The Sportsman's Safety Stirrups.

Are the only successful "SAFETY" for men.

A "wrench" is due to the foot being momentarily held fast through the ordinary stirrup adhering to the boot or the stiffness of a safety bar. The Patent Stirrups, by means of revolving thimbles at A, B and C, entirely obviate this by giving instant release to the feet, and thus reduce the bad effects of a "fall" to a minimum.

Sport in England.

(FROM OUR OWN SPORTING CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, Friday, 27th May 1904.

THE TURF.

THE DONCASTER MEETING.

THE middle of May is proverbially a treacherous time of year, and bleak, dismal weather has often been associated with the northern campaign. Happily, the conditions on the present anniversary have been eminently favourable. The sting of the boisterous wind which swept across Knavesmire earlier in the week, was tempered by genial sunshine, and the warmth of the solar rays at Doncaster this morning was suggestive of July. Unfortunately the sport on the Town Moor was wholly unworthy of the venue. Good subscriptions had been obtained for the weight-for-age events, especially those confined to the rising generation, but on neither day were the fields in keeping with the entries, and the racing on the 20th instant was decidedly tame. In spite of the summerlike conditions, there was a marked diminution in the attendance, as compared with that of twenty-four hours previously, and the going was hard.

THE CHESTERFIELD HANDICAP of 435sovs. One mile and-a-half.

Mr C Perkin's b or br g Roseburn, by Petros—Horton Rose, 4yrs, 7st 5lbs ...	Heppell	1

Won easily by a length; three-quarters of a length between second and third. Corriedale was fourth.

MANCHESTER MEETING.

The London and North-Western Railway Company tried an experiment to-day which was not unattended by success. The new departure was a special excursion to Manchester at fares barely exceeding half the ordinary price, and, notwithstanding that many of the Metropolitan division had travelled down after the conclusion of racing at Hurst Park on the 25th instant, the number who took advantage of the early special this morning seems to have been as large as could be anticipated. Moreover, they spoke of a comfortable and expeditious journey. The sum total of the Southern contingent did not reach a high figure, but the local folk turned out in something like their accustomed force, the cheap enclosures in particular being well filled. What might have been a pleasant day's sport was entirely ruined by the weather, however. Rain had fallen heavily during the night and continued almost without cessation until four o'clock, rendering the going somewhat heavy, whilst the gravel paths were a sea of mud.

(Winner trained in Ireland.)

BETTING: 6 to 1 each agst Decave, Surrender colt, and Red Warrior, 7 to 1 each McYardley and Sir Laddo, 8 to 1 Pitch Battle, 100 to 12 Rassendyl, 10 to 1 Scotch Cherry, and 100 to 7 each Melsary and Childwickbury (offered).

Won easily by ten lengths; three lengths divided the second and third. Decave was fourth, Red Warrior fifth, Sir Laddo sixth, McYardley next, and Childwickbury last. Time, by Benson's chronograph, 2mins. 46⅕secs.

The general environment at Castle Irwell on the 26th afforded such a pleasant contrast to those of twenty-four hours previously that it was possible for the spectators to conjure up a certain amount of enthusiasm over that first half of the proceedings which was quite out of the question amidst the damp and dismal surrounding of the opening stage of the reunion. Unhappily, their joy was short-lived for the sun, which had illumined the scene to begin with, became obscured by the time half of the programme had been run through, and the latter moiety of the entertainment was concluded under depressing conditons. As regards the quality of the sport, a marked improvement had to be recorded, three of the fields reaching double figures, whilst the principal event of the card, the Beaufort Handicap, attracted a very useful party to the post and provided a stirring finish. A fine night and morning had worked wonders with the course, but it was getting sticky towards the close.

THE CROMWELL HANDICAP of 353sovs. One mile and a quarter.

(Winner trained by Hornsby.)

BETTING: 9 to 4 agst Albynes, 7 to 2 Miss Joppa, 7 to 1 Gayboy, 8 to 1 Eon, and 10 to 1 any other (offered).

Won by a length; two lengths divided the second and third. Reaper close up, was fourth, Baron Rouge fifth, Gayboy sixth, Albynes seventh, La Parisienne next, and Eon last. The winner was bought in for 65guineas Time, by Benson's chronograph, 1min. 48⅘secs.

Another terribly wet afternoon was experienced at Castle Irwell, and the big crowd who came to see the Cup run for got a good soaking. The course rode very heavy, and calculations were upset in the first race, when the hot Grately favourite, Hong Kong, was easily bowled over by Little Sprout. At the subsequent auction the winner was bought in for 200 guineas. The victory of His Majesty's Rosemarket in the City Plate was the cause of great enthusiasm.

I have already wired you the result of the Cup and append it below—

THE CLIFF SELLING HANDICAP of 150sovs.; winner to be sold for 100sovs.; second to receive 5sovs. One mile.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. GENTLEMEN OF ENGLAND (with King.) Played at Cambridge on 19th, 20th and 21st May. Cambridge University won by 153 runs. Although the team which was got together by G. J. V. Weigall to represent the Gentlemen of England was anything but strong either in batting or bowling it gave a very good account of itself on the first day of this match. The Cambridge men, still without their captain, F. B. Wilson, did not shine much with the bat, with the exception of E. S. Phillips, who played an excellent innings of 107 in a little more than two hours and-a-half. When stumps were drawn, the Gentlemen had made 160 for the loss of two wickets. C. H. B. Marsham being not out 28, and King, not out, 44. So weak was the batting of the visitors that the last eight wickets could only account for 79 more runs, and when Cambridge went in again with a lead of 46 runs the visitors' bowling was found to be as ineffective as their batting. Mann Magnay, Keigwin, Phillips, and Payne all made good scores, Keigwin and Payne putting up 102 runs in an hour while together. When stumps were drawn Cambridge, with three wickets in hand, had a lead of 388 runs. On Saturday morning the innings was declared closed at once, but owing to rain there was no play before lunch.

LONDON COUNTY C.C. vs. DERBYSHIRE.—Played at the Crystal Palace on the 19th and 20th May. London County won by an innings and 31 runs. The cricket ground at the Crystal Palace looks very pretty at any time during the season, but in the spring it is absolutely charming, and during the Derbyshire match it was seen at its best. There was a most interesting display of all-round cricket on the first day, although when stumps were drawn the home team, with 111 for two wickets against a total of 271, had the best of the situation. The chief feature of the batting was the display of L. G. Wright, who followed up his fine innings against Surrey by making 139 out of 240 in three hours, while nearly all the rest of his side were in difficulties with the bowling. He and Ollivierre made an excellent beginning, and by the way in which both men took charge of the bowling it looked as if they might have been together for hours if an unfortunate misunderstanding about running had not led to the downfall of Ollivierre who had only himself to blame. No one else showed any signs of obtaining a mastery over the bowling until towards the end of the innings Humphries played fine cricket. When London Country went in W. G. and Murdoch were disposed of cheaply, but Hathorn and Poidevin then played out time, the former being not out 25 and the latter not out 51 when stumps were drawn. A fine display of batting by Hathorn and Poidevin placed London Country in an excellent position on Friday morning. Poidevin played a very pretty game, while Hathorn, the South African cricketer, was in great form and made 117 in three hours, his hits including fifteen 4's. Afterwards Braund and Sinclair made hay of the bowling and London County passed the Derbyshire total. While Sinclair was in with Hathorn 73 runs were put on in half an hour, Sinclair's hitting being very powerful. Sinclair was at the wickets for only thirty-five minutes for his 50. The innings was by no means over for Sewell made some good drives, while L. Walker and W. Smith both made useful scores. Derbyshire had to wipe off 127 before they drew level, but helped by a cross wind Braund bowled so finely that no one could make any headway against him except Needham and the result was a surprisingly easy victory for London County.

MIDDLESEX vs. SOMERSET.—Played at Lord's on 23rd, 24th and 25th May. Saved from an awkward situation on Saturday by the rain in the Sussex match, Middlesex again found it useful on Bank Holiday, for it enabled them, after winning the toss, to give Somerset the benefit of a difficult wicket, which was almost certain to improve as the day wore on. Things turned out as had been anticipated, and the unfortunate Somerset team had very much the worst of the game when stumps were drawn. They fared very badly against the bowling of J. T. Hearne, who had a wicket which suited him so well that he took eight wickets for 49 runs (the last six for 9 runs), the only two men who did anything against him being L. C. H. Palairet and P. R. Johnson. When Middlesex went in Warner and L. J. Moon were soon dismissed, while Robertson and Bosanquet met with so little success that four wickets were down for 89. This was not much of an improvement on the Somersetshire total at the same period of the innings, but the two Beldams then came together, and remained at the wickets for the rest of the day. Finding the Somersetshire bowling not very strong, they both soon played themselves in, and were able to give a far more attractive display of batting than is usual with either of them. Instead of defending they were able to adopt measures of such an aggressive kind that in two hours and a half they increased the score by 201 runs, and were still together when stumps were thus drawn, with the total at 290 for four wickets. Middlesex were 164 runs on Owing to heavy rain during the early morning of Tuesday no play was possible on that day. The following day a resumption was made at a quarter past one, and from the second ball sent down G. W. Beldam was easily secured at cover-point by Macgregor, who was fielding as a substitute for Palairet. His chanceless innings lasted three hours and ten minutes, and contained a 7 (4 for an otherthrow), eight 4's, eight 3's, and a dozen 2's. Shortly afterwards E. A. Beldam was caught at long-off, having batted two hours and a quarter without making a mistake, and having hit seventeen 4's, two 3's, and seven 2's. Trott made 41 in thirty-five minutes, and a little later the innings was declared closed. Somerset being set 244 to save the innings defeat. Hearne again proved almost irresistible, and at no time did the visitors appear likely to save the match. Johnson who is in very fine form this year, again played well but he received poor support, and Middlesex won easily by an innings and 119 runs. The bowling of Hearne, which accounted for fifteen wickets for 93 runs, was quite the feature of the match.

TENNIS.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP MATCH.

LATHAM vs FAIRS.—Peter Latham won the championship match at Brighton on the 20th instant by seven sets to five. It was not the gift for him that the first two days' tennis had presaged, for on the 20th Latham was suffering from the severity of his brilliant game in the preceding stages of the match; the attentions of his "rubber" had failed to rid him of his stiffness, and he entered the court feeling anything but himself. Details of the concluding stages :—

NINTH SET

First Game.—"Punch" went on with the service, but Latham volleyed this well, and made a short chase and won a stroke, while Punch served two faults, and Latham stood at 30 love. However, Fairs got on a fine stroke and went to deuce, and afterwards he was very effective in two fine shots at the grille. Fairs won the game.

Second Game.—Peter was successful in going for the openings on both sides of the court, and he laid down chase a yard which brought him the winning stroke in the game.

Third Game.—Latham was splendid in his stopping. There were many long rests, and the later play was mostly on the floor. Latham laid down chase a yard, and Punch tried to force for it and failed. Latham won the game.

Fourth Game.—After the game had been marked 40—love against him, Latham came out in something of his old form, and, with a winning gallery shot and a back-hand volley into the grille, he ran to deuce and then won. Latham now led by 3—1.

Games 5 to 9.—Latham completely dropped his and gave Fairs many easy balls to finish. Everything was for Fairs, who played tremendously well for the winning openings on the hazard side. He had ever so many easy things to finish. Latham went from bad to worse. The chases were long, but from the service side Fairs, with his wonderful forehand stroke, killed ball after ball either underneath the grille or the winning gallery. Fairs won five games off the reel and took the set at 6—3. Time—30mins.

TENTH SET.

First Game.—Latham did well in stopping, but his attack was weak, and Fairs, finding the grille twice, soon won.

Games 2 to 4.—The champion had a spell of success. His shots into the winning gallery were good and he twice won chases about two and three on the floor. Again he looked like winning the set, for he reached three games to one.

Games 5 to 9.—Fairs again found fortune favouring him. He played with great brilliancy against Latham's weakness. There were some long rests, but Latham's attack was comparatively slow, and his opponent easily got the better of the stopping. "Punch" was simply wonderful in finding his grille. Game after game went to him; he won five off the reel again, and the set was his in 35mins. at 6—3.

ELEVENTH SET.

First Game.—Fairs forced the dedans at once, and then crossing over to defend two long chases he found the grille, and then finished a ball off the base of the tambour. He won this game.

Second Game.—This was a long game for Fairs, whose freshness was too much for Latham.

Third and Fourth Games.—Latham was succesful in both of these. He won some easy chases and twice forced for the dedans. There were many long rests.

Fifth and Sixth Games.—"Punch" returned everything, and it was keen and hard tennis. The defence was good, but, though failing often for the openings, Latham managed to take the set to "3 all."

Seventh and Eighth Games.—It was game and game. Peter Latham's defence was very good, but he was palpably off his game in attack, and his forcing usually left only long chases on. The set reached 4 games all.

Ninth Game.—Latham finished the ball underneath the grille and reached 40—love. There was one great rest and Latham won the game.

Tenth Game.—"Punch," with a winning gallery shot and a back-hand volley into the grille, established a lead in this game, which he won, making the set "5 all."

Eleventh Game.—With a lucky boast off the main wall. Fairs went away at the start, and eventually won and took the set at 6—5. Time—38mins.

TWELFTH SET.

First and Second Games.—Latham got going well, and, with Fairs making sundry mistakes, the champion won two love games.

Third Game.—After finding the grille twice Latham lost. Fairs playing remarkably well in defending some easy chases.

Game Four to Six.—Latham made a final effort to settle the match. Fairs was tiring, and the set ran to Latham 5—1.

Seventh and Eighth Game.—Peter lost both of these after getting within a stroke of winning the match. Fairs was going strongly again, and Latham looked quite beaten.

Ninth and Tenth Game.—Fairs won both these, after Latham had been at 40—love in the tenth. Score : 5 games all.

Eleventh Game.—Latham ran to 40—15 and then failed to win chase worse than 2. Eventually deuce was called. A hazard side chase was marked, and then 'Punch" tried to force for the dedans. He failed by a quarter of an inch, and the ball fell 5 and 6. This was a bit of luck for Latham, who won the two chases and with them the game and set at 6—5 and match. Time—30mins.

Latham won the match by seven sets to five, as follows :—

ROWING.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY EIGHTS.—The finest weather of the series was reserved for the 25th instant when the races were brought to a conclusion after a most successful week There were several showers in the morning, but the afternoon and evening proved delightfully fine, and for the first time it could be accounted really warm. As a consequence there was an immense attendance, and the barges presented a brilliant sight with the varied toilettes of the hundreds of ladies present, whilst in places the towing-path wes almost impassable. New College left off head of the river, despite the fact that they lost the services of their stroke on Tuesday, and although Magdalen invariably gained considerably on them, it is very possible that the Wykehamists and a bit in hand, for they never appeared so thoroughly rowed out at the finish at their opponents. On form Christ Church was the fastest boat on the river, as they always finished well within their distance, and if would not be surprising to find quite a number of crews rowing at Henley this summer. To St. John's belongs the credit of having accomplished the record of the races, inasmuch as they were credited with six bumps, and the manner in which they overhauled Merton stamps them a very speedy crew. They were capitally stroked by L. G Sedgwick, an old trial eights' man and they ought certainly to make an effort to send their eight to Henley. Exeter left off head of the Second Division, although they did not have much to spare in their race with Worcester, who were somewhat fortunate in being able to escape the attentions of Keble.

The Second Division order of starting was : Exeter, Worcester, Keble, Lincoln, Oriel, Jesus, Queen's, Hertford, St. Catherine's, Corpus, St. Edmund Hall, and Wadham. A very fine race was witnessed between the three leading boats. Keble looked certain to make their bump. They had a shot near the Cherwell, but missed by inches, which enabled Worcester to get clear again, and an exciting finish ended in Exeter passing the post a short quarter of a length in front of Worcester, who were nearly the same distance ahead of Keble. Oriel gained considerably on Lincoln, and were within half a length at the finish, whilst a similar distance separated Jesus from Queen's. St. Catherine's had the pace of Hertford and rubbed off a length of the starting distance, whilst St. Edmund Hall were within a length of Corpus.

The First Division order of starting was : New College, Magdalen, Christ Church, University, Balliol, Brasenose, Trinity, Merton, St. John's, Pembroke and Exeter. As on the previous evenings, Magdalen showed themselves faster than New College, but the latter were never in any danger of being caught, and left off head of the river with a margin of half a length. It was the same with Magdalen and Christ Church, the latter showing the best pace, but being half a length to the bad at the finish. Balliol were hard pressed by Brasenose, and the latter experienced rather an exciting time of it, as at the New Cut Trinity all but overlapped. Brasenose, however, got away again, and had a quarter of a length to spare at the post. Merton, although they had previously made a couple of bumps, proved no match for St. John's, who came up with a rush in Iffley Reach and caught them before getting through the Gut. The following is the order in which the boats started and finished :

DIVISION 1 (AT START.)

New College	Brasenose	Exeter
Magdalen	Christ Church	Merton
University	Pembroke	Worcester
Balliol	Trinity

DIVISION 2.

Worcester	Keble	Queen's
Jesus	Hertford	Wadham
Lincoln	Ori l	St. Edmund Hall
St. John's	Corpus	St. Catherine's

DIVISION 1 (AT FINISH.)

New College	Balliol	Merton

St. John's : R. M. Nicholls (bow), 10st 6lbs ; B. H. Bourdillon 10st 12lbs ; A. Keown Boyd, 11st 2lbs ; C Harrison-Jones, 12st 12lbs ; W. W. Mumford, 12st 4lbs ; F. J. Seal, 10st 8lbs ; M. Bates, 9st 10lb ; L. G. Sedgwick (stroke), 12st 4lbs ; S. C. Hilliard (cox), 8st 7lb.

THE SCULLING CHAMPIONSHIP.

After over a year's wrangling, a match for the sculling championship of the world is at last in sight, as word was received at Putney on Saturday evening that the champion, George Towns, had agreed to row the challenger, Dick Tresidder, for the title on 30th July. In view of the manner in which hitherto the men have hung fire, the excuses made, and the arrangements for "a gate," the race is not likely to create a great deal of interest in local aquatic circles, although followers of the popular champion will look forward keenly to the result of any race in which he is engaged. They row on the Parramatta, and Tresidder will have the assistance of Chris Neilson, while Towns with most probably be trained by his brothers and Harry Pearce, and in this direction will lack the astute guidance of his friend and mentor, Tom Sullivan. The big New Zealander was behind him when he defeated Jim Wray for the SPORTSMAN Challenge Cup and when he wrested the championship from Jake Gaudaur, and there is no doubt that is was his cable to Towns, that he could be backed for any a mount over the Thames, that brought about the present match quite unexpectedly to many who had commenced to believe that Towns and Tresidder were adopting the American pugilistic style of advertising each other and purely indulging in newspaper warfare.

Regarding this cable, the Sydney Referee, to hand, contains the following from its Newcastle (N. S. W.) correspondent.

"Yes; I must say I was rather astonished when I read in last week's Referee that sufficient money was forthcoming for Towns in London if the race for the championship was rowed on the Thames." This is what Dick Tresidder said in reply to my question as to whether he had seen the cable from Tom Sullivan, when I called upon him at his residence at Carrington on Saturday afternoon. Dick was just about to leave for his afternoon's row when I looked him up, and in course of conversation he assured me that he fully expected to hear from Towns within the next few days. He said that he could not make his intentions definitely known until he knew what the champion was going to do in respect to Sullivan's offers. "If he should take it into his head to journey to England," continued Tresidder, "I suppose I would have to follow him, but you can take it from me I would much prefer to have the race rowed on Australian waters. It is due to the Australian people that we should row here, seeing that we are both natives, and, personally, I would like to have the contest decided on the Parramata, the scene of so many races for the championship. I am one of the worst sailors in the world on boardship, but once I reach thh land it does not take me long to pick myself up. I would not mind the trip to England by any means for it would give me an opportunity of seeing the Old World, but, as I said before, we should study the Australian people."

Tresidder was then reminded that a number of Newcastle people were anxious to see the race rowed on the Hunter, but he immediately replied that he thought that would be impracticable. In the first place, he said, there were no suitable boats, and in the second the steamer receipts were a big consideration to both he and Towns. The prices charged in Sydney could not be thought of in Newcastle, in addition to which the steamboat proprietors were prepared to deal liberally with them during training operations. Hundreds of people would journey from Sydney to the Parramatta to see them at work on the river at least twice a week, and a share of the money so gathered would almost pay a man's training expenses. However, the course was a matter to be fixed when they met to sign articles, but he must say, for the reasons given, that he preferred the Parramatta.

ATHLETICS.

THE IRISH CHAMPIONSHIPS.

The Irish Amateur Athletic Association championship meeting was held at Balisbridge on the 23rd instant. The weather was fine, except for a few slight showers but the attendance could not be deemed satisfactory. A fairly stiffish breeze blew down the straight, which to some extent hampered the runners The performances were moderate and called for no special comment. Denis Murray again easily appropriated the 100 Yards and 220 Yards. By far the best race of the day was the Four-mile, in which Muldoon and Daly fought over again their battle of the last year. This time the rusult was reversed. Details :

Half mile Race (holder S. C. Armstrong, Templederry). —J. McKenzie, Dublin, 1 ; J. E Finnegan, Dublin, 2 ; H. Muldoon, Dublin, 3 ; J. J. Daly, Galway, 4. Nine ran. Won by half a yard ; four yards between the second and third. Time—2mins. 3secs.

THE WEASEL.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HUNT.

THERE was a fairly large field out last Saturday (4th) when we had a bye day. The meet was at Rees' Corner and the morning was fine, but cloudy, after the previous night's heavy rain. At first the luck was against us, for we drew a great extent of the Nunjenad Valley without finding. A line was picked up, however, in a nullah close by Dharma Tope and soon afterwards Mr Mackenzie viewed the jack He went to ground at once, but was bolted by a terrer, and we had a gallop over very rough wild country through Sambur Shola and Kuruthergalle Shola At the top of the latter hounds, unfortunately, divided. Half the pack, however, stuck to the line of the hunted jack and he was viewed quite exhausted, into the scrub below Hecuba Cliff, where we lost him.

Returning above Tiger Shola a jack jumped up in front of hounds and they broke away, running over the top of Hecuba, past Andy Plantation and the swamps beyond, and then left landed towards Vakal Hill. As it was getting late the Master took advantage of a check to stop them. Scent was fairly good except on the top of the hills, where the strong wind seemed to baffle hounds.

On Monday (6th) the wild monsoon weather and driving rain did not keep many people at home, for we had quite a respectably large field out. A move was first made to Mills' Covert and from here hounds picked up a line at once. The jack was not seen to leave the covert, but after a moment's hesitation hounds swung down towards Treble Crossing and then began to run very fast up Blackmoor Vale. They crossed the stream and turned over Newmarket, and past the top of Rawlings' Nullah, down the valley below Blue Gums and then over the spur which runs down from Parlocs where the jack was viewed close in front of hounds. It seemed certain that they would catch him before he reached Governor's Shola, but they overran him in one of the nullahs, and a fresh jack jumping up the Master stopped them in Governor's Shola near the Toda School. This was a very fast and enjoyable gallop.

After this we had a wait for some time, drawing down to double Crossing, over Gold Mine Crossing and Lawley's Course without finding. In the swamp, south of the rising ground, below Gibbs' Shola we picked up a line and although the jack had a long start it was very pretty to see the way hounds settled down to it and warmed to their work. They ran faster every minute, crossing the spur and skirting the side of Gibbs' Shola. They then crossed the Pykara Road and swung down to the crossing below Briar Shola at a pace which it was hard to line with. Up the opposite hill they went, and then turned sharp to the left above Wapshare's Hare Shola as if they were tied to their jack. Crossing the road again west of Bacon Wood, we galloped down into the Yemakal Valley as if Yemakal Shola was the point But the jack never touched it and took past the bottom below Bamboo Shola and, bending to the right, crossed the valley as if it was all the same to him where he went. Over this severe country hounds stuck to him persistently and the pace never slackened, until, after driving him through some dense woodland which is not named on the Hunt Map, they marked an under ground water course where in a few minutes he was pulled out and killed. This I think is the fastest and most severe run for many years. At the finish, beside the Hunt servants, were only Miss Sprot and seven gentlemen.

On Thursday (9th) the meet was at Sandy Nullah Toll Bar. The morning was again wild and stormy, with a high wind and frequent storms of rain, but there was a large field out and sport was good We first drew over Lawley's Course, where hounds just touched a line but scent seemed to have all been blown away. At the bottom of Gibbs' Shola hounds ran heel for a couple of hundred yards on the line of a jack which had gone up into the Shola. About three couple of hounds were forward and when the Master lifted the pack to them we found them hunting one jack in one of the thick clumps between Gibbs' Shola and Herbert Plantation. Apparently demoralised by the weather he had waited for us there, and now broke across the bottom of Herbert Plantation with hounds close behind him, and was killed in covert. We then drew the lower part of Briar Shola and got away at once. Crossing the swamp below, the jack made over the hill towards Wapshare's Hare Shola and skirting the side of this went on to Wenlock Wood. From the top a fresh jack broke towards Chemmund, but the hunted jack kept along the road to Khed Shola, through which hounds drove him without a pause. Emerging at the north side we had a beautiful gallop over a capital line of country. Keeping to the right of Coffee Shop Shola and then swinging to the left hounds drove along in the teeth of the gale parallel to the Pykara Falls Road. Gradually turning towards the river we crossed the road and eventually worked the jack to ground in an earth overlooking the Pykara River.

CRICKET CHAT.

INDIAN cricket scribes can hardly complain just now about there being a dearth of interesting performances to comment upon, as from all the more elevated parts of the country news flows in of exciting and in some cases noteworthy doings in the cricket field. In my last notes I dealt fully with the first two matches of the Simla season and am now able to make a few remarks on the third match against Aligarh College. When the Aligarhians have done anything of note it has usually been with the assistance of past students of the College such as Ahsanul-Hak, Masood Ahmed, Ali Hasan Abdul Razzak, and Abdel Hussain, but on this occasion the team that represented the College did not include any of these players, and their victory by the big margin of eight wickets was one of the most meritorious recorded in the annals of the college. The Simla team was even stronger in batting than that which played the previous week against the outstations and besides General Spens, French, Michell, McConaghey, Laverton, Robinson, Smallwood, and Heasman included C. L. Alexander, the old Salopian who made a century against the same bowling last cold weather, and V. A. S. Keighley. Shafkat Hussain's bowling, however, proved too good for the majority of the batsmen, the famous fast bowler accounting for thirteen wickets in the match (eight clean bowled) for six runs a piece. In the first innings he took six wickets for 32 runs, Mitchell (17), Smallwood (15), Spens (15) and French (11), making all but 13 of the runs made from the bat. Thanks to Keighley (33), Alexander (17) Heasman (23 not out) and Robinson (15). Simla did better in their second innings, totalling 140 but not well enough to escape a severe defeat. Aligarh who were out for 111 in their first winnings (Said Mohamed 23, Ali Raza 20, and Saleem 17) had to thank Abid Hussain (56 not out), and Akram (36 not out) for knocking off the runs required to win after two wickets had fallen for 18 runs. Both these young batsmen, who with Shafkat and Said Mohamed of the present team accompanied the P. and P. team to Bombay, are to be congratulated on the fine start they made against such good bowling. Of the Simla bowlers, H. Heasman gave further proof this season that his right hand has not lost its cunning, and took seven wickets in the match for eight runs apiece. Aligarh College have now beaten Simla three times and have never been defeated themselves by the station teams.

Bombay cricketers, especially Presidency supporters are jubilant over a rumour to the effect that Captain J. G. Greig is returning to India in a few weeks with his regiment, the 107th Pioneers, and will of course be available for the big annual matches with the Parsees. It is also stated on good authority that Captain L. M. B. Deas, the old Presidency fast bowler, who has been at home on sick leave, is returning to India next week, a piece of information which has buoyed up the hopes of Presidency supporters still further.

This is, however, not all the good news, from a Presidency point of view, that I have to impart to your readers, as two good all-round players who, if all goes well, should be strong candidates for Presidency honours, have been unearthed in the persons of Lieutenants E. R. Jones and F. L. Tayler of the Cheshire Regiment. Both these players made their debut in a match last week and displayed promising form with the bat and ball respectively. Lieutenants Jones is distinctly a good bat and, it may interest cricket lovers, to know was in the Merchiston Castle XI's of 1895 and 1896.

Indian cricket lovers will be interested to know that we have had in our midst all unknown for several months a very famous player in the person of Major E. Crawley, of the 12th Lancers, the old Harrovian and Cambridge Blue. Major Crawley will best be recalled to mind for the part he played in the Varsity match of 1888 when as eleventh choice he made 103 not out for Cambridge.

The Karachi Borahs who had come to regard themselves as invincible so far as local cricket is concerned and who have not tasted the bitterness of defeat for a considerable time, had to sing small a week ago when they sustained a severe defeat at the hands of Karachi Gymkhana. All the Borahs could total against the attack of Lucas, who secured seven wickets for 16 runs, was 45. The Gymkhana for whom F. L. Sprott, the old Presidency captain made 29 (top score) compiled 132.

Cricketers at Mussoorie this season can hardly be said to have had an eventful time of it, the game for some reason or another having been neglected. With great difficulty a station team was raised last week to play the Philander Smith's School. The Station won by 57 runs, the chief features of the match being Borrington's innings of 49 for the Station and the bowling of Cowley and Amesbury.

Far and away the best match so far of the Naini Tal season was that between the Station and a visiting team from Ranikhet. The hero of the match was Lieutenant G. S. Cooper, of the Gunners, who in addition to making 89 for the station, captured six Ranikhet wickets in the first innings for 36 runs. Three other Naini Tal bowlers distinguished themselves, J. Campbell taking six wickets for 40, E. H. Burnaby four for 24, and F. Knowles three for 29 W. C Hutcheson with 4 and 42 not out, and P. L. Hanbury with 29 and 4 were the only Ranikhet batsmen who played with confidence. Hanbury also bowled well, taking six wickets for 59 runs, while Captain Atchison took three for 19.

Captain F. G. Smallwood, the old Reptonian, heads the Simla batting averages up to date.

STATISTICIAN.

Here is a good example of a misprint. The line, in the "Surcease of Sorrow," "I am weary of the tossing of the ocean as it heaves," appeared in print as "I am wearing out my trousers till they're open at the knees."

"Quand on cherche l'amour on sort de soi," was recently changed by a printer's devil into "Quand on cherche l'amour on sort le soir."

Football.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

RANGERS vs. CALCUTTA.—Played on the Rangers' ground on the 8th instant. There was a large attendance but the game was a disappointing one and rather a tame display resulted in a draw of one goal all. The visitors were the first to attack, but Anderson relieved and the Rangers had a turn and, after Dods had fisted out a shot from Vears, Rosser beat him with a low one. Following on some midfield play Calcutta attacked, but could not put through, and the home team led at the interval. On resuming they returned to the attack, but the forwards lost many chances of scoring. The home custodian at length transferred play, but the ball was brought back and the Rangers' goal besieged. There was no scoring, however, till just before time Smith shot, the ball glancing off Lees into the net. Teams :—

RANGERS.—Affleck, goal; Margrett and Anderson, backs; Bollard, Lees and Russel, half-backs; Walker, McClay, Rosser, Warden and Vears, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Dods, goal; Badham and Todd, backs; Maunder, Crawford, and Ansell, half-backs; Sherman, MacDonald, Cooper, Stewart and Smith, forwards.

Referee—N. G. Pritchard.

Y. M. C. A. vs. KING'S OWN REGT.—This match, played on the Association ground on the 8th instant, resulted in a win for the visitors by 8 goals to nil. The Young Men were without Lamb, Redmond and Scully and were unable to make much headway against their opponents. The soldiers opened their scoring shortly after the start, Carman putting through. Ennis scored the second goal, and Carman added another just before the interval. After the interval Ennis and Standish put on two goals and before the whistle sounded for time had augmented their score by three more, Carman, Ennis and Jones being responsible. Teams :—

KING'S OWN.—Hill, goal; Mellor and Cotton, backs; Leonard, Standish and Quin, half-backs; Jones, Diggle, Ennis, Carman and Wittingham, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Key, goal; Stokes, back; Schaumberg, Pooler and Collingwood, half-backs; Price, McPhea, Wilson, Vanspaul and Mason, forwards.

CALCUTTA vs. Y. M. C. A.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground last Saturday; neither side was at full strength and though the Young Men played a plucky game they were beaten by two goals to nil. The home team immediately began the attack, and from a scrimmage Stewart put through. Even play followed. Then the Association looked like scoring, but Baker cleared, and nothing worthy of note occurred till the interval. On resuming, Calcutta again pressed, but were unable to score. The homesters were next compelled to defend; their opponents' attacks lacked force, however, and just before time H. Cooper scored for Calcutta after a good run Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Baker, goal; B. Cooper and Badham, backs; Ansell, Crawford and Maunder, half-backs; H. Sherman, MacDonald, H. Cooper, Stewart and Smith, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Kay, goal; Stokes and Lamb, baks; Scully, Pooler and Collingwood, half-backs; Vears, Vanspaul, Redmond, Gordon and Wilson, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. E. Rope.

64TH R. F. A. vs., RANGERS.—On the Dalhousie ground last Saturday, the Rangers beat the soldiers by two goals to one. The ground was in wretched condition and little conducive to good football. The Rangers had the best of matters all through. In the first half Lees scored, but from a mêlée the Gunners equalised. After the interval McClay put on the Rangers' second point. Teams :—

RANGERS.—Behrend, goal; Margrett and Anderson, backs; Affleck, Lees and Russell, half-backs; Pell, McClay, Rosser, McCready and Mulholland, forwards.

64TH R.F.A.—Harrison, goal; Quin and Andersie, backs; Donnelly, Osborne and Beckett, half-backs; Wratten, Sale, Lieutenant Short, Prince and Clarke, forwards.

HOWRAH vs. DALHOUSIE.—This match was played at Howrah on the 11th instant. The ground became a lake owing to the rain during the afternoon. Of the game nothing need be said—a pointless draw was the result, and there was an Exhibition of fisticuffs which will form the subject of Enquiry.

WEST RIDINGS vs. KING'S OWN REGT.—The King's Own suffered their first defeat in the League Competition at Dum-Dum on Saturday last. The King's Own were the first away, but the West Ridings soon got going and Wilson opened the scoring. Even play followed till the King's were awarded a penalty just before half time and Carman equalised. On changing ends the Fort team got down and Carman put through. They did not keep the lead for long, however, for Wooding shortly made the total two all. The Dum-Dum team had the best of the concluding stages of the game and Cottam sent the ball into his own goal, in trying to save a shot by McLaughlin Team :—

WEST RIDINGS.—Robert, goal; Stevens and Evans, backs; Reeves, Turner and Morris, half-backs, Woodings, McLaughlin, Wilson Drew and Hulyer, forwards.

KING'S OWN—Hill, goal; Mellor and Cottam, backs; Leonard, Standish and Quinn, half-backs; Diggle, Jones, Ennis, Carman and Whittingham forwards.

HOWRAH vs. 64TH R. F. A.—Played at Howrah on the 14th instant. The game was fast and fairly even, but the shooting of both teams was poor. After the initial run down by the Gunners, Howrah began to attack and forced a corner. Nothing came of it, but they continued to press, and several chances were missed from bad shooting. Then the Artillerymen obtained a corner which proved abortive. They returned to the attack and Clarke beat the home custodian. On resuming after the interval Howrah played up trying hard to get level. They missed some opportunities of scoring, but Smith at last put through. The homesters had the best of the remainder of the game, but many chances were missed and the match ended in a draw. Teams :—

64TH R. F. A.—Harrison, goal; Quinn and Grimley, backs; Endersley, Osborne and Beckett, half-backs; Douglas, Nicols, Hingley, Clarke and Wratten, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. P. Wilder.

CIVIL AND MILITARY LEAGUE.

There was but a single match on Saturday—Caledonians vs. La Martinière, resulting in a win for the School by three goals to two. On Monday three games were played, La Martiniére beat the Measurers by two goals to nil the Hornets defeated the Caledonians by a goal to nil and the match between two Joseph's and the 79th R. G. A. ended in a draw of, goals each.

CALEDONIAN vs. LA MARTINIERE.—Played on Saturday, on the Caledonian ground, which was mostly under water, and resulted in a victory for the visitors. Park, the Caledonian centre half, was a serious loss to the team. Soon after the start the College scored through Smith, whose white shirt often deceived the home halves, then the play ruled even both sides scoring two goals. Time was call with the score standing at 3 to 2 in favour of the College.

CALEDONIA vs. HORNETS.—These teams, including one or two substitutes, met on the Hornets ground and a fairly interesting game went against the visitors by one goal, which was scored from a "Rugby Scrimmage" being heeled in by one of the Caledonian backs. The Hornets forwards, particularly the two Armenian College boys combined prettily and in the first half shot well, but the Caledonian forwards seemed quite unable to take the many good opportunities afforded them. A. E. Cooper, A. Rosser and Yackjee played well as did Harrington, Dewsbury and Chandler for the visitors.

FOOTBALL NOTES.

THE meeting of Howrah and the West Ridings on Tuesday, the 7th, provided a very interesting match and an appreciative crowd, mostly backers of the home club, lined the United Club's ropes. The Duke's managed to win by 3 goals, but during the first half it looked any odds on Howrah scoring. The home team put in a lot of hard work, but in the second half the Ridings pulled themselves together and Howrah then had no chance of winning, especially as they were playing one man short. Powell saved several shorts, but forwards like Wooding, Drew and Wilson cannot be kept out for fifty minutes unless the back division opposed to them is really strong, and they eventually scored a goal each. The soldiers' halves and Roberts were up to their usual form, and Karr, Jackson and Woods made a good display for Howrah.

The Y. M.-King's Own match on Wednesday does not need much description. Their soldier players presumably would not turn out for the Young Men against their brothers from the Fort and the home team had therefore a very weak eleven, or rather ten, as they played one man short. The Lancasters put on eight goals which considerably improved their goal average.

The Rangers recovered their old form against the C. F. C., and gave an excellent exhibition of the game With the exception, perhaps, of Warden, there was not a weak man in the team; there were certainly several strong ones. They played a new man, MacClay, who was a great acquisition, and their other players, Vears, Lees, Affleck and the backs especially, played a strong game. Calcutta had unfortunately to take the field without V. Sherman, and the rearrangement of the forward line which this led to was not successful. Their back division, however, was reinforced by Todd who turned out for the first time this season, and except for the first ten minutes, played his usual sound game. All the visitors forwards worked well but seemed a bit slower than usual, V. Cooper and Macdonald especially. The halves put in a lot of work and Ansell, who has come on wonderfully at the half-back game, was the best man on his side, being particularly effectual in bottling up the efforts of Rosser and Walker. The game was fast throughout, and although Calcutta had on the whole a little the best of it they could not get the ball into the net till near the finish. In the first half Affleck, who played in goal for the Rangers, had little difficulty in warding off two soft shots from Cooper and Macdonald, but for the first ten minutes of the second half he had a most anxious time fisting out quite a dozen attempts, much to the delight of the Rangers' supporters. The Rangers scored early in the game, and when the teams crossed over were still this one goal to the good and it was not till well through the second half that Calcutta equalised from a miskick by Lees. On the whole the visitors display, especially in front of goal, was disappointing, but they had a good team to play against and the score of one goal all was a satisfactory result of the meeting.

The heavy rain which fell on Saturday had made even the C. F. C. ground a swamp, so it may be imagined in what condition the other grounds were. The general impression was that the turf was quite unfit for play, but as the various teams all turned up and preferred to take things as they were, rather than postpone the games, the referees raised no objections and all four matches were played. Luckily although wet under foot it was fine overhead and fairly cool. In each match the ball was as heavy as lead, and all the teams missed what would have been easy chances of scoring in dry weather. Play was hard and fairly fast, and to the few spectators who turned out there were several items both of interest and amusement.

In the Calcutta-Y. M. C. A. match the Young Men turned out with their usual strong quota of soldiers and, although they had one or two weak spots, were on the whole a strong team to tackle. Neither V. Sherman, Todd nor Dodds turned out for the home eleven, but H. Cooper strengthened the forward line and V. Cooper made an excellent back, so matters were well balanced. The game was fast throughout Lamb, Scully, Redmond and Pooler showing up well for the Y. M, and H. Cooper, Stuart, Crawford, Ansell and V. Cooper for the C. F. C. Several chances were missed by both sides owing to the players slipping or miskicking at the critical moment, but the two goals scored by H. Cooper for his side were the result of really good play. Both goalkeepers were of course severely handicapped, but acquitted themselves admirably under the circumstances.

Dalhousie went over to Howrah in force but did not manage to win their first match in the return half of the League. They had much the best of the game, but the weather was too much for them. They could not get the heavy ball between the posts with their feet and the referee would not allow them to play water-polo. Linton, of Howrah, had to be ordered off the field in this match for striking a Dalhousie player after having been tripped. His case will no doubt go before the I. F. A."

The Rangers-64th R. A. match was also a scramble in the mud, in fact the ground was so bad that had not the R. A. come all the way from Barrackpore the game would no doubt have been postponed. The score was one all at half time, but the home team eventually won by two goals to one. Both teams managed to manœvre the ball extremely well considering the state of the ground, but it was hardly football.

The game at Dum-Dum was most exciting, and although the West Ridings were a slightly better team on the day's play, it was rather hard lines on the King's that the goal which lost them the match should have been scored off one of their own men. The Dukes scored first through Wilson, but Carman shortly after equalised from a penalty and the scores were equal at half time. After the interval Carman scored another goal for his side but the home team then played for all they were worth and Woodings equalised. The winning point was scored by a shot from McLaughlin which went off Cottam into the net and the concluding stages of the game were in favour of the West Ridings. This defeat of the King's Own has given the three next teams in the League a chance and should Calcutta manage to beat or draw with the Lancasters the second half of the competition is likely to be far more interesting than the first has been.

The local dailies have lately been besieged by football enthusiasts. Someone has rushed into print with the enquiry why referees penalise players for lifting their heels off the ground when throwing in, without stopping to make sure that referees ever do such a thing. I have never heard of it being done. A man is often penalised when he has lifted his heels in throwing in but not only because he lifted them off the ground but because in doing so both his feet, or one of them, were off the line. Wing halves should be careful to stand with their toes on the line so that if they happen to raise their heels it does not matter. It is most annoying to have a free kick given against one for a foul throw-in, but the thrower has only himself to blame as nothing is easier than to throw in properly.

We shall soon be in the midst of the numerous (at) junior football "pot hunts." The draw for the Sarma Cup has already taken place and as far as one can see at present the winner will turn up from among the Medicals. 79th R. G. A. and a King's Own Company team. Calcutta B have been drawn against Dalhousie B and this is likely to prove an interesting match.

The B.-N. R. team have had enough of the Civil and Military League so there are now only seven teams competing. The 79th R. A. have had another check from St. Joseph's, but they are still likely to come out winners. There should be a good fight for second place.

The teams in the Calcutta Football League stood as follows on Saturday last :—

Name of Club.	Matches played.	Won.	Lost.	Drawn.	Points.	Goals. For	Goals. Against TOUCH.

THE MURREE TOURNAMENT.

THE FINAL.

GORDON HIGHLANDERS vs. KING'S ROYAL RIFLES.—The final game in the tournament was played on the 6th instant when a large crowd of spectators filled the enclosures. The Rifles got away first and forced a corner; nothing came of it, however, and after pressing for a time they had to defend. Even play in midfield followed and then the Gordons rushed down and put through. The Gordons continued to attack and the Rifles custodian was kept busy. The Rifles relieved at length and getting away Whitehead shot, the ball going over the Gordons goal. The Riflemen again attacked, but could not break through and just before half time the Highlanders transferred play and notched their second goal. In the second moiety the Rifles tried hard to get on terms, but were unsuccessful and the Gordons putting on no further score, ran out victorious by two goals to nil. Lady Blood presented the cup to the winners and medals to both teams.

Golf.

CALCUTTA GOLF CLUB.

THE BOMBAY MEDAL.—The annual competition for this medal took place on the maidan on Friday and Saturday last, or rather to be more accurate a few players managed to get round on Friday afternoon, for Saturday's heavy storm quite put all golf out of the question. Naturally the competition proved something of a farce and this was even more so owing to the fact that Major Renton who put in a very steady round of 88 had forgotten to apply for a handicap on his return to Calcutta and this cost him the prize which fell to Major Drury with a score of 92 less 6-86. Only five cards altogether were sent in, and these were as follows :—

	Total.	Hcp.	Result.
Major F J Drury	... 92	6	86
Major R R Renton	... 88	scr.	88
D A Cuthbert ...	... 91	2	89
Major J M Burn	... 94	4	90

Swimming.

CALCUTTA SWIMMING CLUB.

THE above club held their Plate Diving competition on Friday evening last, the 10th instant. Twelve plates were thrown into the bath, and each competitor had two turns. The one who picked up the most plates at both dives, was declared the winner. There were nine entries, of whom eight competed, with the following result :—

	Aggregate of 2 drives.
A L Clarke	21	First
W S J Willson	16	Second
W Govan...	13
K M Kennedy	8
G Mead	8
A Siddonss	7
A G Watt	7

Mr. F. E. H. Power acted as judge, and presented the prizes. The next event is the 3 lengths (100 yards) Handicap heats on Friday the 17th, and the final on the 24th current.

ORMONDE.

(Special for "The Indian Field.")

THE detailed obituary notices accorded the late Ormonde in the English sporting press—or indeed we may truly say in the press as a whole—is perhaps the most significant testimony that can be afforded of the affectionate interest taken by Britons in a good horse. We do not remember an occasion when so much attention has been lavished upon a race-horse : and, great as were Ormonde's merits during his two brief career on the turf, those merits are not entirely responsible for the length of the biographies which have been awarded him. There is a strong vein of sentiment underlying the sportsman's appreciation of a great horse ; and the circumstance that Ormonde was banished from England for the good of his race and died in exile has not a little to do with the display of feeling which heralded the news that he had been painlessly destroyed on Mr. M'Donough's farm in California. Apart from the unbroken record of racing success Ormonde leaves behind him his remarkable gentleness, went no little way to make him a popular favourite : the idiosyncracies and personal peculiarities of our great horses are as jealously watched and as eagerly recorded as are shreds of strictly personal detail concerning our great public men, more jealously indeed, for a tendency to display temper in fashion untimely has cost many a backer his money and thus every man who "has a bit on" finds sound reason for learning all he may about the horse upon whose performance he depends. Ormonde's disposition in this respect was blameless ; he was led through the streets of London one afternoon through the West End traffic at the height of the season to be present at a garden party, and paid no more attention to the turmoil than a cab horse :so quietiwas he and so dependable;that the only objection urged by the Duke of Westminster to the suggestion that he should ride Ormonde in the Jubilee procession of 1887 was to such parade of ownership of the most famous horse of the day : that the horse would have behaved otherwise than perfectly was never hinted. Though the popularity of a great sire is small in comparison with the popularity enjoyed by a great winner, we are inclined to think that Ormonde's banishment was good for his memory in respect of his stud work As a size he is not entitled to high rank : that he began well is a matter of history. In his first season at the stud he got Orme and Goldfinch ; the latter would have done well but for the leg trouble that overtook him. Llanthony suffered from a mysterious affection of the quarters : Sorcerer was a very fast horse but he inherited from his dam a temperament so nervous that it became impossible to trust him on a course : Orville of course was a roarer. Of the two fillies Ormonde sired in his first season neither Kilkenny nor Orontes II can be said to have contributed to their sire's fame. Then came the fever which seemed to sap Ormonde's vitality, for his average get subsequently was about one foal every second season. Without disparagement it may be said that Orme and his son, Flying Fox, so far as we know at present, stand a'one to keep Ormonde s fame alive. It is said that Mons. Edmond Blanc is trying to buy an Ormonde yearling colt which the great horse got from a St. Serf mare, but what this colt may prove to be remains to see. Thanks to his absence from England Ormonde's subsequent failure as a sire did little to detract from his fame and the affection in which his memory was held

Inevitably his death has evoked the usual speculation concerning Ormonde's place among the horses of the 19th century. In his case this usually barren exercise is less unprofitable than usual, for Ormonde was a good horse, not among mediocrities, but among good contemporaries. Only an exceptional horse could have carried his unbeaten record through seasons which brought to the front such horses as Minting, Breadknife The Bard, Sarabband, and St. Mirin. The hardest task ever set Ormonde, perhaps, was when he beat Bendigo and Minting in the Hardwicke Stakes : in the opinion of his jockey he "won cleverly." When his active career on the turf was over the usual comparisons were instituted between Ormonde and his predecessors. Mathew Dawson always held that St. Simon would have beaten Ormonde at a mile. John Scott, when he reviewed his turf experience opined that West Australian was the best horse he had ever known, holding him the superior of both Velocipede and Don John, between whose claims to supremacy he had previously been divided. John Day clung tenaciously to Bay Middleton : and Mr. Joseph Osborne would admit no horse that he had known the equal of Harkaway. Priam, Plenipotentiary and Barcaldine in the opinion of many, who would review a long period of turf history, were respectively held the best horses of the period over which their admirers' experience extended : but, as we all know, the mists of Time have a magnifying influence which may affect the best balanced judgment Where Ormonde might have stood as a race horse, if when the late Duke of Westminster decided not to risk perpetuation of his unsoundness, he had determined to put him again into training it is idle to speculate : but had he been withdrawn from the stud and put to active work again before that fever undermined his constitution in his fifth year it is possible that we might have enjoyed the spectacle of a really great horse once again winning races well on into years : but supposing Ormonde's success had been continued in his six, seven or eight-year-old seasons, we fear that the temptation to breed from him, roarer or no roarer would have been even more difficult to resist than the Duke found it : for it is no secret that his owner regarded the sale out of England of Ormonde as the hardest wrench of his turf career. He said at the time that be let the horse go with "infinite regret" and those who knew the Duke vouch for it that this was not mere form of words. That horses maintain their form up to a considerable age the records of the turf contain ample proof. Taking a case from our notes at random we find that Black Chance, an exceedingly successful horse in his day, walked over the last race in which he was engaged in his last season, 1744, when he was twelve years old : but in those days a horse s turf career began at the age when animals of the present time are retired to the stud. Black Chance did not run his first race till he was five years old For a really hard life on the turf we need not look nearly so far back. Fisherman, son of Heron, put in four seasons on the course : he ran 31 times in 1856, his first season, and, in all, 117 times, winning 71 races before he was sold to go to Australia

Those who "had to do" with Ormonde must have been grateful for the docility and constitution which nature had bestowed upon the horse. Of Touchstone John Scott said he never trained a horse which needed so much doctoring : as the "Druid" puts it "a record of the calomel and other drugs he swallowed would form a portion of the Whitehall history as remarkable as the recovery of its Prince Llewellyn who answered to the old ale and port and won two races after he had been covered up in the stall as dead and his grave had been dug in the paddock. Touchstone was so lazy at exercise that he had to kick along on most days : but he pulled like an engine when racing. If at all stale he would not stand pressing and would swerve to the left at once it squeezed in the slightest : also he would swerve from the slightest movement of the whip. St. Simon had his peculiarities which had to be studied and indulged: though very quiet in the stable he would never submit to be tied up while being dressed over : if tied, he started weaving and went on till he broke his head collar: and in deference to his peculiarity he was always held by a man while his toilet was performed ; no easy task at times, for St. Simon when in strong work was irritable. At exercise he was a source of anxiety, for he was always dancing about : a habit which might have proved his undoing in the winter of 1883-4 when frost compelled walking exercise for a month : his lad could not keep him on the straw bed and in course of a week St. Simon had seventeen falls : strangely enough he never knocked a hair off. Lanercost during the better part of his career was nearly as lazy as Touchstone, but he became less gross and sluggish as he grew older : a peculiarity of Lanercost was his preference for a heavy weight ; the more curious as his feet gave his trainer infinite trouble. l'Anson used to say that his feet were as good as stable barometers at last and that the horse would fall lame if the ground was going to be hard. Chanticleer is remembered for his shocking temper : it is a matter of history, how on one occasion, his lad remained too long with him in one of his paroxysms and had to be extracted from the horse box by the window. But space presses, and we must not dwell upon the peculiarities of the dead and gone giants. In Ormonde's private history the turf chronicles will find little in the shape of anecdote save to illustrate his singular evenness of temper and docility. Whether his virtues will be perpetuated through his one great son Orme, his grandson, Flying Fox, and his great-grandsons Gouvernant and Ajax, history will tell us.

XI

TRUE INSECTS.

IT was explained in the last paper that spiders, scorpions, mites, ticks, and centipedes were not insects. This paper is to deal with insects, which, in spite of their extraordinary variety and incredible numbers, are one and all characterized by the possession of six legs—no more and no fewer—and by the division of the body into three distinct parts—head, thorax, and abdomen : also by their undergoing changes, called "metamorphoses," as from caterpillar to chrysalis, and from chrysalis to perfect insect. In books the caterpillar, grub, or maggot is called a larva, the chrysalis a pupa, and the final form an imago. The number of insects is bewildering. Of beetles alone there are said to be one hundred thousand species in the British Museum, and of these fifteen or twenty thousand may well be put down for India. The diptera, or two-winged flies, are also exceedingly numerous, and of fantastic varieties of form. Leaving out of account the insects that meet our sight occasionally, in all sorts of places, all the year round, the number and variety that swarm round a lamp on a single favourable evening in the monsoon are past belief till one has become accustomed to the astonishment and the nuisance Yet, with a little attention to the mouth and wings, it is possible to sort the multitude into seven orders as readily as one can sort a basket of beads of different sizes and colours. Modern naturalists are at sixes and sevens about the classification ; and the German schools, as a body, are opposed to the systems preferred by Englishmen ; but Linnæus's simple plan, which has served for two hundred years, is still far the best for amateurs and beginners, and leads to less confusion than the advanced systems which are perplexing from their very ingenuity of accuracy. All insects, in the perfect state, except those of the order diptera, have four wings ; and the seven orders are divided with reference to the form of the wings, and to the fact whether the insects have mouths to eat with or probosces to suck with. The following are the orders :—

1.—Lepidoptera, or, "scale-winged." Moths and butterflies.

2. Coleoptera, or, "hard-winged." Beetles.

3. Hemiptera, or, "half-winged." Bugs, lantern flies, cicadas, leaf-hoppers, frog-hoppers, aphides (plant lice), coccids (lac insects, cochineal insects, etc.), boatmen, water scorpions, etc.

4. Orthoptera, or, "straight-winged." Locusts, grass-hoppers, crickets, cockroaches, mantises (or mantides), earwigs.

5. Hymenoptera, or, "membrane-winged." Ants, bees, wasps, ichneumon flies.

6. Neuroptera, or, nerve-winged" (better, "net-winged"). Dragon flies, ant-lion flies, book lice, caddis flies, lace-wings, may flies, termites (or, "white ants," or "flying ants").

7. Diptera, or, "two-winged." Mosquitoes, midges, table-flies, blue bottles, eye flies, bot flies, bee killers, gad flies, "sheep ticks" (a misnomer : no insect should be called a tick).

Of these Nos 1, 3, and 7 suck their food with beaks or probosces ; Nos. 2, 4, 5, and 6 chew their food with mandibles or jaws. These are simple, sure marks by which to know the order of any insect in its winged state. And it is a puzzle for evolutionists that the particular form of the wings and of the mouth invariably go together. Another invariable rule is that in 1, 2, 5, and 7 the changes, or metamorphoses, are complete, that is, each insect passes through a death-like, chrysalis state ; whereas in 3 and 4, and generally in 6, that intermediate stage is not passed in a state of inertion.

Persons who desire to extend the information conveyed in these papers out of books, will find themselves confronted by a world of Latin names ; and if they have a taste for natural history, they will find the study most interesting. But there are three words which readers of the smallest ambition require to know : they are heteroptera, homoptera and pseudo-neuropter The first means "diverse-winged," and the second "like-winged," and the words are used to make two orders out of No. 3, the hemiptera. If we examine the two upper wings of a large plant-bug or water-bug, they will be seen to be thick and opaque in the half next the shoulder, and papery and transparent in the farther half. This division of the wing has been not very accurately described by the term hemiptera, "half-winged :" heteroptera is a more suitable word. Now all the insects of this order, except bugs, have the two upper wings of one texture throughout, as anyone may see by catching a leaf-hopper or a frog-hopper in the garden or at the lamp ; or, by the more difficult feat of securing a cicada when and where this large family of insects is common. Therefore these, that is, all the hemiptera, except bugs, are separated by many naturalists into an order which they name homoptera. The two are alike, however, in the possession of a sucking beak, and in the manner of their metamorphosis : so, as simplicity is one of the objects kept in view in these papers, we shall do well to follow Linnæus and recognize the heteroptera and the homoptera as a single order. The reason is less obvious to the eye for distinguishing certain neuropterous insects as pseudo, that is, false, neuroptera ; but its reasonableness, more or less, will appear to anyone who follows up the subject in books. Now let the reader, with the help of the following explanations, practise sorting insects into the seven orders, and he will soon be able to do it as easily as a girl sorts a basket of beads or of buttons.

I.—LEPIDOPTERA : Moths and butterflies. Enough : this may suffice. Everybody knows these common, splendid, and harmless insects, with their wings and bodies covered with loose scales. Nevertheless, let me make a few remarks. And first, there is no introduction to the study of insects that compares with the rearing of caterpillars, watching them feed, and grow, and cast their skins, till they are full-grown, when they turn into chrysalises and lie inert for days or months or a year, and then emerge as perfect insects—an amazing type of the resurrection. Much is learned by this practice. Finding caterpillars is an art : for some hide themselves ; and some kinds are to be sought on one part of a tree or plant, and some on another. Of the smaller species, some live in grain, some in the interior of fruit and flowers. The caterpillars of clothes moths live on wool, and both they and the cocoons will be found if carefully looked for on a "moth-eaten" garment. The moths themselves do no harm : all moths and butterflies are harmless in the imago state. Keeping caterpillars is another art : all need to be kept very clean, and constantly supplied with fresh leaves of the kind which each eats. Some eat by day, and some by night. Some species are indifferent to fresh air : others will not live without light and air. Some kinds die in spite of all that is done for them Mr. E. C. Cotes, formerly of the Indian Museum, made the interesting discovery that one species which seemingly would not live in confinement was dependent on the moisture of rain and dew. He sprayed water on them, and they began to thrive. Some caterpillars have sharp spikes on their bodies, which sting if touched. Nearly all the hairy or woolly kinds cause irritation on the skin, the blame of which is usually laid on an innocent spider or lizard ; and some are so poisonous that a single hair getting on the finger, and so touching the eye or the lips, or the inner membrance of the nose, causes much inconvenience. When a caterpillar is about to become a chrysalis, it gives up eating for a day before the change begins ; and sometimes it wanders about restlessly in search of a suitable spot in which to shuffle "off" its skin, and will die if it cannot find what it wants. An interesting fact is that carterpillars of moths are much more like one another than those of butterflies. This is even more true of the chrysalises, those of moths being more or less of the same pattern while those of butterflies are of many different shapes. Most chrysalises of moths are inclosed in a cover of silk ; but every butterfly's chrysalis that I have seen lies or hangs exposed naked to the air. Chrysalises require care in keeping till the moth or butterfly comes out : they should not be shaken, and of course should not be dropped or bruised. Those which naturally hang from some object ought not to be laid in the bottom of a box, cage, or vessel. And they should not be left where ants, beetles, or other insects will get at them to devour them ; nor ought they to be left in the box or case with caterpillars, some of which are more or less omnivorous and can demolish a chrysalis with relish. Another point to be kept in mind is that a butterfly or a moth comes out of its chrysalis covered with moisture, and with its wings like little rolled up morsels of rag: in a few minutes these spread out, and the whole insect dries quickly. The chrysalis should therefore be kept in a place where the insect can climb up and let its body depend with room enough for its wings to expand before they dry. There is little satisfaction in keeping the perfected insects in confinement during the few days that they live. However, if given plenty of light and air for the butterflies, and of air for the moths, with fresh flowers of several kinds for both, they seem happy enough; and it is interesting to watch them uncoiling their long probosces and probing the flowers to the bottom where the nectar lies. But the flowers must be common and even small flowers: cultivated double and triple beauties seem not to yield nectar, and are passed over by butterflies in a garden.

Moths differ from butterflies in several particulars: they fly by night; they have nearly all smaller wings; and from the manner in which they hold their wings, the outside, or side for show, is the upper side, whereas the show side of a butterfly's wings is the under side. But the most notable difference is that a moth's antennæ are finely pointed, whereas a butterfly's end in a knob. Butterflies are often arrayed in gorgeous colours, but differ little in form. Moths, on the other hand, include several remarkable groups of very different shapes. The silk moth of China is a plain enough insect; but the Indian "tusser" silk moths are splendid. There are several kinds, differing in shape and colour, up to the great atlas moth; but they have one common mark in the transpartment membrane which lies like a window in the centre of each wing. These moths are very common, especially in Assam and Eastern Bengal, where silk spinning is a Native trade. The caterpillars, and chrysalises of one kind are found on almond trees, and of another kind on ber trees. But the moths, flying by night, are rarely seen; for they are not one of the few species which come to a light. Clothes moths have already been mentioned: there are different kinds of them. And in Calcutta there is a moth like a clothes moth, whose Caterpillar makes a small case for itself and crawls about the inside walls of houses, feeding, I suppose, on vegatable mould or some other product of the damp walls which it frequents. Hawk moths or sphinx moths are an extensive family with large bodies and small wings whose most remarkable characteristic is that they do not alight on flowers, but draw the nectar while hovering in front of them, after the manner of the American humming birds. Their proboscis are very long. The larvæ of these moths are great, thick, fleshy caterpillars, with smooth skins, and they have the peculiarity of possessing short tails. The chrysalises are equally characteristic, and are not attached to anything—the caterpillars, apparent by being unable to spin silk—but sometimes lie in a natural recess, and sometimes on the bare ground. Death's-head moths are one of the most unaccountable forms in the animal kingdom, every species, large or small, having an unmistakable human skull, with eyes, nose, and mouth, painted on the insect's back. The moths have the general appearance of sphinx moths, and are, like them, of large size; that is to say, the smallest species has a large body by comparison with most moths. Some of them make a distinct squeaking noise if held. The largest English species enters beehives, and sucks the honey. Doubtless Indian species have a similar habit. One species, to my knowledge, sucks nectar while humming before a flower, and two or three of the caterpillars, which have also come under my notice, are like sphinx moth caterpillars except that they have rough though hairless skins. There is a group of lepidoptera (sesiidæ) which might pass for sphinx moths were it not that they fly by day and have knobbed antennæ, being thus half moth, half butterfly. They are further distinguished by a brush at the end of the abdomen. Most of this group have transparent wings, like a fly's or wasp's, and to them the family name properly belongs; but there are also species with the wings scaled like those of any other moth or butterfly. They are usually brightly and beautifully coloured, one common species being half green. I shall not forget seeing one of this family, at a railway station in Greece, hovering before a large picture advertisement on the wall, and vainly trying the painted flowers, one by one, with its long proboscis.

II.—COLEOPTERA: beetles. These are as unmistakable as moths and butterflies, distinguished by their hard, shell-like skin, and by the upper pair of wings called elytra (sheaths), being of the same texture. The under wings, with which they fly, are large and transparent, ingeniously folded up as to be completely covered and protected by the elytra. The larvæ, or grubs, of beetles do not, like those of most moths and butterflies, live in the open air: many of them live in wood; and others are hidden in the ground, in fruit, in grain and seeds, in piles of decomposing matter, and in other places; and they become chrysalises where they are. Both the larva and the perfect insect of the species which live in wood, possess large strong, jaws, with which the larva tunnels in the wood and eats it while it is growing, and the imago having emerged from the chrysalis, gnaws its way out. Quite commonly a ticking is heard for several days in some large or small article of wood in a house: that is caused by a beetle which has left its pupa-case working its way out; and sometimes the beetle may be caught just as it comes out, leaving a deep hole and a quantity of saw-dust behind it. The larva and chrysalis may have been in the tree before it was cut down; or a beetle may have laid its egg in the piece of furniture, and the whole life of the grub may have been passed in the article after it was made. I have seen a yellow beetle, half an inch long, depositing its eggs in crevices and damaged places in a dead bamboo trellis. Formerly ignorant people in England attributed the ticking to supernatural agency, and called it the deathwatch, supposing that it foretokened the death of one of the family. There are many families of coleoptera, as rhinoceros beetles, carpenter beetles, lady birds, fireflies, weevils, dung beetles, carnivorous beetles, Spanish flies (cantharides), cockchafers, water beetles. glowworms are the females of fireflies: their wings are rudimentary, and they want the hard casing; so they were long not suspected to be beetles at all. Cantharides, or blister beetles, occasionally come out in swarms, flocking to the lamp at might, and if they be crushed never so lightly, exuding a moisture which raises an unpleasant blister. The tigerbeetle is a well known English species of the carnivorous beetles, which in India are found up to the length of nearly three inches. They are fierce and active, seizing and devouring any soft bodied insect they can master. As far as I know, these and the carpenter beetles are the only families whose bite is painful: the great, horned rhinoceros beetles are quite harmless. Dung beetles are known for their habit of collecting a ball of animal manure, or some decomposing vegetable matter, and rolling the mass to a considerable distance to bury it, after depositing one or more eggs in it. A species of this family was the famous scarabæus of ancient Egypt. Some species, if they come on a dead mouse or bird, speedily bury it for the food of their grubs, by excavating the ground under it. The bookworms so destructive of books in Bengal, are the larvæ of a minute, reddish-brown beetle which deals with books as carpenter beetles make use of wood. Water beetles are unmistakable beetles but they are boat shaped, and their hinder pair of legs are constructed to be most useful paddles. They are quite different from the "water boatmen," which swim on their backs and are hemipterous insects. The species range from one-eighth of an inch to more than one inch in length. They fly readily out of the water, and sometimes fall on the table cloth at dinner time, attracted by the light. This is the only family of beetles which can be kept with any satisfaction and their larvæ swim and thrive and grow in the water, feeding voraciously. There are two divisions of the species; one which catches and eats many sorts of water creatures, and one which is vegetarian in its diet. In this connection the fact should be noted that, unlike lepidoptera in the perfect state, the coleoptera are ravenous eaters. Their ravages by day in the garden are well-known, but much of the damage done at night by night-feeders is put down to grasshoppers and caterpillars. These two kinds of insects usually eat leaves at the edge, but beetles as a rule eat holes in the face of a leaf. When beetles are about, a visit paid to the garden at night with a lamp will show scores of them at their depredations, as well as crickets, grasshoppers, mantises, moths, spiders, bugs, frogs lizards, and perhaps a snake all eating or being eaten. Scared away by your coming are also bats, shrews, nightjars, and little owls, which have been feasting off the whole crowd.

III.—HEMIPTERA. A general description of this order, with its division into heteroptera and homoptera, has been given near the beginning of this paper. During recent years the term rhynchota, or "beaked," has become better known as a name of the order; and it is a suitable name, for the proboscis of these insects is a simple sharp beak compared with the ingenious piercing and sucking apparatus of the diptera. We may now consider the great group of bugs, and then the other division of this order.

Bug is a word which has the misfortune to be excessively vulgar in English, although it is both proper and polite in American, in which tongue even a firefly is called a "lightning bug," suggestive of the Hindoostanee barg-andaz. To the naturalist the word is absolutely indispensable, unless he choose to say heteroptera every time: so persons who want to study insects must get over their prejudice and familiarize themselves with it. There is a hymn of Bishop Heber's which tells us that amid the spicy breezes (he meant spiceladen) and pleasing prospects of Ceylon, only man is vile; and of the hundreds of insects bugs the one which has made its home with man is vile also. In all respects—size, colour, disposition, habits and character—it is mean and objectionable. It has even lost the power of flight. But the rest of the suborder are perfectly genteel and many of them are noble. There are Anakim among them, two or three inches in length; and a veritable monster, which lives in the water, is the size of a flat-terel out mouse. They are all winged, and they inhabit the garden, the forest, and the pool. Some of them are without odour, but the scent of the most aromatic differs as widely from that of viverræ tectularius as the musk of the musk deer differs from the musk of the musk rat. Gay colours are common among them, and the aristocracy are greaved and casqued, and gorgeted. As in the case of beetles, there are herbivorous and carnivorous families of bugs: the proboscis of the first are the longer, but they cannot pierce the human skin, and are too gentle to try: the carnivorous bugs have short, stout, curved beaks, which they drive vigorously into the hand if they are caught. The first live on the juices of plants and trees; the second size caterpillars and other soft-bodied insects, and suck them dry. There is a predatory bug found in houses in Calcutta whose larva crawls about completely enveloped in a mantle of dust and small particles of rubbish. In this disguise it is said to fasten on other insects and bleed them to death; but I have never caught one in the act. Water-bugs can be kept in a suitable vessel of water as easily as water-beetles, and are every whit as interesting. The giant species already mentioned will chase and catch a frog or a fish, hold it fast, and suck it till only the skin is left. I have only seen this species in Bombay and in Calcutta; but it is common in those cities, reaching maturity at the close of the monsoon, when it often leaves the water at night and flies round a street lamp, looking as large and active as a bat. A similar illusion at night is produced by the great mantises and walking-leaves of Assam.

Two other common water bugs are the black, tailed insect called "water scorpion" (nepa), and the "boatman" (notonecta), which swims on its silver back. There are several varieties of each.

Among the homopterous rhynchota are the extensive family of insects, half moth, half grasshopper, of which the most familiar species are popularly named "frog-hoppers" and "leaf-hoppers. They are of many shapes and colours, but rarely exceed half an inch in length. They may be looked for in books under the names cercopidæ, membracidæ, jassidæ, psyllidæ, tedridæ. They are found on plants by day, stepping round a stem or under a leaf with the stiffness of a military recruit at drill, or making instantaneous little jumps with a click; and after they have matured and got their wings, some of them come to the lamp at night. It is the larva of one of these insects that is found on plants in the centre of a mass of froth which shades it from the sun and conceals it from its enemies. The "green flies," which are such an intollerable nuisance on certains nights in October in Calcutta, belong to this family. They exist in most parts of India, but I have not known them swarm outside of Bengal and Sylhet. They are half the size of table flies, and coloured green, or greenish white, or green spotted with brown. The difference of colour may mark males and females; or there may be three species. On favourable nights, these pests come to the house lamps in such multitudes, that it is impossible to eat or to work without removing the light or getting under a net; and in the morning they are found lying dead, to the depth of an inch or more, under every street lamp. At a meeting of the Microscopical Society of Calcutta, several inquiries and suggestions were made regarding the origin of these swarms—whether they came from the trees or from the grass, and why their larvæ were not seen; and I believe that I was the first, or one of the first, to make an experiment in the matter. One day in May, when there was only a little half-withered grass in the gardens and open patches of ground in Calcutta, and on the Maidan, I noticed countless little greenish things the size of fleas jumping about in such grass. They were two small and too numerous for grasshoppers; so they could only be some species of rhynchota and their numbers suggested the "green fly." I conjectured that the eggs laid the previous September had recently hatched, and that if the perfect insects were to appear in the following September the pupæ would require to lie dormant at some depth in the soil during the rainy months. This would be more after the manner of beetles and butterflies than after that of hemiptera. Nevertheless the millions of "flies" had to be accounted for in some way before they suddenly took wing in September. Accordingly, the next September, when the swarms were nightly appearing, I inverted a glass vessel on the ground, where naturally there was more grass than there had been in May, and pressed it down, after making sure that there was no visible living thing under it. That was in the afternoon, and a couple of hours after sunset, when the swarms appeared, I examined the glass and found several "green flies" inside. This did not prove the life history of the insects; but it was an important fact to be noted as a guide in further investigation. I have not been since where I could repeat the experiment.

Cicadas are those large flies, sometimes thrice as large as a bumble bee, which make a tremendous buzzing or singing all through the heat of the day, quite as disturbing when the insects are large and numerous, as the tooting of a thousand tree frogs at night. Of these, as of so many insects in this wonderful country, the species are numerous and the individuals often gigantic and handsome. The empty shell of the pupa, after the winged imago has taken flight, is frequently found on trees. Cicadas are in force in all or most of the dry parts of India, and in the hills. They seem to be unknown in Calcutta and on the coasts of India; but I found them plentiful at Nagasaki, which is on the sea coast of Japan. Cold benumbs them, and on a raw, misty day in the hills they may be taken with the fingers although they are exceedingly alert when the sun is out. The "seventeen years locust" of America is a cicada. Lantern flies or fulgoridæ occur in several species in the eastern Himalayas. They are of good size, grey or reddish in colour, and have a snout-like process curving upward, with a round knob at the end; but they have no lanterns. And it seems certain that the marvellous descriptions, published a century ago, of the lantern flies of South America, were only travellers' tales. Plant lice belong to this order; but not the creatures called wood lice—soft, state-coloured or whitish animals, of several kinds, shaped like a cockroach without wings, measuring from ⅛ inch to ¼ inch in length, and found on or under the bark of trees and elsewhere, in damp weather: these are crustaceans.

The Story Teller.

THE MAIDEN, THE DHOBIE AND THE I.C.S.

MR. LEEK, as his name implies, was a Welshman. He was also considered a rising man, being one of the brainiest of brainy Heaven borns; and, as such, was of course much in request by the maidens of Cyclonegunge. Two of the local nymphs had far outdistanced the rest in their pursuit of this matrimonial prize; but though Miss Buttercup Midget had made the running, the odds were steadily settling down in Miss Mabel Tyler's favour.

They were both fair; but despite her golden locks and fair skin, it was known that Miss Midget, on her mother's side at least, came of a race, whom to quote a spring poet, "The sun had kissed too ardently." Besides, she knew nothing of European life save what a year or two at a fashionable finishing establishment for young ladies had taught her. Miss Tyler, au contraire, though now, owing to the sudden failure and death of her father leaving her and her mother penniless, only filling the humble rôle of governess to two motherless girls, had enjoyed a London season and two winters amongst the fashionable health-resorts of Europe. Naturally she outclassed her rival both in style and dress. Her frocks and gowns were, however, fast becoming obsolete. Already the greater part of her modest salary was consumed in making those numberless little alterations in her swagger frocks that kept them fairly up to date. She had also to help her mother, so there was no doubt that in other matters she had to pinch. One way was by paying her dhobie by the hundred pieces and not by the month. Miss Midget had heard rumours of the paucity of her rival's weekly wash, and had often thought it would be a score against Miss Mabel, if it could but be brought to the notice of Mr. Leek. The question was, how to do it? She was sharp enough to see, that a direct statement from her might make Mr. Leek think her spiteful and so hurt her more than Miss Mabel. One day, however, chance delivered her rival into her hands. Calling to take the younger of the girls for a drive, Miss Midget had been shown into the deserted schoolroom. The punkha, started for her benefit, fluttered some papers from Miss Tyler's writing table. Picking them up she glanced at one. Eureka! There in Miss Tyler's own writing was her dhobie's account for March and April. She barely had time to slip the paper into her pocket before being joined by her young friend. The carriage was just moving off as Miss Tyler appeared on the verandah. Waving a graceful greeting Miss Midget called out "Oh Mabel, don't forget to bring those two books you promised me, to the club to-night."

