme for their August Meeting since last year, when the richest item of the first day's card was only of the advertised value of 200sovs A couple of new races viz., the Newdigate Stakes of 500sovs. and the Home-bred Two-Year-Old Plate of 300sovs. figured for the first time on the bill of fare, and the programme was strengthened by raising the value of the Sutton Stakes to a "monkey." The Newdigate Stakes is named after an adjacent village, and the title was previously used for an event decided at one of the October Meetings here. The race, which closed last December with 32 entries, did pretty well in attracting half a dozen to the post, for big fields for weight-for-age contests are rare during the August vacation.

Weather of the most perfect midsummer type favoured the concluding stage of the Gatwick Meeting, and the coffers of the executive were substantially replenished in consequence. Apart from the metropolitan division, who attended in unusual force for the slack season, the attendance was strongly augmented by pleasure-seekers from Brighton, and the old-time theory that August gatherings never pay their way was incontrovertibly falsified. Unfortunately runners were scarce, the sum total of the competitors only reaching thirty-seven, and the sport was not as brisk as a glance at the entries would have suggested. The struggle between Madden and Lane for the jockey premiership had reached an interesting stage when they tied for supremacy, and a certain amount of partisanship attached to their efforts on the 27th ultimo. The only addition was a single to the score of Madden, and, endowed as he is with a hardier physique than his rival—who, to tell the truth, seems to be feeling the effects of his recent exertions—the leader looks like staying on the better of the two.

DERBY.

The supreme attraction of the Derby September Meeting, is, as a rule, the inauguration of the Nursery season, but on the present anniversary the executive were precluded from introducing these popular juvenile contests into their programme until the final stage of the gathering, owing to the fact that the first two days fall in August. A fairly representative entertainment was arranged nevertheless, and the card on the 8th, which extended to seven items, fulfilled its promise, thanks to a big contingent of horses arriving from Newmarket in the morning. The official pasteboard, containing as it did the pedigrees of the entrants, was a great improvement on anything seen here hitherto, and the outside cover was handsomely embellished with the Rothschild colours. This may or may not have been done in honour of St. Amant, but it can be stated authoritatively that the St. Leger candidate, though on the spot, will not carry silk to-morrow unless rain falls during the night, as the course on the far side is a little hard. In the straight it yielded good galloping, and the sport was witnessed by a big company.

When heavy banks of thunder-clouds made their appearance on the horizon on the evening of 31st and the air became close and oppressive, it seemed fair to infer that a storm was imminent; but the disturbance was doubtless deflected from its course by one of the lofty ranges of the Peak District, and the night remained fine. This was regrettable, inasmuch as the question whether St. Amant should fulfil his engagement in the Champion Breeders' Foal Stakes depended wholly upon the contingency of rain intervening, and the enforced absence of Mr. Leopold de Rothschild's St. Leger candidate robbed the race of half its interest. The Derby winner was visible in the paddock towards the close of the proceedings, and, although he had his clothes on, it was manifest that he has made great improvement since last he was seen in public. The patrons of the gathering, who were again very numerous, were not favoured with such glorious weather as had prevailed twenty-four hours previously. The air was quite cold consequent upon a change of wind into the north-west, and rain detracted from the enjoyment of the latter half of the programme

The great food-value

BOVRIL

Derby is in the throes of a great upheaval, nearly all the principal streets being in the hands of an army of road-breakers, who are busily occupied in the installation of a system of electric tramways, together with a new sewerage scheme. The town has long laboured under the reproach of having the most antiquated means of locomotion in the Midlands, and it is well that the Corporation have realised the necessity of keeping abreast of the times and doing justice to their admirable railway service The racecourse management have also been stimulated into commendable activity, much pains having been devoted to painting and renovating the permanent structures. Amongst Newmarket trainers in particular the venue is one of the most popular in the whole kingdom, and another big contingent of horses arrived from "headquarters" this morning, making the final day's business the heaviest of the three. The weather was delightfully bright, and there was a fair attendance.

CRICKET.

SUSSEX vs. MIDDLESEX.—Played at Brighton on 25th, 26th and 27th August. Middlesex won by nine wickets. The luck in winning the toss practically decided the issue of this match, for whereas Middlesex were batting all the first day on an easy wicket, their bowlers had the Sussex men more or less at their mercy on the following day. Warner and Douglas made a good beginning for Middlesex, the latter showing very good form indeed in making his 58 But four wickets were down at lunch time for 111, and although Bosanquet hit brilliantly for 47 afterwards while Wells played a useful innings, seven wickets were down for 189. Macgregor and More then came to the rescue of their side, and in course of an hour and five minutes' attractive batting increased the score by 103. More hit tremendously hard, and reached his 50 in three-quarters of an hour, while Macgregor made several fine strokes. There was a heavy fall of rain during the night, and the wicket on Friday exactly suited Bosanquet, who, being at his very best, completely demoralised the Sussex batsmen. In the first innings Fry made the top score, but as it was only 22 it was not of much use to his side. In the follow-on he played splendid cricket, until he ran out Vine when the first wicket had produced 75 runs in an hour. Both men were playing so well that they looked like putting up a big score for the first wicket. After this piece of good fortune things went splendidly for Middlesex. Fry was beautifully caught by Douglas in the long field off a hard and low drive. Killick was in great form, while Ranjitsinhji played delightful cricket for an hour and ten minutes, and speedily compelled the Middlesex captain to take Bosanquet off. But as soon as Ranjitsinghji was out Bosanquet reappeared, with disastrous results to Sussex, who just before the time for drawing stumps were all out. Killick, who played one of his best innings of the year, was at the wickets for two hours and a quarter, and during his partnership with Leach 73 runs were put on in a little over half an hour. Leach hitting with great determination. Bosanquet was expensive in this innings, but he got the batsmen out, which was, after all, the main object when Middlesex had such a long lead in the first innings. Thanks chiefly to him Middlesex only had to make 39 runs to win on Saturday, and although Warner was bowled first ball Beldam and Douglas hit off the runs in twenty minutes.

It was at Colenso, and a poor Tommy who had been severely wounded in the foot, implored his comrade Pat to carry him under cover. Pat, with dreams of the V. C., hoisted him on his shoulder and made for the trenches. Unfortunately, however, before he had gone far, a shell burst and completely decapitated the wounded man. Pat, oblivious of what had happened, arrived at safe quarters with his burden, but was surprised at the derision he received from his comrades. "Oh, begorra," said he on finding he had only saved a headless man, "the devil take the liar, he told me 'twas his phut"

YORKSHIRE vs. SOMERSET.—Played at Taunton on 25th, 26th, and 27th August. Yorkshire won by an innings and 152 runs. The Yorkshiremen were seen to great advantage in this match. On the first day they got rid of Somerset on a very good wicket for 109, and made 146 for the loss of only two men. The Somerset batting was so weak as to surprise everybody including themselves, but the Yorkshire fielding was brilliant, and the bowling excellent. When Yorkshire went in Haigh who required 69 runs to complete his thousand runs, went to the wickets first with Grimshaw, and before he was dismissed his total was 81. He was out just before rain stopped play, and was batting for an hour and a half. Denton was not out 42, which had taken him a little over half an hour to put together. On Friday Somersetshire were completely outplayed. All the Yorkshiremen who went in made runs quickly, and the bowling was very soon mastered. Denton, who had a very narrow escape of being run out when he had scored 99, played a most attractive game, his fine innings of 111 including nineteen fours: in an over of Braund's he made four boundary hits in succession. Hirst and Tunnicliffe both hit well, and the former made four 4's of successive balls from Robson. At about four o'clock Lord Hawke was able to declare the innings closed, Rhodes being then not out 49. Somerset had to bat for an hour and three-quarters, and although Palairet played a beautiful innings, the side fared so badly that when it was time for drawing stumps it was decided to finish the match that evening if possible. But Poyntz and Lee batted so well for the ninth wicket that after all it was necessary to wait until the next morning. When stumps were drawn Lee was not out 27, and Poyntz not out 17, and the total 159 for seven wickets, so that Somerset still required 204 to save the innings defeat. On Saturday the two not outs added 38 runs, their entire partnership producing 80 runs in an hour and ten minutes. It was an exceedingly plucky effort, and it is a pity that it came too late.

LANCASHIRE vs. DERBYSHIRE.—Played at Old Trafford on 25th, 26th, and 27th August. Lancashire won by 131 runs. Thanks chiefly to fine cricket by Tyldesley and Poidevin, who put up 170 runs in an hour and three quarters for the third wicket, Lancashire had somewhat the best of the game on the first day, for against their total of 288 Derbyshire only scored 54 for the loss of two of the best men on the side—Wright and Ollivierre. But on Friday Derbyshire played a very plucky game, and but for the fact that two men were badly run out when they were comfortably set, the total might have been as large as that of Lancashire, instead of 69 behind it. Ashcroft and Lawton both played excellent cricket. In their second innings Lancashire ran up 204 for the loss of nine wickets before stumps were drawn, and were thus in an excellent position. The chief feature of the Lancashire batting was the splendid cricket played by Spooner and Hallows, who scored 161 of the runs between them. Hallows, had to retire soon after he went in hitting a full pitch into his face, but later he resumed his innings, and played in splendid form. His partnership with Spooner realised 131 runs in 80 minutes. On Saturday the innings soon came to an end, but Derbyshire found the task of making 295 runs too difficult for them on a wicket which helped the bowlers. They began well enough, Wright, Ollivierre, and Storer all playing excellent cricket, but although at lunch time the score was 96 for two wickets, the remaining eight only added 67 runs. If Derbyshire had won the toss they would very likely have been victorious

HAMPSHIRE vs WARWICKSHIRE.—Played at Bournemouth on the 26th, 27th, and 28th August. Hampshire won by 40 runs. On a slow wicket, which helped the bowlers, Hampshire were batting nearly the whole of the first day for 248 runs. By far the best innings was the 75 by Sprot, who, after he had once settled down, played a beautiful game; he was at the wickets for an hour and three-quarters. Major Poore, who has not succeeded this season in getting back his old form, played careful cricket for 25, and later in the innings Stone kept up his wicket for two hours for a most useful 56. Warwickshire had a few minutes batting before stumps were drawn, and scored three runs without loss. On Friday some very interesting cricket was seen. On a difficult wicket most of the Warwickshire men made useful scores, but the only outstanding innings were the 41 by W. G. Quaife and the 48 by Lilley. Hampshire were in the satisfactory position of leading by 81 on the first innings, and by the time that stumps were drawn they seemed to have a fair chance of victory, for they were 253 runs on with four wickets in hand. Sprot again played a splendid innings, and was again run out when he was rapidly approaching his hundred. Johnston played a good game, and at the end of the day Stone made some good hits in his 24 not out. The remaining four wickets were soon disposed of on Saturday, and Warwickshire had to go in to make 259 to win. They made a great effort for victory, and Kinneir held his own for four hours and a quarter, while Lilley played an excellent innings, helping Kinneir to put on 87 for the fourth wicket. While this partnership lasted there was always a chance that Warwickshire might win. But seven wickets were drawn for 178, and although Kinneir and Moorhouse kept together for fifty minutes, Hampshire succeeded in gaining their second victory of the season.

THE CHELTENHAM WEEK.

SURREY vs. GLOUCESTERSHIRE.—Played at Cheltenham on 25th and 26th August. Surrey won by 119 runs. For the first time since 2nd July, when they beat Derbyshire, at Derby, Surrey succeeded in winning a match in the county championship, outplaying the Gloucestershire team from the first. For once their captain had a perfectly easy task in managing his bowling, for there was not the slightest necessity to change Crawford and McDonell in either innings. On the first day Surrey had much the best of the game, for they scored 206, and then dismissed their opponents for 79. They began badly enough on a slow wicket by losing Davis and Raphael for 11 runs, but Nice then joined Hayward, and both batsmen hit so vigorously that when their partnership ended 95 runs had been put on in an hour and a-quarter. Nice played particularly attractive cricket, while Hayward played quite the right game for his side. So far so good. But at lunch time six wickets were down for 121, and shortly afterwards eight for 135. Then once more Lees came to the assistance of his side, and hit with much energy, while he found a most valuable partner in Baily, who contented himself with playing a quiet game. The two men put up 64 runs during their partnership of thirty-five minutes and quite altered the appearance of the game. But for their useful stand Dennett would have had a fine analysis, and even as it was he bowled exceedingly well. The Gloucestershire batting broke down so badly before Crawford and McDonell that just before the time for drawing stumps the side was out. The first five wickets fell for 62, while the tail could do nothing with the Surrey bowling. Barnett played a fine defensive game, and, going in first, was last man out after staying at the wicket for about an hour and three quarters for his 15. On Friday the wicket was very difficult after heavy rain in the night followed by powerful sun-light in the morning. With a useful lead of 127 Surrey began badly enough in their second innings, by losing four wickets for 18, but, as in the first innings, Nice played resolute cricket, and scored a very plucky 44, which put a better appearance on the game. The rest of the team found it impossible to do much with Mills and Dennett, but thanks to their lead on the first innings Surrey were able to give Gloucestershire the task of making 219 to win. It was generally anticipated that this would be far too great for the home team and as things turned out Crawford and McDonell again bowled so finely that no one except Jessop and Langdon could make any resistance against them. It is worthy of notice that McDonell and Crawford bowled unchanged through both innings.

SOUTH AFRICANS TOUR.

MATCH vs. KENT.—Played at Canterbury on 25th, 26th, and 27th August. Kent won by 104 runs. There was some most interesting cricket on the first day of this match, but the South Africans were unfortunate to have to bat at the end of the day in an exceedingly bad light for 40 minutes, during which they lost four wickets for 45. Alec Hearne and Humphreys put up 72 runs in a little over three-quarters of an hour for the first wicket, although the ball from the fast bowlers got up very awkwardly at times. The most attractive cricket of the day was seen during the partnership of J. R. Mason and Captain Livesay, who made 70 runs in half-an-hour, hitting the South African bowling all over the field. Livesay, who came into the team because Blaker was unable to play, was in brilliant form, and his innings of 78 was not only the highest but the best of the day. The total made by Kent was quite large for the wicket, which was never easy. With a heavy leeway to make up, the South Africans on Friday played a plucky uphill game, but when the day's play ended there did not seem much chance that they would be able to pull the match out of the fire. With four of their best batsmen out for 45 they were heavily handicapped, and although Hathorn, Schwarz, Mitchell, and Snooke all played excellent cricket, the total of the first innings was nearly a hundred behind that of their opponents. When Kent went in again nearly every man on the side made a useful score, but the bowling was never collared and the visitors struggled desperately to put a better appearance on the game. White met with great success with the ball towards the end of the innings, doing the hat trick and taking five wickets for 46 runs. For the second time in the match the South Africans had to go in to bat at the end of the day for about forty minutes and as in the first innings they fared badly, although they only lost two wickets instead of four. When stumps were drawn they still required 260 runs with eight wickets in hand. Although Schwarz batted well four more wickets fell on Saturday for the addition of 45 runs, so that the position of the South Africans seemed hopeless. But White and Halliwell made such a plucky and stubborn resistance that they put a far better appearance on the game, and then Kotze and Horwood by most vigorous cricket made 59 runs in a quarter of an hour, but the efforts of the tail were unavailing. Blythe bowled with great success.

BOXING.

THE WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP.

SAN FRANCISCO, 25th August.

No less than 9,000 persons witnessed the fight between Jeffries and Munroe for the heavy-weight championship of the world.

Munroe is almost unknown in the pugilistic world, but Jeffries has been the victor in many a hard fight.

The contest proved a miserable fiasco. Munroe exhibited undoubted terror in the ring, and failed to stand up to his opponent. He lacked both the necessary strength and science, and made a most pitiable show. Jeffries had all his own way and, after beating his opponent almost to pulp, knocked him, out in the second round.

After the required ten seconds had been counted the fight was awarded to Jeffries, and the disgusted spectators hooted Munroe out of the ring. The value of the gate was £7,000.

Reuter gives the following details of the fight:—

FIRST ROUND.—Munroe led off, but Jeffries immediately floored him with a left hand hook on the jaw. On rising he was received with a right on the head and a left just above the belt. Another hook on the jaw drove him to the ropes, where he clung for eight seconds. During the round Munroe did not get in a single blow and was so severely punished that he had to be helped to his corner.

SECOND ROUND.—Jeffries viciously renewed the attack and smashed Munroe in the body with rights and lefts, again knocking him down. By this time blood was flowing from Munroe's face and ears and, rendered helpless by a terrific lefthander, he sank on the floor and was counted out.

ON Monday, the 12th September, the meet was at Sandy Nullah Foll Bar at 7-15. It was a bright morning with a high cold wind, but the country was much improved by the recent rain. Hounds trotted to the junction of the Dunsandle Road and began to draw. They picked up a line almost immediately but scent was very cold and after some slow hunting as far as the nullah which runs down to waterfall streams scent faded completely. The Master drew the Dart moor Valley and then went over the ridge below Wapshare's Hare Shola. At this point hounds spoke to a line and carried it slowly across the swamp and round the end of the spur which runs down between Wapshare's Hare Shola and Wenlock and on below Rheel Shola. The hound work was beautiful but scent was so poor that it seemed as if the field would never get on terms with the jack; opposite the seventh milestone of the Old Pykara Road, hounds began to run and after another momentary check at the road, they crossed it and streamed away over the beautiful galloping line towards the Pykara Falls. A herd of buffaloes and some dogs caused a check in the swamp below Toda Coffee Shop Shola but hounds soon crossed the swamp and went away at a tremendous pace to the opposite hill. At the Pykara Falls path the jack ran along the path for a good distance and then turned to the left and crossed the ridge above the Pykara river. Here the Master viewed the jack with his back up and very beat and he entered a small Shola about 100 yards in advance of hounds, this was a thick Shola and a brace of fresh jack went away, but the hunted jack after going on into the next Shola, finding that he couldn't shake hounds off turned back and was marked to ground in an earth where we left him. Hounds then trotted back to Briar Shola which was drawn blank. The Master next drew over Lawley's Course up Rawling's Nullah and down Newmarket without finding and came home. Scent was good but if hounds had been pressed at the beginning of the run they could not have stuck to the line.

On Thursday the meet was at Rees' Corner at 7 A.M. It was a fine day after two days' rain, but very few were out, probably due to the races. Mill Cover was first drawn blank. Above the Treble Crossing hounds spoke to a line and hunted slowly up to Blackmoor Vale with frequent checks. They went up between Rallywood and Bluegums but here scent completely failed. The Master next drew the west side of Newmarket as far as the Double Crossing, but though hounds more than once spoke to a cold scent, they could make nothing of it. We then drew over Lawley's Course and found in the swamp between that and Gibb's Shola. The jack was not viewed away and very probably had a good start but scent was good and hounds pressed him from the start they ran up the spur at the top of Gibb's Shola and turned towards the Pykara Road: this was an extraordinary jack for he did not cross the road, but ran on the road through the whole length of Briar Shola and on to and through Bacon wood, even leaving the turn pike on past Windy Gap and still continued on the roads above the forest bungalow. Here, when the turn of the road leads to Wenlock he at last took to the grass, but the pace had proved far too hot for him and hounds were at his brush. He made a sharp turn in the Nullah between the forest bungalow and Chemmund and but for Chemmund but hounds got sight of him and pulled him down at the top of the Nullah. He was an old dog jack. We next trotted back and drew Bluegums and Jackal Shola on our way home, but did not find.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

SUCH a select few turned up at the meet on the 11th of September at Dapuri (celebrated for its brewing of good ale) 7 miles on the high road to Bombay and my sporting informants having got sadly slack in following hounds of late, I am indebted to the local paper once more and to scraps of gossip for an account of the day's proceedings. The original intention to cross the Pauna River was frustrated by that stream, like Iser, "flowing rapidly," thanks to the recent copious rains which providentially came in the nick of time to avoid famine and desolation in this part of India. Going along the trunk road for a mile or so a move was made to some likely looking sugar cane fields on the right. The spirited account in the Poona paper seems to smack of a new chronicler and while one cannot but admire his graphically descriptive powers I would on behalf of hunting men entreat the talented writer to avoid the irritating trick of referring to the gallant varmint who gives such delight to many as if by his Christian name. It is too but a poor compliment to the Master to infer that the wild rover he is hunting with such skill answers to the name of "Jack" as the advertisements say. But to return to the records of the chase. Hounds opened on a line in the direction of the celebrated Two Sisters and the pace was soon greatly improved, though the country was very deep and holding and horses at times up to their fetlocks. Through and out of a sugar patch with scarcely a check and away to some rough country on the further side. After some pleasant galloping the jack altered his course, and crossing the main road skirted the railway line and, the wire fencing proving impracticable, the field divided for neighbouring crossings. This gave the jackal and hounds a start, and when horseman got on terms again it was to find that this evidently very stout jack had plunged into the swift flowing Pauna had saved the brush his pluck and innate wiliness fully entitled him to retain. Hounds were then taken back to the original starting point near the eight milestone and no delay occurred in finding, the jack breaking away up the neighbouring big nullah. The pace was apparently good and this jack seemed no less of a hero than his predecessor. Across the road he went and under the railway bridge. After running along the river side he turned off into the open country. The pace seems to have varied and the line was scarcely as straight as the proverbial crow's flight, but it seems to have been an enjoyable hunting run. Regarding this finale the talented writer I have referred to chronicles that "the Master considered it advisable to render some assistance to his pack in order that they should not lose the reward they deserved" and after several lines of defensive argument urges that it is "a matter "we can safely leave to our worthy Master." Qui s'excuse s'accuse runs the French motto.

Many of us have been brought up in the doctrine that the legitimate "assistance" which a Master may rightly and sportingly render his hounds consists in helping them when in real doubt with a judicious cast or on occasions 'lifting" team to a view or a trusted "holla." Were it not for the spirited apologia tendered by the narrator referred to no credence would have been given to the doubtless incorrect rumours that the "assistance" in question was of a more definite and drastic description.

CYCLING AND MOTORING AT HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 2nd September 1904.

STILL another death of a racing cyclist is reported from the Continent caused through the high powered pacing machines now in vague, which developing enormous speed makes a fall a far more serious affair than was formerly the case. This time it is George Leander, the American rider, who has only been in Europe six weeks, although in America he has raced with marked success for over three years. He met with a fall whilst racing last Sunday and lingered in an unconscious condition for thirty-six hours at Beaujau Hospital. This class of paced riding has claimed Elkes, Nelson, Goernemann, Dangla, Kaesser and now Leander within the space of a few months, and one cannot help thinking that the National Cyclists' Union has acted extremely wisely in imposing restrictions on the h.p. of the pacing machines to be used at the World's Championships to be decided at the Crystal Palace to-morrow and on 8th and 10th September. We do not want the track to be turned into a slaughter house. It is more than likely that the International Board will move in the matter.

Many cyclists complain that the large number of cycle thefts that occur every week are due to the indifference shown by the police and the inadequate sentences meted out to offenders when convicted. Personally I hold very different views on the subject, and would place the blame on the riders themselves who leave their machines about in a manner that can only court loss. They pay twelve guineas or more for a machine, and then leave it unattended by the roadside as if it possessed no value. Would they leave anything else even of quarter the value in a like manner? As to the police, it must be acknowledged that a bicycle is one of the most difficult articles to trace, and if they fail in following up a theft, it is scarcely to their discredit. Magistrates, too, have imposed some very heavy sentences on men known to be old offenders.

One of the best unpaced road rides achieved this season stands to the credit of Mr. E. A. Boyle of the Bath Road Cycling Club, who last Friday morning at the early hour of 4 o'clock in the morning started from the General Post Office, Edinburgh, and unpaced, rode on his safety bicycle to the General Post Office in London in the record time of 29 hours 8 minutes, an improvement on the old record of 2 hours 40 minutes. The ride is a meritorious one, the record breaker experiencing a strong head wind all the way, heavy rain at the commencement of the journey and sundry punctures.

Another road event decided at the end of last week was the 24 hours race organised by the North Road Cycling Club—an unpaced scratch race for members of the Club. Ten men started, including two mounted on the old time three wheeler, and favoured with an ideal night for riding some good distances were covered At the end of twelve hours, W. Ward, had covered 191 miles and pushing strongly forward completed the twenty-four hours with 364 miles to his credit. The two riders mounted on the tricycles—W. W. Robertson and C. H. Banyard—covered 291 and 276 miles respectively.

The importation of motor-cars, motor-cycles and motor parts into this country continue at an unsatisfactory high figure, the July returns giving the number of cars imported as 632 of a value of £251,472. Parts too, amounted to the large total of £26,656, but this item does not effect the home industry to the same extent, since a large portion of the parts are for use in the manufacture of British-made cars. This year the imports into this country amounts to the enormous total of £1,545,958. "Wake up England" were the words of the Prince of Wales after his tour in the "Ophir" and the home industry should bear his words to heart. But perhaps the fault is not due to any laxity on the part of manufacturers, for many of the British cars are the equals of French productions both in reliability and finish, and quick deliveries can be made, yet, the purchasing public consider it the right thing to drive a French-made car and they will continue to do so until the fashion changes. Why it is they will encourage foreign industry and allow British labour to stand idle, it is difficult to say unless it is entirely due to thoughtlessness.

A very large proportion of the accidents that occur between motorists and pedestrians are where children figure as the victims. It is certainly not to be wondered at and the marvel is that more are not run down. I do not know what is the practice with children in Calcutta, about the age of 10 or 12, but over here they make the public highways their playing grounds, even if a public recreation ground is in the immediate vicinity, and no one seems to interfere with them. Here they rush about as only children can, heedless of everything moving on the road, and especially motors and cycles. One cannot blame motorists unless they were really driving recklessly at the time of an accident, and I have noticed that. Coroners invariably return a verdict of Accidental Death when sitting on such a case. Only last week Earl of Leven and Melville whilst driving in Fulham had the misfortune to run over a little girl. At the inquest a verdict of Accidental Death was returned, and the driver in giving his evidence stated that just before the accident some children playing in the road defied him to run over them.

For fourteen years the Vicar of Folkestone has held an annual Cyclists' Church Parade in connection with his Church, and the one held last Sunday proved the most successful of the lot. It is surprising the amount of enthusiasm displayed by wheelmen throughout the surrounding neighbourhood in this parade and last Sunday the church was packed, the Vicar, Rev. E. Husband, giving an appropriate address entitled "Cycles and Motors," in which he dwelt upon the many advantages surrounding so healthful an exercise as cycling. Motoring, however, was not so favourably commented upon by the Reverend gentleman, and his remark that motor riding was "injurious to health owing to the constant vibration and the entire absence of exercise on the part of the rider" will be bound to be commented upon, although there is a large amount of truth in his remarks The collection amounted to a sum of £17, which will be devoted to the Folkestone Victoria Hospital.

A. L Reed, the London sprinter, has made a flying journey across to Belgium where amongst other events he competed in the Grand Prix de Belgique, winning easily from H. D. Buck and Charvier, who are riding in the Worlds' Championships to-morrow. This race carries with it a first prize valued at forty guineas which consists of a valuable gold stop watch, besides a gold medal valued at £5 and a sash of honour. Reed has every reason to be satisfied with his success since he brought back with him prizes representing close on £50; by no means a bad day's result.

A story which is declared to be strictly true is told in Public Opinion by a high official in North Nigeria, where, though it is British soil, cannibalism still exists. A native chief was found dead, and the district commissioner, an Englishman, acting as coroner, summoned a jury of twelve natives hold to an inquest. The jury being unable to come to decision, the coroner locked them up, and went to lunch. When he returned back he found that the jury, who were also hungry, had eaten the deceased. He wrote to the Chief Commissioner. "Kindly send instructions, as the Proclamation does not seem to provide for this incident."

GLOSTERS vs. ARMENIANS.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on the 14th instant, a well-contested game resulting in a win for the Lucknow team by two penalty goals to nil. The Armenians kicked off but the Glosters brought the ball back and play ruled for a while in the local team's 25. Off-side against H. Apcar gave the soldiers a penalty kick, Parsons doing the needful. On resuming the Glosters pressed once more but a free to the Armenians relieved the pressure and a good run by A. S. Apcar followed. The Armenian forwards worked the ball down but were brought up by the Glosters' back, who was playing a fine game. The visitors took the leather down to the opposite 25 where H. Apcar was once more off-side—a penalty resulting. Holder made no mistake with the place and the Glosters led at the interval by 2 penalty goals to nil. On changing ends the soldiers attacked but could not get through. The Armenians playing hard, made great efforts to score, Yakchee made a brilliant attempt to drop a goal, and Simmons almost placed a goal from a free kick. They failed, however, to put on any score and the Glosters won as stated. Teams:—

GLOSTERS.—Edwards, back; Lieutenant Ford, Berry, Holder, and Lister, three quarters; Coldrick and Lieutenant Blyth, halves, Ball, Frost, Morris, Stevens, Murray, Dance, Parsons, and Prosser, forwards.

ARMENIANS.—Simmons, back; A. S. Apcar, Mathews, Gregory, and Yakchee, three quarters; H. Apcar, Russell, halves; Martin, Basil, Staynor, Manuk, Peters, Callahan Roser, and Creet forwards.

SEMI-FINALS.

KING'S OWN vs WEST RIDINGS (holders).—This match was played on the King's Own ground on the 16th instant, when the Fort team defeated the holders off the Cup by a goal and a try (8 points) to a try (3 points). The Dum Dum team attacked at the start but some opportunities were lost owing to wild passing. Then the King's Own got away and a good dribble by the forwards terminated in Lieutenant Scott crossing the line. No goal resulted and the West Ridings had the best of matters to the interval. On resuming the Dukes again attacked and Beaumont scored a try. The place failed but the Dum Dum men continued to press. Then the King's Own broke away once more and Basonett got over. Scully converted and the match ended shortly after. Teams:—

KING'S OWN.—Scully, back; Basonett, Ashworth, Lieutenant Baker, and Walker, three-quarters; Lieutenant Marshall and Marsden, halves; Lieutenants Scott and Gribbon and Lee, Chadwick, Waite, Morgan, Marshall, and Fowler, forwards.

WEST RIDINGS.—Quin, back; Beaumont, Harrison, Coldwell, and Davey, three-quarters; Holgate and Morris halves; Garside, A. Robinson, E. Flarity, Newhold, Leister, H. Robinson, P. Flarity, and Reilly, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. C. Thorburn.

CALCUTTA vs. GLOSTERS.—The Devons having retired from the tournament, Calcutta on their own ground met the Glosters on the 16th instant. The home team kicked off and for the first fifteen minutes play was very even; Calcutta got over with a try, Martelli failing with the place. Then the Glosters asserted themselves and pressed hard, their back division got away occasionally but could not break through. At last just before the interval Lieutenant Ford got possession out of the loose and scored a try. The place kick failed and the teams crossed over with a try each.

In the second half the Glosters did all the attacking and play was confined to the home 25. The Calcutta backs were kept hard at it. They played up to the last minute, but just before time the soldiers got through once more, Coldrick getting over with the winning try. No goal resulted and the Glosters won as state. Teams:—

GLOSTERS.—Edwards, back; Lieutenant Ford, Berry, Holder, Maslen, three-quarters; Coldrick and Lieutenant Blyth, halves; Ball, Frost, Gunston, Stevens, Dance, Morris, Parsons, and Prosser, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Dick, back; Ismay, Martelli, Siddons, and Barns, three-quarters; MacDonald and Cumberlege, halves; MacLeod, Heilgers, Todd, Kurr, Curtis-Hayward, Berridge, Bishop, and Greyburn, forwards.

FINAL.

GLOSTERS vs. KING'S OWN.—The final game in the tournament was played on the Calcutta ground last Saturday, a large crowd of spectators lining the ropes. It was a fine display of football and was played in the best spirit throughout. The Fort team won and they thoroughly deserve their victory. By steady practice they have worked up their players and are now quite a strong team.

The Glosters kicked off and Marshall picking up set the King's Own threes going but Holder relieved. Once more the Fort backs got away and Basonett nearly got in Edwards bringing him down on the line. Loose play by the forwards took the ball into the Glosters' 25 where after some hard scrums Marshall got possession and a smart bout of passing resulted in Walker crossing the line. Scully converted. On resuming the Glosters were seen to advantage and pressed hard for a while but the Lancaster three-quarters brought the ball back to the visitors' 25 where Lieutenant Ray obtained a try. The place fell short.

The Glosters attacked once more, the forwards doing good work. Shortly before the interval the King's Own were penalised and Holder, taking the place, kicked a fine goal.

On changing ends, the Lucknow men made great efforts to score. The game was a fine struggle between the two sets of forwards and a deal of loose scrummaging was got through. The Fort team broke away once or twice but were brought up by Edwards. The Glosters kept the game in their opponents' 25 for a time and looked like scoring on several occasions, but the King's Own defence was good and they could not break through. The match thus ended in a win for the King's Own by a goal and a try (8 points) to a penalty goal (3 points). At the conclusion of the game Brigadier-General Leach presented the Cup to Lieutenant Baker the captain of the winning team.

KING'S OWN.—Scully, back; Bassonett, Ashworth, Lieutenant Baker and Walker, three-quarters; Marsden and Lieutenant Marshall, halves; Lieutenants Scott, Ray, and Gribbon, and Private Waite Morgan Marshall, Lee, and Fowler, forwards.

GLOUCESTER.—Edwards, back; Lieutenant Ford, Barry, Holder, and Maslen, three quarters; Coldrick and Lieutenant Blyth halves; Ball, Frost, Morris, Stevens, Dance, Grimston, Parsons, and Prosser, forwards.

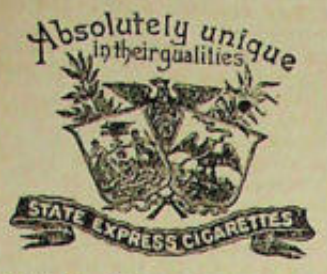
FOOTBALL NOTES.

IT is a long time since Calcutta has enjoyed such a week of good and interesting Rugby Football, the results in most cases being close and the losers generally putting up a good fight.

On Monday evening Calcutta on their own ground met the Services, and the King's Own were the guests of the Customs. In the former game the home XV back division was too much for the opposition and crossed their line no fewer than six times, and Martelli being on the spot with his place kicking (converting five out of six attempts, the sixth striking the bar) the Service men had to put up with 28 points—3 margin against them. Their forwards, however, had none the worst of the argument, and were ably led by Moberley, who was well seconded by Thorburn, the old Blairlodgian and Edinburgh Wanderer. Though out of training he played a hard game and made his presence felt in the scrum Captain Wilson also was very conspicuous in the loose and most of the others individually played well, and had they had two or three more matches together they would be as hot a pack to hold in Calcutta as you could find. At half Reeves and Grimshaw were beaten by the opposing pair and the first-named, and Cumberlege had several lively tussles. At three-quarter Garstin and Landon were most in evidence, but the latter had little opportunity of shining in attack, his special forte. At back the side was badly served and this was their weakest point. For the homesters Kerr played the best game he has since he came to Calcutta, which is saying a lot, while Heilgers, MacLeod and Todd were all good. The backs all played well and it would be invidious to single out any one in particular.



On the next ground the Customs gave the men from the Fort a good run for victory, and indeed the soldiers were rather lucky to be leading by three points at the interval. The game was mainly a forward one and up to half time there was nothing to choose between the teams, but thereafter the King's Own had the best of matters, eventually running out winners by 13 points to nil. For the losers, who were at a distinct disadvantage by having to take the field without Anderson, who is not far from being the best full back in Calcutta, Rowe, Maitland, and Harris were good, especially in defence, while Fitzgerald worked hard forward. For the winners Lieutenants Ray, Marshall, Scott and Baker were very prominent.

The City on Tuesday gave the West Ridings a good game and for the first quarter of an hour pressed hard and had most of the play, the want of scoring power in their back division alone keeping the Ridings' line intact. Half time found the Tommies leading by a penalty goal and a try to nil. On resuming the City men went to pieces for a time and the Ridings put on four tries in quick succession and it looked as if they might repeat their score of the previous week. The Red jerseys, however, rallied again and held their own for the rest of the game. Amongst their forwards Oakley stood out above the rest, his following up being especially good. Cunliffe, Grieff and Clayden also played well, Williams at half gave a good display and his partner Schaumberg, was by no means bad. For the West Ridings Morris and Holgate combined well and behind them Coldwell and Beaumont were most conspicuous.

On Wednesday evening on the Calcutta ground, the only up-country team in the tournament this season, the Gloucester Regiment, tackled the Armenian XV and a remarkably even game resulted. It was curious from the fact that, the lines of neither team were crossed during the game, the Gloucesters winning by 2 penalty goals to nil. The Armenians suffering their usual penchant for off-side play. Otherwise they had none the worst of the deal with their heavier opponents. Their forwards lasted well and were going as hard at the end of the game as at the start. Their following up was very keen and the Gloucester backs when they got the ball out were generally downed before going far. Peters played a splendid game and was probably the best forward engaged, while Creet and Roser were also good. Outside all were very smart, the two Apcars and Yackchee especially so, whilst the latter's attempts at goal dropping were good; his second effort being a brilliant one which deserved a better fate The Gloucesters have a powerful set of forwards, who can play the loose rushing game while they have no laggards in the scrum. At half Lieutenant Blyth was very nimble and the third line is sound in defence if not brilliant in attack. Holder's penalty goal was a really fine kick. Edwards at back was excellent and made no mistake.

On Friday evening the semi-finals were decided and to the losers in each case, the results must have been somewhat of the nature of a surprise, the King's Own beating the West Ridings and Calcutta succumbing to the Gloucesters. Dealing with the former game first, from start to finish the pace was a scorcher, the game being up and down the field the whole time. The King's Own deserved their win, if only because they took the opportunities presented to them. Their forwards played pluckily and the backs were quite good and to Ashworth belongs the credit of the winning try. He made a very nice opening for Bassonet. Lieutenants Baker and Marshall as usual played well, and Lieutenants Scott, Ray, and Gribbon were the best of the forwards. Of the Duke's Morris and Beaumont in the back division were good as also was Coldwell, to whom it must be rather a novelty not having a dropped goal at least to his credit at the end of a game.

The game on the Calcutta ground, where although the score was only 6 points to 3 against the ground team, had the Gloucesters an offensive back division, they must have won by nearly a score of points. After the first quarter of an hour when Calcutta scored, and Greyburn had to be carried of the field owing to a severe kick on the head and Siddons hurt his arm, the home team were not once in their opponents' twenty-five and hardly ever out of their own.

Summing up the teams; for the winners Edwards did all that was asked of him in his usual neat style, while his vis-a-vis Dick though he had by no manner of means a pleasant job played a sound game and saved his side from a far heavier defeat. Of the remainder of the back division, not one of them played up to form, bar Cumberlege, whose kicking into touch and tackling alike being worthy of the highest praise. From the form they showed one is forced to the conclusion that outside the scrum the team is only a fair weather one. Forward Kerr again was the best, being always on the ball, and he seemed to be the only one of the forwards who could raise a gallop at the end of the game. In the mauls the Gloucesters were far superior, and even though Calcutta had only seven men, from the way they were swept of the ball, it was evident that not one but several of them must have been passengers, as was the case twelve months ago when there were also too many forwards who were brilliant in loose to the detriment of the shoving power of the pack. For the Gloucesters Lieutenant Blyth at half was good, as was his partner Coldrick, whose touch kicking was the feature of his play. Of the line behind Lieutenant Ford was the best, while Barry and Holder kicked well. The forwards were undoubtedly good and played better than against the Armenians, while their loose rushes took a lot of stopping.

The final between the King's Own and the Gloucesters, which took place on the 17th on the Calcutta ground, proved somewhat of the nature of surprise, the Fort William men overcoming the Lucknow team by 1 goal and 1 try (8 points) to a penalty goal (3 points). The game was played before a fair crowd of spectators who were treated to a most interesting game, and on the day's play the King's Own were undoubtedly the better team, the forwards holding their own and getting the ball often enough to give the men behind a chance of showing their pace. Of the forwards Lieutenant Scott has rarely played a finer game and he was well supported by Lieutenant Ray and Gribbon and Waite, though the first named was rather inclined to play off-side. At half Marshall was in his best mood and time and again saved some ugly looking rushes of the opposing forwards Behind him all did well, Walker's try being a very pretty one, while Lieutenant Baker did a lot of useful saving. On the other side the forwards had the best of the tight scrums, but did not seem to be getting the ball as often as the other eight, but their loose rushes were always dangerous. Of the men behind Lieutenants Blyth and Ford were good and Edwards at back was again brilliant, but the inside three-quarters' kicking was not as good as on the previous evening, and it would have been more to the side's advantage had they tried fewer drops at goal. In conclusion Lieutenant Baker and his brother officers are to be congratulated in the manner in which they have taught and trained the team which before this season had never played Rugby Football.

TOUCH.

BOMBAY ROVERS' TOURNAMENT.

CHESHIRE REGIMENT vs. YORK AND LANCASTER.—This match was played on the Cooperage on the 14th instant. The Cheshires had the best of the first moiety and pressed hard. After a series of attacks, which were repulsed, a fine bit of passing by the Cheshire forwards ended in Gaffney putting the ball through. From the kick off they once more worked the ball down and Gaffney was responsible for another goal. On resuming after the interval play ruled very even for a while, then the Cheshires pressed once more but Lowthorpe, who was playing an excellent game in goal, kept out all their shots. But the York and Lancaster were penalised in their own territory and the Cheshires scored their third goal. The remaining stages of the game were in favour of the York and Lancaster, but they failed to score and the Cheshires were victorious by three goals to nil. Teams:—

CHESHIRE REGIMENT.—Goal: Pte. Chard; backs: Pte. Branson and Lce.-Corpl. Beers; half-backs: Pte. Fletcher, Walker, and Thornley; forwards: Ptes. James, Gaffney, Dowell Johnson, and Jarvis.

YORK AND LANCASTER REGIMENT.—Goal: Pte. Lowthorpe; backs: Ptes. Lambert and Taylor; half-backs: Pte. Manchester, Lce.-Corpl. Leach, and Pte. Watson; forwards: Lce.-Corpl. Morris, Ptes. Thwaites, Linford, Lce-Corpl. Hood, and Pte. Bland.

Referee:—Mr. W. Nicholl.

SEAFORTHS vs. SOUTH LANCASHIRES.—This match was also played on the 14th instant and resulted in a victory for the Highlanders by two goals to nil. The opening exchanges were even, then the Seaforths got away and Walsh was called upon to save, which he did at the expense of a corner. Nothing resulted, but after some more even play the Lancashires got going and almost scored on two occasions. They forced a corner, but the Highlanders cleared and returning to the attack Dewar found the net after a couple of unsuccessful shots. After the interval the Seaforths had the best of the play, but their opponents offered a plucky defence and it was not till just before the close of play that a splendid dribble by Fergusson resulted in a second goal, the Seaforths thus winning as stated. Teams:—

SEAFORTH HIGHLANDERS.—Goal: Pte. Fairburn; backs: Lce-Corpl. Stephens and Pte. Thompson; half-backs: Ptes. Lees, Tullock, and Hutchinson; forwards: Ptes. Drummond, Dewar, Macnamara, and Lennie, and Corpl. Fergusson.

SOUTH LANCASHIRE REGIMENT.—Goal: Pte. Walsh; backs: Bandsman Roach and Pte. Berry; half-backs: Ptes. Thomas, Dunkin, and Crowther; forwards: Drummer Prytherick, Ptes. Birch, Cook, and Hatton, and Corpl. O'Connell.

Referee:—Lieutenant W. R. Connigham.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. R. G. A. (Colaba). This match was played on the Cooperage Ground on the 15th instant, when the Scots beat their opponents by four goals to one. The gunners pressed at the start, but the Scots took the ball back and Hughes was kept busy. He saved in good style, but at last a rush by the Kamptee forwards resulted in the first point being scored. Keeping up the attack the Scots had the best of matters, but could not score again before the interval. The gunners broke away once or twice without success. On changing ends the Colaba team kept their opponents out for a while, but they returned to the charge and a bout of passing ended in Eltham finding the net. The Scots continued to press and Kennaway obtained the third goal Then the R. G. A. got together and taking the leather down almost scored, but a moment later they secured a goal, one of the Scots sending the ball into his own net. The Scots however got away immediately and made up for the mistake, Hughes failing to stop a low shot. Teams:—

ROYAL SCOTS.—Goal: Pte. Bryce; backs: Ptes. West and Ballantyne; half-backs: Ptes. Kinnigan, Easton, and Lakin; forwards: Ptes. Ross, Kennaway, Webber, McMillan and Hucker

ROYAL GARRISON ARTILLERY.—Goal: Bombr. Hughes; backs: Bombr. Eltham and Gr. Hynes; half-backs: Bombr. Cornish. Grs. Roke and Powell; forwards: Sergt. Key, Grs. Jones, Hartley, Parsons, and Smith.

Referee:—Mr. W. Nicholl.

ARGYLL AND SUTHERLAND HIGHLANDERS vs. EAST LANCASHIRES.—The first meeting of these teams resulted in a draw of a goal each, but the tie was replayed and the Highlanders proved victorious by three goals to one. The opening play was very even then the Highlanders got going and a run down and centre by Hogg resulted in Pollock scoring. They continued to attack on resuming, and McLay found the net with a stinging shot. The Lancashires made great efforts to score and they worked the ball down, but the 93rd backs were safe and once more the leather was taken to the Lancashires' territory where Pollock scored a third goal. Another determined effort by the Lancashires just before the interval was successful, Boothe getting the ball through. The Highlanders had the best of the game after half time, but neither team could score and the game ended as stated in a win for the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders by three goals to one.

Teams:—

ARGYLL AND SUTHERLAND HIGHLANDERS.—Goal: Pte. Mullen; backs: Ptes. Wallace and Ballantyne; half-backs: Ptes. McLean, Lapsley and Benton; forwards: Ptes. Pollock and Fleming, Bandsman Quin, and Ptes. McLay and Hogg.

EAST LANCASHIRE.—Goal: Corpl, Carefoot; backs: Ptes. Gregson and Smallwood; half-backs: Lce. Corpl Hubberstey, Ptes. Bryce and Naylor; forwards: Ptes. Boothe and Walsh, Lce.-Corpl. Coupe, and Ptes. Answorth and Hearne.

Referee:—Lieutenant Conningham.

SHROPSHIRES vs. PAREL GYMKHANA.—More by good luck than anything else the Parel team managed, while fresh, to save their goal from most of the attacks made on it by the Shropshires with the result that by half time the score stood 2 goals in favour of the latter to nil. It would be a waste of space to dwell on what happened in the second half so let it suffice to say that the Shropshires did exactly as they like and left the ground victors by 8 goals to nil. The Rovers' Committee manage their tournament so well that I am surprised they encouraged a scratch team like the Parel Gymkhana to enter, a team, be it noted, that did not even take part in the Harwood League games.

SHROPSHIRE LIGHT INFANTRY.—Goal: Sergeant Willie; backs: Private Andrews and Lance-Corporal Stapleton; half-backs: Privates Evans and Roberts, and Sergeant Humphreys; forwards: Privates Oliver, Ledgette, and Bryan Lance-Corporal Graham and Private Skyrme.

PAREL GYMKHANA.—Goal: Mr. F. E. Murphy; backs: Messrs. W. Dennehy and J. Dennehy; half backs: Messrs. E. Torpy, J. Paterson, and P. S. Holtham; forwards: Messrs. S. Alcock, A Pitcher, H. Hotz, R. Hogan, and W. Alcock.

CALCUTTA F. C. vs. H. M. S. PERSEUS.—No game played so far attracted as much interest as that between the Calcutta team and the Perseus eleven which was played on Saturday afternoon The Calcutta men looked just a trifle stale after their long journey, but there were evidences in the occasional glimpse they gave of their true form that they are a highly trained combination and likely to prove formidable opponents. The Perseus eleven have trained on into a first-rate team and in meeting the naval men the Calcutta team had to encounter a very dangerous side The game throughout was of a most even character and although Calcutta did most of the pressing the defence offered by the Perseus combination was too good to enable them to score after the first ten minutes during which they registered the only goal scored. This goal was the result of fine bit of combined play by the centre half and the inside left, the latter netting the ball. Calcutta pressed their opponents very much during the first quarter and for some minutes bombarded the Perseus goal and twice only missed netting the ball by the smallest margin. The naval team towards the end of the first half played up well and Calcutta had to concede a corner, but this was the only time the Calcutta goal was in serious danger and a minute before the whistle went for half time Calcutta, who had worked the ball down to their opponents goal, put in a hot shot which was only saved with difficulty. The second half was most exciting, each side attacking in turn, but on the whole Calcutta had the best of exchanges and when the whistle went without any addition to the score had the satisfaction of leaving the ground victors by one goal to nil after a splendidly contested game. The Calcutta halves showed up well while of the forwards H Sherman, Cooper, and Cudlip at times were brilliant.

The meeting between the Warwicks and Shropshires in the Rovers' Tournament on the 19th furnished a surprise to those who expected to see the Shropshires run out winners by a big margin. The game was splendidly contested, from start to finish, the Warwicks not only holding their opponents, but having the best of exchanges in the first half especially; they more than held their own and when the whistle went neither side had been able to score and though time was extended by quarter of an hour the game ended in a pointless draw.

The game was replayed on Tuesday morning and ended in favour of the Shropshires by one goal to nil after an intensely fexciting game. During the first half the game was splendidly contested and ten minutes before half time the Shropshires scored as a result of magnificient piece of combined play. The second half was all in favour of the Shropshires but nothing further was scored.

ARGYLL AND SUTHERLAND HIGHLANDERS vs. ROYAL SCOTS.—These teams met in the third round of the tournament on Wednesday afternoon when another well contested game was witnessed. The Highlanders scored a goal in each half eventually winning by two goals to nil. Play in the first half was of a most exciting nature, both teams attacking strongly in turn. The Royal Scots, however, could not break through the Highlander's defence.

CHESHIRES vs. CALCUTTA.—This game, played on Wednesday evening was rather a disappointment, the soldiers gaining an easy victory by three goals to love. Calcutta played a very feeble game compared with what they did when they met the Perseus men on the last occasion. However, the Calcutta back line made a game defence, but their forwards were very erratic in passing and invariably lost ground in consequence.

The Seaforths, from Nusserabad, meet the Artillery, from Kirkee, this afternoon when a good contest is expected.

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

NEW CLUB vs. VOLUNTEERS "B" TEAM.—This was the first match in the tournament and was played at Simla on the 19th instant, the result being a draw of 2 goals each. The ground was in a very slippery state, and the display of football given was not of a very high standard. The Volunteers were the first to score, but it was not long before their opponents had equalised. Just before the interval the Volunteers scored once more. The second half was not particularly interesting. After an encouraging burst by both teams on resuming, the play settled down and ruled even till time was called. The New Club obtained a second goal after half time. The game was prolific in corners none of which gave any advantage.

BEDFORD REGIMENT vs. SOUTH STAFFORDS.—This match was also played on the 19th instant on the Annandale ground. It was, however, a more interesting game than the one between the New Club and Volunteers. The Bedfords attacked at once and the Stafford's custodian was called upon to save a series of hot shots which he did in good style. Continuing to press, the Bedfords at last got though. A smart centre by Scrivener being banged into the net by McNulty. The game then settled down and ruled very even till the interval. On changing ends, both teams worked hard, the Staffords making great efforts to score, but their opponents' defence was good and they were unsuccessful. The Bedfords showed good combination and got some fine runs, but there was no further scoring, and the match ended in a win for the Bedfords by a goal to nil.

OXFORD L. I. vs. QUEENS.—This game, played on the 20th instant, attracted a large number of spectators. The match was evenly contested throughout, play in the first half being especially level. On changing ends, however, the Queens showed up to advantage and the Oxford's goal was frequently in a state of siege. The Oxford's goalkeeper played a splendid game and kept the Queens forwards out in great style. At last they got away and a brilliant run resulted in a shot by Moore finding the net. Shortly after, another goal was scored by the Queens and the issue put beyond doubt, the Oxfords being defeated by two goals to nil.

ROYAL IRISH RIFLES (holders) vs. BLACK WATCH.—These teams met on the 20th instant, a good game resulting in a win for the Black Watch by two goals to one. In the first moiety the Rifles were obliged to defend and after some fast play a pass by Connelly enabled Shepherd to score the first goal for the Black Watch. They rushed down again and in a few minutes a second goal has been obtained, on being responsible. On changing ends the Rifles played very hard and had the best of matters. They pressed during most of the time, but it was not till a few minutes before time that Smith found the net. Encouraged by this success they made desperate efforts to make a draw of the game, but without success, and the Black Watch ran out victors as stated.

Golf.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

1st September 1904.

THERE really is very little golf going on just now, that is to say, golf worthy of comment. A few desultory matches; here and there an exhibition match by the leading professionals, claims a paragraph all to itself and treats of the contest stroke by stroke, this minute of detail being probably due to the scarcity of other material for press. Then, of course, there are the never failing monthly Medal Competitions, the number of the returns immensely swollen at sea-side Clubs and proportionately reduced from inland courses. The letters and articles anent golf on the public commons continue to appear regularly, some are reasonable, some utterly illogical and the subject is not likely to die out for some time, nor does there seem any probability of any definite or appropriate and propitiatory solution of the matter in question being arrived at. It is a very vexed question, and assuredly a most difficult one to arbitrate, and as in most cases, "what is one man's meat is another man's poison." Golf allowed ad libitum and open to everyone on commons would be meat indeed to the players—but poison indeed to those not devotees of the game.

* * * * * *

Poor Mr. Travis! never was a victory more hard won—it is now nearly three months since he took the Amateur Cup and Title of Champion back with him across the Atlantic and scarcely a week has passed without some comment usually of a deprecatory nature being made on the side of the water, on his play, his style, his ability, and on himself, and then the following week warmly taken up and refuted by his friends and fellowcountrymen on the other side of the water. There is, too, a great deal of talk about a Representative Team of British Golfers going out to St. Louis, this team is to be so strong and so representative that they are to thoroughly indicate the honour of the British Lion and carry all before them, and high are the hopes and many the good wishes they will carry with them from thousands of golfers over here!

Great interest is being taken in the match between the "golfing cricketers" and "cricket golfers" at Lords. The rival teams are nearly complete, the former including J. H. Taylor, James Braid, Jack White, and Harry Vardon. Messrs. Horace Hutchinson, C. K. Hutchinson, W. H. de Lœtte, A. S. Johnston, H. M. Braybrooke and the Hon'ble Osmond Scott with Mr. Beldam as Captain there are all men whose chief game is the Royal and Ancient, but who have been known on some occasions to indulge in the National English Game! On the other side are men who are great with the willow or in other departments of cricket yet who where cricket "is" not, are not, averse to a round on the links and who do not despise the "Sport of Kings and Queens." In the team of cricket golfers are Messrs. Roe, Jessop, Smith, Turberville, P. J. de Paravicini, E. D. Compton, Lacey, Captain Guggisbery, etc.

The Annual Tournament of the Dornoch Golf Club began on Tuesday, 16th August, when over 90 players from all parts of the United Kingdom competed for the Club Gold Medal, and many handicap prizes. In the former which was a Scratch Competition, the prize fell to Mr. J. L. Low with the excellent core of 78, details of which were:—

Out 4, 3, 5, 4, 4, 3, 6, 4, 3 = 36.
In 5, 4, 5, 4, 7, 5, 5, 3, 4 = 42.

The next best score was made by the Oxford University player A. G. Thomson with 81, whilst the best return under handicap was made by Mr. A. H. Savage—82—4 = 78 and B. A. Hill Dornoch—93—15 = 78.

In the afternoon the Carnegie Shield (handicap) was played for the best aggregate of two rounds deciding the winner Mr. Low again played fine golf, taking 79, but was beaten by one stroke on the aggregate by T. Munro, junior, with 182—24 = 158, as against Mr. Low's 157 + 2 = 159.

Lady golfers are very busy organising there Autumn Matches and Competitions, but the present time is a bad one for any sort of attempt at getting together players, or even of managing to collect a quorum for a meeting of Committee—but another six weeks will see the fair sex hard at work with driver and iron. Short skirts, thick boots, very often no hat (that is the latest idea for the English sportswoman as conclusive to growth of woman's glory and as a preventitive of headache and megrims!) a very unattractive object is the enthusiastic golfeuse when got up regardless of effect, on a cold damp autumn morning; she is to be met with everywhere, in London streets in underground trains, or in the ubiquitous bus, the Tube knows her, the electric trams are laden with many of her, she is to be descried in Motor-Broughams, or bicycle, or driving herself in a smart "Ralli" and though she looks so undesirable and masculine, for a true staunch friend, for a straight, thoroughly reliable, honest, and well meaning woman, for a thorough "good sort," give me the golfing woman—and these golfing women intend to begin there autumn campaign in a very determined manner. Already the various Coronation Medal Competitions are arranged and advertised. Kent are holding theirs on 19th October, at Sundridge Park. The Worcestershire Club at Malvern are holding an open meeting on 18th and 19th October, and many other interesting events are on the tapis of which particulars and results will be given anon.

A wonderful performance of Mr. Robert Maxwell's is just recorded at Preswick, in which he beat the record held by John Hunter by 3 strokes, Mr. Maxwell went round in 66, going out in 30 strokes and coming home in 36.

The Army Cup Competition is being played with great vigour and enthusiasm. In the third round the Corps Artillery beat the 1st Division R. F. A. by 22 holes to nil. The 2nd Coldstream Guards defeated the 2nd Grenadier Guards somewhat signally by 9 matches to 1. Mr. B. M. Brooke being the single winner for the Grenadiers—while Mr. Boswell (Grenadier Guards) halved with Mr. Burton (Coldstream Guards). The Harlech Summer Tournament of the Royal St. David's Club was concluded in perfect weather on 30th August. In the semi-final for the Harlech Town Bowl J. Ronald Clive (4) beat S. Rowland Parkes (18) by 5 and 4, and R. E. Myddleton (scratch) beat W. Keith Anderson (11) by 4 and 3. In the final 36 hole match between the two winners in the penultimate heat, Mr. R. E. Myddleton beat J. R. Clive by 5 and 4. The latter was 1 up on the first eighteen holes and won the 19th after which Mr. Myddleton went right away and never gave his adversary a chance to keep the lead.

Seventy-two Cards were taken out for the Mixed Foursome Competition, the winners were Miss D. Ellenshaw and Lord Maidstone 94—8½ = 85½. In the Ladies' Meeting which was held at the conclusion of the men's—Miss N. Lloyd Williams with 86 won the Gold Medal and the Silver Medal open to visitors was won by Miss Hilda Clive. Those who are fortunate enough to know the Harlech Green will understand that it is no easy course to make a good score on but play throughout the meeting was distinctly good and, of course, the lovely weather contributed no little quota in the success of the meeting.

The Aberdovery Summer Meeting commenced on Saturday, 27th August. Many Midland players took part in the competitions and over 90 Cards were taken out. In the "Bogey" Competition five players succeeded in beating the Military Foe. Mr. C. R. Minchin playing from scratch was 4 up—next to him came Messrs H. Walker and T. S. Whitefield with 2 up. That same afternoon the first round for the Alcock Challenge Bowl with Memento was played and the meeting was concluded on 30th August with the Medal Competition for the Aberdovery Town Vase, with memento resulting in a tie between Messrs. W. W. Howard and O. Crane with returns of 79 net. The Foursome Competition was productive of much interest and altogether the meeting was an unqualified success

The 13th Annual Irish "Open" Championship, under the auspices of the Irish Golfing Union was commenced on the New Castle (Co. Down) links on Monday, 29th August. The day was occupied with the International matches, in which much interest was evinced and in which Scotland came out victorious, each country was represented by two teams of 10 aside, and each of these teams played as will be seen by the subjoined table a different foe in the afternoon:—

SOME RECORD JUMPS.

THE generally-accepted record wide-jump is the 39 ft. supposed to have been negotiated by Chandler at Warwick over 50 years ago. The exact accuracy of this measurement has frequently been disputed; anyhow, it is very doubtful if at that time a steeplechase jump would be measured as precisely as the distance of Mr. C. B. Fry's long jump was gauged. Thirteen yards certainly seems rather a "tall order"; but one thing is quite certain, and that is that Emblem did 36 ft., over water, with a stiff hedge on the off-side, in the Birmingham Steeplechase at Sutton Coldfield a few weeks before he won the Grand National. Strangely enough, this jump was negotiated within a few miles of Chandler's old home at Moor Hall. Perhaps there is "something in the air!"

A well-known authority has stated that The Colonel was the finest 'chaser he ever saw. A big, upstanding horse, standing rather high on the leg, The Colonel was a magnificent jumper and a very safe conveyance across country; indeed, if anything, he jumped too "big," and at Tamworth, where he won a small hurdle-race, it is said that he took the hurdles as if they were haystacks. He afterwards won the Grand National, giving away 6lb. to The Doctor, which horse Custance, in his "Riding Recollections," describes as "the boldest, biggest jumper I ever rode."

The Doctor accomplished several magnificent performances; and, in addition to running second to The Colonel for the Grand National, occupied the same position three years later in the big steeplechase at Bedford, where, giving away 28 lb. to Albrighton, he was beaten after a punishing finish by half a length. In later years no horse was better known in Leicestershire than The Doctor, who for six seasons cut down the best "leppers" in the county.

Though but a "little 'un," The Lamb was a marvellous jumper, who always seemed to have a leg to spare in an emergency. Many will have heard of the extraordinary agility he showed in the Grand National which he won. The second time round Bechers Brook proved too much for many of the field, and on the landing side the ground was literally strewn with prostrate horses and riders. The Lamb, however, was equal to the occasion, and managed to get clear of them, after giving a "finished exhibition" of how "hop-scotch" should be played.

Robert I' Anson declares that Austerlitz was the best jumper who ever crossed the Aintree country, and he trained him, and would have ridden him had not unforeseen circumstances occurred. The Squire eventually had the mount, and proved equal to getting home. Salamander was a fine natural jumper, and few owners perhaps have more pleasant memories of "The Blue Riband of the Chase" than Mr. Studd, who took £32,000 out of the ring when his horse proved victorious. The commission was executed at a long price, never less than 33 to 1 being taken—a fine price in comparison to the cramped odds so frequently offered in these days.

"The distressful country" has turned out more than its fair share of champion jumpers, undoubtedly one of the best of which was Ilex. As a four-year-old (with Arthur Nightingale up) Ilex won a selling steeplechase at Leicester, afterwards being bought in for 250 guineas. The next year he was beaten in a close finish by Battle Royal for the Great Sandown Steeplechase, and also ran fourth for the Irish International at Leopard's Town. Carrying 10 st. 5 lb., as a six-year-old, he won the Grand National in a trot. There were sixteen runners, out of which number eleven fell; but without this aid to success Ilex's owner obviously "feared no foe," for so confident was he of success that he was content to accept evens about his horse's chance as they passed the stand for the first time. A long away from home the issue was never in doubt, and the "finest lepper of the day," as he was frequently described, passed the post with Arther Nightingale patting his neck and easing him up. Although in the two succeeding years Ilex ran third for the National, he had nevertheless developed unsoundness, and in 1802 finished on three legs. In response to an inquiry on one occassion as to whether Ilex could jump, his owner replied "Jump! He could jump the Victoria Club."

It is not an easy matter to record the exact measurement of any big jumps made in the hunting-field, for when hounds are are running the last thing in the world a sportsman would do is to pull up, dismount, and fish out a measure from his pocket in order to gauge the exact measurement of the jump his mount has made.

There are some stiffish jumps in Leicester and Rutland, and in his "Riding Recollections" Custance makes special mention of one in particular. It is on record that a certain fence near Manton Gorse was so formidable that on one occasion the whole field gave it a "miss in baulk," and took another line, regardless of the fact that hounds were in full cry. A few days afterwards Manton Gorse was the first draw, and, a fox having been found, Custance and Mr. "Timber" Powell both went at the dreaded obstacle and succeeded in getting over. That magnificent horseman and pluckiest of riders, Frank Goodall, was not, however, so successful, for his horse hitting the top rail, come a cropper, whilst Goodall was picked up exactly nine yards away—he must have cleared over 40 ft. Custance describes the jump as "a double post-and-rail fence, with a quick-set hedge in the middle, the rails three and a half feet high, one leaning towards and the other away from you, and they were exactly twelve feet apart at the top. There was no chance of doubling it, as there was a ditch to drain the quick in the middle. The rails were very stiff, and would not allow any liberties to be taken with them."

Truly a nasty fence. A couple of stiff three-and-a half feet rails, twelve feet apart, and with a stiff hedge in between, would stop many a good man to hounds.

A short time ago a well-known member of the Southdown Hunt, riding a rather "hot-headed" mare, negotiated a big jump quite close to the Plumpton racecourse. His mare always jumped "big," and on this occasion actually cleared 38 ft., with a stiffish hedge on the off-side.

Shannon Lass, winner of the National in 1901, is a very safe jumper, and, in fact, has only fallen once in her life, and then through no fault of her own, for the going at Sandown Park, where she came a cropper, was perfectly awful.

Poor gallant old True Blue! What a neat jumper he was! And such an example to a horse who bungled or scrambled over his fences. He was an ideal hunter, and the man who could manage to fall off such a mount must have been a very poor performer in the saddle.

Many very good leaps have been made at horse shows, and some of the jumps at the Dublin Horse Show want a deal of doing. The Stone wall has not much "give" about it; in consequence, a horse soon learns that he cannot take any liberties with this obstacle. There are a large number of horses who have a great objection to jumping in cold blood, and there have been many examples where a really good jumper in the hunting-field has absolutely refused to jump a sheep wattle in a show.

It is on record that dining-tables, fully equipped, have been negotiated by well-known hunters—indeed, of trick jumping there are many amusing anecdotes. A good story is told of the late Marquis of Waterford, who on one occasion made a wager that he could produce a horse who could jump a six-foot wall. This feat was actually performed several times from one side of the wall, but each time the horse approached it from the other he always refused. Later on the discovery was made that the ground was six inches lower on the bad side.

Of records of big jumps made in the circus-ring there are an endless number; but a horse will naturally jump a greater height without a man on its back, and therefore such leaps cannot be fairly compared with those accomplished by a man and horse in the hunting-field or "over the sticks."

THE BEST OILS FOR MOTOR CARS.

Wilburine for cylinders ... Rs. 6-8 per gallon Tin. | Valvoline for Bearings, etc. ... Rs. 5-0 per gallon Tin.

Extract from the "Autocar."

LUBRICATING OILS.—[2422]—It may be instructive to your numerous readers to have the experiences of a motor car experimentalist on the behaviour of lubricating oils for motor work. In the first onset I tried various sorts of oils, all of which left deposits of carbon and gumming matter in the cylinders and valves. These deposits are serious drawbacks, not only to the working of the pistons and valves, but also interfere with the proper sparking at the ignition plugs. I then tried the Valvoline Oil Co.'s oils, using "Wilburine" for the cylinders and "Valvoline" for the bearings, etc.; these being quite pure mineral oils, no deposits either of carbon or gumming matter were left. Every time the pistons, etc., have been examined they were quite bright, clean and well lubricated. The valves also keep in good condition and require very little regrinding. I have been quite free from sparking troubles since using the above lubricants. Any dust that alights on the working parts is easily wiped off, whereas with other oils dirt stuck fast through gumming.

Very much smaller quantities of these oils ("Wilburine" and "Valvoline") about one-third to one-quarter, are required, which more than balances the extra first cost. The wearing surfaces are besides in a magnificent condition. These advantages —viz., high-class lubrication, freedom from deposit in cylinders, gum in bearings, absence of sparking troubles, are too important to be neglected by any motorist.

There is a tendency to use various greases, instead of oils. Engineers have over and over again proved that greases give much greater frictional losses than oils; with motor car engines and bearings the lubricant that gives the least possible friction is the best.

I have referred to the advantages the motorist gets. I will mention another advantage these oils have to those whom the motorist passes, viz., the absence of the fried-fish-shop smell so often noted. Several persons have been very much struck by the absence of smell; even when the car has been standing for some time with the engines running, no trace of offensive odour has been apparent to the bystanders.

I mention these experiences, having no interest in the Valvoline Oil Co., that others may be benefited and save themselves trouble and their neighbours some annoyance.

THE CALCUTTA MONSOON MEETINGS.

WE publish the usual statistics of the Calcutta monsoon season, which do not call for very much comment. The amateurs, both as regards trainers and riders, have more than held their own, in spite of the improved class of horse now running at these meetings, in consequence of the increase in the value of stakes instituted two seasons ago. This is the first monsoon season within our memory in which we have been treated to six meetings, and we can only hope that it will form a precedent, and that the sixth meeting will now become a permanent fixture. If owners will respond as readily in the future as they have this year, there is no reason why six meetings should not always fill well.

As regards this season, entries have been very good throughout, though on two occasions the open hurdle race has been in danger of falling through; and on the whole the fields also have been satisfactory, though in one or two of the handicaps the big J was freely used after the publication of the weights. As is usually the case, the largest fields have invariably turned out for the second class races, closed to horses that have won more than a specified amount, and this is evidently the class that it pays best to cater for.

Of the owners, Mr. Rodocanachi easily heads the list with the very respectable sum—for the monsoon—of Rs. 2,640. This has been mainly put together by that game old mare Kittylea, who, good mare as she is, came in for her full share of luck to win quite as often as she did. Mr. Harold Smith stands second with Rs. 1,925, mainly earned by Hello, who has proved himself as good a performer in the mud as he is on the hard.

Of the riders, Mr. Evers easily heads the poll with 5 wins, 2 seconds, 7 thirds and 13 unplaced, making a total of 27 rides, or eight more than any other riders, professional or amateur. Hard comes next with 17 rides, out of which we has had 3 wins and 4 seconds, and he is followed by Howie, O'Neil and Mr. Galstaun and Shelldrake with 3 wins each to their credit. We append the usual figures and give in our Turf columns the Form at a Glance statement.

An American lady, who was in Port Arthur during the bombardment by Admiral Togo's fleet, tells a curious story of the behaviour of the Port Arthur cats under fire. When the big shells began to fall during the day five or six cats used to come out on to a roof opposite her house. "With my family I spent hours in looking at them," the lady writes; "but only during the day, for at night I dared not stir out of bed. At each gunshot the cats arched their backs and stiffened their legs, and seemed both terrified and furious. Then when a hissing shell arrived it gave the signal for a frightful battle. They jumped at each other raging like tigers, and seemed to hold each other responsible for what was taking place. The effect was so comical that we could not help laughing, though the occasion was not one to inspire gaiety. After having fought, the cats retired for a while, but as soon as the bombardment began again they went through the same business.

Sporting Notes.

THE Calcutta Monsoon season was brought to a close with a capital day's racing at the sixth meeting held last Saturday. It was in many ways the best meeting of the season, and even in the matter of weather we were not so scurvily treated as we have grown accustomed to being. There was a sharpish shower during the hurdle race, and an occasional drizzle during the remainder of the afternoon, but nothing to speak of, and a steady breeze rendered the afternoon pleasantly cool.

Perhaps the most noticeable feature of the day was the immense improvement in the handicapping. At the last meeting there was rightly, we think, more grumbling over this section of the arrangements than we ever remember to have heard before: but apparently the openly expressed dissatisfaction was not without result, since in the closing meeting the allotment of burdens was worthy of Mr. Cursetjee at his best. In support of this it is only necessary to glance at the detailed account of the racing, which shows that out of the six races coloured on the card, in no case was the verdict given by more than a length, while there were two short head victories, and what is perhaps more important, all the placed horses were close enough up to come under the proverbial sheet. This is handicapping, and we can only regret that we did not get a taste of it earlier in the season.

It was a bit of a day out for Smallman, who not only rode two winners, but trained the winners of three out of the six events, though we notice that he is robbed of one-third of this distinction by an esteemed daily confrere, who gives Second Thought (who finished third) as the winner of the Giant Plate, and also, we notice, gives Pierette who finished among the "also ran" brigade (if not behind them) as running third for the first race, the Dalhousie Plate! Whatever eccentricities a reporter indulges in, he might reasonably be expected to get the first three horses placed accurately.

Proceedings opened with the Dalhousie Plate, for which eight turned out. The money was all for Step Ma and Fusilier, but the former got off badly and ran terribly green, swerving all over the course as soon as Mr. Dudley sat down to bustle her in earnest. Fusilier ran a good horse, but could only get within a length of Thunder Cloud ridden by Smallman, who started at the nice price of "tenses."

The Hunters' Handicap produced a like field, of which Gauntlet and Planet II were the most fancied. The latter apparently cannot be induced to gallop in the mud, and declined further interest in the proceedings after going a mile. Sylvia led throughout, fencing in a far less irresponsible style than is her wont, and it was only in the run in that she was collared by Cheer Up who, after a great race, lauded the verdict by a short head.

Only five were weighed out for the Giant Plate and Mademoiselle was installed favourite at twos, though Little Doris had also a strong following. The start was greatly delayed by the vagaries of Second Thought and Little Doris, the latter of whom whipped round as the gate went up, and took no part in the race. Irish led a part of the way, but Mademoiselle assumed command at the turn and won comfortably by a length.

Nine went to the post for the Autumn Plate and that gay deceiver Invincible, was once more served up favourite, with Profit next in demand. The winner turned up in Hello, ridden by Smallman, who started at sixes, as the popular notion was that 11-0 was asking too much of him in the heavy going. Profit led to the turn, but died away there, and Mr. Smith's second horse, Morris, was the nearer to the winner, who got home by a bare half length. Morris, we hear, has passed into Mr. Turner's possession as a paperchaser, and ought to prove a more than useful one.

Black Patch was almost unanimously selected as the plum of the seven who went out for the Lilliput Plate, in spite of her somewhat tucked-up appearance. Little Doris got well away, and in spite of her steadier of 11st. ran very prominently all through and secured third place. Black Patch looked like a winner at the distance, but Golden Tip coming with a rush on the post, snatched the race by half a length. Eight faced the barrier for the last race and Step Ma and Pubna were installed equal favourites. Pubna led from the start to the half distance, where she looked to be beat, and Claymore came to the front. Mr. Evers had not quite finished with the chestnut mare, however, and timing his last effort with the greatest accuracy snatched the race out of the fire by a short head, thus furnishing a good example of the better jockey, and not the better horse, winning the race. More power to your elbow.— T. G. E.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—I regret to state that Mr. C. G. Brown, proprietor of the Cubbon Hotel, is at present lying in a very critical state owing to injuries caused by a wounded panther. The particulars of the accident, which occurred about a fortnight ago, are as follows:—Mr. Brown, who is an experienced shikari, went out with another sportsman after a panther which had mauled a native a few miles from Bangalore a day or two previously. The expedition was an errand of mercy as well as of sport, for the party carried antiseptic dressing for the injured native. Arrived at the scene of action, the stories told by the natives were, as usual, vague and contradictory, and it was difficult to sift the truth from the fiction. Eventually, after the panther had been represented as unwounded, it was discovered that this was not so, principally by the unwillingness of the natives to beat the jungle in which the beast was said to be lying. Then it was said that the animal had been seen, and was so badly hurt that it could hardly crawl and only required the coup de grace. Although acting on this presumption, considerable caution was still observed, but it must naturally have come as a shock to Mr. Brown to suddenly discover the beast, which was alleged to be helpless, charging down on him like an express train. The natives bolted, and Mr. Brown's arm was seized and somewhat badly bitten, he firing two ineffectual shots when the animal was close upon him. He then knocked it off with his fist, and a native shikari, pluckily returning, shot the animal dead. Mr. Brown's companion meanwhile had no notion that an accident had occurred and only arrived when the whole thing was over, it having occupied only a few seconds altogether. The injuries were attended to on the spot, and on his return to Bangalore Mr. Brown had the best possible medical attendence. As I write, however, his condition is very serious. The panther was a female with cubs, another fact which was not mentioned by the lying natives.

I re-open this letter to say that Mr. Brown died from the effects of his injuries at 3-30 P.M. to-day (24th instant). He will be much missed in Bangalore: the greatest sympathy is felt for Mrs. Brown.

The programme of the next Dacca Races, fixed for the 10th, 12th and 14th January next, appears in to-day's issue of this journal. There are half a dozen races each day, and though there are some slight alterations the cards follow pretty closely those of last year, and there may be an Extra or two. Calcutta owners will, of course, be represented, numerously we hope. Mr. C. H. Holder is Honorary Secretary.

The Punjab Horse Show will be held at Rawalpindi about the beginning of April 1905. Improvements are being extensively made, classes re-arranged and more valuable prizes offered, so that the show promises to be even a greater success than its predecessor.

The Madras Race Stewards have just got out the programme of their X'mas Meeting, which is to be held on Tuesday, the 27th December, and full details of which will be found further on in to-day's paper. If the weather permits this meeting will be held on the island, if not at Guindy. First entries close on the 15th December.

This little meeting is in addition to the winter meeting, details of which have already been published.

up a base for shooting in the higher mountains of the central Himalaya that many sportsmen, ever on the look-out for fresh fields will duly appreciate. True the accounts of game encountered by the "Mission" on its onward march were rather meagre, and limited to notice of such lesser items as hare and pheasant, but it was not to be expected that the larger animals would tarry within view of imposing caravans or military columns, though indications were abundant enough to prove that the particular bovines inhabiting these places only need hunting up by small parties, whose presence would not attract much attention. Of course it goes without saying that the road through the valley is but the first section of a high way to Lhassa and, eventually, to Mongolia, but just at present we are but concerned with the game preserve of the Chumbi proper, and facilities it should afford for deer to the east and west, though from the rather sparse information as yet available we know next to nothing of the practical passes to the country north of Bhutan. The few Tibetan traders that come from there have up to date, from fear of divulging secrets that might have got them into trouble, been rather reticent, though the wares they bring show that yak, kyang, the musk ox, the huge hill sambur and the half wild goats roam the lower pine forests in considerable numbers; and as confidence is established between these people and our road making parties and engineers, no doubt the judicious distribution of the almighty dib will induce guides to offer their services. The Bhutias have recently shown themselves well disposed, so that not only may the hunter traverse the Chumbi by the military road, but reach the desired grounds viâ Punaka—the Bhutan capital—and as Sarat Chandra tells us the land slopes gradually down from the meridian of Lhassa merging into a prairie-like expanse extending to the Kham province of China being known as the Dayab (or meadow), there is a grand stretch opening up that has never been disturbed by the crack of the rifle. True the tribes on the Northern Assam border have to be thought of, but so marked a change has come over their behaviour towards strangers—Europeans specially—of late years, if one will respect their peculiarities not essaying bullying or "zubberdust," he should be able to penetrate from end to end their country as safely as Wilcox did eighty years ago. In fact we see no great difficulty in our tramping from the Chumbi to the Dehong without molestation, and in fact as a welcome guest. Not only should these new fields invite the hunter, but those venturesome individuals who seem never so happy as when risking their necks and limbs might essay the ascent of Jomulhari, that huge snowclad hummock marking the entrance of the Chumbi on the east. Viewed from Dewangiri, or even the Shillong Peak, there seems a way up from the north-east which may be practical.

The Calcutta Zoo has just received the following:—

2 Emus, 3 Leopards (one of them with a cub), 1 White Jackal and 2 Demoiselle Cranes. All presented by the Bhawal Raj State, Jovdebpur, Dacca.

Our readers will be interested to hear that the Zoo authorities are expecting a fine pair of Giraffes at the end of October or beginning of November. They were caught in the desert of Kordofan in June last, and are now at Hamburg.

We are glad to see the Chamba State has increased the shooting license fee from Rs. 5 to Rs. 25. In future only a fixed number of these licenses will be granted.

Messrs. Walter Locke & Co., on the threshold of the ensuing cold season, remind us, in the latest edition of their general catalogue and price list, that they are as enterprising as ever and that they maintain their position in the fore-front of Indian commercial enterprise. The large extensions the firm have made to their workshops, the establishment of their foundry at Kidderpore and the rapid increase in their electrical business are alluded to in this catalogue, but they want a book to themselves and doubtless our friends W. L. and Company will see to it later on. The catalogue under notice exhibits all the perfections of its predecessors and introduces us to some novelties in sporting implements and gear. The firm's motor cars, bicycles, and launches are well worth inspection.

Full details of the St. Leger will be found in our English Sporting Letter. Pretty Polly won in the record time of 3mins. 5⅘secs., and she came in practically cantering it must be remembered. What a marvel she is?

The following curious incident is recounted in The Field by Sir Godfrey Lagden, Johannesburg. "There were a lot of rats in the forage-room of my stable, and we had great difficulty in getting at them. They were shy of all traps, and did a tremendous lot of damage at night time, lying quiet all day. At length I put in the room a square tin-lined box about 3 feet deep, and in it placed some burnt cheese. The rats immediately got interested in the cheese, climbed up the outside of the box, and, having got inside, could not ascend the slippery tin lining. In this way we killed a great many. One morning my children took a cat, who was a very good ratter, and placed it in the box, where there was already a good sized rat. The cat, instead of tackling the rat appeared to make friends with it. They put their noses together and frisked around, but no harm was done, and eventually the cat jumped out, refusing to tackle the rat. The children then put in a keen dachshund, who immediately snapped at the rat and missed it. The rat ran round the box two or three times, dodging cleverly, and eventually, by climbing on the dog's back, adroitly jumped out of the box and escaped.

Mr. W. M. Beresford returns in the Arabia and will probably be back in Calcutta about the middle of next month.

The Calcutta Polo Tournament will begin on the 3rd January instead of the 6th idem as originally arranged.

According to an American paper, the first attempt to use the Australian totalizator in America was made at the Vallejo race meeting last month, the Ward machine being used. Although auction pools were sold and a book was also on, the machine was quite well patronized and the public seemed highly pleased with the result. On the last day the ticket sellers were kept busy when the 2-10 pace was on, as it was a split heat affair and each heat closely contested. The odds were so much better than those offered by the bookmaker that the latter did very little business and it is said lost money on the meeting. In the pacing event on the last day, after three heats had been decided and Zolock had lost two of them, one to two was the best odds offered by the book against Zolock, while the totalizator paid better than even money on him when he won the fourth heat. In the second heat of the 2-24 class trot, won by Lady Madison, the machine paid $24.70 for a dollar. Tickets were sold at $1 each, and there were but four heats where the odds were not better than even money. Tickets on the favourite paid better than two to one in many instances where the books had one to two and one to three chalked up.

The Ward Totalizator Company has secured the privileges to operate their machine at Spokane, Boise, and several other points on the North Pacific Circuit and we believe it will be well received by those who wish to back the horses at those points. It is a very attractive looking piece of furniture and the system is so simple that anyone can understand its workings.

On the subject of the evolution of speed a writer in The American Sportsman remarks that while we all believe in evolution, and that under favouring conditions every generation is bound to be better than the preceding one, the average student of the American trotter doubtless gives too much credit to scientific breeding and too little to the many modern speed enhancing devices and improved race tracks.

When we reflect that it is almost forty years from the 2-22 of George Wilkes, the champion trotting stallion of his time, to the 2-02¼ of Cresceus, the champion trotting stallion of his time, we are too apt to attribute the gain of nearly twenty seconds to scientific breeding or evolution. But good judges think the tracks of forty years ago were from eight to ten seconds slower than the best tracks of to-day.

Hamilton Busbey, in his new book, just out, estimates the difference at ten seconds.

If we take all the facts and circumstances into consideration it is probable that the real difference in speed between George Wilkes and Cresceus (both rigged the same) would not be more than six or seven seconds. This is a guess, of course, but look at the reason for it. George Wilkes' record does not indicate his speed limit. He worked a half-mile over the old Union track on Long Island in 1-04 hitched to a 120 pound road wagon. He trotted a quarter in 29 seconds hitched to an 85 pound wagon. In this trial he was timed by Wesley Bishop and Hamilton Busbey. Mr. Busbey, in his new book, claims that George Wilkes, if alive to-day, would defeat every horse in the world easily. In this Mr. Busbey is entirely mistaken. Modern speed provoking devices and modern shoeing cannot be made to measure the distance between the best trial mile that George Wilkes ever made and the 1-58½ of Lou Dillon. Concede that George Wilkes did pull an 85 pound steel tire, friction axle wagon a mile in 2-18. Give five seconds' credit to the modern bike and eight seconds to the modern track, and two seconds to modern modes of training, and still George Wilkes is some strenuous seconds behind Lou Dillon.

This looks like slow progress, but evolution is always slow. Professor Darwin does not tell us in his great book on "The Descent of Man" how many years elapsed between the man-like ape and the ape-like man, nor the crisis in that development when the man-like ape discarded his tail, but it was many thousand years. And notwithstanding the many thousands of years since the first advent of the ape-like man, he is still in imitative existence in many parts of the world. Hence, by comparison with the development of the human race, the speed development of the American trotter has been rapid, even if we have only gained a second in a decade.

We print the programme for the Hyderabad Races further on, and remind our readers that second entries close on Monday, 10th October 1904.

On Mr. R. H. Rimington Wilson's grouse moor of Broomhead, near Sheffield, on the 24th ultimo, all records, says the St. James' Gazette, were broken by a shooting party of nine guns, which killed on that day no fewer than 2,743 grouse, or, in other words, 1,371½ brace. This bag surpasses by nearly fifty brace of grouse the previous record for one day's shooting by a party which was made as far back as 1893 on the same moor by Mr. Rimington Wilson and his guests when 2,648 grouse, or 1,324 brace were accounted for on 20th August.

This record-making shooting party consisted in addition to Mr. R. H. Rimington Wilson, of eight other guns—viz., the Earl of Onslow, the Earl of Powis, Lord Cecil Manners, Lord Savile, the Mackintosh, Major Acland Hood, Mr. Heatley Noble, and Mr. H. Rimington Wilson from which it can be seen that it embraced many of the finest grouse shots living, Mr. R. H. Rimington Wilson himself being regarded as the best grouse shot in England. The ammunition used by the members of the party contained 1⅛oz shot along with the standard charges of Schultz E. C. smokeless diamond, Kynoch and Heurite, while the guns were of the most modern manufacture, the majority of them being single triggers on the Boss system, similarly bored in both barrels. Mr. Rimington Wilson was the first English sportsman to adopt this system some nine years ago.

It is noteworthy that the same number of guns (nine) made the record on Broomhead in 1893 as took part in the 1904 record mentioned. The latter record shows that where care and skill have been exercised in grouse preservation this year there should be abundant grouse. It also shows that the straightest possible power is requisite, owing to the wildness and strength of the birds, and that, we may be certain, was the rule last month at Broomhead or such a splendid bag would not have been made.

The Lucknow Autumn Meeting second entries and third entries for the Army Cup will close to-morrow.

The delay in getting out the Dehra Dun race programme has necessitated an extension of the closing date of entries which are now advertised for the 29th September and 7th October.

Our Poona Correspondent writes:—Everyone was delighted to welcome back Mr. Cecil Grey, the popular Secretary of the W. I. T. C., who was looking wonderfully well after his six months rest at home. He has doubtless come primed with new ideas for the furtherance of the welfare of the Turf Club for which he has already done so much. It must have been a great source of satisfaction to him to find how admirably Mr. Cursetjee Dhunjeeshaw had carried on during his absence. Lady Jenkins also returned by the same steamer and received a warm welcome from her many friends. Ramshaw, the erstwhile jockey, and now developed into an owner, and Ames, a prophet of the most pronounced American seat also caught the race special, and it was interesting to note the arrival of a little English light-weight lad of the well-known family of Barrett coming to try his luck.

It is, I believe, considered ungracious to adversely criticize lady and gentlemen amateurs when they give their services in the cause of charity, but we are used to the best of most things, and when good natured people get up public entertainments and charge for admission, even in the cause of charity, they should bear in mind that in Poona we expect the best. The Café Chantant held during the past week scarely came under this category and showed obvious signs of hasty preparation and lack of proper stage management which people resented.

The Big Meeting opened in fine if rather sultry weather, and the attendance was perhaps slightly restricted in consequence. After the large fields we have been accustomed to throughout the "extras" it was quite a novelty to find only four starters for the Stand Plate for 14 handers, and of this quartet the public would consider nothing but Veera and La France; and rightly, the former beautiful pony winning somewhat comfortably in just a tick over 51 seconds. Travelling indeed!

In the Maiden Plate for Arab ponies, the well-known dealer, Talib, started Moon and Nainawa, backing the latter to win and the former for a place, but had evidently made some mistake in his trial, as Nainawa could get no nearer than third, while Moon admirably handled by Penton won with a bit to spare.

Once again the public spotted which thimble the pea was under and went for the lovely, honest little Russley Rose with determination at 6 to 4 on, and J. Robinson found little difficulty in putting things in a safe state by a convenient half length.

In the Trial Plate, however, the cognoscenti could not make up their mind and a deal of money was circulated by the adherents of Loch Clievedon, Blue Blood, and Child's Guide. Why in the face of the consummate ease with which the later won over 7 furlongs there was a strong opinion current that he could not get the extra one it is difficult to imagine. The English horse certainly never gave his backer much mental anxiety, as he soon drew out with Harpist, and when it came to the distance little Eliott had merely to give him his head (adorned as usual in the insulting cap and blinkers) to draw away and win pulling up.

In the Aga Khan's Commemoration Plate that fine Arab horse Mameluke was rightly made favourite. He is about the only really first-class Arab horse in training. To Hyderi, who was heavily backed by his stable, he conceded 1st. 11lbs., and won cleverly in Penton's clever hands.

A large field of a baker's dozen faced the starter for the half mile race for Lilliput Arabs and gave that patient official a deal of trouble. The lovely little Ptarmigan was made favourite, but was interfered with, Rose, ridden by Ames, eventually winning. So ended a very enjoyable day's racing which augured well for a most successful meeting.

Athletic Notes.

WE learn that the Annual General Meeting of the Calcutta Golf Club will be held on Friday, 28th October, and that Saturday, 5th November, has been fixed upon for the opening day of the new season with its customary handicap and the annual tiffin. The fixture card is much the same as usual, except that this year one of the medal competitions will be brought forward to fill the somewhat long gap between the opening day and the Xmas Meeting. The Amateur Championship of India will once more be played over the links of the Tollygunge Club by kind permission of the Committee and members, and as the event is yearly growing in importance and popularity, a large entry of competitors from all parts of India may be confidently expected.

Page after page of this week's home sporting papers is full of averages and statistics of the closing cricket season, which may, or more probably may not, deeply interest our readers, but there is one player who deserves and will receive the hearty congratulations of all cricketers, his many friends in India included, and that is Jack Hearne upon his place at the very top of the year's bowling averages. A splendid position for a man of his years, and one who always has so much hard to do, and does it. The figures of the South African tour are interesting too, and make the team out at least fully up to tip top county form if not a little more, and the Yorkshire executive will no doubt rejoice at the decision of the Colonial Captain, Mr. Frank Mitchell, to stay at home next year and play regularly for the county of the White Rose once more. His fine and reliable batting should give the side once again that cohesiveness which, with F. S Jackson so often not available, would appear to have been lacking more than once this year.

Mr. J. S. Worthington, the popular Mid-Surrey crack player, is one of those golfers who has literally forced his way to first-class rank by merit and determination, and his performances in this year's Amateur Championship at Sandwich will have prepared many judges for his fine victory in the Irish Open Amateur Championship at Newcastle Co. Down the other day, and his achievement in beating his opponent 6 and 4 on the thirty-six holes, after being thrice down at the end of the first eighteen and in equalling the record of the difficult links with a splendidly played round of 74, speaks volumes for his nerve. Mr. Worthington will go further yet. Another very popular Championship victory was that of Mr. Hal Ludlow, the well-known artist, in the Amateur Championship of Wales at Pembrey, though he had not the same class of rivals to meet as Mr. Worthington, and in fact rather spread eagled his field, winning the final match against Mr. R. M. Brown by no less than 13 up and eleven to play.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes:—The Baronet Cricket Club, one of the best local Parsee clubs, will, I learn on good authority, send a team to Calcutta during the Christmas holidays. Calcutta cricketers may be prepared to meet a fairly strong side, including some of the Parsee representative players. None of the players, however, who assist the Parsee Gymkhana will be in the team which is composed of players who are not members of the Parsee Gymkhana. Meherhomji Daruwalla, the Rajas, Colabawalla and Kapadia, are all likely starters.

The last of the weekly mounted sports were held on Wednesday afternoon, when, owing to the counter attractions of the Rovers' Football Tournament and the Races at Poona, half the items on the programme had to be abandoned for want of entries, while the others drew so few competitors that the afternoon fell flat and uninteresting to competitors and spectators alike.

The local golfers who competed at Nasik in the Western India Golf Tournament have all returned, and it must be said of them that they rendered a poor account of themselves on the whole, in fact I do not remember any year in which the Bombay contingent has shown up so poorly. The Maharaj Kumar Tagore, we hear, is giving a Cup for competition among members of the Bengal Automobile Association. The conditions, we understand, have not yet been definitely settled; but it is likely the decision will be in favour of a speed contest over a more or less tricky course, a reliability trial being rather difficult to work in this part of the world unless it was held between this and say Barrakur and back.

The Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company, with the desire to cater for the public which has always distinguished its management, announce a special Poojah trip to Puri—an attractive little outing that is sure to be taken advantage of by many "Ditchers" who want a glimpse of the sea and a lung full of ozone. It occurs to us that a little more variety could be got out of the trip if a certain amount of cycling were combined with it. The main road from Midnapore to Puri runs close to the Bengal-Nagpur Railway for the greater part of the way, so that a tripper taking a return ticket could, we presume, go by train to Kharagpur, cycle or take the branch train to Midnapore, and reach Puri, alternately cycling and training; or if "so disposed" one might cycle all the way down and return by train. We give full details of the cycle route from Calcutta to Puri in our Cycling columns; but we would make one reservation; we strongly recommend the section between Calcutta and Midnapore being done by train. The last time we were awheel over this stretch of road we had the reverse of a comfortable ride most of the journey. From Midnapore southwards the road is always good.

In our Golf columns will be found the complete results of the R. W. I. G. C. Tournaments at Nassik, some of the finals of which had not arrived for inclusion in our last issue.

The All-India Hockey Tournament will commence at Allahabad on the 12th December, entries closing on the 20th November. The Tournament is open to British Regiments, attached men not to be played in regimental team; teams of British officers of any two Native Regiments combined; batteries or companies R.A. (any two may combine); Station Gymkhanas; Police Officers' Teams, and Volunteer Teams of same Corps or station.

The final game in the Walter Locke Football Competition in Rangoon was played on the 22nd instant between the Rangoon Gymkhana and the Border Regiment from Thayetmyo. There was a large crowd in spite of bad weather. The Gymkhana were expected to win, but their play was much below their usual standard and they were defeated by three goals to one. Each team scored a goal in the first half.

There is no doubt the trend of modern athletics verges on the sensational. Happily, however, oarsmen do not yet make matches to row from Oxford to London, or for many hours at a stretch. Sensational feats or trials of mere physical endurance do not yet appeal to the boating world, we are glad to say. Personally, we fail to see the good of the current discussion on long-distance rowing at all—but that is another story. Is the game worth the candle? Hear what Mr. W. H. Grenfell says:—"My most tedious rowing experience was when I pulled in a treble sculling boat from Oxford to Putney—a distance of 120 miles—in twenty-two hours. The chief hardship was sitting so long in such a cramped position. The thirty-three locks we passed afforded quite a rest." Exactly; such feats are only the outcome of misdirected enthusiasm.

A General Meeting of Members of the Calcutta Rangers' Club was held at the Dalhousie Institute on Friday evening, 23rd September, at 9-30 P.M. Mr. W. J. Bradshaw presided, and in opening the proceedings, he expressed his regret that the President, Mr. Martyn Wells, was unable to be with them on this occasion, but he was enjoying a well-earned holiday and they all hoped he would return much benefited by his trip Home. He next referred to the belated Annual General Meeting and said that it was not in the interests of the Club that a meeting which should ordinarily have been held in January should have been held over till September, and in order that this should not occur another year, a new bye-law would be proposed that evening which would make it compulsory for the Executive to call the annual meeting between the 15th September and 15th October of each year.

He referred to the rules of the Club under which the membership was unlimited in number and said that although the rules gave them power to admit any number of members, yet in his opinion members had not exercised that care which they might have done in the selection of many, who during the last few years had been admitted. There were instances where men had made a convenience of the Club for a few months and then had walked off and never paid their subscriptions; others had joined the Club because they found it an easy way to get drinks, sign for them and then leave the Club without paying their bills; the result was a large amount had had to be written off as bad debts, quite irrecoverable and the Club was consequently on the wrong side. He urged members to be careful in their selection of new members, and thought if they did so the standard of the Club would be raised and there would then be no dearth of good players. As far as he personally was concerned, he would rather the Club not be in a position to enter a team to compete in any event, than pack it with outsiders just brought in for certain occasions.

This brought him to another question which has caused some feeling in the Club during the past season, i.e., the admission of soldiers into the Football Team under the rule which empowers the General Committee to elect temporary members for three months, without their names going to the ballot. He would impress upon the meeting that the Committee had the interests of the Club at heart and their great desire he knew was to put in the best team they could, but in their zeal for the sport, he thought they had not exercised that discretion which the general body of members expected them to do. He had the greatest admiration for the British soldier, and could testify to the excellent behaviour and great assistance the military element introduced in the football team last season had been to the Club, but they must remember that the Rangers was intended to be a Civilian Club from its foundation and he hoped it would always remain so. He mentioned this matter as it had been the cause of some friction of late and he hoped it would now be a thing of the past, and now the Committee knew the wish of the members, or he should say the majority of the members, he hoped in future they would only elect under the rule for temporary members such candidates as would be sure of election had their names gone up to the ballot.

He then referred to the large sums run up by some of the members for refreshments and he suggested that the older members should be a little more careful in the way they had encouraged a habit to grow up lately, by fostering what was termed "creeps." He knew of instances where men were let in to pay for a large number of drinks for others, which they could not afford to pay for, and he was sure if they only gave the matter serious thought they would see that it was not in the best interests of the Club, or its members, to encourage this. He then referred to the accounts and said it was to be regretted that the balance was on the wrong side: with a Club of 100 members this should not be so, and it was necessary that members should take a livelier interest in the welfare of the Club if they wished to carry it on. He pointed out that the duties of Treasurer were such as made it difficult to get any member to take it up and it was proposed that Messrs. Patton and Company, Incorporated Accountants, should take over the accounts, make all collections, pay all bills, and submit a monthly statement to the Committee of the state of the Club finance. He felt certain, it would pay the Club to pay a fee and have the accounts well looked after, rather than run the risk of having to write off large sums each year in bad debts. He then read a letter from Mr. Theo. Walsh referring to the accounts of the past year and giving his reasons for having resigned the Club, which were recorded.