* * * * *

Turn we now to the club, where, an hour later, Mr. Leek and Miss Tyler might have been seen enjoying, at the far end of the verandah what appeared to be a confidential confab. The club gradually filled as evening drew on, and presently Miss Midget arrived, who, descending from her carriage, called out gaily to her rival as she approached her. "I do hope you have brought those books." This turned the conversation to the books in question, which were lying on an adjacent chair; and on Mr. Leek saying he had often wished to read one of them, Miss Midget, with her friend's permission, after first glancing through it herself, made it over to him as he rose to leave.

That was the last time he was ever seen in confidential chat with Miss Tyler. Dipping into the book, after dinner, preparatory to reading it, a paper dropped from it as he turned over its leaves. When about to replace it curiosity got the better of him, and he read it.

"Oh a dhobie's account without doubt must be Mabel's" (he had got to that stage) "since it was her writing." As he was about to propose there could be no harm in reading it. Rather a lark to see if girls really do wear the wonderful garments one sees advertised in ladies' papers? So mused Leek and so musing he perused; but his brows clouded as he read.

"Hum, four hanky's a week seems rather short, yet that's the average for two months; and,—Oh but that must be a mistake, only nine pairs of stockings in two months. The dear girl has forgotten to put them all down, careless one,' thought he. "Pettis means petticoats, two a week, hardly looks adequate. Dresses four a week, that's better. Eh,—let me see, what on earth are "Ches." Oh—er of course answers to our shirts we believe. Great Scott!! Why I use twelve a week and she has made twelve do for eight weeks!!! I think after all I'll saddle the other filly" concluded he. He did, for the marriage of Miss Buttercup Midget with him was announced a few weeks after.

J. JARBO.

There were plenty of bookmakers in France some thirty years ago who were willing to bet on English races. "All in, run or not" was the general rule, and in order to know the probable starters, telegrams were despatched from the different training quarters informing the layers of what horses had left to fulfil engagements.

About this time the Bromley meeting was in full swing. All the Epsom animals that were intended to perform at the now defunct gathering left the town of salts by the midday train, and the pencillers across the water were duly notified of the fact. On one occasion, however, Antidote, one of the Epsom division looking to have a decided chance in the principal event, did not join the string going to the station, another animal in the same stable, and also entered in the big race, taking his place. Knowing that Antidote would be a strong tip, several layers in Paris offered tempting prices to their clients in order to persuade them to back the non-starter. Scenting a "stumer," many of them refused, but one English "jay" was forthcoming, he backing the horse with several of the biggest pencillers to win something like three thousand pounds.

The result was eagerly waited for. At length it arrived, and when Antidote was given as the winner there was some language—foreign, but expressive. Eventually it leaked out that the native of "perfidious Albion" who had profited so largely by Antidote's success was in league with the stable. Knowing their horse would be at a shortish price, the ruse was adopted of keeping him in the stable until the usual train had gone, and then despatching him to the scene of action by a special. As events turned out, the "wheeze" proved even more successful than anticipated

TO MOTORISTS

THE BEST OILS FOR MOTOR CARS.

Wilburine for cylinders ... Rs. 6-8 per gallon Tin. | Valvoline for Bearings, etc. ... Rs. 5-0 per gallon Tin.

Extract from the "Autocar."

LUBRICATING OILS.—[2422]—It may be instructive to your numerous readers to have the experiences of a motor car experimentalist on the behaviour of lubricating oils for motor work. In the first onset I tried various sorts of oils, all of which left deposits of carbon and gumming matter in the cylinders and valves. These deposits are serious drawbacks, not only to the working of the pistons and valves, but also interfere with the proper sparking at the ignition plugs. I then tried the Valvoline Oil Co.'s oils, using "Wilburine" for the cylinders and "Valvoline" for the bearings, etc.; these being quite pure mineral oils, no deposits either of carbon or gumming matter were left. Every time the pistons, etc., have been examined they were quite bright, clean and well lubricated. The valves also keep in good condition and require very little regrinding. I have been quite free from sparking troubles since using the above lubricants. Any dust that alights on the working parts is easily wiped off, whereas with other oils dirt stuck fast through gumming.

Very much smaller quantities of these oils ("Wilburine" and "Valvoline") about one-third to one-quarter, are required, which more than balances the extra first cost. The wearing surfaces are besides in a magnificent condition. These advantages —viz., high-class lubrication, freedom from deposit in cylinders, gum in bearings, absence of sparking troubles, are too important to be neglected by any motorist.

There is a tendency to use various greases, instead of oils. Engineers have over and over again proved that greases give much greater frictional losses than oils; with motor car engines and bearings the lubricant that gives the least possible friction is the best.

I have referred to the advantages the motorist gets. I will mention another advantage these oils have to those whom the motorist passes, viz., the absence of the fried-fish-shop smell so often noted. Several persons have been very much struck by the absence of smell; even when the car has been standing for some time with the engines running, no trace of offensive odour has been apparent to the bystanders.

I mention these experiences, having no interest in the Valvoline Oil Co., that others may be benefited and save themselves trouble and their neighbours some annoyance.

STANDARDS OF SPORTSMANSHIP.

THAT is an unfortunate and unpleasant incident to which reference is made in our London Letter concerning the Palma Trophy at Bisley. It reveals a breadth of difference between the Britisher's standard of propriety in sports and competitions, and that prevailing across the Atlantic which makes us pause and ask ourselves whether international competitions between the two great English-speaking nations can ever be carried to a successful and satisfactory termination. Those who take interest in rifle shooting on the range need not be reminded that the terms on which the match for the Palma Trophy is shot include as their main feature the condition that each competing team shall use the regulation military rifle of the country it represents. The scheme of the competition is a very practical one, it aims at discovering the best rifle as well as the best marksman, or, perhaps, we should say the best combination of man and weapon. Such a competition has peculiarly wide interest: it appeals with equal force to every nation which sends a team to compete, no matter in what country the shooting takes place: and it offers the best opportunity possible for comparing the merits of military rifles, to the advantage of all interested in that vital question.

At Bisley, last year, teams representing France, Norway, Australia, Canada, the United States and Britain competed: the United States team won, beating the British marksman by a very insignificant number of points. Their success was accepted in the usual spirit: they were warmly congratulated and the last thing that occurred to anybody was to cast doubt on the loyalty of the visitors to the rules they had accepted. There were whispers that something was not quite right, but these did not take any definite shape, being promptly silenced by the hosts of the foreign teams who were naturally jealous for the honour of their guests. The rumour never obtained any width of currency and would have been forgotten but for the Americans themselves. An evening paper, published in Washington, made certain statements which were brought to the notice of the National Rifle Association officially and could not, therefore, be ignored. The Secretary of the N. R. A. was instructed to write to the N. R. A. of America and propound specified questions arising out of the assertions which had been made by the Washington journal: and this letter was the means of bringing a reply we will only call disappointing. General Bird Spencer, President of the American R. A., acknowledged that the United States team had taken to England two sets of rifles: one set consisted of the 1902 model, United States Army Service rifle: the other rifles were fitted with special barrels which had not been adopted by the War Office in Washington. In a word one set of rifles complied with the Palma Trophy conditions, but the other did not, and the latter were used by the American team. It cannot be said that General Bird Spencer's reply improves the situation: in course of a long reply he said "my instructions to the captain of the teams were, that if there were the slightest objection to the use of the rifles to which were attached the special barrels his team was immediately to discard them and shoot with the old model of rifle taken with them." The President's concluding remark is that "post-mortem objections at this time can be productive of no benefit or advantage to the cause:" and what feeling prompted this observation our readers may decide for themselves. We should like to think that it means "We did a smart thing and are sorry for it: and we hope you will not put us to shame by making much of it now," but we must confess the probabilities are against this reading.

The action of the Americans and the explanation offered by their responsible head left the N. R. A. authorities no alternative but to point out that the most vital rule of the competition had been deliberately infringed, this was done in a letter studiously moderate in tone, but which would make the ears of a British recipient burn for a month afterwards. Colonel Crosse wrote "the success and continuance of a match such as that for the Palma Trophy must depend primarily on a scrupulous observance by all parties of the rules which bind allalike. It is difficult for the representatives of our country to know what is the latest regulation respecting the patterns of army rifles of another, and in default of precise information it would be offensive to a competing team to assume that they intended to commit a breach of rules unless prevented by a protest. It is obvious that if all competitors were to feel at liberty to infringe the rules in the hope that objection would not be taken, it would be impossible to preserve good feeling in any match." Colonel Crosse further informed General Bird Spencer, and in doing so, we think, replied to the correct sense of that remark concerning the inutility of "post-mortem objections"—that it was in no degree the purpose of the British N. R. A. Council to seek reversal of the result of the match.

We should like to be able to express surprise that it should be necessary to lay down thus in plainest language the elementary principles governing a sporting competition for the enlightenment of the Americans; but unfortunately previous experience precludes any other feeling than regret. The treatment of the Valkyrie in the America Cup race of 1895 left an unpleasant feeling in the minds of yachtsmen who race only for sport. The proceeding of a member of the American Polo team which visited England last year, in rolling off his pony at Hurlingham and crying "I'm down!" in order to save a goal was on the same footing. Little was said about the latter incident; nothing, if we are not much mistaken, was allowed to appear in print; but the incident was the subject of very general comment in polo circles, and the difficulty of meeting on even terms players who thus evaded the spirit of a rule for their momentary advantage was recognised.

The great difficulty lies in the fact that the American standard differs from the British: the American sporting code allows these opportunist actions: they are part of the game, and the American would not dream of objecting if the Britisher adopted similar tactics; of that we feel quite sure. He is a good sportsman according to his own lights and were an opponent to win by move or dodge which he, the American, had not foreseen, he would merely raise his opinion of that opponent's "smartness." We recall an incident which serves to exemplify this feeling: our readers may have a clearer recollection of it than we can boast, but if we are not mistaken it occurred at the Henley Regatta a few years ago. The occasion was a sculling race for singles, and at the first stroke one of the two competitors had the misfortune to miss the water and overturn his craft. His opponent observing it lay on his sculls, backed and waited for the drenched and gasping oarsman to be wrung out and reinstated in his boat for a fresh start. It was a sportsmanlike thing to do, for, of course, there was nothing in written or unwritten codes to prevent the opponent rowing over the course at his leisure and claiming the heat. One or two American visitors, however, were honestly and volubly astounded at the scullers' behaviour. Why he should thus deliberately refrain from making the most of his opponent's mishap, due, as it was (without doubt) to carelessness, was utterly beyond their comprehension: nor did the proffered suggestion that the gentleman did not care to owe success to an accident which put his opponent out of the race at the start, convey any meaning to them. With natural courtesy they conceded that it was an exceedingly sportsmanlike thing to do, but their courtesy thinly veiled their obvious conviction that a sportsmanlike thing might be extremely quixotic and foolish.

America needs more sportsmen of the Caspar Whitney stamp: Mr. Whitney spent much time in England a few years ago and his "Sporting Pilgrimage," written on the strength of his experiences, contains the opinions and conclusions of a man who combines great impartiality with unusual discernment. "We Americans," he says, "take our sport and ourselves too seriously..... Tradition and years of experience, and, too, possibly, less nervous, active disposition of the native Englishman have persuaded him that, after all, the winning or losing of a football match will neither lengthen nor shorten his earthly career. He is human enough to wish to win, to use his best endeavours to that end and rejoice in his victory, but he is not going to lose any sleep over it. Too much store is not set on the mere winning, the cardinal principle being to do something athletic and to do it to the best of your ability." We have italicised the concluding sentence, because it reflects the American spirit as bared by Mr. Whitney; the American "sets too much store on winning;" and setting overmuch upon it, as a natural sequence seizes every means that will help him to success. The license—as we consider it—which he permits himself in breaking the spirit of rules is the outcome of that intense anxiety to win—somehow. The same intentness upon winning it is that it induces him to study every smallest detail which may contribute to success, and which goes so far to gain for him well-deserved success in games and athletics. If the action of a sculler refusing to take advantage of a mishap made American visitors stare in wonderment, so indeed would "the sight familiar to us (Americans) of members of a defeated football eleven throwing themselves prostrate on the ground in an agony of bitter disappointment," make Englishmen stare, as Mr. Whitney remarks.

That men should do their best to win, but take defeat in a philosophical spirit was a revelation to Mr. Whitney: "on coming in touch with this spirit for the first time it impresses the American University man strangely though none the less pleasantly." We have quoted thus much from him to emphasise the fundamental difference between the standards prevailing in the two countries. Nothing but closer contact between the sportsmen and athletes of the States and of Britain can bring the standards up to a common plane: and we can only hope that the mutual appreciation of one another's good points which it is certain grows with increased frequency of contact will in time rub out such ideas of the permissible as have been brought into painful prominence by the Palma Trophy affair.

Sporting Notes.

THE death of Mr. George Garth, of Dacca, as the result of a polo accident on Wednesday, the 15th instant, will be very widely and deeply regretted. He took a terribly bad fall during a practice game on Wednesday evening, was knocked clean out of time and, never recovering consciousness, died early next morning from concussion of the brain and fracture of the skull. It seems that his pony came down and he fell on his head, his Sola topee having previously fallen off. As Manager of the Dacca Estates he enjoyed a well-earned popularity throughout Bengal and his success in the management of the Nawab's affairs, from the most important matters down to the smallest details connected therewith, was such as to render his sudden removal from office a circumstance that can mean little short of dismay and the keenest regret to the nobleman whose interests he served so faithfully and so well. His funeral was attended by practically all Dacca and the hearse was drawn by his favourite pony "Olla."

As a sportsman he was ever in the van. The brilliant and successful way he ran the Dacca race meetings, the concomitant polo, sports, social gatherings and festivities will always awaken pleasant memories in those who, in recent years, participated in the hospitalities and sporting doings of Dacca. He was a good all-round sportsman, too, had a practical working knowledge of most sports, was good at several and excelled in a few. In common with the whole of Eastern Bengal we tender our respectful sympathy to the members of his family now in Indiain their sudden bereavement.

The final in the Simla Polo Tournament for the Beresford Cup was played on the 15th instant, a large gathering, including Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Ampthill and Lord Kitchener, was present. The game was won by the 15th Hussars, who beat the Chief's Staff by two goals and four subsidiaries to two subsidiaries.

A General Meeting of Members of the Calcutta Paperchase Club was held last Friday evening at No. 12, Russell Street, to consider the terms of the Pony Paperchase Cup for the coming season.

Pony-chasing of late years has not received the support or attention we think it deserves, and we are pleased to see that certain members of the executive are making a special effort this year to put matters on a sounder footing.

The old rule—for which the executive themselves we believe were reponsible—requiring all ponies running for the cup, irrespective of height or class, to carry even weights (11st.) was not calculated to encourage the smaller ponies, and undoubtedly lessened the fields that have of late started in this race. To ask—say a 13-2 Arab—to run over four miles of natural country at even weights with a 14-1 Waler is scarcely a sporting question from the Arab's point of view, and the meeting very wisely decided to make the teams weight for inches with the usual class allowances.

It had previously been decided—at a meeting held on the 10th instant—to raise the upper limit of height from 14-1 to 14-2 with a view to affording pony owners a wider choice of mounts. The Cup next season will therefore be for ponies 14-2 and under, weight for inches, 14-2's to carry 12st., Arabs and C.-B.'s to receive the usual allowances.

With the increased height, the "little 'uns" given a chance, and some 6 or 8 months for probable competitors to obtain suitable ponies, we trust to see a good entry for the Pony Paperchasers' Cup of 1905.

An attractive programme was gone through with the greatest success at the Simla Gymkhana last Saturday. Entries were big and a large gathering was present. The first event was the Kadir—jumping a hurdle and taking three discs with a spear. This was won by Mr. Gopham. The Polo ball race was won by Mrs. Taylor, who beat Mrs. Rivett-Carnac in the finals, these ladies having won their heats. The Amazon Stakes went to Major and Mrs. Crocker. Lady competitors had to throw a polo ball for their partners to catch. The Musical chairs, with polo balls or sticks in place of chairs, was next and was won by Mrs. Heneage, Mrs. Wormald taking second place. The programme concluded with the Board School Stakes—a word making competition for ladies. Miss Usborne secured this, the word being "Saucer."

The Bangalore Polo Tournament will commence in Bangalore on the 13th proximo and will be continued on the 15th and 18th idem, and, if not finished, will go on again on the 20th idem. The prize offered is a Challenge Cup presented by H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore and is valued at Rs. 1,000. The present holders are the 4th (Q. O.) Hussars. The Tournament is subject to the usual conditions, and the stewards are General Eccles Nixon, C. B., Major A. C. Hamilton, the Carabiniers, and Major W. W. Evans, R. E.

In our Home exchanges this week, we see it stated that Sievier has instructed his solicitors to apply for a new trial of his slander action against Sir James Duke, on the grounds of misdirection of the jury and fresh evidence. Mr. Rufus Isaacs has been briefed to lead in the case, and the confident expectation of the plaintiff is that he will finally win his case on technical grounds. Colossal cheek! And now he is being prosecuted for perjury in connection with one of his insolvencies.

Mr. Walter Winans, the famous expert with the revolver, is taking charge of the shooting gallery, which will, we imagine, be one of the principal attractions at the bazaar in aid of the Victoria Hospital, and which closes to-day. Mr. Winans arranged a whole series of novel shooting competitions, including matches between ladies, gentlemen, and even children, and we hear that some handsome presents will be given to the winners of these contests.

J. Robinson, the jockey, passed through Calcutta last week, on his way to Poona.

A correspondent writes:—Three leopards have been shot close to the officers' quarters at Kailana, one by Mr. MacIntyre, attached to the Rifle Brigade, on the 27th ultimo, and the other two by Mr. Chisholm, of the 15th Hussars. Mr. Chisholm sat up over a goat, and seeing a leopard fired at it, the beast bounded away and thinking he had missed, Mr. Chisholm remained for some time by the goat, as on a previous occasion after having fired and missed, the leopard returned and took the goat; after waiting a short time, Mr. Chisholm had another shot, and in the morning found that he had killed two leopards.

Dr. W. C. Hossack, the well-known sporting medico of Calcutta, has undertaken to compile a history of the Calcutta Paperchases from its earliest days to the present year of grace. It is to be illustrated, to be altogether an edition de luxe, and the expenses, we believe, are to be defrayed by subscription.

The little story we heard the other day of the raffled horse, the "lucky winner" and the vet teems with quiet fun. "A," on the eve of his departure for Home, took a ticket in a raffle for a gee whose value was set down at about Rs. 500, and a day or so before he embarked he was informed that he had won it. He left instructions with "B" to sell the animal. "B" had it lotted at auction two or three times, lowering the reserve on each occasion, but with no success; no one wanted this horse it seemed. "B" next lent the animal to "C" to use till "A's" return and "C" forthwith bought a new set of harness and tried the brute in his office gharry next day, when he found there was more than a substratum of truth in the baboo's essay—"horse is noble animal, but if you shall beat him he will not do so." This one looked extremely noble, but all the beating in the world failed to make him "do so," or in other words to draw the gharry. The exasperated "C" sought explanation of "B" and together they sought a vet, whose verdict was "osteoporosis all over and badly gonein the loins; shoot him ek dum." The "lucky winner" lost his horse, and pays Rs. 70 besides for lotting fees, feed, examination and destruction! Hard case—what should "A" and "C" do?

Ruin, an Australian pony, has just been purchased for India; a good price was paid for the animal, which has a fairly good reputation.

Mr. J. D. Scott has recently bought the English colt Young Sirdar.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes :—Paper-chasing is proceeding vigorously in Bangalore, and every week there is a run. Latterly the fields have been very large, and when a start was made from the south end of Cambridge Road on the evening of the 14th instant, some fifty riders, both ladies and men, were present. Amongst these were General and Mrs. Nixon and Miss Chinnery, Colonel and Mrs. Daniell, Colonel and Miss Sprot, Colonel and Mrs. Georges, Colonel Stevens, Lieutenant-Colonel Pierce Moore, I. C. S., Major and Mrs. Johnston, Major and Mrs. Jollie, Major and Mrs. Hamilton, Captain and Mrs. Battley, Captain and Mrs. Sharpe Smith, and many others. The course was about four miles and consisted, to a large extent, of "made" fences, differing in this respect from previous courses this season. The artificial obstacles were, however, wisely put into the later stages of the journey, which prevented undue crowding. There was some grief, but nothing serious resulted. Colonel Sprot, of the Carabiniers, was the first to finish in a very trying ride, and this officer, who commands the popular "Carbs," will be compulsorily retired at the end of July! Comment is needless. Colonel Daniell and the officers of the R. A. were "At Home" to their freinds at the finish, which took place on the Agram plain near the Station Hospital.

Mr. "J. B.'s" horses at present with T. Tingey, are to be placed in Ramshaw's hands when that neat horseman returns to India from his holiday.

We are glad to hear that W. Southall has now practically recovered from the injury to his leg, and that he will soon be en route from Australia to Poona, at which meeting it is his intention to ride.

Our Poona correspondent writes :—The booming of complimentary salutes in the cold grey of the morning and the flashing of scarlet and gold come as unmistakeable signs to show that High Dignitaries have deigned to return from heights Olympian and that to those of us hopeless mortals who have frizzled here in the plains, the period of Purgatory is well nigh over. For Nature will naturally not presume to disappoint High Officialdom, and High Officialdom by its mere condescension in returning from the hills has intimated its wish for the early attendance of the gentle rain from heaven, and if there's any unseemly delay all that is necessary is the prompt issuing of a Government Resolution. In the civilian mind there is an implicit belief that nothing, not even nature, can withstand a G. R.

But while the beauteous butterflies and dazzling drones of society have been fluttering and flitting, sipping honey at their will from sweet hill flowers, the busy bees, left behind in the hives of the plains, have been whiling away the weary hot days in a praiseworthy attention to stern duty for the public weal.

Polo players are determined that the prestige of their glorious pastime shall not suffer and have issued prospectuses of a Junior and an Open Tournament. The junior contest is to take place during the latter half of August. No member of a team is to have played in any open tournament or in any of the following tournaments:—Inter-Regimental, Punjab, Infantry, Bombay, Poona (open), Delhi Durbar, Bengal Cavalry, Jodhpur, Ulwar or any Championship, or since the 31st December 1899 in Hyderabad, Secunderabad, Bangalore, Madras, Mhow or Nasserabad. The four players are to belong to the same corps or recognised polo club and to be permanent members of the club for which they play. Native State teams are barred. Each team is limited to a dozen ponies and no pony is to play for more than one team and no substitute for a pony injured will be allowed. A team is to be composed of four Europeans and a regimental team of four British officers, except when a second team is entered, in which case one native will be allowed if the Commanding Officer certifies that a fourth British officer is not available, and one is considered available if present even though the individual may not be a player of the game. Ponies are to be the property of the regiment for which they play and in the case of non-regimental teams to be the property of the players, though one player may own them all. Entries, Rs. 40 a team, to go towards a silver pot for the winner. It will amuse those behind the scenes to observe how studiously and ingeniously the executive have endeavoured to guard against the little insidious stratagems of previous experience and the executive are certainly to be congratulated on having effected their object with apparently consummate skill. The aspiring novice has certainly every reason to be grateful, for his interests have been looked after with the most tender solicitude and the cracks have been so completely barred that ambitious youth has every opportunity of displaying his skill among his compeers. The Polo Committee are altogether to be congratulated I think on the cleverness with which they have framed the terms of the tournament. It will make the junior tournament infinitely more interesting without its clashing with the interest in the open tournament, as was the case in previous years.

No less satisfactory seems to be the terms of the Open Tournament, which is to begin about the 30th September, concurrently with the big races. It is very gratifying to observe that the unsporting restriction of last year, debarring native teams although the Challenge Cup was actually presented by the finest of all native sportsmen.—Pertab Singh (as he is best known throughout the length and breadth of Hindustan, even though he now holds regal rank). This restriction aroused intense dissatisfaction among many and has most wisely been eradicated. We may now reasonably hope to see polo of the highest quality. Ponies are limited to 24 a team and of the Rs. 75 entrance fee Rs 50 goes to the winning team for suitable mementoes in addition to the custody of the Challenge Cup for the ensuing 12 months.

Reckless riding by some members of the Ootacamund Hunt has provoked the following circular from the Master :—

"During the first run on Thursday last, 9th instant, two hounds were knocked down and ridden over by members of the field. One of these is badly injured and will probably die. He is one of the best hounds in the pack. We cannot let this incident pass without a protest and we now appeal to the members of the Hunt to conform in future more closely to the recognised rules of riding to hounds, in the full belief that if members, who know what these rules are, will follow them, others of less experience will profit by the example. We quite understand that the circumstances of hunting in the Nilgiris are peculiar, and that it is often necessary to ride nearer to hounds during a run on these hills than would ever be permitted in England; but nothing can excuse the offence of riding directly behind the pack, of riding through the pack to get to a crossing, or of riding so close to the head of the pack on either flank, as to drive them off the line, but these offences have been committed of late, to the great detriment of sport. We feel sure that this appeal will not be misunderstood by the members of the Hunt, but will be accepted in the spirit in which it is made, and that they will recognise that it is in the true interests of sport, which is rightly considered the best, as it is the most popular, these Hills can afford."

Messrs. A. J. Combridge and Company, of Bombay, have sent us a copy of The Literary Review for the current month. Among the hundreds of books mentioned therein are several that should be on every sportsman's shelves, including the newly issued "Sportsman's Book for India," edited by Mr. F. G. Aflalo and contributed to by well-known writers on sport in this country.

The following timely letter on the subject of game preservaton in Assam, from the Assam Branch Indian Tea Association, has been forwarded to the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Assam:—

In reply to your letter No. 226 Mily. 113-M of the 11th January 1904, requesting this Association's advice as to the season which should be held to be the close season in the case of each quadruped and bird which it is considered desirable to protect, I have the honour to make the following suggestions:—

All deer should be protected from 1st May until the 1st November, during this period all adult female deer are pregnant or have very young fawns at foot, and are slaughtered in large numbers from boats, by men armed with daos, spears and luthis, etc.

The protection should include a clause prohibiting the sale of venison during these months, a clause which it is submitted would not be difficult to enforce, as the meat is generally brought in boatloads to various market centres for sale, many of which are easily accessible to the nearest Police: the writer saw six or seven boatloads thus brought in to Kokilamukh in one day during a high flood.

The shortening of gun barrels under License Form XI will do much to save deer from extermination.

As regards the protection of rhinoceros as the period of gestation is 17 or 18 months, the only protection which will be efficacious, will be by providing sanctuaries where no one is allowed to shoot. The extermination of these prehistoric survivals will be principally due to the huge beats got up by sporting Rajas and others (often titled globe-trotters) who kill everything that gets up before the line: male, female or young. One such beat does more to exterminate game than years of individual shooting by Europeans.

The protection of the Bos Gaurus and Bos Frontalis known respectively in Assam as "Mithun" and "Mithun" or "Bonoria Goroo" and Bos Bubalus, known in Assam as the "Moh" will be best effected by a regulation that males alone are to be shot and by limiting the number under each license.

As regards game birds it is doubtful whether it would be possible to enforce different dates for different species, and if but one time for them all is selected it should be from 1st April to 1st September, but the actual breeding season of each kind may be said to be much as follows, and the periods named are those during which protection is recommended.

All Pigeon and Doves :—

Pigeon commonly called Green-Pigeon belonging to the Genera Osmotreron, Treron, Spenocercus and Chalcophaps, Imperial Pigeon or Pagocmas belonging to the Genera Ducula and Carpophaga. Doves belonging to the Genera Turtur and Oenopelia.—From 15th March to 15th June.

Jungle Fowl (Gallus Ferrugineus). Pheasant (Gennaeus horsfieldei and Polypilectron Chinquis). Partridges (The Genera Francolinus, Aboricola, Bambusicola). Pea-fowl (Pavo cristatus and muticus).—From 1st April to 1st September.

Floriken (Sypheotis aurita and bengalensis).—From 1st June to 1st November.

Resident duck and teal (wood-duck, Asarcarnis scutulata). Whistling-teal (Dondrocycna). Cotton Teal (Nettopus coramandelianus) Spotbill Duck. (Anas poecilorhyncha and zonorhyncha).—From 1st June to 1st October.

In conclusion it is submitted that it is a well-known fact to the Police, that gun owners make a regular business of hiring out their guns to other persons for shooting purposes, so that the amount of damage done must not be reckoned by the amount which the owner does, or by the amount of powder and shot he himself can afford to buy; and when one considers that the number of gun licenses issued in Lakhimpur District amounts to over 1,600 and that licenses are issued as freely in all other districts of Upper Assam, it is hardly to be wondered at, that game is rapidly becoming exterminated.

An interesting account of a fishing trip to Poonch is published in to-day's issue. The result, on the whole, was not encouraging, but its interest lies chiefly in the lesson in perseverance, it teaches the fisherman, and the emphasis it lays on the necessity for obtaining accurate and local information as to the condition of rivers before undertaking the trouble and incurring the expense of getting to them.

We hear that so far this season nothing much has been done in respect of mahseer in Kashmir, only a 12 and 4-pounder having been recorded up to the 12th instant. Chiroo, up to 4 and 5lbs., are reported to be fairly plentiful; they are by no means a sporting fish, but are always useful for the larder.

Mr. Buckingham of Assam most opportunely lays before his brother planters the position they place themselves in either in procuring guns for bustee-wallahs, or making presents of these weapons to coolies as rewards for long service or loyal behaviour. Many mofussilites not caring for shooting themselves, retain the services of a shikari for bringing in game for the table, but that functionary certainly should never be permitted to take the gun to his home where, as frequently as not, it is lent or hired out to another party who blazes away at all and everything he comes across. A stricter supervision also should be exercised over the amount of ammunition issued, comparing it with the quantity of game brought in. There can be no objection to the man taking tale in moderation from the bag, but in many cases the factory shikari drifts into the regular game supplier for the whole place, and if near a station extends the same business to that, sometimes keeping a regular depôt in the bazar where maimed birds and animals are confined, lingering in agony for sometimes days together. Although there is not much danger now of anything serious arising from the practice, it used to be the custom on some frontier gardens among the shikaries to get powder, lead and caps through an unreflecting good-natured planter selling or rather swapping the same to the hill men for such things as rubber and wax. If all we hear is true, the trading Marwaries still pursue the business, both with the mountaineers as also with the reckless potshooter in the plains, and we have reason to believe that a good deal of John Hall's blasting powder is used for other purposes than quarrying limestone for which alone the mahajans are licensed to sell it. We want a little more supervision on the part of subdivisional officers over the frontier bazar shopkeeper.

We have to chronicle the advent of projectile that may be called a "hypnotising shell" for big game. It contains some powerful drug akin in its effects to chloroform, but if all accounts are true it is instantaneous and far spreading in its effects, so that it is by no means necessary to aim for mortal spots, but by simply plumping the missile anywhere round about, as close to the effecting nerves as may be for choice, and lo! the charging beast falls to the ground quiescent and can then be immolated at leisure without spoiling skin or other trophies. How long insensibility lasts has not transpired; an important fact that the hypnotising hunter would do well to have pretty accurately determined, for a sudden recovery similar to that which "Peter" of London Zoo fame exhibited when having a tooth drawn would be decidedly awkward. In the interests of game preservation we hope this shell will not come into use for half a dozen butchers firing into a herd of deer would bring down twenty at once, when the process of the hallal could be carried out in as many minutes. In fact our Societies should approach the authorities on the subject of restricting the sale very stringently, for we presume its use would strongly recommend itself to dacoits and burglars as an easy method of carrying on their nefarious transactions without resorting to violence. This hypnotiser may legitimately be brought into use against a convicted rogue or man-eater, but to sanction its general employment would only tend to the extermination of game by placing in the hands of the most nervous cockney aspirant a weapon requiring neither skill nor courage to manipulate. Sundry little precautions would have to be observed in the carriage of the shell, for one dropped on the floor of a howdah, for instance, would placeing occupant, mahout and elephant in a state of coma; then the advantage would certainly be all in favour of the opposite party, who, in the case of a tiger, could select his meal at pleasure, unless, indeed, he himself came under the influence of the anæsthetic. What a subject for a camera!

A correspondent in the Mirzapore district writes:—"While inspecting my sleepers here yesterday, I saw a lot of wild dogs full speed after a sambhar on the hill above me. I immediately put on steam and gave chase as hard as I could, but had not gone far in my mad career when I went head over heels, falling heavily with several hard pointed rocks sticking into the small of my back; but worst of all my gun lay a miserable sight alongside of me with the stock smashed in two. I shook myself together as speedily as aches and scratches would allow me, picked up my wrecked gun and ran on as fast as I could, but saw nothing. While looking at the beautiful country around I heard a scream very much like that of a bear, and also very distinct splashes of water down below where I was standing, but only a short distance off. I thought, to myself, here is a go with a broken gun and a couple of bears fighting in the water within a few yards of me. I pulled out a couple of ball cartridges at once, put them into my disabled gun, fixed the stock as best I could, which felt very shaky in my hands, marched up to the high bank, looked over to ascertain the reason of all the commotion and then I beheld the whole pack of dogs hanging on to and doing their utmost to drown the stag, while he rose to the surface he gave another scream of distress, but in another instance a shell crashed through his ribs and ended his career. My gun with the shock again fell to pieces, and before I could put it together again all the wild dogs had disappeared without a scratch. I regretted their escape, as I wanted to bag one very much, they looked a five savage lot and capable of pulling anything down. My men soon followed up and the stag was brought in here with willing hands much to the delight of the village people who went in for a big dinner that night, which was washed down with a good supply of their favourite beverage "Billi Stink," which reminds me very much of the smell of a dirty Scotch badger.

Lives of fishermen remind us
We may strive for prizes grand:
And, departing, leave behind us
Tales of fish we failed to land.

A great deal of interest is now shown in pigeon racing and the homing instinct of pigeons, and every military nation has carefully-trained pigeons in its Army equipment. It has been noted that pigeons often fail to reach their destination whilst big storms are in progress, and Dr. Tressider, a great authority on these birds, has come to the conclusion that pigeons cannot be relied upon to home in cyclonic weather. He cannot explain the reason, but there is no doubt that some of the big races that have taken place in heavy gales have been most disastrous, and caused the loss of great numbers of valuable birds.

So far as experiments have gone the hopes of those who are attempting the crossing of zebras with donkeys and ponies appear to stand a fair enough chance of being realised. We may anticipate success here on the Chenab paddock, but trust private breeders in other parts of the country will not neglect the business. Runs or ranches are well nigh out of the question in India for obvious reasons, so the grazing grounds devoted to the zebrule will have to be pretty strictly patrolled, or some weak-sighted shikari may perchance mistake the striped equine for a striped feline. Twelve hands appears to be the maximum average height of the zebra stallion or mare, but with judicious selection the third generation should attain the required 14.

Usually fishermen are anxious to get a bite, but no Nova Scotia fisherman is anxious to get a bite from a dogfish, says the Ottawa Star. In August their bite is particularly virulent. Many dogfish go mad in August and bite each other. The thought of a mad dogfish attacked with hydrophobia and encompassed by the dreaded element from which there is no escape, is one to draw tears from the hardest eyes. Clarence drowned in his favourite Malmsey is not a circumstance to it. Fishermen who have been bitten by mad dogfish in August have been known to shun water as a beverage ever afterwards.

The members of the Calcutta Clay Bird Club have a sweep shoot on next Sunday at Messrs. Lyon and Lyon's range.

Ram Jus is an up-country jemadar who has evidently been having rather a troublous time lately. We are led to this observation by the perusal of the following letter which he wrote last week to his employer:—

To Manager—

SIR,—I have the honor to report as follows:—

1. Ram Saroop peon had a son; he therefore craving favor for 10 days' leave and Rs. 10 advance pay.

2. Plowmen is clamorus for khurcha, but I am paying nothing. Plowings going on since 3 days.

3. Three cartmen have taken their way homeward. I cannot say why.

4. All your survants fighting for mangos and drunk last night, Sulloo Khansama drinking your uskey and smoking ceekarate; Jugoo syce and Ramdhun (Dhoby) also suffering, i.e., from drunk, all together beat dhoby's big wife with lahdis (sticks), she was telling him abuse.

5. Ticks are thrusting in the flesh of fowl. Ten Pigeons son's died yesterday. Nobody going near big dog Jhabra. He is dam! (?)

All other works is going on well.—

Yours sincerely, RAM JUS.

The results of the Tollygunge Club Gymkhana held yesterday reached us just as we were going to press: we give details in our Turf columns and reserve comments till next issue.

Athletic Notes.

THE annual general meeting of the Indian Football Association was held at the C. V. R. Headquarters, Calcutta, on Friday evening, the 17th instant, Mr. J. G. Greig presiding. The annual report was presented and passed, and the meeting proceeded to the election of the Council for the ensuing season, the following being elected:—President—H. H. Sir Andrew Fraser; Members—Messrs. H. S. Ashton (C. F. C.), M. Remfry (Y. M. C. A.), J. Greig (D. F. C.), A. Mathieson (Rangers), S. Phelps (D. F. C.), K. C. Mitter (Sova Bazaar), and M. Ganguli (National Association), and one member each from the King's Own Regiment, West Ridings, and 79th R. G. A., to be elected hereafter. Mr. N. G. Pritchard expressed his willingness to continue the Honorary Secretaryship, in which he will be assisted by Mr. E. E. Rope. A proposal was then put before the meeting by Mr. Pritchard for the fixing of specific dates for each match played in the first and second rounds of competitions under I. F. A. rules. This was seconded by Mr. Greig, and carried. No further business was transacted, and the meeting terminated with the customary vote of thanks to the chair.

Among the results of the more important English cricket fixtures last week are the following :—On the 15th instant Notts defeated Middlesex by an innings and 20 runs: Essex beat Surrey by an innings and 196 runs: Worcester beat Oxford University by an innings and 93 runs: Cambridge beat London County by 139 runs: Derbyshire was defeated by Leicestershire by six wickets: the matches between Warwickshire and Lancashire, Sussex and Yorkshire, Gloucester and South Africans were all drawn.

In a match at Sheffield on Saturday, the 28th ultimo, in the Norton and District League, a player named Ash, for Mill-houses, against Totley United, secured six wickets for thirteen runs in a total of seventy. The phenomenal feature of his bowling lay in the fact that twice during the innings he did the "hat trick," taking his wickets with the first three balls sent down and the last three.

In a case before the American courts a novel question affecting golfers is involved. Thomas O'Hagan, a former caddie belonging to the Nyack (N. Y.) County Club, is, by his guardian, suing the Club to recover 10,000 dollars damages for the loss of an eye while acting as caddie at the Club. The question is whether golf clubs are liable for injuries sustained by caddies while performing their duties, a point upon which the courts have not yet passed judgment.

Captain Greig has returned to India, and has proved that he has lost none of his old form with the bat and ball. In the XI vs. XX match at Poona last week, he put up 38 in excellent style and retired. He also took five wickets.

On Monday, the 30th ultimo, at the Oval, G. L. Jessop batted practically with one hand for Gloucestershire vs. Surrey, because the little finger of his left hand had been splintered by a ball from B. J. T. Bosanquet at Lord's in the previous week. He was able to rest the left hand on the bat until the moment of striking, when he took it away. One of his hits was a drive to the boundary off Smith, and it is hardly necessary to say that the stroke was loudly applauded, for to the ordinary spectator it naturally seems a very remarkable feat to make a good drive with one hand.

But most cricketers have at some time or other had to bat with one hand, and they know well enough that there is nothing extraordinary in making quite a big drive when thus handicapped. Several men have played a fine game in first-class cricket, with only one hand available, and either Lord Harris or Mr. A. N. Hornby could speak from experience of what can be done in this way by a determined man. There used to be a well-known player in Surrey—a master at Cranleigh School, named Casswell—who having lost his left arm, was not disposed to give up cricket. He was known far and wide in the county, and often played an innings of over a hundred. He could hit as hard as most men, and any medium-paced bowler who thought he could dispense with an outfield when Casswell was at the wicket, had very soon to alter his opinion.

The expression "eight," which is so often used to signify the crew of a racing boat, is, it must be confessed, the measure which too many people take of the position of the coxswain. They treat him as non-existent, and some of the towpath have been even heard to express surprise that he should be counted as one of the crew. The truth is that the men who sit in the stern of racing boats have, in some respects, the worst position in the boat. They have to sit perfectly still, their eyes have to be everywhere; they have to exercise consummate judgment often at a moment's notice, and to decide on a course of action which may win or lose the race. To the thoroughly trained oarsmen the work of the race is more or less mechanical; to the coxswain the unforeseen may present itself at any moment, and in the most embarassing circumstances. On a cold day he has a good deal to put up with. He is well wrapped up, it is true, but he has to remember that every extra ounce that he puts on will have to be pulled by the oarsmen over four-and-a-quarter miles, and he has to strike a nice balance between being too heavy and being frozen. Some coxswains have been known to experience a wretched time, sitting in ice-cold water without even the consolation of an oar to pull at or a stretcher to kick against. On the whole, the coxswain deserves something better than to be blamed when things go wrong and ignored when all is well.

The annual race between crews representing H. M. S. Worcester (Thames) and H. M. S. Conway (Mersey), the well-known cadet vessels, was decided on Tuesday, the 31st ultimo, on the Thames at Greenhithe, last year's race having been at Liverpool. As usual, they rowed in six-oared light boats, and the event created a good deal of interest amongst the friends of the cadets and in naval circles generally. The course was from a point off Greenhithe to the Worcester, and Mr. C. W. Kent, the old Oxonian and Leander oarsman, officiated as starter and umpire. The visitors won the toss and selected the Essex side. There was little in the station, but their superiority was marked throughout. In the first minute, the Conway boys assumed the lead, rowing nearly thirty strokes. At the end of a mile they led by fifteen lengths, and passing the Arethusa had the race at their mercy apparently, bar accidents. Then to the surprise of those following, the Worcester spurted. The effort, however, proved unavailing, as the leaders settled down for a fine finish, and, rowing well and cleanly together, repeated last year's win very easily indeed.

Preparations for Henley were going on apace when the last English mail left. The Leander B. C. have already started work with the following "Grand" Eight :—W. H. Chapman (bow), F. S. Kelly, Johnstone, P. H. Thomas, C. W. H. Taylor, F. J. Escombe, A. Graham, and R. H. Nelson (stroke), with G. S. Maglagan (cox).

Messrs. Goldie and Taylor will go for the "Goblets," and F. S. Kelly for the "Diamonds," while the "Stewards" Four are seated thus :—W. H. Chapman (bow), C. W. H. Taylor, F. C. Escombe, F. S. Kelly (stroke and steers).

The London R. C. crews are now in serious work. The provisional "Grand" Eight is composed as follows:—E. Hay-Currie (bow), G. T. Western, E. P. Bryant, W. W. Field, J. W. Knight, R. D. Warren, F. Souttar, G. R. Davie (stroke), but, of course, "Captain" Lowe has yet to be included. The "Stewards" Four will probably be Messrs. Bryant, Western, Knight and Western; and the "Thames" Eight, P. A. Sergeant (bow), F. A. G. Medd (the old Calcutta Rowing Club man), L. B. Cane, M. C. M. Legatt, H. E. Steatus, A. M. Walker, J. Compton, P. Dewar (stroke).

The Kingston R. C. Senior Eight is composed of E. O. Capon, H. M. S. Carpenter, H. G. M. Young, T. P. Scott-Monrieff, H. Prideaux, R. Willis, W. H. Watney, E. W. Greene (stroke), R. W. Spooner (cox). The second eight is manned by B. J. Easton, J. F. Greene, D. H. Whitmore, K. Bremner, R. Woollatt, C. Pimm, J. N. Horsfield, and V. Allcard (stroke); and the Junior Eight by S. Nops, W. Keith, T. Mackie, A. T. Chappell, A. N. Peckham, A. W. Pimm, A. P. Trengrouse, C. H. Bretherton (stroke), Guy Monro (cox).

An Hellas R. C. (Berlin) Four for the "Stewards, seated thus: (bow) Sarre, Wonhter, Schwartz, A. J. Muellier stroke) will probably enter this year. It all depends upon how they shape at the Berlin and Hamburg meetings.

Messrs. H. T. Blackstaffe and D. Fitte, Vesta R. C., have definitely decided not to row for the "Goblets" this year, but it is quite possible that the ex-amateur champion and J. J. Beresford, of the Kensington R. C., may be seen out in the event.

A meeting was held on the 26th ultimo at Newhaven, Connecticut, at which the representatives of Harvard and Yale agreed to accept the Oxford and Cambridge challenge for an athletic meeting.

This decision was reached within six hours of the receipt of the challenge. The number of events will probably be eleven.

Harvard and Yale athletes, owing to this challenge, will not take part in the competitions at St. Louis, except as individuals.

One of the best golf stories perpetrated in recent times is just now running through the papers. It is to the effect that an American has invented a golf ball that squeaks when lost. No wonder that this is characterised as one of the most astounding inventions of the century. It is a pity that the yarn cannot be true. Since the Yankees have doubled the price of golf balls, the anxiety about losing one and the time devoted to searching for a lost sphere have also been doubled, to the serious detriment of the pleasure of the game. Truth has a poemlet on "the latest":—

A ball that squeaks? If that be so,
There very well might be
A ball that gives a knowing wink
When missed upon the "tee";
Or one that, when the least result
Rewards the greatest strain,
Through the black dent the cleek has made,
Pipes softly, "Topped again!"

Our Bangalore correspondent writes.—It is really very sporting of the racing professionals, of whom Tom Ferguson is the moving spirit, to be going in for cricket as vigorously as they are doing, and they certainly deserve to beat the owners in the match which will probably be played at the close of the racing season. They have purchased a regular fit-out, including net, bats, etc., and have played two matches, winning against the Bowring Institute and losing against the Carabinier Sergeants. In the latter match however, though they could only muster 44 against 87 in the first innings, they knocked up 124 for 7 wickets at the second attempt, and declaring had got two of their opponents' wickets for 11 when the ground was requisitioned for football. Several of the jockeys and trainers are quite useful all-round cricketers.

We regret to learn of two boating accidents, one of them attended by loss of life, that occurred during the yacht racing at Naini Tal on the 15th instant. The Spray, in the yacht race, upset, immersing the skipper, Archdeacon Cockin, and the crew, who were rescued. In the afternoon a row boat upset: Sergeant-Instructor Aunce reached the shore, but Mr. Barling, undertaker, was drowned within a few yards of the shore. Numbers of natives were present, but rendered no assistance. Captain Dundas succeeded in bringing the boat and body to shore. The deceased was formerly a Drum-Major of the Yorkshire Regiment, and leaves a widow.

In the opinion of Mr. W. H. Eyre, the famous Thames R. C. veteran, as expressed in a letter to the Field, fixed-seat rowing and training for juniors is not necessary for high excellence later on. Such an opinion from such an authority is worthy of serious thought, of course, but he will not find many to agree with him, we fancy. In the course of this epistle he says:—

"The sliding seat was first used by amateurs in England at the Henley of 1872 by the crews of London and Thames, who wa ked off with all the open eight and four-oared prizes of that regatta, and the new style was then generally adopted. Of course, for the next few years the senior crews of each club were largely manned by oarsmen who had first raced on fixed seats, but a boat racing generation only extends to four or five years, as a rule, and very soon, certainly well before 1880, the mass of metropolitan competitors at regattas had only been taught racing on sliding seats, for (from your point of view, strange to say) the present day notion of the value of fixed seat racing, did not commend itself to the then rulers of London and Thames Clubs—Mr. F. S. Gulston, Mr. W. L. Slater, Mr. J. E. Catty, and Mr. J. Hastie—who themselves had had practical experience of both methods. Their idea was that the two modes of applying skilful force to the oar are so different in essentials that to keep men on fixed seats after they have learned the earliest rudiments (which everyone must, of course, first learn in a fixed seat skiff) was sheer waste of time. On the other hand, I believe, the University authorities from the beginning have kept their lower division crews on fixed seats, so that, at the Henley Regattas between about 1878, or let us say 1880 and 1891, when Leander first became fairly established as the club to which all University oarsmen ought to bear allegiance, the metropolitans, who had learned on the Thames, were the especial representatives of exclusive sliding seat training. But that is the very period when the metropolitans did best as against the Universities, London winning the Grand in 1881, 1883, 1884, and 1890, and Thames in 1888 and 1889. Their successes in other races were equally marked, and most assuredly the junior form of London and Thames during that time was exceptionally good, and decidedly superior to that of the present time, as exemplified by University as well as metropolitan oarsmen. True there was a sprinkling of University men, (not all Blues) in Thames and London crews, but only a sprinkling, and I do not think many people would say that the metropolitan style of these days was leavened by them; indeed, it was rather the other way. The fact is that the men available, quite fortuitously, happened during those years to be exceptionaly strong and keen, while the coaching was exceptionally good. But no crews were ever taken out on fixed seats, and all club races, even for the lowest degree of juniors, were rowed on slides. Yet look at the record. I have tresspassed too much on your space already, but I could give you a long list of Putney-taught oarsman who gained the highest aquatic honours, but who never rowed on fixed seats in an outrigger. The reasons for the recent non-success of tideway men at Henley are, I think, plain enough, but in my opinion are quite other than the neglect of fixed-seat rowing, and it is really hard for me to understand how anyone who remembers the metropolitan form of the eighties can succumb to such a singular delusion. I should like to add that, as one who had four years' racing on fixed seats (including two Henleys, 1870-71) and very well remembers the best style of those days (that of Gulston, Darbishire, J. H. D. Goldie, etc.), I am inclined to think that it will not be easy to find coaches on the tideway competent to teach it to the rising generation. Certainly what I have recently seen of metropolitan fixed-seat rowing bears but small resemblance to the way it was done "lang syne."

At the Calcutta Swimming Baths last Saturday afternoon, that very promising swimmer, Mr. A. B. Siddons, earned the silver time medal offered by the Club. He swam the 100 yards in 1min. 18secs., which is well inside the limit, indeed it is gold medal time, and we make no doubt that later on in the season, when Mr. Siddons tries for the gold medal, he will easily secure the honour of having his name inscribed on the board below those of Messrs. H. P. Henderson and G. Brown.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Friday, 3rd June 1904.

SATURDAY saw publication of the Report of the Royal Commission which was appointed in April of last year to consider the Militia and Volunteers. The report is a very long one and covers a great deal of ground : but in effect (I had written "for practical purposes," but withdra w the words for obvious reasons) the whole gist of the two fat blue-books lies in the following sentence :—"A home defence army capable, in the absence of the whole or the greater portion of the regular forces, of protecting this country against invasion can be raised and maintained only on the principle that it is the duty of every citizen of military age and sound physique to be trained for the national defence, and to take part in it should emergency arise." That is the opinion of the majority. Sir Ralph Knox, Colonels Salter Thwaite and Dalmahoy do not approve of compulsory service. The first named enunciates the apparently sound principle that "the real and only defence of an Island power is its fleet:" the two latter officers do not sign the report because they think it does not deal definitely with the problems submitted to the Commission, and because they do not think any form of compulsory service necessary or advisable.

The fact is the Commissioners had an uncommonly difficult matter to deal with and were heavily handicapped from the outset. They were asked to say what changes, if any, were necessary to make the auxiliary forces efficient and adequate. "Efficient and Adequate," said the Commissioners, "of course : but efficient and adequate for what purposes ?" They did not feel justified in answering their own question, so they went to the Committee of Defence and knocked at the door. The Committee of Defence was in no hurry to answer, but at last it came and asked what was wanted. "What do you want these auxiliary forces for ?" asked the Commissioners. "Oh, Home Defence we suppose," says the C. of D. "Yes, Home Defence," and it hurriedly shuts the door. "But against what ?" shout the Commissioners. "Invasion," says a muffled voice through the keyhole. "But what scale of invasion ?" cried the poor Commissioners. "How in the world should we know," says the Committee of Defence happily. "Go and ask the War Office—you know the War Office ? It is being abolished, we think, but you might find somebody there who hasn't been abolished ; go to the Intelligence Branch ; fourth floor front in St. James's Square." So the Commissioners went. The War Office turned the question over in its mind and was of opinion that the strength of the force which could be landed in this country was a point on which there was some diversity of opinion : it depended a good deal on the Navy ; but some authorities held that the Navy "could guarantee complete protection of the United Kingdom against the danger of invasion by any larger force than from 1,000 to 5,000 men.

"Come !" says the Commission, "this is something to go on at any rate. We've got to ascertain if, and how many, Militia and Volunteers could repel an invasion of at most 5,000 men if so large a force shipped through our fleet and landed on—Sh, isn't there somebody at the door ?" It was the Defence Committee. "So you've got a statement from the War Office," it said. "Well, I'm not going to say anything against the War Office, capital institution the War Office, though Lord Esher has hustled it a bit lately : but I say—you mustn't take what the War Office says as Authoritative, you know : that would never do. The Admiralty put them up to that 5,000 men limit : sort of thing they do at the Admiralty : mere naval swagger you know." The Commissioners looked at one another, and they said, "Well, it did strike us a bit below the mark because something was said about a home force of 330,000 men, of whom four-fifths were to be militia yeomanry and volunteers : and it seemed that necessity for a force of 264,000 auxiliaries pointed to something more serious than invasion by 5,000 men." The Committee of Defence did not know anything about that : it had only come round to say that anything the War Office said must not be considered Authoritative. Then it left. "What are we to do ?" the Commissioners asked one another : and being sensible men they decided to go straight to the Admiralty and put a few direct questions. So they drew up a series of six questions with the greatest care not to hurt the Admiralty feelings, asking what the Navy could do ; and sent for the Director of Naval Intelligence to answer them. The Admiralty could not stand that : the paper contained such questions as "To what extent can the Navy be relied upon to protect the country against invasion ?" or "Is it possible that either from (a) stress of weather, (b) defeat in action, or (c) temporary absence from any cause, the protection which the Navy would naturally give, might be temporarily suspended ?" "You mustn't go near those prying people," the Admiralty said to its Director of Naval Intelligence, "its downright impertinence. We will write to these fellows officially and tell them to go to the—Chairman of the Committee of the Imperial Defence." So it did. "Hullo !" said the Committee of Defence genially. "Here you are again ! So they wouldn't give you any information at the Admiralty, wouldn't they ? Well, we can't make them do it, you know. Let see ; you were appointed to do something in connection with auxiliary forces weren't you ?" The Commissioners refreshed the Committee of Defence's memory in a polite note (dated 26th May) and the Committee of Defence read it and thought over it and wrote letters and minutes about it until the 5th August. Then it wrote to the Commissioners and told them that if they took 100,000 Militia and 200,000 Volunteers as an effective force, they could go on that basis ; but "these figures do not necessarily represent those which the Committee of Imperial Defence will eventually adopt, and they are only put forward as a basis from which the Royal Commission may prosecute their inquries." And on that basis the Royal Commission prosecuted its inquiries and comes to the conclusion that we must have compulsory service. But was ever Royal Commission told with franker cynicism that it was only appointed as a demonstration of political party activity ?

He is sanguine who looks for tangible results from a Royal Commission Report, and perhaps it is making a mountain out of a molehill to have dealt at such length with the labours of the Duke of Norfolk and his colleagues whose painstaking endeavours to come at the truth concerning a most important subject were so strangely baulked by the authorities. Needless to say the Government won't hear of compulsory service in any shape or form : so much Mr. Arnold Forster said yesterday in reply to a question. Mr. Arnold Foster hopes that "much will come of the Commission's Report;" if anything comes of it, the results will have been reached in spite of the Imperial Committee of Defence and the Admiralty.

That is an instructive circular which the Russian Minister of Public Instruction has issued for use in schools. Anxious that the youth of Russia shall be enlightened as to the true facts concerning the genesis of the war, this circular explains that Russia's "periphery" or colonial empire had been gained (by the sword when necessity obliged) by measures kindly and fraternal in the Christian sense : contrasting favourably with the relations maintained by the nations of Western Europe—England in India for instance. Russian colonisation is carried out in the interests of the peasantry : that of Western Europe in the interests of the capitalist—England in the Transvaal for instance. Perhaps the most noteworthy statement in this remarkable document is that the "United States and England thrust forward as an opponent of Russia, Japan, a nation hostile and dangerous to themselves, their competitor in industry and in sea-going commerce." America and Britain did this, it appears, to weaken both Russia and Japan. It is the first time a Russian Government Department has voiced this idea.

It could be wished that our American cousins were a shade less "smart." A matter which must create a disagreeable impression has been bruited about for long past among men who affect the Bisley meetings, but it has only just been officially made known. The conditions of the Palma Trophy last year included one to the effect that competing teams should use the military rifle of their respective countries. The United States team won it and now it is admitted that they did not use the regulation United States military rifle, but one with a special barrel which the War Office in Washington had not adopted. To aggravate matters, the President of the United States National Rifle Association admits that the team took to England regulation rifles, with instructions to discard the non-regulation rifles if protest against the latter was made. Nobody supposed it necessary to ask our guests if their weapons fulfilled the published conditions, so no protest was made. It is stated that no British team will enter for the Palma Trophy to be shot for in America this summer.

"Who's Who," which appeared at the Savoy on Saturday, is not a very inspiriting farce : it was disappointing partly because we associate the Savoy with all that is best in light opera : but at any theatre its "knock about" character would be rather depressing. The humour consists largely of people hiding themselves or others in a large trunk : and a very little of the sport goes a long way. Why Inspector Mustel (Mr. Laurence Caird) should have supposed Mr. Fortescue, M. P., (Mr. E. Dagnall) had been murdered, when he had only run down to Bexhill to see a lady, is not very clear : nor was there any evidence strong enough even for a stage detective to affix suspicion on Harold Fortescue (Mr. Arthur Longley). Anyhow, the Inspector did suspect Harold who for some unearthly reason elected to deliver a dog-box shaped like a trunk at Lady Gerrard's house at 6 in the morning. The trunk was for Lady Gerrard (Miss Fannie Ward) to convey her dog down to Bexhill in, but while Harold is explaining he heard Sir Charles coming and hastily hides in the box, in which he travels down to Bexhill. At the Grand Hotel, Bexhill, he is let out by Slater the porter, and the porter alarmed at the approach of the manager, gets in and is shut in. Fortescue, in the porter's apron, mistakes the manager for a visitor and tells him there are no spare rooms : wherefore he is arrested for a burglar. Old Fortescue is in the hotel, and for reasons of his own gives everybo ly a different account of himself and the suspicions of the local police are aroused. Enter Baxter, of the Bexhill Police (Mr. Allen Thomas) hot on the scent of the supposed murderer of old Fortescue: he finds Slater in the suspicious trunk and cries, "Arrest everybody." This disposes of five of the principal characters and down comes the curtain. In the third act old Fortescue is found in that nif—I beg pardon—in that trunk with an asinine explanation : but affairs have got so mixed now we really don't know where we are. The thing has its points, but is sadly incoherent ; possibly the fault of the adapter who did it into English from the French original.

Dungeons, knives, poison, passion and pistols : of such is Miss Margaret Young's drama in a prologue and three acts entitled "The Edge of the Storm," which burst upon the world at the Duke of York's on Wednesday night. The storm itself is in the wings or thereabout : some of it was in the gallery, rather to my surprise, for so much blood and mystery was, I thought, acceptable to the gods. There are 16 named characters, and "Magyars, sepoys, English, French, and native clerks, aygahs servants, etc., galore (vide programme). We begin (prologue) in Hungary in 1846 : and in the depths of a castle dungeon hear of a plot to kidnap Metternich : by and bye ferocious Magyars drag in a gentleman who has apparently been caught looting a second-hand clothes shop and has put on all the cloaks he could find. Evidence of the prisoner's iniquities invited, witnesses step forward one after another and, taking for granted that the gentlemen in cloaks is Metternich, tell appalling stories of his crimes. The gentleman in cloaks stands silent and unmoved until Leta, Istvan's daughter (Miss Gertrude Elliot), sees his eyes and says she shall Never forget those eyes : then the cloaks shake and quiver, but whether because the wearer reciprocates this love at short sight or because this promises more entertaining mystery we do not yet know. It turns out that the cloaked party is a young Britisher Poulett by name (Mr. Forbes Robertson) who met Metternich awhile back and changed clothes with him. No Matterrr ! he shall die at daaawn ! Istvan, the Magyar leader (Mr. G. S. Titheradge) has him tied to a post, and to await his doom and in the dead of night Leta naturally turns up with the family carving knife, to cut his bonds and soliloquy and bid him follow her. Istvan evidently had an eye on Miss Leta's goings-on for he comes on in time to get stabbed in the back. Curtain on Ferenz, nephew of Istvan, administering oath, fine and full flavoured, to Leta to avenge her papa. So much for the prologue, which measured by melodramatic standards, appeared to me much the best part of the whole play.

Act I shows us Jim Poulett's house at Comarlapatan somewhere in India, nine years later—Mutiny epoch. Poulett seems to have settled things for the Hungarians and seems to be regarded as the potential saviour of our Eastern Empire if he will only take the trouble : meantime he has his hands full enough to keep his own skin, and how he would have succeeded but for that opportune boy of his, Mootoosawmy, is more than I can tell. Mootoosawmy represents all that is most useful in, and everything that is expected of, the Faithful Servant. Leta, Wilma (Miss Tita Brand) and Ferenz have been hunting Poulett these nine years and have found him at last : but Mootoo is there too. Would Ferenz stab Poulett ; enter Mootoo with cheroots. Would Wilma poison his coffee ; enter Mootoo to change cups. Priceless Mootoo ! Eventually Wilma and Ferenz plot to leave Leta to marry Poulett and make her keep her oath after. We gathered that Leta had had a "stroke" of some kind, and the painful demise of her father has been wiped out of her mind. Poulett, ignorant that he had killed his man that night, contrives to wipe it in again by a timely disquisition on the abstract propriety of using knives on one's enemies—it struck me as a remarkably appropriate topic to discuss on one's honeymoon. Leta remembers all. Forgives. Re-enter Ferenz from heaven knows where: fires two shots at Poulett and kills Leta. Ferenz gets killed in the Mutiny, mercifully, or there might have been a fourth act. A vapid play.

I suppose the Temple Flower Show, as one of the functions of the season, ought to have been noticed in an earlier paragraph. Wednesday was a miserably gloomy day—the Derby was run in a thunderstorm—but I never saw a bigger or smarter crowd than filled the tents. The King and Queen paid an early visit to the show before the public was admitted. The Charing Cross Hospital Fancy Dress Ball, at the Albert Hall, was a great success: the Alake of Abeokuta was there: but he is everywhere: and enjoys everything like a schoolboy.

It would be too early to say that Madame Magdeleine is making a sensation, but given a fair chance I shall be surprised if she does not attract a great deal of notice. The lady gave a seance, semi-private, at the Sunday Concert Club's Meeting at the Grafton Gallery on Sunday. She is a sort of dancing Trilby. With no particular taste for music, she exhibits when hypnotised an extraordinary sensitiveness to musical sounds. Being hypnotised, a violinist made her dance, walk the tight rope (apparently), swim, gesticulate in all kinds of ways to which one might attach meanings: and her expression varied according to the music: she was in raptures, devout, in agonies of pain and melancholy by turns—and never a word all the time save when she was in pain and then the audience—one member at least of it—suffered as much as she did. It was the weirdest and most eerie performance you could imagine: her dancing was singularly graceful.

TWO LIONS OF MAUNGU.

THE belief appears to obtain in some quarters that the African lion, though bolder and noisier than the tiger, is not as powerful an animal. I have not had a very vast experience of tigers but know something of what a lion can do in the way of strength and I lean to the opinion that if not exactly stronger, the lion is just as strong as the tiger. However, it is a matter that can easily be considered in the light of facts, and in this view I chronicle the following occurrence in British East Africa. I have, by the way, heard that there was a fight between a Somali lion and a tiger in India, some years ago—in 1898 I think—one of the organisers of the deadly duel being Colonel Tweedie of shikar fame. In this fight I was told both animals perished, the tiger dying first. Another feature of the conflict was that the tiger appeared to be more agile and the wounds it inflicted on its opponent were more ghastly. On the other hand, every blow the lion caught the tiger, he sent the latter rolling over half stunned. Whether all this be true or only the plotting of some fevered brain I cannot tell; but I have treasured the story, and would have given my ears to see the fight. If there is any truth in it, and any of your readers can give further details of the fight, I for one shall be deeply indebted.

Some 83 miles from Mombassa, the port of British East Africa, is a station called Maungu. The station is nearly in the centre of the Taru Desert, the same desert being so called rather from the fact of there being great scarcity of water therein, than an abundance of sand. The station was simply a railway shed of planks and corrugated iron and no more. Herein dwelt a Bengalee station master—a true descendant of Shivaji, hailing from our own fragrant metropolis. Perchance the purlieus of Lower Chitpore Road or the intricacies of Hurri Mohun Bysack's Lane had once known the flavour of his footsteps. Then one day the buzzing bustie knew him no more and here we find him much "gobrified" but sleek withal.

Almost opposite the station was a Permanent-way Inspector's hut of wattle and daub, covered over with a green tent. That hut had memories for me, for it was there while on a visit to the worthy Permanent-way Inspector that I first heard the roar of a lion. So close was it and so terrifying that I sat up on my cot and sweated cold. It was in the neighbourhood of this hut that I first got acquainted with the beautiful Impala antelope and saw the huge vulture-headed guinea fowl and the snow white bird of the same genus. The country round was covered with thick brushwood and occasionally one could meet a tree standing out stiffly from its mean surroundings. The Grand Trunk Road, or to call it fairly, the caravan track, wound through the scrub not far from the hut.

One day along this track toiled a soulless and dispirited caravan of half-a-dozen donkeys, well laden, two Indian contractors walking ahead and an escort of Indian coolies and Swahillies armed with obsolete sniders. The sight of the hut seemed welcome enough to them and they hurried on urging the unfortunate little donkeys into a draggling shufile. It was evident that they were coming to stay, for the night at least, for they pulled up near the hut and at once set about making themselves comfortable. The headman enquired if there were lions about, and getting a reply in the affirmative, gave orders for a boma or stockade to be built. In due time this was done and a fairly substantial boma of scrub and timber was built about eight feet high. As night came on the donkeys were driven inside and soon fires were lighted and it wanted no lullaby to put the travellers to sleep.

It must have been about midnight when the whole population of Moungu was awakened by the most frightful noise it has ever been the lot of man to hear. The clashing of empty kerosine oil tins and brass vessels, the shouting of men, the braying and stampeding of donkeys and the banging of rifles made the night hideous. Out over the scrub for miles around, through gulleys and ravines, down the glittering railway track and away into the pitchy stillness beyond, swept that horrible din. Then it crept rumbling through the bolted and barred door of the station master's quarters, and the answering shouts, lantern flashes, and the discharge of what was afterwards discovered to be an antediluvian shot gun told of Soshi Bhusan Bhattacharje being alive to the possibilities of anything from petty larceny to mutiny. And above the efforts of humanity rose another sound—a snarling and growling and snapping in the blackness over there which grew fainter and faded into a hoarse sob.

There was no doubt that something or somebody had been carried off from the Indian boma for the noise had originated there. To get lanterns and dash across, rifles in hands, to the boma was the work of a few minutes; but once there it was no easy matter to gain an entrance. Shouting was vain for it only encouraged those in the boma to shout louder. The only thing was to fire into space, and as the express bullet went pinging into the tree tops there came a lull, a brief parley, and the barricade of the boma gate was removed. The interior of the stockade was an appaling sight. Confusion reigned everywhere, the donkeys in their mad stampede had wrought havoc. The tiny tents of the escort lay in ruins, while large rents in the contractors' shouldaree told a tale. Of the half-a-dozen donkeys, but four remained, and there near the spot where they now stood, cowering and trembling like aspens, were two large pools of blood! That the ghastly work was that of lions, there was not a doubt: but were all the men safe? Yes: nobody was missing and only the two donkeys were gone. But where were their carcases? In vain we searched the sides of the boma for an opening; there was none, so that they could not have been dragged through. There was only one other way and that was for the animals to have been carried over the eight foot boma. It was hardly probable you say, and so did we, but nevertheless it was so! Here was an eye witness. He had been roused by the donkeys stampeding and looking up saw a lion and a lioness crouching upon two fallen donkeys. Then of an instant the lion was up and flung his prey over the boma wall, following it immediately. The lioness followed suit and then the man, was borne down by the rushing donkeys and nearly killed. The story was incredible, but the man pointed out the spot where the animals had carried over their victims, and there, sure enough, were drops of blood on the boma wall. I don't believe myself that the donkeys were thrown over, but there was no doubt that they had been carried clean over the eight feet wall, and this with dead-weight donkeys is in itself no mean feat of strength.

For all ostensible purposes my story is told and I have little more to add. The carcase of one donkey was found outside the boma, near the spot where it had been carried over, but the other one had been carried off into the bush and, as was discovered afterwards, devoured.

There was no sleep in camp after these events. The coolies and contractors took to the trees and lived there for two days, or until the valiant Permanent-way Inspector shot the lion over his undevoured kill. And what a rumpus that lioness made over it! She kept out of danger, but for two nights howled and roared and waltzed round the spot where her old man had given up his spirit.

But I am talking of some years ago and I have no doubt she has thrown off her weeds by this time and has settled into the faimly of some other noble whose propensities lead him not donkeywards.

"GHOOMING" FOR BEARS.

SINCE anything savouring of mystery or a cheap method of attracting attention by the meretricious use of strange and bizarre titles is far removed from the intention of the writer, let him make his peace forthwith by declaring that the first word of the above heading is but a very ordinary Hindi word, anglicized, after the manner of the strangely compound verbiage indulged in by us illiterate but practical exiles, into a perhaps more expressive form of speech than is attainable by the use of purer language.

Having assured the reader therefore that "Ghooming" is neither a patent food for captive bears, nor yet a form of searching them out or dealing with these interesting plantigrade quadrupeds in a manner from which he need turn coldly, deeming it to be improper, it may possibly be useful for him to learn that to "ghoom" means to wander round and about—to prowl, in fact—being derived from the verb ghoomna. My shikari prefers to call it, this process, "ghoom-gham," after the alliterative or reiterative methods of the Eastern mind; and I have noticed that he makes especial use of this form of wording whenever the prowling or wandering around partakes of a hopeless and useless nature—gloomy in fact.

I don't think there is anything particularly new about this "ghooming" for bears, nor is it in any way a patent process. It was suggested to me one night when I had been persuaded to perch on the limb of a gular tree and await the approach of certain black bears which were reported to visit the tree nightly for the sake of the ripe red figs then yielded by it so profusely. The moon was at about her full, and the light she shed most brilliant: the night soft and still, when the slightest sound may be clearly heard—an ideal chance for an easy shot at any black Bhalu who might come my way attracted by the long range scent of the gular figs.

My hiding place was not uncomfortable, but as the night rolled on and the "great Bear" revolved slowly round the Pole star it became borne in on me that this was an unprofitable form of amusement, this passive waiting on the capricious wanderings of the earthly prototypes of the great constellation above my head. The position of its "pointers" gave the hour as past midnight. I sat on awhile immersed in further thought. Thus it came to me that why should I too not be a wanderer through the moonlight, a night bird, a beast of prey seeking its quarry through the silent jungle? The chances of meeting with something worth shooting would be multiplied manifold by exchanging my fixed position for one of changeful activity.

I was alone, so had to lower my rifle to the ground by an improvised rope, then descended myself by the aid of the gnarled processes on the trunk of the big fig tree. Just as I put foot to terra firma, some creature rushed off suddenly through the crackling leaves; and, every whit as precipitately, did my involuntary muscles shoot me a full six feet upwards, to cling awhile in safety. However 'twas but a mungoose, or some such insignificant jaiwar. Once more, therefore, I set foot to earth, picked up the rifle, looked right and left, and chose a path which would bring the moon rather behind me. Thus I began to ghoom.

There were no tigers to alarm by casual shooting in that part of the country, so it was permissible to fire at anything one deemed worth the trouble or the practice. The locality was an elevated plateau of considerable size, rejoicing in the name of Mákla, and composed of low undulations, woody terraces, and, below them grassy glades intersected by small jungle and cattle paths. The woods clothing the sides of the winding terraces were fairly thick, and under the moon they loomed dark and mysterious, with here and there a suspicious crackle of leaf or stick. Far away a little Korku village had long since sunk to rest, but some of its wakeful curs bayed the moon at intervals, only adding to the sense of sleep and rest. This sense, however, is only partially correct during a moonlight night in India, for a large number of the wild inhabitants are now not only abroad but extremely busy. The deep hum from a sweet-flowered tree overhead tells one that the bees, who hate the hot sun like any————are hard at work. Nightjars are incessantly tapping out their rapid notes of the love-making season, the owls are abroad, and from a deep glen that lies sheer below the edge of the plateau we are traversing can be heard the staccato note of a watchful sámbar, which has seen something suspicious while wandering in search of food.

The little path leads away along the plateau below the terraced slope of jungle, dipping into a little nala, and seem to continue its course beyond it, over a patch of short dry white grass. On this clear-lit space stand a black object which brings the shikari to a halt. Whatever the creature may be it seems to be listening intently. Perhaps it has seen us! But no! It turns and moves in our direction. Shikar kit of the proper kind is almost invisible at night. As the black shape descends out of sight into the little depression nearer us, we run forward on tip toe, and just as it reappears down we go, lying prone on the ground. The creature approaches. It is a bear, or a pig? Moving slowly onwards it reaches a tiny bush—at which distance we have made up our mind to fire. Turning side-wise the creature lifts its head in the pale light, and seems to be gently scratching its brawny throat against a little twig. It is a huge boar, with grizzled grey chaps and tusks gleaming white, twenty-five yards away. If we can hit this target we should be tolerably certain of a bear under similar circumstances. In the lying position, therefore, on the short sward, the night sight is brought to bear on its forehead. Just at that instant the boar throws up his head and seems to be gazing intently in our direction—but it is too late: there is a long blueish spurt of flame from the heavy cordite rifle, and the thud of the explosion travels reverberating along the line of wooded terraces. Ere its echoes have died away, an intermittent spasmodic kicking is going on close to the right of the bush, where some black object is seen to be stretched out. Still we lie prone. A charging boar by moonlight is not an easy matter to stop! The kicking grows feebler. We rise, and reloading, go slowly forward. As we thought, it is a huge mountain boar, a hoary patriarch bearing testimony to the high feeding of these cool and fertile plateaux. His lower tusks projected 3½ inches from the jaw; there will be quite five to six inches more of ivory embedded in its bony matrix.