He briefly referred to the work of the Sports Section of the Club during the past year, and said that the Club's visit to Dacca would long be remembered owing to the princely hospitality and pleasant time they had as guests of that good sportsman H. H. The Nawab of Dacca.

The Committee's report and statement of accounts were then passed with acclamation. The following office-bearers were appointed for the ensuing year:—President.—Mr. Martyn Wells, Vice-Presidents:—Messrs. W. J. Bradshaw, A. Burrup, and H. Hobbs. Honorary Secretary—Mr. P. C. Margretts Honorary Ground Secretary.—Mr. Alexander Mathieson. Official Treasurers.—Messrs. Patton and Company. Committee.—Messrs. Aldridge, Haines, Henderson, and Nugent.

The Captain and Vice-Captains and Sports Committee to be appointed by the General Committee.

The meeting then considered and revised the Bye-laws of the Club which were ordered to be printed and circulated to all members.

A vote of thanks was recorded to the past officers of the Club and the meeting terminated.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes :—The sports of the 12th Battery, R. F. A., which have taken place during the past week, were especially interesting as they celebrated the 50th anniversary of the sanguinary battle of the Alma, at which the 12th Battery fired the very first shot discharged on either side, and were subsequently wiped out almost to a man. To go into each and every item on the programme would occupy too much space, but a special word of praise must be given to the jumping of the battery horses, which was almost phenomenally good ; whilst the training of the animals in the section jumping, when led horses were introduced, was also excellent.

The tent-pegging too was far above the average and the accuracy of both Sergeant-Major Crouch and Farrier-Sergeant Wall was wonderful, pegs placed edgeways appearing to present no difficulties at all to them. Crouch seemed to possess the better style, but the judges were unable to separate the men and a tie was announced. The Skill Stakes, an event which was open to the Bangalore Gymkhana, and was well-named, embracing as it did the negotiation of three hurdles, the cutting of a head, the slicing of a lemon and the taking of a peg with the sword, went to Lieutenant Young of the 58th Battery, R. F. A., Captain Cowey R. A. M. C., being second.

Major Johnson, D. S. O., and the officers of the 12th Battery R. F. A., were "At Home" to their friends, and their guests were numerous.

The Madras Rugby football tournament, which fell through for lack of entries, was re-opened to admit a sporting entry from "The Hyacinth," which has been for some time past in Madras Harbour. A match was played last evening between "The Hyacinth" and the Gymkhana, when the latter won easily by 4 goals two tries to nil.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 9th September 1904.

TO-DAY have we for the first time a full telegraphic account of an action in Manchuria from an "own correspondent." He, of the Times, sends a painfully detailed story of the struggle for Liau Yang : three general assaults in 24 hours and a fourth 24 hours afterwards ! One can forgive General Kuropatkin for calling his subsequent movement the "advance northward" as he did in a recent telegram after the extraordinary tenacity of his defence. The latest news speak of a concentration round Mukden and the certainty of another ghastly fight there ; but as we are told there are no defences to speak of at Mukden we can only hope the "advance north" of Kuropatkin will not be interrupted by useless repetition of slaughter. Word from Port Arthur speaks of the garrison as disheartened. A message from Kronstadt indicates that the much talked of Baltic fleet has hardly any existence except on paper. Russia, we are told, possesses two new or comparatively new, battleships, and outside the Pacific not a single first-class armoured cruiser save the Dmitri Donskoi whose machinery is poor and whose steaming power is little over 15 knots. On the credit side, she has three inferior armoured cruisers, all old ; and four iron cruisers dating from 30 to to 40 years back, and three battleships near completion or running trials. And such is the Baltic Fleet the Tzar goes to-day to inspect.

The Home Office has spoken at last. Lord Justice Henn Collins, Sir Spencer Walpole, and Sir John Edge, late of the N.-W. P. High Court, are appointed a committee "to inquire into and report upon the circumstances of the conviction of Mr. Adolf Beck in 1896 and 1904." Let us hope that the committee will give the widest interpretation to their terms of reference, as what the public mind is most concerned with is not the actual conviction, but the way the police got up the case and the action of the Home Office after Beck's distinct identity from Smith was revealed.

The Army Manœuvres in Essex began in earnest on Wednesday, when Sir John French's invading force of ten or eleven thousand men landed at Clacton. The disembarkation was an interesting business as the plan of operations required the whole force to land on the beach. The transports and their cruiser escort lay about a mile and a half off shore and thanks to the smoothest of seas the whole army with guns and horses landed comfortably between half-past seven and four in the afternoon without hindrance on the part of any but sight-seers. General Wynne, commanding the defensive force, kindly looked the other way, thinking, no doubt, that the enemy would be seasick and glad to feel firm ground under his feet again : besides if he had prevented the disembarkation, as it is presumed he had it in his power to do, there wouldn't have been any manœuvres at all. Boats in strings towed by launches and crammed with men offer marks for rifle fire, to say nothing of artillery, which I imagine would make such disembarkation impossible. The mere pen and ink fellow also sees tangible difficulties in landing a mixed force on a very flat beach in a sea, but we must have manœuvres, and must have some make-believe as a first condition.

Mr. Albyne Ireland, who has been contributing some remarkably able letters to the Times on Eastern affairs, has brought to the front again the question which occupied much attention twenty years ago, to wit the severance of Burma from India. What he says is true enough : Burma is geographically distinct from India, and knowledge of affairs acquired in Bengal or any other province does not apply to a country so utterly distinct as the land across the Bay. That perhaps is a minor matter ; experience gained in the Punjab might only mislead a man who took over a district in Madras if such a transfer should ever be made : the real crux is purely one of the pocket. Burma is the richest province under the Viceregal sceptre and the best part of her surplus goes to Calcutta while she cries aloud for roads and other public works. The old proposition to make Burma a crown colony is revived, but in conjunction with Malaya, which latter region has "come on" so enormously in recent years.

Sir Charles Elliot has been giving us, in the Nineteenth Century, a glimpse of the way responsible administrators in Africa are treated by the people in Whitehall. For example, in answer to a general demand he proposed to check extortion and violence among the Mombassa boatmen who land and embark passengers by steamer, by licensing a number and giving them a uniform at their own expense —consisting of a blue jersey. Not only was he obliged to refer Home for authority to do this, but permission to do it was actually refused !

Impressed by the number of solicitors whose names appear in the latest Report of the Inspector-General in Bankruptcy, Mr. J. B. Mathews has put forward a scheme for the protection of confiding clients with whose money it is assumed these men of law have been gambling and come to grief. His idea is that the Incorporated Law Society should extend its functions and, by levying heavy entrance fees on all members of the profession, whom he would oblige to join, become a guarantee society pledged to make good any defalcation in the matter of clients' moneys. The plan is one which would commend itself in the main to all solicitors of standing and repute who are jealous for the honour of their calling. The number of solicitors who have been struck off the rolls and sentenced to imprisonment during the last few years is much larger than they who have the credit of their profession at heart can regard unmoved : but I doubt much whether Parliament will see its way to grant the loan which Mr. Mathews finds necessary for the proper flotation of his scheme.

An uneasy seat that of the Army Reformer. The absence of Parliamentary eloquence leaves the columns of the newspapers clear, and Mr. Arnold Forster is learning day by day exactly what the unofficial army reformers, whose ranks he adorned not so long ago, think about him and his scheme. Lord Haliburton, late of the War Office, is the most active critic : Sir Howard Vincent has lots to say about it also : neither of them like the Dual Army idea, and truly there is much to say against it. The military chiefs do not seem to like it, and it is doubtful whether their attitude can be attributed to the soldier's general antipathy to changes. The main difficulty Mr. Arnold Forster has to solve is the dearth of recruits : the hot fit of the South African War is well over and natural reaction has brought us to the torpid stage. Mr. Arnold Forster's idea as regards the Regular Army is based on the principle of making the Service more popular, the soundest basis, as I humbly venture to think, from which any reformer can start : but his critics opine that he goes much farther than is at all necessary with his Dual Army, the Home moiety of which is to have no prospect of serious soldiering while his foreign service troops get all the work. It needs little knowledge of human nature to see the gulf that will separate these two armies and the magnificent contempt with which one will regard the other.

Jersey does not like the prospect of losing her garrison. A deputation waited on the Lieutenant-Governor last week to seek advice and to tell him that the States' action in regard to the Militia did not represent public opinion in the Island. The Lieutenant-Governor told the deputation that the Jersey Militia in its present condition was useless as a fighting force and was therefore not worth retaining in time of peace : the Army Council was determined not to leave regular troops on the island. The State met on Wednesday to consider whether the matter should be treated as one of urgency, and decided that it would take no steps in the matter. Doesn't it seem a little odd, injudicious even, to leave it to a sort of parish council to say whether an outlying fraction of the empire shall be garrisoned or not ?

The steam coal question is being agitated vigorously. There is a strong body of opinion in favour of keeping what remains of our supplies of smokeless coal for naval consumption, and another which regards the advantages of smokeless coal as so problematical that the stuff is not worth reserving for ourselves, while others are so convinced that the motive power of the near future will not be coal at all they deem the subject not worth considering. Meantime, pending the application of electricity, explosive oil or liquid air as prime factors of locomotion, Russia among other countries draws heavily upon South Wales to fill her ships' bunkers. I wonder if the Smolensk and Peterburg were using Welsh smokeless coal. You heard, of course, that our cruiser Forte had delivered the Russian cypher message to these vessels last Tuesday near Zanzibar. The captains indicated their intention to return at once to Europe.

Mr. Sydney Gundy's adaptation of Mr. Forman's story as "The Garden of Lies," which Mr. Alexander produced at the St. James's on Saturday, is reminiscent of Anthony Hope : that is not in its disfavour. The resolute firmness with which it scorns the probabilities, however, is rather against it, though I am bound to say the audience was very well pleased. It is a bustling sort of play with a good deal of shouting for Mr. Alexander, whose strength, to my mind, lies another way : but to the story. A member of the royal house of Novodnia, it appears, had married Miss Mannering, daughter of an American millionaire in New York. Coming home from the wedding there was a carriage accident and the unfortunate bride, falling on her head, was unconscious for a fortnight. While she lay unconscious, large happenings were afoot in Novodnia, and Carol, the bridegroom, had to rush off home to that vague region to save the throne from pretenders and get crowned as Carol III. Now, such are the results of getting out of the carriage on one's head, that when Eleanor recovered consciousness her memory was an absolute blank concerning events prior to the date of her first meeting with Carol. It was a particularly awkward time for the mental clock to stop, because the lady thus didn't know of Carol's existence much less that she was Mrs. Princess Carol. Her friends enlightened her on this head, which was proper enough : but then they took the very curious step of sending her to the care of Sir Gavin Mackenzie, M. P., expert in mental diseases, at Paris. I suppose they couldn't find Novodnia on the map, and being rich Americans, Paris occurred to them as the happiest place on earth for anybody. All this we learn from Sir Gavin, whose acquintance we make at curtain rise in the Café d'Alençon where he is having drinks with Colonel von Altdorf and Creighton (the last named was never baptised : so one infers from his lack of Christian name). She must have her husband or Sir Gavin wont answer for the lady's mind : she is perpetually asking for him, which doesn't seem unreasonable. The Colonel explains that Carol can't possibly leave Novodnia : let him leave that throne and the pretenders would seize it at once.

Under these circumstances you or I would have recourse to the expedient of conveying the lady to her prince as her prince cannot convey himself to her: but merely shows that you or I don't know how to write a play of this kind at any rate. It is Creighton who hits upon means of avoiding the common sense solution. Some body must be found to personate Carol III. The other two jump at the happy thought, and all three flatly refuse to personate: wherein they seem quite right. Enter Mr. Alexander—pardon, Denis Mallory—"drunk, drunk, but still a gentleman." Mallory is the man: they overcome his scruples with lies and cheques: there is no husband really, its only an idea of this poor lady. He agrees after suasion: he has as a matter of fact seen Eleanor from his window and fell in love at sight. To his credit be it said this is the mainspring of his objection. In Act II he is introduced to Eleanor in the Doctor's Garden: he loves: she loves. Enter Jessica, Eleanor's sister, who reveals to Denis that the husband is no fiction. Denis throws up the job in disgust and sends back the cheque: nothing shall induce him to go on with it—till Colonel von Altdorf mentions Carol's powers with the rapier. That is enough for Denis: he put in an afternoon of drink and D. T's. and resumes love-making, next day hugging the prospect of a fight.

I thought his idea was to kill the prince and make Eleanor his own: but I was wrong: you can't follow the workings of a mind which is obscured by D. T.'s in the evening and is clear as spring water next morning.

Well, they went on love-making for a week, until suddenly the prince jumped in at the window: then there is trouble. The prince wants to fight Denis, but Denis wont do it till he is called a coward: then he sends for swords and disarms the prince twice, just to show what he could do if he chose. Explanations: the prince shakes hands with Denis, but Eleanor calls upon Jessica to help her now to hate the only man she ever loved. Telegram. Revolution in Novodnia: exit prince with Denis to do a little real fighting for a change. Need I add that long before the curtain rises on Act IV the prince has got killed, while Denis has taken the pledge and turns up (in the Doctor's Garden again) to explain that he is not dead, as reported, and to ask for Eleanor? I must confess that my sympathies were with Carol III: an unattractive person certainly, but the victim of misguided relations and Scotch doctors. Miss Lilian Braithwaite was charming as the princess and Mr. Herbert Danny was good as the prince. Mr. Alexander faced the huge contrarieties of his part with unflinching courage and was drunk and sober by turns with enviable facility and ease. Mr. Mark Kinghome is excellent as the "Caledonian stern and wild" as Creighton calls him. The other characters have little to do.

Mr. Zangwill is a humorist, so permeated is his system with humour that he mars his effects by making us laugh in the wrong place. I hardly know whether to describe his comedy "Merely Mary Ann," as a farce with tears in it or tragedy with an undercurrent of smiles. It is very simple. Mary Ann, an overworked maid of all work in a lodging house, is desperately in love with Lancelot, a long-haired musical composer, who has a room upstairs. Lancelot is one of those hypersensitive beings who wont degrade his art to pay his bills, and, unlike men of that kind generally, shows himself an ill-conditioned cad in his treatment of the wretched servant. Turned out of the lodgings because he can't pay his rent, Mary Ann proposes to follow and serve him. He is quite willing, but the plan is checked by news that Mary Ann's brother has died leaving her a fortune. Mary Ann proposes to him and is refused. Six years later the curtain rises on Mary Ann "in society." How she has submerged the grubbly serving-maid and has caught the tone of breeding is rather remarkable. Almost as remarkable is Lancelot's success as a composer. He did not promise well in Mrs. Leadbetter's lodgings. He meets Mary Ann in her own drawing-room and proposes: she refuses, but gives way, and going "off" returns to accept him in her old servant's cap and a pair of gloves he gave her years ago because he couldn't bear the sight of her black and red hands. Miss Eleanor Robson as Mary Ann was magnificent: she has extraordinary capacity for acting the emotional, and Mr. Zangwill's play gives her great scope. Mr. Henry Ainley as Lancelot did the best he could with a thankless part. I have not referred to the dozen or so of subordinate characters, the sisters Trippet, music-hall dancers, Rev. Samuel Smedge, comic cleric and others. Miss Ada Dwyer as Mrs. Leadbetter has the best written part in the piece, and deserves far more notice than I have been able to give her. The dialogue is exceedingly clever without being laboured: but we expect this from Mr. Zangwill. Did I say that the play is at the Duke of York's?

That singularly foggy and futile play "The Chetwynd Affair" is now preceded at the Royalty by a curtain-raiser, whose power is something quite exceptional. It is eminently tragic, but the strength of "Eriksson's Wife" is undeniable: in its intensity it reminds me of those "grim realities" Charles Ross published years ago in "Behind a Brass Knocker." Here is the story. Erik Eriksson is a dissipated, worthless youth, whose sole redeeming point is the affection he cherishes for the memory of his mother, who died less than a year ago. Halder Eriksson, his father, announces his intention of marrying again to the unveiled disgust of Erik. Disgust deepens into something else when Halder brings home Brita and requires his son's respect for and obedience to her: for Erik instantly recognises in Brita the loose character who first led him astray. His father turns him out, but he returns to find Brita alone and in a horribly realistic scene he insists that unless she reveals her real character to Halder he will do it. He uses violence and Halder coming in shoots him: only to learn the truth before Erik dies. The piece is the very antithesis of the poor stuff that follows.

I must certainly make a point of seeing "The Golden Light," with which Mrs. Brown Potter is going to open her career as Manager of the Savoy on a date not yet named. Mrs. Brown Potter, as we all know, has a strong sense of the importance of clothes, but "The Golden Light" will mark a new dramatic era, inasmuch as the dresses Mrs. Brown Potter is to wear are to "denote not only the striking personality" of the lady, but "the moral progress of the heroine." This is alluring. We don't know of course whether the moral progress is up or down, though the title may give us a hint: but it doesn't much matter anyway, as it would not help us to solve the clothes mystery. The dressmakers have got to "express ideas in colours and curves" in order to produce "emotional gowns." There are a few well recognised sartorial trade marks on the stage; the adventuress' carious preference for red frocks, in example, but clothes to express moral progress are quite new. They would take much responsibility off the hands of Madame Raval Duval, who writes the play.

Various Items: The sea is making such serious inroads at freshwater in the Isle of Wight that the Local Government Board have advised the Rural District Council to construct a sea wall to prevent the erosion continuing. The difficulty in these cases seems to be the question whether the nation or the parish is responsible for the expense involved by maintaining the integrity of these islands. It would seem to be the parish in this case, as removal of sand and shingle from the beach appears to be partly the cause of the sea's invasion.

Swan and Edgar were fined 40s. and costs at Malborough Street on Monday a fortnight ago, They hired the man or mannikin "Phroso" and put him (or it) in the window: the attraction drew such crowds that extra police had to be called and the street was blocked. A hard-headed magistrate, insensible to the ingenuity of the advertisement, dealt with it as an "obstruction."

The P. and O. are reported to have given a strong hint that unless capital and labour at Marseilles can manage to settle their differences without paralysing all work at the port, their steamers well seek another place of call. Much labour seems in a striking humour, as the example of the Marseilles people has been followed at a dozen other places to "show sympathy."

The unhappy Nerbudda Coal Company winds up its affairs and sells the whole undertaking—lock, stock and barrel—to the Indian Government for £40,000, the chairman telling the shareholders they might think themselves lucky to get that; in which estimate not all the shareholders agreed.

AFTER WINTER SNIPE IN SOUTH CHINA.

ALONG the southern and south-eastern coastline of China, there are each year two, and sometimes three, distinct snipe seasons. These do not, as a rule, in any way run into each other, but there is, generally speaking, a marked interval between each.

The first one—known locally as the autumn snipe season—commences about the beginning of September in early years, sometimes not before the end of that month in late ones. The autumn snipe are very irregular and erratic in the times of their arrival, which depends on the weather of the preceding month of August more—it appears—than on the temperature of September itself. If August be wet and the paddy-fields flooded—as sometimes occurs—the snipe, although they undoubtedly arrive along the coast, make no long stay in these overflooded districts. It is believed that at such seasons they betake themselves to the hills and the higher ground, too distant from the coast to admit of their being readily got at.

This is what happened during the last season of 1903, when owing to the excessive rains of August along the whole of the south-east coastline the snipe were fewer than they have been for years past during the autumn months.

In a normal year, however, the autumn shooting is good all along the lowlying cultivated tracts near the coast; and bags of from 30 to 40 couple per gun are not uncommon without working excessively for them.

This of course compares not very favourably with India, but it must be remembered that conditions are different, the cultivated tracts of paddy being more limited in extent, at least near the coast where sport is usually obtainable only.

The second season sets in about a month after the conclusion of the first. The last of the autumn birds usually disappear about the middle of October, and for a month thereafter it is rare to find snipe, except perhaps a solitary one or two in the mountain nullahs.

About the middle of November generally, provided the weather begins to get cold, the winter snipe begin to arrive in some numbers.

These winter snipe, although resembling in plumage the autumn flight—for they are all the "Fan-tail" or full snipe—can be at once recognised as a bird of very different habits to their earlier flighting brethren. They come in as great, or even greater, numbers, but are far wilder and more difficult shooting. They are, too, somewhat heavier birds and stronger in flight and more resembling those at home in their wariness and wildness. When flushed they are the more lethargic birds of the autumn, which latter more resemble the Indian and Burman snipe in habits.

These winter snipe, moreover, are found in entirely different country to those of the earlier flight. For whereas the latter congregate in the small stretches of paddy fields in the vicinity of villages, the former never frequent these; for at the time of year that they begin to arrive, the autumn crops have been reaped or are, at any rate, in process of being reaped.

At the estuaries of the various rivers that flow into the sea all along the south coast, there is another kind of cultivation which the Chinese carry out. On either side of these estuaries, commencing from the sea and extending for many miles inland on either bank of the rivers, they have in the course of centuries gradually reclaimed from the mud and ooze of the tidal flats, large tracts of land. These they have enclosed and bunded by high dykes, some of them being 15 or 20 feet above high water mark and 20 to 25 feet wide at the base. The summits of these dykes are planted with banana trees, and within them enormous fields are enclosed, many of them a square mile in area and often even exceeding this.

These fields are irrigated by means of sluices in the dykes, and are planted about the beginning of August with a coarse species of paddy, that grows to a height of 4½ or 5 feet with very thick and strong stems.

This paddy is reaped about the beginning of November and the stubble that is left is often a foot or a foot and a half in height

It is here, then, that the winter snipe assemble, and are found frequently in large numbers. Owing, however, to the fact that the Chinese work continually in these fields all through the winter, gathering in the stubble for fodder, the birds are kept continually on the move, and it is rare to find a field without a hundred coolies or more working in different parts of it.

Each field is, as mentioned above, of enormous size, and although one part may be thus disturbed, birds are found in other parts of it; if with luck one finds a field temporarily deserted by workers, then sport is sure to be good.

In November of last year it was my good fortune to be offered the opportunity of getting some of this winter shooting, which is different to any single shooting that I had previously had during a residence of some 16 years altogether in the East, including India and Burma. My first experience was a two days' shoot in the West River, which flows into the sea about 25 miles to the S.-W. of Canton. The whole estuary of this river, from the mouth to the northern limit of the tidal water, has been greatly confined and narrowed by reclamation on either bank, as described above; the original width of the estuary being clearly recognisable by the miles of bunded fields extending inland from the present shores.

Our start was made in the evening so as to reach our shooting ground during the night and anchor in the river until morning. Four or five hours' steaming brought us to the mouth of the river, which however could not be entered until daylight, owing to the existence of a bar. However, the weather being at this season bitterly cold we—the two other guns and Y, who composed the party—had no desire to start shooting before a good breakfast had been discussed, so that a start from our launch was not made until 8 o'clock.

We then rapidly collected our impedimenta, and with our Chinese snipe pickers and luncheon coolies soon tumbled into the boat alongside and were quickly rowed across to the eastern shore, where we had determined to commence operations.

On reaching the nearest wall of the dyke, we disembarked, climbing up its nearly precipitous sides with some difficulty, but by means of holding on to the squared edges of the blocks of stone with which it was constructed and getting one's feet on the edges that these presented, we managed to accomplish it.

On gaining the top of the dyke we saw before us an enormous field newly reaped and with patches of stubble standing. This, however, a large number of Chinese were already busy in digging out by the roots in places, but the nearer side of the field—a stretch of about a mile long and several hundreds of yards wide—was undisturbed.

We now therefore essayed our first beat, and of course, the prevailing anxiety present in our minds was, to know whether the winter flight was yet in or not, as it was still a little early for the birds.

A notable feature of this paddy cultivation is the absence of small bunds that one could walk on. Barring the big dykes there are no bunds at all, and so one must perforce face the mud, which is of an extremely rotten nature and of as much as 18 inches or 2 feet in depth throughout. It can then be easily imagined that shooting under these circumstances was particularly difficult and progress very slow. However, despite the coldness of the day and the bitter north wind blowing, having separated and formed line at about 70 paces interval, we plunged into the mixture of bog and stubble, the latter reaching often above our waists. For the first hundred yards or so nothing was seen, and our anticipations of sport began to descend to the lowest ebb, when suddenly a wisp of fine snipe got up in front of the right gun. They rose at least 30 yards in front of him, and so quick away were they, that as he pulled trigger they must have gained 10 yards more—and he was, as later experience showed me, one of the best and quickest snipe shots on the southern coast. The first barrel failed to score, but with the second he got his bird, a very long shot though. A few yards further on, a second wisp rose between him and me. They were on wing as quickly as the others, but rose more, coming obliquely down the line. The gun on my right got one, I got a second, and the left gun also got one of them.

All now knew, at any rate, that the birds were well in, and having picked up the slain—and it took a little time to find them in the high stubble—we then formed line once more with coolies between the guns, and prepared to carry on the beat to the farther limit of the field, about three-fourths of a mile away.

We had taken care to start walking down wind, for with these winter snipe it is otherwise impossible to approach them. By doing this however, the birds, which sometimes rise 100 yards ahead, come back towards the line against the wind, giving one capital rocketing shots overhead, which are, nevertheless, by no means easy ones, owing to the fact of one's feet and legs being firmly embedded in the boggy ground.

Proceeding then, we shot with varying luck. Sometimes the birds would give one a real chance by lying until one was within some 20 yards of them, and then as they rose against the wind one might get a right and left out of the wisp. This was, however, the exception ; for more often they got up clean out of shot and only gave one a flukey chance coming back overhead.

It took us over half an hour to work to the end of this field and then we returned on a parallel beat. Coming up wind, however, we had but little luck, most of the birds rising out of shot and going right away unfired at. We noticed, though that their flight was almost invariably over a certain portion of the bund that lay in front of us ; so when we had completed about one half of the return journey it occurred to us that a gun on these might have some good shooting, as the birds did not rise high, but just topped the banana trees on the dyke. We accordingly called a halt, and decided for one gun to go on and get on to this bund, making a detour by the right. As soon as he was in position, which took some time to accomplish, we extended our line again—two guns only now and the coolies—and moved forward. The man who had gone on was too far ahead for us to see what sport he was having, but apparently was not short of shooting from the reports we heard. We two, on the other hand, hardly got a shot on the return journey, all the birds getting up out of range. The mud, too, seemed more tenacious and more deep as we got tired, so that we were by no means sorry to reach the end of the beat. About 100 yards from the dyke we saw our companion ensconced in the banana trees, and from his signals it appeared that there was something in the thick clump of stubble that lay between us and himself. This proved to be the case, for on proceeding to walk it up, a very large wisp of snipe—some 30 in number—got up between us and him. We each got a couple of these, but it was disappointing to see so many birds going away unaccounted for. We hoped, however, to come on them later.

We found that H., who had gone forward, had got ten birds, all of which had been driven forward by us. Our total bag for the two beats only amounted to 20 couple, so we could not claim to have had very good sport, as we must have put up in all between 200 and 300 birds. Most of these were, however, out of shot, and of those killed it is safe to say that hardly one was shot under 35 yards. After two miles of this truly awful walking we were glad to take a rest, sitting on the dyke and debating as to our next move, which was not very clear, for we noticed that the greater part of the remainder of the field had been disturbed by the Chinese, who were even then working in it.

We thought we would try one more beat, however, and after we had rested, started again. This time we had no luck, not finding any birds, owing, no doubt, to the fact of the ground having been trampled over by the coolies working there.

These, too, now that we approached them, began to take an undue interest in our proceedings, and insisted on following us up to recover empty cartridge cases—of which, however, there were few. But more annoying still was it when they would insist on crossing our front and flushing the few birds we might have got.

As we soon got "fed up" with this sort of thing, we beat a retreat to our boat and crossed the river—a mile or more in width. On the far bank we found some better ground and walked it steadily until lunch time. Birds were, however, terribly wild, and towards 4 P.M. we decided to knock off and found that our bag was 42½ couple only.

Next day we had only two hours' shooting, for we had to catch the tide to cross the bar. We had fair sport, nevertheless, getting 17 couple, all on the further bank to that on which we had commenced the previous day.

Fifty-nine and a half couple, then, was the total bag and of course nothing compared to autumn bags for a similar period ; but in spite of the bad walking the sport was really good, for every bird accounted for was in nearly every case a long and difficult shot.

H. the Aga Khan's Ayrdale came away in the last few strides and won by a head, Trenton and Loch Clievedon making a dead-heat of it for second place. Honorary Secretary :—G. O.' HARA, ESQ.

First Day, Tuesday, 20th September 1904.

ALL who assisted at the opening of this popular meeting were agreed in pronouncing it an unqualified success, a recognition of the labours of the Honorary Secretary and his Committee that was thoroughly well deserved. Everything conspired towards this end The arrangements were perfect, the attendance was unusually good and the sport provided was rather above average quality. Quite one of the pleasantest features of the day was the prominent part played by Major-General Smith-Dorrien who got second on Muskerry and Alexis in the first two races. A favourite's day it undoubtedly was, only two second favourites getting verdicts out of the seven races. The disqualification of Sirocco in the Novice Stakes for having interfered with Federation gave very general satisfaction, for everybody was glad to see Mr. O.'Hara get the winning bracket : he also got a couple of thirds with Chorister and Margaret, having the mount himself on each occasion, while he rode a winner in Captain Greer's Auric who beat Alchemix cleverly by a length in the Australasian Stakes. Quite a day out for the Honorary Secretary it was. Details :—

LONDON, Friday, 9th September 1904.

DONCASTER.

HONOURED by the patronage of the King, the Doncaster Meeting was ushered in under the most brilliant auspices from a social point of view, nearly all the county magnates entertaining house-parties for the occasion. Amongst them mention may be made of Earl Fitzwilliam, Lord Savile, Earl of Scarborough, Viscount Halifax, Lord Derwent, Lord Wenlock, Lord St. Oswald, Sir William Cooke, Sir Thos. Pilkington, Sir Henry Meysey Thompson, Mr. R. C. Vyner, Mr. E. Beckett Faber, and Mr. Arthur Wilson, whose distinguished guests filled the county and private stands to overflowing. His Majesty was looking the picture of health after his Continental holiday, and his arrival with Lord Savile's party was the sign for a loyal and hearty demonstration from the huge crowd asembled on the Town Moor. The course, profusely covered with herbage, was looking beautiful, but the going underneath was firm. Summerlike conditions prevailed, but the entertainment was a little too long, and the officials were hard pressed to keep pace with their work. The judge had an exceptionally busy time of it, as so close were two of the finishes that he was unable to separate the two leaders past the post ; and, taken as a whole, the sport was highly interesting.

Verdiana was fractious at the post and delayed the start for nearly a quarter of an hour before Galangal, on the inside, cut out the work from Costly Lady, in the centre, Full Cry on the outside, and Pamfiete, with Verdiana and Brother Bill next and Rondino filly whipping in, to the bend, where Costly Lady joined Galangal, with Pamfiete, Verdiana, and Brother Bill in close attendance. At the distance Verdiana began to creep up on the rails, and, in and exciting encounter, she just managed to get up and make a dead-heat of it with Galangal ; a short head divided the pair and third. Standen was a placed fourth, close up, Pamfiete was fifth, Carita sixth, Brother Bill next, and King Duncan last. Time, by Benson's chronograph, 1min. 11⅗secs.

William's Hill, was the quickest away, but Ambition settled down from Whistling Crow, Imari, and William's Hill, these being clear of St. Hubert, Hands Down, and Loveite, with Florinda and McYardley last, for about half a mile, when St. Hubert went on from Ambition, Whistling Crow, Imari, Hands Down, and William's Hill, the whipper in being Mrs. Hodgson. At the Rifle Butts Whistling Crow took a slight lead of Imari, Hands Down, Ambition and William's Hill, with Bellivor Tor next, but at the distance Whistling Crow gave way to Hammerkop and Hands Down, the former winning easily by three-parts of a length ; half a length between second and third ; a neck behind Bellivor Tor was placed fourth. Ambition was fifth, Imari sixth, William's Hill seventh, Sandboy eighth, Loveite next, and Mrs. Hodgson tailed off last. Time by Benson's chronograph, 3mins. 4⅕secs.

BETTING : 5 to 4 agst. Compliment, 4 to 1 each Wild Night Again and Ardcer, 9 to 1 Nellie H., 10 to 1 Kilcheran, and 100 to 8 any other.

Won by a length ; four lengths between second and third. Bushy Boy was fourth, Norman Bride fifth, Kibrit next, and Lovetin last. There was no bid for the winner.

The fact that the St. Leger was at best a two-horse race, whilst many regarded it in the light of a walk over for Pretty Polly did not detract one whit from the popularity of the great Yorkshire festival, and never in the proud history of the contest has it attracted a bigger concourse to the Town Moor. The pulse of the vast county of acres was quickened before dawn, and big brakes, full of holiday makers who had driven a score of miles, began to arrive soon after eight o'clock. By ordinary and special trains the excursionists flocked into the town from all parts of the Kingdom throughout the morning of the 7th instant and by noon a surging stream of humanity flowed unceasingly in the direction of the course. It was a relief to breathe the purer crisp, country air after inhaling the heavy, pungent fumes of westrumite, with which the main streets of the borough had been saturated, and the day turned out delightfully fine, although there was a sting in the wind which was strongly suggestive of autumn

The arrival of the King was once more the signal for a hearty demonstration of loyalty, but this was as nothing to the spontaneous outburst of cheering which greeted the victory of the Royal candidate, Chatsworth, in the Bradgate Park Plate. The Triumph of Pretty Polly was decisive, sensational, and wonderfully popular, and she stands out as one of the greatest fillies of all time. Only twice during the past sixty years has the big race been contested by a smaller field than the half-dozen who tried conclusions to-day, viz., last year and in 1897, when Rock Sand and Galtee More each had but a quartette opposed to them. With Pretty Polly and St. Amant measuring strides there was no lack of quality, if quantity was missing, and partisanship ran high as between the respective admirers of the pair. Although quite a number of people professed to believe in the ability of the colt to win, their confidence was not reflected in the market, the odds laid on Pretty Polly increasing to 5 to 2, whilst "fours" could always be had about the Derby winner's chance. It was almost impossible to obtain a clear view of the favourite from the moment she entered the paddock, and the mobbing to which she was subjected slightly upset her equilibrium, so much so that for the first time she showed signs of nervousness on emerging on to the course, and had to be led by an attendant during the parade. It was clear that she had thickened out somewhat since Goodwood, nor had St. Amant been standing still, for he filled the eye as having improved considerably. It was not one of his good days, however, and, throwing up the sponge about half a mile from home, where Almscliff wrested the lead from him, the son of St. Frusquin quickly dropped out of the race. Almscliff was done with a little latter, and Pretty Polly was closely attended by Henry the First for a few strides, but he could not live with the flying daughter of Gallinule, who won in her own inimitable style without the semblance of an effort. Her performance was a marvellous one, for she beat all previous records for the course by nearly three seconds, and when her faithful attendant, the hack, met the victress and escorted her to the unsaddling enclosure she showed no signs of having unduly exerted himself.

This was the first time that either Major Eustace Loder, Mr. Gilpin, or Lane had been primarily concerned in a St. Leger success. Pretty Polly is the sixth filly to win this race in twenty years and she joins the select band consisting of Formosa, Hannah, Apology, La Fleche, and Sceptre, who have carried off the One Thousand Guineas and Oaks in addition to the St. Leger.

THE CLEVELAND HANDICAP PLATE of 440sovs., winners extra ; the second received 50sovs. The Sandall Mile.

BETTING : 5 to 2 on Pretty Polly, 4 to 1 agst. St. Amant, 100 to 6 Almscliff, 25 to 1 St. Denis, 50 to 1 Henry the First (offered), 50 to 1 Andover (offered).

Almscliff was the first to leave the paddock, and he was followed in the parade by Andover, Henry the First, and Pretty Polly, with St. Amant bringing up the rear They cantered in the same order, except that Pretty Polly dropped back last, and the white flag was hoisted at 3 15. A capital start was effected a minute later, Pretty Polly being the first to show in front of St. Denis, Andover, and St. Amant, with Henry the First whipping in, but after going about a quarter of a mile St. Amant was rushed to the head of affairs and held a slight lead of Pretty Polly, with Almscliff and St. Denis next, till rising over the hill, where the leader drew out clear and Almscliff slightly headed Pretty Polly, Andover now bringing up the rear. On reappearing into view Almscliff took close order with St. Amant, and soon after passing the Rifle Butts his colours were a little in advance of Pretty Polly, whilst Henry the First came next and St. Amant began to drop out beaten. About half a mile from home Pretty Polly, on the outside, ranged along-side Almscliff, and, taking up the running in the straight from Henry the First and Almscliff, cantered home with her ears pricked, winning without the semblance of an effort amidst uproarious applause by three lengths ; six lengths separated the second and third. St. Denis was placed fourth and St. Amant was last. Time, by Benson's chronograph, 3mins. 5⅕secs., a record for the race. Value of the stakes, £4,625.

The whirl of excitement during race week at Doncaster continues from dawn until well into the night, and the energies of those who wish to take a hand at all that is going on are severely taxed. On returning from witnessing the morning gallops there is just time for breakfast and a glance at the papers before repairing to the sale paddocks, and on the conclusion of business there is a rush to see the first race. As to the dazzling allurements of the Fair, they are unlimited, and owners, trainers, jockeys, and others whose names are household words on the Turf may be seen indulging in games of chance and skill until closing time There were sensational doings by the ring side this morning, bidding being brisk in spite of the cold and cheerless conditions. The air was chilly, and a drizzling rain fell at frequent intervals until the second race had been decided, when it cleared up, but the light was never good. Notwithstanding the unpromising outlook, the public turned out in their accustomed numbers, and the entertainment worked out well. Owing to an unfortunate occurrence, however, it was almost dark before the proceedings concluded.

The "BROWN"

MOTOR BICYCLE.

Supplied with 2¾ and 3½ h.p. motors.

To use a hackneyed phrase, the "Brown" is free from complications. No better value is found anywhere. Carefully examine the illustration and note how get-at-able every part is. Observe the substantial frame, the strength of the forks, the general business-like design, and when we tell you the whole is made by us, under direct supervision, you can rest assured that NO part or detail has been overlooked to make the "Brown" absolutely as perfect as it is possible to make a motor bicycle. We employ nothing but the very best materials and accessories in the construction.

The Specification includes:—Triple Head, Girder Forks, Mechanical or Automatic Inlet Valves, Two Powerful Brakes, Longuemare Carburetter (with throttle), E.I.C. Coil, Best Celluloid Accumulator, Brooks' Saddle, V Belt, Extended Mudguards, Dunlop (or other) Tyres. Speed from 5 to 40 miles per hour (according to power of motor). The most serviceable and reliable self-propelled vehicle in existence.

Thousands of unsolicited testimonials from Colonial riders.

Mr. TYLER, ADELAIDE, AUSTRALIA, writes:—

"Having just completed some 10,000 miles on the "BROWN" MOTOR CYCLE which I purchased from you last August, I now write you to express my entire satisfaction on the excellent running and power of the machine. Really I cannot speak too highly of it. I have put it to the most severe tests on bad roads and hills, and used it both with trailer, side carriage, and now as a tandem. I can safely say it is just as powerful with two on as with the one."

Fitted with Forecarriage if desired.

Write for the "Book of the Brown." It illustrates and describes the working and management of this excellent motor cycle, and is of great interest to users or prospective buyers of motor vehicles. If in cycle trade enclose business card for trade terms.

CRICKET.

SURREY vs. LEICESTERSHIRE.—Played at the Oval on 5th, 6th, and 7th September. Surrey won by an innings and 206 runs. In beautiful weather, and on a good wicket, Surrey batted first on Monday, and ran up a score of 393. Hayward and Raphael put up 76 for the first wicket, while Hayes and Raphael made 88 for the second. Raphael, who was missed very early in his innings, played beautiful cricket, and seemed likely to make a hundred when he was caught and bowled by King. Nice batted in excellent form, but, when he had made 51 in an hour and a quarter, he was obliged to retire on account of a strain. Goatly failed, but J. N. Crawford was in good form and later in the day Baker and Davis had a splendid partnership, which in the course of an hour and fifty minutes realised 174 runs. Davis made the first hundred of his career in first-class cricket, and played a most promising game, which must have given Surrey men great hopes for his future. When stumps were drawn, Baker, who had shown very steady cricket, was not out 70. There was no play at the Oval on Tuesday owing to continuous rain. The Surrey captain declared his innings closed on Tuesday, and yesterday Leicestershire had a formidable task. For once Surrey were in luck's way, and yesterday the wicket proved to be so difficult from the first that it soon became very doubtful whether Leicestershire would be able to make enough runs to save the innings defeat. J. N. Crawford met with great success at first, and when the total was 15 he claimed the three wickets which had fallen. He met with no further success during the innings, but by dismissing Wood and De Trafford he had done a great service to his side. Smith then took up the running, and was so difficult to play that Knight alone ever looked like making a long stand against him; Knight hit very hard and was especially severe on Crawford. The innings was over before half-past one, and Leicestershire had to follow on against a balance of 273. They began badly, for J. N. Crawford bowled De Trafford first ball. But Wood and Joyce then kept together until lunch time, when the total was 24, of which 20 were claimed by Joyce. Their partnership was broken when the score was 28, at which total three wickets fell. Knight was well caught in the long field by Hobbs, who was fielding as substitute for Nice. Before another run was scored King was missed at the wicket and also at point off successive balls, but these mistakes made very little difference except to the bowler. Half the side were out for 41, but Whitehead made some fine hits. The tail could do nothing against J. N. Crawford and Smith, who both took the utmost advantage of their opportunities. Crawford had the satisfaction of bowling his brother, V. F. S., for 2 runs. By a quarter to four Surrey had gained a fine victory.

THE BOURNEMOUTH FESTIVAL.

GENTLEMEN OF ENGLAND vs. PLAYERS OF THE SOUTH.—Played at Bournemouth on 1st, 2nd, and 3rd September. Gentlemen won by 94 runs. As two strong teams had been together for this match, a fairly large crowd went to see the first day's play, which turned out to be greatly in favour of the bowlers. The Gentlemen's team included Fry and Ranjitsinhji, who alone were sufficient attraction to induce spectators to put in an appearance in large numbers. Play began late owing to the heavy rain of the previous day. The Gentlemen's eleven, which might have been termed "Gentlemen of the South (with Mr. Brearley)," won the toss but could make very little progress at first, and six wickets were down for 58. Captain Wynyard played well and Jessop seemed to be quite comfortable when he stepped on his wicket while watching the result of a chance in the slips. Fry, who played splendid cricket, received great help from Johnston, and when the innings seemed almost over Robson, the old Hampshire amateur wicket-keeper, knocked up a most useful 28 not out. Trott bowled well all through the innings. After losing Vine for a duck the Players of the South did so well that when stumps were drawn the total was 125 for three wickets, so that they were only 46 runs behind with seven wickets in hand. Wrathall played a most brilliant innings and both he and Sewell hit finely; they put on 84 runs for the second wicket. Wrathall survived until the last over, when he was out for an excellent 66, which had taken him about an hour to put together. On Friday, Brearley bowled so finely on a slow wicket that the last seven wickets of the Players fell for 54 runs and the Gentlemen had a lead of 8 runs. When the Gentlemen went in again they chose a fresh wicket, according to arrangements which had been made before the match began that a new wicket might be chosen for each innings. Beldam and Jessop were the only two men who could take the measure of the Players' bowling, Fry and Ranjitsinhji both failing. Beldam occasionally hit very hard and occasionally played slow cricket, while Jessop hit vigorously as usual. The last five wickets fell very quickly. Before stumps were drawn the Players, with 188 to win, lost three wickets for 21, all to Hesketh-Prichard's bowling. There seemed more than a probability that a desperate struggle for victory would be seen on Saturday, but as things turned out, the Players could make no fight at all. So much rain fell during the morning that it was not possible to resume the game until nearly three o'clock, and although Vine and Butt raised the score from 21 to 67 before they were parted, the wicket was always becoming more difficult, and the rest of the team could do nothing with More and Jessop. The last six wickets fell for 26 runs.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN'S TOUR.

MATCH vs. THE SOUTH OF ENGLAND.—Played at Hastings on 5th, 6th, and 7th September. Drawn. The absence of Dr. Grace from the South of England team was a great disappointment to everybody who took an interest in the Hastings Week, for the Doctor had previously taken part in every Week since the institution of the Festival sixteen years ago. There was some extraordinary cricket on the first day, for a strong but not representative South of England team had lost seven men on a good wicket for 80 runs, when an astonishing display by Jessop put an entirely different appearance on the game. Jessop went in at the fall of the third wicket with only 18 runs on the board. He was suffering from an attack of lumbago, and after he had been in for some time he had a man to run for him. But this did not prevent him from jumping in to hit, and while he was at the wickets for about two hours he scored 159, his hits including twenty-six 4's. His first fifty runs were made in about an hour, his second fifty in fifteen minutes and the third fifty in forty minutes. His partnership with Cox changed the fortunes of the game: it lasted for about an hour and produced 125 runs. At one time Cox only made a single, while Jessop was making 56. Chiefly as the result of Jessop's brilliant hitting the total made by the South of England was quite respectable. The South Africans had to bat for an hour and fifty minutes, and in the course of that time lost six wickets for 118 runs, so that their position was anything but satisfactory. Sinclair hit very finely, and twice drove Braund out of the ground: at another time a fine drive of his only just missed a lady in the crowd. On Tuesday, Llewellyn, who was not out 29 overnight, was joined by White, and the two men played excellent cricket until heavy rain put an end to play for the day. They added 86 runs to the score, and thus very greatly improved their side's position. Yesterday play was resumed in beautiful weather, but after Trott had bowled a maiden over, a heavy and unexpected rainstorm made the pitch so wet that there was no more play before two o'clock, after an early lunch. Llewellyn only survived two more overs, and was then out for his highest score of the season. He had played splendid cricket, and his hits included eleven 4's. White also played a very fine game. When the South went in again with a balance of 18 against them, they tried to make runs quickly on the chance that they might be able to declare and snatch a victory. Wickets fell pretty quickly, and no one made much of a stand except Payne. Eventually the South declared their innings closed with six wickets down, and the South Africans had to make 108 in about an hour, a difficult but not impossible task. The visitors made their position secure, and scored 38 for one wicket.

SWIMMING.

THE CHANNEL SWIM.

Two more names have to be added to the rapidly increasing list of those who have tried to swim the Channel and failed, for late on Tuesday night, too late to send any news, both Weidman and Burgess had to give up their attempts. The latter came out after being in the water only two hours, but then he was quite fresh. He found that Weidman's pace was too slow for him and that he could not keep himself warm. The burly Yorkshireman, who weighs quite 15st., swims the underhand side stroke, and, if not an attractive mover, is certainly speedy. Weidman is almost as slow as Holbein, and thus they were hardly the two men likely to swim in company. Once Burgess got clean ahead of his companion and had to come back and in the end he left the water quite fresh. Concerning Burgess's retirement, it is only fair to state that the tug was engaged for Weidman, and that it was distinctly understood that the boat was there in his interests. Weidman made the plucky effort that was expected of him, but was beaten by both the tide and the conditions.

At the start everything was favourable, the water being smooth and warm and the course shaped excellent. However, then came one of those remarkable changes for which the Channel is notorious. A rushing inset sent him careering along the coast, and a very cold current caused the temperature of the water to fall to 58 degrees. Thus, he accomplished a wonderfully good performance in staying in so long as five hours. The water never changed, and was calm all night, the rain helping not a little in this respect, but the cold water and the hard battle took the strength away from Weidman, who was attacked by cramp in the loins shortly before the fifth hour, and had to be pulled out of the water. It was a brave effort, that demonstrated to the full that the Dover seaman is no ordinary man. The way he pegged along last night spoke for his great pluck, and there is little doubt that under good conditions he would make a first-class show. However, the last five Channel attempts have taught the lesson that, so far as the end of August and early September are concerned, the swim is almost impossible owing to the coldness of the water. So far this has affected four of the five men that have attempted the journey. Burgess we cannot speak about too quickly, for he is going to make another attempt at 7 o'clock this morning, and, as he thinks the Press did not treat him too well last time, the reporters have all promised to go out and see him. Concerning Weidman's attempt I can only state that Mr. A. S. Wauchop Watson did his utmost for the swimmer and that Professor Marquis Bibbero was also of the greatest assistance.

CYCLING.

THE WORLD'S CYCLING CHAMPIONSHIPS.

It was unfortunate that the international Cycling Meeting, which was commenced last Saturday, clashed with the opening of the football season, and still more unfortunate that the weather conditions, in the forenoon, should be as bad as they could. The former accounted for the absence of a great many provincial spectators, and the latter for many Londoners; nevertheless, there could not have been far short of 10,000 people present.

The principal events on the programme were the 100 Kilometres Professional Championship, and the preliminary heats of the Two Kilometres Amateur Championship. The entry included representatives of thirteen of the fifteen countries affiliated to the Union Cycliste International. In the professional event W. T. Hall, the holder of the one hour record, could not get a pacing machine to conform to the regulations, whilst Piet Dickentmann, the holder, was a non-entrant, and so both England and Holland were unrepresented. The result was, as had been anticipated, a win for Robert Walthour, the American; but he was given a hard race by C. Simar, France. The Frenchman, however, went weak before the finish, and Walthour won by about a mile in 1 hour 33mins. 57⅘secs. Gerbi, the Italian representative, rode pluckily and would, doubtless, have finished a close third, but, when he had only about six miles to cover, fell and sustained concussion of the brain.

In the Two Kilometres Amateur Championship the English representation was very strong, in fact, the home talent could, with advantage, have been considerably curtailed without seriously jeopardising our chance of again supplying the winner. As it was, the inordinate length of this one event, prevented the whole of the programme being carried out. A. L. Reed, the present champion, a London rider; J. S. Benyon, Liverpool, last year's runner-up; and Marcus Hurley, the American Amateur Champion, had no difficulty in qualifying for the semi-final round, although Hurley, in his heat, was drawn against H. D. Buck, London, the British Empire One Mile Champion. Walter Engelman, who finished first in the annulled championship at Copenhagen last year, also had no difficulty in surviving the day's racing. The great surprise was the defeat, by B. Jones, of Wigan, of Christen Rode, the other young German, who, since riding a very close second to Reed in the Amateur Grand Prix de Paris last June, had held an unbeaten record.

The programme included a One Mile Professional Scratch Race, in which D. J. Walker, the celebrated Australian handicap rider, made his first appearance in competition on an English track, but he was well beaten by the two Welsh riders, S. Jenkins and T. James, who were respectively first and second.

SCOTTISH SPORTING ITEMS.

The Racing Board of the Scottish Cyclists' Union has duly made application on behalf of that body for admission to the I.C.A. Dan Flynn, Scotland's only representative, will by now have been placed in a position to try his luck in the short-distance amateur world's championship. Much satisfaction is felt in Scotland at the victory of Miss Mackay, of the Fairfield Swimming Club, in the 100 Yards Ladies' Championship at Leeds last week. Miss McLaughlin, of the South Side Club, also made a good fight in the same event. James McAulay, of Dumbarton, the greatest of Scottish International goalkeepers; R. Kelso, of Dumbarton and Everton; Joe Lindsay, of the former club; and W. Robertson—all veteran Internationalists—took part in a charity match in aid of Dumbarton Cottage Hospital last week, at Dumbarton. Mr. Robertson is now a captain of local volunteers. The benefit match played last week at Tynecastle for R. Walker, the Heart of Midlothian's International forward did not come up to expectations. Still, what with tickets sold, etc., Walker should be the richer by £150. Port Glasgow has long been famous, or infamous, for rowdy spectators, and assaults on players and referees are not unknown. The local Athletic, in order to protect itself from such characters, had one prosecuted last week for using foul language. The culprit was fined 20s. or 14 days. The Border Rugby clubs, which include Carlisle, have decided not to go in for a league or a trophy, but that their home and home fixtures are to be for the championship of the Borders. The Earl of Dudley, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, has arraged to spend a golfing holiday at North Berwick this month. He may also make a short stay at St. Andrews. A rising young St. Andrews golfer, David Cuthbert, jun., has gone as a professional to the Southdown Golf Club, Shoreham. T Straiton has been chosen as the West of Scotland Harriers' fourth man for the South London Harriers' Relay Team Race. The Clyde yachting season was brought to a close on Saturday last by the Royal Northern Y.C., starting from Rothsay Bay and finishing at Lamlosh Bay. There was an almost entire absence of wind. Mr. J. Howe, Perth, won the annual Angling Championship of Loch Leven last Friday, his catch being ten trout, weighing 11lbs. 12oz. Mr. J. B. Smith, Sterling Club, gained the sweepstakes prize, his take being seventeen trout, weighing 7lbs. 9oz. Howe had one trout of 3lbs. The cycling parade held in Glasgow last Saturday was favoured with splendid weather. Fully forty cycle clubs participated in the fancy dress parade, while a contingent of the local fire brigade took part in the show. The procession started from Yorkhill, and through the principal streets to Hampden Park, where the judging took place. It returned to the City viâ another route, and dispersed in Blythwood Square. D. Billington, of Bacup, will appear at the Vulcan S. C.'s (Springburn) gala on Monday, 12th September, and will compete in a half mile handicap race against W. R. Stewart, of Alloa, Scottish half-mile champion.

THE WEASEL.

Twice recently (writes a correspondent to the Westminster Gazette) I have witnessed the curious spectacle of blackbirds chasing a cat. Puss came bounding over a green, with the two birds in hot pursuit. When reaching the shelter of a friendly wall she turned on her pursuers as she would on a dog. With back up and tail erect she stood at bay. One bird took up a position right in front of the cat and the other close up to the wall a little distance off. In this way the cat was threatened from two points. Bird number one kept hopping and chirping in front and making occasional attempts at attack. Each time the cat tried to strike at her assailant the second bird would attack from the rear, and thus distract her attention, till the poor thing appeared to be in a terrible state of fright. At last, after this manœuvring had gone on for fully a quarter of an hour without any definite attack being made, the cat, seizing a favourable opportunity, made a dash for an open door and escaped, and brought the chase to a close.

Hunting.

OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

MONDAY, 19th September.

WE met at the kennels at 7-30. The Master first drew Gascelle's Cover, Bingham and Brooklands blank. This may be accounted for by the large crowds that assembled on Newmarket on Saturday, the occasion of the Hunt races. We went on across the stream at Sandy Nullah Toll Bar and drew up past Barber's Shop to the swamp below Wapshare's Hare Shola. Here hounds picked up a line and hunted it slowly towards Chemmund, a little short of which they were stopped. The Master then drew Briar Shola blank and next went over Lawley's Course to Rawling's Nullah, at the head of which hounds got on a line which failed on the top of Newmarket. Thinking that the jack had probably gone to Rallywood the Master took hounds round the top and Mr. Colin Mackenzie viewed him across the spur below the potato fields. Hounds were laid on and they ran through the Cover, forcing the jack away towards Jackal Shola. He kept to the right of this and skirted the top of One Tree Hill where, as has often happened before, there was another line which caused a momentary division of the pack. Swinging round into Jackal Shola hounds hunted their jack to the spur in the middle and back into the bottom of Rallywood, but of this he was viewed not far in front of hounds and he breasted the hill and took the field into Porlock, from here the jack ran the road right through the Cover after passing the Toda Mund turned into Andy Plantation before reaching which he turned again and skirted the top of Tiger Shola to Swamyar Bluegums and from this he took us down to Leed's Shola, through it and on to Monkey Shola, through the latter and on to Baikie, where we lost him. It was a fast and severe run with scent rather catchy.

I regret to have to record that the fine hunt mare, Theodora, presented to the hunt last year by Mr. Mackinnon, died on Sunday of peritonitis.

THURSDAY, the 22nd.

We met at Rees' Corner at 7-30 A.M. It was a damp and cloudy morning after the recent rains. A very small field turned out and a start was made by trotting to Mills' Cover which was drawn blank. Hounds then went on past Drouble Crossing above which they got on a cold scent. They followed this very slowly towards Rawling's Nullah but the Master found it too stale to persevere with. The Master then drew over Lawley's Course and Gibbs' Shola and all the country beyond as far as Road Shola without finding. Turning back Lawley's Course and Rawling's Nullah were drawn and hounds touched a line which they slowly puzzled out to the bottom of Governor's Shola, where scent failed completely, starting from the South-West Sheffield Plantation was drawn downwards and Monkey Shola upwards. In the latter a jungle sheep jumped up in front of hounds. They followed him to Sheffield where they mixed him. After a pause hounds emerged on the Tiger Hill side and appeared to be running a jack. They followed through Tiger Shola and on over the top of Swamyar Bluegums to Hecuba. They ran through the scrub here and they crossed to the Cover beyond Andy Plantation where scent again failed. On the whole it was a very disappointing morning.

BLUE GUM.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

AFTER a long continued drought the gentle rain which falleth from heaven is," while not forgetting the passing claims of the "poor cultivator," a blessing to none more than a heart broken M. F. H. with an impossible scent to show sport on, or a despairing chronicler with no straw wherewith to mould his sporting bricks. An endeavour is occasionally, I am actually assured, made in other parts of the universe but never needless to say in this quarter of the globe to endeavour to slur over bad times by means of fulsome flattery wedded to a vivid imagination. Such a course must make wise and sporting men (and all sporting men are wise in that they love sport) smile in sorrow and but renders ludicrous what it intends to defend. If my humble unscholarly lines are happily a source of interest to men and women who, like myself have to enjoy the great sport of kings from afar I venture to opine that it is so in that offering my glass of sherry I at times in being truthful have to dash in just a drop or two of bitters ; that in gathering my bouquet of roses I do not spoil Nature by slavishly evading every tiny thorn. The man that would fear to pluck his rose lest he should prick his finger is but a sorry sportsman. This week my pleasant task is to chronicle most excellent sport and Colonel Sheringham's heart must indeed be full of joy at the capital runs he has been able to show his followers after the days of tribulation and regret consequent on the sun baked Deccan. As a well-known writer said the other day. "Scent is a thing we all talk much about—knowing little." On the 18th the meet was a brace of miles beyond Diggi to the left of the Two Sisters and a very flattering field considering the long way to covert turned up pay their devoirs to "the Colonel." Turning off to the left hounds soon opened on the line of an early traveller and ran at a great pace for a long ten minutes into a pan garden from which they could not evict him and after hustling him about for nearly a quarter of an hour killed him in covert. This was such a racing jackal that it seems a thousand pities the field had not a better chance of testing his lasting powers. After a short breathing time the Master moved on and drew the sugar-cane fields near Alundi and at once proclaimed the presence of a tenant and hounds brooking no denial hustled him out with scant ceremony and a galloping jack pointed straight for "the Sisters." So far as I can gather as my informants are a bit sketchy on the actual direction, for a quarter of an hour or so this speedy jackal led hounds and field a merry galloping till ever increasing heat rendered scent hopeless and Colonel Sheringham wisely decided to stop hunting and take hounds to their van. A thoroughly enjoyable morning's sport it evidently was—a good jack killed and a good jack saving his brush. Honours easy and all in the way of sport, which is as things should be.

But a still greater bean feast was in store for the followers of this illustrious Hunt. On the following Thursday, the 22nd September, hounds met at the 7th milestone on the 'Grand Trunk Road" to Bombay and a very "large and aristocratic" field, headed by Lord Lamington who seems seldom to miss any meet within reasonable hail of Government House, assembled, filled with hope and favour by the inspiriting accounts of the previous day's gallops. Nor were their fond hopes damped. After generously giving a few moments' grace to any possible laggards the Master moved off towards a hamlet called Bosree. There in some half-grown crops hounds owned to the line of a jack opportunely found at the psychological moment and proclaimed the tidings of great joy in a burst of delightful melody which so is so gladdening to the faded heart. Out of the crop land and away over the level to a big nullah in the direction of the river and so away to the left to the main road and across it and to the forbidding wire fencing along the iron road. Here the jack finding the pace a trifle too hot to be gratifying indulged in the artifice of "lying low" like Brer Rabbit, and with success as hounds flashed over in some green crops and the wily varmint would have reaped the benefit of his guile but human eyes came to the rescue of erring hounds—(it does seem a trifle rough on the poor little game devils at time doesn't it?) and the Master had hounds back again into the path of rectitude Frustlated in his artfulness though force of numbers the jack "pinked" back and re-crossed the high road and away at a rare galloping pace I hear. Over some sporting country the chase continued till after 19 minutes running and a very sporting line—if not quite as the crows fly home to roost the jack died that sport might live. A capital little run. Jogging on to some sugarcane another jack was found "At Home" and, as a mouse may at times help the Beast King. So on this occasion a jungly "pussie cat" came to the assistance of the jack who taking advantage of the temporary excitement sneaked away at a further corner. But once more artfulness was conquered by extraneous aid and he was viewed away by a watchful "whip" and little delay occurred in getting most of the hounds on to the line. This jack like his forerunner didn't seem to know the lie of his land very fluently and couldn't make up his hound as to his point and his line was consequently slightly globular. But it was, I hear, from all sources a capital gallop over a genuinely sporting line of country and the pace in the main all that could be desired and after about 25 minutes this jack surrendered his trophies to grace a Gubernatorial Hall. And yet immortal Cæsar dead and turned to clay thrill but stopt a bung to keep the wind away. What a fortunate jackal! So ended two thoroughly enjoyable runs. There is a rumour that Colonel Sheringham entertains an idea of retiring at the end of the season. Nothing, I am sure, could be further from the thoughts of every member of the Hunt who one and all appreciate to the full the skill and keenness of the gallant old man who has grown grey in the furtherance of the sport he loves so well and knows so well. If the most carping can find a possible fault it is possibly that of super-keenness. And that is a fault readily forgiven. Yet in every community—saving only in absolute Monarchies—the view of the multitude—be it right or wrong—must prevail. Everyone, I am sure, hope that the rumours, of the gallant old sportsman's retirement are unfounded and that any trivial obstacles there may be will be smoothed away. Colonel Sheringham's experience of Indian hunting must be absolutely unique.

SCARAMOUCH.

Polo.

POONA OPEN TOURNAMENT.

THE two games in the first round were played on the 22nd instant, before a large gathering of spectators. The weather conditions were perfect and the ground muchly improved.

BARODA vs. 33RD CAVALRY.—This was rather an uninteresting game the Cavalry had it all their own way and when at the end of five chukkers the 33rd had put on 14 goals and six subsidiaries to 1 subsidiary, their opponents elected to stop.

First Chukker.—The 33rd rushed away at once and put on a goal, another was added shortly after and followed up with a subsidiary. Play was in midfield for a space then Major Browne got away and passing to Captain Hopwood the latter sent it through. Another minor point was realised and then Major Browne got on once more and hit another goal. Score : 33rd 4 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Second Chukker.—The ball was taken to the Baroda territory where Allar Khan scored a goal. Then Baroda got away and a shot by Prince Fateh Singh missed. Hopwood next scored a goal for the 33rd to which he added another on re-starting Baroda got on once more and offside against the 33rd gave their opponents a penalty hit—nothing resulted. Score : 33rd 7 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Third Chukker.—Allar Khan scored a goal, which was followed by two subsidiaries. The 33rd continued to press and a goal was scored from a scrimmage. Score : 33rd 9 goals 4 subsidiaries.

33RD CAVALRY vs. THE SCOUTS.—This game was played on the 27th instant, and was left undecided. Three Chukkers were played during which the Scouts had somewhat the best of matters. The game will have to be replayed.

Rowing.

MODEL ROWING CLUB OFFICIALS.

THE CAPTAIN.

WHILE the President is the nominal ruler of the rowing club, its real autocrat is the captain. He it is that shapes its future, and can do more to make or mar it than a wilderness of championships. But if he enjoys the pleasures of despotism, he has also to suffer its penalties. If he be the Czar of the club, he is also maid of all work to the member. Does an oar display a weird objection to going in square and coming out clean at the end of the stroke, it is not the fault of the man at the dry end of the oar, but entirely due to a malformation of the oar itself, which, of course, the captain must remedy. Does a stretcher shake loose, or a sweater mysteriously vanish, the captain must mend the one and find the other. Anything and everything is his business—from the amount of water in the river to the cut of the club cap. Hard work, worry, and anxiety dog his footsteps from the moment of his election, even unto the going down of the sun on the last day of the season.

The eximious beginner is his earliest trouble. When a young man is first seized with a desire to learn the whole science and art of oarsmanship he comes down to the river with a light heart and a general idea that it is the simplest thing in the world. Then the captain takes him in hand. At the end of the first week that young man comes to the conclusion that an oar is the original protoplasm of all evil and mischief, and that the ordinary span of life is all too short for such a complex study. By the time he has rowed his first race, however, his confidence has revived, and he is a peripatetic guide to rowing and training generally. It is a strange rhythmical fact in connection with the embryo wetbob that, as a rule—

The worse he rows
The more he knows.

The long-suffering captain is, of course, the appointed vessel to receive all this accumulated knowledge. It is difficult to understand what some captains do with all their superfluous advice. I have a private theory that the result of a good deal of it is to be found under the standing heading in the summer papers of "Another Boating Accident"—but that is another story. The thing that sows the most youthful captain's head with grey hairs and wrinkles is, however, the choice of the regatta crews. He must, of course, be a perfect judge of rowing, and entirely unswayed by any personal feelings, for the onus of a defeat rests on him—the credit of a win, of course, goes to the crew. One by one he goes through his men, and, one by one he discards them. At last, however, he makes his choice, and the crews start practice. He now finds he has become an Ishmaelite, for every man's hand is against him. The great army of unemployed are, of course, indignant that their prowess should be overlooked and even amongst the elect there is not peace. There is a state of nervous irritability produced by the early stages of strict training in even the most placid of men; and each member of the crew has a private grievance, ranging from his stretcher to the unnecessarily vituperative remarks of the coach on the towpath. The latter functionary is also gloomy. He informs the crew collectively and individually that they would be more at home in a mud barge than a best boat, and implores the captain, with tears in his eyes, to take away the whole lot to a quiet spot and drown them. It is the captain's pleasant task to reconcile these conflicting claims, and generally pour oil on the troubled waters. He must, therefore, be a man of infinite tact. He must also be an animated Rowing Almanack, well posted in the names, weights, and form of all prominent oarsmen on the river, for he should be able to gauge the chances that his crew will have against the representatives of other clubs, and not waste them in unnecessary defeats.

The whole subject of the duties and trials of a captain is one that might well fill a dozen volumes, but, from what has been said, it will be seen that the perfect captain, like a poet, is born, not made. However, for the benefit of future generations, it may be stated that to make a fair average captain, one should take the foresight of a statesman, the resolution of a general, the pluck of a bull-dog, the resource of an omnibus conductor, and the tact of a Prince. Mix well together, enclose in the frame of a Hercules, and then—well, trust in Providence.

Wheeling.

TO PURI FOR THE POOJAHS.

DISTANCE.—Total distance from Calcutta 318 miles; by road or river steamer to Ooloobaria 20 miles; by road to Midnapore 52 miles; by road from Midnapore 246 miles.

ROAD.—One of the finest in India, kept by the P. W. D.

ACCOMMODATION.—Dâk bungalows at Ooloobaria, Midnapore, Chaitan Bazaar, Jellasore, Balasore, Bhadruck, Cuttack, and Puri. Inspection bungalows about every ten miles.

This is a delightful trip combining variety with, for most of the journey, the most perfect cycling conditions. It takes us over road, river canal, and sea, and occupies at the outside eight or nine days, allowing for the easiest stages on the road The road is a fine metalled track from beginning to end, maintained by the P. W. D. and under European supervision throughout. There is an abundance of shade, good water, resthouses every ten or twelve miles, and seven good dâk bungalows, in fact as a public way it is second only to the Grand Trunk Road. Several rivers have to be crossed and in every case the ferry arrangements are both easy and expeditious. The P. W. D. inspection bungalows, or resthouses alluded to above, are furnished, and in some there are cooking utensils, but no cooks or khansamahs are retained. The chowkidars in charge can, however, always be induced to boil water for tea or get a bath ready on the suggestion of backsheesh, and, if supplies are forthcoming, they can us ually produce chapatis, a curry, eggs milk, etc. But if the stages are properly arranged there should be no necessity to rely on the culinary art of the chowkidar, though these bungalows will be found cool and comfortable places in which to make the long midday halt. The charge for occupying them is one rupee per day for travellers, subject to the proviso that they are not required by Government officers, in which case the cyclist would have to move on.

The Bengal-Nagpur Railway line crosses the road between Midnapore and Cuttack five times and runs parallel toit for many miles, so that one feels comfortable when contemplating the possibilities of a serious breakdown, and there are refreshment rooms at Khargpur, Balasore and Cuttack where cyclists can supplement the dâk bungalow menu if so inclined. It is three hundred and eighteen miles by road and there are dâk bungalows at Midnapore, Chaitan Bazaar, Jellasore, Balasore, Bhadruck, Cuttack, and Puri, so that the commissariat question in one that need not trouble us at all. The road runs on to Madras through Berhampore, Rajahmundry, Kistric, Ongole and Nellore, at all of which there are bungalows and the going is uniformly good throughout. We have this on the authority of a cyclist who has frequently cycled from one end to the other and is enthusiastic on the excellence of the surface and the pleasures of the ride. But our present concern is with the section between Midnapore and Puri, as we do not propose to go beyond the limits of the Bengal Presidency in these Chapters.

Ooloobaria can be reached by road or steamer. One can either cycle down to Budge Budge (17 miles) and cross in a dinghy or take one of Hoare Miller's steamers preferably that leaving Armenian Ghât at 4 P.M. This lands us at Ooloobaria about dusk, and just beyond the bazaar, taking the road to the right from the top of the landing stage, is the dâk bungalow. There is absolutely nothing of interest to see here. The bungalow is comfortable and well found in every respect, and what is of equal importance the old khansamah in charge is active and intelligent. Ice is unobtainable, but can easily be brought down from Calcutta. Verb sap. It will be necessary to take something in the way of light refreshment, for whether we arrange to get into Midnapore for tiffin, or occupy the whole day on the journey, there are fifty-six miles before us, and a few sandwiches, cold tea &c. won't come amiss.

Presuming it is the intention to make it a half-day run we shall so arrange that chota hazari shall be discussed, and a start made at 5 A.M. The road turns sharp to the left from the bungalow gate, and after crossing the wooden bridge over the locks the turning to the left takes us to the main road. There are no further turnings and no tributary roads; we have but to watch the mile posts and pedal straight away. Several small villages occur on the right hand side of the road till we part company with the canal at the 4th mile out, the biggest being Chandipur. At the 44th mile (8 miles from Ooloobaria is the Damuda river with Mohesh-danga on the east bank. The ferry takes us over leisurely, but it is a pretty spot, and we would fain linger near the babul avenues and big banyan tope while we enjoy the cool morning breeze off the water. The road is well shaded from this point to the 36th mile, close to which is Nowpolla where we dismount and hail the ferry to take us across the Roopnarain about half a mile broad here. On the opposite bank is Kola, quite a busy place, the embankment, cantilever bridge and other railway works requiring a large resident European staff. An enterprising Rajput from Bombay has opened a shop here, and keeps almost everything but liquor. There is capital drinking water everywhere. If we are out for the day an hour or so may be put in here; if not we proceed.

At the 21th mile we find ourselves on the banks of the Cossaye river with the rather extensive villlage of Punchkura on the other side. At the thannah milk, sweetmeats, fruit, and excellent drinking water can be obtained, or one can use the excellent P. W. D. Bungallow on the opposite river bank about 300 yards off the road to the left. The road continues very pretty and the rise more perceptible up to Debra just opposite the 15th milestone. On a little knoll to the right is a P. W. D. bungalow and in the verandah a lie back in the easy chairs will be welcome. The chowkidar can procure fresh milk, about all the provender the place can supply, and while he is away we can find amusement in watching the gambols of the enormous lungurs which infest the village.

Continuing our journey with the reflection that "there's one more river to cross" we realise the fact at the 5th mile near a little hamlet called Kongsaputty. There is no ferry here except in the rains, so having seen the bikes safely carried across we wade in after them, and remounting at Monnighur, after a scramble up the bank, continue to the new dâk bungalow which stands in the racecourse outside the station. Opposite is Messrs. Watson's bungalow beyond which lies the town. There is a church, an American Mission, one of the biggest and finest jails in the world, and one or two objects of local or general interest, and some fine roads in and about the station.

The road to Puri begins here, the distance being two hundred and forty-six miles. In the first thirty miles we pass Benapore, Naraingarh and Ranisarai with a P. W. D. bungalow at each village; the next place of any importance is Dantan, seven miles further on, and another ten miles brings us to Jellasore, forty-eight miles from Midnapore, where there is a dâk bungalow. About five miles from Jellasore we come to the Subarnarikha river, the limit of the Midnapore district.

We cross at Rajghat, and twelve miles further on is Basta, fifteen miles after passing which we dismount on the banks of the tortuous Bina Balong river, three miles on the other side of which lies Balasore. The town is situated on the right bank of the Bina Balong (literally "Old Twister") about seven miles from the sea in a straight line, but fifteen by river. Balasore was one of the first English settlements in the east and the story of its acquisition is quite romantic. According to Sir W. W. Hunter in 1636, Mr. Gabriel Broughton, Surgeon of the ship Hopewell, cured the Emperor's daughter, whose clothes had caught fire, and in 1640 he successfully treated one of the ladies of the TRAILL & Co., The Pioneer Diary Publishers in India, CALCUTTA.

Bengal Viceroy's Zenana. When asked to name his own reward, he replied that he wished nothing for himself, but begged that his countrymen might be allowed a maritime settlement in Bengal. Accordingly, in 1642 imperial commissions were made out granting the East India Company a land factory at Hughli, and a maritime settlement at Balasore. But the gradual silting up of the river mouth seriously injured the port; and the last blow was struck at its prosperity when, in 1863, the Government abandoned the monopoly of the salt manufacture and trade. Meanwhile the English were firmly establishing themselves at Calcutta, and the Commerce of Balasore and its importance were gradually transferred to that place.

There is a dâk bungalow here and a good deal to see about the place.

Bhadruck is the next important place on the road forty-three miles from Balasore with Soro, a busy village with a large bazaar about midway. The last place we run through in the Balasore district is Aguapada, sixteen miles further south and then we come to the Brahmini Byturnee river, the Indian Styx, which defunct Hindoos cross by the aid of the sacred bull's tail. This forms the boundary between Balasore and Cuttack. In the course of the next sixteen miles we cross the Byturnee, the Kursoon, the Brahmini and the Mahanuddy rivers. Burchunna is the next halting place, then Tangi, twelve miles nearer Cuttack, and after another ten miles, the dâk bungalow at Cuttack gladdens the Sight. Cuttack (Kataka—the fort) is the chief town and administrative headquarters of the district and the capital of the Province of Orissa. It was once a flourishing place, its trade and commerce being considerable, while among its manufactures the silver filigree work—its speciality—has a world-wide reputation, and is perhaps, increasing with indication of a growing demand; but it is not a particularly lively place now and is associated chiefly in the European mind with those embodiments of rascality, the pestiferous Ooryia bearer and the debased palkee wallah, who hail from these parts.

It is about 56 miles from Cuttack to Puri. If time does not permit of our doing the extra stage, we can return by the B.-N. Railway or Chandbally steamer. If we decide to keep on we make for Khurdah Road passing through Barang and Bhubaneshwur. At Khurdah Road there is the Railway Refreshment Room at which a comfortable meal can be got, and from this point to Puri it is about twenty-eight miles, the road turning to the left (East) and taking us through three or four extensive villages. At Puri the dâk bungalow is our first quest; then we may do the temples, the pilgrims, the bazaar, and have a look at the Bay of Bengal.

CYCLING AND MOTORING AT HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 9th September 1904.

THE dates for the World's Championships have arrived, last Saturday being the first of three days' racing, yesterday the second and to-morrow the last and concluding day. These championships are competed for annually in the different countries affiliated to the Union Cycliste Internationale and this year, for the first time, they have been alloted to England. The crowd that surrounded the Crystal Palace track last Saturday was by no means large owing to the heavy rain experienced throughout the morning, but still, if it was not large, it was undoubtedly enthusiastic and thoroughly appreciated the superior racing provided by the competitors. The heats for the two Kilometres World's Amateur Championship were first decided, and as these mounted up to eleven in number, they occupied the best part of the afternoon, indeed, the 100 Kilometres Professional Championship was finished in the dark. A. L. Reed (holder), London, accounted for the first heat; M. Hurley, American, the second; H. C. Bouffier, London, the third; J. S. Benyon, Liverpool, fourth; B. Jones, Wigan, fifth; Dan Fivna, Scotland, sixth; E. Payne, Worcester, seventh, A. E. Wills, London, eighth; W. Engelmann, Germany, ninth; D. Roudelli, France, tenth; and A. Charvier, France, eleventh. Some of these heats provided grand exhibitions of finishes and although plenty of "loafing" was indulged in the early stages of each heat the finishes amply compensated for this crawling. The finals for this event as well as the finals of the two Kilometres Professional Championship will be decided to-morrow the programme also including the race for the 100 Kilometres Amateur Championship which should prove an even more exciting race than the professional event over the like distance.

It is many a day since I witnessed a more interesting and exciting race than was provided in the contest for the World's Professional 100 Kilometres Championship. Amongst the riders who entered for this event the name of only one Britisher appeared, namely, Ned Barkaway, of Wales, and as he failed to start, the race from an International standpoint possessed no interest for the British spectators, but still, they were treated to some keen racing between C. Simar, France, and R. Walthour, America. The starters were R. Walthour, America; C. Simar, France; Vanderstuyft, Belgium; E. Andemars, Switzerland; Gerbi, Italy, and A. Hansen, Denmark. The American was first to pick up his motor pacing machine, and his easy and even style stamped him at once as the likely winner. But it was soon apparent that there was another competitor to be reckoned with, for when the Frenchman, Simar, got into his strides, he could cover the ground at a terrific speed and soon after the tenth kilometre passed Walthour like a flash and eventually lapped him. Walthour, too, could move at times, and the pace these riders travelled was an eye-opener to many of the spectators. At twenty-five kilometres the American regained the lead and although Simar made repeated efforts to take it from him he was unsuccessful and had to content himself with second place. In the hour Walthour covered 40 miles 976 yards and completed the 100 kilometres in 1 hour 33 minutes 57⅘ seconds.

Included in the afternoon's programme was a one lap professional scratch race decided in two heats and a final and which eventually fell to Syd Jenkins, of Wales, Tom James, another Welshman, occupying second position, and Dan Walker, the Australian Champion, third. In the second heat, an amusing incident occurred at the start. The competitors were H. B. Howard, Walker, and Hedspath, a negro rider. When the pistol fired the men slowly moved off and Howard found himself with the lead, a position he did not desire until the end of the race, and, as the others did not seem inclined to take it from him he turned round and rode in the opposite direction with the intention of forcing to the front. In this he was most successful, for immediately Walker and Hedspath saw his move they sprinted off and left Howard right in the rear.

From the Monday to the Saturday of last week the Automobile Club of Great Britain and Ireland successfully carried through their Reliability Trial for small Cars, on the roads around Hereford, making two daily runs of about 50 miles each. There were non-stop runs, hill climbing competitions and brake tests so that the competing vehicles were thoroughly tested and came through the ordeal in a highly satisfactory manner. These trials were organised by the Automobile Club in order to give full encouragement to the opening of a new field by manufacturers of motor cars. Hitherto the trade has neglected the small car of about 6 horse-power to 10 horse-power and has paid more attention to higher powered vehicles, but lately there has been a growing demand for a light car priced about £150 to £200 which could carry two or four passengers and travel well up to the legal limit. A great body of professional and business men, who have little use for a pleasure car, will welcome the advent of a small cheap but reliable car which they could put to practical purposes.

The "loafing" indulged in by racing men more especially in short distance events, has frequently been the subject of discussion, but so far, no effective method of overcoming the practice has been discovered. It is an acknowledged fact amongst racing men, that the competitor who outs out the pace throughout the case rarely, if ever, wins, therefore it is only natural that each competitor should endeavour to keep to the rear during the earlier stages of the race and in doing this they create the "loafing" complained of. The Guernsey Cycling Club however, have introduced a novel way of endeavouring to grapple with the difficulty and in a five miles scratch race have instituted a sort of sliding scale for the prizes. If the winner covers the distance in 12 minutes 30 seconds the first prize will be value £10, the second prize £5, and the third £2. 10s. Should, however, the riders indulge in "loafing" and occupy fifteen minutes in completing the distance they will only receive half these amounts.

Some very sensible remarks on the dust question appears in the current issue of The Builder, a trade journal of good standing. The writer says that in common with his readers he suffers much from the dust raising capacity of motor vehicles; but in spite of personal inconvenience, he is inclined to look upon it as a blessing in disguise, as it emphasises the fact that the highways are unsuitable for present-day requirements. "It is obviously the duty" he continues "of local authorities and their professional advisers to find materials of construction suited to the requirements of the travelling public. The character of our road surfaces must inevitably be changed and the sooner this truth is realized the better it will be for everyone concerned." Inhabitants of roadside dwellings, pedestrians, in fact, every member of the community are all inconvenienced by the dust, and although it will be an expensive matter to change the character of the roads, it will have to be done some day, so why not do it at once and let the present generation benefit thereby?

COTTER PIN.

THE BROWN MOTOR BICYCLE FOR 1904.

THE advertisement, which appears for the first time in this paper, gives our readers some idea of the new "Brown" Motor Cycle. By this mail we received a large quantity of printed matter relating thereto and to the firms' general business in cars and bikes, accessaries, tools &c., from the large four-seated motor car to nuts and screws small enough to require tweezers wherewith to pick them up. Very fine catalogues they are, and of great interest to those who are either motorists or on the verge of joining that daily increasing happy band of speedy travellers. We have read what the catalogue has to say about the "Brown" Motor bike, and while we regret we are unable to reproduce the illustration which accompanies it, we think the following particulars will be of interest to our cycling readers.

The experience of past seasons has enabled this firm to produce a motor bicycle which can be depended upon to start when wanted, to go wherever it is guided, and to carry its rider comfortably and safely home again. Only the very best materials are used throughout; for reliability and all round good workmanship, the Brown will bear comparison with any other machines on the market.

Adequate strength is imparted to the frame by re-enforcing the always substantial construction at all vital points; the front fork, which in all bicycles is the weakest part of the frame, is triply strengthened by the extension of the fork blades upward and the provision of a pair of tubes from the front wheel spindle to clip cone above the steering head, so as to counteract the breaking tendency always prevent at the crown of single fork. The machine throughout is so beautifully balanced making remarkable smooth running over the roughest roads also reducing the risk of side-slip to a minimum. The driving wheel, which has to bear the greater part of the weight as well as all the propelling strain, is built in an exceptionally staunch manner; and the belt rim, initiated of being clipped on to the spokes, is attached direct to the tyre rim by a double set of spokes alternately set at opposite tangents, thus ensuring perfect truth in the belt rim. Abundant brake power is provided by means of a pull up brake on the front wheel rim actuated by a lever under the right handlebar, and a Bowden brake on the back wheel actuated by a lever under the left handlebar.

The motor itself is carried centrally in a vertical position, the crank case being attached to a substantial cradle strongly bolted to a lug on the front down tube and the bottom bracket in the rear, so that when fixed in position the motor forms a rigid unyielding part of the bicycle frame, but when occasion necessitates its detachment for adjustment or repairs it can be removed by loosening three bolts only without risk of any part being out of alignment. Large and heavy fly-wheels ensure great smoothness of running.

The dimensions are:—2 horse-power 64 m/m bore and 70 m/m stroke; 2¾ horse-power 74 m/m bore and 76 m/m stroke; 3½ horse-power 82 m/m bore and 90 m/m stroke.

The cylinder, the combustion head, and the valve chamber, are all cast in one piece and very accurately finished, thus doing away with all joints and consequent loss of compression; they are secured to the crank case by means of two long vertical bolts surmounted by nuts.

The inlet as well as the exhaust valve is mechanically operated, by means of a substantially constructed train of spur wheels actuating separate cams covered by a dust-proof gear box. These valves are interchangeable, so that only one spare valve need be carried. The 2 horse-power motor (and, if preferred, the 2¾ horse-power) has not the mechanically operated inlet valve, but is supplied with automatic inlet valve.

Petrol is carried in the rear half of the single tank, which has a capacity of 1¼ gallons, and conveyed by a pipe at the lower corner of the tank to a beautifully constructed specimen of the genuine Longuemare carburetter with throttle and air control lever.

The forward half of the tank holds accumulator and coil, and a separate compartment contains lubricating oil sufficient for about 500 miles. On the right hand side of the tank, forward, is a pump with celluloid barrel, by which lubricating oil is supplied to the engine.

Ignition is regulated by means of a single make-and-break contact breaker actuated by the foremost of three operating levers on the top of the tank, and when this lever is drawn right back it not only retards the ignition to the utmost, but also raises and holds open the exhaust valve. The 3½ horse-power is furnished, in addition, with a Bowden exhaust valve lifter worked on the handlebar. Plain coils are fitted to the 2 and 2¾ horse-power engines, but a high-speed trembler coil to the 3½ horse power. Two accumulators and a two way switch are fitted to 3½ horse power machines.

The operating lever, on the right hand side of the tank, controls the throttle.

The operating levers above described are furnished with ratchets which prevent their shaking away from whatever position the rider may have placed them.

On the left hand side of the tank, not visible in this illustration, is a small rod terminating in a lever by which the amount of air admitted to the carburetter can be regulated.

The sparking plug is situated vertically on the top of the cylinder head, over the inlet valve, where it is protected by the tank from rain; this position enables an extremely short wire to be exposed for the conveyance of the secondary current. The position of the accumulator, moreover, similarly allows the length of primary wire to be reduced to the smallest possible dimensions. Above the tank, the primary wire rises to an interrupter on the top rail, whence it is carried into and along the handlebar to a switch actuated by twisting the left handle. Fluted felt switch handles are fitted.

The exhaust pipe and box are right in front of the engine, where they are exposed to the fullest possible current of air.

The power is transmitted from the engine shaft through the medium of an oil-retaining belt pulley very deeply dished, ensuring a long bearing, thence through a "Duco" V shape belt 13/16ths wide. The crank case being oil-tight, and the driving-pulley oil retaining, it is impossible for oil to reach the belt and cause it to stretch and slip.

The connecting-rod bearings are of steel, and the main bearings of gun-metal.

The mudguards are 3 inches wide, the front one being extended well forward off the head.

The wheel base is 50 inches, and the size of frame 22 inches, this being the only size which can be supplied.

The wheels are 28 inch diameter with N. P. rims fitted with 2-inch Dunlop tyres.

Any other information we have no doubt the firm will be happy to give direct or through their excellent catalogues.

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

NEW CLUB "A" vs. VOLUNTEERS "B".—These teams having made a draw of their first meeting re played the tie on the 21st instant when the New Club were victorious by two goals to one. The Club rushed away at the start but the ball was brought back and midfield play followed for a time. Then the Club attacked once more and after Meakin, the Volunteer goal-keep. had stopped several shots, he was beaten by Sherbourne. On resuming after half time the Volunteers pressed hard and Greenway equalised. This put the New Club on their mettle and they kept the ball in their opponents' territory, where, after a smart defence by the backs, Sherbourne scored a second goal. There was no further scoring and the New Club won as stated.

GORDONS vs. NEW CLUB "B".—This match played on the 21st instant was a very onesided affair. The Gordons had the best of matters all through and won by six goals to one. The New Club custodian played a plucky game, but could not stop the persistent shots of Patterson and Hodds.

ROYAL SCOTS FUSILIERS vs. VOLUNTEERS "A".—This match played on the 22nd instant was the last game in the first round. Play during the first half was fairly even. The Fusiliers attacked first and obtained a penalty kick. They failed to score however and the Volunteers had a turn at attacking and just before half time a nice bit of passing ended in a goal for the Volunteers. Winning finding the net. After the interval the Volunteers attacked again, but the ball was brought back and a foul against the Volunteers gave the Fusiliers a penalty kick from which they scored a goal. They put on another shortly afterwards and then play became fast. The Volunteers tried hard to equalise but were unable to get through the Fusiliers' defence and the game ended in a win for the Allahabad team by too goals to one.

SECOND ROUND.

NORTH STAFFORDS vs. NEW CLUB "A."—This game commenced on the 23rd instant in a shower of rain, the ball and ground being very slippery in consequence. The Staffords attacked throughout and put on four goals in the first half. After the interval the New Club played better and on occasions got away but were unable to score. They got a penalty towards the end of the game, but the kick failed the ball glancing off the cross bar. The North Staffords thus won by 4 goals to nil.

THE QUEEN'S vs. BEDFORDS.—Also played on the 23rd, an interesting and well contested game resulting in a win for the Queen's by three goals to two. Shortly after the start the Queen's scored a goal from a penalty kick for a foul. Almost immediately the Bedfords got a penalty for a foul and equalised. Even play followed till half time. On resuming White scored for the Queen's, Lovell putting on a third goal later on. The Bedfords played all they knew and their efforts were rewarded by a goal, McNulty finding the net. Though pressing till the close of play they failed to score again and the Queen's won as stated.

GORDONS vs. BLACK WATCH.—Played on the 24th instant. A large gathering of spectators witnessed an exciting match between these teams. They both had a fair share of attacking in the first moiety and the interval arrived without score. On changing ends the Gordons pressed hard, and fast play followed. They obtained two corners in quick succession but could not get through, and the ball being taken down to the other end the Black Watch scored, thus winning by a goal to nil.

WELSH vs. SCOTS FUSILIERS.—Another fast game was witnessed. Shortly after the start a free kick to the Scots resulted in a goal. Then both teams pressed in turn, but there was no further scoring till half time. In the second half the Welsh got away and equalised with a fine shot. Fast up and down play followed and both teams almost scored. Then the Welsh took the ball down and after a fine bout of passing they put on their second goal. The Scots pressed again towards the end and obtained a corner which they just failed to turn to account. The game ending in favour of the Welsh by 2 goals to 1.

SEMI-FINALS.

NORTH STAFFORDS vs. THE QUEEN'S.—A big gathering was present at the meeting of these teams on the 26th instant. The game was a fast one. The Queen's got away after twenty minutes' even play and put through from a scrimmage in front of goal. Then the Staffords attacked and kept their opponents busy till the interval. On resuming a foul against the Queen's enabled the Staffords to equalise from the free kick. The Queen's tried hard to get the lead, but their opponents got away once more and the ball was put through. The kicker was ruled offside, however, and after an unproductive corner to the Queen's the game ended in a draw of a goal each. Ten minutes extra each way produced more fast play. The Staffords got the ball and running down notched a second goal, and all the Queen's efforts being unsuccessful the North Staffords won by 2 goals to 1.

BLACK WATCH vs. WELSH FUSILIERS.—It had been expected that the Black Watch would have an easy victory over the Welsh on the 27th instant, but a splendid game was put up and the Highlanders just managed to win by a goal scored a few minutes before time. In the first half play was rather wild for a time, then they settled down and both teams had an equal share of the game. Nothing was scored and they crossed over. The Highlanders then pressed, but were unable to score and the Welsh assuming the offence almost put through on two occasions The Black Watch next rushed down and just before time was called the ball was headed into the net, the Highlanders winning as stated. The final between the Black Watch and North Staffords will take place to-morrow.

BOMBAY ROVERS' TOURNAMENT.

THIRD ROUND.

WARWICKSHIRE vs. SHROPSHIRES.—The first game the third round in the Bombay Rovers, Tournament on Monday afternoon of the 17th instant, between the Warwickshire Regiment from Belgaum and the Shropshire Light Infantry from Ranikhet, aroused more enthusiasm among the spectators than perhaps any other game played in the Tournament so far. In the first half the pace was very hot and was maintained until half time was piped. The distinctive the features in play during thisperiod were the effective short passing and some defence of the Warwicks in which Johnson, Merry, Millward, and Turner were conspicuous and the really brilliant form shown by the backs Stapleton and Andrews, and the forwards Roberts and Skyrme for the Shropshires. During this period the Warwicks made three determined attacks on their opponents' goal and narrowly missed scoring, Willie, the goalkeeper, and Andrews being instrumental in averting the danger. The ball was rushed from end to end, and the warwicks' goal on several occasions was in jeopardy, Locke saving with difficulty a hot shot from the right wing, and again later on negotiating a similar shot. But perhaps the closest thing in the way of scoring was when the Warwicks, in one of their attacks sent in a shot which only missed the net by a few inches, the ball rebounding off the goal post. Towards the end of the first period the Shropshires were hard at work in front of their opponents' goal, but the fine defence of the backs and skill of Locke the goalkeeper, was too good to enable the Ranikhet team to score. The second half was practically a repetition of the except that towards the end the pace sackened perceptibly. On the whole the a Wrwicks did most of the attacking, their play at this stage being particularly attractive. In the first ten minutes or so they kept the ball in the Shropshires' territory and gave that team an anxious time. The Shropshires asserted themselves later, and Locke was called upon to save several times before the whistle went. The end of the hour found the Warwicks attacking, and Willie, the opposing goal, keeper, was kept hard at work. Play in the extra period was of a very open character and neither side could claim any advantage, the game ending in a pointless draw.

The tie was replayed on Tuesday morning and another interesting game resulted in the Lhropshires winning by the narrow margin of one goal to nil scored ten minutes after the start. The Warwicks made desperate efforts to equalise, but their display hardly reached the same standard of the previous evening. The Shropshires had much the best of the game throughout and had hard luck in not adding at least two more goals to their score.

ARGYLL AND SUTHERLAND HIGHLANDERS vs. ROYAL SCOTS.—A good deal of interest entered in this game and the Royal Scots were regarded as having more than an outside chance of lowering the Argyll's colours. That they failed to do so and were beaten by two goals to nil by no means represented that they were outplayed or had the worst of the game. Although the Highlanders scored a goal in each half, the Scots did just as much attacking, in fact they kept their opponents on the defensive for the greater portion of the first half. They were the first to become dangerous and only for a few minutes late in the first quarter when the Highlanders by brilliant combined play managed to find the net had they the worse of exchanges. A few minutes after the start Webber, who played a brilliant forward game for the Scots, missed the net with a long shot. A little later the Argyll's goalkeeper was called upon to clear twice, and as the result of a third attack by the Scots the Aaryll's had to concede a corner. A series of long exchanges near midfield followed, and then the Scots attacked again, the ball being twice lifted over the Argyll's crossban. But for weak play in front of goal the Scots at this period would have scored. Mullen, the Argyll's goalkeeper, played a cool game and had a good deal of work to do in the first half. He was well backed up by Wallace and are Bannantyne the backs : and McLean, the nippiest half in the tournament, and McLay who has no superior in any of the teams as a forward were always prominent when their side was attacking. The Royal Scots did most of the attacking during the first fifteen minutes of the second half. They were the first to break away and sent in a series of long valleys which kept Mullen, the Argyll's goalkeeper, busy. A couple of corners followed and latter a desperate attack on the Argyll's goal, culminated in three good shots, one of which only missed the net by a foot. The Argylls asserted themselves in the last quarter and be sides scoring a goal kept the Scots on the depensive, with the exception of for a few minutes during this period.

CHESHIRES vs. CALCUTTA.—Despite the fact that they had to take the field without Jervis, their left wing, who had sustained an injury in the second round, the Soldiers entered on the struggle confident of victory and the result fully justified the confidence they felt. Calcutta, however, although defeated were by no means disgraced, and considering the calibre of their opponents, they made a grand and plucky fight, and it speaks volumes for the defence offered by their backs that they should only have been beaten by three goals to nil. A full description of the game would be monotonous, so I shall confine myself to a few comments on the principal features. Since their game with the Perseus team, Calcutta had greatly improved and had they been in as good training as the Cheshires, the struggle would have been an even closer one. Their weak point in the game last week had been their play in front of goal, but they shewed marked improvement in this respect on Wednesday. The brothers Sherman in the forward line strove very hard for their side, but were so closely marked that they never had an opportunity of becoming really dangerous. The game at the start was very fast, but in the second half the pace varied and at times was very slow, the Calcutta men showing up badly against the superior training of the Cheshires. Fortunately they had a tower of strength in Baker, their goal keeper, who time after time saved attaeks on his charge in the most brilliant fashion Had a less experienced man been in his position, the margin against Calcutta would have been much bigger The Cheshire played a scientific game throughout and were at all times brilliant. They were only in difficulties once in the first half when Calcutta got the ball up their end, but fine play by the back carried it away again. Their first goal was obtained about ten minutes before half time and was the result of a finely judged shot by Gaffwy which gave Baker no chance of keeping out. The latter just previous to this had cleared three hard volleys in grand style. Calcutta had a good chance of scoring early in the second half, Chard, the Cheshire goalkeeper, being called upon to save twice, a foul against the Cheshire giving Calcutta an attcking the net and the shot being fisted out by Chard into the circle. Shortly after this the Cheshries scored their second goal. For a brief period Calcutta kept the Cheshires on the depensive, a shot from V. Sherman just clearing the cross bar. The Cheshires had all the best of the game from this to the end and scored their third and last goal five minutes before the whistle went.

SEAFORTH HIGHLANDERS vs. ROYAL FIELD ARTILLERY.—After a close and intensely exciting game this tie resulted in a victory for the Seaforths by 2 goals to 1. The latter had all the best of play in the second period and kept the Kirkee team on the defensive. The Gunners on the other hand held the advantage in the first half and whe the teams changed over led by a goal to nil. The superior passing tactics of the Seaforths in the concluding half carried the day and found the Kirkee team hard pressed for nearly the whole period. The Seaforth's second goal was scored three minutes before the whistle went.

SEMI-FINALS.

CHESHIRES vs. ARGYLL AND SOUTHERLAND HIGHLANDERS.—The meeting between these teams on Friday afternoon was invested with perhaps more interest than any other game played in the tournament so far, and was in every respect a grand struggle. Both teams gave a highly scientific display, and although the Cheshires obtained the only point scored in which they were helped by luck there was absolutely nothing to choose between the two teams.

The goald scored by the Cheshires was obtained ten minutes before half time, and was the result of a kick from Blears, the Cheshire back, from "hands" against the Argylls. The ball went in front of goal, where James, one of the forwards, received it and sent in a stinging shot which struck the left upright and bounded off into the net—an impossible shot for any goalkeeper to negotiate. The Argylls despite the fact that the only point scored was in the first half, had, if anything, the best of the game during this period, but in the scored half the Cheshires had a shade the better of exchanges.

SHROPSHIRES vs. SEAFORTH HIGHLANDERS.—This game was played on Saturday and provided a most interesting struggle, but was somewhat marred by a nasty display of temper on both sides, which called for the referee's interference on several occasions. There was besides a good deal of rough play, especially in the first half. A few minutes after the start the Shropshires found the net and scored their first goal as the result of a vigorous attack. The Highlanders quickly retaliated, and pressing their opponents closely, had three corners conceded to them in quick succession, none of which, however, resulted in anything. From this to the end of the first half the Highlanders continued to press and their correct passing and well-judged play enabled them to equalise from a magnificent shot by Bryan. The struggle during the opening ten minutes of the second half also went slightly in favour of the Highlanders, but they were unable to penetrate the defence of the Shropshires, whose superior staying powers now enabled them to beat back the Highland attack and press their opponents in turn. In one of the Shropshires' now frequent attacks a mistake by one of the opposing backs gave them the lead, the back in question kicking the ball into his own net. After this, although the Highlanders occasionally pressed their opponents, the latter had the best of exchanges and when the whistle went were able to claim a victory by two goals to one.

The Seaforths entered an objection to the first goal scored by the Shropshires. A meeting of the Executive Committee was held in consequence on Sunday afternoon, at which representatives of bot teams were present. After a careful enquiry into the matter it was ruled that the Shropshires were off-side and that the game should be replayed. The game was accordingly replayed on Monday morning and resulted in a win for the Seaforths by two goals to nil.

THE FINAL.

CHESHIRES vs. SEAFORTH HIGHLANDERS.—On Monday afternoon the Cheshires gained a well-deserved victory by two goals, one against the Seaforths, who however played a good defensive game; but in the second half the northerly wind was much against them. After the match Mr. Justice Russell, who has for years been the patron of the tournament eulogised the winners and runners up, particularly the former, who have won the Cup for the last three years. Mrs. E. Gray, wife of the Collector of Bombay, presented the Cup and medals.

FIRST ROUND.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. GLOUCESTERSHIRE REGIMENT.—The game in the first round of our rugger tournament between the Bombay Gymkhana and the Gloucesters on Tuesday afternoon ended in an easy win for the Gloucesters by three goals and two tries (twenty-one points) to one try (three points). Except for a brief period in the first half, play was mostly confined to the Gymkhana twenty-five, the tackling, kicking and running of the latter being very feeble. After play had been in progress a quarter of an hour, Prosser got a try for the Gloucesters which was converted and the Gymkhana just on half time, obtained a try, the kick failing. Crossing over the splendid combination of the Gloucesters enabled them to completely outplay their opponents, and four more tries were obtained, two of which were converted, the other two being charged down. The Gloucesters three quarters played a brilliant game and their halves gave the opposite halves no chance. Frost, Russell, Morris, and Ball obtained the other tries for the Gloucesters, Holder kicking the goals.

THE SEMI FINALS.

DEFEAT OF THE CALCUTTA TEAM.

WELSH REGIMENT vs. CALCUTTA F. C. The first game in the semi finals of this tournament was between the Welsh Regiment and the Calcutta F. C. It was played on Wednesday evening and resulted in an easy victory for the Welsh by one goal, one dropped goal and two tries to nil. Calcutta gave a most disappointing display, their three quarter back line being completely over shadowed by the opposing quartette and their forwards being overrun by the Welsh pack.

In the first half and for the opening ten minutes Calcutta kept the play confined in the Welsh 25, but after that except for occasional bursts, the Welsh pressed them hard only. One try was obtained in the opening period, but when ends were changed the Welsh had it all their own way and added the remaining points. The poor combination shown by the Calcutta forwards gave their backs no chance, and this was the explanation of their defeat Martelli and Cumberlege played like Trojans and were frequently brilliant and Schaumberg, the Calcutta back, played a splendid game saving the situation time after time

Probably a grander mover than Wild Dayrell, the Derby winner of 1855, was never seen on a racecourse. So little was thought of him by his breeder, Mr. Popham, however, that the colt was parted with for a mere song though through the earnest entreaties of a friend Mr. Popham very fortunately was induced to repurchase the animal. As a two-year-old Wild Dayrell made but one appearance—namely, at Newmarket, when he literally ran away from his solitary opponent, and from that time forth he occupied aposition int he Derby price current, being originally quoted at 40 to 1, and eventually starting a very hot favourite.

In the spring of 1855 Mr. Popham was advised to purchase some trial horse of acknowledged public form in order that Wild Dayrell's merits might be tested at home, and eventually for a long figure Tom King, a speedy miler, capable of telling the time of day at any rate up to that distance, was secured.

Jack Charlton, then in the zenith of his fame as a first-class jockey, was specially retained to ride Tom King in the trial whilst the late Robert Sherwood, father of the present "Bob" of that ilk, then a mere stripling, had the mount on the Derby, horse—as he had, indeed, in the actual race itself. Charlton used often afterwards to recount the details of this famous trial, concluding almost invariably with the expression—

"By gad! Wild Dayrell was the greatest wonder in horseflesh ever foaled. I believe the day he was tried with Tom King he could have carried Sherwood and me too, and then won!"

CALCUTTA GOLF CLUB VS. CALCUTTA RANGERS.

THIS interesting old game always attracts a certain amount of attention at the Calcutta Golf Club during the rains, and a challenge to play a match six a side, against the Calcutta Rangers on Saturday last was cordially received. Unfortunately, however, only four members of the Rangers team were able to put in an appearance with the result that for the Golf Club F. H. Stewart and Pym stood out of the Singles and T. Drimmie and Steven out of the Doubles. The Rangers, too, were distinctly handicapped by the difference of the ground, and the change of rules from those under which they usually play, and were, with the exception of A. O. Henry, who played a strong game all afternoon, especially in the Singles against T. R. Theakston, no match for the Golf Club men, who won an easy victory by four matches to two, and 113 points to 77, the full score being as follows :—

Saturday, 24th September 1904.

The Calcutta Swimming Club successfully brought off their annual swimming gala this afternoon. The meeting was well attended. the "ladies' gallery" being well filled, as well as the seats round the Bath for the mere men. Five events were decided, the preliminary heats having been swum off during the week. and a water polo match, and a display of diving completed the programme. The diving was much appreciated, Messrs. Brown and Walker in particular showing considerable talent. Lobo's band played selections and an amphibious clown and a bibulous policemen supplied the comic element. During the afternoon the Aggregate Cup, presented by Mr. E. C. H. Power, and gold and silver time badges were given away by Mrs. W. Bushby, who distributed the prizes Mr. A. E. B. Siddons had secured the Aggregate Cup with 22 points. He was also the recipient of the gold and the silver time medals. Messrs. W. Govan and L. THE ENGLISH BULLDOG.

IT is over three hundred years ago since the breed which is looked upon as the national one of England was first mentioned in literature under the name it is now known by, with simply a modern variation of spelling. A few years ago it would have been quite sufficient to have headed this chapter with the simple one of "The Bulldog," but the modern craze of finding or creating new breeds of dogs for show purposes, and the subdivision of existing breeds for the same reason, has gathered in its net two other kinds of dogs called Bulldogs—one being designated a French animal and the other a Toy. It is, however, of the real Bulldog proper that I write—the national dog of Old England.

The Bulldog was something over three hundred years ago known as the Bonddogge, or the Boudogge, and these names obtained in the time of King Henry VII., they both being used in the literature of the year 1500. Seventy-five years later, Dr. Caius, in his "Treatise on the Dog," used the term Bandogge and William Harrison, when writing his description of England, in 1586, gives the reason for the latter name—namely, "Manie of them are tied up in chains and strong bonds in the daie time for doing hurt abroad, which is an hugh dog, stubborn, ouglie, eager, ourthenouse of bodie (and, therefore, of little swiftness), terrible and fearful to be hold, and oftentimes more fierce and fell than any Archadian or Corsican cur." That the Bouldogge of those days was not like the animal one sees on the show bench of the present time is unquestionable. He was a larger animal, without doubt; at the same time, he possessed the same characteristics. Dr. Caius, in writing of the dog three centuries ago, refers to the animal as the Mastive, or Bandogge, and, seeing what a change can be produced in a breed in the comparatively short space of fifty years—to wit, the present show-bench Bulldog—it is not surprising, then, the breed, in the course of time, took at first a more modified form, and then, after the decadence of pit fighting, it has been bred to a still more altered type to meet the requirements of the present day standard of points. These show points were framed for the preservation of the animal, and which incidentally enables its owner to win valuable prizes in the peaceful enclosure of the modern show ring, instead of by the bloodcurdling melees which so amused our ancestors, writers Mr. Fred. Farnam in the Illustrated Kennel News.

As long ago as in the reign of King Charles I. the dog was known by the name it has retained ever since those stirring times, for as far back as 1631, there is indisputable evidence of the term "Bulldogge" being applied to the breed—quite a remote enough period for the animal to claim an ancient lineage.

In the Record Office there is evidence that in the above year a gentleman named Eaton, writing from St. Sebastian to a friend in England, George Willingham of St. Swithin's Lane, London, asked him to procure him three dogs. In his letter he asks his friend to obtain for him "a good Mastive doggie," and then proceeds to say:—"Pray procure me two good Bulldogs, and let them be sent by the first ship," which exhibits the fact that in those days Bulldogs, in 1631, were being imported into Spain from England. Not only did Eaton name Bulldogs, but he required that they should be of some use, and stipulated that they should "be good at the bull and cost what they will, but let them be good curs." It is quite clear from this letter that nearly 300 years ago the Bulldog was known by the same name as now, and also required for the purpose of bull-baiting in Spain, because of its courage, tenacity, and pluck, and through which it has become symbolical of British pluck and daring.

As in this letter, there is also a request for a Mastive, it is clear that the breeds of Bulldogs and Mastives, both of which had one common ancestor, the ancient "Alaunt," had become distinct one from the other, even in these early days. It is indisputable that for several hundred years the English Bulldog has been an animal of a distinct breed, and that it is indigenous to these islands. It was an animal bred for a specific use. At first this use was the baiting of various animals, principally the bear and the bull, and for years the dog was fostered and kept by all classes of society, high and low, reach and poor, for the carrying on of this national pastime. It is not to be wondered at, in view of the prevailing taste for such sights as must have been seen in the bull ring, that dog fighting also became common, and right down to less that a hundred years ago Bulldogs where bred to exhibit their prowess in fighting pits.

In the days when the dog was used for the practical purpose of fighting, it was naturally bred with a view to a certain amount of activity, as well as courage and strength, and consequently, it was not like the superlatively cloddy, low-to-ground, thick-set animal which stands for the Bulldog at the present day. Still, the present day Bulldog is certainly a reflection of its predecessor, with every "point" exaggerated to the utmost possible degree—in fact, it is a glorious example of the triumph of man, and the possibilities of breeding for show points and prizes.

From being an animal used for fighting, the dog has, under the changed condition of the times become one of peace, and the instincts of humanity of latter-day times has prompted the suppression of the revolting scenes by means of legislation, which has now swept away all but historical traces of this once favourite pastime. At the close of the eighteenth century, baiting and fighting by Bulldogs had fallen into the hands of a class which used the animal for the delectation of the "sports" of the day, and sickening were the scenes of barbarity and cruelty which were seen in the dog pits and fighting dens.

This was the last era through which the dog, as a fighting dog, passed, an era when it was attended by the lowest associations, and one cannot help coming to the conclusion that amidst its sow surroundings, amidst the squalor of the scene and the depravity of it all that the dog itself stood out by far the superior animal to those two-legged ones who gloried and gloated over the nauseous sights which so delighted the gentry of the dog-fighting pits of those days. It is not to be wondered at that the poor Bulldog got a bad name in the end, and that a writer in British Field Sports in the year 1818, described him as the "blackguard of his species," forgetting that the plucky dog was not to blame, but the biped who trained and used him for a degrading pursuit.

It was a Mr. W. H. Scott who in 1818, penned the above description of the Bulldog, but in addition to this he declared that the Bulldog had "no claim upon utility, humanity, or common sense and the total extinction of the breed is a desirable consummation." Osbaldeston, a few years previous (1792) referred to the Bulldog as "one of the most fierce and strong of the canine race, having the nose short, and the under jaw larger than the upper."

At the commencement of last century the breed was certainly on the decline. Bull-baiting was on the down grade and the dog went with it, and, referring to this, Taplin, writing in 1803, also gives as a reason that great numbers were taken abroad. Still the decline does not appear to have, at that time, been anything more than a numerical one, for he describes the dog at that day as having a 'natural ferocity, strength, and thirst for blood" so much so that the owners did not allow them full liberty.

The study of the English Bulldog, its history and its antecedents, is one of absorbing interest to all those who take an enlightened interest in the breed, apart altogether from the standpoint of the modern show bench—in fact, there is no other breed in this country which can surpass its historical interest, or can claim to be so English to the core as the Bulldog. It has passed through centuries of time and flourished, and it was not until the extinction of bull-baiting and dog-fighting (in common with other similar pastimes) that there arrived a time when it really looked as if it would disappear from the face of the earth. This period was between the time when its use had gone and the advent of the establishment of dog shows as we now have them in our midst. I have already shown that in 1803 a current dog-writer stated that the breed was declining numerically. Idstone asserts that twenty years later the breed was said to be degenerating; at any rate, it is clear that the Bulldog, about a hundred years ago, was on the down grade. The breed suffered in consequence of the objects for which it was bred going out of fashion, and at one time it certainly looked for this reason and the legislative measures taken, as if it would become extinct and lost in the vortex of mongrelism. It looked as if the dog, whose claim to be the National breed is undisputed, was within a measurable distance of disappearing in the country of its origin. Happily, however, all the specimens were not extinct when the spirit arose in this country fifty years ago to foster the interests of the various breeds of dogs and it is not at all surprising that one of the first objects to which attention was given was the preservation of the race of the Bulldog of England.

The preservation of the breed up to the earlier part of last century is clearly attributable to the use it was bred for—bull and bear baiting and fighting generally. Right away from the earliest period of English history, after the Norman Conquest, bull-baiting was practiced. In 1154 (Henry the Second's time) it was clearly in vogue, and it continued onwards during succeeding reigns. From 1374 to 1778, it was annually resorted to at Tutbury, in Staffordshire; and at Wokingham, in Berkshire, it flourished from 1661 to at least 1802. The bull ring at Birmingham is one of those historic localities in the annals of bull-baiting, and there it flourished for years under the very walls of the Parish Church. From the reign of Henry VIII. to 1773, and in fact, all over the country for centuries bull-baiting flourished, and the Bulldog was bred and fostered accordingly. The "sport" was patronised by royalty, including those of the fair sex, and Queen Elizabeth herself was a frequent spectator of these exhibitions.

As civilization advanced with the centuries, a more humane phase passed over the inhabitants of these isles. The better classes withdrew their patronage, and, finally, a bill was introduced into Parliament, with a view to absolishing this "sport" but the measure was defeated on the 24th of May, 1802, Mr. Charles Windham opposing it upon the ground that British pluck would certainly decrease if it were allowed to become law, and for another thirty years the practice continued to be a legal one. Two years before our late Queen Victoria ascended the throne the "sport" received its deathblow, for in the year 1835 bull in common with bear, baiting and dogfighting was prohibited, and thus ended a national pastime, and thus it came to pass that the Bulldog's occupation ceased. The suppression of bull-baiting was naturally detrimental to the preservation of the dog, and it being of no further use, the breed was allowed to degenerate. Its specimens became rarer as the years rolled on, and it bade fair to cease to exist as a separate breed. The advent of dog shows, however, saved it, and although the specimens we have around us at the present day are highly in-bred for points there is no question but that they are the direct descendants of the animals which were bred on more active lines when they were used for baiting the bull. The breeds future is now perfectly secure, and there is no fear of the National breed ceasing to exist for want of patronage.

As regards the Bulldog of the present day, and its "points" for show purposes, this is a matter of little interest compared with the history of the breed. The various clubs have their scales of points for the guidance of judges, and anybody wishing for information under this head can have as much as he wants by obtaining it from the associations which have drawn up the scales, or adopted them. To win a prize on the modern show bench is certainly a matter of interest to the owner of a Bulldog, and one of more congratulation if the exhibitor has bred the successful animal; but, after all, the main object of those who foster the breed should be its preservation in form and character as it existed when the national breed was bred for a national pastime. Can it be truthfully asserted that the Bulldog of today is really like the Bulldog of baiting days, or that the clubs which foster the breed appoint judges who take as their ideal the shape and make of the old English Bulldog? I think not. A hundred years ago the legislature refused to pass a bill for the abolition of bull-baiting it being contended by opponents to it that the measure, if passed, might prejudicially affect the pluck of the British nation. The Bulldog has always been a dog emblematic of the English race an animal which, for his fearlessness, activity, pluck, daring, stanchness, and indomitable gameness, has always been held as a dog to be proud of. Does the animal we now see around us, overburdened with its glossly exaggerated points, inspire one with the same feeling? Can it be pointed to as the the old English Bulldog, which could, if called upon, bait the bull, or perform the work which it was called upon to do when the breed was at the zenith of its prosperity—as the Fox-hound is at the present day?

As a model of strength though possessing immense bone, a heavy body, large skull and great ugliness, the Bulldog of today is certainly an object of interest as exhibiting what can be done by breeding for points. As a model of what the English

Bulldog was he is not good, but a gross exaggeration all over. However, perhaps it is just as well from one point of view that Bulldogs are not like their ancestors, for, as Taplin wrote of them a hundred years ago, they were then "seldom seen at their full liberty, either in town or country," and it might be owners would nowadays have to keep them always indoors "from a proper fear of the law fiding it more prudent to keep them properly confined." The Bulldog of today is about the most genial and docile of the whole canine race.

QUETTA HORSE SHOW.

TAKEN all round this show was successful in point of general arrangement, number of entries and quality of exhibits, while one has seen judging that was far more open to question than we had here. To Mr. O'Hara's Chorister fell Championship honours for best horse in the show; General Smith-Dorrien's Grey Arab Alexis, Captain Gray's grey country bred Cherry, and Mr. Haggard's brown waler mare Mousme were selected as best in their class, the latter gaining the distinction of being considered the best pony in the show. There was some very superior jumping in both divisions. Details:

The Story Teller.

"CLEVER MR. GREEN."

THAT his name happens to be Green is a singularly inappropriate fact, having regard to the artfulness of his nature. His cunning is supreme; no trace of verdancy may be discerned in connection with the development of his sporting schemes; and he is not assumed to possess an extreme delicacy of conscience. Some of his taps below the belt are denounced by connoisseurs.

He began to race in a small way when he was quite young, having a little cash which a maiden aunt, whose brain was as soft as her heart, had been foolish enough to leave him and he had to learn everything for himself Naturally, his money was lost while he was acquiring valuable information. By the time we have gained experience our capital is often gone, so that we are obliged to start again, like sharks refreshed, to make some more. We know then what to do, whom to do, and how it is done in an artistic manner. If the mines explored are only auriferous!

Thus working with desperate courage and talent, to rehabilitate his fortunes, our hero gained the title of "clever Mr. Green," and men forgot to think how clever they were themselves, especially as to feats of mastication, when he entered the arena with his hat on one side, cigar in mouth, and a plater or two in ambush. He always kept a few useful platers up his sleeve, so to speak; his methods of "slipping" them were remarkable. Those he backed with spirit generally came up more than a head first.

"Oh! yes," said a compatriot, admiringly, "he is a very good fellow—to himself; and when you see him with two apples in his hand you may be sure that he will eat the best at once and keep the other for his future consumption."

That was not an unfair sketch of his idiosyncrasy. Even apples were treated by him as currency: to wit, Eve would not have had a thousand-to-three chance if he had been in the garden; one could not get a bite with him near the core. It was the same all round. When he played a friend at billiards for cigars and drinks and a dollar side bet, the other fellow might easily miss at a critical moment, the tip of his cue, or a foul ball might be interpolated for his discomfiture when he looked like winning. If money is the root of all evil, what price the resulting foliage?

"Ah! but such a nut on him," cried a poor punter, referring to owner Green with ecstasy; "and when we dare to step into the market before him, he is certain to give us a rude shock. Nobody is let up on the inside if he is leading in the pigskin." . . . Such statements were substantially accurate.

So it came to pass, after several seasons' racing, that Green's "hot pots," few of which boiled over, were anxiously watched for by the experts who bet to live, and live well until they are "broke" again. They interfered with his wagering enterprise more than once. When he wished to back his candidate he found sometimes that the price was shortened against him to a painful extent, and that, if he won, he would be chiefly benefiting other people not disposed to lend him a trifle in case of need. He realised what the mercy of the world means—outside, Eliza, with more kicks than half-pence for your wedding portion!

At last, according to Green's view, the state of affairs as indicated became intolerable. He was not able to get any money on his horses when they had a chance except at a cramped quotation, since he was admitted to be extremely dangerous when he was trying. When he wasn't—well, anybody might rush in (for aught he cared) to secure the cream of the market. What scum it turned to i' the mouth ere its flavour was emphatically execrated!

Meeting his friend Timkins in the paddock at glorious Trodmore, Green conceived a great idea. "Why," he muttered, "have I never thought of it before, with money staring me in the face and the plot as simple as 'saucering' warm tea regardless of convention? What fatuity on my part!"

He clasped his brow, like an arch or dome near the top; his visage, dark in repose, brightened. Then, ambling across the enclosure with an air of undoubted supremacy, he tapped, winningly tapped, the shoulder of dear Timkins.

"A word in your ear," he said stopping short, "and it will be as good as coin in your pocket. Come,' he bowed, "with me. Get a move on you."

"Yes, yes, brave sir," exclaimed the rapturous Timkins, who was young and guileless. "No matter how far you may wish to go, it will be a treat for me to come with you as commandeered."

"The first quiet corner," said the other, "will suit our purity of purpose. I am a sportsman of few words, but I like the long ones to score."

"I bottle up my longest for that object," replied Timkins, "and when I draw the cork my confrères rarely know what the explosion means. They are doubtful whether they ought to be under the table or on the roof."

"Do not enlighten them," urged the wily owner, "until they are partly up the chimney. That experience, even if there is not much soot, is sure to do them a great deal of good."

Having found a nook secluded enough for the proposed symposium, he proceeded to describe the nature of his startling plot. He had, as appeared, a smart three-year-old, which he wished to put in a selling race and bet with infinite enthusiasm. But, he explained, if the horse were entered in his name—and the punters were always watching for him—there would be no chance to obtain a decent price, so his ambition was to put them away—his eyes sparkled like coals of fire—by a clever ruse of his own invention. All he wanted was the help of an unsuspected conspirator who possessed sufficient tact to keep his mouth shut except at prescribed intervals.

"You see, my boy," Green went on, frankly, "you have not earned a reputation for sharpness on the Turf. No one ever dreams that you are likely to win a race if there is a solitary runner to oppose you and he is so bad that he certainly would not be pulled out for any other mission."

"Oh! thanks," replied the neophyte, colouring up. "You read me like a book with the title-page missing. But, if I am such an ass, how can I be of use to such a genious as you?"

Clever Mr. Green chucked softly. "That is the essence of our contract," he affirmed, just as if he were engaged in building new rainbows on a large scale.

"Who is supposed to be the trickster," asked Timkins, "and do the trick in style?"

"Trust all that to me," replied Green, with an aspect of dignity. "I intend to enter my smart three-year-old in your name in a selling race. The public know nothing about him; running for you, he will be quite neglected, a perishing quantity, and my agents will be able, therefore, to put the shekels on him at a nice price."

"Don't leave me quite out," pleaded Timkins, "when the spoils are divided."

Soon after the conversation noted Mr. Timkins's Flamingo appeared amongst the runners for a £100 race, winner to be sold for £50, at an important meeting, where the ring was large and representative. There was a big field, including sundry smart platers, whose owners were betting on that occasion. The market was brisk and lively; money came pouring in for several of the highly-fancied performers. It was delightful to watch the bookmakers engaged lustily in their beautiful work of speculation.

Any odds were offered against Flamingo as a matter of course. Carefully primed by his astute confederate, Timkins put all his friends away with unblushing effrontery. They had no right to ask questions, and he answered accordingly—a practice which many owners consider to be not unmeritorious.

"I have," he averred, "nothing to try my horse with, and I have no line as to his form. He does not carry a penny of my board. He may be able, for aught I can say, to beat a barrel-organ in full blast; but if the organist knows his business he would probably win by a tune or two. My poor gee," he winked, "is only slightly musical." . . . Alas for the turpitude of human nature as revealed (for pelf) at the races!

Mr. Green kept himself consistently in the background while those preliminaries were arranged. He leaned against the buffet, smoked a cigarette, and told a funny story. It had so much point that an anæmic youth present by mistake flushed to such an extent that his acquaintances scarcely recognised him in his new colours.

"Ah! no, my lads," went on Green, merrily, "I cannot give you a hint as to what will win this next race, because I have left my books of form in the lavatorium at home. Besides, I do not care to back other people's horses, even if the other people are not sunlight marauders."

In the meantime, however, when the runners were cantering to the gate, two or three agents began quietly to operate in favour of Flamingo. They backed him from twenties down to fives, and, if the start had been delayed, he might have touched a shorter figure.

But the barrier went up quickly; there were no recalcitrants. Jumping off in front, Flamingo made all the running, and won by three lengths. It was a surprise packet for the poor punters, while Timkins strutted about the paddock as if it had been made for him, and, even so, was not spacious enough to satisfy his aspirations for more grass The demon Green made no sign, mirthful or diabolic.

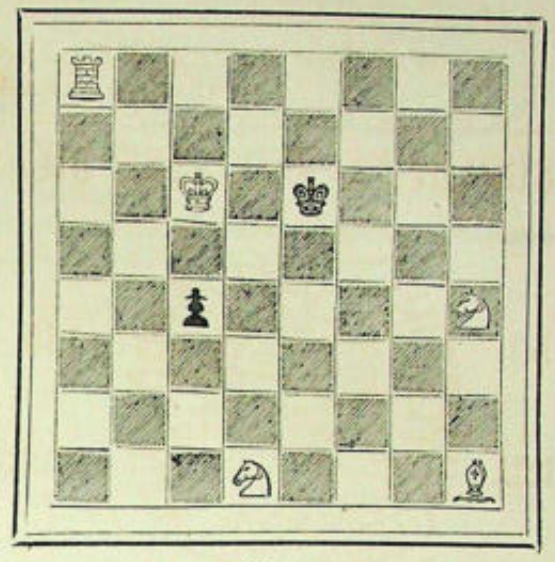
Still, a whisper having gone round with respect to the merit of Flamingo, a few awkward moments were experienced by our sporting hero when his horse was offered for sale in the usual manner. He was run up with exceptional earnestness and desperation. Timkins trembled in his shoes; if he had been in his sheets he would probably have done the same or worse.

Unfortunately for Green, the whisper aforesaid had reached the owner of the second, who refused to listen to reason on any terms. "This colt," he growled, "would look well in my stable, and I wish to see him nestling there if I can whack you in a cash encounter."



He failed to do that, since clever Mr. Green knew more than he did, always an advantage where money or love is concerned and the winner was retained for—well, let us say, many hundred guineas. That is near enough to save us in this veracious chronicle. He was reported in the papers to have been sold to Mr. Green, who remarked:

"It is as expensive to buy back one's own horse as to kiss one's own wife when she has made other arrangements."

THE BEST OILS FOR MOTOR CARS.

Wilburine for cylinders ... Rs. 6-8 per gallon Tin. | Valvoline for Bearings, etc. ... Rs. 5-0 per gallon Tin.

Extract from the "Autocar."

LUBRICATING OILS.—[2422]—It may be instructive to your numerous readers to have the experiences of a motor car experimentalist on the behaviour of lubricating oils for motor work. In the first onset I tried various sorts of oils, all of which left deposits of carbon and gumming matter in the cylinders and valves. These deposits are serious drawbacks, not only to the working of the pistons and valves, but also interfere with the proper sparking at the ignition plugs. I then tried the Valvoline Oil Co.'s oils, using "Wilburine" for the cylinders and "Valvoline" for the bearings, etc.; these being quite pure mineral oils, no deposits either of carbon or gumming matter were left. Every time the pistons, etc., have been examined they were quite bright, clean and well lubricated. The valves also keep in good condition and require very little regrinding. I have been quite free from sparking troubles since using the above lubricants. Any dust that alights on the working parts is easily wiped off, whereas with other oils dirt stuck fast through gumming.

Very much smaller quantities of these oils ("Wilburine" and "Valvoline") about one-third to one-quarter, are required, which more than balances the extra first cost. The wearing surfaces are besides in a magnificent condition. These advantages —viz., high-class lubrication, freedom from deposit in cylinders, gum in bearings, absence of sparking troubles, are too important to be neglected by any motorist.

There is a tendency to use various greases, instead of oils. Engineers have over and over again proved that greases give much greater frictional losses than oils; with motor car engines and bearings the lubricant that gives the least possible friction is the best.

I have referred to the advantages the motorist gets. I will mention another advantage these oils have to those whom the motorist passes, viz., the absence of the fried-fish-shop smell so often noted. Several persons have been very much struck by the absence of smell; even when the car has been standing for some time with the engines running, no trace of offensive odour has been apparent to the bystanders.

I mention these experiences, having no interest in the Valvoline Oil Co., that others may be benefited and save themselves trouble and their neighbours some annoyance.

STAMPEDES OF HORSES.

THAT was a curious but by no means unprecedented mishap which prevented the 8th Hussars from taking part in the autumn manœuvres in Essex. The home papers told us that one of the troop horses having broken a leg, the veterinary-surgeon decided to destroy him with a revolver as he stood, or lay, in the lines. The shot must have been fired while it was still dark, for it is difficult to imagine that troop horses would be panic-stricken by the discharge of a pistol in daylight. However that may be, the discharge caused instant panic and all but three of the 500 horses belonging to the 8th Hussars tearing up their picketting gear and bolting. The inevitable ensued: the terrified horses swept through the camp killing and injuring themselves and infecting every horse they approached, ed with their own alarm until a mob of over a thousand animals was scouring over the country, broken up into mobs which rushed blindly as stampeding horses do into every obstacle that happened in their way. A drove of about 200 rushed into the sea by Southampton Harbour: another mob jammed itself in the narrow Bargate, which most people know, who have been through Southampton: while a third mob headed for Aldershot by Winchester. Many of the horses were drowned or otherwise killed themselves: a train load of injured had to be sent to Aldershot for treatment: and exhausted or dying horses were collected from the roadsides in scores. Altogether about two-thirds of those which broke away were killed or injured. We regret to read, further, that many men were more or less gravely hurt by the stampede through the camp.

This constitutes about the worst case of stampede among horses on record. Perhaps it would be unfair to blame the veterinary-surgeon whose pistol shot was the primary cause of the incident. He no doubt reasoned that the troop horses, broken to fire, would take no notice of the flash and report, and that he might safely adopt this means of killing the disabled beast. We have assumed that the shot was fired in darkness, if it were, the panic is what might have been expected: troop horses in England are not accustomed to hear shots at night, and every one who has any acquaintance whatever with horses knows how nervous they are at night, more particularly under new conditions. Here are horses used to the seclusion of a stable, brought out on the march and picketted in the open. Every sound, we may say, is new to them, and a noise otherwise perfectly familiar takes a strangeness and novelty that is alarming. Even in daylight such panic is not inexplicable: a shot fired in the lines is a different thing from a shot or shots fired under circumstances where the horses have learned to expect them just as the horse which regards motor-cars in town with indifference, evinces often the greatest fear of a car meeting it on a quiet country road.

The Southampton stampede differs in one respect from others we can recall, in that the cause was on the surface: there was no doubt what produced the panic: quite different were the "Cove Common Panics" of 1871 which attracted a great deal of interest, and the true cause of which has never, so far as we are aware, been discovered till this day. The manœuvres of that year were, if we mistake not, the first to be held on an extensive scale: among the cavalry regiments engaged was the 1st Life

Guards who, on the 30th August, pitched camp on Cove Common, picketting their horses in the way which had then been but recently introduced, with a peg and shackle securing the off fore and near hind leg. The panic occurred soon after dark when the officers were in the mess tent: and every horse, save the few whose owners had time to run to their heads, drew his picket pegs, and joined in the stampede. An incident of the rush was the action of a turnpike keeper on the Farnham Road. Hearing the thunder of hoofs and seeing riderless horses dash past his cottage, he ran out and shut the gate in the face of the mob. The turnpike gate was by no means a weak one: an outcome perhaps of the detestation in which these things were held when first established when it was a popular feat to smash up or destroy the "pike gate." These obstructions were always very strongly built. The gate in question, however, went to pieces like match wood before the rush of the heavy Life Guards troop horses. A searching enquiry was made into the cause of the stampede, but nothing definite could be ascertained: some of the men had seen a couple of geese wandering near the line, and it was thought that horses whose work lies in the London Streets might easily have been alarmed by the unfamiliar sight of the big white birds: another suggestion was that a fox might have found his way into the lines and frightened the horses: but as we have said nothing conclusive was discovered.

Three nights passed without incident: night guards were strengthened, officers remained on duty all night in the lines, and special care was taken to make the gear secure. On 3rd September the Life Guards were joined on the Common by the Bays and the 10th Hussars. Forwarned the officers of these regiments took special precautions against panic, and thanks to these the results of the stampede which did take place were not serious. The singular and mysterious thing was that again the cause of the panic could not be traced: a sudden access of fear swept over the lines of all three regiments, and about 160 broke away: others flung themselves down in their struggles to escape, and some were injured. Those that broke away travelled fast and far, but by great good luck there were no casualties, save to three horses of the Bays which killed themselves. After this second stampede the animals were carefully watched. It was observed that during the whole time the regiments remained on Cove Common they displayed symptoms of nervousness, particularly during the first hours of darkness. It may have been that having once been alarmed, the infection spread to new arrivals, and that all the animals were continually on the look out for some strange sound, sight or smell which terrified them: but when in course of the manœuvres Cove Common was left behind and the horses were picketted on new camping grounds, there was no further trouble.

Similarly obscure, and more remarkable in that it took place in broad daylight was the stampede which occurred a good many years ago in a dragoon regiment which was on the march in Southern India. The regiment had camped about half a mile from a large tank, and in the evening the men took the horses, bare back, from the lines, squadron by squadron, to water them. The first squadron were drinking when suddenly they threw up their heads, dashed out of the water and stampeded: meeting the second squadron on the way to the tank they dashed through these and carried with them most of the horses they did not knock down, through the lines sweeping up more horses and away into the desert. As usual the runaways split up in mobs and took different routes. In all seventy horses broke away, and of these fifty were recovered by ten o'clock next day: none had gone less than 15 miles, some very much further. Four horses were not recovered for upwards of a fortnight, and then only by employing native trackers who pursued them for hundreds of miles. Inquiry could discover no reason whatever for the panic: none of the men had seen so much as a water snake in the tank: and whether it was a case of one horse taking alarm and communicating his terror to the rest in the mysterious way panic is communicated: or whether again, it was some strange smell which would not be appreciable to human nostrils, but which frightened the whole squadron at once could never be ascertained. Mons. Emile Zola, in one of the most vivid passages of a terribly graphic book, has described the stampedes of riderless and starving horses after Sedan. His descriptions bear the impress of accuracy in every word, and they serve to show that under given conditions the state of panic may continue for days together.

It goes without saying that cattle are just as liable to panic as horses: are perhaps even more easily alarmed. The author of a remarkable book on the experience of a cowboy driving thousands of oxen on a march of some 2,000 miles from Southern Texas to the fatting pastures, told how such a trifle as the stumble of a horse while jogging round the resting mob, or the striking of a match is enough to cause a stampede. The only difference is that men well mounted can manage to keep the flying drove of horned beasts together and eventually round them up, while with stampeding horses their greater speed and staying power makes it impossible to stop the rush or control them in any way: they must be left to go on till they stop from sheer exhaustion, or, to use the hunting term get "pounded" by an impassable wall or other obstacle. It is a curious feature of panic among horses that if thus brought to a stand by such a chance they almost immediately recover from their fright: appearing to ask themselves and one another what all the trouble is about: while the arrival of a man seems welcome, and helps greatly to restore their courage and composure.

This has hardly been a cricket veterans, year at home. Mr. A. P. Lucas has only played once or twice. Mr. Murdoch has not done as well as last year when he had an average of 35, and was high up in the list. Nor has W. Gunn approached his last year's record. Dr. Grace played an innings of over a hundred in his birthday match, but even he is at last beginning to show signs of falling off, although one can never guess what he may do in another season. Mr. Newham has not played much, but is as capable as ever of keeping up an end. Lord Hawke still holds his own, and this season he has played several fine innings when his side was in great difficulties.

Sporting Notes.

WE draw attention to an alteration in certain of the conditions and dates connected with the Dibrugarh Races, the programme of which appeared in our issue of 22nd ultimo. For example the value of The Assam Bank Tournament Cup is Rs. 600 and not Rs. 350. Entries for the Planters' Plate close on the 19th January and not on the 31st as originally set forth. An advertisement regarding these changes appears further on.

The final game in the Poona Open Polo Tournament, which had been postponed owing to rain stopping play on the 27th ultimo, was played off on the 30th when the Scouts beat the 33rd Cavalry by eight goals and three subsidiaries to one goal.

Pretty Polly has, up-to-date, won her owner £31,692 for her fifteen wins.

The Burma Polo Association Tournament will probably be held in Mandalay between the 10th and 20th November.

A full report of the Mussoorie Meeting appears among our race reports to-day. A rather curious incident occurred on the second day, during the running of the Arab Handicap. Mr. C. Fitch's ch a h Bend Or, after the first lap, was seen to stagger and shut up completely a few strides further on, and it was found, on examination, that he had broken his off fore in more than one place. He was not shot; his owner having some hope of setting the leg and using the unfortunate pony for stud purposes: at least so we are told.

The Poona Horse Show of 1904 was, on the whole, a success, the number of entries being large and the quality of exhibits of a high order. The ground was, however, awkward and altogether inadequate for the requirements. The rings were cramped and horses had little opportunity of showing freedom being jumbled one on to the tail of the other. There was considerable dissatisfaction at the judging in not a few classes, but popular feeling reached a climax in the pony jumping competition in which the public verdict was for Colonel Kettlewell's Luxury who fenced a faultless round in the most brilliant style; Major Anderson's Freda, a well known performer being but little behind, two or three others doing excellent rounds. To everyone's astonishment the judge asked neither of the two named to go a second time and awarded first prize to General Mahon's Simon Pure who did a safe, but decidedly sticky first round. Great, too, was the wonder when the blue rosette was given to Mr. Bleach's Lady Cheltenham who hit the wall and twice struck the post and rails in each instance sending the top rail flying! It is curious to note that in the Horse Competition on the very next day Simon Pure went a purler on to his head over the bush fence while Freda, the spurned, won the Horse Jumping outright from an exceptionally fine lot of jumpers. Judging of such a fantastic description and so contrary to public opinion (and public opinion round an Indian show ring when so strongly held and so freely expressed is not likely to be wrong) must mar the popularity of any show and the committee would do well to avoid the selection of any judge who holds faddist views so opposed to those of the large majority of horsemen. In the Horse Competition the verdict was no less free from adverse criticism as the claims of a magnificent fencer in Mr. W. Anderson's

Gossip were wholly ignored. It was unfortunate the lack of strict punctuality rendered it impossible to hold so interesting an event as the Champion Stone Wall which many were looking forward to with pleasure. Apart from these little drawbacks which fell short of perfection the show was a decided success, the class of animals of an unusually high order, the prizes most generously handsome and the attendance good and the thanks of the public are due to all those gentlemen who took so much trouble to provide two most pleasant afternoon's amusement. A list of the prize winners appears elsewhere.

The Poona Senior Polo Tournament was scarcely as great a success as was at one time hoped for, only four teams eventually coming to the scratch, two of whom obviously had not the slightest chance of success and the final set to was left to the local champions the 33rd Cavalry and the team of sporting visitors calling themselves the "Scouts." Ill fortune attended the tournament, as on the day appointed for the final after two chukkers were played with the result that the Scouts obtained the useful lead of a goal and 3 subsidiaries when torrential rain put an effectual stop to proceedings, the polo ground becoming a veritable lake. Play had consequently to be renewed on Friday morning at 9-30 in intense and sultry heat. In the meanwhile Major Wogan Browne of the 33rd fell sick and his place was filled, and as events proved was admirably filled, by Mr. Passey who had shown dashing form in the junior tournament. After the brief display on the previous day it must have required a very whole hearted adherent of the Cavalry to believe strongly in their chance of ultimate victory as the Scouts clearly held them all the time with ease. This subsequent events, proved ; as though a reference to the Polo Association resulted in the game having to be re-started afresh the Scouts soon put matters beyond any further doubt and obtaining a goal and a subsidiary in the first round slowly, but surely, increased their lead till the seventh chukker ended in their favour by no less than 8 goals and 3 subsidiaries to a single goal. The game was not, however, nearly so one-sided as these results would tend to show, and the Cavalry played with the utmost dash up to the very last moment and long after it was impossible that victory could be theirs. For the victors Captain F. Guest played one of the finest back games seen on this ground for some time I imagine, while the Rajah Saheb of Rutlam played quite brilliantly hitting with wonderful precision and strength. Mr. Grenfell was a veritable thorn in the side of Duffadar Aliar Khan the well known back of the Cavalry, while Mr. Herbert, a local player who kindly took the place of Captain Cameron, disabled by a recently broken collar bone, played a capital game throughout. The 33rd, one and all, played a losing game in the pluckiest and most determined manner, galloping hard from start to finish, and were perhaps beaten more by the marked superiority of the winning team's ponies than anything else.

The Naini Tal week, which ended last Saturday, was a great success. The polo tournament resulted in a win for the 3rd Skinner's Horse who beat the Civil Service "A" team by five goals to four goals one subsidiary. The Gymkhana Hockey Cup was won by the Diocesan School which beat St. Joseph's College by a goal to nil.

Many and cruel are the devices resorted to by horsedealers in order to enable them to dispose of their animals to uninitiated buyers ; but the latest case, which comes from Burnley, is one of the most revolting we have heard of. The crust of a hoof had been cut down to the quick, and a veterinary surgeon, who gave evidence, said this was a practice known as "levelling." When it was found that an animal was lame in one foot a certain class of dealers purposely lamed it in the other, to make it "go on the level," to deceive buyers. The magistrate who heard the case said if the defendant took all the nails off his fingers and then walked on his fingers he would be suffering the same agony he had caused this horse. It was a pity he could not receive the same punishment, but he was sentenced to three months' hard labour and ordered to pay £3 4s. costs—a sentence all too lenient.

An amusing story is going the rounds in shooting circles concerning the late Lord Leicester. His lordship was entertaining a shooting party, and overnight the talk turned upon shooting accidents. One of the guests declaimed with much energy against the careless gunner, and vowed that if a man shot him he would not scruple to pepper him in return. Next day, as luck would have it, his lordship had the ferocious gentleman shooting next to him, and as the guns were popping away merrily and the sport was at its height, a yell was heard, and the truculent guest was seen to fling down his gun and hold his leg. Rubbing the injured member, he looked round fiercely and shouted to his host, "Coke, was that you?" "Yes," replied his lordship, at the same time placing his gun to his shoulder ; "I believe it was. I have got the other barrel here." The guest did not carry out his threat.

This season has seen not only the grouse records broken in England, but also in Wales, by driving parties. We learn that on Mr. Wynne-Corrie's moors of Penycae Hill, near Ruabon, in Wales, Mr. Wynne-Corrie and nine other guns, including Lord Harlech, Lord Kenyon, Lord Trevor, Sir O. Wakeman and Mr. P. Laming, shot 1,356 grouse on the first day's driving and 1,346 grouse on their second day—bags which are believed to have been hitherto unsurpassed in Wales by grouse-driving parties in one day's shooting. While records are this year being broken in England and Wales, the old records stand in Scotland both for dogging and driving, the first having been made sixty years ago by Colonel Campbell, of Monzie in Perthshire, and the second by the Mackintosh, at Moyhall, Invernessshire. The other records still standing are Sir Frederick Milbank's 728 grouse in eight drives and 190 grouse in a single drive to his own gun in 1872, and Lord Walsingham's 1,058 grouse to his own gun by driving in one day in 1888. These are the existing grouse records, and those of partridge shooting may now well be added. These are Lord de Grey's 240 partridges in one drive, the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh's bag of 780 partridges to his own gun in one day at Elvedon in 1876, and Lord Ashburton's bag of 1,458 partridges to his party of six guns in one day at the Grange, in Hampshire, in 1897.

The twentieth century has revived in a novel form the ancient sport of hawking and falcon flying. Highways and by-ways of Normandy are filled, says the Figaro, with merry troops of motor cars, whose tenants carry hooded falcons on their wrists. From Dieppe and down the valley of the Dun, on the plateau of Veules les Roses, the sport has become immensely popular. Old books are being consulted for hints, and everything done to make the pastime exactly like that of our ancestors. The birds, quite unaffected by the speed of the vehicles, or the tooting of the horns, are as ready to return to the owner's leather-clad wrist as though he rode the charger of flesh, bone and hide, instead of a steel and iron one.

The game laws are very strict in Johore. A Malay man was fined 100 dollars lately for killing two snipe at Sekarama, a place somewhere near the Pahang boundary. He is now in gaol for six months as an alternative to payment.

"Talking of strange food and baits for fish," says "Spinning Minnow" in the Bath Herald, "once upon a time an honest angler went out a-fishing. He was an unmethodical man, and had provided no lunch, so was perforce obliged to take the food the gods supplied in the shape of the remains of a beefsteak and onions he had for dinner the previous day. While eating his frugal meal down by the river side, he flung in a few strips of the fried onion, when he noticed a goodly-sized tench come up and eagerly devour it, although it would not take the angler's lures. In about three or four days more our fisherman was once again fishing at the same spot when he saw a tench, which proved to be the one he had seen there last, swimming towards him with something in its mouth, which the scaly carefully deposited on the bank. and then stayed in mid-stream till the angler had picked it up and examined it. It proved to be a fair-sized raw onion that had evidently fallen in the river from a neighbouring garden, and which the sagacious tinca vulgaris, not liking the taste of a raw onion as well as one cooked, evidently wanted the angler to take home and fry for his tenchship's dinner." Next please.

Here it is: "It is about a poor blind angler on the Broads who can find his way along the water side, select his swims, adjust his tackle, bait his hook, make a cast, and tell when he has ever so small a nibble. The explanation of this seemingly incredible performance is that the blind angler has cultivated to the highest degree his other senses, especially that of hearing. Now listen. One of the stories recorded of him is about an angler who placed his rod on the bank with the line in the water near the blind fisherman and moved away to fetch some of his impedimenta. He was quickly recalled by the blind man, who told him there was a fish at his bait! The angler returned, observed the float quivering, and found that a fish was nibbling. 'I thought so ; I could hear them!' said the blind man." And next?

well known importer of English ponies, a magnificent whip, and a real good fellow. Many old friends in Calcutta, will remember this Admirable Crichton of importers and join us in deploring his death.

Messrs. Rodda and Company, the well known gunmakers and importers of sporting appliances, have sent us a copy of their latest catalogue, a neat, comprehensive, and attractive publication of special interest to most of our readers.

It is proposed to hold the Burma Polo Association Tournament at Mandalay between 10th and 20th November, the conditions being probably much the same as those previously adopted for Commission Cup Tournaments viz., six chukkers of five minutes each, each team to be allowed thirteen ponies.

A letter from our old friend Mr. Fred. Greenhill, dated from Port Said, tells us that he is coming out to Calcutta again with another lot of specially selected English thoroughbreds. The shipment of twenty-three "Mr. Fred" considers to be "about as good as money can buy" so we shall be on the lookout for something super excellent. He continues—"they are the most classy horses that have ever been known to leave England for India or any other country (not excluding Australia) and are streets in front of the lot I brought out two years ago. There are two pairs of carriage horses that must take first and second prizes at the Tollygunge Show, and the most perfect saddle and harness horses, hacks, chasers and ponies. One little pony, Mischief, is about as cunning as a wagon load of monkeys, took second prize at the Bexhill-on-Sea show and has since put in his time carrying Lord Curzon's children. The whole lot in short will open the eyes of Calcutta buyers, so you may tell them to follow the man who was in Cook's."

In drawing attention to Messrs. Bell and Company's advertisement among our Sporting announcements this week we may mention that recent importations by this firm include such rare good ponies as Fun, Gordon, Chatterbox, Almont, and Miss Oracle.

The Gracchus, which sailed this week for Australia, took from Calcutta, the well-known turf disappointment, Friar Tuck, the brown English horse, who goes to Tom Uphill's Pranjip Park Farm. His destination is the stud at which he ought to do well; his sire was Friar's Balsam, a Middle Park Plate winner, and his dam was by the famous Galopin. He will probably serve Uphill's Busy Bee filly as a lead off. The same steamer took down the following broodmares—Perfect, Granny, Actress, and Sweet Talk.

Athletic Notes.

THE final match in the Rangoon Rugby Football Competition was won by the Gymkhana who beat the Garrison Club by two goals and two tries to two tries.

The Bechtler Hockey Tournament at Mussoorie was won by the "A" team, St. George's College, who beat the "B" team by two goals to one.

Complete results of the Northern India Racquets Tournament will be found further on.

The Durand Football Tournament was brought to a conclusion on the 30th ultimo when the Black Watch and the North Staffordshire Regiment met in the final, a splendid game resulting in a win for the latter by two goals to nil. Lady Ampthill presented the trophies to the winners, and His Excellency the Viceroy made a short speech in which he said that the North Staffords had thoroughly deserved their victory in the magnificent play which had been witnessed in the final and they fully sustained the reputation of the north country for football. He specially congratulated the goalkeeper and backs of the Staffords upon their long kicking, and went on to say that the regiment, in its victory over the Black Watch, for the Blue Ribbon of Indian Football, had turned the tables upon the opponents, who, in 1898, had beaten it in the finals by exactly the same two goals to love. The Black Watch, he said, had made a gallant fight, and throughout the tournament had had the hardest of the work, having had to meet the Royal Irish, who won the Durand Tournament last year, the Gordons, who won the football trophy at the Delhi Durbar, and the Welsh Fusiliers, who had also played a splendid game. As the North Staffords had sustained the reputation of the north of England, so the Queen's Royal West Surreys had sustained that of the south. The present tournament was noticeable for a record number of its entries, for the splendid weather, in which it was played, and for the growing popularity it displayed. In evidence of which His Excellency referred to the sporting gift by the members of the Government of India and Secretariat of an additional Challenge Cup. Up to the present only the Scotch Regiments, namely, the Black Watch and the Highland Light Infantry had won any Durand Football Challenge Trophy outright by three victories in succession. Being an Englishman himself, he hoped that an English team would be the next to repeat this performance. His sympathies, however, were also with the Scotch, and especially with the Black Watch, a regiment which had given him no less than two members of his staff, one of them being no less important a person than his Military Secretary. His Excellency went on to refer appreciatively to what Sir Edmund Elles had done to encourage the tournament, and referring to a remark made by the latter in his introductory words as President, in which he had said that the speaker was not unknown in the athletic world. Lord Ampthill said that this fact and the interest he took in soldiers, made the Durand Tournament appeal to him especially. He believed that such a competition, when played in a proper spirit, could do nothing but good. He was glad to recognise that this condition had been amply fulfilled in the present case, the whole of the play having been of a most sportsmanlike and gentlemanly character, a fact to which the services of the referee, Corporal Muddle, had materially contributed. His Excellency also congratulated the committee and their Honorary Secretary, Captain Onslaw, upon the success of the tournament.

At the Hampstead C.C. Sports last month, F. R. Spofforth, the famous old Australian, won the Throwing at the Wicket competition.

As a sport, bicycle racing has been dead for a good many years, but if it had not it would assuredly have been killed by the melancholy exhibitions which were witnessed at the so-called "world's championships" which are dealt with by "Cotter Pin" in our wheeling columns. Since the institution of banked tracks cycle racing has become nothing more than trick-riding, and many of the competitors in these contests seemed desirous of seeing how slowly they could possibly go for a greater part of the distance. One would think, too, that they had an understanding between themselves, for his opponents seemed to think they had been badly used when Ivor Lawson, in the two-kilometres' race, spurted half a mile from home, and stole a lead of fifty yards which they could never make up. The Englishmen had matters all their own way in the long-distance event, but Leon Meredith's fine performance is discounted by the circumstance that motor-pacing was allowed.

It is somewhat curious that E. H. D. Sewell, who has hardly ever been put on to bowl for Essex this season until two men have become thoroughly set, is very easily at the head of the Essex Club and Ground bowling averages. Sewell is also easily top of the batting averages with 6 innings, 1 not out, 451 runs, highest score 232, average 90·2. The records of the three chief bowlers in these matches are as follows:—

	O.	M.	R.	W.	Aver
Sewell ...	46·4	6	127	24	5·29
Reeves ...	177	42	504	35	14·4

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—Those of your readers who know how inconvenient and altogether unsuitable the present Bombay Gymkhana pavilion is, will be interested to learn that the executive committee has called for designs for a new pavilion which among other things is to include a billiard room, a card room, and a large clock in front. The site of the new pavilion will be the piece of ground to the south of the cricket pitch which will be a great convenience to cricketers and golfers and will do away with the necessity of pitching tents.

Polo players in Bombay have been turning out regularly for practice on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, but I have not heard anything further regarding the bumblepuppy tournament it is proposed to hold some time in October. Some of the players, I understand, are not very keen on the tournament idea and it may not be possible to make up the four teams mentioned in my notes a few weeks ago. Two players are crocked as the result of injuries at football and a third will be going on leave in October.

Gymkhana cricketers are looking forward to some good games this cold weather, especially during Christmas week. Captain J. G. Greig will be in Bombay with His Excellency the Governor's staff and H. Cheetham will be back from England where he has been on six months leave. Captain Bayford, also a member of the Governor's staff, will be another useful acquisition as will J. H. Du Boulay, I. C. S., the Governor's Private Secretary. We shall not, however, on the other hand, have the Langhornes or Major Carnegy here. Lieutenant A. P. Langhorne left last week for Delhi and Captain J. A. D. Langhorne proceeds to Aden this month. Major Carnegy leaves on the 12th instant for Poona with his regiment, the 121st Pioneers.

I regret to state that J. S. Milne has been obliged to abandon the idea of taking a team across to Calcutta during the Christmas holidays owing to the difficulty of getting together a sufficiently strong side.

Bombay hunting men are getting ready for the first run of the season which will take place in a few weeks and hunting prospects generally are spoken of as being more promising than has been the case for some years. A new huntsman in the place of Stacey, who died last year, has been secured, but where prospects are most promising is in the number of new members who have joined the Jackal Club.

The Bombay Gymkhana Racquets Tournament this cold weather will be more interesting than usual by reason of the number of players expected to compete who were in the front rank of public school players of their respective years. There is some talk of Jamsetjee, the Gymkhana marker and champion of India, making another trip to England. Want of the necessary funds to carry out the project will not stand in his way as Mr. D. J. Tata and other Parsee gentlemen are prepared to furnish the wherewithal.

The annual Bombay Golf week which commenced last Monday, was in a great measure spoiled by the arrival of a circus which proceeded to erect tents on the second green in the middle of the match. The second green is one of the best on the course and a new green, which had to be prepared at a moment's notice, proved very rough. "The week," it is significant, never attracts players from outside Bombay but this is hardly to be wondered at considering the difficulties under which the game is played. The results of the two days' scratch competition against "Bogey" hardly saw the crack players at their best for the "Colonel's" score, which was put at 39 for the first day and 40 for the second, though somewhat low should not have offered insuperable difficulties.

The Bombay Rugby Football Tournament ended on the 1st instant in a win for the Welsh Regiment who beat the Glosters by a dropped goal and 2 tries (10 points) to a goal. A report of the tournament will be found in our Football columns.

The Annual General Meeting of the Caledonia Athletic Club was held on Saturday, 1st October, when the officers for the Club's athletic year were elected. Amongst other business, new and revised rules were passed and adopted. The Treasurer gave a very satisfactory financial statement. The Club had started on the year from last October with only a small membership and with an unsatisfactory balance sheet. But the energy and enterprise of the officials have been the means of trebling the list of members and, what is still more satisfactory, putting the affairs of the Club on a sound and good-going basis.

It was decided to hold the annual dinner on Friday, 28th instant. The officers elected are :—Captain of Cricket, Mr. J. H. Dimsdale (Re-election) ; Vice-Captain of Cricket, Mr. E. O. Elliot ; Honorary Treasurer, Mr. J. H. Dimsdale (Re-election) ; Honorary Secretary, Mr. G. V. Wade (Re-election) ; Joint Ground Secretaries, Messrs. G. V. Wade and R. J. Davis. We wish the Club all success during the ensuing season.

Mr. E. E. Coombs, the Bombay Gymkhana fast bowler, by taking seven wickets for 47 runs in the match against the Y.M.C.A. on Saturday, brought his total number of wickets for the monsoon season to 81 for just under 10 runs apiece ; is a record for the Gymkhana, no bowler in a single season ever having previously taken more than 60 wickets.

With sincere regret, which will be shared by hundreds of people in Calcutta, we heard yesterday of the death of Mr. E. J. King who was, up to a few years ago, a prominent figure in business, volunteering, and social circles here. He was a rare good athlete in his day and many a good race stood to his credit in the good old days when the Ballygunge C. C. Sports was our big annual athletic fixture. Ofttimes in by gone years have we toed the mark with "the Monarch," in many a hard tug-of-war have we felt his brawn and muscle doingi ts full share on the rope behind us, for E. J. was always "anchorman." He will long be remembered as the officer who did more than any other for the old Calcutta Naval Artillery Volunteers and what a fine figurehead he was in his uniform ! He resigned in disgust, and to the great regret of his brother officers and men, when a new order of things came in, but not before he had earned his V. D. Generous to a fault, he was a most liberal patron of sport and volunteering. We recall his readiness with his cheque book and his almost boyish enthusiasm many and many a time when we have taken round the hat in aid of some sporting or amateur soldiering event. Alas ! a few years ago a great and terribly sudden calamity overtook him, his health was completely shattered and his retirement from India soon followed. Recent news of him said he was much better, so that the announcement of his death at Southsea has come as a big shock to his friends in Calcutta.

Fishing.

THE FOOD OF FISHES.

FOR a number of years past investigations have been carried on to ascertain the food consumed by the various kinds of fish, and very interesting are the results. Nearly all fishes live on marine animal food, preying either upon weaker members of their own family or upon animals of lower organisation. The two great ends of existence from a fish's point of view are to eat and to avoid being eaten. Hence the conditions of life under the waters, so to speak, are dreadful in the extreme. When the vastness of the ocean population is considered, and it is realised that nearly every fish devours a score or several scores of other living things daily, it is obvious that the slaughter which goes on without ceasing is appalling in its immensity. Fortunately for themselves, it may be inferred, fishes have a poorly developed nervous system, and probably the fear of death gives them little trouble. Of course, as we go down the scale of marine life we reach a class of animals that live entirely on vegetable matter. But even among the most highly organised are vegetable feeders—not wholly vegetarian, but living on a mixed diet. A well known scientist, Mr. Cunningham, classifies the fishes, as those which prey on other fishes only, those which also prey on lower marine animals, those which eat the lower animals alone, and those which partake of a mixed animal and vegetable diet, the last being few in number.

The ways in which fishes feed are various. Some, for instance, hunt only at night, others feed in the day time. Some lie in ambush, others pursue their prey. Some feed at the bottom of the sea, others at the surface, and others still in mid waters. Those which live on very small fry have curious straining organs, by means of which they separate the food from the immense quantity of water which passes through. Among them are the herring, pilchard, and sprat. The plaice, which feeds mainly on shell fish, has a powerful crushing apparatus in its throat. So has the catfish. Some, like the spotted dog-fish hunt by smell, and are equally successful night or day. Mackerel and whiting hunt by sight, and therefore in the day time only. Then some of the cod family have been liberally dealt with by Nature, for they can use both sight and smell in capturing prey, while their chin is armed with a barbel to bring in the aid of touch. This barbel permits hunting at night, and it is then the ling and the rockling seek their prey. Those curious markings on the backs of flat fishes are designed to aid them in the capture of food as well as in concealing themselves from enemies. They lie on the bottom, sometimes partly buried in gravel or sand, and when a desirable victim comes near it is pounced upon and devoured. The sole lies quiet all day, having the power to assimilate its color to that of the ground, but at night it makes full use of its acute sense of smell. Its curious habit is to tap the ground with the side of its head in search of shrimps and worms. The angler fish, some times a monster six feet long, will lie close to a weed-covered rock quite undistinguishable from it, until his prey approaches, when he will seize it with the rapidity of a flash.

Red mullet are armed with barbels with which they rake up worms and other ground denizens. The turbot will cover itself with sand, and become the very color of the ground. There it will wait patiently until its prey comes by, when it will rise quickly and seize it. One would suppose that a fish thus stationary would not obtain any great abundance of food. But the fact, that as many as sixty small fishes have been found in the stomach of a turbot, shows how the ocean teems with life. Perhaps the most curious prowler of the ocean is the John Dory, so called, who takes advantage of his extraordinary flatness to approach his prey unperceived. This fish swims in an upright position with its side turned towards the prey —a herring or pilchard usually—and so small is its antero posterior diameter that it can steal quite close without being observed. When it gets within striking distance there is no escape. Undoubtedly the weaker fishes' wits, if they possess any wits, have need to be sharp. If in the stomach of a single turbot sixty sand eels were found—that being probably only a fraction of the day's diet—it seems a mystery how the vast multitudes of marine animals obtain sufficient food. A single shoal of herrings or mackerel will require millions of their favorite prey every day in the year. The food of a whale should be estimated by the hundred-weight. And not only does the ocean supply food to its own denizens, but it feeds countless millions of sea-birds. Ultimately the whole of the pabulum must be furnished by the vegetables which grow in the waters and on the shores. Marine plants are, indeed, extraordinarily abundant and various. Muddy shores are covered with grass-wrack ; on the rocks is a thick carpet of green, red and olive weeds ; but of greatest importance as food are the microscopic plants which multiply so amazingly as to color immense areas of the ocean surface, or make the water turbid to a considerable depth. A great quantity of vegetable matter is also carried by the rivers to the sea. On this food live the lower forms of animal life, themselves very often of microscopic minuteness. The periwinkle and other shell fish browse on the weeds of the inshore waters.

In the ocean are great quantities of foraminifera which feed on diatoms and other minute vegetable matter. The bivalve molluscs live on diatoms, foraminifera and other such things insignificant in size, but almost infinite in number. Scallops, oysters, mussels, moving scarcely at all, suck in continuously a stream of water, from which they strain off these tiny articles of food. In the mud and sands are myriads of worms, molluscs and crustaceans which form the food of animals higher in the scale. On the bottom of the sea the ground-fishes find their food—starfishes, oysters, clams, mussels, shrimps, hermit crabs, razorshells, cockles, etc. Most of these are practically stationary, and many lie quite exposed, so that, except for their defensive armour, they are easy prey. But floating in the water is also an immense quantity of food. If the stronger fishes feed on their weaker brethren, they do not hesitate to swallow the lower orders of sea life as well. The larvæ of shrimps, lobsters, crabs, hermit crabs etc., rise to the surface, being decimated on the way by the smaller fishes and almost entirely devoured before it is time to descend again. The spawn of herrings is such a dainty that great number of cod and haddock, etc., follow the spawning herrings and grow fat upon it. One authority, Mr. McIntosh, states that eighty boxes of haddocks have been trawled and that the stomach of every fish was found distended by the eggs of herring. The cod itself will give off as many as five million eggs of which all but a score possibly are sure to be eaten by other fish. Then there are countless numbers of little copepods said to be found everywhere. On food of this kind some fishes live mainly or altogether, such as sprats, pichards and herrings. Thus every kind of lower animal is eaten by one fish or another. But every fish, except the strongest, is also eaten by another fish. The mackerel prefers sprat and other small fish. The brill eats sprats and sand-eels. The whiting eats herrings, but is equally satisfied with a member of its own tribe. The pollack eats sprats and gurnard. The ling preys on gurnard, haddock, seabah, and mackerel. The hake, a night-hunter, devours mackerel, herrings, and anchovies. The skate feeds on whiting, mackerel and pollack. The spiny dog-fish on herrings, sprats, whiting, and mackerel ; the eel on almost anything it can get ; while the female conger will appease her hunger with one of the males. The cuttle fish or squid, preys on a great variety of fishes, and also forms the chief part of the sperm whale's food. Among the fishes which prey on the lower animals are the cod, plaice, sole, haddock, turbot, flounder, striped bass, and grey gurnard. The plaice eats cockles, scallops, lug-worms, ragworms, sea-mice, and razorshells swallowing the smaller razorshells entire and dragging the larger from their shells. The sole lives chiefly on worms ; the cod on squids, anemones, swimming crabs ; and the turbot and grey gurnard on a variety of crustaceans and molluscs

London, Friday, 16th September 1904.

THE Essex manœuvres have come to an end with the re-embarkation of the invading force at Clacton. An indulgent public took them seriously for as long as it could, making believe more than ever did Marchioness over orange peel and water: but there is a limit to all things: and when the invaders marched recklessly on Colchester without provisions or transport or anything else: when hostile armies had to pretend not to know of one another's existence while there was nothing but a hedge between; and when about seven-tenths of the ground was closed in the interests of the farmers, it was felt that the business was not sham fighting but sham sham fighting from which nobody was likely to profit and might be brought to a close as soon as it decently could.

The most interesting incident of the war this week has been the apparition of the Russian transport Lena at 'Frisco which provides Uncle Sam with just the same nice problem which has befallen other neutrals to solve. The Lena happened into 'Frisco with boilers in need of repair: she had strained them, we gather, in the ardent pursuit of her duty which was to arrest American ships which might be carrying contraband of war. Survey indicated that the boilers could not be made seaworthy without putting the Lena into a condition of efficiency superior to that in which she left Vladivostock: and the latest is that her captain proposes to dismantle the ship, thus relieving America of a difficult task. The billigerents about Mukden appear to be resting and small blame to either of them. There are rumours now concerning the failure of provisions at Port Arthur.

The Baltic Fleet left Kronstadt on Saturday for the Far East after receiving the Imperial benediction and symbols indicative of its immediate patronage by the Czar: and it got as far as Reval, at the mouth of the Gulf of Finland, which is about 200 miles: and there it is reported to remain pending the arrival of certain information from the seat of war. I confess to some curiosity concerning the colliers from which the Fleet is to replenish its bunkers on the high seas en route to the Pacific. Have they or any of them started? If so where are they and how long are they going to wait? The exceeding benevolence of Germany's neutrality towards Russia is attracting some attention. It is averred that the Kaiser's Government made advances to the Czar whereby the latter was enabled, without anxiety, to denude the Russo-German frontier of troops and even to remove siege guns from certain frontier fortresses to supply Port Arthur, Liao Yang and other Manchurian garrisons. Every facility was given for the execution of Russian orders for war material at Essen and other factories more or less controlled by the German Government which further is kind enough to arrest and surrender Russian deserters. The failure of Admiral Prince Ukhtomsky,to take his ships to the German port of Kiao-chan when the last sortie from Port Arthur failed, is said be the reason of his supersession: preparations had been made to coal the Russian vessels with such expedition as would allow them to leave within the 24 hours limit. Altogether Germany seems to be sailing, or to have been sailing, uncommonly close to the wind.

His critics say that the Russian officer in Manchuria takes no interest in his business and loafs in cafés and haunts of more questionable character in the hour when the enemy is at the door. The Russian officer on his part seems to have grounds for complaint: a letter from one who was at Mukden on 20th July said that Transbaikalia was flooded with gendarmes who continued to arrive from home and pursued with unremitting vigour the task of searching the men's quarters and belongings for evidence of revolutionary leanings. "They are for ever prying after 'revolution'" says the writer. If this be true it is only in obedience to the notorious "secret" instructions which were promulgated a few weeks ago enjoining commanding officers to make surprise visits to privates' quarters and rummage for revolutionary literature. What an extraordinary condition of affairs it is!

The shipowner who carries contraband of war and omits to proclaim the fact from the main top before his crew "signs on" incurs responsibilities towards the crew under the Employers and Workmen Act. The case of the Cheltenham, which was captured by the Gromoboi and taken to Vladivostock in July, has furnished her German crew of nineteen men with cause of action against the vessel's owners. They sued for damages £10 each in compensation for their privations and the danger of sailing seas studded with mines: and they won their case at the Guildhall the Alderman holding that the owners knew the Cheltenham was carrying contraband (railway material) and the men did not. But supposing the case of a ship captured with what a Russian prize court and nobody else holds to be contraband of war—fish manure for instance—how does the unlucky shipowner stand towards his crew then?

The Discovery arrived from the Antarctic region on Saturday, after an absence of three years, to receive the welcome she deserves at Portsmouth; and yesterday saw her alongside in the East India Docks. The King with his inevitable sense of the right way to do things caused Commander Scott to be notified of his promotion as soon as he reached Portsmouth and ordered a new Polar Medal to be struck which is to be granted to the officers and men of the Discovery. The men are an excellent advertisement of the nutritive properties of seal meat on which they have been living: the provisions supplied from home were so bad that the crew left them alone; and to a man they are stouter than when they left. The Biographical Society entertains Captain Scott to-day; but into welcoming festivities I had better not enter; the atmosphere is one of dinner, toast, speech, and compliment.

The "outrage" in Westminster Abbey last Sunday seems to have been one of those deeds which pace Mr. Bernard Shaw and the Humanitarians would be best met by application of the birch-rod. An idiot who means to do mischief does not seek to accomplish his end with a couple of two-penny crackers, though he may have reckoned on creating a panic. Thanks to the good sense of the congregation in the North Transept where the explosions occurred, any alarm they created speedily subsided. A man who was in the Abbey says he thought somebody was firing at large with a revolver—I see Canon Duckworth formed the same idea—and though there was a rush from the North Transept, it stopped almost immediately and people at once calmed down. Some half-destroyed writing was found which purported to connect the Kensit movement with the matter: but Mr. Kensit's disclaimer is frankly accepted.

How far ought the public character of the Lord Mayor of London's office to extend to his domestic family? The question is suggested by the strenuous endeavours of some papers to make journalistic capital out of the misfortune that has befallen the Lord Mayor's daughter. Miss Ritchie was to have been married on Monday to a Mr. McCalman, and on Saturday evening a relative of Mr. McCalman called at the Mansion House with a letter for the Lord Mayor which letter informed him that Mr. McCalman saw reason for not marrying Miss Ritchie and for withdrawing to the Continent. With discretion Mr. McCalman left no definite address, as Miss Ritchie has male relatives who might see reason to follow him with cutting whips. One ha'penny paper affirms that its representative was accorded an interview with the lady's brother, but this statement I find it difficult to believe. The knife-and-boot-boy at the Mansion House (if there be so humble a functionary in an establishment so august) could have told the interviewer that Mr. McCalman was expected to lunch on Saturday and did not turn up and that Miss Ritchie remained in her room. Mr. McCalman's "reasons" for his conduct are known only to himself and those to whom he thought proper to confide them. They must be reasons of exceptional soundness to extenuate. He has an appointment in the Egyptian Irrigation Department: I hope it may be correct to write "had."

The Lord Chamberlain has promulgated new Regulations to secure the greater safety of audiences in theatres. The authority of the London County Council ceases: no longer does the London County Council enjoy power to control licences and the granting or withholding of theatre licences now rests entirely with the Lord Chamberlain whose permission is required before any structural alteration may be made. A new and stricter rule is made as regards smoking: it is prohibited in the auditorium: this will be a blow to the music hallite. The newer theatres give the occupant of stall or dress circle seat as much room as he or she can reasonably require, but the new Regulations provide that each person must be allotted a space at least two feet from back to front and eighteen inches wide. I could name at least one West End theatre which will have to reduce the money the house "holds" in obeying this order. A new clause says that masquerades or public balls may be held in a theatre provided the consent of the Lord Chamberlain be procured, such functions were not allowed at all under the old Regulations.

"The Catch of the Season" is a musical comedy by Mr. Seymour Hicks (who plays the Duke) and Mr. Cosmo Hamilton: the Lyrics are by Mr. Charles Taylor and Mr. H. E. Haines and Evelyn Baker are answerable for the music. It is Cinderella modernised and furnished with accessories, notably a very small and ugly page-boy who answers to the name of Bucket and who is deeply, desperately, hopelessly in love with Cinderella—that is to say, with Angela. The first act is quite within the realm of the possible,—only it strikes one as a shade too modern to present a large "At Home" in Mayfair with all the women smoking cigarettes. The Duke of St. Jermyns is just arrived home and he is going to give a ball which is the topic of hour. Lady Crystal and her two daughters are going, but Angela, the step daughter, is not for reasons akin to those which sought to deny Cinderella a similar gratification. The Duke, however, has seen Cinderella at the school-room window every day for a week, and being a Duke of enterprise he walks into the school-room, shares Angela's bread and butter, tea, and avows his love. Then at the eleventh hour enter the fairy godmother in the person of Lady Caterham with a bevy of dress maker's girls who dress Angela for the ball. She is to go as Lady Caterham's Irish cousin Molly O'Halloran. Act II is the ball: a mad ball I promise you! Saw you ever a peer capering round his own premises singing a catchy song with all the women folk after him? Then we have a curious scene with ladies on pink cushions, playing with toy butterflies and nets: very pretty but passing strange. Act I is musical comedy and good musical comedy: Act II lapses into riotous farce: but it served the Vaudeville audience and the piece had the reception which spells success. What matter if Angela took an Irish accent with her Irish alias and expanded from the subdued school-room Miss into the seasoned beauty, self-sure and collected in the hour? What if the Duke did fail to recognise her and made love to Miss O'Halloran in place of Angela his adored of two hours agone? These be the stock in trade of musical farce, and let them go. There is some comical dialogue and some of the songs are very charming: best is Angela's "I'll be a good little Girl"; though another solo "Can't you speak" runs it close. Very catchy and haunting is the Duke's song "Church Parade" and sung in that weird racket of a ball-room. Miss Lena Dare is Angela and the part fits her perfectly in Act I. Mr. William Gibson (Mr. Compton Coutts) with his ten Dana Gibson daughters was a valuable acquisition to the play. Miss Ethel Mathews and Miss Hilda Jacobson were the wicked but handsome sisters. Master A. Valchera as the lovelorn melodramatic buttons was inimitable. Miss Dare is tall, and Bucket is such a small boy: I really felt for him when he had to cease adoring Angela and go downstairs to answer the bell which announced the advent of his rival the Duke.

The dramatic event of the week was, of course, Mr. Beerbohm Tree's production of "The Tempest" at His Majesty's on Wednesday night. It was well received: an audience would be more than human and less than reasonable if the spectacle of a mediæval galley breaking up before its eyes to the accompaniment of the very best stage thunder and lightning failed to secure sympathetic attention at the outset: it is one of the most remarkable scenic efforts I have ever witnessed. Whether Mr. Tree's conception of "The Tempest" meets yours or mine or anybody else's is an open question. I must admit it never struck me that Caliban was a personage of such importance as to deserve interpretation by Mr. Tree himself: so it is however: a monster, tusked and hirsute but human enough; an object for pity in the concluding scene where we have him standing solitary on yellow sands gazing wistfully after the departing vessel that carries away from the island his gods worthy and the reverse, his glimpse of a higher order of things. Ferdinand and Miranda have their turn of love-making and very well they do it, though Miss Norah Kevin's coquetry struck me as a shade out of place: Mr. Basil Gill as Ferdinand was admirable. Mr. Lionel Brough was Trinculo and Mr. Louis Calvert Stephens; both were superb, and their entry brought new life to the play when Ferdinand and Miranda had taken a back seat and the arrival of the shipwrecked passengers kept the story in a state of suspended animation. Their appearance, of course, brings Caliban to the front and gives him the prominence he does not enjoy in the printed book. Ariel, delightfully and enthusiastically played by Miss Viola Tree, pervades the piece; which I presume is as it should be, as there is the atmosphere of enchantment to maintain. Concerning that atmosphere, by the way, Mr. Tree will none of those divers spirits in shape of dogs and hounds when the scene shifts to Prospero's Cave; nought so tame: his idea of spirits is that of weird uncanny monsters such as Mr. Reed gives us in Punch. Mr. William Haviland as Prospero was rather heavy: it goes without saying that the wronged Duke of Milan can't be made a cheerful character: but Mr. Haviland's reading of the part is slow and ponderous to tedium; had he solemnly wound up "and now my dear brethren" pulpit-wise, one would have felt the utterance quite in accord with his method of rolling out Prospero's speeches: he was more a Church Dignitary than a magician. There is "ballet with a purpose" (more than slightly reminiscent of pantomine, this) in which the most audacious of Cupids figures largely. Cupid caught the fancy of the house amazingly, and his persistence in using his bow were after Ceres had informed us that the chubby godlet had "broke his arrows" and had given up shooting only strengthened his claim to popularity. The whole play is a marvel of stage craft from the wonderful wreck scene down to Ariel's exit through the flies by some ingenious arrangement of wires: the scenic effects alone are enough to give the piece a long run.

The Post-Master-General contemplates the introduction of the V.-P.P. system for which a section of the public has long agitated. It would suit the tradesman dealing with an unknown customer to throw the work of collecting his account on the postman; but personally, I can't see that the innovation is very urgently needed. It is invaluable to residents in the mofussil, but with postal orders and post office orders at everyone's hand it does not seem very necessary in this country.

A Coroner, while holding an inquest a few days ago, protested against the regularity with which juries tack on the qualification "while of unsound mind" to a verdict of suicide. It is the charitable habit of juries to do this in about 299 cases out of 300, though there is no evidence whatever of insanity: the popular idea being that the suicide's remains will be refused Christian burial if a naked verdict of felo de se be returned: which is quite a mistake as the Coroner pointed out.

Some little time ago Mr. Pierrepont Morgan brought in Italy a remarkable vestment which was said to be of thirteenth century workmanship and he kindly lent it to the Victoria and Albert Museum. The authenticity of the garment has now been upheld by Signor Luca Beltrami who identifies it as the cope which Nicholas IV presented to Ascoli Pecino in 1288: it was stolen from the cathedral of that city two years ago, and the first receiver being arrested committed suicide. Signor Beltrami suggests that Mr. Morgan's proper course is to restore the cope to its lawful custodians; but it is understood that the eminent millionaire had already promised to do this.

Mr. Kipling has written a letter to Mons d'Humieres who translated his works into French. As far as the quotations published allow one to judge it is a letter worthy of the Imperialist poet who makes some singularly happy and unhackneyed remarks on the inter-relations of England and France. In a curious passage he explains the British taste for exercise as a necessity imposed upon us by the artificial conditions under which a crowded population must live in chastity. No doubt he could make out a plausible case for his view of the matter.

The War Office is arranging for the shipment of 50,000 of the new short rifles to India before the end of the current financial year that regiments first for service may be armed therewith.

Mussulman London wants a mosque and an architect has been commissioned to prepare plans for it.

A new, if not convincing, defence was offered by a bookmaker charged with street betting at Brierley-hill: he weighed 33 stone and was thus unable to do any sort of work. ONLOOKER.

Mr. Charles Greville, the Talleyrand of the Turf, seems to have occupied an enviable position. Through the interest of his grandfather he was appointed Secretary of Jamaica, and Clerk of her late Majesty's Privy Council—an office which he held for forty years. The two offices brought him upwards of £4,000 a year, besides his honorarium as manager of the Duke of York's racing stud.

At first, however, with all his cleverness, he does not appear to have been successful in his betting transactions. He used himself to tell an amusing story illustrating the difficulties in which he was occasionally landed in his early days.

Having lost £3,000, which he was unable to pay, he applied to his uncle, the Duke of Portland, for a loan of the money, and the Duke readily lent him the amount. As soon as Mr. Greville was in funds he put three brand-new Bank of England notes for £1,000 each in his pocket, and presented himself before his uncle to discharge the debt.

"Oh! no, Charles; keep the money by all means. It will bring you luck. I never meant it as a loan," said the Duke, good-naturedly.

Greville made some show of reluctance, and unluckily laid the notes on the table. He was quite sure, he used to say, that if he had offered a bundle of dirty notes or a cheque, the Duke would have refused to take the money. But bright, clean, crisp notes had a kind of fascination for his grace which he was unable to resist. He picked them up folded them neatly, and placed them in his pocket-book, saying—

"Well, well, Charles, since you insist upon it I'll take the money; but whenever you have a bad time come to me."

THE EGG-HUNTER IN LAPLAND.

THE appearance of this attractive and beautifully illustrated volume affords an excellent instance of the fascination which egg-collecting exercises on its votaries. After having experienced in 1895 all the hardships and difficulties inseparable from an expedition to such a desolate and inhospitable country as Lapland, to say nothing of having been nearly eaten alive by mosquitoes, the author took another trip to the same district in 1899, and repeated his performance in 1901 and again in 1903. It is to these last three trips that the present volume is devoted, Mr. Pearson having given his experiences of 1895 in the earlier work entitled "Beyond Betsora Eastward." To anyone contemplating a trip to Russian Lapland it may be pointed out that the expenses are heavy and the travelling, both by sea and land, difficult. For instance, according to the author, a special vessel is a sine qua non, and as the steam yacht employed by Mr. Pearson was found unsuited to negotiate the ice in the White Sea, it would appear that a wooden whaler would be the best type of craft for the trip. Then, again, it must be borne in mind that although fine salmon are taken at times, both the fishing and shooting are described by the author as indifferent, big game being apparently for the most part wanting, although wolves may be met with, and we should think there ought to be bear and perhaps an occasional glutton and lynx, although the country may be too devoid of trees for the latter animal. It must likewise be borne in mind that in ordinary seasons the country is wrapt in a snowy pall till well into May, while in late seasons the snow may last well into June. Moreover, almost directly the ground is clear of snow, mosquitoes of a most venomous type make their appearance in such swarms as to render life to a well-fed, tender-skinned Englishman (to use the author's own phrase) almost unendurable in some districts.

Although grassy meadows of a few acres in extent are to be met with in the neighbourhood of some of the towns, the country produces little in the way of fodder except reindeer moss, which affords, however, ample sustenance to large domesticated herds of the animal from which it takes its name. In summer, however, the moister districts are rendered gay by a spangling of marsh marigolds, while a still more brilliant display is afforded by the fields of the splendid yellow Trollius europæus, which is by far the finest flowering plant of the country.

If, however, the traveller be an ornithologist and an egg-collector (and we suppose few others would have any inducement to undertake the trip), and at the same time prepared to face the above-mentioned hardships and other drawbacks, there would seem few countries better worthy of his attention, for in the breeding season it is a perfect paradise for birds of all sorts and sizes, ranging from the willow-wren and the wheatear to the lordly white-tailed sea-eagle. An example of its richness in bird-life is afforded by the author's statement that during his 1899 trip he encountered no less than 76 different species, of 44 of which he was fortunate enough to obtain the eggs.

The enthusiasm which the country excites in the mind of the enthusiastic egg-collector may be gleaned from the author's introduction to his experiences during the 1901 trip, where he writes as follows:—

"A man leaving the coast of Northern Russia, his body well bitten by mosquitoes and his mind full of the hundred and one little annoyances inseparable from all travel, may vow he will never venture there again, but in six months all the troubles are forgotten, and only the recollection of some of those glorious days spent within the Arctic circle, which no other region of the world can give, remains; and when the spring returns he is as restless to be off once more as are the birds to return to their northern homes."

Thus it is with every ardent sportsman and field naturalist throughout the world, if only he can afford the time and money.

Among the birds to be found in the greatest profusion in Northern Lapland during the brief summer are puffins—the miscalled "ducks" of the Arctic Pilot—which breed in thousands in their burrows and whose bodies and eggs are collected in vast numbers by the natives and by Russians who visit the country at this season for the purpose of collecting them for food. Eider ducks and long-tailed ducks are likewise met with in profusion; while on the higher grounds are flocks of ptarmigan and willow-grouse. These two latter by the way, are all-important to the other birds, since they are the only species which undergo a spring moult, and are consequently the only ones which afford a supply of feathers for the nests of their fellows. The birds dear to the heart of the collector are, however such species as the herring and glaucous gulls, the turnstone, dotterel, little stint, and numerous other shore and wading species which nest only on the barren tundras of the frozen north.

Of the eggs and nests of these and numerous other species, whose breeding haunts were first made known in civilised Europe by John Wolley, and subsequently by Seebohm and other hardy explorers, the author gives a number of exquisite reproductions from photographs taken on the spot, which confer on his interesting volume a permanent value to the scientific ornithologist. The author, however, by no means confines himself to a description of the bird life of the country, but furnishes much interesting information with regard to the natives of the country, with several excellent photographs. From its attractive style, both as regards letterpress and illustrations, the book may therefore be commended, not only to those who contemplate a trip to the country, but to all interested in bird-life and adventure.

A CRICKET MANUAL.

IT would seem to be impossible for a writer on cricket to produce a book which shall be worth reading: yet Mr. F. C. Holland, a member of the Surrey team, has accomplished the feat. His contribution to the literature of the game consists of about ninety pages and every line is to the point: it is in fact the handiwork of an intelligent and thoughtful cricketer who has the gift of self-analysis and who has consistently asked himself what is the right thing to do, and how to do it: who has made use of exceptional opportunities for studying all the best exponents of the game and has profitted by his observation: and who above all for instructive purposes, can impart his knowledge. Mr. Holland writes in a straightforward simple style, giving his reader advice exactly as he might do by word of mouth on the field: and the result is an unpretentious, but sound and sensible book whose perusal will profit the keen beginner more than that of many much more ambitious volumes. Particularly have we reason to commend the chapter on "Stopping, catching, and throwing in:" the author is fully alive to the fact that work in the field is unduly neglected by the average cricketer and he is at pains to show how much of the success of a team depends upon the alertness and skill of the fielder.

The book is profusely illustrated from photographs to show the position of the batsman under various circumstances, the proper method of holding and handling the ball by the bowler and the various ways the fieldsmen should go about their work. We can heartily praise the book for its directness, simplicity, and good sense.

A TIGRESS AND HER CUBS.

I AM personally well acquainted with the chief and his nephew referred to in the following account of the latter's experience lately with a tigress and her cubs and can vouch for its accuracy. In April last information was brought to the chief of one of the native Feudatory States that a tigress was playing havoc in one of his villages, situated about 25 miles from his gurh, and that the villagers who had during the previous few weeks lost a considerable number of cattle were thoroughly terrorized. Only one tiger had been actually seen occasionally by woodcutters, but it was believed that there were others about. The Rajah, himself a good sportsman, was in bad health and disinclined to face the heat then prevailing in the Nichi Ghaut, where the report came from, but his nephew, Beni Singh, a fine young Rajput of about 20 years of ago, who, though he had never shot a tiger was a keen and ambitious sportsman, arranged to go out. He rode down the same evening to ——— where the Rajah has a bhandar or zemindary cutchery and grainary, situated in the centre of the neighbourhood reported to be affected by the tigers.

The following morning he began to make enquiries regarding them, when it appeared that in all 22 head of cattle had been killed during the previous six weeks, and the day before his arrival a man cutting wood in the jungle had been seized by a tiger, but had been fortunately rescued by his companions before he could be carried off. During the next two days no news was brought in of the animals, which appeared to be unusually quiet. Beni Singh visited all the villages in the neighbourhood on an elephant in order to get any khubber that was to be had, and had buffaloes tied out at night at likely spots in five different villages, but day after day reports were brought in to him that there had been no kills and the tigress appeared to have left the neighbourhood. Beni Singh was beginning to get impatient and determined to beat all the adjacent jungles thoroughly in turn, and in this way passed four more days unsuccessfully.

Disappointed on the fourth day he returned home in the afternoon and had just bathed and eaten when two men came running to the bhandar in great excitement saying they had been out in the jungle with Munsi Pilhi, the wife of the elder of them, collecting goolab fruit; the woman had climbed a large goolab tree which overhung a deep well wooded ravine, and was picking and throwing down the fruit to them when a tiger had silently crept up out of the ravine torwards them, and making a sudden spring seized her husband by a shoulder, throwing him down, but his companion at once threw his axe at it, striking it well behind the shoulder, when it dragged the man and made off, they had both then run away as quickly as possible. Beni Singh immediately ordered his elephants to be got ready and was preparing to go out when the woman also turned up in a great hurry, and said that being greatly frightened when her husband had been seized by the tiger she had climbed up to the next branch above her, and that as soon as the men had disappeared the tiger had again come up out of the ravine under the tree she was on, when she endeavoured to climb a little higher and more out of the animal's reach, but in her terror missing her hold she had slipped and fallen right on to its back, it was so startled at her advent that with a loud roar it had made one spring back down the ravine, where it sat growling, though unseen by her. She had on recovering from the shock crawled away a few feet and then getting up had made the best of her way to the bhandar.

Beni Singh mounting his elephant at once and started, accompanied by the one unwounded man and some half a dozen villagers. Mounting the tree where the woman had sat he directed all the men to get on to the neighbouring trees and to keep a good lookout, and then sent the elephants round to beat up the ravine towards him. In about half an hour a low growl was heard, followed by the tremendous roar of a tiger close at hand and growls of cubs with her, with squeals and trumpeting of the elephants, these latter however remained staunch and steadily advanced towards Beni Singh's tree, when suddenly a tigress with two small cubs bounded up out of the ravine behind the tree and into a small patch of grass jungle some 50 yards off. Their appearance on that side had been so altogether unexpected that Beni Singh had not been able to get in a shot, but on the elephants coming up they were put into the grass, and after one or two ineffectual charges by the tigress they managed to hustle her and the cubs back towards the ravine, when Beni Singh dropped her in the open with a ball in the spine; she was unable to get up again, and a second ball in the head finished her.

The cubs had in the meantime gained the ravine, and a search was at once commenced for them, headed by Beni Singh, they were soon found, but proved to be such little spitfires that it was no easy matter to secure them, several men got severely clawed and scratched, but one of them at length managed to throw a cloth over the larger of the two cubs, and getting entangled it was then captured, the other however, had in the meantime crept into a prickly bush, and every now and then made rushes thence at the men's hands as they tried to seize her, eventually the bush had to be gradually cut away from over her, when she was also secured in a cloth thrown over her. They appeared to be only a few weeks old and were a male and female. The tigress measured only 8 feet 8 inches, but was a young animal with a magnificent dark ruddy coloured coat. The cubs have since been reared at the bhandar where they have been loose in a courtyard, and are at present absolutely tame and follow the men about like dogs. They were at first brought up entirely on milk, and afterwards on milk and rice, and cooked meal, they also eat flour and atta chapathies and even fruit, a most unusual thing in my experience. Beni Singh is justly very proud of his first tiger, and the cubs, which now measure over 4 feet in length, and stand over 16 inches high at the shoulders will shortly be sent down to the Calcutta Zoo.

PROPOSED INDIAN GAME LAW.

VIEWS OF THE BENGAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

THE following letter has been forwarded to us for publication :—

From the Secretary, Bengal Chamber of Commerce, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Revenue Department, No. 1437—1904, dated Calcutta, 21st September 1904.

Sir,—I am directed by the Committee of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce to acknowledge receipt of your letter No. 2909 of 25th July 1904, enclosing copy of a Bill to make better provision for the protection and preservation of game and fish, the introduction of which is contemplated by the Government of India, and also copy of a letter, No. 1084 of 23rd May 1904, from the Government of India, Home Department, explaining in full detail the reasons for the introduction of the measure and commenting upon the provisions of the Bill. You ask that the Government of Bengal may be furnished with an expression of the opinion of the Chamber on this measure. I am instructed to say in reply that the Committee have given their most careful consideration to the Bill and have also read with great interest the letter from the Government of India, which, in their opinion, states the case for the introduction of a general Game Law for the whole of British India with extreme fairness and considerable force. I am now instructed by the Committee to submit the following comments on the letter in question and on the provisions of the Bill. In considering the whole matter, the Committee have been assisted by a special Sub-Committee of members of the Chamber, more or less interested in sport. They have discussed the proposals from the point of view of the requirements of the Province of Bengal only, as they feel it would be going beyond their province to make suggestions in connection with other parts of India, of the local circumstances of which they are ignorant, and the residents in which will, no doubt, judging from the interest the matter has aroused throughout the country, make suitable representation on their own account.

With regard to the statement in paragraph 7 of the Government of India letter that a great number of Indian birds are migratory and need no protection even against the extensive netting by which the markets are supplied, the Committee are of opinion that the netting of wild duck and teal should be restricted (as there has been visible diminution of several descriptions in the jheels of Bengal during recent years) and they go so far as to recommend that snipe should not be allowed to be brought into any market or station in their live state. The Committee consider that the practice of snipe netting is attended w th a great deal of cruelty, as snipe when caught are almost invariably maimed, and in any case they are birds that it is most difficult, if not impossible, to keep alive in captivity. With regard to the proposals for the classification of sportsmen, referred to in paragraph 10 of the letter, the Committee are of opinion that sportsmen in India should be divided into only two classes, viz., residents, and non-reidents, and that the respective rates for ordinary licenses should be Rs. 20 and Rs. 100. The Committee strongly deprecate any differentiation in regard to rate of classification between official and non-official residents, and trust that the Government of India will see their way to withdraw this objectionable provision. The Committee find themselves entirely in accord with the principles laid down in paragraph 14, Clause (a) of the letter with regard to the prohibition of the practice of sitting up over water holes in order to shoot animals which come to drink. With regard to the question of an export duty on horns, skins and other trophies of game raised in Clause (b) of this paragraph, the Committee are inclined to think that before any such duty is imposed an inquiry should be made as to what quantities of such articles, exclusive of shed horns, have been exported during the last five years. With regard to Clause (c) of this paragraph, the Committee differ from the Government of India as to the necessity for the protection of eggs. They consider that provision should be made in the Bill for the protection of the eggs of game birds, the nests of which they have reason to believe are frequently plundered.

The Committee are not inclined to support the proposal embodied in paragraph 15 of the letter from the Government of India to appoint a special officer in connection with the administration of the Game Law. In their opinion a single officer for the whole of India would be quite unable to cope with the work, and it would be practically impossible to obtain any officer with the requisite knowledge of the country and game, the circumstances in different parts of India being so entirely different. The Committee suggest as an alterative the formation of local Committees of sportsmen and others, or Associations to assist Government in the administration of the law. The Committee are strongly opposed to employing revenue from license fees in providing guns gratis, for persons holding licenses for the protection of crops or for the destruction of dangerous animals, and consider a better way of dealing with any surplus fees would be to offer rewards for the destruction of such animals, as are the natural enemies of game. The suggestions already made if adopted will involve certain alterations in the provisions of the draft Bill, with regard to which latter the Committee have only the following further recommendations to make :— They suggest in Section 15 (1) (b) the substitution of the words "and or" in place of the word "and" in the third line of this Sub-Clause, and in Section 15 (1) (c) they recommend the substitution of the words "and or" in place of the word "and" in the fourth line of this Sub-Clause. With regard to Section 16, providing a fine which may extend to Rs. 500, in respect of every head of game not accounted for by the holder of a license limiting the number of head of any specified kind of large animal which might be killed or killed in excess of the number so permitted, the Committee consider that a fine extending to Rs. 100 would be sufficient.—I have, etc.,

Secretary.

THE BOLD WILD DOG.

LAST month on my way to a forester's camp I came to a batch of logs lying in khere grass by the side of the L. Creek ready for me to measure. My travelling elephants and men had passed probably about ten minutes, and as I had only my hunter with me I sent him to fetch men from the forester's camp to help me to measure these logs whilst I sat on the end of one with my rifle close to me. I had been sitting there about five minutes when I heard the patter of feet in the creek, and thinking it was my men coming back at first took no notice, but as the sound seemed unnatural, I looked up and saw a barking deer swimming in deepish water very slowly with only the top of its head and back showing out of water. The first thought that struck me was of wild dogs and so I did not shoot, but stood up on the log from where I could see about 200 yards up the creek and then watched the antics of the deer. He had not noticed me although I was only about ten yards off him and he seemed to be trying to remain in the water as much hidden as possible, sometimes when the water was too deep for him to touch the bottom he went right under. Eventually he spotted me and made off down the creek, and as nothing was in sight above I took a shot and missed.

I then sat down again on my log and had not been there half a minute before a wild dog came cantering slowly along the sand about 6 yards off me and between me and the water. (I had no more cartridges, my bag being with the hunter.) He took not the slightest notice of me, his tongue was hanging out and his nose well up, never on the ground and he seemed to be using his eyes only, evidently expecting to catch sight of his quarry in front of him. Another two or three minutes passed and along came three more dogs all in grand condition cantering easily with their tongues out. One came within two yards of me and stopped short and looking at me for fifteen seconds or so and then went on as though nothing had happened, after the others. He was lame and whining piteously. Before he was out of sight my men turned up and as I was showing them how close the dogs ran to me I spotted the deer sitting on the side of a landslip behind a bamboo clump on the opposite side of the creek to that down which the dogs had run. I went up close to him and as he did not get up and only moved his head a little I thought I must have wounded him when I shot, so finished him off. On examining him I found only the one wound and so he must have been only done up and unable to go further. How I wish I had made certain before shooting again.

I wonder whether my presence put the dogs off although they seemed to take no notice of me or whether the deer was one too good for them. Evidently his game was to cut off his scent by using the running water. Many is the wild dog I have seen up here and never once have they seemed shy as you invariably read in books. When after bison I have three or four times put a wild dog up within two yards of me.

Two years ago I was coming back from shooting jungle fowl walking along the side of some cut paddy-fields about half mile in length when on the opposite side I saw a barking deer run from the jungle into and across the fields to the creek. Shortly afterwards two wild dogs appeared and one followed the deer and the other cut across the fields to a point some way down the creek and so (if the deer followed the creek) saving one-fourth of a mile or so. I had been shooting with a Holland and Holland and Paradox and had one bullet with me. I was standing right in the open and yet the latter dog came almost straight for me passing within thirty yards. It was quite dusk, but I could still see fairly well and took a shot as he was broad side on and knocked one of his front legs clean off at the knee point. I followed him till too dark to see, but never came up to him.

I see in the "Indian Field Shikar Book" in the description of wild dog :—"The young are sooty black throughout." Last cold season in this same creek abovementioned two wild dogs about a week old were found in a nest in thick undergrowth and given to the forest Officer here—they were quite red, a rusty red over, getting darker on the back.