And there is the mark of the bullet—just above the eye! With this mountain of flesh we shall make great friends with the Korkus; while with the shot has been gained a sense of confidence that we can bring off a bull's-eye by the light of the moon—otherwise it seems a shameful murder, even although the nearest rideable country be thirty miles away. Poor old boar!

Standing there it seems as though no rude shot had ever been fired: the jungle is as it was, the night birds as wakeful, the st llness unbroken, and just as undisturbed a feeling abroad as before.

The season is late April—not much fruit at this particular season in the jungle—and the mhowa must have ceased dropping its sickly flowers long since. Yet—we remember having noted one or two trees of bare appearance and leafless—a sign that all their flowers have not been shed—as we rode along not far from here the previous day. Perhaps they may still attract the bears. In their direction therefore!—and let the process of "ghooming" be resumed!

Winding round promontory after promontory of dark terraces of woods, the yellow white grass grows long and rank, and the moon, shining down with her peculiar cold stare, exercises a strange influence on the eyesight. Everything seems unreal. Each black rock or fallen tree-trunk appears invested with occult powers of motion, and many are the halts to stare, and peer, and rub our eyes and stare again. The night must be far spent in this noiseless shadowy walk of ours, the feet move mechanically, the brain feels a sleepy stagnation creeping over all—until one realizes the enormous and pleasant difference between this, so leisurely a perambulation in an atmosphere of perfect temperature and translucency and that the disadvantage of a tramp abroad in sweltering glare of an Indian sun.

We fall to picturing the ways and habits of the bears that we seek; how, now many hours since, they must have come clambering uncouthly upwards from the precipice—circle ravines surrounding these pleasant uplands, to emerge on these grassy glades and make for the well-known trees—mother and cubs, male and female, or crusty old he-bear moving along and puffing by his lone. They will be right in the middle of the woods now; but, by and by, they must, when they instinctively become aware of the approach of dawn, cross the open grass once more on their downward homeward way.

Wandering along in this manner it must have been about the hour of two in the morning that we became aware of a distant sound from the dark line of trees to the left. There was not the slightest stirring of the air, all was dead and white and ghostly. We halted—but the slight sound has ceased. Moving onwards once more it sounded again, louder, and faintly rustling; and was now located on the face of the sloping terrace about three hundred yards away—a slow gentle crash—crash of heavy animals wandering about in the dry leaves. Pigs perhaps—bears just as likely. The little path is now deserted for the grass land, and gradually, silently we approach the foot of the bosky slope. Still that steady soft crashing and crackling half-way up hill in the black shadow of big trees. Then we begin to pick our way gently under the woods step by step.

At length the sounds in the carpeting of dead leaves appear to come from under the large mhowa tree now only about thirty yards distant. We cannot get much nearer, for every step we have taken has made some slight rustle in the dead leaves, and each time the invisible eaters of mhowa have stopped their foraging to listen suspiciously. Of what can they be suspicious? Tigers and leopards do not attack bears; man is never abroad in the jungle at this ghostly hour of the night. Perhaps, however, the apparently still air has slowly wafted them a suspicious whiff!

Then the snuffling and stirring recommence. Under the mhowa tree it is dark and dim, but out of its immediate shadow patches of moonlight fall on the thin grass and leaves covering the ground, and after a long silence a greyish patch is seen to emerge and point in our direction. Slowly it is followed by a black but indistinct mass, and the bear, as now we can tell it to be, turns its broadside and stands snuffing discontentedly. Behind it in the shadows there is yet more heavy crunching among the leaves: its companion has evidently found something tasty underneath their covering. Then number one moves a step or two forward, and the moon's rays illuminate the hairy ridge of his back.

There is very little light under the trees, and the white card V. of the night sight seems difficult to find. By moving the rifle muzzle up and down, however, something is seen. It is lowered, raised to what seems the correct level, and for the second time that night out darts the blue flame of cordite. The cracking explosion is followed instantly by an appalling uproar! We "stand by" for developments—and a tree-trunk is a comforting thing in a way. There is a murderous disturbance going on under the mhowa tree, rollings about, crashings of timber, and a most heartrending vociferation in which all the bears of Mákla—and they are not few—seem to be taking part! The very trees above us are crashing and whooping!—it is a colony of langúr monkeys, that disturbed by the terrifying din below them, are cursing and leaping about aloft, black and spectral against the yellow disc of the moon. Suddenly the yelling ceases, but the dry leaves are still being scattered in all directions. There is a "umph-a-umph-a'" heard retreating rapidly; and not long afterwards two dark objects, one of them coughing as it goes, are seen to shoot across an open space in the trees fifty yards away—too quick for a shot.

It would be useless to buoy up the reader with further hopes—a search revealed no defunct bear; there had been but two, and the wounded one—for the time at least—had got away! Wearily we descended the hillside to the grassland, and resumed our way.

At the farthest end of the night's beat, where the little forest road begins its descent to the deep Sipna valley, we halted, and raised the water bottle; and a sandwich was followed by a cheroot. Our late failure with the bears had somewhat damped the spirits and caused a sensation of gloom to pervade the night's wanderings—this was "ghoom-ghám"; and the one redeeming feature of the proceedings was that my shikari-orderly was not here to exasperate still further with his lantern-jawed expression of hopeless resignation. Too old a bird to be cast down even by an unusual run of bad luck, if left to myself, the despairing appearance of the Oriental under defeat never yet failed to exercise the most dangerously homicidal feelings in my breast. But to-night it was different. The cheroot with its glowing eye and soft wreaths of soothing smoke soon wafted all such feelings away, and shortly we sprang up, refreshed. Once more we "ghoomed."

Turning northward this time, it was the eastern portion of the plateau that we faced, rather rougher country than on the side we had lately traversed and where the terraced woods are nearer the edge of the plateau, and the intervening grassland less wide in consequence. A little deep-cut miniature glen took us through dark trees awhile, and we then emerged once more on the flat. Again the eyes became aware of that extraordinary kind of moon-blindness, when the sleeping landscape seemed to shimmer and fade, reappear and fade again, rocks to resemble wandering bears, tree-trunks the chest of some intently watchful tiger or panther. The "pointers" of the "great Bear" now lay below the level of the Pole star, and pointed upward, the lower of the two stars being almost hidden by the line of dark trees. It must therefore have been about an hour before dawn, that mysterious time of night when the most nocturnal of creatures seem to pause awhile and slumber, when even night-birds are silent, and mankind, with all his world, is wrapped in the most intensely death-like sleep, all nature at its very feeblest ebb, her breathing scarcely audible. An intense longing for sleep became almost overpowering in its peremptoriness, a desire to sink down anywhere and curl one's self up without delay. But we are nearing the end of our moonlight prowling now. Not far ahead is the grove of indigo-black trees below the village itself; there is a well there, and wild creatures often seek a drink at the little puddle which is fed by the drainings of the women's waterpots as they visit the well at sundown. One look at the well therefore—after that a short nap till sunrise. And so we push forward on the last of our "ghoom."

Pigs have a certain way of walking—"Sister Mary" walked like that perhaps—deer have another. Members of the family Felis do not when wandering at night pick out the noisiest heaps of dried leaves and tramp heavily therein. It is plainly a bear therefore, that is making, openly and fearlessly, that loud crashing under a very big spreading banyan tree to the left of the open space round the well. There are one or two tussocks of grass beside the little pathway; behind one of these we sink down in a sitting position. Fifty yards away a black thing had just emerged from the banyan tree's shadow.

The black object was the head of a big male bear, and a very peculiar effect the moonlight had as it fell on this one portion of his frame, over the edge of the shading branches.

Gradually the object increased in size, swelled, grew taller, and out into the moonlight waddled the bear himself. His big incurved paws came marching bandy-legged across the bare grass, and his uncouth lurching bulk threw a long black shadow on the yellow ground in front as he advanced steadily.

"Do bears charge at night?"—was a question that, I remember, occurred with lightning speed at that moment.

"Why not!" came the mental reply. "They are not bad at it sometimes during the day are they?"

"Oh lord!" returned my alter ego, or perhaps my Astral self—"Neither they are!"

"But we can't help that"—came some third and innermost voice. "Here is a bear!—hast come to shoot bears?" which last was incontrovertible, accompanied as it was by a mental illustration of my orderly drooping his sad jaw, with the words "ghoom-ghám!" issuing therefrom.

By this time the bear had advanced a few paces and turned slightly to his right. His head now pointed rather to my left than straight towards me; the moment was auspicious. The rifle came up, elbows on knees, the white card rested well in the middle of that black mass. I can remember the extraordinary sensation conveyed by that hairy waddling thing, the short white moonlit grass, black trees, and dead silence. Next moment there was a bang and a blow on my shoulder. The momentary flash had gone, the echoes rolled away into distance,—and a black rock, as it were, lay there motionless; then still sitting in my place, I could see convulsive movement of the head. That too was shortly stilled. . . . . .

Leaving him lying there, I climbed the path up the little terrace-side to the sleeping village: there was an old forest hut hard by, and in its verandah I found my roll of bedding. The old mare was picketted not far away. In a few minutes I was asleep.

Perhaps I had slept half-an-hour when there was a quick thudding of naked heels on hard ground, a clinking of jingling metal, and a graceful upright figure swept by with long quick strides. An upward curving brown arm, the dark silhouette of a big brass waterpot poised aloft, against the luminous Eastern sky where twinkled the morning star, and the figure was gone with its retreating "clink-clank" of barbaric anklets. Then more hurrying feet and clashing ornaments, as bevy on bevy of dusky Rebeccas went swiftly and silently down the path to the well. Scanty the water-supply therein at this season, it was only the early birds among the village damsels who obtained their household utensils fill: therefore their hurry.

Then, as the faint light spread wider and higher behind the distant mountains, and the jungle-cocks began calling loudly in all directions, I turned me over to complete my nap, smiling as I pictured the Korkunis' affright as they discovered what lay that morning in their path to the well.

DHANK.

Fishing.

MAHSEER FISHING IN COLOURED WATER.

WHEN a stream is clearing after having come down in red flood, fly, spoon and spun dead bait are all alike practically useless. Mahseer, however, can still be caught by either a dead bait trickled about slowly on the bottom, or with atta. Atta fishing for Mahseer is rather looked down upon as unsporting slow work. So it is, when this system of angling is confined to burying a large hook in a lump of dough, casting the bait into a still pool, and then sitting down to await a bite.

A far more killing and sporting method of paste fishing is based on the way Grayling are angled for with bait at Home. The paste tackle for Mahseer not exceeding ten pounds, should consist of a three-yard medium thick trout cast, with one smallish eyed hook, and a B B shot bitten on to the line 12 or 15 inches above it. There should be a small float. A ball of cork, the size of a marble, with a hole through the centre for the line to go through, and a bit of quill fitting the hole tightly to keep the float in position is a good and simple arrangement. The float should be so set on the line, that the shot is certain to be on the bottom. As Mahseer bite boldly no great exactitude as to the position is necessary; but the paste and some of the gut above it should always be on the bottom. The best rod is a stiff light cane, or ringol, eleven to thirteen feet or so in length. The eddies in each pool, and also the slow runs should be fished. It is not a good plan to stay long in one place, as if Mahseer are on the feed they usually bite at once. A few small pellets of atta thrown into the eddy while one is fishing, help to attract the attention of any fish which are about.

The time to strike is when the float goes under and away; the moving off of the float being a sign that the Mahseer has the paste in his mouth. A sharp twitch of the wrist is all that is necessary to drive the hook home, if it is, as it should be, fine in the wire, and as sharp as a needle. After a little practice movements of the float caused by the current, are never mistaken for bites. The bite of a fish is altogether sharper and more jerky, than any movement caused by the stream.

The winch should have a light check, and there should be eighty or a hundred yards of fine plaited silk roach line.

The line may be dressed or undressed according to fancy: undressed lines are considerably the cheapest.

It is necessary to have a good deal of line, as sometimes even a five or six pound fish will go clean out of his pool down stream at the first rush, and with the fine tackle above described there is no holding on to him.

For dead bait fishing in coloured water, I use a single hook with some lead wire wound round the shank to give the necessary weight. I pass the baiting needle in at the vent and out at the mouth, and draw the hook well up into the vent till only the point and portion below the bend are visible. A lean bait is better than a fat one. With a fat bait the lower portion of the hook lies so close against the belly, that a Mahseer may easily miss being hooked. The dead bait should be cast into every likely eddy and allowed to work round slowly on the bottom. Wherever a clear stream flows into a coloured river, there are sure to be Mahseer waiting about on the look out for food. In these places they take dead bait on the bottom well. By letting the bait trickle slowly round each eddy, I have taken Mahseer when the water has been quite thick. The fish should be given time to get the bait well into the mouth before the strike is made. The tackle being fine and the single hook almost entirely concealed, Mahseer will be quite unsuspicious, and after taking the bait, will, if slack line is given, proceed to gorge it.

On being hooked the Mahseer usually violently ejects the bait, which runs up the line, and is often so little mauled that it can be used again.

For dead bait fishing as above described I use a stiffish eleven-foot trout rod, with fine dressed silk line.

There is not enough lead in the bait to strain a stiff trout rod, which is quite powerful enough for fish of six or eight pounds.

When water is coloured it is a good thing to take two rods, so that each likely pool can be quickly tried with both atta and dead bait.

In discoloured pools with a clear stream falling into them I have found dead bait far more killing than atta; otherwise it seemed to be quite a matter of chance which method proved more deadly.

FLEUR-DE-LYS.

FISHING AT POONCH.

THE following account of my experiences at Poonch is not brilliant, but it shows the capabilities of the river and also the necessity for previously ascertaining its condition from local sources.

I left Uri, a stage on the Murree route into Kashmir on the 29th of May and set off on foot with my kit on mules. The new mule track is fair, except after rain, when it becomes very heavy in places. But it is a stiff climb of over twenty miles to the top of Haji Pir (8,500 feet) which is the boundary between Kashmir and Poonch territory. The scenery, however, is magnificent.

From Haji Pir is a steep descent to Aliabad where there is a rest-house belonging to the Rajah of Poonch for the use of which permission is necessary. There is no khansamah, but milk, eggs, fowls, wood, etc., are obtainable locally.

Next morning I made an easy start and breakfasted in route at Kahuta, where there is a rest-house similar to the one at Aliabad. Kahuta is somewhat less than halfway. From Kahuta into Poonch is bad going and the Bitarh River has to be forded several times, the depth at this time of year being in places as much as three feet and there is a swift current. Luckily an elephant had very kindly been sent out from Poonch to meet me, so I reached camp in dry clothes.

From Aliabad to Poonch is about 22 miles downhill.

I left Kashmir as it was too early for Mahseer on the Jhelum. Poonch, I was told, was in its prime, though hot. However, the account I was given of enormous fish jostling each other through accommodating eagerness to seize the angler's lure seemed a reasonable enticement even in view of possible cremation.

But on arrival at Poonch I found that the river was much discoloured by snow water and that some sixteen thousand logs had just passed down and were blocking the river at Ser about 8 miles below Poonch and one of the best fishing places.

As the fishing near Poonch itself would naturally recover before places lower down, I determined to remain there and try my luck.

31st May—Morning blank.

1st June—Morning blank; evening six-pounder on a crocodile spinner.

2nd June—Morning blank; evening blank.

3rd June—Morning blank; evening one ¾-pounder on live bait worked with a float.

4th June—Morning blank; evening blank.

5th June—Morning nine pounder; evening two pounder. Both on crocodile spinners.

6th June—Morning blank; Evening forty-five-pounder; length 50", girth 24½" on a dead bait pulled slowly and intermittently along the bottom. Not spun.

7th June—Morning blank.

Total 5 fish, weighing 63¾lbs., all Mahseer.

I fished hard for three hours in the morning and the same in the evening—trying every kind of spinning bait and live bait. Eventually I used a flight consisting of one lip hook and two trebles mounted on Hercules gimp and put on a murral about 6" in length. I let the bait remain perfectly straight so as not to spin. One and a half feet above the bait I had a ¾ oz. barrel lead.

I cast this well out into mid stream and let it swing round until the bait touched the bottom. I then pulled it along the bottom slowly with perceptible pauses and it was during one of these pauses when the dead bait was lying on the bottom that it was taken by the 45-pounder. When the water is in good order the fishing should be magnificent.

The best times would be just before the melting of the snows, after the snows have melted and before and after the logs come down.

As these conditions are local and vary considerably each year—they should be carefully ascertained before embarking on a trip.

At the right time of year a very pleasant month might be spent between Tangrote and Poonch with a certainty of large fish. Tents and stores are required and kit should be so packed as to be adapted to whatever mode of transport is employed, i.e., either coolies or ponies. The former will carry about 60lbs. weight and the latter about two maunds.

Soda water of good quality can be obtained at Poonch.

A pony, or better still a riding mule, is very useful and helps one over the rough and stoney ground that one's morning or evening fishing may have placed between oneself and camp. A good mule is wonderful over boulders and really rough ground, and also through fords up to two feet or so in depth with stoney and uneven bottoms.

BRIDGE QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Would you oblige us by a decision on the following points:—

Four players are playing a rubber of bridge. Three fresh candidates come into the card-room. Do the four players, with the two first arrivals, form a table and has the third candidate a right to cut in.

On the table being incomplete is it a "fresh table" with the three new arrivals having a prior right to enter, and the lowest cut of the four original players having the right to play?

F. E. E.

CHITTAGONG, 1st June 1904.

[The four original players cut to allow the first two arrivals to come in, the seventh candidate cannot play until there is a vacancy, as the table is complete with six. ED.]

Notice.

H. McQuade's Training Stable is now in full swing, preparing many horses and ponies for the coming Mysore and Bangalore Meetings.

This stable is in great form, every meeting records for him four for five wins, this shows that he takes very great interest in the horses or ponies under his charge. His training stable is one of the largest and up-to-date business places in India. Owners of Race Horses should avail themselves of this opportunity as his charge is very moderate and the climate of Bangalore is the place to keep a horse of value.

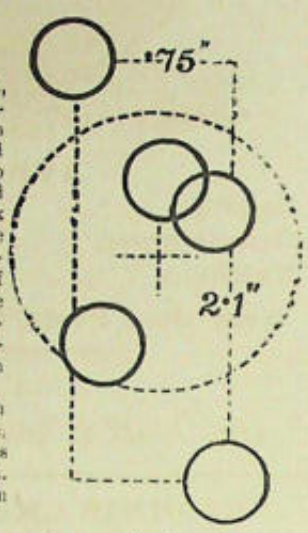
LANG

HIGH-POWER, LOW-PRESSURE.

"SPECIAL No. 2." ·450 Bore.

CORDITE RIFLES



FOR BIG GAME.

Average Velocity 2,171ft. per second.

Striking Energy Equals an 8-bore Firing Black Powder.

The Special No. 2 gives a pressure of about 13 tons compared with 16 to 18 of the original ·450 Cordite Cartridge, consequently there is a greater margin of safety, and the risk of jamming is reduced to a minimum.

"THE FIELD,"
9th May, 1903.

"Messrs. Joseph Lang & Son, Ld., have been very prompt in submitting for our notice a rifle which has been chambered and regulated for firing the new No. 2 nitro cartridge.....A thoroughly sound and well turned out piece of work .....maximum of strength and ease of extraction. Very high velocities.....most marvellous run of uniformity. In fact, it would be extremely difficult to find an instance where equally well authenticated experiments have shown such satisfactory readings."

Five shots at 100 yards with the new No. 2 Nitro Cartridge, fired in a LANG Rifle. Centres of shot holes fell within 2·1 in. by ·75 in. Average deviation from point of mean impact ·7 in.

"THE FIELD." A fine piece of shooting.

"A target made at 100 yards, which is in our possession, contains a group of five shots with a distance of 1in. between the centres of the highest and lowest perforations and $\frac{1}{16}$ths of an inch between those on the extreme right and left."

"EL OBEID."

"With reference to the ·450 Cordite Rifle you made me, I am very pleased with it. It is extremely accurate, and, although heavier than the ordinary ·450 Express taking black powder, the difference in weight is not sufficient to prevent an ordinary European carrying it himself all day in a hot climate. For these reasons it is often the only rifle I take with me out shooting, and have killed with it Lion, Koodoo, Waterbuck, Hartebeest, etc."

"H. G. F. S., Captain."

THE TURF.

EPSOM MEETING

THE number of racing enthusiasts who, with a supreme disregard for the elements, find their way to Epsom in all weathers is extraordinarily large; but it would be idle to contend that a soaking wet morning exerts no influence over the attendance. On the 31st ultimo, unfortunately, the rain fell steadily and incessantly from daybreak, and an overwhelming proportion of the regular patrons of the route by road were deterred from undertaking the journey. So, indeed, were many others who race merely for pleasure, and the muster all round showed a marked falling off. The inclement conditions had no terrors for the King, who drove to the stand, accompanied by Prince Christian shortly before the numbers were hoisted for the opening event, and remained an interested spectator almost to the end of the proceedings. The afternoon remained dull and gloomy after the rain had ceased, but some capital sport was witnessed, the display of Sundridge—although he only ran second for the Egmont Plate—being a sterling handicap performance.

THE WOODCOTE STAKES of 930sovs. for two year olds. The last six furlongs of the Derby Course.

(Winner trained by Armstrong.)

BETTING: 11 to 4 agst Extradition, 5 to 1 each Noblesse and The Red Wing II. colt, 7 to 1 Aspendale, 100 to 14 each Donnetta and Otherwise, and 100 to 8 any other (offered.)

Won easily by three lengths from Week End, who took second place inside the distance: two lengths between second and third. Dumbarton Castle was fourth, Red Wing II. colt fifth, Aspendale sixth, Donnetta next, and Extradition last throughout.

There is one day in the year when by general consent Epsom is known as "Epsim" and the glorious, far-stretching Downs as the "Dahns." For Derby Day is recognised as the Cockney Carnival. It is the day when the Cockney sportsman sallies forth to witness the great race of the year, and, possibly, to cheer the favourite to victory. Derby Day of 1904 did not break auspiciously. Rain fell incessantly till twelve o'clock, and then for the first time the sun shed its rays through the leaden mass of cloud. The consequence was that there was an agreeable absence of that pell mell rush for the trains at Victoria which one is accustomed to associate with the great racing festival, and one was able to travel down to Epsom in comfort. A sharp shower was falling as I strolled leisurely across the Downs, and one had need to be careful of one's footing, as the overnight rain had transmuted the usually firm surface of the Downs into a white greasy mud. On my way I passed the familiar knots of tatterdemalion race-card vendors, unwashed and unkempt sellers of pencils; oily-tongued purveyors or some celebrity's guinea specials for "thruppence;" polite blind men with honeyed words of flattery for the good-natured eleemosynary and smothered curses for the hardened Pharisee; legless and armless mendicants with less conscience than limbs, et hoc genus omne. Within the shadow of the grand stand I overtook picturesque begging gipsy women with borrowed babies and "matriarchal" harologists without any clients. In the public enclosure were garrulous tipsters, smelling of the mews, who were reiterating the old fairy story, "Buy my tip for the Derby and you'll be riding in your carriage to-morrow" But somehow or other no one seemed to be at all engaged by the prospect or else the oft-repeated "gag" has lost its convincing flavour Between twelve and one the people swarmed over the hill like vagrant bees returning to the hive. The traffic along the main road leading to the town was tremendous. There were not so many coster barrows as usual; probably the old-time coster has risen in the world and comes down by coach, while the new breed of coster possibly considers the barrow an undignified means of locomotion for Derby Day. Where also, are the feathers and "pearlies" with which we used to be dazzled? I do not remember seeing a single purple feather or an eruption of pearl buttons. This is a decadent age.

But for the international flavour imparted to the great contest by the presence of the French champion, Gouvernant, this year's Derby would have been one of the tamest on record, the best of our own representatives being admittedly much inferior to the crack filly, Pretty Polly, who was unhappily not entered for the Blue Riband. As it was, however, patriotism and partisanship ran high, and feverish anxiety as to the destination of our most conveted prize attracted a huge concourse to the Surrey slopes in spite of the damp and unpromising outlook. Unfortunately, rain had fallen steadily during the night, and the morning could have hardly been more forbidding, widespread disappointment being caused thereby. On the Hill, where the coaches and other vehicles mostly congregate, there were vacant spaces, and the general attendance could not fail to be below the average for a Derby Day, though the enclosures were thronged. A salvo of cheers greeted the arrival of the King (who was accompanied by the Prince of Wales and Prince Christian) shortly before the first race, but regret was expressed at the absence of the Queen and Princess of Wales. No sooner had His Majesty taken up his position on the stand than the sun peeped through the clouds, but a terrific thunderstorm broke over the Downs whilst the Derby was being run, the popular victory of St. Amant being achieved amidst a torrential downpour.

THE DERBY STAKES of 6,500sovs. by subscription of 50 sovs. each, h ft. or 5 only if declared by the last Tuesday in March 1903; colts 9st, fillies 8st 9lbs; the nominator of the winner received 500sovs., the second at least 400sovs., and the third at least 200sovs. About one mile and a-half. (260subs., forfeit declared for 104). Closed 22nd July 1902.

PLACES: 1, 2, 3, 2 to 1 on John o' Gaunt, 7 to 4 Henry the First, 6 to 4 Gouvernant Evens St. Amant, 2 to 1 agst Andover, 8 to 1 Lancashire, 10 to 8 St. Denis, 25 to 1 Coxswain (offered).

The first to leave the paddock in a downpour of rain was Andover, who was followed in the parade by St. Amant (wearing blinkers), St. Denis, Lancashire (wearing a hood), Henry the First, Gouvernant, and John o' Gaunt, the whipper-in being Coxswain. They turned and cantered in similar order, and the white flag was hoisted at five minutes past three, a fair start being effected three minutes later. St. Amant, on the outside, was the quickest away, with Coxswain, Lancashire, John o' Gaunt, Andover, and Henry the First next, and Gouvernant last, behind St. Denis, and on setting down St Amant went on with a two-length lead of Henry the First, Lancashire, and Coxswain, with John o' Gaunt next and St. Denis whipping-in. Passing the mile post three lengths of daylight separated St. Amant from Andover, whose nearest attendants were Gouvernant, Coxswain, and John o' Gaunt, St. Denis still being last behind Henry the First, and no further change took place till a quarter of a mile from home, where John o' Gaunt took second place some three lengths behind St. Amant, and a long way clear of St. Denis and Andover. But the victory of Mr. Rothschild's colt was assured, John o' Gaunt failing to gain an inch upon him in the run in, and it was by three lengths and amidst deafening cheers that St. Amant triumphed over John o' Gaunt, after making every yard of running; six lengths separated the second and third, Andover was placed fourth by the judge, Henry the First was fifth, Coxswain sixth, Gouvernant seventh, and Lancashire last. Time, by Benson's chronograph, 2mins. 45⅘secs. Value of the stakes, £6,450.

Many and varied have been the changes in the card for the third day of the Epsom Summer Meeting. The Grand Prize (won last by Whittier) gave way in 1896 to the Durdans Plate, which was succeeded by the Epsom Cup. Two years ago the Coronation Cup was inaugurated, in its stead and has proved an unqualified success from the very outset. The encounter yesterday stood out as one of the chief attractions of the whole season, and the finish between Zinfandel and Sceptre was a stirring one, although the mare had to suffer defeat by a length. The public appetite for the strenuous diversions of the racecourse had been effectually satisfied by the vicissitudes and exertions of Derby Day, and, many of the Metropolitan division holding themselves in reserve for the Oaks, it was in the presence of a somewhat attenuated audience that the entertainment was run through. The King was present, with the Prince of Wales and Prince Christian. The conditions showed an improvement over either of the preceding days, inasmuch as there was a welcome immunity from rain, but the sky was overcast and the atmosphere was chilly. The going was on the soft side.

So far the attendance at the Epsom summer meeting has fallen below the average of previous years but there was a large gathering to-day, the weather being greatly improved.

The King drove from Epsom Downs station in an open carriage, in which were Prince Christian, Lord Farquhar, and the Hon'ble F. Ward. He had a most cordial reception from a large crowd who had gathered about the entrance to the grand stand. In a carriage which followed was the Prince of Wales, attended by Sir C. Cust. They arrived just before the course was cleared for the first race, the Belmont Plate. By that time the spectators had increased greatly, and the scene was a very bright one, such as tradition associates with Oaks Day. The sun was out in full force, the weather had become pleasantly hot and the ladies had an opportunity of displaying their prettiest dresses—an opportunity denied to them on Derby Day. Many coaches were arrived and there general rejoicings at being able to throw off the depression induced by the gloomy weather of the past three days. The Jockey Club Stand was very crowded with distinguished personages.

There could be nothing in more marked contrast than the two great days of this year's meeting, and one recalls in this warm sunshine with less regrets for a holiday spoilt the painful experiences of Derby Day.

I append the result of the big race.

THE OAKS STAKES—Of 5,000sovs by subscription of 50sovs, each, h.ft, or 5sovs. only if declared by the last Tuesday in March 1903 for three-year-old fillies; 9st each; the nominator of the winner to receive 400 sovs out of the race; if not sufficient surplus be obtained from subscriptions to give the second at least 200sovs, and the third at least 100sovs, the difference to be made up by the Race Fund. About one mile and a half. Two hundred and eleven entries, forfeit declared for 95.

CRICKET.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. LONDON COUNTY.—Played at Cambridge on 26th, 27th, and 28th May. Cambridge won by an innings and 36 runs. Dr. Grace was able to take a strong batting team to Cambridge, but the bowling at his command was of such a kind that no one could have been surprised when the University made a big score against it. The match was a triumph for the University both in batting and bowling. On the first day Hopley bowled so finely for them that the London County team was dismissed in an hour and twenty-five minutes, not a single man being able to get going. When the 'Varsity went in they had not to meet any bowler with a reputation, except the Doctor himself, and when stumps were drawn they had scored 200 for three wickets. Keigwin, who carried his bat for 58, helped Mann to put on 142 runs for the second wicket in about an hour and a-half. On Friday K. R. B. Fry hit brilliantly, and his innings included nineteen 4's; he was at the wickets for two hours and a-half. During his partnership with Phillips 110 runs were put on in an hour and a-quarter, while May helped him to score 83 for the last wicket. Keigwin was batting for three hours for his patient 64. London County had made 166 for four wickets when stumps were drawn, and were thus still 20 runs behind. The Doctor played excellent cricket for an hour and a-quarter for his 45. On the next day Poidevin, who was not out 49 overnight, and L. Walker (not out 31) made a fine stand, and they were not separated until their partnership had produced 145 runs. At lunch time Poidevin was not out 95. When, a few minutes after the game was resumed, he was dismissed, he had been batting steadily for three hours and a-quarter, and had done his best to save his side from defeat. The last wicket fell at a quarter to four.

LANCASHIRE vs. KENT.—Played at Old Trafford on 26th, 27th and 28 May. Lancashire won by an innings and 128 runs. It was only possible to play cricket for two hours and three-quarters at Manchester on the first day of this match, but Lancashire made such good use of their time that when stumps were drawn they had made 244 for four wickets. The chief credit for this excellent performance belongs to Tyldesley and Hallows, who, during a partnership which lasted for about two hours, put on 190 runs on a soft wicket. There was no play on Friday. When the game was resumed on the following morning the innings was not declared closed, since Kent would have had only to make 94 to save the follow-on. But the rest of the Lancashire batsmen made runs as quickly as possible, and most of them, including Tyldesley, lost their wickets in trying to carry out this sensible plan. Tyldesley's splendid innings of 146 included twenty 4's, and lasted for two hours and three-quarters. It was now a question whether Kent would play out time. The wicket was difficult, but although Cuttell and Hallows were both in great form the first few batsmen did so well that a drawn game seemed almost a certainty. At lunch time Kent had lost one wicket for 35 and afterwards Marsham and Huish played so well that despite the failure of the tail only an hour and a-half remained for play when Kent had to follow-on. Humphreys and Alec Hearne began the second innings, and for some time kept their wickets intact without troubling in the least about runs and a little later Humphreys and Seymour kept together for twenty minutes. But then the end soon came, and Humphreys, alone could stand against Cuttell and Hallows, who both bowled exceedingly well, while the fields men worked splendidly The result was that Lancashire gained a brilliant victory about twenty minutes before time.

SUSSEX vs. SOMERSET.—Played at Brighton 26th, 27th on and 28th may. Sussex won by ten wickets. Although his match was greatly interrupted by the weather Sussex had the good fortune to be able to bring it to a conclusion. On the first day Tate and Cox proved too good for the Somersetshire men on a difficult wicket, and Sussex made an excellent score. Fry was in great form and played an innings which was worthy of his great reputation. He made his runs so rapidly that he was only at the wickets for an hour and three-quarters: his innings included nineteen 4's most of which came from fine drives. Killick played a very useful innings, and Ranjitsinhji, who was more cautious than usual, was at the wickets for an hour and twenty minutes for his 48. The tail did not distinguish itself, but thanks to the good play of Fry, Killick and Ranjitsinhji Sussex had a lead of 202, and as Somerset lost a wicket in their second innings before stumps were drawn with the total at 5, the visitors had an uphill task before them. On Friday there was no play, but on Saturday Somerset made a determined though unsuccessful attempt to save the game. Tate was absent from the Sussex side on account of on injured head, and in this absence some of the Somersetshire men did very well indeed. Montgomery was in for an hour and a-half for a very attractive innings of 50 and with Robson as a partner, put on 50 for the second wicket. Then Palairet and Braund were together for an hour and five minutes during which they scored 50 runs, and there were yet hopes for their side. But although when only half the wickets were down the total was 170 the remaining wickets were so quickly disposed of that Sussex had only 14 runs to make to win.

ROWING.

HENLEY ROYAL REGATTA.

The Leander put in an early appearance for this year's aquatic gathering on the 2nd instant, trying their four for the "Stewards" over the Henley course. The crew consists of W. H. Chapman (bow), C. W. H. Taylor, F. C. Escombe, and F. S. Kelly (stroke and steers). Their trial consisted of a strong paddle for nearly an hour. The Goblets representatives also tried their new boat by Sims, of Putney—C. J. D. Goldie (bow), C. W. H. Taylor (steers)

The foreign entries for Henley Regatta closed on the 1st instant. The official list, which is a small one, is as under:—

Stewards' Challenge Cup fours.—Winnipeg R. C., Canada.

Diamond Challenge Sculls.—L. F. Scholes, Don. R. C., Toronto, Canada.

Anentry for the Diamond Sculls was also received from Harrison Burke, Tasmanian R. C., but that competitor has scratched.

The regatta takes place on 5th, 6th, and 7th, July.

Two Eton crews have been chosen from the Upper Boats from which the eight for the Ladies Plate will be selected. Mr. R. S. de Havilland, O. U. B. C., has again kindly undertaken the coaching. There are five of last year's old choices left—L. E. Jones, H. C. Bucknall, D. P. Wormald, L. R. A. Gatehuse, and E. W. Powell. With such good oarsmen, their prospects at Henley seem very rosy. Crews:

No. 1 Crew: G. D. Cochrane (bow), 10st 4lbs; 2, G. Campbell, 10st 11½lbs; 3, A. G. Kirby, 12st 10lbs; *4, D. P. Wormald, 12st 10lbs; *5 L. E. Jones, 13st 4½lbs; *6 L. R. A. G. Gatehouse, 13st 2lbs; *7, E. W. Powell, 10st1 2½lbs; *H. C. Bucknall (stroke), 11st; T. Preston (cox), 7st 13lb.

CYCLING.

CONTINENTAL CYCLING.

BRUNI BEATS WORLD'S RECORDS.—Eug Bruni, the champion pace follower of France must be considered very unlucky in not holding the world's hour record on the 29th ultimo, as, but for pacing troubles, he would undoubtedly have put fifty-five miles inside the sixty minutes on Friday last at the Parc des Princes track, Paris. Bruni has had his eye on Tommy Hall's record of 54 miles 545 yards for some time past, but has not been able to obtain the necessary pacing until last week, when Reimers completed his 22 h. p. motor and fitted it with a large wind shield. Friday then being fixed for the essay. As the event was advertised, a good number of spectators put in an appearance, and Bruni was despatched just after 6 p. m. He soon got inside world's records, but the monster pacing machine suddenly went wrong, so Bruni dismounted After an interval of twenty minutes a fresh start was made, and the young French man again got well inside world's records, but it was not his day out, for after covering 25 kilometres in 17mins 18⅘secs, as against the previous best of 17mins, 3⅕secs., the motor eased again, and before he got going behind a new pacemaker he was 1min. 7secs. to the bad. Reimers rapidly repaired his motor and was soon ready to take his charge on again; then the pair put in some wonderful pace, travelling at a 57-mile an hour gait, reducing the flying kilometre record en route (time 38⅘secs). It was too late, however, to get near Hall's figures, the hour score showing 23 yards worse than 54 miles Bruni went on for the 90 kilometre record, which he beat by a good margin. Below I append the new figures:—

POLO.

ROEHAMPTON CLUB.—Matches between Eden Park and Roehampton and the Old Cantabs and Handley Cross were decided on the 30th ultimo. The former contingents were the first to line out, and were arranged as follows:—Roehampton: Mr. R. Grenfell, Mr. M. Nickalls, Mr. Edward Ezra, and Mr. M. de Las Casas (back); Eden Park: Mr. F. Menzies, Mr. E. Covill, Captain Innes, and Mr. J. C. de Las Casas (back). Captain Sheppard umpired. The visitors had most of the play during the opening period, and broke through the defence of their opponents on two occasions, but, Roehampton had recovered the lost ground by the end of the third bout, when the board indicated three goals all. Subsequently, first one and then the other side took the lead, and the teams were on terms of equality, with seven goals each until within one minute of the close, when Roehampton secured another point, and the victory by eight to seven. Then followed the encounter between the Old Cantabs—Mr W. McCreery, Mr. F. M. Freake, Mr. W. S. Buckmaster and Captain Godfrey Haseltine (back); and Handley Cross: Mr. H. Rich, Mr. F. Jay Mackey, Mr. C P. Nickalls, and Captain H. Lloyd (back). Early in the match, Mr Buckmaster met with an accident, and had to retire. In reaching for the ball he was struck on the side of the temple by the bit of an opponent's pony, and was rendered unconscious for nearly half an hour, being eventually removed from the field on a stretcher. Mr. F. W. Nickalls took his place in the team. At half time the Cantabs, for whom Mr. Nickalls and Mr. Freake had obtained goals, had an advantage of two to love, and as Mr Freake and Mr. Mackay scored for their respective sides in the second portion of the game, Handley Cross were beaten by three to one RANELAGH CLUB, BARN ELMS.—The Army Cup Tournament, for which six teams have entered, was commenced at Ranelagh yesterday, when the tie between the 1st and 2nd Life Guards was decided. On the latter side were Mr R. J. L. Ogilby, Lord Montgomerie, Mr. H. C. S. Ashton, and Captain C. C. de Crespigny (back); while the 1st Life Guards were represented by Lord H. Grosvenor, the Hon'ble C. Bellowes, Mr E. H. Brassey, and Captain E. W. Clowes (back). Umpire, Captain Scratchley. After playing for thirty minutes the 2nd Life Guards had an advantage of two goals to love, and they eventually qualified for the next round by four to one. Previous to the above an ordinary match was fought out by the premier Ranelagh quartette and Rugby. Though the turf was in a heavy condition, the game was fast throughout, but the scoring was, contrary to expectations, nearly all on one side, the Rugby contingent failing to show to advantage. During the first three periods Ranelagh scored three goals, and to these they had added four more before Rugby gained what proved to be their solitary point almost on the call of time. Sides: Ranelagh: Captain L. C. D. Jenner, Mr. A. Rawlinson, Mr. F. A Gill, and Mr. H. Scott Robson (back); Rugby: Mr Walter Jones, the Earl of Shrewsbury, Captain E. D. Miller, and Mr. C. D. Miller (back). H. R. H. Prince Arthur of Connaught was present at the enclosure.

GOLF.

SCOTLAND vs. ENGLAND.

The annual international golf match between teams of nine aside representing England and Scotland was played over the Royal St. George's Club course at Sandwich on Saturday, the 29th May. Last year, at Muirfield, Scotland were defeated by five matches to four, but on Saturday the tables were turned to the extent of a six matches to three victory for the representatives of the Thistle. Two powerful teams were got together, the Scottish side including Mr. Robert Maxwell, the present holder of the Amateur Championship; Mr. J. E. Laidlay, an ex-holder; and Mr. Mure Fergusson, who has twice, and Mr. J. L. Low, who has once run up for the honour, whilst the English team included three ex-champions in Messrs. John Ball, jun., H. H. Hilton, and H.G. Hutchinson, and one runner-up in Mr. S.H. Fry. Play was, as usual, over 36 holes, and at the end of the first round each side had three matches to its credit, whilst neither team could claim the advantage on the other three.

On restarting the Scotsmen began to draw away, and although later in the second round it looked as if England would pull the match out of the fire, the home side was beaten; but not until two of the games had been carried beyond the eighteenth green Results:—

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.

The fifth and sixth rounds of the Amateur Championship were decided on the Royal St. George's Club's links at Sandwich on the 2nd instant, when Walter J. Travis, of Garden City, New York, the United States amateur champion, and Edward Blackwell, the famous St. Andrew's long-driver, qualified to take part in the final tie of 36 holes to-day. That the prominent position taken by the American golfer has created general surprise scarcely needs to be stated. Never before have the leading United States players competed in what is practically the world's amateur championship, and it is indeed remarkable that in their first essay they should have provided a finalist, who, after his performances of yesterday, has become first favourite. Travis disposed of two top-sawyers in H. H. Hilton and H. G. Hutchinson In both matches his driving was very steady, but not exceptionally long. In the approaching and putting, however, he was generally master of the situation. Blackwell had not such difficult tasks to perform, but he disposed of O. C. Bevan and J. E Laidlay in excellent style, and if he be on his long game, he will give the American a great match to-day.

In the semi-final nearly all the spectators followed Travis and Hutchinson. The latter lost the first hole through slicing his drive, but squared at the second, where he laid his pitch dead. Then, however, the American commenced to forge ahead. He ran down a five yards put at the third, and Hutchinson, who had pulled his drive badly, was never in sight of a half. The American made two perfect shots to the fourth, and was down in 4 to 5, and at the fifth after too strong a pitch, he holed a ten yards put for a half in 8. Hutchinson had to get down difficult puts for halves at the next three holes, and at the ninth he became three down, Travis playing a good second shot on to the green and finding the hole in 4. The scores out were :—

Travis. 4, 5, 3, 4, 3, 3, 5, 3, 4—34.
Hutchinson, 5, 4, 5, 5, 3, 3, 5, 3, 5—38.

Coming in Hutchinson regained a hole at the tenth, and looked like reducing his deficit to one at the thirteenth, where Travis duffed his second shot out of the long grass. Hutchinson did not get a clear second shot, but he was farther than the American and he decided to take a brassie, and endeavour to carry the bunkers guarding the green. He took a line too far to the left, and was bunkered. Travis won the hole, and was therefore 3 up with 5 to play. The American laid a pitch out of the bunker dead for a half at the fourteenth, and by dividing the fifteenth, became dormy. He made the better drive to the sixteenth, and getting down in 3 to 4 won the match by 4 up and 2 to play. The scores home were :—

Travis, 6, 5, 5, 6, 5, 5, 3—35 for seven holes.
Hutchinson, 5, 5, 5, 7, 5, 5, 4—36 for seven holes.

Laidlay playing a perfect approach, took the first hole from Blackwell. Three halves followed, and then Blackwell squared at the fifth, where he reached the green from the Tee, while Laidlay was in the rough to the left. Another half followed at the sixth, where both were weak on the green, and then at the seventh where Laidlay lipped a ten yards put for a half Blackwell took the lead for the first time. Laidlay snatched a hard half at the eighth, where he holed and eight yards put for three. After getting into the rough from the Tee, Blackwell took the ninth, thus turning 2 up. He also secured the tenth, but lost the next. A couple of halves were followed by an exchange of holes, and the sixteenth being halved, Blackwell became dormy 2. Blackwell was in the rough to the left of the line going to the seventh, but got out with his mashie to the far edge of the green, and although Laidlay made a plucky effort with a fine approach and a long put, which he laid dead, Blackwell easily effected the necessary half to win by 2 and 1. The scores for seventeen holes were :—

Blackwell (out), 5, 4, 4, 5, 4, 4, 4, 3, 4—37 ; (home), 3, 5, 5, 5, 5, 4, 3, 4—34 ; total, 71.

Laidlay (out), 4, 4, 4, 5, 5, 4, 5, 3, 5—39 ; (home), 5 4, 5, 5, 4, 5, 3, 4—35 ; total, 74. Returns :—

FIFTH ROUND.

J. E Laidlay, Hon. Company, beat O. C. Bevan, Royal Ashdown Forest, by 6 and 5.

H. G Hutchinson, Royal North Devon, beat Robert Maxwell, Tantallon, at the 19th hole.

W. J. Travis, Garden City, America, beat H. H. Hilton, Royal Liverpool, by 5 and 4.

SEMI-FINAL ROUND.

E. Blackwell beat J. E Laidlay by 2 and 1. W. J. Travis beat H. G. Hutchinson by 4 and 2.

I have just time to give you the result of the final, the post closing in less than 20 minutes. Travis beat Blackwell. Doubtless your Special Golf Correspondent will deal more fully with the Tournament.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HUNT.

LAST Saturday (11th) the annual Hunt Breakfast took place at the Club. Their Excellencies the Governor and Mrs. Thomson were present, and there were nearly 150 guests. Hounds met at the Club at 9-45 and there was a very large field out. Brooklands was the first draw and here hounds spoke to a line. They could make nothing of it however. The morning was fine, but very windy, and this made it difficult to hear what was happening. No jack was viewed away and we went on to Rocky Covert which was blank. We then crossed the stream to Lawley's Course and drew on up Rawlings' Nullah, at the top of which hounds picked up a line which took us into Blue Gums. Here, however, Captain Fife, the Master, stopped hounds, considering that it was not the sort of morning for Woodland hunting. He there drew down Black Moor Vale and when we were half way down a jack jumped up at the top of Newmarket Hounds were drawing on a very wide front, and those on the left got away close behind the jack with a lead which the rest of the pack were never able to make up. They raced him over the top of Newmarket and down the side of Rawlings' Nullah, across the stream and up into Staircase, which he reached with hounds at his brush. Here there was a check and it is possible that we may have changed on to another jack, but hounds hunted through Staircase and came out above Herbert Plantation and then on to Briar Shola, where they checked again and the Master stopped them. As it was now getting late hounds were taken home. In spite of the fact that there were several jungle sheep about in Staircase, and the fact that the howling wind made it impossible to hear anything, we were only 1½ couple short out of the 25 couple we had out many of which were puppies.

On Monday (13th) a fairly large field were out at the meet at Sheffield Corner. The morning was cloudy with mist showery and rather windy. We first drew the covert just beyond Andy Plantation and hounds came away on a rather cold scent. They puzzled this out across the swamp below and turned, hunting slowly towards Parsons' Valley. They soon checked and as the field was pressing them it was a few minutes before the Master could get their noses down and hit off the line again. When we got going again we had some beautiful slow hunting across the head waters of the Krurmund stream and then up towards the back of Governor's Shola swinging to the right the pace improved until they marked the jack to ground in a nullah below the Krurmund path. The earth was a big one and two couplé of hounds got in at one end whereupon the jack bolted at the other end and was killed. Another jack bolted immediately afterwards and slipped away while hounds were busy and we then dug down to the hounds underground and found that they had killed another jack in the earth. The weather was now so wild that the Master turned back to Rally Wood which we drew blank. We picked up a line just outside however, and a capital run followed. As soon as hounds had settled to it they ran at a great pace over the top of Newmarket and down the long spur parallel to Rawlings' Nullah, over the stream and up to Staircase. Turning to the right they ran straight through and Captain Fife reached the top of Herbert Plantation just as they came away. Keeping along the ridge they ran through Briar Shola, crossed the Pykara Road and streamed away over the hill past Bacon Wood. A momentary check occurred close to Windy Gap, but they hit it off again across the road and then turned for Winlock Wood. Through this they stuck to the jack and crossed to Khed Shola just short of which a herd of buffaloes were across the line. We were not able to hunt our jack a yard beyond and had to give him up. This was a very fast gallop.

The meet on Thursday morning was at the Kundal Cross Road at 7 A.M. It was a nice hunting morning and the country was wet after rain. We first moved off to draw Mills' Covert and before reaching it—when just over the nullah below Bagman—hounds picked up a line. They hunted over the spur into Mills Covert, through the covert and out at the top and then went away very fast up Blackmoor Vale. On reaching Rally Wood the jack ran straight up to the left of the Potato Field and then cross the Krurmund Road to Monkey Shola. Here, instead of turning down hill as usual, he swung to the left, broke at the top of Monkey Shola and again crossing the road, sported the side of Jackal Shola and re-entered Rally Wood. Without a pause he went on over the hill to Blue Gums, ran straight through on the Forest Fire Line and came out at the bottom, whence he set his head for Staircase. Up to this the pace had been fast enough, but with the jack running up-wind across the valley it now became tremendous and it was impossible to get near hounds. Turning into Staircase the jack ran the usual line and emerged on the saddle above Herbert Plantation. Half way up the ride in Staircase the Master's horse collapsed from exhaustion and lay unable to move. After a few minutes Major Short came up and lent Captain Fife a pony on which he was able to follow the line hounds had gone. They ran along the ridge to Briar Shola and through it and then went on viâ Windy Gap and Wapshare's Hare Shola to Wenlock Wood. Here the jack turned across the road to Chemmund at which point the Master came up again and seeing two fresh jacks on foot stopped the body of the pack. But the leading hounds were on, and as has been since ascertained, forced the hunted jack away at the west end of Chemmund, hunted him through the bottom of Dormer Wood and finally marked him to ground in an earth between Dormer Wood and the Pykara River. The distance measured in a straight line on the map from the point where we found to the place where the jack got to ground is five miles, but taking into consideration the large ring which we ran early in the run the actual distance cannot have been less than nine miles and there was no check or any sign that we changed jacks during the run. Scent was very good. We then drew homewards without finding again.

CRICKET AT DARJEELING.

THE STATION vs. COMBINED SCHOOLS.—This match between The Station and the pick of St Joseph's College and St. Paul's School was perhaps the best game we have had here this season. The match was all the more interesting as The Station was trying a "colt" in Maharaj Kumar Victor Narayan, the second son of the Maharaja of Cooch Behar. The young Kumar gave a most gratifying display at all points of the game, with the bat, with the ball, and in the field. He compiled the top score for his side, and his 67 was free from blemish, never giving a chance, but the one which disposed of him in the slips. His style was most graceful and the variety of strokes he employed evoked much applause from the pavilion. His driving was powerful, and a couple of leg glances which went for boundaries showed that he played with confidence all round the wicket. The game should have been a drawn one, but instead of drawing stumps at 5-30 The Station" agreed to play to a finish. This sporting decision cost them the match, for Mr. Maddox's wicket went down when but 7 runs were required to win. As usual the Schools fielded brilliantly and The Station score was hardly earned. But The Station's fielding was poor. F. Singleton should have been out when he had made 5 and the mistake cost The Station 91, which, of course, meant the match. For the Schools F. Singleton, Bryan, and Shaw did most execution with the bat, the latter putting up his 27 in less than 20 minutes, while P. Singleton bowled with most success. For The Station Mr. Cousins batted patiently for his 53, and Mr. Uzielli scored his 29 byhard hitting, seven boundaries and one single, and Mr. Murray compiled a careful 26 when runs were badly wanted. Mr. Mytton, did not come off. His first ball he hit out of the grounds, his second ball he smote almost into the pavilion, and his third ball he sent skywards, which on its discent was cleverly held by the smart Beale in the long field. Mr Clayton Daubeny despite a bad sprain he contracted at Polo, bowled with some of his old sting, and the three wickets he took went to beautiful balls with tremendous break. Mr. Maddox bowled in his usual alluring style, and some of the most tempting balls were accepted with fatal results Mr. Mytton was very quick at the wicket his only mistake being when he let off F. Singleton already referred to. The following were the scores :—

CRICKET AT SIMLA.

CIVIL vs. MILITARY.—Played at Simla, on the 16th instant, and was left unfinished. The Military batted first and put up 210, McConaghey (78) and Mitchell (57) playing good cricket. The Civil lost six wickets for 152, of which French was responsible for 102. This player was given out in his first over by the wrong umpire for a catch: the umpire at the bowler's end decided it a catch from a bump ball and French, resuming his innings, carried his bat for 102. CRICKET CHAT.

THE Gharial Flats have recently been the scene of two cricket matches which should have more than an ordinary interest for cricket lovers throughout India by reason of the number of old public school players who participated in them, as well as the high scoring that marked both matches. The King's Royal Rifles, a regiment which despite a three years' residence in India spent at Kaldana, Rawalpindi, and Gharial is comparatively unknown in the Indian cricket world outside the North-West Frontier Province, furnished the chief interest in these matches. At the present time, I do not think there is another regiment in India that could put quite such a strong batting side in the field and if any one doubts my assertion let him glance at the names of the cricketing officers of the corps. First there is G. Cookson, the old Harrovian who in 1899 was third in the Harrow batting averages with 34·18 for 11 innings (aggregate 376, highest score 85), and in 1900 headed the averages with the excellent figures of 40·63 for the same number of innings (aggregate 447, highest score 89) and who last cold weather added his name to the list of batsmen who have made 200 runs in an innings in India. Then there are the two old Etonians, F. O. Grenfell and E. B. Denison who were contemporaries in the Eton XI. of 1899. The first named headed the batting averages with 40·7 for 9 innings (once not out) and an aggregate of 327 (highest score 136). Denison was fifth in the averages with 23·9 for 12 innings (twice not out), his aggregate being 239 and his highest score 52. This does not by any means exhaust the list of batsmen available as there is Major H. R. Blore, an old Marlborough boy who was in the 1889 XI. There are also Major C. S. Chaplin, R. N. Abadie, Captain E. F. Ward, B. J. Curling, R. H Willan, and F. G. Willan, quite a formidable array of batsmen. The first of the two matches mentioned was between the King's Royal Rifles and the Changla Galli Musketry Class and was remarkable for the manner in which the class snatched a victory against time. The Rifles had compiled 310 runs, towards which Major Blore contributed 102 and F. O. Grenfell 65, the latter having to retire with his shoulder out.

The Musketry Class who had such good batsmen as Captain Taylor, Alleyne, Keen and Jackson assisting them created quite a sensation by knocking off the 60 runs they had to make to win during the last half hour. The second match was between the Rifles and the Wiltshire Regiment and here again the scoring was heavy, both sides making over 300 runs the Rifles eventually winning by nine wickets. The chief feature of the game was the magnificent display of R N. Abadie, who made a century for the Rifles.

The first century of the Naini Tal season has I notice, been made by J. Campbell, who compiled 123 not out for Captain Barlow's team vs. Lieutenant Colonel Goodwyn's team in a scratch match arranged after the match with Ranikhet. Among other players who scored well were P. T. Hanbury (69), Major H. G. Stainforth (39), Captain Hon'ble F. E Guest (35), and V. A Coaker (52).

Mention of old public school players reminds me that at no time in the history of Indian cricket have the large public schools ever been so strongly represented. Nearly all the principal schools could place elevens in the field at the present time, elevens too composed entirely of players who got their colours. A few years ago, about four I think, I made an attempt to compile a full list of public school players in India and although the result was a list fairly complete if not absolutely accurate there were only two or three schools with as many as eleven representatives in India. Eton I remember had four, but has now fourteen. Some of the best bats turned out by the school in recent years are among these, and as names of prominent public school cricketers are always of interest to cricket lovers I append the names of the fourteen in question:—C. T. Studd, C. W. Foley, Major Hon'ble T. W. Brand, Captain F. C. France-Hayhurst, Captain J. S. Unthank, Major A W. F. Baird, Captain M. H. Tristram, Captain F. C. Pilkington, H. W. Kettlewell, C. T. Aden, Hon'ble G. W. S Cadogan, G. A. Akers-Douglas, F. O. Grenfell, and E. B. Denison. Not much doubt about the batting strength of an eleven selected from the above-mentioned players, two of whom, however—Akers-Douglas and Unthank—got their colours as twelfth men.

I have splendid news from Bombay regarding the prospects of the Presidency and it now seems fairly certain that the Parsees will have to fight all they know if they wish to repeat their performances of last year. Personally I do not think they will be strong enough to defeat the Presidency teams they are likely to meet this year for they will have the famous Captain J. G. Greig to reckon with, his recent return to Poona from Somaliland being the cause of my jubilation. Besides Greig the Presidency will have the services of Captain L M. R Deas, who returns to India next month from England, where he has been on leave. He will be stationed at Poona, which station will have a stronger team than has been the case for some years. Greig, Deas, Carroll, Mc'onogh, Kennedy, Langton, Lyon, Kearsey, and Umfreville with two others, probably Colonel E. H. Hazelton and J. Monteath, will form a very powerful combination. Greig, Deas, Medonogh and Hazelton furnishing the attack. The Parsees with the exception that A.A Mehta will be available will depend on very much the same side that did duty last year. Anyhow it is certain that Mistry, Meherhomji Pavir, Balsara, Daruwalla, Raja senior, and the brothers Kanga will again don flannels and probably Kapadia the young bowler who met with success in the Poona match last year.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

CALCUTTA vs. KING'S OWN.—This match was played on the 15th instant on the King's Own Regiment's ground. The soldiers were defeated by five goals to one. They started off at a great pace and the opening exchanges were all in their favour. Ennis got away and opened the scoring. Then Calcutta pulled themselves together and it was not long before H Sherman had equalised after a capital run. Continuing to press Calcutta put on another goal before the interval and crossed over with the lead. Playing a sound game, they had all the best of the second moiety and, three more goals being added by Crawford V. Sherman and H. Cooper the visitors won easily by five to one as stated.

RANGERS vs. DALHOUSIE.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on the 15th instant, resulting in a draw. The first half was very evenly contested and the teams crossed over without score. Soon after resuming a penalty against the Rangers gave the home team a chance and Prike did the needful. The visitors were not long in equalising, Pollock putting through shortly before time. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Street, goal; Stimson and Templeton, backs; Dalling, Butler and Phelps, half-backs; Prike, Bonar, Campbell, Stewart and Holley, forwards.

RANGERS—Behrends, goal; Margrett and Anderson, backs; Allcock, Lees and Russell, half-backs; Mellay, Rosser, Mulholland, Pollock and Vears, forwards.

Referee.—Sergt. Morell.

RANGERS vs. Y. M. C. A.—This match was played on the Rangers' ground on Saturday, the 18th instant, a evenly contested game resulting in a pointless draw. The Young Men had rather the best of the first half, but were unable to score. After the interval the Rangers played up, but missed several opportunities of scoring, the game ending as stated. Teams:—

RANGERS.—Behrend, goal; Margrett and Anderson, backs; Bollard, Lees and Russell half-backs; Mullholand, Pollock, Rosser, McClay and Vears, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Kay, goal; Stokes and Lamb, backs; Schaumberg, Pooler and Collingwood, half-backs; Price; Dwyer, Scully Gordon and Redmond, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. D. L. Walker.

HOWRAH vs KING'S OWN.—The Fort team went across the river last Saturday and defeated Howrah by four goals to nil. The opening exchanges were very even. Howrah forced a corner and had hard lines in not scoring. Then the King's Own began to show up and Carman opened the scoring. Diggle adding a second goal soon after. Crossing over with the lead the soldiers attacked and Howrah was kept on the defensive till the end of the game. Diggle scored the third and Walton the fourth goal for the King's Own Teams:—

KING'S OWN.—Sinker, goal; Standish and Mellor, backs; Quinn Ennis and Leonard, half-backs; Diggle, Walton, Jones, Carman and Wittingham, forwards.

HOWRAH.—Powell, goal; Curtis and Annett, backs; Morrow Wood and Hart, half-backs; Kerr, Burns, O'Neil, Echlin and Smith, forwards.

Referee:—Sergeant Marsh

CALCUTTA vs. DALHOUSIE.—A large crowd witnessed this match on the Dalhousie ground on the 18th instant. Although the turf was heavy, play was interesting. The homesters rushed down at the start, but Baker relieved and Calcutta got in some good runs. Templeton transferred the ball to the other end, and play ruled even for a space, then the visitors pressed again but were unsuccessful and half time arrived without any score. On resuming Dalhousie kept the Calcutta custodian busy, but Vlasto gave a good display and they could not get past him. The visitors next got away and Smith scored. Fast play followed and Dalhousie sent in a hard one which Vlasto cleared A goal was claimed on the score that the ball had been cleared after it had crossed the line, but Mr. Wilder decided in favour of Calcutta. It has been stated in some quarters that the referee was not on the spot and so unable to judge; but as a matter of fact he was standing close up, actually on the goal line, and was perhaps in a better position than any one else to decide the point. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Vlasto, goal; Baker and Badham, backs; Ansell, Crawford and Maunder, half-backs; H. Sherman, Macdonald, V. Cooper, Stuart and Smith, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Street, goal; Stimson and Templeton, backs; Phelps, Dalling and Evans, half-backs; Holley, Stewart, Campbell, Bonar and Prike, forwards.

Referee:— Mr. P. Willder.

CIVIL AND MILITARY LEAGUE.

On the 18th instant the 79th R. G. A. beat the Hornets by four goals to nil. St. Josephs defeated the Caledonians by three goals to one; and the match between Sibpur and the Measurers proved a walk over for the former who won by no less than eight goals to nil.

FOOTBALL NOTES

The 61th Royal Artillery visited Howrah on the 14th to play their return League match against United Club, but could not repeat their former victory. The game was a very poor one to watch, neither side having out a representative eleven. Howrah had most of the game, but made a very poor display of shooting. The inside men were well fed by Kerr and O'Neil, and Wood played a strong game at centre half and the visiting forwards worked well together, but neither side could make more than one goal, and the game therefore ended in a draw. Wood is said to be leaving Calcutta this week, and if this is so, Howrah will lose not only their best player, but one of the keenest footballers and all-round sportsmen the Club has ever had.

In this match the 61th Royal Field Artillery made their last appearance in the League, the team having since scratched from all their engagements owing to their inability to get an eleven together With the exception of one incident, which was dealt with by the I. F. A., the Royal Artillery have always played a nice game, and it is a pity they have been unable to continue playing. In case any misconstruction may be put on their withdrawal I have been asked to state that it is in no way due to Bombardier Corby's suspension after their match against the Y. M. C. A. By Rule 14 of the League Competition none of the games already played against the Royal Artillery will count so Calcutta, the King's Own, Dalhousie, and the Y. M. C. A. will come down two points, the Rangers four points and the West Ridings one, and the Calcutta and King's Own goal averages will also be lowered.

Dalhousie had slightly the better of their return match with the Rangers, but could only get past Behrend from a penalty kick, and the Rangers managing to score one goal also the game ended in a draw. Bonar was ordered off the field in this match, but after enquiry he was allowed to play again on Saturday, when he helped Dalhousie considerably against Calcutta.

The King's Own Calcutta match was watched by an enormous crowd, and play was extremely fast and interesting throughout. At the start the civilians seemed all at sixes and sevens and rather nervous, and Carman soon opened the scoring for the military. After this, however, Calcutta pulled themselves together and after an excellent piece of play, H. Sherman scored from the right. Hardly had the ball been restarted when H. Cooper, who was playing an exce lent game at centre, notched another point for his side, amid great applause, and although the King's Own had the best of the remainder of the first half the score at half time was unaltered. The Calcutta men seemed very fatigued at half time, and it looked as though the military would give them a lot of trouble in the second half, but they came up to scratch in great style and played the best game seen this season. Crawford put in the third goal for his side, V. Sherman scored the fourth and H. Cooper the fifth from a penalty and the soldiers were absolutely demoralised. The concluding stages showed, as was anticipated, that the King's Own cannot play a losing game. Fouls were numerous and the referee's whistle seemed to be going continuously and the spectators at any rate were glad when "time" arrived. The Calcutta back division played a great game, against which even such excellent forwards as those of the King's own could do nothing, and of the forwards H. Cooper and V. Sherman were conspicuous. The soldiers goalkeeper seemed rather off color, but Dodds made a brilliant if at times somewhat risky, display for the civilians. The result of this match brought Calcutta to the top of the League, a position which they thoroughly deserve; they will, however, have to work very hard to retain their supremacy.

The last few games played by the King's Own have had a very disastrous effect on their goal average. A fortnight ago it was 22 to 1, whereas now it is less than 3 to 1.

The Rangers could make no headway against the Y. M. C. A. on Saturday in spite of having impressed into their service three men from the 93rd Highlanders. The home team had heaps of chances, but their new men do not seem to be able to shoot, and the game ended in a pointless draw. It is a pity the Rangers have been unable to withstand the "pot-hunting" tendencies of the times and it cannot but be mortifying to the executive responsible for the introduction of the military element into this old civilian team to see that the eleven is not playing nearly so well together now as before this innovation.

The Lancasters had no difficulty in disposing of Howrah by four goals to nil. The United Club had out a good team and played up well, but the combination of the military was too good for them.

Calcutta were very lucky in securing two points from Dalhousie on Saturday. The game was watched by a big crowd, and when it was seen that Calcutta were playing without H. Cooper, V. Sherman, Todd and Dodds, the general opinion was that the Trades Club would win. The exchanges were very even in the first half, first one side showing up and then the other, and both goalkeepers had a fair amount of work. At the commencement of the second half Calcutta pressed and Baker having placed the ball almost into the Dalhousie goal from a free kick, Stuart and Smith rushed it through. From now till time Dalhousie had the best of it, but the excellent defence of the visitors' halves kept them from scoring, though at one time a scramble on the Calcutta goal line looked to have resulted in a goal. The referee, however, was on the spot and had no doubt that the ball had not gone over the line, but Calcutta had a narrow escape. With four of their best men absent Calcutta were rather weak, and though Vlasto in goal was an excellent substitute for Dodds the other three absentees were badly wanted. V. Cooper played centre forward and acquitted himself very well, but Badham who took his place at back was not in form. Crawford, Ansell and Maunder in the half line played an excellent game throughout and were in fact the mainstay of the team The Dalhousie team played extremely well, but were weak in shooting—Boner, Phelps and Stimson were perhaps most prominent.

It is a pity that all the League clubs cannot make such excellent arrangements for keeping the crowd off the ground as those made by the Dalhousie executive on Saturday. The crowding of spectators over the touch lines is an unmitigated nuisance to everybody, and it was hoped at the beginning of the season that all clubs would endeavour to enforce the new rules drawn up by the League Committee to meet such cases: but only in a very few instances have proper steps been taken with the consequence that matters are now just as bad as they were last year. Surely it should not be considered infradig for three or four members of the home club to lend a hand to keep the crowd back, and even if it were the men from the Fort are always ready to help when asked.

A proposal is on foot for the arrangement of a Civil vs. Military match to take place on the 9th July after the completion of the League Competition. This fixture, in which great interest used to be taken, has been allowed to drop during the last two years, and the League Committee are to be congratulated on their endeavour to revive it. The 'gate" will of course be for charity, and as the prices of admission will, I understand, be only half those charged for the annual I. F. A. charity match, it is to be hoped the venture will meet with great support. The I. F. A. have welcomed the proposal, and the match will come off under their patronage. It is to be hoped the Selection Committees will get together two really representative teams from the League clubs.

The I. F. A. have held their annual meeting, and Mr. Rope, the Honorary Secretary of the League, now joins Mr. Pritchard as Joint-Honorary Secretary Both these gentlemen are extremely keen on doing everything possible to further the interests of football and will we may be sure, do all they can to make this year's Shield Tournament as successful as those of previous years. An innovation has been made in the fixing of dates for the playing of all I. F. A. matches. This year each match will be played on a date to be fixed by the Council, the idea being to do away with the playing of all the matches in each round on the last day of the round, which in the past has led to endless confusion, especially in the case of drawn games. It is to be hoped this innovation will work all right, and that the draw will favour good matches on Saturdays.

The League clubs stood as follows on Saturday, the 18th—

Lieut.-Col. Parry Okeden, Turnworth, Dorset, has in his possession an elephant's tooth, partially decayed. The animal belonged to his father, who was in the East Indian Civil Service at Moradabad, and as the tooth caused the animal so much pain that it interfered with its eating, his father, with the assistance of the mahout's son sitting on the elephant's head, and telling him to be quiet, extracted the tooth by means of hammer, iron bar, and rope. The grateful animal used to like to have his gums dressed with tow and gin for days after the operation. As this happened before 1842 no anæsthetic could have been used.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

26th May 1904.

SO many events are taking place every day and all day now, that it is hard to discriminate and pick out the most interesting for notes, for is there not an old saw "What is one man's meat is another man's poison," so that what vitally interests A does not concern B. one jot and vice versâ! Perhaps first and foremost in importance ranks the Irish Native Championship under the auspices of the Irish Golfing Union, which has been held at Portmarnock, preceded by the annual inter-provincial match between Leinster and Ulster, when the former easily defeated the latter with teams of 15 a-side. In the Stroke Competition which with most Championship meetings takes place prior to the Tournament, Mr. R. A. Campbell (Malahide) tied with 84+2=86 - for first place with Mr. R J. Hewitte (Malone) 89 - 3=86. Thirty-two couples entered for the Tournament, and the play was of a every first class order. In the second round, W. H. A. Boyd was taken to the 19th hole when he beat the Hon'ble E. Gibson, and Mr. W. H. Boyd only got the better of Mr. G. C. Green on the 21st green. In the third round the holder (Mr. Harold Reade), was beaten by Mr. T. Henshaw In the fourth and fifth rounds the following passed away: Mr. Henshaw, Mr. P. M Watson, Mr J. L. Morgan and Mr. Jennings. The semi-final round drew large crowds of spectators and was played in perfect weather. Chief interest centered in the match between Mr. Boyd, Mr Inglis, the former being 2 up at the time, by the following figures: 4, 4, 5, 5, 3, 4, 4, 4, 4=37. At the 15th hole he was dormy and a half at the 16th gave him the match. Mr. Todd won somewhat easily from Mr. Hewitte by 5 and 4.

In the final, consisting of 36 holes, Mr. H. A. Boyd defeated Mr. J. P. Todd by 4 up and 2 to play.

The meeting of Professional Golfers Association to discuss the question of handicapping, in the Association Tournament is to be held at Sandwich prior to the Open Championship and should be a very largely attended meeting. The great feature in the competition recently held at the West Middlesex Club was the introduction of handicaps and it will be proposed at the forth coming meeting that in future tournaments of the Association certain leading competitors be made plus, and that all others start from scratch. The formal opening of the new course of the Ardross Club took place on Saturday, 21st May. Mrs. Burns of Kilmahey drove the first ball, after which Willie Ferme of Troon and Ben Sayers of North Berwick played in 18 hole match, which was won by the Troon man by 3 and 2.

The Rules of Golf Committee are certainly not allowed to enjoy a sinecure and have very recently published a series of discussions on points sent to them from all parts of the golfing world and of which many would be of interest to players of both sexes Clear and well worded as are the code of rules now in force, there must inevitably arise from time to time some question on which apparently none of the rules have any decisive bearing, and it is of course quite impossible to provide against all the unlikely things which may and now and again do happen in this game of games—hence the use and office of the Rules Committee!

* * * * *

The formal opening of the Walton Heath Club, where Blaid has not taken up his quarters, by a 3-ball match between Vardon, Taylor and the Local Man, adds another to the many good courses round the Metropolis. The making of the course itself cost, it is stated by one in authority, £10,000. Mr. W. Herbert Fowler is the energetic and capable Honorary Secretary of the Club, and with so experienced an official and such a player an Blaid the success of the venture is almost a foregone conclusion.

2nd June 1904.

Of course the Whitsuntide holiday meetings have monopolised the attention of Golfers to the exclusion of all else. For England the weather was good and low scoring was the order of the day At Sandwich the enormous entry of 112 players for the St. George's Challenge Vase on Friday, 29th May, rendered the competition so unwieldy and caused so much congestion of the Links, that play was perforce extended over a far longer period than usual. Among the competitors were the Amateur Champion (Mr. Robert Maxwell), the Americans W. J Travis and Mr Byers (with whom Mr. Maxwell was partnered). J. Ball, Junior, the Champion, was somewhat inconvenienced by the large crowd who followed him and although he did the first round in 83 he did not complete his second round. The feature of the day's play was the fine form shown by Mr. John Graham, Junior, the star of the Graham family is just now in the ascendant) who with scores of 98+76=154 constituted himself the holder of the vase for the ensuing 12 months. Next to him came Mr. S. Mure-Ferguson with 79+80=159. Another margin of 4 strokes between Miss and Mr. Edward Blackwell's 163, and then the scores came thick and fast on top of one another. At the Royal St. George's Club, Sandwich, the Whitsuntide Meeting was brought to a close on Tuesday, 24th May, when in the semi-final round Mr. P. Robertson-Walker (6) beat Mr. V. A. Pollock (+1) by 3 up and 2 Mr H. E Acklom (8) w. o., Mr. E. Martin Smith (+1) scratched. Final: Mr. Acklom beat Mr. Robertson-Walker by 2 and 1.

Sir Walter Foster had a round recently over the old course at St. Andrew's with old Tom Morris. The play of the veteran was very remarkable, giving Sir Walter third, he beat him by 2 and 1, going out old Tom took 46 and coming back in 48 he did the round in 94. In the ordinary course of events a player takes 20, 30, or 40 strokes more than his years can number to a round, but this wonderful old man, who will be 83 this month, took only 11 strokes more than his age and the most wonderful and astonishing part of his game was his driving, which was straight and far and sure.

At Sandwich on Thursday, 26th, the draw for the Amateur Championship took place. Owing to the death of Mr. N. Martin Smith, Mr. Eric Hambro, M. P., Mr. H. Hambro and Mr. E. Martin Smith are debarred from competing, and another player, Mr. Cecil K. Hutchison is prevented by a military examination from taking part. There are 128 entries and nearly all the prominent players are competing.