Despairing of arranging a match with any individual pugilist for the heavy-weight championship, James J. Jeffries has made an offer unique in prize ring history. He has announced his willingness to fight three heavy-weights in the same ring in one night.

"I shall take them on for ten rounds each," the champion remarks, "and if they defeat me they can fight for the championship title."

The men Jeffries prefers to meet under the condition stipulated by him are James J. Corbett, "Bob" Fitzsimmons, and "Tom" Sharkey. There is no candidate in view the big fellow can meet at present. If none of the men named come forward the Champion says he will retire while still in his prime, but he wants it to be understood that he fears no man.

Fishing.

FISHING THAT IS FIGHTING.

THE region where most of this fishing takes place is in America, and lies between New London on the Connecticut shore and Chatham on the southernmost shore of Cape Cod, where annually thousands of sword-fish are taken, though the most important fishing grounds seem to be about Martha's Vineyard and Block Island, or nearly in the centre of this region. Here are found boats sent out from New London and Stonington, New Bedford and Hyannis, Boston and Provincetown, the waters in a good season being fairly dotted with them. Here they may be seen, shifting and turning over the ever-restless waters, their look outs stationed at the topmost part of the main-mast, their skipper, harpoon in hand, leaning from the pulpit, or supporting-iron, at the outermost edge of their prows, and all the others of the crew anxiously holding to the tillers or keeping a hand to the guy ropes, so as to lose no time in bringing the ship about should fish be seen. In this position they cruise, all searching the waters for that tell-tale show of dorsal fin which indicates the presence of a sword-fish.

The interest which attaches to the swordfish itself is that it is a fighter. From time immemorial the fame of the prowess of this fish has come down until its descendants bask in much of a reflected and dramatic glory. The fact that it is the master of the right whale, the killer of the shark, the assailer of ships, and the destroyer of its enemies generally, and that actually it has been known to drive its sword through a thickness of wood and metal aggregating two feet, has built up a fame for it which inspires admiration. It is known to be one of the most savage of all deep-sea fishes, and the fact that it can put enough force behind its trusty beak when necessary to destroy a small boat is awe-inspiring. Indeed, the men who hunt it are constantly on the look-out for some such attack as this, and are never satisfied until they have come away safely without it.

The manner in which the sword-fish conduct themselves in the water is so peculiar that it forms the basis, as well as the method, of fishing employed. They usually swim in schools of hundreds, and even thousands, but never close enough together to permit of more than a single catch at a time. Their size and habit of swimming with the upper or dorsal fin showing above the water provides a means of detecting them, and their leisurely manner of progressing gives the opportunity of overtaking and killing them. They have an idle manner, and when one is even so close on them as ten feet they do not always seem to notice. Only when the harpoon is hurled and a wound inflicted is the savage, fighting instinct of the fish aroused, and then they show a degree of energy and power which, if it does not disturb, at least arouses a sense of respect in the observer.—

A PROJECTED SANITARIUM.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The rather feeble attempt to furnish Calcutta with a seaside resort, which from time to time is paraded by the Balasore bungalow proprietor, has, we observe, brought other projects of a similar kind to the front, the latest contemplated being the erection of a cluster of cottages on the north end of Sundip Island at the entrance of the Megna, with a pile pier running out over the shallows like those on shelving shores in Europe. The place is salubrious enough and could be reached from Calcutta in 18 hours, from Dacca in 8, and even from the uttermost parts of Assam in less than 30. Shell fish, shrimps, etc., are plentiful enough and in both the main river and the western creek bummaloe, becktie pomfret bameen and even dol. hin abound; sharks and muggers are to the fore affording good sport in their way Sea bathing in a properly constructed palisade could be safely indulged in, while all necessaries such as bazar supplies are to be had cheap and plentiful enough from the villages on the main land. The north end site is well protected from cyclones and is free from surf

Not only is the place well suited for a sanitarium but it would form an excellent base for the sportsman to operate from in the lower south-east Sunderbunds; the forest fringed creeks between Sundip and the Hurreen gotta (suggestive name) river, being remarkably well stocked and have remained undisturbed since the Rainyes gave up shooting. The game consists of rhino (though they are rare) bheelwah and chital near the coast with sambhur and hog deer higher up towards Khulna, wild boar, of course, being much in evidence. Green, bronze wing and wood pigeon with the usual sea-birds and plover, while in January and up till March snipe make the interior a refuge : buffalo are to be had nearer the cultivation eight miles up and a motor or steam launch would put one in touch with the churs between Naraingunge and Chandpur. Yatchs with lee or centre boards would have ample space on the broad bosom of the estuary while more ambitious yatchtsmen could run out into the briny itself, for the mid channel is devoid of surf and the bars are so discernible that they can easily be avoided.

There is, says an Australian exchange, a well-known bookmarker in Sydney whom we shall call "Puddin'" Stone. This isn't his name, but it will answer.

One day "Puddin'" who weighs anything between 20 and 30 stone, was fielding at an up-country meeting, and had clerking for him a Yiddisher of pronounced type "Puddin'" had a mare engaged in one of the events, which he considered good enough to have a plunge on, and his clerk also had a flutter on the supposed "certainty."

About a furlong from home the mare and another horse cleared out from the field, and were fighting out a great finish. "Puddin'" at this stage, recognising a probability of defeat, was energetically "riding" his champion along at the top of his voice. "Go on, you beauty, Go on ! Go Hon. ! !" he yelled

Then turning to his clerk excitedly, he added—"I wish to goodness I was on the old mare. I'd shift hear along a bit."

The clerk glanced at his employer's elephantine proportion a moment ere he replied, in tones of despair —

"Do you ! Lor' bli'me, I wish you were on the other run.'

WESTERN AYR MEETING.

THIS annual festival, which is looked upon as the 'Ascot of Scotland," opened on the 14th instant in auspicious fashion. The weather could not have been more favourable, the air being invigorating and tempered by a sun always shining from a cloudless sky, and under these circumstances it was not surprising to find a crowd assembled above the average dimensions. Scotsmen will have few more opportunities of assembling for the purpose of racing on the present estate, for at a meeting this morning it was practically decided—although not definitely—to establish a new course at the other end of the town, the site being about five minutes' walk from the railway station. Details :—

Next afternoon there was a very large attendance—the biggest seen here for several years past—when the second stage of the Scottish festival was gone through. A continuance of yesterday's splendid weather was experienced, but although the sport was interesting enough it could not be described as eventful unless one race be excepted. That was the Ayrshire Handicap, value 1,000sovs, the chief item on the card. The stake was annexed by a former Liverpool Cup winner in Captain Kettle, and it was a popular win for he was firm favourite throughout the piece.

BETTING: 5 to 4 agst. Leucadia, 13 to 8 Reno, 6 to 1 Gavello, and 8 to 1 Park End.

Rounding the final bend, Gavello challenged Leucadia, who got the better of a good race by a neck; a length and a half separated the second and third.

Unfavourable weather was associated with the concluding day of the Ayrshire festival, rain falling almost all the morning, and this circumstance, naturally greatly militated against the attendance. Nevertheless the muster was a satisfactory one, and sport, if not of such an important character as on the preceding days, was quite as interesting. The first race, a Juvenile Selling Handicap, provided an exciting finish, the Duke of Montrose's Corriedale winning by a head. Details:—

THE LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP.

DIVISION I.

WOOLWICH ARSENAL vs. PRESTON NORTH END.—There might have been 25,000, there must have been over 20,000, people witness Woolwich Arsenal make thier bow before their own supporters in the First Division of the League on Saturday. Unfortunately, however, very few of the assembled multitude departed at the conclusion of the game convinced that they had seen a good display of football. As a matter of fact, Woolwich Arsenal's first home match, in what may be termed "the upper circles," proved a most disappointing affair. They had for opponents Preston North End, who have already signalised their promotion to League I. by successfully defeating Aston Villa and Sunderland, while last season the Lancastrians just beat the Reds for premier honour in the Second Division. On Saturday, Jack was just about as good as has master. The Arsenal may have had the best of the play, taking the game throughout, but there were times when the North End caused the utmost anxiety to the Southern enthusiasts by attacking in the most dangerous fashion. Ashcroft, however, proved the saviour of his side, and the Reds managed to gain their initial First Division point. The Arsenal goal-keeper played a very fine game indeed, saving marvelously two or three times when all seemed lost, and Gray was just about the best class back on the field, tackling well and kicking a grand length with considerable neatness. Jackson did heaps of good things, but he still persists in keeping the ball too much in the air. The half-backs were rather feeble, Buchan being the pick of the trio. Sands, as usual, defended well, but he scarcely backs up his forwards as a good centre-half should. Satterthwaite was easily the most prominent of the home front line. The old West Ham man ran strongly and dropped in some capital centres, but he was badly supported, the Arsenal forward play, in fact, being for the most part indifferent. McBride is still a great goal-keeper. He had much more to do than Ashcroft, but the Prestonian was never at fault, and his coolness gave his side additional confidence. The two backs, Rodway and Derbyshire, tackled fearlessly and kicked well, but the real strength of the North End team was at half-back, where Lyon, Hunter, and McLean proved themselves three veritable terriers, and did most towards upsetting the Arsenal plan of campaign. Bond and Bourne, the two extreme wingers, were the best of the forwards, but Brown, the old Queen's Park Ranger, often made himself conspicuous by cleverly opening out the game. Like their opponents, however, the North End were dreadfully weak in front of goal. The Arsenal played what can be termed their best team, Sands making his first appearance to the exclusion of Bridgen, Buchan going to right half. An injury kept the famous old Scottish International, Ball, out of the visiting eleven, and the Preston captain's place as outside right was filled by Bond. The game began under a threatening sky promptly at half-past three, and although Jackson, upon winning the toss, chose to first defend at the Plumstead end, there was nothing in the conditions to give either side any advantage. Brown kicked off, but the Arsenal at once advanced to the attack, and Satterthwaite and Dick both shot wide, while later on Coleman missed a good opening through not kicking hard enough. Clever work by Bond brought out some good defence from Jackson, and soon afterwards Wilson shot over the Arsenal bar, following a corner-kick. The Southerners had slightly the best of the play, but once Brown got right through, and with an open goal, shot straight at Ashcroft, who stopped the ball splendidly. This was a lucky escape for the Arsenal. Matters subsequently progressed evenly until half-time, when neither side had scored, and just about the most exciting incident of the whole match happened a few minutes after changing ends. North End secured a free kick for a foul fairly close up, and Hunter accurately placing the ball in front of the Arsenal posts, Ashcroft got himself hopelessly beaten, but just as the leather was passing over the goal line, Buchan pushed up and cleared in the very nick of time—another lucky escape for Woolwich. Subsequently, the Reds had the best of the game, but could not score, and the result of a poor match was a draw, nothing being done by either side.

SHEFFIELD WEDNESDAY vs. WOLVERHAMPTON WANDERERS.—On Saturday the weather in Sheffield was perfect and the crowd at Owlerton to watch the first home match of the League champions was very large fully 20,000 people witnessing the defeat of the Wanderers. The ground was in perfect condition, and there was no wind to trouble the players. Wednesday had full strength in the field, but for the fact that Bartlett, of their reserves, took the place of Ruddlisdin, who had been hurt the previous week at Middlesbrough. The visitors had a full side in the field. They also won the toss, but right from the start had to defend strenuously, Baddeley and his backs being given any amount to do. Still all the attacks were successfully countered, and before half-time Smith, who played very well, gave Lyall such a handfull that he had to fall full length to divert the course of the ball. He cleared all right, and at half-time there was no score on either side. In the second half, with the sun at their backs, Wednesday set up a tremendous pressure and in four minutes Davis had scored with a high dropping shot, which Baddeley lost sight of in the blazing sunshine. Then, nine minutes later, Wilson took a pretty pass from his right, and, though missing at the first attempt, subsequently drove home a superb shot, which gave Baddeley no chance. In five minutes more the same forward had a clear course, and running right on, had almost reached the goal line when he tipped the ball clear of the custodian, whilst before the end Chapman tried a pot shot, which also came off, and the result was: Sheffield Wednesday four goals; Wolverhampton Wanderers love

NOTTS FOREST vs. BURY.—There was an attendance of about 7,000 people at the City ground, Nottingham, on Saturday, when the Foresters won a brilliant victory over Bury by five goals to one. Three of the Forest goals were scored in the first half, two by Morris and one by Niblo, whilst Morris and Shearman each scored in the second half. Early in the game the Foresters were awarded a penalty for Lindsay tripping Morris, who was within a dozen yards of Montgomery's goal when he was brought down. Craig was entrusted with the penalty kick, but sent the ball on to Montgomery, and Spouncer put it outside. Morris headed the first goal from a centre by Sugden, all the others coming from direct kicks. Thorpe obtained Bury's only goal just before the whistle went for "time." The turf had been cut short and well rolled, and the ball travelled very fast—too fast indeed for the Bury forwards and halves. The Forest halves worked well, and it was to their efforts that much of the success of the Forest forwards was due. Swann, Sagar and Plant were all out of the Bury team, Ball, an old Chesterfield player, figuring at outside left. In the Forest team, Barnsdale, a lithe and active young half, was in the centre of the second line, and was well able to hold his own against the Bury forwards. The result, as indicated above, was: Forest, five goals; Bury, love.

THE GLASGOW CUP-TIES.—It seems rather early in the season to speak of Cup-ties, yet the Glasgow Association, finding that its competition was again likely to suffer, as it has in past years, by the inroads of League games, decided to have an early start this time, and thus the first round for the handsomest of Scottish trophies was the piece de resistance in the West of Scotland on Saturday last. The two matches which opened the initial stage were of absorbing interest, more especially that between Celtic and Queen's Park, two famous Cup-tie fighters, and favoured with fine weather, both had capital attendances, that at Parkhead reaching well past 25,000. Refereed by Mr. J. Lewis, of Blackburn, the game proved well worth witnessing, play in the opening period and throughout the better part of the concluding half being keenly and well contested. Aided by a strong wind and sun, the amateurs shaped well at the outset. Even though losing a goal through some weak defence after five minutes had gone, they maintained a determined attack on the Celts' stronghold, and but for a lack of cohesion forward would certainly have made up the leeway. Disaster again overtook their colours, Somers notching a second point for the home eleven. In the second moiety the game lost much in interest, neither side showing to any great advantage. Queen's Park were decidedly inferior towards the finish, and when Quinn, the Celts' sharpshooter, snatched a third goal the amateurs subsequent listless movements gave indication of their recognition of the hopelessness of further effort. Doubtless alarmed by the overwhelming nature of their defeat by Glasgow Rangers, Partick Thistle reinforced by the inclusion of Neil Gibson, the International half, and Gilchrist, a young back whose transfers were secured from their conquerors of the previous Saturday, made certain work, with a side thus strengthened, of entrance to the second round. In Clyde, whom they defeated by two goals to nil, the Partick Club found worthy opponents, and had it not been for an accident which deprived the losers of one player in the last half, the result might have been closer.

SCOTTISH LEAGUE.—Taught by unpleasant experience of fruitless journeys to Dundee in search of League points, and those at times when defeat was least to be expected, Glasgow Rangers sent their strongest available side North on Saturday, when the northern club fell to be faced on its native heath. The composition of the forward line had been an open question during the week, the inclusion or non-inclusion of R. S. McCall, whom the Light Blues secured last week, from Newcastle United, being the point at issue, and it was only at the last minute that the directorate decided to retain Kyle, the young junior who has been performing so well of late, and allow the brilliant ex-amateur another week to devote to training. The probility of his appearance with a Scottish club after so long an absence from the Land o' Cakes attracted a few additional thousands to the Dundee ground, some 15,000 spectators being in attendance, and disappointment was general at his absence. The game, though fast, was not of a very high standard, the Dundonians adopting the rush and long-kicking tactics more associated with provincial football, and the close, studied game usual to the visitors was, in consequence severely disturbed. Hamilton, however, secured plentiful opportunities for his electric dashes, and was responsible for two of the points scored. A third was gifted the opposition by the home custodian. It was an interesting fight at Paisley, where Port Glasgow Athletic and St. Mirrin clubs, who had not yet gained a solitary victory, met. A fitting result would have been a draw, but St. Mirren had not even the consolation of doing as well as their former companions in misfortune, a snatch goal coming a few minutes before time was called, leaving them still to register a score in the League race. Airdrieonians maintained their new reputation for consistency, dividing points with Hibernians each scoring once in the second half. Last year's champions, 3rd Lanark, found a warmer handful in Motherwell than they expected. Losing the first goal in four minutes, the Volunteers were compelled to strain every nerve to get on level terms. Turn and turn about then became the order of the day in goal-scoring until the game was well advanced, when Kidd, who displaced the veteran Campbell for the afternoon, brought his side into the safe haven of victory. Greenock Morton showed improved form against Kilmarnock, whom they beat by two goals to one.

among scientifically condensed foods is Bovril. In the smallest possible bulk Bovril has every virtue a true food should possess—it is nourishing and strengthening—it is a stimulant and a warmth-giver; and, besides being very appetising, is thoroughly digestible. Bovril is a great help to the cook, too.

SWIMMING.

LONG SWIM BY HOLBEIN.—Montague Holbein, the long-distance swimmer, essayed on Saturday to swim from Trent Bridge, Nottingham, to the Boathouse at Newark, a distance of 26¼miles. The swim was under the direction of Mr. Walpole Hiller, of Sheffield, who has accompanied Holbein on his Channel swims, and assistance was given by the Nottingham Boat Club, a number of whose members accompanied the swimmer in boats. Mr. E. Duffey, of the Medway Club, piloted Holbein, and Hiller and a number of local swimmers took turns in the water with him. Holbein had to leave the river at the Holme Lock, a couple of miles from the starting point, and occasionally took refreshments standing in the shallows. There was a strong current, and the wind was directly behind the swimmer, who made good progress, though he is by no means a rapid traveller. At various villages along the riverside there were crowds of spectators, and a number of cyclists and pedestrians went by the towing-path.

The day was far advanced as Holbein neared the hardest part of his journey, about three miles from Newark. Here the water is stagnant, the cut being really a canal, and it was eight o'clock when Holbein reached this neighbourhood. At ten minutes past he was persuaded to come out of the water, thoroughly exhausted. Holbein attributed his non-success to the low temperature of the water, and the hard task set him in the canal for a finish. He was swimming altogether ten hours and a half. The water at the start was only 48 degrees, a much lower temperature than was consistent with the success of an effort entailing so prolonged an immersion. Holbein swam at the rate of two miles and a half per hour for the journey. He was badly piloted, and would have done better but for his guides not knowing the river. Holbein's knees were much grazed in going through the shallows.

ENGLISH WATER POLO CHAMPIONSHIP.

FINAL TIE.—Quite the most important match of the season was that played last evening at Lambeth Baths, for in a degree it may be likened to the final of the Football Association Cup. Unfortunately the South of England has during the past few years not made that progress in water polo that has marked the game in the Midlands and the North of England, and as a result since Worthing was defeated in the final by Osborne in 1901 no club has been enabled to reach the final stage. Some years ago matters were different for the combination of the People's Palace and Polytechnic twice opposed Manchester Osborne, than in the height of prosperity, in the final match, although they never succeeded in winning, and in earlier years Nautilus and Tunbridge Wells won. It was unfortunate in more than one respect that all the Southern clubs were beaten, for this year the championship game was allocated to the South of England, and thus had a team from that district managed to stay until the finish there is little doubt that Lambeth Baths would have been crowded to excess. As it was, notwithstanding the fact that an important semifinal in the Southern Championship between Polytechnic and Nautilus was also set for decision there were not more than 500 spectators present, whereas there was accommodation for fully 2,500.

As was generally expected, Hyde Seal managed to maintain their hold of the trophy, for they won by four goals to two. However, they had to play their tightest game of the season, for Wigan put up a wonderfully good fight. In the first half Hyde, who defended the deep end, were the first to become aggressive, but so finely did Smith, of Wagan, perform in goal that the shots put in by Wilkinson and Forsyth were all saved. As a matter of fact not until three and a half minutes had elapsed were they enabled to score, and then Forsyth at close quarters put in a shot that gave Smith no chance. Afterwards Nevison and Hodgson did some good work for Wigan, but they failed to get past E. Wilkinson. Shortly before half-time George Wilkinson got possession for Hyde, and, circling round, was in a beautiful position for scoring, when he was fouled by Magraw. This occurring within the penalty area, the Wigan man was ordered away whilst Wilkinson had a free shy at goal, from which he scored easily with a screw shot. Wigan made desperate efforts to score prior to the interval, but quite failed, and thus Hyde crossed over with a lead of two goals.

In the second half the Hyde men started in excellent form, and soon compelled the Wigan men to assume the defensive. However, it was not until two minutes elapsed that Wilkinson got free and, with a straight shot, beat Smith. Then a little later Herring managed to get clear and, with a long shot, added the fourth point, thus practically placing the result out of doubt. However, Wigan played such a stubborn game that ere the match ended they scored twice. From a foul by Forsyth Saunders scored one from a penalty, and just before the finish, with a brilliant backhander, added another. On the actual play Hyde were always the better side, being faster swimmers and combining better. As the game was played Wigan appeared to lose many good opportunities by holding the ball too long and not passing when free to do so. The teams were :—

Hyde Seal S. C. (holders) (white caps) : *E. Wilkinson (goal), *J. C. Smith and *T. Wilogoose (backs). C. Fowden (half-back), *G. Wilkinson, *C. E. Forsyth, and H. D. Herring (forwards).

Wigan (blue caps) : *C. S. Smith (goal), W. Magraw and G. Nevison (backs), *T. Saunders (half-back), J. Critchley, *F. V. Swift, and J. Hodgson (forwards).

Referee : Mr. G. W. Brodribb ; timekeeper, Mr. A. Poole ; goal-scorers, Messrs. G. Marshall and S. J. Monks.

*Internationals.

ENGLAND vs. WALES.—There was a large crowd present at Penarth Swimming Baths on Saturday evening to witness the seventh International fixture between England and Wales. The Welsh Association had made three alterations in the side that was defeated at Blackrock by Ireland a few weeks ago J. Radmilovic (Cardiff), A. G. S Mum (Penarth), and Oliver (Newport) coming in vice White, Thomas, and Davies. It was rather a one-man team, however, for Paola Radmilovic stood head and shoulders above his compatriots from an individual point of view, whilst combination was sadly lacking throughout. England, on the other hand, stood out as a strong all-round side, with an effective combination both in attack and defence. Swift, Ripley, and Gallagher were the pick of the side, whilst Wilkinson in goal was very safe. It was not until the late hour of 9-20 that the teams took the water. England won the toss and elected to play from the shallow end. Swift was quickly prominent, but Paola Radmilovic cleverly intercepted his shot, taking the ball down to the centre, where he wound up by missing the net by inches. Wallace was next prominent with a clever dribble, but could not penetrate the English defence, and Swift, after a lot of manœuvring, got in a low shot which easily beat Fergusson. Almost immediately on the restart, however, Paola Radmilovic, with a long, high shot, equalised matters. Play became very brisk after this, Oliver, Herbert, and Wallace all being prominent for Wales, Gallagher, Swift, and Ripley taking their turn for England. Just before the interval Saunders, after some pretty passing, placed his side ahead, whilst Swift, followed on with the third goal, the interval score being :—

England ... ... Three goals
Wales ... ... One goal

In the second portion of the game play was rather more even, Wales attacked at the outset. Styer robbed J. Radmilovic cleverly and tested the Welsh defence. The brothers Radmilovic and Fergusson were very sound, however. An exceedingly smart bit of play by Paola Radmilovic saw him rob Swift and put in a smashing hard shot at goal. Wilkinson got to it but was not able to stop it. With Wales only a goal behind now, excitement was pretty keen, and for a time it seemed as if the Welshmen would equalise matters. They died away towards the finish of the game however, and Ripley and Swift each adding goals for England the seventh successive victory of the Englishmen was recorded with the score being :—

England ... ... Five goals
Wales ... ... Two goals

Teams :

England : E. Wilkinson (Hyde) (goal), J. Smith (Hyde) and T. Saunders (Wigan) (backs), P. Ripley (Burslem) (half-back), A. St. J. Styer (Brighton) (capt.), W. Gallagher (Openshaw), and V. Smith (Wigan) (forwards).

Wales : A Fergusson (Penarth) (goal), H. J. Herbert (capt.) and A. G. Oliver (Newport) (backs), J. Radmilovic (Cardiff), (half-back) Paola Radmilovic (Cardiff), J. Wallace, and F. S. Munn (Penarth) (forwards).

Referee : Mr. J. Taggart (Scotland). Goal-scorers : Messrs W. E. Jones (Wales) and G. W. Hearne (England).

ATHLETICS.

LONDON A. C. SEVEN-MILE WALK.—On the 14th instant the L. A. C. annual Seven-mile Challenge Cup Walking Race and "Yacht" Handicap took place at Stamford Bridge, with the commendable result that every man who started completed the distance. A noticeable absentee was the holder, R. H. Watson, who resigned the trophy and took unto himself a bride instead, yesterday being his wedding day. It may not be inappropriate here to tender congratulations on so auspicious an occasion to so fair an exponent of fast walking. With Watson absent, F. R. Thompson had matters all his own way in the scratch race. Walking beautifully throughout he easily finished first in the level event, doing the entire distance in the good time of 55mins, 51⅗secs. The Rev. S. L. Sarel, an old Oxford University athlete, who has greatly improved in pace since last year, won the Sealed Handicap with an allowance of 6mins, while the scratch man and winner of the Challenge Cup just beat the veteran limit man, J. E. Fowler-Dixon, for second prize. The officials were : Starter (professional), C. Perry ; timekeeper and handicaper, Mr. F. W. Parker ; judges, Messrs E. Ion Poole and Arthur Cook ; referee, Mr. S. K. Hohman (honorary secretary). Result :—

BILLIARDS.

ARRIVAL OF FRED WEISS.—The Union-Castle Liner Saxon arrived at Southampton from South Africa on Saturday morning, included amongst the passengers being Fred Weiss, the Australian Billiard Champion. It is now sixteen months since Weiss left Australia, and his career in South Africa during the period has been one of uninterrupted success. By making a break of 488 (the South African record) he won the "Burroughes and Watts" Shield and when the fact is taken into consideration that the highest break credited to him when he was in England six years ago was 293 he appears to have made a distinct advance. Questioned on this point, the Colonial's modesty was quite overcome, his answer being he had improved 'out of all knowledge." It will be remembered that in 1888 Weiss played three matches here beating Chas. Memott 9,000 level (allowing him to push), drawing with Roberts when receiving 6,500 in 21,000, and being beaten by Dawson, the Huddersfield man who conceded 2,000 in 18,000, winning by 1,866 points. His chief breaks during the tour were : 293, 282, 272, 265, 247, 225 220, 210, and 203 (twice), thus his South African 488 denotes considerable improvement. That a great deal was thought of Weiss in South Africa is evident from the fact that he was matched for £200 to concede the late W. Spiller 2,000 in 10,000, the Englishman's sad death occurring just before the time fixed for the match. Weiss played several benefit matches on behalf of Mrs. Spiller, who has recently received £50, as the result of South African sportsmen's generosity, this being the surplus after the funeral expenses had been paid. Weiss informed our representative that after a few practice matches he will challenge for the championship, and feels confident of giving Dawson, Stevenson, or Roberts a good game.

Hunting.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

YEROWDA invariably appears to tempt a large field and the 25th September proved no exception for a number of fair women and brave men yearning for a gallop once again and brimful of hope after the pleasant little spins of the previous hunting day and with every prospect of still better things in store for recent showers and heavy dew and a fairly cool morning provided some of the ingredients of success the necessary finishing touch being to hand in a Master death keen on showing sport to his faithful followers. The morning moments were, naturally too precious to waste and not a moment's law, I hear, was given, and little delay occurred in finding a jack in a nullah in the vicinity of the Aga Khan's Palace (which stands out as a prominent land mark for many a mile around). Hounds streamed away and men shook themselves and "snuggled' into their saddles with a sigh of content for their lies a beautiful country to gallop one between the Palace and the distant range of hills. But all hope was shortly shattered for it must have very speedily become apparent to the knowledgeable contingent that the jack was no "customer" and after a sorry mile or so he ignominously "chucked it" and was rolled over. After this the Master pointed for the octagonal tank which I gather is also a land mark in those parts and from a babul coppice a jack was viewed sneaking away and it was shortly seen that this jack was a very different sort to the previous poltroon. Across the country road and straight for Stoney Glen (that harbours many a jack and fox I believe) anda way across the open—and beautiful going I hear it is—making a bee line for the nearest hill and bang away over the dip in the creest. "As many men so many minds." Some of the field breasted the hill as if they had a change of horses on the top. Others, I believe, followed the lead—part of the way when bellows to mend reminded some that their hunters were a bit big in condition and short of a gallop or two ; while others with no false pride left "mountaineering" to others and sagaciously elected to skirt the hill and trust to a benign Providence arranging for a réunion or the further side. The pace while warm enough was not too killing to allow all contingents to join hounds again,—such at least who had galloping still left in them, and some rough nullah country had to be negociated at a fair pace where a couple of tantalising little chinkara endeavoured and I believe all but succeeded to lure hounds from the path of rectitude. Towards the valley of the Indriganee river the line lay and some keen-sighted sportsman got a view of the jack. But some cultivators headed this gallant little varmint from his point and wheeling round and nothing daunted he altered his objective to the Sister hills and running with what must have been rare pluck and determination this stout-hearted jack made good his sanctuary and "scored the major point" and saved the life he had so fully earned and trust and trow there were few who grudged it to him. A really fine sporting gallop of over an hour's genuine hunting and everyone seems to have fully enjoyed it—and it must have been a source of the consolation to the gallant Master.

SCARAMOUCH.

OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

HOUNDS met on Monday, the 26th September, at 7.30 A.M. at Brooklands. It was a bright morning with heavy dew and a hot sun. From Brooklands hounds hunted a stale line to Dartmoor Valley stream and up to Rocky, where they lost the line. The Master then crossed the Sandy Nullah stream at the ford and drew beyond Barber's Shop. In the swamp here hounds hunted a cold line for a short distance. Dunsandle was then drawn and in the cover near Waterfall Singer Post hounds spoke and emerged towards Road Shola but scent again failed. Hounds were then trotted to Gibb's Shola through which two jacks had probably gone some time—they puzzled out the line of one of these to Lawley's Course and to the foot of Staircase. They could make no more of it and the Master drew Rawling's Nullah, Rallywood, Newmarket, and Mill's Cover without finding. Scent was not very bad, but hounds appear to have been on very stale lines all the morning.

On Thursday, the 29th September, the meet was at Golf Corner at 7-30 A.M. After rain overnight the morning was bright and fresh. We first drew Jackal Shola blank and then through the cover at Rallywood to Newmarket. Near the pool at Newmarket hounds spoke to a line, but scent was bad and failed at the second Nullah on the Blackmoor Vale side. Very soon after this hounds got on two lines one of which they followed slowly to Rawling's Nullah and could keep on it no further. Hounds were then trotted back to the other line and feathered it out, with an occasional note, in the direction of Gold Mine swamp. After a check above the swamp hounds settled down and hunted across the swamp and got on to the path leading over Lawley's Course and began to run fast. At the top of Lawley's Course they swung to the left and then ran very fast in a line with the swamp on the other side. When below Herbert Plantation they turned to the right and with a great crash of music ran right through and out on the ridge with the jack close in front. He led them to the Pykara Road, short of which he turned into Briar Shola. From the far side the Master viewed him, with a good lead, an advantage he must have gained while in cover.

Hounds, however, were on the line, and with the exception of Harlequin, carried a good head, and ran over Windy Saddle down past the slope to Wapshare's Hare Shola, on to the swamp and then up to the Pykara Road just beyond the Forester's Hut. Here the jack turned and ran along the road. Hounds checked here, but the jack was viewed making for the Yemakal Valley and so the Master set hounds at first in that direction. The line was lost for a time and then recovered at Wenlock Shola and followed to Road Shola where we could make no more of it. The jack appears to have stopped here. The north side of the old Pykara Road was then drawn and after passing Barber's Shop hounds went down to Waterfall. Just above Waterfall the Master crossed the Sandy Nullah stream and hounds at once spoke to a line and was viewed a brace of jacks running towards Rocky Cover. The Master lifted hounds to their view, and they hunted their jack to ground in a Nullah on the side of rocky, where they killed him. He was pulled out dead and broken up. Throughout the morning scent appeared good.

POONA OPEN TOURNAMENT.

THE FINAL.

33RD CAVALRY vs. THE SCOUTS.—This match, which had been left unfinished on the 27th ultimo, was replayed on the 30th and resulted in a win for the Scouts by 8 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 1 goal. The game was hotly contested throughout but the 33rd Cavalry were not as well mounted as their opponents and were further handicapped by being without Major Wogan Browne, though Mr. Passy who took his place played an excellent game. There was a large attendance and much excitement and interest in the play. General Richardson presented the Cup to the winners with an appropriate speech.

First Chukker.—Play opened very fast, then the Cavalry attacked, but the Scouts checked and taking the ball down the Rajah scored a subsidiary. They continued to press and Herbert hit a goal. Score : Scouts 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—Up and down play ended in an onslaught by the Cavalry but the Scouts saved and play was transferred to the other end, where a susidiary was scored. Herbert adding a goal. The Cavalry then attacked and a fine shot was just diverted. Score : Scouts 2 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Third Chukker.—The Cavalry pressed and after two unsuccessful shots a good pass by Passy enabled Alyar Khan to Score. The Scouts next got possession and the Rajah hit a goal, Grenfell adding another almost immediately. The period closed with the ball in the Scouts' territory. Score : Scouts 4 goals 2 subsidiaries, Cavalry 1 goal.

Fourth Chukker.—Play ruled in midfield through out and there was no scoring.

Fifth Chukker.—The Scouts broke away and after a good run by Grenfell the Rajah scored. They continued to press and Grenfell and Herbert put on two more goals, a minor point being added before the close of the chukker. Score : Scouts 7 goals 3 subsidiaries, Cavalry 1 goal.

Sixth Chukker.—Fast up and down play opened the period and then after one unsuccessful attempt Grenfell put the ball through. The Cavalry got on and were attacking when time was called. Score : Scouts 8 goals 3 subsidiaries, Cavalry 1 goal.

Seventh Chukker.—Only a few minutes were left for play and there was no further scoring, the scouts winning as stated by 8 goals and 3subs. to 1 goal. Teams :—

CYCLING AND MOTORING AT HOME.

London, 16th September 1904.

THE curtain fell last Saturday on the World's Championships for 1904 which for the first time in the history of this classic fixture have been held in England. The track selected for this meeting was the Crystal Palace, but it is doubtful whether the National Cyclists' Union acted wisely in this, since the attendance at any of the three meetings fell short to what would have been the case had the meetings been held in such a sporting centre as Manchester for instance Certainly, the mornings of the first two meetings were wet, and on this account many people kept away, but I am convinced that rain would never have damped the ardour of the citizens of Manchester if they had been favoured with the fixture. Londoners have so many counter attractions, especially on Saturday afternoons, that cycle racing, even of the class of these championships, fail to draw them.

Only about two to three thousand spectators put in an appearance at the second day's racing on Thursday, and the whole proceedings proved extremely flat, indeed, I have witnessed more interesting sport at a small club meeting. The result of the semi-final round of the two Kilometre Amateur Championship left Marcus Hurley, America, A. L. Reed, London, and J. S. Benyon, Liverpool, to fight out the final battle on the Saturday. The heats for the two Kilometre Professional Championship were also decided on this afternoon and a one-lap scratch race for amateurs and a five miles professional handicap completed the programme. J. S. Benyon won the lap race with H. D. Buck second and C. Rode third, whilst the five miles professional handicap fell to Henry Mayer, the German, from scratch, Massart 350 yards start, second, and Doerflinger, Switzerland, 300 yards, third. Altogether the meeting was a disappointment; the racing was exceptionally tame except for some bright and keen finishes.

On the Saturday, the last day of the Championships, the scene entirely changed, and if the Thursday meeting failed to arouse interest and excitement that held on Saturday more than made up for it. For the first time, the weather looked kindly on the gathering and a glorious morning and afternoon, attracted a large crowd of spectators who covered the sloping banks around the track and crowded into the stands. The racing, too, gave promise of being of the very highest order, since the world's greatest riders were competing against one another in the finals of the two kilometre events. After a half mile amateur handicap had been disposed off the racing of the day started with the final heat of the two Kilometre Amateur Championship, M. Hurley America, A. L. Reed, London, and J. S. Benyon, Liverpool, being the starters. They commenced at a very slow pace, each watching the other closely until the bell sounded for the last lap. With 200 yards to go, the pace warmed up, Reed then having the advantage by about a length; five yards from the tape, Reed still led, but Hurley by a tremendous effort managed to sprint home the winner by one inch with Benyon only half a wheel behind. It was a grand finish to be sure, but the time for the distance—a little over a mile—was 11mins. 7⅗secs.—"loafing" of the first waters! The professionals then came on the scene and ran off their semi-final heats for a similar distance, the first heats being won by H. Mayer, Germany, the second by J. Lawson, America, and the third by T. Ellegaard (holder), Denmark. These three riders therefore qualified for the final. The pistol fired and the men set off at a crawl, so slow indeed, that before twelve yards had been covered two of the riders fell side-ways on to the track. A fresh start was made and the pace was as ridiculous as ever, Mayer treating the spectators to a pantomime performance by pedalling backward and standing perfectly still on his machine. This kind of thing would have gone on much longer had not Lawson, seeing his opportunity, suddenly sprinted, gaining a considerable lead on the two others and finally coming home the winner by three lengths.

The last important event was the hundred Kilometres Amateur Championship in which nine good men started and which as expected provided a win for England. Leon Meredith, the Londoner, who has ridden with such marked success this year, was first to take up his pacer, and it was evident by the speed which he travelled, that he was in great form The first five miles were covered in 7mins. 22secs., and Meredith was then two laps to the good. On he went at his terrific speed the ten miles being covered in 15mins. 42⅖secs. and 20 miles 1 lap in 30mins., 30 miles 2 laps in 45mins., 40 miles 1 lap in the hour and 50 miles in 1hr. 15mins. 33⅘secs. In an hour and a half riding, Meredith had covered 59 miles 2 laps, over six miles ahead of G. A. Olley the second man, and the race seemed a certainty for him. A tremendous sensation was caused when Meredith had but two miles to go; in taking one of the corners his pedal caught the track and he was shot right over his handle bars, turned several somersaults and then slid along the track for considerable distance. He jumped up and although in a dazed condition called for a fresh machine and rode home the winner in the world's record time of 1hr. 35mins. 30⅘secs. W. J. Prett was second in 1hr. 44mins. 23⅖secs., and G. A. Olley, third in 1hr. 45mins. 18secs. These three were all British representatives, none of the foreign competitors being placed. At the completion of the race, there was a rush for Meredith, but in what a sore plight he was. In his fall he was grazed all over, his arm being gashed to the bone and one of his fingers smashed. Yet in this condition he re-mounted and completed the race! Well done Meredith!

The Motor-Cycle Club of France will be holding the first race for the International Cup for Motor Cycles on the 25th of this month, the course selected being from St. Arnoult to La forêt le Roi, Ablis and back to St. Arnoult, a distance of some 54 kilometres. This course will have to be covered by the competitors five times so the total distance of the race will be 270 kilometres or in the English equivalent 167 miles 1,370 yards. The race will be held on very similar lines and conditions to those governing the race for the famous Gordon Bennett trophy. Affiliated countries are entitled to send three representatives and the machines these representatives ride must be entirely manufactured in their respective countries. It is bound to prove interesting as all international contests are.

A Staffordshire cyclist has brought great trouble upon his own head, by riding a machine not equipped with reliable brakes. His afflictions consist of a lost situation, personal damages and a fine from the bench of 10s. and costs. No one will pity him for the offender was accused with having addressed some ladies in anything but polite language, of running into a pedestrian on a hill and finally riding over a child in a basinette. His plea was that he had lost control of his machine, which might have been true although it is quite certain that he lost control of his tongue.

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

The Final.

North Staffords vs. Black Watch.—A large crowd witnessed the final game in the tournament, played at Annandale on the 30th ultimo. The weather conditions were perfect and a splendid game was put up. At the start the Staffords pressed and forced a corner, from which they nearly scored. Another corner to the Staffords followed, but the Highlanders cleared and rushing down kept the opposing custodian busy, he was equal to all the shots however and the ball was transferred to the Highlanders' end where it was put through. A penalty against the Black Watch shortly after enabled the Staffords to score a second goal. The Highlanders, playing hard, attacked till the interval. They got a corner, but nothing resulted. On resuming, the Staffords pressed and had rather the best of the game, but they were unable to get through the Highlanders' defence and there was no further scoring, the match ending in a win for the North Staffords by two goals to nil. Lady Ampthill presented the trophy and medals to the winning team and the Viceroy made a short speech the substance of which will be found in our Athletic Notes.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA RUGBY TOURNAMENT.

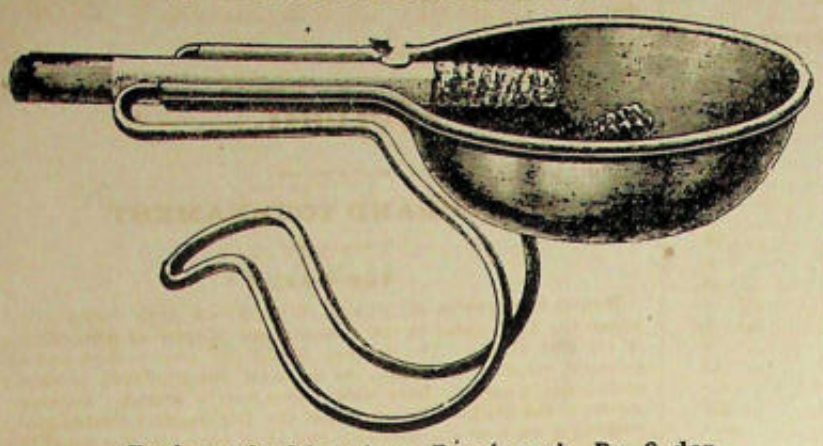
I was able to send you wires giving the results of two out of the four games in the Rugby Tournament and can now give a brief summary of the whole tournament. Two of the games it must be admitted were greatly lacking in interest, those in which the local teams were engaged, owing to their one-sided nature. The Gymkhana who had to meet the Gloucester Regiment in the first round had perhaps some excuse for their defeat as owing to accidents and transfers they were without two of their best scrummagers A. P. and J. A. D. Langhorne (transferred) and two others, Elseworth and Mackay ("crocked"). Naturally in the absence of four of their regular forwards their pack was greatly weakened. But what was almost of as great consequence was the inability of D. H. Brand the skipper and half-back to play and as E. R. Jones was unable to take his place the vacancy had to be filled by F. St. G. Gratwicke, who did not shine in that position, his usual place being three-quarter back. Had the Gymkhana pack been able to hold their opponents the game would have been a fairly even one, but as it was the forwards were completely overrun and the backs rarely had a chance of getting away The superiority of the Gloucesters forwards was most marked and this with the excellent combination shown by their three-quarters gave them the victory by 3 goals and 2 tries to 1 try.

A larger crowd than I have seen for many a long day filled the enclosure and lined the ground to witness the game between the Calcutta Football Club and the Welsh Regiment which promised to furnish an interesting struggle. Unfortunately for the Calcutta team their forwards, as was the case of the Gymkhana in the previous game, were so badly beaten, that their backs on whom they chiefly relied were completely tied up and never had a real chance throughout the game of showing that combination to be looked for from such three-quarters as Martelli and Barnes, and halves as Cumberlege and Marshall, most of whom have, if I am not mistaken, played in first class football at home. The Welsh whose training has enabled them to reach a high standard of efficiency, played a superb game, and if we could see a little of the form they showed more frequently in Bombay, the Rugby code would soon be popular again. What struck me particularly about the Welsh three-quarters was their passing and the way they marked the opposing three-quarters. A. Siddons got away once or twice and Martelli on at least one occasion looked dangerous but these were about all the openings they had, so closely were they marked. The genial Irish skipper, Martelli, who, I should take this opportunity of mentioning, officiated as referee in all the other games, worked hard to avert defeat but it was a hopeless task behind badly beaten forwards. Considering that the Calcutta forwards shaped so poorly the defeat of their side by 2 goals (1 dropped) and 2 tries to nil reflected no disgrace on the side as a whole. Quite the contrary it was eloquent testimony of the fine work put in by the backs.



The third game in the tournament between the Gloucesters and the Casuals does not call for much notice resulting as it did in a runaway victory for the Gloucesters by 4 goals and 4 tries (32 points) to nil. The local team gave as poor an exhibition as I have ever seen and were completely outplayed at every point of the game. They are a young team and were plucky to have entered for the Tournament, but they must show very much improved form before they hope to meet even ordinary teams on even terms.

The Final.

The Welsh vs the Glosters.—This was a grand game and although the Welsh beat the Gloucesters by two goals (one dropped) and a try (12 points) to a goal (5 points) the game was a much more even one than the difference in points secured to indicate. The Gloucesters who played a quiet gentlemanly game had distinctly the best of exchanges in the first half and when the sides changed over were leading by a goal to a try. It was not only in points, however, that they had the best of the game during this period, but in the actual play as for two-thirds of the time the ball was either inside the Welsh "25" or between the "25" flag and midfield. The Welsh played a rougher game than their opponents and in their excitement resorted to some unorthodox methods. Mr. Martelli, whose refereeing during the tournament evoked high praise, was down like a hawk on offenders who indulged in rough play and the number of free kicks given against the Welsh for fouls and offside were considerable. There was one point in which the Welsh showed any marked superiority and that was in the combination shown by their three-quarters whose passing, tackling, and running was very fine indeed. Better combination and a faster back division were the factors that decided the game in their favour. The best three quarter on the ground was, however, Holder the Gloucester left centre whose kicking was magnificent and who when once well away was a very difficult man to bring to grass. In the line outs the under Welsh forwards marked their men better, but the Gloucesters on the other hand were quicker in following up the ball and smarter with their feet.

The Welsh had most of the play in the second half. Their second try was inexplicable; from a kick out from touch in goal the latter obtained the ball and walked across with the Gloucesters idly staring at him. The Gloucesters attacked strongly after the Welsh had converted their second try into a goal and twice were nearly across their opponent's line. Once, indeed, after a fine piece of combined play by the three-quarters, Holder was within an ace of scoring, but was smartly brought down on the line where after several exciting scrums the ball was passed back again to the three-quarters but a weak pass spoilt an almost certain chance of scoring. During the remainder of the closing period the Welsh had the upper hand and kept play confined in their opponent's "25" for the most part. All things considered it was a magnificent game, and I think the Calcutta skipper who refereed will bear me out in this remark The Welsh have now won the cup nine times, their record up to 1902 being eight times in succession.

MADRAS RUGBY TOURNAMENT.

MADRAS GYMKHANA vs. H. M. S. "HYACINTH."—The advent of the Hyacinth, the flagship of the East India Squadron has put a little life into sporting circles in Madras, which except for a little cricket was going a bit slow pending the arrival of the cool season. On Saturday last they played the M. C. C. at cricket and won quite easily, then they took them on at hockey but found the local team in too good practice for them and were beaten. Learning that the Madras Rugby Football Tournament had fallen through for lack of entries, they very sportingly entered a team for it, and the match, the only one in the tournament, was played on the 27th ultimo on the Gymkhana ground on the island before a fairly large gathering of spectators. The game was very one-sided but interesting all through. The M. C. C. team had the measure of their opponents from the very start and in the end won easily by the large margin of 26 points (4 goals and 2 tries) to nil. The Hyacinths lacked the skill and combination of their opponents; but in keenness and go they were 'all there' and played to the bitter end of a game that was always going against them without any "slacking."

The Madras team won the toss and played with the wind behind them, the blue jackets kicking off. The latter gained a little ground at the start by playing strongly for touch and a series of toughly-contested "scrums" took place in the Gymkhana half. Play afterwards became faster and a couple of runs on either side livened up the game and the Gymkhana came in and kept the Hyacinths busy defending. Haughton receiving the ball from Pelly was pulled up just short of the Hyacinths goal line and later, taking the ball from Hooper he essayed a clever drop kick at goal just before he was tackled and narrowly missed. The Hyacinths touched down in self-defence, but the kick out gave them very little respite; the ball was quickly back again and from a line out Faith got away and grounded the ball behind the posts and Hooper converted a certain goal. The Hyacinths, unable to get through, took to dribbling and for a time kept the Gymkhana from being too pressing, while the tackling of their back division was quite good. Glasgow stopping more than one rush; but the next score came from the Layard who picking up the ball dribbled to him by Faith went down with it on the right and being too fast for the sailor backs again secured a try behind the posts. Hooper again converting without any difficulty. The Gymkhana now kept up a determined attack. An attempt by Prendergast to pass Glasgow was quickly stopped; but from a scrum some clever passing by Clarke, Cattell, and Layard resulted in the lastnamed just falling across the line near the corner and scoring a try. The kick—a long and difficult one, with a tricky wind to contend with—was taken by Hooper and scored a goal. Half time now sounded with the home team leading by 15 points to nil.

In the second half the Gymkhana with a mighty kick off by Hooper to aid them were soon in the Hyacinth's ground where they stayed almost without a break for the rest of the time. Play at first was confined to "scrums" and short runs but the Hyacinths were good in their defensive work in stopping individuals. A fine passing run by Pelly, Cattell and Haughton stopped by Porter, let the Gymkhana in and from a pass out from a scrum near the sailors' goal Clarke went in a and scored a try. H. A. C. Campbell took the kick, a certain one and scored the fourth goal. The rest of the game was played in semi-darkness; but the next score came from one of the finest pieces of passing by the Gymkhana witnessed in the match. Haughton getting the ball in Gymkhana territory fought his way through the Hyacinth forwards and then some fine passing among the backs resulted in Steele getting through but no goal resulted. The final try came from another good bit of passing in which Hooper, Steele, Haughton, Pelly, and Layard were associated, the last-named scoring. Time was called the Gymkhana winning by 4 goals and 2 tries (26 points) to nil. They thus win the handsome Rugby Cup which would only have become their's this year by the inglorious process of a walkover had the Hyacinths not entered. Appended are the names of the teams:—

FOOTBALL IN MADRAS.

MADRAS GYMKHANA vs. "HYACINTH"—The Hyacinth left Madras on the 29th ultimo for Trincomalee but before doing so the sporting crew had one more "go" for the Madras Gymkhana on the 28th idem, taking them on this time in a game of soccer. Madras put a strong side into the field, showing from experience that the "sailor men" make up in perseverance and persistence what they lack in skill. The Hyacinths were unable to get together their usual team and some delay took place, the game not commencing till past 5 30 P.M. It was then decided to play 40 minutes without a break, but even then the game ended in the dusk From the start it was seen that the local team were cleverer and better trained than their opponents who, as usual, played keenly and pluckily, but had no chance until the end when they got in a shot or two which were ineffective owing to inaccurate shooting. They were beaten by 4 goals to nil, which if not so over-whelming as their defeat in the Rugby match the previous evening was conclusive enough.

The game started with the Hyacinth playing with the wind and attacking the town goal and the opening exchanges were uninteresting. The Gymkhana then found their feet and kept the sailors pretty unanimously on the defensive as their defence was too good for the occasion at breaksaway by the blue jackets. The Gymkhana shortly forced a corner, but it was not improved on and their play opened out a bit, the sailors having quite their share of the play. Gordon Fraser with a clever run on the right opened the score for the home team, and this was evidently the signal for further successes, for a moment later Strouts put in a hot shot which Pengelly reached; but the ball rebounded from his hands into the net. The Hyacinth put on their mettle by these scores against them played up and got away with the ball, and Pelly was called upon to protect his goal which he did without difficulty. The Gymkhana by clever tactics forced the ball back into the visitor's territory where O'Reilly getting on to it scored with a "stinger." The Gymkhana slacked of a bit and the Hyacinths got to work; but they could not break through the defence of the Gymkhana whose forward line freshly attacked before the call of time when Partridge scored their fourth goal for them. Teams:—

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

8th September.

THE Irish Open Championship being the most important meeting of the month must hold first place in date as well as interest just now This the 13th of its kind was commenced, as I recorded in my last notes, at Newcastle, County Down with International matches between the three rival sister Countries; England, Ireland, and Scotland, and resulted in a decided triumph for Scotland—they beating England by 47 holes to 25 and Ireland by 43 holes to 31, while England beat Ireland by 38 holes to 36. Such poor form on the part of the Home Country pointed to the chances of victory of Ireland as very small, but then, the most fancied Irish player, Mr. H. H. Reade, was, it must be remembred, an absentee. On Tuesday, 30th August, the date of the Stroke Competition the weather was excellent, fine, and calm, and 104 players took out cards. When Mr. G. Wilkie's fine score of 76+4=80 was given in it was thought that considering that the Bogey is 82, he would be almost certain of victory, but later Mr. Forster, of Fointon, came in with a 74 gross+4=78. His figures were:—

Out 6, 4, 4, 6, 4, 4, 3, 3, 3, = 37.
In 4, 4, 4, 5, 4, 5, 4, 3, 4, = 37=74.

a wonderful card and one that no one expected would be beaten during the meeting. Mr. Stewart gave promise of a remarkable round up to the 11th hole, but falling off somewhat in the last 4 holes he only returned a score of 79. Mr. Forster's card gave him the choice of gross or net prizes, both of equal value. In the latter part of the day, the first round of the Championship was played. By this time, the wind had increased very much, and 38 couples were down to start, of these five scratched, three ended on the last green—two were decided on the 20th green and one at the 21st. The biggest win was that of Mr. A. Robertson, of Edinborough Thistle with 8 up and 6 to play on Mr. F. G. Gillespie, of Edinborough Burgess In this round some surprise was created by the defeat of the last year's winner, Mr. Wilkie, by Mr. E. A. Apthorp, of Bedford. After his score in the morning it was thought he was safe for two or three rounds—a sliced ball at the 17th, when the match was square, lost him that hole and a duffed second at the 18th lost him the match by 2 holes. Mr. Forster in his match with Mr. Macniven had to play 21 holes before he could gain the victory. Mr. H. A. Boyd's defeat by Mr. Ritchie on the 15th green came as another surprise.

On Wednesday the second round was played; with the exception of Mr. W. G. Ritchie's defeat by Mr. J. D. Brown most of the matches finished according to expectation, Mr. Dobson scratched to Mr. C. E. Stuart, and Mr. Young to Mr. Dunn; five of the 32 matches were concluded on the 18th green, one at the 19th and two at the 20th. Mr. D. Forster had another very tight match with Mr. A. Duncan, the latter being 1 up at the 12th from thence, however, Mr. Forster played beautiful golf and won by 3 and 1. Mr. Mitchell only qualified for the third round by beating Mr. C. K. Potter on the 20th green. At the 19th Mr. Mitchell lost a stroke by driving out of bounds, but by a beautifully played approach shot, from which he holed out, he succeeded in snatching a half, and at the next hole his opponent pulled his tie shot which lost him the match.

The third round was productive of some very interesting matches, Mr. C. E. Stuart after being 3 up and 5 to play eventually lost to Mr. Apthorp on the 19th green. Between Mr. H. H. Reade and Mr. Easterbrook, it was a deadly struggle on the outward journey, but coming home the Irishman and Ex-Champion steadily increased his lead and won by 5 up and 3 to play.

Thursday, 1st September, was an ideal golfing day when the eight couples started in the fourth round. Again Mr. Forster played fine golf, and having an easy match in Mr. A. Robertson, who was 'off" he won by 6 and 5. A great struggle between Mr. Cairnes and Mr. H. G Stewart was expected, both players being very much fancied. Mr. Cairnes, however, was completely "off" his game and his putting being especially weak he lost by 4 holes. The two Irish players, H. H Reade and H. C. "Bruce," had a deadly struggle, which ultimately ended in favour of "the Bruce" by 3 up and 1 to play. At the conclusion of the fourth round only one Irishman remained in, this was 'the Bruce" better known in Irish golfing circles as Dr. Brian O'Brian. In the fifth round Mr. Mitchell beat Mr. Dunn by 5 and 4. Mr. Stewart fell to Mr. Forster at the 16th hole by 3 and 2 to play. Mr. Worthingron defeated Mr. "Bruce" by 1 hole, and Mr. Palmer beat Mr. Andrew 2 up.

The Semi finals were played on the Friday in dull but very pleasant weather, and there was nothing particularly exciting or worthy of comment in either of the two matches, Mr. Mitchell defeated Mr. Forster on the 17th green by 3 up and 1 to play, and Mr. Worthington secured a brilliant win of 5 up and 4 over Mr. Palmer, which somewhat surprised many people who considered Mr. Palmer quite worthy of and likely to obtain premier honours. In the afternoon, as is not unusual under the shadow of the Manne Mountains—and elsewhere in the Emerald Isle, the weather completely changed, torrents of rain and a violent storm made golf impossible and at the 9th hole, when the finals were being contested with Mr. Mitchell 1 up, it was thought imperative to postpone the match until the following day. On resuming play on Saturday Mr. Mitchell finished the first round of 18 holes, 3 up; but falling to pieces in the afternoon. Mr. Worthington secured an easy victory by 6 up and 4 to play, his round of 74 being made up as follows:—

Out ... 5, 4, 4, 5, 4, 4, 3, 4, 3=36 }
In ... 3, 4, 5, 3, 4, 6, 5, 3, 5=38 } =74.

The present Irish Open Champion, Mr. J. S. Worthington, is well known in Golfing circles as one of the Mid Surrey "cracks;" throughout the meeting at Newcastle, he met foeman after foeman worthy of his steel and twice only reached his goal by the narrow margin of 1 hole. The opponents over whom he obtained the victory are as follows:—

Mr. W. S. Colville (Glasgow),	to whom he was	1 up
" A. Crawford (S. Nicholas)	" "	2 "
D. G. McKenzie (Morton Hall)	" "	4 and 3
F G Dickson (North West)	" "	2 and 1
Dr. Brian O'Brian (Belfast)	" "	1 up
C. A. Palmer (Handsworth)	" "	5 and 4
J. F. Mitchell (Musselborough)	" "	6 and 4

Mr. Clive Lawrence, (a son of the newly created Justice Lawrence) on Wednesday, 31st August, broke the record of the Sain Links by one stroke, the previous one of 74 being held jointly by himself and the Club Professional H. A. Richards, Mr. Lawrence's figures in his new record are as follows :—

Out 5, 4, 5, 4, 4, 4, 3, 5, 4=38.
In 5, 4, 4, 4, 3, 5, 4, 3, 3=35=73.

There was a stiff breeze blowing at the time. The North Berwick Golf Club, one of the oldest and most select in Scotland held their Annual Meeting on Thursday, 1st September, Colonel W W. Gray was elected Captain for the ensuing year, the business being conducted in a marquee erected for the purpose close to the home green. In the competition held after the business meeting, Mr. J. Laidlay, partnered with the Right Hon'ble A J. Balfour did a fine round of 79, going out in 43, he accomplished a brilliant feat in the incoming holes—doing them in 36—and with his 79 he easily won the Scratch Medal; the best handicap return was made by Mr. W. J. Mure with 88–0=88. Record beating seems the order of the day just now, for while playing at Prestwick in a fourth Ball fairsome with Mr. Coats against E. D. Protheroe and the professional J. Hunter Mr. Robert Maxwell, the amateur ex-champion lowered the record for their green to 66. With a remarkable succession of 5 threes as a start he was out in a marvellous 30 and by absolutely faultless golf he came home in 36. This phenomenal score was aided only by two shots which might be called lucky—one was by holing an approach at the third hole, and laying his approach dead at the 18 might be termed another piece of luck; his score was as follows :—

Out 3, 3, 3, 3, 3, 4, 3, 4, 4=30.
In 5, 4, 5, 4, 4, 4, 3, 4, 3=36=66.

There was a big field of ladies at North Berwick on Friday, 26th August, 44 cards being taken out for competition for the Club Gold Medal and 3 handicap prizes. The Scratch Medal was won by Miss Hilda Sant with a record score of 59 (30 and 29). The course is a 9 holes one and in the second round Miss Sant had no fewer than seven consecutive 3's. The next best scratch score was by Miss C. Fyfe who with 63–6=57 tied with Miss F. Murray 73–16=59 and Mrs. Cockburn 75–18=59 for first place.

The Edzell Professional Tournament on the 1st, 2nd, 3rd September was a tremendous success. On the first day 30 of the finest players in the United Kingdom played 36 for handsome money prizes. Two years ago Harry Varden succeeded in lowering the record and accomplishing his round in 66, but the best score returned on Thursday 1st September was a 70 by J. H. Taylor. The first prizes, value each £9-10, were won by Harry Varden with 74 and 71=145 being equalled by Amand Massey's aggregate series of 72 and 73=145. The second prize was won by Ben Sayers with a total of 147 (prize value £6-6-8). A Herd—also 147 and James Braid the same total all three receiving the sum of £6-6-8 each. J. H. Taylor with 148 received £4 and T. G Renout with 150 received £3. The following day's play, resulted in Vardon and Braid, old foes and old friends—qualifying for the final. (The first eight players on the preceding day having qualified for the second stage) On the Thursday the final was a very exciting match, at the turn Braid stood, 1 up being out in 38, winning the 10th he stood 2 up, but the next 5 holes were divided in perfect Golf; winning the 16 and 18 by his putting which was grand Vardon, squared the match. In the afternoon at the 27 hole Braid held a lead of three and continuing his fine strong game the Scotsman eventually won by 4 up 3 to play.

The Annual Handicap Tournament for the Queen Victoria Jubilee Vase was commenced at St. Andrew's on Tuesday, 6th instant, when as one of the competitors wrote me the "very air vibrated with golf." The entrants numbered 76 and included most of the best players in the club. Play was over the old course which was in perfect condition. The first round was chiefly remarkable for the many defeats of cracks. A very close match was that between Mr. Ferrier Ross (scratch) and Mr. V. A. Pollock (+1) the latter played a fine game going out in 38 and stood 2 up, becoming dormy at the 17th he halved the 18th and entered the next round four matches were halved and six ended on the 18th green. The second round was productive of some very close matches particularly those between Mr. Robert Whyte and Mr. Elwes, those were all square with 1 to play when Mr. Whyte secured the hole and entered the third round. Mr. Low played fine golf against Mr. Wilson going out in 38 winning his match by 4 and 3. He accomplished the round in 78 strokes. On Wednesday the third and fourth rounds were played in beautiful weather. The first couple to go out in the evening was Mr. Robert Whyte and Mr. Maitland and a close match between them resulted in a half. Another good game was that between Sir Thomas Packyers and Mr. A. S. M. Low, which ended in favour of the latter by 1 hole. Mr. J. L. Low and Mr. Fowler were also very near, but after being 3 up at the turn the former again relinquished his lead and brought the game to a close on the 17th green. Play in the fourth round was opened by Mr. Gurley Blackwell (who had a bye in the previous round) and Mr. Robert White. At the turn Mr. White led by one hole—but his opponent gradually assumed the lead until at the 17th he clinched matters by standing 2 up and 1 to play. Mr. H. S. Boyd somewhat easily disposed of Mr. Maitland 7 6 and 4 Mr. R. B. Sharp beat Mr. A. S. Low on the 13th green. Mr. J. L. Low won from Mr. Walter Blackwell by 4 up and 3 and the fifth round was begun on Thursday in dull weather. Rain having fallen heavily during the night the green was somewhat dead. Some very close fights took place in this round. Mr. E. Blackwell halved with Mr. E. C. P. Boyd, Mr. H. E. Boyd and Mr. Sharp had another hard tussle also resulting in a half. Another squared match was between Mr. John Low and Mr. Cook. In the afternoon those who had halved played one another again: in that between Mr. Blackwell and Mr. E. C. P. Boyd, the former assumed the lead early and won somewhat easily. Mr. Sharp succumbed to Mr. Boyd. The semi-finals between Mr. Cook and Mr. Blackwell and Mr. John Low and Mr. Boyd (H L.) attracted a large number of spectators. Mr. Blackwell playing fine golf led throughout and won by 4 up and 3 to play. The fight between the others was a very keen one, but eventually Mr. H. L. Boyd entered the finals by a victory of 3 up and 2 over Mr Low and by beating Mr. Blackwell by 5 up and 3 to play in the last stage Mr. Boyd won the Jubilee Vase.

While the St. Andrew's players were striving against one another for the Victoria Jubilee Vase—the links of Lamlash were gay and crowded with aspirants to the title of South of Ireland Champion. As is usual the proceedings opened with a stroke competition among the entrants in which 56 players took out cards, the successful competitor being a local player Mr. Eric Shaw who went round in 85–9=76; only 12 matches were played in the first round 20 players receiving byes. With the exception of that between Mr. D. Forster (the Frinton crack) and Mr. Eric Shaw which ended in favour of the former on the 17th green, none of the matches were especially close. In the second round, however, some very good contests were fought, that between the Irish closel Champion Mr. H. H Boyd and Mr. Forster being especially exciting; neither was ever more than 1 up and it was only on the last green when by securing a half when doing 1, that Mr. Forster qualified for the third heat. Another very keen fight was between a former holder Mr. Browning and Mr. Horace Castle (well known in the South of England). This was a give-and-take match from start to finish and only on the 17th green could the Englishman (Castle) claim the victory. In wild wet weather the third and fourth rounds were played on Thursday. Mr. Forster, and the Chislehurst player Mr. Dun, had a close match in the morning which the former won by 3 and 2. Some surprise was caused by the defeat of Mr. Livingston by Mr. Cecil Boyd. The afternoon matches were devoid of any marked feature. Mr. Boyd again played surprisingly well but in Mr. Foy he more than found his match, the latter appropriated and kept the lead from the beginning. When Mr. T. Allen defeated Mr. Lysaght the last of the Irishmen disappeared from the competition. In the semi-finals which took place in showery weather Mr. Horace Castle beat Mr. Fry by 4 up and 3 to play, and Mr. D. Forster defeated Mr. Allen by 6 and 5. The first half of the finals was played on Friday afternoon in a strong wind, Mr. Forster secured the lead from the very onset; his short game was particularly deadly and he finished the 18 holes with the comfortable lead of 5 holes from Mr. Castle. The last 18 holes was exciting, for at the 16th green the match was square. Going to the 18th, Mr. Forster by playing a magnificent approach from which he holed, gained the match and the title of South of Ireland Champion. By the bye—though now playing almost entirely at Frinton-on-Sea, Mr. A. Forster is an old Leven player.

Another ex-old Scottish golfer, Mr. D. G. Soutar of Carnoustie fame, has just won the Amateur Championship of New South Wales, the final was a somewhat remarkable achievement, for Mr. Soutar defeated his opponent Mr. R. Whytt, the Honorary Secretary, Royal Sydney Club, by no less than 12 up and 11 to play. A curious incident occurring at the beginning of the finals served to unsteady Mr. Whytt and quite put him off his game. Some boys with a dog were on a green, and Whytt hurled his putter at the dog (of course not at the boys) which he hit and probably hurt. The incident seemed to quite un-nerve him and he never once succeeded in holing a long putt, his opponent whose nerves were stronger and who had not hit the dog appeared indifferent and finished the first round 7 up in 83 strokes. Meanwhile the aspirants for the title of Champion of Wales, have decided their fate, and the lot has fallen on one well-known to golfers in the South of England and especially to those who frequent the West Middlesex Golf Course at Southall—Mr. Hal Ludlow—of sketching fame. In the semi-finals at Llanelly on the Ashburnham Links, Mr. Ludlow beat Major Green and Mr. R. M. Brown beat Captain Wilkins. Subsequently Mr. Ludlow by defeating Mr. Brown earned the title of Amateur Champion of Wales. A very exceptional circumstance occurred recently at Cufield when 4 players tied for first place in the September Medal Competition—there were Mr. Smallwood, 79–2=77; Mr. F. Haycroft, 87–10=77; Mr. C. C. Rawlinson, 87–10=77; and Mr. G. Walker, 89–12=77. Next came Mr. Jackson, 92–14=78; Mr. A. C. Young, 77+2=79, etc, etc. In the now annual match between "cricket golfers and golf cricketers" for the latter team the three famous golfers Braid, Taylor, and Vardon did not excel. the three between them contributing only nine runs and the result of the match was a draw, the match being only a one-day one, the golf cricketers "declared" with eight wickets down for 181 and the cricket golfers had one wicket down for 96 runs of which the Kent Captain, G. L. Jessop, contributed 76 not out including eleven fours.

THE GUN-DOG.

IT has often been stated that the modern breeds of the dog were gradually evolved from crosses between the dingo, the wolf, and other carnivora of a similar nature. Doubtful though this point must necessarily remain, all facts and researches go to show that the varieties were primarily produced by natural selection, and by the influence of their surroundings. Differences in climate and food tended towards the evolution of distinct breeds, and when eventually the wild species were domesticated by man, the varieties were multiplied at will, according to the purpose for which they were required.

In pre-historic times the dog was the companion of the aboriginal hunter, and was used for tracking and killing game, as well as for guarding his master from the stealthy approach of an enemy, and it is at this point that the evolution of the gun-dog begins. Throughout the ages man naturally chose the fastest and most intelligent animals to assist him in his search for food, and a keen nose has always been regarded as indispensable for this purpose.

We are, however, at present concerned only with a limited number of species, namely, those now used in connection with modern sport. Strictly speaking, the deerhound might be classed in this category, but space will only permit us to deal briefly with pointers, setters, retrievers, and spaniels, although terriers, dachshunds, beagles, and others are often used for rabbiting and working in concert.

Pointers first appeared in England country about the year 1720, when shooting birds on the wing first came into vogue. A certain Baron Bechill is said to have imported the first pointer from Spain into Norfolk. Later, Colonel Thornton crossed the Spanish pointer with the foxhound, and from this cross the modern breed has descended. At the present date pointers vary very considerably in colour, though the liver and-white and the lemon-and-white are varieties perhaps most commonly seen. Orange and white, black and white, or even pure black specimens are not unknown, and one of the best down-wind workers in the writer's experience was of the last-named variety. Colour is immaterial, but in selecting dogs, especially for breeding purposes, the greatest care should be taken to choose well-formed specimens. No dog requires so much space for the lungs and interior organs as pointers and setters, and well-sprung ribs are indispensable in connection with a deep chest and strong, muscular loins. The legs should be straight, and the thighs perfectly curved and symmetrical. The dog must have a good head and eye, wide nostrils, and compact feet, neither spreading nor arched; sloping shoulders, with the blades coming close together, the mouth neither undershot nor overshot, but with a broad, level muzzle. These qualifications are necessary for all sporting dogs which have to endure hard work, and especially for pointers, setters, and retrievers. The tendency of breeders is to select the sire and dam mainly for producing progeny which will shine on the show bench, and utility is in many cases sacrificed to looks. In pointers and setters this is hardly so noticeable as in other varieties, but we see it in retrievers and spaniels, and the show specimens of these breeds are often deficient in nose, endurance, and other necessary qualities.

Of setters there are three varieties—the English, the Gordon, and the Irish breeds. The former is black or blue and white, orange and white, black, tan, and white, lemon and white, or liver and white in colour. The Gordon is black and tan and the Irish pure red or red and white. The latter is somewhat lighter in build than the others, and rather more graceful in outline, but all three are conspicuous for beauty, and have their distinctive peculiarities. Setters are less suitable for severe work in hot weather than pointers, but the latter are more liable to suffer from cut feet and torn claws than their long-coated companions. The setter was formerly known as the spaniel, but since the development of the varieties of working spaniels this name has been applied to them alone. Setters were used earlier than pointers, certainly in connection with falconry in the 16th century, at which period no man could keep a "setting dog" unless he possessed land to the value of £10 per annum. Early in the last century the Laverack breed was introduced, but the strain has now been entirely lost, although the "ticked" varieties of the English setter generally owe their distinction to a cross with the Laverack.

The flat-coated retriever has to a great extent ousted the burly Labrador breeds, although the two latter are greatly in favour with wildfowlers or for rough or mixed shooting. The curlies are probably produced from the Irish water spaniel and the poodle, and the flat or wavy-coated variety from a cross between the Labrador, the collie, and the setter. The liver specimens which are occasionally met with are produced by a "throw-back" to the Irish setter blood, but a liver bitch is just as likely to have black as liver pups.

In breaking retrievers, the greatest perseverance and patience are necessary, especially with shy and timid specimens, and they should be perfectly steady to "feather" before they are allowed to touch "fur." At the age of six months a pup should have learnt to walk at heel, come back to whistle, drop or sit at word of command, and to use his nose in finding some soft object such as a cap which has previously been dropped without his knowledge. He should retrieve tenderly to hand at full speed, and be more or less under control. He may then be introduced to game, and will probably soon discover the meaning of the shot, and, if he is worth anything, will try to "run in." This can be checked by means of a check-cord, and the young dog should be steady at 12 months old, although he will not be seen at his best till the end of the second or third season.

Space will only permit a few remarks about spaniels which are of six varieties, besides innumerable crosses which are sometimes considered distinctive breeds. These are the Clumber, the Sussex, the Black, Welsh springer, the Cocker, and the Irish Water Spaniel. The lastnamed is used principally for wildfowling, and is invaluable to the sportsman who prefer rough or mixed shooting, while his intelligence and adaptability render him suitable for all kinds of work. In the Highlands both fur and feather lie so much in thick, rank heather that a lightly-built, long-legged dog has a great advantage over the short-legged, heavy bodied show specimens; and the Welsh Springer and the Cocker are thus more suitable than the Clumber and the Sussex spaniels though the activity of the latter sometimes enables him to negotiate the thickest cover with success.

Spaniels should be worked in teams, should drop or stand to shot, put up game, but not chase it, and range within 30 yards of the handler. Teams may vary from two to twelve in number but if many are used the dark and liver coloured varieties should be excluded, owing to the risk of shooting them by mistake. Welsh Springers are generally lemon and white in colour and are seldom seen in the Highlands. The writer had, however, the opportunity of watching a team at work on the West Coast last winter, and there can be little doubt that no other variety is so well adapted for woodcock shooting, rabbiting, or any form of sport where game lies close in thick covert. The spaniel was formerly used, like the setter, in connection with falconry, and is described in works dating from the 13th century, but the numbers of the breed were probably very limited at this early period.

Spaniels, pointers, and setters have all suffered from the adoption of driving as opposed to shooting over dogs and their popularity has decreased in favour of the retriever. This is more evident in connection with partridge shooting, owing to the short stubble which remains after the progress of the modern reaper. To a great extent the same tendency is in progress on the moors but from different causes. Some say that the disappearence of pointers and setters is only a matter of time, but all dog-lovers would regret the change.

A few years ago that scourge of the doggy world, distemper was unknown in the Highlands, but we must now make up our minds to endure it in common with the rest of the United Kingdom. The older a dog may be when attacked by the malady, the severer is its form, and puppies, fortunately, generally recover if carefully nursed. The symptoms are unmistakable—feverishness accompanied by a yellow discharge from the nose and the nostrils, while in bad cases the lungs and bowels are affected. Fresh air is essential, and the disease must run its course. The dog should be placed in a warm but airy room or kennel, and food should be light, consisting of milk or broth. The bowels should be attended to and on the first appearance of the malady an emetic may be given with advantage.

The Naturalist.

A NATURALIST IN THE N.-W. HIMALAYAS. PART IV.

THE month of April is a busy one for the naturalist and the sportsman—spring weather causes the bears to move about, at first they do not wander far from the winter retreat, they seem to be but half awake, but with the aid of a few warm days they recover themselves and travel in quest of food.

Ursus torquatus (the Himalayan black bear) does not hibernate if this can be avoided, very large numbers migrate downwards into the lower ranges where snow does not stay on to the ground some even going on to the edge of the plains.

Whilst migrating the black bears will often be attracted by forests which contain oaks, it is astonishing what a number can be met with in the lower forests when the acorn is on the tree, a few days will however again find them moving downwards, thus a forest may contain a score or two of bears one week and in the next not a single one. If you find the black bear high up in the hills during the early spring as often as not the animal will prove to be a very old male, these undoubtedly hibernate, they stay out as long as they can find a good supply of food, and then retire to a hollow tree or some very dense jungle, if disturbed and made to move they appear to be easily fatigued, whilst the frozen snow is on the ground they are unable to get about without cutting their paws, and very shortly after they are turned out of a lair blood stains will be seen on all their footprints.

Some times in mid winter the black bear can be heard grumbling in these lairs, but in the morning no trace of their having moved is found, and the whereabouts of the beast is hard to determine. I am inclined to think that after the bear has retired for the winter, it never willingly emerges until the milder season of early spring comes, in fact until the sun has thawed the snow and the green grass springs up. It is partly due to the effect of eating the freshly-grown herbage that bears are so very thin in the early spring. I have been induced to write these few lines, because the question is so often asked whether the black bears hibernate or not.

If they stay in the higher valleys they must do so where one of the last of the berries they can get in large quantities is that of the hawthorn. Acorns are generally found on hills from which the black bears can descend without having any high ranges to cross and are taken in due course of migration.

Searching for voles and other small rodents in the spring is not very profitable, the shallow runs which are made under the turf would not protect them from the melting snow, consequently the voles in winter burrow deep amongst the roots of trees—at the best of times they are hard to catch Their chief food consists of roots, any succulent stalks are greedily devoured; in gardens the destruction they cause is very aggravating, now and again they can be caught in a trap, but the best plan is to set a man to watch until they are found throwing out the freshly-dug earth from these burrows and then to drive an axe or some thin implement into the run, the retreat will then be cut off and they are easily captured.

Young voles are curiously tame, if placed amongst suitable herbage they will generally begin to eat as soon as released from the hand.

A vole we have lately been collecting chiefly on the borders of the Wurdwan in Kashmir at altitudes varying from about 7,000 feet to 11,000 feet is causing a great deal of research before it can be identified and I shall be very pleased to send a small series to anyone who has collected these small mammals, and still more would I like to exchange them for any voles procured from the hills north of Dehra or from any part of Kumaon, etc. Microtus stracheyi (the Kumaon vole) is the name for the time being given to a specimen I have procured from north eastern Ladak, if anyone will give me the chance of comparing this with voles from Kumaon I should be greatly obliged.

BEE CULTURE.

Mr. H. M. Phipson stated that he had lately been trying to interest the Agricultural Department on the subject of bee culture in the hope that they might see their way to carry out properly conducted experiments on the domestication of the two species of Indian bees which are not migratory (Apis nigrocinctus and Apis dorsata) and also possibly to introduce the European hive bee (Apis mellifica). Seeing how largely honey is used by the people of this country for the preservation of fruit and for sweetmeats, it is surprising that bee culture has not been further developed Dr. Theodore Cooke made some interesting experiments several years ago in Poona, with Apis indica, but as this species of bee is known to be migratory, the experiments led to disappointment, as on the approach of the hot season the swarms fled to the hills, along with the Government officials. Had the experiments been made with the rock bee (Apis dorsata) which is twice the size of the other, the results might have been very different.

Mr. L. C. H. Young, the Honorary Secretary of the Insect Section, read some extracts from the latest work on the subject of Indian Hymenoptera, by Colonel C. T. Bingham, and suggested that members of the Society living in the Punjab, Kolhapur, and other places, where experiments had been made, should be asked to communicate with the Society on the subject.

FLEAS.

The Honorary Secretary stated that Captain W. G. Liston, I. M. S. had kindly offered to read another paper before this Society, at the November meeting, on the subject of Fleas and the part they play in the propogation of plague. Captain Liston, it will be remembered, read a paper on this subject, on the 15th March 1903, but he has since devoted much time to it and an account of his recent investigations will be of the greatest interest.

PAPERS READ.

The following papers were read and discussed:—1. Water-yielding Plants found in the Thana forest, by G. M. Ryan, I. F. S.; 2. Cassia occidentalic, by B. H. Barlow-Poole, I. F. S; 3. Birds observed in the Nilgiris and Wynaad, by A. M. Primrose; 4. Notes on the Nesting of some birds in the Upper Chindwin District, Burma, by Captain H. H. Harrington; 5. Notes on Burmese Reptiles, by Major G. E. Evans, A. V. D., F. L. S.; 6. Notes on the Hornbills of the Pegu District, by C. W. Allan, I. F. S.; 7. The Russell's Viper; by Lieutenant-Colonel L. L. Fenton; 8. A Cobra feeding on Eggs, by C. P. George; all of which will appear in full in the Society's Journal.

Nothing is so admirable as logic. A traveller hurried out of the railway carriage, tired and dusty, and seating himself at a restaurant table, cried out, "Waiter, bring me a beefsteak!" The waiter replied that he would be charmed to do so, but that it took twenty minutes to cook a steak, while the train only waited ten minutes. The kindly and sweet-tempered traveller retorted, "Well, then bring me half a beefsteak!"

THE BEST OILS FOR MOTOR CARS.

Wilburine for cylinders ... Rs. 6-8 per gallon Tin. | Valvoline for Bearings, etc. ... Rs. 5-0 per gallon Tin.

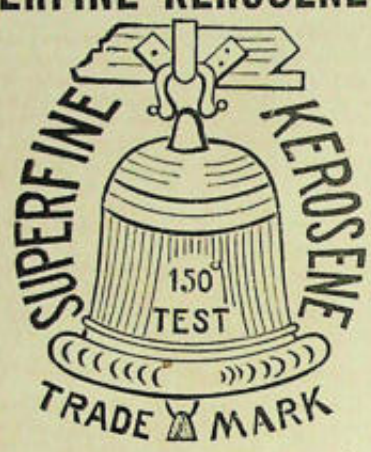
Extract from the "Autocar."

LUBRICATING OILS.—[2422]—It may be instructive to your numerous readers to have the experiences of a motor car experimentalist on the behaviour of lubricating oils for motor work. In the first onset I tried various sorts of oils, all of which left deposits of carbon and gumming matter in the cylinders and valves. These deposits are serious drawbacks, not only to the working of the pistons and valves, but also interfere with the proper sparking at the ignition plugs. I then tried the Valvoline Oil Co.'s oils, using "Wilburine" for the cylinders and "Valvoline" for the bearings, etc.; these being quite pure mineral oils, no deposits either of carbon or gumming matter were left. Every time the pistons, etc., have been examined they were quite bright, clean and well lubricated. The valves also keep in good condition and require very little regrinding. I have been quite free from sparking troubles since using the above lubricants. Any dust that alights on the working parts is easily wiped off, whereas with other oils dirt stuck fast through gumming.

Very much smaller quantities of these oils ("Wilburine" and "Valvoline") about one-third to one-quarter, are required, which more than balances the extra first cost. The wearing surfaces are besides in a magnificent condition. These advantages —viz., high-class lubrication, freedom from deposit in cylinders, gum in bearings, absence of sparking troubles, are too important to be neglected by any motorist.

There is a tendency to use various greases, instead of oils. Engineers have over and over again proved that greases give much greater frictional losses than oils; with motor car engines and bearings the lubricant that gives the least possible friction is the best.



I have referred to the advantages the motorist gets. I will mention another advantage these oils have to those whom the motorist passes, viz., the absence of the fried-fish-shop smell so often noted. Several persons have been very much struck by the absence of smell; even when the car has been standing for some time with the engines running, no trace of offensive odour has been apparent to the bystanders.

I mention these experiences, having no interest in the Valvoline Oil Co., that others may be benefited and save themselves trouble and their neighbours some annoyance.

THE SEASON'S CRICKET IN ENGLAND.

THE end of the season came with the match played on 13th, 14th, and 15th September at the Oval between Lancashire, as champion county, and the Rest of England: a match which appropriately enough ended in a draw. The columns of the papers devoted to sport are as usual flooded with those searching analyses of batting and bowling performances which give the first-class cricketer, amateur and professional, the final reminder for the year that the eyes of his country are ever upon him and his works. His misdeeds, too, have this year been made the subject of analytical examination of a sort, for we observe that somebody who signs himself "Man of Kent" has devoted some of his leisure to study of the cricket reports throughout the season, and has set out in all the remorseless nakedness of cold print the names of those cricketing malefactors who have dropped catches, which the reporters thought ought to have been held, with the number of catches so dropped, and, unkindest cut of all, the number of runs made after those catches were "muffed" by the batsmen who ought to have been caught out. It may be some consolation to each of them whose names appear in this Fieldsman's Black List that they appear in a goodly company, for among the sixty names chronicled occur those of most of the best known men of the day. Recording the hope that the "Man of Kent's" cruel exposure of mistakes may have its effect in bringing fieldsmen to a stronger sense of their duty we may turn to more gratifying phases of statistical industry. Ranjitsinghi for the third time heads the list of averages. In 1896 he led the batsmen with a tale of 55 innings and 2,780 runs, an average of 57·91 runs per innings. In 1900 he was again first with 40 innings, 3,065 runs and the brilliant average of 87·57. This has only once been excelled in recent years: Major Poore's 1899 average was 91·23, but we must set against this the fact that he played only 21 innings: and the quantity as well as the quality of the cricketers, play must surely be taken into account. This season's play gives Ranjitsinghi an average of 74·17 for 34 innings, 2,077 runs. Mr. C. B. Fry comes next, with an average of 70·60, 2,824 runs made in 42 innings: a less brilliant record than he had at his credit last year when he headed the list with 40 innings, 2,688 runs, average 81·30. We may suggest that the responsibilities of magazine editorship are claiming more of Mr. Fry's attention than the patron saint of cricket can regard unmoved. The batsman who perhaps has the finest record for the season, though it does not bring him out nearer the top than sixth is Hayward. He played 63 innings: which is more than any other first-class player amateur or professional, and his aggregate of 3,170 runs is also much higher than that of any other player: so much cricket with its greater area of chances naturally pre-supposes a smaller average, but 54·65 is an exceedingly good one when the quantity of play is considered. Hayward leads the way with the largest number of centuries (11) made during the season, Mr. C. B. Fry coming next with ten. Concerning Hayward's aggregate of 3,170, it may be pointed out that this has only once been exceeded: e. g., by Abel's 3,309. Mr. P. A. Perrin takes the palm for the best score of the season, 343 runs not out made for Essex vs. Derbyshire. Turning to the veterans we of course seek the name of "W. G.," and run inquiring finger far down the list before we find him in company with another old hand in the person of W. L. Murdoch. Dr. Grace played 26 innings during the season and his 637 runs give him an average of 25·48: Murdoch with 23 innings and 585 runs has an average of 05 less.

Bowling averages are less satisfactory things to work out than are batting averages. It would be a mistake to give Huddlestone the palm as by far the best bowler of the year because he stands at the top with an average of only 11·25 runs per wicket, while the next best man, E. Humphreys, has 16·53. While Rhodes comes well down the list with 21·59 runs per wicket and Gunn still further with 25·27. We must consider these averages by the light of the total work done by each man. Huddlestone bowled only 70 overs during the whole season and took 12 wickets: Rhodes bowled 1,197·2 overs and took 131. Gunn bowled 1,115·3 overs and took 123. It has been a batsman's year on the whole, dry wickets are ever against the bowler, and the long record of centuries made during the season points this with conoincing eloquence: no fewer than 250 centuries have been scored in first-class cricket during 1904 as against 147 last year. The summer of 1903, however, was so wet that we should compare the latest record with those of earlier years. 1902 yielded 174 centuries and 1901 was remarkable for 273. The last named year, is will be remembered, was prolific of outcry against rules and implements which are all in favour of the bat: last year we naturally heard little or nothing about the bowler's difficulties as he could hold his own fairly well on such wickets as an exceptionally wet summer provided. The past season closed with a speech made to the Secretary of State for India in which we remark the hotly debated question of altering implements was once more brought to the front. Mr. Brodrick is not, so far as we are aware, regarded as a leading authority on the game, and perhaps his wish to see the stumps used in first-class cricket raised one inch, while those used in school and other matches are retained as at present may be passed over as a graceful concession to the feelings of the Surrey bowlers whose cause he seems to have espoused more particularly in his defence of the county team. We incline the more to this belief since the Right Honourable gentleman urged the fact that the stumps have always been their present height is sufficient reason for changing them. The argument that the bowler has now often to bowl six days a week during the season is answered by saying that the batsman's work is a great deal harder than it used to be. If there be a case for conceding something to the ball, whether by spreading, or raising the stumps or by altering the rules, it is most safely based on the vast improvement in modern pitches.

We fell more in sympathy with Mr. Brodrick when he deplores the number of matches which are drawn: the number of these does not decrease and it is legitimate enough to suggest that their plenty furnishes reason to strengthen the bowler's hands: but in this connection the painstaking researches of the "Man of Kent" rise to our mind, and we ask how far the tale of drawn matches would be reduced by a shorter record of catches boggled. It would be worth while including in these annual summaries of cricket a table showing how many matches were played out to the end and how many were left unfinished by effluxion of time: the record of dropped catches would acquire even stronger significance were it set out as a corollary to the drawn match list, particularly when framed as the "Man of Kent" has framed it with details of the number of runs made by the fortunate batsmen. Catches always have been and always will be missed, but before the M. C. C. considers the propriety of altering the implements the search light of public criticism might profitably be directed upon work in the field. Better work there might do something towards reducing the number of drawn matches and removing the bowler's grievance.

It is hoped that arrangements may be made for the visit to England of a South African team in 1907, and also for the tour of an English team in South Africa in 1905-6. This is the natural outcome of the very successful tour of the South African team during the past summer, and English cricketers certainly will not be likely to raise any objections to such visits.

Sporting Notes.

A FULL report of the Mussoorie Horse and Dog Show is printed in our impression of date. It was a real good show in most respects and was well supported by exhibitors and public. Our special correspondent, however, does not quite voice the general opinion on the judging in the Dog section when he says the gentlemen who donned the ermine "did their duty well"—at least we are led to this reflection by several letters we have received from good people who think they could have held the scales much better in certain classes, more particularly the Terriers. 'Twas ever thus we know, and in cases where the point at issue is purely a matter of private opinion, we consider it best not to open our columns to a useless discussion. But there is one incident connected with this show, which has roused the ire of many and occasioned general surprise to most people who took any sort of interest in the show. We allude to the questionable taste that induced an official to present two "specials" and compete for them himself with exhibits that could not do otherwise than win! A correspondent writes on this subject :—"I noticed at the Prize-giving that he had not the cheek to come up to receive his own special, although he took it afterwards. I earnestly hope the committee will next year make it a rule that a donor shall not be able to take his own prize, or one could very soon load a dog with 'specials,' no matter his breeding or quality. For instance, I might own a Pie with one leg, enter it at a show and give a special prize for Pies with one leg."

The half-yearly general meeting of the Western India Turf Club was held at Race Stand, Poona, at 8 A.M., on Saturday, 1st October 1904. There were present the following gentlemen :—Stewards—Lieutenant-Colonel R. C. Broome and C. A. Beatty, Esq. Members—Aga S. Shah, J. Alston, Esq., Colonel F. W. Bromfield, W. F. Casson, Esq., E. S. Deane, Esq., Major P. England, Colonel H. S. Fitzgerald, Captain P. L. Grove, H. R. Hackney, Esq., Captain H. R. Hopwood, Captain F. D. Hunt, Major F. Joslen, Major C. F. Murray, H. B. Pike, Esq., T. L. Roberts, Esq., L. H. Spence, Esq., Cecil Gray, Esq., Secretary, W. I. T. C. Lieutenant-Colonel R. C. Broome in the Chair.

The accounts for the year ending 31st March 1904, were submitted, passed unanimously, and the Meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chair.

Soon after the start for the Two-mile Selling Handicap at Lingfield, as reported in our London Sporting Letter to-day, Master Newby, ridden by Bott, fell and brought down Belosselsky, the mount of W. Lane. The last-named jockey unfortunately sustained serious injuries and was carried back in an unconscious condition. Otto Madden re-appeared in this event after his Warwick mishap, and for a moment looked like coming to grief again, but he succeeded in getting Belle Savile over the fallen Master Newby, and eventually won the race. Lane received medical attention, but when the day's proceedings closed he was still unconscious. A few hours before the mail left he was reported to be coming round.

The following letter was recently received by the United States Department of Agriculture :—"My wife had a Tame cat that dyd. For the enrichment of the soil I had the Carkis deposited under the roots of a Gooseberry Bush. (The Frute being up to then of the smooth variety). But the next Seson's Frute, after the Cat was berred, the Gooseberrys was all Hairy—and more Remarkable, the Catapilers of the Same Bush was All of said Hairy description." This opens a wide field for enterprise. By an extension of the experiment it may be possible to cover bald heads and produce military moustaches by eating hairy gooseberries.

The Simla polo Tournament was commenced on the 10th instant, when two games were played off. In the first the team composed of Major Maxwell, Captain Forester, Lord F. Blackwood and Captain Smith, beat Majors Atkinson and W. Campbell and Captains Tandy and Peacocke by two goals to one.

The second game was between the following teams : Colonel Birdwood, Mr. R. A. Mant, Captain Wood, and Captain Wake, versus Colonel Hubert Hamilton, Major Barnes, Captain Orr, and Captain Lambert, and was won by the latter team by 3 goals to love.

"Clever Hans," the performing horse which has been causing quite a furore in Berlin, where the circus style of entertainment is particularly popular, certainly appears to be a quadruped with greater claims upon our interest than the ordinary calculating pig of the peripatetic showman. He is reported to have stood successfully the searching tests of a thoroughly serious and representative committee of experts, and those who came prepared to mock remained, if not exactly to pray, at any rate perfectly convinced of the genuineness and independence of this unusual animal's mental processes. As for the details of his various achievements, some may possibly be coloured by the reporters' enthusiasm, but men of science and expert circus proprietors alike have been quite persuaded that he is capable, for instance, of spelling (in German, too), and of mental arithmetic of a somewhat intricate type. We are told that among other feats he indicates, by knocking his hoof so many times on the ground, what the day of the month will be next Tuesday, how many pfennigs there are in half a mark put under his nose, and what is the way to spell, for instance, Bremerhaven or Brunsbüttelkoog with pasteboard letters out of a box. And yet, it is sad to think, the poor creature in all probability is totally incapable of understanding the simplest English, and does not so much as know the meaning of "Gee up."

We are glad to learn that the colours of His Highness the Maharajah of Cooch-Behar will be seen on the Calcutta course this cold weather. It is a long time since His Highness had any horses in training. We hear of a probable candidate from this stable for The Indian Grand National.

There is a growing conviction in Europe that the fowl "enteric" disease which has obtained such a firm footing among pheasants and other conserved game birds is due to the substitution of the numerous artificial foods that have been of late years introduced. Overcrowding in the spinnies, of course, necessitates feeding, as the immense number herded into comparatively confined spaces precludes the possibility of the cover supplying requirements for all. Old-fashioned keepers have always been averse to the use of these foods, but their warnings have hitherto been disregarded or put down to prejudice, but recent investigation has shown them to be not far wrong, post mortems disclosing inflammation being due to over-concentration of too stimulating ingredients in the stomach. The same thing happened nigh 50 years ago with the popular greaves for sporting dogs. The original mixture was all that could be desired, but was soon undersold by cheaper and inferior concoctions, while, as with most patent food substitutes for natural ones, manufacturers turned out those which at first answered to all appearances admirably but were followed by ulterior effects which proved most disastrous. Although artificial game bird rearing may be a remote contingency to contemplate in India, the initiative taken by Sir John Woodburn and Mr. Earle at Darjeeling indicates that it may take on among some of our wealthy noblemen; to such as may entertain it we give the above remarks as a caution counselling a strict adherence to nature in the character and quantity of all food given. The simultaneous investigations instituted in England and on the Continent should, when published, prove of considerable interest to sportsmen who wish to see our birds brought up as their natural habits indicate they should be.

The local Assam papers we notice fully approve of the recent administration resolution regarding the conservation of orchids, sensibly pointing out that the European growers and private fanciers have in their hothouses the means of raising these beautiful plants from seed. Collectors sent out simply sweep whole tracts, while as the native gatherers are paid by the quantity brought in without regard to variety, heaps of really beautiful though common plants are rejected and thrown aside to rot. Out of a toppa—perhaps containing 800, barely 50 or 60 are deemed worth exporting; some idea can thus be formed of the ruthless waste that has been permitted to go on for years past, until chance travellers in Assam and Burma deride the idea that those districts can be the home of the plants. The orchid collector should be put on the same footing as the shikari, limited strictly to a moderate number of specimens, not to turn botanising into a commercial avocation. Most of the best vandas and dendrobes take from two to four years to attain anything like attractive proportion, and as it is seldom a sprig is left as nucleus for fresh growth when the plant is torn from its hold, no wonder that the grand show the eastern forests made in the autumn twenty years ago exists no longer. Even the gorgeous rhododendrons that once formed such a splendid display in the Dompeh Valley between Cherrapoonje and Shillong have been well nigh ruined for want of conservation, but this has been owing chiefly to grass firing, which needs putting down with a high hand as much in the interest of plant preservation as in that of ground game and brilliant hued songsters, both of which are being scared from these places by this pernicious and senseless custom. This ukase taken in conjunction with that of closing the Bijni reserve forest to the potshooter indicates a laudable intention on the part of the Assam authorities to stay extinction of both floral and animal life and we hope at no future date to chronicle similar resolutions from all subordinate governments. We have no wish to advocate undue interference with the genuine sportsman or botanist, but let the commercial butcher and avaricious greengrocer be anathema.

Our Poona Correspondent writes :—The Champion Wall Jump, which could not be held, owing to lack of time on the second day of the Horse Show, was held on the following Monday morning, and after a spirited competition, was won by a grey Australian mare called Grisoline, belonging to Mr. Younghusband, one of the Stewards of the W. I. T. C. The mare was admirably handled by Captain Casson. There were no less than 30 entries for the event, but owing to the unhappy postponement, only eight actually competed.

The Pirates of Penzance for an amateur company is distinctly an ambitious undertaking, but the company of Poona amateurs came through the ordeal most creditably, playing four nights to crowded houses. Colonel Grantham, who stage managed the show, deserves great credit, and everything passed off without the slightest hitch.

A thoroughly enjoyable and most sporting point-to-point meeting was held, in connection with the Poona and Kirkee Hunt, about 5½ miles outside Poona, on the road to Ahmednagar. From all accounts it was an admirably run meeting, and greatly enjoyed by a large concourse of people only too glad to have some little change in the dull monotony of life, and on whom the prolonged strictly formal racing is possibly beginning to somewhat pall. Details of the afternoon's proceedings will, no doubt, find a place elsewhere.