Great interest has of course centered in the International match between England and Scotland which took place on Saturday, 28th May, at Sandwich. The representative and results were as below and the teams consisted of 9 aside:—

The match consisted of 36 holes, and at the conclusion of the first round a much closer finish, than what actually took place, seemed probable. As each side was leading in 3 games while the 3 remaining couples stood all square. The hardest match was that between Mr. Robert Maxwell and Mr. John Ball, Junior. In the first round Mr. Maxwell stood 3 up at the turn, the approximate scores out being 33 and 38 respectively, and at the conclusion of the 18 holes, the Scotsman in spite of his lead having been reduced to 1 at the 16th was still 3 up. In the afternoon at the 8th green Mr. Ball squared the match, and took the lead at the 9th with a 4, his score out being 36 and 3 halves in 4, at the following holes he increased his lead 62 by laying his approach at his 13th lead Slicing out of bounds at the next Mr. Maxwell stood 3 down and 4 to play. Losing the 15th and 16th Mr. Ball stood dormy at the 17th, but the Scotsman taking the 18th in a perfect 4, the match was once more square. Starting out again from the 1st tee both drove off the course and halved in 5. At the 2nd Mr. Maxwell got a fine drive and Mr. Ball from a hanging lie put his second in the slope above the hole. Again they halved, but at the 39th hole the match was decided here the Scotsman was hole high to the right, whilst Mr. Ball was just short of the green. Mr. Maxwell's put lopped the hole, and stopped 3 inches off whilst Mr. Ball left himself stunned four feet from the hole and failed in his attempt to get down. Whilst Mr. Hilton was somewhat easily defeated by Mr. Mure-Fergusson by 4 and 2 there was a close fight going on between Mr. John Graham, and Mr. deZoste which was eventually won by the Scotsman by 4 and 3. Mr. H. G. Hutchinson beat Mr. Laidlay by 4 and 2. Mr. Hutchison for Scotland beat Mr. Pease After finishing all square in the morning by 4 and 2 Mr. Fry and Mr. Blackwell had a very close fight. At the 12th hole in the afternoon the match was square and it was again even at the 18th or 36th hole. Going to the 37th Mr. Blackwell hit a very long drive quite 50 yards beyond his opponent. Mr. Fry missed his Brassey, and failed to hole in 4, whilst the Scotsman put down a 4 feet put, and won the hole and match. Mr. Fowler drew away from Mr. Blyth after being all square in the morning and won by 7 up and 5. Mr. Horace Castle was quite off his game in the afternoon and was beaten by Mr. Dick by 9 and 8 to play. whilst for England Mr. Darwin recorded a win by 6 and 5 over Mr. J. L. Law.

Now to turn our thoughts to the doings of the fair sex on the green; we have done with the opens we have recorded the Scottish Championship, the Irish is yet unplayed, but the Midlands Counties of England have been hard at it. The 8th of this Annual Competition was begun on 26th May at King's Norton with an 18 hole medal round for teams consisting of 3 players from all clubs affiliated to the Midlands Union. eight clubs sent teams and the aggregate score of the three players was counted. In the morning the conditions, for play were perfect and it was in the forenoon that the winning club (Newark) were fortunate enough to play. The individual scores of this team were made up follows: Mrs. C. Richardson 84, Miss E. C. Nevile 85, Miss M Nevile 90 259 Next came the Worcestershire and Handsworth Clubs each with 263 then Minchinhampton, 274. Kings Norton 275, Coventry 285, Northampton 287, Sandwell Park 289. The best individual round was accomplished by Winifred Bryan from Minchinhampton who returned a card of 82, going out in 40 and home in 42. This on the men's course was a very fine performance indeed. Next day, the individual competition in connection with the meeting of the Midlands Counties Ladies' Championship was decided by a 36-hole stroke competition, Miss E C. Nevile (the holder) won the gold medal once again, the silver fell to Miss Bryan and the bronze to Miss Foster, a sister of the well-known Foster Brothers, of Malvern so good at all athletics The entries numbered 34 and all the leading clubs were represented. The conditions under which the play was carried on were most depressing Rain fell without ceasing from the hour of starting, the course became thoroughly soaked and several of the greens were under water. To make matters worse a very violent thunderstorm came on at midday and continued without a break for at least an hour and a half, the lightning was blinding and incessant and more than half the competitors gave up all chance of being Champion and fled into the nearest shelter. Miss Nevile was fortunate in having an early starting time and escaped the thunderstorm and also the worst state of submersion of the green, whereas Miss Bryar who was playing a remarkably fine game came in for the full fury of the storm the 2, greens being quite flooded, down the centre of one of these a swift torrent flowed over the hole carrying the floating ball away down the stream, a local authority being appealed to he made a sort of compromise with player and element, but Miss Bryan took 6 when she should have had a 3, under ordinary circumstances and her card showed 86 to Miss Nevile's 83. Rain still fell heavily when the second round was started, but undeterred Miss Nevile played a brilliant round of 78 and won the Midlands Championship with 12 strokes between her and the next player. This being the fourth time she has possessed the cup and title, besides twice having been runner up in the Open Championship, the holder of the Lincolnshire Championship, possessor of Midlands Silver medals and of 2 bronze! Her remarkably fine 78 was made up as follows: 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 5, 4, 4, 4, 5, 4, 5, 4, 3, 5, 4, 5, 5 =78.

Before closing my notes I should like to say one word in recommendation of 2 balls which have recently been patented and sent to me to sample, those are the "Saxon" and the "Ideal." They are made by the Anglo-American Golfers' Trading Association, 46, Woodward Road, Dulwich, London East, fly remarkably well, especially in a wind, and cost only the very moderate sum of 1s. each for the "Saxon" 1/3 for the "Ideal."

Australia seems fated to suffer from the importation of European animals and birds. Rabbits and sparrows have become perfect plagues, and now the starling is added to the list of unwelcome visitors who increase, and whose destructive habits are causing serious injury to agriculture. The starlings are said to descend on the vineyards in swarms like locusts, and clear off the grapes wholesale. As starlings invariably roost in large flocks at certain seasons, it should not be very difficult to devise some means of getting rid of them at night by a united effort on the part of grapegrowers.

THE FOOD OF FISHES.

FOR a number of years past, investigations have been carried on to ascertain the food consumed by the various kinds of fish, and very interesting are the results Nearly all fishes live on animal food, preying either upon weaker members of their own family or upon animals of lower organisation. The two great ends of existence from a fish's point of view are to eat and to avoid being eaten. Hence the conditions of life under the waters are dreadful in the extreme. When the vastness of the ocean population is considered, and it is realised that nearly every fish devours a score or several scores of other living beings daily, it is obvious that the slaughter which goes on without ceasing is appalling in its immensity. Fortunately for themselves fishes have a poorly developed nervous system, and probably the fear of death gives them little trouble. Of course, as we go down the scale of marine life we reach a class of animals that live entirely on vegetable matter. But even among the most highly organised are vegetable feeders—not wholly vegetarian, but living on a mixed diet. Mr. Cunningham classifies the fishes as those which prey on other fishes only, those which also prey on lower marine animals, those which eat the lower animals alone, and those which partake of a mixed animal and vegetable diet, the last being few in number.

The ways in which fishes feed are various. Some, for instance, hunt only at night, others feed in the day time. Some lie in ambush, others pursue their prey. Some feed at the bottom of the sea, others at the surface, and others still in midwaters. Those which live on very small fry have curious straining organs, by means of which they separate the food from the immense quantity of water which passes through. Among them are the herring, pilchard, and sprat. The plaice, which feeds mainly on shell-fish, has a powerful crushing apparatus in its throat. So has the catfish. Some, like the spotted dog-fish hunt by smell, and are equally successful night or day. Mackerel and whiting hunt by sight, and therefore in the day time only. Then, some of the cod family have been liberally dealt with by Nature, for they can use both sight and smell in capturing prey, while their chin is armed with a barbel to bring in the aid of touch This barbel permits hunting at night, and it is then the ling and the rockling seek their prey. Those curious markings on the backs of flat fishes are designed to aid them in the capture of food as well as in concealing themselves from enemies. They lie on the bottom, sometimes partly buried in gravel or sand, and when an unhappy victim comes near he is pounced upon and devoured. The sole lies quiet all day, having the power to assimilate its colour to that of the ground, but at night it makes full use of its acute sense of smell. Its curious habit is to tap the ground with the side of its head in search of shrimps and worms. The angler, sometimes a monster six feet long, will lie close to a weed-covered rock quite undistinguishable from it, until his prey approaches, when he will seize it with the rapidity of a flash.

Red mullet are armed with barbels with which they rake up worms and other ground animals. The turbot will cover itself with sand, and become the very colour of the ground. There it will wait patiently until its prey comes by, when it will rise quickly and seize it. One would suppose that a fish thus stationary would not obtain any great abundance of food. But the fact, that as many as sixty small fishes have been found in the stomach of a turbot, shows how the ocean teems with life. Perhaps the most curious prowler of the ocean is the John Dory, who takes advantage of his extraordinary flatness to approach his prey unperceived. This fish swims in an upright position with its side turned towards the prey—a herring or pilchard usually—and so small is its antero posterior diameter that it can steal quite close without being observed. When it gets within striking distance there is no escape. Undoubtedly the weaker fishes' wits, if they possess any wits, have need to be sharp. If in the stomach of a single turbot sixty sand eels are found—that being probably only a fraction of the day's diet—it seems a mystery how the vast multitudes of marine animals obtain sufficient food. A single shoal of herrings or mackerel will require millions of their favourite prey every day in the year. The food of a whale should be estimated by the hundredweight. And, not only does the ocean supply food to its own denizens, but it feeds countless millions of sea-birds. Ultimately the whole of the pabulum must be furnished by the vegetables which grow in the waters and on the shores. Marine plants are, indeed, extraordinarily abundant and various. Muddy shores are covered with grass-wrack; on the rocks is a thick carpet of green red, and olive weeds; but of greatest importance as food are the microscopic plants which multiply so amazingly as to colour immense areas of the ocean surface, or make the water turbid to a considerable depth. A great quantity of vegetable matter is also carried by the rivers to the sea On this food live the lower forms of animal life, themselves very often of microscopic minuteness. The periwinkle and other shell-fish browse on the weeds of the inshore waters.

In the ocean are great quantities of foraminifera which feed on diatoms and other minute vegetable matter. The bivalve molluscs live on diatoms, foraminifera and other such things insignificant in size, but almost infinite in number. Scallops, oysters, mussels, moving scarcely at all, suck in continuously a stream of water, from which they strain off these tiny articles of food. In the mud and sands are myriads of worms, molluscs and crustaceans, which form the food of animals higher in the scale. On the bottom of the sea the ground-fishes and their food—starfishes oysters, clams, mussels, shrimps, hermit-crabs, razor shells, cockles, etc. Most of these are practically stationary, and many lie quite exposed, so that, except for their defensive armour, they are easy prey But floating in the water is also an immense quantity of food. If the stronger fishes feed on their weaker brethren, they do not hesitate to swallow the lower animals as well The larvæ of shrimps, lobsters, crabs, hermit crabs, etc., rise to the surface, being decimated on the way by the smaller fishes and almost entirely devoured before it is time to descend again. The spawn of herrings is such a dainty that great number of cod and haddock follow the spawning herrings and grow fat upon it. Mr. McIntosh says that eighty boxes of haddocks have been trawled and that the stomach of every fish was found distended by the eggs of herring. The cod itself will give off as many as five million eggs, of which all but a score are sure to be eaten by other fish. Then there are countless numbers of little copepods, said to be found everywhere. On food of this kind some fishes live mainly or altogether, such as sprats, pilchards, and herrings. Thus every kind of lower animal is eaten by one fish or another. But every fish, except the strongest, is also eaten by another fish. The mackerel prefers sprat and other small fish. The brill eats sprats and sand-eels. The whit-

THE FOOD OF FISHES.

FOR a number of years past, investigations have been carried on to ascertain the food consumed by the various kinds of fish, and very interesting are the results Nearly all fishes live on animal food, preying either upon weaker members of their own family or upon animals of lower organisation The two great ends of existence from a fish's point of view are to eat and to avoid being eaten. Hence the conditions of life under the waters are dreadful in the extreme. When the vastness of the ocean population is considered, and it is realised that nearly every fish devours a score or several scores of other living beings daily, it is obvious that the slaughter which goes on without ceasing is appalling in its immensity. Fortunately for themselves fishes have a poorly developed nervous system, and probably the fear of death gives them little trouble. Of course, as we go down the scale of marine life we reach a class of animals that live entirely on vegetable matter. But even among the most highly organised are vegetable feeders—not wholly vegetarian, but living on a mixed diet. Mr. Cunningham classifies the fishes as those which prey on other fishes only, those which also prey on lower marine animals, those which eat the lower animals alone, and those which partake of a mixed animal and vegetable diet, the last being few in number.

The ways in which fishes feed are various. Some, for instance, hunt only at night, others feed in the day time. Some lie in ambush, others pursue their prey. Some feed at the bottom of the sea, others at the surface, and others still in midwaters. Those which live on very small fry have curious straining organs, by means of which they separate the food from the immense quantity of water which passes through. Among them are the herring, pilchard, and sprat. The plaice, which feeds mainly on shell-fish, has a powerful crushing apparatus in its throat. So has the catfish. Some, like the spotted dog-fish hunt by smell, and are equally successful night or day. Mackerel and whiting hunt by sight, and therefore in the day time only. Then, some of the cod family have been liberally dealt with by Nature, for they can use both sight and smell in capturing prey, while their chin is armed with a barbel to bring in the aid of touch This barbel permits hunting at night, and it is then the ling and the rockling seek their prey. Those curious markings on the backs of flat fishes are designed to aid them in the capture of food as well as in concealing themselves from enemies. They lie on the bottom, sometimes partly buried in gravel or sand, and when an unhappy victim comes near he is pounced upon and devoured. The sole lies quiet all day, having the power to assimilate its colour to that of the ground, but at night it makes full use of its acute sense of smell. Its curious habit is to tap the ground with the side of its head in search of shrimps and worms. The angler, sometimes a monster six feet long, will lie close to a weed-covered rock quite undistinguishable from it, until his prey approaches, when he will seize it with the rapidity of a flash.

Red mullet are armed with barbels with which they rake up worms and other ground animals. The turbot will cover itself with sand, and become the very colour of the ground. There it will wait patiently until its prey comes by, when it will rise quickly and seize it. One would suppose that a fish thus stationary would not obtain any great abundance of food. But the fact, that as many as sixty small fishes have been found in the stomach of a turbot, shows how the ocean teems with life. Perhaps the most curious prowler of the ocean is the John Dory, who takes advantage of his extraordinary flatness to approach his prey unperceived. This fish swims in an upright position with its side turned towards the prey—a herring or pilchard usually—and so small is its antero posterior diameter that it can steal quite close without being observed. When it gets within striking distance there is no escape. Undoubtedly the weaker fishes' wits, if they possess any wits, have need to be sharp. If in the stomach of a single turbot sixty sand eels are found—that being probably only a fraction of the day's diet—it seems a mystery how the vast multitudes of marine animals obtain sufficient food. A single shoal of herrings or mackerel will require millions of their favourite prey every day in the year. The food of a whale should be estimated by the hundredweight. And, not only does the ocean supply food to its own denizens, but it feeds countless millions of sea-birds. Ultimately the whole of the pabulum must be furnished by the vegetables which grow in the waters and on the shores. Marine plants are, indeed, extraordinarily abundant and various. Muddy shores are covered with grass-wrack; on the rocks is a thick carpet of green red, and olive weeds; but of greatest importance as food are the microscopic plants which multiply so amazingly as to colour immense areas of the ocean surface, or make the water turbid to a considerable depth. A great quantity of vegetable matter is also carried by the rivers to the sea On this food live the lower forms of animal life, themselves very often of microscopic minuteness. The periwinkle and other shell-fish browse on the weeds of the inshore waters.

In the ocean are great quantities of foraminifera which feed on diatoms and other minute vegetable matter. The bivalve molluscs live on diatoms, foraminifera and other such things insignificant in size, but almost infinite in number. Scallops, oysters, mussels, moving scarcely at all, suck in continuously a stream of water, from which they strain off these tiny articles of food. In the mud and sands are myriads of worms, molluscs and crustaceans, which form the food of animals higher in the scale. On the bottom of the sea the ground-fishes and their food—starfishes oysters, clams, mussels, shrimps, hermit-crabs, razor shells, cockles, etc. Most of these are practically stationary, and many lie quite exposed, so that, except for their defensive armour, they are easy prey But floating in the water is also an immense quantity of food. If the stronger fishes feed on their weaker brethren, they do not hesitate to swallow the lower animals as well The larvæ of shrimps, lobsters, crabs, hermit crabs, etc., rise to the surface, being decimated on the way by the smaller fishes and almost entirely devoured before it is time to descend again. The spawn of herrings is such a dainty that great number of cod and haddock follow the spawning herrings and grow fat upon it. Mr. McIntosh says that eighty boxes of haddocks have been trawled and that the stomach of every fish was found distended by the eggs of herring. The cod itself will give off as many as five million eggs, of which all but a score are sure to be eaten by other fish. Then there are countless numbers of little copepods, said to be found everywhere. On food of this kind some fishes live mainly or altogether, such as sprats, pilchards, and herrings. Thus every kind of lower animal is eaten by one fish or another. But every fish, except the strongest, is also eaten by another fish. The mackerel prefers sprat and other small fish. The brill eats sprats and sand-eels. The whiting eats herrings, but is equally satisfied with a member of its own tribe. The pollack eats sprats and gurnard. The ling preys on gurnard, haddock, seabab, and mackerel. The hake, a night-hunter, devours mackerel, herrings, and anchovies. The skate feeds on whiting, mackerel, and pollack. The spiny dog-fish on herrings, sprats, whiting, and mackerel; the eel on almost anything it can get; while the female conger will appease her hunger with one of the males. The cuttle fish preys on a great variety of fishes, and he forms the chief part of the sperm whale's food. Among the fishes which prey on the lower animals are the cod, plaice sole, haddock, turbot, flounder, and grey gurnard. The plaice eats cockles, scallops, lug-worms, ragworms, sea-mice and razor-shells, swallowing the smaller razor-shells entire and dragging the larger from their shells. The sole lives chiefly on worms; the cod on squids, anemones, swimming crabs; and the turbot and grey gurnard on a variety of crustaceans and molluses.—Standard.

The Story Teller.

A QUESTION OF COLOUR.

"I TELL yer there's a fortin in it," said Peter Grimes, laying a huge paw heavily on the table in front of him—not noisily; that would have attracted attention. The rail structure shook, and waves appeared upon the beer in the pint pots. Peter was a man of substance.

"Yes, if it can be worked all right," dubiously assented his companion. Tommy Batty was a subdued-looking little fellow, in marked contrast to his big, burly, bumptious friend, who was accustomed to lay down the law on every conceivable point, and was decidedly impatient of contradiction.

"What's to prevent it?" demanded Peter, angrily. There had been a time—not so long ago, either—when a proposal of his would scarcely have been questioned. Then he was universally known throughout Aireboro' as "Lucky Peter," the champion among punters, the man who raked in the golden shiners in hatfuls, and promptly squandered them in riotous living. But those blissful days were departed, probably never to return, and his distinguishing adjective now required the negative prefix. It was rare indeed for Peter to make a haul nowadays, although he was clever enough in his way, and absolutely devoid of conscience. At present his chronic condition was that popularly described as "on the rocks." If a brilliant inspiration came to him he was without the funds to carry it out, and he had had bitter experience of the folly of imparting his splendid ideas to others. Time and again a golden harvest had been garnered by men to whom he had confided some of his well-planned coups, and what had been the reward of the great originator? Perhaps a tardy and reluctant half-dollar; oftener—with shame be it said—the price of a beggarly pint, which Peter received with picturesque anathemas—after he had pocketed the coin. It had even happened that when he had applied for the monetary recognition due to his talents he had been contemptuously ordered to take his sanguinary hook to the hottest quarter known to fiction.

At last, however, he had evolved a scheme requiring but the merest trifle of capital to commence with, and which, with the least little shade of luck, must grow and grow with the rapidity of the rushing avalanche till, in the gorgeous future he saw in his mind's eye, it had mounted up—who could say?—perhaps to thousands! And in the working out of his idea no other assistance was necessary than that of his faithful henchman, Tommy—Tommy, who was his humble slave. The little man's regard and admiration for his brilliant friend was simply boundless; for his sake he was willing to risk anything, even to that last appalling calamity the loss of his job. And there could be no doubt that in the carrying out of Peter's present designs Tommy would run the gravest danger of being invested with the order of the sack. He was employed as a sort of odd man at the Centaur Club, the chief betting resort of the sport-loving citizens of Aireboro', and it was this fact that rendered Tommy of priceless value in his leader's eyes.

It may as well be frankly admitted that the enterprise on which Peter was about to embark was not one calculated to commend itself to persons of high moral principle, being neither more nor less than the fond aspiration of the earliest punter, what will most certainly be the final dream of the latest—a method of despoiling the innocent bookmaker by betting on a cert; in other words, backing a horse after it had won.

Poor pencillers! How sad it makes one feel to reflect upon the numberless assaults made upon their unprotected pockets! The prey of wicked jockeys, of crafty trainers, and unscrupulous owners, robbed without remorse by conspiring telegraphists and other thieves too numberous to mention—how, oh! how, do the wretched men contrive to exist? And yet to all outward appearance they bear their troubles with manly fortitude, and come up smiling after the rudest buffets of fortune. Truly, there must be a special providence watching over the gentle fielder.

In olden days, when racing results used to reach the club by the ordinary telegraphic message, Peter, then connected with a gang of "sharps" who used to lay themselves out for "quick results," had engineered more than one successful method of communicating with a confederate in the club when a specially speedy result had come to hand, and had many a big win in consequence. This happy state of affairs, it is true, rarely lasted long, but it was splendid business while it did. But now things were changed; there was a particularly rapid tape-machine at the Centaur, and by comparing notes with a member Peter had ascertained that a certain bookmaker of his acquaintance, Drakely by name, who frequented a pub. close by had been betting on a big handicap quite five minutes after the winner had been proclaimed in the club.

Now, he proposed to reverse his former process, and by getting timely information from inside to victimise the poor outside bookmaker. But it was an extremely difficult matter, seeming at first almost impossible. The doors of the club were closed for a certain time before and after each race, and no one allowed in or out; the windows were of thick muffled glass, and communication by sound was out of the question. Still, Peter did not despair. In the course of his many tours of inspection round and about the club premises he had noticed something in connection with the windows that struck him as likely to afford the chance he sought. The building was an old one, the windows composed of many small panes, and in some of them a pane at the top, for purposes of ventilation, could be opened or shut by means of a cord and pulley arrangement.

A question to Tommy elicited the fact that there was such a pane in the small room behind the bar where his time was usually spent. Here the bottled stuff was stored with which he from time to time replenished the bar, and under the window was a sink for washing-up purposes.

"Can they see the window from the bar?" inquired Peter, anxiously.

"No; it's behind the door at the side."

"Good! Then I think I can see my way."

To a man of Peter's capacity the utilising of the ventilating pane was a simple matter. His idea was this: Taking the probable runners for a certain race from the mid-day "tissue," he represented each by a particular colour—red, white, blue, etc.; and when there was a big field by combinations in addition, such as red and white, black and white, and so on. Provided with strips of paper of various colours, each about a foot in length, by three or four inches in width, Tommy, as soon as the name of the winner was announced in the club, was to climb upon the sink, whence he could easily reach the ventilating pane, and show a strip of the pre-arranged colour through the opening. Peter, on the watch outside, would see the signal, and in half-a-minute could be with Drakely, the easy-going bookmaker. There was little danger of his being observed, as this window opened upon an unfrequented lane.

"But do you think you'll get to know the winner at once?" queried Peter. "Time'll be mortal vallyable just then."

"Oh! lor, yes," replied Tommy. "Minnit it comes through on the tape they're a-shoutin' of it all over the shop."

Peter carefully drilled his satellite for a couple of days, and by then Tommy understood his part perfectly, and operations could be commenced forthwith. But there was a serious difficulty in the way, a difficulty that has marred many a promising enterprise—lack of funds. Tommy's last tanner had gone on a gee that had finished down the course, and Peter, as usual, was stumped. But, being a man of observation, he had discovered that the wife of his bosom had a secret hoard which she wickedly concealed from her lord and master, and after diligent search in the dead of night he found it. Peter had good reasons for believing that the money was intended for the purchase of boots for the small feet of Peter, junior, aged seven, but the stoical father brushed that trifling consideration aside.

"Let the brat wait," he said, as he proceeded to annex the poor mother's savings.

They amounted to six shillings, which, Peter reflected, would allow of a bob for necessary refreshment and a dollar to be planked down for the first gamble.

About noon next day he met Tommy by appointment, and gave him a copy of the issue, with a colour marked against the name of every likely starter for the principal race. Peter judged it more prudent to open the campaign with a single flutter, and he also guessed that Drakely would not be quite so particular about the time he closed his book on the chief event.

The longed-for moment arrives at last, and behold Peter close under his pal's window, watching with all his eyes. Great Christopher! how the minutes dragged along! There must have been at least a dozen false starts, or—dreadful thought—had some horrible accident occurred to prevent Tommy signalling? A cold perspiration broke out all over him.

'Eh, what! Hurrah!" A strip of paper was fluttering from the window!

'White by jingo! What is it?"

Referring hastily to his own paper, marked similarly to Tommy's, he found that white represented Rifleman, and he was off like a shot to the bookie. The dollar, at starting price, was accepted without a murmur, and ten minutes later the evening papers were out. Peter could have shouted for joy as he read: "Rifleman—4 to 1 against."

Words fail to describe the pride and joy of the confederates on realising their success. The amount won was, of course, trifling but Peter's plans had been proved perfect, and their possibilities were boundless. The road to fortune lay fair and straight before them.

"Well, old cockie, what d'yer think now, eh?" cried Peter.

Tommy's countenance expressed the profoundest admiration. "Think? Why, there ain't no body breathin' fit to hold a candle to yer, Peter—no, by gosh, there ain't!"

The great man received the remark as a fitting tribute to his transcendent abilities, and went on:

"Now, old chap, I've made the start, and we've a quid in 'and; but' tain't enough, by chalks. There's the big race at Wickhurst to-morrow with a tremenjus field—there's no knowin' what price the winner might start at. If we'd another couple or so we might easy collar an 'undred. Eh, what!"

"Where's it to come from?" said Tommy, dubiously.

"Why, you've got to find it, of course. Didn't I rob my own flesh and blood for a miserly dollar? And you've said many a time as your missus 'ad got a tidy bit put away somewheres—you get it!"

Tommy shook his head, looking the picture of misery. He stood in mortal dread of his wife, a big, brawny woman quite capable of taking her tiny husband on her knee and spanking him; but the fiat had gone forth, and he had but to obey.

Greatly to his surprise, however, he found his task unexpectedly easy. At first, naturally, his better—and bigger—half scouted the idea of risking her hard-earned savings on a pack of rubbishing horses; but when he pointed out the ease and certainty with which large sums of money might be won her natural cupidity was aroused, and she became all eagerness to share in the good things. From some unknown quarter she produced four sovereigns, which she handed to Tommy, so that the capital of the firm now amounted to five pounds.

Tommy, among his bottles and barrels, awaited the result of the great race with feverish anxiety. At last the clamour of noisy tongues was hushed for a moment, and a voice proclaimed—

"Bertram!"

"By gosh, that's a real outsider," muttered Tommy "what's his colour?" A hasty glance at his paper informed him, and presently a strip of blue paper fluttered for a few seconds from the top pane, and was withdrawn.

When Tommy learned that the winner had started at the stupendous odds of 40 to 1 he nearly jumped out of his skin. "Two hundred quid won!" he chuckled. "Why, it's a fortin."

He thought that the longest day of all his life, but it came to an end at last and he was free to hasten at top speed to meet Peter. To his intense astonishment, instead of finding him in the public-house, drinking and smoking as befitted the occasion, he was walking up and down outside looking as black as a thunderstorm.

A sudden chill fell upon the little man: something dreadful must have happened. "D—didn't you get on?" he quivered.

"Get on! Why, of course I did, you blanky fool!"

"Then w—what are you looking so down about?"

"Good Lord!" yelled Peter "he arsts me what I'm lookin' down about! What did you give me Punter's Pride for eh?"

"I never did; it was Bertram—blue slip."

"It was a green 'un, you gory liar!"

Peter could contain himself no longer. He rushed upon poor Tommy, and at once proceeded to wipe the flags with him. And that was nothing compared to the mauling the unfortunate wretch received at the hands of his justly indignant wife when he presented himself before her with his tale of disaster.

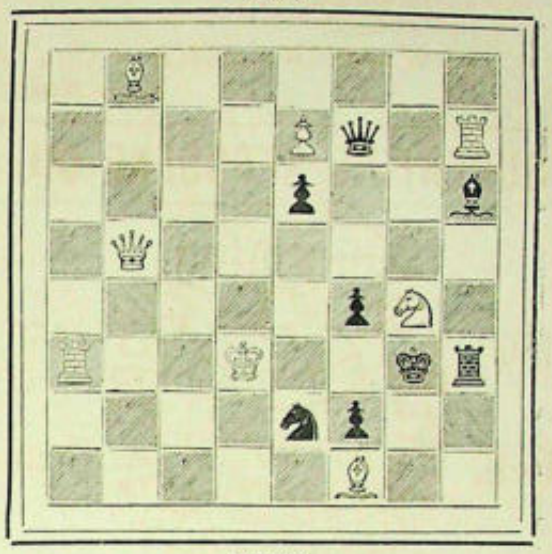
And yet Tommy had made no mistake, and Peter was quite sincere in believing a green paper had been exhibited. The explanation is very simple. Peter had not a good eye for colour, that was all, and had mistaken blue for green, with the disastrous results above chronicled. A small thing, and yet enough to irretrievably wreck the great scheme.

JEMMY BLAND was one of the most illiterate men that ever, stood up in the Ring, but he contrived to make money, and eventually became a recognised power amongst the leviathan of his time. Despite the quantity of business Jemmy transacted he was for many years unable to even write his own name, but possessing a wonderful memory he dispensed with a clerk waiting until he reached home for the quantity of future-event bets he invariably made to be entered.

After his first wife's death Bland engaged a good-looking housekeeper much younger than himself, and she, by careful management, eventually became his confidante. To her care was entrusted the entering of the bets, answering correspondence, etc., until she was regarded as almost indispensable by her employer, who, moreover, it was rumoured, regarded the fair amanuensis with anything but indifferent eyes.

Several times, to Jemmy's great surprise, he found himself forestalled, and eventually could not help thinking that someone knew as much of his affairs as he did, the climax coming when a secret shared by the lady previously referred to was discovered to have become common property. From that moment the suspicious layer had his housekeeper watched, and it soon transpired that a certain handsome young fellow frequently visited her. Jemmy, from a coign of vantage, recognised the caller as one of a gang of "boys" who were always to the front when any chance of "getting a bit" presented itself.

Bland took matters very quietly, but soon had a plan of revenge ready. To the lady who should have guarded his interests not a word of the discovery was mentioned, but some little while before a big handicap Jemmy commanded several letters to be written telling sundry friends that a certain horse was "good" for the race mentioned.



Within a few days the "good thing" was second favourite, several usually "wide" members backing it heavily; but in the race he was "down the course." Bland chuckling heartily, for he had warned the parties interested not to take any notice of communications from him, and had then put a man in to lay the animal, which, as anticipated his amanuensis had told her lover was a cert., and it had been backed, by those in whose interests he was working with the utmost freedom.

On his return home Jemmy told his betrayer something, and without further notice bade her depart, which she did at once joining her companion. The latter, however, having no further use for her services, accused the lady of having sold him and threatened her with such violence that she left him precipitately.

THE BEST OILS FOR MOTOR CARS

Wilburine for cylinders ... Rs. 6-8 per gallon Tin. | Valvoline for Bearings, etc. ... Rs. 5-0 per gallon Tin.

Extract from the "Autocar."

LUBRICATING OILS.—[2422]—It may be instructive to your numerous readers to have the experiences of a motor car experimentalist on the behaviour of lubricating oils for motor work. In the first onset I tried various sorts of oils, all of which left deposits of carbon and gumming matter in the cylinders and valves. These deposits are serious drawbacks, not only to the working of the pistons and valves, but also interfere with the proper sparking at the ignition plugs. I then tried the Valvoline Oil Co.'s oils, using "Wilburine" for the cylinders and "Valvoline" for the bearings, etc.; these being quite pure mineral oils, no deposits either of carbon or gumming matter were left. Every time the pistons, etc., have been examined they were quite bright, clean and well lubricated. The valves also keep in good condition and require very little regrinding. I have been quite free from sparking troubles since using the above lubricants. Any dust that alights on the working parts is easily wiped off, whereas with other oils dirt stuck fast through gumming.

Very much smaller quantities of these oils ("Wilburine" and "Valvoline") about one-third to one-quarter, are required, which more than balances the extra first cost. The wearing surfaces are besides in a magnificent condition. These advantages —viz., high-class lubrication, freedom from deposit in cylinders, gum in bearings, absence of sparking troubles, are too important to be neglected by any motorist.

There is a tendency to use various greases, instead of oils. Engineers have over and over again proved that greases give much greater frictional losses than oils; with motor car engines and bearings the lubricant that gives the least possible friction is the best.

I have referred to the advantages the motorist gets. I will mention another advantage these oils have to those whom the motorist passes, viz., the absence of the fried-fish-shop smell so often noted. Several persons have been very much struck by the absence of smell; even when the car has been standing for some time with the engines running, no trace of offensive odour has been apparent to the bystanders.

I mention these experiences, having no interest in the Valvoline Oil Co., that others may be benefited and save themselves trouble and their neighbours some annoyance.

THE JOCKEY CLUB AND HALF-MILE RACES.

LORD DURHAM'S motion to the effect that four-furlong races be again made allowable for two-year-old horses was carried at the annual meeting of the Jockey Club, after a very interesting and instructive discussion, in which many of the members took part, by the convincing majority of 22 votes against seven. Those who follow the history of Turf legislation will, no doubt, remember that half-mile races used to be numerous until they were done away by the Jockey Club in 1879 for reasons which were then convincing enough. Prior to the year mentioned there was no restriction upon the number of two-year-old events which might be included in the programme for one day's racing; Lord Durham cited as an example the Monday of the Second October Meeting in 1878 when there were no fewer than seven races for two-year-olds. Nowadays only two races for two-year-olds are allowable in one day up till 1st September. Again, prior to 1879 two-year-olds might be run up to a mile.

Lord Durham agreed that the radical changes which have taken place in the English system of racing during the last quarter of a century justified the Club in reverting so far to the old system as to make half-mile races allowable. The old races in which two-year-olds might run for very valuable stakes are done away with: the temptation to owners to run their two-year-olds is much less than it was formerly, as the values of stakes early in the year have been diminished. The chance of overdoing a young horse had been, also, reduced by the prohibition which precludes horses at any period of their two-year-old career from running off a dead-heat: not a very great restriction, perhaps, but one which on occasion has been the means of saving a young horse from an effort that would have proved injurious. Then there is the starting-gate, which has done much to spare horses from the hustling and pulling about which was inseparable from the old method of starting: and lastly the system of riding short races from start to finish, which was introduced by Sloan from America a few years ago, had been for the advantage of young horses. Nowadays there is rarely any waiting in two-year-old races: no holding back and coming with a rush in the last furlong: the race is ridden from flagfall to finish, and Lord Durham seems to hold that this alteration of method of itself is enough to render shorter races desirable in the interest of the two-year-old.

His scheme is to let the youngsters run half-mile races during the first two months of the season and gradually increase the distance over which they may compete. He wished to let them run from four to five furlongs until the Epsom Summer Meeting, as when they became more mature, to let them run up to not more than six furlongs until 1st September: after which date they might run any distance which accorded with the existing Rules. The principle is undoubtedly a sound one: it is idle to urge the total abolition of two-year-old racing, and the proper course to adopt with the young horses seems to be just that proposed, to run them over a distance they can get without undue effort to begin with and to gradually increase the distance. It would be of interest if one of the close students of English racing should make a point of keeping a record of two-year-old breakdowns in the future to compare with similar figures in the past.

Lord Crewe raised objection to the change on the ground that this reduction in distance was not accompanied by any proposal to limit the value of stakes. He thought that unless the Rule were limited to cheap races, there would be temptation to owners and trainers to enter promising youngsters for a four-furlong race which they could resist in the case of a five-furlong race. In other words, he thought the sanctioning of the half-mile limit would defeat its main object by affording undue encouragement to racing of young immature horses. There is undoubtedly weight in the argument: many a young horse in a five-furlong race shows clearly that he has shot his bolt when he has covered the half mile and he finishes the last furlong "shutting up" steadily. Many a two-year-old can be depended on to get the half-mile when his trainer knows he cannot get the additional furlong: and though the very valuable stakes of an earlier period are now done away with, there are plenty of stakes of an amount which will tempt the owner to have the preparation of his two-year-olds pushed on for "only a half-mile race which cannot possibly hurt him." Lord Crewe gave figures to show that this temptation is a very real one. Ten years ago there were seventeen races worth £400 and upwards before the Epsom Summer Meeting: one of these was worth over £2,000 and one over £1,000. This year there were eleven races, each worth over £400, including one worth over £1,000, before the same fixture. Lord Crewe appears to be opposed to two-year-old racing in toto, if we correctly read his speech, but he was prepared to vote for Lord Durham's motion if it were so amended as to preclude temptation to the owners of the better class of race-horses. Mr. Chaplin is well known as an opponent of two-year-old racing, and during his long and honourable connection with the Turf he has been consistent in his endeavours to control and limit it: he was much of Lord Crewe's opinion that these four-furlong races should offer the least possible temptation if the change were made at all. He manifestly, however, regarded reduction of distance with dislike. To offer prizes for such races up to a certain period of the season "surely was not the way to try and induce owners to breed animals of stamina, stout and sound horses, that could run for a longer course than four furlongs."

Mr. Chaplin thought the step proposed "most retrograde" and altogether in the wrong direction. Be it far from us to pit an opinion against an authority so eminent and of such long experience, but it appears to us that racing is long since become an industry or a business in which an element of the undesirable must be allowed as a means of staving off worse. It is not given to humanity to breed horses of such uniform excellence that they are worth keeping and preparing for only large and valuable stakes: there must ever be a large proportion of mediocrities, and these, when possible, must recover at least the fee which was paid for the use of their sire. Legislate away all chance of the mediocrities earning a little money for their owners and many breeders will necessarily be legislated out of the business altogether. It may be admitted that the Turf might be none the worse if many of the youngsters now bred never came into the world at all: but inasmuch as the rank failures are speedily retired into private life, we need not consider the point. Mr. Chaplin was willing to vote for half-mile races for two-year-olds provided they were selling races only. He was opposed to a step that would encourage the production of a class of horse that could get only four furlongs, holding that the Turf had quite enough of these as it is. His view is perhaps rather an extreme one: because four furlongs is the maximum distance a two-year-old new to racing can safely travel at speed, it does not necessarily follow that the same horse will never be able to travel any greater distance in his three and four-year-old seasons.

Lord Londonderry was wholly and entirely opposed to half-mile races on any terms: he objected to undoing what had been done for good reasons in 1879: he held that though the starting-gate had done much to mitigate the drawbacks of the start, a four-furlong race could never be anything but a scramble: and he held it discordant with the true interests of the Turf that a horse which won such a race should enjoy the prestige which attaches to any winner. Also, speaking as a breeder, he felt strongly that Mr. Chaplin was right in holding that four-furlong races would not make for the improvement of the thorough-bred.

Colonel Baird opposed the motion because he thought more harm was done to two-year-olds in the first half of a race than in the latter half; also the hustling that went on to get away from the gate was detrimental to the jockey's riding: and believing that a reduction of distance must aggravate these objections he could not support Lord Durham's motion.

Sir Waldie Griffith was in favour of the motion, because he thought four-furlong races would put their best horses out of court for the early races altogether (wherein his view is diametrically opposed to that of Lord Crewe) as owners and trainers would not enter their good ones for a half-mile scramble. Lord Coventry supported the motion, because he thought the shorter the distance two-year-olds ran in the spring when the ground was often deep, the better for them.

The discussion we have summarised above is interesting if only because it shows what diverse opinions best authorities in England hold on the subject. It will have been remarked that little was said as regards the principle of short races: support or opposition was for the most part based on practical considerations. The change in the rule, however, is made, and it remains to see which party's prognostications will be verified.

Sporting Notes.

BEYOND the fact that it was more or less of a frost, there is not much to be written about the first Tollygunge Gymkhana, of which we gave the bare results last week. The attendance was not particularly good, and the going, in consequence of the course having been recently ploughed up and subsequently drenched by the unexpectedly early rains, was hock deep.

Fields were disappointingly small, five being the largest number of starters, while the hurdle race was a walk-over for Mr. Wheeler's Hailstorm. Not to entirely defraud an expectant audience of their looked-for bit of lepping, however, the solitary candidate generously treated us to a little exhibition of timber-topping as it should be done.

Only three were saddled for the second race, which was considered a good thing for Snapshot, but the mud proved her undoing and the winner turned up in First Guide; though had the galloping been on top of the ground the public selection would have been right enough.

Winterlea was most fancied of a field of five hacks, but here again the selection did not turn up trumps as Day Dream led throughout and, won cantering.

The right one was picked out of the field of four which turned out for the harness pony race, in Mr. Bowring's Flush, a mare with a wonderful pedigree. She only just secured the verdict by a neck, however, from Cyclone, and if it had not been for the fact that the latter's jockey in the excitement of a particularly energetic finish, "came unglued," the order would undoubtedly have been reversed. However, these little accidents will happen even in the best regulated Gymkhanas, and as the favourite got home, no harm was done. A possible objection—it may be mentioned par parenthèse,—was averted by the prompt and energetic action of one of Calcutta's largest and most sporting owners, and who fled hot foot to the rescue of the winning jockey, who had apparently forgotten the important ceremony of weighing in after the race, and was off in the direction of the stables! The last race was regarded as a foregone conclusion in favour of Mr. Hamilton's pretty little mare Pierette; but once again the heavy going told and she succumbed to Nicotine, though an unusually ragged start was also partly responsible for the result.

Four firms of bookmakers were present in the enclosure and seemed to be fairly busy; the "tote" on the other hand was not greatly patronized, though on one race it paid the useful dividend of Rs. 57 per Rs. 5 ticket.

Lord Lamington holds his first Levée in Poona next week when prehistoric frock coats and antediluvian "toppers" get their annual airing. Some of the latter can yield pride of place in antiquity only to the fine old yellow beaver of our great grandfathers, while a few of the coats, though doubtless the pride of their respective sartorial professors of some decades past, would bring tears of anguish to a latter day artist of the tape and scissors.

Mr. Cursetjee Dhunjishaw, the "eminent" handicapper of the Western India Turf Club and Officiating Secretary, has apparently lapped knowledge at the feet of wisdom in the shape of Mr. Cecil Gray, with good effect, as it would seem that he is keeping the Poona race-course and all connected with it and matters racing in an excellent state of efficiency and will no doubt keep matters so till the return of Mr. Gray from England. It would ordinarily not be unreasonable to expect that an Executive Officer from the East would come back primed with fresh ideas from the civilized West; but most men who have had experience of racing both at home and at the headquarters of the Turf in Western India hold that there are few, if any, race meetings in England that have not more to learn from the management of racing in Bombay and Poona than they can teach. Mr. Gray seems to have, like the Japanese, the happy facility of getting the best of everything from everywhere, and bettering it.

Our Poona Correspondent writes:—The Official Measurer held an equine levée, about a dozen candidates coming up for presentation, the ceremony being prolonged, I hear, owing to the misbehaviour of two or three candidates who had not acquired the art of standing steady for the dread ceremony. The present Measurer's methods are, I understand, exactly in accord with those of his illustrious predecessor, so owners and trainers know exactly what they may expect and are not unduly disappointed in consequence.

Even thus early in the training season there are, I believe, nearly two hundred and fifty quadrupeds with aspirations to Turf honours going the "daily round" and a new trainer has entered the lists in the shape of Mumford, who has been entrusted with Mr. Galstaun's string: and a new factor ever adds interest. He is, I am told, a strong and determined horseman, and in him Friar Tuck, who was beginning to get a bit troublesome, found his master, and admitted it. He and his stable companion Vasto work together and I am assured one knows when they are coming.

Aga Shamsudeen Shah has taken a few of his string to Mysore, and one may reasonably presume that whatever he selected was taken not merely for change of air and scenery. Jimmy Robinson, too, has gone there and most of the jockeys have already assembled there. "Where the carcase is."

Those well-known trainers, Thomas Tingey, Andrew Clarke, Bleach and the Parsee Byramjee, are all to the fore and none of them have, I should imagine, many spare stalls, while Pearson is in charge of the select and successful stable owned by the sporting Bhattia owners, Messrs. Mathuradas Gokuldass and Anandjee Nanjee, who win in their turn—and often out of it.

There was a flutter of fast work recently on the part of the Mysore candidates, but work has now, I hear, naturally enough quieted down again. As the first extra day's racing is not till the 30th July, even the most blood-thirsty Arab dealer-trainers seem to be able to control their ardour. And how they love to hear their desert-born steeds rattle on the hard!

The queenly Cricket calls for no serious comment at present—apart from the fact that everyone is glad to welcome back from Somaliland Captain Greig; even though, in spite of his distinguished cricket, the Mullah still must be considered by most umpires as "not out"—"retired hurt" would perhaps be a good decision. The season has opened with the time-honoured XI vs. XXII and Under Thirty vs. Over Thirty, but the results of these interesting contests are not likely to cause a thrill through Hindostan, so I will wait more doughty deeds.

Colonel Sheringham has an unusually strong pack at his command this year, over 40 couple I am told, and has already begun the season with a little blooding of the new drafts—but I gather that in the present parched, baked condition of the ground anything approaching a run would be eminently undesirable. An expert tells me that hounds are improving in condition rapidly—(and if hounds don't improve with Colonel Sheringham, they are not, I opine, likely to improve with anyone else) and will be in rare fettle by the opening day, which is to be some day during the first week of July. The sporting contingent from the Shropshire Regiment will be greatly missed, but it is to be hoped that the two new regiments will more than supply the deficiency by their support.

In Russia racing is being made to pay its war tribute in the shape of a new totalisator tax, which goes to the Red Cross Society. At a recent trotting meeting in Moscow the tax produced nearly £4,000. As is only to be expected, the war is having a bad effect upon racing generally, and it is stated that more than one prominent Russian owner intends withdrawing at the first opportunity.

Rain spoilt the handicap shoot of the Calcutta Clay Bird Club last week. Only six members were able to fire and by the time these had shot off their ties the company were "demmed, moist unpleasant bodies;" the shoot was declared off and the competitors wended their damp and muddy way homewards.

Although the system of walking horses up to the barrier appears to work all right at some of the big American tracks, it has not given satisfaction at others. At the big Memphis meeting in April the method was abandoned after a fortnight's trial, and the standing start reverted to. One objection to the moving start was the delay at the post, caused no doubt by the boys trying to beat the starter. In New York, at meetings under the supervision of the Jockey Club, the moving start is being given a thorough trial, notwithstanding that at least one prominent starter is understood to be opposed to it.

Second entries for the Bangalore Races are published in our Turf columns to-day: they are not particularly numerous. We remind our readers that final entries close on the 1st proximo.

The following are the latest additions to the Calcutta Zoological Gardens:—

1 Nilgai—Boselaphus tragocamelus—Presented by the Superintendent, Muzaffur Jail:

3 Pythons—Python molurus—Presented by M. L. Oakes, Esq., D. S. P., Gonda.

1 Andaman Pig—Sus cristatus (Andamanenses)—Presented by William Rutledge, Esq.

2 Anoa.—Anoa depressicornis—By exchange.

The Gymkhana at Simla, on the 25th instant, was a great success and was remarkable for the large number of entries. There were five events and a match for Rs. 100 between Captain Laverton's Cheemji and Captain Southey's Irish mare. Cheemji won after a dead-heat. The Bending Race brought out 19 entries and was run in heats. Mr. Mant and Captains Smith and Southey appeared in the finals, the first-named winning by a head. Twenty entered for the Egg and Spoon Race, which was won by Miss Tyrrell, Mrs. Courage being second. The Costume Race proved an easy win for Captain Mortimer and the Hon'ble Mr. Heneage. The staff ride, for which 22 entered, was won by Miss Tyrrell, who was the only competitor to go the correct course. Mrs. Heneage and Mrs. Taylor tied for second place. The Academy Stakes was won by Mr. Macleod and Mrs. Collins. There were 25 entries.

A proposal to hold a Sky Meeting, on the 6th August, was being considered by the Rangoon Race Stewards when last we heard from that lively little town.

The Indian Government, having decided to start a pure Arabian breeding stud for military purposes, after the model of those long existing in Austria, Russia, and elsewhere, has just concluded the purchase from Mr. Wilfrid Blunt of four of his best stallions from the Crabbet Park Stud, including the well-known sire Seyal. These will be shipped so as to reach India at the beginning of the cold season. In consequence of this and other English sales, which have been more numerous than usual during the past winter, no public auction will be held this year at Crabbet Park.

The hearing of the appeal of that enterprising Rangoon litigant, Mr. F. F. Goodliffe, in the case of himself vs. The Stewards of the Rangoon Races, has been fixed for the 18th July.

The following account of a tiger shoot, as told by a native correspondent of Russellkonda, is not too bad:—

"May I request you to publish in your daily issue a tiger of an extraordinary size shot on 12th May 1904, by Mr. A. S. Laurie, the Assistant Engineer of Russellkonda. The tiger was attempted by many a country shot, but without a success. The tiger was a shock of terror to the people of the Kallingia villages because it took away several buffaloes belonging to the villagers and subsequently came to be called a Royal tiger on account of its huge size. The country cartmen were panic-stricken by the presence of the tiger in the jungle adjoining the Kallingia road and hesitated to pass the road with their carts for fear of being killed by the tiger. Somehow or other this news reached the ears of Mr. Laurie, who was ever ready and naturally delighted in such games, ventured to meet the foe. It is interesting to know how he despatched the Royal tiger with one final shot.

Mr. Laurie was told by the villagers that the tiger had taken away one of their buffaloes and thrown it dead on the Kurmungia Ghati road. No sooner had he (Mr. Laurie) heard of this, he lost no time and was ready on the spot waiting to welcome the Royal Master. The tiger slowly sneaked out of its den and appeared to sympathise over its dead friend (buffalo) at about 6-15 P.M. Mr. Laurie was watching him lying in concealment about 20 yards distance. The grand master first came and stood by the dead buffalo for over three minutes, then sat in front of his dead friend like a Pilevan (master athletic), resting both his hands on his thighs and looked up to heaven kissing over his dead fellow. After an interval of five minutes he (the grand master) twisted his arrowy whiskers on his majestic face with both the front paws and looked to either side with a challenging attention for a little over a minute, and then commenced to give a bite with his cadaviverous teeth over the neck of his dead fellow (buffalo). Mr. Laurie, who was watching in concealment the chivalrous exploits of this ferocious tiger, waited until he turned his head back and thus securing a position with a well directed aim he (Mr. Laurie) shot him dead on the spot with one blow.

The sudden and powerful shot is said to have made the tiger jump into the sky as high as five yards, and gasping for life fell down from there in full prostration of its length measuring in all 11 feet."

The little vicomtesse sat in the verandah at Le Toquet, and the great game of golf was laboriously explained to her by an expert.

"Ah," she cried at last as sudden light came to her, "I have seen it played at Paris, at Bagatelle, by eight men on ponies."

We publish in our Turf columns details of the Murree Sky Races which, with good entries, fair racing, a good attendance, and the hospitality of the 60th Rifles, were sufficiently successful to encourage the hope that these meetings will be repeated at intervals.

Apropos the recent Murree Sky Races "A Lover of Horses" writes to the C. and M. Gazette:—

"May I suggest to those responsible that this race would be equally amusing if the riders were forbiden to carry whips or sticks. I presume the Stewards know the difficulty the average amateur rider has in using his whip. I remember once hearing a jockey remark about a horse trained in Arthur Yate's stable 'he wont try unless you hit him, and every time the captain hit him he missed him,' but Thomas Atkins was a good deal more successful than some of the sporting captains who wore silk, and moreover, some of them carried weapons like clothes props and even when hopelessly beaten flailed the wretched tats mercilessly.

The bazar pony's life must come as near hell on earth as that of any living creature. Need we rub it in?"

Very seldom has 1,100 guineas to be paid for a horse who is entered in a selling race, the conditions of which state that the winner shall be sold for 100sovs., but before Mr. Hill-Wood could retain Twelvebore after she had won the Mickleham Plate at Epsom on the 3rd instant, he had to run up to the sum mentioned. Twelvebore is a filly by Matchmaker out of ·303, a daughter of Carbine. Mr. Fern, whose Departure gelding finished second, was able to share the very substantial surplus of 1,000 guineas with the race fund, while the value of the race was only 200sovs.

One of the most phenomenal catches of fish on record was made at Oceanside, Los Angeles, Cal. T. J. McGarvin and three assistants ran their seine through the surf, and then were unable to pull it in, owing to the enormous amount of fish they had taken, says the Chicago Inter-Ocean. A team of horses was sent for and attached, and still the catch could not be landed. A second team was procured, and the united efforts of men and teams drew the wonderful catch to the shore. Most of the fish were of the kinds known as yellowfin croakers, fish about eighteen inches in length and weighing 8lbs. or 10lbs. each. It was found when the fish were made ready for market that there were 15 tons of them. Nine tons of them were shipped to Los Angeles, and the remainder were dried at the fish-drying works there.

The Lahore Midsummer Polo Tournament, which is being played on the American system, opened on the 20th instant. Only three teams entered owing to the fact that many players are at present on leave. "A" team met "B" team in the first game, the latter winning by 1 goal and 3 subsidiaries to 3 subsidiaries. The teams were as follows:—Team "A."—R. H. Anderson, 11th Lancers; Captain H. G. Melville, I.M.S; Alexander, 11th Lancers; Morgan, 24th Regiment. Team "B."—T. C. Greenway, 24th Regiment; St. John, 20th Punjabis; Captain A. Smith, C.V.D.; Maxwell, 11th Lancers.

The Mysore week is now in full swing, but skipping, or only lightly touching upon the official festivities, we shall pass at once to matters sporting. It may be said, however, that Government House and the Camp in its grounds now holds nearly 150 guests, and that 145 actually sat down to the State Dinner on the night of the 23rd instant. With the lavish hospitality of H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore and the wonderful organising capacities of Mr. Maconoche, I.C.S., Colonel Godfrey Jones, I.S.C., and Mr. H. Donne, it is hardly necessary to state that everything is being done upon a scale which is far more than generous, whilst the thousand and one little items which go so far towards making up a successful function, have been considered with a care that is hardly short of marvellous. If His Highness' guests are not pleased this year, then indeed they are hard to please.

An account of the racing on the 25th and 28th instant is published in our Turf columns. We tender Mr. Apear our congratulations on winning the Maharajah's Cup with Goldsmith, who started at fives and was very nicely ridden by Penton.

The opening matches of the Polo tournament are also given in the usual place. We shall be surprised if either the Bangalore Gymkhana or the Carabiniers —the latter for choice—do not prove the eventual winners. Jimmy Robinson is there, and as a matter of fact few of the good jockeys in India are absent.

The Bombay Gymkhana held their first mounted sports for this season last week. The weather conditions were most favourable and the ground was not so soft as the recent rain would have led one to expect. The programme was a good one and the afternoon's sport a great success. Messrs. W. E. Crum and F. R. Hill, the Joint Honorary Secretaries, were assisted by Messrs. H. Simmons (judge), J. A. Lord (starter), T. L. Roberts and R. Harter. Proceedings opened with tent-pegging, Mr. W. E. Crum securing first place. The jumping competition was good and was won by Mr. D. Graham, who was one mark ahead of Mr. J. Greig. Mrs. S. McCausland won the ladies' trotting race with Mrs. G. McCausland a close second. The Mounted Infantry race went to Mr. Graham. The Pre-Raphaelite Stakes caused much amusement and was won by Mr. J. C. Bruce and Mrs Miller: Mr. P. Fischer and Miss Mills second. The Pony Scurry was won easily by Mr. Fischer's Heera, Mr. McCausland up: the same Owner's Governer, ridden by Mr. Fischer, taking second place. The Horse Scurry brought the sport to a conclusion, Mr. Romnell's Tyke, ridden by owner, winning in a canter.

Athletic Notes.

THE fact that the Racing Club of France, the crack athletic organization in that country, were opposing a team representing the South London Harriers lent quite an international flavour to the gathering at Stamford Bridge on Saturday. Whereas it has been shown that Continental nations can nearly hold their own with us at rowing and other branches of aquatic sport, our supremacy on the running path is beyond all dispute, and the "Irrepressibles" had matters almost entirely their own way. As a matter of fact, the Frenchmen won only one event, the steeplechase, though it is conceivable that du Coteau might have secured the Quarter had he run with a little more judgment. The "star" performers of the afternoon were Shrubb and C. H. Jupp, the former running away with the Mile and Three Miles, while Jupp was timed to do 19½secs. in the 200 yards Invitation Race. This performance, however, must have flattered him somewhat, as Tremeer was only beaten a shade over two yards.

The following are the results of some of the important cricket matches at home last week:—Lancashire beat Kent by 107 runs; Yorkhire beat Essex by 9 wickets; Derby beat Warwickshire by an innings and 24 runs; Sussex beat Cambridge University by an innings and 93 runs. The matches between Middlesex and the South Africans, and between Surrey and Oxford University resulted in a draw.

On the 24th instant, Kent beat Gloucester by 9 wickets; Marylebone beat Cambridge by 9 wickets; the South Africans defeated London County by 10 wickets. On the 25th instant, Yorkshire beat Somerset by 7 wickets; Lancashire beat Surrey by 70 runs; the match between Sussex and Oxford University was won by the former by 6 wickets, and Leicestershire vs. Hampshire resulted in a win for Leicestershire by 219 runs.

The Committee of the Calcutta Rowing Club have arranged to include in the programme of their regatta on the 30th proximo a sculling race for ladies, should sufficient entries be obtained. Here's a chance for some of our fair waterwomen.

As a golfer improves he finds the temptation to use strong language grow beautifully less, if it never altogether vanishes (says a critic). Apart from these debatable points, however, the real and chief virtue of golf lies in the fact that it is a source of unlimited enjoyment to an evergrowing section of the community. It is a game which all can play, from the schoolboy to the septuagenarian. It is a recreation, not only for any age, but for all seasons of the year. Cricket and football have encouraged the lethargic Chinese joy of "looking on." Golf has not done so, and is never likely to do so to any serious extent. It encourages our natural energetic characteristics, and is, to this extent, a national asset. It is a vigorous, if not violent, pastime. It is, in short, "a delightful labour."

We noticed in a recent issue the Southern India Amateur Racquet Tournament; among our sporting notifications to-day will be found further details thereof, and we would remind our readers that entries and fees must be sent in before Monday next, the 4th July.

Messrs. Krieg and Co.'s new price list, just issued, reminds us that this popular emporium of all that is choice and toothsome in provisions and high-class in wines fully maintains its popularity among a clientele which extends from the Himalayas to Cape Comorin. The present "monsoon" issue of this attractive list displays the neat get-up and interesting contents which we have before had the pleasure to notice and bears evidence of the fact that the firm is determined to keep its position in the van, where we trust it may ever be found.

The entries for the Calcutta Trades Cup closed last Monday, and include twenty-seven teams; which are as follows:—

Jamalpore Apprentice Engineers Recreation Club, Medical College, Gaurandi Football Team, Asansol Football Team, Moslem Football Team, Customs Athletic Club, National Association, Jamalpore Gymkhana, Mohan Bagan, Howrah Sporting, Sibpur Engineering College, St. Joseph's Football Club, Primrose Athletic Club, Rovers Football Club, Aryan Football Club, Calcutta United "A" Team, Calcutta United "B" Team, Lunar Sporting Club, Doveton College, Chowringhee Football Club, Mahomedan Sporting Club, Calcutta Union Club, Phœnix Club, Sporting Union, St. James' Football Club, Entally Football Club, and Bhookalash Football Club.

At the Calcutta Swimming Baths on the 28th instant a water polo match was played between teams representing the Sibpur Engineering College and the Calcutta Swimming Club. At the end of the first half the Swimming Club were leading by three goals to one, but after the interval Sibpur put on five goals, thus winning by six goals to three.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 10th June 1904.

REPORTS of the "unconfirmed" character have been pouring in from the East all the week. On Tuesday the wires had it that Port Arthur had been bombarded for five days: on Wednesday another Russian vessel had been sunk: yesterday Port Arthur had fallen and the Japs had sustained a serious reverse. To-day's morning papers speak of Chinamen being bundled out of Port Arthur in a hurry and the Japanese bombarding the place, at long range for fear of mines; for sensational reports we have to await the evening papers which rarely disappoint. Then we get all that the Russian authorities serve up for their own public; and lots more besides.

Things do not look better for Russia at home than for Russia in the East. It is reported that reservists, officers as well as men, are leaving the country to escape service in Manchuria, the Government preferring to send reservists to the front as a method of counteracting disturbance. There was yesterday a report from Vienna that twelve officers had been shot at Poltava for protesting against their despatch to the East. Deserters are finding their way over the border into Austria. Meantime Japan goes ahead methodically picking up or exploding the mines the Russians scattered with such a liberal hand.

The House of Commons has devoted some of its time since Friday last to that much needed measure, the Penal Servitude Bill. The scheme provides for the classification of convicts and the longer detention of the habitual under conditions less rigorous than those now in vogue. Experts in criminology have for years been urging some such change as this: there is a class of offender who lives by burglary and theft, and who has no use for liberty except to prey on society; it is this class at which the new Bill aims. For an offence which is now awarded three years the habitual will get seven or more, but the greater part of the term, if the Bill is carried, will take the form of mild detention, its purpose being simply to keep the culprit out of mischief. Very instructive were some of the examples of professional crime cited by Mr. Akers Douglas in introducing the Bill: space forbids reference to these in detail; but it appears that out of 2,879 convicts in prison in 1901, no fewer than 2,242 had been more than once previously convicted.

Some progress has also been made with the Aliens Bill. Even the C. B.'s can't manage to work up much thunder over that, having I suppose not entirely lost sight of their radical constituents in their furious anger with the Government, but they do their sentimental best. The Licensing Bill gives them a better chance and the fulminations have been simply lurid. We have not quite dropped Chinese labour as a rod for the chastising of the wicked yet, but it is wearing out, as these artificialities must wear out. Tempers on the C. B. side have been very shaky this week, as Mr. Lowther has found while in the chair in Committee.

The mania for misappropriating an annual Sunday to the perpetuation of somebody or something more or less meritorious has at last attacked the followers of that minor prophet, the late Mr. Richard Cobden, the centenary of whose birth occurred last week. The Cobden Club wanted the nation to recognise a "Cobden Sunday," when the great and good works of Cobden should be preached from all pulpits. The endeavour seems to have met with no very enthusiastic support, and really when Cobden's claims to ultimate beatification are dispassionately considered, charity bids us leave his memory in peace even as charity has forgotten his ravings at the time of the Mutiny. His idea of the Mutiny was it "visited the sins of the fathers upon the children." He wrote that it might have been avoided, had his own countrymen "displayed exalted virtues and high intellectual powers. But I fear the traits most conspicuous in our countrymen have been of a very different character."

He kept all his righteous indignation for those who punished the mutineers at Cawnpore and Delhi, "the bloody deeds now being enacted and which all arise from our own original aggression upon distant and unoffending communities, will be visited with unerring justice upon us or our children." He could never see that our possession of India was beneficial to any native race nor to ourselves, and regarded our dominion as "utterly hopeless," but that was the gentleman's attitude to all Colonial enterprise. He was the smallest, narrowest, and blindest of Little Englanders.

The astonishing thing is that Mr. Cobden should still be accorded rank as a great statesman: every prophecy he uttered has been falsified by events, from the adoption of universal Free Trade (so-called) to our evacuation of India. Stripped of his gift of oratory (misgiven gift to how many misleaders !) he was the most parochial of politicians, who regarded all men of action as emissaries of the devil.

There is something magnificent about the Marquess of Anglesey's bankruptcy: it is not bankruptcy in a legal sense, but I take it to be so in every other. He succeeded to the title and estates in 1898 and the income was £110,000 a year: since then he has run up bills to the extent of £541,000 odd, including unsecured debts of a quarter of a million. His balance-sheet is interesting. He was paying off an original debt at the rate of £5,000 a year: legacy and succession duties and a mortgage he was not answerable for wiped up £11,700 a year: he was paying £13,950 as interest of debts and £38,000 as life premiums to the Insurance Companies from whom he had borrowed on policies. Altogether this capable spendthrift had reduced his income to £10,500 a year, and the poor fellow has no relatives "who could help him." He is abroad just now for the sake of his health and the creditors are trying to arrange matters. It was agreed at a meeting that there should be an assignment to trustees for the benefit of the creditors who would get practically an immediate dividend of 3 shillings in the pound. When the Marquess came into the title and gave up the Anglesey Harriers as a first step, one felt he could come to no good.

I made brief reference in a recent letter to a curious case of death which arose from the accidental omission to remove a pair of forceps from a patient's body after an operation. Another case of somewhat similar oversight has been the subject of an action for damages in the King's Bench Division. A servant sued Miss Thorne, a lady doctor, for damages for alleged negligence. The patient underwent a very serious operation in the abdominal region at Miss Thorne's hands and by an unfortunate accident a "mattrass sponge" was left in the body when the operation, which occupied an hour and three-quarters, was finished. The patient became ill again and a second operation revealed the sponge. The medical testimony showed how easily a sponge of the kind employed might by discolouration be overlooked, and there was room for the supposition that one of those used had come apart in process of removal, the nurse swearing that the number was correct when counted. The jury gave the patient a farthing damages, being influenced by the fact that Miss Thorne had operated without making any charge; but the Judge holding this incompatible with the answers given to the specific questions he had put, sent them back and accepted a verdict carrying £25 damages. It is a disturbing thought that the marvels of modern surgery should be complicated by the risk of appliances being left in one's interior. I feel inclined to speculate on the number of deaths due to such causes which have gone undiscovered or unrevealed.

Christie's was crowded on Saturday when the Orrock collection of old masters was sold. It struck me that the most expensive work was Turner's water-colour "Lancaster from the Aqueduct," which sold for 1,500 gs.: 480 gs. was paid for another sketch 8½ inches by 3¼ inches. Strange how the market value of pictures fluctuates. Ten or twelve years ago the Germans offered in vain £8,000 for Gainsborough's portrait of Mrs. Charlotte Freer to add to the Berlin Museum. On Saturday the canvas went at 3,300 gs. to an English purchaser. Reynolds' "Lady Anne Fitzpatrick" brought 4,000 gs. There were also pictures by Romney, Laurence, Raeburn, Constable and David Cox, but none made sensational prices.

Another crowd assembled at Christie's on Monday when the late Duke of Cambridge's silver plate was sold: the 150 lots brought about £10,000, but there were no sensational prices. The Duke's Canteen set, used by him in the Crimea, partly silver and partly plated ware, brought £120. The Guards Presentation Vase, given to the Duke of York by the Coldstreams, went at 16-3 per oz., £595. A pair of William III.'s two-handled cups brought £4-4-0 per oz., £92-16-6. Some of the 16 inches by 17 inches century German silver-gilt ware sold at high prices and after warm competition: one beautiful little cup, not four inches high, went at £200 to a Bond Street dealer: another, a little larger, but less beautifully chased, brought £280. The catalogue describes something under a ton of silverware. It is said by experts that the Duke's collection of portraits of Royalties is the finest ever brought into a sale-room.

Miss Harriet Ford has not made the best of Stanley Weyman's "A Gentleman of France," which was produced at the Avenue on Saturday. The novel bustles with incident, and with incident that lends itself to the stage, and a more capable hand would have made a good romantic play of the material provided. This version is a poor one: by some fatality the adapter has omitted most of the scenes that suggest themselves and the incisive diction of Weyman's characters finds no echo on the Avenue boards. Wordy to weariness, to any one who has not the story at his finger ends, it is so verbose and confused as to be almost unintelligible. Mr. Murray Carson did what he could with Gaston, but was obviously handicapped by the long speeches which come so strangely from a man of action: and Miss Esmé Beringer put as much life as she could into Mdlle. de la Vire: but the adapter was against them and the applause which welcomed curtain fall was neither spontaneous nor hearty.

The production of Mrs. Lyttelton's "society" play at the Camden Theatre on Monday created more excitement outside than in. The position of the authoress naturally brought what journalistic jargon calls a "fashionable audience" to remote Camden Town to see "Warp and Woof," and Camden Town assembled literally in thousands to see the smart people arrive: mere hansom cabbers could scarcely get near the doors for the crowd. Mrs. Lyttelton must be suspected of writing with a purpose: the whole business depends on the thoughtlessness of great ladies who delay till the last moment to order dresses for swell functions and on the hardships so inflicted on work girls. Act I takes place in Madame Stefanie's show-room, a spectacle of gowns and affluence: Act II in the work-room, a spectacle of overworked girls suddenly relieved by the appearance of an Inspector of Factories, to whose notice some of them have brought their wrongs. The scheme of the play is good, but the most has not been made of it. Mrs. Patrick Campbell as Theodosia the "fitter" had some opportunities at the period when she has accepted an offer to become somebody's mistress in order to get money for her dying sister, after they have been turned out of Madame Stefanie's; but what interest the play possesses crumbles away after the dismissal scene. I should like to know which of the three ladies in the bill acted the red-haired sewing girl: her performance of a minor part was so good as to keep it clearly in one's memory after more important features have dimmed. It was rather a society function than a regular "first night" performance.

It seems to be a growing fashion to give pieces a trial in suburban houses before bringing them into town. A new play called "The Sadducee and the Sinner," has been produced at Kennington; "The King's Diamond" at Notting Hill; and Miss Louie Freear has a company of her own at Hammersmith playing "Boy Bob." Of all these more anon if the acceptance accorded brings them into the heart of London. Miss Viola Tree made her début on Tuesday afternoon at His Majesty's in the part of Viola. Mr. Tree, no doubt, took a liberty with Shakespeare when he transferred Feste's songs "Come away Death" and part of "When that I was and a little tiny boy" to Viola, but the doing was an experiment that made all the difference to Miss Tree. She has a charming voice and sings with great feelings: and the applause deservedly given put fire into her acting. The change was really remarkable, and I bethought me of Mr. Pinero's axiom at a Playgoers' Club dinner years ago, "The atmosphere of art is praise." Miss Tree has been carefully trained, of course almost too carefully, but after her successful song it was curious to see how the trace of the teacher disappeared and how she "stood on her feet." Miss Tree is tall, slight, very pretty and endowed with beautiful eyes. She will be a successful actress: whether great or no remains to be seen. By the way, small gratification was expressed at the inclusion in each "souvenir programme" of an envelope in which we were invited to place a donation to Miss Viola Tree's special collection to the Fresh Air Fund for poor children. It is an excellent charity, but when one goes to the theatre one does not expect appeals to one's purse for extraneous matters. Mr. Tree thanked us for enabling 20,000 poor children to get Concerning the Music Halls, the most noteworthy event is the appearance of Mdlle. Dancrey of the Folies Bergère, one of the most delightful of French dancers and singers : she is the most exhilarating dancer I can remember ; her gaiety and vivacity are really captivating.

Various items : On Wednesday, 1st June, the Cape to Cario Railway reached the Zambesi below the Victoria Falls ; and they await arrival of the bridge sections to go on. Jersey has refused to supply funds for Militia, and the States have been told that if they don't do so the garrison will be withdrawn. It appears to me that the better and cheaper plan would be to withdraw the local mis-government. An Irish labourer, aged 107, has been discovered in a charitable retreat at Clapham ; as is usually the case he is neither an abstainer nor a non-smoker ; odd isn't it how the good die young. The "Fourth" was celebrated in due form at Eton this year for the first time since 1900. Queen Victoria's death, the King's illness, and the fatal fire in turn caused the abandonment of the function in three successive years : a thing unknown in Eton history. Mr. George Marshall, who reported that he had been robbed of £18,000 in notes while staying at the Hotel "Metropole" in January, has been committed for trial on the charge of misappropriating £12,000, the property of his employer, the Duke of Newcastle. The allegation is that he invented his circumstantial story of robbery to cover his own misdeeds. Where shall we find freedom from the motor-car ? Yet another man has driven his machine up to the top of Snowdon and brought it safely down again : that he did it in 61 minutes appears to me no palliation of the offence. The Alake of Abeskuta is making good use of his time in England. Royal Military Tournament, City receptions, Alhambra—his impressions will be a trifle mixed when he gives himself time to think. On Wednesday he went to the Royal Counties show at Guildford and was so much taken with the ploughs he saw that he ploughed a furrow on his own account and ordered half-a-dozen to take home with him. Not before it was necessary a regulation has been issued limiting motors in Hyde Park to ten miles an hour. The British Ambassador at Paris has obtained the release, after a fortnight's detention, of Colonel Gordon Smith, aged 70, who was arrested for taking photographs of an ancient Breton fortress interesting to none but antiquarians. Some pig-headed gendarmerie officer was responsible for the high-handed and foolish proceeding.

MIKE MURPHY'S TIGER.

'TWAS Misther Michael Murphy, visiting the East,
Who wished to shoot a tiger as a noble sort of beast,
So he sought the Forest Officer, and thus to him he said,
"Bedad me bhoy 'tis Misther Stripes I'd dose wid pills of lead."

But Misther Michael Murphy, tho' generally awake,
Had in this single instance made a "thriflin" mistake,
He'd read of shooting tigers from elephants and so
He thought that from a pachyderm he'd lay his tiger low.

But educated elephants who'll stand a tiger's roar,
Are sometimes not available—'twas so in Dustipore.
So Misther Michael Murphy got lots of jungle walking,
Whilst—hardship to an Irishman—his host allowed no talking.

A week went by, and Michael still was tramping through the jungle,
Beginning to be doubtful if he hadn't made a bungle,
Mosquitoes ate him day and night, "wait-a-bits" tore his breeches,
And Misther Michael Murphy pricked his fingers dropping stitches.

The first time Misther Murphy came across a tiger's "pug"
He opened both his mouth and eyes and gave his hair a tug,
"My sowl is that a fut-mark," he said, "'tis like a plate,"
"Begorra if he shteps on us we'll all of us be ate."

One evening Misther Murphy was reclining near his tent,
His host the Forest Officer was out on business bent,
When lo ! there came a jungle man, "Salaam, Salaam huzoor,"
"Bahut burra bagh hai—plenty near—Protector of the poor."

Now though not a Hindooi scholar, Mike Murphy understood,
An uncommonly big tiger was somewhere in the wood,
"Shure now's the time," he thought, "to show that Indian Forest man,"
"The descendants of the Murphies were iver in the van."