The extra day of the big Poona meeting provided some capital racing though the attendance showed a distinct falling off and the beat of the public pulse is declared by the fact that the enterprising G. I. P. Railway management are withdrawing their sumptuous "Race Special" that bold and entirely successful venture which has proved so immensely popular with the racing public during the past season. But the fields were capital and Mr. Cursetjee's magic handicapping as usual completely puzzled the knowing contingent. The ball was set rolling with a 5 furlong handicap for maiden 14 hand Arabs. Eleven facing the starting gate; a very blood little pony called Superior with the nice impost of 6st. 3lbs. outstaying the favourites, Sabig being second and the handsome Random third while the much-fancied Calcutta, who has not sustained his form of the earlier part of the season, failed to secure place money.

A twin race to the above—the original entries being so large as to necessitate being split up—resulted in the good-looking, but hitherto dissappointing, Bandit II. after giving much trouble at the post, jumping off with a nice lead which he sustained with ease to the end, False Start second and Hopeful third. Nasser greatly fancied running badly. A most interesting race was the High-weight Handicap for horses which had not won at the Poona Big Meeting and quite a number were fancied and backed. Beadsman being scratched the public took what they considered the gentle hint and backed Carreewick but the good thing did not come off and indeed failed to get a place to everyone's surprise in the last stride Rosomond eventually winning a capital race with Fotheringay next, and Mr. Galstaun's Springlock "in the money."

Everyone appreciates a gallant performance on the part of an old warrior and it was a brave feat of that honest pony Governor, who has been racing for many a seasons, to comfortably defeat such smart performers as Farewell and Mint and good ones like Moreed, Yerbo (the Pony Derby winner) and such like behind.

Only seven went under the orders of Mr. O'Gorman for the 1¼ mile Losers' Handicap, but among them the evergreen and well-named little Gallant (on whom anno domini seems at last telling the inevitable tale) Narunjee and Connaught (last year's Governor's Cup winner). But Aga Shamsudin Shah's luck is in and his blood-like colt St. Gatien, not greatly fancied apparently by his astute trainer-owner, won quite cleverly at the end, the Emperor, also little fancied, being second, and that wonderfully handsome though disappointing horse Connaught close up.

An exciting finish was provided in the Handicap for Horses which had not won a race of the value of Rs. 3,000 or over since 1st April 1902. Harpist, with Ames as pilot, only just scrambling home and steering a course none too straight or free of Riverside II while Shotover was close up third.

The closed races which have been so extremely popular and well supported this season on this occasion took the form of a Welter Handicap for Arabs 14-1 and under. Captain Bayford's small but very select string has been in such form this season that the public (more especially since that admirable horseman, Captain Meynell, had the mount) would have nothing but the top-weight Borderer. The favourite, however, was either a bit off colour or found 11st. 7lbs. not quite to his liking and could not get place money. Syndic 10st. 4lbs. (who was rather overlooked, seeing that he ran so prominently in the Governor's Cup), won somewhat comfortably very nicely ridden by Captain Hopwood, the bottom-weight Surhan in at 8st. 4lbs. and carrying 10lbs. extra for Melsom's services being second, and Captain Bayford's second string, and bottom-weight but one, third. A capital race. There was considerable excitement provided gratis after this event, a buzz of surprise occurring when Bikanir's number was hoisted as the winner, a temporary error due to great similarity in the racing colours which was promptly rectified. The ever-patient bookmaking fraternity must have had a satisfactory afternoon.

Chloe, the last of the two gorillas who recently found a home in the Zoological Gardens, has gone to her rest, leaving only one example of the gorilla in Europe, and that at Breslau. Chloe arrived at the Zoo about a month ago, with her companion Venus, who died eight days later. At first there was a trifling difference of opinion between them on the food question, but when Venus had made it abundantly plain that she was to be mistress, the pair got on very well together. Then Venus died, and Chloe was terribly affected. Early last week she became ill. A doctor attended her, but in spite of every care she died. This is the Zoo's third attempt to keep gorillas. The first was made in 1877, when a male gorilla was caged: then there was a female in 1896, but both died. Everything that could be suggested for the comfort of these anthropoids has been done, and there seems to be no immediate prospect of the gorilla being kept long in England. We think it would be better to attempt domestication in some way in Africa. It is possible then that better results might follow by the importation of the hardier captives.

It may be surprising to know that Japan leads the world in oyster culture, says an exchange. The industry is centred in the Inland Sea, which is considered by many the most important natural preserve of fish and shellfish in the world. There are three kinds of Japanese oysters. There is a small dwarfed salt water variety which is abundant along the southern and eastern coast of Japan. It is the most abundant of all the species. In actual size this oyster is rarely larger than one's finger nail, but its flavour makes amends for its tiny proportions. The second variety is the important one, from a commercial point of view. Although not large, it averages the size of a blue-point, and is the kind with which experiments are being made in Puget Sound. The oyster itself is cream coloured, and is found in abundance throughout the Inland Sea. It thrives best in bays well tempered by fresh water. The third type of Japanese oyster is of a large size, specimens weighing as much as five pounds being not infrequent. Little value is placed on this oyster, and no attempt is made to cultivate it for the market.

Messrs. P. Orr and Sons' latest price list of guns, ammunition, and sporting accessories does them infinite credit, for, beyond doubt, it is in the best style of modern printing and get up, quite apart from the interest and value of its contents to sportsmen in this country. Almost every item in their extensive stock of weapons and shooting appliances we here find attractively figured and fully described, and an additional welcome will be recorded the book by reason of the useful hints given on many of its pages together with details of some of the latest novelties in sporting guns and small arms. Messrs. P. Orr and Sons will be glad to send copies to all sportsmen who ask for them.

The natives of Venezuela and adjoining countries on the north side of the river Amazon often avail themselves of the services of a native crane to care for their poultry, and also in the place of collies or shepherd dogs, to guard and herd their domestic animals. This remarkable bird, which the Indians call yakamik, and the ornithologists Psophia crepitans, is found in a wild state in the great forests which lie between the northern coasts of South America and the Amazon river, particularly in Venezuela and British Guiana. The birds never leave the forests unless shot or captured. They may be trusted with the care of a flock of sheep or domestic fowls, and every morning will drive the ducks and poultry to their feeding-places, and, carefully collecting any stragglers, bring them safely home at night. A yakamik soon learns to know and obey the voice of his master, follows him, when permitted, wherever he goes, and appears delighted at receiving his caresses. It pines at his absence and welcomes his return, and is exceedingly jealous of any rival. Should any dog or cat approach it flies at it with the utmost fury, and, attacking it with wings and beak, drives it away. It presents itself regularly during meals, from which it chases all domestic animals, and even the negroes who wait on the table, if it is not well acquainted with them, and only asks for a share of the eatables after it has driven away all who might aspire to a favourable notice from the family.

Book Notes for October, that interesting monthly publication devoted chiefly to book matters and issued by Messrs. Thacker and Co., of Bombay, is full of good things this month. Details of all the popular new books will be found therein, something about old favourites and a little regarding novels that are at present "on the stocks." Book Notes maintains its character as a high-class catalogue.

At last Pretty Polly's extraordinary run of brilliant successes has been broken: she was beaten by Presto II. in the Prix de Conseil de Municipality at Paris last Sunday.

Our Bangalore Correspondent writes :—Bangalore still shows that there are racing possibilities present here, a very excellent little Gymkhana meeting having been brought off on Saturday, the 8th instant. Full particulars accompany this for your racing columns, so that it is only necessary to say that sport was more than fair. It is of course quite too early to prophesy about next year, but there has been a far better season in 1903-04 than there was during the previous year, and the race-fund I understand is "quite well thank you"! This being so, and Bangalore horses and ponies having made so good a show in Poona—although, by the way, Colonel Desaraj Urs has been most unlucky with Trenton and Red Coral—one may look forward to next season's serious business with a fair amount of confidence.

Athletic Notes.

WE remind those whom it may concern that entries for the Cawnpore Hockey Tournament—the Bechtler Cup—close on the 25th instant.

That progressive band of sportsmen, the Executive Committee of the South Indian Athletic Association, Madras, have arranged a big boxing tournament, full details of which will be found in the advertisement further on. The show begins on the 24th December, and from what we know of the management of the S.I.A.A. and what we hear of the arrangements now in hand, this particular meeting ought to be really first class.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes :—The Bombay Gymkhana Cricket Secretary, Captain H. S. MacDonald, is determined that no stone shall be left unturned to arrange a full list of fixtures for the cold weather and one or two big matches for Christmas week, and to spare no pains to make the cold weather cricket season as thoroughly successful as last year. It is an open secret that with local European cricketers, despite the pressure of business and the short evenings, the fixtures between November and March are enjoyed far more than those during the season proper—between June and October.

The Baronet Club team before its departure for Calcutta in December will be given a game by the Gymkhana, who have received an accession of strength last week in the persons of Lieutenant F. S. Massy of the Suffolk Regiment and A. Cox. The first named is a very fine hard hitting bat and should score largely on the cold weather wickets.

The Hindu Gymkhana Committee have addressed a letter to the Cricket Secretary of the Bombay Gymkhana, in which they ask for a match with the Presidency next season. Their application, I learn on good authority, will very probably receive the consideration that it deserves. The Hindus do not propose to confine the selection of their team to local players, but will include such men as Jayaram, Seshachari and Narayan Rao of Madras, Shama Charan, Nanak Ram and Naneck Chand of Northern India, and Shiulal of Kathiawar.

I commented last week on Coombs' feat with the ball this season up to date in taking 81 wickets for the Gymkhana for a fraction under 10 runs apiece—a performance which has never been approached by a Gymkhana bowler in a single season, at all events as far back as 1880, beyond which I cannot go. Considering the number of great bowlers who have figured in Bombay cricket during the last twenty-four years Coombs' feat in taking close upon a hundred wickets is one he may be pardonably proud of. Up to 1895 Bombay probably enjoyed greater luck in the matter of always possessing a couple of really first-class bowlers than any other cricket centre in India. Lieutenant A. H. Newnham of Glocestershire fame (now Major Newnham), Lieutenant A. E. Barton, who played for Hampshire (now Major Barton,) and F. D. Gaddum, the Cambridge Blue, three of the best Indian bowlers of their day, were all in the team together in the middle eighties. In the later eighties and early nineties the attack was borne by such famous trundlers as Ernest Steel, who only a couple of seasons ago, playing for Lancashire, proved that he was still one of the best amateur slow bowlers in England, E. B. Raikes, E. J. Track and Newnham, who a few seasons later were succeeded by R. T. Sinclair, the fastest bowler ever seen on a Bombay ground, and H. Cheetham. None of these, however, have ever accomplished the feat of capturing 80 wickets in a season. From a perusal of old records, I find that Newnham, Steel, Raikes, Sinclair and Cheetham have never brought their total number of wickets for a single season to 60, so that Coombs easily holds the record for the greatest number of wickets.

The paucity of entries for the last Rugby Tournament and the difficulty the local Gymkhana experienced in entering a team will sooner or later—before next season probably—cause the question to be taken up as to whether something cannot be done to revive an interest in football under the Rugby code. This is a matter which affects not only Bombay, but the whole of India, as there have been clear indications during the present season that in a few years there will be no Rugger teams left and consequently no tournaments, if things go on at this rate. Witness, for instance, the recent Madras Tournament for which only two teams entered, one, practically speaking, a scratch XV made up at the eleventh hour from H.M.S. Hyacinth, the flagship of the East India Squadron, which by a lucky chance happened to be at Madras. Probably the only place in India at the present time where Rugger still preserves a certain degree of popularity is Calcutta. As for Bombay, some idea of the state to which Rugger has sunk will be gathered from the fact that the Gymkhana, in spite of its 600 members, was on several occasions this season unable to put a full team in the field, there being only 17 or 18 men all told who favour the Rugby code. It was only by a fluke that the Gymkhana were able to enter a team for their own tournament this year, as up to a few days before the date fixed they had only twelve men, Brand, Elsworth and Jones being crocked and the two Langhornes and Sneyd having left Bombay. Rugger, rather than soccer, should be the most popular code with Gymkhanas, as the majority of club men come from Rugger playing districts, Scotland, Wales, Ireland and the south of England. Why, then, are there so few men who care to don jerseys. It is not to be expected, of course, that men who have entered on the "thirties" would feel very keen about playing in India, but what about the youngsters who come out to India every year in batches of hundreds, many of them fresh from schools where Rugger is played? It is these to whom we look to foster and encourage the game and give it a stimulns in the right direction. Twelve years ago Bombay possessed one of the best Rugger teams in India, but those were the halcyon days when enthusiasm for the game was so great that it was not uncommon to see 20 and more players a-side taking part in Gymkhana practice games. But those were also the days when A. Walpole, the Irish International, and Marshall Reid, the Scottish International, played in the three-quarter line, and such men as P. R. Cadell, the Oxford Blue; R. H. MacAulay, the Cambridge Blue; M. R. Jardine, the old Fettesian and Oxford Blue; H. F. Cleveland, J. H. G. Casserly and several others not unknown to fame, assisted the side regularly.

A meeting of the Cricket Committee was held at the Bombay Gymkhana on Saturday evening to decide what reply should be sent to the Hindu Gymkhana in reference to their application for a match with the Presidency next season. Various proposals were made and the prevailing sentiment was strongly in favour of the Hindus being given a match even at the sacrifice of one of the matches with the Parsees. It was pointed out that the Hindu Gymkhana had gone right through the season of 1904 without once having to admit defeat, and that among the clubs met were the Parsee Gymkhana (twice), Elphinstone C. C. (twice), Baronet C. C., and Liberal C. C. which always play five or six men of the representative Parsee team. Last season the Hindus were only defeated once and the season before on two occasions, so that they have only suffered three reverses during the last three years, a record that no other club in Bombay has ever been able to point to. Among the suggestions made by the Bombay Gymkhana Cricket Committee was one which will hardly commend itself to the Parsees. This was that the Parsees should be asked to meet the Hindus and that the winners of that match should play the Presidency. It was pointed out, however, that the Parsees were almost certain to decline an arrangement of this kind and might retaliate by claiming to meet the best team in a match between the Presidency and the Hindus themselves. The triangular arrangement was accordingly put aside as impracticable. Another suggestion took the form of a match with both the Hindus and the Parsees instead of two matches with the Parsees as at present. This arrangement seemed to be the only way out of the difficulty, as it was felt that the Presidency would be unable to play four matches every season, two with the Parsees and two with the Hindus. Before deciding anything definitely it was, however, finally resolved that the Cricket Committee of the Poona Gymkhana should be consulted in the matter and that a special meeting should be held next week, which several well-known local cricketers and judges of the game would be invited to attend and give their opinion as to the best arrangement to be made in the circumstances. The question is one which is exciting a vast amount of interest amongst all classes of local cricketers, and it is felt that the Bombay Gymkhana can no longer ignore their responsibility in the matter.

The Bombay Gymkhana eleven played their second last match of the monsoon season on Saturday against the Friends Union or young members of the Hindu Gymkhana, and the game resulted in one of the best played for some time. The Gymkhana won the toss and batted first, the innings starting at 2-30, the temperature being something like 105 in the sun. The innings after an hour and three-quarters was declared with the total 172 for seven wickets, of which A. H. S. Aston was able to claim the large share of 96, having the hardest of luck in being run out when so close to his century. The only other double figures on the side were Coombs' 22 and Cox's 17. The Hindus were left with exactly an hour and a quarter, and with Coombs and Milne in charge of the leather it was not anticipated that they could get more than 100 runs in that time. The unexpected, however, happened, as it so often does in cricket, and from the last ball of the last over, just on the stroke of time, D. K. Telang, junior, hit a six off Milne, which brought the Hindus, total level with that of the Gymkhana, the game thus ending in a draw in favour of the Hindus.

The letter was sent in consequence of a dispute having occurred in a local League match. The umpire was not sure whether he had allowed five or six balls. He expressed his doubt to the bowler, and the bowler asked if he must send another ball. The umpire replied that he must, and when this ball was bowled the batsman attempted to play it, but was bowled. The scorers at once shouted "over." The bowler, however, claimed the wicket and the umpire gave the batsman out. The question at issue was whether a man could be bowled by the seventh ball.

A Boxing entertainment was held at the Jubilee Hall, Rangoon, on the 1st instant and drew a big house. Some good sport was shown and the proceedings were voted a great success. Colonel Lawford was president, Major Hammond and Lieutenant Waterfield were judges, and Mr. White referee. Following a display of ball punching by St. Clair, Private Plunkett, of the King's, met Gunner McDougall in a six-round contest—an excellent bout resulting in a draw, the judges being unable to separate the men, even after an extra round had been fought. The next event provided another very even contest. Gunner Sherrington, 70th Co., R. G. A., met Drummer Smith, of the King's, the former getting the verdict on points. An extra round had also to be fought in this bout before the judges came to a decision. Drummers Byrne and Andrews next went through six rounds for the Bantam Championship of Burma, the latter winning on points. In a wrestling match the best of three falls, between two Sikhs, Lal Khan proved himself superior to his opponent. The match between Betts, R. G. A., and Foster, the King's, for the Welter-weight Championship, resulted in an easy victory for the Gunner. Then came the big item of the evening, a ten-round contest for the Light-weight Championship of Burma and Rs. 150 a side, between Conolly and Burridge. The former had all the best of matters and dropped Burridge in the eighth round. He was not counted out, however, and lasted out the round, but threw up the sponge during the interval, Conolly being declared the winner. The bout between Page and Downy only lasted two rounds, Page acknowledging defeat. But Downy struck him while his hands were up and was disqualified. Another short contest closed the entertainment, McGuinness disposing of Gomes, who was counted out.

James Buxton, a collier, of Whittington Moor, Chesterfield, had succeeded in establishing a record in the matter of continuous walking. For six days and six nights he walked a mile every half hour on a grass track, seventeen laps to the mile. The performance took place at the Nag's Head tennis grounds, Bleasley, Derbyshire. After each walk he lay down on a couch in the grounds.

The second and final match in the William Younger Football Tournament took place on the 6th instant at Rangoon before a very large gathering of spectators. Lower Burma beat the Upper Burma team by two goals to one, thus winning the Cup. At the interval both teams were level having obtained one goal each, but thereafter the game was very interesting, and Lower Burma scored the winning point near the end.

Our Bangalore Correspondent writes:—Cricket is languishing terribly in the station at present, and the games against the Survey of India and the Central College, which have taken place during the past week, are scarcely worthy of notice, because the sides representing the Gymkhana have been in the first instance a very weak one, and in the second not a Gymkhana side at all. In fact there were only five Gymkhana members in evidence against the Central College, and this must have been most unsatisfactory to the latter, who are well coached (by Mr. J. G. Tait, a well-known South Indian veteran) and can put a really smart team in the field. The Survey of India had the hardest sort of lines, being only one run behind their opponents with three wickets to fall, when time robbed them of a win. The Central College did not take their cricket too seriously, but made hay of the weak bowling of their opponents until they had scored 199 for six wickets, when they declared, and getting six of the "Gymkhana" men out for 109, the match resulted in a draw greatly in their favour. It is much to be hoped that Bangalore—who have done right well during the past two or three months— will resusciate before the return match with Madras, or else there will be much leather hunting for them.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 23rd September 1904.

WE live in expectancy of news from Mukden and Port Arthur, for in both arenas the Japanese seem disposed to push matters and bring them to a head. Recent accounts from Port Arthur point to a fearful condition of affairs there arising from the carnage: the tenacity of the defence and remorseless ferocity of attack seems to have heated the blood of both sides and we hear of dead being found "their teeth fastened in each others throats and their fingers crammed into each others eyes:" this from Russian sources: also that the Russians are obliged to wear plugs of wool steeped in camphor in their nostrels, so appalling is the stench from the heaps of dead close up to the walls. The white flag is ignored by either side, and the wounded are left to die where they fall.

The Baltic fleet remains in the Baltic: Admiral Wirenius is reported to have sent home an urgent request for its prompt despatch, but this, like so many other reports, is "unconfirmed." The condition of the Lena's boilers gives "furiously to think." It is now averred that they are in perfectly good condition: why then her visit to San Francisco, a visit which those responsible must have known would result in detention and disarmament. Is the ussian fleet riding for a fall—to use a bad metaphor—or does this placing of the Lena point to disaffection on board? The anticipated contradiction of the report that Argentina had sold four war vessels to Russia came yesterday morning.

It seems as though the brief days of the War Correspondent were like to end with the Russo-Japanese War. Japan has kept all the foreign correspondents on the curb since the Times man and his wireless telegraphy steamer discovered and revealed Admiral Togo's secret base in the Elliot Islands. Fortunate it was for Japan that Russia did not know how to turn the information to account. Lord Wolseley in the days when he had not discerned the sweet uses of advertisement denounced the War Correspondent as a "curse"—as the curse I think,—of modern generals: but the later editions of the Soldiers' Pocket Book thought better of it. There would perhaps be this advantage in the disappearance of the War Correspondent. Wars whose course trickled though official channels would not be popular, and the nation in bellicose mood would bethink it perhaps that a war it heard little of was not worth understanding. After all what is war to ninety per cent. of the people, but something that makes its paper readable?

The coronation of King Peter of Servia is reported to have passed off without a hitch. The Palace in which the murder of the late King and Queen occurred had been razed to the ground to hasten the dissipation of unpleasant memories and to lay the ghosts of the murdered sovereigns which were said to haunt the place. Talking of ghosts if the Servians are superstitious and reck aught of signs, they must have been disturbed by the trivial incidents of the coronation ceremonies. King Peter had to take off his crown two or three times,—small blame to him seeing its weight is 9lbs. avoirdupois—and keep it beside him: he simply could not endure the weight on his head. And when the procession was dismounted at the Cathedral the Royal Standard fell and was picked up bedraggled with mud. Be these portents? The Servians may well ask.

"The Prayer of the Sword" by Mr. James Fagan, which appeared on Monday night, is something of a new departure from Adelphi traditions. The playwright has aimed high; and if his achievement recalls some classic plays, his blank verse often rises to a dignity worthy of a lofty theme and the incidents and spectacular scenes are distinctly good. In one regard the purist feels uneasy: the time is 1,500 and the land Italy: but the tone of the play is 20th century and the air British. Mr. Fagan rather overtaxes his audience with five acts and a tableau: and application of the blue pencil would, I think, strengthen the play. The main idea centres on the virility of Fra Andrea, a young monk who is destined to become a priest. We find him in the garden of San Bruno Monastery wearying of his vows: to him enter the Duchess of Andola with followers. One of her men leaves his sword on a bench and Andrea happening on it opostrophises the weapon:—

> "Arm thou the right; let order's cause be thine;
> Lead thou the slave to freedom; guard the weak;
> Arise, and win the equal right of man.
> Lord, hear my soul that echoes this great call—
> That I who work by prayer might pray by work;
> Work with the sword, pray with the sword, wage war
> With prayer of sword, on all the powers of ill
> That turn the world from thine eternal law."

An old monk tries to correct his views, but Andrea, unconvinced, is made still less content with his future by the Duchess who sympathises guardedly with the young monk's glowing picture of the service he as a man at arms might be to any just cause—hers for instance. Act II finds Andrea in the cloisters on the eve of ordination: he thinks he has got over his craving for an active life and tells the Prior his conscience is dear. At this critical juncture a dying soldier is brought to the monastery: he is supposed to be dead and Andrea is told off to watch by the body. Left alone with the monk the supposed corpse recovers and crying for his horse declares that the Duchess is in danger. Andrea says he will pray for her, but the wounded man is not satisfied. She wants "a man of deeds to be her stay." Andrea wavers and when in answer to his plea that he's a monk, the injured man cries "No, thou art first a man!" and bids him take the sword and go. Andrea obeys this "sign from Heaven." In the next scene we discover how that soldier got his mortal hurt and why. He was assassinated by order of Scoila who seeks to make himself master of Andola and marry the Duchess: he comes to the Palace to press his suit and to be refused. His forces are without: and his wooing is interrupted by a call to head them against a rabble led by a "ragged madman with a sword." The madman, of course, is Andrea to whom the court fool opens the gates: only the Duchess recognises him. She prevents the pending fight between Andrea and Scoila accept the latter's submission and prevails on Andrea to accept the office of Gonfalonier of Andola in place of Scoila and spend a month with her. He consents and of course she falls in love with him. This in the third act which drags a little. Act IV is the church in which Andrea and the Duchess are about to be married, Scoila in hiding comes out at the psychological moment, denounces Andrea as a monk vowed to celibacy and forbids the banns. The Bishop who was about to perform the ceremony accepts Andrea's "sign from Heaven" to turn soldier and would marry the pair, but an order comes from the Pope ordering Andrea back to his monastery. He refuses to obey: and in the most impressive scene of the play is ex-communicated. Act V sees Scoila's revenge. The Duchess dies of a scratch from a poisoned dagger secured in a struggle with the Scoila faction and dies after telling Andrea to go back to the cloister. The Tableau, fifty years later, shows us Andrea old and bent praying at a grave, presumably the lady's. It is a long story and a long play. Mr. Walter Hampden did well as Andrea and spoke his lines effectively. Miss Lily Brayton was at once dignified and tender as Maria the Duchess, and Mr. Oscar Asche was sufficiently brutal as Scoila. Beppo the court fool (Mr. Charles Angelo) has undue prominence in the play, but he acts and sings his many pieces well. The piece is splendidly staged and lends itself to sumptuous mounting.

Sir Henry Irving opened his tour on Monday at Cardiff with the "Merchant of Venice:" and is said to have acted Shylock with amazing vigour. Miss Wynne Matheson's Portia is also very warmly praised: she has vivacity, grace and humour. It is reported that the tour will include a visit to Sunderland where Sir Henry Irving made his first bow to the public nearly fifty years ago, in 1856 to be exact.

The dramatic atmosphere is one of prediction. Mr. Pinero has written a new play called "A Wife Without a Smile:" this not very attractive wife is to make her appearance at Wyndham's on a date not yet fixed. Misses Elliott and Hosford have remodelled "The Master of the King's Company" and it well be produced under the title of "His Majesty's Servant" at the Imperial, when Miss Elizabeth's Prisoner has finished his day The Court Theatre opens about the middle of October and the fixtures are many: among the more interesting events is a new play by Mr. Bernard Shaw called "John Bull's Other Island." Mr. Bernard Shaw's views on some questions may be a bit distorted, but we all concede the brilliant cleverness of his dialogue. There is such a demand for the Court Theatre one marvels that nobody thought sooner of running a house on hotel principles to take in performances for as long as they care to stay or care to pay. Mr. John Lawson is going to make the flesh of audiences to creep with a new (or revivified) sketch called "Mr. Todd of London." Mr. Todd is apparently a reincarnation of Sweeny Todd of the penny dreadful of a past generation: he was the English counterpart of that famous French barber who was in partnership with the keeper of the pie shop next door. You would remember that sanguinary barber. His shaving chair stood on a trap door and his method was to draw his razor across the throat of the shavee, and down went the latter into the cellar to be converted into material for the pies sold next door. This lurid spectacle should catch on amazingly among lovers of the truly horrible.

Dan Leno has a new "turn" at the Pavilion, two impersonations both uncommonly clever. In the first he describes the difference between town and country life and the feature that sticks in mind is his difficulty about pockets. As a country boy he was accustomed to stock his pockets with the usual sundries: in London his tailor would not let him have pockets and thus the stage gets strewn with Dan's miscellaneous purchases, salt herrings, string, apples, tops, and allied valuables. As the old woman who has lost her husband he was of course entirely in his element and the house recognised the variety of the character with delight. There be those who aver that "the King's Jester" is not the actor he was a couple of years ago: but I confess to seeing no decline of his peculiar powers. At the Tivoli there is now a species of musical farce called "The Dandy Thieves," with comic burglars and pantomime policemen: rather wild, but brisk enough to delight the Tivoli audience which does not seek improvement and elevation.

The Passive Resister is passively resisting with the customary vigour of his cheap martyrdom. His ranks have been strengthened by the accession of Dr. Clifford who nobly sacrificed two silver trowels he didn't want to the legal minions seeking property on distraint. Rev. I. Campbell, of the City Temple, refused to obey the Enfield Magistrate's summons and a distress warrant was issued. The sums involved vary up to about four and twopence I understand; but the Principle is the thing. They have an agreeable magistrate at Nillesden, by the way: A hundred passive resisters came before the bench on Monday and a selection of them made speeches: Mr. Grant tearfully made orders to pay; expressing his admiration for the heroism of these victims of tyranny and oppression. One would not be surprised if Mr. Grant should hear from the Lord Chancellor or whoever is the exalted being whose mission it is to keep magistrates in order.

Messrs. Hooley and Lawson were "up" again at Bow Street this week after two months' adjournme. t of the case against them for conspiring to obtain money by fraud from Mr. Paine. In the interval the prosecution have preferred new charges against the accused, involving their doings with the "Construction Company" which has formed to electrify a tram line at Blackpool. Lawson, it is alleged, appropriated to himself 25,000 preference shares carrying 6 per cent. and Hooley is said to have aided and abetted him in this and other dubious transactions. The case which has occupied Mr. Fenwick for three days and has excited a good deal of attention has been adjourned till next week.

The expatriation of the Chartreuse monks was a matter of concern to more than them who regarded the event from a lofty standpoint. Before they left their monastery the makers of Chartreuse smashed all their apparatus and took the secret of manufacture into exile with them. The chemist employed by the French Official Receiver claims now to have discovered the method of brewing Chartreuse by analysing the contents of certain utensils which the monks had forgotten to wash out or destroy: and he proclaims that, after repeated experiments, he has ascertained the proportions in which the plants, over a hundred in number, were used: and, in a word, earns the boundless gratitude of his kind by his promise to produce the Only Genuine. Meantime the banished monks established at Tarragona are producing their Real Original: and the Official Receiver is bringing an action to prohibit their use of the name "Chartreuse." Be it so: we shall buy the Real Original by whatever name it flows.

Various items: Mr. M. H. Spielmann has in hand a biography of the late G. F. Watts, R. A. The great painter came in close personal contact with most of the leading men of his long age and the story of his life should be much above the average in interest.

I am no teetotal crank, but I do think that every burglar who wishes to succeed in his calling should take the pledge. Witness the distressing case of the practitioner who broke into the office of a Hull spirit merchant and lade himself with as many samples as he could hold. Uplifted by these he sought the roof to sleep and was seen peacefully reposing on the slates by somebody living over the way next morning.

The system of picketting in the British cavalry seems to stand in need of alteration. Following the stampede at Southampton the other day comes news of another at Atley in the small hours of Saturday: six hundred horses got away and took the camp in their rush seriously injuring at least four men.

The Beck Enquiry Committee will begin its work next month, but it is not yet decided whether the proceedings will be public or private. I am afraid if the Committee adopt the course which is said to be under consideration and hold a private court making "arrangements to inform the public of all that concerns them" the public will be dissatisfied.

That is a pleasant thing in exhibitions they have opened at Manchester: The post-medical profession, as Wendell Holmes calls it, have formed a National Association and their first meeting includes a fine display of coffins, biers, shrouds, palls and all the horrible trappings of the trade.

Mr. Plowden, the popular humourist of the Police Courts, wants to know what is the use of the Thames if you can't throw rubbish into it: he always thought that was what it was meant for, and had no sympathy with the conservancy who ran in a bargee for throwing moss litter into the river. It is to be feared that if all "beaks" took Mr. Plowden's view the Thames would be an even dirtier stream than it is.

The Scottish Meteorological Society has been obliged to announce the closing of the Ben Nevis Observatories: the Observatory on the crest of the mountain is considered the most useful in the country, and the society has contrived to carry it on for 14 years with the aid of public subscriptions amounting to £6,000 a year. Dissatisfied with the uncertainty of this source of income they applied to the Treasury, but unsuccessfully: and the observations will close next month unless private liberality comes to the rescue.

The "Cook's Cap" introduced during Mr. Brodrick's tenure of the Secretaryship for War is, it is said, to be abolished immediately. The thing is ugly and it is German: and if the report be true nobody will regret it.

SPORT WITH A ·310 SHARP-SHOOTERS CLUB RIFLE.

DURING the rains of last year I was in Southern India, and, having to travel about a good deal, had occasional opportunities for shooting. The animals I expected to have most sport with were Black Buck (the male of the Indian Antelope) and Chinkara (the Indian Gazelle). Having been unable for some years to obtain any shooting of this kind I had no suitable rifle, and was debating in my mind what description of weapon to procure when I chanced upon a friend who possessed a ·310 Sharpshooters Club Rifle by W. W. Greener. He had shot two Black Buck with it, and thought that it was sufficiently powerful for this class of game as each of the animals had fallen to a single bullet. It also had, to my mind, the very great advantage of not being capable of slaying an innocent cultivator at 1,500 or 2,000 yards distance, as is the ever-present danger with ordinary small bore high velocity rifles. In fact it would be quite safe for use even in the highly cultivated country in which antelope are often found.

Having written to a firm in Bombay I received the rifle, with brass cleaning rod and two brass-wire brushes, for the small sum of Rs. 65. The cartridges were Rs 6 a hundred and loaded with about 5½ grains of cordite powder and a solid lead bullet of some 125 grains. For the proper cleaning of the rifle I found the brass brushes quite indispensible, as the leaden bullets very quickly fouled the barrel and affected the shooting. The coating of lead could readily be removed with the aid of the brass brush and a little turpentine. Disliking, for sporting purposes, the military leaf backsight, I got it removed and replaced by an ordinary sporting backsight with leaves for 100 and 200 yards. The stock was much too straight, and when practising at a target I realised that good shooting entailed great care both on this account, and because a very small error in the amount of foresight taken into view meant a considerable difference in elevation. And this latter was very likely to occur as the foresight bead was on a very long neck.

The Monsoon was daily threatening when I had my first trial at game with the little rifle, and the moisture in the air, and a few scanty showers, precursors of the deluge shortly to arrive, had caused a tinge of green to appear over the land and the trees to put forth new shoots. The sky in the West was dark and lowering, and in the far distance, where the dim outline of the Western Ghauts was visible, heavy rain was falling, as evidenced by the columns of dark, almost black, shadow falling perpendicularly from the clouds to the horizon. These familiar signs warned me that my few days' sport—I had four days leisure—might be enjoyed under the somewhat damp conditions of the break of the Monsoon. There was, however, the hope that heavy rain would hold off for a few days longer; and at any rate the very great likelihood that the storms of rain which herald the regular Monsoon would not come on until about three or four o'clock each afternoon. The air was cool, and most invigorating after the stifling heat of the hot season just passed. It was with a gay heart that I set off about seven o'clock in the morning, carrying my shot gun with which to shoot sand—grouse for my larder, and with four sturdy villagers, one with my lunch basket, one as gun bearer and water carrier, and the others to carry back to camp any game I might get.

The ground in front of me all along the foot of the hills looked so suitable to the habits of chinkara that I sat down in the shade of a tree and carefully searched every likely spot with my binoculars. Eventually, having looked everywhere but close to me, I discovered several chinkara feeding on the edge of a small watercourse about 300 yards to my left. Not being able to make certain if there was a buck among them as some were just out of sight, I made a long detour and dropped into the watercourse some distance beyond them, and in their line of retreat to the low hills. My men, previously instructed, came quietly along and showed themselves, and the chinkara, which appeared not in the least scared, came quietly towards me and passed about 70 yards away, without detecting my presence, as I was lying down behind a tuft of coarse grass and the wind was favourable. There was only one buck, with small horns about 6 inches long, and four does, so I let them all go without frightening them. On the men coming up I joined them and went on to a small conical hill which marked the highest point of the slowly ascending country I had come over, and indicated an excellent view of the valley beyond, which stretched away to the east for some miles towards a range of basaltic hills; and to the north narrowed up to the junction of the low range I was on with a series of precipitous hills some 1,200 to 1,500 feet high. Making my followers sit down before topping the rise I made my way, without showing myself, over the sky line, by lying down and warming myself alone until safe in the shelter of a large boulder. Here I got into a comfortable sitting position, and elbows on knees commenced a careful survey of the scene of my day's operations. The view which met my eyes was one to gladden the heart of any sportsman, more especially one with a new rifle to experiment with! Antelope were in sight in all directions. Not 500 yards away was a herd of some 20 or 25 animals with several bucks of various shades of darkness among them. Away to the left, towards the foot of the precipitous hills were two dark objects which the binoculars showed to be black buck feeding by themselves, probably because they had been turned out of some herd by the "master" buck for undue attention to the ladies of his court. About half a mile to the right, in some freshly ploughed fields, and beyond a network of small ravines, was another herd of antelope nearly all does and young bucks with only one moderately black buck among them. No bustard could be descried anywhere in sight, and after about 20 minutes rest and enjoyment of the scene I decided that one of the bucks of the nearest herd had a good head of about 18 or 19 inches and that the stalk would present no very great difficulty. The wind was, as far as I could tell from the top of the hill, favourable.

Returning quietly to my men I told them what I intended to do and sent them back some distance, so that they should not spoil matters by curious peeps at my manœuvres. I then followed a foot path which I had observed to pass some 250 yards from the herd, and to cross a small ravine which joined the main watercourse running within 100 to 150 yards of the buck which I had marked. All went well. The sentinel does lifted their heads sharply, and after prolonged scrutiny resumed feeding as I continued to walk quietly along the path without appearing to notice them. The little rifle I held down by my side. Arriving at the small ravine I found that I was almost out of sight, and so quickly dropped into it; and stooping and crawling got into the main watercourse. All was then easy, and in a very few minutes I was lying against the bank, and looking through a tuft of grass at the beast I was after, feeding quietly about 120 yards away. A sentinel doe was, however, very uneasy, and might give the alarm at any moment so without waiting longer to steady down I took a careful aim, with the 100 yards sight, just above the elbow and pressed the trigger. No answering "smack." The buck, not knowing where the danger lay, trotted a few yards towards me and stood looking all about him. The doe, however, had a fairly good idea, and began to lead the herd with two or three high bucking jumps. There was no time to lose—I thought I had probably shot high—so taking a fine sight at the girth, fired again. A loud smack told me I had scored a good hit, and with a convulsive bound the stricken beast galloped wildly about 60 yards, stopped, staggered, and slowly fell over on his side. Pacing the distance where the buck had stood when shot I found it to be 105 yards, and 65 yards to where he fell. He was quite dead and, and as I had surmised by his behaviour, hit through the lungs. The bullet had entered at the junction of the black and white of his body behind the elbow, and passing through diagonally had come out at the point of the right shoulder. I was astonished at this great penetration and proportionately pleased with the rifle. My first shot had evidently been a miss over his back. All's well that ends well, and taping my beast's horns, I found them to be 19½ inches, a good length for this part of the country. The skin was nice and black and that of the head particularly good.

One good buck being enough for the day I decided not to shoot another unless tempted by an exceptionally good head, and wandered out to try and find a bustard. It was very sultry and hot, and at about half-past ten I sat down under a shady thorn tree and had breakfast. The men made theirs off the liver and heart of the buck, which they toasted over a fire of dry twigs. After a rest and a smoke I sauntered on, and, incautiously going round a small rise in the ground, my eye was caught by a moment in the shade of a bush; and there was a fine cock bustard about 100 yards away and thoroughly alarmed. I drew back and went quickly to the other end of the hillock, where I would be within 100 yards range, but just as I got there I heard the noise of the great birds wings and knew that my chance had gone. Watching his steady flight with my glasses, I marked him down close to the foot of the conical hill from which I had started, which was some 1,500 yards back, and returning, planned a stalk. Working my way along with infinite care and pains I knew I must be within 70 or 80 yards of him, but could not see him. Suddenly his long white neck shot up he had been resting in the shade of a tuft of grass and before there was time to get the rifle on to him, was off with a grunt of alarm and soon out of sight over the conical hill.

It was now very hot and about one o'clock, and rather disgusted at my failure with the bustard I started to walk home. Close to where I had seen the chinkara in the morning, I again, to my astonishment, spied my new familiar acquaintance standing in the shade under a small thorn tree. He had taken up a strategic position, and, my attempt at a stalk alarming him, flew off over the low hills and out of sight. I regretfully turned once more towards camp, where I arrived about half-past two with another brace of sandgrouse picked up on the way. I next removed the buck's mask, and rubbed it with a mixture of four parts burnt alum and one part saltpetre, and hung it up to dry.

I may here remark that this preparation is the simplest, best, and cheapest known to the sportsman in India for the curing of skins in camp. Trophies treated with it can be kept for years before being placed in the hands of the Taxidermist. It does not, however, do so well when the weather is very wet and the atmosphere thoroughly damp; though still, with trouble, quite efficacious.

The clouds had been banking up all the afternoon, and about 8 o'clock in the evening a steady downpour commenced and continued through the greater part of the night. The morning was bright and fine, and the thirsty soil having absorbed most of the rain, the walk out to the shooting ground of yesterday was not so sticky under foot as might have been expected.

Beyond a few black buck, none of which appeared better than the animal I had already secured, there was no game that I wished to pursue. The peculiarly penetrating call of the sandgrouse attracted the eyes upwards, and high in the air could be seen various packs of grouse hurrying to some pool of water to slake their thirst for the day before going into the fields to feed. Having decided to follow more or less along the foot of the precipitous hills, and make for a sort of table land, on the far side of the valley, which connected this range with the range of hills to the South East, I proceeded in skirmishing order by extending the men with me as scouts on either side. When crossing a small ravine I was startled by a doe chinkara bounding up from almost under my feet and making off with prodigious haste. I had almost trodden on her, and suppose she must have been asleep, or else hoped to escape observation. After going about a mile the man on my left signalled to me, and using my glasses, I saw some chinkara moving off in front of him at a quick trot. Joining the man I ascertained from him that one of them was a buck, and giving them a few minutes law in which to settle down, followed on with every precaution "to see and not be seen." I was rewarded by finding the herd in a most favourable position for a stalk and, to cut the matter short, obtained a shot at the stern of the buck, at some 90 yards

The herd was feeding steadily away from me and a side shot was not offered, and rather than wait, and perhaps not get another chance, I trusted in the little rifle's tried accuracy at a target, and aiming very carefully, and from a lying down position, laid the buck out, kicking in the throes of death. Running up I quickly bled him, as I did not know if he was really badly hit or only knocked over temporarily. The bullet had entered at the left haunch and passed right through the body and come out at the right shoulder. Truly the penetration of this small weapon with its 5½ grains of cordite is most marvellous. Horns 19½ inches and with 14 rings.

While all this was doing I had not paid much attention to the signs of the skies, and suddenly realised that I was about to get a very sufficient wetting unless I could find shelter. The only trees anywhere near were some baubul trees, a species of acacia, and not renowned as good shelters for rain. However, nothing better was to be had so I spent the next hour and-a-half trying to keep the water from trickling down my back as it ran off my hat, and angrily brushing away the swarms of black ants which attacked me from the tree. The storm having passed, the sun came out, and we went on, finding the going very sticky indeed.

On gaining the plateau a solitary bustard was seen about half a mile distant striding about on a knoll. The stalk was successful but the shooter not, and the less said about that bustard the better. It now came on to rain heavily and I made my way about half a mile, through drenching rain, to the shelter of a large mango tree where I ate my breakfast, well seasoned with rain-water which dripped from the leaves above. In about twenty minutes the rain ceased and I proceeded to walk myself dry, after having completely undressed and wrung out the water from my garments. The places in which to look for game were obviously the most sheltered spots, and when passing along the edges of a large depression seemed with water courses, and covered with a scanty bush jungle, I suddenly caught sight of a pair of horns, and instantly dropped to the ground signing to my following to do the same. A very muddy crawl enabled me to gain the shelter of a bush thick enough to look through, and a watch of five minutes disclosed to me that there were ten or a dozen antelope quietly feeding about 150 yards away, having evidently been sheltering themselves among the bushes during rain. The ground was particularly favourable for a near approach owing to the deep watercourses; and ten minutes stooping and crawling brought me behind an ant heap and within 40 yards of the nearest of the herd The best buck was lying down, when suddenly the whole herd took the alarm. Possibly some movement of my large pith hat may have caught an eye, or may be it was a slight shift of the little wind there was. Getting quickly into firing position I dropped the buck stone dead with a shot through the shoulder rather high up. As in the case of the other two animals the bullet went right through and out at the far side. Horns 20½ inches but rather thin. At last the white neck of a cock bustard caught my eye some 600 yards away, and in a few moments I picked up three others, not far off from the first, all busy feeding. It was most interesting to watch them stalking about in the stately way they have. Bustard have a most keen sense of smell, and any approach except down wind appeared almost impossible. There was nothing for it but to wait, and in the course of half an hour they were trending towards some higher ground on which were a very few small bushes. A détour under cover of a fold in the ground took me without any particular precaution to within 150 yards of these; and a crawl on hands and knees and elbows, and sometimes on the stomach, all through sopping wet plough land, landed me some 80 yards nearer. As I sat up slowly to see where my friends were I saw a long neck appear round one side of a bush about 120 yards away peering this way and that to see what strange green beast it could be sitting in the field (my shooting suit was of a greenish brown heather mixture). I sat like a carved image, as the least movement would be fatal, and that curious bird actually paced slowly on until 70 yards away without having been able to make me out. I took the opportunity, as he passed for a moment behind a small bush with long tufts of grass growing through it, to get the rifle to bear in his direction, with elbows on knees ready to fire. At last the time arrived when I thought discovery was imminent, so taking careful aim at the lower edge of the breast I dropped him with a shot through the body. Loud hoarse grunts of alarm showed me the other birds were not far off, and on my rising up the last of them flew off from some 150 yards away. There is no finer bird than a male of the Great Indian Bustard and my delight may be imagined as I handled his magnificent plumage and stroked the long white neck. He weighed 21lbs. At the same time there was a genuine feeling of regret, now the excitement was over that the stately bird had been slain and would no more stalk proudly over his native plains. I felt that I had committed enough slaughter for one day, and, making the man carrying the bird walk in front of me, so that I could feast my eyes on my trophy all the way home, trudged the seven miles back to camp in a happy and contented frame of mind; though wet to the very skin by the storm of rain which came on and lasted almost back to camp.

I will not tire the reader with a description of the remaining two days sport. The conditions were much the same and I bagged two more antelope. One, a buck of 19 inches, fell to a single bullet. The other took three shots to secure, but that was not the fault of the rifle but of the man behind it, as the first shot aimed at the centre of the chest went to one side, and entering near the middle ribs lodged in the opposite hip. A second shot, obtained 15 minutes later, was too high up and passed through, some 2 inches below the spine, over the shoulder. The last bullet was through the heart. The horns were 19½ inches.

During the next three months I secured four more chinkara, and five more antelope, with this most excellent little rifle, and only one of these animals required more than one bullet: again the fault of the shooter in the placing on the first shot.

I find that one great factor in success with this rifle has not been mentioned, and that is the absence of smoke and noise The bewilderment of animals as to which direction danger lay was most noticeable, and of course gave extra chances if the first shot happened to be unsuccessful. Taken all round, I know of no other small bore rifle of low price, more suitable for the class of sport which I have described.

TUNA FISHING AT THE MAGIC ISLE.

THE "Magic Isle," the "Fisherman's Paradise," and many other appropriate names have been given to a small Island in the Pacific Ocean thirty miles off the south-eastern coast of California, geographically known as Santa Catalina Island.

Here by means of glass bottomed boats (ordinary flat-bottomed boats with panes of common or French glass placed in the bottom) may be seen all manner of fish life, beautiful ferns, and all varieties of sea vegetation in the clear crystal waters at a depth of from 25 feet to 100 feet Here beneath such surroundings is the home of the wonderful Catalina tuna; a giant in strength, he is a veritable devil in tricks. Before his fiendish rushes the stoutest lines part like threads in unskilled hands. He who would take the tuna on rod and reel must be a pastmaster of the school of angling. His weight may be half a ton; 251lbs. is as big a tackle as has been able to deliver him in Southern California waters up to date. Specially-built rods of wonderful stamina, reels of windlass like proportions and power, lines of small calibre but hawser-like strength, and piano-wire traces for leaders are parts of the equipment needed in the pursuit of this marine leviathan, whose cavernous mouth engulfs with ease a hook which an eastern sportsman would readily use for a gaff.

Beautiful bright blue on the back and silvery underneath, tapering at bow and stern like a submarine boat and furnished with a scimitar-shaped tail more powerful in proportion than the strongest screw propeller, the Catalina tuna is built for speed, and every big fish angler will tell you that no other fish approaches the velocity of his fierce rushes when once hooked. Pursued in a boat with live flying fish for bait, tuna are trolled for, and when they are in a biting mood one seldom wastes much time without having a "strike." The first impact feels as if the hook had fouled in kelp; the illusion passes quickly as the giant marine athlete, his throat pricked leaps into full speed for freedom, two hundred, three hundred, six hundred feet at first rush, may go tearing line off the big reel under its leather thumb drag. The kelp has changed to a steam tug now, swiftly doubling back and swinging around the boat, the enraged creature gains a bit of slack line and launches himself from the water, shaking his noble head to and fro in a frenzy of fury as a lion might shake a rat. The expedient often wins. Sometimes it fails, and then the battle is resumed. How long it lasts is largely dependent upon the physical strength and endurance of the angler. Eventually the big fish may be worn out and reeled within reach of the boat. Short but furious downward rushes now take the place of the long runs, and inch by inch the gasping creature's broadside nears the poised gaff of the boatman, and when the right time comes, into his throat it is plunged. Utterly worn out, the lucky angler lies down in the bottom of the boat and Mr. Tuna is made fast astern: the homeward trip is begun, and eventually follows the brief pose before the fish rack with a gaping throng accompanying.

NOTES ON RIFLES AND AMMUNITION.

TELESCOPIC sights have made great progress in the United States during the past few years. It is quite common now-a-days for hunters of squirrels, woodchucks, etc., to have their rifles fitted with telescopes. Improved sighting arrangements have naturally resulted in factory-made ammunition being prepared with far greater care than before; and thoroughly reliable cartridges for all the popular bores are now readily obtainable.

Improvements in ammunition are largely due to the untiring experiments of rifle enthusiasts. The "crank" as he is called in America, is endlessly, when at Home, trying new loads on the target; and having found a satisfactory combination, he forthwith either goes into the fields to test it on woodchucks, or into the woods to try it on red and grey squirrels.

The woodchuck, which is a Marmot, very like the Himalayan one so familar to hunters in Kashmir, is the favourite practicial test of a rifle's killing powers. If the bullet has sufficient smashing effect to stop a tough old chuck, with a body shot, at the edge of his burrow, it is considered good enough as regards power for any small game. The hunting test for accuracy, is to be able to hit a grey squirrel in the head up to forty or fifty yards. Of course it would be impossible to make such shooting without a telescope.

The Steven's Company have now brought out a complete line of rifle telescopes. The mounts used by them are very neat, but to my mind hardly strong enough for ordinary hunting work. This is a common fault in telescopic sights. The fact is the barrel ought to be made with a special rib on to which the telescope could be slid. It is not sound trusting to the ordinary sight slots, or to bases attached to the barrel by a couple of small screws, to carry a telescopic sight.

Some of the telescopes run the whole length of the barrel, others are only about 12 inches long

Probably the most useful type is a short telescope with a power of from four to six diameters. Higher powers are very little practical use, owing to the loss of light, and the smallness of the field. I am finding fault with the mounts and length of tube of American telescopes; but it is only fair to say that people in the United States appear to be quite satisfied with them, and use them freely when hunting as well as on the target.

A powder which has proved most successful in America is King's semi-smokeless. It gives much less smoke than black and has about the same power, bulk for bulk. Semi-smokeless seems to suit specially such rifles as the ·25—21, ·25—25, and ·28—30.

After long experience with the ·25—25 and ·28—30, I am of opinion both are perfect weapons for small game shooting in India—with a reduced charge of 5 grains of Schultze and a solid bullet of 120 grains, the ·28—30 makes quite as accurate a rook rifle as the ·25—25. With the full charge of 33 to 35 grains Curtiss and Harvey's No. 6 and a 95 grain hollow bullet it has a flat trajectory and is very powerful. I had some trouble over the right temper for the 95 grain bullet, and think a slightly heavier hollow-fronted bullet is to be preferred. My experience has shown that a Black Buck hit about the middle of the body with an express bullet from the ·28—30, dies quicker than when hit about the same place with a Mannlicher. So small an animal does not bring out the capabilities of the latter rifle, and the bullet only partially expands in its passage through a buck broad side; on the other hand the ·28 hollow bullet breaks up completely and scatters its lacerating spicules of lead throughout the lung cavity. The shells of the ·28—30 rifle are particularly well and solidly made: to all intents and purposes they are everlasting, and will stand reloading an indefinite number of times.

The ·25—25 is an equally satisfactory and accurate rifle; it does not knock about small game as much as the ·28—30, and I certainly never experienced any trouble over the temper of the hollow-fronted bullet, which weighs 75 grains. With 25 to 27 grains of Curtiss and Harvey's No. 6 and the express bullet, it is quite sufficiently powerful for Black Buck and Chinkara. It certainly does not knock down a Buck quite like the ·28—30, but still I never recollect losing one which I had hit fairly with the little rifle.

On one occasion I killed a Black Bear with it: the range was of course short, and I shot the animal in the neck. Reduced charges of black powder are never very satisfactory: they foul the rifle more than the full charge, and are unnecessarily noisy. Four to five grains of Schultze, or other smokeless powder will be found superior in every way. This small smokeless charge is accurate enough to keep everything inside an inch circle at 25 yards; this would be thought nothing of in America, but at the time I thought even this degree of accuracy sufficiently satisfactory, and never worked the rifles to get closer diagrams.

In America two or three grains of smokeless are often used under a full charge of black. This is to blow out the fouling, and make the shooting cleaner.

The ·25—25 does not seem to be such a favourite in the States as the ·25—21. For India, however, the longer cartridge is the best, as the extra 4 grains of powder flattens the trajectory and smashes up the express bullet better. The ·25—21 is merely the ·25—25 shortened; the same reloading tools do for both cartridges. The shells are straight with a very slight outside taper to facilitate extraction.

For cleaning any kind of rifle there is nothing like a bristle brush with an oblong piece of rag put over the bristles.

Pieces cut to shape from an old thin texture wool jersey do most excellently.

For all gun and rifle cleaning I now use "Orite." After two years' trial, I have come to the conclusion that it is the most satisfactory lubricant and cleaner at present in existence.

ALUMINIUM COOKING POTS AND PANS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD,"

SIR,—Are camping requisites made of Aluminium to be recommended? By "requisites" I mean cooking dishes, water bottles, tumblers, etc., etc.

I have heard that they corrode very quickly and taint any liquid which is put into them.

Perhaps you can let me know if they would be all right for a short shooting-trip.

J. M.

[Yes, we can conscientiously recommend these utensils. They are light, easily kept clean and last well with care. But on no account should tea be kept in aluminium teapots for more than a few minutes unless one likes ink as a beverage, for it turns black very quickly, and we do not recommend acids being put into aluminium receptacles—limejuice, claret, etc., etc.—ED].

A CURIOUS CHITAL HEAD.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD,"

SIR,—Looking through "The Indian Field Shikar Book" the other day, I noticed that the largest number of "points' found on any Chital Stag, entered in that book, is 5×5=10 points I write to tell you that on 6th April 1903 I shot a very fine Chital Stag at Pawalgarh, in Naini Tal District. The length of the horns was 33 inches, not a record for length certainly, but the points were 6×7=13, well above anything on record in the book referred to: the right side horn 7 points, the left 6 points. Two of the points are about ¾ of an inch in length each, three are from 1½ to 3 inches in length; these are what may be termed the extra points: there are, of course, the usual brow tines, with the two upper points, to each horn. The following sketch will give you an idea of what the head is like:—

It will be observed that two of the extra points of the right horn bend over (Nos. 3 and 4) and touch at tips, forming almost a circle.

MESSRS. THRESHER AND GLENNY.

With a record of nearly a hundred and fifty years in the trade that is their spécialité, and a reputation co-extensive with the British Empire, Messrs. Thresher and Glenny enjoy a peculiar distinction as complete civil and military outfitters, and conduct a business which would always be among the first to command attention in any review of the commercial aspect of London. This notable house has now existed in six reigns, for King George the Second occupied the Throne when, in 1755, Messrs. Newham and Thresher established themselves as successors to Thomas Street, at the sign of the "Golden Peacock." In 1780 Mr. Richard Thresher was sole proprietor of the business. The name of Glenny first appeared in 1820, in conjunction with that of Mr. John Thresher, son of the abovementioned Richard Thresher, and later on the firm assumed the title of Thresher and Glenny, which has ever since been retained. The fact that the two families are still represented in the personnel of the firm is noteworthy, the present principals being Mr. F. Thresher Giles and Mr. Henry J. Glenny. Distinguished patronage has been accorded to this house throughout its long career, and as far back as the reign of George IV., Messrs. Thresher and Glenny were granted the Royal Warrant of Appointment, the same honour being subsequently extended to them by King William IV, and the late Queen Victoria They had the honour of supplying the Prince of Wales (now King Edward VII.), and every member of his suite, with outfit for the voyage to and climate of India, on the occasion of his visit to that part of the Empire in 1876, and after his return to England the firm received the Royal Warrant of Appointment to his Royal Highness. Ultimately, in July, 1901, Messrs. Thresher and Glenny were granted the Royal Warrant by their Majesties King Edward and Queen Alexandra, and have recently been honoured by a Warrant of Appointment by H.R.H. the Princess of Wales They have also long enjoyed the patronage of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, and that of the Viceroys of India, the Governors of Madras, Bombay, and various Colonies and Dependencies, and of many other illustrious personages, besides a very large clientèle in military, naval, and diplomatic circles. All the Viceroys of India since 1858 have been supplied by this firm, the list of these exalted patrons comprising Earl Canning, the Earl of Elgin, Lord Lawrence, the Earl of Mayo, the Earl of Northbrook, the Earl of Lytton, the Marquess of Ripon, the Marquess of Dufferin, the Marquess of Lansdowne, the Earl of Elgin, and Lord Curzon, the present Viceroy. In the early days of the house Lord Nelson was one of its patrons, and an autograph letter from the great Admiral is among the treasured possessions of Messrs. Thresher and Glenny, who, in more recent times, have equipped a very large number of distinguished naval and military men, travellers and explorers (the late General Gordon and Dr. Livingstone among the number), and supplied outfits for the officers of almost every regiment that has served in the South African War. In the old days of the overland journey through Egypt to or from the East Indies, the trunks supplied by Messrs. Thresher and Glenny acquired a great and well merited renown, and his Highness Abbas Pasha, Viceroy of Egypt issued a Firman in terms declaring the trunks made by this firm to be those best adapted for the route in question, and recommending all travellers to provide themselves with them. Messrs. Thresher and Glenny continue to supply every description of trunk and travelling requisite, in addition to the multifarious articles of personal outfitting of which only a perusal of their price-lists or a visit to their well-known establishment at 152 and 153, Strand, can convey any adequate idea. In point of comprehensiveness their business has few, if any, equals within its particular scope, and it is possible in this brief sketch only to mention the principal departments, which embrace the following:—Hosiery and gloves, shirts, gentlemen's tailoring and underclothing in general, ladies' outfits for India and the Colonies, wedding trousseaux, layettes, hats, trunks and fitted bags, saddlery, camp and barrack furniture, and complete equipments for any part of the world for naval and military officers, surgeons, officials, diplomatists, and civilians. It is a matter of universal knowledge that Messrs. Thresher and Glenny supply absolutely everything which can be regarded as coming under any of the above heads. Many of their leading specialities have been famous for years and are still quite unexcelled, perhaps unequalled. Among these are their noted India Gauze Waistcoats, Kashmir Flannel Shirts, Military Shirts, specially manufactured Hosiery, India Tweed, and Jungra Cloth for shooting suits. They were among the pioneers of Khaki, and their Khaki Drill is a particularly strong and excellent material of English manufacture for coats and riding breeches. Equally careful attention is paid by Messrs. Thresher and Glenny to the requirements of both sexes, and their ladies' department is a very important feature of the business. In this connection they are honoured by the patronage of H.R.H. the Princess of Wales (who, when Duchess of York, was supplied by them with part of her outfit for the great Colonial Tour as also were the members of her Royal Highness's suite), H. R. H. the Princess Louise (Duchess of Argyll), H. R. H. the Duchess of Connaught, and many members of the haute aristocratie. The firm's exceptional experience has given them a masterly knowledge of the requirements of the Services, and of the special needs of those travelling to or residing in any part of our world-wide Empire; and not only do they provide every item of an outfit, but they also render many other valuable services to their patrons, undertaking the packing of outfits and baggage, the shipping and insurance of the same, and the arrangement in connection with passages by the shortest and best routes to India, China, etc. In every department they maintain the standard of unexceptional excellence which gained for them high awards as long since as the great Exhibitions of 1851 and 1862, and also at the Madras Exhibition of 1856 and the Health Exhibition of 1884. This excellence of quality has been the secret of the longevity and far-reaching celebrity of their house. Messrs. Thresher and Glenny employ between 100 and 200 hands, and the entire business is under the principals' personal supervision for the efficacy of which it speaks volumes.

The firm announce that the reconstruction of their premises is now complete, greatly increasing the accommodation in the fitting and show rooms. In the Tailoring Department several workrooms have been added giving improved facilities for personal supervision, which will enable them to execute orders with the utmost precision and dispatch.

LONDON, Friday, 23rd September 1904.

LINGFIELD.

LINGFIELD was looking at its best on the afternoon of the 20th in the warm glamour of an ideal autumn day, and it was only to be expected that the votaries of our national sport should make most of their opportunity and rally in force. The card contained nothing of very special importance, but it yielded excellent sport, and the only incident to mar the harmony of an enjoyable gathering was the mishap which resulted in the somewhat serious injury to W. Lane during the race for the Two-mile Selling Handicap. The going was in splendid order and the riding honours were equitably distributed.

LEWES.

Lewes presented manifold attractions on the 21st instant, the annual Sheep Fair, held on the grassy slopes overlooking the town, sharing the favours of the local folk with Messrs. Pratt's reunion. The charms of each were enhanced by the perfect weather, the day being a jewel in the crown of one of the most glorious Septembers within recent memory. Scarce a cloud was to be seen in the azure sky, and but for the gusty easterly wind which swept across the uplands, the intense heat of the solar rays would have been overpowering. About the programme itself there was no very alluring feature, but it provided a light and breezy entertainment for a fair sprinkling of visitors, and the only jarring notes were those struck by various sinister and unauthorised rumours which gained credence regarding the condition of W. Lane, who still remains unconscious at Lingfield as the result of his accident on the previous day.

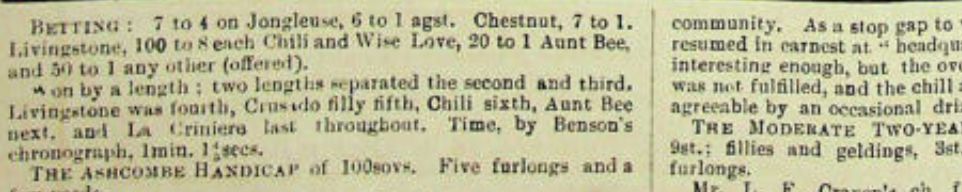
"Your ·360 Cordite Rifle put a soft nosed nickel bullet through the neck of a Hippopotamus at 170 yards range. The bullet passed through the neck and came out the farside. I am extremely pleased with the above Rifle and its excellent stopping powers."



Mr. T. P. A. Holford writes :

"I am writing to tell you about the Double Hammerless Ejector ·360 Cordite Rifle you built for me, and which I used on my last Big Game shoot in British East Africa and Uganda. I consider it the most perfect and reliable weapon I have used for Big Game. With it I killed everything from the size of a Guinea Fowl to Rhinoceros, including Lion, Zebra, Wildebeeste, Waterbuck, and many other Antelope and Gazelle. Its accuracy, striking and stopping powers are extraordinary ; of the latter, the bullets cut out of dead game which I also forward, will give you a very good idea. While writing this I might also add, that I am very pleased with the Double Hammerless ·450 Cordite Rifle you built me, having done very good work with it in the Rocky Mountain."

FOLKESTONE.

It was not a very strong company that mustered at Westenhanger yesterday afternoon, nor is this to be wondered at, seeing the vicissitudes to which regular racegoers have lately been subjected. The arrangement by which such meetings as Birmingham, Lingfield, Lewes, Folkestone (or Pontefract), and Manchester follow each other in the fixture list reflects little credit either upon the ingenuity or the foresight of the powers that be, and it is sincerely to be hoped that in the future the individual interests of the various executives will be subservient to considerations for the general welfare and convenience of the racing community. As a stop gap to while away the time until sport is resumed in earnest at "headquarters," the entertainment proved interesting enough, but the overnight promise of a brilliant day was not fulfilled, and the chill air was rendered none the more agreeable by an occasional drizzle.

ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP.

DIVISION I.

SHEFFIELD UNITED vs. SMALL HEATH.—Twelve thousand spectators assembled at Bramall-lane on Saturday, the 17th instant, to witness this match which ended in a victory of two goals to one for the home team, the winning goal being scored three minutes from time. The result by no means represents the preponderance of attack which Sheffield United enjoyed, but at the same time it bears testimony to the doggedness of the Small Heath defence, which has been one of the main factors in other respectable performances to their credit this season. Sheffield United were without their veteran goalkeeper, Foulke, Lievesley taking his place, but this was the only change in the side defeated at Everton a week previously. Small Heath relied on the same team as went under to Notts County a week before. The visitors started promisingly, and Athersmith soon got in one of his dangerous sweeping centres, which Groves headed away. After this it was a considerable time before the old Villa player was heard of again. Needham and Milnes coping very effectually with him. The United forwards settled into their stride and displayed clever passing in midfield, but near goal for a long time seemed incapable of driving home the attack. This ineffectiveness in front of the uprights was due to the smart bustling of the Heathens' halves and the brilliant play of Stokes at left back. Lipsham rattled in one fine shot, which Robinson deftly turned over the bar, but at the end of ten minutes the United took the lead. Lang sent in a shot from the right, and, Robinson stopping this under the bar, the ball fell to the feet of Brown in the goal-mouth, and the latter easily touched it past the Heathens' goalkeeper. Following this the United did a lot of further attacking, but now and again the Small Heath forwards broke away, and both Jones and Wilcox narrowly missed scoring. At the end of half an hour, with Small Heath at close quarters, Milnes, of the United, handled the ball in the penalty area, and from the free kick Beer equalised. United, had slightly the best of matters up to the interval, but could not score again. The first half-hour of the second half witnessed fine play by both sets of forwards. The home team did more pressing than Small Heath, but both teams were unlucky with shots that hit the crossbar or one of the uprights. There was a better understanding among the United forwards than those of Small Heath, though the left wing and centre of the latter at times acted well in concert, but the Heathens' defence was so solid that the winning goal only arrived three minutes from time, when Donnelly converted a centre by Lipsham. On the United side the right wing was the more effective, and Brown was smart in the centre. In their defence Needham shone and Milnes gave one of his best displays, while Livesley's goalkeeping left nothing to be desired. On the Small Heath side Robinson acquitted himself well in goal, and Jones and Field among the forwards played with rare dash. Result: Sheffield United, two goals; Small Heath, one.

PRESTON NORTH END vs. DERBY COUNTY.—These teams played their first League game of the season on the Deepdale enclosure, Preston, on Saturday, in beautiful autumnal weather, on a fast ground, and before 13,000 spectators. The sides were representative, though Bell, the North End Captain, was still absent. The game began at a rattling pace, and from the start it was apparent that some good work would be seen. The visiting forwards swept down the ground, but found Rodway and Derbyshire a formidable pair. Once McBride saved from Richards. Then North End moved forward in grand style, and Derbyshire with a lunge hit the crossbar. The attack could not be broken and at the end of ten minutes' play Maskery was beaten by a clinking shot by Brown from close quarters. The Derby left time and again essayed to break away, but Bloomer was watched and proved ineffective. Each custodian saved good attempts to score, and then Maskery was beaten a second time, but Bond was offside and the point did not count. The home lot pressed capitally and a foul in the penalty area brought the attendant kick. McBride escaped to score, but Maskery got his foot at the ball, and the incident closed without substantial advantage. At half-time North End led by one goal to none. In the second half the Prestonians again went to work in earnest, and on the first few minutes Bond and Brown both missed by inches. Again after the game had been in progress ten minutes, the home side increased their lead, P. Smith beating Maskery. The Derby men made several ugly rushes for McBride, but they did not come to anything tangible, and the end came with North End winners by two goals to none.

NOTTS COUNTY vs. MANCHESTER CITY.—Manchester were a little the better team of the two which met at Trent Bridge Ground on Saturday, the 17th, but each side scored a goal, and the result was a draw. The Notts committee did the right thing in substituting Clinch for Montgomery at back, for the ground was very fast, and Clinch is a much quicker mover than the other. On the Manchester side "Dr." Holmes was introduced vice Ashworth, at left half; but he was out of condition. Hillman was induced to take goal; but he was not in a fit condition to play. He has by no means recovered from his injuries, and still suffers from dizziness; he nearly missed the ball on at least two occasions from straight shots, through inability to see properly. Hillman deserves great credit for his pluck, but he was lucky in not having many shots to stop. Earle, on the other hand, in the Notts goal, had plenty to do, and did it well. Clinch and Clare had not played together previously, but worked with some understanding, and should suit each other. Green, the Notts centre-forward, was attended to by Hynds and Frost, and although the right inside of Notts scored a goal, the home forwards were always a straggling lot. Thornley scored for Manchester in the first half, Earle making quite a remarkable attempt to save, when three shots came at him in rapid succession from close quarters. Meredith and Livingstone found Griffiths and Clinch quite equal to checking them, and though the Notts forwards were poor, the Mancunians were equally effective. Neither team was indeed seen at its best, we think. If Notts played up to form, then indeed they are a poor team, for Manchester was decidedly moderate. The result was a draw of one goal each.

DIVISION II.

BRISTOL CITY vs. GLOSSOP.—Bristol City won their first home League match on Saturday, the 17th, before 7000 spectators. It was a well deserved win, the homesters showing much improved form. An experimental rearrangement of the forwards line proved highly successful, and the men showed better combination than in previous matches. The City had by far the best of the game, and from the early stages it appeared as if play would be very one-sided. Glossop, however, improved, and the game ruled more even. The City repeatedly attacked dangerously, and but for a rather lucky defence the visitors would have had a good many more points notched against them. Gilligan scored the only goal in the first half. The homesters opened the second half similarly to the first. Some good and some bad shots were sent in, but only one took effect. This one came from Gilligan, and gave Davies very little chance. The visitors rarely shot at goal and though Clay had to be on the alert he was rarely called upon to deal with a difficult shot. Result: Bristol City, two goals; Glossop, none.

MANCHESTER UNITED vs. BOLTON WANDERERS.—So great was the interest taken, that fully 25,000 spectators witnessed this game at Manchester on Saturday. As was generally expected, some fast play was seen. Bolton, who have played so well in the competition, winning by two goals to one Mackie was first to score for the home side, but ere ends were changed White had equalised for Bolton. After change of ends the teams played very fast football, White, by scoring another goal, causing Bolton to return home with the victory.

LIVERPOOL vs. BRADFORD CITY.—There were 14,000 spectators at Anfield on Saturday to witness this game, which the home side won very easily by four goals to one. They were always playing superior football and were by far the better team. In the opening half Beckham scored first goal for Liverpool, but this was equalised by Morris. However, from that stage Bradford were outplayed. Parry caused the home side to lead by two goals to one at half-time, and after change of ends Cox added two more goals.

GRIMSBY TOWN vs. BURNLEY. Four thousand spectators witnessed the meeting of these teams at Grimsby on Saturday, the home side proving successful by one goal to love after a hard game. The first half was stubbornly contested, the defence on both sides being very fine, Spendiff, the home goalkeeper, distinguishing himself by saving from a penalty kick. Afterwards both clubs again played fine football, and as time drew near it appeared likely that a pointless draw would result. However a few minutes before the finish Grimsby pressed hard, and from a corner Ross gained the winning goal.

CASUALS vs. LONDON CALEDONIANS.—This football season at Tufnell Park, Holloway, was opened on Saturday afternoon, when the above clubs, who share the ground, met before about 1,500 spectators in bright and summer-like weather. It was the first match of the season of the Casuals and the second played by the Caledonians, who the previous week played a drawn game with Leytonstone on the latter club's ground, each side scoring two goals. The ground was in first-rate condition, and, if the play did not come up to very high standard, there were bright periods and some promising form was displayed by men in both teams. Many old faces were to be seen on both sides, but a couple of changes had to be made from the sides advertised. G. B. Pollock-Hodsoll giving place to W. E. Wright while on the Caledonians' side J. G. Gibson played instead of C. G. McFarlane. The Casuals had the sun in their faces during the first half, but they combined better than their opponents, and Ralston and Robertson had more to do than King and Partner. It was evident that many were short of practice, and, although now and again the goal at either end was threatened, the shooting was very erratic and many good openings were allowed to slip. Gibson sent in one terrific shot but had the misfortune to hit the crossbar. At the other end Ward also looked like beating the Caledonians' custodian, but failed in shooting. Just on half-time the Scots put on the pressure and Gibbons found the net, but had the mortification of hearing the whistle sound just as he did so for an infringement of the off-side rule, and the interval came without any score. The second half saw an improvement in the pace of the game, both playing with plenty of dash. At first the Caledonians did the bulk of the attacking, and kept King very busy. More than once Porter, Shaw, and Gibbons looked like giving their side the lead, but again faulty shooting spoilt their efforts. Midway through this half the Casuals did better, and smart play by Harris and Durrant led to the Caledonians' goal being threatened, but the first-named, after once failing when he had only the goalkeeper to beat, later struck the crossbar. Try as they would, neither side could score, and the game ended in a draw.

FOOTBALL IN SCOTLAND.

THE LEAGUE GAMES.

That R. S. McColl, the brilliant ex-amateur, is still a personality in Scottish football, was evidenced by the enormous attendance assembled at Hampden Park, Glasgow, to witness the League fixture between Queen's Park, his old club, and Glasgow Rangers, under whose colours he made a first appearance in the west since his secession to professionalism. Before departing to England to take service with Newcastle United, McColl won fame on the "classic slopes" of second Hampden Park, where for many years he was a popular idol. That his popularity had in no wise diminished, the reception he was accorded on taking up his position on the field clearly showed. The fact that R. C. Hamilton, and the ex-Novocastrian are both centre-forwards caused a re-arrangement of the visiting forward line. Speedie, the Internationalist, dropped back to centre-half, Hamilton retained his place, and McColl was set to act as support to A. Smith, on the left wing. This combination worked capitally, although that particular wing (with whom Hamilton allied himself) overshadowed the other. Speed and trickery were the outstanding features of the trio's play, but the essential object of getting quickly to goal was never lost sight of. In this respect, the ex-amateur, contrary to what we had formerly been accustomed, effaced himself for the benefit of his colleagues, and showed no signs of those bewildering movements and that deceptive swerve for which he was famous. On the whole, though the home side were defeated by four goals to nil, that margin could not be taken as a criterion of the division of the exchanges. While there was no doubt as to which was the better eleven, the merits of the Queen's Park men were decidedly ill-rewarded. Time and again they were given opportunities to reduce the leeway, but misfortune dogged their path, and a pointless reverse had unfortunately to be accepted. Considering the calibre of the men against them, the amateur defence did well, the half-backs comparing favourably with their better-known confreres in the corresponding opposing middle line. Forward, of course, the difference was marked, the finishing powers and neat foot work in the out-field on the part of the winners showing to considerable advantage over the disjointed and wild efforts of their amateur brethren. With these departments the issue of the game lay, as the final score indicates. Airdrieonians, whose consistency yet maintains itself, still hold the leading place in the League race, their record of nine points for five games, reading better than that of Glasgow Rangers with eight points for a similar number of fixtures played, and, on the principle that "a bird in the hand, etc.," also better than Celtic, with seven for four, and they worthily upheld their position on Saturday, by overcoming, in marked fashion, Port Glasgow Athletic, on foreign ground. In all respects, the Lanarkshire club were the superior lot, and their win by three goals to one was a fit estimate of their merit contrasted with the eleven of the Lower Ward. Another victory, which was well-deserved, was that of Partick Thistle over Greenock Morton. The strengthening of the back division worked wonders, and the front line gave evidence of much brighter form than they have been exhibiting of late. Sommen, a smart little player, secured from Motherwell, was an important factor in the achievement of winning. Long-kicking and fast rushes were the main tactics utilised by Morton, but they availed little, the game being always under the control of the Partick side, who ultimately gained the day by three goals to one. St. Mirren, who seem to have fallen on evil days, have still to win their first game. At any time they play well against Celtic, and it was not with any tremour, but with an anticipation of possibly coming out on top, that the Paisley Club engaged their Glasgow rivals. Scoring as they did the opening goal, made prospects rosy for them and put the necessary heart into the eleven to do well. All through it was a keen struggle, though hard knocks might easily have been fewer, with the verdict at the close in favour of Celtic by three goals to two. Whether it is that Kilmarnock are improving or Third Lanark retrograding, the match between the pair, which on current form looked safe for the Volunteers, was a hard and determined fight. It terminated with honours easy, neither side having scored, a state of affairs on which the former may congratulate themselves, since, had a deplorable attempt before an open goal by a Kilmarknock forward been more accurately directed, they would be now lamenting even the solitary League point secured. Heart of Midlothian have recently had some trouble with their players, the brothers Wilson being suspended early in the week. Fortunately, the breach between players and club was healed, and one of the offenders signalised his return by notching three of the four goals by which the Hearts overcame Motherwell. An even draw of one goal each was recorded at Easter-road between Dundee and Edinburgh Hibernians.

All papers relating to any particular firm or business are filed together, and are thus kept quite separate, and readily get-at-able.

No unnecessary room taken up, as in the case of most files now in the market, the back being quite thin and takes up no more space than the actual letters—a very important point where space is a consideration.

All papers can be instantly and conveniently referred to without any manipulation of springs which often means dislodging a number of papers in order to get at any particular document.

The covers are made in various qualities and sizes, to take from 1—300 documents, in octavo, quarto or foolscap.

Files are supplied in different colors : Blue, Red, Orange, Buff, and Green. The idea of using coloured Files provides an easy means of distinguishing at a glance the various distinctive branches of correspondence in a large business, such as referring to Agencies, Purchases, Sales, Finance, or for Town, Country, Mofussil, Continental and Colonial.

ATHLETICS.

S. L. H. AUTUMN MEETING.

Good as was the spring meeting of the famous South London Harriers, that of Saturday, 17th instant, at Kennington Oval surpassed it. A fine, sunny afternoon, and the prospect of witnessing excellent sport had the effect of drawing a record attendance. Directly the gates were opened, the public entered in a steady steam until, at three o'clock, there must have been cully 20,000 onlookers. Everything conduced to success. Very fapable officials were at the head of affairs, the entries were first-class, both on the score of quality and quantity, and, above all, the racing, whether on foot or cycle, was exceedingly keen and well worth watching. This latter remark is especially true of the cycling, which was in marked contrast to the wretched crawls witnessed at the Crystal Place a week ago. The men went for all they were worth on the grass track, and it was stiff going, as they often had to contend against a strong breeze, which in the sprint gave the runners material assistance. Consisting of eleven open events, the programme lasted for three hours and a half—sufficient for anyone. It sparkled with engaging finishes from first to last. Large fields, too, were always the order.

Getting away to a fine start, Duffey was the first to show in front, but at half-distance Morton came out with a fine burst, and finishing very strongly, gained the verdict from Jupp by a good yard, half a yard separating the latter from Miller, who just beat Duffey, the American easing up on the tape, owing to a strained leg. Time—9⅕secs. which equals British record. On returning to the Pavilion, the winner had a great reception.

ONE MILE RELAY RACE.

The competing teams were:—Herne Hill H. (C. MacLachlan, C. H. Childe, A. E. Janes, and C. Stanfield) ; Highgate H. (W. Dalaney, F. Lyon, C. W. Fox , and J. Binks); Salford H. (F. E. A. Rowell, W. The conditions were : The first man of each team to cover 440 yards, the second 220 yards, the third 220 yards and the fourth 880 yards Rowell Salford H., with the inside position, ran a capital quarter, beating McLachlan, Herne Hill H., by fully five yards. This lead was increased by Hiles in the first sprint of 220 yards, the latter defeating Childe, Herne Hill H., but in the second 220 Morton made a fine effort, and cut down Heap's advantage to about four yards Unfortunately Montague did not gather his flag promptly, with the result that Heap sent the last Salford Harrier, Brierley, off with an advantage of fully thirty yards for the final. However, the latter set a pace which he could not last, and failing 200 yards from the tape, Blunden, running finely, overhauled him and stalling off the challenge of Montague, won by four yards ; a dozen yards off J. Binks, of the Highgate H., was third, with Brierley fourth. Time—3mins. 43secs.

BOXING.

East London patrons of the noble art should have a very fine night's sport at Wonderland on Monday next, when the much-talked about contest takes place between Young Peter Jackson and Charley Knock, upon the result of which depends no less than £350. Wonderland, or the East End National as it has often been described, has, during the few years it has been known as a boxing resort, been the scene of a number of interesting events, but nothing has ever ranked of such importance as the contest between Jackson and Knock, which is invested with quite an international flavour. The men are matched to box fifteen two minute rounds, with 4oz. gloves, under Queensbery rules, at 10st. 8lbs., and both are to weigh in at two o'clock on the afternoon of the contest. Knock is, of course, better know in the Metropolis than his dusky opponent, for he has figured in many contests in the East End and other places, and had been more often a winner than a loser. Indeed, he can well be described as one of the best men that the Metropolis has produced in late years. Jackson, who has sparred but twice since he arrived in this country, is best known by his second bout, which as will be seen below, stamps him as quite a first-class performer. That both men are out for business, and the best end of the stake money, is indicated by the conscientious manner in which they are training for the event. Visits were paid to them yesterday by representatives of this paper, and so far as can be judged next Monday's contest at Wonderland should be well worth seeing. In addition to the big affair, there is a contest between George Cunningham and Bill Hook, and other important events. Indeed, it is not surprising that already the demand for seats is quite active.

OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

ON Monday, the 3rd October, hounds met at Sandy Nullah Toll Bar at 7-30 A.M., though the morning was bright and there was good dew, yet the country was dry. The east side of Lawley's Course was first drawn, and then crossing over the course we drew up Gibbs' Shola at the foot of which hounds spoke to a line and puzzled it out to the Shola near the road Thinking that the jack had crossed the road, the Master held hounds forward to the crossing near Briar Shola, where they picked up the line again and ran past Wapshare's Hare Shola to the old cattle crawl below where there was a check. They hit it off again and drew across the swamp to the old Pykara Road. Below Wenlock the pace improved and we crossed the old Pykara Road at the 7th Milestone and turned along the swamp. A jack was viewed close in front and hounds did not give him another chance. He turned towards the Shola Ghaut, but was killed in the open. A large dog jack.

The Master next drew the country north of the road to the Pykara Falls. On the opposite side of the nullah there a large sounder of pig were viewed, but hounds were very steady, notwithstanding that they winded them. Hounds found again almost immediately and ran at a good pace right up to the Falls road, and then turned towards the Ghauts, where the Master saw a brace of jacks in front. They ran a right-handed circle of fully three miles and came back on the original line. Close to the Falls path the jacks separated, one going forward and the other back. Hounds hunted the latter, and he took us up the steep hill at the end of the ridge above Toda Coffee Shop Sholer and then on towards Khed Shola. At this shola he turned to the left, and crossing the old Pykara Road near the 1st Mile headed for Dunsandle. He run along the side of the fence and crossed the nullah above Beadnell's Shola, where we lost him. The second run was exactly an hour without a check, and the going in the earlier part was very severe.

On Thursday we met at Rees' Corner at 7-30. The country was in good order after the recent heavy rains, and the morning a fine one. Hounds first drew the cover at Bagman blank, and then the Master drew Mills Cover upwards and hounds went slowly over the municipal stream and the Pykara Road towards Bingham Shola, but there was no doubt that the jack was a long way off and the Master did not persevere. We then recrossed the municipal stream at Treble Crossing and drew past Double Crossing. Here there was another cold line, which hounds puzzled out for some distance when scent failed.

The Master then drew over Lawley's Course and up to Gibbs' Shola where hounds spoke, and with frequent checks crossed the Pykara Road and got to the top of the Dartmoor Valley where they could make no more of it. After drawing the side of Wapshare's Hare Shola blank hounds turned down to the Yemakal Valley at the other side of the Forest Bungalow. On crossing the Yemakal Stream a halloa was heard from a native first below Bacon Wood. The Master trotted back and laid hounds on the line of the jack, for he had waited for us. He took us through the cover part of Bacon Wood and emerged on the Chammund side and turned up towards the road, but on seeing the field coming along the side, turned in again.

He broke on Briar Shola side and turned down hill as if for Yemakal, but meeting one of the horsemen, went into the cover part of Bacon where he was killed in cover in a very short time.

News was brought of a jack being viewed in Briar Shola, so the Master trotted back and drew it. He broke and went over Windy Saddle into Wapshare's Hare Shola where he turned very sharp and overrunning hounds was viewed into the top of Bacon Wood where hounds could not follow further. He probably ran the road where there was no scent, and although the whip got forward they could not view him. Scent was not as good as might have been expected all the morning.

BLUE GUM.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

ON the 2nd of October a field of about forty lovely women and brave cavaliers assembled at the village of Kalas to do honour to Colonel Sheringham and enjoy a hunt. Time is a precious commodity these days with so much lee-way to make up, and on the stroke of six the Master drew to the right of the road leading to Diggi and hounds soon owned to a line. Away they went, at a brisk pace I hear, past the hamlet of Danowri and towards Temple Hill, the jack skirting the uplands for a time, while the Master endeavoured to prevent him breasting the hill. A good few of the field riding wide on the left from all accounts rode a little too "forward" and rather headed the jack on to the fastness where he saw Sanctuary, but hounds were not for mercy and killed him among the rocks after a pleasant little hunting run of about 20 minutes. After performing the funeral rites, Colonel Sheringham drew towards the Kalas road and hounds soon hit off another line. Merry was the pace towards some village called Bopekul (as near as I can get it), and after leading the field a pleasant gallop for more or less 25 minutes from start to finish, hounds tumbled their jack over in some standing crop, the "going" during the latter half of this run being, I believe, rather heavy and holding. For the facts connected with what seems to have been an admirable day's sport at Harapsur I am, in the main, indebted to the talented scribe who writes such graphic accounts of the doings of this illustrious pack in the local Thunderer, as I deeply regret having to be ungrateful enough to give away my usual kind sportsmen who have of late become sadly indolent Among those out I notice the names of some apparently very regular attendants in Colonel Channer and Colonel Bull, neither of whom ever seem to miss a day. Mr Armstrong and Mr. Casson the two hard-riding whips who have assisted the Master so ably through out the season, and it is interesting to see that of the very small though select field that assembled on this occasion the majority were of the tender sex, Mrs. Beatty, Mrs. Parry, Mrs. Morris, Miss Anderson and Miss George gracing the proceedings. Some sugarcanes near the meet were drawn, but though usually it is said a safe find were on this occasion drawn blank. In a neighbouring nullah, however, hounds owned to a line and in a burst of melody galloped away at a race pace. Over the railway enbankment and on to some nice galloping grass land and so through some extensive cultivation where some of the field got thrown out, and I believe Colonel Channer on one of his well known hunters, who seem to take such a deal of catching, had hounds quite to himself for a time. Scent seems to have been exceptionally good and the leading hounds were running at a rare pace till some rocky broken country slackened the speed. Hounds, however, were death on blood and would take no denial, and after about 25 minutes of a really brilliant gallop ran from scent to view, and eventually rolled their jack over in the open. Everyone seems to have been delighted with their morning's sport. The hounds will, no doubt, be shortly for sale and hounds men up-country should be able to suit themselves well.

CYCLING AND MOTORING AT HOME.

LONDON, 23rd September 1904.

IN one of the cycling papers considerable correspondence has been running on the time-worn question of "side-slip" and readers have been airing their views with all the assurance that when they have publicly voiced their opinions, it would only be a matter of a short while before "side-slip" was a thing of the past. Although some score of cyclists have discovered the antidote, we noticed in our walk to the office this morning —there had been a short shower just previous—two riders on the ground, they having slipped on the wet tram-lines; possibly they had not read the correspondence referred to. Some writers hold that the solution of the problem is to be found in the wheel base of a machine; others that it is all in the position of the saddle whilst the pressure the tyre is inflated to is believed by many to effect the question. Personally we believe that no contrivance will effectually overcome the bug-bear, but that the chance of experiencing a slip can be considerably reduced by the cyclist learning to ride perfectly. Even pedalling, without sudden or hard thrusts, will do most to diminish side-slips.

Last Friday, 16th September, was an eventful day in the cycle world since on this day the famous Welch patent expired. It was on this patent, which protected the method of fixing pneumatic tyres to the rims, that the Dunlop Company worked up such an enormous business with branches in every part of the world and it was this patent too, which made cycling the universal pastime it now is. The expiry was celebrated in an unique manner by the Dunlop Company in the form of a "wake" at the Hotel Cecil, to which four hundred representatives of the cycle and motor trades were invited. The dinner over, the evening was devoted to speech making until the hour of midnight, when, as the clock chimed out twelve, the Chairman pronounced the following "elegy" of the Welch patent.

"Here lies Welch; he was saddle or arch shaped; he rested on a median convexity; his boundaries were inextensible; he dies, and yet he lives, no longer for the few, but for the use of all.

"According to Irish custom this is his wake; these are his ashes. But according to another Irish monumental legend, there arises from these ashes a phœnix. That phœnix is Dunlop 'The manufacturer.'

"Welch is dead—Dunlop lives. He too is saddle or arch shaped; his median convexity is the world; his boundaries are extensible—may they extend.

"Long live Dunlop, the manufacturer."

And the Orchestra played Chopin's Funeral March.

The Polytechnic C. C. in conjunction with their harrier colleagues held a very successful meeting on Saturday last at the Paddington Recreation grounds when favoured with glorious weather a large crowd of spectators put in an appearance. Possibly many attended with the hope of seeing A. L. Reed, who had performed so splendidly though defeated in the two Kilometres World's Championship, but he did not put in an appearance nor did another fine amateur A. E Wills. The cycling events consisted of a half mile open handicap won by R. Janson, from the 23rd yard mark, a mile open handicap for novices pulled off by J. T. Scott, and a five miles scratch race which resulted in a grand finish between C. Brooks, and J. B. Casey, the former just winning in 13mins. 42secs.

At the Windsor Petty Sessions a motorist was successful in having a charge brought against him, dismissed by the judge. A town councillor for the Borough of Windsor summoned him for unlawfully, recklessly and negligently driving his car in Thames Street, Windsor, in a manner which was dangerous to the public. In support of his case the councillor called a police sergeant and stated that the car was being driven at a very fast rate, he only escaping being run down by springing suddenly out of the way. Mr. Staple Firth who defended, was successful in getting the case dismissed with costs against the councillor.

There is no doubt that the result of the past season's trade in motor cycles has been very disappointing to the manufacturers who had almost expected 1904 to provide a boom year with this class of machine. The result has been the reverse, demand falling considerably below what was expected. The reason of this is believed by some people to be due to the heavy weight of the present day motor bicycle, indeed, so convinced is one publication that the dearth of customers is through this cause, that they have for some months been experimenting and investigating as to what reductions may be made to a motor cycle with safety. The result is that they have produced a motor bicycle with a 2¼ horse-power engine that scales but a trifle over 71½lbs. as against 140lbs. to 200lbs. which a motor bicycle generally weighs. On a recent trial run this machine easily covered thirty miles an hour and took Holywell Hill, St. Albans, without pedal assistance. It has always been upheld that a light engine of 2½ horse-power was not powerful enough to drive a motor bicycle and that with a more powerful engine a heavier and stronger frame was necessary. But it has now been proved that a small powered engine can drive a cycle satisfactory, that is, a cycle scaling about 75lbs., and we fully believe with the paper making the experiments, that in this reduction of weight rests the future popularity of motor cycling. There are a number of persons to whom speed has no particular charm and who would take up the pastime if they could purchase a light and reliable motor bicycle which would not be beyond their strength to lift, capable of carrying them along at about 20 miles an hour.

Different magistrates have very different opinions as to the what punishment to inflict on offenders brought before them. An poor old man who steals a turnip from a field is likely as not to be given a term of four weeks' imprisonment, whilst a clerk who robs his employer will be left off with a caution under the First Offenders Act. Two cases have come under my notice this week which empathises the need of some system for magistrates to follow when sentencing offenders. In one a man called at a cycle agents and hired a machine for two hours, leaving with the agent a five shilling deposit. Well, he never returned with the machine but attempted to sell it in a neighbouring town which led to his arrest. When brought before the bench he was sentenced to a fine of £1, or in default, ten days' imprisonment. In the other case, a cyclist who had met with an accident and broken his machine, put it behind a hedge until he returned with a trap to fetch it away. A youth came along and seeing the machine behind the hedge thought it had been thrown away as useless. He took it home with him and had it repaired and re-enamelled making no secret of his find. In the meantime the owner was searching for his lost machine and hearing that a cycle had been found put the police on the track of the youth. He was prosecuted and although he possessed a good character and called witnesses to prove that he announced his find broad cast, he was fined just the same amount as the man who hired the machine with the intention of selling it.

CRICKET IN BOMBAY.

THE GYMKHANA BATTING AVERAGES.—Our Bombay Correspondent writes. With only one match to play it may be interesting to your readers to know what the batting averages of the Bombay Gymkhana are like up to date. I have worked these out including the scores in the match between the Civil and the Military, but omitting those in the first match with the Parsee Gymkhana which I have mislaid. Lieutenant A. P. Langhorne and Major Carnegy were the only batsmen, however, who made any runs to speak of in the latter match, the first-named scoring 36, so that their averages are probably a point higher than shown in the following table :—

ANNUAL HANDICAPS.

THE tournaments this year have been an even greater success than usual, and whether owing to the lateness of the Pujahs or other causes, fewer members have been away, and the matches have been played off with commendable punctuality and keenness, and scratchings have been few and far between.

The Doubles have not been remarkable for close games so far, but the final, which lies between Colonel Wheler and Captain Jackson and Messrs. Stewart and Foley, is looked forward to with much interest: the former pair are generally regarded as the likely winners, but the latter upset a very hot combination in Messrs. Collin and Collingridge, and may be expected to put up a very stiff fight, even if they do not actually win. The match will probably not be played till next week, owing to Captain Jackson's absence from Calcutta.

In the Singles the games have been much closer, though the standard of play has not been high.

In the first round there were three good matches, Colonel Peck and Mr. Paine pulling through after very tight games with Messrs. Bayley and Porter respectively, while Colonel Wheler, with the score one game and 11—5 against him, got himself out of a nearly hopeless position and wore Mr. Col in down. Mr. Foley put up a good game with Mr. Rae in the second round, and it took Mr. Buckland all his time to defeat Colonel Peck. In the semi-finals Mr. Paine made a poor show against Colonel Wheler, but the other match between Messrs. Buckland and Rae was very exciting and produced perhaps the best rackets of the tournament. Losing the first game, the former got into his service in the second, and playing very well won easily: the last game was better contested, but Mr. Buckland continued to have the best of the argument, and with the game 13—8 in his favour the match looked over, but Mr. Rae put in a useful sequence of six aces all by service and eventually snatched the game out of the fire. The final, which was played on Saturday last, was a poor game, and a pretty full gallery was disappointed of the close match they expected as Colonel Wheler was not up to his best form, and Mr. Rae won comfortably. Both players made far too much use of the side walls, and the constant hitting round both in the service and the rallies (of which there were only one or two of respectable length) spoiled the game entirely. Colonel Wheler won the first game, but after that was no match for his opponents' severe service and hard hitting, and despite his effort in the third game, Mr. Rae won by 3 games to 1, 66 aces to 37, or not counting the handicap 76 aces to 25.

The games were all played in the East Court, the floor and walls of which have been recently laid with Indian Patent Stone, an experiment which gives promise of turning out a success.

Appended are details of the Singles:—

First Round.

Lieutenant Colonel Peck, I.M.S. (3) beat Mr. W. E. Bayley (3) 15-12, 13-15, 15-12.

Mr. H. P. M. Rae (owes 4) beat Captain T. D. Jackson, D.S.O. (5) scratched.

Mr. B. Foley, (5) beat Major J.C.C. Perkins (7) 15-8, 15-8.

Major W. J. Bythell (owes 2) beat Major G. Lubbock, R. E., (7) scratched.

Mr. F. T. Paine (3) beat Mr. M. T. Porter, R. E. (7) 17-6, 17-14.

Colonel C. B. Wheler (3) beat Mr. E. W. Collin, (3) 11-15, 17-6, 15-4.

Mr. F. H. Stewart, (3) beat Mr. C. Radcliffe (7) 15-8, 15-10.

Second Round.

Mr. Buckland beat Lieutenant-Colonel Peck 15-9, 12-15, 15-6.

Mr. Rae beat Mr. Foley 15-7, 5-15, 15-9.

Mr. Paine beat Major Bythell 15-11, 15-11.

Colonel Wheler beat Mr. Stewart 15-6, 15-8.

Third Round.

Mr. Rae beat Mr. Buckland 15-11, 3-15, 17-5.

Colonel Wheler beat Mr. Paine 15-9, 15-8.

Final.

Mr. H. P. M. Rae (owes 4) beat Colonel Wheler (rec.: 3) by three games to one 12-15, 15-4, 18-13, 15-5.

Shows.

THE MUSSOORIE HORSE AND DOG SHOW.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

THANKS to the untiring energy of Major Kemp, the General Honorary Secretary, one of the most successful shows ever held in Mussoorie, took place on the 30th ultimo, when some 100 entries for horses, and 250 for dogs, were catalogued, most of which actually put in an appearance. The weather was grand, the attendance good, and the competition in many cases very keen. Being "Chakrata Week" the arrangements for one function seemed to clash with that of another, and things had to be hurried up at the last moment. This was the case with the benching of the dogs, which was not completed till most of the animals were on the ground, and when finished was not good. The spaces being nearly all the same size, and not big enough for some of the large breeds, particularly the St. Bernards. Still the Secretary has made a note of this and a few other minor things, and they will not occur next year. The Savoy Hotel was advertised to be "At Home" (?), but of this at least said soonest mended, I daresay it will be freely commented upon in the daily papers before this is in print. The horses which were on the whole quite up to the average, were judged by Major Humfrey, Major Kemp, Major Brandreth, Captain Stewart, and Captain Pilkington; the following were the awards and comments on the classes:—

THE HORSES.

Class I.—All Arabs 14-2 and under. 1st Captain Holden's b a g Bumble Bee, 2nd Mr. Bevan Pitman's g a g DeLuze. A moderate class.

Class II.—C.-B. Ponies 14-2 and under. 1st Mr. V. A. Keighley's r cb m Joan, 2nd Miss M. Powell's bl ch m Audrey. A moderate class.

Class III.—English and Colonial Ponies 14-2 and under. 1st Mr. D. H. Vanrenen's br aus g, Shah II, 2nd Captain Walter's g aus m Margaret, 3rd Mr. Keighley's br aus m Toss. A very good class.

Class IV.—All Horses over 14-2. 1st Captain Holden's b aus g Eric, 2nd Mr V. A. Keighley's ch aus g The Marquis. A poor class with the exception of the two prize winners.

Class V.—Polo Ponies 14-1 and under. 1st Mr. D. H. Vanrenen's br aus g Shah II, 2nd Mr. Bevan Pitman's g a g DeLuze. Class a good one.

Class VI.—Hacks, ridden by men. 1st Mr. D. H. Vanrenen's b aus g Valiant, 2nd Captain Pennington's blk aus g Cygnet, 3rd Mr. Hume-Kelly's ch a g Paddy. An indifferent class. Majority wanting in manners

Class VII.—Hacks, ridden by ladies. 1st Mr. Bevan Pitman's g aus m Rose, 2nd Mr. D. H. Vanrenen's b aus g Valiant, 3rd Mrs. Humfrey's b cb g Jack-a-Dandy. Class very good.

Class VIII.—Children's Ponies. 1st Master Sackville Gwynne's ch cb h Rufus, 2nd Miss Lucy Chapman's br cb g Bulbul. An excellent class.

Class IX.—Jumping. Horses over 14-2. 1st Mr. V. A. Keighley's ch aus g The Marquis, 2nd Mr. J. J. Ouseley's b aus g Spion Kop. A poor exhibition of jumping.

Class X.—Jumping. Ponies under 14-2. 1st Mr Gracey's ch a g Dauntless, 2nd Captain. H. O. S. Cadogan's d aus m Shoji. Jumping much better than that of the horses.

In Class XI, for Hill-bred ponies, there was only one entry. Mr. Clifford Batten's The Mighty Atom, a very powerful and handsome grey, standing about 12-1, had a walk over for first prize.

THE DOGS.

The Dog Section was under the rules of the Northern India Kennel Association which, I think, accounted for the grand quality if not quantity of the animals shown. The day has past for Bumblepuppy shows, as none of the owners of good kennels would think of wasting their time and tiring their dogs at such child's play. Perhaps Simla will make a note of this when their next annual show comes on. The following donned the ermine and, as I have not yet heard of a single complaint, evidently did their duty well:—Lieutenant-Colonel Rennie, Greyhounds, Rampur and Kangaroo hounds, Borzois, Variety large, Braces, and Soldiers' Dogs. Major Gwynne, all the Foxterrier Classes, smooth and wire-haired, Airedales, Dachshunds. Captain Rudd, Irish terriers. Rev. J. P. Meik Great Danes, Bullterriers, and Eastern dogs. Mr. Clifford Batten Cockers and Spaniels other than Cockers and Toys. Sergeant Miles, Foxhounds, St. Bernards, Retrievers, Setters, Pointers, Variety small and Puppies other than Foxterriers. Mrs D'ffolliott Powell, Irish terriers.

Greyhounds, Borzois, Rampur and Kangaroo Hounds.—Not a strong class, headed by Jind Newcastle Sailor, a Borzoi, the son of Ch. Velsk, a nice dog but miserably thin, next came Black Prince, a Greyhound with fair legs and brisket, rather lucky to get above White Brilliant, a better boned Greyhound, standing well on his legs, but not a nice mover.

Foxhounds.—Won by a very powerful and exceptionally well boned puppy, Rajah, this dog also came second in the mixed puppy class.

Great Danes.—In spite of the inducement of a Special, this class did not fill, so the bowl was withheld to be presented later on at another show, and the first prize was given to Kader Venom, a promising bitch puppy, just over the year, with good legs and hindquarters, beating her mother Kader Viperine, a typical specimen, but too small.

St. Bernards and Retrievers.—Won easily by a Labrador Retriever, Glanbrane Rock, followed by a St. Bernard, Jind Leo the Great, a very fine and large dog, put down in the best condition of any dog I have yet seen that has lived for any length of time in those kennels. The entries for Retrievers being good it was decided to form an extra class for this breed only. Here again Glanbrane Rock had it all his own way, as he is certainly the best retriever in India, with excellent quality all round, he also won Major Gwynne's Special for wavy retrievers, the Northern India Kennel Association Special open class, and obtained one win towards their Championship Max, a flat coated specimen, took the second prize, he is above the average of retrievers as seen in this country.

Setters and Pointers.—This was a very weak class, only two setters, one a pup, only five months old, and a very small and indifferent pointer. Practically a walk over for Ambari Don, a setter which, if it had more feather and flesh enough, might make a good Gordon. Don was lucky enough to secure a handsome Special presented by the Maharajah of Jind.

Cockers.—Half the entries in this class were dogs nearer forty than twenty-five pounds and would have fared better in the class for "Other than Crockers." A black dog, named Robin Adair, would, I feel sure, have been noticed as a Field Spaniel, as a Cocker he was quickly dismissed. A pretty little black bitch, Rock Girl came first, she seemed full of life and go, so characteristic with the breed, good tail carriage, and nicely placed feet, and if she possessed a little more bone would be a real flyer. She also secured an Northern India Kennel Association Championship Certificate, and with her kennel companion Rock Boy won the braces. Rawdon Sandboy was second, he is a nicely shaped lemon roan with plenty of bone and the right size, but a very bad shower, appearing very dull and listless in the ring, and his sleepy eyes reminded one too much of the toy species. The third, Rock Queen, is rather on the big side about thirty pounds, she has a nice head and body and her tail action is good, she is better boned, but lacks the expression of Girl.

Spaniels—Other than Cockers and Toys.—Fair in quantity but vile in quality. A run away for Dick, a nice black, good in bone but lacking in feather. The second prize was withheld, and it is a question whether a third should have been given to a black with white feet.

Fox terriers.—The open class for smooth dogs, was full of quality, with Baby Huntsman leading, one of the very best terriers in India and certainly could hold his own at home, a most classy head, good bone, and straight legs. He also won in the Soldiers' Class, and came second with Cap-a-Pie in the braces. A most promising puppy with good head and bone, and one that should come to the front, if he does not get too big, named Tyrant came second, closely followed by his kennel companion Isaac, one of Major Impey's breeding. In the Limit Class these two dogs were first and second. Cap-a-Pie, entered in catalogue as date of birth unknown, was born 15th April 1901 (this may interest her owner), was by far the most classy bitch in the Show, she is the right size, good in head and ears with nice body and feet, and easily secured premier honours in the open smooth bitches, second was given to Snow Flake, a bitch full of breeding, she also secured a second in the Limit Class, and a third in the Novice. In the Limit bitches Karari Natitia headed the list, she is a typical terrier in every way, the third in this class, Partney Venie, is also a very nice bitch. In the Puppy Class, smooths and wires were mixed, and a grand lot of promising youngsters they were. In the open wire-haired dogs, Don't-go-Bang was first, but he has fallen off since he won his Challenge Certificate at the Fox terrier Show at Cheltenham in November 1901; Dusky Member and Carlo, both good terriers sired by the same dog Member's Ticket, ran each other very closely, the former just getting into second place, this dog also won the Northern India Kennel Association Limit Special, while in the Limit dogs and bitches, he was first, again followed by Carlo, with Dusky Kitty third. The Open wired haired bitches were headed by Wellingbro' Bloom, second Dusky Tattler, both good specimens from the same kennel, and both sired by a Champion dog. In the next class, Novice wire hairs, there was a great falling off, and the judge wisely decided to withhold the prize.

Irish terriers also were weak in quantity and quality, the winner, Jind Collin, was a good all-round dog, bar the ears, which were badly carried. Bullterriers were also poor, Ambari D. Turk, a powerful dog with bad ears was first, followed by Ambari Bordesley Prince, brindle marked on one eye and over one ear. Airedales were a strong class, the red being given to Rock Ferry Wrangler, a big dog with plenty of bone, his only fault seemed a ragged coat, with a bad, or I should say, unpleasing colour, with this changed he would make a certain winner in the hottest company. Karari Gladiator, second, will in time be a typical Airedale, he has a nice long head, good coat and colouring. Third was secured by another good one, a bitch, Gipsy Consort. The difficulty of judging mixed sexes was here apparent, the lady having to take the back seat.

In Dachshunds, last year's winner, Kader Preifrau (a descendent of Unser Fritz and the great German dog Schlupfer) again headed the list, she is a bitch of much quality and has improved wonderfully, being more furnished, let down in front, and stands true, which is a rare thing as the breed now runs. Her colouring is a silver dapple the only one I have ever seen in India, with the exception of her late consort Tiger Tippoo. Ben was rather lucky in securing second honours, as he is only a puppy with at present too straight legs.

The Variety large, was a poor class, a Russian Poodle, Jind Czar, in good condition winning easily. The variety small, was a strong class, headed by a grand little black Pekinese, Glanbrane Lung, weighing under ten pounds, and one of the very best outside the Chinese Empire. Lung also won the Northern India Kennel Association Novice Special, Major Gwynne's Special for best Pekinese under ten pounds, and the Special presented by Messrs. Bechtler and Company, for the best dog owned by a lady. Jind Black Raven, a good specimen of a Schipperke, stepped into second place. This is a breed I should like to see become more popular, as they are sharp little house dogs, and splendid ratters. Jind San Toy, a Japanese, in grand coat, was third.

The Class for Eastern Dogs, was so poor that only a second prize was given to an indifferent Chow, the Puppy Class for all breeds, except Foxterriers, was strong in quantity but lacked quality, the two prize winners were the only ones worth noticing, the first a Retriever sired by Glanbrane Rock, called Glanbrane Punch, is a promising youngster, the second, Rajah, a Foxhound, and a winner in Class 2.

In Soldiers' Dogs, large variety, Colour-Sergeant Moore's Collie Whisky won. As I did not see this dog, I cannot comment upon him, but was told he was a nice one. The Small Variety Class was evidently meant as a little bit of sugar for the bird, as Sergeant Miles' Baby Huntsman was placed first, followed by a passable pug owned by Sergeant Hall, and placed above such dogs as Cap-a-Pie and Rawdon Sandboy, both belonging to Sergeant Miles.

In the Brace Class, twelve separate pairs entered, Major William Dawson's merry little cockers taking the red. Rock Girl has already been commented upon in her class. Rock Boy has his good points, but is not quite to my style of liking, he is well boned, but his expression is marred by being slightly underhung, and having lightish eyes, he is also a little too long and low, still he has the liveliness of his breed, and made a pretty pair with his companion Rock Girl. Second came Baby Huntsman and Cap-a Pie, both previous winners in the Foxterrier classes. Wellingbro Bloom and Wellingbro Gambler secured third place for their sporting owner, Mrs. D'ffolliott Powell, who, I am sorry to say, we are losing from India for some time, still her kennel is not to be broken up, as has been stated, but will remain at Ajmere.

THE BEST OILS FOR MOTOR CARS.

Wilburine for cylinders ... Rs. 6-8 per gallon Tin. | Valvoline for Bearings, etc. ... Rs. 5-0 per gallon Tin.

Extract from the "Autocar."

LUBRICATING OILS.—[2422]—It may be instructive to your numerous readers to have the experiences of a motor car experimentalist on the behaviour of lubricating oils for motor work. In the first onset I tried various sorts of oils, all of which left deposits of carbon and gumming matter in the cylinders and valves. These deposits are serious drawbacks, not only to the working of the pistons and valves, but also interfere with the proper sparking at the ignition plugs. I then tried the Valvoline Oil Co.'s oils, using "Wilburine" for the cylinders and "Valvoline" for the bearings, etc.; these being quite pure mineral oils, no deposits either of carbon or gumming matter were left. Every time the pistons, etc., have been examined they were quite bright, clean and well lubricated. The valves also keep in good condition and require very little regrinding. I have been quite free from sparking troubles since using the above lubricants. Any dust that alights on the working parts is easily wiped off, whereas with other oils dirt stuck fast through gumming.

Very much smaller quantities of these oils ("Wilburine" and "Valvoline") about one-third to one-quarter, are required, which more than balances the extra first cost. The wearing surfaces are besides in a magnificent condition. These advantages —viz., high-class lubrication, freedom from deposit in cylinders, gum in bearings, absence of sparking troubles, are too important to be neglected by any motorist.

There is a tendency to use various greases, instead of oils. Engineers have over and over again proved that greases give much greater frictional losses than oils; with motor car engines and bearings the lubricant that gives the least possible friction is the best.

I have referred to the advantages the motorist gets. I will mention another advantage these oils have to those whom the motorist passes, viz., the absence of the fried-fish-shop smell so often noted. Several persons have been very much struck by the absence of smell: even when the car has been standing for some time with the engines running, no trace of offensive odour has been apparent to the bystanders.

I mention these experiences, having no interest in the Valvoline Oil Co., that others may be benefited and save themselves trouble and their neighbours some annoyance.

RUDIMENTARY STRUCTURES IN THE HORSE.

WITH the reams and reams of paper that have been used in writing on the structure of the horse it might well have been imagined that we know everything that it is possible to know regarding the anatomy of the noble quadruped, as it is the fashion to call it in sporting literature. Recent observations and discoveries have, however, tended to show that this is really very far from being the case; and that much still remains to be learnt regarding the occurrence and nature of certain remarkable rudimentary features occasionally met with in the domesticated horse,—more especially, be it noted, in thoroughbreds and Arabs.

The first of these discoveries, which was brought some little time ago to the notice of the Linnean Society by Dr. Ridewood and others, tends to show that the name "Bucephalus" ("ox-headed"), applied to the famous charger of Alexander the Great was not a mere fancy title, but was given owing to the fact that this animal really was a "horned horse."

Of the three specimens demonstrating the undoubted existence of such horned horses exhibited before the Linnean Society, the first was part of the frontal region of the skull of a horse whose history has now unfortunately been lost. This frontlet shows a pair of small bony projections, less than an inch in length, occupying the same relative positions as the horn-cores of an antilope, or the antler pedicles of a deer, and which can scarcely be regarded as anything else than rudimentary horns or antlers. Precisely similar projections occur on the foreheads of a couple of chestnut thoroughbreds in the possession of Mr. H. Day, the well-known breeder. These two horses, "The Swamper" and "Domain," are nearly related to one another, so that their horns are doubtless inherited features.

The remarkable thing is that three specimens of horned horses should have come under the notice of scientific men almost simultaneously; and that, with the exception of "Bucephalus," no other instances of a similar "freak" have, so far as we are aware, been recorded. It is, however, impossible to believe that these three cases are the only instances of horses with horns; and may-be some of our readers can furnish other examples. If they should be able to do so, it would be important to record the breed, and if possible the pedigree of the horse or horses referred to. Of the three modern horses with horns at present known, two, as already mentioned, are thoroughbreds; while there is nothing to show that the third may not also have been either a thoroughbred or an Arab. Further reference to this point will be made in the sequel.

The occurrence of these rudimentary horns naturally suggests, at first sight, that they are vestiges of structures which were functional and well developed at one epoch of the horse's ancestry. The remarkable thing about the matter is, however, that none of the ancestors of the horse,—all the leading types of which are now thoroughly well known—were horned animals. Accordingly, it looks as though the three abovementioned instances were pure "sports" or "freaks;" but, on the other hand, it is very remarkable that in two of these instances the phenomenon has originated independently, and yet that the structures are precisely similar. If other instances were to be put on record, as we think they will, the phenomenon would be still more noteworthy and still more suggestive of being hereditary.

We pass on to notice a second occasional structural peculiarity in the horse which is certainly of a vestigial nature. All our sporting readers are doubtless well acquainted with the fact that all deer, and certain antelopes, such as the Indian black buck, are furnished with a gland on each side of the face a short distance below and in front of the eye. This facial gland, or "larmier," is probably connected with the sexual function, and in some species, like the black buck, can be turned almost completely inside-out during periods of excitement. It always rests in a special hollow of the skull—the preorbital cavity; the base of this hollow in some cases, as in the deer tribe, freely communicating with the nose-chamber, while in other instances its inner wall is solid. No trace of such a larmier, or if the cavity for its reception, normally exists in the domesticated horse of Europe, nor indeed have any of the existing members of the horse tribe a face-gland. In the extinct three-toed hipparions of the Pliocene strata of the northern hemisphere, which were evidently nearly related to the ancestors of the horse, if indeed they themselves were not the actual ancestors, the skull shows, however, a large and deep preorbital cavity, which in life evidently contained a functional face-gland. Till recently it has been supposed that no trace of such a preorbital cavity existed in the domesticlated horse. Mr. Lydekker has, however, domesticated the presence of a shallow rudiment of this cavity in the skull of a horse from India (perhaps an Arab or a thoroughbred) presented to the British Museum many years ago by the late Mr. Brian Hodgson. He has also shown that a still fainter rudiment of this cavity exists in the skull of the thoroughbred "Bend-Or;" while an extremely slight trace of it appears to be visible in the skull of the thoroughbred mare "Corrie-Roy" formerly owned by the late Sir Blundell Maple.

On the other hand, ordinary European horse-skulls, inclusive of fossil ones from the superficial formations of England and the Continent, show no trace whatever of a face-gland cavity.

This, however, is by no means all, for a correspondent has informed Mr. Lydekker that he once owned a horse—believed to have been an Argentine —, in which there was a distant depression in the skin below each eye, in the position of the face-gland, although no aperture was present. More important still is the information supplied by Mr. Wilfred Blunt, the celebrated breeder of Arabs, to the effect that an Arab mare formerly in his stud had a distinct functional face-gland on one side of her head. The portrait of this mare was painted, but unfortunately not from the side with the face-gland, which was then regarded as a mere unsightly blemish!

This evidence points strongly to the conclusion that some at least of our modern horses are descended from species in which functional face-glands were present. Possibly the supposed Argentine may trace its descent to the horses which apparently survived in parts of South America at the time of the Spanish Conquest, and which may themselves have been the descendants of certain extinct Argentine horses known to have been provided with large face-glands. This, however, is a mere conjecture.

On the other hand, with the exception of the aforesaid Argentine, all the horses with vestiges of the face-gland at present known are either Arabs, thoroughbreds, or from India. Consequently, this tends to confirm the view which has been arrived at from other evidence that Arabs and thoroughbreds are descended from a species distinct from the one which gave rise to the ordinary horses of Europe. Mr. Lydekker has suggested that the ancestor of the Arab and the thoroughbred may have been the fossil Equus Sivalensis of India, which is known to show a very distinct rudiment of the face-gland. A further suggestion is that it may be from this stock that the "horned horses" are derived, two of which are known to be thoroughbreds. There is at present, however, no evidence to show that the Siwalik horse ever had rudiments of horns, but then we are acquainted with only two or three skulls of that species.

To substantiate or disprove Mr. Lydekker's theory that the thoroughbred and the Arab are the only domesticated horses that retain occasional traces of the ancestral face-glands, further evidence is essential. If any readers of The Indian Field should be acquainted with horses showing external traces of the face-gland, they are invited to communicute their information to the Editor. It may be added that skulls of Arabs or thoroughbeds would be gratefully received at the Natural History Museum, South Kensington.

In conclusion, one other point in connection with vestigiary structures in the horse may be briefly mentioned. Every body, it may be presumed, is aware that the "chestnuts" or "callosities" on the limbs of the horse must be vestigial remains of structures which were once functional. At the recent meeting of the British Association held at Cambridge, Professor Cosseir Ewart definitely announced that these structures are rudiments of food-pads. Apparently he must have been unaware (or, it may be presumed, that he would at least have had the courtesy to allude to it) that Mr. Lydekker has proposed an entirely different theory, namely, that the "chestnuts" represent limb-glands, comparable to those of deer. To recapitulate the very strong evidence in favour of Mr. Lydekker's view would exceed the limits of our space. We may refer, however, to one statement which, if true, is practically conclusion as to the truth of Mr. Lydekker's throry. The statement in question is to the effect that if one of the callosities of a horse be pared down and the finger dipped in the exuding secretion and then held to any horse's nose, the animal will follow. Can any of our readers confirm this? The experiment, although apparently easy, should not be undertaken rashly, as we believe, it may cause injury to the horse; but in some cases of excessive growth it is advisable that the "chestnuts" should be pared.

Sporting Notes.

WE remind our readers of the approach of certain important dates connected with the Calcutta Races, details of which will be found in the usual place.

Prince Lyon, the last Colombo Governor's Cup winner, is reported to be a probable entrant for some of the big races at the Calcutta Races.

The Tollygunge Club hold their fourth Gymkhana on Saturday the 29th instant, when an attractive programme of six events will be discussed.

Mr. W. Bell-Irving, who is now en route for Calcutta, had hard luck with Metalwing shortly before he left home. The horse showed a lot of temper at the last meeting his owner took him to, and in a race which was considered good goods for him he bucked his jockey off at the starting post, bolted and ran himself to a standstill.

Political Europe is much tumbled up and down in its mind about the spread of the Mongolian race, foreboding something dreadful from the "yellow peril." Ceylon, with more reason, is indulging in a scare about the multiplication of jungly hatties, which may be styled peritis pachydermi. Recent accounts from the island describe nightly aids upon fruit gardens, and what with this bold behaviour, the trampling on coffee and general crops down South, squetching of belated coolies and derailing of trains in Assam, mofussilites would be thankful for an outbreak of plague, enteric, dengue fever or murrain of some sort to thin the ranks of these playful but ponderous creatures. Should Providence not intervene in some such manner there'll have to be a drive or drives to rid the afflicted district of this pest, like that which had to be resorted to nigh eighty years since in the island colony.

It would seem incredible, were it not absolutely true, that after the stampede in the camp near Southampton had ruined permanently, or for a time, twelve hundred horses, collected for the manœuvring army, and all, or most, of them highly trained animals, an almost identical disaster should have occurred in Ireland. The stampede affected a smaller number of animals, but the percentage of damage and loss was nearly as great. It seems to have been forgotten that an almost similar disaster occurred some twelve years ago at Colchester, where the horses of an entire regiment were attacked with panic in the night, wrenched up their steel picket pegs, and with these flying loose at the end of ropes, lamed each other and themselves by hundreds. The fact is that "sleeping out" is just as strange to ordinary cavalry horses as it is to men. The animals are used to sleep every night in comfortable barrack stables, where they neither hear nor see anything different one night from the experience of all other nights. Then they find themselves picketed, out of doors, without the familiar walls and racks, cold, perhaps with the rain falling on them, and with all kinds of strange sights, sounds, and smells around them. The whole lot are nervous and fidgety, and at the same time not tired out, as they would be on a campaign, but full of condition. The result is that, being highly sensitive animals, addicted to panic naturally, their overstrung nerves give way at some "last straw" of noise or sound, and the whole body of horses stampedes.

for poultry. Five hundred dollars in prizes was offered for best estimates or guesses as to the number of feathers on a hen. The first prize was 100 dollars. Thousands of guesses were received, including some very amusing ones. One person, who was probably looking for some "catch" scheme, estimated "none at all." Many estimates in the hundreds of thousands were received, several in millions, the highest estimate being 600,060,017. The correct number was found to be 8,120. The company says: "We feel a pardonable pride in having contributed to poultry science an item of information actually new."

A polo tournament will be held at Mhow, opening on the 7th November. The following teams are probable entrants:—Kishengarh, Bhopal Imperial Service Lancers, Poona Horse, Central India Horse, Seaforth Highlanders, 10th Hussars, and Mhow Gymkhana.

The Simla Polo Tournament was concluded at Annandale on the 13th instant, when the final tie was played off. The game was a most exciting one and was hard fought throughout. The teams were:—Red Major Maxwell, Major Smith (12th Cavalry), Captain Forrester and Lord Frederick Blackwood. White: Major Poynter, Captains Brooke, Popham and Jones-Mortimer. White drew first blood, Mortimer-Jones scoring in the first chukker; the Reds equalised in the second period. The close of third period saw the Whites once more ahead but the Reds again equalised. Two extra three-minute chukkers were played without result. Another two periods were played, but neither team scored, and it was not till a fifth extra chukker had been played that a definite result was arrived at, Forrester putting through for the White, who thus won by 3 goals to 2. Lady Ampthill presented a silver cup to each member of the victorious team.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes:—If the Athletic Sports only proved a partial success, the Annual Mounted Sports, which were held on the following days, were perhaps the most successful ever organised by the Gymkhana, both in regard to the attractiveness of the programme and the number of entries for each event. In spite of the sultry weather the attendance on each of the days of the mounted sports was very good, in marked contrast to that at the Athletic Sports. The first event on the programme on the opening day, the Jumping competition for horses, drew a larger number of entries than I have ever known for this event and, as a result, we were treated to a higher order of jumping than is usually the case. The performances of the three placed horses owned, respectively, by Messrs. J. H. Symington, J. D. Johnston and D. N. Graham were much above the average. The Tent-Pegging competition for ponies was won by Mr. J. St. J. Graham, who throughout the monsoon season has been hard to beat in this event. Colonel H. W. Boyd, Captain J. H. M. Davie and Mr. T. D. Moore all came out level in regard to points, so were given another run to decide which of them should be placed second and third. Mr. Moore and Colonel Boyd eventually qualified for second and third places respectively. The Tent-Pegging for horses was splendidly contested, nearly all the riders taking their pegs in the first run. Mr. J. St. J. Graham and Mr. T. D. Moore tied for points, and in a third run the judge's verdict was given to Mr. Moore; Mr. T. Barraclough was third. The Polo Ball Race was decided in three heats, Captain Davie and Messrs. P. F. Fischer and D. N. Graham meeting in the final, which resulted in an easy win for the first named. The form shown in this event was not up to a very high standard. The Horse Scurry Handicap was the principal event of the first afternoon and resulted in a win for Mr. Symington's Jane, ridden by Mr. D. N. Graham, with Mr. J. St. J. Graham's Greyleg and Mr. N. Rommel's The Tyke, both ridden by owners, second and third respectively. Mr. Graham rode with great judgment and won comfortably by two clear lengths. The Pre-Raphaelite only interested the competitors, and the Lloyd-Lindsay competition, which was won by the Nondescripts, composed of Messrs. T. D. Moore, H. E. John, P. F. Fischer and Captain Davie, concluded the afternoon's sport. The latter event excited a good deal of interest and the winners have to be congratulated on their riding and shooting, which was superior to a marked degree over that of the other four teams that competed. Although Thursday's programme was not quite such a long one as that of Wednesday, most of the events were watched with interest. The Jumping competition for ponies was a gift to Mr. L. H. Greig's Rajah, and the reputation of this pony as a lepper accounted for only four of the eight ponies originally entered competing for the event. The most interesting event of the afternoon was the Tent-Pegging by sections of four, for which four teams entered, but only three competed. The Fort Team, consisting of Messrs. F. A. Reddie, T. Barraclough, S. M. McCausland and R. F. R. Cooke, proved to be the better combination and were awarded first place with 28 points. Mr. D. N. Graham won the "V. C." Race, which was decided in two heats and a final. The Pony Scurry was won by Mr. Fischer's Heera, owner up, after a good race, Mr. Bruce's Sarah, Mr. Alston up, and Mr. S. McCausland's Vionel, owner up, being second and third. Mr. T. D. Moore, nominated by Mrs. G. H. McCausland, won the Needle and Thread Race, which was amusing, but the last event on the programme, the Postillion Race, was a monotonous affair and had to be run off in four heats and a final, which was won by Mr. D. N. Graham with Mr. L. Barraclough second.

Saturday was given up as an extra day to the mounted sports but I am afraid the few people who turned up to witness the afternoon's proceedings took their pleasures rather sadly. Whether the great heat that had prevailed during the week made the usual competitors disinclined for further exertion or the Poona Ninth Extra Meeting offered superior attractions it is difficult to say, but one thing is certain and that is the entries were very poor, while the attendance was not much better. One event, the Pony Hurdles, fell through altogether, and most of the other events on the card filled badly. Mr. D. Graham, who was in great form during the three days, won two of the events and the Committee had no difficulty in selecting him for the Aggregate Cup. Next year the Committee will not make the mistake of commencing the Athletic and Mounted Sports at such an early hour as 3-30. Had it been arranged to begin an hour later the attendance would have been much better and it would not have been necessary to have such a long interval between the events, especially in the Mounted Sports.

The cricket match between the Bombay Gymkhana and the Baronet C. C. which was to have been played on Saturday had to be cancelled owing to the Gymkhana being unable to raise a team. This fixture was the last of the monsoon season fixtures.

We publish to-day the prospectus of the Dacca Polo Tournament which will be held from the 9th to 14th January.

The Ceylon Turf Club have fixed the dates of the Monsoon and August Meetings for 1905. The former will be held on the 27th, 29th and 31st May and the latter on the 5th, 8th, 10th and 12th August.

A letter from Messrs. Westley Richards & Co. is published in our Correspondence columns in conjunction with an exhaustive report by Mr. P. Easte, M. R. C. V. S., on the comparative effects of the "Capped" and "Copper-tubed bullets" upon animal tissue, both hard and soft, which appears in a letter further on. Indian sportsmen who have watched the steady rise in popularity of Messrs. W. R. & Co.'s new patent "Solid Capped Expanding Bullet" will peruse these communications with interest and profit.

Messrs. Arlington and Co., the old established jewellers of Calcutta, remind us that the catalogue season is in with a copy of the latest edition of theirs, an improvement on those of bygone years and a most enticing thing to go through. Everybody will find something therein which they would like to possess; our better halves, the mere male thing, the ordinary householder, the sportsman, in short all sorts and conditions of men are specially catered for.

Our Poona Correspondent writes:—So heavy was the rain up to the day of the 9th Extra Meeting that there was quite an anxiety as to the possibility of a postponement. However, it cleared up in ample time and the going was admirable, and the times showed clearly that the Poona course fully justified its reputation of being the quickest drying track in India, a tribute to its excellent drainage. Proceedings opened with the Auction Stakes, a "seller" for 14-hand Arabs, over ½ a mile, and though there were three better favorites the long, backed and stupidly-named Sweetlips, belonging to that astute turfite, Mr. S. A. Wahed, won quite comfortably and sufficiently impressed Ramshaw into capturing him at the absurdly small sum of Rs. 600, which trivial sum he should speedily recover.

The Sydney Plate, a high weight handicap for 14-2, tempted some useful ones. The Armenian owner, Mr. Artin Essayie, owner of that excellent Arab lilliput, Little Joker, recently launched out into a new line by becoming the owner of the useful pony Koko, which was installed favorite at 6 to 4, with Min, Indabba and Olga next in request. But Mr. Galstaun's blood pony, Gun Metal, though little fancied, proved in Robinson's hands too much for the favored opposition and was followed home by Ramshaw's promising filly, Wakefull, steered by young Barrett, with the favorite no nearer than third.

Following this came a mile handicap for maiden Arabs in which Talisman, having all the advantage of Robinson's services, was not in demand, but the honest pony Moreed, excellently ridden by A. Hoyt, added one more win to his victories.

A 5-furlong handicap for horses afforded Mr. Cursetjee one more opportunity of completely mystifying the talent, who attempted to solve the mystery by selecting Roscommon with Springlock as the saving clause, and the latter was distinctly fancied by his clever stable. But the star of the Aga's stable is clearly in the ascendant, and Carreewick, most excellently ridden, raced neck and neck up the straight with Springlock, and, just lasting out the better, won by a neck, a good performance on little Kamad's part.

Then came a horse Welter Handicap for animals that had not won a thousand rupees since the 1st April 1902, and it was considered all over bar the shouting for old Dumbell, despite his 12st. 12lb. burden. But the promising young G.R. on the favorite made the time-honoured error of laying out of his ground, and Mumford making hay while the sun shone, shoved along and scrambled home by four lengths before he could be overtaken. Mr. Pike followed this gift of fortune by securing a 6-furlong handicap for 14-hand Arabs with his handsome pony Bandit II, whose win last week, after a series of disappointments, seems to have done him good, and the handicapper certainly treated him with no undue severity with 6st. 10lbs. Jumping off like a rabbit he was never headed and stalling off challenges by Grey Fox and Zuriff, he won, steered by Kamad, in the surprisingly good time of 1-24⅗ if the official timester's clock made no mistake. But it reads suspiciously good on what was certainly not exceptionally flying going.

Mr. Charles Harding, the eminent maker of books, appears to be a most versatile genius in the sporting line and evidently a bad customer to "take on," unless you happen to be a bit—and a good bit—above the happy mean. Last year an ingenuous amateur, who fancied himself above a bit at crouching over the handle of a racing bicycle and thought he had a soft thing on, got very speedily enlightened to the contrary after a lap or two on the road encircling the race-course. This year Mr. Youd having natatory ambitions offered in the fulness of pride to concede Mr. Charles Harding 200 yards over a measured mile in the waters of the flowing (not to say slightly ordoriferous) Moola river from the Connaught Boathouse to Holkar's Bridge. Mr. Youd was reported to fancy himself and to be prepared to back his fancy and excitement ran high. At the appointed hour of 7-30 A.M. Mr. Harding appeared on the starting punt, but his opponent was "conspicuous by his absence," and after granting a quarter of an hour's law the referee awarded the contest to the distinguished layer of extravagant odds, who however most sportingly anxious not to disappoint his numerous admirers did a dive and swam the entire course without a quiver, to the apparent disappointment of the numerous rescue parties on the look-out for jetsam and flotsam in the person of C. H.

Athletic Notes.

A full report of the annual Athletic Meeting of the Bombay Gymkhana appears further on. We regret that, owing to the misreading of our telegram last week, we credited Mr. F. G. Siddons with the half mile; this was a mistake, it was the quarter mile he won, while his brother, A. B., ran a good second in the 100 yards, beating the veteran Percy Fischer by inches. The latter won the 150 yards Handicap with 5 yards, beating the scratch man by less than a foot.

Entries for the Gaikwar's Motor Cup, run under the auspices of the Motor Union of Western India, close on the 1st December. The proposed course is from Mhow to Bombay—400 miles, and the road is reported to be in excellent condition. Among entrants from Calcutta will be Mr. A. A. Bachmann, the well-known old time cyclist and winner of many championships.

The Maharaj Kumar Tagore has kindly offered a trophy to be competed for under the auspices of the Automobile Association of Bengal, the terms of which will appear later on. The Special Committee elected to formulate the term of the competition consist of Messrs. E. J. Oakley, F. Marsh and J. H. H. Rolfe. It is proposed to make the competition an open one, to eliminate the question of speed, and the award solely to be one of merit and reliability. The run to be one of a distance of some 150 to 200 miles only. The trial being similar to that to be held in the Bombay Presidency—the date to be fixed as soon after this event as possible, say, the middle of January.

1. The object being to bring prominently before the Indian public the fact that motor-cars have been brought to such a stage of perfection that they are eminently suitable for use in India, more especially for district work.

2. To induce tourists visiting this country to bring their cars with them, and thus take advantage of the good roads and perfect weather which are invariably assured to the traveller between the months of October and March.

3. To call the attention of manufacturers in Europe and elsewhere to the wants of India in the matter of motor-cars. The competition will be for two days only. Date, distance and route to be fixed hereafter by the Committee. Any sort of car will be allowed to compete, and the most successful car will be that obtaining the largest total number of marks for the different points stipulated for. The rules and regulations will be formulated as soon as the Committee are assured that this form of competition will meet with sufficient encouragement and the number of entries justify the Committee in concluding that the competition will meet with support. It is therefore requested that all owners of cars be good enough to write as soon as possible to the Honorary Secretary intimating their willingness to enter their cars. The entries will close on the 1st December. Each car competing will pay an entrance fee of Rs. 32. Replies should be sent to J. H. H. Rolfe, Honorary Secretary, Automobile Association of Bengal, 57, Park Street, Calcutta.

The annual All India Boxing Tournaments will take place at the Central Gymnasium, Secunderabad, commencing on the 3rd January 1905. There will be the usual Feather, Light, Middle, and Heavy-weight competitions.

The Harris Football Tournament concluded at Poona on the 13th instant. But three teams entered this year. In the first round the 93rd Highlanders beat the East Lancashires by two goals to nil, and then met and defeated the Warwickshires in the final by a goal to nil.

The final game in the Murree Hockey Tournament was played at Murree on the 6th instant. The competing teams were the 60th Rifles and the North Stafford, and a very interesting match resulted in a win for the Rifles by 4 goals to nil. The first half was very even and the interval arrived with no score, but on changing ends the Rifles had rather the best of matters and put on four goals. The cup and medals were presented to the winners by Mrs. Penno.

The Amateur Golf Championship of India and the East will be held in Calcutta from 31st December 1904 to 2nd January 1905. Play will take place over the Tollygunge Club links. The Asian Challenge Bowl Open Handicap will be played for at Barrackpore between the 24th and 27th December. While Visitors vs. Calcutta matches will be arranged during championship week.

This is indeed an iconoclastic age in the matter of athletic records, and no form of sport has suffered from it more than the Royal and Ancient Game of Golf, and that, too, at St. Andrew's itself, the very high place of the craft. At this year's autumn meeting on the 28th ultimo the medal record has gone again, broken by two strokes and reduced to 74 by the ex-Cantab, Mr. Norman Hunter, one of the most slashing of the younger school of long drivers, and this, too, after it had already been broken by Mr. A. G. Barry, who must be just about the youngest member of the Royal and Ancient Club with a splendid round of 75, 39 out and 36 in. Mr. Hunter's figures, especially for the second half round are so remarkable that they are worth giving in full as follows :—

His partner, the Hon'ble Osmond Scott was two strokes better than this going out, but dropped three coming in, and in addition lost a point by a 5 being incorrectly registered instead of a 4 at one hole, but for which he would have tied with Mr. Barry. Mr. Edward Blackwell occupied fourth place with 78, and this gave him the George Glennie aggregate medal, which for the past three years has fallen to Mr. Maxwell, with a total of 82 + 78 = 160.

It is good news that the Australians are definitely going to send a cricket team to England next year to endeavour to recover the famous ashes, and to hear that Mr. C. W. Alcock and the M. C. C. authorities have their fixture card already in hand. But against this the continued bad reports of Victor Trumper's health which renders him an unlikely starter, and the absence of Hugh Trumble, Darling, and Gregory, will very seriously diminish their chances of beating the full strength of England on a home wicket, and in the opinion of many of the best judges, an Australian eleven without Trumper will be uncommonly like the play of "Hamlet" without the Prince of Denmark. In any case, M. A. Noble, who will doubtless succeed Darling as Captain, seems likely, to have to fall back on the services of several players, such as C. McLeod and F. Eaver who were not oversuccessful on previous tours, to fill up with, unless the selection authorities can unearth not only some really first-class bowlers, but what seems to be even more requisite in Australian cricket just now, some dependable batsmen to follow the "stars," in the forthcoming Inter-State Matches. In any case Trumper will have all sportsmen's wishes for his complete recovery, if only in the selfish hope that some of them, at any rate, may be at home next summer to see him repeat his inimitable batting triumphs of the last Australian tour.

A sculling match for the championship and £500 aside between Geo. Towns, Champion Sculler and Jim Stanbury the exchampion, is on the tapis. It is proposed to hold the match, arrangements for which are proceeding apace, next Easter.

The Bantam-weight Championship of the world was decided at the National Sporting Club on the 18th instant, when Joe Bowker, England, beat Frankie Neil, America, in twenty rounds.

From the fifty-third Annual Report of the Western Assurance Co., we learn that the balance of Revenue Account, being the underwriting profit and interest received on investments, is £62,815 14s. 7d. This has been apportioned as follows :—Written off Investments to bring these to market value at 31st December, £3,750 7s. 3d. Written off Office Furniture Account, £2,053 7s. 9d. Applied to the payment of two half-yearly dividends at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, £24,465 11s. 6d. Added to Reserve Fund, £32,546 8s. 1d. Total, £62,815 14s. 7d.

The premium income of £735,652 1s. 5d. is £27,037 0s. 4d. greater than that of the preceding year, and the losses incurred are £672 3s. 2d. less than in 1902. The receipts from interest show a gain for the year of £2,193 7s. 6d. The total profit on the year's underwriting is £43,152 2s. 0d., being £10,281 11s. 11d. more than that realised in 1902, and £22,100 11s. 10d. in excess of that for 1901. Apportioning the expenses of the year to the Fire and Marine branches, respectively, according to the cost of the business of each, a profit is shown in the Fire Branch of £45,786 4s. 2d., and loss in the Marine Branch of £2,634 2s. 1d.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 30th September 1904.

OFFICIAL news from Tokio has been very scanty since I last wrote : but the intelligence concerning the Japanese doings at Port Arthur, coming from very serious sources, is all in the same strain and cannot be entirely put aside. According to this the besiegers have lightened their hold on the fortress during the past week and among other captures have taken a fort that commands an important water-supply. Whether any weight may be attached to the several statements that food is running short, that ammunition is giving out and that cholera has made its appearance, nobody knows. By the way, apropos of the German sympathy with Russia, a friend whose business took him last week to Pillau, a small port in Eastern Russia, told me a significant story. He saw three boilers of the kind used for torpedo boat destroyers and packages of fittings, labelled in Russian characters, and a German acquaintance to whom he made some remark on the subject made no pretence that these articles were bound anywhere but for Kronstadt. "Of course you English do the same for Japan," he said. I should mention that my friend is a naval architect learned in the equipment of war vessels, otherwise those boilers' purpose would perhaps have been denied. Tales of desertion and evasion of military obligations in Russia grow more frequent. Even officers are said to exhibit no keenness for service in Manchuria.

I have held my peace about Lord Dunraven's "Devolution" scheme as a political affair beyond the terms of my reference, but Mr. Wyndham's very tardy comment upon it has appeared at last and has given rise to all kinds of conjectures. Mr. Wyndham says the Government does not approve. Very good ; but why did he not say so sooner ! There is a growing impression that Somebody—Sir Antony McDonnell is freely named—gave Lord Dunraven to understand that the Government would regard with sympathetic interest the ventilation of his ideas, and that Mr. Wyndham's delay was due to official desire to see how the country would regard the scheme. The country having unanimously pronounced against it, officialdom throws Lord Dunraven & Co. overboard. Sir Antony, as you in India know, is a strong man and his Home Rule views are scarcely disguised ; he personally was all in favor of "Devolution" and is supposed to have thought himself strong enough to carry the Irish Secretary with him. I hear on good authority that when Sir Antony's term of office in Dublin expires it will not be renewed. You are quite welcome to have the gentleman back.

Lady Curzon's grave illness has of course delayed the Viceroy's return to India. Acute peritonitis is the malady, but surgeons do not operate for that, and the summons of certain specialists suggest appendicitis as well. The use of oxygen for days of itself shows the critical condition of the patient. The reports, however, grow more reassuring, and unless there be a relapse, there are now good hopes of Lady Curzon's recovery. Her relatives on the way from New York are informed of her progress by wireless telegraphy.

Mr. Martin Sutton's letter to the Times on the Financial position of the Royal Agricultural Society has created a sensation. It has of course been no secret among those interested in its work, that the fixed-site-for-the-show policy and the purchase of Park Royal have been a failure so far. The Acton site cost £28,000, which practically wiped out the reserve fund of £30,000 : the show of 1903 produced a loss of £23,000 and this year's a loss of £9,000 : moreover, the Society's premises are pretty heavily mortgaged. The case is a difficult one, but I fail to see that any good is done by members of Council who have resigned "crabbing" the Society's work as Mr. Sutton is doing. He disapproved the fixed site policy and resigned when it was adopted. Now he urges that the Society "cannot honestly hold another show" at Park Royal and would have the show abandoned altogether or, at most, converted into a show for horses and cattle which have won championships at county shows. The truth is Mr. Sutton's Jeremiad is too previous. The weather of 1903 was enough to ruin any outdoor show of any sort, and the most sanguine supporters of the new policy did not look for immediate success to follow so great a change. There be those who have heavily backed their belief that, given time and bold management, the Park Royal show will hold its own. After all, the R.A.S.E. is not a money-making concern.

The central tower of Canterbury Cathedral is in a serious condition ; the stones are decaying in the same fashion as the stones of Westminster Abbey were decaying a few years ago, crumbling and flaking away : and it is declared that the decaying stones must be replaced at once if the tower is to be saved. Other portions of the structure also show the same signs of age ; the roofs of the south transept and the western portion of the north aisle : also the stonework of the upper walls of the nave : the great window in the west gable is in danger, and some of the nave pinnacles are so far gone as to be dangerous. The central tower, "Bell Harry Tower," as it is called, dates from the end of the fifteenth century, so it cannot be regarded as ancient from the ecclesiastical architecture point of view. Our ancestors were not invariably happy in their choice of stone when building their grandest works. It was popularly supposed that the decay of the stones of Westminster—which was arrested by the application of some preparation—was the result of some disintegrating property in the polluted London atmosphere ; but the tower of Canterbury Cathedral breathes air pure enough, and we must conclude that some kinds of stone suffer from the weight of years. £14,000 is required to repair the Cathedral.

The representatives of the United Free and the Old Free (or "Wee") Churches met in Conference on Wednesday. The former came armed with a lengthy "Memorandum," the gist of which was a proposal for arbitration to determine how the property, accumulated before the Union of 1900, should be allotted between the Frees and Wees. The latter declined to consider the memorandum at all as being beyond the scope of the Conference. It was not a very promising start, but the meeting proceeded to discuss the temporary arrangements for working put forward by the Wees and considerable progress is reported. The proceedings were private. The "Memorandum" above referred to has been published : it serves to make clear how wide and how complex the property question is, and it hints not obscurely at the possibility of further litigation.

Those who are charged with the care of such matters predict that the unemployed problem in London this winter will reach a magnitude unknown for years. Whence no doubt the meeting of representatives of Boards of Guardians to consider what preparations should be made. The wisest proposition was that the Boards should amalgamate and purchase, each, the 50 acres allowed by law for establishing labour colonies so as to make one 400 acre colony. To this land unemployed, willing to work, should be sent with the object of cultivating at a fair wage and ultimately perhaps settling as tenants. Anything is better than the much advertised organisations to give free relief which brings thousands who prefer being unemployed, to London every winter from all parts of England.

London wants more playgrounds. There are any number of cheap clubs with fields in the outer suburbs, but to the boys who live within the radius these are little use, because they cannot afford the railway fare to go out there, and if they walk their Saturday afternoon is practically over before they arrive. There is more in the plea for accessible playgrounds than some of the advocates for them seem to see. It is want of definite occupation and amusement that produces the street loafer and hooligan : but where are playing sites to be found in the "Wen"? Perhaps more latitude might be given to Saturday afternoon cricketers in Hyde Park : cricket and football are, I suggest, at least as beneficial to the participants as the floods of foolish oratory which bring idle crowds together in the same place : even be it cricket with a soft ball as allowed in Kensington Gardens.

"The Golden Light" proved a Light that failed, if for failure one should not rather write "collapsed." I have been at a good many first nights now, and have seen some mixed receptions : but never (save at a certain suburban home when a popular mime came on drunk) have I heard such cries of "go off" from the gallery as one heard at the Savoy last night. The "gods" stood nearly three acts of the four, and then their patience gave way : the patience of the rest of the house was exhausted long before the curtain finally fell. I agreed with a lady who remarked on the way out that "such clothes were thrown away on such trash." "The Golden Light," you will remember, is the piece in which the heroine's gowns were to show her "moral progress." In the absence of any traceable moral progress I failed to appreciate the significance of Mrs. Brown Potter's dresses and hats though much impressed by their beauty and the lady's. The play is unmitigated trash. Mrs. Dane (Mrs. Brown Potter) married Mr. Dane a novelist (a most weird novelist !) who is entirely absorbed in his work. Mrs. Dane tries to win some of his attention, and, failing, starts flirting with Dane's cousin who is not unwilling. A friend of Dane turns up from India and warns Mrs. D. Ere long Mr. Dane hears about her "carrying on" and he has a row with his cousin : excitement induces heart disease, but he lives long enough to be reconciled to his wife who survives to marry the cousin. The plot is antique enough, but something might have been made of it in competent hands. I fear the hands were very incompetent, for the characters are unreal and the thing is flat and lifeless. The actors seemed to feel the hopeless nature of the task they were engaged in, and the frank ridicule which developed into hostility fairly took the spirit out of them.

The Maude—Harrison partnership is soon to be dissolved : from the fact that people on the fringe of dramatic society speak of the dissolution as "a split," one may conclude there has been some difficulty, but that I take it is not necessarily a matter of public interest. Mr. Harrison remains at the Haymarket and Mr. Cyril Maude will find another house whither he will probably be followed by Miss Winifred Emery. "Minnie Brooke, Widow," leaves the Criterion after a shortish London career and starts a provincial tour at Eastbourne. "The Prayer of the Sword" has been reduced from five acts to four, and should be much strengthened thereby. The play reads remarkably well, but it is notorious that high literary qualities do not necessarily make a good acting play.

There is not much to be said about the Music Halls this week. The Magic Kettle is still drawing to the Palace crowds whose admiration of the marvel is not, and need not be, in the least impaired by the knowledge that liquid air is the secret. The "business" is uncommonly well done with a superflous block of ice on which to boil the kettle : bereft of this very legitimate showman's accessories, the turn would be exceedingly interesting : and after all the average music hall audience does not include many likely to be acquainted with the mysteries of liquid air.

The Kilted Canadian band, advertised to appear at the Albert Hall this week, had to postpone their opening night in London, as on landing at Liverpool they were met by a Royal Command to proceed to Balmoral. It is understood that this band is a particularly popular institution in the Dominion : so His Majesty's command has the touch of statesmanship we associate with his public doings.

Various Items. This is the silly season, and the height of it : wherefore I presume the licence accorded Mr. Bernard Shaw to rail against flogging in the Navy. The correspondence has been acrimonious, but it has brought out larger displays of wholesome common sense than of faddist silliness. Mr. Bernard Shaw never went to a public school and his views are peculiar : he is a vegetarian on principle and he finds his recreation in anything but sport, so allowances must be made. "Free meals for children also occupies us largely." Whether Board school children should be supplied with an adequate breakfast at the rate-payers' expense ; whether the move should not include dinner and tea ; or whether, on the other hand, a free school breakfast would break up the "family meal" and impair the 'umble 'ome 'or would merely set free more money for paternal drink : or would create an undesirable "class" feeling between the children who accept a free breakfast and the children whose parents have some decent pride—all those arguments are bandied with many others. I beg leave to put forward the following views of my own : that since adequate food is more necessary for the rising generation than Education (with a capital E.) and since it is inexpedient to give the rising generation free food at the public expense ; therefore it is more inexpedient to provide Education at the public expense. What a howl Enunciation of this amazing theory would raise if propounded in the London papers !

The eruption of Vesuvius which began to grow serious last Friday had grown more violent on Sunday, and it was reported that the funicular railway had been put out of action. This proves to be untrue: the railway is in working order and is doing exceptionally good business in the tourist way, special service of trains being run for those who want to see eruptions at close quarters. Let us hope that this confidence in its goodwill towards man will not be rudely shaken by the volcano.

The fitness of Mr. H. Marks to represent the Thanet Division as a Conservative or as anything else occupies a good deal of attention just now. The Political atmosphere is not particularly pure as it is, and its purity would not be enhanced by the presence of the man now bellowing his own praises down in Kent.

MY LITTLE PRESERVES.

VII.

FOR some days we had seen nothing more of the bison, so on Sunday afternoon, having nothing better to do, we thought we would take a stroll as far as the swamp, on the offchance of picking up a stag en route, or of getting a shot at the solitary ibex that F. had seen when after bison some days previously.

Before, however, we had gone more than a mile from camp, as we were going down the hill into the sholas, we heard a lot of smashing of eettas in the jungle to our left, that could hardly be caused by monkeys, though as there were any amount of them about, we were at first disposed to push on, as we had a good two hours' trudge before us, and it was already nearly 4 P.M.

Just as we were deciding to make a start, F. spotted a couple of elephants on the edge of the jungle, and soon after, two more made their appearance, all cows, and several more were evidently in the eetta, but some way below. Presently another cow with a calf turned up, and began to feed, but slowly moved off from the rest, the little calf evidently causing its mother no little anxiety, by legging off on its own account over the grass hill.

We waited on till sunset, but as the tusker did not think fit to show up, we were obliged to return to camp without even knowing for certain that there was a tusker with the herd. Next morning we were off by daylight, and had not gone more than half a mile, when we spotted six or seven elephants (evidently the same we have seen the previous evening), coming out of the small sholas through which our track lay, and making for the direction of the swamp, to which we were bound. We soon lost sight of them, as the track turns abruptly to the south soon after passing the sholas, but in another three-quarters of an hour, we reached the bend in the path and nearly landed ourselves on the top of the herd who were feeding quietly on the long grass, part of them above, and part below the track we were following. On the opposite hill, about a mile off, we made out six or seven bison—a regular case of embarras de richesse. In looking about to see if the tusker was in evidence, I very nearly rubbed shoulders with an old cow, that the long grass had prevented me from noticing. F., however, who was a little way off, and above me had spotted her, and whistled, thus drawing my attention to the fact. If only she had been the tusker, what a lovely shot I should have had! But alas! our luck was out this morning, and though we got an excellent view of the cows, the tusker was nowhere to be seen, so after wasting a very precious half hour, we decided on leaving the elephants in peace, and making for the hill on which we had seen the bison. This we successfully managed, it was a very still morning, hardly a breath of air stirring, which accounted for our getting round the herd without being winded, even by the old lady I had so nearly, run foul of. But the bison were nowhere to be seen and we had a long trudge for nothing, as before we reached the swamp they had made off into the jungle

About a week after this, F. got a stag, dropping him neatly with a shot from the ·303 in the neck, and then for some days the game had a rest. One afternoon just as we had finished tea, we spotted a solitary ibex on the top of the cliffs just behind our camp, and S. and F. promptly went after him, but fearing to give him their wind, they waited rather too long, hoping he would feed down the southern slope; this he did not do however, but moved off to the east, and by the time they got up to him, the light was bad, and S., who was given the shot, just managed to miss him. F. who was close by saw where the bullet struck just over the ibex's back. She was a fine big fellow and had a capital head, and would have been a good trophy. We had an excellent view of him through the glasses for over half an hour after S. and F. went. To tell the truth, I was rather glad they had not bagged him, as the herd is a small one, and was terribly bullied by certain butchers a few years ago during my absence.

The grass now was getting so dry, that I was obliged to set fire to it, as, already, some of the distant hills had been burnt, and once the natives begin firing the grass, there is no knowing what may happen: a fine path had been cut all round, so taking advantage of a comparatively calm day, and the chance arrival of a few hillmen, we set fire all round the huts, and had a very successful burn. Shortly after this most of our party left, and as the fires had, of course, driven all the game off the plateau into the big jungles below, there was no chance of any more shooting until the young grass began to shoot up again.

However, just to keep us from fretting too much over the absence of our friends the bison and sambur, a solitary elephant arrived one night, and amused himself by doing his utmost to spoil my six foot track down to the ghat road, that we had lately put in order.

My Tappal cooly brought me the news and informed me that the tusker had gone off into the Tavalum jungle, only about half a mile off and just below the "Bangalow Hill." My cooly was perfectly sure that he (the elephant) was a tusker, and equally certain that he was the rogue that had killed a cooly near the village of Mundakayam and for whose destruction the Travancore Government had offered a reward of Rs. 50, as had been duly advertised in the Government Gazette and so on.

So down to the Tavalum jungle I duly went, but finding no signs of the elephant, was returning to the house, when I heard my foxhound, "Boxer" giving tongue in the jungle at the back of the house.

Hurrying back as fast as I could go, I saw my "Boy" returning from the direction of the jungle, having been sent by my wife to see what "Boxer" was after. He informed me that it was "nothing sar, Boxer only hunting one sambur I think." It never crossed my mind for a moment that it could be the elephant, for during the number of years we have been here, off and on, I have never known an elephant to enter this particular jungle, though we have had them on many occasions literally all round us.

"Boxer" now turned up, considerably blown, and not at all inclined to follow me, evidently thinking the game was not worth the candle.

Imagine my astonishment when I had hardly gone 20 yards down the road that skirts the jungle, I came on the fresh marks of the elephants; he had been standing under a big tree on the edge of the jungle, not 30 yards from our huts, and "Boxer" had evidently come upon him on the road, and hunted him off. I followed on the tracks some distance to make sure of the direction he had gone, and then took a short cut up through the jungle on to the grass hill at the back of the house in hopes of catching up with him and getting a shot. But "Boxer" had evidently given him a terrible fright; the brute never stopped for a moment, but made clean off along the track, and got down into the big valley to the east, so as it was now getting late, I had to return without even seeing him. If only I had waited half an hour, before going down to the Tavalum jungle, where I felt sure the elephant would be, I simply must have got a shot at him, and within 30 yards of the house; an awful disappointment! My wife told me that "Boxer," must have been some minutes baying the beast on the edge of the jungle:—what a pretty sight it must have been, and what a lovely shot one must have had at him!

One of my greatest drawbacks, in fact the greatest drawback with which I have to contend up here, is the fact that "My Little Preserves" are situated just outside the boundaries of the country within which the Travancore Game Laws are in force, so that while I, personally, most religiously observe the close season, I cannot obtain a conviction against any of the villagers in my neighbourhood, who, every now and again, make a raid on the extreme southern end of my country.

Until quite recently I had flattered myself that my own personal influence was sufficient to prevent the slaughter of bison and ibex at any rate, as I have been compelled to wink at the occasional death of a sambur,

The manufacture of LEMCO is controlled by the Liebig Company throughout—from the rearing of their own cattle to the potting of the extract. This ensures that perfection and evenness of quality which are found in LEMCO alone.

The secret of LEMCO's efficiency—high concentration—explains its great economy. The careful housewife will find that LEMCO, besides improving her cooking, reduces her expenses.

for my neighbours are greedy flesh eaters, and I found it good policy to do so.

But alas! for my personal influence. Just listen to this tale of woe.

For the last three and-a-half months, not a week has passed without our seeing one or other of the herds of bison that have, for so many years, been my special care; they had more than once come on to the hill just across the stream at the foot of our headquarter's camp, and I was hugely delighted to find that the herds had increased in number since last season. In one herd we clearly made out three, if not four young calves, and a fine bull had joined another herd whose Lord and Master we had bagged last January, an account of which has already been sent to you.

Well, about three weeks ago, early one Sunday morning, we were having our usual look through the glasses to see what there might be in the neighbourhood of the swamp hill, and I spotted some strange objects on the top of the ridge, and for the life of me, I could not make out what they were—the swamp is a good two miles off as a crow flies—after a short time the creatures began to move, and then, to my something worse than disgust, I saw that they were human beasts who had evidently been up for a shoot. That they were returning empty handed was some sort of a consolation, but I fear me the language that was uttered—well let us draw a veil over that, and trust that the recording Angel has been lenient!

Three days after, the big herd of bison made its appearance, but they carefully avoided the swamp and its neighbourhood, and seemed restless and wandered about, not feeding quietly, as is their wont—and the next day they disappeared, and we have not seen them since. Of course we very naturally connected the disturbed attitude of the bison with the human brutes we had seen a few days previously, and, alas! that it should have to be written, our worst fears have been realised.

Last week a Mahomedan from a neighbouring village came to see me on a small matter of business, and in course of conversation, asked me if I had been out shooting lately, and on my remarking that I never shot during the close season, he informed me that a certain Mahomedan, who is the greatest butcher within 20 miles, accompanied by four hillmen from the village that lies at the foot of the Swamp Hill, had been out after, what I still call, my bison, and had fired four shots at them, wounding one badly, but though they tracked it for several miles never came up with it.

I have written it advisedly, as my informant was unable to say whether the wounded beast was a bull or a cow—probably the latter.

As I personally know the individuals who have thus so-to-speak frustrated my efforts to make "My Little Preserves" a sanctuary for at least four months in the year, my readers will understand that they have a very warm place in my heart.

There is nothing I should love to do more than to toddle down to the abodes of my friends—save the mark—and give each one of them two dozen with some of my choicest rattans; but while the spirit is only too willing, the flesh alas! is, if not weak, at any rate not quite so strong as it was a quarter of a century ago, and I must fain admit that the tramp to the distant village is rather more than I can undertake. And then the consequences of such a well merited punishment, if inflicted, would be something too terrible. One would of course be haled before the beak, and the great representative of the Law in this district, before whom the sorely-tired sportman would have to appear, holds his Court on the top of a lofty range of hills some three days journey from this.

The road to it lies through an inhospitable country, and involves a long journey across the Peermade Plateau, then down into the plains of British India (Madura district), and then another fearful climb up to the most elevated Court House in the Travancore State.

The admission of one's guilt, under the grossest provocation of course, would naturally follow, the admission of the guilt would be duly recorded but the provocation part would receive scant notice from an unsympathetic beak, and the would-be Game Preserver would be fined to the extent of some Rs. 50 to Rs. 100 at least for thus daring to take the law into his own hands, albeit in a righteous cause.

One cannot help, even at the risk of being jeered at as "laudator temporis acti," sighing for the good old days that are past and gone, when these lovely hills were not desecrated by the presence of Cutcherries and Magistrates, and Police, and such-like abominations, and when evenhanded justice was freely administered, whenever necessary, by the men who opened up the country, and did so much for the people of the land of their adoption.

SAVERNAKE.

For some years the leading luminary and shining light of the Ring, so far as exuberance of verbosity was concerned, was the late Charley Head. No matter with whom he did business, he was invariably rolling some impromptu or flippant repartee off his ready tongue. "Fair women and good wine" was Mr. Head's motto through life, and he used to observe, with his cheerful chuckle, that "it was the book and the figures that kept the pot boiling."

At Ascot on one occasion an unfledged and unsophisticated lordling came up to Charley, and asked him what odds he would bet against two coupled.

"To you, my lord, I'll lay two monkeys to one."

"Very short price," was the rejoinder.

"Well, my lord, anything to please; I'll lay you three monkeys to one each."

"That's better," replied the youngster, taking out his betting-book. "Head, I'll take that," dotting it down.

Backer and layer were both equally pleased, and it is no wonder that Mr. Head, if he often came across punters like this one, was able to keep up half a dozen different establishments.

Shooting.

THE COMPARATIVE EFFECTS OF THE CAPPED AND COPPER-TUBED BULLETS UPON ANIMAL TISSUE, BOTH HARD AND SOFT.

No. 1. CAPPED.—Fired at a distance of 150 yards at living horse; point of entry on the sixth rib, which was fractured for a distance of 3½ inches.

The opening through the skin being oval with clean cut edges, having a diameter of nearly half inch, the direction of the bullet being downwards and backwards, passing entirely through the apex of the heart, through the lungs, diaphragm and part of the liver, making its exit through the eighth rib on opposite side and lodging in half inch deal board.

The wound channel through the soft tissues abovementioned, was greatly in excess of the calibre of projectile used, and especially was this noticeable in the heart and liver, in both cases measuring as much as three inches diameter, whilst in the lungs and diaphragm a trifle smaller. The exit orifice was irregular in shape with very jagged edges and of a diameter of one inch.

Upon impact, a large circumscribed swelling beneath the skin appeared, measuring 6 to 6½ inches. This was not noticeable in the coppe tubed bullet.

Both of the ribs struck were completely severed, and parts of the displaced bones were carried into the bullet track for some distance.

No. 2. COPPER TUBED.—The conditions of this shot were similar to the above, and the direction of the bullet the same, with the exception that the diaphragm and liver were not struck. The entry through the skin was smaller with regular clean cut edges, also the wound channel through the heart and lungs, the diameter through the latter barely exceeding the size of the bullent, though through the former it reached a diameter of nearly two inches.

Upon the ribs, both on entry and exit, the damage done was not so extensive as the "Capped," the displaced pieces of bone being much smaller in size, not carried far from the fracture, and the fissures not extending so far up to the shaft of the bone.

It was impossible to recover this bullet, having passed entirely through the animal.

No. 3. CAPPED.—Soft Tissues only.—Distance, 100 yards. Object 2½ feet of muscle (nearly solid). The skin having been removed from the side on which entry took place, the bullet wound was of almost the same diameter throughout its entire length, viz., 2½ inches) and shewed great destruction of the surrounding tissue, which was torn and lacerated for a distance of 19½ inches, where the bullet was recovered.

No. 4. COPPER TUBED.—Distance, 120 yards. Object, the same as above. Here the entry was smaller than "Capped," the wound channel also not exceeding 1¼" inches in diameter, the edges less jagged, and less damage done to the soft tissues. The bullet passed clean through the object, leaving an exit of about 1½ inches and was pulled up against a thigh bone at a distance of about 4 feet where it broke up without penetrating the bone, and part was recovered.

No. 5. CAPPED.—Distance, 200 yards. Broadside at two fore limbs joining each other. In this shot was shewn very clearly, the effect of the bullet upon bone after penetrating some 4 inches of muscle. The entry through skin was small (¾ inch) and clean cut, at once became enlargred on entering muscle, measuring 1½ inches by 2 inches for a distance of about 4 inches, where it came in contact with the neck of the shoulder blade or scapula, which was badly fractured into 10 or 12 fragments, the parts measuring from ½ to 1½ inches in length; it then passed on into the fleshy part of the second limb, which was penetrated for a distance of about 5 inches and part recovered.

No. 6. COPPER TUBED.—The distance and object similar to above. Beyond being smaller, there was very little difference in size or character of passage of bullet through muscle, between this and "Capped" bullet, but upon striking the bone, the fractures were less complete and displaced, also smaller in size, and shewing more penetrative than smashing power.

No. 7. CAPPED.—Shot through the thick part of the hind quarter, taking the thickest part of the soft tissue and hardest bones in the body. Distance, 150 yards.

Entry through skin of same size and character as in the previous shots, also the bullet track through the first 8 inches of muscle, but after striking the femur (or thigh bone) at this point, the tearing effect of the bullet was greatly increased, being similar in every way to No. 3. The femur itself was completely smashed for a distance of 4½ inches along its shaft, the fragments of bone being quite displaced and carried some distance into the muscles beyond. After passing through this bone the bullet traversed nearly another 7 inches of muscle and was finally embedded in the stifle joint of the opposite limb, a complete fracture taking place here but no displacement.

Unfortunately the bullet could not be recovered in its entirety, only a part with the nickel jacket.

No. 8. COPPER TUBED.—Distance, 150 yards. Object, same as above. Entry through skin small, oval and clean cut; wound channel through first 9 inches of muscle measuring 1½ inches in diammeter, its walls having a similar appearance to the previous shots fired with this bullet. The femur was struck immediately below the neck, which being more solid than the shaft of the bone, was almost severed, the fragments here being much smaller, and the fractures extending not beyond 1 inch from point struck. After entering a further 11 inches of muscle, the bullet passed out of the part and was not recovered. The last 11 inches penetrated shewed increased destruction of soft matter to the first 9 inches, measuring in some parts as much as 1½ inches.

No. 9. CAPPED.—Distance, 100 to 200 yards. Objects,—Stomach, Bowels, Liver, Lungs, and Heart.

Heart:—Entry irregular in shape, measuring 2 inches diameter.

Exit 4 inches, entirely destroying the lower part of this organ.

Lungs:—Entry irregular, ¾ inch diameter; wound channel 1½ inches. Exit about the same. Not so much internal damage done as in the less elastic organs.

Liver:—Similar in all respects to the heart.

Stomach:—Entry irregular shaped, 2½ inches diameter. Exit in one shot measured 5½ inches and in a second trial 4 inches, there being no difference in size of entry.

Bowels:—The effects upon these parts were in every way similar to those upon the stomach, with this difference, that the exit varied in size and shape upon the part of the bowel struck, due to the nature of its contents.

No. 10. COPPER TUBED.—A series of trials were made upon the above organs with this bullet at the same distance, and in all cases except the bowels were the entries and exists smaller. The internal damage done to the heart, lungs, and liver was less, the wound being cleaner cut and less jagged, and of a smaller calibre.

W. R. patent capped expanding bullet—ordinary bullet referred to by Kynoch.—From the above trials I have come to the conclusion that the capped gives a greater shock and has more destructive effect upon both hard and soft animal tissues than the Tubed bullet. Especially was this seen where the bullet had traversed soft tissue before striking bone; also upon any organ having fluid or semi-fluid contents, e. g., the Stomach, bowels, heart, lungs, and brain. The fractures both of long bones and flat were more complete the parts displaced and carried some distance into the surrounding tissue

Ordinary tubed bullet referred to by Kynoch has too much penetration.—In both cases the penetrative power was very great, but more so in the "Tubed," it being almost impossible to get this bullet to remain in the body.

MESSRS. WESTLEY RICHARDS' NEW PATENT SOLID CAPPED EXPANDING BULLET.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In recent issues of your valuable paper, you have dealt with the question of expanding bullets with special reference to remarks which have appeared in the Kynoch Journal upon this subject.

I shall be glad if you will kindly permit me to comment upon certain aspects of this question and to refer, in the interests of the sporting public, to serious and unaccountable omissions of a form of bullet which has proved itself one of the best—if not the best sporting bullet yet introduced. I allude to the "Westely Richards'" Patent Capped Expanding Nickel Bullet, which I think I can show by its records justifies the unique claim I have made for it.

Before entering more fully into this portion of the question, I would like to deal with the mode of conducting experiments adopted by Messrs. Kynoch. I disagree with them as to the choice of substance against which they tested the expanding bullets which were the subject of their article. Neither sawdust nor water represents, in any sort of way, the kind of object against which the bullet is used in actual sport, and the result of tests derived from shooting at such media as adopted by Messrs. Kynoch cannot be relied upon as affording indication of a bullet's probable behaviour at game. This is obvious; and I maintain that reliable tests of bullets—short of actual shikar experience—can only be made at live and dead animal bodies.

There is a further factor of error in the tests as usually carried out, and it is one of vital importance to the sportsman. I refer to the practice of testing the effect of a bullet at 200 yards, not by actually shooting at objects placed at that distance, but by reducing the charge until you obtain at, say, 50 yards, the same velocity as you would get at 200 yards with the full charge. As described in the Kynoch article, common sense rejects this as being the equivalent of an actual test at 200 yards, and, moreover, is supported by the conclusions of unimpeachable expert authority which has made comparative tests of both methods. This subject is fully discussed in a pamphlet, published in 1897, by Professor Von Bruns, First-class Surgeon-General, attached to the Royal Wurtemberg Ambulance Corps, in which it is stated that the result of shooting experiments carried out upon a very large scale by the Medical Department of the Royal Prussian Ministry of War showed that—"Experiments with reduced powder charges at short ranges is a mere makeshift and does not altogether tally with actual existing conditions . . . . Experiments show, as a matter of fact that firing with reduced charges of powder does not, as a rule, produce equal, but on the contrary inferior, effects to those produced by full charges fired at the respective full ranges."

It was on account of this unreliable system referred to, that for the purpose of ascertaining the effect of bullets, I have invariably conducted trials at beef or living and dead animals at the actual ranges with full charge, and it is for this reason, that I claim greater reliability for the results I have published, than those conducted at sawdust, etc., with reduced powder charges by Messrs. Kynoch.

I may add that the Prussian military authorities also laid it down that, "It is scarcely possible to point out any material difference between the effects of shots upon living and those of dead bodies."

When Westley Richards and Co. first introduced the Capped Expanding Bullet, it was made for the Mauser pistol, and trials at beef and animals clearly demonstrated that it possessed a combination of the highest possible penetration and expansion. It made a hole in beef nearly three times its whole diameter and equal to that made by a man'stopping ·450 bore lead bullet; a remarkable testimony to its great expansive power, and yet this same capped expanding bullet, when fired at the forehead of a horse, caused instant death, and at 15 yards produced a compound fracture of thigh bone.

No. 1. Represents the Capped Mauser Bullet fired at forehead of a horse.

No. 2. Capped Mauser Bullet, after piercing 10-inch of muscle and fracturing thigh bone of horse.

And thus it was that Land and Water in reporting upon this bullet, said:—

"Undoubtedly one of the most effective, by reason of the fact, that in it, penetrative force and shock-giving qualities are nicely balanced."

Since then, the system of the "Westley Richards' Capped Expanding Bullet," has been applied to all bores from ·303 to ·577.

Trials of this bullet in ·360 bore at living and dead horses have proved that it is far more destructive than the soft nose or other form of expanding bullet, causing a wound channel twice the size of that caused by the ordinary forms of expanding bullet, while at the same time these trials showed that the capped expanding bullet maintained a just balance of penetrative force and shock-giving qualities, as it was indeed designed to do.

This bullet, in addition for sport in India, has been used very successfully at Elk, in Norway, and at South African game, such as Eland, Hartebeest and Wildebeest, and only recently a report was received from Africa that the ·303 capped bullet is considered the most destructive bullet for big game.

This bears out my own tests and demonstrates that the capped system of expanding bullet proves more destructive than any other, no matter in what bore. I was, therefore, surprised to learn that neither in the Kynoch article, nor in your comments thereon, was there reference to this capped form of expanding bullet. I, therefore, trust you will allow me to supply the deficiency. The universal satisfaction given by the bullet and the overwhelming testimony available to its superiority are sufficient to convince any unprejudiced mind, but I have, nevertheless, adopted my past practice of enlisting the aid of a perfectly impartial expert to carry out experiments with the "Westley Richards' Copper Capped Expanding Bullet" in comparison with the ordinary Copper-tubed ·303 bullet, to which Messrs. Kynoch are so partial. It will be seen that this latter bullet is both for expansion and for the quality of retaining at same time a large proportion of its mass under all conditions inferior to the "Westley Richards' Capped! ·303 Bullet."

Other testimony equally convincing could be furnished as to the superior destructive power of the capped bullet, but the following may be worth quoting, as of interest to sportsmen, and that is firing at a steel plate has confirmed the experiments as to the behaviour of the capped bullet when fired at animals, viz., that in all bores, whether ·303 or ·577, the local rending effect of metal is greater and the diameter of the hole bigger.

The independent report referred to of the trials respecting the ·303 capped bullet and the ordinary copper tube bullet accompanies this letter. These trials were conducted by Mr. Percy Easte, M. R. C. V. S.

DARJEELING SKY RACES.

First Day, Monday, 17th October, 1904.

RUN in most cheerless circumstances. It started drizzling in the morning and continued throughout the day. The wet was not heavy enough, however, to make the course dangerous, so the Stewards decided to hold the meeting. As may be expected there was a very sparse attendance, and speculation was only nominal. There was a mild gamble on the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup, and as the betting indicated there were only inquiries for two, and the public selections were the only two in it. The Selling Race was run in semi-darkness and the Fred Archer Stakes did not come off. Mr. Galstaun had a very nice day out, and the way he handled Energy in the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup was marked by some judgment, the public testifying their appreciation by much applause. With easy the exception of the race for the New Plate all the others were victories for the winners.

THE NEW PLATE.—For all ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a race value Rs. 200 or over. 14-1 to carry 12st. C.-B.'s and Arabs allowed 21lbs. W. I. ½ mile.

NOVICE STAKES.—For a cup value Rs. 49. For Arabs and C. B.'s 14-1 and under and others 13-3½ and under that have never won a stake value Rs. 40 or over. Arabs and C. B.'s 14-1 to carry 12st. and others 13-3½ to carry 12st. 6lbs. W. I. ¼ mile.

THE TURF.

MANCHESTER.

THE Manchester September Meeting apparently touched low-water mark a twelvemonth ago, when only thirty-four runners could be found to do duty on the first day, but a much more satisfactory state of affairs was revealed on the 23rd instant. The aggregate number of combatants reached fifty-eight, and though the valuable Autumn Breeders' Foal Stakes (won last year by Fretty Polly) was conspicuous by its absence from the programme, class may be said to have been as well represented as usual. The conditions which prevailed at New Barns were bright and summerlike to a degree, and the attendance reached goodly proportions in consequence. The course is beginning to yield a plentiful crop of herbage, and the galloping was in good order, if on the firm side.

If only the Manchester executive could habitually rely upon such genial conditions as those which gladdened the hearts of visitors to Castle Irwell on Saturday, they could be assured of a prolonged era of unexampled prosperity. True, the usual dismal accompaniments to sport here may not appreciably affect the local attendance, for just as the mole is by nature inured to darkness so the inhabitants of Cottonopolis have from long custom come to regard an opaque atmosphere and lowering skies as their normal environments. But with many others it is different, and the failure of a valuable stake like the Prince Edward Handicap to fill at the first time of asking year after year can be directly attributed to a growing dislike on the part of owners to frequent a gathering which labours under such serious climatic disadvantages. Happily the big handicap met with a worthy response on being re-opened, and both in point of numerical strength and quality the field reached the average. So, indeed, did the general attendance, in spite of a formidable counter attraction in the shape of the Manchester City and Sheffield football match, and the course was in grand order.

A capital start was effected. Catty Crag, on the inside, showed the way to Jollybird, Earla Mor, Flower Seller, and Donnetta, with Kilteel next, in advance of Thunderbolt, Kirkby figuring in the rear behind Marsden, till making the bend into the straight, where Earla Mor took up the running on the rails from Donnetta, Kilteel, Thunderbolt, Robert le Diable and Flower Seller, with Camphor and Prince Royal galloping in their heels. Nearing the distance, where Flower Seller was badly bumped by Donnetta, Thunderbolt drew to the front, and Robert le Diable began to get on terms with Earla Mor, whom he relegated into third place by a length, without succeeding in getting on terms with Thunderbolt, who won by half a length. Donnetta was placed fourth, Flower Seller was fifth, Camphor sixth, Prince Royal seventh, Kilteel eighth, Marsden ninth, The Arrowed tenth, Jollybird next, and Catty Crag last. Time, by Benson's chronograph, 2mins., 4secs.

NEWMARKET.

With the exception of Manchester, most of the racing witnessed since Doncaster has been little better than "flapping," and it was a treat to take part in sport worthy of the name at Newmarket again. The First October Meeting belies its nomenclature upon the present anniversary, the fixture terminating on the last day of September, and it was ushered in under almost summer-like conditions. A slight early morning mist was speedily dissipated by the solar rays, which blazed down from a cloudless sky throughout the day, and the light was singularly translucent for the season of the year. There was no lack of runners, however, and the interest in the entertainment was well maintained. The course yielded grand going, and some exciting finishes added a zest to the proceedings.

The whole country side was enveloped in a dense, dank, vapoury mist after daybreak on the 28th instant following a slight hoar frost, and so opaque was the atmosphere that though the Heath was simply alive with horses, whose hoofstrokes resounded in every direction, next to nothing could be seen of the work. It was not until nearly twelve o'clock that the veil began to lift, and the sun succeeded in forcing its way through, but thereafter the day was bright and fine suggestive of August until late in the afternoon, when it clouded over and a drizzling shower fell. Some important lots were submitted for sale at Park Paddocks, but attendance at the ring-side was very sparse, and some rare bargains were secured, amongst the brood mares in particular. When the forces took up their positions at the Rowley Mile Stand, no increase was to be observed in the general muster, nor was the sport quite in keeping with the traditions of headquarters, the fields for the most part being below the average as regards both strength and quality.

Between the Jockey Club Stakes and its companion event, the Princess of Wales's Stakes, a material difference exists, inasmuch as three year-olds, which are ineligible to compete in the great event decided "behind the Ditch," are here afforded an opportunity of measuring strides against their elders. Nor is this to be regretted; on the contrary, their presence greatly enhances public interest in the contest, just as it tends to increase the strength of the field, and the younger generation have effectually justified their inclusion, for of the eleven winners to date only four four-year-olds, viz., Isinglass, Love Wisely, Sceptre, and Rock Sand, appear in the list. For some day past doubts existed as to the possibility of Rock Sand (who had been so mercilessly trounced by Sceptre here a twelve month ago) taking part in the encounter, owing to the weak condition of his forelegs, and it was not until a comparatively late hour last night that Sir James Miller definitely decided to let the son of Sainfoin take his chance. He was well advised, as a fighting policy brought its own reward, and the sturdy brown retires from the Turf with his honours thick upon him. Yesterday at exercise the colt walked as soundly as he ever did in his life, and he showed to the utmost advantage in the paddock, but he pottered down to the post as if in acute pain, and it seemed almost cruel to run him.

BETTING: 5 to 2 agst. Rock Sand, 5 to 2 Henry the First, 7 to 1 St. Amant, 100 to 14 St. Denis, 8 to 1 Lochryan, 10 to 1 Rydal Head, 100 to 8 Foundling, 33 to 1 Red Robe, 40 to 1 William Rufus, 100 to 1 Piari.

There was only a trifling delay before the lot were despatched to an excellent start, Rydal Head being the first to show in front of Rock Sand, Henry the First, St. Amant, and Piari, with Lochryan next, in advance of St. Denis, Foundling, and William Rufus; and there was practically no change in the order until reaching the Bushes, when Piari had shot her bolt and dropped back last, and Henry the First, on the left, took up the running from Rock Sand, on the top ground, William Rufus, and Foundling, the lot being well clear of Rydal Head and St. Denis. There was little to choose between the two leaders descending into the Dip, and, drawing well clear of their opponents, they fought out a desperate finish, which resulted in favour of Rock Sand, who won amidst deafening cheers by a length and a half; four lengths divided the second and third. Foundling, some eight lengths off, was placed fourth. St. Denis was fifth, Red Robe sixth, St. Amant seventh, Rydal Head next, and Piari last. Time, by Benson's chronograph, 3mins. 2⅗secs. Value of the stakes, £7,435.

Owing to the failure of an All-aged Selling Plate to fill, it was not necessary to commence racing at Newmarket to-day till one o'clock, but although this time was found to be more convenient there was not a large company present when a party of twenty turned out for the Bretby Welter Handicap. In an open market Boycot and Sansovino had most friends, and the former won cleverly in the hands of Saxby. Details:—

THE LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP.

DIVISION 1.

WOOLWICH ARSENAL vs. WOLVERHAMPTON WANDERERS.—After fighting three stern battles in the League without success, the Arsenal, to the great joy of their myriad supporters, conquered the Wanderers from Wolverhampton on Saturday, and thereby gained their first League victory and bagged a brace of much-needed points. It was curious weather at Plumstead. Prior to the start a sharp shower fell rendering the turf slippery and the ball difficult of control, followed by bright sunshine, and a further downfall of rain midway through the second half. It was during the first "45" that the Arsenal were seen to most advantage, and this opening stage certainly produced the brightest and the briskest football. The Arsenal gained the day chiefly through the marked superiority of their forwards. Taking the line as a whole, they were more scientific, better skilled in combination, and more readily adapted their plan of attack to the prevailing conditions. Gooing, in the centre, proved a most unselfish leader. He made any number of openings for his wings, and trusted chiefly to the right. Certainly Brierley justified the confidence reposed in him, playing a capital game throughout. Hunter was useful at times, and Satterthwaite, to whom fell the distinction of scoring the first League goal for the Arsenal, made the most of rather limited opportunities. The feature of the half-black play was the grand display of Dick, who was quite the best half on the field. He tackled with unerring judgment, placed to his forwards with unfailing accuracy, and generally was seen at the very top of his form, quite overshadowing, in fact, Sands and Buchan, of whom the amateur was particularly effective whenever his goal was seriously threatened. At back Gray and Jackson were first class, the former once recovering marvellously when it looked odds on Miller scoring. Both keepers played a worthy part. Baddeley was severely tried but he emerged from the ordeal without a blot on his high International reputation. The Burly backs, Jones and Battelley, kicked well, but both were occasionally beaten for speed. Of the halves, Walker was perhaps the pick. Wooldridge in the centre and Miller on the extreme left showing most prominently among the forwards, who, as a body, were inclined to be ragged and spasmodic. For a time in the second half they were really dangerous, but a lack of finish precluded success.

Practically no advantage was gained from winning the toss, there being no wind to speak of. Gooing started and at once Briercliffe and Coleman made off on the right and forced a fruitless corner. This was followed by individual attempts on the part of Wooldridge, Haywood, and Smith to break away, which Dick, Sands, and Jackson easily checked. Gooing headed two neat attacking movements, Hunter in the first shooting into Baddeley's hands, and then after Jones had his shot cleared, Satterthwaite pounced on the ball at a favourable angle, and driving it fairly home scored the first League goal for Woolwich amid great enthusiasm. Scarcely had the cheering died away before Gooing again got his line in motion, and the centre, beating Walker, was in close proximity to Baddeley when a slip enabled Jones to clear. A fine run by Satterthwaite, who centred beautifully, caused the custodian to fist away, after which Buchan, fouling Wooldridge, let up the Wanderers for a momentary spell, in the Arsenal quarters. Dick quickly relieved to Briercliffe, who, working nicely with Coleman, enabled Gooing to have a shot which was just wide. Retaliating, Baynam finished a fast run with a flying centre, which Gray misjudged. Miller dashed up with the goal at his mercy, but, recovering himself very smartly, the back was just in time to intercept the winger's hot shot. For at least half an hour the Woolwich forwards were very aggressive. However, the Wolves improved towards the close, Ashcroft having to save from Smith and Haywood, while after Briercliffe had crossed to Satterthwaite, only to see the latter fail to trap, thus losing a promising chance, Miller completed a fine sprint with a centre to Baynam, who headed over. Half-time arrived with the Arsenal still in possession of their lead. On resuming, a desperate skirmish occurred around the Wolves' custodian, who eventually cleared safely, and Miller, galloping to the other end, gave Ashcroft a dropping ball to beat away. Subsequently the visitors, now aided by the wind, made a series of incursions, but, combining poorly, were always frustrated. Wooldridge got hurt in a collision with Sands and went off for a few minutes. Relying on one back and on the return of the centre playing the other well up the field, the Arsenal forwards, especially Satterthwaite, were frequently placed offside, the game in consequence slackening and losing in interest. During the rain the Wolves certainly did most of the attacking, and in this period Jackson, Sands, and Gray rendered particular service. Once Miller, taking a corner, sent into the net, but the ball touched no one in transit. At length Hunter and Satterthwaite got clear on the left, and the former, evading Jones, gave Baddeley a straight hard drive—the hottest of this half. He dealt successfully with it, but ten minutes from the end Sands passing out to Briercliffe, the latter transferred to Coleman, who shooting across the goal-mouth, had the satisfaction of seeing the ball hit the far post and glance into the net. Until the whistle blew there were some anxious moments for the Arsenal, Ashcroft being called upon to save at full length from Smith. However, all went well with the home team, who fully deserved their victory by two goals to none.

CLAPTON vs. CASUALS.—Doubtless the big counter attraction at Upton Park had a deal to do with the sparse attendance at the Spotted Dog Ground on Saturday, for though the weather was rather uninviting, it was not so bad as to account for the fact that only 600 people were present to see such an attractive fixture as that between Clapton and the Casuals. As it happened the play was hardly worthy of the occasion, the reason being that many of the players, especially on the Casuals side, could not do themselves justice on the treacherous ground. The ball, too, soon got slippery, and at no time was it easy to control. The Claptonians adapted themselves to the circumstances much more readily than the visitors, whose forwards rarely exhibited good passing; there were flushes of brilliancy which showed the Casuals' capabilities, but they were not sustained. On the run of the play Clapton were decidedly the better team, and in the end they won by four clear goals. For some reason or other that splendid old pillar of Clapton, H. J. Cook, was not chosen, the two backs being E. G. Langhorne and H. A. Milton, who both tackled well but were weak in their kicking. With the wind in their favour Clapton showed up well at the start, their combined movements comparing most favourably with the disjointed efforts of the Casuals. Inside five minutes G. S. Farnfield with capital judgment, rushed in from the extreme left and scored from a centre by Baker. Within a few minutes G. S. Farnfield put in a capital pass to Evans, who gave Lovegrove no chance with a great shot. The Casuals made a determined effort, but Foot twice cleared, and then Clapton resumed the upper hand. At the end of half an hour there was a mêlée in front of the Casuals' goal and Lovegrove, in attempting to clear, sent the ball on to Nugent, off whom it bounced back into the net. G. S. Farnfield hit the post just later and Gething made a fine shot at the other end, but there was no more scoring up to half-time, when Clapton led by three goals to none. At the start of the second half the Casuals played up well and for a time the football was capital. Nugent got clear for Clapton but was offside, and then Durrant tried Wilding with a hot drive, the home custodian saving under the bar. Evans showed some excellent play and two corners were forced by Clapton, but nothing came of them, Lovegrove showing magnificent form in goal. From a splendid piece of play by the Casuals G. S. Harris shot through but was ruled offside, a similar decision being given against Evans a little later. Two minutes from the end Lovegrove ran out to meet a pass by Hollis, but H. V. Farnfield got to the ball and scored, Clapton thus winning by four goals to love.

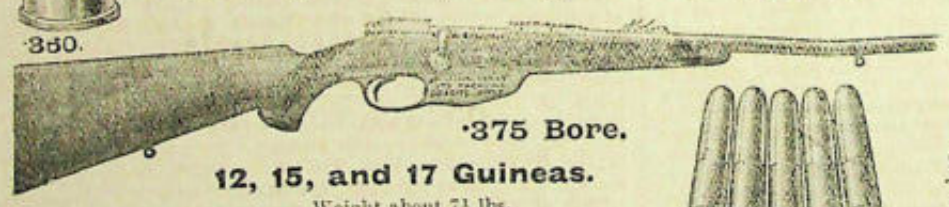
"Your ·360 Cordite rifle put a soft nosed nickel bullet through the neck of a Hippopotamus at 170 yards range. The bullet passed through the neck and came out the farside. I am extremely pleased with the above Rifle and its excellent stopping powers."

Mr. T. P. A. Holford writes:



"I am writing to tell you about the Double Hammerless Ejector ·360 Cordite Rifle you built for me, and which I used on my last Big Game shoot in British East Africa and Uganda. I consider it the most perfect and reliable weapon I have used for Big Game. With it I killed everything from the size of a Guinea Fowl to Rhinoceros, including Lion, Zebra, Wildebeeste, Waterbuck, and many other Antelope and Gazelle. Its accuracy, striking and stopping powers are extraordinary; of the latter, the bullets cut out of dead game which I also forward, will give you a very good idea. While writing this I might also add, that I am very pleased with the Double Hammerless ·450 Cordite Rifle you built me, having done very good work with it in the Rocky Mountain."

RUGBY RULES.

HARLEQUINS vs. OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS.

The Merchant Taylors were very largely indebted to J. E. Raphael, the Oxford three-quarter, for their brilliant win over the Harlequins at Wandsworth Common on Saturday. Raphael, in his first match this season, came out right at the top of his game, his resource in defence and attack, his kicking and his pace, were wonderful. Like good judges, the Taylors' halves and three quarters concentrated their game on Raphael in the centre, and, making many chances as well for himself, he won the game quite easily for his side. All the interest in the game seemed to centre round Raphael, who was always in the van of the attacks, and, like the good general that he is, he was always about helping the full-back when there was any keen defence to be done. Cockell and Sherwin were a "nippy" pair of halves, and were clever in getting the ball when the Harlequin forwards were carrying the scrummages, and Tannahill, the full-back, too, fielded the ball well and kicked with rare judgment. As for the Merchant Taylors' forwards, they were pushed about a good bit at first, but they were more skilful with their feet and were quicker in the open; indeed they kept the pace going to the end. The Harlequins' forwards were very good at starting, shoving well and going on with the ball, but they could not stay the pace, and after the first quarter of an hour were always losing control of the ball. Stoop came out strongly once or twice, but he was not well supported. After being hard pressed the Taylors found relief by the kicking of Raphael, and in ten minutes, from a free kick for offside, Raphael landed a penalty goal. Then the Harlequins' forwards forced the game strongly, and taking the ball into goal Vesey gained a try. Fearenside failed at goal. The score was now three points all. But after this Raphael put in two grand swerving runs from midfield and got a try at the end of each. From a difficult angle Fletcher, who was playing three-quarter at a pinch, placed a goal but he missed the second kick; and so the Taylors crossed over with a lead of 11 points to 3. The Merchant Taylors were much the better side in the second half, but they scored only one more goal, this being grandly dropped by Raphael. There were a good many other shots at goal, and the ball was often near the Harlequins' line. The ground was in good order and there was a large company. Result: Old Merchant Taylors, one placed goal, one dropped goal, one penalty goal, one try (15 points); Harlequins, one try (3 points).

BOXING.

ARMY AND NAVY CHAMPIONSHIPS.

After extending over three days, and furnishing pretty nearly twenty hours of solid boxing, the thirteenth championship meeting, open to the Army and Navy, reached its end at the Gymnasium, Queen's avenue, Aldershot, last evening. Without producing anything startling in the way of form, the tournament goes into history as giving a record in the way of an entry, for while the names of only 24 officers figured on the long programme, men of all ranks swelled the number to 198. On Wednesday boxing was in progress from two o'clock until nearly eight, and even then there was so much work to get through that a resumption had to be made yesterday at eleven o'clock. With no time lost in getting the competitors into the ring, and, helped by a few brief heats, the last contest was over soon after half-past six.

FOR OFFICERS

Final Bout.

Second-Lieutenant G. D. A. Shaw (Royal Field Artillery), beat Lieutenant R. C. Williams (Royal Field Artillery). If not quite equal, Shaw looked on a par with his opponent as regards weight. The start was brisk, Shaw cutting out the work at his best pace. In the first half minute Shaw slipped down, but he was soon up, taking part in some resolute half-arm hitting. The second round saw both hugging, and, while Williams was served at long range by his reach, Shaw was always busy at close quarters. Up to the last minute of the third round there was very little in it. Here Shaw was served by his strength. Williams went down, and just before the finish the bout was stopped.

LIGHT-WEIGHT (10st. and under).

Final Bout.

Second-Lieutenant G. D. A. Shaw (Royal Field Artillery), beat Veterinary-Captain E. P. Barry (2nd Life Guards). The Life Guardsman had all the best of it as regards height and weight, but Shaw, making light of his handicap, went straight in for fighting. Barry was inclined to hold, but Shaw fought on fair and very resolute lines. The first round favoured the smaller man, and, going for all he was worth in the second, he pummelled his opponent freely. Barry was upset, but still remained strong on his legs. Shaw, however, was always the quicker, and, with Barry almost out at the end, the Artilleryman won easily.

MIDDLE-WEIGHT (11st. 4lbs and under).

Final Bout.

Lieutenant W. J. R. Ford (Royal Navy), beat Lieutenant R. B. Campbell (2nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry). There was a good deal of sparring and much short leading in the first round, which ended with honours level. Facing each other again the work was a shade faster, but no better. Campbell got home a few lefts, but his blows lacked both freedom and power, and Ford staying longer than the other, the award went to the sailor.

FOR WARRANT, PETTY, AND NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS, SEAMEN, AND PRIVATES.

Final Bout.

Private Evans (21st Lancers), beat Driver Himphen (R. F. A.) Evans was very cautious, and with Himphen not inclined to run undue risks the boxing in the first two rounds was chiefly of a long-range character. Now and again Himphen got in with both hands, but he found Evans awkward to land on, and there was not much in it when they stood up for the third time. Here Evans was again served by an advantage in reach, while Himphen's best work was at close quarters. At the end of a close bout Evans was returned the winner.

LIGHT-WEIGHTS (10st. and under).

Final Bout.

Lance-Corporal Hutton beat Private D. Corsey (Sutherland Highlanders). A light first round went slightly in favour of Hutton. Soon after starting the second, Corsey sent his man to the floor. Then Hutton had a shade the better of it, and after the judges had disagreed, the award went his way.

MIDDLE-WEIGHT (11st. 4lbs. and under).

Final Bout.

Lance-Corporal Stebbins (21st Lancers), beat Trooper Oldman (Royal Horse Guards). The holder, Stebbins, had to give away something in height and reach, and Oldman, making the most of his advantage in this respect, used a straight left, and held his own in the initial round. In the second, Stebbins began to make play with the right, which he got home now and again with effect. Oldman, however, declined to be hustled. The final bout, however, saw Stebbins come up hand over hand, with the result that Oldman was practically beaten before the call of time.

HEAVY-WEIGHTS (any weight).

Gunner Hewitt (R. M. A) beat Gunner W. McFadden (R. M. A.) Hewitt was first at work, and, getting within range, at once scored with left and right on the head. This brought about some warm two-handed fighting, in which Hewitt, quick in his deliveries, had the advantage. McFadden was hustled about for a little while, and then, settling down, he steadied his man with some clean lefts on the face. The first round, however, favoured Hewitt, and, though McFadden did his best to take a lead in the second, he received as much as he sent. At the third meeting however, Mac fought with much determination, and Hewitt, sticking in the corners, had to take a lot of punishment. At the end of this bout the judges disagreed, and an extra bout was ordered. McFadden was the aggressor in this, putting in some good two-handed work. Another disagreement on the part of judges saw Hewitt get the casting vote of the referee.

ATHLETICS.

L. A. C. AUTUMN MEETING.

The meeting that took place on Saturday worthily maintained the tradition of the L.A.C., for the sport was of the finest quality, and full of interest from start to finish. Unfortunately, the weather was wretched, for on and off it rained throughout the whole afternoon. However, the crowd numbered 2,500, one of the best attendances seen at the ground for some time past. The sentimental interest attaching to the meeting brought out quite a number of old athletes to see the last of the famous enclosure, and those that remained to the end and heard the band play "Auld Lang Syne" were rather sorrowful.

Turning to the afternoon's sport, Morton's win in the 120 yards handicap was a fine performance, his time 11⅕secs. equalling the British amateur record held by W. P. Phillips, C. A. Bradley, and A. R. Downer. The Mile Relay Race provided a great deal of interest, Morton's win on the post giving the victory to the Rest of England. Shrubb's attempt on record was a failure but it produced a real good performance. Jupp failed by ⅕ths of a second in his attempt on the 300 yards record. The officials were:—Referee, Mr. W. M. Chinnery; judges, Messrs. D. Basan, C. V. Hunter, E. H. Pelling, and J. H. A. Reay; judges for Volunteer competition, Lieutenant-Colonel C. H. Reid Todd, Captain C. R. Johnson, and Messrs. E. Ion Pool and H. Venn; starter, Mr. C. L. Lockton; timekeepers, Messrs. S. K. Holman, J. E. Fowler-Dixon, and H. Hewett Griffin; handicapper, Mr. F. Parker. Details:—

TEN MILE INVITATION RECORD HADICAP.