He took his twelve-bore rifle and he took his cartridge bag,
The jungle-man went with him, clad in just a single rag,
They quickly took the tracks up, and they followed them until
They tracked that mighty tiger to a sholah on a hill.

All round about that sholah a girdle soon they placed,
Misther Michael Murphy said "Begob he's here the baste,"
They quickly built a large machan and then tied up a bait,
Then invited Michael Murphy to ascend and take his "sate."

But Misther Michael Murphy was short of breath and fat,
And climbing up an awkward tree did not come very pat,
With many groans and many puffs and many shoves behind,
The coign of vantage reached at last he thought Fate wondrous kind.

For many long and weary hours he waited up that tree,
He squinted till his eyes ached, but no tiger could he see,
Cramped and mosquito bitten, as the dawn began to peep,
Mike Murphy and his jungle-man were both of them asleep.

Simultaneously the feline, with the earliest gleam of light,
Having missed his supper—sambur beef—and prowled throughout the night,
Winded the wretched byle and quickly followed up his nose,
One stroke of that tremendous paw and down the bullock goes.

Now couched upon his victim, Stripes drank both long and deep,
And then with tooth and claw began his beefy spoils to reap,
He had had one mighty helping, and had come again for more,
When his meal was interrupted by a most terrific snore.

A tiger seldom looks aloft so Stripes gazed all around,
Searching the bushes with his eyes, but nothing there he found,
He had taken two springs forward, when there came an awful "crack,"
And Michael Murphy's sixteen stone dropped on that tiger's back.

Fast following Misther Murphy, his startled henchman fell,
And, landing on the sprawling pair, uttered an awful yell,
With a "wough" astonished Stripes made off, but two barrels had been loaded,
And at a range of just three yards, Mike Murphy's gun exploded.

'Tis often said Diana to youthful griffs is kind,
And 'tis true as Lempriere's utterance that Love is ever b'ind,
But never was the luckiest griff with such a stake at issue,
So finely served as Michael by his extra fatty tissue.

For as the gun exploded, Fate played a friendly part,
And steered that random bullet straight into that tiger's heart,
Though this may sound a Yankee yarn it is an o'er true tale
And that splendid ten-foot tiger was as dead as any nail.

But from the fallen sportsmen a bitter cry arose,
"Och wirrasthrue," "Aiyo, aiyo," they thus poured forth their woes,
Where they fell down, there they remained, each covering, up his head,
Wishing the thing was over and each comfortably dead.

For a sad and solemn interval, then silence reigned around,
Mike Murphy, henchman, tiger all lay sprawling on the ground,
Then Mike peeped through his fingers and jumped up with a howl,
"Erin-go-bragh" likewise "Hurroo" he's dead upon me sowl.

And then with "pomp and circumstance," the bearers twelve they came,
With "embroidery" his jungle-man extolled the sportsman's fame,
There was much congratulation from his generous Forest host,
And Michael Murphy's tiger has become an annual toast.

An annual toast in Ireland with the little Murphies round,
When Mike describes with gusto, how he lay upon the ground,
But rose upon one elbow and took a deadly aim,
The bullet sped, straight to the head and slew the noble game.

If you would ask me how I know all that befell that day,
"Natives are sometimes venal" is what I fain would say,
But Mister Michael Murphy's true name I may not tell,
For he's a friend of many years and faith I like him well.

B. A. B.

ADVENTURE WITH A CROCODILE.

WHILE sitting in my verandah early one morning in October last discussing my chota-hazri, the "Baega" (priest) of my principal village came rushing at a very unusual rate of speed for such a high dignitary, and sat down in my verandah gasping and quite knocked up by an experience which his old bones were not accustomed to. By his wild appearance I at once concluded that something very serious had occurred in his domestic arrangements, and having lost ground came rushing to me for protection. He was, however, too excited to remain quiet and all my attempts to pacify him having failed, I was compelled to listen to his speech, which was delivered in gusts, and gradually the real facts came out, viz., that he had narrowly escaped being made a feast of by "Old Nick" himself in the disguise of a huge crocodile while he was crossing an inland hill stream about half a mile from my bungalow.

To enable me to fish the real truth out of this naked semi-savage I began by sympathising with him ; observing what a fearful calamity it would have been for the immediate population had he been carried away and devoured by this bhoot crocodile, to which he at once concurred and breathed a word of approval as to his importance, and judging from the dignified air he assumed one might have imagined himself in the presence of at least a bishop than that of a poor ignorant dirty semi-savage. I again got him on the subject of his narrow escape, and it seems he was crossing the nalla where it is shallow to inspect his crops on the other side accompanied as usual by his favourite dog, when half across a huge black mass rose from the centre of the pool to his right with evil intent. The "Baega" realising the situation at a glance turned to the right about and ran according to his own account faster than he ever did in his life before—with the crocodile close at his heels determined to lay hold of and make a feast of him. The "Baega," however, thinking he was done for, was giving vent to his feeling by producing numerous unearthly yells and as a last resort to save his precious bacon jinked the alligator by leaving the pathway and running up a steep hill, but this sudden move placed the dog in his pursuer's jaws. It was killed on the spot and dragged back to the pool at the crossing.

As I had nothing particular to do that day, I thought I might as well go out and interview "Old Nick" in his disguise, for being an intruder he had to explain his presence on my property. I at once looked up my cartridge box, but could find only two shell cartridges, remains of old stock, with which to stay this renowned monster. About 30 well-seasoned braves were collected, and we all left as bold as lions. Stories relating to their former deeds of bravery were being freely discussed on the way, and as I listened attentively concluded myself fortunate in having such experienced and bold warriors to join me in the coming fight. We were not long in reaching the scene of the struggle where the dog was killed, the track was followed up to the pool where the "Baega" very cautiously looked over the bank and immediately signed to me to come alongside, which I did, and low and behold there lay at the clear bottom a huge black and very ugly looking mugger with the dog in his mouth. The water was very clear which made the depth deceptive, but as he did not look far from the surface I at once prepared to put a couple of shells through his ribs. All became suddenly quiet, and on looking round for my bold hunters not one could be seen, all having fled to a man. Some distance off I sighted my holy friend, the priest, high up a tree. I requested him to come and stand by me, but he shook his head, stoutly declining the invitation, saying he did not want to be killed ; the others had all disappeared up the hill well concealed behind rocks, leaving me quite alone facing the enemy. As I saw assistance from such a cowardly lot was hopeless, I at once levelled my gun and fired both barrels into the black mass below, but as no disturbing result was visible, I began to think I had killed him and communicated my impression to my brave followers who began to drop in very cautiously. After the water cleared, I looked over the bank and there saw the crocodile in the same position and spot, not having budged an inch. The coolies had made up their minds that he was dead, all, no doubt, inwardly hoping that such was the case. I knew better, and warned them to keep well away from the bank.

As I had no more ammunition a couple of dilapidated spears of uncertain age, probably of Noah's period, were brought from the village, not at all promising looking weapons with which to attack such a monster. I selected the strongest and had it lashed to a good sound sapling, and when all was ready slipped it into the pool which was about four feet below where I stood. On looking round to call for assistance all the coolies had disappeared, leaving me alone surrounded by hills and dense jungle with the sleepy-looking croc in front of me. Of course, my experience of such animals did not go beyond shooting them on the banks of the river and they always appeared to me to be a sleepy, slovenly and unwieldy lot ; so that I was quite ignorant of the danger and activity of this animal, no doubt the natives were fully aware of his capabilities ; but had this been explained to me in detail, I would certainly have disbelieved them and acted as I did. I lost no time in raising my heavy spear with both hands and dug it in between the brute's shoulders with all my might, but in an instant the infuriated brute rose to the surface, pushing me up the bank and lashing the water with his tail into a perfect sea, throwing volumes of water all over the place. He tried to hit me with his tail. His first attempt at this was nearly successful, but seeing his game I gave him more pole and defied him and held my spear into him with all my might. Failing to lay hold of me he then seized the pole in his mouth, twisting his head and neck round it like a snake, his small eyes gleaming and flashing his rage and contempt for his assailant, wishing no doubt he had him between his jaws. After a fearful and determined struggle he released himself by giving a sudden jerk with the whole of his body, thus throwing the spear out of my hands, bending it out of all shape and pitching me almost head over heels without ceremony on the rough bank with a splinter of wood forced into my hand during the last round, but of course this wound was not felt at the time, and until the final fight was over pain had no consideration.

My quarry then quietly sank to the bottom, I withdrew my spear from the pool, and while meditating how to repair it to renew the fight my braves began to crawl in, the "Baega" returning with a few more looking very much scared, and re-opened our conversation by saying "Sahib, let us sit down and discuss matters." This I refused to do, at the same time instructing them to hold their council of war while I repaired the damaged spear. Shortly afterwards they came back in a body saying that they had unanimously concluded that the creature was a bhoot, and if we did not let him alone there would be murder in the end. I certainly agreed with them so far that he was a decided shaitan; but I meant to bag him all the same. I ordered the trembling coolies out of my sight. The first encounter they witnessed was evidently more than enough for them, as they all stoutly refused to assist where murder would be the result, and all deserted me for the second time and retreated to their former place of safety. I had just slipped my spear, lashed to a new and heavier sapling, over the bank, and while meditating where to strike the enemy, I observed three natives running along the opposite bank who joined me as speedily as possible and at once volunteered to assist in the struggle. These men came from a distance, being boatmen in my employ, and made of different stuff to the cowardly lot here; without delay we dug the spear in the saurian, who immediately rose to the surface again renewing his lashing of the water, but was not nearly so savage as he was on the first occasion; he soon sank to the bottom through exhaustion and from repeated spear thrusts was speedily converted into a corpse and dragged out on the opposite shore with many shouts of victory from my cowardly crew whose bravery suddenly returned when all danger had vanished. The creature was cut open for examination in case he might be in possession of valuable treasure. His stomach contained a lot of human bones and eighteen zinc bracelets which had turned the colour of iron. Enquiries were subsequently made in my own and other villages if any had been killed by this animal, no one had been lost in the near neighbourhood, so that he must have been new to this place. Judging from the size of the bracelets the girl killed must have been about ten to twelve years old. I do not know whether an account of this encounter will be interesting reading or not, all I can say is that the fight was a grand one, and I would go a long way to enjoy such another.

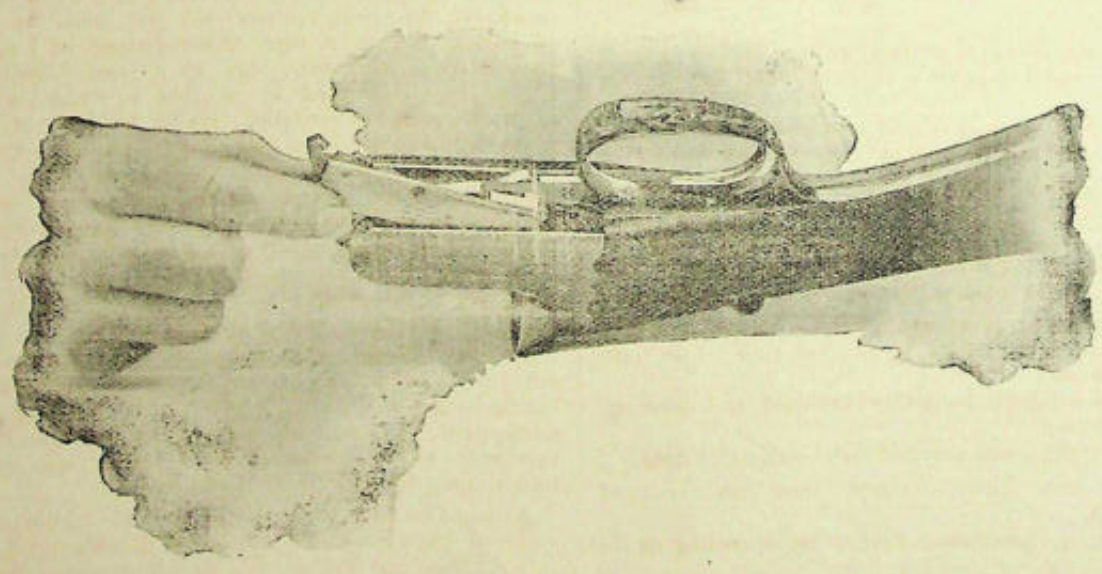
WESTLEY RICHARDS' DETACHABLE LOCKS.



AMONG the many inventions for which sportsmen are indebted to the ingenuity of modern gunmakers there are few which commend themselves more to us than the detachable lock mechanism which Messrs. Westley Richards and Co. patented a year or two ago. There is nothing novel in the actual mechanism of the lock action: it is the Westley Richards' well-known Hammerless Gun with their Anson and Deeley patent which was introduced nearly thirty years since and whose strength, simplicity and reliability have earned the popularity it continues to enjoy. Incidentally, it may be remarked that this hammerless gun-lock reduced the action, which until 1875 had vogue, by no less than fifteen parts. The difference between the complexities of the old lock and the simplicity of the Anson and Deeley can only be fully realised by placing examples of the two side by side for comparison: the ingenuity of the latter, which consists of only four main parts, the cocking jifter, hammer, mainspring and gear, then speaks for itself.

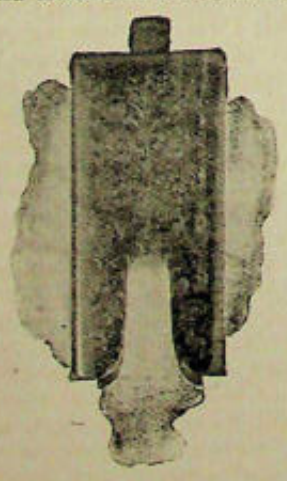
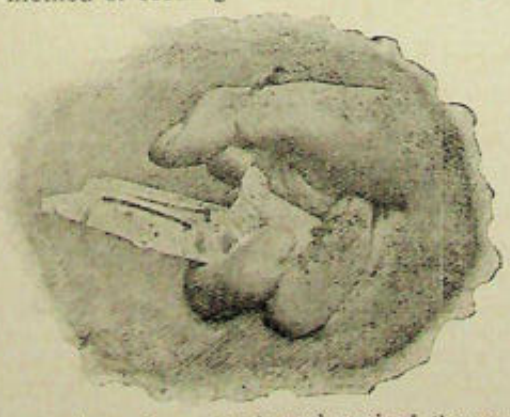
The Westley Richards' detachable lock.

It is this mechaniam, the Anson and Deeley to which Messrs. Westley Richards apply their "hand detachable" principle. The lock is built upon a plate and each plate with its lock drops easily into the body and is held in position by a cover plate which is furnished with a catch; there is neither pin to draw nor screw to turn; the catch does everything. To remove the lock (or locks for each is distinct from the other) the gun is cocked by opening the breech and the fore-end is taken off; pressure on the catch, which fits into a suitable groove in the fore-end, releases the detachable lock on its plate which comes clear away from the gun.



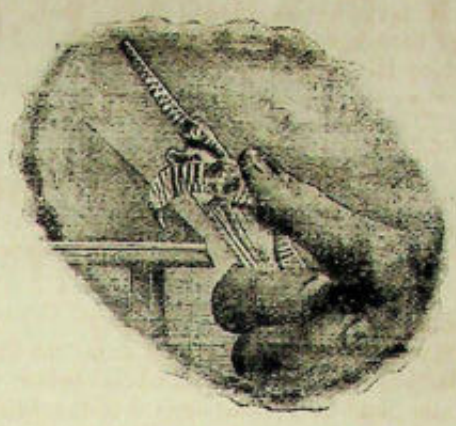
No. 2
Inserting the lock.

To replace it the hammer is cocked and the lock is slipped back into the body as before, the cover plate is placed over it, gentle pressure sending the catch home to retain it in place



The simplicity and the advantages of this invention are such that one involuntarily enquires why nobody thought of it before—the truest compliment that can be paid any invention. The advantages are self-evident. If one lock comes to grief it can be removed without disturbing the other and sent for repair. The plates fit with such nicety into the body of the gun that there is as little risk of the locks being affected by rust or damp as in the case of an ordinary gun, while for ease of cleaning, the detachable locks are infinitely superior to the immoveable mechanism.

No. 3.
The cover plate with catch which goes over locks and holds them in position.



Those of us whose weapons have suffered from the curious fingers of enquiring native servants will appreciate the advantages of an invention which enables one to remove the locks and put them away apart from the gun. If one falls in mud or water while out shooting and the gun seems to have suffered, the locks can be removed for examination in half a minute, wiped dry if necessary, and as quickly replaced. The system is applicable to either hammerless gun or hammerless rifle of any calibre.

No. 4.
A method of cocking the lock before using it.

To a man who spends months beyond reach of the gunsmith these locks are literally a boon: and be it observed that Messrs. Westley Richards provide duplicate pairs of locks—gilt if desired, to preserve them from rust—to fit the gun: a reserve whose value we can appreciate more fully in this country of slow posts and long distances than can people at home. The cost of the extra pair of locks is £4 10s.: they are put up in a neat wash-leather lined case of a size and shape that will go conveniently into the pocket.

No. 5.
Another method of cocking the lock by pressing the hammer on the edge of a bench or table.

It should be noted that this welcome contrivance is obtained without the sacrifice of anything in the shape of strength or adjustment: the detachable lock gives us much and deprives us of literally nothing. It is practically impossible to tell that the locks are on the detachable principle by glancing at the gun, with such beautiful neatness is the invention arranged. The stud which operates the catch of the cover plate as already said is countersunk in the fore-end and thus it is impossible for the locks, or either of them, to be displaced by accident: the fore-end must be removed before the locks can be taken out.

The illustrations need no explanation. It may be said, however, that when the locks are out of the gun, they may be cocked when necessary by the thumb. To prevent the point of the striker hurting the thumb, a small horn cap is placed over the hammer, but this may be dispensed with and the lock cocked as shown in Fig. 5, which is also extremely simple.

THE SPIDER'S LICK.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The writer of those natural history papers "What animal is that" says spiders are harmless. Well I'd'n'o s'much about that. There is a kind found in Chittagong that causes some horrible sores. It is said that they eject some acrid secretion which blisters. Anyway, a friend of mine once suffered the attention of the spider and the sores extended from his ear to his shoulder. Many people thought he had scrofula. I have seen a native's face scarred for life from the same cause, and scarred so badly that he could hardly be recognised when the sores healed. Well, now, what spider is that? And how does he do it and what's it done by. Bite, sting, ejection? If the writer of those papers has never heard of this creature I shall be glad to put him on the track and you can give him my name, but really he ought not to say that because they don't bite they are harmless. A man and a maid in a kalajuga don't bite I guess. Query—Are they harmless or should it be 'armless.

MYSORE RACES, 1904-05.

(By Special Telegram.)

STEWARDS:

Col J P Grant | E Maconochie, Esq
Lt-Col J Desaraj Urs | R L Kindersley, Esq
M Khantaraj Urs, Esq | P F Bowring, Esq

Secretary and Clerk of Course—H Donne, Esq

First Day, Saturday, 25th June 1904.

The Mysore Meeting opened in dull and slightly showery, but pleasant weather. The attendance was good, the Maharaja and Yuvaraja being early on the course. It was decidedly a backers' day, favourites or second favourites, coming home in every race ; but on the other hand in three out of five events another horse was well backed, so the bookmakers got their chance. Seven pencilling firms were on the course and they laid fair prices. Unless stopped by weight of money. Details :—

The Lilliput Plate.—Rs. 1,000. Rs. 500 presented by M. Lakshmi Kantharaj Urs, Esq., with Rs. 500 added from the Fund, of which the second pony will receive Rs. 100. For Arab ponies 14 hands and under. 14 hands to carry 9st. 7lbs. W. I. Penalties—Winners, since 31st March 1902, of a race value Rs 200 or more once 4lbs.; twice 7lbs.; three times or oftner 10lbs. Winners since the above date of races, value as above, of the aggregate value of Rs. 2,000, 3lbs. ; of Rs. 5,000, 7lbs. in addition to above penalties. Allowance—Maidens, 7lbs. 6 furlongs.

Aga S Shah's b a h Oriental, 9st 2lbs ...	Robinson 2
Major Bell's b a h Matussan, 8st 11lbs ...	Lansdowne 3
Mr White's g a h Robin, 9st	Hoyt 0
Mr Franklyn's g a h Bijli, 8st 5lbs ...	Elliott 0

Betting : 6 to 4 on Oriental, 5 to 4 agst. Ptarmagan, 20 to 1 each Robin, Bijli, and Matussan

Oriental was left six lengths. Matussan led for a furlong when Ptarmigan, went by and made the pace a cracker ; Oriental came through his horses and took second place two furlongs from home, Robinson riding hard, but never approached Ptarmigan who won in a canter by eight lengths, Oriental was eased ; four lengths between second and third. Time—1min. 25secs.

The Macintire Plate.—Rs. 1,000, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 100. For horses which were maidens on the 1st of January 1904. W. A. and C. Penalties—Winners, since 1st January 1904, of a race value Rs. 200 or more, once 4lbs.; twice 7lbs.; three times or oftener 10lbs. Winners since the above date of races value as above of the aggregate value of Rs. 2,000, 5lbs. in addition to above penalties. Entrance—15th 6 furlongs.

Mr Chowdry's b e f Nightingale, 8st 5lbs...	Lansdowne 1
Lt-Col Desaraj Urs' b. aus g Red Coral, 9st 10lbs	Melsom 2
Hon Mr Apcar's br aus g Spithead, 8st 12lbs	Penton 3
Lakshmi Khantaraj Urs' b aus g Cecil. 9st...	Thompson 0

Betting : 7 to 4 and 2 to 1 on Nightingale, 2 to 1 agst Red Coral, 4 to 1 Spithead, 10 to 1 Cecil.

Spithead gave trouble at the start and eventually broke the rope barrier.

When off to a good start Cecil led for a few strides but was passed by Nightingale. The latter made the running at a fast pace ; Red Coral came up at the turn for home, but Melsom was early at work on him and Nightingale won fairly comfortably by one and a quarter lengths ; six lengths between second and third. Time—1min. 17⅘secs.

THE ARAB PLATE.—Rs. 1,500, of which the second pony will receive Rs. 300, and third Rs. 200. For Arabs. W. A. reduced 7lbs. Penalties—Winners, since 31st March 1902, of a race value Rs 200 or more, once 4lbs.; twice 7lbs.; three times or oftener 10lbs. Winners since the above date of races, value as above, of the aggregate value of Rs. 2,000, 3lbs.; of Rs. 5,000, 7lbs., in addition to above penalties. Allowances—Maidens 7lbs. Ponies under 14 hands 7lbs. Cumulative. 1¼ mile.

Mohamed Haji Ebrahim's ch a h Gallant, 9st 6lbs	Heroo	1
Mr Moss King's b a h King Cobweb, 7st 10lbs	O'Neill	2
Mr Richard's ch a g Selpme, 8st 10lbs ...	Elliott	3
Col Sprot's ch a h Harefoot, 9st ...	Capt Randall	0
Maharaja of Mysore's b a h Khundoos, 8st 4lbs	Thompson	0
Mr Webster's b a g Derision, 8st ...	Melsom	0
Major Bell's g a h Scattercash, 8st ...	Hoyt	0

BETTING: 6 to 4 on Gallant, 3 to 1 agst. King Cobweb, 4 to 1 Scattercash, 6 to 1 Derision, 8 to 1 each Harefoot and Selpme, and 10 to 1 Khundoos.

After a good start, Derision made the running from Khundoos, Selpme, King Cobweb, and the favourite last. They ran in this order for three-quarter mile when Gallant and Harefoot improved their positions and King Cobweb dropped back last. At the distance Harefoot died away and Derision was already done with. O'Neill brought King Cobweb through and challenged Gallant vigorously, but the favourite won, all out by three-quarters of a length; three lengths between second and third. Time—2mins. 24⅘secs.

THE FARM PLATE.—Rs. 1,000, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 100. For C.-B. horses. W. A. reduced 4lbs. Penalties—Winners since 31st March 1902, of a race value Rs. 200 or more, once 4lbs.; twice 7lbs.; three times or oftener 10lbs. Winners since the above date of races value as above of the aggregate value of Rs. 2,000, 3lbs.; of Rs. 5,000, 7lbs. in addition to above penalties. Allowance—Maidens 7lbs. 5 furlongs.

Jaffer Mohomed Mystery's beb g Upstart, 9st 9lbs	Heroo	1
Capt Randall's br cb f Miss Ascot, 8st 11lb	Hoyt	2
Maharaja of Mysore's Clara, 6st 11lbs ...	Melsom	3
Aga S Shah's g cb m Pardon, 8st 11lb ...	Kamad	0
Lakshmi Kantaraj Urs' ch cb m Phyllis, 7st 11lbs	O'Neill	0

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Upstart, 3 to 1 agst. Clara, 4 to 1 each Pardon and Miss Ascot, and 6 to 1 Phyllis.

Pardon led out from a fair start of which, however, Clara got much the worst. Upstart lay second to Pardon until a furlong from home where Heroo asked the question of the favourite and quickly had the race in hand winning by two lengths; three lengths between second and third. Time—1min. 5⅗secs.

THE MEDIUM PLATE.—Rs. 1,000. Rs. 500 presented by M. Kantharaj Urs, Esq., with Rs. 500 added from the Fund, of which the second pony will receive Rs. 100. A handicap for ponies 14-2 and under. ¼ mile.

Lt-Col Desaraj Urs' b aus m Mamao, 9st 11lbs	Lansdowne	1
Major Gunn's br aus g Dandenong, 8st 10lbs	Melsom	2
Mr West's ch aus m Firebrand, 9st 2lbs ...	Elliott	3
Lakshmi Kantaraj Urs' ch aus m Queen Cole, 11st	Thompson	0
Mr Kindersley's br e m Freda, 9st 5lbs ...	Hoyt	0
Capt Dailey and Mr Neilson's b aus m Felicity, 9st 5lbs	Capt Randall	0
Capt Ward's b aus m Dolly, 8st 6lbs	Meah Jan	0
Maharaja of Mysore's b aus m Doris, 6st 9lbs	Bennett	0

BETTING: 5 to 4 agst Mamao, 6 to 4 Freda, 4 to 1 Dandenong, 5 to 1 Queen Cole, 6 to 1 Firebrand, and 10 to 1 Felicity.

Dolly and Doris were quickest at the start, but we soon found Mamao racing Freda until two furlongs from home; Freda then fell back and Dandenong rapidly improved his position and challenged the leader, but the favourite held her own and won without being pressed by a length; one and a-half lengths between second and third. Time—51⅗secs.

Second Day, Tuesday, 28th June 1904.

(By Special Telegram.)

The attendance showed a great improvement, and to-day's fields, with the exception of the first race, were excellent. The Maharaja and Yuvaraj, the Maharani, the British Resident and General Nixon were on the course, and there were many ladies on the grand stand. It was not, on the whole, a backers' day. The field for the Cup was really excellent both as regards numbers and class. It provided a fine finish, too; Penton rode Goldsmith with great judgment. It was a very open race. Details:—

THE YELLANDUR PLATE.—Rs. 1,500. Presented by Sir P. N. Krishnamurthi, K. C. I. E., Dewan of Mysore, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 300, and third Rs. 200. A handicap for C.-B. horses. 1 mile.

Capt Randall's br cb f Miss Ascot, 7st 5lbs	Hoyt	1
Jaffer Mahomed Mystry's b cb g Upstart, 10st 7lbs	Heeroo	2
Col Grant's b cb h Prime, 7st 2lbs ...	Gooloo	3
Aga S Shah's g cb m Pardon, 6st 4lbs ...	Kamad	0

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Miss Ascot, 2 to 1 agst. Upstart, 4 to 1 Prime, 10 to 1 Pardon.

Prime made the running for a furlong, with Upstart last, Pardon and Miss Ascot in the order named. At the half mile Pardon was leading Miss Ascot, Upstart still last and coming into the straight Miss Ascot went round her horses and assumed command. Upstart came up second, a furlong from home and made his effort but weight told and Miss Ascot won in a canter by a length; ten lengths between second and third. Time—1min. 49⅘secs.

THE MYSORE SERVICE PLATE.—Rs. 2,500, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 300 and third Rs. 200. A handicap for Arab horses. R. C.

Maj Hamilton's Jack Horner, 6st 4lbs ...	Kamad	1
Mahomed Haji Ibrahim's ch a h Gallant, 9st 10lbs	Heeroo	2
Col Kavanagh's g a h Money Spinner, 8st 2lbs	Hoyt	3
Aga S Shah's ch a h Sandow, 8st 6lbs ...	Robinson	0
Col Sprot's ch a h Harefoot, 8st 3lbs ...	Bennett	0
Capt Dailey and Mr Stewart's ch a g Selpme, 8st 11lb	Elliott	0
Mr Webster's b a g Derision, 6st 12lbs ...	Melsom	0

BETTING: 6 to 4 on Sandow, 3 to 1 agst. Gallant, 5 to 1 each Money Spinner and Selpme, 6 to 1 Jack Horner, 8 to 1 Derision, and 10 to 1 Harefoot.

Jack Horner led out from a good start and took a clear lead of several lengths, with the favourite going after him, Selpme and Derision next, and the rest in a string. At the seven furlongs post the favourite was leading, and coming into the straight Sandow was second to Pardon, the rest closing up. Two furlongs from the finish Gallant caught Pardon and the favourite was beaten. At the second enclosure Jack Horner came through full of running and won comfortably by a length; three lengths between second and third. Time—2mins. 22secs.

H. H. THE MYSORE MAHARAJA'S CUP.—Rs. 3,000, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 300 and third Rs. 200, to which will be added a Cup, of the value of Rs. 500, presented by H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore to be given to the winner. A handicap for horses. R. C.

Hon Thelluson's b nth am m Madeira, 7st 2lbs	Hoyt	0
Maj Hamilton's b aus g Scissorman, 7st 2lbs	King	0

BETTING: 5 to 2 agst. Bundook, 3 to 1 each Ayrdale, Corrie Roy, and Misty, 5 to 1 Goldsmith, 6 to 1 each Madeira and Trenton and 20 to 1 each Scissorman and Pope.

Wild Raven was first away, but Scissorman passed him and took the lead twenty lengths, from Misty, Madeira, Corrie Roy, and Ayrdale in the order named, the three last being Bundook, Goldsmith, and Trenton. Scissorman was caught by Misty at the six furlong post and fell away beaten. Coming into the straight O'Neill was driving Bundook into fourth place and Misty looked all over a winner. A hundred yards from home Goldsmith challenged, got the best of the struggle, and won a good race by three-quarter of a length; one and a half lengths between second and third. Time—2mins. 9⅘secs.

THE STABLE CUP.—Rs. 1,000, of which the second pony will receive Rs. 100. A handicap for ponies 14-1 and under 6 furlongs.

BETTING: Evens Cocos, 4 to 1 each agst. Mamao and Dandenong, 5 to 1 Ocean, 6 to 1 Freda, 10 to 1 each Lancer, Firebrand, Nipcat and Felicity.

To a somewhat straggling start Firebrand and Freda got away best and at the five furlong post Freda had a clear lead which he retained to the distance. The favourite then came up and a good race ensued, opposite the stand Cocos drew away and won by one and a quarter lengths; one length between second and third. Time—1min. 19⅖secs.

THE BIRTHDAY CUP.—Rs. 2,000, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 400 and third Rs. 200. A handicap for horses. 5 furlongs.

BETTING: 2 to 1 agst. Nightingale, 5 to 2 Carburton 3 to 1 each Harpist, Beadsman, and Red Coral, 6 to 1 each Gum, Tecoota and Spithead, any odds Wadhurst.

Nightingale made strong running with Carburton and Beadsman next. Coming into the straight Harpist came up second and Carburton dropped back a furlong from home, Harpist passed Beadsman but could not reach the favourite who won in great form by a length and a quarter; two lengths between second and third. Time—1min. 2secs.

MURREE SKY RACES.

Saturday, 11th June 1904.

A VERY successful afternoon's racing was the general opinion of those who witnessed the sport at Gharial to-day. Entries were fair and the course in good condition. THE TURF.

KEMPTON PARK MEETING.

THE fourth of June celebrations at Eton and elsewhere accounted for the absence of several prominent patrons of the Turf from Kempton, but the conditions were such that a large crowd was attracted to Sunbury, and the gathering must have proved a brilliant financial success. The members' enclosure had not been so well filled this season, and the dainty toilettes of the fair sex which lit up the lawn served as a vivid reminder that Ascot is but a few days distant. The rustic charms of the umbrageous park were vastly appreciated after the stress and turmoil of Epsom, and the card amply sufficed to provide an exhilarating entertainment, the enjoyment of which was enhanced by the summerlike environments. A cool easterly breeze tempered the fierce heat of the solar rays, and the course, covered as it was with a profusion of herbage, yielded perfect going. Details:—

LINGFIELD PARK MEETING.

The week before Ascot is always very quiet, and, with two or three exceptions, the racing is of an unpretentious character. This gives trainers of high-class thoroughbreds a nice opportunity for staying at home and concentrating their attention on the aspirants to fame and fortune on the Royal Heath—an advantage of which the leading lights of the profession are not slow to avail themselves. Most of the combatants at Lingfield on the 7th instant hailed from the country stables, and if they were of moderate calibre the sport was nevertheless enjoyable. It could hardly fail to be so amidst to-day's environments. A strong north-easterly breeze tempered the heat of the solar rays and rendered the atmosphere pleasantly cool, but except in the members enclosure the attendance did not seem to quite reach the average. This may be accounted for by the fact that the counter attractions of the metropolis are very numerous and varied at this season of the year. The course was in beautiful order.

Won by three lengths ; a length divided second and third. Flower of Teviot filly was fourth, Albynes fifth, Snooker sixth, Merry next, and Walk In last. The winner was sold to Mr. Jersey for 360 guineas.

The universal 'tip' for the Ford Manor Plate in the morning was Chicory, but Mr. Liddiard's three years old—who had been run into by a cab last night—remained in his stable, and odds were always laid on apresl, with 10 to 1 on offer barring her and Hopetoun. It was an uninteresting and one-sided contest, the favourite's victory being assured half a mile from home, and she cantered past the post five lengths in front of the Manton horse. The mare was very much on the big side when she finished last of four to Chicory, Sakubona and Gun Carriage at Warwick in the spring, but she stripped in very different fettle to-day and ran like a thorough stayer. She filled second place behind Roe O'Neill for this race a twelvemonth ago, when Hopetoun was last, Mistle had defeated Tay filly so decisively at Harpenden (though the verdict was only a length in her favour) that Escott's filly seemed to possess a chance second to none in the Godstone Two Year Old Selling Plate, and her party were lucky to get such a nice price as 3 to 1 about her The good thing was very nearly coming undone through the overconfidence of Halsey, who eased the daughter of Mimic and Palmiste when she was out by herself at the distance, with the result that Gallop On, coming with an electrifying rush opposite the stands, got to the favourites neck as they swept past the judge. Mistle should have won very easily, but Gallop On is doubtless pretty useful. The Dead Heart colt by Darnley appeared erroneously on the card as a gelding. Escott was able to retain the winner for 160 guineas, and Vive la Reine (advertised as for sale, win or lose) was sold to Mr. Dean for 24 guineas. Details.—

SOUTH AFRICAN'S TOUR.

MATCH v. WORCESTER.—Played at Worcester on 2nd, 3rd and 4th June. Worcestershire won by 137 runs. Although the South African cricketers have now been for some time in England they have hardly become accustomed to turf wickets, and it was a good performance to run Worcestershire as close as they did, especially as H. K. Foster and Arnold were both in splendid form with the bat, while Arnold also bowled very well indeed. Foster's brilliant innings of 107 lasted for about two hours and three-quarters, and included twelve 4's. The partnership between Foster and Simpson-Hayward produced 102 runs in an hour and a half, and it was all the more noticeable because when it was commenced, six wickets had fallen for 81 runs. Simpson-Hayward was batting for two hours for his 58. When stumps were drawn the visitors had made 80 for three wickets. On Friday Mitchell played a great game but was so poorly backed up that Worcestershire had a lead of 66 on the first innings. When the home team went in a second time Foster again played a fine innings, putting on 18 runs in partnership with Arnold, whose 82 runs were made by beautiful cricket. The visitors had to make 301 to win, and when the day's play ended had scored 5 of them without loss On Saturday the South Africans began so well that at one time the total was 106 for one wicket. Tancred was in great form and Mitchell and Shalders rendered their side great service. Unfortunately there was an astonishing break down in the batting when Burrows went on to bowl, and the last six wickets fell for 30 runs.

MATCH v. CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—Played at Cambridge on 6th, 7th and 8th June, South Africans won by 70 runs. The South African cricketers gave a good account of themselves on Monday in this match, but towards the end of the day the weakness of their bowling became noticeable. Their visit attracted the largest crowd of the season. The best innings of the day was the 50 of Sinclair, who played beautiful and powerful cricket for about an hour. He and Shalders put up 59 for the first wicket, and at one time the scoring board showed 131 for three wickets. There was then a breakdown in the batting, which was arrested by a good stand by Halliwell and Shepstone, who, in a little over half an hour, increased the total by 50 runs. As the wicket was excellent, it did not seem at all likely that the University would have any difficulty in beating the visitors' total of 216, but at the commencement of their innings Sinclair met with such success with the ball that when only 18 runs had been made four men were out. But Phillips and Wilson added 50 runs in thirty-five minutes, and for the next wicket McDonell and Hopley made 85 in forty minutes. During these last two partnerships the bowling of the tourists was made to appear quite commonplace. When stumps were drawn Cambridge, with three wickets in hand, were 45 runs behind, McDonell being not out 53. The 'Varsity only increased their total by 26. Sinclair then played another excellent innings for the visitors but no one else except Mitchell, who played a very fine game indeed for his 1 2 not out, made a good score. Nevertheless, the 'Varsity had to make 265 to win. They began badly by losing Eyre before a run had been scored. The success of the South African bowlers did not end here and they dismissed half the Cambridge team for 67. But McDonell and Phillips then remained together until the total was 141, leaving the University still to make 165 to win, but this proved too hard a task yesterday.

The Sportsman's Safety Stirrups.

Are the only successful "SAFETY" for men.

A "wrench" is due to the foot being momentarily held fast through the ordinary stirrup adhering to the boot or the stiffness of a safety bar. The Patent Stirrups, by means of revolving thimbles at A, B and C, entirely obviate this by giving instant release to the feet, and thus reduce the bad effects of a "fall" to a minimum.

MIDDLESEX vs. YORKSHIRE.—Played at Lord's on 2nd, 3rd, and 4th June. Middlesex won by 77 runs. It was only natural that this match should have attracted a vast amount of attention, for Middlesex, the champions, are this year, as well as last year, the favourites of fortune, while the Yorkshiremen still create a certain amount of awe wherever they go, although their bowlers seemed to have all been turned into batsmen. Middlesex had the good fortune to win the toss and began to bat at about twenty minutes past two on a wicket which, while it was by no means in favour of the batsmen, was far easier than it became on the next morning. Their display was decidedly good on the whole, for although four wickets were down with the total at 24, Warner, E. A. Beldam, MacGregor and Foley all played such plucky cricket that when stumps were drawn the total had been raised to 183 for the loss of three more wickets. Warner's innings was worthy of the highest praise, for he made his runs at a time when Hirst was bowling superbly and when other men were quite at sea. E. A. Beldam only made eight, but there have been innings of 80 of less value to a sight, for he stayed in for an hour at a most critical time. It must have been an unpleasant surprise for the Yorkshiremen when Foley and MacGregor, who came together with the total at 76 for seven wickets, began to take charge of the bowling, and eventually to master it. The light was bad and it was by no means easy to make runs, but for about a couple of hours they remained at the wickets, without making many mistakes. Altogether their display was one of the best of the season. Their unfinished partnership produced 107 runs. But on Friday morning they were soon out, Foley leaving at 197 and MacGregor at 20. It was seen from the way in which the bowlers obtained the upper hand as soon as play began on Friday morning that every run made during the day would have to be fought for, and no one could have been greatly surprised when the Yorkshiremen failed to distinguish themselves against Trott and J. T. Hearne, who were both admirably suited by the wicket. None of them, except perhaps Ernest Smith, ever looked like making runs, and the follow-on was only just saved. Nor did Middlesex fare much better when, with a lead of 142, they went in a second time. But Warner again played admirable cricket. The last eight wickets fell for only 25 runs. Hirst and Rhodes were unsuccessful, although on a similar wicket they would have been deadly last year. Jackson and Haigh, however bowled with great effect. Yorkshire had to make 238 to win, and although the wicket was still very difficult, they made a fight which was quite worthy of their reputation as players of an uphill game. With the total at eight Tunnicliffe was bowled by Haigh, and spectators prepared themselves to see a procession. But there is no man in the world who can play a game against enormous odds better than F. S. Jackson, and with Denton as a partner he was now seen at his best. He and Denton proceeded to knock off Trott, making 26 off five overs, and by so doing they did a very great service to their side. They both played a great game, and put on 50 runs for the second wicket. The fourth wicket fell at 93, and then Rhodes and Wilkinson doggedly kept up their wickets till stumps were drawn with the total at 169 for four. Thus 129 runs were still required. Rhodes was not out 11 and Wilkinson not out 22. In the Yorkshire second innings on Friday it was noticeable that although the batsmen were getting the best of the situation, Bosanquet and G. W. Beldam were not called on to bowl. It was pretty certain that if the sun came out on Saturday morning Yorkshire would not be able to make the runs, as the wicket would be exceedingly difficult. The sun appeared at full strength, and everything turned out just as had been anticipated. Wilkinson and Smith were very soon dismissed, and although Rhodes played steadily and did his best to save the side, wickets continued to fall, and at the end of an hour Middlesex had won easily. Lord Hawke, who carried his bat, played a plucky game, and possibly might have saved the situation if anybody could have stayed with him.

SUSSEX vs. NOTTS.—Played at Trent Bridge on 2nd, 3rd and 4th June Notts won by 226 runs. On the first day of this match the Notts men covered themselves with glory. They put together a total of 313 on a slow and easy wicket which never dried, and then got rid of three of the best Sussex bats, including C. B. Fry, for 47. They had chiefly to thank A. O. Jones and Iremonger for this happy state of affairs, for the two men put on 173 for the first wicket in a little over two hours by really brilliant cricket. But Iremonger was badly missed with his score at 13. After this good beginning the bowlers began to meet with better fortune, and although J. Gunn, Anthony and Oates all made useful scores, the total fell short of what had been anticipated. On Friday morning Sussex began their uphill game badly, for Relf and Ranjitsinhji were both disposed of when they seemed set, but Newham, as usual when he reappears in the team, played a fine defensive game and was ninth out after batting for two hours and a quarter for an invaluable 69, the highest and best innings of the day. Notts went in again with a lead of 135, and when stumps were drawn they had made 225 for the loss of six wickets, so that they were 360 runs on, and had a remarkably good chance of winning the match. Jones and Iremonger again played a fine game, putting up 66 for the first wicket, while J. Gunn and Anthony kept together for a little more than an hour. Fry made a brilliant running catch behind the bowler, disposing of Hemingway. When Notts had added 43 on Saturday morning without further loss, the innings was declared closed, and Sussex had to make 404 to win. Unfortunately for them, neither Fry nor Ranjitsinhji did anything big, and although Relf played a fine game, while Newham again did well, the result was never in doubt. Score.—

WARWICKSHIRE vs. ESSEX.—Played at Edgbaston on 6th, 7th and 8th June. Warwickshire won by an innings and 110 runs. After a series of small innings for Essex, Sewell was sent in first in this match, and proceeded to play his true game with brilliant success. He was only at the wickets for an hour and twenty minutes, but in that time he scored 107, his hits including nineteen 4's. In an over from Moorhouse soon after the match began he made four boundary hits. Carpenter also played a very fine innings, and only just missed making his hundred. He was at the wickets for three hours, and helped Sewell to put up 142 for the first wicket. After Sewell was out, the play of the Essex men was not very noteworthy, but Russell and Read played finely towards the end of the innings. When stumps were drawn Warwickshire had made 33 for the loss of a wicket. On Tuesday there was a succession of good scores, Quaife and Lilley especially playing very fine cricket. Quaife and Lilley put on 136 for the sixth wicket, and when play ended for the day, Quaife was still unconquered with 178 to his credit, while the total was 532 for seven wickets. Yesterday Quaife reached 200 after batting for five hours. Score.—

SUSSEX vs. DERBYSHIRE.—Played at Brighton on 6th, 7th, and 8th June Sussex won by an innings and 65 runs. These two counties resumed their annual contest on Monday after an interval of twenty years Ranjitsinhji, who has not been the Ranjitsinhji of old this year although he has made a few good scores, was taking a rest, but as C. B. Fry happened to be in brilliant form the Derbyshire bowlers had plenty of work. Fry played a magnificent innings, and the only chance that he gave was of a kind which is taken very rarely indeed. He was at the wickets for four hours and a-half, and was seventh out with the total at 376; his innings of 226 included twenty-two 4's. In partnership with Vine he put up 175 for the first wicket in two hours and ten minutes, and although Relf was the only other batsmen besides Vine who helped him much he made his runs so rapidly that this did not greatly matter. When stumps were drawn the total was 392 for eight wickets. A heavy thunderstorm on Monday night affected the wicket considerably, and the Derbyshire batsmen with the exception of Wright, who played a splendid game, did not greatly distinguish themselves. Hopelessly behind Derbyshire had to follow-on. By the time that the day's play ended Derbyshire were in a hopeless position, for with only two wickets in hand they were still 152 runs behind. Yesterday Ashe oft played a great game.

ATHLETICS.

L.A.C. EVENING MEETING.

A good deal of interest was attached to the evening meeting of the L.A.C. held on the 8th instant at Stamford Bridge, owing to the fact that the programme included a 7-mile Level Race and "Yacht" Handicap confined to members of the Stock Exchange. For this twenty-two were allotted starts from last year's winner, T. E. Hammond, J. Levy having the limit of 9mins. 30secs. The chief absentees were E. F. Broad, G. Hoare, and the brothers Nicholas, and on the publication of the handicap J. T. Jull was perhaps the most fancied. The weather proved bright and fine, but the competitors had to contend against a stiff north-east wind. With all the men starting off the mark, first place in the actual race was voted a certainty for Hammond, and not troubling himself about the handicap, he made a waiting race of it until the last half-mile, when he came away and won by a dozen yards. Details:—

440 Yards Hurdles Challenge Cup.—J. B. Densham (holder), 1; C. D. Comrie, 2. Densham jumped off with the lead, and never being caught, won easily by twenty-five yards. Time (63-⅕secs.

300 Yards Handicap (members) (first three in each heat to snart in final).—Heat 1: C. W. B. King; 24 yards starts, 1; E. H. Flatt, 16, 2; H. Watson, 7, 3; W. H. Orton, 9 0; P. A. Casserley, 23, 0; J. R. Barnes Moss, 34, 0. Won easily by two yards. Time—33secs. Heat 2: E. F. Goodale, 26 yards start, 1; R. E. Wright, 22, 2; E. S. Ward, 21-3; L. F. Tremeer, 5, 0; J. B. Densham, 7, 0; C. D. Comrie, 7, 0; R. S. Paine, 13, 0; E. F. Vowles, 30, 0. Another easy win by a yard and a half. Time—32⅕secs. Final heat: E. F. Goodale, 26 yards start, 1; R. E. Wright 22, 2; H. Watson, 7, 3; E. H. Flatt, 16, 4; E. S. Ward 21, 0, C. W. B. King, 24, 0. The limit man was never caught, and won by two yards, three dividing second and third. Time—32⅕secs.

Francis Fry, 3mins., O. C. Nickalls, junior, 5mins. 20secs., and A. Bingley, 5mins. 30secs., did not finish.

Hammond led for the first lap, closely followed by Hare-Duke, Jull, and Knights. Three hundred yards later Hare-Duke went to the front with Hammond next, H N. Duke third, Jull fourth, and Knights fifth. This order was maintained for six miles. At two thousand yards Bingley retired, and Fry stopped at three miles and a half. Up to six miles and a half not more than eight yards separated the first four. Here H. N. Duke took command and Hammond walked into second place. Half-way through the last lap but one, however, Hammond went to the head of affairs for the first time, and despite a sturdy effort from H. N. Duke he won cleverly by a dozen yards; twenty-five yards divided the next two.

S.L.H. SUMMER MEETING.

Quite an International flavour was imported into the proceedings in connection with the above meeting, decided at Stamford Bridge on Saturday, owing to the presence, as competitors, of the pick of the members of the Racing Club of France. The "Irrepressibles," as the South Londoners have long been known, and the Frenchmen are old and friendly rivals in the matter of athletics, for twice previous to Saturday they had met and contended for honour and glory. On each occasion victory rested with the Britishers, who for the third time showed, in rather a marked manner, their superiority over the young gentlemen from the other side of the Channel. The conditions could not have been more favourable. The sun shone from a sky of almost cloudless blue, while the programme included the names of many of the foremost amateur athletes of the day. For some reason, difficult to explain, the attendance was not what it should have been, considering the charming weather and the very interesting card put forward, the proceedings attracting less than two thousand spectators. Details:—

100 YARDS MATCH.

E H Clube, S L H 1
H Tissier, Racing Club, France 2
H Watson, S L H 3
A Klingelhoefer, Racing Club, France 0

After a splendid start, Clube, Watson, and Tissier were level at the half-distance. Here Clube forged slightly ahead, but Tissier, finishing strongly, was only beaten half a yard; the same distance between second and third. Time—10⅖secs.

100 YARDS HANDICAP (Open).

Final Heat.

H Courlander, S L H, 7 yards start 1
R Lemoine, Racing Club, France, 9 2
E E Parkhurst H H H, 8 3
C J Limpenny, R N College, 6½ 4

The South London harrier drew steadily on Parkhurst, and catching the Frenchman in the last stride won by a yard; a foot between the second and third. Time—10secs.

880 YARDS MATCH.

E H Montague, S L H 1
M Scalhat, Racing Club, France 2
E Langlais, Racing Club, France 0
P B Dodd, S L H 0

The Frenchman made play, with Montague lying third and Dodd last for a lap. Soon after entering the second circuit Montague ran right away and won by twelve yards. Only two finished. Time—2mins. 0⅘secs.

ONE MILE MATCH.

A Shrubb, S L H 1
P A Casserley, S L H... 2
L de Fleurac, Racing Club, France 0
A Moreau, Racing Club, France 0

Shrubb ran right away from the flash of the pistol and won by 200 yards. Moreau stopped at a quarter and Fleurac in the third lap. Times—Half mile, 2mins. 6⅘secs; one mile, 4mins. 28secs.

880 YARDS HANDICAP (Open).

Final Heat.

C G Turner, Gainsford A C, 62 yards start 1
H E M Martin, S L H 65 2
J F Lintott, Ranelagh H, 62 3
J Ellingham, Elstree A C, 75 4
T Stuart, Putney A C, 75 5
T W Blott, Ranelagh H, 70 6

Turner, who was always handy, took command half-way round the last lap and won cleverly by five yards; two yards between the second and third. Time—1min. 56⅕secs.

120 YARDS HURDLE MATCH.

H P Phillips, S L H, ... 1
M Rachon, Racing Club, France 2
A Gowing, S L H 3
A Klingelhoefer, Racing Club, France 0

A splendid race. Up to the seventh obstacle the four were almost level; then Phillips and Klingelhoefer drew out. They rose almost together at the last hurdle where, however, the Frenchman blundered and fell, leaving Phillips to win by five yards. Time—16⅕secs.

440 YARDS MATCH.

J B Densham, S L H. 1
Bellin du Coteau, Racing Club, France ... — 2
E Langlais, Racing Club, France 3
E H Montague, S L H 0

The last named, after making the best part of the running, was pumped out at three hundred yards. Du Coteau turned into the straight with a lead of four yards, but Densham, finishing with all his well-known grit, wore the Frenchman down and won by a yard and a half. Time—53⅕secs.

Final Heat.

C H Jupp, L A C 1

Jupp forged steadily away from the start, and at the half distance he was two yards ahead. This in the next fifty he increased slightly, and finally he won very cleverly by two yards and a half in 19⅘secs., equaling E. H. Pelling's record time.

1,000 YARDS STEEPLE CHASE MATCH.

M Soalhat, Racing Club, France 1
F J Spencer, S L H 2
G Filiatre, Racing Club, France 3
P B Dodd, S L H 0

Dodd fell at the water and retired, and Filiatre, after leading for nearly half a mile, gave way to Spencer. The last-named looked like winning, but he was beaten for pace and defeated by five yards. Time—2mins. 44⅕secs.

THREE-MILE MATCH.

A Shrubb, S.L.H. 1
J Versal, Racing Club France 2
A Moreau, Racing Club, France 0
F A Knott, S.L.H. 0

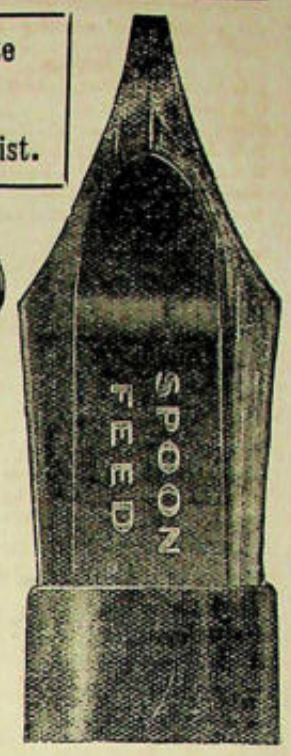
As in the mile, Shrubb adopted cutting down tactics, and bounding away, he soon took a lead of twenty yards. This he increased as he liked. Moreau retired at a mile and a quarter and Knott at two miles, and finally Shrubb all but lapped Versal, who was beaten by 430 yards. Times—One mile 4mins. 41⅕secs.; two miles, 9mins. 44⅕secs.; three miles. 14mins. 42⅕secs.

POLO.

THE HURLINGHAM CLUB, FULHAM.

Held as it was under the most pleasant weather conditions, and numerously attended by the leaders of London Society, Saturday's meeting at Hurlingham proved a huge success. Of the two matches decided the most important was that between Ranelagh and a home contingent, the former being given a trial in view of their engagement in the Champion Cup Tournament this week. This season Ranelagh have been enabled to place two teams in the field for this important competition, and the side that did battle was their second string. The quartettes were constituted thus: Ranelagh: Mr. A de Las Casas, Mr. R. Grenfell, Capt. the Hon. G. Morris, and Capt. A. E. W. Harman (back); Hurlingham: Mr. J. Bellville, Capt. G. J. Fitzgerald, Mr. John Watson, and Capt. the Hon. Dudley Marjoribank (back). Umpire: Mr F. Bellville. No sooner had the ball been thrown in than Hurlingham assumed the aggressive, making a combined run to their antagonists' end and scoring through Mr. Bellville within a minute of the start, but immediately after an exchange of territory had been effected Ranelagh drew level with a goal by Mr. Grenfell. Hurlingham then again took the lead, Mr. Bellville securing their second point, and they maintained their advantage until nearing the end of the second period, when their defence fell twice in rapid succession to shots by Major Morris and Capt. Harman. Play in the third stage ruled very fast, and was slightly in favour of the home team, who, however, missed an excellent opportunity of equalising after Capt. Fitzgerald had made a capital run and left the ball favourably placed within a few yards of the posts and at half-time they were in a minority of three goals to two. At the close of the third period Hurlingham were attacking hotly, and early in the succeeding bout Mr. Bellville credited them with a third goal from a scrimmage, but Mr. de Las Casas soon enabled Ranelagh to again forge ahead, and they finally won by four points to three. The visitors played well together, and were unlucky not to have registered more goals. In the succeeding match the sides were Hurlingham: Mr. H. W. Hudson, Mr. Burdon, Lord Villiers, and Mr. Mann Thomson (back); Pelicans: Col. Martyr, Mr. F. Newman, Major K. McLaren, and Mr. T. B. Drybrough (back). Capt. Blacker umpired. At the midway interval the board denoted two goals all. Hurlingham eventually proving successful by three goals to two. Mr. Buckmaster was present, and has made such rapid recovery from the accident sustained at Roehampton on Monday last that he will be able to play for the Old Cantabs in the Champion Cup.

ROEHAMPTON CLUB.



Roehampton was well attended on Saturday, when extremely interesting play was witnessed. Of the four matches that figured on the programme a commencement was made with that between Handley Cross and the Old Cantabs, the latter not being at full strength in the absence of Mr. Buckmaster. Sides: Handley Cross—Mr. H. Rich, Mr. F. Jay Mackey, Capt. Neil Haig, and Col. W. Gordon Renton (back); Old Cantabs—Mr. W. McCreery, Mr. F. M. Freake, Mr. O. P. Nickalls, and Capt. Godfrey

Haseltine (back). Half-time saw Handley Cross with the slight advantage of three goals to two, which they had increased by four to that number on the completion of the fourth period, but the Old Cantabs had placed themselves on terms with ten minutes remaining for play. During that time Handley Cross scored twice to the Cantabs' once and thus achieved the victory by the narrow margin of six goals to five. In the engagement between the Royal Artillery and the 1st Life Guards, the former had registered three goals to two at the midway interval, and they finally rode off the winners by seven to four. The teams were: Royal Artillery—Major H. N. Schofield, Capt. Aldridge, Capt. Gosling, and Major Young (back); 1st Life Guards—Lord H. Grosvenor, the Hon. C. Fellowes, Capt. E. W. Clowes, and Mr. E. Brassey (back) A most important match was that in which Rugby (the winners of the Champion Cup last year) opposed Rochampton, as both have again entered for that tournament. After playing for fifty minutes, the sides were level at three goals all. Rochampton then went to the front, and won by six to four. Sides: Rochampton—Capt. H. Wilson, Mr. M Nickalls, Mr. P. W. Nickalls, and Capt H. Lloyd (back); Rugby—Mr. W. Jones Lord Shrewsbury, Capt. E. D. Miller, and Mr. C. D. Miller (back) In the other contest, the quartettes were arranged thus: Free Traders—Mr. R. Emmet Major Powell, Mr. F. Bellville, and Mr. K. Marsham (back); Rochampton—Mr. C. Bucknall, Mr. C. Grenfell, Mr. W. Roylance Court, and Mr. J. B. Dale (back). The Free Traders led by six goals to three at the end of the third period, and won by eight to five. The Band of the 14th (King's) Hussars gave a number of spirited selections.

LONDON POLO CLUB.

In beautiful weather, the members of the London Club met an Eden Park team at the Crystal Palace on Saturday when the home side gained an easy victory. The sides were: London—Mr. M. Burge, Mr. W. Farquhar, Mr. R. Tryon, and Mr. E. Blake (back); Eden Park—Mr. F. Holder, Mr. E. De Clermont, Mr. E. Covell, and Mr. A. Holder (back). Umpires: Messrs. Fleming and Parsons. At half-time the London Club led by nine goals to one, and they eventually won by fifteen goals to two. For London, Mr. Farquhar scored five goals, Mr. Tryon four, Mr. Burge four, and Mr. Blake two. The Eden Park points were gained by Mr. De Clermont and Mr. A. Holder. A match, in which Married (Mr. Wilson, Mr. E. Webb, Mr. B. Fleming, and Mr. Trollope) opposed Single (Mr. Porter, Mr. J. Parsons, Capt. B. Turner, and Col. Grainger) followed, Mr. Farquhar umpiring. In a well-contested game the bachelors were beaten by six goals to five.

THE RANELAGH CLUB, BARN ELMS.

The Ranelagh club was largely patronised on Saturday. Two polo matches were decided, in the first of which a home team—Messrs. I. Bell, Nigel Baring, Guy Gilbey, and J. C. de Las Casas (back)—took the field against the Wanderers—Messrs. W. V. Beatty, M. de Las Casas, A. Dugdle, and H. Schwind (back). Capt. Scratchley officiated as umpire. It was a keen and close game, the Wanderers having all their work cut out to defeat Ranelagh by have goals to four. Chief interest centred in the succeeding encounter, which was between the Magpies and the premier Ranelagh combination, both of which were playing sides that will represent them in the Hurlingham Champion Cup this week and consequently the match served as an impromptu trial for the sterner contests in the tournament mentioned. The sides were: Ranelagh—Capt. Jenner, Mr. A. Rawlinson, Mr. F. A. Gill, and Mr. H. Scott Kobson (back); Magpies—Capt. G. W. Hobson Major. J. Vaughan. Capt Ulric O. Thyme, and Capt. H. R. Lee (back). Of such a one-sided nature was the scoring that the game calls for little comment. There is no gainsaying the fact that Ranelagh are in extremely formidable team, but one had certainly expected the Magpies to make a much better fight. As it was they made a very poor show, and after being in arrears at seven goals to one at the end of the third period, had ultimately to strike their colours by ten goals to two.

THE WEASEL.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HUNT.

ON Monday (20th), the meet was at Sandy Nullah Toll Bar on a wet, windy morning very stormy and with driving clouds. As was to be expected there was only a small field out. We first drew Lawley's Course blank and also Gibb's Shola. Briar Shola was also empty, but from the swamp below Wapshare's Hare Shola we picked up a line and hunted slowly with a very bad scent as far as the earths below the Old Pykara Road, when hounds killed a half grown cub. The line which had brought us here took us on to Khed Shola, hounds running fast here and there for a short distance, but never being able to carry on far long. A stag sambur went away in front of them at Khed Shola, but they took no notice of him and puzzled out the jack's line back to the Old Pykara Road at the seventh mile across it and down to the swamps on the north side. Here they began to go along faster, but were soon brought to their noses again and a long check followed. Recovering the line we had some very pretty slow hunting, turning gradually left handed until we found ourselves in Tada Coffee Shop Shola where scent improved. Crossing the Pykara Road, hounds ran through the lower part of Road Shola and on to Dormer wood. They were now beginning to press their jack and though sambur and jungle sheep were jumping up in all directions they stuck to the line and forced the jack out above Chemmund. He ran through this and then faced the Yemakal Valley. On reaching the Yemakal stream his heart failed him and he turned back towards Chemmund, but was too beat to get away from hounds now, even uphill and they rolled him over just below the Shola. It was a capital run, but scent was very catchy.

The meet on Wednesday was at Golf corner at 7 o'clock on a fine morning with a howling wind. There were about 35 people out, we first drew Jackal Shola and found a brace of jacks One broke at the top and hounds got away on the other, which took on to Rallywood. Here hounds checked. At least one more jack was on foot and scent was so bad that hounds, would not keep to the line. Eventually the jack slipped away over the road to Monkey Shola and we hunted him in covert for some time. At last he broke away to Baikie, but scent failed altogether. News was now brought of another jack having been viewed into Jackal Shola and the Master took hounds back there and we ran a second time to Rallywood. A brace of jacks were viewed away over the hill to Blue Gums, but scent was so very bad that hounds were hardly able to hunt a yard. We then tried for a fresh jack down Newmarket, up Gold Mine swamp and down Lawley's Course. We drew Gibb's Shola, Briar Shola and Wapshare's Hare Shola the covert along the old Pykara Road and the top part of Beadnell's Shola without finding again. Scent has never been known worse than to-day probably owing to the gale.

THE MYSORE TOURNAMENT.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

MYSORE, 24th June.

THE Mysore Polo Tournament opened this evening in somewhat threatening and windy weather, but luckily the rain clouds all went round at the back of Chamundi Hill and only half-a-dozen big drops fell. The two matches which took place were played on the Government House ground which was rather dry and hard, but some excellent play was seen. H H. the Maharaja's numerous guests took great interest in the matches, and the gathering of the general public was very large. H. H. the Maharaja's Band, and the Band of the Barr Infantry were on the ground, and played excellent selections of music. Details:—

IMPERIAL SERVICE LANCERS, "A" TEAM vs. MYSORE GYMKHANA.—First Chukker.—From the start Lingaraj Urs took the ball down to the Lancers line, but Murad Beg averted danger. Annaji Kadam gained ground for his side, but was well ridden off and shortly afterwards Subramanya Urs opened the scoring with a subsidiary for the Gymkhana. Play came back to the territory of the latter team, and Lingaraj Urs was proving himself a very safe back when the chukker closed.

Score:—Mysore Gymkhana:—0 goal 1 subsidiary.
Imperial Service Lancers:—0 goal 0 subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—From the re-start at the Gymkhana end H. H. the Maharaja came through at once, and scored a fine goal for his side amidst loud applause Changing ends the ball went behind the Gymkhana line, Subramanya Raj Urs temporarily relieved the pressure, but the ball was brought back and went out at the side near the Gymkhana end Murad Beg broke his stick in a good back-handed shot which was only just saved, but Annaji Kadam added a second goal for the Lancers.

Score:—Imperial Service Lancers:—2 goals 0 subsidiaries.
Mysore Gymkhana:—0 goal 1 subsidiary.

Third Chukker.—Annaji Kadam was well checked by Kantharaj Urs when looking dangerous, and H. H. the Maharaja was applauded for a fine back-handed stroke when in difficulties. Though now playing up the hill, the Lancers were having all the best of the play and a good shot by Colonel Desaraj Urs was barely saved. He should have scored almost immediately afterwards, but shot wide, and a long drive by Gopal Raj Urs transferred play to the Lancer end. Sticky play followed near their goal, where Murad Beg defended stoutly. Play was proceeding in midfield when the chukker ended without any change in the score.

Score:—Imperial Service Lancers:—2 goals 0 subsidiary.
Mysore Gymkhana:—0 goal 1 subsidiary.

Fourth Chukker.—Subramanya Raj Urs almost scored for the Gymkhana, but Murad Beg and the Maharaja relieved, and the ball was taken to the other end of the ground. Lingaraj Urs, who played well throughout, got away, and was looking dangerous when his stick was cleverly crooked by Murad Beg. The Gymkhana goal was then hotly besieged, and Annaji Kadam scored a goal for the Lancers. A foul was shortly afterwards given against them, and the Gymkhana added a subsidiary, but the Lancers then came back, and before the chukker closed Colonel Desaraj Urs hit a fine goal.

Score:—Imperial Service Lancers:—4 goals 0 subsidiary.
Mysore Gymkhana:—0 goal 2 subsidiary.

Fifth Chukker.—This chukker opened with a good run by Subramanya Raj Urs, and Lingaraj Urs gained more ground, but the Gymkhana were penalised for a foul and the advantage was lost. H. H. the Maharaja and Colonel Desaraj Urs, playing well together, then invaded the Gymkhana end, where the ball twice went behind the line. Sticky play was in progress when the bugle sounded.

Score:—Imperial Service Lancers:—4 goals 0 subsidiary.
Mysore Gymkhana:—0 goal 2 subsidiaries.

Sixth Chukker.—There was only a short time remaining for play, and a good run by Colonel Desaraj Urs and a shot by Murad Beg which narrowly missed the posts were the only noteworthy features of this final chukker.

Final Score:—Imperial Service Lancers, "A" Team:—4 goals 0 subsidiary. Mysore Gymkhana:—0 goal 2 subsidiaries.

Umpires:—Captain Hay and Mr. Henderson.

RAJA VENUGOPAUL BAHADUR'S TEAM vs. IMPERIAL SERVICE LANCERS "B" TEAM. First Chukker.—The Lancers played up the hill, and play opened somewhat slowly, a foul being given against them in the first two minutes. The pace quickened, and give and take play followed, in which the Lancers had a trifle the best of the argument. But their opponents then warmed up, Sheik Ismail all but scored, and just as the chukker closed Oakes opened the scoring for Raja Venugopaul's team with a fine shot

Score:—Raja Venugopaul's Team:—1 goal 0 subsidiary.
Imperial Service Lancers:—0 goal 0 subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—The scratch team attacked, and Sheik Ismail, though ridden off at the last moment, scored a subsidiary which would probably otherwise have been a goal. Gwyer and Oakes became prominent, the latter doing some fine riding off, and the Lancers began to have considerably the worst of the play. The ball went behind their line and immediately afterwards their goal was at Sheik Ismail's mercy, but he missed the stroke clean. Raja Venugopaul then scored for his team and immediately afterwards put in a fine run, eventually over-riding the ball. Play was proceeding near the Lancers end when the bugle sounded.

Score:—Raja Venugopaul's Team:—2 goals 1 subsidiary.
Imperial Service Lancers:—0 goal 0 subsidiary.

Third Chukker.—Gwyer scored a good goal almost at once for Raja Venugopaul's team, and it began to be apparent that the Lancers were not in it with their opponents. They temporarily improved, however, after the re-start and took play into their opponents' quarters, where it remained until Oakes relieved with a pretty run, shortly afterwards cleverly turning the ball through the posts and placing his side further ahead. The same player well checked Chanda Rao Ranavaraj, and Sheik Ismail added a subsidiary.

Score:—Raja Venugopaul's Team:—4 goals 2 subsidiaries.
Imperial Service Lancers:—0 goal 0 subsidiary.

Fourth Chukker.—When play was resumed the Lancers attacked vigorously, but Gwyer was just now safe at back, though he had previously missed a good many and he could not be passed. The hitting of the Lancers was not so accurate as that of the scratch team, nor did their ponies seem so handy. However they kept Gwyer busily employed for a time, and then Oakes and Sheik Ismail once more took play to the Lancers end.

Score:—Raja Venugopaul's Team:—4 goals 2 subsidiaries
Imperial Service Lancers:—0 goal 0 subsidiary.

Fifth Chukker.—The ball went behind the Lancers line, and shortly afterwards Raja Venugopaul scored his second goal and the fifth for his side. The match was now clearly all over; although the Lancers never relaxed their efforts and continually broke away, only to be checked or to override the ball. Chanda Rao Ranavaraj became dangerous, but Gwyer cleverly crooked his stick and the ball was brought up the hill and twice went behind the Lancers line. From the second hit out Gwyer and Oakes checked a rush, and Raja Venugopaul gained ground, Sheik Ismail finally adding a subsidiary.

Score:—Raja Venugopaul's Team:—5 goals 3 subsidiaries.
Imperial Service Lancers:—0 goal 0 subsidiary.

Sixth Chukker.—Chanda Rao Ranavaraj took the ball three-quarters down the field at a great pace, but Gwyer returned with a clever run. The play quickened and Raja Venugopaul almost scored as the result of a good effort by Oakes. Finally Sheik Ismail, though pressed at the time, scored a very neat goal by a shot underneath his pony and the chukker and match shortly afterwards closed.

Final Score:—Raja Venugopaul's Team:—6 goals 3 subsidiaries.
Imperial Service Lancers, "B" Team:—0 goal 0 subsidiary.

CYCLING AND MOTORING AT HOME.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, 10th June 1904.

THE Automobile Club of Great Britain and Ireland, is to motorists what the Cyclists' Touring Club is to members of the push-bike brigade, but in the two institutions there is a wide difference as to the manner in which each look after the interests of their respective patrons. The Cyclists' Touring Club is conducted on too rigid business lines, there is, and has been for some time, too much trade about its proposals and transactions; the object of the executive apparently being to amass riches in the form of a substantial reserve fund, whereas, the correct procedure of such an institution is to spend the surplus revenue in the good of the pastime, of course, the while, remaining solvent. On the other hand, the Automobile Club is doing excellent work in fostering the pursuit of which it bears the name. As an instance of the contrast between the action of the two clubs we may take the recent side-slip trials organised by the Automobile Club. The Club had not been in existence more than seven years before it offered valuable money prizes for the most effective non-slipping device with the object of unearthing some contrivance that would overcome that constant danger to Automobilists—side-slip. For seventeen years Cyclists have been confronted with this danger, yet, the Cyclists' Touring Club never moved in the matter. True, the consequences of a slip on an ordinary cycle are not so serious as is the case with a motor but we have known of many cases where cyclists have sustained fractured limbs and in some cases met their death.

Whilst some of the larger and best known cycle manufacturers are working at full pressure in order to keep pace with the orders that continually fall in, many of the smaller concerns are crying out at the stagnant state of trade. A great change is coming over the industry and the above is the forerunner of what is to be. Two or three weeks ago, an old established firm, with a high reputation, came out with the announcement that it was putting on the market an eight-guinea machine, fitted with two rim brakes and free wheel, which could also be obtained on the gradual payment system of fifteen shillings a month. The announcement was naturally received with many misgivings by those in the trade, since such an offer by a firm of standing would practically cut the ground from beneath the feet of small manufacturers and local makers. Indeed, we do not doubt, but that in a few year's time, local makers will have ceased to exist, their business having drifted into the hands of big firms that possess up-to-date labour-saving machines.

The "rational" dress is now almost extinct, only now and again a stray specimen being seen on the highways—an image of what might have been. Amongst those who fostered the cause some years ago there still lingers the hope that the movement is but hibernating till the day arrives when lady cyclists will appreciate its advantages. We trust that it has contracted the sleeping sickness. Now and again, however, the rationalists secure an argument in favour of their cause, and one in point is a somewhat serious accident that has just happened to a lady cyclist. An extra heavy gust of wind blew her skirt into the front wheel of her bicycle, looking it, and bringing her down heavily to the ground. Such an accident would be a clinching argument for rationals were it not for the fact that the lady in question was riding in a full skirt at the time of the accident which blew about in all directions. If ladies will ride in ordinary walking skirts they must take the risk of such an accident occurring, but with a properly cut cycling skirt there is no more danger than with rationals.

A cyclist in Dublin who was riding a practically new ten-guinea machine, stopped at an inn for refreshments, leaving his cycle unattended without. On emerging from the bar he was surprised to find that his machine was gone and that another, of more value than his own, had been left in its place. Thinking that someone had taken it in mistake and would be returning when the error was discovered, the wheelman waited about until at last he rode home on it with silent congratulations on the good deal. On the evening he began to grow uneasy about the incident and decided to lay the facts before the police. He soon discovered the reason for the second parties generosity in leaving a high grade machine for his ten-guinea mount. The high class machine had been stolen, and the thief, finding that the search was becoming too hot, made the exchange in order to throw the police off the scent. The police handed the machine over to the rightful owner and the unfortunate cyclist was left without one.

An example of what a modern motor car is capable of accomplishing, is provided by the wonderful feat just achieved by Mr. Harvey du Cros, junior, who on a 15 horse power car surmounted the highest mountain in England and Wales—Snowdon. In January last, Mr. du Cros was obliged to relinquish an attempt he then made owing to the heavy snowdrift encountered when only within a short distance of his goal. On the recent attempt, however, the snow had vanished and the intrepid driver successfully steered his car to the summit. The course he pursued was the track of the mountain railway which winds its way up the face of the mountain and which at places possesses gradients of 1 in 5. Nor was this all the mountain climber had to put up with. The track consisted of a loose bed of stones and slates and at many points gulleys had to be bridge over with planks so as to permit the car to proceed. At places the car was driven along the edge of the Llanbere's Pass which dropped many thousands of feet into the valley, and if at these points anything went wrong with the steering a terrible catastrophy would have occurred. The ascent occupied a matter of four hours the average speed of the car working out at seven miles an hour.