The others were mainly on the track for the purpose of pacing Shrubb, who went in front between the sixth and seventh mile, and eventually won easily. The attempt on the record was a failure, notwithstanding some excellent pacing, in which all the men on the track did their share. Shrubb was very consistent up to the sixth mile, but then fell away, and in the end was 38⅖secs. outside W. G. George's World's Amateur Record, made at Stamford Bridge, on 7th April 1884. He ran on with the intention of beating George's hour amateur record of 11 miles 932 yards, but, with his time 57mins. 55⅖secs. at the eleventh mile, it was a hopeless task, and as a consequence he stopped running. Appended are Shrubb's times:—

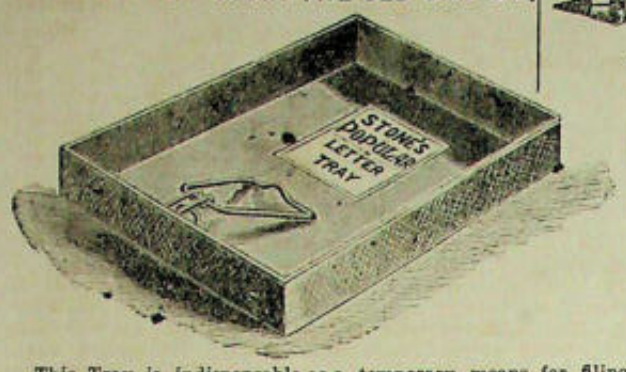
OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.



On Monday, the 10th October, the meet was at Brooklands at 7-30. It was a cloudy, cool morning with the country wet and most favorable for sport. Brooklands was first drawn and hounds had not been half way through when Captain Kennard halloaed at the bottom corner. Two jacks broke together and 16 couple of hounds went away on the line. They settled on the line of one of the jacks leading across Demon Valley and up the hill to Rocky Cover, on the far side of this the two jacks converged and ran parallel to the Sandy Nullah stream. Above Waterfall one of them was marked to ground in the rocks on the edge of the stream, and the other crossed and took five couple of hounds on below Beadnell's, and then right handed down Waterfall Valley before the whips could get across and stop them. Jimmy was sent after them and with the rest of the hounds the Master drew over the hill above Barber's Shop, and then along the top of Beadnell's Shola. Passing the Toda Mund hounds touched a line and after a snatch to the right and then to the left, dashed into the cover below the mund. Running straight through they turned across the swamp below and then crossed the hill, leaving Bracken Cover on their right, to the old Pykara Road. Here they checked, but the Master held hounds along the road, thinking that the jack had run it. They were kept on it for about a mile, but only the leading hounds occasionally stooped to the line.

About the first mile the jack appears to have left the road and hounds getting on to the grass drew along with a great crash of music parallel to the road to the ridge above Toda Coffee Shop Shola, there they swung to the right and hunted in the direction of the Shola Ghauts. They swung again to the right and ran past Tamad Mund down to the bad swamp, across it and up towards Dunsandle. The pace had been and continued so fast that no horse could live with hounds, but the Master kept along the top of Dunsandle and hearing from the terrier boys that they had gone towards Beadnell's rode down to Beadnell's and there found hounds with their jack marked to ground in a rocky earth in a nullah close to the head of Waterfall Valley, the jack could be heard snarling at them in the earth and hounds were frantic for blood, but their jack had to be left there. It was one of the best gallops this season for pace. On Thursday, the 13th, we met at Rees' Corner at 7-30. The morning at the start was cloudy, but later on it grew hot. A small field turned out and the Master sent them on to Baikie Crossing preparatory to drawing Druid, but just after leaving Rees' Corner a jack was seen to come off the hill above and resolutely galloped through the people on the road towards Fairlawns. We next drew Druid Shola blank and hounds got on a line between this and Baikie, but as the jack headed for Baikie the Master stopped them. Hounds next drew Ballywood downwards where a jack was viewed. We went to Brick Kiln Crossing and then turned to the right; re-crossing the swamp above Pearl Crossing and leaving Jackal Shola on the right brought us over the Krurmund Road to the top of Baikie, there hounds checked over the line they had failed a few minutes previous, but they soon hit it off again on the Monkey Shola side and ran at a great pace into Monkey Shola. The jack then went over Rallywood and into Bluegums. Here, some fine cover hunting followed, during which a jack jumped up and hounds got divided. The hunted jack went away across to Governor's Shola with only five couple after him, of which the puppy, Gracity, was the leader, throwing her tongue freely. She guided the scent through the thick part of Governor's Shola past the Tolia School and through Martyn's Shola to the back of Staircase, there the jack got away and seeing the whips bringing up the rest of the jack the Master waited for them.

We next drew Herbert Plantation and got away from the north end almost immediately. Crossing the hill hounds ran through the upper part of Briar Shola, where the Master viewed a brace of jacks away in front. These ran together and took us to the back of Staircase to within half a mile of Bamboo Shola, and then up the top of Staircase over it and down into cover. There we lost them and came home. Scent throughout the morning was not very good and towards the end there was a south-west breeze with hot sun

BLUE GUM.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

Dapuri was the trysting place for the 9th, and though excellent country is available in this direction, the field on this occasion was disappointingly meagre, due no doubt to the ceaseless rush of gaiety which is swamping Society at present, but which will soon be over for a time for all save those who follow the whirl from place to place. Crossing over the river some sugarcane fields were drawn blank, but drawing on in the direction of Chinchwad a wandering jack happily crossed the line of objective and hounds promptly owning to this slice of luck ran at a slow pace over not very difficult country, I believe, and after about a quarter of an hour tumbled over this far from large-hearted jackal in some fields not far from the railway station. Drawing homewards, a second jack was soon afterwards found and taken in the most accommodating way a line straight for the Dapuri Covert after a not very interesting run made good his point and saved his brush for another morning.

On Thursday, the 13th, about a quarter of a hundred sporting souls met at the Kennels, a meet which allows Poona folk an extra hour in bed. In consequence of the recent life-giving rain (which I gather has done almost incalculable benefit to the country and will turn otherwise miserable crops into excellent ones) the going was, needless to add, decidedly holding, but actual rain held off more or less all the mornings. Some cactus close to the Kennels was tried as a preliminary measure, but no jack was sufficiently foolhardy to play such pranks with Colonel Sheringham and his pack as to taunt them in that manner, and some fields on the banks of the big nullah were consequently searched and not in vain, for some half-grown crops held a jack who was promptly forced into the open towards the ill-omened Gibbet Hill and led hounds and horses a pleasant gallop. Over the hill close to the dip, and sinking the range he sought the level on the further side, rather rough, nullah-broken country, if my memory serves me rightly. Running rather a ring from all I can gather, the jack made back for civilization once more, both to leave his happy home on the green, green field besides the somewhat smelly nullah of Bairoba, which has the evil reputation of being responsible for so much fever in the vicinity. Over this Styx the jack galloped at a rare pace and the heavy going accounted for a considerable tailing off in the field and bellows to mend for many. It was a comparatively brief though lively gallop, and what between some disliking galloping up to their fetlocks and some endeavouring with disastrous results to "ride clever" at the hill range, an extremely select few saw the jack meet his end. A very enjoyable morning's sport for those who didn't mind the slush.

Monday and Tuesday, 10th and 11th October 1904.

The annual athletic sports organised by the Bombay Gymkhana which were held last Monday and Tuesday were hardly the success anticipated and the reasons for this were various. Time was when the Bombay Athletic Meeting could hold its own with any other of a similar kind in the country, but not so now and as a matter of fact this year the meeting had so little attraction for athletes that several events fell through for want of entries. Since the institution of this meeting it has been customary to hold it in the month of October, absolutely the steamiest month of the whole year in Bombay. It is but natural that men do not care to do any training under these conditions and it has consequently each year grown increasingly difficult to get men to Compete. With the temperature 99 degrees in the shade it is the reverse of pleasant to have to exert one's self violently and it happened that Monday was the hotest day we have had this year. The attendance during the two days instead of being numbered by thousands totalled only a few hundreds.

Two events were expunged from the programme for want of sufficient entries, viz., the walking race and throwing the cricket ball. It is difficult to understand why sufficient entries were not obtained for the cricket ball event. There are any number of cricketers in the Gymkhana who might have entered but only two could be persuaded to send in their names. The entries for some of the events were very poor, notably the high jumps, 120 yards hurdle race, 120 yards veteran handicap, tug-of-war for British soldiers, and tug-of-war for native soldiers, in each of which there were only two competitors. Three teams originally entered for the tug-of-war for British soldiers but the Royal Garrison Artillery team from Colaba failed to put in an appearance thus robbing the event of nearly all interest. On the whole everything went off a bit flat and there was a want of enthusiasm on the part of spectators and competitors alike which was very marked, especially on the first day. No fresh records were set up, though this does not imply that the times recorded in some of the events were not good. The 100 yards (Challenge Cup) for which six competed was an interesting race and was won by Lieutenant F. S. Massy in 10⅘secs. from A. Siddons, the Calcutta man, who ran well and only lost by a few feet. The result was a bit unexpected. T. J. Reed being regarded as having the race safe. The quarter-mile open to all-comers and the open 100 yards attracted a considerable amount of interest and were run off in two heats. The 100 yards proved a gift to Private Sharp, of the Black Watch, a well-known performer on Indian tracks, who won in the good time of 10⅕secs. The final in the 220 for British sailors and soldiers also fell to Sharp who covered the distance in 24secs. The 220 for members (handicap) resulted in Brand, the Gymkhana Rugby Captain, just winning by a foot from P. F. Fischer who ran very strongly. The mile flat race for British sailors and soldiers resulted in an easy win for Gunner McCormack the time recorded, 4mins. 46secs. being fairly good considering the roughness of the track. The half-mile open to members and honorary members was won by C. M. Ward after a good finish with F. Siddons. The latter's win in the quarter-mile (Challenge Cup) for members and honorary members was quite one of the best performances of the meeting. His time, 53⅘secs., was remarkably good and he ran strongly to the finish. Lieutenant A. H. C. Garsia and C. M. Ward who were second and third respectively also ran in good form. Lieutenant F. S. Massy, a young athlete who created a very favourably impression, annexed the long jump with a jump of 20 ft. 10 ins. and also carried off the 120 yards hurdle race for members and honorary members, clearing his hurdles in fine style. The half-mile flat race open to all-comers attracted no less than 20 entrants from different regiments and resulted in a good win for Bombardier Dunkley. The 150 yards handicap for members only was regarded as a walkover for P. F. Fischer who won easily. The half-mile steeplechase for British soldiers and sailors and the same distance for Rugby football playing members of the Gymkhana were annexed by Piper Wright and A. M. Forrest respectively, their times being 2mins. 45⅘secs. and 3mins. ⅘secs. The other events on the second day had not much interest for the spectators.

The honorary secretaries, Messrs. Crum and Hill, worked hard to make the athletic portion of the meeting a success and if things scarcely panned out according to expectations it was through no fault of their.

LONDON, 30th September 1904.

AUTUMN is a favourite season with road riders for making record attempts, but unfortunately during the last two weeks a keen east wind has been blowing against which it is too trying a task for riders to ride at record time. But taking advantage of one day when the wind was not quite so much in evidence, G. A. Olley, of the Vegetarian C. C., started on an attempt to improve upon the twelve hours unpaced record for Southern Roads which stood to the credit of J. Dudley Daymond at 198¼ miles. Although considerably delayed through punctures, Olley put a very meritorious performance, completing 203 miles in the twelve hours. This is the first time that 200 miles have been covered in twelve hours on Southern Roads in an unpaced ride.

Sunday, 25th September, was the day fixed by the Moto Cycle Club de France for holding the great International Cup race for motor cycles and which was duly carried out to the success of the promoting nation. The cup was presented early this year to the Moto Cycle Club of France for international competition under rules and regulations very similar to those governing the Gordon-Bennett race for Motor-cars; indeed, it is the "Gordon-Bennett" of the motor cycling world. All affiliated nations may send three representatives the successful country holding the trophy for the ensuing twelve months, like in the Gordon-Bennett contest, the machines driven by the competitors must be built throughout in the country which the riders represent. Five nations competed this year, viz., —Austria, Denmark, France, Germany and Great Britain, but unfortunately our representatives never finished, in fact, only the French and Austrian riders showed up at the finish. Demester (France) was first; Toman (Austria) second; Inghilbert (France) third; Lamberjack (France) fourth and Nourtick (Austria) fifth. These were the only men to complete the 167½ miles the distance of the race. The others had shocking experience with punctures—the roads, it were stated, having been maliciously sprinkled with nails: even the first men home had a fair share of punctures, the winner no less than three in less than a quarter of the distance.

Motor cyclists have figured prominently just lately, for besides the road race just referred to a very interesting meeting was carried through at the Crystal Place on Saturday last. The fixture was the Annual Race Meeting of the Auto Cycle Club and consisted of three events, viz.,—an hour race for a Challenge Cup presented by the proprietors of The Motor Cycle, a five-mile handicap for another cup presented by the proprietors of The Motor Car Journal and a mile time trial for a cup presented by the Automotor Journal. The hour race brought out seven competitors and a good start was made by Bennett with Crundall well up. Very shortly after the start, however, an unfortunate accident occurred, Bennett being thrown full length across the track with Crundall and Bent following in the rear at forty miles an hour bat. Crundall was able to clear the fallen rider by running off the track, but Bent rode over his legs and then charged the fence, he and his machine rolling down the banking. Bent was considerably knocked about and had to be removed to the hospital. A fresh start was then made and the hour ride completed without further mishaps, the winner—Crundall putting up new records by covering 22 miles in 30 minutes, and 42 miles 1,352 yards in the hour. The five miles handicap was won by C. Collier in 7 minutes 3⅗ seconds, Crundall being second and Franklin third. Collier was also successful in the Mile Time Trial, covering the distance in 1 minute 15 seconds. Altogether the meeting was a success, and I believe that there is a future for motor cycle racing since "loafing" does not figure in the rider's "tactics."

I find that the recent record ride of Mr. E. H. Grimsdell of the North Road C. C. in knocking off 3½ hours from the unpaced London to Edinburgh jaunt is even more meritorious than the actual time shows, for beside meeting with an extra share of punctures he was delayed for over an hour at Borobridge; trying to make his machine rideable and then, being unsuccessful, he mounted a strange machine and completed the remaining 120 miles. The distance between the two cities is 400 miles, and this Grimsdell covered, without any assistance whatsoever from pacemakers and including all delays, in the remarkable time of 28 hours 3 minutes. There are one or two motor cyclists who will be shortly attempting the journey on motors, with the hope of bringing the time down to about 24 hours.

The "Sport and Play" Tournament held on 24th September on the Aston Villa grounds, Birmingham, attacted some of the best of the provincial racing talent, such men as E. Payne, J. S. Benyon, W. M. Hight and Arthur Gell figuring among the starters. Perhaps the most important cycling event on the programme—it being a mixed programme—was the 1 mile N. C. U. Championship of the Birmingham Centre won by E. Payne, of Worcester, who, apart from Benyon, is the finest rider in the provinces, if not his equal. A ten miles scratch race resulted in a win for Ben Jones of Wigan, with A. E. Taylor second and A. Gell third. There are now very few meetings to be decided since winter will be with us in the course of another four weeks or so, even now the evenings close in at 6 o'clock and the afternoons are becoming cold and damp.

Cyclists, as one man, condemn the pastime of the youthful members of the community which consists of bowling a hoop along public highways to the danger of all traffic and cyclists in particular. At Eastbourne recently, a gentleman was killed by being run over by a horse which had taken fright at a hoop which had become entangled in its legs. This is certainly nothing to do with cycling, but it provides another example of the danger which exists in the practice, and which wheelmen have been growling about for years. Why do not the police act in the matter? They are smart enough in stopping "football," "tip-cat," and other pa-times when played in the roadway, but the hoop with its many dangers is left alone.

Whilst not advocating the imposition of a cycle tax in this country, such a tax would not be without its advantages for then the popularity of a pastime could be accurately gauged year by year and its rise and fall noted. In France, each succeeding year has shown an increase, the number of machines whereon taxes were paid last year amounting to 1,310,223. The number of motor cycles reached 19,816. This is not so many as in this country, so it is more than probable that Great Britain would also exceed the French total for push bikes.

CRICKET IN CALCUTTA.

MR. F. H. STEWART'S XII. vs. OLYMPIAN C. C.—Cricket on the maidan at any rate always begins with the Poojahs, and the above annual encounter took place on Saturday last, the first day of the holidays, and produced a most exciting game, the scratch side, which was beaten by 19 runs on the first innings, making a gallant bid for victory in declaring their second closed with five men out for 82, and getting all their opponents' wickets except the last in the thirty-five minutes or so which remained for play. Both sides were strongly represented, and the assistance of F. Gould, the Ballygunge bowler, was of great value to the Olympians he and his brother coming out with fine analyses, as did Hechle, F. H. Stewart, Ogilvy, and Hilary for the visitors. The only really good batting display was Hilary's second contribution of 36 not out. Abbott, who scored 21 for the Olympians, being missed at least twice, though his plucky innings certainly won the match for his side. Phillipowsky showed good captaincy in putting his opponents in first after winning the toss, for they were totally out of practice, and the wicket, which played wonderfully well, got faster and easier after lunch: he kept wicket, too, as well as ever, being wonderfully active on the leg side. The Olympians won by 19 runs on the first innings, but were actually 34 behind with only one wicket to go in their second. Full score and analysis:—

DALHOUSIE A. C. vs. CALEDONIA A. C.—On Saturday on the Dalhousie Club ground, the Caledonians batted first on a soft wicket. Templeton, who is associated with the Trades Club for the present, and Butland, bowled ; the varying lengths of the deliveries of the latter worried the visitors considerably, only 40 runs being scored with the fall of the tenth wicket.

Dalhousie gave a still poorer display of batting, but fortunately for them Prike managed to stay at the wickets, and by some plucky hitting gave his club the victory. Score :—

CRICKET AT DARJEELING.

CIVIL vs. MILITARY.—Played on Saturday last on "The Shrubbery" ground, the Civil winning by the substantial majority of 124. The Aligarh College player, Abdul Rezzak, was on the winning side and compiled a tidy 72. He played with extreme care and caution at the start, but when he got well set he opened out and scored rapidly. His style is most attractive and pleasing to watch. He was out to a full pitched ball which he misjudged and put into the hands of the smart Uzielli at long field. The Maharajah of Cooch Behar's son, Victor Narayan, a pupil of Abdul Rezzak commenced well, but he was out to a difficult ball from Hartley when he had scored 14. Messrs. Beechcroft and Brown gave a delightful display for their 66 and 50, and with the exception of Cousins, who made 24, the others did little, and the innings closed for 262. The Military opened well with Uzielli putting on boundaries in quick succession, but misfortune beset the side when two reliable bats in Major Buchanan and Sergeant Fraser failed to score, and Quinan was out for 12. Captain Clarke made a useful score by vigorous hitting, and Waller followed suit scoring 24 by boundaries out of his 27. Ryan did not have his usual success in this match, securing but one wicket for 51 runs. The following were the scores :—

HARRIS TOURNAMENT.

93RD HIGHLANDERS vs. East LANCASHIRES.—The tournament opened at Poona with this game on the 10th instant. A smart shower of rain fell at the beginning of the match and made the ground rather heavy. The Lancashires attacked first but could not get through, and the Highlanders taking the ball down pressed hard. After one unsuccessful attempt a goal was scored by Pollock. The Lancashires played up, but their opponents again attacked, and Quin getting possession ran through and scored a second goal. After the interval the Highlanders had the best of the game, but there was no further scoring and the game ended in their favour by two goals to nil. Teams :—

93RD HIGHLANDERS.—Mullen, goal ; Wallers, Ballantin backs; Maclean, Tapsley, Mowatt, half-backs ; Pollock, Fleming, Hogg, McClay and Quin, forwards.

THE FINAL.

93RD HIGHLANDERS vs. WARWICKS.—This match was played at Poona on the 12th instant in heavy rain. In spite of the weather there was a fair attendance, and a well-contested game was witnessed, resulting in a win for the Highlanders by a goal to nil. Lieutenant-Colonel Harwood presented the Cup to the winning team. The 93rd went away at the start and very soon Galbraith found the net, and almost scored a second goal a little later. The Warwicks then had a turn, and Mullen was kept busy, but he saved in good style and the interval arrived with no further score. On resuming the Warwicks attacked and obtained a free kick for a foul against the Highlanders. The ball, however, struck the Highlanders' goal-keeper and was soon taken out of danger. Even play followed and time arrived, leaving the Highlanders victorious as stated.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

29th September 1904.

FTER heading my notes as above it seems very inconsistent to immediately record the doings of golfers on a foreign se, but readers must pardon this, for the open meeting at rne is worthy of comment. Several amateurs entered for vent, but premier honours went to the professionals, the rize falling to W. E. Reid, late of the Skegness, but now yed by the Société de golf de Paris as pro. Next to him W. Freemantle, of St. Moritz and Hyeres. The weather ominable, rain and a thick fog making scoring at all very lt. The first four players in the stroke competition quali- r the tournament, and were Messrs. Reid, Freemantle, ay, and Morton. Reid's round in the Medal Competition nposed as follows :—

, 3, 5, 6, 5, 4, 6, 3, 3=39. In 3, 4, 4, 5, 3, 5, 34, 3=35=74. ay be remarked en parenthèse that the course is a 9 and Reids 35 is the record.

finals were closely contested, Freemantle succeeding in g Reid by 2 up and 1 to play.

d now from Lucerne I must crave license to wander still r from a British Green, away, away to the far west where e Baltusrol Links, near New York, the American Amateur pionship was played, and in which event for the first n record an amateur champion of Great Britain was petitor. Mr. Walter Travis, however, quite failed to add laurel to his wreath, his play, both in the qualifying and in his subsequent two rounds (in the latter of which victim to Mr. G. A. Ormiston, of Pittsburg, by 3 and 1) ry indifferently good. The latter is a Scotsman by birth ed his Golf on the Old Luffness Course. He is in quite rank of American Golfers. The eventual winner of the nship was Mr. Chandler Egan, of Chicago, who beat irreshoff, of Enwanoch, in the final by the big margin . Mr. Egan was captain of the "All West" Team when they played the Oxford and Cambridge Golfing which match he was beaten by 4 holes by Mr. Norman The runner up, Mr. Heirrshoff had before his own eaked out last years' runner up Mr. Byers, of county, by 5 and 4—one of the American contingent who came over to Britain this spring. The Newquay (Cornwall) Club Annal 36 holes Amateur Stroke Competition was held on 14th September. The winning total last year was 163 returned by Mr. J. K. Willis, and it is a curious coincidence that the same score again this year headed the list. This was made by Mr. R. C. Simpson, next to him came H. C. Tringham, with 165, followed by a tie in 166 for 3rd place.

That marvellous old Golfer, Tom Morris, has recently been showing excellent form at St. Andrew's. Playing in a 3 ball match with Dr Holcroft and Mr. Williams, Old Tom went out in 41. This remarkably steady scoring he did not keep up, but managed to come in in 48, to when it is remembered that the old man is now in his 84th year a round of 89 is simply wonderful. There was a big field on 7th and 8th September for the Royal North Devon Golf Club's Autumn Meeting at Westward Ho. The best score on the first day was returned by the Hon'ble O. Scott, son of Lord Eldon, and brother of the thrice lady Champion Lady Margaret Hamilton Russell (née Scott). Mr. Scott's round was 77, which with 5 strokes added made him take sixth place in the handicap competition but gained for him the Hope-Grant Challenge Medal with memento. On the following day he was round in 78, this total entitled him to the Club Silver Medal and Lind Testimonial for best aggregate scratch scores of the two days' play. His brother, the Hon'ble D. Scott, won the President's prize for handicaps of 12 and under—aggregate of 3 scores. The Westward Ho Ladies' Club held their autumn meeting during the same week. Several of the Devon County players competed, including the Captain, the Hon'ble Lois Yarde-Buller, Miss Morant, Miss Hopkins, etc., and a member of the Kent County Team (Mrs. Wilson Hoare). The Meeting concluded with a Mixed Foursome Competition in which 18 couples entered, this was won by Mrs. and Mr. Nicholls with 98−10=88. The best gross return was by Miss Morant and Lord Churston 95−5½=89½. The Approach and Putting Competition was won by Mrs. Wilson Hoare and the second prize by Miss Hopkins.

In Yorkshire, too, the Ladies have been very pleasantly and busily occupied for the Scarboro Club has been holding high revels. For the Ladies' Challenge Bowl open to members of the Home Club only, the Yorkshire Captain, Miss Bertha Thompson, was the winner with two capital scores of 84 and 83. There was a difference of no less than 31 strokes between her gross aggregate and the next one below hers which was 198 returned by Miss Bolton. An open competition on the following day resulted in favour of Miss Lockwood with 86−10=76. Miss Thompson again accomplishing 83 which brought her to third place. The men were equally fortunate in having fine weather and a large entry for their autumn meeting which was concluded on 12th September, when for the Scarboro Cup Captain Graham defeated the Hon'ble R. Jervis after a tie in 79 net. For the Bedford Challenge Cup Mr. Maxwell Rouse led the field with a net 77, and for the medal competition Mr. Sowden with 90—10=80 put in a win followed closely by the Rev. S. C. Walley in 81 net after which four competitors tied with 82. The Huddersfield ladies have been very much occupied with matches and meeting : on the 20th September they played a return match with the Leeds Club at Trixby Park which they won by 15 holes to 1. Only a few players entered the preceding day for the Bogey Competition which was tied for by Mr. Houghton and Mrs. Naylor, both 1 down.

The Royal Guernsey Club held their Annual Open Amateur Competition for the Tradesmen's Challenge Cup on Monday, 19th September Play was by stroke 36 holes. For the Cup Mr. C. C. Dooty (Ilkley Club) 81+88=169 and G. D. Morgan (Royal Guernsey) 89+89=169 tied. Next followed P. Shaw Stewart (Royal Guernsey) 82+88=170.

Players are beginning to return to their home courses again and settling down to the routine of Monthly Medals, Monthly Bogey competitions and friendly matches. But some linger still, loth to leave the sea side wind swept links, for the bustling City and crowded "House." Lahinch, that charming South Irish Links, has been attracting large numbers of players at their club meeting on 15th September, and following days. Almost all the English and Scottish players, who had taken part in the South of Ireland Championship the previous week, were easily persuaded to stay on. The "Phelps" Vase Competition, match play under handicap, attracted 36 competitors, amongst whom were Messrs. Horace Castle, S. H. Foy, David Forster, and H. A. Boyd. The Chiswick player (Castle) ultimately even with a penalty of 15 proved the winner, after some very close matches, two of his victories being only proved such on the 19th green. In the final he met a brother of the Irish Close Champion, Mr. Cecil Boyd and only won the victory on the 19th green. In the Mixed Foursomes partnered with Miss Shaw, Mr. Castle was again successful.

Mr. Walter Travis has given his impressions of British Golf in an American journal and his criticism of the Sandwich Links and of the play of our leading amateurs although sympathetic and kindly is unmistakably frankly outspoken : "Oh wad the powers the giftie gie us to see oursel's as ithers see us"! and yet when "ithers" do expose our weakness we are very apt to resent it, for does it not wound us mostly in our most vulnerable spot—self love. In Mr. Travis' criticism our insular pride gets a severe set down, and we learn that from what others see in us, we have still very much to learn at Golf and all the while Mr. Travis, when measuring his strength over here with the pick of our amateurs, found time to spot what he considers the weakest spot in our armour and in his criticism comments freely on that "heel of Achilles" i. e., we are too intent on and attach too much importance to our tee shots, trying to get an extra long ball away, and neglect the great importance of accurate approaching. A criticism itself, Mr Travis' article is bound to provoke much counter criticism in Golfing circles, and it will be interesting and amusing to notice how British Golfers accept his summing up of their driving as a "sensualism of swiping," which he says has been indulged in for two years after the innovation of the American balls at the expense of their short game by British Golfers.

The entry for the Royal and Ancient Club's Autumn Meeting on 27th September at St. Andrews was the largest on record. No less than 166 players put down their names as against 159 for the same competition last year, and included such famous amateurs as Messrs. Robert Maxwell Edward and Ewnley Blackwell, Leslie Balfour-Melville, J. L. Low, J. E Laidlay, W. Herbert Fowler, Norman Hunter, T. Mansfield Hunter, the Hon'ble Osmond Scott, Lieutenant C. K. Hutchinson etc. Play was for the medal presented by King William IV. won last year with the record score of 76 by Mr Robert Maxwell and for the Club Gold Medal which last year went to Mr. Leslie Balfour-Melville with 79 for second best score. According to the time-honoured and studiously observed custom, the newly-elected Captain, Mr. Ralph Dalzell, winning the Medal indicative of office (presented by Queen Adelaide) drove the first ball from the tee, then followed the scratch players. The first noteworthy return was made by Mr. Leslie Balfour-Melville in 80 A little later, however, a young St. Andrew's University Golfer, Mr. A G. Barry, handed in a 75 made up as follows :—

Out 5, 4, 5, 4 5, 4, 5, 5, 4=39. In 4, 3, 5, 3 5, 4, 4, 5, 3=36=75, and with his brilliant 3 at the home hall, it was thought certainly that his, the new record, would carry off the prize, but at golf surprises are the order of the day, and even one broken record did not suffice, for Mr. Norman Hunter came in with a marvellous score of 74 made up as follows :—

Out, 4, 4, 5, 4, 5, 5, 5, 3, 4=39. In 4, 4, 3, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4=35=74.

The compiler of this wonderful record score, Mr. Norman Hunter, is well known on many greens, it may be remembered he captained the Cambrige 'Varsity team some few years ago and did well last year for the combined Universities in their American tour. His new record for the St. Andrews Course, beats the professional one held by J. H. Taylor of 75 made in the Championship of 1900. In this round Mr. Hunter was partnered with the Hon'ble Osmond Scott, who returned a 76, and it was not until after his card was handed in that it was discovered a 5 had been marked when it should have been a 4. The Committee, however, very rightly decided that his original total of 76 must stand, but for this unlucky incident Mr. Scott would have tied with Mr. Barry for the Club Medal. His round was compiled as follows :—

Out 4, 6, 4, 4, 6, 4, 4, 2, 3=37. In 4, 3, 5, 4, 4, 4, 5, 6, 4=39 =76.

The draw for the Professional Golfers' Association Tournament for £210 in money prizes to be held at Richmond on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday on 4th, 5th, 6th October, the old Deer Park Course took place on the 27th September at the office of the Association. Thirty-two players have qualified and with the exception of Jack White, Tom Vardon, and Andrew Kircaldy, this field includes the very highest professional golfing talent. Full particulars will be given in my next letter of what certainly should be the finest performance of Golf in the Metropolitan districts of the year. Yet another Course is added to the already enormous existing number, this is at Bonar, N.B. The opening ceremony was performed on Saturday, 24th September, by Mr. Andrew Carnegie, of Skibo Castle, in the presence of a large and locally representative assembly. Mrs. Carnegie was conducted to the first tee by the Secretary of the Club Mr. D. Sutherland, and having driven a ball, and made short speech, she declared the course (9 holes) open. A silver mounted and inscribed club was presented to her as a memento of the occasion, and the recipient having replied in suitable and grateful terms the proceedings terminated.

The last of the Scottish Championship was decided at Gullane on the week ending 24th September, when a large entry of clubs fought for the "Glasgow Evening Times Trophy" including such well-known clubs as Edinburgh, Bunkers, Carlton, Stewarts College, Prestwick, St. Nicholas, Gullane, Carnoustie, Cathcart Castle, Dumbarton, New Alban, Troon Portland, etc.

Eventually St. Matthews, Edinburgh, defeated Carnoustie in the final by 2 and 1, the winning club being represented by W. Shirroch and J. Fergus, whilst for "Carnoustie Messrs. F. Scroggie, and C. Harris did yeoman service, the clubs which fell to the victors being Heriots, Greenhill, Burntisland, London, Direlton Castle, Carnoustie, and those over whom Carnoustie was victorious being Prestwick, St. Nicholas, Millport, Helensburgh, Dumbarton, Troon Portland. The Trophy was, therefore, carried in great triumph to the East, the holders (Cathcart Castle) having succumbed in the second he .

Dent and Stewart, in whic former stood within one point of game, when his oppon still required three. In the semi-finals Mr. Keene beat M Pym somewhat unexpectedly, and Mr. Stewart's easy victory er Mr. Thearston was also a considerable surprise, the ultim te winner playing an extremely strong game. DOUBLES HANDICAP.

THE final of the Doubles Handicap was played on Friday last between Colonel Wheler and Captain Jackson and Messrs. Stewart and Foley (both pairs receiving the same handicap) before a very small gallery. Colonel Wheler and his partner were very smart off the mark and had snatched the first game almost before their opponents knew they had started, and though Messrs. Stewart and Foley improved more and more as the match went on, and only just failed to secure the third game, they lost by 3 games to love, 45 aces to 24. The match was not nearly so one-sided as the score would indicate, as Messrs. Stewart and Foley were rather more than holding their own at the end, but they started too slowly and could not get going in time to save the game. There were several fair rallies in which Colonel Wheler and Mr. Stewart were most prominent, but Mr. Foley was quite off his game and the service taken all round was poor, quite the best being Captain Jackson, who, in spite of occasional lapses, combined good length with a fair amount of pace, though his play in the rallies was very erratic and displayed the lack of practice from which he has suffered. Colonel Wheler was very steady. Results :—

First Round.

Colonel C. S. Wheler and Captain T. D. Jackson (4) beat Lieutenant-Colonel Peck, I.M.S., and Mr. W. E. Bayley 15—11, 15—8.

Perkins (scratch,), Messrs. E. W. Collin and H. Collingridge (scratch), Major G. Lubbock, R. E. and Mr. F. M. Buckland (5), Messrs. F. T. Paine and A. T. Chotzner (3), and Messrs. F. H. Stewart and B. Foley (1).

Second Round.

Beachcroft and Porter beat Rae and Radcliffe 15—1, 15—9.
Wheler and Jackson beat Bythell and Perkins, 15—4, 15—5.

SKITTLE GYMKHANA AT WELLINGTON.

THE Skittle Gymkhana Meeting organised by Captain A. S. Toogood, Honorary Secretary, came off this (Saturday, the 15th October), evening in the presence of a large and fashionable gathering. The card presented seven events, but it was a pity to note that only two ladies, Miss Byron and Miss Baddeley, competed for the event No. 3, set apart for ladies. There were two accidents. Lieutenant Wilkinson, of the East Yorkshire Regiment, from Burma, who came up with the Depôt details, was thrown off his horse while taking off at a hurdle and had to be carried to the hospital. Captain Seller, of the Essex, had a fall in the Potato and Button Race, but he was not seriously hurt. Owing to these accidents there was some delay in going through the different events, and the meeting terminated only at 6 30 P.M. The band of the 1st D.L.I. under the baton of Mr. A. Hind, furnished music and enlivened the proceedings. Colonel Mayne, C.B., Officer Commanding the Southern District and Major Nason, D.S.O., were the Judges, while Captain Toogood, acted as Starter. Major Buck and Officers of the D.L.I., were "At Home to their" friends on the ground, and on the whole a pleasant and most enjoyable evening was spent. The weather fortunately kept fine. It is hoped that Captain Toogood will arrange for similar meetings occasionally and keep the place lively. Details :—

TENT PEGGING.—Three runs allowed. Points for style and finish.

(1) Captain Gibson, 1st Durham Light Infantry.
(2) Captain Toogood, Royal Warwickshire Regiment.

Colonel Mansel, Mr. Mathews, and Mr. James Stanes, also competed.

(1) Lieutenant Philips, of the 1st Durham Lght Infantry.

Miss Byron and Miss Baddeley also competed, but were unsuccessful in going round all the posts.

LADIES' RACE.—Ladies to ride up polo ground, round a post and back to starting point, with a tennis racket and ball ; the ball to be kept on the racket. If the ball falls off, ladies may dismount and pick it up.

(1) Miss Baddeley.

POTATO AND BUTTON RACE.—Gentlemen to ride up polo ground over a hurdle, to where the ladies are sitting, the gentleman will then hand to a lady a potato, which she will peel and then sew a button on to the back of his coat. Gentleman will then mount and return over another hurdle to the starting point.

This, as usual, created considerable amusement and attracted a good number of competitors. Leutenant Kidd of the 1st Durham Light Infartry was declared the successful competitor.

HITTING POLO BALL—Round the posts and through goal. Near side strokes only allowed.

(1) Lieutenant Tyndall } Both of the
(2) Lieutenant Shrieff } 1st D. L. I.

Lieutenant Philips nominated by Miss Baddeley.

DISTANCE HANDICAP FOR PONIES AND HORSES.—Once round the course.

A good number of local ponies entered, but the favourite won easily.

THE BEST OILS FOR MOTOR CARS.

Wilburine for cylinders ... Rs. 6-8 per gallon Tin. | Valvoline for Bearings, etc. ... Rs. 5-0 per gallon Tin.

Extract from the "Autocar."

LUBRICATING OILS.—[2422]—It may be instructive to your numerous readers to have the experiences of a motor car experimentalist on the behaviour of lubricating oils for motor work. In the first onset I tried various sorts of oils, all of which left deposits of carbon and gumming matter in the cylinders and valves. These deposits are serious drawbacks, not only to the working of the pistons and valves, but also interfere with the proper sparking at the ignition plugs. I then tried the Valvoline Oil Co.'s oils, using "Wilburine" for the cylinders and "Valvoline" for the bearings, etc.; these being quite pure mineral oils, no deposits either of carbon or gumming matter were left. Every time the pistons, etc., have been examined they were quite bright, clean and well lubricated. The valves also keep in good condition and require very little regrinding. I have been quite free from sparking troubles since using the above lubricants. Any dust that alights on the working parts is easily wiped off, whereas with other oils dirt stuck fast through gumming.

Very much smaller quantities of these oils ("Wilburine" and "Valvoline") about one-third to one-quarter, are required, which more than balances the extra first cost. The wearing surfaces are besides in a magnificent condition. These advantages —viz., high-class lubrication, freedom from deposit in cylinders, gum in bearings, absence of sparking troubles, are too important to be neglected by any motorist.

There is a tendency to use various greases, instead of oils. Engineers have over and over again proved that greases give much greater frictional losses than oils; with motor car engines and bearings the lubricant that gives the least possible friction is the best.

I have referred to the advantages the motorist gets. I will mention another advantage these oils have to those whom the motorist passes, viz., the absence of the fried-fish-shop smell so often noted. Several persons have been very much struck by the absence of smell; even when the car has been standing for some time with the engines running, no trace of offensive odour has been apparent to the bystanders.

I mention these experiences, having no interest in the Valvoline Oil Co., that others may be benefited and save themselves trouble and their neighbours some annoyance.

HORSES AND DOGS IN FICTION.

THE announcement that a new edition de l the works of Whyte Melville is in proc preparation, reminds us of the position his v retain as classics among sporting fiction. Whyte Melville has had many imitators, but it needs some searching of memory before we can recall the name of a sporting novel which stands, not within measurable distance of his writings, but above the ruck of books which fall so far below the Whyte Melville standard. Surtees stands alone, and probably always will stand alone. His writing has the same individuality as that of Dickens: he created his own atmosphere, and if, like the Dickens' atmosphere, it was not quite that of real life, the fact only serves to widen the gulf between his works and those of subsequent writers. Whyte Melville's atmosphere differs from that of Surtees in its truth to real life: we do not find in his novels the caricatures, vigorous and clever, but none the less caricatures, which appear at home and alive in the Surtees' atmosphere.

Each author owes the acceptance his works still enjoy, and probably will always enjoy, to the fact that he was a sportsman first, and a writer of fiction afterwards. Surtees' popularity is due to the robust humour and force of his presentations, as well as to his intimate knowledge of all that pertains to hunting; but Whyte Melville's perhaps rests on a wider basis than his knowledge of sport, of the class for whom he wrote, and on the inevitable certainty with which he struck the right note. A critic said, with more penetration than he knew, that Whyte Melville was an author who knew what he was writing about, because "he did not make fellows ice their claret." He had style, which possibly does not count for much where intimate knowledge co-exists, and he had humour which he never forced. Surtees' style is less deserving of the name in the literary sense, which goes towards proof of our proposition that this qualification is not indispensable: his humour is undeniable, and if it is the broader humour of a past generation, we should not have it otherwise, for his characters would lose something of the tone of their day, which was a more outspoken age than that in which we live.

One of the secrets of Whyte Melville's success deserves closer consideration. We believe it right to say that Whyte Melville owes his lasting popularity in a large measure to his deep love for and nice understanding of the horse. Never have we had a writer of fiction who bestowed such infinite care and attention upon the horses in his books: their characters are almost as clearly drawn and as deftly shaded as the characters of his human puppets: and could horses read we are convinced that they would unanimously vote for Whyte Melville as the author who has exhibited the best understanding of, and displayed the closest sympanthy with, the equine race. Surtees is second to none in his knowledge of the horse as a servant: but with some intimacy with his writings we can nowhere recollect a passage which contains evidence of such feeling and sympathy as that which so greatly helps to commend the writings of Whyte Melville. His horses have character, but it is the character of caricature: "Xerxes" and "Arterxexes" for example dwell in mind rather by reason of their ungainly externals than by virtue of their inherent character. Whyte Melville's horses, on the contrary, depend far more upon their dispositions for place in memory than on appearance. Invite a clever artist to draw a portrait of one of Mr. Jorrocks' horses, and we know exactly the style of rawboned beast we shall see—"a hugly brute" in the words of the owner: but a portrait of Tilbury Nogo's "Saraband," or of almost any horse in Whyte Melville's novels, would stand for almost any hunter: it was characteristic of Whyte Melville that he drew his horses with a subtler pen than did Surtees.

It is easy to overlook merit in these days of many books when, as we are told on the authority of a publishers' journal, "three books out of four are almost as dead as mutton in three months:" but we should find it hard to name a book in which the animals are portrayed with such nicety as Whyte Melville's horses. We say "animals" advisedly, that we may embrace dogs in the remark. There are some admirably drawn dogs in fiction: the best and most carefully drawn is perhaps Dora Spenlow's "Jip" in David Copperfield. Dickens was a genuine dog lover, but his affection for dogs does not appear with great frequency in his novels. Jip is out and away the best: but when we come to look into that not very attractive spaniel's part in Dickens' best novel, we are constrained to admit that he is hardly an independent character: he does not, as it were, stand on his own feet. We never catch Jip apart from Dora except when he is bundled into the platewarmer to keep him from being a nuisance to Miss Trotwood. And the whole raison d'être of Jip lies on the surface: he is merely an accessory to Dora: he serves as the medium through which she displays her childishness: when Dora is silliest Jip is most in evidence: and when Dora dies Jip, his mission at an end, dies too. Dora would not be Dora without Jip, and Jip has no purpose apart from Dora: a fact which does not prevent the character of the dog from being the most complete animal portrait Dickens ever drew. Bill Sykes' dog in Oliver Twist and "Lion" in Little Dorrit, are mere shadows by comparison with Jip.

We have, of course, books in which the study of one individual animal is the leading motive: and the best of these in our judgment is the dog in Mr. Jack London's clever tale, The Call of the Wild, wherein canine character is brought out with a distinctness that indicates perfect understanding without the too common assistance of investment with human attribute. Dogs naturally lend themselves to the purpose of characterization more readily than any other animal: higher intelligence, more complex character, and greater accessibility to man are all in their favour: and for one good horse in fiction we could find half a dozen dogs. We have sometimes wondered why Kipling has never made use of animals in their legitimate place in his stories. Lacking nothing of knowledge of horse and dog nature, he has rarely turned horse and dog character to account, except in anthropomorphic vein particularly does this apply to his horses which, divested of their ability to talk, would be as good horses as any we know: but when words of wisdom issue from the chimney of a locomotive, and the voice of comfort emerges from a roller bolt, it would, we apprehend, be too much to expect horses and other animals to remain as silent as Nature made them. "Ouida" often exhibits a knowledge of dog nature that compares more than favourably with her knowledge of her own kind: and we could find passages in her books, though these have lain unread for many years, which indicate that her sympathy for animals did not stop short with the dog. To suggest that she understood horses will perhaps invite the reflection that the lady once made a horse win three Derbys: whereto we would reply that knowledge of horses and understanding of equine character does not necessarily imply acquaintance with even the elements of Turf-affairs. Thackeray managed to produce the best novel ever written without more than the most casual reference to either dogs or horses: Mrs. Bute Crawley's poodle and Jim Crawley's "little dawg," who was addicted to biting footmen's calves, are among the figures that never would be missed. Nor was George Eliot addicted to the portrayal of animal character, although her numerous novels deal so largely with life in the country. Tom Tulliver's dog, Yap, who disgraced his master by trying whether barking would not do as well as chasing a water rat, and Bob Jakin's helpmate, Mumps, are about the only dogs that can be called characters, and neither of these are particularly prominent: it is indeed only George Eliot's unrivalled gift of indicating a trait with a single touch that brings the poor spirited Yap to mind at all. There is plenty of room for horse and dog in the fiction of the future: and if we must await another Whyte Melville to render justice to the horse, there must be dog lovers with understanding enough and to spare among our living novelists.

According to a Liverpool newspaper, a certain cotton broker of that city, who has a weakness for shell fish, is a regular customer at a neighbouring oyster shop. The other morning he ordered Natives, and the waiter informed him that they were out of them. The broker thought that, in the absence of oysters, a lobster might do, but the lobsters likewise were off. Crab was his next choice, but the waiter regretfully informed him that the crabs were also among the absent. "Then why do you keep these things on the bill? Have you any shell fish at all!" the broker demanded. "Only eggs, sir," replied the waiter.

Sporting Notes.

THE dates of the Lucknow Army Cup Meeting have been changed to 24th, 26th, and 28th November. An advertisement elsewhere gives further details regarding this alteration.

The manufacture of sporting "copy" at this 'twixt and between season, imposes a task on the scribe similar to that allotted to the chosen ones a few odd centuries ago when they were called on to execute the brick Sans straw manœuvre. Fortunately, there happens to be such an institution in the land as the Tollygunge Club, and the executive thereof have nobly flung themselves into the breach and inaugurated a Gymkhana for next Saturday, the 29th. The following six items are down for discussion:—

1.—The Hie Over Stakes.—A handicap hurdle Race for bonâ fide paperchase horses. About 1 mile, over 5 flights.

2.—The Portly Stakes.—A distance handicap for horses or ponies, the property of Gentlemen who walk 12-7 or over. Owners up. About 3 furlongs.

3.—The Russa Road Stakes.—A handicap flat race for maiden horses. 6 furlongs.

5.—(Open Race).—The Cosmopolitan Stakes, a handicap flat race for maiden ponies 14-1 and under. 6 furlongs.

6.—The Jehu Stakes.—A handicap flat race for horses that have never won a race of any description value Rs. 50 or over and have regularly been driven up to date of entry. 5 furlongs.

In addition, an extra event has been catalogued, viz.: The Bell Cup, the terms of which run:—

A flat race for ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a race of any description value Rs. 50 or over. 14-1 to carry 12st. 7lbs. W. I.

Allowances—Arabs, 28lbs.; C.-B's, 14lbs. Penalties—Winners of previous Gymkhanas once. 7lbs.; twice, 10lbs.; oftener, 14lbs. About 3 furlongs.

The prospectus is certainly comprehensive enough to suit all sorts and conditions. The response from owners, however, has, we regret to say, not been very encouraging. Entries were advertised to close on Monday, and the returns that evening disclosed about seven competitors for the Russa Road Stakes; three for the Hurdle Race and the Bell Cup, whilst the remaining five items figured from the two to zero mark. The Portly Stakes claimed the honour of the "wooden spoon." A field of some kind can probably be raked up for this amongst the heavy weight division, but the Jehu Stakes will in all likelihood fall through. The folk who drive horses in their tum-tums, are in a very small minority compared to those who drive ponies, and it seems to us a better entry would have been obtained if the race was framed for the latter. Brougham, "phaeting," and office gharry horses of course there are in profusion; but the bulk of aspirants in the first two classes are barred by the statute of Anno Domini (or else infirm understandings) while the latter are mostly on the "hire system" and indulge in quite a sufficiency of 5 furlong sprints up and down Clive Street without being called on to repeat the performance out at Tollygunge. Entries were kept open till last night with what result we had not heard up to time of going to press.

Doings on the Calcutta course are still of an important nature and nothing is attempted by trainers beyond slow work. Mr. Hart's horses arrived from Bangalore and Poona a few days ago, and their appearance betokens Fergusson's usual skilful handiwork. Messrs. Apcar's and Galstaun's strings will probably arrive next week.

Messrs. G. Greenhill and W. H. Walmsley returned to Calcutta last week, both looking aggressively fit after their trip home.

We publish in our Shikar Columns to-day the revised rules for shooting in the Chamba State.

The Lucknow Sky Meeting opened on Tuesday with success and warm public support. Under the energetic administration of General Sir E. L. Elliot and his Stewards the course and enclosures have been immensely improved, the latter quite out of all knowledge. The first thing to strike the eye is the larger space provided, next the paddock on to which the range of stalls now faces, and by proper railing the lawns will not be encroached upon in future. A "place" totalisator is also among the innovations. As a correspondent writes:—"The second-class enclosure has also been considerably extended and provided with various conveniences. The new and spacious stand will be taken in hand next spring when perhaps the Apthorp gateway will be removed and rebuilt on more appropriate lines at the entrance to the big enclosure, and unlucky backers of horses will no longer be able to say the Lucknow race enclosure is the graveyard of their hopes. The beautiful green swards of the paddocks, lawns, and even the racing track are very refreshing to the eye."

Recent rain has benefitted the course exceedingly, and, with splendid entries for both this preliminary meeting and the Army Cup meeting to follow next month one can confidently predict capital sport all round, while not omitting to tender hearty congratulations to Captain Guest, the Honorary Secretary, on the general results of his brilliant and unceasing efforts to have everything up to the very best standard.

We have to acknowledge receipt of a copy of Vol. XVIII of that indispensible turf guide The Australian Racing Chronicle which grows in bulk and utility with every issue. The period embraced in this volume is from 1st February to 31st July of the current year. The book can be had of Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Company, Calcutta.

Colonel P. K. L. Beaver and Mr. Boteler, the official handicapper, returned to India last week and are up at Lucknow.

Undecided, a six year old chestnut gelding by Tostig—Excelsior, has just been bought by Mr. Galstaun, the Calcutta turfite. Undecided won the April Handicap of £230 at the V. R. C. Meeting on the 16th April last, carrying 7st. 3lbs. and securing a neck verdict. Up to July this was his only success out of half a dozen tries. This smart gelding fulfilled five engagements as a three years old and scored one win—the Riverside Purse of £35 at Maribyrnong. In his fourth year he was under starters' orders ten times and running in pretty good company put another bracket to his credit when he carried off the Cornwall Handicap of £176 at the V. R. C. June Meeting, 1902. His sole engagement the first six months of the following year found him among the "also rans"; but in the second half of the year he was out no less than sixteen times, running under the colours of three separate owners, and he had five wins—the Rupertswood Handicap of £50 at Sunbury, the Valley Handicap of £50 at Mooree Valley, the Glenhuntly Handicap of £200 at the V. A. T. C. May Meeting, the Mentone Cup of £100 at the Mentone R. C. Meeting the same month, and the Richmond Handicap of £160 at the V. A. T. C. June Meeting last year. He ought to prove useful up here.

Mr. W. M. Beresford, the Secretary to the C. T. C., has returned from his holiday, much improved in health we are glad to hear.

A petrified horse lies in about six feet of water in a lake six miles south of Lake Tahoee in the Sierra Nevada mountains. The region is seldom visited by tourists, which probably accounts for the fact that few, outside of the immediate vicinity, ever heard of this curiosity. The animal lies in about six feet of water, and has been there for years. It is stone-grey in color, the petrification having become complete. The lake is surrounded by banks of snow and ice, and the water is almost down to the freezing point. It is said that bodies lying in lakes of this temperature are preserved as if in refrigerators, and for a long time it was supposed that this was the case with the remains of the horse. But several years ago some divers ventured into the lake in spite of the cold, and discovered that the animal was petrified. Desolation Valley is the name of the place where the lake is situated, and it has been well named.

We regret to announce the death of Lieutenant-General Owen Williams, which took place at his residence, Temple House, Marlow, on the 2nd instant. The health of the General had given cause for considerable anxiety for some time past, but a splendid constitution enabled him to withstand more than one attack of illness. Some six weeks ago, however, more serious symptoms developed, and although the patient rallied on more than one occasion, his condition on the 1st was exceedingly critical, and at 4-30 A.M. next day he passed peacefully away in the presence of his wife and only surviving son. The funeral took place on Thursday, the 6th, at Bisham Church, near Marlow.

Lieutenant-General Owen Williams was of the best type of British sportsmen, and excelled in almost every branch of outdoor sports. Everything he took up commanded his serious attention, and whether it was playing cricket at Eton, while serving with the Blues, big game shooting in India, hunting in the shires, angling for the regal salmon in Norway or Scotland, steering his yacht in many seas, or participating in the "Sport of Kings," he was thorough and an enthusiast. He was a firm believer that enthusiasm is the vitality of sport, and fulfilled his belief in both the letter and spirit. The descendant of an old Welsh family long established at Craig-y-Don in Anglesey, he was born in Berkeley-square in 1836. His father was an ardent politician and a Berkshire landowner, and it is on record that he sat in the House of Commons for Great Marlow consistently from 1820 to 1868, when death brought his long period of Parliamentary service to a close. The subject of this present sketch was educated at Eton, where, though he did not get a place in the eleven, he developed good form as a cricketer, and from that time never ceased to take an interest in the game. In 1854 he entered the Royal Horse Guards, became a lieutenant in 1856, got his troop two years later, was promoted lieutenant-colonel in 1866, colonel in 1871, and major-general in 1882, when the new rules of the service compelled him to give up the command which he dearly prized. He was exceedingly fond of his profession and popular in his regiment. In 1862 he married Fanny Florence, youngest daughter of Mr. St. George Francis Caulfield, of Donarvon Castle, County Roscommon. She died in 1876, and six years later Major-General Williams married Nina Mary Adelaide, daughter of Sir J. G. Tollemache, Bart. From 1880 to 1885 he represented Great Marlow in the Conservative interest in the House of Commons; he was also a magistrate for Buckinghamshire, Berkshire, Aylesbury, and Carnarvonshire. He was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-general in 1887. He accompanied the Prince of Wales (now the King) during his Indian tour, 1875—1876, as Equerry, and also held the office of Silver Stick-in-Waiting to the late Queen Victoria. During his trip to India, General Owen Williams, who was a personal friend of the Prince of Wales, made his mark by bringing down many fine tigers, while he on one occasion shot no less than a hundred couple of snipe—a remarkable feat. He was also at one time a leading member of the Four-in-Hand Club, and always had a smart team at the meets of the club at the Magazine, Hyde Park. Although he at one time owned a few greyhounds, he never scored any prominent success in coursing.

General Williams commenced a lengthy and fairly successful career on the Turf about the year 1880, and in the next session he was elected a member of the Jockey Club. His colours were then registered as "white and black cap," which he changed the following year to "white, cardinal sleeves and cap." At the commencement, he placed a horse or two with Jones at Downs Cottage, Epsom, but he subsequently removed his horses to Newmarket, where they were trained by George Bloss for a time. In 1883, Monotony, a two year old filly, won him several races, while Nautilus, Fitzfulke, and Cohort were also successful wearers of his colours. Nautilus was a most serviceable son of Hermit out of Barchettina (dam also of The Abbot, etc.), and was the means of landing his owner several nice stakes, though he ran in no race of importance. In 1884, he won races with Corhot, Nautilus, Glance, Dulcimer, Dean Swift, Monotony, Fitzfulke, Black Diamond, Can't, and others. In the following year he became associated with the Chetwynd House division, of whom Sir George Chetwynd was the most prominent owner, whiel R. G. Sherrard ably officiated as trainer, with Charles Wood for the leading jockey. The death of his son, when fighting the Matabele, was a great blow to the tall, commanding soldier, who, however, bore his loss like a sportsman. He owned some good horses, including Perigord, while he had a half-share in that phenomenal performer, The Bard. One of his most conspicuous possessions was Pensioner, who ran second to La Fleche in the Cambridgeshire, and came to an untimely end, having—at any rate so it was believed—been the subject of foul play.

Paris is to have an equestrian museum containing models of all classes of horses, and of the carriages which they have drawn, from the chariot of the sun down to the Japanese ammunition waggon. The collection of carriages will be very curious and interesting, but will probably want more space than is available, say, in all the shops in Long Acre. bear in mind that your object is to impart nourishment; invalids are faddy, and their digestive organs weak.

Remembering this, try LEMCO. Besides being very nourishing, Lemco dishes are so delicious and tempting that the faddiest invalid relishes them; they are so digestible that the weakest stomach can assimilate them.

very other article of domestic general use, has not been of a single mind in regard to carriages, which differ as much as the English landau and the Russian droshky. The most primitive of all is, or rather was, the posting cart, used in Roumania as late as the early days of the last century. It was simply a long box, placed on two axles, each of which went through the centre of a solid wooden wheel two feet in diameter cut from a log of oak. No fewer than four horses were harnessed by ropes to this awful vehicle, which was then stuffed with hay. The traveller lay on it like a sofa, and was then bumped, at a gallop, over the plains ad infinitum.

Four teams comprise the entries, so far, for the Championship Polo Tournament which opens at Umballa on the 7th proximo. These are the 9th and 12th Lancers, the 15th Hussars and Patiala.

The home papers to hand this week say that the day Pretty Polly was to cross to France there was a violent storm in the Channel and that she was not put on board that day. The presumption is that rough weather prevailed on the Friday, and that she was not fit for her race on the following Sunday, hence her defeat by Preston II.

For years those who own, train, or ride horses on the Calcutta track have had just cause to grumble at the dangerous practices of the military whose penchant for firing blank cartridges and swarming on the course during the hours devoted to work in connection with racing has been most pronounced. All racing men will hail with satisfaction the appearance of a recent Station Order which says:—"The maidan is at all times available for the exercise of troops, either Regulars or Volunteers. During the cold weather, from 15th October to 31st March, whilst horses are being trained on the Race Course troops are to avoid crossing the Race Course during the early morning. (3) Blank firing should not be carried on within 40 yards of any of the public thoroughfares around the maidan nor on the roads leading to the Fort if vehicles are being driven along in the vicinity. (4) Troops are to avoid firing blank when ladies riding or driving in carriages are in their immediate vicinity, or when nervous riders are about.

Our Poona Correspondent writes :—The penultimate day's racing of the Poona season in the shape of the "10th Extra" afforded a capital afternoon's sport in which, it is said, backers had slightly the better of the layers of odds, but the stentorian-voiced brigade have the reputation of taking care of themselves on the whole and I hear of no necessity for any charity concert on behalf of the fraternity at large. A Lilliput Arab handicap set the machinery in motion. Aga Shamsudin Shah's Swazi, despite a suspicion of roguery—real or assumed—being installed favourite with a lot of stable money to support him, and the little grey displaying much speed and little roguery won quite easily with Zurrif second and Dillerjung, who has scarcely fulfilled his earlier great promise, third.

Only a quartette of 14-1 ponies turned out for a 7-furlong scurry and Mr. Galstaun's Ping Pong was much in the public mouth. The speedy La France in receipt of a stone and five pounds from Mr. Galstaun's mare, was also fancied but extinguished her great chance by getting off badly nor were her hopes of ultimate victory increased by little Bennett making up all his lost ground in the first 2½ furlongs. But the winner turned up in Olga excellently ridden by Melsom, who scraped home by three-quarters of a length ; a neck between Ping Pong and La France.

Nine Arabs went under Mr. O'Gorman's orders at the 1¼ mile post, the old favourite, Narunjee, being made favourite. Nor were the fancy out in their reckoning for Narunjee just managed to get home but unhappily Ames, who was a delinquent quite recently in the same respect, failed to hold his mount straight and crossing Robinson on Aga Shamsudin Shah's Sandow in so palpable a manner close to home that the appeal which was made to the Stewards could but have one termination and the race was consequently awarded to Sandow, Skylark thereby securing second money and that handsome, disappointing Connaught becoming third.

In a 7 furlong high weight handicap for horses, which had not won a race of the value of Rs. 1,500 since 1st April 1902, only five came to the scratch, the old stager Dumbbell with Morrison up winning handsomely by the better part of two lengths from Gum, Prestwick, the favourite, failing to sustain Aga Shamsudin Shah's good luck.

A large field of Arab ponies, which had failed to win a race of Rs. 150 since the mystic 1st April responded to the handicapper's estimation of their respective virtues, and well again the cognoscenti, hit the right nail on the head in selecting the beautiful little blood pony Kour Saheb as their champion, though it was none too easy as he was about all out under Robinson's excellent effort to win by half a length from False Start who was in turn but a neck in front of little Swazi who had already run and won during the afternoon and who struggled so honestly that all doubts as to his rumoured lack of gameness may be dispelled.

The "Captings" next disported themselves, Ames, Thompson, and Elliott also having mounts with the usual 10lb. penalties attached. But they found themselves in useful company and that nice, quiet horseman Major Edwards on his own pony Kuzan, stalling off a determined challenge from Captain Hopwood on Surhan, secured the verdict by half a length, Major England's Rocket with Mr. Stewart up half a length behind.

A selling race for 14-hand Arabs brought a successful afternoon's racing to a close, nine trying their luck, the favourite in Mr. A. W. P.'s Mudmie just catching the eye of the man in the box by three-quarters of a length, but the owner had to pay 400 rupees over the selling price to retain the winner whose 55 seconds impressed the public to that extent.

A horse-disease new to England has appeared at Ipswich Barracks, and several animals have been shot. It is called Epizootic Lymphangitis, supposed to have been imported from South Africa. If this proves to be the dreaded "Horse Sickness" under a scientific name, the strongest measures of precaution should be rigorously applied. The carcases of the first victims were buried in quick-lime, but the Board of Agriculture considered that burning would be safer. Doubtless it is right, but the local officials found a difficulty in carrying out the idea. They laid two of the slaughtered horses in a large trench, heaped bundles of faggots on them, set two to three tons of coal on the top, and soaked the mass with paraffin. It was confidently supposed that only ashes and bones would remain when the fire burnt out ; but this hope was disappointed so far that the authorities ask permission to resume the quick-lime process. The experience is worth note. Many murderers have discovered how hard it is to consume a human body, but they could seldom work at their ease. How did "the ancients" manage? We can scarcely believe that they were satisfied with the perfunctory cremation of the Hindus.

We hear from Jubbulpore that quite a good meeting is expected next week. Mr. Preston's arrangements are excellent, and the programme has attracted owners and sportsmen from distant centres.

A handicap polo tournament, organised by Colonel De Lisle and run on Hurlingham lines, began at Lucknow on the 24th instant, when two matches were played. The first was between the R. A. composed of Captain Leighton 1, Mr. Stanley, changing with Mr. St. John 2 ; Captain Davidson 3 ; and Major Massy, changing with Major Hussly, back, and the 6th Bengal Cavalry team, comprising Mr. L. E. McConaghey 1, Mr. G. N. Shaw, changing with Mr. P. N. Craigie 2 ; Mr. Baker (Glosters), changing with Mr. Twedie (Glosters) 3; and Captain C. C. Newnham back. A fast and even game resulted in a win for the Gunners by four goals to two.

The second game was between the Royal Dragoons, B. team.

Mr. W. T. Hodgson, changing with Mr. A. H. D. Chapman, 1 ; Captain H. D. McNeile, 2 ; Captain T. P. Godman, 3 ; Lord Basing, changing with Captain the Hon'ble A. Hamilton Russell as back, and the Gymkhana team, comprising Mr. Hermon Hodge, changing with Mr. Hutchinson, 1 ; Mr. Stice, I. C. S., 2 ; Mr. Sullivan, E., 3 ; Captain the Hon'ble F. Guest, back.

This was another keenly contested game ; the Dragoons showing better combination than the Gymkhana won by five goals to nil.

Among the passengers brought up to Calcutta from Australia by the Orotava was Mr. J. Rowan, well known in coursing and turf circles in Sydney and elsewhere. He has coming up in the Umta, a small but unusually select shipment of horses by such sires as Grafton and Lochiel and one a grandson of Trenton. They are all unbroken, but he is confident they are worth the attention of buyers, being all thoroughly good and desirable in every way. They go to "Tattersalls," Bhowanipore, where his race horses Lucretia, Blackthorn, that very nice looking mare Olga Patricia, and the beautifully bred Saxon are now in regular work for the cold weather meeting. Mr. Rowan has also, he tells us, something novel and choice in the way of Colonial saddlery turned out by the best maker in Australia. Mr. Rowan, ere he left Sydney, was entertained at a banquet by a large number of sportsmen and had a big "send off" at the steamer in which he left.

The entries for The Army Cup now number forty-five, third entries having brought in another six. Entries up to date are published in our Turf Columns ; final entries close on the 15th proximo.

A two days' race meeting is advertised to take place at Asansol (E.I.R.) on the 9th and 11th November, Entries closing on Tuesday, the 8th idem. There are to be seven races each day of Rs. 150 each and of these three on the first day are closed to residents of the Burdwan and Manbhoom districts.

The dates for the 8th Lahore and Mian Mir Dog Show have not yet been fixed, probably the 30th and 31st December will be appropriated, and the Honorary Secretaries may be Mr. H. A. Close and the Secretary N. W. K. A.

Colonel C. T. Bingham, who is well-known in India as a writer on entomological subjects, is at present engaged upon a work on the butterflies of India for "The Fauna of British India" series, which is being published at home under the direction of the India Office on behalf of the Government of India.

A Darjeeling Correspondent writes :—"Last September I found a siskin's (Chrysomitris spinoides) nest in a clump of bamboos with four eggs—in time three young were hatched. I intended rearing them when large enough to take away from the parent birds. A week after seeing the young I went to see how they were getting on, but found the nest empty, my first thought was that a black eagle was the robber, but on looking on the ground below, and a short way from the nest, I saw a lizard with the whole head of a young bird in its mouth. I immediately took them up as they were and put them in a bottle of spirit."

Mr. Bell Irving has returned to Calcutta : Metalwing follows with a few other good ones later on.

A Report on the conduct of elephant-catching operations in the Southern Forest Circle for the year ending the 30th June 1904, received from Mr. C. E. Brasier, Conservator of Forests, Southern Circle, is published. From it we learn that operations were conducted during the year in the divisions of North and South Malabar and South Coimbatore. Seven elephants were captured, and it is satisfactory to note that, except for a slight injury to the tusker captured in North Malabar, there were no casualties. This is creditable to the officers concerned. One of the elephants has been sold and the rest are reported to be in good health. The small number of captures in North Malabar is attributed to the fact that owing to heavy rains the Mysore forests were well supplied with water and there was therefore no necessity for the elephants to cross over into the British forests. Besides elephants, many animals fell into the pits. Of the twenty-three bison, four died and two had to be shot as they had fractured their hips in the fall. Of the three tigers, one escaped and the other two, which were cubs, were shot. Of the two bears, one was shot and the other escaped. Two of the sambur died, and all the remaining animals were released.

New Zealand continues to be the paradise of trout-fishers. Here is an extract from a letter dated 27th August last :—

"The trout fishing at Rotorua has been particularly good during the season. A register was kept showing the catches made in Rotorua Lake and adjacent waters. At the close of the season the record showed that 6,952 trout had been caught, aggregating a weight of 13 tons 13 cwt. 3 qr. 21½lbs. Amongst the fish taken were many weighing 12lbs. to 18lbs. Enormous as the registered catch was, it is considered that probably a third more was actually taken, as many fishermen failed to supply the required particulars. The total quantity of trout taken from the lakes and streams in this district is therefore calculated at close on 20 tons. Many of the greatest catches were made by trolling in the lake."

Captain R. L Kennion, writing in the Pall Mall Magazine for October, on the antelope in Thibet, mentions that not many years ago this particularly graceful beast could be seen in large herds in the Chang Chenmo and adjacent valleys of Ladak on the northern Kashmir frontier; but of late they have been driven eastward, till now they are scarcely found to the west of the Thibetan border, while to see them roaming the plain in any considerable numbers one has to travel far into the forbidden country, and reach a land inaccessible to all globe-trotters and unleisured persons. Everyone has heard how the Thibetan antelope scrapes for himself a hole in the ground, in which he lies so still that his long, slender horns look like dry willow shoots sticking out of the ground; and it was only this morning (says Captain Kennion) that my wife had pointed out with delight three little beds side by side in the sand—a big one, a smaller one, and a very diminutive one, evidently the resting-place during the night of some "papa, maman, et bebe" of the timid wilderness folk. Antelope are very pretty beasts, standing about 32 inches high. Their colour varies from brown to fawn, the under part being of a lighter shade, almost white. Under the short, stiff hair lies a loose layer of wonderful soft white wool, which is woven into exquisite pashmina. This can be plucked out in handfuls, and is valuable. Their slender horns have a graceful curve, and frequently have a high polish in the natural state.

In a country like Thibet, where an old provision-tin or the lid of a packing-case is a very valuable asset, the horns are put by the natives to all sorts of uses. Perhaps the most appropriate use is as a rifle rest, when a pair of them are attached to the barrel by a hinge, the points when in use sticking into the ground. The better the rifle, of course, the more help such a rest would be; and it has often occurred to me to ask why we should be superior to the idea for our third-class shots in the Army. The Thibetans also make an ingenious trap for antelope out of the same material, and this they prefer using to bullets or powder, which are hard to come by. This consists of a ring three or four inches in diameter, made of splinters of horn bound round with goat's-hair twine. Sticking out towards the centre are a number of horn spikes, so arranged as to allow an antelope's foot to go through in one direction, but not to be withdrawn. The snare is covered with a sprinkling of sand, and set attached to a heavy stone on one of the numerous paths made by antelope. Though their colour matches their surroundings, antelope, owing to their being so often on the move, are not, as a rule, difficult to see, but when motionless, like other hill beasts, they "turn into stones." And by the same token stones are frequently mistaken for one's quarry, and, curiously enough, if you start with the idea that a stone on a distant hill is an animal, the more you stare at it the more it appears to be ascending the hill.

Athletic Notes.

THE Calcutta Football Club holds its Annual General Meeting at the Saturday Club tomorrow at 9-30 P. M.

The Englishman's London Correspondent wired on the 19th instant :—"Sir Thomas Lipton is unable to prevail Mr. Watson or Mr. Fife to design another challenger for the America Cup. It is believed that Sir Thomas's intention to race next autumn has been abandoned."

This will be hailed with satisfaction by those who deplore the mingling of sport with advertisement.

The brevity of the replies sent to a correspondent who asked the opinions of Lord Alverstone, Mr. Andrew Lang, and the headmasters of Eton and Haileybury, on Miss Arabella Kenealy's doubtless sincere observation that "there is no more stupid person than your man or woman who excels in games," is commendable. Dr. Warre and Mr. Lyttelton wrote politely, but at slightly greater length, to the same effect as the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Lang. Here are the replies of the two last :—

"The Lord Chief Justice presents his compliments and begs to state that he entirely disagrees with the view expressed by Dr. A. Kenealy.

"Dear Sir,—Perhaps Miss Kenealy does not know much about the matter. Very clever as well as very stupid people are good at games.—Faithfully yours,

(Sd.) "A. LANG."

Lord Alverstone could hardly hold any opinion except the opinion he expresses. But, on the whole, we like best Mr. Andrew Lang's "perhaps."

Mr. William Charles Renshaw, of Shore Villa, Swanage, Dorset, and formerly of 31, Piccadilly, Manchester, the well-known tennis player, champion player of England from 1881—87, who died on 12th August last, aged 42, left estate of the gross value of £61,604 6s., of which £54,475 12s. 4d. is net personalty, and probate of his will, dated 26th December 1899, has been granted to his sister, Miss Edith Ann Renshaw, of Annscot, Waltham St. Lawrence, Twyford, Berks, to whom he left the championship cup which he won at Wimbledon in 1881. He bequeathed a second championship cup to his half-sister, Nellie Violet Ward Meara, and requested that these cups should be passed on by will to certain other relatives. He left an annuity of £50 to John Bamfield and his wife Eliza during their joint lives and the life of the survivor, and he left £50 to their children payable on the decease of the survivor. He bequeathed £500 to his godson, Mr. Myles Wood, and £50 to Elizabeth Hulls, of Walton, Bridgwater, and his residuary estate to his said sister, Miss Edith Ann Renshaw. Mr. James Ernest Renshaw, brother and co-champion of the above, died, aged 38, on 2nd September 1899, leaving net personalty sworn at £47,021.

Arrangements for the Delhi-Bombay Motor Trials promoted by the Motor Union of Western India are proceeding satisfactorily. The event for motor cycles will now be carried out, sufficient entries having been receivod to warrant this event taking place. It has been decided to run the trial for motor bicycles and tricycles in conjuntion with that for motor cars, but the smaller machines will only have to traverse between Agra and Mhow, a distance of 389 miles, to be covered in seven days. Great Scot! a two days run. Motor cycles will arrive in Gwalior on the same day as the cars and will, in consequence, be able to take part in the Motor Gymkhana which will be held by the Maharaja of Gwalior. This will be on Tuesday, the 27th December. Entries for the motor cycle event will be received by Captain Jennings, R. G. A., Bombay, and must be in before the 1st December. Maps of the course are being prepared and all information will be afforded to competitors regarding accommodation, etc., in due course.

The Annual General Meeting of the members of Calcutta Golf Club will be held at the Pavilion tomorrow evening; and the opening meeting will take place on Saturday, the 5th proximo,—vide advertisement further on.

The All-India Boxing Tournament, which promises well we are glad to hear, will begin at the Central Gymnasium, Secunderabad, on 3rd January next.

The Lake Michigan Automobile Club (U. S. A.) has just played its first game of push-ball with motor cars. The sport was excellent for the spectators. Five cars had their bows stove in, two lost wheels, and four had their tonneaus smashed by rear-end collisions. There being no more cars available in the town the game was adjourned. Seven players were hurt, one of them being scalded by the collapse of a radiator when two cars going at thirty miles an hour thoughtlessly came into collision. A 40 horse car then charged the grand stand boring a tunnel through it and injuring twenty-three spectators, but fortunately not seriously. The game was called a draw by the umpire, who was at once set upon and badly mauled by the infuriated populace who wanted a more definite decision. Fifty-eight arrests were made in an ensuing riot. Although the rest of this exciting game of push-ball was postponed, it is not announced when it was postponed until.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes:—Our Racquets tournament ought to be extremely good this season judging from the calibre of the players who are likely to meet in it. Probably one of the best players in India at the present time is J. L. Ainsworth, the old Marlburian, who has been turning up at the Court regularly for practice during the past two months and who, it only takes half an eye to see, is much above the average of the ordinary Indian player. He represented Marlborough, I believe, in the Public Schools Tournament in a year that his School carried off premier honours. A good many up-country racquets players are spoken of as being likely to visit Bombay for the Tournament, and among the names mentioned are F. O. Grenfell, E. B. Denison, Brigadier-General J. Spens, Major F. W. D. Quinton, Captain S. H. Sheppard, Captain H. O. Lathbury, A. B. Reynolds, W. E. Copleston, and a couple of players from the 10th Hussars. The bowling green has been newly done up, several improvements have been carried out and players are looking forward to an enjoyable season.

I am afraid the attempt to run a local polo tournament here has fallen through. The original intention was to make up four teams, but the number of poloists in Bombay is so limited that the defection of two or three players would prevent this being carried out. There is only one thing that will ever give a stimulus to Bombay polo and that is the advent of a polo playing regiment.

Yacht owners are pushing on their preparations for the coming season and in the harbour one sees newly-painted yachts, large and small, lying at their moorings. Several have made trial trips and in a short time the harbour will present its usual lively cold weather appearance.

The Yorkshire Regiment has taken the place of the Cheshire Regiment in Bombay and numbers amongst its officers several who are bound to make their mark in local field sports. The Gymkhana will receive accession of strength so far as cricket is concerned in Captain E. H. Chapman and Captain E. L. Vans Agnew and Lieutenants W. K. Rollo, G. C. Denton, L. Peel, H. C. Cumberbatch, and B. S. Greville. Several of the officers play rugger and soccer as well, so that, taking the regiment all round, it is likely to prove more of an acquisition than the Cheshires whose officers, with one or two exceptions, did not favour field sports.

Local lovers of field sports are at present considerably exercised in mind over the ground problem, the land grabbing operations of the Improvement Trust having deprived four Athletic Clubs of their grounds on the Cooperage, which, with the exception of the bit of ground on the west side used for football and hockey, has been entirely built over. The matter is a serious one and calls for the intervention of the Government of Bombay. If things go on at their present rate the only European Club that will be left with facilities to play cricket will be the Bombay Gymkhana who monopolise the greater portion of the parade ground. The operations of the Improvement Trust may be based on very sound principles so far as relieving congestion in our overcrowded city is concerned; but on the other hand that body is gradually depriving the bulk of the European inhabitants of the few plots of ground left to them for cricket, tennis, etc., and consequently of the means of taking part in field sports and obtaining the exercise so necessary to health in a place like Bombay. If the Local Government could be induced to put the Oval into proper condition for games much of the evil now complained of would be removed, but so far all attempts to get this done have failed.

There is another point which should not be overlooked and which has probably not been mentioned before. The members of the clubs which have been deprived of their grounds are for the most part Volunteers and surely it would not be expecting too much of Government to spend a few thousand rupees on the citizen soldiers who on several occasions have rendered valuable services to Government.

Among the passengers who arrived in Bombay by the P. and O. Company's mail steamer Caledonia on Saturday I notice the names of the following sportsmen:—Mr. E. H. Aitken ("Eha"), the well-known naturalist, Major A. H. Block, R. A., the Central India cricketer, Mr. J. L. Maffey, of the Punjab C. S., an old Rugby cricketer, Captain A. B. Sangster, the well-known Mhow cricketer, the Earl of Rock-Savage, and Captain S. R. Kirby.

If there is any merit in figures so far as cricket is concerned, J. Monteath, the old Cliftonian, and Dharwar batsman who last week scored a century, his fifth this season, is the best batsman in the Presidency and certainly the most prolific run-getter. I have kept the averages of all the principal batsmen in the Presidency who have played ten innings and upwards during the season, and although Greig, Carroll, and Wilkins of Poona, Acton of Bombay, T. Aitchison, Captain Brewis, and D. E. Copleston of Belgaum, H. Pogson and T. R. Maitland Kirwan of Dhulia Captain E. Saulez, Captain Hon'ble W. G. S. Cadogan, and H. P. Chaplin of Mhow, and C. A. Kincaid of Rajkot, can all point to remarkably good figures they all fall far behind Monteath who throughout the season has batted with wonderful consistency, and, indeed, has only on three occasions failed to reach double figures, while in only one innings was he dismissed without scoring. There is probably no other batsman in the Presidency to-day who is more attractive to watch or who can command so many fine strokes.

Local turfites are looking forward to the opening of the Bombay racing season with more than usual interest for everything points to a most successful season, both as regards the quality of the candidates, great and small, some of which are now in training, and the liberal way in which all classes have been catered for. The course at Mahalaxmi is in apple pie order and in another forthnight the usual November morning mustering of owners, trainers and riding boys will be in evidence between daylight and 8 o'clock for the purpose of putting likely candidates through their paces.

The Aga Khan Hockey Tournament, details of which will be found further on, resulted in a win for the Royal Scots who defeated the Poona Gymkhana in the final by three goals to one.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 7th October 1904.

THE autumn speech campaign has begun in earnest. Mr. Balfour dined with the Scottish Conservative Club in Edinburgh on Monday and afterwards touched the tender tops of various themes, as Ireland and the fiscal question. Mr. Chamberlain, in a wooden hall which had been built expressly for the purpose on the outskirts of Luton, addressed an audience estimated at 7,000, which is the maximum the building will hold. The wordy warfare of electioneers still rages in the Thanet region. The liberal candidate, Mr. King, is said to have scored heavily by the ingenious device of producing a glass jar labelled in German "Potted Dog" as a specimen of the food eaten in Protectionist countries. This statesmanlike argument has made a deep impression on the Free and Enlightened in Thanet—much deeper one gathers than the recital of Mr. Marks' financial evolutions has had, in an opposite sense, on the same Pure and High-souled electors.

Mr. Arnold Foster, addressing the cutlers at Sheffield last night, had much to say about the difficulties of a War Minister and the wealth of negative criticism which is showered upon the War Office. He also made the remark, which may or may not be significant, that the time for talk was past and the season for action is arrived: and the papers are already asking in gloomy despondency, not unjustified, what is going to happen to our unfortunate army next. Mr. Arnold Foster is, or pretends to be, gratified by the Essex manœuvres from which valuable lessons, he said, have been learned. He did not tell us what those lessons were, nor did he mention the bill, which was £5,000. There was one sign of grace in his address. He laid down the very sound proposition that if the country wants an army it must make sacrifices, and hinted not obscurely that the sacrifices must be in the shape of cash. This seems a variance with his previous decision to sacrifice battalions in the interests of economy.

Sir William Vernon Harcourt's death removes a figure which had ceased for a time to be prominent in the political world, his pending retirement had been preceded by a term of detachment from the strife in which he was for so long so conspicuous. He was one of the hardest hitters in the House, but he always played fair and those who sat over against him never found reason to lose respect for the Squire of Malwood. As a public man his name recalls most readily the Anathemised Hares and Rabbits Bill and the Death Duties: the former a measure difficult to reconcile with his knowledge of country life and affairs. He died at Nuneham in Oxfordshire the property to which he succeeded a few years ago: and it is thought passed away in his sleep from failure of the heart induced by the chill from which he had been suffering. He was buried yesterday.

It is satisfactory to see signs of rebellion on the part of landowners against the idiotic building bye-laws by which county councils or other busy-body assemblages make it almost impossible to raise dwellings for labourers in the rural districts. Mr. Blunt, led off the ball with a scathing article in the Nineteenth Century, stung into print by the action of the East Grinstead Rural Council which "ran him in" and fined him for building a range of cottages in iron and wood. There is no stone in this district, and the cost of bringing brick to the spot where the cottages are required is prohibitive. Mr. Blunt's article has loosened the pens of other landowners in a similar plight: and now the world has a chance of learning what relation exists between the blessings of local self government by self advertising small tradesmen and the depopulation of the country districts. One Council refused to "pass" any plans for labourers' cottages unless these were built according to a scheme of its own which would cost £350 per cottage: and where is field labour paid at a rate which will allow the hind to pay five shillings a week in rent. The Berkshire farm hand considers eighteen pence a week for a roomy cottage a high rent.

* * * * * *

The outlook for the poor this winter is gloomy enough—Mr. Long has invited the Guardians to confer on the subject at his office—and the Amalgamated Society of Engineers has contrived to make it worse for the East End of London. The Austrian Government had accepted Messrs. Garrow's tender to build 28 torpedo boat destroyers: the engineers stuck out for "time and a half" for night work instead of the orthodox "time and a quarter:" and the difference in the wages bill worked out a such a figure that Garrows have been obliged to sublet the contract to a Trieste firm: whereby there will be fewer men by 2,000 or 3,000 wanted at Garrows during the next six months or more, and nearly a quarter of a million in wages will not be spent.

I have never seen Sarnrof and Chancel's Le Prince Consort, but am strongly inclined to think that he changed his spots considerably in the passage across the channel. Mr. Boosey's adaptation of the play which was produced at the Comedy on Saturday leaves the impression of a good man struggling with a Lord Chamberlain. It is not difficult to see what Mr. Boosey's difficulties have been: the spirit of the original play breaks through here and there, Bowdlerisation and the Censor of Plays notwithstanding: but as a whole the susceptibilities of the great B. P.—or the Lord Chamberlain's Department—have been so well considered that the French heart of the play has been excised and nothing can replace it. There is not much plot in the original: and the plot without the Gallic spirit is a poor thing. The State of Corconia needs an heir: so it is expedient that Queen Sonia should marry. The ex-king of Ingra a shameless unctuous old scamp and Enofa, Queen Sonia's Aunt, who has just laid down the Regency of Corconia on Sonia's arrival at her majority arrange that Prince Cyril, the ex-King's son, shall marry Sonia. In Act II Cyril and Sonia have been married six months, and though they were and are in love with one another, he finds his position as subject and husband impossible. I sympathised with him. Sonia is prone to sink the wife in the sovereign, and she orders Cyril about with some want of tact: further, suspicious ministers and officious ladies in waiting make the poor man's bed a thorny one, and he eventually seeks peace in flight. The anxiety concerning that much needed heir helps Sonia to a solution and she compels her advisers to allow Cyril to share the throne. You see how the land lies. In the original, that unborn baby would be played for all he is worth as the trump card: but we do not talk obstetrics on the English stage, and the mainspring of the play is relegated to a very back seat indeed. Miss Miriam Clements makes a dignified and charming Queen to all but her unhappy husband: Mr. Leonard Boyne has a most thankless and difficult rôle to sustain, and he did not impress one as a princely domestic martyr. Miss Lottie Venne as the outspoken old aunt Xenofa had, I imagine, to leave unsaid many things that would help the play to success in Paris, and Mr. Eric Lewis contrived to make the also much be-Chamberlained part of the regal reprobate Ingra amusing. Of the other characters the stolid Lieutenant Sandor (Mr. Philip Cunningham) who will not respond to old Xenofa's flirtatious advances, and an exasperating lady in waiting were very good.

I looked in upon "Veronique" at the Apollo on Tuesday. Mr. George Graves has added an immense deal of clever and amusing gag to his part as the ambitious old florist: and the donkey in the second act now comes on with the air of a seasoned actor. Miss Ruth Vincent's song in the swing goes better than ever.

"The Golden Light" flickered through three performances, which must have been a rare ordeal for the actors, and went out on Saturday night fairly smothered by tempests of ridicule. What else was to be expected when this is no unfair example of the dialogue. MRS. BROWN POTTER (at the tea tray) "one lump of sugar? or two?" THE LOVER "One lump will be sufficient. Your fingers make sugar sweeter." More fatuous drivel than this play has never been poured out on an unoffending audience. The Magic Kettle business has been so successful at the Palace Theatre that if the present rate of progress is maintained every Hall in London will "boil" its own liquid air kettle within the next fortnight. The Hippodrome has its "mysterious" kettle, the Canterbury a "demon" kettle, and other resorts similar attractions under similar names.

That was a curious incident which closed Sir Henry Irving's stay at Swansea. When the certain fell on "The Bells," Sir Henry was called to the front and was received with the hymn "Lead Kindly Light," sung with intense fervour by the whole house. One can quite understand Mathias moving an audience, to enthusiasm, but why, oh why! should "Lead Kindly Light" peculiarly relieve its feelings?

The first Covent Garden Ball was a huge success on Friday night: perhaps the bigger crowd was in a measure due to their earlier beginning, as heretofore the first ball has been usually held in mid October. I don't think there were any very original dresses worth mentioning.

People who like brass bands and plenty of them had a royal time at the Crystal Palace on Saturday, when twenty-four bands from different parts of the kingdom met to compete for a £1,000 trophy. The most successful bands were from the mining districts of the north, the "Geordie," being a far more musically disposed person than his exterior, on working days, would lead one to suspect. The Hebburn Colliery Band won. I was not at Sydenham myself, but an unauthorised agent who was, tells me that the soldiers chorus from Faust, played by twelve massed bands, was one of the most stirring things he ever heard.

It blew a gale on Wednesday night and Thursday morning. In town the wind did no more than strip the trees and give the parks a prematurely winter look, but at sea the mishaps were many all round the coast. The gale came on suddenly and by consequence caught many small vessels which could not live in it. This was particularly the case on the south coast: Folkstone was the scene of at least one pitiful disaster, the channel fishing fleet having endeavoured to find shelter in the Folkstone harbour. The gale subsided about as suddenly as it rose, and last night there was not a breath of wind moving.

Kipling's new book, "Traffics and Discoveries," was published on Tuesday. It has been received with very moderate enthusiasm by the reviewing fraternity who go so far as to pronounce much of it dull. A casual glance reveals the fact that the illustrious author is motor-struck: he enthuses about scorching in such a vigorous vein that it will be no surprise if he figures as defendant before an unsympathetic bench. We know, from the letter he wrote to Mr. Filson Young, published in that gentlemen's recent work on motoring, that Kipling had discovered the motor and that the motor had opened a new world to him. Motoring is said to have a stimulating effect on the nerve centres, so Kipling's motor may prove a world's benefactor—if the owner can only prevail upon himself to keep his pen out of its works.

The trial of "Keiro" and his wife "Zoga," professors of palmistry, concluded yesterday. Mr. Gill for the prosecution made fun of their professions, but the defence was able to put into the box quite a lot of witnesses who stoutly maintain the possibility of reading character by the lines of the hand. These believers scout the idea of prophecy, of course, insisting on the exactness of palmistry as a science. That is what was mainly instrumental in prolonging the case. Mr. Loveland continually reminded those engaged in it that the bench had not to decide whether there is a science in palmistry or not: but whether the defendants endeavoured to obtain money by false pretence of telling fortunes: and the two questions are so closely involved that it was a nice matter to keep them apart. The result was "guilty and don't do it again," the sinners being bound over to come up for judgment if called upon.

A big brown bear in silk dress and picture hat sharing a motor-car with two respectable looking men, suggests lunacy when you meet this vision in the London Streets: but it is only an advertisement. The bear is a performer at the Italian Circus in Regent Street, and she is tame and well conducted beyond the wont of performing bears, as witness the clothes she consents to wear as a lady or a barmaid. "Madame Batavia" is wonderfully well trained and remarkably intelligent: her conduct is so exemplary that the police have not felt called upon to object to her airings in the street so far: but having regard to horses' terror of the smell of bear, the proceeding strikes one as being a little risky.

Various Items. Sir F. Wingate has been making experiments on the beach at Dunbar to ascertain what type of tyre would be best suited for motor-cars in Egypt. They have used motor vans to transport goods in the Soudan, and the Sirdar is said to hold that there is a great future for self-driven vehicles, waggons, and carriages, in Egypt, if a wheel or tyre can be found that will not sink into the sand.

The "Gurney incident" has been settled by mutual apologies. I don't know anything about Mr Gurney whose love of motor scorching led him into trouble, but it would have promised better for his future success as a diplomatist had he paid up his $25 fine and held his peace. To infringe the laws of the country to which you are accredited and then scramble behind your diplomat's privilege verges upon the injudicious.

A brave man created a mild sensation at the Garrick one night last week by appearing in his stall dressed in knee breeches and buckled shoes. There be those who herald him as the pioneer of male evening dress reform: and predict the re-appearance of powdered wigs and frilled shirts. I fear me they will wait long.

Mr. Brodrick's artistic feelings have been lacerated by the suggestion that he was in any way responsible for the muffin cap or cook's cap which was introduced into the army during his reign at the War Office. He has written to Mr. Jeffrey, M.P., in reply to a letter, to say he was in no way to blame: his military advisers did it, and "the flattering attention of those who have endowed the cap with my name is wholly undeserved."

The motor-car is not hurting the hunter market, whatever else it may be doing. I was at Tattersalls on Monday when Captain Colles, of the Carabiniers, got 550 guineas for Prince Tolleyrand, and 320 guineas, 285 guineas and 240 guineas for other good-looking weight carriers. Two other weight carrying hunters with reputations went for 300 and 290 guineas respectively.

Thirty-two "Rhodes scholars," one from each State of the Union arrived from America on Tuesday to finish their education at Oxford.

Earl Fitzwilliam has almost American ideas of doing himself well: but he does other people uncommonly well at the same time. He is master of two packs of hounds, one in England and the other in Ireland, and gives generous support to another Irish hunt whose country marches with his own. Lately he has felt the need of a yacht, and found what he wanted in a handy little Orient liner of over 3,000 tons.

The County Council has decided to decline with thanks a gift of trees to plant in Picadilly Circus. This not wisely considered present was offered the town by Councillor Von Raalte, whoever he may be.

ELEMENTARY BRIDGE.*

THIS little book, as its title indicates, is very "Elementary," and hardly goes far enough to be of much value to any beginner wanting to obtain a grasp of the game. We cannot agree with some of the author's remarks regarding "Honor Declarations" and "No Trump" Declarations, and on various points the information contained is too meagre to be of practical use. We should recommend a novice rather to study one of the standard handbooks of the game, which are not, in our opinion, so complex as "Grim" suggests.

HOUSEKEEPING.*

IN a comprehensive, handy volume running to over 200 pages, Maj L. J. Shadwell gives us a perfect vade mecum for housekeeping in India, and though the writer's experience has been confined to the Southern and Western Presidencies, the work is applicable to all parts. New comers more especially will be benefited and saved much inconvenience and trouble by keeping the book at hand. The compilation embraces all subjects connected with the several matters dealt with: treatment of servants, cooking—including many useful and novel recipes—, stable management, with valuable hints as to diagnosing correctly equi maladies and treating of minor injuries. In short, it covers the whole range of domestic economy and housekeeping. Mess Presidents of regiments just arriving in the country will particularly appreciate the brochure Though mainly intended for the "upper circles," the less affluent housekeeper will benefit by a perusal, for the details are minutely entered into and there will be found no difficulty in adjusting the recipes to income. In fact, "Housekeeping" is a concise epitome of the many books and pamphlets that have from time to time taken up each subject in separate publications. In this book there is, of course, a good deal that is not precisely new, but this will repay re-perusal, while find much therein that is novel and instructive, and this will very acceptable to those who have to bear the burden of hot club or mess management in this country of poor supplies dishonest dealers, and villainous servants.

THE MAKING OF A MUSEUM.

PROFESSOR Ray Lankester's reign at the Natural Branch of the British Museum will be signalized, if by no other great achievement, at least by the conception and publication of the work before us, of which the second volume will, it is hoped, make its appearance before long. Such a work has been long wanted; and no better plan could have been desired of making it as nearly perfect and complete as possible by intrusting the writing of the history of the various departments and sections to the officers severally responsible for the administration of the same.

The British Museum, we may remind our readers, actually dates from the year 1753, when an Act of Parliament was passed for the purchase of the collection or Museum of Sir Hans Sloane, together with the Harley collection, and to provide a suitable place of reception for them and the cotton library, which had become the property of the nation in 1700, and for such additions as might be made to them. In the present volume we are told how the four Natural History Deparments (that is to say, Zoology, Geology, or more properly Palæontology, Botany, and Mineralogy) gradually became separated from the library and art collections, and subsequently from one another, till the final climax in 1880, when the Natural History Museum was ready for the reception, and science migrated to South Kensington while literature and art remained in the old quarters at Bloomsbury.

The volume before us is devoted to the history of the Natural History Libraries, and of the collections in the Departments of Botany, Geology, and Mineralogy; the Zoological Department which is perhaps the one of most general interest, being reserved for the sequel. Our notice of the present volume will be chiefly confined to the collection of vertebrate palæontology, which is the one appealing most strongly to the general public.

The history of the Geological Department commences with the acquisition of the Sloane collection in 1753, which was opened to the public at Montague House in 1759. This collection, which was of a very miscellaneous character, included a considerable series of fossils, both from at home and abroad. "Two specimens of petrified wood," it is stated, "and 84 invertebrate fossils from the collection can still be identified with certainty, a dozen others being less certain; further, several fish-remains still bear the Sloane label; and a few mammalian fragments are still duly marked." It might have been added that a fossil tortoise's shell from Turkey, which has been made the type of the species Testudo Sloanei, and is the only known representative of the same, form a part of the Sloane collection. In 1823 came the first collection of fossil mammalian remains from the celebrated Kirkdale Cave in Yorkshire. Teeth of the gigantic dinosaurian reptile Igreanodon from the Sussex Weald received in 1825 and 1828 marked the period of the first discovery of these remains by Mantell. The year 1834 is memorable for the acquisition of the first series of the wonderful collection of ichthyosaurian and plesiosaurian remains made by Thomas Hawkins in the Lias of Dorset and Somerset, the working out and description of which marked an epoch in the mechanics of palæontological work.

In 1840 Major (afterwards Colonel Sir) Proby T. Cautley presented to the Museum the marvellous collection of vertebrate remains made by himself in the Siwalik Hills, which formed the basis of Falconer and Cautley's great work, the "Fauna Antiqua Sivalensis."

To continue further anything approaching a general sketch of the history of the building-up of the collection would obviously be impossible within the limits of our space, and we may therefore conclude this portion of our subject by the following extract from the introduction to the geological section by Dr. A. Smith Woodward, the Keeper of the Department:—

"As the British Dependencies and Colonies were gradually explored, nearly all the pioneer collections of fossils reached the Museum. Cautley [as already mentioned] presented his vertebrata from the Siwalik Formation of India in 1840; Bain, Atherstone, and others sent fossil Reptilia from the Karoo Formation of South Africa; Sir Thomas Mitchell, Sir Daniel Cooper, Dr. George Bennett, Mr. G. F. Bennett, and other contributed extinct Marsupials and other vertebrata from Australia; while the Hon'ble Walter Mantell and many other explorers in New Zealand sent important collections of remains of the extinct birds of that island. The Department of Geology, in fact, now comprises most of the original type-specimens of the fossil vertebrata discovered in the British possessions.

Discoveries abroad have also received much attention, and among unique acquisitions may be enumerated the Pomel and Bravard collections of French Tertiary vertebrata purchased in 1851-52, the Archæopteryx [lizard-tailed bird] purchased in 1862, the Van Breda collection of Maastricht and other fossils purchased in 1871; and the Forsyth-Major collection of Lower Pliocene Mammalia from Samos purchased in 1889-90. Even the Arctic Regions are well represented by fossils collected by the Nares expedition in 1875-76, by the McCormick collection bequeathed in 1890, and by the Spitzbergen fossils obtained by Dr. J. W. Gregory during the Conway Expedition in 1896. "During recent years many classic collections made by British palæontologists have been acquired by the Department of Geology. Among these are the Egerton and Enniskillen collection of fossil fishes; the Leeds collection of Oxfordian Reptilia; the Davidson collection of fossil Brachiopoda; the Sedgwick collection of fossil Insects; the Nicholson collection of Stromatoporoids; the Williamson collection of Carboniferous Plant-sections; and the Rufford collection of Wealden Plants."

Throughout the volume one uniform method of treatment has been adopted. We have, firstly, a general account of the rise and development of each Department. This is followed by a chronological account of the principal accessions to the collections of the Department up to the end of the last century; and this, in turn by an alphabetical list, with short biographical notices, of the more important contributors to the Departmental collection.