A motor cyclist whose business took him along a certain road three or four times a week discovered that three barking curs invariably flew out from one of the houses and followed him down the street snapping at his legs. So consistently did they attack the wheelman that he at last decided to meet them on equal terms. Armed with a heavy cycle polo stick he sallied forth to do battle and was not long before meeting the enemy. The fight was hot and furious and was favouring the wheelmen when an old lady came rushing out of the house to protect her "dear pets." She appealed to a passing policeman, who called upon the cyclist to stay his slaying arm. More in fun than in earnest the cyclist suggested to the policeman that the old lady be asked to produce her licenses for the dogs, which alas, she was unable to do, and was therefore subsequently find 22s. 6d. with costs.

Although amongst the British amateur riders there are several who must be classed top fliers, there is one who stands out prominently as a rider of exceptional merit since in whatever meeting he competes, he invariable carrys off at least one of the prizes. We refer to A. L. Reed, the Polytechnic C. C. Champion. He is a tall man of somewhat heavy build and his powerful legs will keep up a sprint considerably longer than any ordinary rider, indeed, it is said that he will sprint a whole lap without reducing his speed. On the 19th June he intends making his first appearance on the Parisian race path, having entered with his co clubman, Rowland Janson, in the amateur race for the world-renowned grand Prix des Paris. He should certainly carry off this event as the French amateurs are not such speedy men as our men, owing to the rage there is over there to turn professional immediately one develops a turn of speed.

Excitement is growing apace in the motoring world over the Gordon-bennett Cup Race which is to be decided in Germany next Thursday, 16th June. Nineteen cars of high horse power and developing great speed have entered for the contest and a keen fight is expected for the Motor Derby. Next week I intend giving a short history of the Gordon-Bennett Cup together with details of the race.

CRICKET CHAT.

ALTHOUGH there are so many well-known Anglo-Indian and Indian Cricketers in England this season I have not noticed many of their names in connection with club cricket. J. P. Candler, the rejected of Cambridge, where he was given a long trial for his Blue a few years ago and who will be remembered by Bengal Cricketers is doing very well with both bat and ball for Mr. J. C. Lovell's XI this season. Against Barnes he scored 7 and took 4 wickets. For Single vs. Married he scored 23 and took 4 wickets, and followed this up in the next match against Home and Colonial with 44 and 4 wickets. His best performance was perhaps against Norbury Park when he scored 22 and took 7 wickets Another well-known Bengal Cricketer, E. A. Leach, of the Calcutta C. C., is playing for the Wimbledon Club this season and against Kensington Park made 0 and 36. Captain R. E. E. Krickenbeck, a well-known Bombay Presidency player, is assisting Surbiton and against Hampstead only made 8 runs in two innings. G. L. Whatford who showed such good form against the Authentics a couple of years ago for Bundelkhand playing for the Gentlemen of M. C. C. vs. the London and Westminster Bank, scored 12. A native player named Mahboot Ali Beg playing for Forest Hill vs. London and Westminster Bank was dismissed for a blob. Captain H. Strong, of the Indian Army, scored 20 for Incogniti vs. R. M. A., Woolwich. Three well-known Jhansi and Bombay players Lieutenants R. J. Armes W. J. Locker, and P. Lyon, of the North Staffordshire Regiment, played in a recent match for Lichfield vs. Incogniti. P. Lyon made 32 not out. S. de Saram, a cousin of D. L. Saram's who visited Bombay for the Indian team for England test matches last cold weather played in the Cambridge Freshmen's match, scoring 15 and 18. In a trial match a few days later for Mr. R. P. Keigwin's team he only scored 8 and 4. S. de Saram had the reputation of being one of the best native cricketers in Ceylon about five years ago, but has evidently not trained on much. It is rather unfortunate that the climatic conditions of Bombay are such as to make it necessary that football and cricket should be played in the same months. Cricketers cannot play both games and keep their hand and eye in for cricket and in any case the time given up to football is the time that should be spent at the nets. Cricket is flourishing at Karachi this season and the local Gymkhana have been able to place a stronger team in the field than in any year since 1897 when A. P. Douglas the old Middlesex, Surrey, and Presidency player was a power in Karachi cricket and captained the Gymkhana team. For some years after Douglas' departure the game languished so far as the Gymkhana was concerned the dearth of good players being partly responsible for this state of things. Last season things began to assume a more rosy hue and this season the presence of F. L. Sprott, the old Presidency captain, has given the game a much needed stimulus. Quite a strong batting side can now be placed in the field with Sprott, Creagh, Chetham (J. C.), Captain Price, Merriman, and several others of equal calibre available, while the bowling with two such capable performers as Lucas and Newton is by no means weak. Sprott has met with success in every match that he has played and last weak compiled a faultless 41 against the Sind Volunteers, a match in which Creagh scored 86 not out, the highest innings made by a Gymkhana batsman this season. Newton placed a good bowling performance to his credit capturing seven wickets for 53 runs. The Gymkhana total was 245, the highest total made by the club for some years, Captain Price (29), Merriman (21), Newton (18), and Lucas (11) being the other double figure contributors. The Volunteers were only able to make 102, of which H. N. Dinshaw, the youngest member of the Karachi cricketing family of that name, made 42.

The second match of the Poona season between teams composed of players Over Thirty years and Under Thirty has let further light in on the form of several of the new players and has made it practically certain that the Poona Gymkhana team this year will be stronger in batting than any team since 1900 when Captain Greig, Captain N. D. Wood, F. L. Sprott, Captain W. Drysdale, A. F. Lumsden, E. L. Sale were all able to assist regularly. G. Thornton, who is a batsman of the hard-hitting order and who made a successful first appearance in the match last week, contributed 68 not out to the Under Thirty total of 261, and gives promise of being very useful to Poona this season. Two other new players, A. S. Noake and S. Ussher, also shaped well for the same side, the first-named making 58 and the latter 48. These players with B. M. Carroll who contributed 31 made between them 205. C. D. G. Lyon, the old Wellingtonian, and J Kennedy, the old Hailyburian, who were both assisting Under Thirty, were dismissed for small scores. Over Thirty who had to take the field without Captain Greig compiled 196 of which three players, Lieutenant-Colonel Hazelton (57), Captain Bruce (54), and Major-General Richardson (20) contributed 131 between them. There are signs of weakness in the bowling at present but when Captain L. M. R. Deas arrives the attack will the strengthened.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE

DALHOUSIE vs. WEST RIDINGS.—These teams met on the 22nd instant on the Dalhousie ground before a large crowd. The home team started the game, but the Dum-Dum men soon got possession and Woodings put through two minutes from the start. The soldiers continued to have the best of matters, and Hulyer sent in a fine shot, in trying to clear which Robinson headed the ball into his own goal. Following on this second success the West Ridings obtained a penalty kick for "hands" and Hulyer scored a third goal. After the interval the Dalhousie men showed greatly improved form and Prike getting away found the net. The home team continued to play up and had the better of the exchanges, but they were unable to add to their score and the West Ridings won by three goals to one. Teams:—

WEST RIDINGS.—Roberts, goal; Evans and Holcombe, backs; Reeves, Turner and Morris, half-backs; Woodings, Laughlin, Wilson, Drew and Hulyer, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Street, goal; Stimson and Robinson, backs, Phelps, Butler and Evans, half-backs; Holly, Stewart, Dalling; Prike and Campbell, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. P. Willder.

HOWRAH vs. RANGERS.—Played at Howrah on the 22nd instant, the visitors winning by two goals to one. In the first half, though the Rangers did most of the attacking, they were unable to score owing to the fine defence of the Howrah back division. Mulholland managed to put the ball through, but the point was disallowed. On resuming, after the interval, Maclay scored from a melee. Howrah were not long in equalising, Kerr putting through. Then the Rangers had the best of the game and Rosser scored the winning point. Teams:—

RANGERS.—Behrend, goal; Margrett and Anderson, backs; Mulholland, Lees and Affleck, half-back; Vears, Maclay, Rosser, McCready and Pollock, forwards.

HOWRAH.—Powell, goal; Curtis and Burns, backs; Morrow, Wood and Hart, half-backs; T. Smith, O'Neil, Sanderson, J Smith and Kerr, forwards.

Y. M. C. A. vs. West Ridings.—Played on the Rangers' ground last Saturday, resulting in a win for the regiment by two goals to nil. The West Ridings were first away and Woodings opened the scorings. Shortly after Wilson put through. The soldiers continued to press during the second moiety, but could not break the defence and won as stated. Teams:—

WEST RIDINGS. Roberts, goal; Evans and P. Reeves, backs; A Reeves, Turner and Morris, half-back; Woodings. Laughlin, Wilson, Holcombe and Hulyer, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Kay, goal; Stokes and Skully, backs; Schaumberg, Pooler and Collingwood, half-backs; Vanspal, Dwyer, Redmond, Critchley and Gordon, forwards.

CALCUTTA vs. HOWRAH.—The trans-Hugli team gave us a surprise last Saturday when they defeated Calcutta on the latter's ground. Howrah, who were at full strength, started the ball and the opening exchanges were very even. Then the home forwards put in some good combined runs, but missed a couple of chances. Howrah next forced a corner, but nothing came of it, and Calcutta returned to the attack. The shooting of the forwards was poor, and some good opportunities were missed, the interval arriving without score. On changing ends Calcutta pressed hard, but the Howrah backs played well and the home team could not get through. Then Kerr got away for the visitors and passing to Jackson, the latter found the net. Calcutta played all they knew and kept up a strong attack, but were unable to get even, and the visitors thus won by a goal to nil. Teams:—

HOWRAH.—Powell, goal; Annett and Curtis, backs; Morrow, Wood and Hart, half-back; Smith, Echlin, Jackson, Burns and Kerr, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Dodds, goal; Baker and Badham, backs; Maunder, Govan and Ansell, half-backs; H. Sherman, MacDonald, H. Cooper, V Sherman and Stuart, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. P. Willder.

KING'S OWN REGIMENT vs. RANGERS.—The match between these teams on the King's Own ground attracted a large number of spectators who witnessed a very even game, resulting in a pointless draw. After a dash by the home team play settled down, and ruled very even till they got away again, and Carman and Ennis just missed scoring. Then the Rangers had a turn, but could not find the net. After half time Rosser got away for the visitors, but was stopped. Play was fast and even for the rest of the game which ended as stated. Teams:—

KING'S OWN.—Sinker, goal; Standish and Mellor, backs; Quinn, Ennis and Lionard, half-backs; Diggle, Jones, Walton, Carman and Wittingham, forwards.

RANGERS.—Behrend, goal; Margrett and Anderson, backs; Affleck, Lees and Mulholland, half-backs; McCready, Pollock, Rosser, Maclay and Vears, forwards.

Referee:—Captain Gardner.

CALCUTTA vs. WEST RIDINGS.—Playing on their own ground, on Tuesday, Calcutta defeated the West Ridings by three goals to one. The soldiers ran through at the start, but Hulyer shot wide and the home forwards going away forced a corner, which proved abortive. Calcutta continued to press and from a scrimmage in front of the visitors' goal, H. Cooper put through. The Dum-Dum team played hard, but were unable to score before the interval. On changing ends Calcutta had the best of the play. Then the military forced a corner, which they did not turn to account. Even play followed till Cooper put in a fine run and once more beat Roberts. Shortly after Cooper scored a third goal. The West Ridings were playing up all they knew, and before time their efforts were rewarded, Wilson finding the net. Teams:—

CALCUTTA.—Dods, goal; Todd and V. Cooper, backs; Maunder, Crawford and Ansell, half-backs; H. Sherman, MacDonald, H. Cooper, V. Sherman and Stuart, forwards.

WEST RIDING.—Roberts, goal; Evans and P. Reeves, backs; A. Reeves, Turner and Morris, half-backs; Woodings, Lochlin, Wilson, Holcombe and Hulyer, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. P. Wilder.

DALHOUSIE vs. Y. M. C. A.—These teams met on the Dalhousie ground last Tuesday, the home team having the best of matters all through and winning by a goal to nil. In the first half Dalhousie pressed, but nothing was scored till just before the interval Street found the net. On resuming the Young Men gave a better display, but their shooting was wild. Teams:—

DALHOUSIE.—Street, goal; Templeton and Dalling, backs; Phelps, Butler and Evans, half-backs; Campbell, Robinson, Prike, Stewart and Holly, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Kay, goal; Stokes and Scully backs; Schaumberg, Pooler and Collingwood, half-backs; Mitchell, McPhu, Redmond, Mason and Critchley, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. F. Lees.

FOOTBALL NOTES.

DALHOUSIE were expected to turn the tables on the West Ridings at their second meeting or to at any rate secure one point from them, but the soldiers put so much 'go" into their play in the first few minutes that they had put on two goals before the home team had got into their stride. Matters were not improved by an unlucky handling of the ball by Stimson in the penalty area, and before the game had been in progress for fifteen minutes, the West Ridings were three goals to the good. The position now seemed hopeless for the Dals., but they were far from accepting the score as final and, during the second half of the game, played up so well that the military had to play one of hardest defensive games they have tackled this season to keep the homesters out. Prike managed to get through once, after a rather lucky piece of play, and the match thus ended in favour of the soldiers by three goals to one. Dalhousie unfortunately could not turn out their best team, Robinson especially not being a good substitute for Templeton, but Stimson at back and the three halves all played a good defensive game and Stewart, Dalling and Holley put in some good work in the forward line. For the Dum-Dum team Woodings and Hulyer on the wings, and Morris, Turner and Reeves in the half line were most conspicuous.

Being interested in the West Riding's match I was unable to visit Howrah where the Rangers beat the home team on the post by one goal. The visitors evidently had most of the shooting though, as in their match against the Y. M. C. A., the ball seemed to go anywhere but between the posts.

Once more the Howrah team have upset all calculations and kept up their reputation for surprises by securing two points from Calcutta, the weakest Club in the League beating the strongest. The game needs little description. For the first ten minutes it was very even; both sides attacked in turn, but the ground and ball being very slippery no one seemed to have any command over the ball. Calcutta then took up the running and for the rest of the game, with the exception of the one smart run down from which Jackson scored for Howrah, the home team swarmed round the visitors' goal. Shot after shot hit the posts or crossbar, went just outside the net or was saved by Powell, but although each of the forwards seemed to be trying their best no one could score. The Howrah defence was excellent, the halves and backs playing a strong game and the goalkeeper saving marvellously, and Wood, who has by now left for Rangoon, is to be congratulated on his final display. Calcutta were unfortunately without their usual backs and centre half, Crawford being especially missed, but the game was mostly a "forward" one and with a little luck they should have won by a good margin.

The West Ridings had not much difficulty in defeating the Y. M. C. A., though the latter played up well. The Rangers gave the King's Own a hard game and interest was maintained right up to the call of time. In the first half the Lancasters pressed and Behrend had to clear several shots, but in the second half the Rangers had rather the best of it and on two or three occasions looked like scoring. The shooting, however, was not as good as it might have been, and Sinker had no difficulty in keeping his goal clear, so that when "time" arrived neither side had scored.

As will be seen from the table below, Calcutta's defeat has given the King's Own another chance of annexing the Locke Cup, in spite of the latter's draw with the Rangers. The probabilities are in favor of the team from the Fort winning their remaining two matches which will bring their final total of points up to 19—Calcutta by winning their remaining matches can also obtain 19 points and as their goal average at present is just a point better than the King's Own they might by a bit of luck came out on top, but, and this is a very big but, the soldiers have yet to play the Y. M. C. A., and in this match they are likely to improve their goal average considerably! As regards the West Ridings all depends on their match against Calcutta. Should they win or even make a draw of it the finish is likely to be between them and the King's Own and the civilian team will drop into third place. It will thus be seen that a great deal hangs on the result of Tuesday's match, and it is unfortunate that I am unable to keep these "notes" back till this great game has been played. Calcutta may beat the Dum-Dum men, but they are not likely to win by a sufficiant number of goals to counterbalance the Lancasters' probable score against the Y. M. C. A.

The teams which have been selected to play in the Civil vs. Military match on the 9th are representative of this season's League football and, as will be seen from the names of the players which I am able to give below, an extremely strong combination has been got together. On the civilian side, Crawford should, on his play this season, have been in the half line and Street is perhaps not quite the strongest man who could have been picked for goal, but on the whole the eleven has been very judiciously selected. On the military side Diggle is perhaps deserving of a place, but it would be difficult to know which of the chosen five should be left out for him and the soldiers need have no doubt of their being fully represented.

In spite of the attempt in some quarters to throw cold water on the idea of a Civil vs. Military match I think we may, expect a good display and, given a fine afternoon, the "gate" should be a good one.

The following are the selected players:— (Civil—Street, goal, (Behrend reserve); Todd and Stimson, backs, (Margrett reserve); Phelps, Lees and Pooler, halves, (Crawford reserve); H. Sherman, Rosser, H. Cooper, V. Sherman and Kerr forwards, (Boner, Holley and Prike reserves). Military—Roberts, goal, (Sinker reserve); Evans and Mellor, backs, (Holcombe reserve); Quinn, Tanner and Reeves, halves, (Ennis and Merris reserves); Whittingham, Carman, Wilson, Jones and Wooding, forwards, (Hulyer, Diggle and Laughlin reserves.)

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

June 9th, 1904.

FOR the first time in the history of this competition, the Amateur Golf Championship has been taken out of the United Kingdom. When it was first known that Mr. Travis, the American Champion, intended to take part, and later on when his form had been seen, critics did not consider him steady enough for premier honors, in competition with all the amateur cracks of Great Britain and Ireland; but after his display at Sandwich in the past week, it is universally acknowledged and conceded that no player has ever deserved his win more than Mr. Walter Travis, his golf having been throughout the Tournament, magnificent His victory perhaps was almost entirely owing to his marvellous putting, but at the same time his play through the green was excellent. With the exception of one or two notoriously long drives Mr. Travis held his own off the tee, whilst his brassie shots and approaches would compare favourably with those of any other player. Among the crowd of several thousand spectators who witnessed the final, were most of the leading professionals, and they one and all agreed that Mr. Travis is the finest putter they had ever seen: for this he uses a very peculiar club, of aluminium with the shaft let in nicely half way along the top; this is a club of American invention known as Norton's Schenectady Putter. In all probability this patent club will henceforth be frequently seen in the hands of anxious golfers of both sexes and the fortune of the inventor be made!

But we must back to Tuesday, 31st May, when the first round of the Amateur Championship was still undecided. To begin with the weather was deplorable, rain began early, and except for a brief cessation at mid-day continued the whole day while a fairly strong cold wind blew across the links towards the sea. The draw was somewhat unfortunate as the majority of the best players were in the lower half, and only one of the following "fancied" players could reach the semi-final, Messrs Graham, Maxwell, Balfour, Melville, Ball, Mure-Fergusson, N. F. Hunter and Hutchinson, of these Mr. Balfour-Melville succumbed easily to Mr. Graham by 7 and 6. There was considerable excitement when it became known that Mr. Maxwell was driving 2 down to Mr. Mathews, but the holder, although quite off his drive won the 17 and 18 and eventually won the match on the 20th green. Mr. J. Ball had a w.o. from Mr. W. Dod. Mr. Mure Fergusson disposed of Mr. Norman Hunter.

In the next round, the chief interest centred in the exciting match between the American Champion Mr. Travis and Mr. Robb of Glasgow. The opinion of the Yankee's play at this stage was briefly condensed into this.—"The American player's putting was wonderful, and his short game very accurate, but he gets no length on his long game and it is difficult to see how he can stand against a really long player.' He, however, won this his second beat on the last green and passed on to the third round heat. In this the players were favoured with fair weather with a moderate south-westerly breeze, and two matches of high importance were decided, that between Mr. Graham and Mr. Maxwell and that between Mr. Bell and Mr. Hutchinson, the former did not however, prove the great struggle that was anticipated, Mr. Maxwell very soon showed that he had recovered from his "off" phase and Mr. Graham's weakness on the green lost him many a hole and without going into details of a not very interesting match, Mr. Maxwell won his heat by 5 up and 3 to play. The criticism on Mr. Travis' play in his match with Mr. Murray, whom he beat by 3 and 1, was slightly more favourable but even now his chances of going through were considered very very remote, and it was said that the Sandwich links with its comparatively large number of not very long holes suited the American's game to perfection. Be that as it may he passed on with 15 others to the fifth round. It was in this heat that attention just became drawn towards Mr. Blackwell as a probability! In his match with Mr. Boyd the best golf of the day was produced. There was never more than two holes between the pair and Mr. Blackwell was round approximately in 74. In the match between Mr. Ball and Mr. Hutchinson, in which the latter was victorious by 2 and 1, some remarkable play was shown by the winner, both an account of his putting and ability of more than once holing out in 2 from a bunker. The match was give and take till the 17th green when all was over in Mr. Hutchinson's favour. Mr. Hilton beat Mr. Williamson only at the 19th hole Mr. Laidlay only succeeded in defeating Mr. Graham Murray on the 20th green and Mr. Travis after a close match with Mr. Reade qualified for the 6th round; after being 2 down with 4 to go he finished very strongly, doing the last 4 holes in 15 strokes and still he was not looked upon as dangerous!

Rain fell most of the morning while the fifth round was being decided, but the afternoon was fine. Mr. Blackwell defeated Mr. W. E. Fairlie after being one down at the turn, then Mr. Blackwell went right away from his opponent and won the next five holes, over a stymie on the 15th green to win the hole and match. In the match between Mr. Bevan and Mr. Laidlay, the latter was 4 up at the turn and won by 6 and 5. The match between Mr. Maxwell and Mr. Hutchinson was a very fine one, the latter putted badly at the start, but afterwards played a strong game, and somewhat to the surprise of the onlookers after a very close and exciting finish he knocked the holder out, but only when 19 holes, lofting had been played. An exciting incident took place on the 18th green, when Mr. Hutchinson played his 2nd they left of the green, while his opponent was only just over the bunker, but he laid his approach quite dead, when Mr Hutchinson laid him a dead stymie Mr. Maxwell lofted his ball successfully amidst great excitement and all square till they went to the 19th Tee; it was then that Mr Hutchinson holed a 10ft. putt and his opponent failing with his, the match was won. Mr. Hilton was quite off his game in his match with Mr. Travis and 3 down at the turn he lost the match by 5 and 3 leaving in the semi-finals Mr. Blackwell vs Mr. Laidlay, Mr. Tranvis vs Mr. Hutchinson. The match between the two former was very close and exciting, laying a long putt dead Mr. Laidlay took the 1st hole in 4 to 5 and two halves in 4 followed, the 4th was halved in an indifferent 5. Reaching the green from the Tee Mr. Blackwell squared the match at the 5th with a 3, but only halved the maiden in 4 by taking 3 putts and took the lead at the 7th but Mr. Laidlay by completely missing his drive at the 9th turned 2 down At the 14th by a fine 4, Mr. Laidlay reduced the lead to 1, but lost the 15th and only halving the 16th. Mr. Blackwell stood at dormy 2 and a half at the 17th gave him the match.

All doubts as to Mr. Travis' ability and form were completely set at rest by his match with Mr. Horace Hutchinson, each day he seemed to better his golf, playing well within himself and bringing out a game just sufficient to beat his adversry 'Apparently Mr. Travis has no nerves" said a spectator and he certainly is the most calm and imperturbable golfer one has ever seen. Playing Mr. Hutchinson he turned for home 3 up with the following score—4, 5, 3, 4 3, 3 5, 3, 4 = 34, but driven often from the Tee, Mr. Travis' remarkably accurate short game and putting carried him successfully through. At the 14th the American was still 3 up, a half 5 in at the 15th made him "dormy" and he brought matters to a conclusion at the 16th by winning the hole, and stood 4 up and 2 to paly. Next day was fine when the final tie of 36 holes was played and the American Champion and Mr. Blackwell met and fought. At the 1st hole neither was seen to advantage, so often the case; but both that and the 2nd went to Mr. Travis. Bad play at the 3rd resulted in a half, and at the 4th after two fine shots the American holed a long putt and stood 3 up, the 5th he won with a very long putt giving him a substantial lead of 4 holes. At the 10th, however, his lead was reduced to 2, then followed two halves, but at the 13th, after having all the best of the long game, the Scotsman threw his chance away on the green and lost the hole. With a fine approach Mr. Travis won the 14th and stood 3 up at the 15th the next two were halved, but the American winning the 18th stood 4 up on the round. After lunch any feeble glimmer of hope which still existed in British breasts was extinguished, a lead of 4 is not always enough to pin our faith on, but when at the 5th with another of his constantly recurring miraculous putts, the American stood 5 up and the "maiden" falling also to a 3 from him he stood 6 up and 12 to play the British hope grew faint. Mr. Blackwell, however, was not yet beaten for he won the 7th in 4, halved the 8 and holed 6 holes in 23. Mr. Travis found the 2nd bunker at the 9th and Mr Blackwell holing a long putt turned 4 down. He looked like winning the next 2 holes but Mr. Travis again put down some more of his patent long putts and by so doing snatched a half at both. A half in 4 followed at the 12th and the 13th and 14th were down by each in 5 The match came to an end on the 15th green the approximate scores for 15 holes being,—

Mr Travis 7, 4, 4, 4, 3, 3, 6, 3 5, 4, 4, 4, 5, 5, 6 = 67.
" Blackwell 6 5, 3, 5 4, 4 4, 3, 4, 4, 4, 4. 5 5, 6 = 66.

Lord Northborne afterwards presented the cup and medals to the winners, Mr. Travis being very heartily cheered. According to precedent, but contrary to his intention, Mr. Travis is competing in the open Championship this week. Directly the great event was over and ever since the demand for the patent putter used by the winner has been enormous and every one of the kind is, it is stated on authority, sold already, and thousands are wanting this marvellous and most efficacious weapon.

The Horse.

THE AMERICAN SADDLE HORSE.

THE American saddle horse presents an anomaly; unknown to the great majority of the American people; unrecognized by America's foremost horse show and propagated by only a small number of individual enthusiasts, he is nevertheless known to his breeders as the most docile, most versatile, and most intelligent of all breeds of domestic animals. Not only so much, but also as far and away, the most beautiful and most nearly ideal of all the breeds of horses. He has received the gratuitous and unstinted praise of all writers who have contributed to the literature of The Horse in recent years, and where he is known at all his partisans are absolute devotees. And yet of all of the forms of unutilized wealth at our command, so far as horse flesh is concerned, no other is so generally ignored as this beau ideal of the horse kingdom.

To explain why this is so is to seek the raison d'etre of the saddle horse, and this is plainly found in the local conditions obtaining where he originated. In any country where short distances are to be frequently traversed and convenience of the means employed is essential the saddle horse is par excellence. Further that saddle horse who conveys his rider with greatest ease and expedition is obviously most desired.

Hence the original habitat of the American saddle horse is found in the hilly districts of the Southern States, where the nature of the country and the vast extent of the plantations made him the child of Mother Necessity. Climatic conditions have made Kentucky the nursery of America's horses, and it is here, in common with the thoroughbred and the trotter, that the saddle horse originated, flourished, and has blown into the full flower of perfection.

In a technical sense the saddle horse includes those animals that have been entered for registration in the books of the American Saddle Horse Register Association. The number included up to the last published volume 1,785 stallions and 2,229 mares, including animals entered under different numbers, etc. Probably at this time there are less than 5,000 registered horses living. But aside from registration the saddle horse is sui generis. Leaving out of consideration for the present the blood lines of saddle horse sires, let us recall the essential characteristics and distinguishing features that have created a specific type and peculiar breed of horses.

Every breed of horses to day extant has come to be recognized as such by virtue of two essential characteristics: First, the ability to do certain things better than others, and second, to reproduce its kind. Thus certain horses were observed to run very fast and from this fact grew the development of our thoroughbred horse, with his five generation of uncontaminated blood. Other horses were able to go swiftly at the trot until the ability to trot a mile at this gait in two minutes and thirty seconds became one of the elements of the breed, it being assumed that so much demonstrated speed betokened the requisite blood in the ancestors or likely to occur in the progeny. The draft breed grew out of the ability of certain strains to move great burdens, and each particular family perpetrates certain peculiar features. So the saddle horse. In the localities where horses were mostly used under the saddle it was found that certain animals had peculiar gaits, the motion of which conveyed no sense of discomfort to their riders. It will be readily appreciated that an animal who would carry his rider at a rapid gait, and could change from one to several others without losing time at any of them would do so with a maximum of longevity to himself and minimum of fatigue to the rider.

With these selfish considerations as the (perhaps unconscious) basis of his law of selection, the southern breeder mated animals who possessed the easy riding gaits until we have the result in the breed of horse under this title head. Inasmuch, therefore, as they are the basic foundation of the type let us study these gaits somewhat in detail.

Until within the last past two years the gaits requisite to be shown for registration by performance were: First, walk; second, trot, third, rack; fourth canter; and fifth, either, (a) fox trot, (b) running walk, or (c) slow pace, and five were essential. The walk and canter are natural gaits with all breeds of horses. We cannot here give space to the much mooted question as to the trot vs. pace being the original gait as against the other, but will assume that the consensus of opinion is in favour of the trot reserving only our personal opinion that the burden of evidence is on the side of the pace. We find that in walking, a horse really lifts his feet one at a time but that the extensions of the front near and hind off foot are made so nearly together as to convey the impression of moving in pairs.

It may be observed here that by the ear and not by the eye is the only true way to observe the succession of movement in a horse.

In the trot the diagonally opposite feet strike the ground together, resulting in a two-beat sound.

In the pace the fore and hind leg on the same side are extended together; two-beat gait.

I think the word "rack" is a misnomer. It is at best a colloquialism or, perhaps better, a localism. In the authorities the words rack, pace and amble are practically synonymous, and none have the sense of our use of them. However, as used by horsemen, the word rack means the same thing as the term 'singlefoot," which I prefer on the ground of expressiveness. Single-foot, i.e., each foot striking the ground singly separately, aptly and truthfully tells the story of this four-beat gait to the ear. While the impulses arise almost in pairs, as in the pace, yet the extension of the hind legs are retarded sufficiently as to alternate with the fore legs giving the rapid one-two-three-four sound peculiar to this gait.

The slow pace differs only from the pace in point of speed.

The canter is the slow form of the gallop or run. The perfection of a canter is measured not by its speed but by its slowness.

The mass is propelled by one hind foot the other three feet striking the ground practically together and the impelling foot following after. Nevertheless the legs on each side move in pairs.

The leaves us with the running-walk and fox-trot for consideration, and I believe it will be as well to make a frank confession about these gaits, and say plainly we don't know what they are It is very difficult to explain them on paper or without having an object lesson for illustration. It may be that there are men who know all about these two gaits, but I have questioned numberless trainers and breeders, and I have never met one who could give me a concise, accurate description of the successions of leg movements distinguishing these gaits. I have, myself, been engaged in breaking, training, gaiting and riding saddle horses for some years, and, contradictory as it may seem, I cannot tell much about the gaits, though I can teach them to an amenable horse. Here is about the best I can offer.

The running walk is a slow gait; faster than a walk, not so fast as a trot or rack. An extremely exaggerated walk in point of speed comes very nearly being accurate. But there is a peculiarity about it, too. In this gait a horse moves forward with seemingly very little leg motion The knee action is next to nothing, and on the other hand the ankle or fetlock joint motion is excessive. One might fairly say stiff-legged, so far as the upper joints are engaged. Really the horse seems to easily glide forward in a rapid four-beat gait, each leg moving independently. A horse called Bald Stockings was the first horse to attract attention to his peculiar gait. For ease to the rider it is the very "poetry of motion" idealized.

The fox-trot, too, is a slow gait. It probably owes its name to some fancied resemblance to the rapid, swinging, all day trot of the fox in his native haunts and which he will maintain hour after hour to the despair of the most ardent "hunter."

It is the two-beat trot reduced in point of speed—but also with a peculiarity. While the diagonally opposite legs move in pairs there is a shortening of the extensions, resulting in a peculiar rhythm of what sounds like a one-two-one-two recurrence. Another characteristic is that the hinder parts of the horse feel as though slightly elevated and cause the sensation to the rider of his being tilted forward in a small degree.

Having thus cursorily examined the mechanism of the gaits, let us consider them solely from the vantage of the saddle.

When a rider mounted upon a horse accelerates the speed of the animal from a walk into a trot he experiences the feeling that it is next to impossible for him to retain his seat. It is, indeed, possible to remain on the horse by leaning well back and extending the arms and the legs but even so it becomes extremely wearisome and dangerous. In other words the lifting in unison of the diagonally opposite legs of a horse results in an effect upon his back that causes any object placed there on to receive a succession of jolts, which come with too great rapidity to admit of continuous adjustment. Next one finds by experiment that by having something whereon to rest the feet (stirrups) and by throwing his weight on to the stirrups and rising from the horses with each alternate bound he can maintain his series of re-adjustments with ease and regularity. This is what is called "posting" in the saddle, from which it may be easily seen that the trot is not an easy gait to ride, although the efforts involved in "posting" is stimulating and enhances a pleasurable feeling of exhilaration.

In the canter, as the horse leads with his right forward foot that foot will extend beyond the point where the left foreleg alights, and his left hind foot will be the one from which the mass receives its impetus, and which will be the last to leave the ground. Consequently it will be placed at a point somewhat in the rear of the right hind foot. So nearly, however, do the feet move in pairs that the result to a mounted rider is one of undulating grace that leaves his contact with the saddle unimpaired and hence it is an easy gait to ride.

The slow pace is the gait par excellence for ease and comfort. In this, as in the pace, the two side legs move in union, and the result is a smooth, even effect to the rider, wholly devoid of jolt or jar. In the fast pace, however, there is too much of the rolling motion for great comfort. This brings us, then to the rack. This is a fast gait, and may be said to be between a pace and a trot. It is considered an easy gait to ride, no matter how great the speed. The rider sits fast in the saddle, simply helping to maintain his equilibrium by carrying the weight of the legs in the stirrups. A person can ride as far as he would ask a horse to get at a fast gait on the rack without any fatigue or effort. In point of ease and comfort to the rider the running-walk and fox-trot are akin in that they are wholly pleasurable. This consideration of the slow gaits brings prominently to mind the fact that there are really two sorts of saddle horses. The slow gaits and the rack are characteristics distinguishing one sort from the other. They have given rise to a saddle horse called "the gaited horse" as distinguished from what is known as the "walk trot and canter saddle horse." The term used in connection with each of these horses characterizes their abilities. Now among the "smart" people who follow the dictates of fashion and with whom fashion means aping the succession of changes in our English cousins across the water the gaited horse is ostracized and the only saddle beast recognized is the walk, trot and canter horse.

In England they have no such thing as a gaited horse. The hunter of the English gentleman is to all intents and purposes a thoroughbred and along with the ability to walk, trot and canter he must be able to run swiftly and jump any of the fences and ditches that abound in the 'Tight Little Isle." I doubt if any English rider ever tried a "gaited" horse enough to learn his merit, and I apprehend a somewhat ludicrous result of a first experiment. And this tying to old country custom has prevented our own leaders of fashion from becoming acquainted with the treasure their own countrymen have to offer them in the form of a pure American-bred product.

Of the incomprehensible things under heaven this is the most so, that people who love to ride should favour an uncomfortable horse to an easy one. In our consideration of the gaits in the foregoing paper we have shown that the trot is a rough, jolting gait, tiresome and fatiguing, and to be used with pleasure only as a change from something else Just why a horse should be taboced because he is beautiful, vivacious and comfortable to ride upon is one of the impenetrable mysteries of "fad, fashion and foolishness." There is not one single point of merit in the 'walk, trot" horse that is not embodied in the gaited saddler. In fact, they are the same horse in breeding, put to a different use. The 1903 winner of the saddle horse championship at the Garden was sired by the most popular and successful saddle horse in Kentucky. Given a good saddle horse, take his tail off, teach him to forget his easy gaits, pull his chin in and bound towards his ears with one step and bump back in the saddle with the next, and you have your fashionable horse that conforms to the indefinite, intangible, etherial thing they call 'Type.'

Further—an important part of my plea—a woman, quite as well as a man, can ride a gaited horse with ease, pleasure and decorum, and remember the trot (so dear to the heart of the "walk-trot" purist) is always there in its perfection for the change we take advantage of on some short, secluded bit of road. But the other gaits are so peculiarly adapted for woman's riding it seems a marvel she will permit herself to be denied their perfect pleasure. Early on a spring morning she mounts her gaited horse, whose graceful beauty, from flashing eye to gorgeous, flowing tail, completely fills her pride, and over springy country roads, beneath the foliage of the full-bloomed trees, her horse glides under her at that easy 'stealing pace" that fills her whole being with health, hope and happiness. The running walk is conducive to pleasant thoughts, and while nature smiles on her from every side she moves along in pleasant communion with herself and at peace with all the world A gently sloping stretch of road invites to faster speed, and gently 'feeling" the velvet of her companion's mount, with double reins well gathered, she is graduated without conscious effort or effect, into a rhythm of the four-beat rack that sends her swirling through space, easily, gently and with only such vibration of movement as brings a flush of colour mounting, and sends the blood flying through her veins in a fever of exhilaration She sits quietly upon the saddle, bracing herself slightly upon the reins and stirrup and the quiet, rolling, rocking, swaying of her body thrills her, fills her with ecstatic pleasures never felt before. Horse and rider are one, and in perfect unison. The music of the flying feet, the rushing of the air past her as she sweeps through space and the sense of perfect security and ease combine to form such a symphony of pleasure as makes the path on which she rides seem but a "way to glory."

Slowing down with the same diminution of momentum to a walk, she feels no more of unpleasant sensation than the parlour car passenger of an Empire State express. And while she feels how good a thing is life and how sweet a joy is youth, the gentle onward swing of the fox-trot allows the enthusiasm to become cooled and the blood to resume its normal flow. And even here the great advantages of the gaited horse are in evidence, for these slow gaits so pleasant to ride as a change from the fast speed of the trot, rack or gallop are at the same time ground-covering gaits far different from the dull, dead level of the flat-foot walk. The walk is for the end of the journey, for reminiscence and contemplation, but now we want life and activity. And if the rack is the princeps facile of the fast gaits, so is the canter the movement of beauty, grace and dignity at a slower rate of speed. No horse in the world is comparable with the gaited American saddle horse in the refined daintiness with which he performs this graceful movement. Leading with either foot, rising from his supple haunches, mane and tail swaying with the up-and-down undulation, he is easy as a cradle and realizes the adage of "cantering all day in the shade of a tree."

In a practical way it may be said that the day of the horse as a means of transportation has gone by. The filling up and settling of the country; the decrease in the size of individual holdings: the era of railway and electric trains, of the bicycle and the motor-car—all these have helped to force the horse from the Southern bridle path, the cow range and trail, and even the humble livery steed has all but found the oblivion of innocuous desuetude along with the tow path mule. Generally speaking, the horse remains to us to-day as one of but two things—a beast of burden or a vehicle of pleasure. The race horse, running or trotting, is still here, but whether he is to be classified under the head of profit or pleasure, we will leave to those who have tried him for the former. When we speak of the horse for pleasure, we are sure we are on solid ground, where neither that convenient little run about bicycle nor the most pretentious auto-car can affect us. Nor can such improvements be made in mechanics as will, for one thing is sure: The pleasure of riding or driving a horse is sui generis. Auto-machines may come and go, but for pleasure two horses will forever retain their absolute supremacy: The American Trotter and the American Saddle Horse. For at the last the whole thing is right here: A horse may be a companion; there establishes itself between a congenial man and his horse a bond of sympathy a camaraderie that nothing can take the place of, and nothing take away. The two become one thing, with common feelings and impulses. In song and story; in marble and bronze; in peace and in war the horse has been part and parcel of the history of man and through all the unrest of ambition, whether of toil, of husbandry or charge of battlefield, the page whereon is written the story of man's progress bears letters in shining light of Man's Noblest Friend, the Horse.—Horse Show Monthly.

The Naturalist.

RUNNING ANIMALS.

THE fourth and last of the admirable series of articles devoted to the adaptations of mammals to particular modes of existence, which have for the last few months been in course of publication in the American Naturalist, appeared in the January issue of that journal, and deals with the structural modifications rendered necessary in species which depend upon their speed, either for the purpose of escaping from foes or for capturing their prey. In this article on running, or cursorial, mammals the author, Mr. R. S. Lull, points out that, as might naturally, have been expected, the modifications for the purpose in question are most distinctly displayed in the feet and limbs, and in a less degree in a corresponding elongation of the neck in long-legged forms which is, of course, a necessary correlation. Nevertheless, adaptation for speed is likewise displayed is the moulding of the contour of the body so as to prevent the least possible amount of resistance to the air, as well as in increased heart and lung capacity in order to withstand the greater exertion demanded from those organs, whose duty it is to supply what we may call boiler power to the organism. Nor is this all, for in species which progress by means of great letess, such as kangaroos, jerboas, and African jumping hares, the tail, which has to serve the purpose of a balancing organ, becomes greatly elongated.

Nearly all terrestrial mammals are capable of running to a certain extent, but those which have developed an excessive turn of speed, although numerous, belong for the most part to a comparatively small number of the ordinal groups of the class. The author classes cursorial mammals in two groups according as to whether they possess speed for the purpose of capturing prey or for fleeing from foes. Those coming under the former category are said to be endowed with "offensive flight," while those in the second group are described as exhibiting "defensive flight" Such expression savour however, a little; too much of Americanisms for the taste of English readers, the first being in fact scarcely even grammatically justifiable, seeing that the idea of 'flight," except in the case of birds and bats, essentially implies the act of fleeing from enemies. It can hardly, therefore, be made to express pursuit.

Mammals which capture their prey by running it down or rushing suddenly upon it are to be met with not only among the true carnivora, but likewise among the carnivorous marsupials, in which, as indicated by its name the Tasmanian wolf curiously simulates in build and structure the true wolves. On the other hand, species which seek safety in flight are to be found among the marsupials, as exemplified by the kangaroos and wallabies, among the rodents, as the hare, the jerboas, and the African jumping hares, and in both the odd and even-toed groups of the ungulates; the cursorial representatives of the two latter groups being too numerous and too well-known to need mention.

As regards the adaptation of the foot for great speed, we notice among the carnivora the passage from a plantigrade type of foot, which still survives in the slow moving bears, to one of the digitigrade type, like that of the cats and dogs, in which the animal walks on the tips of its toes. There is also a slight tendency to a reduction in the number of digits, all the member of the dog tribe having lost the first front toe, as has also the Tasmanian wolf; while in the African hunting dog and the hyænas the number of hind toes is likewise reduced to four. Much more marked is the reduction of the number of digits in the hoofed or ungulate mammals, as is also the degree of specialisation of the foot in general. Here, starting with a primitive, partially plantigrade and short-limbed, five-toed mammal, with the toes covered with broad nails (of which the elephant and the hippopotamus are perhaps the nearest living representative). We have a complete gradation on the one hand to long-limbed and single-toed creatures like the modern horses and some of the extinct South American proterotheres in which the one remaining digit is completely encased in a solid hoof; and on the other hand, to the giraffes and certain antelopes in which the reduction process has resulted in the production of a pair of toes to each foot encased in hoofs symmetrical to the line between them. Accompanied with this latter reduction is the production of a cannon bone by the union of the so-called metapodial bones in each foot. Nor is this all in the way of solidifying the limb skeleton, for in both the horse tribe and in the deer, antelopes, oxen, giraffes, etc., the ulna in the fore-leg and the fibula in the hind one have been reduced in size and respectively fused with the radius and the tibia; the lack of any necessity for pronation and supination in the limbs of these animals rendering the presence of two parallel bones in the lower segment superfluous. Again, the lower ends of the cannon bones in these animals are provided with "tongue and groove" joints, which are admirably adapted for running purposes, although they mar the limb for other use.

Another marked cursorial adaptation noticed by the author is the increase in the length of the lower segment of the leg and of the foot, both absolutely and in relation to the length of the thigh bone, or femur; this lengthening of the limb increasing the stride of the animal, while the raising of the centre of gravity accelerates the motion. The greatest development of this adaptation is displayed in animals of the approximat size of the Indan blackbuck, since in species of decidedly larger dimensions the increase in the weight of the body entails greater structural strength, which limits the degree of relative elongation of the limbs.

In all the above-mentioned running animals, as well as in many others, the kind foot is lengthened by the elongation of the metapodial, or metatarsal, bones; but, curiously enough, in the African lemurs or galagos, as well as in the weird little Malay lemur, commonly known as the tarsier, it is the tarsus, or ankle-joint itself which becomes elongated, two of its component elements taking on the character of "long-bones."

Herbivorous cursorial animals, other than those which progress by leaping with the hind limbs alone, also display a lengthening of the head as is well exemplified in the case of the horse; this being, of course, rendered necessary in order that they may be able to graze. A similarly elongated skull is likewise noticeable in the greyhound; and serves in this instance to enable the animal to seize its prey with facility when running at top speed.

The neck is likewise lengthened in herbivorous cursorial forms in correlation with the limbs; the most noticeable instance being the giraffe-antelope, or gerenuk, of Somaliland, the giraffe itself and the extinct giraffe-camel (Alticamelus) of North America, which although a true camel, shows a most giraffe-like build and stature. In jumping forms on the other hand, and more especially those like the Cape jumping hare, in which the head is short, there is a marked tendency to an abbreviation of the neck, accompanied in many cases by a loss of movement, some of the cervical vertebræ being in certain instances fused together. In no instance, however, is there any variation from the typical number of seven cervical vertebræ as a result of speed adaptation.

Finally, it has to be noticed that as a general rule the tail is short in cursorial mammals. The greyhound and the pointer, as well as wolves and foxes present, however, a marked exception to this rule: but as Mr. Lull suggests, this appendage may serve as an aid in maintaining the equilibrium when a greyhound or a pointer is suddenly changing its course, and if so, there would be a sufficient reason for its length. Again the members of the horse tribe, including the wild asses, as well as certain antelopes, such as oryx, have long tails These serve the purpose of a fly brush; and it may be that some animals require such an instrument much more than others. At any rate, the deer manages to get on perfectly well without one.

In jumping mammals, on the other hand, as already mentioned, the tail is frequently very long, and increases in relative length and weight directly with the increase in the proportions of the hind-limbs over the front pair. The development of a caudal counterpoise also occur among such of the extinct dinosaurian reptiles as habitually assumed the upright postures although these creatures walked instead of hopping. In the ostrich and its kindred, as the author points out the balance of the body is maintained by the outstretched wings; these birds having become flightless long after the date when the long tail characteristic of the primitive member of the class had been lost.

As a whole, the series of articles of which the one under consideration forms the last, are a valuable contribution to the study of adaptation among mammals. And the importance of this branch of zoological science can scarcely be overrated, since it is by this means alone we are able to determine which features in the structure of an animal are indicative of genetic affinity.

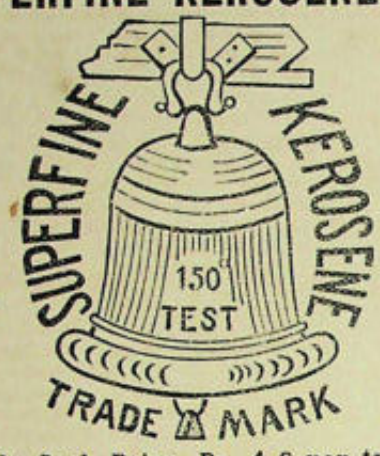
Extract from the "Autocar."

LUBRICATING OILS.—[2422]—It may be instructive to your numerous readers to have the experiences of a motor car experimentalist on the behaviour of lubricating oils for motor work. In the first onset I tried various sorts of oils, all of which left deposits of carbon and gumming matter in the cylinders and valves. These deposits are serious drawbacks, not only to the working of the pistons and valves, but also interfere with the proper sparking at the ignition plugs. I then tried the Valvoline Oil Co.'s oils, using "Wilburine" for the cylinders and "Valvoline" for the bearings, etc.; these being quite pure mineral oils, no deposits either of carbon or gumming matter were left. Every time the pistons, etc., have been examined they were quite bright, clean and well lubricated. The valves also keep in good condition and require very little regrinding. I have been quite free from sparking troubles since using the above lubricants. Any dust that alights on the working parts is easily wiped off, whereas with other oils dirt stuck fast through gumming.

Very much smaller quantities of these oils ("Wilburine" and "Valvoline") about one-third to one-quarter, are required, which more than balances the extra first cost. The wearing surfaces are besides in a magnificent condition. These advantages —viz., high-class lubrication, freedom from deposit in cylinders, gum in bearings, absence of sparking troubles, are too important to be neglected by any motorist.

There is a tendency to use various greases, instead of oils. Engineers have over and over again proved that greases give much greater frictional losses than oils; with motor car engines and bearings the lubricant that gives the least possible friction is the best.



I have referred to the advantages the motorist gets. I will mention another advantage these oils have to those whom the motorist passes, viz., the absence of the fried-fish-shop smell so often noted. Several persons have been very much struck by the absence of smell; even when the car has been standing for some time with the engines running, no trace of offensive odour has been apparent to the bystanders.

I mention these experiences, having no interest in the Valvoline Oil Co., that others may be benefited and save themselves trouble and their neighbours some annoyance.

A REVIVAL OF THE EGLINTON TOURNAMENT.

IT has been proposed, we observe from the English papers, to organise a revival of the famous "Eglinton Tournament" of 1839, whose ruination by bad weather has given the event a place in history which is firmer possibly than would have been the case had a few fine days enabled the promoters of the affair to bring it off with all its long prepared ceremonial and completeness. To discover how great a stir the Eglinton Tournament made in the world of 1838 and 1839, it is necessary to refer to old journals of the period. The story has been repeated time and again in various magazines, but what was perhaps the most curious feature of it has received comparatively little attention: we refer to the practice and rehearsal which occupied social London during practically two years before the date ultimately fixed for the Tournament. The idea was conceived by the thirteenth Earl of Eglinton, a young man of 25, steeped in Arthurian and mediæval lore, in the year 1837: he, a wealthy man, but it may be doubted whether even he, bent as he was on his scheme of reviving for three days the glories of the lists, realised what it was to cost him: that however by the way. He put forward his idea, and the "fashionable world," to use an odious phrase, instantly rose to it. The eagerness with which the leaders of English society welcomed the proposition may have been due to the ever-ready appetite for something novel: or it may have been that chivalrous feeling was roused at the time by the recent advent of the young Queen Victoria to the throne. Whatever the reason, Lord Eglinton's idea was taken up with the utmost enthusiasm.

A suitable field, sufficiently excluded from the vulgar gaze, was found at the Eyre Arms, a then suburban tavern on the outskirts of St. John's Wood, and to the Eyre Arms daily, during the London seasons of 1838 and 1839, resorted every young man of family, who could ride and who intended to bear a part in the Tournament. Lord Chesterfield, Count D'Orsay, Lord Londonderry, the Marquis of Waterford and all the leading men of early Victorian society joined in the business, and spent their afternoon tilting at wooden shields and practising with the lance. Horses had to be trained to withstand the shock of meeting, and to facilitate their education a sort of tramway was laid down on which ran a life size wooden horse moved by rope and windlass, against whose rider the practising knight might educate himself and his mount. The Earl of Eglinton courted publicity for the Tournament itself, but naturally enough those who purposed to bear part in it were not anxious that their bungles and tumbles in the Eyre Arms field should be watched by the newspaper reporter. Hence most that posterity has been permitted to learn of the proceedings at St. John's Wood has come to light through letters which have since been published in "Reminiscences" and "Recollections" of various personages who were interested in the affair at the time. Little has come down to us concerning the horses used: as the practising knights and nobles did not wear armour at rehearsal they no doubt used their most reliable hacks and hunters; and the modern cart-horse who alone among equines could carry the mailed knight in full panoply was not brought into requisition. Public attention to the doings at St John's Wood was only invited in July 1839, when a full dress rehearsal took place for the last time, preparatory to the real Tournament, which had been arranged to take place on the 28th and two following days in August: and during the intervening weeks the "Eglinton Tournament" was the staple topic of public interest.

The thing was done on an extraordinarily lavish scale. The Eglinton Castle "house party" numbered 300 and included royalties from most parts of Europe: stands were erected in the park to accommodate 3,000 people; and the Earl issued a general invitation to persons of all classes in the three kingdoms to be present. This remarkable public invitation was coupled with a request that those who came should wear the dress of the period to which the Tournament referred—the sixteenth century—and on the great day it must have been a matter of no small gratification to the Earl to see that a large proportion of the host that assembled—estimated at 200,000 persons—had observed his wishes. This phase of the affair, by the way, gave rise to a curious difficulty: pursuant to his policy of giving the public an interest in the matter, Lord Eglinton caused special and excellent arrangements to be made for the newspaper reporters: and the question was mooted what style of dress would be appropriate to a calling which had no existence in the sixteenth century? The editor of a local journal gave expression to his doubts on the point and received an unlooked for reply from a rival Glasgow editor who urged the Eyre editor to "go in a fool'scap and bells as Wamba son of Witless."

The Earl's great undertaking, it may be remarked, was not unanimously approved by a section of the Scottish public whose imagination was not amenable to the romance of the affair: and the Glasgow Argus had been prominent in denouncing the Tournament as tomfoolery which disgraced all concerned with it. That the "tomfoolery" brought into the district more money than the inhabitants ever had had to spend before or since was a detail which might have commended the scheme to the hard-headed Scots, but their dourness apparently rose superior even to monetary considerations. At the eleventh hour a fresh and entirely unforeseen difficulty cropped up in the persons of the police: the authorities, who had apparently been rubbing up their history for the occasion, discovered that the jousts of ancient days were frequently the cause of serious accidents: and they interfered. Their intervention, however, was pardonably half-hearted: indeed it seems to have been almost a formal compliance with some grandmotherly piece of officialism: and, receiving the assurance that the lances were without steel points and were made of a wood that did not splinter, and also that the armour (in many cases genuine antique mail) could be relied upon, the police gracefully withdrew.

There is no institution or ceremonial of the middle ages concerning which more complete and minute details have been preserved to us than the complex etiquette which surrounded the old Tournament: and the Eglinton Tournament reproduced these with an elaboration which did infinite credit to those who "stage managed" it. The public could not be expected to appreciate the research and care which had been exercised in laying out the lists and in getting up the ancient laws and forms of the tourney, but they could appreciate the wonderful pageantry which surrounded the business, from the Queen of Beauty (Lady Seymour, one of the three famous Miss Sheridans) down to the squires, retainers and men at arms. The enthusiasm of the public knew no bounds. Every house within twenty miles of Eglinton Castle took in guests for the occasion, either as friends or for payment: off Ardrossan, the nearest point on the Firth of Clyde, some twenty steamers, fitted up as floating hotels, were anchored; and fancy prices were paid for any and every kind of conveyance. One thing only was necessary to secure success—a fine day: and that was denied the Tournament. The Queen of Beauty and her ladies, who were to have ridden in procession on the cobs which had been collected and equipped with gorgeous trappings, declined to face the downpour of rain which ushered in that memorable 28th August, and arrived at their Pavilion in the most modern of closed carriages: the knights in their magnificent armour, their squires, trumpeters, standard bearers and retinues braved the storm and paraded in shoals of mud and sawdust: but this touch of realism was cruelly counteracted by the practically-minded spectators who, regardless of the sorry anachronism, put up forests of umbrellas. Ginghams at a sixteenth century function! Storms of rain notwithstanding the programme was carried out in a curtailed form, and the better part of the day was spent in an admirable reproduction of the "jousts of peace." On the 29th the lists were flooded, and the house party had to be content with bouts of sword play in the ball-room; but the rain ceasing that night the Tournament was renewed on the 30th with the Queen of Beauty's procession and other ceremonies which had been given up on the 28th. The last act was a sword combat between eight mounted knights, and is memorable for the contrétemps which no doubt had many a counterpart four centuries ago. The hot-headed Marquis of Waterford was pitted against Lord Alford: and the two losing their tempers attacked one another with the forbidden "point" with such hearty ill-will that the Marshal of the Lists had to exercise the authority of his ancient office in good earnest and separate the combatants. Only one accident of any consequence occurred: the Hon'ble Edward Jermingham, who appeared as the Knight of the White Swan, received an injury to his wrist from whose effects he suffered for a long time. His death from fever ten years later was attributed to the effects of this wound: other mishaps, to the chief actors at all events, there were none.

What was spent on this remarkable Tournament by all concerned in it cannot of course be known: some of the fifteen knights who bore part spent upwards of £2,000 on their armour and trappings, and each of the 300 guests who formed the house party made a point of maintaining their sixteenth century character indoors and out during the tournament week. Lord Eglinton, on whom of course fell the lion's share of the cost, spent £40,000 on the affair before it was finished; but it is to be remembered that larger sums have been spent in modern times upon schemes with much less to recommend them and calculated to afford pleasure to not one-twentieth the number of people.

The Tournament which is reported to be in contemplation cannot be in any sense a rival of the great Eglinton pageant: it is proposed to hold it in aid of charity, and though the charities may benefit, we may doubt whether the thing will be done on the prodigal scale which made for success in the Tournament of 1839.

FISH CULTURE AS A SOURCE OF CHEAP FOOD.

THE question of Fish Preservation and Culture has been brought before the Indian Government time after time, but so far the matter has not been taken in hand with any seriousness. We all know how fry are ruthlessly destroyed in millions every year, which, if preserved, might become hundreds of tons of valuable food. The legislature necessary to turn the fresh waters of Hindoostan into fruitful fish farms would have to be vast and far-reaching, and the contemplation of such a task appears to be quite beyond the powers that be. As it is apparently hopeless to expect any sweeping fishery laws being made and enforced, it will be as well to think out some way of making a beginning.

Perhaps if the Indian Government could be induced to make an experimental grant extending over, say, ten years; the importance of fish as a food-supply might be so irrefutably established, that efficient Legislature would follow as a matter of course We would propose one or two fish farms being started in suitable localities in each Presidency. Each farm would require a small fish-curing factory, to preserve the fish in various ways. The fish to experiment with would be the various labeos and carps, and the gourami. The murrals would also probably repay culture. At present we do not know their growth rate, but they are much esteemed as food by certain of the native population, and they are singularly easy to transport, as they will live many hours out of water.

The tanks and ponds of the experimental farms would, of course, have to be canal fed, in order to ensure a constant water supply. Re-oxygenation by means of running in fresh water is also very important during the hot weather in order to keep fish free from disease. The interesting question could then also be tested, as to whether a certain amount of canal water devoted to fish culture brings better returns, than the same volume expended in irrigating crops.

Fish on farms would, of course, be principally fed on natural food. Certain weeds are most valuable: some few are actually eaten by the large carps, and the gourami is also a vegetable-eater, but weeds derive their principal importance from the animal life they bring with them. The fresh water snail is a fish food of the highest value.

Fish ponds, if they are to give the highest results, must be under perfect control. If they can be run dry and cleaned out when necessary, so much the better. They should, at any rate, be capable of being thoroughly netted. Predaceous fish in India are innumerable, and every precaution would have to be taken to keep them out of the ponds.

The labeos and carps grow with great rapidity when turned into suitable water. Small fry of an ounce or so will probably attain to at least a pound within a year.

The spawning of Indian fish is at present so little understood, that the ponds at first would be stocked by means of netting suitable fry from rivers and tanks. With the fish under strict observation, the best methods of artificial breeding would be quickly arrived at; and the farms once well established, steps could be taken to gradually re-stock and preserve suitable waters all over India.

INTER-VARSITY CRICKET MATCH.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Monday, 4th July 1904.

THE match between Oxford and Cambridge, which began at Lords on the 30th June, ended in a draw.

Cambridge made 253 in the first innings and 390 for eight wickets in the second and then declared. Oxford made 149 in the first innings and 221 for six wickets in the second.

THE AMATEUR ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION CHAMPIONSHIPS.

London, Monday, 4th July 1904.

THIS meeting was held at Rochdale on Saturday, the 2nd instant, and produced good results. Shrubb won the mile and 4 miles, Larner walked in great form and Workman won the half mile—all very popular wins. Details:—

Sporting Notes.

UP to the present the prospects for the Calcutta Monsoon meetings do not look too brilliant as regards fields ; but after all it is the rule rather than the exception to foresee a paucity of horses for their fixtures, and yet when the time comes they usually roll up in numbers sufficient to fill up a satisfactory card.

Mr. Galstaun has, we understand, only four in pickle for the Autumn meetings, three ponies and an untrained jump horse. The ponies are Rosalea, Western Queen, and the evergreen Not Yet. The hurdle horse, a dark chestnut from the Straits, was given a few schools this time last year, but did not start in a race. He is a nice lepper at any rate, though as he has not been sent along as yet, it remains to be seen whether he has much dash of foot.

There should, with any luck, be no difficulty in filling the jump races, as there are a very fair number of jumpers undergoing preparation ; one that should be about the best of the bundle being Bell Brand, who is now in Smallman's charge. This horse is taking very kindly to the game and has, as we know, a great turn of speed. Whether he will be able to get a mile and a half in the mud is another matter, though of course it is well-known that many horses who could not even get six furlongs on the flat have turned out a success over two miles of sticks.

Mr. Parsons, too, has a useful jumper in Belmeath, the property of Mr. Rowland Hudson, and the winner of a good hurdle race at home, besides one or two minor performances on the flat. He has also a couple of Irish-bred youngsters belonging to the same owner, and the little bay horse Planet, who it is to be supposed will go for the closed hurdle races and should be worth looking after.

Another pair have come down from Behar in Pierette and a jump pony, both belonging to Mr. Hamilton. The latter went a short school with Yuletide on Saturday, but seemed to jump a bit sticky, at last the mare was jumping right away from him at each flight. Bell Brand, Mr. Galstaun's chestnut, and a little brown horse named, we believe, Norman, also put in a school the same morning, all fencing well.

Euryalus is also being schooled over hurdles, but is not taking kindly to it so far, and on Saturday morning gave Wall a spill, after repeated refusals.

No jumping was indulged in on Tuesday, but a little fast work was witnessed, being restricted to short spurts across the middle of the course. Bell Brand, Harold and Hello were the first to go out and put in a short three-quarter pace spin.

Rosalea and Not Yet were given a couple of darts over three furlongs, as were also Western Queen and a new one from the same string. All this lot are looking as fit as possible and only require a final polish to be cherry ripe. Clynder, and a new one of Mr. Dass' did a couple of spins in which the new one looked to be altogether out-classed.

We have seen a copy of the programme for the second Tollygunge Gymkhana on the 16th instant; the Courteous Hony. Secretary did not send us one. It does not call for much comment, except perhaps as regards the introduction of the "All-Comers' Stakes," in which the usual restrictions as to owners being members of one or other of the principal clubs are withdrawn. This strikes us as being a distinctly wise move and we shall not be surprised to see a very fair field turn out for this race. It is not quite apparent from the wording of the programme whether these restrictions are also withdrawn as regards riders and the race opened to all G. R.'s or not, but we take it that this is the idea and here again we applaud.

As regards the rest of the programme, it remains to be seen whether three flat races for ponies on the same day will fill, but it looks doubtful. In view also of the walk-over for the hurdle race at the last meeting, it would hardly seem as though the chase included in this card stood much chance of drawing a field but nous verrons, as Mr. Jorrocks says.

It is rumoured that the Nawab of Dacca has offered the appointment of general manager of his estates to Mr. Luttman Johnson, late Commissioner of the Dacca Division. Though from an accident Mr. Johnson is debarred from personal participation in field sports, as a district officer in Assam he took a keen interest in game preservation, so should he accept the proferred post we may look for a much stricter conservation of the Mahadapur waste than has been exercised over it since the grandfather of the present owner Ghani Meah practically threw it open to the surrounding villagers some thirty years ago. Previous to this the ground was as popular with the big game hunter as the khets of Jessore with the spearman under Archie Hills.

Second entries for the Army Cup are but two—Modesty and Alexis, as per details further on. This brings the total up to thirty-nine, and we may add that third entries close on the 1st October.

There is no second entry for the Civil Service Cup.

The marriage of Mrs. A. G. Lewis, the millionaire widow of the late Mr. "Sam" Lewis, of 16, Grosvener Square, W., and Woodside, Maidenhead, to Mr. Montague Hill, of the Scots Guards, is announced to take place this month. On Mr. Lewis's death it was estimated that his estate was worth £4,000,000. Mrs. Lewis's sister is Hope Temple, the well-known composer, who is now the wife of Mr. André Messager. Mr. Montague Hill, her future husband, is in his twenty-eighth year. He joined the Scots Guards from Sandhurst in January, 1899, and obtained his lieutenancy in 1900. He served under Lord Methuen with the Brigade of Guards at the Cape. After good work at Belmont and Enslin, he was wounded at Modder River. His keenness as a soldier secured him the adjutancy of his battalion.

Mr. Edmond Blanc, the owner of Ajax, has no reason to be otherwise than satisfied with the horse, especially when he casts his eye on his racing account. Ajax has won him five races and placed to the credit of his account in stakes £22,404.

The black country-bred mare, Blue Bell, owned by the Maharajah of Mysore, has been renamed Clara.

We hear from Rangoon that Mr. Beville has lost that first-class little mare Ida: she died last week.

Our Poona Correspondent writes:—We are now launched out into the perilous sea of the season's festivities, the shove off from the shore having been given by the functions in honour of the birthday of His Most Gracious Majesty, The King (whom may God long preserve) The big parade was really a very fine sight and though it is not my mission in life, or goodness knows my desire, to draw any comparison there is no doubt that for feminine eyes there is a wondrous fascination in the "lilt o' the kilt." Sir Archibald Hunter took the parade while His Excellency Lord Lamington, on horseback, took the place of honour at the saluting flag. His Excellency certainly had a hard day's work. For in the afternoon he held his first levée in the Hall of Council; entertained a large number of high functionaries at a State banquet and after dinner he and Lady Lamington held a reception—one of the most largely-attended ones on record I am assured—which lasted till a late hour.

By the way some serious calamity evidently happened to the flag staff in the Council Hall as we all noticed with a shock that "the flag that's braved a thousand years the battle and the breeze" was fluttering ignominiously, yet defiantly from a disreputable looking bamboo stuck in an unwonted position. But thank Heaven the Union Jack is the Union Jack where ever it flutters!

Cricket calls for more than a mere passing comment this week owing to the fact that in a match between the "Indian Army" against "The World" the first batsman on either side and no less than three performers successfully topped the century. It seems almost superfluous to add that one of the centurions was Captain Greig whose arduous duties in hunting the Somaliland Snark do not seem to have materially interfered with the strict accuracy of his vision. After scoring five score runs and five he obligingly retired, a politeness which was copied by Mr. Carroll on passing the coveted triplet and after annexing 287 for seven wickets, five out and the above two "voluntaries," the Indian Army adopted the closure. If they mildly imagined it was all over bar the shouting, however, they grievously erred, for Mr. A. D. Wilkins, the veteran of many hard-fought fights, who was, I am told, playing cricket out here when many of us were at dame schools, soon showed that he was still in form and playing delightful cricket, made 103 before he put one up in the air, Mr. Kearsey (not out 53) and Mr. Ussher (not out 30) added most useful contribution with the result that at call of time The World were 206 for two wickets.

The news that Colonel Sheringham was taking hounds for exercise to draw the babul covers and reeds along the river bank behind the Sappers and Miner's Mess on the off chance of finding a jack attracted a large number of sportsmen to Holkar's Bridge and I hear a sprinkling of habits even though it was understood that no serious work was intended. Hares were, I believe, annoyingly plentiful and hounds wonderfully steady to the riot of fur, but though hounds seemed once to hit off the line of a jack the ground was so sunbaked and the morning so dry and hot that they could make nothing of it. Colonel Sheringham has not, I believe, been able to dare put as much work into the hounds as he could have wished and they are still as a natural result a bit backward in galloping condition. Hounds drew right away down to the Bund Bridge without their just reward.

A few days afterwards they did a useful morning's exercise in the country round about the ominously-named Gibbet Hill and though a jack and a brace of foxes were on foot hounds could make little of an impossible scent. The first real business is, I hear, to be on the 3rd at Yerrowda which appears from all I can gather to be the pick of the hunting country and the opening meet is definitely fixed for the 7th at Government House. In my last week's note on hounds I see I inadvertently referred to the Hunt having sustained a loss owing to the departure since last season of the Shropshires. How I ran off the line I really don't know. I meant the Buffs, who I have been assured formed a very strong hunting contingent, none attending more regularly or going straighter than the Commanding Officer Colonel Vyvyan. Doubtless one or both of the new regiments will fully fill the gap in supporting the Hunt.

The second match in the Lahore Polo Tournament was played on the 23rd ultimo when "B" Team met "C" Team, the latter winning after a well contested game by 3 goals and 1 subsidiary to 1 goal and 4 subsidiaries. Teams:—"B" Maxwell 1, Smith 2, St. John 3, Greenway (back). "C" Elgee 1, Casson 2, Clifford 3, Warburton (back). On the 25th ultimo "C" Team beat "A" Team by 2 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 2 subsidiaries. "C" Team thus are easily first in the Tournament, the total scores being as follows:—"C" 5 goals, and 4 subsidiaries; "B" 2 goals and 7 subsidiaries: "A" 5 subsidiaries.

In connection with two-year-old racing and the newly-passed Rule reintroducing juvenile races of four furlongs, it is interesting, writes "Arbitrator" in the Sportsman, to recall some bygone attempts of members of the Jockey Club to ameliorate the lot of thorough-breds of that tender age. One most serious attempt was that of Sir Joseph Hawley, who in 1869 made a proposal to his fellow members of the "most exclusive Club in Europe," to the effect that no two-year-old should run earlier in the year than 1st July. This motion was lost by 25 votes to 18. Among those who voted for the resolution was Lord Durham, father of the present peer. After several other resolutions of Sir Joseph Hawley's had been lost, inclusive of one which stipulated that two-year-olds running a dead-heat should not be allowed to run it off, but must divide the prize—thus anticipating a somewhat similar rule which came into being a few years ago—an alternative proposal by Colonel Forester was carried by 27 votes to 8, making it law that two-year-olds should not run before 1st May.

This compromise remained in force exactly four seasons (1870—'73). Apparently, however, there was strong opposition to two-year-olds being debarred from running during the first nine weeks of the season, for at a general meeting of the Jockey Club held at Newmarket during the Houghton Meeting of 1873, Mr. Caledon Alexander moved "that the part of Rule 15 which prohibits two-year-olds from running until 1st May be rescinded, and that they be allowed to run at and after the first legitimate race meeting of the season. Mr. Stirling Crawfurd seconded the motion, Admiral Rous supported it, and Mr. George Payne presented a memorial in its favour. Mr. Henry Chaplin proposed, as an amendment, that the Rule should remain as it was, and among his supporters was General Peel. On a division 16 voted for the original motion and 14 for Mr. Chaplin's amendment. It was to this narrow majority of two, therefore, whether for better or for worse, that the Turf owed the reinstitution of early two-year-old racing after its temporary abandonment Harking back to Sir Joseph Hawley's original resolution that no two-year-olds should run earlier than the 1st of July. the Kentish baronet had on his side, in addition to the late Lord Durham and Mr. Chaplin, such other prominent owners as Lord Bradford, Colonel Forester, Mr. H. Savile, and Lords Stradbroke, Strafford, Wilton, Zetland, and Fitzwilliam, as well as the late Duke of Richmond and the Duke of Rutland. The late Lord Derby was not present, but wrote Sir Joseph Hawley a letter approving of his proposal. To such a sweeping measure Admiral Rous was strongly opposed, and among the 24 others who voted against it were the late Lord Falmouth, the Duke af Beaufort, Prince Soltykoff, Lord Alington (then still Mr. Sturt), the Duke of St. Albans, Lord St. Vincent, Prince (then Count) Batthyany, Lord George Manners, Mr. George Payne, Sir Frederic Johnstone, Sir Charles Legard, Baron Rothschild, Lord Calthorpe, and Mr. Alexander. The last-named a few years later led the anti-close-timists in their successful assault on the milder measure which was passed in place of Sir Joseph's drastic remedy for the ills of our two-year-olds.

Our Mysore Correspondent writes:—The week is over and it has been a huge success. Having the happiness to be able to speak from experience, I can state that the arrangements made for the entertainment of His Highness' guests were perfect, and they were loud in their appreciation of the fact. Lavish expenditure was no more carefully carried out than small details, and it is these small details which as much as anything else conduce to complete success. There were three dances and two concerts in Government House during the week, and a special word of praise is due to the playing of H. H. the Maharaja's band, which was quite first rate. Mr. Alec Marsh, an English baritone of some repute, had been invited as a guest of the Maharaja's and moreover professionally engaged at great expense. A pleasing feature of the week was a dinner of Old Etonians, who were guests in Government House. This little function was organised by Captain Stirling, D. S. O., of the Essex Regiment, and just a round dozen sat down, including R. Moss King, the Hon'ble H. E. Thelluson, J. J. Unthank, R. Neave, C. Graham, A. Gwyer, E. J. Peel, I. E. Darley, C. M. Lawin, F. C. Rash, Captain G. H. Stirling, and T. M. Babington. The last-named as the senior Etonian present was in the chair and proposed "Florast Etona, esto perpetua," which was duly honoured and several verses of the Eton boating song were sung.

Each Etonian present signed his name, on the back of a menu, inserting the initials of his house master and the years during which he was at school, and the menus so signed were retained as mementos of the occasion. Considering that Captain Stirling's engagement to Miss Mabel Sprot, daughter, of Colonel Sport commanding the Carbiniers, has only just been announced, it was infinitely energetic of him to find time for the organisation of a gathering which will be a modest landmark in the memories of those present.

With regard to the sport of the week, it has been so fully reported for your columns that not much need be said here. Bundook did not quite come up to the expectations I had formed of him, but then whilst bowing in all humility to the superior wisdom of Mr. Cursetjee Dinshaw, it did not seem to me that he was too well treated. Surely on public form, Goldsmith, the winner of the Cup, should have given him weight? However, he would nearly have beaten Misty in the Palace Cup had the weather been dry. He ran very game, but was under the whip for nearly a furlong. A similar remark applies to the finish between Minimus and Cleopatra, in which the former was beaten a neck carrying 12st 10lbs. (ye gods!) on a wet course. Fields were not too big, and many jockeys who went up to Mysore did not, it is to be feared, get mounts.

Other features of the meeting were the surprising running of Jack Horner on the second day, when he won the second best stake of the meeting; and the manner in which Ptarmagau, Colonel Desaraj Urs' well-known half-mile Arab, compassed double that distance and won in a canter. Jack Horner was of course chucked in with 6st. 2lbs., but even so no one thought he could beat an Arab of the class of Gallant. The third day was the worst of the three for backers, and the fielders must have done well on the meeting.