The work has been thoroughly well planned and thoroughly well carried out; and all connected with the production of the first volume are to be congratulated on the excellent manner in which they have carried out a most important task of great public interest and value. We shall look with interest to the appearance of the second volume of "The History" at, we hope, no distant date.

BURREL STALKING IN THE CLOUDS.

HOW often has the fog been sworn at by sportsmen all over the world, by sailors, soldiers, townsmen, and others? But there are times when the fog befriends the stalker on the mountain side and assists him to get near his game. In July, 1902, I was on the look out for burrel in a likely nullah in the Garhwal Himalayas. On the 8th we had been out since early in the morning, the clouds had enveloped us since eleven, at about 14,000 feet altitude, but shortly after two they lifted for a short time and a few minutes afterwards I sighted four rams. In an instant my two men and I had crouched among the rocks and I was looking at the game through my glasses to pick the best head, they were all good ones and not much over two hundred yards off.

"Be quick, Sahib" said my guide, "the fog is blowing up again," but I wanted to get nearer, and this I hoped to do under cover of the fog, and then wait for it to clear again, the burrel were grazing on some fresh young grass, not likely to go far away, and the wind was right.

Presently the fog completely hid the burrel and we began to move towards them along a very steep bit of ground in the direction of some big boulders of rock which would bring us within easy shot. We got to the boulders all right and crouched among them, within thirty or eighty yards of the four rams, here we waited for an hour and could occasionally hear the clash of the rams' horns as they playfully butted eath other. Both old and young rams are very fond of playing in this way. The fog seemed to be thinning out, and I was hoping for a sight of the game, when suddenly a herd of ewes and young rams appeared out of the fog within twenty yards of us and just below. We kept as still as rocks, but it was no use, some of the ewes gave their alarm whistle and the herd turned and went galloping away up the hill, past us, and above where the rams were. The fog cleared shortly afterwards, but the rams had gone, we saw them and the ewes on the sky line over four hundred yards off, and it was not the slightest use following them. On the 9th July we reconnoitred another nullah with rich grass on both sides, just below a glacier which led up to the snow peaks, and at about eight o'clock sighted a herd of eighteen burrel, in which were five or six good rams, on our side of the nullah and a good five hundred yards below us. All we could do was to watch them and wait till they shifted their position, but this they did not seem inclined to do. Far away across the nullah I could see another herd of burrel, over thirty, but whether rams or ewes could not tell.

It was a lovely bright morning with the wildest and grandest of scenery on every side. We were surrounded by snow peaks of over 20,000 feet altitude, glaciers, broad snow fields, and below them green slopes covered in places with the beautiful Alpine rose.

After a long wait the fog began to roll up the valley and by half-past ten the burrel were completely hidden. We got up and went down the hillside towards where we had last seen them, below some very white-looking rocks. We crouched and waited, and when the fog lifted the burrel were not in sight. We came across the place where they had been grazing and followed their tracks slowly up the nullah. On coming over a rise I saw the whole herd lying down about 120 yards off, and I immediately squatted down and drew a bead, with my ·360 Cordite express, on the biggest ram. His black chest was towards me and an easy shot: "crack," and he reared up, and rolled over dead. The herd jumped up and ran a short distance up the hill, then stopped. I banged the two next biggest rams in two more shots at about 150 and 180 yards. The remainder of the herd crossed the nullah and joined the other large herd who were now on the move.

Burrel, though extremely alert animals, and possessing long range sight and keen scent, get flurried, after the manner of their kind, when confronted by sudden danger. They run about, herd together, stand gazing, and don't seem to be able to make out where the danger is, enabling several shots to be fired. But once started they go for miles, making for the most dangerous and precipitous ground.

In June, 1903, I was again on the look out for burrel, and again the fog assisted me. We sighted a herd of twenty rams about seven o'clock, they were about a mile off on the slope above us and moving slowly across a snow-field towards some grassy ravine. We got away into a nullah beyond and made our way up it, a long and stiff climb, until we thought we were rather above the burrel and and then crept out of the nullah and along the brown slope with patches of snow about it to a ridge from where we had a good view. There were the herd of twenty, about half a mile off straight ahead, and slightly lower down the hill than we were. The steeps above were covered with snow, and there was no way of getting near the burrel without the help of a fog. All we could do was to watch them as they fed slowly away from us. I expected the fog to roll up the valley about eleven o'clock and as it was now past ten I had my lunch and kept my eye on the herd meanwhile.

Sure enough, before eleven wreaths of mist were creeping up the slopes while down in the main valley was a dense white cloud. As soon as our hill-side was enveloped we started off and after going a short distance had to cross a very steep slope of snow, this took some time, and was nasty work, as a slip would have meant a tobogan down about a thousand feet to some black rocks. After crossing we had to wait some time, crouching among the brown stems of the Alpine roses, not yet in flower, as the mist had lifted and the burrel were in sight. The fog came up again thicker than ever and we went on, across three more snow-filled ravines to some boulders, here we waited again as the fog lifted for some hours. I watched the burrel, they lay down, grazed, and butted each other at intervals and seemed entirely unsuspicious. Later on, however, I saw one of the rams suddenly leave the herd and trot down the grassy slope for some distance and then lie down. I believe he had winded my coolies coming along with the camp equipage far below.

Meanwhile the other nineteen rams went on grazing; they were about five hundred yards from us now, the mist was blowing about in wreaths, but not covering the burrel enough for us to continue our stalk, and the sentinel ram continued his watch below. We had a three hours' watch and wait, the sentinel returning to the herd but remaining lowest down the hill of all, about half an hour before the fog came on thick again.

Off we went again, across another snow slope and the fog lifted just in time for us to crouch on the brown hill-side about three hundred yards from the herd. Our clothes matched the surroundings well and there were rocks about, also we kept as still as we could for more than half an hour while I watched the herd through my old steward glasses trying to pick out the best head. The old sentry, who was still below the others some fifty yards or more, appeared to have the best head, and my men wanted me to fire, but I determined to get nearer if I could. It is always advisable to get as near as one can even if armed with a modern high velocity rifle.

The friendly fog came up again and we had another steep snow slope to cross. If the fog were to lift while we were crossing it all would be up, as the burrel would see us and the slope was too steep to admit of a steady shot. In great excitement we got across as quickly as we could to some less steep ground beyond, then across another patch of snow and crouched breathless among some rocks just as the fog was lifting. We were now about two hundred yards from the burrel, and I believe I might have got nearer, only my guide, in his impatience, I suppose, stood up and pointed at the herd as if I was blind. A vicious dig with my elbow into his ribs and an order to squat, hissed out, made him crouch again, but it was too late, several double whistles—"phee—phee"—were given, and the whole herd began to move off up the grassy slope they were grazing on. I sighted the lowermost ram, the sentinel, and let him have a ·360 soft-nosed bullet behind the right shoulder. He plunged down the slope and stood, I shifted my sight on to another big fellow and he rolled over. "The first one is not hit," said my guide, he was still standing, so I fired at him again but the bullet went over his shoulder, I saw the earth fly up beyond. A moment after he rolled down the slope dead. Meanwhile I dropped a third ram with my fourth shot just as the herd were disappearing over the slope. The first ram was hit rather low down by my first shot, that accounted for his standing so long His horns were very massive and had fourteen rings on them, length 23¼ inches. The second had seven rings, length 22 inches. The third had eight rings, length 25 inches.

The remaining seventeen burrel moved away up and up towards the snow fields and black crags above. My men were delighted as we cut off the three heads and returned to camp, orders being given for the meat to be brought in first thing the next morning. This was the longest and most exciting stalk I have ever had. We sighted the burrel at seven and I shot them at about a quarter to five. The weapon used was a double ·360 Cordite, weight 8½lbs. A weapon second to none for Himalayan sport.

GARHWALI.

A TUSSLE WITH A HYÆNA.

D C sends the following interesting account to the Pioneer:—Two friends of mine—C. and G.—came down from Calcutta to spend a holiday and Sunday with me in a certain small station in Bengal, bringing with them a bobbery pack of four terriers of sorts, a spaniel, an Irish terrier, and two semi pies, to which I contributed a bull-terrier. We went out on foot in the evening after jack. Avoiding one piece of jungle, which was a favourite haunt of a hyæna, we put the pack into a small patch of "khea" jungle, which is, as a rule, a safe find for a jack. The "khea" here grows to a height of 12 to 14 feet, the fringe and top being thick and prickly, and inside a mass of roots and branches, interwoven in places with creepers and branches of all descriptions. The first sign which we had of a find was one of the terriers darting out with his bristles up. I put the bull-terrier to it, and presently he re-appeared, but with what little nose he has he had scented "something." Presently a tremendous yay yaping commenced, and in the bull-terrier went again, and almost immediately another voice joined in the concert which told me that the old dog had gone straight home for whatever it was, and that it was more than a jack. There was nothing for it if we wanted to save the dogs but to go in ourselves, so with a feet-foremost plunge I landed inside on my back in soft mud. In about three minutes I reached the scene of the fray, and there in a lair shaped like a horse shoe—the only practicable entrance being the way which I had luckily struck—was the bull-terrier tackling single-handed a large female hyæna, with a couple of terriers and the spaniel cheering him on from a safe distance. The good old dog had got home at the brute's throat, but had already been mauled and was being badly mauled—I had only a hunting-crop with me, with which I belaboured the hyæna on the head. It had small effect on her beyond distracting her attention somewhat from the bull-terrier and making her want to be rid of us. She was getting away when I pulled her back by her tail, and she then came for me. I was able to keep her off and to give her a bit of a headache, and the bull-terrier got home again in her throat. C. here came up from behind me, but the space was too confined for him to help me, and he could only reach the hyæna's body with his blows. At this stage my hunting-crop broke. The hyæna was getting away again, when I pulled her back with the same result that she again came for me. In self defence I closed with the smelling beast, and got a grip of her throat with both hands. Her weight bore me down into a sitting position, she being on my left and partially past me, C. on my right and more or less behind, and the bull-terrier somewhere mixed up with my legs and nearly done for. After a brief struggle I worked her over to my right, when C. was able to help me. The next instant she had him by the ankle, but he luckily had on thick boots and putties, and her teeth didn't get home. Luckily, too, for both of us, he had a fair-sized shikar knife with him with which, after trying a couple of vicious digs behind the shoulder, he cut the hyæna's throat and severed her windpipe. Just before the end, with what we thought was his dying effort, the bull-terrier once more got his teeth home in the brute's throat alongside of my fingers. We had to force his jaws apart, and even then C. had to carry him away by force. He was badly bitten, as may be imagined, but C. took him to the stream and after ten minutes he was able to stand up and presently walk to the trap. Only one of the terriers got bitten in the ear. Poor G. arrived on the scene just as the sport was over, having by then managed to force his way through from the opposite direction. He and I dragged out the kill. She was a big, heavy beast, twice to three times the size of my bull-terrier. Needless to say the latter was installed a great hero that night, and I trust that he has many more glorious fights before him, as he is only just two years old.

HOW TO BUY A GUN.

What to Secure and What to Avoid.

WHILE we regard the best gun that can be built as the best value in the market and the cheapest in the end, many people only care to pay from £10 to £20 for their guns, and desire to get, if possible, the best value for their outlay. They do not require their guns to do very much work in the course of the year, and they believe with some reason, that a thousand shots or so per annum can be discharged as satisfactorily from the low-priced as from the high-priced weapon. The latter must be ordered to be built, while the former can be bought ready-made in any gun-shop, if the would-be purchaser knows anything about guns or has a friend of experience with him in selecting a gun from the many varieties at his disposal. Assuming that the gun is a low-priced one suitable for general all-round shooting, the chief points that have to be attended to are as follows:—First test the weapon to ascertain if it has any shakiness in its joints. This can be done by holding the butt-end in the left hand, grasping the handle of the stock with the right, and moving the gun quickly from side to side. Should there be any sound heard of a shake in the parts, all fastenings, especially those connecting the barrel with the action, should be carefully examined to see if they perfectly fit. A top-fastening is unnecessary for safety and strength, and the gun looks better without it, while there is less danger of sand clogging the free action. If the usual lumps under the barrel are properly made and fitted they should be quite sufficient to fasten the breech. If they are not so a top-fastening cannot improve them, while it is the first piece of mechanism on a low-priced gun to get into disrepair, and the most difficult to put right again. The barrels should not be less than 28 inches long nor more than 29 inches, for the shorter barrels cannot be more quickly aligned on game, and are less steady and more difficult to kill with on the average of all-round shots.

For shooting power there is no gun that can approach a twelve-bore. Twenty-bore guns suit some people, but they are inferior to twelves, because, among other things, the shot pellets in the latter lie closer to the walls over the powder, and are therefore more strongly discharged. Being the farthest from the explosive the top pellets of a shot-charge in a gun have least propelling power, and are consequently less effective than the pellets nearer the powder which have to drive them out. The weight of the gun for a man of ordinary strength should not be over six and three quarters pounds. Twelve-bore guns are made down to five and three-quarter pounds, the barrels being 26 inches in length; but they are only desirable for men of weak physique, with charges correspondingly reduced, so as to avoid much recoil. Most low-priced guns are made with the right barrel a cylinder and the left a choke, making a pattern of from 160 to 200 pellets according to whether the choke is modified or full) at forty yards on the 30 inch circle. Choking, however, has now altogether gone out of fashion, and a gun with both barrels cylinder is to be preferred on many grounds, especially if some of the shooting may be, as it is likely to be, at driven game. The choke barrel smashes the birds too severely, even in ordinary wild shooting most of the shots being best taken by a well-bored cylinder even at forty yards. Pigeon-shooting only requires choke barrels, because it is the only kind of shooting in which it is advantageous to "plaster" the birds with shot. Pigeon guns, however, are in a class by themselves, and should a shooter contemplate pigeon-shooting occasionally, his best plan would be to have a spare pair of barrels fully choked fitted to his gun. It must be remembered that a game shot is handicapped by using a pigeon gun in game shooting, seeing that the charge of the pigeon gun covers a very small space compared with the large one covered by the regular game gun, requiring more accurate aim and giving more chance of missing altogether unless the pigeon charge is absolutely centred on the game, which means at ordinary game distances, rendering it unfit either for the pot or the poulterer.

Having selected the description of gun required, next comes the very important question of getting a well-fitting, even though a ready-made, weapon. The Americans, with all their guns machine-made with interchangeable parts, have to acquire the art of fitting themselves to their guns which is a long, tedious process. The Englishman, on the contrary, wants a gun that fits him accurately from the start, and he can get it.

DELHI-BOMBAY MOTOR TRIALS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—With reference to the event for Motor Cycles, we have pleasure in saying that a sufficient number of entries have now been received to warrant this event being carried out, and we shall be glad if you would give publicity in your paper to this effect.

It has been decided to run the trial for motor bicycles and tricycles in conjunction with that for motor cars, but the smaller machines will only have to traverse between Agra and Mhow, a distance of 389 miles, to be covered in seven days.

The motor cycles will arrive in Gwalior the same day as the cars, and will in consequence be able to take part in the Motor Gymkhana, which is being held by H. H. the Maharaja of Gwalior. This will be on Tuesday, the 27th December

Entries for the Motor Cycle Event will be received by Captain Jennings, R. G. A., 32, Colaba, Bombay, and must be in before the 1st December.

Maps of the course are being prepared, and all information will be afforded to competitors, regarding accommodation, etc., in due course.

Second Day, Thursday, 20th October 1904.

OWING to continued wet weather the second day did not come off on the 19th as advertised, but the next day turned out an ideal one for racing, and the meeting was brought to a conclusion under the most successful conditions. There was a very large attendance, and in contrast to the first day speculation was fairly brisk. Favourites justified their selection so that the public had a particularly happy time. The handicappers had been very lenient in three or four cases which the public did not fail to see and invest accordingly.

Mr. Galstaun had an uncommonly good time, having thirteen mounts and steering nine winners during the meeting. His finish in the Kinchinjungha Plate on Energy against Mr. Dudley on Royal Flush was artistic. Both rode all they knew, getting every ounce out of their mounts, and it was only during the last dozen strides that Royal Flush chucked it, and the game mare went on winning amidst great applause by a length. Energy may be borne in mind should she run at Calcutta this winter over her distance. Details :—

First Day, Thursday, 20th October 1904.

THE Hyderabad races commenced to-day in very favourable weather and before a fair attendance which included His Excellency the Prime Minister, Maharajah Sir Kishen Pershad Bahadur, General Sir James and Lady Willcocks, Mr. and Mrs. Casson Walker and many officials of the British and Nizam's Governments.

The Nizam's band was in attendance and there were two bookmakers in the enclosure. In addition to the usual refreshment tent of the Nizam's Regular Troops Officers the United Service Club had their own tent and there was also a public bar run by Brind's Hotel, so that the old cry of lack of refreshments was not heard on this occasion.

A protest was made with regard to the second race by the loser, in that Mr Eve, who rode the winner, entered the paddock after the race without weighing in. The objection was overruled by the Stewards, but of course it was perfectly open for the owner to lodge a protest at Calcutta; but this he decided not to do. The following are the results:—

LONDON, Friday, 7th October 1904.

HURST PARK.

THE Hurst Park Meeting was not entirely favoured by the weather, inasmuch as a dismal and dreary morning kept a great many intending visitors away, and the attendance was much below the average in consequence. Happily, the conditions improved as the day wore on, and the afternoon of the 2nd instant turned out bright and fine, though towards the close the light began to fail, especially along the far side, where a vapoury mist curled up from the river and overhung the course. We have already reached the time when big fields are attracted to the post for every description of contest, and from first to last sport was conducted under high pressure.

The long avenue of trees leading from Leicester to Oadby has already begun to assume the mellow tints of autumn, and a turbulent wind levied heavy toll upon the fading leaves during the night, strewing the pathways with a carpet of russet brown. It blew a hurricane from the north-east for several hours, so much so that the breeze lost its equilibrium and slipped round into a south-westerly grove, remaining there during the day. Nor did it diminish much in force, which was fortunate, for the sombre banks of clouds overhead were kept moving too rapidly to discharge their contents, and the afternoon was fine if the sky was overcast. A capital muster again passed through the turnstiles, and they were rewarded with witnessing some enjoyable sport, runners being numerous and many of the finishes of an exciting nature.

BRISTOL CITY vs. BRADFORD CITY.—Once again Bristol City ere favoured with glorus weather, when on Saturday they eceived a visit from Bradrd City. The spectators numbered about 7,000. The game as of a fair standard. Bristol City relied on the same teams defeated Chesterfield last week. The homesters had most the game in the first half, though the Bradford forwards were by no means strangers to the home goal. The first half had been in progress about half an hour, when Chambers got possion of the ball and put it to Wombwell, who rushed down line and put in a splendid shot at very difficult angle. The ll landed just below the bar and eat Mearns. A few minut later Theckitt collided with Drain nd the latter's injuries necited his removal from the field. He as unable to take part in game afterwards. At half-time istol City led by a goal nil. In the second moiety, though ying only ten men, Brad made a very plucky fight, and e or twice almost eqused. They had more of the game he second half than in first. The home forwards played l, Gilligan, Dean and bwell being the best. The Halves e sound, and so was ft. Thickett was in better form, not so good as his tner. Conlin was the best of the lford front rank, but issed one easy chance. Robinson McLean did well half, and both backs were good. ns was very safe bet n the posts. A well-fought game l in a deserved wi or the Bristol team by one goal e.

LOSSOP vs. BOLTON ANDERERS.—These teams met at sop on Saturday, befe 000 spectators and the result was rd-earned victory for Wanderers by two goals to one. hing had been scored ither side at half time, but after nging ends Stokes and ite scored for the Wanderers and wrence for Glossop. I playing for half an hour Glossop e handicapped throughe retirement of Synott, owing to isposition.

LIVERPOOL vs. LEICE FOSSE.—Fifteen thousand people tnessed this match on urday at Anfield-road, Liverpool. he home team had ma mostly their own way from first to st and finally won eby four goals to none. Robinson ored all the four goas Liverpool after ends had been hanged.

BURTON UNITED vs. SLEY.—The United suffered defeat n their own ground at on-on-Trent on Saturday at the feet of Barnsley, who the accomplished a good performance. Halliwell and Beech scor the visitors during the first ten minutes, and subsequeKing obtained a point for Burton United, who were rathacky.

THE SCOTTISH LEAGUE.

There was a full League programme down for settlement under First Division auspices north of the Border on Saturday, the way having been cleared in the West of Scotland for free progress by the working down of the Glasgow Cup Competition to its ultimate stage, while in the East the local competitions have not yet begun. Having safely negotiated a fortnight ago the most formidable hurdle in their season's path so far, Airdrieonians seem now safe to attain a place on the League ladder which will be the envy of their elder brethren in senior circles, as the next three engagements to be faced by them are with clubs whose present form should not give rise to any anticipations of possible defeat, while the same might be said of the succeeding four fixtures to be played from home. On their actual going the Lanarkshire club may steer clear of disaster for two months to come. After that period, of course, Glasgow rangers and Celtic, their nearest rivals, may prove stumbling blocks, but the confidence born of success has not a little to do with results and even then surprises are not improbable. In Saturday's game against Port Glasgow Athletic they did not expect that resistance which had been their lot in the more important games already disposed of. In this they were, to some extent disappointed, as the "Port" ran the Airdrie team neck and neck, up to half-time, when neither had scored. However, Port Glasgow could not keep it up, and were finally beaten by two goals to none. After an uneven match, due to the high wind prevalent, Queen's Park were beaten by Celtic by three goals to two. The amateurs had all the business of defence to attend to in the opening half, and they did it well, although before the interval arrived three points had been lost. Little fault could be found with the middle and back lines, who showed great steadiness and resource. The regular keeper, L. H. Skene, the Edinburgh Varsity man, was absent, and the substitute could easily have been improved on. In the concluding stage, however, aided by the elements, the "Spiders" forced the pace, and though kept at bay for full thirty minutes, Logan, their fair-haired centre half-back, made amends for a previous blunder in failing to convert a penalty kick, by shooting a splendid goal, and the leeway was immediately afterwards further reduced by Miller. The last few minutes were keenly fought out, but no additional advantage fell to the young Hampden eleven, victory resting with the Celts as stated. A very serious drop befell Glasgow Rangers. Playing without McCall and Hamilton they found the Paisley men quite a match for them. Indeed the Saints drew first blood, and soon Mackie equalised with a header for the Rangers, and Turnbull put the latter in a lead of two to one at half-time. Now however, it became St. Mirren's game, and McPherson put them level two each again. The home team—the scene was laid at Ibrox—next had a goal, which after consultation with the umpires as is allowed under new League rules, the referee disallowed. Fate was kind to St Mirren, and just with five minutes to go, McDonald gave them a majority of three goals to two, which places Rangers down two points in the League list. Third Lanark had a very close game with Morton, at Greenock, and so even were the teams that honours were even at the finish, neither side scoring. Dundee were the guests of Motherwell. In the first fifteen minutes McAteer and Cowie had both scored for Dundee. The former point should have been saved. What looked like a runaway victory, however, was stayed at this point, as no further goals were obtained, Motherwell thus losing by two goals to none. Hibernians have fallen on evil days. They have played nine matches and have only won two, though three are drawn. Kilmarnock were their opponents on this occasion, and evidently the veteran blood in this team is having an effect on their general play. Rennie, Hibernians' International custodian, was beaten once in each half, and the Hibernians lost by two goals to none. Another surprise took place at Tynecastle, where Heart of Midlothian had a visit from Partick Thistle, who are playing a decidedly improved game this season, due largely to the incorporation of the Rangers' veterans, Gilchrist and Gibson, into the back division of the Thistle Early in the game Kennedy dashed away and beat the Hearts custodian with a low shot. This proved to be the only point gained by either side, and the supporters of the home team had to witness their favourites in a minority of one goal to none when the whistle blew for a cessation of hostilities.

LONDON CALEDONIANS vs. SHEPHERD'S BUSH.—After playing drawn games with Leytonstone, the Casuals and Townley Park, the London Caledonians obtained their first victory of the season on Saturday at Tufnell Park, Shepherd's Bush being soundly beaten by three goals to love. The West Londoners quite failed to do themselves justice, and suffered severely from weakness at full back, while they were also handicapped by Hughes, the centre forward, being lame throughout the game, an injury sustained on the previous Saturday reasserting itself. The Caledonians played a capital game, and to all appearances have a better all-round team than for some seasons past. They were always superior to the Bushmen in the way of speed and certainly much better together. Pressing from the start, the Scots opened the scoring after eight minutes play Gibbons netting with a fine cross shot from long range Later on the same forward shot over the bar when well placed and play continued to favour the Caledonians, although nothing further was scored before half-time, Lemoine in goal making some capital saves. Scarcely had the game been resumed, when Gibbons shot a second goal, the ball being taken down direct from the kick-off. For a time the play became a trifle straggling but the home side always had their opponents well in hand. Once Kerley broke right through for Shepherd's Bush, but Ralston raced him and just managed to intercept his shot when a goal appeared certain. A third goal for the Caledonians eventually came from Dale-Wilson, who would have been offside but for the ball glancing off an opponent just prior to his shot. Shepherd's Bush could never get properly into their stride, and ultimately retired beaten as stated. During the second half Gibbons had a kick on a leg and for the remainder of the game was very lame. A dismal morning was followed by a pleasant afternoon and the attendance numbered about 1,500.

RUGBY RULES.

LONDON SCOTTISH vs. ROSSLYN PARK.—With this match at Richmond on Saturday, against Rosslyn Park, the London Scottish entered on their serious programme for the season, and though they started with a win, the game yielded them little further satisfaction. On each side the play displayed much distinctly moderate and the play generally was far too wild and scrambling for it to possess much interest. A fairly good gate the fixture attracted. Rosslyn Park have a useful lot of hard working forwards, but their backs are weak, while the Scotsmen, on their form on Saturday, are neither strong in the scrum nor behind it. Each team was seen to more advantage in defence than when attacking, but on the day's play the Scottish backs showed the better form, and to this they owed their success though much of their play behind the pick was poor in the extreme. Of their new men Wade, the Dulwich College youth, and P. Munro, the Oxonian, played uncommonly well, but generally they were poorly supported, and on the whole the play on Saturday gave no promise that the Scottish will prove a very formidable fifteen this season, and the same remark may well be applied to Rosslyn Park. The Park forwards did much good work against the Scottish, breaking up the "scrums" smartly, and more often than not taking the ball with them, but their backs threw away their chances by their weak passing. Early in the game, they were desperately hard pressed, for Purvis followed up a long dribble, and had just got to the ball as it went over the line when Dixon dashed up and kicked it dead. Then the Park forwards were dangerous, but though cleverly repulsed by the sound tactics shown by Gibson, they came again, and King Stevens looked like scoring when he was pulled down in the corner. This was the only occasion in the first half that Rosslyn Park really looked dangerous, but just before the interval the Scottish forwards got away, and, following a spell of scrambling play near the goal line, Ross scored a try. He took the place-kick himself, but his effort to land the goal was a sorry failure. In the second half the Park men had generally the best of the play, but almost directly after changing ends the Scottish forwards came out with a fine dribble, and getting down to their rivals "25," their three-quarters put in a capital round of passing across the field, and Ritchie finished off a fine movement by scoring a try. Wade was entrusted with the place-kick, but it was not successful. After this Rosslyn Park several times threatened danger, but they could never profit by their opportunities, and so the game ended in a win for the London Scottish by two tries (6 points) to nil.

LENNOX vs. LONDON IRISH.—At Cricklewood on Saturday, Lennox won the first match on their new ground by 16 points to 8. The losers were at a disadvantage at the outset, as Maguire and Walsh did not arrive until Lennox had scored two tries. At the outset Lennox made the running, and Haxell, within ten minutes of the start, scored behind the uprights, but Atterbury failed to convert. Continuing, the Lennox halves did well, and Bell dashed down the line and put on a second try, but the same

To use a hackneyed phrase, the "Brown" is free from complications. No better value is found anywhere. Carefully examine the illustration and note how get-at-able every part is. Observe the substantial frame, the strength of the forks, the general business-like design, and when we tell you the whole is made by us, under direct supervision, you can rest assured that NO part or detail has been overlooked to make the "Brown" absolutely as perfect as it is possible to make a motor bicycle. We employ nothing but the very best materials and accessories in the construction.

The Specification includes:—Triple Head, Girder Forks, Mechanical or Automatic Inlet Valves, Two Powerful Brakes, Longuemare Carburetter (with throttle), E.I.C. Coil, Best Celluloid Accumulator, Brooks' Saddle, V Belt, Extended Mudguards, Dunlop (or other) Tyres. Speed from 5 to 40 miles per hour (according to power of motor). The most serviceable and reliable self-propelled vehicle in existence.

Thousands of unsolicited testimonials from Colonial riders.

Mr. TYLER, ADELAIDE, AUSTRALIA, writes:—

"Having just completed some 10,000 miles on the "BROWN" MOTOR CYCLE which I purchased from you last August, I now write you to express my entire satisfaction on the excellent running and power of the machine. Really I cannot speak too highly of it. I have put it to the most severe tests on bad roads and hills, and used it both with trailer, side carriage, and now as a tandem. I can safely say it is just as powerful with two on as with the one."

Fitted with Forecarriage if desired.

Write for the "Book of the Brown." It illustrates and describes the working and management of this excellent motor cycle, and is of great interest to users or prospective buyers of motor vehicles. If in cycle trade enclose business card for trade terms.

player failed to bring off the major points. Maguire and Walsh now arrived, and Lennox experienced an anxious time, twice touching down. After some useful work by Lennox, Somerville, Bell, and Newburry, the last-mentioned secured a grand try, from which Walker landed a goal. Shortly after changing ends, Haxell, who had been playing in fine style, was compelled to discontinue owing to an injury to his leg. Kelly now opened the scoring for the visitors, but the place kick failed. A little later Maguire got possession, and, backed up by McCormac, a try resulted. Kelly succeeded in converting. Matters now became exceedingly interesting, the Irishmen only being three points to the bad. Both teams made the most of the remaining time, but Lennox again got the upper hand and Somerville added another try. Walker converted, and Lennox thus won by two goals and two tries (16 points) to one goal and one try (8 points).

NEWPORT vs. OLD MERCHANT TAYLORS.—Newport opened their season on Saturday, when they met the Old Merchant Taylors on the famous Uskside enclosure, in fine weather, and in the presence of 4,000 spectators. Newport had all the best of the opening stages of the play, but the visitors nipped several rounds of passing in the bud. Eventually Thomas got a chance on the near side, and went over a yard from the touch-line. A moment later R. B. Griffiths picked up on the far side and scored a second corner try, but neither place-kick was converted. The Newport forwards broke away on the restart, and Hodges, Adams, and Pritchard handled, the latter scoring behind the posts and Lewis converting. Thus at half-time Newport led by one goal and two tries to nil. Newport resumed the attack and pressed hotly, but lost chances through faulty passing. Lewis picked up, ran in, and afterwards converted his own try. Just afterwards Harding was injured, but after having his head bound up he resumed play. In the end Newport won by two goals and two tries (16 points) to nil.

HARLEQUINS vs. RICHMOND.—A very stubbornly-contested game resulted from the meeting of these teams at the Wandsworth enclosure on Saturday, the play being of a very fast order throughout. The result would doubtless have been different but for the good defensive play of Gibson, who was playing back for the Harlequins in the absence of Batstone, for time after time—particularly in the second portion—he collared magnificently. Close upon 1,500 spectators had assembled when the visitors started. A pack in mid-field resulted in Hammond getting away nicely, but he was brought down in the Richmond "25." A penalty was here awarded to the "Quins," and although it was taken at easy distance it failed to add any advantage. A very tight scrummage took place near the home line, but Wheeler brought relief and a fine attempt from a mark by Ward only just failed. After some very fair play, in which the Richmond three-quarters showed to advantage, Wheeler, the Quin" three-quarter, got held, and, making a dash through his opponents, he just managed to get in; but Feareside failed at a rather easy goal. A series of scrums followed in the home "25," where Gibson repeatedly collared some fine attempts by Hancock and Stout, but eventually Bennett kicked across to Butcher, and picking up smartly he succeeded in landing the ball behind the post. Stout, who took the place-kick, failed to convert. On resuming, the visitors' forwards made a fine dash down the field, and Odgers, getting away nicely, had a fine opportunity for scoring, but he slipped when near the line, and in the scrummage that ensued Greenlage, one of the Harlequins' forwards, had to retire for about ten minutes owing to an injury to his knee. When half-time arrived neither side could claim the lead, both having scored a try. Early in the second half the home team caused the visitors a lot of trouble. Hammond, Young, and Veasey being prominent, the latter making a splendid attempt to drop a goal, which only just missed. After this the game was transferred to the other end, and here some splendid [illegible] Hancock, getting hold from a fine dribble by the visitors' forwards, was all but over when Gibson brought him down. A free kick to Richmond, although taken near the home goal, failed to add to the score. Towards the finish both clubs tried their utmost to get the advantage, Lippert, Curtis, Hayward, and Wheeler being conspicuous in attempting to [illegible] for the home team; while Hancock, Butcher, and Leggett were always to the front for the visitors, but when the game ended neither side had added to the score, the result being a draw of one try (3 points) to each.

CHELTENHAM vs. CLIFTON.—The meeting of these clubs at Cheltenham on Saturday was productive of an excellent game. It was generally anticipated that Cheltenham would win, and this they succeeded in doing, but Clifton gave their adversaries a real good game, and played with rare dash right up to the finish. Soon after the start the Cheltenham backs passed with much skill, and Davey was able to score a try from a pass by Goddard. Unwin failed at goal. From then until the interval play was fairly even, but errors in handling lost many chances, and there had been no further scoring when half-time arrived. Upon the resumption of the game, Pike quickly added a second try for Cheltenham. This in no way disheartened Clifton. On the contrary their forwards set up a hot pace, and, from a weak bit of play by Daunter, Burnford was able to score a try, which Burnford failed to convert. This woke Cheltenham up again, and a magnificent movement amongst the backs ended in Cottrell passing back inside to Unwin, who crossed with the try of the match, which Jacob had no difficulty in scoring. Just before the close Clifton came with a big rush, but the home defence was very sound, and the final score read: Cheltenham, one goal two tries (11 points); Clifton, one try (3 points). It should be stated that almost at the last moment Cheltenham had two disappointments. F. H. B. Champain was unable to play owing to an injured ankle, and C. Hall, the old Gloucester International, who had promised to assist, failed to put in an appearance, so that C[illegible]x, a retired veteran, had to be "picked up" on the ground.

THE RUGBY GAME IN SCOTLAND.

Glasgow Academicals undertook a most responsible fixture for such an early period of the season when they arranged to play the equally famous Watsonians at Annesland, Glasgow, last Saturday. The Academy had been out and about and had already the scalps of two border clubs, Hawick and Melrose, respectively, at their waistbelts, while the Edinburgh team had only had a limited share of field practice at home by way of training, though preparations for what was felt would prove a stiff encounter had by no means been lacking. Academicals had nearly the same team as playing in the South of Scotland. Dr. J. W. Arthur again occupying the position of full-back, Russell not yet being available. R. S. Stronach was out, however, but Haller at the lost moment could not take his place at three-quarters. Nothing was left to chance on either sidet It was a pity indeed that such an important game should have to be played so soon, but apparently there was no help for it. The pace was a cracker from the start, and there was no parlour play to be witnessed; neither expected nor asked for quarter. The Academicals were the better dribblers, but the defence of the visitors left little to be desired, their tackling being good. There was a disposition on the part of the Watsonians to indulge in off-side, and for this they repeatedly paid the penalty. The only damage done in the first half was a slight injury to Stronach, who, however, subsequently resumed. Neither side scored in this period. On resuming, Greig and France for Academicals had both good runs, as had Cairns for Watsonians. The visitors forced matters somewhat and carried most of the mauls. Then came a splendid dribble by W. Russell, which ended in Waddell scoring a try, but Arthur did not improve on this. The Academicals pressed determinedly, and although retarded for off-side play, they had several successful attempts to get over. Two free kicks were given for off-side, and from the second of these Arthur scored a penalty goal. The Watsonians were kept on the defensive to the close. The grand form of the home team was rewarded with a third consecutive victory by a penalty goal and a try (6 points) to nil. Glydesdale and West of Scotland met at Titwood, being the opening game for both. The teams gave a very fair exposition of the game, and though both pushed matters to the very finish, neither scored. Edinburgh Institute has begun its annual run of defeats, Glasgow High School being on this occasion the conqueror by a penalty goal and two tries (9 points), all obtained in the second half, to nil. Royal High School had a visit from Kelvinside Academicals. The latter are rather weak this season. The School obtained a goal in the opening period, Burns getting the try and Sanderson converting. In the concluding stage, after a good deal of mauling, the home team had two tries the latter of which was turned into a goal by McLaren. Academicals thus lost by two goals and a try to nil. Melrose visited Edinburgh and returned home defeated by Stewartonians by a try to nil.

WALKING.

FIFTY-MILE TRACK WALK.—Although monotony to a certain extent from some point of view, is bound to be associated with a performance that necessitates the covering of a quarter of a mile track no fewer than two hundred times, the Fifty-mile Invitation Amateur Scratch Race, promoted by the Blackheath H. and the Surrey Walking Club, and decided at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, on Saturday, proved one of the most notable events of its kind ever held. The struggle lacked, it is true, the variety and, one may perhaps say, the novelty of the Stock Exchange walk to Brighton of last year, but the issue was so finely fought out, and the performances of five of the six men who finished of such a high standard, that interest in the proceedings was maintained almost throughout.

It was exactly fifteen minutes to ten when the seventeen competitors were sent on their long journey. Butler at once cut out the race, and, dashing away with a fine long stride, he quickly left his field behind. At the end of a mile, Butler was leading Lansley by seventy yards, and, keeping up the pressure, he covered his two miles in fifteen seconds ahead of Sinclair's time. Even thus early the competitors had spread out considerably, and at the end of the third mile Butler had lapped his field. Rain continued to fall but this appeared to have no prejudicial effect on the walkers, and Butler, making much use of himself, forged further ahead, with the result that at the end of the first hour he had covered seven miles 220 yards and led from Lansley and Unwin. Rimmer was the first to drop out done with in the eleventh mile, while two-thirds later, Barnes Mass retired. At seventeen miles, Butler was three-quarters of a mile ahead of the second man, Lansley. Four laps later, the last-named gave way to Thompson, who from the start had walked in fine style, declining to be at all bustled by the leader. Knott was at this stage occupying third place, with Lansley, tiring rapidly fourth, and Unwin fifth. At eighteen miles and-a-half Roberts left the track for good, while a mile and-a-half later Lansley gave in, at the end of the third hour Butler, the distances walked by the first three men were, Butler, 20 miles 520 yards; Thompson, 19¼ miles; and Knott, 19½ miles. Neville was the next to cry "enough," and at 22 miles Butler began to wipe out the figures made by the Southampton harrier, W. E. N. Coston, 27th December 1880. The leader, however, soon afterwards began to feel the effect of the rate he had been going, and slowly and surely he came back to Thompson. The Ranelagh harrier was walking grandly, and well within himself, and when Butler, after walking 30 miles, pulled up and retired, Thompson was left with the lead. Mawson, who had been making up a lot of ground, was second, Heastie third, and Hammond fourth, with the others scattered. Knott had given up the struggle at 26 miles, and Pool, labouring under the want of condition, had lost ground considerably. At the expiration of the fifth hour, Thompson had done 32 miles, Mawson, 31 miles 750 yards; Heastie, 31 miles 500 yards; and Hammond, 31 miles 200 yards. Mawson hearabout was going along in fine style, while Heastie appeared as fresh as at the start. Hammond, however, was not quite comfortable, while Jull began to drop away. Thirty-four miles were reeled off, Thompson at this stage being 1,600 yards ahead of Mawson, who was closely followed by Heastie and Hammond, with Unwin next. Jull was done for at 32 miles, and soon afterwards Wakefield was attacked with cramp, and obliged to quit. At 35 miles Thompson was over fifteen minutes in front of record, and spurting he did his next mile in 9mins. 24secs. The appearance of the band had quite an effect on some of the competitors, especially Mawson and Unwin, who put in a couple of laps of fast business. In the thirty-eighth mile Mawson was two laps and nearly a hundred yards behind the leader, but, walking in great form, he got back the odd hundred, and was cheered as he gave the Ranelagh harrier the go-by. Thompson at once received orders not to let the Yorkshireman leave him, and putting on the pace, he hung to Mawson's heels. The result of this little battle was that Heastie and Hammond lost ground, and six hours from the start Thompson had negotiated 37 miles 1,740 yards, taking him over seventeen minutes inside record. Increasing his pace, Thompson got in front of Mawson, making his lead two laps and a few yards, and the Yorkshire champion slowing down, was pretty nearly half a mile behind the leader at 40 miles. By this time the field had been reduced to seven, Thompson, Mawson, Heastie, Hammond, Muir Cole, and Pool, who came along in the order named, the last two being a long way behind. Seven hours found it still a splendid struggle, considering the distance they had gone, between the first five men. Thompson had walked 44 miles 350 yards; Mawson 43 miles 800 yards; Heastie, 43 miles 300 yards; Hammond, 42 miles 1,600 yards; and Unwin, 42 miles 650 yards. All the five were in hail of record, the leader an hour in which to do less than six miles. Keeping up the pressure, Thompson at 47 miles was three laps ahead of Mawson, and had at this juncture 3hrs. 57secs. in which to do his last three miles and beat eight hours. Cole was nearly five miles behind at this stage and, very weary, he wisely retired. The result had for some little while been, bar accidence, a certainty, and finally Thompson spurted home a winner by 1,900 yards. He continued for eight hour figures, and when the pistol went he had done 50 miles 437 yards. Mawson, Heastie, Hammond, and Unwin all finished at mile pace, and Pool, who was over five miles away, last plodded along gamely to the end.

	H.	M.	S.
F. B. Thompson	7	57	38
G. W. Mawson	8	8	14
B. Heastie	8	11	17
T. E. Hammond	8	13	20
F. Unwin	8	20	2[illegible]
E. Ion Pool	9	12	3[illegible]

Mawson, Heastie, Hammond, and Unwin received silver medals for beating record.

Thompson walked on and covered 50 miles 437 yards in 8 hours. J. Hibberd, the professional, is credited with walking 50 miles in 7hrs. 54mins. at the Agricultural Hall, 14th May 1888.

G. P. O WALKING RACE.—On the 5th instant ninety-seven of the 103 entrants for the G. P. O. Walking Race over 31 miles of road competed, and some fine performances were the result. Last year the event was decided on the Tonbridge road, but on Wednesday the route taken was from the Berkeley Arms, Cranford, viâ Hillingdon, Uxbridge, Gerrard's Cross, Beaconsfield, Farnham Royal, Slough, Colnbrook, and Longford, back to the starting point. The roads were in splendid condition, and, as the majority of the men had for some time been in hard training, some good performances were anticipated. In this respect there was no disappointment, for the average pace of the leaders worked out at well over six miles an hour, and, indeed three of the competitors (Roberts, Aldred, and Brown), outside the first two places, gained the gold centre medals offered for beating an average of six miles an hour all the way, while the gold medals offered for doing an average of six miles and a half per hour throughout or, failing that accomplishing the best and second best times in the race were well won by Jarvis and Hubbard respectively by reason of their very meritorious performances. Medals were also offered for beating six hours for the journey—a performance which was accomplished by no fewer than 56 of the 80 competitors who finished. From first to last all the men walked quite fairly and in a most sportsmanlike manner, not a single caution having to be administered. Prizes were very numerous, there being awards for placings in a sealed handicap and in classes for veterans.

The result of the level race was as follows:—

AUTOMOBILISM.

THE GREAT MOTOR RUN.

Shortly before half-past ten on Saturday night a dust-stained and mud-besprinkled motor-car was driven into the arena of the London Hippodrome by Mr. Archibald Ford. The driver claims the non stop motor-run record. A week ago last Friday Mr. Ford started on his long journey, and during the course of slightly less than 204 hours covered a distance of 2,391 miles without stopping the engines of his 15 horse-power Darracq car, thus easily beating the previous British record of 2,017 miles accomplished by Mr. D. M. Weigel. The world's record of 2,350 miles, made by Laroche in America, also went by the board. Mr. Ford appeared none the worse for his wonderful performance, and he came in for hearty applause from a large assembly as he drove right down the stage and into the arena. Mr. Frank Parker officiated as M. C., and described the route taken by Mr. Ford during the run. A flashlight photograph was taken of the scene, and in commemoration Mr. Ford received the present of a car similar in pattern to the one on which he established the fresh record. Mr. Ford arrived in London from the north on Saturday morning, and at once started for Brighton, but he found the southern roads dangerously slippery. Shortly before reaching Brighton the car skidded upon the greasy surface, and, colliding with some strong iron railings, the front mudguard was badly damaged, while the basket containing supplies was carried right away. Everything was quickly put to rights, however, and this proved really the only accident that took place during the long trip. Mr. Ford undoubtedly accomplished a remarkable performance, but the record only stands so far as the duration of the run of the machine is concerned. He occupied much longer time than Mr. Weigel, and it is admitted that Mr. Ford rested for several hours during the trial, the machine, of course, running throughout. Mr. Weigel made his record by travelling incessantly day and night, and he is still prepared to defend his possession of the Dewar Cup, when that possession is assailed.

BOXING.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.

Under conditions of quite a favourable character, and in the presence of a fine gathering of members and friends, boxing was resumed at the National Sporting Club on the 4th. Although the summer is dying hard, visitors came from all parts of the country to assist at the initial entertainment of the fall of the year, and judging from the interest taken in the proceedings by the large and thoroughly representative gathering present, the noble art, as conducted at headquarters, is as popular as ever. It is hardly necessary to add that the arrangements were of a National Sporting Club order, and having said this much it is needless to add more. Mr. Bettinson's programme was made up of a competition open to heavy-weight novices, finished outright, and international match between Harry Barrett and the coloured welter-weight champion, Young Peter Jackson, of America, a six-round set-to in which the pride of Birmingham, Owen Moran, was opposed to Ted Moore, of Stepney, and bouts between lesser lights of the profession.

Jackson's appearance in the ring at headquarters had long been anticipated with much interest. In the States the coloured artist had put together a record of quite a unique character, and the members of the premier club were naturally anxious to see the man who is credited with stopping such a terror as Walcott in four rounds. Since he landed Jackson has easily matched the men put up against him on this side, and though he expected to see the stranger whipped last night, it was hardly a customer would be found capable of giving the champion, at any rate, something approaching a fight. Unfortunately, the material at the disposal of Mr. Bettinson was not particularly high standard, and though Harry Barrett, of Brighton, who had agreed to tackle the coloured boxer, has at times shown very fair form in the ring he occupied last night, his display with Jackson was not even up to service form. The affair, which lasted less than two full rounds, may be summed up in a few words "Barrett could not and Jackson would not." The Englishman boxed—if what he did can be called boxing—in a half-hearted manner. Jackson did not box at all. Had he have done so one good punch would in all probability have put an end to the business. Anxious to let the spectators see something, caring perhaps little what it was, Jackson held his hand, and contented himself with parrying the feeble attacks made by Barrett. The last-named did not even relish this sort of thing and after a lot of pushing and hugging he went down several times, and finally from a light rap on the throat. It was a disappointing bout, a blot on a very enjoyable entertainment, through no fault of Jackson, but owing solely to the inability of Barrett to make anything like a show. Opposed to Ted Moore, of Stepney, Owen Moran of Birmingham, though out of condition, displayed all his old cleverness and skill while winning easily, and some vigorous bouts amongst the heavy-weights left Private, McLoughlin, of the Irish Guards, the winner of the final.

In a six-round contest, Sid. Wilmott, of Australia, had pretty much a stone the worst of the weights with Ted Ward, of Birmingham. The Colonial is a lightly-built youth of not more than 8st., and, against one his own poundage, would no doubt, make a decent show. Ward, however, was always too strong for an unequal match, and he won with a good deal to spare. A bout of a like length between the coloured man, Andrew Jeptha, of Cape Town, and Joe Platford, of Tottenham, was fought on more even lines. The stranger, taller and longer in the reach, played a merry tune on Platford, who struck one as being a shade fortunate in securing a draw. During the evening Frank Neill (bantam-weight champion of America) and Joe Bowker, who box at the National on the 17th instant, were introduced and given a hearty reception, as was the retired champion of the P. R., Jem Mace, recently returned from South Africa.

Mr. J. H. Douglas officiated as referee, Messrs. G. N. Hall-Say and R. Smith were judges for the competition, Mr. E. Zerega took the times and Mr. Bettinson was M. C.

SCOTTISH SPORTING ITEMS.

The Scottish Amateur Gymnastic Association has twenty senior clubs affiliated and eighteen are attached to the Junior Association. The revenue for the past year was £237 10s. 11d., and the credit balance £99. Andrew Brown, the St. Mirren veteran, is dead. He played for St. Mirren first in 1882-3, when his club won the Renfrewshire Cup. He obtained International honours against Wales in 1890 and also in 1891, when he appeared at half-back. The alterations of New Cathkin Park (Old Hampden Park) have cost 3rd Lanark F.C. £2,600 and leave the club with a debt of only £625 to commence the season. Most of the Glasgow bowling clubs closed their greens for the season on Saturday last, and had presentations of prizes. While the team selected for the Glasgow Association to meet Sheffield is not at all representative, it is the best the Association could obtain from the City clubs who are reluctant to give their players because of more important League engagements on the same date. The final for the Glasgow Cup, in which Celtic and Glasgow Rangers oppose each other, has been fixed to be played at Hampden Park on 8th October. Mr. Tom Robertson is to referee. By winning the "Waddell" Life-Saving Challenge Shield, the Edinburgh Police Swimming Club have qualified to compete in the contest for the National trophy against the champion teams of England. This is the fourth time this team has reached the final, and once they were the winners. At Aberdeen Highland games, A. A. Cameron, of Partick, put the 22lbs. ball 43 feet 6½ inches and threw the 22lbs hammer 101 feet 1 inch. He is now practising wrestling, and at the same games won in catch-as-catch-can style. The financial position of Glasgow Rangers, notwithstanding their misfortunes in the past, is satisfactory to their friends. Though the season is now only six weeks old, they have £1,000 to their credit. The enterprise of the directors in securing the best talent has resulted in the gates being doubled. The absence of J. A. Paton, the Edinburgh champion swimmer, from the entrants for the 100 Yards National Championship at Middlesbrough was due to the fact that he has given up racing entirely. Edinburgh Academicals have arranged a fixture with London Scottish, which is a new match for the Raeburn-place team, Fettes College, which has held the School Championship for the past two seasons, will be minus no fewer than eleven of last year's XV. Though the forwards will be lighter, the three-quarters will very likely prove the strong point in the team. Greenock Wanderers, in addition to their usual game at the back-end with Dublin Wanderers, have also arranged a match with Lansdowne (Dublin). L. Harvey and A. Langton, two of Greenock's best men have gone to Calcutta and Shanghai respectively.

THE WEASEL.

OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

SATURDAY, 15th October. The meet was at Sandy Nullah Toll at 7-30 A.M. The first draw was from the junction of the Sholar and Pykara roads and then over the portion of Beadnell's, now known as Hamlet Cover, which the Master drew upwards. At the top of the cover hounds spoke to a line and hunted slowly to the old Pykara Road where there was a check. The Master thought the jack had run the road as usual, and held them on it well past the sixth mile, but without success. Hounds spoke again above Road Shola and puzzled out a faint line as far as the swamp behind Toda Coffee Shop when the Master stopped them as the jack appeared to be a long way off We then drew below Khed and Wenlock Sholas and then past Wapshare's Hat Shola. Hounds opened on a line in cover and hunted slowly across into the other part of Wapshare's Shola through it, and with frequent checks across the old Pykara Road to Bracken Cover. The line led them into this cover and two porcupines were at once on foot, one of which hounds killed and the other went to ground. The delay made further perseverance on the line of the jack hopeless, so the Master took them back to Lawley's Course and drew across it and up Rawling's Nullah to the top of Newmarket. On reaching the pool, the Master viewed a jack in the swamp below making towards Rallywood. The Master took hounds quickly to the bottom of Rallywood and succeeded in heading the jack, for he turned up towards Pearl Crossing and then back towards Blackmoor Vale. On touching his line hounds went off at a pace which left no doubt as to scent. He took us a short distance down Blackmoor Vale, and then crossing the stream, went over the top of Newmarket round the top of Rawling's Nullah and along the top of Bluegums, running along the fire line. Scent was a little at fault here, but the puppy, Gaiety, held the pack to the line with loud music along the top of Porlock. When nearing Sheffield Cover the jack dived into Porlock, but soon broke again, and passing below Foresters Hut entered Governor's Shola. After running the side for a short distance, he turned downwards and came out at the bottom, crossing the valley at Martyn's Shola. He left this with hounds 100 yards behind him and went on to Shaw's Plantation where he turned sharp to the left and re-crossed the Nullah to Martyn's Shola where a herd of buffaloes in the vicinity brought hounds to their noses. In Martyn's Shola hounds nearly had him, but he slipped them again and got off at the bottom back to Governor's Shola. But the pack would not be denied, and hunted him back through the thickest part of the Shola, until they finished the season, 1904, by killing him in the Cover between Porlock and Governor's Shola after 45 minutes' hunt without a check.

Hunted 63 days.
Killed 19 brace.
Ran to ground 12½ brace.

BLUE GUM.

An instance, showing the maternal attachment of a dog to its progeny, occurred during a fire which took place at Dept ford last week. A fire broke out in one of the South-Eastern Railway arches occupied by a sawdust contractor, and a number of passenger trains filled with city men had to rush between two bedges of fire. The carriages were filled with smoke, but no harm was done. While the firemen were at work a fox-terrier bitch was observed running in and out amongst the smoke, evidently trying to attract the firemen's attention. When the firemen got closer to the fire they took out, from the very centre of the arch, three little pups still alive, which, but for the conduct of the mother, must have been suffocated, burned, or drowned.

THE Annual Athletic Sports of the College took place this afternoon. H. H. The Lieutenant-Governor presided and Lady Fraser distributed the prizes. There was a very large attendance, as the school sports are one of the most interesting items of the Poojah festivities. Some good timing was put up in A. and B. Divisions. J. Owens won the 100 Yards in 10⅘ secs., and secured the Long Jump, the Hurdles, the High Jump, and the 220 Yards. J. Robinson won two of the best events, the Quarter and the Half Mile W. Smart's throw of the cricket ball fell a little short of 102 yards. H. Clifford and C. Hearne in B. Division had the proud distinction of establishing school records in the Junior Sections. One of the most interesting events was the Pritchard Challenge Cup, for which there were 40 entries. The course was 600 yards. The trophy was won by C. Rayneau, who won the Cup ought as he has now taken it for three years in succession. His timing was 1min. 27secs. There were two open events, one for Amateurs and the other for Professionals. For both there were a good number of entries, though Mr. Brown won the 220 fairly easily. Between the events the Gymnastic Class of the College gave an interesting display on the bars and the horse and took part in some fancy groupings that were much admired.

By kind permission of Major Bird and the Officers of the Royal Fusiliers, the Band of the Regiment played a charming selection of music during the afternoon. There was a vast array of handsome and valuable prizes, which were kindly distributed by Lady Fraser at the close. Details:—

THE BENARES ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION

THE football season opened in Benares on 15th August with a spirited game between the Benares Sports Club and "C" Company, West Riding Regiment, on the regimental ground, the first game in the Challenge Cup Competition played under the auspices of the Benares Athletic Association. Altogether six teams entered, and the various contests have evoked keen interest throughout the district. "C" Company of the West Riding Regiment have finally won the Challenge Cup, beating last year's winners—the Central Hindu College—by two goals to nil. The winners' record is a good one, for they have won every match and have scored seventeen goals, with only two against them. The Challenge Shield—the second prize—is not yet disposed of, and there promises to be a keen competition between "H" Company of the West Riding Regiment and the Central Hindu College for the second place. The Police team has played very pluckily throughout, and will doubtless prove a formidable team in next season's competition.

The Hockey Competition is about to begin, but there is little doubt that last year's winners—The Police—will repeat their success especially now that the XIIth Pioneers have left the station. Seven teams have up to the present entered for Hockey, and the competition is expected to be over by December, to give way to Cricket and Lawn Tennis (Doubles and Singles).

Altogether, thanks to the Benares Athletic Association which is under the patronage of the Commissioner of the Division and the Collector, and under the able guidance of its President, Mr. P. Bramley, D. S. P., athletics in Benares are very flourishing, and the Association does much to stimulate healthy competition throughout the area under its control.

Mr. C. P. A. Holford writes :

"I am writing to tell you about the Double Hammerless Ejector ·360 Cordite Rifle you built for me, and which I used on my last Big Game Shoot in East Africa and Uganda. I consider it the most perfect and reliable weapon I have used for Big Game. With it I killed everything from the size of a Guinea Fowl to Rhinoceros, including Lion, Zebra, Waterbuck, and many other Antelope and Gazelle. Its accuracy, striking and stopping powers are extraordinary; of the latter, the bullets cut out of dead game which I also forward, will give you a very good idea. CYCLING AND MOTORING AT HOME.

LONDON, 7th October 1904.

AN enquiry has been held by the Local Government Board respecting the proposed speed restrictions for motor cars in the City of London. The case for the Corporation was conducted by the City Solicitor—Sir Homewood Crawford, and the interests of automobilists were in the hands of Mr. Moresby White who represented the Automobile Club. As to the actual proceedings at the meeting they were of little interest to anyone and the result of the enquiry will not be made known for some time, but some figures which were given by the City Solicitor give a very good idea of the traffic in London. He stated that 1,250,000 people entered the City daily and that the day population to the "square mile" was 359,940 persons. In one day 248,000 persons used the crossing in front of the Mansion House and 61,185 persons the subway under the sandway. Vehicles to the number of 100,000 daily entered the City, the number passing the Mansion House being estimated at 29,745. During the evidence the Chief Commissioner of the Police acknowledged that he had heard of no motor accidents to life or limb and that motorists had been very careful.

My ultra suburban village of Wallington was last week the scene of a regretable cycling accident which occurred to a young lady in the early hours of the morning. Her brother had just made her a present of a free-wheel machine, and being anxious to try it, she got up early one morning and went for a spin. It was a foggy morning and in turning a corner she failed to notice a milk cart until right under the horse's head. To save herself she caught hold of the horse which made the animal rear, and losing her hold she fell to the ground and the cart passed over her. She was removed to a shop close by, but died very shortly afterwards from the injuries received. We find that the circumstances surrounding the accident are very similar to many others that occur, inasmuch, that the fatality could have been avoided had reasonable care been exercised. It appears that the young lady had only just learnt to ride a fixed-wheel cycle and the ride on the ill-fated morning was one of her first on a free-wheel; it was foggy, too, and her eye sight was defective, she being under treatment with an oculist. One cannot, therefore, be surprised at an accident occurring; it was foolish of her under the circumstances to venture out alone.

The proprietors of a motoring publication who are fostering the light weight motor bicycle, are doing so in a practical manner and intend to back up their arguments with experience. They have had a motor bicycle specially constructed for them, the weight of the machine, all on, being 72lbs. It is in daily use and up to the present has covered 400 miles without requiring any adjustment of the nuts or screws. The heavy weight of motor cycles hitherto built is said to account for the lukewarm support given to this class of machine by the public, it being upheld by the publication in question that a light machine would be far more popular.

One of the annual functions of the Stanley Cycling Club is a "goose worry" held on the Sunday nearest to Michaelmas Day. Of the social fixtures of the Club perhaps this is the most enjoyable although the bird immortalized by nursery rhymes is not the lightest mouthful to sleep upon. However, the members of the Club disregarded dyspepsia and all its surrounding ills and dined heartily off the Michaelmas goose, the dinner being made more palatable and enjoyable by the good fellowship which abounded. This year the "Chequers" at Uxbridge was the selected hostelry and some sixty cyclists sat down to a well served repast. Amongst the visitors were representatives of the Anerley B. C., Brighton C. C., Centaur C. C., the North Road C. C., and several other Clubs. This informal gathering was an undisputable success.

Cycling accidents still continue to be as numerous as ever and the unsatisfactory part of it is, that a large proportion of them result fatally. In addition to the case already touched upon in this column, two cases are reported from Preston wherein one rider lost his life owing to losing control when descending a hill in the neighbourhood, and the other through his chain breaking and locking the back wheel, causing him to be thrown over the handle bars on to his head. A Cork cyclist met with a serious accident through losing control, remaining in an unconscious state for many hours, and a lady rider of Omagh collided with a spring cart when turning a corner and was trampled on by the horse, dying from the effects of her injuries two days later. Why is it that so many accidents occur now? No doubt every day sees a large number of tyros of the pastime who do not exercise the same amount of care as seasoned riders when in reality they ought to be more careful since they lack experience of the road. Free-wheels, too, are doubtless responsible for many mishaps: one must be more careful with a free-wheel than with a fixed-wheel machine.

Under the Motor Car Act which came into force on the 1st of January last, the local district councils and other rural councils, were burdened with the duty of erecting danger and caution boards wherever necessary, but although I have toured many counties this summer on my push bike, I have not once seen a board erected by a rural council. The danger boards of the Cyclists' Touring Club still remain as warnings to cyclists, but these are becoming weather worn and indistinct, and besides, they are not distinctive enough for automobilists. Several accidents have occurred to motorists which might possibly have been avoided had the councils fulfilled their obligations. When accidents occur through insufficient warning, motorists should take steps to get the local council to erect these boards.

Mr. Archibald Ford, the well-known automobilist, has given a fine example of what a well-built motor car is capable of accomplishing when in the hands of an experienced driver. He has achieved a world's record by driving his car 2,390 miles without once stopping the engine. A start was made on this long journey at 7 A.M., on the morning of 23rd September, and London was reached at 7 P.M. the same evening. Then a run was made to Brighton and the car turned for Perth which was reached after a very trying journey at midnight on the 25th. From Perth the course was re-traversed and London was reached at 2 P.M. on the 27th and Brighton a few hours later, the car again being headed for Perth with a return run to London, Brighton and back to London. The British record of 2,017 miles was passed on the afternoon of 30th September outside Durham and the World's record of 2,350 miles held by La Roche, of America, on the last run from Brighton. Mr. Ford did by far the largest amount of the driving, being at the wheel, on at least two occasions, for 19 hours at a stretch.

When arranging their list of club runs at the beginning of the season, it is usual for cycling clubs to leave several dates open, and these appear on the fixture cards as "impromptu."

At a meeting held by a newly-formed Tyneside club, one of the members was asked to nominate a place.

"Why, Aa think," said he, "that we might hev a run to Impromptu; there's a lot o' clubs hev runs to it."

And he wondered why they all laughed.

CALEDONIA A. C. vs. ROVERS' C. C.—The meeting of these teams on Monday provided an interesting day's cricket on the Caledonian ground. The Rovers were strengthened with the inclusion of several Medical College men, two of whom opened the batting for the visitors. The Caledonian fielding was slack at the start and the 1st innings' total of 94, might otherwise have been less. Cruden and Duff's partnership produced some good cricket and after Dimsdale brought about a separation, Christensen bowled with success. The Caledonians went to the wicket after tiffin, but only Byers and Christensen did anything of note as the whole side was out for 69 to the good bowling of Alexander backed up by smart fielding.

With an advantage of 25 runs the Rovers batted a second time, but Elliot and Christensen disposed of them all in sixteen overs, the latter showing his old cunning with the ball. The Rovers set their opponents the task of scoring 69 runs in 55 minutes and Chandler and Christensen started well, the latter hitting very hard for his innings of 33. The game became quite exciting, as time was getting short and a collapse in the batting occurred. Dimsdale, Pybus and Byers being disposed of in rapid succession. At 5-20 Wade scored the winning run for his side, the credit for which victory rested mainly with Elliot and Christensen.

OOTY GYMKHANA vs. THE SECRETARIAT.—Played on the 17th instant, the Gymkhana winning by 6 wickets; Hemmingway (46) played a good game for the Secretariat, while Captain Copeland (54) and Major Norie (53) were top scorers for the winners. Copeland bowled well, taking seven wickets for 45 runs. Score:—

AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. BISHOP'S HIGH SCHOOL.—This was the first match in the tournament and was played at Poona on the 17th instant. The High School team, which has only been in existence a short time, gave a good account of themselves. They had the best of the opening exchanges, but towards the close of the first half the Scots got away and obtained a penalty in the High School circle. They cleared, but the soldiers returned to the attack, and before the interval Pope and Henry scored a goal each. In the second half the Scots pressed most of the time and scored once more, Reid netting the ball. The School played a good defensive game, and there was no further scoring till the close, the Scots winning by three goals to nil.

A. AND S. HIGHLANDERS vs. E. LANCASHIRES.—Played on the 18th instant before a poor attendance, a well contested game resulting in a win for the Highlanders by 3 goals to nil. They got away at the start and Mr. Stewart found the net. Soon after the Lancashires lost Cleary, who dislocated his elbow and had to retire, Thorns taking his place. There was no further scoring in the first half, but on resuming after the interval the Highlanders put on two more goals. Private Stewart and Mr. Stewart being credited with the points.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. Y. M. C. A.—A good game was witnessed between the above teams on the 19th instant. During the first half the Young Men had rather the best of the exchanges, but neither team were able to get through. After the interval the play ruled very even, and though both sides nearly scored on more than one occasion they could not find the net and it was not till the last five minutes that Webber hit the first goal for the Scots. The Young Men tried hard to equalise but without success, and Mr. Pope put on another goal for the soldiers who thus won by two goals to nil.

POONA GYMKHANA vs. A. AND S. HIGHLANDERS.—Played on the 20th instant, a great game resulting in a win for the Gymkhana by five goals to one. Play ruled fast throughout; the Gymkhana attacked on starting but Campbell missed. Then the Highlanders pressed and the Gymkhana were forced to defend: they broke away, however, and scored a goal from a scrimmage. Hall put on the second goal a little later, and before half time a third had been added by Yates. After the interval the Highlanders attacked but the Gymkhana backs cleared and the forwards rushing down hit a goal. The remainder of the play was very even: Kearsey scored the fifth goal for the Gymkhana, and the Highlanders working hard managed to put through just before time was called.

THE FINAL.

POONA GYMKHANA vs. ROYAL SCOTS.—A large attendance witnessed the final match in the tournament, played on the 21st instant, between the above teams. The Gymkhana's chances were most fancied, but the soldiers were in good form and won a hard game by three goals to one. The Gymkhana were very prominent at the start, but the Scots got away after a while and Reid scored a goal. The Gymkhana made a great effort to get level but the Scots defended, and once more the forwards rushed down and Pope hit a goal which was disallowed. In the second moiety the Gymkhana pressed, and put in some good work, but were unable to score. The Scots then attacked, and Pope hit the second goal, Webber adding the third a little later. A few minutes before the end Lucas put through for the Gymkhana. Major-General Richardson having congratulated the winners, Mrs. Richardson presented the Cup to the winners. Teams:—

THE ROYAL SCOTS.—Goal, Keegan; Backs, Mackenzie and Lance-Corporal Harley; half-backs Corporal Fitz John, Lister, and Corporal Martin; forwards, Messrs. Pearse, Reid, Henry, Pope, and Private Webber.

POONA GYMKHANA.—Goal, Stubbs; backs, Lyon and Lucas; half-backs, Laron, Creagh, and Captain Umfreville; forwards, Campbell, Hall, Yates, Thew, and Kearsey.

MR. FRED GREENHILL'S ENGLISH HORSES.

WE took a turn round Cook and Co.'s stables, Dhurrumtollah Street, the other morning and had a look at the English horses Mr. Fred Greenhill has lately imported, ex S. S. Scindia, to Bombay and railed across to Calcutta. So many of his shipment of two years ago did so remarkably well in the different show rings and racecourses of India that he has been inspired to try his luck again. This small but select shipment includes seven thoroughbreds and 16 saddle and harness horses and ponies. They really are pictures to look at and there should be no difficulty in finding buyers as soon as they are fit to show and have got over their physic.

The catalogue, which will include the tabulated pedigrees with the Bruce Low figures, is now in the hands of the printers, Mr. Greenhill hopes to have it ready in about a week's time. In the meantime intending buyers can, on application, obtain a preliminary catalogue from Messrs. Cook and Co., or of Mr. Fred Greenhill, Spence's Hotel.

The thoroughbreds include Handelian, bay colt, 1902, winner of two races in England, by El Diable 3, out of Galathen, by Galopin 3 out of Reredos by Rosicrucian 5.

Insurrection, bay colt 1902, by the Rush 8 out of Restons 4, by Merry Hampton, engaged in the North Derby of 1,500sovs. June 1905.

Child Adopted brown filly, 1902, by Abercorn 3, out of Handrine 5.

Bigamy brown filly 1902, by Hopbrine out of Gogo 13 (the best two-year old of her year in Ireland, by Town Moor, by Doncaster)

Mynanugger, a chestnut gelding, 1902, by Baliol, out of Romilda.

Shipwrecked, a brown horse 1901, by St. Angelo, out of Lady Chippendale, by Chippendale

Mr. Greenhill has several others in England, among them Sing Sing by Melford Lad out of Sing On (by Saraband). Sire of the dam of Pretty Polly and a brown yearling colt by Trenton, out of Lady Sterling.

We were nearly forgetting to mention the bay filly, 1902, by Trenton, out of Blow, we see her three year old full sister won a race of £100 for Sam Darling at Folkestone this month. So this ought to help along her sale. She will be trained by Wishart and this trainer will also look after the brown St. Angelo colt, Smallman will take over Bigamy and Insurrection to train as soon as they are fit, and Gardner, who has come out with Mr. Greenhill as trainer, will have Handelian, Mynanugger and Child, Adopted and as he has had his pick, buyerss hould watch these three. Gardner comes out here with a good reputation and can go to scale easily 8st. 4lbs we noticed old Harry Weatherall also with Mr Greenhill's horses and he informs us he is working for "Mr. Fred," and hopes to ride some winners for him before returning home. The harness horses are a really magnificent lot and are deserving of attention

Mr. Greenhill tells us he can ride and drive every horse himself, and he says he never was much of a jockey, it is a sure guarrantee of their being thoroughly quiet. They are as follows:—

Bay Mare. 15-1. 5 Years
SIRE—SULTAN 1565 and 667 (p. 64).
DAM—MYSTERY 698 F. S.
Description and Breeding.—A charming pair of golden bays with black points and no white, suitable for a victoria, lady's phaeton, or brougham. They are naturally perfectly matched being by the same sire, and daughter and granddaughter respectively of the same mare Mistery, the fastest her late owner ever drove in a buggy. Sultana Mistery is a very sharp trapper in single harness. The pair are curious specimens of the Coach Horse and Hackney cross, both being out of small Hackney Mares by the famous Sultan, who has given his beautiful colour, lengthy top-line, and quality, without adding to the size. There is nothing cobby about this pair: they should breed admirably to a Hackney stallion after their work is done. All the Sultans have great courage.

Fosterling, the dam of Sultana Fosterling, was imported into India in 1902 by Mr. F. Greenhill, and took Frist Prize in the Harness Class, Calcutta Show.

CEMENT.

Quiet single and double.
SIRE—PRINCE VICTOR 376 Y. C. H. B. (p. 63).
DAM—2399 PRINCESS H. S. B.
Description.—A beautiful pair of victoria or landau horses, with elegance and action. They have rare mettle and good manners, and are rich dark bays or browns, whole colours without white.
Breeding.—The pair are a good specimen of the Hackney and Yorkshire Coach Horse cross, with an inch less size than usual but with the great advantage, rarely missed, of whole colour. Cement is half-sister to the grand yearling and three-year-old fillies Fusion (Lot 69) and Alloy (Lot 62), both being out of a fine Coaching mare, Lady Lanerton, while the sires of both are respectively son and grandson of old Norfolk Confidence. No Hackney blood on the top "nicks" with the Yorkshire Coaching mare like that of old Confidence; and it is lamentable to think what breeders lost a generation ago by not pursuing that cross thus leaving to foreigners the market for 15-3 and 16-hand whole-coloured harness horses in this country.

VICTOR GAL.

Dark Bay Gelding. 15-3. 5 Years.
SIRE—VICTOR GAL.
DAM—GAY LADY 2773.
A very nice horse with quality and action; a good match to either Cement or Victor Prince.

DO HORSES THINK?

EDWARD Shipp, chief horse trainer for Forepaugh and Sells circus, has recently written an article on the training of horses, from which the following extract is made:—

"That curious, indefinite quantity known as 'instinct' is at the bottom of all the tricks the horse learns. Just as he eats from instinct, he learns tricks. Usually the eating is at the bottom of his entire education. He does things for the most part because he gets something good to eat after the doing. It is his natural search after food that makes him do them, just as he paws away the snow to get at the grass. After a while the actions become habits, and we will say he is 'broken.'

Nothing of the sort.

There never was anything to break. His instincts were simply set in motion. Some men take months to teach a horse the simplest tricks and weeks to make him bridle-wise. In a week I can have the same horse responding easily to my directions in simple tricks. It isn't the horse; it is the trainer. Some men exercise an influence over animals which is almost hypnotic. The man himself can't tell how it is done. In some mysterious manner the horse's instincts make him do certain things in certain ways at certain times. He does them just as he eats and with no more evidence of judgment.

It is no uncommon thing for a horse to open a feed-box to get at the grain inside. Some people fancy this is a proof of intelligence. Really it is natural nosing after something to eat. Man is not the only animal whose heart can best be reached through his stomach.

There is not the slightest reason to believe that a horse has a thinking mind. Here is an instance:—

During the winter, two of our ponies that do a pedestal act, and always get a lump of sugar after it, if they make no mistakes, rehearsed so much that their pedestals became duncolored from dirt. When, we came into Madison Square garden to perform the little platforms were repainted. What do you think those ponies did?

They refused to act. When led into the ring and set at their tasks they looked and sniffed at the new pedestals and didn't make a movement in the direction of their usual performance.

It wasn't intelligence that made them act thus. The same lumps of sugar were waiting at the end. They simply had not sense enough to know their own implements in white paint.

If a horse is taught to go through a red door he will have to be taught all over again to go through a white one. All doors do not look alike to them.

THE INDIAN JACANAS.

BY F. FINN, B. A., F. Z. S.

THE Jaçanás form one of the most remarkable families of wading birds, and are found all round the world in warm climates; they do not migrate and for their peculiar mode of life need water well overgrown with aquatic vegetation, their extraordinarily long toes enabling them to run easily over the leaves without sinking In this respect they somewhat resemble the Rails, with which they were formerly classed; but the Jaçanás are still better adapted for this kind of life than the Rails, as all their toes are long and provided with almost straight claws of extravagant length, especially the hinder, while in the rails the claws are of more ordinary size and form and the hind toe and claw rather short. Moreover, the Jaçanás have a plump body and are not slab-sided like the Rails; while their bills resemble that of Plover with the same small mouth; and it is to the Plovers that their anatomy shows them to be allied. They build their nests on the water weeds; their downy young are variegated, not uniform black like those of the Rail family. Their plumage is very pretty, and cock and hen are alike. We have only two species in India, but these are among the very commonest of our water-birds, and a great many are sent into the Calcutta Provision Bazaar every winter. In spite of their long spidery-looking legs and toes, they are good table-birds, and quite worth putting on the list of game-birds and protecting as such. They are not shy birds, and often live near human dwellings.

THE BRONZE-WINGED JACANAS.

Metopidius indicus, Blanford, Faun. Brit. Ind., Birds, volume IV., p. 218.

Native names:—Dal-or jal-pipi, Karatiya, in Bengal; Kattai in Purneah; Hi, in Burma.

I take this first, as it is a typical example of the family, our other species differing considerably from all other Jaçanás The Bronze-winged species has a thick-set body and very short tail rather short and decidedly rounded wings, and very long stout legs, with the claws very long and straight, the hinder one positively enormous. The bill also is rather stouter than that of the other species, and there is a small rounded flap of skin on the forehead. The plumage of the young is quite different from that of the adult, but there is no seasonal change in the feathering when adult plumage has been acquired.

The old bird is very richly and handsomely coloured, being green-black with conspicuous white eyebrows, and with the upper back and wings (except the pinion-quills) metallic bronze; the lower back and tail are glossy maroon. The eyes are dark, the legs dull green, and the bill greenish-yellow with a touch of red at the root, and flap on the forehead dark bluish.

The young bird has the neck and underparts white where they are black in the old one, except for a patch of green-black on the back of the neck. The crown is chestnut, and there are chestnut edgings at first to the bronze feathering on the back and wings; the lower back is pencilled with black and chestnut, and the tail with black and buff, and there is a buff wash on the sides of the neck and on the breast. Birds in the transition stage seemed scarce in the Calcutta market, so presumably they come into colour late in the spring. Hens at any age are rather larger than cocks being a foot long, with a shank of more than two-and-a-half inches and wings of seven from knuckle to tip.

This bird is found over most of the Indian Peninsula and east to Celebes, but not in Ceylon or Kashmir, the Punjab, Sind, or Western Rajputana, and chiefly affects places where there are permanent marshes, hiding a good deal in the herbage. It feeds both on insects, and on vegetable food, such as seeds and roots, and breeds from June to September, laying usually four eggs of a buff or olive colour, marked with a confused network of dark lines and very glossy; they measure about an inch-and-a-half in length. I found it was not brought nearly so numer-

THE PHEASANT-TAILED JACANA OR WATER-PHEASANT.

Hydrophasianus chirurgus, Blanford, Faun.-Brit.-Ind., Birds, vol. IV., p. 219. Native names:—Piha, Pihuya, Hindi; Surdal, Sukdal, Misca, Dal-kukra, Bhepi, Jal-manjor, Chittra-billai in Bengal and Behar; Balal Saaru and Neweiya in Ceylon; Europeans in that island know it as "Tank-pheasant."

This beautiful creature is about the same size as the last species, but somewhat different in form, having a more slender bill and legs, with decidedly shorter claws, and a longer and pointed tail; the wings are also much longer and decidedly pointed. The first quill has a curiously-shaped tip, like a lance-head, the shaft connecting this with the rest of the feather being very slender and flexible, the fourth quill also ends peculiarly, running suddenly to a point. There is a very marked seasonal change of plumage, not only in colour but in the length of the tail, and in the breeding season a strong sharp spur is developed on the bend of the wing.

In full breeding-plumage the tail is ten inches long—afoot in the hen, which is larger than the cock, shaped like that of apheasant, and black in colour, as is most of the plumage; the head and throat, however, are white, as are also the wings except for a border running to each quill, decreasing from outside inwards; the back of the neck is a lovely glossy golden yellow. The bill is reddish, and the legs a greenish colour; the eyes are usually dark. In winter the wings remain the same, except for some brown mottling near the shoulder, but the long tail is replaced by a short white one with brown centre feathers; it is still, however, tipped and longer than in our other Jaçaná; the black disappears from the body plumage, the underparts being white as well as the throat, and the back a glossy light brown; the yellow reduced to a dull streak down each side of neck, and crown of the head is brown.

Young birds are clothed in a very similar plumage to this dress, but have a chestnut crown and chestnut borders to the upper plumage, and no yellow on the neck; moreover they have yellow eyes as a rule, though I have twice seen dark-eyed young birds, and much more frequently yellow-eyed old ones. Hardly ever saw a bird in the bazaar showing change of plumage contrary to what one so frequently sees in some groups, the Rail tribe for instance.

This Jaçaná is more widely distributed than our other species, spending all over India and Ceylon, and East to South China and Japan; it frequents open water more, and takes wing more readily. Its cry is different, being a cat-like mew, and it utters it less frequently, not crying out even when handled. Its eggs are different from those of the Bronze-winged species, being markably peg-top-shaped, and uniform in colour, not marked; they are reddish-brown or greenish-bronze very glossy, and about an inch-and-a-half long. Four are laid in a nest on the like that of the other bird.

When in Calcutta I used to take much interest in this species, to mind the most beautiful of all our smaller aquatic birds, hardly equalled in this respect by any bird whatsoever. It can be easily kept on a large weedy tank with its wings cut (not too closely) in its proper place, on weeds, the large size of its feet is not apparent, and its singular grace of form and the eye even when the showy breeding-plumage is not worn. I kept several specimens on the tank in the Indian Museum compound, so had considerable opportunities of observing them. I found they were very sedentary in their habits and resented each other's trespass on their chosen spot; an intruder was attacked with both beak and wings both of them striking at once. The small males seemed to stand in much awe of the females, and with considerable reason; it would be interesting to know which sex sits on the eggs, they when they swam, sitting on the water even more lightly than a Coot but unlike most gulls, they can dive, using their wings under water, not their feet, they seemed to feed mostly on small seeds which they procured by turning over the leaves, but I found that in closer captivity they would eat the diet I recommend above for the other species, and I succeeded in sending them to the London Zoo.

THE CARE OF YOUNG BIRDS AFTER THEY LEAVE THE NEST.

When urged as an objection to the Darwinian theory that Natural Selection, if that force exists, must tend to destroy species rather than cause new ones to come into being. All birds leave the nest before they are fully developed. When they first come out of the nursery they have attained neither their full powers of flight, nor complete skill in obtaining food. Every young bird, no matter how fine a specimen it be, leaves the nest an inexperienced weakling and can therefore stand no chance in competition with the fully grown and experienced members of the species. Natural Selection takes an individual as it finds it and pays no attention to potentialities.

That such an objection should have been urged against the theory of Natural Selection is proof of the fact that naturalists are inclined to forget that with many, if not all, species of birds the duties of the parents towards their offspring by no means cease when the young birds leave the nest. A study of the habits of cats and dogs—the animals with which we come most into contact tends to impress us with the transitoriness of parental instinct; the puppies which the mother guards so fiercely to-day will be almost forgotten a week hence. This abrupt and sudden termination of the maternal instinct is, I submit, not a natural trait. It must be attributed largely to the effects of domestication and human selection. That such treatment does affect this powerful instinct is a fact well-known to pigeon-fanciers, for some artificial breeds refuse to nurse their own young, consequently these have to be reared by a foster-mother in the shape of the blue rock pigeon. Domestication, however, has not succeeded in greatly impairing the maternal instinct of the barn-door hen. Nevertheless I think it may be generally stated that animals in their natural state have the parental instinct more highly developed than those under domestication.

The fact that birds look after their young long after these have left the nest and even after they are well able to find for themselves is not brought out with sufficient clearness in books dealing with natural history. Such books tell us much of the care of the mother bird for her chicks while they are in the nest but give us to believe that as soon as the youngsters are strong enough to fly well their parents take no further notice of them, and even go as far as to literally drive them out of house and home. Thus Mr. Pycraft writes, "In almost every case, so soon as the young are old enough to look after themselves, they are driven away from the neighbourhood of their birthplace to seek homes elsewhere."

The objects of this driving young birds to seek pastures new are to prevent the numbers of the species in the locality from exceeding the food supply and to obviate too close interbreeding.

Some species may drive away their young ones as soon as these are able to find for themselves, but I do not believe that many do Theoretically of course a species of which the distribution of the food is comparatively uniform as, for example, a fly-catching bird, should spread itself equally over the area of its distribution. In practice birds do nothing of the kind; at least my experience teaches me that they do not. To cite a concrete example the distribution of the little green bee-eater (Merops viridis) in Madras. The bird is not common in that city, and the few birds which do occur are by no means uniformly distributed over the station. They occur in several colonies. There is one field, which might well be called "bee-eater field," for in it one may be almost sure of finding a number of bee eaters. while all the surrounding fields are devoid of these birds Birds are social creatures, and usually keep together even though by so-doing they experience greater difficulty in obtaining food than they otherwise would. But this is a digression. The fact that the parent birds tend the young long after they have left the nest, and even after they are fully capable of holding their own in the struggle for existence, disposes of the above-cited objection to the theory of Natural Selection. Nature is so careful of the young warriors that she prolongs the instinct of parental affection longer than is absolutely necessary So important is it that the young should have a fair start in life that she errs on the safe side.

It is common knowledge that foster parents feed cuckoos when these have grown so large that, in order to reach the mouth of their spurious babes, the little foster mothers have to perch on their shoulders.

The sight of a tiny bird feeding the great parasite is laughable, but it is also most instructive. It demonstrates how thoroughly bird mothers do their work. Crows, as is well known, tend their young ones for weeks after they have left the nest. I have recently had ample opportunity of satisfying myself as to this.

It is my custom to breakfast on the verandah. A number of crows assemble daily to watch operations and to pick up the bits of food thrown to them. The crows are all corvus splendens, with the exception of two, which belong to the large black species, but these latter are, comparatively speaking, shy birds, and consequently hang about on the outskirts of the crowd. Among the grey-necked crows is a family of four, the parents and two young birds. Everyday without fail they visit the verandah, and the two young birds make more noise than all the rest of the crows put together. They are easily recognisable, firstly, by their more raucous voices, and secondly, by the pink inside of the mouth. They are now so old that in size they are very nearly equal to the mother. Further the grey of the neck is sharply differentiated from the black portions of the plumage, showing that they have left the nest for some time. Unfortunately I did not make a note of the day when they first put in an appearance, however, I can assert with confidence that they have visited the verandah regularly for the last three weeks and the mother bird still feeds them most assiduously. It is ludicrous to see these great creatures sidle up to the mother when she has seized a piece of toast and open their huge red mouths, often pecking at each other out of jealously. They are obviously well able to look after themselves; their flight is quite as powerful as that of the mother bird, yet she still treats them as though they were infants quite incapable of doing anything for themselves.

In crows the parental instinct is so highly developed that the above occurrence has not caused me so much surprise as a little scene I witnessed some months back.

I was walking one morning along a shady lane when I noticed on the grass by the roadside a bird which I did not recognise. It was a small creature, clothed in black and white, which tripped along like a wagtail. It had no tail, but it wagged the hind end of its body just as a sandpiper does. While I was trying to identify this strange creature a young pied wagtail came running up to it with open mouth, into which the first bird popped something. I then saw that the unknown bird was simply a pied wagtail (Motacilla madraspatensis) which had lost her tail! The young bird was fully as large as the mother, and having a respectable tail, which it wagged in a very sedate manner, looked far more imposing. The parts of the plumage which were black in the mother were brownish-grey in the young bird. The white eye brow was not so well defined in the youngster as in the adult, while the former had rather more white in the wing, but as regards size there was nothing to choose between two. The young bird kept following the mother. It was able to keep pace with her as she dashed after a flying insect. It ran after her begging continually for food. The mother swallowed most of the flies she caught, but now and again put one into the mouth of the young bird, but she did so very severely, as if she were saying, "You are far too old to be fed; it is no use to pretend you cannot catch insects, you are a naughty lazy little bird!" "But the young one looked so lackadaisical, that her looks said more plainly than could be expressed by words." "Oh mother, it tires me so to chase insects. They fly so fast. I have tried but have caught so few, and am very hungry."

For several minutes, the young wagtail followed the mother, then something arrested its attention, so that it tarried behind its parent. The mother moved away, apparently glad to be rid of the troublesome child for a little. Then she suddenly flew off. Presently the young wagtail looked round for its mother, and I was interested to see what would happen when it noticed that she had flown away. My curiosity was soon satisfied. Directly the young bird perceived that the mother had gone, it set itself most philosophically to catch insects, which it did with all the skill of an old bird, turning, twisting, doubling with the elegance of an experienced wagtail. I describe these two little scenes, not as anything wonderful, but as examples of what is continually going on in the world around us.

The parental instinct is probably developed in some birds more than in others, but I believe that in all cases the affection of a bird mother for her young persists long after they have left the nest, and for some time after they are fully capable of looking after themselves. Birds are born with many instincts but they have much to learn both before and after they leave the nest. It is not until their education is complete, until the mother-bird has taught them all she herself knows, until they are as strong or stronger than she, that the young birds are driven away and made to look after themselves.

The Story Teller.

HOW THE PUNTERS WERE PUT AWAY.

STRAIGHT backing—that is, betting on horses to win without other means of subsistence—would not have kept him in the clover which he permanently inhabited, and there was always a bloom upon his cheeks. "Not so dusty" was a description of him frequently given; in course of time that phrasing was contracted to "Dusty" as an appropriate pet name for our sporting hero; and so, with "Dusty" for title, he became a familiar figure in the ring. Oh! for a bit of luck there when we are "dashing it down!"

He was consistently well-dressed. New garments seemed to drop on him from the clouds. He changed them—his garments, I mean, not his clouds—as other men change a threepenny piece, with the same insouciance and recklessness as to consequences. His tailor must place trust in him, we reflected, even if his wife might have her doubts, because, alas! "Dusty" is—and here romance dies—voluminously married. A suspicion of moustache on the lady's stiff upper lip does not contribute to his happiness. When she puts her foot down it covers a considerable expanse of territory. There is a trifling reverberation.

Familiar with those salient facts, her husband economised his time as much as possible in her society. He did not yearn to visit her when she was in one of her ebullient moods. For, as he remarked with beautiful emphasis after a bad day at Gattick: "Other things we have a chance to retrieve after they have been wrested from us in the last round, and even when cash is gone we need not despair while we have strength enough to terrify citizens less robust. But lost time is a fatal indiscretion, while every step takes us nearer to our final cubby-hole." . . . Odds on tombstone, so to speak.

When he bought a real racehorse after a good day at Gattick ructions were experienced in that hapless home. The nature of his transaction was revealed to him by she of the expansive tootsies in a hideous manner. He trembled to observe the ferocity of her glance.

"A rabbit," she cried, "would be more in your line than a racehorse, because you might skin the former when you are 'broke to the world' again. Such nerve and want of principle! I wonder that you do not follow the example of your elder brother, who is still under—ah!—lock and key."

"Shut up, do!" growled her worthy mate. . . . . Few of us care to sit still while piquant exposures as to our family history are initiated.

But curling her stiff upper lip, moustache and all, the lady continued to expound her sentiments with some degree of passion. When racehorses," she declaimed, "are sold to sportsmen of a certain class"—her glare at him was withering—"others must step gingerly into the arena. Cold, not gold, is what they are likely to take there."

She put all her foot down at once without apparent effort, and the rafters shook, her next remark, being: "Do not come to me when you are insolvent, and pray for help. If you go down on your knees in the dust and weep copiously to dry it the effect will be nil so far as my purse is concerned."

Thus admonished, "Dusty" was as cool as a cucumber, and looked at his wife with an air of condescension. Sometimes, indeed, he took strange liberties with her, and asserted his intellectual supremacy with a gratifying result. "Dearest," he murmured, "keep your eyes on me, and ere many moons have passed you will see something that will warm the cockles of your stony heart."

"I took you for better or worse," she retorted, "and have been trying since to make the best of a bad job."

Reserving his cross-buttock for a more auspicious occasion, "Dusty" proceeded to work his racehorse according to his lights. Sordid aspirations filled his soul. He might make the ring quiver, or, far more probably, he would quiver himself to the point of pallor if his "good things" came unravelled or semi-detached. He schemed, therefore, in his most diabolical vein. Races were run in which his crack, overdone with flesh and not backed, figured in the rear rank. He grew to be regarded as a fatile creature. Punters forget to recognise the fact that he was ever on the course.

His owner chuckled to himself, scenting unholy chances of profit. He intended to "slip" his candidate soon; it would be a personal or home benefaction. His wife might be induced to shave before he or she was much older if he approached her in the right way and poured riches into her lap. The harvest was ripening, the golden sheaves would be garnered; oh! yes, in a little while he would be able to visit his till without a groan or an execration. Many shopkeepers use both expresions at such a crisis.

The day of days arrived when "Dusty" was ready with his horse. Friends smiled at him when he appeared in the paddock with that quadruped just as proudly as if he had a halo round his head and another under his arm. If his wife had sent him a lock of her hair—not from that stiff upper lip—he could not have shown a brighter front. A thoroughly capable jockey had been engaged, and every prospect was favourable.

The gambling associates of our hero chaffed him mercilessly when his "flyer" was being saddled. They said he was one of the "also ran" or "did nots," such was their play of persiflage, their facetious intercourse. If they had only known!

"My horse will take this race," said "Dusty," with a serene air of confidence, "and anybody who backs him will have reason, if not the wish, to thank me for this tip."

His jovial companions laughed. Their idea was that he was saying to play a sort of belated joke or spoof on them and that his motives were treacherous, impure. One roysterer declared:

"Why, your old wreck of a tit could not have more than a bit of a look in for this prize if half his foes were holiday-making and the rest were disheartened. Study the book, my lads, to get the infamy of his form. Analyse the horrors of his recent running and then let us revile this clown" he pointed rudely at our hero—"for owning such a disgraceful instrument of gambling."

"He is sure to win this handicap," persisted his proprietor, "perhaps by the length of a street. Do not tell me after the thoroughfare victory, that I put you off the only blessed 'snip' present afternoon. I'm trying to put you on."

It was impossible, however, to overcome the incredulity and scepticism of those artful punters. Nor, sooth to say, was the last speaker anxious to do so; he was playing a game of his own. His notion, suggested by experience, was that when he informed everybody that his horse was certain to win nobody would believe him. We often note a lack of faith in Tattersall's enclosure when an astute compatriot avers that he holds a winner in the hollow of his hand. "Which hand?" we ask derisively "and what price the sleepy hollow in which you repose, eyes closed, mouth open, beautiful?"

Often, indeed, the best plan by which to obtain a nice price against a rod in pickle is to be frank and candid, when people act on the principle that if you had a "good thing" you would assuredly keep it to yourself. Say your horse has no chance, and they begin to sniff after him amongst the pencillers.

. . . . . .

To make the business in this case more remunerative it was worked on clever s. p. lines in town, where the commission seemed to be practically endless. That part was, in fact, transacted with eminent ability, having been organised by turfites who knew every move on the board, every trick of the trade, and every tinkle of the bell, and they were not impeded by evangelical scruples. Not a penny was invested on this "readied" competitor in the ring. Care was taken that the s. p. money did not come back to the course. If there were not a delay at the post!

"Get off with my horse as soon as you can," said "Dusty" to his jockey ere the latter mounted, "and also get the others off quickly."

"What d'ye mean?" queried that fine rider, disturbed mentally by such weird orders.

"I mean this: My champion has about a ton in hand, and the 'stuff' is put on 'away.' Naturally I do not wish it to be wired to the ring, and the only chance of that is by your being kept behind the barrier for any length of time. So, if you can manage it, induce two or three of the other jockeys to help you in that way. Promise 'em a 'tenner' each on mine."

"Right you are, guv'nor," was the reply, "and don't forget me after I have landed your huge wagers."

Fortunately, there was no delay at the starting-post on the occasion. The runners lined up to the barrier and kept steady as mice with a cat in ambush. The tapes were released immediately, it was delightful to watch, and the favourite, backed as a certainty by the "heads," was outpaced in the first few strides. A despised outsider—no other than that floated by the infatuated "Dusty"—won in a trot. Nor a soul was on him in a penny sense except his owner and the jockey who had helped to pull a result so glorious. Their faces were wreathed in smiles, their accents were honeyed. They wore the aspect of well-paid actors who had not been hissed off the stage recently.

Whilst his speculative friends gathered round "Dusty" after the event, they were not able to upbraid him—which was the purpose for which friends usually assemble. He had informed them all that his horse was sure to win, that it was certain money to back him with spirit, and that such an opportunity rarely occurred for bleeding the bookmakers till they retched few of their precious red corpuscles. The frankness of his revelation caused those choice acquaintances to mistrust him: he had served his turn. Played slowly, the game is full of thrills.

He spoke his mind, the naked truth, almost to the verge of indelicacy. "I tried to put you on" he said, "instead of trying to put you away, and so you put yourselves off accordingly. The best method for gaining on an audience is to tell a pack of lies; the worst plan to keep it is to spout in the opposite direction. Racing men"—he bowed to them—"are so suspicious that the little they believe they cannot assimilate, and the rest is mere flatulence. Good-day," he waved his hand "and thank you."

By rights the story ought to end there, but, at the risk of anti-climax—the bane of warriors when the fight is over—we are compelled to win up with a more subdued coruscation. Blue ambition to give full value for money ruins us. Besides, we forget that dear lady with a coupçon of fur on her stiff upper lip and feet that look almost murderous in the gloaming!

She waited for "Dusty" to come home with his horse—as was not an affectionate nature—too hirsute females are apt to be clinging—and she prepared a speech or two for him when he arrived. He was late. Yet she sat up determinedly, rehearsing a few neat phrases for his discomfiture, and tingling with apprehension lest they might be deficient in sting at the eleventh hour. It was nearly that time now. She liked to supply her own venom in wholesale quantity. What a treat it is, bless her, to be brought into humorous relations with strong-minded women!

At last, perchance with a few vine leaves in his hair, "Dusty" approached the domestic hearth, whereon his wife sat, her purpose being (as proclaimed by the malignancy over her brow) to give him a tremendous wigging. But like a trustsman, he decided to get the first run.

"Darling," he murmured, weaving a trifle, "have you ever seen a cluster crisp, rustling five-pound (bis) notes?"

"Bis, what?" she cried, "you tipsy reprobate!"

"Or a number of bright, glistening sovereigns, he went on, changing his legs, which I have brought home along with me (bis) notes for you to keep until we go—er—birds'-nesting together again."

"Let us retire, dear," she cooed, sweetly, "while you are able to go upstairs without recourse to your hands and knees."

DOUBLE DUMMY PROBLEM No. 20.

A WELL-KNOWN PHYSICIAN AND SPECIALIST gave the undermentioned prescription to a lady suffering from nervous disorder and affection of the skin, caused by indigestion:—She should drink

ROBINSON'S PATENT BARLEY

as it did not require any preparation, being in powder form; a spoonful could be mixed into a tumbler of water at the dinner-table, and the Barley Water was made.

KEEN, ROBINSON & CO., Ld., LONDON,

Makers of ROBINSON'S PATENTGROATS.

REALLY! REALLY!

First Scene.—At a small dinner-party.

Lady, to gentlemen on her right: "Yes, when I was a girl my father liked us to be as simply dressed as possible; we never wore anything but plain linen collars and cuffs."

Gentleman: "But did it not excite some remark? Rather like Mark Twain's South Sea Islander, who went to church fully dressed in a hat." Tableau.

Second Scene.—Some days later.

Choir practice in a colonial station. Chaplain appears late and apologises for the unclerical cut of his coat, which is a light silk one he has adopted during an unusually hot spell of weather.

Our friend of the dinner-party: "Oh, don't apologise, Mr. Brown, you look so nice in it I wonder you ever wear anything else." Then, with a vivid blush at the memory of her late faux pas, "And, of course, trousers, I mean."

Collapse of chaplain and choir.