The polo tournament also has been sent you in full detail, and little remains to be said. Quite the most consistent team which was entered won, and as the next best got into the final, there was no fluke about it. But if the "Carbs" could only have moderated their ardour, and hit a bit slower when nearing goal they would have made a much better fight. Captain Peel stood out by himself as an individual player, and by the way I hear that one or two of his ponies are for sale. There is a very particular little grey whose name I cannot remember at the moment, but the subject is worthy of the attention of polo players. (Verb sap.) Very sporting young teams came from the Essex Regiment and Durham L. I. and it was good to see how those boys put all their heart and soul into the polo. I think the Durhams should have beaten Rajah Venugopaul Bahadur's team, and a little better mounted, the Essex Regiment would have bothered the Carabiniers.

The Kulu fruit growers are not the only ones who have to complain of the invasion of bruin, for the terai villagers in North and Eastern India are suffering from a similar irruption of shaggy coated poachers. As a general rule the small black fellow under the eastern mountains confines his attention to jack, but since bee-keeping has been entered on systematically, he has turned his attention to the hives; even those set up in the centre of the villages. As visitors find no difficulty in obtaining quarters among the people hereabouts some good fun can be had in capturing there animals as the cubs are seldom left at home, but in honey-stealing more especially, accompany the dam and once the adult is accounted for they will not quit the body. There is no sneaking on the part of these midnight marauders for when once they have scented honey they go boldly for it. Small as the black sub-Hamalayan bear is he is not to be played with, for though the full-grown male generally tries to get away the female will show determined fight when the cubs are with her. There is no difficulty in getting reliable khubber for the victimised bee-keeper is only too glad to get asistance. The wild hives pendent from tree limbs and over-hanging rocks are easily spotted and though to a more intelligent animal their position would reveal the hopelessness of getting at them, bruin will remain about the place for days on the chance of something happening to bring booty within his reach; detached portions of comb do occasionally fall and then there's ruction twixt bear and monkey for possession. In well wooded ravines where hives are to be seen regular bear walks are found so there is not much likelihood of the hunter returning empty handed from either village or jungle. A jack tope is almost always a certain find at this reason when the fruit is in its prime.

The abnormally heavy rains that visited the whole of Northern India in March and April though driving animals from the low lands up into the ravines and mountain spurs, thus bothering those who indulge in howdah shooting, has played into the hands of the fowler for next season's operations. The usual grass firing which destroyed multitudes of immature birds has been rendered impracticable over a vast extent of country and though no doubt a considerable number of delicate chicks have succumbed to the wet, there has been nothing like the destruction caused by the practice alluded to. Vermin have no doubt enjoyed a similar immunity, but as the former greatly out number them in ordinary seasons that does not much matter. Of big game there seems to be no dearth, and with an early tailing off of the rains, which many predict, fawns and wild calves should be born under the most favorable conditions. On the higher lands self-sown seeds, such as orchids, etc., have had a better chance of establishing themselves than for many years past, hence both sportsmen and botanists have every reason to anticipate a successful cold weather. The early rising of the mountain streams also, in preventing close weir fishing, has given the finny tribe a respite, so that though many hot weather outings have been spoilt, taking things all round, the cycle of wet has been propitious so far as next cold weather operations are concerned.

There is a very common belief amongst keepers and others, that birds are odourless during the period of incubation, writes "Ranger" in the Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News. I have always been sceptical upon this point until recently, when a pair of robins built their nest in a mushroom ridge about two feet from the ground. Past this nest my brace of cocker spaniels go to and fro the whole day long, but they have never "winded" the robin. As these dogs are the keenest-nosed spaniels I ever possessed there must be something in the odourless theory. I was discussing this subject with my friend, Velveteens, who has been going about the woods, with dogs at his heels, all his life. He was very emphatic in his belief that sitting birds possessed no odour, and what was more he declared that a vixen carrying young gave off no sent. He ought to know, for his dogs have been chasing foxes off his ground for the past ten years at least. It is useless to remonstrate, because he says his business is to rear birds, not foxes, and his master does not hunt.

We understand that Lieutenant-Colonel J. F. Worlledge, of the 99th Deccan Infantry, was successful in bagging not fewer than 12 tigers during a month's shooting trip in the Sirpur Tandur District of the Nizam's Dominions. This is something like a successful shoot, even though it took thirty days to do.

That great lady shikari Lady Jenkins recently returned from one of her numerous tiger shoots and was made the honoured guest at a grand banquet given by His Highness the Nizam in her honour. By order of the Nizam a photograph was taken on the occasion in which besides His Highness and his principal guests Brigadier-General Beatson, Major and Mrs. Wolseley Haig, the Prime Minister, the Premier Nobles, Colonel Afsar-ul-Mulk, and others appeared.

One of the Ootacamund hounds, glorying in the undoggy-like soubriquet of Red Skin got left out in a hunt on the 22nd of June. The Master was afraid he had got stuck in an earth and a search of all the probable earths was made for two days without success. On the third day Red Skin was heard barking in a nullah by some men who were passing that way. He was subsequently dug out having been in the earth about 86 hours and 107 hours without food. Of course Red Skin was very weak, but it is good to hear that he is doing well.

The Northern India Kennel Association are endeavouring to effect a reform which, if carried out, should be of immense benefit to our big Indian shows. The Secretary of the N. I. K. A. writes the following letter:—

"We are making an attempt to collect sufficient money to bring out to India, this cold weather, a judge from England for our chief shows in Bombay, Lahore and Calcutta. It has occurred to me that, perhaps, your Club would like to join, for it would scarcely cost more for the judge to go from Calcutta to Colombo and to England than from Calcutta to Bombay and England. The Northern India Kennel Association have promised Rs. 500, and I fancy only about Rs. 1,500 would be required, and we should try to raise the balance from show funds and by sending round the hat. Men are coming forward already with promises. Could your Club join? If so, what amount would you give? It would be a great thing for shows, and would give a great impetus to canine matters. Will you kindly lay the matter before your Committee and let me hear as soon as possible, for there is not much time. Mr. Sydney Castle is probably the man who would come. He is a well-known judg- at Home."

Athletic Notes.

THE English Varsity team of athletes who will meet the Americans this month have been selected, and on paper it looks as if we shall be able to render a good account of ourselves. Here are the names:—100 Yards—R. W. Barclay (Cambridge) and J. Churchill (Cambridge); Quarter Mile—R. W. Barclay (Cambridge) and J. Churchill or T. B. Wilson (Cambridge); Half Mile—K. Cornwallis and H. E. Holding (Oxford); One Mile—H. W. Gregson (Cambridge) and C. C. Henderson Hamilton (Oxford); Two Miles—A. R. Churchill (Cambridge), M. H. Godley (Oxford) and H. W. Gregson (Cambridge); High Jump—E. E. Leader (Cambridge) and C. S. Doorly (Cambridge); Long Jump—T. A. Leach (Oxford) and G. Le B. Smith (Oxford); Hurdles—F. H. Teall (Cambridge) and A. M. Lyle (Oxford); Hammer—M. Spicer (Cambridge) and B. M. Tomlinson (Oxford).

Many as are the brilliant performances which that wonderful runner, Alfred Shrubb, has accomplished during his sensational career, he has seldom been seen to greater advantage than at Glasgow on the 11th ultimo. Taking part in two events, he covered himself with glory on each occasion, winning the Two Miles' handicap from scratch in 9mins. 9⅗ secs.—world's record for the distance—and later in the afternoon scoring again over a mile in a similar sort of event. That Shrubb was running extraordinarily well, even for him, is suggested by the fact that the time—4mins. 23⅘secs.—is better than any he had previously accomplished at the distance, while to McGough, who a few weeks previously had beaten the South London Harrier on even terms, he this time successfully conceded 15 yards. If he confined his attention for a time to the shorter distances, Shrubb could very probably get near George's wonderful mile record. As our special wire informs us Shrubb last Saturday won the mile and 4 miles at the A. A. A. Championship meeting for the second and fourth years in succession.

Review. To find a pure exercise which is not a game, he says, and which approximates in anything like the degree that running and walking do to our beau ideal, we must hark back to the days of our youth, or, indeed of our childhood, and must make up our minds to try skipping. The trained athlete knows that skipping holds a high place in the repertory of exercises which the candidate for honours in athletics, of whatever kind, practises in order to develop firmness in his muscles generally, capacity of breathing power and maintenance of sustained effort. It is stated on good authority that a well-known pugilist of the mid-Victorian era (Jem Mace) had so high an opinion of skipping for the purpose of training that he used it largly to get himself into condition for fighting, and especially as a means of promoting agility, in which he was remarkably proficient. Many a footballer and boating man also has had reason to thank the skipping rope for bringing him into condition for the struggle in which, with leg or arm, he had prepared himself to engage. Among the claims of skipping is the ease with which it can be graduated to meet the capacity of even the feeblest tyro. For the graduation of effort is of the very essence of training. Skipping is essentially a rhythmical exercise. The skipper cannot skip at all except in a rhythm of some sort. Other forms of home athletics, such as dumbbells, clubs, expanders, etc., may be used in a rhythmical manner, but the rhythm must be imparted to them by the will of the user. It is this essentially rhythmical feature of skipping which enables it to be graduated so precisely. The skipper who adjusts his movements to a definite rate per minute may be assured that in 10 minutes he is expending just 10 times the energy that he expends in one minute, with a greater certainty than he can have in the case of any other exercise except walking. Skipping gives hope to the corpulent. Dr. Bond quotes a lady writer, well known for her works on hygiene, who says that "for keeping corpulence at bay there is nothing to equal skipping," and relates the experience of "a poor but unhappy lady of her acquaintance." This lady, being threatened with embonpoint, adopted the advice of a candid friend and took to skipping as her daily exercise. Living in a neighbourhood where the barrel organ nuisance is rampant, she is a proof of the saying that "it is an ill wind that blows nobody any good," for she so manages her work that as soon as the daily organ reaches her end of the street she can take her skipping rope into her paved back yard and skip in regular measure to its rhythmic if noisy music. She is now slim and upright as a dart, bright of face, and ready for anything.

Among the county cricket results at home last week were the following:—Surrey beat Derbyshire by an innings and 103 runs: Sussex beat Leicestershire by an innings and 92: Yorkshire beat Warwickshire by an innings and 4: and Notts drew with Lancashire.

We remind our local readers of the big football match—Civil vs. Military—which is set down for settlement on the Calcutta F. C. ground next Saturday afternoon. The I. F. A. executive have been at great pains to have all the arrangements for the match as pucca as possible, and we believe more than usual attention has been devoted to the seating accommodation, the desire being to ensure the greatest comfort to those who patronise the gallery and help to swell the exchequer of some of our most deserving charities, to wit, the Hospital Nurses' Association, the Little Sisters of the Poor and a military institution given to good works. We are glad to hear that every reserved seat has been booked; it needs but fine weather to make the undertaking a success. We think the idea a very sound one; indeed a charity match once a month, if any one could be found with time enough to run it, would not, in our opinion, be out of place; we must be a miserable lot, with a poor idea of "charity," if we find a rupee a month too great a tax on our generosity.

We have to thank the Telegraph Department for a copy of the July number of the Indian Telegraph Guide.

A most unfortunate gun accident has deprived the Calcutta Football Club of one of its best backs, and the Bengal Pilot Service of one of its most promising young officers. Mr. H. R. Todd was admitted to the General Hospital on Monday suffering from the effects of a gunshot wound, the result of a most deplorable accident, and, to the regret of all who knew him, he expired on admission.

From the report of the directors of the Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society, we make the following extracts:—

The nett premium income for the year ending 31st December 1903, amounted to £1,140,351.

The percentage of losses on premiums is 51·41 as against 51·55 in 1902 and 71·74 in 1901.

After setting aside one-third of the premiums (£380,117) as a Reserve against liabilities on policies not run off, the balance at the credit of profit and loss account, including the unappropriated balance, £189,921, brought forward from the previous year, is £341,981, out of which an interim dividend of £2 per share was paid in January last, and a further dividend of £2 per share, with the addition of a bonus of £1, has been declared by the board, and will be payable on the 9th of June.

The undivided balance, amounting to £286,981, inclusive of £125,000 required to provide for the Society's losses arising out of the conflagration at Baltimore in February last, is carried forward to next year's credit.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes.—The past week has been singularly unattractive from a sporting point of view chiefly on account of heavy rain in the evenings. Interest in Rugger is, I am glad to say, on the increase in Bombay judging from the number of people who have turned out to witness the games between the Gymkhana, United Services and the Casuals during the past three weeks. I am glad of this in common with a great many others who have seen with regret the very small interest taken in Rugger outside the Gymkhana during the past five or six years. The formation of the Casuals Club was given a great stimulus to the game and I doubt not has weaned back to their allegiance a number of players who had temporarily forsaken Rugger for Soccer. With so much interest taken in Rugger now there is a good chance that some at least of the lost glories of Bombay will be restored, glories which held sway in the halcyon days of Marshall Reid (Scottish International), R. H. MacAulay (Cambridge Blue), A. Walpole (Irish International), P. R. Cadel (Oxford Blue), H. F. Cleveland (Blackheath), J. H. Casserby (Dublin), and a host of others well known in home club circles. The brothers Langhorne, who have given a great impetus to the game in military circles and have twice so far put teams representing the Colaba Garrison in the field, are as keen as mustard and are moreover both good players to boot. There are a large number of enthusiasts and provided they turn out regularly interest in Rugger will be sustained. The Casuals are a bit new to the game yet, and their play is somewhat crude but shews improvement every week. On Friday they met the Gymkhana and were beaten by a goal, a drop goal, and a try to nil. Even these points hardly represented the difference between the two teams, the Gymkhana showing immeasurably superior combinations both in the forward and back lines. Griffiths, Brand, Taylor and Mackay were all very greatly in evidence for the Gymkhana, Mackay and Griffiths crossing the line and Taylor dropping a neat goal on the Casuals' 25 line. Brand kicked a goal off Mackay's try. Before closing my references to Rugger I would like to mention an instance of keenness certain to interest Rugger players throughout India. Major C. E. Baynes, D. A. A. G., Bombay, who had not donned a Jersey for over twenty years turned out for the Military vs. Gymkhana last week and played a wonderfully good game at half-back. I wonder how many would care to play Rugger after an interval of twenty years and at forty-five years of age. Major Baynes, I should state, was a very fine player in his day and was in the Woolwich XV.

Interest in the Harewood League games is still keen and some of the games played recently have been well attended. The Cheshire Regiment who have two teams are going very strong and B team, which are so far has played four games and won them all without having any points scored against them, is at the head of the table, A Team with two wins, one loss and one draw and three points against being second. The R. G. A. team is third with two wins and one draw out of three games. H. M. S. Perseus occupies fourth place with one win, one loss and one draw, while the Rovers have drawn one and lost one of the two games played and are fifth.

Votaries of the "royal and ancient game" are taking their pleasures somewhat sadly just at present the wet mornings interfering considerably with attendance at the links. Bombay without its "gowf" is to a certain section of players absolutely unendurable and and I hear that a number of keen spirits have been spending their week ends at Nasik where, on the famous links of Western India's golf headquarters, they derive consolation for the disappointments of the week in Bombay.

Although one still occasionally notices announcements in the papers to the effect that "the ground will be reserved for polo this evening" one hears of nothing that is hopeful regarding a revival of interest in the game. A stroll down to the maidan on a polo evening is hardly an enlivening experience and one that has a chastening effect on a lover of the game, for what is there to see in the way of polo, but four or five players engaging in a practice game in a half-hearted kind of way. It is one of the very strangest things that polo should absorb so very little interest in a large place like Bombay. The defeat of the poloists by the maidan cricket clubs in regard to a monopoly of the ground for polo has practically killed all interest in the game.

The mud sports, or rather, to call them by their new and more dignified name, the mounted sports again furnish us every Wednesday afternoon with a little diversion. Riding men naturally look forward to Wednesday afternoons and this year have been lucky inasmuch that the committee have been favoured with fine weather for the first two fixtures which duly came off and were largely attended and in all other respects most successful. I say that riding men were lucky, because the mud sports are more celebrated for being postponed than for taking place.

I need make only a passing reference to the matches played yesterday, the 2nd instant. The Gymkhana who had the B. B. and C. I. Railway C. C. as opponents suffered a defeat by 72 runs being unable to do much with the bowling of Baloo and Bhanda who secured six wickets for 21 and two for 19 respectively. The Gymkhana total was only 53 of which S. N. Powell (18), and E. E. Coombs (12) contributed more than half. At one stage of the game the Gymkhana had lost five wickets for four runs, and it was not until Captain Langhorne joined Powell on the fall of the fifth wicket that the rot was stopped. Langhorne played a most patient game and eventually carried his bat out for 8 after batting for forty minutes. Only two of the Railway batsmen reached double figures but as it happened their united efforts realised more runs than the whole total of the Gymkhana. Bhanda, who is emphatically one of the best bats in Bombay as Baloo is the best bowler, contributed a faultless 47, while Patel knocked up 29, in compiling which he gave several chances. No one else on the side made more than half a dozen runs, but extras accounted for 23 which helped to bring the total to 125. Reference to Baloo's form with the ball reminds me that on the previous Saturday playing against the Y. M. C. A. he captured seven wickets for 13 runs. The first three figure innings of the Bombay season was made by H. D. Kanga who, playing for the Parsee Gymkhana against Elphinstone College, carried his bat right through the innings for 102.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Friday, 17th June 1904.

MONDAY was a great day at Eton: the King and Queen paid their promised visit and after the formal reception in the Quadrangle and a visit to the Chapel, the function of the day required a move to the river. The old Royal Barge, which dates from the reign of William and Mary, was put in commission for the day, and the beauty of the craft made one wish that water pageants were more usual than they are: the "boats" filed past the Royal Barge twice and then, with the King and Queen on board, joined in a long procession, led by the upper boats and closed by the lower, down to Albert Bridge. The Home Park was opened to the public for the occasion, and the procession went down stream 'mid shoutings I have rarely heard excelled for volume. Their Majesties seemed to thoroughly enjoy the proceedings.

Lord Dundonald was, no doubt, quite wrong to make a speech charging a member of the Canadian Government with political prejudice in deleting the name of a man Lord Dundonald had put on the list for a commission in the Militia: and Mr. Fisher, the minister, who did so delete the name was, no doubt, quite within his rights in doing so. And under the circumstances there was nothing but to relieve Lord Dundonald of his command. The whole affair is more than regrettable: and Sir W. Lawrier did not improve the case for his Government when he referred to Lord Dundonald as "a foreigner—stranger." The incident is one of those of which the exact unvarnished truth will never be given the public. Those who know, have long been aware that politics and Militia commissions are far more closely involved one with the other than Military efficiency would have them: that political jobbery has been the bane of every Commander who has gone out from England with the interest of the force at heart. It is now proposed that the commanding officer shall be appointed by the Canadian Parliament: what that implies it remains to see.

Raisuli, passive resister and brigand, is doing remarkably well for himself. Urged by the American Government whose subjects' lives are at stake the Sultan of Morocco dismisses the Governor of Tangier a persona ingrata to Raisuli: pays him £11,000: releases all Raisuli's imprisoned tribesmen: imprisons the Sheiks who obtained Raisuli's arrest and grants him absolute jurisdiction over specified districts. Having got so much, Raisuli naturally wanted more: He demanded the cession of four provinces cession to be guaranteed by the States and two other Great Powers: he got the provinces, but lacks the guarantee, so I doubt the value of the cession. There seems likelihood that the eminent brigand will over reach himself: let Messrs. Pericardis and Verlay out of his hands without "guarantees," and he is like to find the Sultan as good as evading bargains as himself.

If the Alake of Abeokuta keeps a diary I should like to see it. We know everything he does and says: but I want to know the thoughts that pass through the mind of this sagacious West Coast African. On Friday he regaled Liverpool with a brief address on cotton planting: on Saturday at Oldham he worked with his own hands a field cotton-ginning machine: on Sunday—he was at peace: on Monday he came back to town: on Tuesday he received a deputation from the Church Society for the Promotion of Kindness to Animals and made a speech promising benefits to live-stock of Abeokuta: then he went to a missionary meeting and made a suitable—very suitable—speech there. On Wednesday he went to the Norwich Agricultural Show, made a speech after lunch and manifested his usual interest in the implement sections. Yesterday he went to Aberdeen to study the bagpipes and the trawling industry. The Alake's private opinions on all he has seen and heard would be interesting.

The Trustees of the Chantry bequest are undergoing the, to them, by now familiar ordeal of public inquest. Firm in their iniquity these persist in regarding the works of (a) Academicians, (b) Associates, or (c) Associates unofficially elect as the "best:" and there be those who aver that there are better pictures and work by men who are neither (a), (b), nor (c), which remain unbought for the Chantry collection. Is the Chantry bequest an endowment of the Royal Academy? Are there no pictures, no statues, no anything done by hands unrecognised of the forty? That is what quite a number of people want to know apparently: but the forty preserve a massive silence.

The General Slocum disaster in Long Island Sound seems to have been one of the worst things of the kind known to history. The strange feature of the business is the amazing rapidity with which the fire spread: one asks where the boats were hung that the burning of the davit tackles rendered it impossible to launch them. Whether many would have been saved had it been possible to put the boats in such a mill race as the telegrams describe is another matter. The Captain, who appears to have kept his head perfectly under extraordinarily trying circumstances, attributes the great loss of life to panic: but with some two thousand women and children on board it had been wonderful did panic not occur. The majority of the dead were drowned in the whirling eddies. The Captain has been arrested: a matter of form no doubt. There may have been default on his part, though the fire is said to have been caused in the cook's galley: so far what we learn of Captain Vanschaik is that he stuck to the bridge and safely steered a blazing ship crammed with shrieking children and women through a mile or more of cross currents strewn with sunken rocks: a course hard to hold in the easiest circumstances.

The American Rifle Association Committee has decided that it cannot possibly keep the Palma Trophy under the circumstances I referred to in my last letter, and have intimated their intention of returning it. That is well done: it is the action of straightforward men with British blood in them. The N. R. A. for its part consents to hold the trophy for future competition under the same conditions as before.

I have not been able to make much of Mrs. Kipling's "Army of a Dream" which "fantasy" has embellished the columns of the Morning Post this week. The failure is probably due to the fact that I have not had time to read it all twice over; and on first reading it strikes one as a needlessly subtle and obscure presentation of a sensible idea: military training for the million at school, barrack life made enjoyable, encouragement to men to be keen about their business. The Imperial idea runs through it of course: but I pray you be referred to the Posts of Wednesday, yesterday and to-day. It is quite a long time since the Recluse of Burwash has put pen to paper; I wondered the Esher Report and the Norfolk ditto did not bring him into the arena before.

I heard this little story from a member of Mr. Chamberlain's Commission before whom it was told to illustrate the American business man's veneration for method:—He was a young "drummer" and having climbed to the 31st or top storey of a skyscraper, he so dunned the occupant to buy his wares that the occupant arose in his might and thrust him forth: with one hand to the scruff of his neck and a blow of the fist between the shoulders the occupant of floor 31 shot that drummer downstairs. On floor 30 appeared one who saying "to be fired out!" caught the drummer by the scruff, hit him between the shoulders and shot him down to floor 29. On floor 29 he was met by another man who said and did precisely the same things: and so on even unto the ground floor, and as the drummer sat a while on the bottom step to rest he looked up and said 'What system!"

Mr. Owen Hall's new musical farce "Sergeant Brue" wants pulling together a bit, particularly in the last Act, but that done Mr. Willie Edouin as the Sergeant and Miss Ethel Irving as Lady Bickenhall will carry it to success, an I mistake not. The piece has a fairly sound thread of plot through it which always serves to commend. Here it is. Sergeant Brue of the Metropolitan Police will inherent £10,000 under his deceased brother's will if he become an Inspector before a year elapses. The prospects are not bright when the curtain rises, which it does on a swell hair dressing shop kept by Michall, the Sergeant's son (Mr. Farren Soutar), for in the Sergeant's own words his "lines traffic" which does not lead to a brilliant future. Michall, however, is in touch with Lady Bickenhall, a lady who takes a philanthropic interest in girls and the interest born of need in her own future. Lady Bickenhall has placed several girls—very pretty ones too—in Michael's shop; and it is to Lady Bickenhall that the Sergeant is introduced. She is an inventive woman with a large and curiously selected acquaintance: or it may be that philanthropy has made Crookie Scrubbs (Mr. Arthur Williams) whose vocation is petty larceny an intimate of hers. She engages Crookie to burgle her rooms in the Green Park Hotel, to the end that the Sergeant may catch him and his mates and receive promotion. The plot fails (Act II) Crookies heart failing him: and when the alarm is given the Sergeant is found hiding under her ladyship's bed and led away to the police station before a chorus of alarmed ladies who were in such a hurry to see the fun that nary, one of them, stayed to put on a dressing-gown: quite an instructive display of bed-gowns was this. In Act III, scene 1, we have the Sergeant pleading guilty to burglary before Mr. Crank at Crawlborough police court, to save Lady Bickenhall's fair fame. I suppose he was released on bail that he might catch Mr. Crank and Sir Fergus Treherne of the Home Office playing baccarat at 75, Berkeley Square, whereby he receives promotion as the price of silence. It is a distinctly amusing piece and the music by Madame Liza Lehmann was a genuine surprise: nobody had suspected the lady of the Daisy Chain capable of such light, nay frivolous and tuneful work. Lady Bickenhall's song "Heigho! Men come and go" is so charming that 'tis like to fall early prey to the barrel organ. The "Tea" duet and the "Twopenny Tube" duet are also safe to reach popularity. Miss Hilda Trevelyan as a maid was very good in a small part, and Mr. Gilbert Porteous was capital as Mr. Crank. The Sergeant's business is pregnant with possibilities and if Mr. Edouin does not develop them nobody can I have never seen Miss Irving in a part that suited her better, and she played it for all she was worth. Did I say that Sergeant Brue is the successor of the Chinese Honeymoon at the Strand, and that Tuesday night saw his birth?

Mr. Max Pemberton's "Romance" The Finishing School which was produced at Wyndham's last night is simply a comic opera without the music: and a comic opera without music has an atmosphere of its own which demands indulgence. If I say that in half a score of places we felt the orchestra was wanted, and the school-girls were as often remiss in failing to burst into chorus, you will have the sense the piece conveys. The time is the earlier part of the 18th century: which provides pretty dresses: and the main idea is the not unfamiliar one that a school-girl shall disguise herself as a boy to follow her soldier lover "to the wars." The people concerned in a piece of this kind are pretty well known to us all. Sir John Vane, the crusty but good-hearted old guardian (Mr. J. H. Barnes), Murray Vane (Mr. Ben Webster) his son who is Dorothy Melville's lover, and Lady Rose (Miss Ethel Matthews) to whom Sir John wishes to wed his son, are the principal characters. pardon! I forgot Dorothy herself, charmingly done by Miss Annie Hughes. We meet the lovers first at Gretna Green where Sir John chips in just in time to stop the marriage: then we are taken to the "Finishing School" where the girls are treated with far more gentleness and consideration than were ever school-girls in 1701—1750 if history be an honest record. Then to York Barracks, crowds of uniforms and pretty dresses: and back in Act IV to the school again. The plot won't bear examination: it is a very pretty, well-dressed and "busy" piece but—it wants the music badly all through.

The Queen was at the opera on Saturday to hear Madame Melba as Marguerite in Faust. Madame Patti gave her first and last concert in London this season at the Albert Hall on Saturday: mention of the Albert Hall suggests reference to the grateful diversity of the posters now display: on one hoarding is a large portrait of the white head and beard of "General" Booth, to notify a Salvation Army meeting; on its neighbour stimulating figures of wrestlers stripped to the buff soliciting patronage for a very different display. Captain Jessel's Public Entertainments Bill, which seeks to bring peace between Managers of Theatres, of the one part, and managers of Music Halls of the other is published. Briefly it proposes that a "sketch" of not more than 40 minutes' duration and having not more than six principal performers shall be lawful in the music hall. The bill is not likely to secure a second reading this session. Mrs. Lyttelton's play "Warp and Woof" has been moved from Camden Town to the Coronet where it is drawing good houses. Madame Réjane opened her season at the Prince of Wales' on Monday with that not very pleasing play "Zaza", taking the name part, of course, herself: it is one that gives her rare opportunity, there can be no question of that. "Twelfth Night" has been revived in the evening bill of His Majesty's for this week, Miss Tree taking the part of Viola. She had a great reception and the general concensus of opinion is that Miss Tree has a future before her. Mr. Alfred Austin's comedietta "A Lesson in Harmony" was produced as a curtain raiser to the Fairy's Dilemma at the Garrick last night, but I was at Wyndham's and the poet laureate's achievement must wait: the piece I am told, is slight, but fresh and brightly written. Sir Charles Wyndham last night revived at the New, H. A. Jones' The Liars: quite the best of the Only's plays.

Various Items:—The action brought by Mrs. Millar (Mrs. Grimwood that was) against her solicitor for neglecting her interests and involving her in loss was settled without going to the jury. It seems to have been a case of a lady in haste to be rich by means of a Bond Street dressmaking business; in arranging the terms of copartnery wherein, the lady was badly advised by the lawyer: who pays up. There is quite a remarkable falling off in the number of motor-cars to be seen in the Park this season: it seems to have gone out of fashion to "mote" there in the afternoon; anyway the atmosphere gains in purity and horses up from the country are not frightened. The Bishop of Stepney, preaching at St. Paul's last Sunday gave London Society a "dressing down" worthy of Rita herself. His particular complaint was the dependence of the Hospitals on the legacies of the dead rather than on the purses of the living: a complaint, me thinks, ill-founded. John Alexander Dowie the prophet made but a short stay with us whom he had come to regenerate. He fell into the error of saying silly things against the King and the public did not like it: such was the feeling that not an hotel manager in London would take him in: he did get a room in the Savoy—somehow—but was requested to leave the moment his identity was discovered: so he left with some haste and without ostentation for Boulogne on Monday, having spent about 50 hours in town. At the sale of the late Duke of Cambridge's pictures on Saturday, Gainsborough's half length portrait of Maria Walpole was bought by Agnew for 12,100 guineas: the record price for a Gainsborough. The estate of Mr. Leiter, Lord Curzon's father-in-law, is estimated at 25 million dollars. The Board of Agriculture and Fisheries has appointed a commission of well-known shooting men to enquire into the mysteries of grouse disease.

ONLOOKER.

Captain Burton, the intrepid explorer, had been telling of an Arab attack which ended fatally for his assailant, when a doctor who was of the company, rather aggravatingly inquired: "And how do you feel captain, when you kill a man?"

Burton paused for a moment, as if to analyse his feelings, and then replied slowly: 'I don't know, doctor. How do you?"

Review.

OVIS AMMON AND IBEX IN SOUTHERN SIBERIA.

MAJOR SWAYNE'S trip was over much the same ground as that which has been covered by Prince Demidoff and Major Cumberland, Mr. Littledale and a few other sportsmen: and he is able to confirm the reports of his predecessors concerning the quantity of game to be killed in the Russo-Chinese frontier region if the visitor be prepared to work very hard and if he go about the business in the right way. The right way, if we profit by the author's experience, includes self-denial in the matter of travelling companions, for it appears much better to go alone: and the scrupulous ommission to take Kalmuk attendants out shooting for any purpose whatever. Major Swayne began by bringing out one or more of his densely idiotic native followers and a pony to carry tiffin: but after these valuable dependents had distinguished themselves by appearing and scaring away the game two or three times, he left them behind in camp and got on much better. As regards companions, Major Swayne had with him during part of the trip Sir H. Seton Karr and the two Messrs. Cattley: good sportsmen all: but we are inclined to think that in such country as the author describes two sportsmen starting from the same camp are extremely likely to mar one another's sport: with the greatest care in the world this must sometimes occur.

Major Swayne sighted Ovis ammon for the first time on the 11th July, and reached Prince Demidoff's "Happy Valley," where he saw so many wild sheep, two days later. It would appear that at this season the rams congregate in larger or smaller flocks, while the ewes and lambs assemble together apart from the males. This habit of congregation does nothing to make successful stalking easier: and the author might well have put "patience" first among the essentials for a trip in this region. An idea of the quantity of game may be gathered from the fact that on occasion the author saw "no less than 400 ewes and young rams—too many to count." These were not at all shy and "seemed to know they were not fair game:" a curious thing, for the Kalmuks make no distinctions in the matter of age or sex when in want of mutton: perhaps the ewes, measuring the risks of mankind by the range a Kalmuk deems killing, felt safe from the author at the 300 yards distance whence he saw them. By the way he notes in respect of this large flock that when they moved away "the valley reverberated with their loud and deep baaing. This was the only time I ever heard wild sheep making a noise." It was on the same day that he saw a sight that makes one's mouth water. His Kalmuk Shikari Power had pointed out a ram's head looking over the brow of the hill whence they had just come: Major Swayne covered it with his telescope and presently "another head came up above the brow beside the first one and stared at me. . . . . I took my eye from the telescope and just then the rams' heads turned at right angles and heads and backs could be seen as they trotted away. They were followed by a string of some sixty grand rams' heads and backs in silhouette against the skyline. Every one of them passed in review before my telescope and there was not one which was not a faultless head." And this was only one of three flocks of rams seen almost in the same hour! Needless to add this superfluity did not make for sport, as the movements of one flock put the others on the qui vive. The best head obtained by the author was one of 51 inches and 18¼ inches in girth: a long way behind the record, but a very grand trophy nevertheless. Major Swayne killed a few ibex, but he saw nothing with horns that exceeded 42 inches, and confirms the observations of others in regarding the ibex of this region much inferior to those of Kashmir and Turkestan.

It is a singularly wearying country to shoot in, as we know from previous writers: but none have more graphically brought home to us the toil of struggling ups and downs these long steep slopes of loose and shifting detritus, the oppression of such work at high elevation, the embarrassments of snowfall and sleet on the mountains than Major Swayne. Another drawback to camp life, is the mosquito, which for size, number and ferocity has few equals in any part of the world.

The great numbers of "derelict sheep skulls" found in places afford food for interesting speculation. After a careful search over the ground under some rocky bluffs and examination of a few hundred skulls, the author inclines to the belief that the wolves, which are numerous, drive the sheep to these rocks, where they have their dens and kill them there for the convenience of their young. He does not think that the numerous skulls and skeletons seen were those of the victims of avalanches, as they often were found in situations which forbade the avalanche theory at once, and also the bones were too fresh. "In the valley under the slopes, for the distance of a mile or so, I estimated that there were about 150 skulls of all ages: some rotten with time, the skeletons having long since been carried away piecemeal: some had been killed within the year, or even within a week or two before our presence here. There seems to be no other way in which to account for this extraordinary fact, that the rams go to one place to die, unless we accept the theory that they are driven there by wolves or men." There, Major Swayne indicates an alternative which may be acceptable, which at all events deserves notice. Is it not possible that the "huanaco's dying place" in Patagonia may have its counterpart in this valley of rams' skulls in Southern Siberia? But why are only the skulls of males found there? We gather that the skulls seen were those only of rams. If we are to discard the wolf theory, we confess that the suggestion conveyed in the following passage commends itself as well worth consideration: "It is said that in certain valleys the sweep of the wind prevents the snow from lying deep over the grass in winter, that these favoured grazing spots are resorted to by the sheep and many die there" Major Swayne rejects this theory, but on not, we think, very sufficient grounds. If the hungry sheep resort to particular spots in winter it is only reasonable to suppose that the hungry wolves will learn to expect them there: and thus it is quite possible to reconcile two highly probable theories.

Major Swayne gives the Kalmuks who accompained him a very indifferent character: lazy, disobedient, independent and deplorably stupid in some respects. Of the Kalmuk pony's endurance and docility and climbing powers he has the highest opinion: that humble animal contributes much to the amenities of shooting in this region: he carries the sportsman over long distances of bad ground which elsewhere he would cover on his own feet. The reader will pick up many useful hints while reading this very interesting book:* and the appendix contains a fund of practical information concerning kit and stores required and probable expenses. We notice, by the way, that the author swears by the ·450 cordite express for such shikar: and certainly when chance favoured he did some good practice with it. There are many very admirable photographs in the book: and the stalking map facing page 114 is a capital idea, which we hope future writers on sport will keep in mind. It saves a world of words and makes the plan of a stalk perfectly clear at a glance. An exceedingly good and entertaining book.

"Why don't you try to drive that horse without profanity?" "It wouldn't do any good," answered the canal boatman. "It ain't fair to the horse to ask 'im to start in at ees time o' life to learn a whole lot o' polite synonyms."

CONSUMPTION.

IT is not always a good thing to read medical works. Jerome's man in a boat said that after reading one he wasn't sure whether he had "Housemaid's Knee," but he knew he had got the symptoms of all the other diseases he found described. But there are diseases which it is good for the man-in-the-street to know something about, so that, as the rat which knows a lot about rat-traps avoids walking into them, he may know how to avoid these death-traps, which no one would walk into if every one knew all about them. Consumption is such a disease. It is an infectious disease caused by a microbe which is mostly passed on from one person to another through the expectoration, though it may be contracted from the milk or meat of a tuberculous animal. It is a preventible disease, as if the advanced cases were treated in suitable sanitaria and used disinfectant spitoons, and the rest of the world was stopped spitting about the place, there would be very little chance for the microbe to find fresh fields and pastures new for its ravages. It may be added that it is in many cases a curable disease and not the least interesting part of the book before us is the author's description of the air cure on the mountain, by the sea or almost any where else. The book before us is quite easy reading and does not necessitate any great mental effort like working to pass the lower standard or picking out a winner in the handicaps. We commend it to such of our readers as are not entirely devoted to the absorbing study of the Turf and the Chase. The price, one shilling, is not ruinous.

BISON, BEES AND BUFFLOES.

D. having received a wire from his friend S. who was then in camp in the Native States of Chota Nagpur, to join him for a few days' shooting, proceeded by rail to Sakti where he found a dooley and bearers waiting for him with a letter from S. saying he was to come on by dooley, about 30 miles to Dhoolian, where he would find an elephant and further on horse dâks laid for him. Starting by dooley about 9 P.M. he got to Dhoolian about 6 or 7 the following morning and learnt that he had still some 20 miles to go to S.'s camp which he reached about midday. The camp was a large one and the tents were pitched in a spacious mango grove to the north of which about half a mile distant a rocky but well-wooded line of hills ran east and west. The country D. had passed through on his way up lay through continuous forests intersected by numerous streams, large and small, and with every appearance of good cover for large game. S. had come to that part of the States for the special purpose of getting a shot at gaur and wild buffalo which were still to be found thereabouts and which he had never before had an opportunity of shooting during the two days previous to D.'s arrival he had had men out to get him khubber, but so far they had only come across old tracks of gaur, though they had reported wild buffaloes to be tolerably numerous in the lower jungles to the south. D. being rather done up by his long journey, they decided on making the following an easy day in camp, but riding out in the cool of the evening they questioned some villagers about two miles from camp about game in the neighbourhood and were told that wild buffaloes frequently strayed into and ate down their cold weather rice crops, when if two or three were together they had great difficulty in driving them off: upon this S. promised them Rs. 20 reward if they could put him in the way of shooting the animals which they promised if possible to do. The Feudatory Chief of the State being in S.'s camp they were, of course, pretty sure that everything that was possible would be done in order to get them the sport they desired, and about 9 P.M. that night he came to tell S. that he had received information from some of the men he had out that they had the previous evening come across that morning's fresh tracks of gaur about seven miles from the camp, he suggested that the Sahebs should go out about 3 o'clock the next morning on elephants so as to be on the ground by dawn which was agreed to, S. and D. accordingly left, as was arranged, on pad elephants taking with them a tiffin basket with cold provender. It was a dark night and rather cloudy, and as the way lay over a very rough country through dense jungles and deep ravines sleepy as they both still were, they had a rather uncomfortable ride.

An hour before dawn they got to a somewhat open plain country and the Chief's men who had guided them said they were then among the usual gaur haunts, and it would be well, therefore, to halt till dawn broke, and then to proceed on foot leaving the elephants there. This being settled S. and D. dismounted and after fortifying themselves with some cold coffee from the tiffin basket, and each putting some half a dozen sandwiches and a few biscuits in their pockets in case they should get separated in the course of the morning from the coolie told off to follow with the basket, they were ready for a start. Two of the Chief's trackers and three coolies had come out with them, so the spare guns were handed over to two of the latter to carry the third coolie following with the provender. gaur being exceedingly wary and easily startled animals the trackers asked to be allowed to go a little ahead of the Sahebs who followed about eighty yards behind. When the sun rose they had covered about two miles of a rough country without having, however, come on any traces of gaur; pig tracks, fresh and old, as also those of a sambhur that had passed that night had been observed, and as it was thought improbable that gaur would after that hour be found out in that comparatively open country, as they usually retire for the day to the heaviest jungle covers, it was agreed to try for any other game that might turn up and the trackers again led the way.

They had hardly gone a quarter of a mile when they saw a large bear, followed by a half-grown cub, leisurely coming directly towards them, with their noses to the ground, and occasionally stopping while the old one scratched at an old ant hill, they were evidently making for a small tongri or rocky hill half a mile to the east, the whole party stepped behind a large rock close to the path the bears were coming along, and on their coming up to within twenty-five yards D. fired at and knocked the she Bear over, she rolled about biting viciously at the wound in her side, and then suddenly jumping up came on up the path; having apparently caught sight of one of the coolies who in his excitement had stepped out on to the path but a second ball from D. finished her, when an exciting chase after cub ensued. He had followed his mother up the path and when she fell ran up to her body which he smelt all over running round and round her, but as soon as the coolies advanced to catch him he charged full at them with loud savage "suf oup" he did not, however, charge home, and one of the coolies managed to catch hold of the long hair on his back as he turned off to escape, the little fellow on this rolled on to his back, and catching the coolie's arm with both his paws scratched him severely and also managed to fix his teeth in his wrist, he however soon let go and being himself freed by his captor scampered off closely followed down the path by the coolies and was not finally secured till one of them had knocked him over with a blow on the head from a stick, his legs were then all securely tied together with a cloth. One of the trackers was then sent back to bring on the elephants and on their arrival the old she bear was hoisted on to a guddee and sent back to camp.

As the extensive forests were too heavy at that season for stalking game through, it was decided to return homewards through the lower jungles which were lighter and where there was a probability of getting a chance at peacock and jungle fowl, and the trackers in the meantime went off again to try for traces of gaur. S. and D. reached camp in time for a late breakfast bringing in a pair of very fine jungle fowl. Soon after nightfall the trackers turned up and reported that they had got traces of three gaur, a bull, and two cows by the size of their footprints, which had come down to drink at a pool about half way to the spot where the elephants had been left that morning, and that they had after drinking turned to grazing in some long grass close at hand where the trackers felt sure of being able to take up their tracks in the morning, and a second early start as before was at once arranged.

They were accordingly off by 3 A.M., when they had gone about four miles they crossed a river bed down which, however, only a narrow streak of water was then slowly trickling, here the trackers called a halt till dawn, as they were but a short distance from the spot where the gaur had been the previous evening, a little before dawn the trackers silently stole off to try and ascertain if the animals were still about the neighbourhood, half an hour later one of them returned saying that the gaur had apparently grazed thereabouts throughout the night and they had found their perfectly fresh tracks leading away across the river towards the heavy jungles to the west where the party had gone the previous day, and that there were still hopes of being able to come up with them if not startled by anything. Crossing the river on the elephants S. and D. then got down and followed the trackers who now, that the light was sufficient, ran the tracks along in a wonderful manner, examining the ground as they went, seldom at fault for a moment, they kept on for a couple of miles at a slow trot, and at length stopping suddenly they advanced slowly and cautiously for some distance when again stopping one of them made signs to S. and D. to come on, which they did as noiselessly as possible, fortunately such little breeze as there was at the time blew towards them. On their joining them one of the trackers whispered that the quarry were immediately ahead of them in some long grass, but it was some time before they could make anything out till the sound of an animal moving in marshy ground gave them the direction, and a moment after the head and shoulders of a gaur appeared as the animal evidently came up out of the water on to the higher ground in the grass, its head was turned slightly away from them up wind, S. at once fired at his shoulder and the report was followed by a loud thud and a rush as of other animals making off, but the groaning among the grass showed that S.'s shot had told, remaining quiet for a short time, however, they heard the animal get up and plunge forward and then move off slowly after his companions, the sounds indicated that he stopped frequently so moving on to the spot where he had been hit, they found the grass around it broken down and a large quantity of blood about, they were thus easily able to follow the blood tracks, the trackers now keeping behind they slowly followed the wounded animal without sighting it for over two miles, when the blood traces became fewer and fainter and at length were lost altogether, the trackers, therefore, again took the lead, S. and D. keeping close to them, suddenly the long grass they had been passing through abruptly ended and they found themselves looking down into a marshy hollow with a pool of murky looking water in the middle, on the opposite side of which the wounded gaur lay on his side, his neck stretched out to the water which he was trying to lap, having heard their approach he with difficulty got on his legs and moved threateningly towards them, but immediately fell again on his knees, head foremost when two more bullets from S. finished him. He appeared to be a young bull hardly full grown, as he was barely 5 feet high at the shoulder, and his horns measured but 2 feet still he was the first either S. or D. had ever seen and S. was delighted with his good fortune in getting him.

After giving directions about securing the head they left one of the trackers and the coolies to cut the animal up and started on their return journey with the other tracker to show the way to the elephants, and to take one of them back to bring in such portions of the gaur's carcase as might be required in camp for consumption. Having put up a couple of peacock before reaching the elephants they returned with them to the spot to beat the birds up and D. succeeded in securing one, when they left for camp. On the way they passed the village where they had two days before been to'd that wild buffaloes frequently came down to the rice crops at night, and learnt that they had, during the previous night, done considerable damage. S. again offered Rs. 20 reward to anyone who would enable him to get a shot at a buffalo, and said he was willing to come down at any hour day or night, on the chance of getting a shot. Passing on presently under a mango tree D. thoughtlessly struck with a stick at what he took to be an old bee's comb on it, but in an instant he found out his mistake when hundreds of enraged bees poured out of it flying and buzzing round them. S.'s bearer had in the morning put a rough horse blanket up on the elephant's pad for his master to wrap round his legs during the early morning ride out, and this S. quickly threw over D. and himself, but not before D. had been a good deal stung about the face and hands. The mahout had also an old blanket on which he was sitting on the elephant's neck and this he threw round himself, but the elephant was in the meantime maddened by the bees which pursued her viciously and had made off as fast as she could across country, when the mahout hampered as he was with the blanket about him had great difficulty in keeping her head towards the camp: after a run of about a mile, however, the bees finding the blankets impenetrable to their stings gradually slackened off and left them altogether. S. and D. were both pretty tired with their tramp after reaching camp while D. was besides very sore from the stings he had received, and his hands and face by evening were a good deal swollen, the elephant had also been badly stung about her trunk.

After dinner about 9. P.M., a couple of men came in to say that some wild buffaloes were in their crops at the village they had visited that morning, D. was much too sore to think of moving, but S. at once accompanied the men back, one of them carrying his second gun. They had about an hour's trudge and on reaching the village two dark objects were pointed out in some distant crops, while a third was noticed grazing alone about 200 yards further west, as there was a little scrub jungle alongside of the crops in the direction of the latter S. decided to try and steal up towards the single animal by taking cover as he went among the jungle patches, he began his stalk taking a wide circle round and so got the jungle between him and his objective, and then walked down towards it, as he got closer he had to crawl from one shrub to another which required great caution in order not to frighten his quarry, and being a stout man it was somewhat trying to have occasionally to progress for thirty or forty yards stooping low, almost to the ground, and all the time carrying a heavy gun, he however managed to get up to a bush within about thirty-five yards of the buffalo and then paused to take breath. The animal before him loomed large in the uncertain light, and he was not able to make out clearly how long the horns might be, but there at any rate was a wild buffalo at last in front of him, heading slightly towards him but almost broad side on, and he was determined to make no mistake about it, so waiting a bit till he had quite recovered his wind, he took a steady aim at the shoulder and fired, the huge mass tumbled over, kicking violently, and running forward he gave it his second barrel. The other animals at once galloped off, and the villagers ran round shouting to S. who in the meantime examined his prize, he had never before seen a wild buffalo, but was not struck with any remarkable difference between the animal before him and the ordinary domestic village buffalo, this one might possibly he thought be a little larger, but here the villagers arrived, they walked round the carcase silently at first, then two or three at once broke out that this was not what they brought the Saheb to shoot, this was one of the village buffaloes which must have got loose from the bathan and strayed down to the rice fields, in fact it was soon recognised as belonging to one of the very men who had actually brought S. out. It appeared that several of the villagers had been watching the crops and saw two wild buffaloes come down to them when it was decided to leave them alone and that the Saheb should be sent for, the third buffalo had not then been out and was only first seen shortly before S.'s arrival and being a long way off, it also had been supposed to be another wild one. As there was no chance, of course, of animals returning and nothing further could be done that night S. tramped home escorted by several of the villagers to whom he then paid Rs. 35 which was said to be the value of the slaughtered animal. D. was greatly amused at the adventure and considered he had been well out of it. He was too sore to do anything for the next two days, during which they therefore remained quietly at home.

On the second night one of the Chief's trackers reported that they had seen five buffaloes four miles away and that his companion had remained out with two villagers to watch them, so it was decided to try in that direction next day, when an early start was again made. About dawn one of the above villagers met them with the information that the Buffaloes were still grazing near the spot they had been discoverd in the previous evening, and as there was water close by and heavy jungle within a mile of it, they would probably go no further than to the latter when the sun was up. He led them on for half a mile or so till they came up to his companions, who explained that there were a bull, two cows and two half-grown calves. A gentle south breeze was blowing from the grassy patches they were in towards the jungle, so it was settled that the guns should be posted near the latter, while the elephants were sent south, whence their advent would certainly send the buffaloes off to shelter northwards. S. and D. therefore, accompained only by the trackers carrying their second guns, took up their positions, well shelterd behind some large trees and the elephants making a circuit to the south slowly moved in their direction, when a minute or so later large animals galloping through long grass were heard approaching. Immediately in front of the guns was a comparatively clear space a few yards broad, and suddenly the whole heard pulled up at the edge of it, looking round and behind them in a startled manner, the two calves had come on into the open, the cows stood a little behind them and a very fine bull was again beyond them; all had their heads thrown well back sniffing the air towards the elephants. D. aimed and fired at the bull's shoulder at about thirty-five yards, when he swung round and attempted to bolt, but stumbled on to his nose, when D. put in another ball-breaking his right fore leg and rendering him helpless for the moment; in the meantime S. had brought down a bull calf, but he was up in a moment and charged down as S. incautiously stepped out from behind his tree, but a second ball through the side of the chest stopped him, and he was then easily finished off. Just, then D.'s bull again got on his legs somehow and endeavoured to come at them, but his weight proved too much for his three whole legs and he again fell groaning and struggling, but it took three more shots to kill him. The rest of the herd had got clear away to the jungle and it was useless to think of following them up.

THE TARPON AND THE MEGALOPS.

A FEW years ago I saw a beautifully set up specimen of the tarpon (Megalops Atlanticus) in the window of a fishing tackle shop in London. I was immediately struck with its close resemblance to the Indian megalops (M. Cyprinoides) and examining it closely saw that except to a naturalist, and barring size, the two fish were identical. This set me wondering as to what size the Indian representative of the family really reaches in the sea, and this is a point over which I am still in ignorance. Perhaps some of the readers of The Indian Field may be able to supply this information.

In one of the ponds in the Madras Park years ago I hooked a large Megalops on a livebait. This fish eventually got off, but before leaving gave me several opportunities of estimating his size, as he was in the air almost as much as in the water He looked about six pounds.

The megalops thrives in fresh water although really a sea fish. There is, therefore, little doubt that if anyone introduced tarpon fry into a large fresh water lake in a suitable climate, they would breed and do well. As, however, the megalops family are essentially predaceous, they would soon clear a piece of water of most of the other fish.

Megalops in Indian ponds often take a fly well. Dark coloured flies are the best. The half and three-quarter pounders are extraordinarily lively when hooked, jumping repeatedly. Unfortunately, owing to the boniness of their mouths, they often get off. A very small livebait will take the larger ones. I daresay a fly spoon might also afford sport, but have not tried it, so can only conjecture.

Megalops fry must be peculiarly migratory, as they manage to get into ponds which are quite a considerable distance from the nearest river. I conclude they take advantage of the monsoon to work up the nallahs and water-courses, even then it is extraordinary how far they get from any water communicating with the sea.

The megalops is a silvery handsome fish with large brilliant eyes, and a strongly forked tail. I have not tried them from the sea, but when caught in ponds, they are practically uneatable in spite of their beauty.

SNOOKERS QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Will you kindly give your valued opinion on the following point which arose in a game of Snookers:—

A and B play. A's score stands at 10 and all the red balls are off the table. Our coloured balls are brown, green, blue and black, valued respectively 2, 3, 4, and 5. A plays at brown (2) which goes down, but his white ball also hits the blue (4) and holes it, the green (3) being still left on the table. My queries are:—

(1) How should A's score stand after the stroke?
(2) Should A continue to play?

Another point. A has played and having missed the red ball on which he was entitled to play left his ball touching the green and paid a penalty of 3 points; the green is directly between the white and the last red ball left on the table.

If B plays direct on the red, pushing the green out of the way. In doing so does he lose 3 points for playing on the green ball? In other words is B in order to avoid a penalty compelled to play away from the green ball, which the white ball is touching?

[A's score stands after the stroke 16. The blue ball is put on the table again and A continues to play. B loses 3 points for playing on the green ball; he must play away from it in order to avoid the penalty.—ED.]

CROQUET QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—I should be much obliged if you would give me a ruling on the following Croquet hard case.

A, playing blue a non-rover has black a rover as partner. A roquets black with blue: in the croquet black (roving) hits the peg. Is black dead, i. e., out of the game or not?

I maintain it is: and rules of Croquet No. 12. Rule 14 is not in point, as it deals only with balls pegged out by rovers, whereas in this case—blue is not a rover.

A. D.

GURGEON, 28th June 1904.

[No; only a Rover can peg a Rover out. See official Edition, 1902, of the Croquet Association, Rules 14 and 15. The rule says a Rover can be pegged out by another Rover. It does not say a Rover can be pegged out by any other ball. Some of the rules are not very precise, they should be made more definite and leave no room for quibbling, of which there is far too much. The rules of Croquet appear to have been drawn up in the idea that everybody knew all about the game—hence the trouble. Rule 14 to be complete should have added to it—but cannot be pegged out by a ball that is not a Rover. There is plenty of room for more explicitness in many of the rules, and we are surprised the Association have not seen to it ere this. Here is a case. The rule is—A Ball may not roquet another a second time before making a point. There is no penalty given for making this stroke which is usually an accident, and it does not appear under the head of fouls, it is, however, we believe, generally taken to be a foul, although not definitely expressed as such.

The trouble comes in when in taking Croquet the ball croquet'd slows down or is arrested in its course and the player's ball following on hits it again. Is this roqueting a ball a second time? No doubt earnest players wish to play according to the rules, but players in this country, and we may include the Colonies, who have not had the opportunity of seeing first-class play in England have only the printed rules to go by and they unfortunately leave so much to be desired. Some players contend that you may do anything at Croquet that the rules do not expressly forbid—for instance you may run a hoop and go off the dead boundary and bringing the ball on continue your turn, also you may knock a ball off in the Roquet and still continue your turn—because the rules do not state your turn stops by doing either of these things, and as a matter of fact the game is so played in first-class play in England. In this country the turn stops on many grounds when either of these strokes takes place.

With reference to the question at head of this there is no rule that says a ball that is not a Rover cannot peg out a ball that is a Rover, and so the contention that you may do anything that the rules do not forbid, admits of argument—and no one refrains from arguing given the chance. Hence the game is played with variations on different grounds according to the construction placed on rules which should have but one possible construction. ED.]

A NEW FLOUR MILL.

Last Saturday, at the invitation of Messrs. Marshall Sons and Company, Limited, the well-known Engineers of Calcutta, we had the pleasure to visit their workshops and see at work a most ingenious, compact and efficient piece of flour milling machinery in the shape of a "Stamford Stone Flour Mill" for which the firm are the sole agents in India. This mill has several recommendations, most of which strike one at a glance. To begin with it is simplicity itself; the working parts few in number, are thoroughly reliable; it is economical in working; it is entirely British made; it effectively solves the difficulty hitherto experienced of getting small quantities of flour ground for household or say village use; it is cheap and requires the least possible mechanical skill to work it. These are "pointers," as the Americans express it, that should ensure for the Stamford Mill an immediate and wide popularity among the natives, especially those dwelling in the mofussil. The mill costs but Rs. 320 and its grinding capacity is 6 maunds an hour. and it can be driven by a small electric motor, oil engine, or ordinary steam power. The wheat is poured into a funnel shaped feed box at the top of the machine, passes over an agitator that ensures a constant and equal supply of the grain to the stones which revolving vertically at great speed in a barrel shaped casing put out the result through a trough into receptacles placed to receive it below. This is carried to an improved flour dressing machine close at hand and here a cylinder covered with wire gauze of different meshes and having in its internal economy rapidly revolving brushes receives the flour which being driven through the various meshes comes out in three qualities—very fine, fine and bran.

The chief advantage the Stamford has over other such grinding mills in the market, is that instead of using metal plates or distintegrators (which reduce the grain by concussion or cutting, and which only produce good meal, while the plates were new and the edges sharp) stone millstones have been utilized. These millstones are cut and dressed almost in the same manner as the one we are accustomed to see in this country. They are worked vertically and not horizontally as in the case with the old-fashioned millstones which proves itself to be more advantageous and saves a lot of useless expense, as these stones are calculated to wear a little over two years, while the others fail in a very short time. By this system all the advantages of the old-fashioned stones are obtained at a reduced cost with increased production, less driving power, economy in space occupied, great care of management and facility of dressing or sharpening the stones. Two kinds of stones are used, the "adaras" obtained from special quarry and prepared particularly for use in these mills. They are of a free open texture, grind quickly, and are admirably adapted for general work chiefly food for cattle, but where meal is required for domestic use, the French Burr stones are utilized instead.

H. McQuade's Training Stable is now in full swing, preparing many horses and ponies for the coming Mysore and Bangalore Meetings.

This stable is in great form, every meeting records for him four for five wins, this shows that he takes very great interest in the horses or ponies under his charge. His training stable is one of the largest and up-to-date business places in India. Owners of Race Horses should avail themselves of this opportunity as his charge is very moderate and the climate of Bangalore is the place to keep a horse of value.

MYSORE RACES.

Third Day, Thursday, 30th June 1904.

STEWARDS:

COL J P GRANT | E MACONOCHIE, ESQ
LT-COL J DESARAJ URS | R L KINDERSLEY, ESQ
M KHANTARAJ URS, ESQ | P F BOWRING, ESQ

Secretary and Clerk of Course—H DONNE, ESQ

THE racing in the course of the third and last day of the Mysore races was perhaps the best of any seen during the meeting. But the course was heavy, owing to a big shower that fell just before racing began, and rain continued more or less throughout the afternoon. Had it not been for this fact, certainly one, and possibly two races would have ended differently; the wet course being quite enough to break the hearts of the heavy weights. Heavy weights indeed! It seems next door to cruelty to ask a good pony like Minimus to carry 12st. 10lbs. over a mile, but he struggled so hard that he nearly upset what was considered a very good thing by those "in the know." Cleopatra won a lot of money for certain people at Mysore, but had the course been dry, the second pony would have given her 52lbs. (!) and a beating. Bundook was another top-weight upon whom the wet course had an effect the reverse of beneficial; but he ran a good, game horse, and was only just beaten though running under the whip for the last furlong. Sandow and Cleopatra were the only actual favourites winning during the afternoon, though there was a good deal of money on Prime for the opening event. Ptarmagan and Misty were four to one chances, and the people who thought Colonel Desaraj Urs' beautiful little grey could not go a mile were woefully mistaken. "Best half-mile Arab in India, can go five furlongs, and if not bustled early, can scratch along for six." But a mile! No! back Oriental—real good." That was the opinion heard all over the course. But Ptarmagan nevertheless made practically all his own running, and cantered in two lengths ahead of St. Gris whilst Oriental, a red hot favourite, ran a perfect pig. It only shows how apt even the best informed tuifites are to go wrong. It was on the whole most distinctly a bookmakers' meeting, there were many long faces amongst punters, and lots of men are looking forward to Bangalore with the hope of getting a bit of their own back. Details:—

THE B. C. HANDICAP.—Rs. 1,500. Of which the second horse will receive Rs. 200, and the third Rs. 100. A handicap for Country-bred horses. 1¼ miles.

Colonel I P Grant's bc b h Prime, 6st 10lbs ... ... Kamad 1
Captain J Randall's br cb m Miss Ascot, 8st 12lbs ... ... Hoyt 2
Mr Jaffer Mahomed Mystry's b cb g Upstart, 11st 7lbs ... ... Heroo 3

BETTING: Evens Miss Ascot, 6 to 4 agst. Prime, and 4 to 1 Upstart.

Prime made running from start to finish, with Miss Ascot second and Upstart last.

The same order was maintained throughout, Upstart being eased in the last quarter of a mile and finishing twenty lengths behind Miss Ascot, the latter being easily beaten by a length by Prime for first place. Time—2 mins. 22⅕secs.

THE CHAMUNDI PLATE—Rs. 1,500. Of which the second pony will receive Rs. 200, and the third Rs. 100. Handicap for Arab ponies 14 hands and under.—One mile.

Lieut-Col Desaraj Urs' g a h Ptarmagan 8st 6lbs ... ... Melsom 1
Captain A S Toogood's g a g St Gris, 8st ... O'Neill 2
Colonel Kavanagh's g a h Money Spinner, 8st 13lbs ... ... Heroo 3
Aga S Shah's b a h Oriental, 8st 8lbs ... Kamad 0
Major R M Bell's g a h Scattercash 9st ... Hoyt 0
Major R M Bell's b a h Matussan, 6st 12lbs (carried 7st 3lbs) ... ... Gooloo 0
Major A C Hamilton's g a h Defendant, 6st 11lbs ... ... Bennett 0

BETTING: Evens Oriental, 3 to 1 agst. Money Spinner, 4 to 1 Ptarmagan 5 to 1 Scattercash, and 10 to 1 each St. Gris, Matusson and Defendant.

Ptarmagan at once streaked away from Defendant and Oriental, but the pace afterwards became a bit slow. At the turn for home Defendant dropped back, and a little later Oriental was well beaten, whilst St. Gris came through. He could make no impression, however, upon Ptarmagan, the latter winning as he liked by two lengths; three-quarter of a length between second and third. Time—1min. 55⅕secs.

THE PALACE CUP.—Rs. 2,000. Of which the second horse will receive Rs. 300, and the third Rs. 200. A Handicap for Horses. One mile.

Capt Wilson's bk e h Misty, 7st 10lbs ... Kamad 1
Mr J MacJohn's b e g Bundook, 9st 8lbs ... O'Neill 2
Mr N R Chowdry's br aus g Wild Raven, 8st 2lbs ... ... Elliott 3
Mr Kelso's b aus g Harpist, 9st 3lbs ... Heroo 0
Lieut-Col J Desaraj Urs' b aus g Trenton, 8st 10lbs ... Melsom 0
H H Aga Khan's br e g Ayrdale, 8st 8lbs... Robinson 0
Major F C Logan-Home's br aus g Corrie Roy, 7st 8lbs ... ... Hoyt 0

BETTING: 6 to 4 agst. Ayrdale, 4 to 1 each Bundook, Harpist, Misty and Corrie Roy, and 5 to 1 each Trenton and Wild Raven.

Misty made strong running from Bundook and Harpist, when three furlongs had been covered, Misty was still leading, with Bundook Harpist and Ayrdale running in the order named. So they ran until entering the straight, when Harpist dropped away beaten, and Corrie Roy improved his position. Wild Raven also came through, and a great race home ensued Misty just holding his own, and winning by three-quarter of a length. Only half a length divided Bundook from Wild Raven and so close behind the latter was Corrie Roy, that many people thought he had run into third place. Time—1min. 45⅕secs.

THE ROYAL PURSE.—Rs. 1,500. Of which the second pony will receive Rs. 200, and the third Rs. 100. A Handicap for Ponies. One mile.

Mr A P Symond's bk aus m Cleopatra, 9st Heroo 1
Lieut-Col J Desaraj Urs' br aus g Minimus, 12st 10lbs ... ... Lansdowne 2
Mr A West's ch aus m Firebrand, 7st 7lbs Elliott 3
Mr M Lakshmi Kantaraj Urs' ch aus m Queen Cole, 10st 5lbs ... ... Thompson 0
Major Dougall's ch aus g Lancer, 9st 6lbs Penton 0
Mr S W Webster's b aus m Flight, 6st 8lbs Bennett 0

BETTING: Evens Cleopatra, 3 to 1 each agst. Minimus and Lancer, 4 to 1 Flight, and 10 to 1 each Queen Cole and Firebrand.

When they settled down, Cleopatra led from Lancer and Queen Cole, with Minimus last. After running two furlongs Flight came up third, but the pace subsequently became too good for her and she dropped back. At the turn into the straights Minimus improved his position, and a furlong from home took second place and challenged the leader. A great struggle ensued, Cleopatra eventually beating Minimus who ran game as a pebble under his crushing weight, by a neck, with Firebrand third, two and a half lengths away. Time—1min. 54⅕secs.

THE ARAB HANDICAP.—Rs. 1,500. Of which the second horse will receive Rs. 200, and the third Rs. 100. A Handicap for Arab Horses. 9 furlongs.

H H Aga Khan's ch a h Sandow, 8st 8lbs Robinson 1
Mr Mahomed Hajee Ibrahim's ch a h Gallant, 10st 4lbs ... ... Heroo 2
Colonel A Sprot's ch a h Harefoot, 7st 11lbs Hoyt 3
Capt Darley and Mr Stewart's ch a g Selpme 7st 13lbs ... ... Elliott 3
Major A C Hamilton's ch a h Jack Horner, 7st 8lbs .. .. Bennett 0
Mr S W Webster's b a g Derision, 6st 10lbs (carried 7st 2lbs) ... ... Melsom 0
H H The Maharaja of Mysore's b a h Khundoos, 6st 2lbs (carried 6st 5lbs) Kamad 0

BETTING: 5 to 4 agst. Sandow, 2 to 1 Jack Horner, 5 to 1 Gallant, and 6 to 1 each Selpme, Harefoot, Derision and Khundoos.

Khundoos led out from the favourite, and Derision, with Jack Horner, whipping in. Along the far side of the course the last-named pony was sent to the front and led into the straight by two lengths. A quarter of a mile from home he dropped back beaten, while Sandow assumed the lead and Gallant and Harefoot improved their positions. Sandow eventually won without being asked a question, by two and a half lengths, two lengths dividing second and third. Time:—2mins. 10secs.

THE TURF.

ASCOT MEETING.

THOUGH the turf was singularly verdant (and never looked better) for the opening stage of the fixture on the 15th instant, the ground was decidedly firm, and grave apprehensions were entertained lest the going should revert to its old-time adamantine condition before the conclusion of the gathering. These fears were effectually dispelled, however, when it was realised that the rain which set in towards the close of the entertainment had continued almost without intermission throughout the night, and the galloping was not only in fine order the next day, but it is likely to remain so for the rest of the week. Happily the downpour ceased soon after dawn, and the afternoon being fine, though dull, the gathering again assumed the appearance of a fashionable garden party. In spite of the temperature being appreciably lower, costumes of the daintiest and most delicate fabrics lit up the lawn, and the scene was worthy of the traditions of the venue. The king and Prince of Wales again honoured the reunion, but no ladies were included amongst the Royalties present. The feature of the racing was the marked success of Mr. Gilpin's stable. Details:—

Won in a common canter by three lengths from Montem, who beat Pieria a neck for second place. Flamma was fourth, Chelys fifth, Leucadia next, and Vergia last. Time by Benson's chronograph—1min. 49⅗secs.

Three circumstances combined to make yesterday's gathering at Ascot the most interesting so far of the meeting, and possibly the most enjoyable. I allude to the weather, the prospect of a Homerio struggle between Sceptre, the gamest mare that ever planted her four feet on the turf, and the dashing, long-striding Zinfandel, and the visit in State of the King and Queen. The optimist is so happily minded that he can always find some new feature of enjoyment in the present, and disdains comparison with past Ascots, because he knows such gatherings are more or less at the mercy of hidebound circumstance as regards weather and the social phase, while the element of luck has been known to play by no means an unimportant part in the game of racing. In writing of the gathering yesterday I have in my mind the knowledge that possibly hundreds are making their social debut on the most fashionable day of the most fashionable function in the world, and therefore, I hope it will gratify them in the same measure as it gratifies me to be able to state that Gold Vase day has never been favoured by more glorious weather conditions, has never attracted a bigger attendance, and has never had its traditions more worthily upheld in all respects. (Winner trained by Braime.)

BETTING: 5 to 4 on Zinfandel, 7 to 4 agst. Sceptre, 10 to 1 Maximum II., 20 to 1 Throwaway (offered).

Throwaway was the first to leave the paddock, and he led the parade from Maximum II., Sceptre, and Zinfandel, a stable companion of the latter preceding him. The white flag was hoisted at four minutes past three, and a minute later the quartette were despatched to a capital start. Throwaway settling down with a clear lead of Sceptre, with Maximum II., whipping in. Turning out of the straight Throwaway increased his lead to about five lengths and the others maintained their positions (a space of about a length separating each to the junction of the courses where Sceptre began to creep up, reducing the gap to a couple of lengths. Making the bend for home Sceptre drew level with Throwaway, and when fairly in the line for home she held a three-quarter-length lead, whilst Zinfandel and Maximum II. closed up with the other pair. Halfway up the straight, however, Sceptre was in difficulties and Throwaway resumed the lead, and, resisting the challenge of Zinfandel, won, amidst intense excitement, by a length; three-quarters of a length divided the second and third. Time by Benson's chronograph—4mins. 43⅗secs.

Won easily by two lengths; six lengths between second and third. Esclavo was fourth, Atlas fifth, Pure Crystal sixth, Lady Villikins filly next, and St. Ia colt last. Time by Benson's chronograph—1min 14⅗secs.

Bright as was the promise of this morning, it has now somewhat clouded over, and it is not unlikely that rain may close the day. The heat is great, and any breeze stirring of the slightest, so that never were the gardens more attractive. Those who came down by the earlier trains, settled quietly down in their seats around the band stand and preferred that way of going a racing to anything that the course could offer. They had a distinct advantage, for they could contemplate close at hand the long stream of well-known people who poured into the stands or were on their way to the Royal enclosure. The attendance in what is called in theatres "the better parts of the house" is almost as big as yesterday. The paddock, in the close atmosphere, is the favourite resort, and has been crowded at every interval.

BETTING: 5 to 4 agst. Ajax, 7 to 1 Gouvernant, 8 to 1 Lorlot, 10 to 1 Macdonald II, 12 to 1 Turenne, 16 to 1 Samsam, 20 to 1 Rataplan, 20 to 1 Mannequin, 33 to 1 Profane, 50 to 1 Orange Blossom, 66 to 1 Xenophon, 66 to 1 Borgia, 100 to 1 Devis.

There was a long delay at the start, caused by Profane refusing to face the barrier. Turenne was first off, attended by Lorlot, Macdonald II, and Samsam, with Profane next, then came Xenophon, Rataplan, Ajax, Orange Blossom, and Gouvernant, Borgia being in the rear. On settling down, Profane took up the running from Turenne, followed by Samsam, Ajax, Lorlot, and Devis, the next division being led by Macdonald II, closely followed by Rataplan, Gouvernant, and Mannequin. There was little further alteration in the running until they had traversed a little over a mile, when Profane increased the pace. Turenne again assumed command, close up being Gouvernant, Macdonald II, Ajax, and Rataplan, with Mannequin next. At the distance Gouvernant showed signs of distress and dropped back. Stern now called upon the favourite, who responded gallantly, and amidst a scene of considerable excitement Ajax overhauled Turenne and won easily by half a length; two lengths and a half divided the second and third, and, half a length away, Gouvernant was placed fourth. Time by Benson's chronograph—3mins. 19⅗secs. Value of the stakes, 10,904sovs.

CRICKET.

NOTTS vs. YORKSHIRE.—Played at Trent Bridge, on 9th, 10th and 11th June. Yorkshire won by 10 wickets. The Yorkshire bowling was severely tried on the first day of this match, although only two men, A. O. Jones and J. A. Dixon, offered any prolonged resistance to it. For a time everything worked well for Yorkshire, and when four Notts wickets were down for 54 runs, it seemed not unlikely that the total would be very small. But Dixon now joined Jones, who was playing a fine game, and for two hours the bowling was mastered, while the score was increased by 151. Both men played beautiful cricket, and while they were together the bowling was made to look uncommonly easy. Yorkshire made 10 runs without loss before stumps were drawn, and thus with all their wickets in hand were 342 runs behind. On the next day the Notts bowlers came in for even more severe treatment than had been the lot of the Yorkshire men on the previous afternoon, and when play ended for the day, Yorkshire had still two wickets in hand, and were leading by 80 runs. Several of the team played excellent cricket, but Tunnicliffe, the highest scorer, was by no means seen at his best. He and Denton put on 174 for the third wicket in two hours and ten minutes. Later in the day, Hirst and Rhodes made a most useful stand, and when stumps were drawn with the total at 422 for eight wickets, Lord Hawke was not out 18. It did not seem at all likely on Saturday that the match would be finished, for with two wickets in hand Yorkshire only had a lead of 70. But the unexpected happened, and before half-past four Yorkshire had gained a brilliant victory. The remaining two wickets increased the total by 30, and when the innings came to an end Notts were 100 runs behind, while the wicket still remained good. But everything now came off for Yorkshire, whose three regular bowlers were seen in their form of last year. Even Rhodes who has of late been of very little service to his side with the ball came out of his shell, and showed something of his old skill. It was a bad thing for Notts when Hirst got rid of A. O. Jones and W. Gunn for a duck's egg apiece, and although he did nothing else during the innings, he deserved extremely well of his side. From this time Notts struggled in vain to extricate themselves from an awkward position, and although Iremonger, J. Gunn, and Dixon all played with great pluck, they could not save their side. Score.—

NOTTS vs. MIDDLESEX.—Played at Lord's on 13th, 14th and 15th June. Notts won by an innings and 20 runs. After A. O. Jones and Iremonger had put up 72 runs for the first Notts wicket such a change came over the game that when half the wicket were down the total had only been advanced by 61. Hardstaff then joined Iremonger, and helped him to put on 73 runs in an hour for the sixth wicket, and as Day, Hallam, and Wass all gave valuable assistance to Iremonger, the Notts total nearly approached 400 Iremonger was at the wickets for five hours and a quarter. J. T. Hearne bowled exceedingly well for a long time during the day. On Tuesday, Middlesex began their innings badly, losing three wickets for 41. Bosanquet then played a lively innings, making 32 out of 35 runs, and Littlejohn played good cricket. Meanwhile, G. W. Beldam was batting with great caution. At lunch-time the total was 122 for five wickets. Beldam received so little assistance that his side were made to follow on; his innings of 49 lasted for two hours. Yesterday, Middlesex struggled gamely, but although both Beldam and Littlejohn kept their wickets intact for a long time, there never seemed any chance that a drawn game would be brought about. Score.—

SURREY vs. ESSEX.—Played at the Oval on 13th, 14th and 15th June. Essex won by an innings and 196 runs. Batting on a perfect wicket on Monday, Essex made 396 runs for the loss of only three wickets. Most of the runs were scored in partnership by Carpenter and McGahey, who, coming together when two wickets were down for 67, added 328 runs for the third wicket in four hours by cricket which, if it was not very exciting, was always correct and scientific. During the long partnership there were periods when the play became even tedious to watch, and Carpenter, after he had reached his hundred, was an hour in scoring the next 30 runs, although he had quite taken the measure of the bowling; but, on the whole, runs came at a good pace. Carpenter was dismissed five minutes before stumps were drawn, when he only required a single run to complete his second hundred; he was at the wickets for five hours and a quarter, and can hardly be said to have made a really bad stroke; his hits included twenty-three 4's. McGahey was still unconquered with 143 to credit. As there was prospect of heavy rain during the night Surrey men could not look forward with much cheerfulness to the remainder of the match. It was thought that Essex would probably endeavour to make runs very quickly on the next morning, but Sewell and McGahey played very carefully until, with the total at 467 for four wickets, the long and patient innings of the latter came to a close; he had been at the wickets for five hours, and his hits included two 5's and nineteen 4's. Tosetti then played a pretty game, and his partnership with Sewell produced 105 runs in an hour. Sewell made some big hits now and then, and at lunchtime he was not out 106, after batting for two hours and twenty minutes. Naturally, the innings was now declared closed, and Surrey had a bad time, the first three wickets falling for 22 runs. Hayward and Hayes then made a much needed stand, but at 78 Hayward and Smith were both dismissed. The tail played up well, but the innings came to an end just before rain stopped play for the day. Yesterday in the follow-on Hayes and Holland played a great game, but by lunch time the match was practically over. Score.—

SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

MATCH vs. OXFORD UNIVERSITY.—Played at Oxford on June 9th and 10th. The South African team won by an innings and 95 runs. The South Africans seem to be finding their feet rapidly, and although neither of the University teams can be considered as very formidable, the visitors did so well against both of them as to raise great hopes for their future. On the first day the University was quite outplayed, the South Africans making 288 for six wickets against a total of 154. Oxford lost their first four wickets for 50 runs, and never recovered from this unsatisfactory beginning. The chief cause for their failure was the excellent bowling of Sinclair, who took eight wickets for 69. Sinclair also played a fine innings of 65, which was put together at the rate of a run a minute. Hathorn and Mitchell also batted exceedingly well, putting on 87 in an hour during their partnership for the third wicket. W. H. B. Evans, the Oxford Captain, was not playing, and during his absence the bowling was not well managed, the first change not being made until the total was 70 for one wicket, although Hathorn and Sinclair were making runs rapidly. Burn was kept on until the total was 120, although his only wicket was taken in the first few minutes after the innings began. On Friday White and Wallach added 75 runs in a little over three-quarters of an hour, and when the innings came to an end the visitors had a lead of 264. In the second innings of Oxford Awdrey made a great effort to save his side, and kept up his wicket for about an hour and three-quarters, during which he scored 69, his hits including eleven 4's. Score.—

MATCH vs. GLOUCESTERSHIRE.—Played at Bristol, on 13th, 14th, and 15th June. Drawn. Against a weak team of Gloucestershire the South Africans gave a good account of themselves on Monday, scoring 339, and taking a Gloucestershire wicket for 11 runs. Tancred, Shalders, and Hathorn began the South Africans' first innings so well that the first wicket fell at 75, while the second produced 93 runs in fifty minutes. At lunch time the total was 180 for two wickets. Tancred and Schwarz each made nearly a hundred, the former batting for two hours, and the latter for an hour and a half. During the partnership of Wallach and Schwarz for the ninth wicket 75 runs were put on in forty minutes, most of them from the bat of Schwarz. The batting of Gloucestershire was disappointing on Tuesday, and Wrathall alone made a good score. Soon after the first innings closed play was abandoned for the day owing to rain, Gloucestershire being 193 runs behind. Yesterday, in the follow on Gloucestershire did well, and the South Africans were left to make 69 runs. Score.—

GOLF.

THE OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP.

After as exciting a day's play as the golfer could wish to see in a tournament conducted under stroke game rules, the forty-fourth annual competition for the Open Golf Championship was won on the 10th instant by Jack White, the professional to the Sunningdale Club. Throughout the competition, he played a brilliant game, as his aggregate of 296 for the four rounds testified, yet he had many anxious moments after he had come in with his splendid final round of 69, for first Jas. Braid and then J. H. Taylor had a put on the last green to tie with White. In each case the put was a long and difficult one, but it was holeable to such men as Braid and Taylor, who had been playing grandly all day, and not until Taylor had made his plucky bid which touched the hole and ran past, was it certain that White had triumphed. That he thoroughly deserved his triumph was agreed on all sides. Throughout the meeting his pulling was wonderful, and in the long game he made only two genuine mistakes. They consisted of pulled drives. His rounds were 80, 75, 72, and 69, and his aggregate of 296 constituted a record for the championship. The previous best was 300 by Harry Vardon at Prestwick last year. White was born at Pefferside in Scotland thirty years ago, and has played golf since early childhood. He learnt his game at North Berwick, where he used to carry for Mr. J. E. Laidlay. He has made several highly creditable appearances in past championships, and in 1899, when the meeting was last held at Sandwich he set up a record of 75 for the championship course and finished second to Harry Vardon. White's record for the green was made with a guttapercha ball and with the help of the rubber-cored ball it was beaten several times during the recent meeting. To J. H. Taylor, however, fell the honour of making the best score of the meeting. In the afternoon he needed to do a round of 67 to tie with White, and it said much for his pluck that he all but accomplished that task. With a hole to play he had three strokes left, and after reaching the home green in two, he gave his put every chance. For an instant it looked certain to go down, but then it was seen to slip along the edge of the hole, and it was realised that White had won. Taylor lost his chance at the sixteenth hole, where he took 4 instead of a par 3. Owing to the crowd in front he had to wait for some time on the tee, and the delay probably put him off his game. Anyhow his drive was hooked, and, failing to get dead in two, he lost what was perhaps the most valuable stroke of the round. Prior to that, however, Braid had given White a fright. The Walton Heath professional was playing a game full of confidence, and when on the fifteenth tee he was told that he needed to do one 3 and three 4's to tie with White he set to work in such brilliant style that he did the fifteenth in 3. At the next, however, he, like Taylor, took 4, and it was not until he had finished that he knew that he had been misinformed as to his position when he had four holes to play. As a matter of fact, he wanted at that point two 3's and two 4's. On the last green, still under the impression that he had a 4 to tie, he putted so as not to run out of holing distance. He wanted to get down, but not to go too far ; he was short and his chance was gone. As he said afterwards, if he had known that he had only that put to tie he would have been ten yards past rather than a foot short. The conditions were all in favour of low scoring. Heavy rain during the night had taken the keenness out of the greens, and there was practically no wind. Still, the returns generally were remarkably good, and Taylor's record round of 68 was brilliant in the extreme. It should be stated that of the fifty-two who qualified to play, Willie Fernie, Arnaud Massey, and G. Pulford scratched, so that the competitors numbered forty-nine.

ROWING.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY SUMMER RACES.

Although the weather was dull the greater part of the day, the sun shone brilliantly for the conclusion of these races on Saturday. As a consequence, another large company was present. Third left off the head of the river being more than their distance at the finish and quite fresh. The Hall made no impression on First Trinity, but Caius gained considerably on the Jhonians. Jesus experienced bad luck, as they kept away from Emmanuel till just before the finish, when the stroke lost his oar and they were defeated. Christ's descended for the fourth time, King's being the conquerors. Selwyn had to give in to First Trinity 2, Emmanuel 2 left off head of the second division, whilst Magdalene, by making another bump gained their oars, being the only crew to have accomplished this performance. Both the Emmanuel boats have made three bumps, as also have Clare. Seven bumps were recorded on Saturday evening, making a total of twenty-nine for the four nights. There were again a large number of old blues on the towing-path. The judges for the evening were Messrs H. B Grylls, J. F. Escombe, and J. B. Peace.

The Second Division were started at 5-35 in the following order :—

Emmanuel 2	Jesus 2	St Catharine's
Peterhouse	Corpus	Queens'
Clare 1	First Trinity 3	Third Trinity 2
Sidney	Clare 2	Selwyn 2
Caius 2	Magdalene	Downing
Pembroke 2

Emmanuel easily held their own. Clare overtook Peterhouse after a fine struggle at the Railway Bridge. The next five boats caused great excitement, only half a length separating each crew, but no bumps took place between them. Magdalene again ascended. Clare 2 being their victims. Queens' caught St. Catharine's at Ditton Corner, whilst Selwyn 2 vanquished Third Trinity 2 at the Little Ditch.

The First Division were started at 6-35 as follows :—

Third Trinity 1	Jesus 1	Pembroke 1
First Trinity 1	Emmanuel 1	Trinity Hall 2
Trinity Hall 1	Christ's	Lady Margaret 2
Lady Margaret 1	King's	Emmanuel 2
Caius 1	Selwyn 1
	First Trinity 2

Third rowed well throughout and were never pressed. First had no difficulty in keeping away from the Hall, but Caius gained a lot on the Johnians, who, however, reached home safely, Emmanual had a splendid race with the Jesus crew, the latter having hard luck, as just before the finish their stroke lost his ear and this gave Emmanual their chance, who quickly drew up and bumped them. King's overcame Christ's at the Willows, and First Trinity bumped Selwyn in the Long Reach. The next four boats were in close pursuit of each other with no definite result. The following is the order in which the boats started and finished :—

First Division (at start).—Third Trinity, Trinity Hall, First Trinity, Lady Margaret, Christ's, Caius, Jesus, Selwyn, Emmanuel, King's, First Trinity 2, Pembroke, Lady Margaret, 2, Peterhouse, Trinity Hall 2.

Second Division.—Trinity Hall 2, Sidney, Caius 2, Emmanuel 2, Clare, Pembroke 2, Jesus 2, First Trinity 3, Corpus, Clare 2, Third Trinity 2, St. Catharine's Queens', Magdalene, Downing, Selwyn 2.

First Division (at finish).—Third Trinity, First Trinity, Trinity, Trinity Hall, Lady Margaret, Caius, Emmanuel, Jesus, King's, Christ's, First Trinity 2 Selwyn, Pembroke, Trinity Hall 2, Lady Margaret 2, Emmanuel 2.

Second Division.—Emmanuel 2, Clare, Peterhouse, Sidney, Caius 2, Pembroke 2 Jesus 2, Corpus, First Trinity 3, Magdalene, Clare 2, Queens', St. Catharine's, Selwyn 2, Third Trinity 2, Downing.

Appended are the first five crews, with weights :—

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY TOURNAMENT.

The tournament was brought to a conclusion on the 15th instant, when the final games in connection with the Challenge Cup and Handicap Tournament were decided. The weather was again favourable, and rain having fallen the previous night naturally made the gowing better. The first game was for the Challenge Cup, in which St. Neots and Odds and Ends were left in. Lord Wodehouse played substitute for Mr. A. Brown on the Odds and Ends side. Both went off at a fast pace, and it looked as if a fine game would be seen. Such, however, was not the case, as after the first ten St. Neots were seen to great advantage, the final score reading : St. Neots, fifteen goals ; Odds and Ends, two. The goals for the winners were scored by Evans (6), Montgomery (5), Fordham (2), and Jordan (2), and for the Odds and Ends by Paget, the other being kicked through by Barron's horse. The sides were : St. Neots—Mr. A. Jordan, Mr. G. Evans, Mr. H. Montgomery, and Mr. W. Fordham ; Odds and Ends—Mr. H. W. Fordham, Mr. W. E. Paget, Lord Wodehouse, and Mr. E. W. Barron. Umpire : Mr. I Buxton. In the Handicap Tournament final the sides were "B" Team (reds) vs. "C" Team (whites). Only four tens were played, the Reds winning by six goals to one. The teams were : Reds—Mr. R. Meyer, Mr. H. E. Von Tiedman, Mr. A. Jordan, and Mr. G. Evans ; Whites—Mr. C. Aspinall, Mr. I. Buxton, Hon. O. R. Windsor Clive, and Mr. W. E. Paget. Umpire : Mr. W. J. Peters.

THE MYSORE TOURNAMENT.

(Second Ties)

MYSORE, 27th June 1904.

TWO games in the second ties of this tournament were decided on the morning of the 27th June, and some good play was witnessed especially in the match between the Carabiniers and "A" Team of the Imperial Service Lancers. The other game in the morning was something like a triumphal procession on the part of the Bangalore Gymkhana who were far too good for the Local Service Cavalry and also better mounted, their ponies being much handier than those of the local men, which seemed raw. It was very sporting, however, of the Silledars to enter a team, and everyone will wish them better luck next time. The score in the match between the gallant "Carbs," and the Imperial Service Lancers hardly represents the game, for the Carabiniers had all the best of it almost throughout. But though always travelling at a great pace, their shooting was sometimes erratic, and a rather rough ground did not tend to improve this. Details of the play :—

BANGALORE GYMKHANA.	LOCAL SERVICE LANCERS.
1 Mr Rasch	1 Jamadar Mahomed Nasiruddin
2 Captain Peel	2 Jamadar Khaja Hussain
3 Mr Wagstaffe	3 Jamadar Sadudin
Mr Lewin (back)	Risaldar Mahomed Ismail (back)

First Chukker.—Although it was pretty well known that the game was a gift for the Gymkhana, it was hardly expected that they would score so rapidly as they did. Peel and Rasch each put the ball through the posts before play had been in progress for more than a few minutes, and a subsidiary quickly followed. Then Peel added another goal, and it was evident that the Gymkhana were going to have a day out. However, Sadudin and Mahomed Nasiruddin got in a good bit of combined play, and the latter scored the first and last goal for his side amidst applause. The Lancers were then sent behind their own line for infringing the "off-side" regulation and Rasch scored a subsidiary for the Gymkhana as the chukker closed.

Score :—Bangalore Gymkhana :—3 goals and 2 subsidiaries.
Local Service Lancers :—1 goal.

Second Chukker.—After two subsidiaries to the Gymkhana, who were penning their adversaries terribly, Wagstaffe made a neat dribble, concluding it with a goal. A foul against the local men followed and still disaster dogged their footsteps—or rather their ponies' hoofs—Lewin adding another major point to the rapidly increasing score. He was again prominent, but missed his stroke and Peel scored a subsidiary. The Gymkhana lost opportunities by twice paying the penalty for "off-side," but there was only one team in it and after fine combined work by Peel and Lewin, Rasch scored an uncommonly pretty goal, with the neatest of backhand strokes.

Score :—Bangalore Gymkhan :—6 goals and 5 subsidiaries.
Local Service Lancers :—1 goal.

Third Chukker.—The Lancers for a brief period held their own, and Mahomed Nasiruddin, particularly did some accurate hitting, but then Peel came away in a manner peculiar to himself. His last stroke but one was a bit hard, and the ball almost went behind the line, but picking it up very quickly he put it between the posts—a brilliant goal this. Lewin added a subsidiary and then Peel once more scored, the contributions to the already large Gymkhana score, coming in such quick succession that it was difficult to keep account as to who actually added the points. With a desperate rush the local men came down the field and for a few moments kept play at the Gymkhana end but once again Peel was away being uncommonly well pulled up by Mahomed Ismail. It was of little use, however, for no one was marking Rasch and he easily scored.

Score :—Bangalore Gymkhana :—9 goals and 6 subsidiaries.
Local Service Lancers :—1 goal.

Fourth Chukker.—Nothing daunted by the monumental record on the scoring board, the Lancers attacked, but the ball went over the Gymkhana line, and Lewin was very prominent in the combination which took play back to the local mens' end. Who individually scored the next goal for the Gymkhana, deponent knoweth not for it accrued out of a stately and stickly gathering of men and ponies in the Lancers' goal mouth, but Wagstaffe immediately afterwards put in a most brilliant run, and, unassisted, placed the pillule where it was intended to go. After this the Gymkhana somewhat relaxed their efforts and the game became bit slow. Score at the end of the chukker :—

Bangalore Gymkhana :—11 goals and 6 subsidiaries.
Local Service Lancers :—1 goal.

Fifth (and last) Chukker—It is illustrative of the fact that even now the Lancers did not know they were beaten, that they came down and got in a subsidiary. The Gymkhana subsequently shook themselves up again and waltzing complacently to their opponents' end, Peel scored a grave and sedate goal. At least that was the impression it gave the spectators, it was so very deliberate. There were only two minutes remaining for play when the chukker closed, and with the scoring board "staring them in the face," the Lancers decided that they could hardly pull up in that time. Moreover there was a second match to be played, and the sun was getting hot. So "all over" was called and the Gymkhana went to breakfast

Score :—Bangalore Gymkhana :—12 goals 6 subsidiaries.
Local Service Lancers :—1 goal.

THE CARABINIERS.	IMPERIAL SERVICE LANCERS "A" TEAM.
1 Mr Dormer	1 Resalder Annaji Kadam
2 Mr Kennard	2 H H the Maharaja
3 Captain Watson	3 Lt-Col J. Desaraj Urs
Mr Swifte (back)	Resaldar Murad Beg (back).

First Chukker.—The Maharaja and Colonel Desaraj Urs were at once prominent, but Swifte—a safe back my Masters—returned with a hard drive down the ground, and Kennard, after taking the ball over the Lancer's line, ended a pretty little run with a successful shot at the posts. The pace quickened, and if not very accurate, there was no doubt about the Carabiniers vim and energy. Before the end of the chukker Dormer added a second goal for them.

Score :—The Carabiniers :—2 goals.
Imperial Service Lancers, "A" Team :—Nil.

Second Chukker.—Uneventful play marked the opening of this chukker, and after some scrambling exchanges near the Lancers' goal, the ball went behind their line. Then Dormer registered a subsidiary and the same player in conjunction with Kennard was looking dangerous when a somewhat uninteresting chukker closed.

Score :—The Carabiniers :—2 goals, and 1 subsidiary.
Imperial Service Lancers "A" Team :—Nil.

Third Chukker.—Clearly the Carabiniers' chukker, although only a goal and a subsidiary were added to their score. Watson showed up quite brilliantly at times, but was erratic when near goal, although more than once he travelled almost the whole length of the ground. Dormer was also responsible for a fine run in which he missed the ball at the psychological moment, but Kennard coming up completed a good effort by scoring an easy goal. Watson was travelling again at a great pace, when the ball went out and the chukker ended.

Score :—The Carabiniers :—3 goals and 2 subsidiaries.
Imperial Service Lancers, "A" Team :—Nil.

Fourth Chukker.—The Commandant of the Imperial Service Troops was quickly away, but Swifte pulled him up with a certain emphasis, and combined play by the Carbs took the ball back to midfield where some sticky work succeeded. Then Swifte was applauded for an excellent run but a "dangerous foul" against his side neutralised the advantage and the Lancers were returning to the attack when the chukker ended.

Score :—The Carabiniers :— 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries.
Imperial Service Lancers, "A" Team :—Nil.

Fifth (and last) Chukker.—Owing to the length of the previous chukkers no sixth chukker was required and even as it was not much time remained. Nothing more was scored, and the match ended as above in a win for the Carabiniers by 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries to nil.

The evening polo was, if anything, better than the morning, the Essex team in particular supprising their warmest adherents by the excellent form they showed. Ootacamund Gymkhana never looked like beating them, although it must be said that Barr for the losers played an excellent game. But the Essex men hit accurately, had plenty of pace, and most important of all seemed to understand each other, whilst Ootacamund were decidedly scratch. The other match resulted in a great game Opinions were divided as to whether Raja Venugopaul's team or the Durham Light Infantry would win, and the event proved that the match was very open. Indeed had the Durhams shot a little straighter for goal they might well have won, and though they themselves modestly put down the result to rotten bad "shooting," several of the subsidiaries were distinctly hard lines. Details of the play :—

ESSEX REGIMENT.	OOTACAMUND GYMKHANA.
1 Mr Raymond	1 Capt Gibbes
2 Mr Bowen	2 Major Logan-Home
3 Mr Neave	3 Capt Barr
Mr Raleigh (back)	Capt Henderson (back)

First Chucker.—The Essex quartette played down the hill and Raymond at once was away with a fast run to the Ootacamund end, where the ball twice went behind the line. Barr then brought play to neutral territory, and subsequently almost to the Essex goal. Raymond and Bowen retaliated and three times the ball was sent over the line. Then Neave scored a subsidiary for the Essex, who were still having the best of matters when the chucker ended.

Score :—Essex Regiment :—0 goal 1 subsidiary.
Ootacamund Gymkhana :—Nil.

Second Chucker.—Logan-Home gained much ground, but was stopped by Raleigh, and Raymond getting away, scored a goal for the Essex. Raymond who by the way played excellently throughout, was again prominent, but playing the ball against his pony's fetlocks he lost it. Neave, however, was backing up, continued the run and again scored. Logan-Home was once more doing useful work for "Ooty" when the ball went out, but for a few minutes, the scratch team—for they were practically scratch—held their own. Raymond, however, was again away, and going down the field at a great rate, scored a subsidiary, which was quickly followed by another from the same stick. Then Gibbes and Barr took play to the Essex end where it was proceeding when the chucker closed.

Score :—Essex Regiment :—2 goals 3 subsidiaries.
Ootacamund Gymkhana :—Nil.

Third Chucker.—The Essex team pressed at once and Raymond was prominent in a run which enable Neave to score for them. Changing ends, Henderson approached the Essex end of the ground with a mighty drive, but "off-side" and a "dangerous foul" were given in quick succession against Ootacamund, and from the latter Neave scored a goal. Raymond was at once away after the restart, but he missed his hit near the Ooty goal, and all the other Essex men strangely enough followed suit. Barr thereupon got possession, and transferred operations to the Essex line, where the ball went behind. Give and take play was the order of the day for the reminder of the chucker

Score :—Essex Regiment :—4 goals 3 subsidiaries.
Ootacamund Gymkhana.—Nil

Fourth Chucker —The ball went behind the Ootacamund line and then Barr with a nice run took play to midfield The Essex men were soon back, however, and some good combined work by Neave and Bowen resulted in the latter scoring a goal. The Gymkhana came down with a rush, but the ball went behind the line, and Raymond, going up the field with a brilliant run, scored a subsidiary

Score :—Essex Regiment :—5 goals 4 subsidiaries.
Ootacamund Gymkhana. Nil.

Fifth Chucker.—Ootacamund here began to have more of their share of the play, and after Barr had been applauded for an uncommonly fine run, Gibbes got possession and taking it on scored a good goal, Neave retaliated with a subsidiary for the regiment, but Ootacamund were for the time the better team, and after Barr and Logan-Home had brought the ball to the Essex goal line, the former had distinctly bad luck in not scoring.

Score :—The Essex Regiment :—5 goals 5 subsidiaries.
Ootacamund Gymkhana:—1 goal 0 subsidiary

Sixth Chucker.—Still sticking pluckily at work whilst their opponents seemed to be either tiring or relaxing their efforts, Ootacamund pressed, and after the ball had gone behind the Essex line, Barr scored a subsidiary which was all but a goal. From the hit-out Raymond broke away, but the bugle sounded, and the Essex team retired thoroughly deserving victors.

Final Score :—The Essex Regiment :—5 goals 5 subsidiaries
Ootacamund Gymkhana :—1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Umpires :—General Eccles Niton and Mr. Wagstaffe.

RAJA VENUGOPAUL BAHADUR'S TEAM.	DURHAM LIGHT INFANTRY.
1 Shaik Ismail	1 Mr Hartley
2 Raja Venugopaul Bahadur	2 Mr Turner
3 Capt H C Oakes	3 Capt Unthank
Mr A Gwyer (back)	Mr Wallace (back)

First Chucker.—The Raja winning the toss his side played down the slope to began with, but notwithstanding this the Durhams had the best of the opening exchanges. Unthank got in a good run along the side of the ground and finished up with a subsidiary a second accruing to the regimental team before the chucker closed.

Score :—Durham Light Infantry :—0 goal 2 subsidiaries.
Raja Venugopaul's Team :—Nil.

Second Chucker.—Raja Venugopaul got away, but Hartley robbed him and brought the ball back. He was pulled up by Gwyer and the scratch team began to press, Oakes scoring a subsidiary. Hartley and Turner raised the siege, but a foul near their opponents' goal neutralised the advantage gained. Play was in progress in midfield when a somewhat uninteresting chucker closed.

Score:—Durham Light Infantry :—0 goal 2 subsidiaries.
Raja Venugopaul's Team :—0 „ 1 subidiary.

Third Chucker.—Both teams warmed up, and the play became faster. The Raja put in a very pretty run, and Oakes, in close attendence, took the ball on and scored a goal. Then Turner came back with a good run and concluding with a goal, placed his side again ahead. The ball went behind the scratch teams line twice and they were temporarily in a state of siege, but Sheik Ismail and Gwyer went down the field and the latter steered the ball safely through the Durham posts. The native player was again very prominent but, no further score took place, and the chucker ended with Raja Venugopul's team in a bare majority.

Score :—Raja Venugopaul's Team:—2 goals 1 subsidiary.
Duham Light Infentry :—1 goal 2 subsidiaries.

Fourth Chucker.—The Durhams, playing for all they were worth began to press, and after Hartley had scored a neat goal, Turner became very dangerous, with a brilliant run. He added a subsidiary, but then Oakes took a judicious pass from Gwyer, and once more placed his side ahead, hearty applause greeting a really good bit of play.

Score :—Raja Venugopaul's Team :—3 goals 1 subsidiary.
Durham Light Infantry :—2 goals 3 subsidiaries.

Fifth Chucker.—The game now became very exciting, and every stroke was closely watched by the spectators. For a while the Raja's team pressed, but then Turner, who with Hartley played a good game throughout, came down the field at a great pace and Hartley scored a subsidiary. Turner added another and had the Durham's shooting been better at this point in the game they would probably have won. The psychological moment passed however and after Gwyer had gained a lot of ground, the Raja hit a very neat goal.

Score :—Raja Venugopaul's Team :—4 goals 1 subsidiary.
Durham Light Infantry :—2 goals 5 subsidiaries.

Sixth Chucker.—Only two minutes and twenty-eight seconds remained for play, but the Durhams kept going with undaunted pluck and had all the best of the closing phases of the game, although they could not manage to score. With better shooting they should have gone into the semi finals.

Final Score :—Raja Venugopaul's Team :—4 goals 1 subsidiary.
Durham Light Infantry :—2 goals 5 subsidiaries.

THE SEMI-FINALS.

The semi-finals were played on the morning of the 29th June, and although both the teams that won were favourites in their matches, it was not expected that such scores would be piled up. The score in the first game, however, hardly represented the play correctly. Several times the Essex team should have scored, and when it is considered that they were a very young side with comparatively little experience, and were moreover entirely out-paced by the grand ponies ridden by the Dragoons, it must be confessed that their display was an excellent one. It is good to see such sporting spirit in four young subalterns of an infantry regiment. Their money is considerably better invested in this way than—well in others. The "Carbs" played their usual galloping game, but with very much more accuracy than they exhibited against the Imperial Service Lancers, and Kennard especially played quite a different game.

Ye gods! What a slaughter of the innocents followed. Most people thought the Bangalore Gymkhana would beat Rajah Venugopaul's side, but no one imagined that they would pile up 8 goals and 4 subsidiaries to nil. Peel hit briliantly, Lewin played up to him very consistently, Wagstaffe was a very safe back, and Rasch quite out-generalled Sheik Ismail, a very good performance for a young player. Moreover, both Oakes and Sheik Ismail were much off their game, the latter in particular, seeming unable to hit the ball. Gwyer did a lot of hard work throughout, and the Rajah played well for three chukkers, but they were long ones, and he seemed a bit cooked in the later stages of the game. Details of the play :—

THE CARABINIERS.	THE ESSEX REGIMENT.
1 Mr Dormer	1 Mr Raymond
2 Mr Kennard	2 Mr Bowen
3 Capt Watson	3 Mr Neave
Mr Swifte (back)	Mr Raleigh (back)

First Chukker.—The Cavalrymen played towards the transport lines, i.e., down the hill and had the best of the opening exchanges. Watson after a good run scored a goal for them, and though Bowen gained some ground after changing ends, the "Carbs" came back, and Watson adding a subsidiary when the Essex goal seemed at his mercy, did better at his next attempt, and taking an accurate centre from Dormer scored an easy goal.

Score :—The Carabiniers :—2 goals and 1 subsidiary.
The Essex Regiment :—Nil.

Second Chukker.—Dormer reached the Essex line with a fast run, but Neave and Raymond took play back to midfield where Kennard got possession. He centred well and Watson scored a subsidiary. Off side was given against the Cavalry, but from the hit out Kennard was away with a good run. Raleigh checked him and returned the ball, but Watson with a mighty drive put the ball almost into the Essex goal mouth where sticky play succeeded. Neave, with one of the best bits of play in the match, got the ball away and ran it safely to midfield, where play was proceeding when an excellent and interesting chukker ended.

Score :—The Carabiniers :—2 goals and 2 subsidiaries.
The Essex Regiment :—Nil.

Third Chukker.—After some give and take play, the ball went out. The Infantry team about now played with much dash, and Bowen and Neave were loudly applauded for a combined run which took play close to the Carabinier goal. Here a shot, which looked as though it would have scored, hit a pony—distinctly bad luck—and the Cavalry temporarily cleared. Once more there was hearty applause for the Essex, as Neave and Raymond took play close up to their opponents' posts where the ball went behind. Watson retaliated and took the ball down the ground, Swifte adding a subsidiary to the Carabiniers' score. But although their sheet was still blank, this at least was quite the Essex men's chukker.

Score :—The Carabiniers :—2 goal sand 3 subsidiaries.
The Essex Regiment:—Nil.

Fourth Chukker.—The last had been a very lengthy chukker and play was two minutes over time. Raleigh hit out, Dormer returned and Watson scored a subsidiary. The superiority of the Cavalrymen's ponies now began to make itself felt, and yet Neave and Raymond twice took play up to their opponents' line. Nothing tangible resulted, however. Watson and Neave put in good runs for their respective sides, but after the latter's effort, the Carabiniers came down with a rush, and Watson scored a fine goal, as the chukker closed.

Score :—The Carabiniers:—3 goals and 4 subsidiaries.
The Essex Regiment:—Nil.

Fifth Chukker.—Good exchanges and subsequent sticky play marked the opening of what proved to be the final chukker, but the Carabiniers were now outpacing their opponents, and after Watson had missed an easy chance, Kennard coming up, put the ball through without being interfered with. The Essex four kept going and Raymond scored a subsidiary for them which was within an ace of being a goal. Watson then got clear away and going right down the ground by himself, drove the ball between the Essex posts, loud applause greeting this fine effort. The Essex ponies were about done, and though Neave broke away, Watson, on a much faster pony, easily caught and checked him. The Carabiniers were still pressing when time arrived, and a very sportingly contested match ended.

Final Score :—The Carabiniers :—5 goals 5 subsidiaries.
The Essex Regiment :——0 goal 1 subsidiary.

Umpires :—General Nixon and Mr. Queripel, R. A.

An amusing incident occurred in the course of the game Raleigh was riding an uncommonly cross-grained Arab and taking a dislike to Dormer's pony, this Arab bit at her and then seized her rein in his teeth, declining to let it go. Dormer not unnaturally presented the Arab with a smart rap on the head to make him loose the rain, and several spectators were under the impression that a little fight was in progress between Messrs. Dormer and Baleigh!

BANGALORE GYMKHANA.	RAJAH VENUGOPAUL BAHADUR'S TEAM.
1 Mr Rasch	1 Sheik Ismail
2 Capt Peel	2 Raja Venugopaul
3 Mr Lewin	3 Capt H C Oakes
Mr Wagstaffe (back)	Mr A Gwyer (back)

SHOT In ordering, please specify the Abbey Improved Chilled Shot Company Ltd., Newcastle on Tyne.

N.B.—We also make Hard and Soft Shot, but strongly recommend Improved Chilled Shot for penetration. The only Company in Great Britain devoting its whole time to shot making.

First Chukker.—Peel scored a subsidiary for the Gymkhana in the first half-minute, and though Oakes gained some ground, Wagstaffe checked him, and Peel getting away hit a fine goal. Peel and Rasch were again prominent, and though Gwyer temporarily relieved, the Gymkhana were soon back, and Wagstaffe scored a goal.

Score :—Bangalore Gymkhana :—2 goals and 1 subsidiary.
Rajah Venugopaul's Team :—Nil.

Second Chukker—Bangalore thus early were showing a decided superiority. Peel scored a subsidiary, the ball subsequently going behind the scratch team's line. Sheik Ismail and Gwyer gained a little ground, but Peel getting away in a characteristic run, out galloped Gwyer, and hitting very accurately, was deservedly applauded for a really brilliant goal. The ball went out near the scratch team's line and then Peel added another subsidiary Lewin and Peel were working nicely together and from a neat pass the latter once more scored a subsidiary. The Rajah at last relieved with a fine run three parts down the ground, the ball eventually going over the Gymkhana line. The last named team, however, came back, and Rasch riding Gwyer off afterwards got possession and hit a neat goal.

Score :—Bangalore Gymkhana :—4 goals and 4 subsidiaries.
Rajah Venugopaul's Team :—Nil.

Third Chukker.—Play had hardly started when Lewin took a pass from Wagstaffe and put the ball safely between the goal-posts. Changing ends Peel was at once away, but the ball went behind Gwyer shortly afterwards saving what looked like a certain goal. Gwyer and the Rajah, who were playing well took play to their adversaries line, but once more the Gymkhana came back and Peel scored another goal for them as the chukker ended.

Score :—Bangalore Gymkhana :—6 goals and 4 subsidiaries.
Rajah Venugopaul's Team :—Nil.

Fourth Chukker. Gwyer and Rajah Venugopaul were once more prominent, but they were not particularly well supported, and Sheik Ismail especially, though working hard seemed never in his place. From a centre by Peel, Lewin almost scored, and then Peel himself with a neat backhanded stroke completed the point. The match was now all over, and the Gymkhana were romping away with their opponents

Score :—Bangalore Gymkhana :—7 goals and 4 subsidiaries.
Rajah Venugopaul's Team :—Nil.

Fifth Chukker.—Gwyer made a baddish miss, and Peel got away, but the Rajah pulled him up and gained some ground. Bangalore, however, were not to be denied and coming back again, Wagstaffe put the ball between the posts as the chukker ended. Only 20 seconds of time remained and no further play took place.

Final Score :—Pangalore Gymkhana :—8 goals, and 4 subsidiaries.
Rajah Venugopaul's Team :—Nil.

THE FINAL.

The final was played on the morning of Thursday, the 30th June, the new polo ground on the Mysore racecourse being utilised for the purpose. The opposing teams were the Bangalore Gymkhana and the Carabiniers, and whilst the first-named were the favourites, it was thought that the Carabiniers, who are a very fast side, would hustle their opponents considerably. They did not do themselves justice, however, and were beaten somewhat easily, although the score hardly represents the game. Peel for the winners surpassed himself. He hit accurately, galloped at a great pace, and seemed rather to like being ridden than otherwise. Wagstaffe at back was also good, Lewin performed the unostentatious business of playing up to Peel very satisfactorily, whilst Rasch at No. 1 helped considerably by his vigourous riding off and general hard work. In short the side deserved to win.

Of the Carabiniers, Watson stood out head and shoulders the best man on the day's play, and Kennard was perhaps next best. Swifte hardly seemed up to his usual form at back, and Dormer, though at times playing well, was uncertain. That a single "off-side" decision should have been the only transgression of the Laws throughout the match, speaks volumes for the gentlemanly game played by both sides, and it may be mentioned in parenthesis that the Carabiniers are most unlucky in polo tournaments. In pretty nearly every tournament they enter for they get into the final, but they have not yet been able to win. Details:—

First Chukker.—The Gymkhana were the quickest starters, and after Watson and Kennard had repulsed an attack, Peel went down to the Carabiniers' with a brilliant run. Give and take play, however, succeeded, and it looked like being a good game. Rasch broke away, and with a good drive landed the ball in close proximity to the Cavalrymen's goal, where Peel opened the ball by scoring a subsidiary. Nothing more was added during the opening chukker.

Score :—Bangalore Gymkhana :—1 subsidiary.
The Carabiniers :—Nil.

Second Chukker.—Watson was at once prominent, but Peel retaliated and took a long shot at goal. The ball through sheer bad luck hit Rasch's pony and Dormer temporarily relieved, but Peel, who was playing a magnificent game, was soon back, and scored a subsidiary. Swifte transferred play to Gymkhana territory with a mighty drive, but again the Bangalore men came down: and Peel scored a good goal for them amidst applause. Changing ends the "Carbs" played for all they were worth and for a bit it seemed as though they might out-gallop their opponents. But they showed a want of judgment in the strength of their hitting, and Watson, Dormer and then again Watson, played too hard and shot over the Gymkhana line. Dormer about now got in pretty run, and Kennard backing him up well, scored a goal for the Carabiniers, the enthusiastic nature of the applause being a sufficient proof of the popularity of the gallant Carbs.

Score :—Bangalore Gymkhana :—1 goal and 2 subsidiaries.
The Carabiniers :—1 goal.

Third Chukker.—After 'off-side' had been claimed and allowed against the Cavalrymen, Peel put the ball into their goal mouth but Swifte saved and play was transferred to midfield. Peel, however, was irresistible, and was soon again attacking; Watson although playing excellently when he himself got away seeming unable to stop the brilliant Bangalore No. 2.

The ball went behind the Carabiniers line and then Peel put his side further ahead with a long shot, Watson got away after changing ends, but with the goal absolutely at his mercy, made a missing hit and shot wide—a bad piece of luck for the "Carbs," for Watson is as a rule the cleanest of hitters. Now occurred what was perhaps the most brilliant individual piece of play in the match. Peel got a clear field with the exception of the Cavalry back, close to his own goal, and travelling like a streak he went clean down the ground, drove the ball beyond Swifte, galloped past him as though he was standing still—the pony he was riding, Bayleaf, is well known for his pace in Bangalore—and took the ball straight through the Carabinier goal, hearty cheers greeting what was a magnificent effort. Out of a scrimmage before the close of the chukker Lewin added another goal, and the Gymkhana appeared to be certain winners.

Score :—Bangalore Gymkhana :—2 goals and 2 subsidiaries.
The Carabiniers :—1 goal.

Fourth Chukker.—The "Carbs" were not yet done with, however, and they certainly had all the best of the next chukker. Watson took the ball down and shot behind. Shortly afterwards he again got away, and making no mistake, put the ball between the Gymkhana posts by a clever shot. Vigorous applause from all over the ground resulted, and for a time the Cavalrymen more than held their own. Watson, who about this time, was playing brilliantly, but hitting too hard when approaching the line, was once again away after the change of ends, but Swifte sent the ball over the line. A clever dribble by Kennard, and a run by Watson, who, however once more put the ball over the Gymkhana line, brought about the end of a chukker which ought certainly to have resulted in more tangible advantage to the Carabiniers had they kept their heads when nearing goal

Score.—Bangalore Gymkhana :—4 goals and 2 subsidiaries.
The Carabiniers :—2 goals.

Fifth Chukker.—The ball was hit out from behind the Gymkhana line, and they at once invaded the Carabiniers' territority. Swifte twice saved well, and then Wagstaffe brought the ball round, and though ridden hard at the moment of shooting, he scored a goal with an uncommonly fine slanting shot. Still the Bangalore Gymkhana pressed, and Peel scored a subsidiary. He shortly afterwards put in another fine run and though being ridden by Kennard, he met Swifte's return and scored another grand goal which was deservedly applauded.

Nothing more was scored during the chukker, and as only 37 seconds remained for play when it closed it was considered useless to begin a fresh chukker.

Final Score :—Bangalore Gymkhana :—6 goals and 3 subsidiaries. The Carabiniers :—2 goals.

PRESENTATION OF THE CUP.

The numerous spectators and the players then assembled in the enclosure in front of the Grand Stand and Mr. Maconochie, I. C. S., Private Secretary to His Highness the Maharaja, said :—"Ladies and Gentlemen, His Highness has asked me to say something on his behalf before the Cup is presented to the winners. We have just finished what I think has been a very sporting tournament, and have had a capital game to wind up with. I daresay that the winners will forgive us if we say that we should have liked to see the Carabiniers win as it is always pleasant to see a regiment win. But we can only wish the Carabiniers better luck in the future. The entries this year have been a good deal bigger than they were last and His Highness wishes me to say, "Let 'em all come." We want a gunners team badly. The Durhams—I hope they may emulate the glories of their other battalion, and the Essex have played real sporting games (hear, hear) and the Bangalore Gymkhana thoroughly deserved to win the cup for they have played consistently well through out the tournament. It now only remains for we to ask Lady Pretyman to kindly present the cups to the winners (applause.)

Lady Pretyman then presented the handsome challenge cup to Captain Peel, the Captain of the Bangalore Gymkhana, and the small silver cups to the individual members of the team Cheers were subsequently given for Lady Pretyman, His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore, the winners, and the runners up, and an uncommonly sporting and successful tournament closed. Under the conditions of the tournament, Bangalore Gymkhana, if they win the cup next year will retain it as their own property.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

London, 17th June 1904.

IT was in 1898 that Mr. James Gordon-Bennett, the proprietor of the New York Herald, desirous of encouraging the motor industry which at that time was in its infancy, presented to the Automobile Club of France a valuable and handsome trophy which was to be put up for annual competition amongst motorists and which is now known the year over as the Gordon-Bennett Cup. Amongst the rules governing the contest is one stipulating that the cars must be constructed wholly and in every detail in the country of the clubs they represent. Thus it was that in the first two races the Automobile Club of France secured the Cup, the French people having had a considerable lead in motor construction which enabled them to enter cars far in advance of those produced in other countries. Every Foreign Automobile Club recognized by the leading Automobile Clubs of the world are allowed to challenge for the cup, providing the challenge is sent to the club holding the trophy before the first day of January of the year the race is to take place, and each club is entitled to enter three cars. It is also necessary to send with the challenge a deposit of one hundred and twenty pounds, which sum is returned if the club is represented at the start. The first race held for this cup was decided in France in 1900 over what is known as the Paris-Lyons course and resulted in a win for M. F. Charron. The second race took place on 29th May 1901 on a course from Paris to Berlin and was won by M. Girardot. The third race held over the Paris-Vienna route in 1902, marked the rise of the British motor car industry, the Cup being secured by the Automobile Club of Great Britain through its representative, Mr. S. F. Edge. This rider on an English-built motor car, not only won the race for the Cup but also a long distance race held in connection with it, in spite of the fact that no less than 132 other competitors started. Last year's race held in Ireland was won by M. Jenatzy, the German representative. While writing this, nineteen huge racing cars are competing in the fifth annual race over a carefully selected course in the Taunus Mountains, Germany. The result, however, will not be to hand before the Indian mail leaves, so particulars must wait over until next week.

We have decided to spend all our riding time on a push bicycle in the Brighton Road, in the hope of being run down by a motor cyclist of wealth who is known to frequent that highway. Last Sunday, the gentleman in question, collided with an ordinary cyclist completely smashing his machine. Instead of resorting to abuse intermingled with unparliamentary adjectives, the motor cyclist immediately dismounted and the following conversation took place. "How much do you want to settle it? £8!" "£12" replied the cyclist, "All right. Here you are" said the motorist as he handed over the amount demanded. He then mounted his machine and rode off before a policeman came to take his name and address, whilst the cyclist walked off with his wrecked cycle on his shoulders and twelve golden guineas in his pocket.

It may be some years yet before the motor is extensively used on home farms owing to the deep grafted prejudice that exist amongst agriculturists against innovations of any description, but as the railway has displaced the old mail coach and gas and electric light the farthing rush-light, so will in time the motor displace the horse on the farm. In this country, more than in any other, is it necessary to practice efficiency and economy if the land is to be made to pay for its cultivation. Keen competition against the foreign markets, unfavourable seasons, and heavy charges by the railways for produce sent to market, are a few of the difficulties that an English farmer has to contend with, and if he is to do so successfully it must be by reducing the cost of cultivation to its lowest possible figure.

In what better way then, can this be accomplished, than by employing motor power? During the last two years, agricultural motors have been perfected to a considerable degree, and although inexpensive, they will do practically any haulage work on a farm, cheaper and quicker than would be the case were horses employed. At the Royal Agricultural Show held last year, there were no less than six exhibitors of agricultural motors, and in some tests carried out with one of the machines, a field of nineteen acres of wheat was cut in ten hours, and two acres and fifteen poles of land, with a very hard surface, was ploughed with a double-furrow plough in 5hours 49minutes. The cost of running the motor is extremely low.

The good sport-loving citizens of Manchester have answered in an unmistakable manner the question which has been worrying cycle sport promoters for the last few years, as to why it is that cycle racing fails to attract support? They have answered it by attending in their thousands a meeting that was worth attending—a meeting brim full of high class events and which was carried out from start to finish in a manner that could not fail to draw the public: indeed, it was a cycle race meeting conducted as cycle race meetings should be conducted. The meeting to which we refer was the first of the National Cyclists' Union Championships of the year, held on the Fallowfield grounds, Manchester, on Saturday last, 11th June, when the most attractive of all the National Cyclists Union Championships—the one mile and quarter mile events—were decided, sandwiched between two open handicaps over a lap and a mile. The weather was favourable, and over 6,000 spectators watched some of the most exciting and interesting racing that it has been our lot to witness for many a long day.

In the race for the mile championship a splendid entry had been received of twenty-six good riders, which necessitated eight heats being run in the first round, three heats in the second round and then the final—and what a final it was, in which A. L. Reed, the Londoner, E. Payne of Worcester, and J. S. Benyon of Chesterneld figured. At the bell, Payne went for his usual lap sprint with Reed closely hugging his back wheel and Benyon in the running. Almost up to the white tape the positions remained unchanged when, with a desperate effort Reed gained the lead and won by one foot from Payne with Benyon only half a wheel behind. In the race for the quarter mile championship twenty-three entrants had been received which after holding a matter of ten heats were sifted down to J. S. Benyon, H. Buck and A. L. Reed. The racing in the quarter mile final, although good, lacked the dash and excitement of the mile event, Reed, being tired out with his afternoon's riding having to give way to Benyon and Buck, indeed, Reed sat up before the race was over, "whacked" as he afterwards explained. This race was won by Benyon with Buck a length in the rear.

Our leading professional rider "Tommy" Hall, still continues to meet with success in Paris, which City he makes his headquarters during the summer season. His latest win was in an hour paced race when he was opposed by Bracy, Bruni, Contenet and Darolli, four good men behind fast pace. In spite of the fact, that during the race Hall met with a rather serious fall—one of his tyres bursting—he managed to put in the respectable distance of 51 miles 100 yards in the time, winning by over two kilometres from Contenet. These riders who race behind high powered motor bicycles, that can easily cover fifty miles an hour, take upon themselves a tremendous risk of sustaining severe, if not fatal, injuries. Already this season Hall has experienced seven falls, but in each case he has been rather fortunate and has not been obliged to lay up for any length of time.

A TRIUMPH OF EFFICIENCY.

Is suitable for Documents and Correspondence of every description All papers relating to any particular firm or business are filed together, and are thus kept quite separate, and readily get-at-able.

No unnecessary room taken up, as in the case of most files now in the market, the back being quite thin and takes up no more space than the actual letters—a very important point where space is a consideration.

All papers can be instantly and conveniently referred to without any manipulation of springs which often means dislodging a number of papers in order to get at any particular document.

The covers are made in various qualities and sizes, to take from 1—300 documents, in octavo, quarto or foolscap.

Files are supplied in different colors: Blue, Red, Orange, Buff, and Green. The idea of using coloured Files provides an easy means of distinguishing at a glance the various distinctive branches of correspondence in a large business, such as referring to Agencies, Purchases Sales, Finance, or for Town, Country, Mofussil, Continental, and Colonial.

CRICKET CHAT.

E. A. LEACH, the Calcutta C. C. player, is making a lot of runs for Wimbledon this season. His latest effort was 55 against Upper Tooting on 4th June. J. P. Candler, the old Bengal Presidency player continues to make runs and get wickets for Mr. J. C. Lovell's XI, and on 4th June scored 24 and took two of the five wickets that fell against Beddington. T. B. Nicholson, an old Madras player of the later nineties who went to South Africa with Lumsden's Horse and got a commission, playing for London County vs. Leicestershire, scored, 1 and 12. This was his first appearance in an important match. Ernest Steel, the old Bombay player, was in great form with the bat in the Gent'eman of England vs. I Zingari match, played on 6th, 7th and 8th June, scoring 11 and 111 for I. Zingari. He captured two wickets for 63 runs. E. L. Sale, the Bombay Presidency player, scored, 0 and 83 not out for Marlborough Blues vs. Hampstead on 4th June.

After three successive wet Saturdays the Bombay Gymkhana were able to play their first match last Saturday, their opponents being the Elphinstone College. Rain unfortunately interfered with the game, but what play there was did not lack in interest. The Gymkhana total was 192, of which two men, A. H. S. Aston and A. P. T. Langhorne contributed the large proportion of 92. No one else on the side got into double figures, but considering that this was the opening match and practice has not been possible owing to rain, I do not attach much importance to the failure of most of the side. Langhorne, whose second season it is, knocked up 61 by free cricket, and when he gets set is a most punishing bat. Aston played nice cricket for his 31, and is a vastly improved bat. He now plays a free, sometimes brilliant game He and Langhorne are without a doubt the best batsmen the Gymkhana have this year. Aston on Monday last, the King's Birthday in a whole-day match between the Civil and United Services, gave further proof of his batting ability by scoring 86 for the Civil, his highest score so far in India. It was not a faultless innings—how many innings ever are?—but all the same deeply impressed those who witnessed it. One of the most pleasing incidents in the recent matches has been the success with the ball of J. L. Ainsworth, the old Marlburian and Lancashire county player. He has a beautifully easy action and can keep on all day without tiring. He bowls with a big break (medium—slow) and varies his pace and length in a way that is most puzzling to the batsman. He ought to be very good by the middle of August and it is of course a foregone conclusion that he will play for the Presidency. A batsman, who is likely to prove a very useful acquisition to the Gymkhana is Lieutenant J A. D. Langhorne, R. A., an elder brother of A. P. J. of that ilk In point of style he is the antithesis of hisbrother, being a very slow bat with stonewalling tendencies Still, on the sticky difficult, rungetting Bombay wickets he should do very wel. Hemade only 7 and 6 but he was in a considerable time on each occasion S. N. Powell and J. S. Milne were in scoring vain on Monday, making 31 and 38 respectively for the Civil. Coombs so far has done very well with the ball, having secured six wickets for 29 runs.

Dharwar cricketers have started the season with a match between the Gymkhana and the local Hindus which after an exciting finish ended in a victory for the Gymkhana by 9 runs, the totals being 122 and 113 respectively. Dharwar has some good cricketers this year, including J. Monteath the Old Cliftonian who played for the Presidency last year, M. C. Gibb, and L. C. Crump, a player who, if he were to practice regularly, would be one of the best in the Presidency. He made top score for his side in this match and took a couple of wickets. D. Bhasker took seven wickets for the Gymkhana, and Samuel for the Hindus only just missed the rare feat of taking all ten wickets, nine batsmen falling to his deliveries. The annual match between Dharwar and Bellary played last Friday and Saturday, showed both districts to be in possession of very strong teams this year. The Dharwar wicket is a matting one so high scoring is usually the order on that ground. Nobody reached a century in the match, but there were four scores of over 50 and six others over 20. The highest score in the match was made by Passannah who knocked up 87 in Bellary's second innings. A. F. Mullings (56 and 0) and Lieutenant C. W. Watney (8 and 45) were also seen to a advantage for Bellary who, however, lost the match by eight wickets. It is worthy of note that Passannah and Watney contributed 132 out of the total of 171 in the second innings. The Dharwar batsmen shaped splendidly in the first innings, seven men reaching double figures. J. Monteath, the old Cliftonian and Presidency player, was the principal contributor with 79, and M. C. Gibb (59), L. C. Crump (38), G. McHarrison (38), D. Bhaskar (34), and C. Sinclair (24), all did well. Crump and Bhaskar bowled well, the former getting five wickets in the second innings and the latter five in the first and three in the second.

Karachi lovers of the game were en fete last Saturday week, the occasion being the first of the two annual meetings between the Gymkhana and the Parsees, a fixture which attracts as much attention in Karachi as the Presidency match does in Bombay. The match was, however, robbed of a good deal of interest by the absence of F. L. Sprott, the Gymkhana's best batsman and wicket keeper. Four Gymkhana batsmen got into double figures—Wilson 29, Merriman 24, Price 12, and Creagh 10,—but the total was only 112. N. J. Mobed, a bowler, who has figured in Karachi cricket for some years with great success, captured five wickets for 20 runs, while S. N. Miniwalla got four for 31 runs. The Parsees compiled 139 for six wickets. N. M. Dinshaw, their crack batsman, contributing 59, while P. D. Dastar got 20, and J. D. Miniwalla 15. I hope Dinshaw's latest effort will be duly noted by the Parsee Selection Committee.

The Royal Welsh Fusiliers have a team that can always be relied upon to run up a big score no matter how strong their opponents may be in bowling. Last Saturday week I notice they totalled 310 against Kailana Depôt, J. D. Venables taking a century (115), while useful scores were made by Lieutenant-Colonel Lyle (45), Captain France-Hayhurst (32), Captain G. Lloyd (25), H. J. Reynolds (18), and Captain H. Hill (16). The Depôt team were not comfortable in facing the deliveries of G. Lloyd and France-Hayhurst who took five and four wickets respectively. Three batsmen, P. D. Saxton 31, M. A. Muir 28, and J. St. O. Darlington 22 not out, were responsible for 81 of the total of 108.

A whole day match was played at Poona on Thursday last which, a glance at the scores will show, was remarkable for individual innings of three figures and weak bowling among other things. The sides were the Indian Army vs. The World, and altogether 493 runs were made for the loss of only seven wickets which gives some idea of the weakness of the bowling. Three batsmen placed centuries to their account, viz., Captain J. G. Greig (105 retired) and B. M. Carroll (101 retired) for the Indian Army and A. D. Wilkins (103) for the World. A. H. C. Kearsey, who made 53 not out for the latter side, would also very probably have taken a century had play lasted another hour. S. Langton of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders made his debut in this match but had no opportunity of batting. He, however, did as well as anyone else on his side with the ball. Greig, Carroll and Wilkins are all in great form with the bat, and should make plenty of runs in the more important matches this season. The two first-named should give the Parsee bowlers a lot of trouble in the Presidency matches. Wilkins' success was very gratifying to himself and his friends. The old Bedfordshire County Cricketer is the oldest player in the Presidency and made a memorable score of over 200 for North of the Presidency vs. South of the Presidency eighteen years ago.

Dhulia was the scene of an interesting match last week between teams representing the Station and Bhusaval and Manmad the latter team having been got together by A. Dangerfield The visitors were out-classed at all points and H. Pogson, an old Presidency player, made 104 not out for the Station. T. Maitland Kirwan, who played for Poona Gymkhana last season, D. Kotwal, G. A. White, and R. E. A. Elliott, all made double figure scores for the Station, whose innings was declared on the fall of the third wicket with the total 216. C. S. Campbell (15 not out), Howard (20) and Otto (35) were responsible for 70 of the total of 91 in the visitors' first innings, six men falling to score. In the follow-on C. S. Campbell made 34 not out out of the total of 54. Four batsmen made a single apiece while three failed to score, two of whom obtained spectacles in the match. The best work with the ball for the Station was done by Joshi, who captured seven wickets, Kulkami who took five wickets and Pogson who took four. H. Pogson was given a trial in the Presidency test match last year at Bombay, but had no luck and did not get a place in the eleven, though he represented the Presidency in 1899. He is said to be showing very fine form with the bat this year a fact which I hope will not escape the Cricket Committee of the Bombay Gymkhana with whom lies the selection of the team of the Bombay match.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

KING'S OWN vs. DALHOUSIE.—These teams met on the soldiers' ground last Saturday when a well-contested game was witnessed by a large crowd. A lucky goal to the King's Own gave them the victory. They began the attack and Carman came very near scoring. Dalhousie then had a turn and several shots were sent in but all failed to find the net and the game settled down very fast and even, neither side having gained any material advantage at the arrival of the interval. On changing ends the Dalhousie men rushed away and obtained three corners, play near the King's Own goal being very exciting. They were unable to score, however, and the military took the ball to the visitors' end where the Dalhousie custodian was kept busy. In trying to save a low shot Street fell and, throwing the ball over his head it was put into the net. The Dalhousie men made great efforts to equalise but in vain, and the match ended in a win for the King's Own by a goal to nil Teams:—

KING'S OWN.—Sinker, goal; Mellor and Cotham, backs; Ennis, Standish and Leonard, half-backs; Quin, Carman, Ashworth, Diggle and Mitchell, forwards.

DALHOUSIE.—Street, goal; Templeton and Stimson, backs; Phelps, Butler and Dalling, half-backs; Prike, Bonar, Evans, Stewart and Campbell, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. J. Greig.

RANGERS vs. WEST RIDINGS.—Played on the Rangers, ground last Saturday, the home team being victorious by two goals to one. The Dum Dum team went away at the start and Woodings and Laughlin put in a couple of shots. The Rangers then attacked but Roberts kept the ball out and from a scrimmage in front of the home goal Drew found the net On resuming after the interval the Rangers ran right away from the soldiers and Rosser equalised. Continuing to press Pollock shot and the ball being only partialy cleared Rosser had no difficulty in getting possession and scoring a second goal. The remainder of the game was very even. Teams:—

RANGERS.—Behrend goal Margrett and Anersderson, backs; Boilard, Lees, and Mulholland, half-backs; Vears, Maclay, Rosser McCready and Pollock, forwards.

WEST RIDINGS.—Roberts goal; Evans and Holcombe, backs; Reeves, Turner and Morris, half-backs; Hulyer, Drew, Wilson, Laughlin and Woodings, forwards.

Y. M. C. A. vs. HOWRAH. A pointless draw was the result of this match played on the Y. M. C. A. ground last Saturday. The visitors had the best of the play but failed to score owing to wild shooting Teams.—

HOWRAH.—Powell, goal; Curtis and Annett, backs; O'Neil, Morrow and Hart, half-backs; Smith, Echlin, Jackson, Burns and Kerr, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Kay, goal; Stokes and Glover, backs; Collingwood Pooler and Schaumberg, half-backs; Mitchell, Mason, Redmond, Vanspal and Vears, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. McPhee.

WEST RIDINGS vs. HOWRAH.—This match was played on the Rangers' ground on the 5th instant and closed the League engagements of these two teams. It was a very even game, but the soldiers eventually won by two goals to nil. The West Ridings went down and obtained a corner, which was not improved upon, and play being transferred, Howrah sent in some hard shots, and the Regiment conceded a corner. No advantage accrued and after a spell of even play, Woodings got away and opened the scoring. After the interval Howrah played hard, but missed opportunities owing to wild shooting. Then the West Ridings once more scored, Drew putting through from a centre by Woodings. Howrah played hard but were unable to score, the game ending as stated. Teams:—

WEST RIDINGS.—Roberts, goal; Evans and T. Reeves, backs; A. Reeves, Turner, and Morris, half-backs; Woodings, Kelly, Wilson, Drew and Hulyer, forwards.

HOWRAH.—Powell, goal; Curtis and Annett, backs; Hart, Morrow and O'Neil, half-backs; Echlin, Burns, Jackson, Smith and Kerr, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. P. C. Margrett.

CIVIL AND MILITARY LEAGUE.

CALADONIA A. C. vs. SIBPUR COLLEGE.—The teams met on the Dalhousie ground for their return match on Saturday when the College won by one goal after a hard game. At the start Fox and Street went away at great pace and pressed the Caledonians hard, but the defence was sound and gradually relieved the goal. A miskick from the goal was taken advantage of by Street and the only point in the match was scored by Street, towards the end of the game.

CALEDONIA A. C. vs. 79TH R. G. A.—On Monday, the 79th R. G. A, piled on six goals in their League match with the Caledonians. The Hastings ground was very heavy and the visitors had a very weak team out.

Watts, who was in good form, scored twice in the first half and twice in the second, and Fleming scored twice towards the end of the match. This heavy defeat was disheartening to the Caledonians who have done well all through the season and actually think of competing in the I. F. A. tournament.

FOOTBALL IN CALCUTTA.

OLD WORLD vs. OFFICERS OF THE FORT.—This game was played on the Calcutta ground on the 1st instant, and though the officers won by three goals to love, the Old World gave them a good game. The latter team was composed of players who were shining lights on the footer field in by-gone years, and included such players as Winckworth, Hechle, Newton and Watson. Play ruled very even throughout, and the Old World had hard luck in not scoring. Le Fleming (2) and Captain Gardner (1) put on the goals for the winners.

FOOTBALL NOTES.

AS expected, the return meeting of Calcutta and the West Ridings provided a most exciting game. Calcutta came out winners by three goals to one but they had to fight hard to secure their two points as the soldiers played for all they were worth right up to the call of time, and did not appear to be at all disheartened at having three goals against them. The Ridings' forwards were in great form and as they did not waste time in short passing, but shot whenever they got the chance, and shot well too, the civilian defence was severely tried. The halves frequently. The Calcutta team played an excellent game though Macdonald was slow at taking chances, and the younger Sherman missed one or two openings, Cooper giving the best exhibition of centre-forward play seen this season and scoring all three goals. Maunder in the half-line also came out strong supported their forward line well, but the backs, especially in the second half, played rather wildly, and Roberts in goal had more work than he has had in any other match this season. He put in some excellent play, but was inclined to run out rather too and played sound football from start to finish, but when all performed so well it would be unfair to too highly commend individuals.

Dalhousie had the best of their match against the Y. M. C. A., but although they had their full team out, with the exception of Stimson, they only managed to win by one goal, for which Steward was responsible. The Y. M. defence was excellent, but Dalhousie had no difficulty in checkmating their forwards, and Street in goal was seldom troubled.

The King's Own won their match against Dalhousie on Saturday through an unlucky fall of Street's. He had been in excellent form throughout the match and had cleared several dangerous shots, but towards the end of the second half after stopping a shot he slipped backwards and the ball rolled into the net. Although Dalhousie had on the whole the best of the game, the King's Own thus won by one goal to nil, and brought their goal average to the same level as that of Calcutta.

The West Ridings played a good game against the Rangers, but as in their match against Calcutta their backs seemed off colour, and Rosser got through twice owing to their miskicking. In the first half the men from Dum-Dum had rather the best of matters and scored one goal, but in the second half the home team asserted their superiority, and the match eventually ended in their favour by two goals to one. The ground and ball were very slippery, so that accurate shooting and passing were difficult, but both lines of forwards acquitted themselves creditably and the goalkeepers on both sides were called upon to save on several occasions. This match disposed of the West Ridings chances of annexing the Locke Cup, but although they have now the same number of points as the Rangers they are likely to retain the third place. The final struggle is between The King's Own and Calcutta and, as stated last week, the probabilities are in favour of the former team winning on goal average—a close finish?

Appended is the League state up to Saturday last :—

A record number of entries has been received for "The Trades' Cup," which now seems to be the most popular junior football competition in India. The Honorary Secretary has his work cut out to satisfy twenty-eight teams and before the finals are reached he will no doubt wish the entries had been fewer. The competition is supposed to commence on the 6th and finish on the 23rd instant; but the executive will be extremely lucky if it is brought to a successful issue within this time. It is useless speculating on the probable winners at this early stage, but there are several games which should be worth watching, notably those between St. Joseph's and the Nationals, St. James' and the Medicos, and Gaurungdi and Asansol.

Owing to the sad death of Mr. H. R. Todd, the Calcutta-Rangers match has, by mutual agreement between the two clubs and with the consent of the League Secretary, been postponed till early next week. Though Todd had not played much this season, those who remember the struggle for the I. F. A. Shield last July are not likely to forget the splendid display he made as right back for Calcutta. Todd always "played the game," and the Calcutta Club has lost not only one of the best footballers who ever played for them, but a real good sportsmen.

THE COLOMBO MEDAL.—This competition on Friday and Saturday last, the final one of the season, proved a regular farce, only four cards been sent in and a nett score of 88 by Mr. B. Sinclair being sufficient to win the prize. Why this was so it is difficult to say for though the weather was persistently showers and the putting greens anything but easy to putt on there way really no reason why the scoring should be so much worse than usual, and the numbers of returns so scanty. THE ORMISTON SILVER CHALLENGE CLUB.—The close of the season also brings with it the close of the competitions for the Ormiston Silver Challenge Club, for the eight lowest nine hole rounds for the year in Club Competitions and for the Cashmere Cup, which goes to the player who returns the lowest scratch score for nine holes in a Club Competition, during the year. The scoring for both was decidedly good, and there was a great struggle between Messrs. Sinclair and Dick for the former trophy, which is always a much coveted one Mr. Sinclair fully, deserved his success which has been very marked of late on the maidan, and Mr. Cuthbert, the Honorary Secretary of the Club, is also to be congratulated on winning the Cashmere Cup, which usually falls to one of of the scratch players, the following are the best scores put in for both events.

IV.—ORTHOPTERA. With the exception of earwigs, whose wings are differently folded, and which are otherwise anomalous, the members of this order are easily recognised by their wings alone. If we examine a large cockroach or a large grasshopper in its perfect state, the inner pair of wings appear folded lengthwise, like a fan ; and that, with the eating mouth and the imperfect metamorphosis, constitutes the mark of the order. Most of the genera can be kept and reared as easily as caterpillars, and their ways even those of cockroaches, are most interesting. In intelligence they surpass any other order except the hymenoptera.

To pass to the separate families, locusts differ from grasshoppers in possessing the power of sustained flight, and in travelling in swarms. The name is wrongly applied, in both England and America to several insects which are neither locusts nor grasshoppers. Grasshoppers differ from crickets in five particulars ; they are active by day ; they have very short antennæ ; they are silent ; they live in the open air ; and their wings slope downward on the sides of their bodies Crickets are active by night ; they have antennæ from one inch to four inches long ; the males chirrup or sing by the hour, the great field crickets very loudly ; they live in burrows or crevices ; and their wings lie flat on their backs. There are only a few common kinds ; but there are uncommon kinds with marked peculiarities. Grasshoppers, on the other hand, are in great variety, and some species are strikingly beautiful Grasshoppers mostly live on grass, and in exceptional cases damage plants ; but crickets, with their stronger teeth and savage disposition, are very destructive, whether in the house or out-of-doors The Chinese keep field crickets in little cages, and set them to fight Molecrickets—so ruinous to the roots of plants—have no legs for jumping, and their forelegs are shaped into powerful diggers. They are not as bulky as field-crickets, but are considerably longer. Nobody could tell them to be crickets, and if shape goes for anything, they are not crickets : but they can be seen at once to be orthoptera.

There is a family of carnivorous insects of this order, usually green or brown, which are neither grasshoppers nor crickets : they are active by night ; they have long antennæ ; they make a loud scraping noise, some kinds incessantly, and others in three syllables often repeated ; they live in the open ; their wings are held like those of grasshoppers The best known species is a green insect which comes into the house in the evening and rasps away energetically. People call it a grasshopper, but it will be found to answer the description I have given. There is an immense brown species in Assam, which looks like a bat, and makes a triple sound that can be heard nearly half a mile off. The "katy-did" of North America is one of this family. They do not live on grass or leaves ; they eat juicy vegetables or fruit, but prefer insects. The Japanese keep them in neat bamboo cages, for the sake of their "song" Some years ago I saw several of a small brown species in a house in the Monghyr district, among some papers, which had made little shelters for themselves by turning over pieces of paper and fastening the edges together with some glutinous secretion. The work was more difficult than anything a mason wasp does, and was neatly done. I do not know that this practice of these grasshopper crickets has been observed in another case The females of all these insects—locusts, grasshoppers and crickets—have an instrument of some kind at the end of the abdomen, called an ovipositor, by means of which they put their eggs under the soil, in crevices of trees and plants, or in some other suitable place of safety.

If we set aside the intelligence of bees, wasps, ants and spiders, mantises (or mantides) are the most interesting of all insects and arachnids. They are those insects, varying from half an inch to six inches in length, and of any colour, but usually green, brown, or grey which stand and walk on four legs, using the third, front, pair to seize their food or feel their way. Their very name, mantis, a soothsayer, was given to them because of their quaint way of holding their spiked forepaws either in an attitude of prayer or to point this way and that, their curious heads, with two observant eyes, meanwhile turning to every point of the compass. The mantis is the only insect which can be called tame in the sense that a bird or a beast is tame : for it will allow itself to be taken up, and in a few moments will stand on the hand or the table, and with its paws take food from the fingers and eat it, looking about all the while like a parrot. But a quiet species must be chosen : some are so swift and nervous that they cannot be tamed any more than a fly. The species are innumerable, some of grotesque shapes and some in perfect imitation of leaves, twigs, knotted grass, or pieces of bamboo, green or dry. These are known as walking leaves and walking sticks. Some kinds stay on the bark of trees, and run round the trunk as swiftly as cockroaches, which they resemble in their flat forms There are two main divisions of these insects ; one which are predatory, seizing things suddenly with their forepaws or claws, and another which are Phytophagus or in the King's English, feeders on plants and leaves. The latter are soft, slow, weak, and helpless creatures, looking like thin twigs ; but they grow to a greater length than those which capture prey : I have taken one that was nine inches long, and I have seen one in a collection from Assam or the Malay Peninsula which measured a foot in length In the first of these papers I have described a fight between one of the predacious species and a minute shrew. I had another, which, not getting all the insects it wanted, ate a large quantity of a sour mango, sickened soon afterwards, and died next day. Mantises lay their eggs in a mass, mixed with a substance which cakes or crusts and forms a protection to the eggs. This dried mass, which takes many shapes and colors, is often found adhering to a twig or a stem of grass, and after a few days about a hundred tiny mantises make their way out of it and enter life on their own account, eating and being eaten.

Cockroaches are of many kinds, some living indoors and some out-of-doors. Offensive as the common kinds are, it will repay anyone interested in natural history to keep several species in cages, giving them room and fresh air and food, and a dark corner, and watching them grow and change their skins till they reach maturity and lay their eggs. The egg-cases of one species are constantly found in the house—little reddish brown capsules, like small seed-pods. And there is a shining, black parasite fly (hymenopterous : genus evania) about twice the size of a table fly, with a huge thorax and a preposterously small hinder part which lays its eggs in these cases and leaves its larvæ to feed on the contents. Obviously that is a fly to be encouraged. Some field cockroaches fly into the house, to the lamp, in the evening, and are variously taken for moths, bugs and beetles, because of their unusual appearance ; but a slight examination will reveal the marks of the orthoptera. A species is described as common in Brazil which is really formidable, half as large again as our great brown flying kind : it eats off the eye-lashes of children who sleep soundly, and also the toe-nails and finger-nails. The Brazilians have also a gigantic spider which they encourage to live with them because it has both the will and the strength to hunt these cockroaches. The "black beetles" of England are cockroaches, and are not black. The mark of an earwig is the "pincers" which take the place of a tail. One Indian species, which I found in the thatch of a native boat, is so much larger than the common kinds, and so fleshy, that a novice might hesitate to recognise it but for this mark.

V.—HYMENOPTERA. These are so-called because their forewings consist of a transparent membrane with just enough nerves or veins through them to serve as a frame. They eat with masticating mouths, and their pupæ are motionless chrysalises. They almost all sting, or bite, or do both. The exceptions, when recognized, though looking for all the world like wasps, may be taken in the hand with impunity. Some ants, as the common black ant, merely nip with their jaws : others, as the dreaded red ant, inject venom into the wound they make. This order—bees, wasps and ants—is the wonder of the insect world. I must pass over the subject, and refer readers to books and cyclopædias where they may satiate themselves with detailed and illustrated descriptions of the thousand and one ways in which these insects make their living and provide for their young, some kinds singly and others in organized communities. Bees—honey bees of several kinds, humble bees, and solitary bees, among which are mason bees, which from their habits might be classed with wasps, and parasite bees. One of the commonest of the last in India is of a bright metallic green colour, with a patch of red where its tail should be. It is in several sizes, and one may be seen following and watching a mason wasp as it packs spiders or caterpillars into the mud house it has built for its young. As soon as the wasp flies off for another insect the bee lays an egg, in the nest. This egg is hatched before the wasp's egg, and the larvæ feeds on the store and doubtless eats up the young wasp also. The genus is called tubulifera and "ruby-tails," and though bee-shaped to the common eye, is no nearer bees than wasps to the naturalist. For some reason the insect's abdomen is armed with five chisel-like edges. With reference to humble bees, it is well known that in England large numbers of their nests are destroyed by fieldmice, which eat the comb. Can we doubt that only investigators are required to discover that the same kind of thing goes on in India on a larger scale ? Wasps—honey wasps, mason wasps, robber wasps, burrowing wasps, parasitic wasps, and predatory wasps, or "ichneumon flies," so called because they track their prey. How many sorts and sizes and colours of them there are ! What sorts of houses they do build ! And in how many ways they lay up food for their young—some not "laying up" anything, but laying their eggs in the bodies of living caterpillars ! In such a case the larvæ come out before the caterpillar whose inside they have consumed is quite dead, and turn into little cocoons on its outside ; or else the caterpillar turns prematurely into a chrysalis of unnatural shape, and the wasp, of which there may be only one, comes out instead of the intended moth or butterfly. There is a large, grey, hairy caterpillar, which feeds on the jamoon and tamarind trees, and turns into a handsome brown and white moth. This caterpillar is beset by a certain ichneumon fly, and dozens of its chrysalises, round and half-sized, are sometimes to be found on the trunks of those trees, all bound to become wasps. There is endless interest in watching wasps building their paper nests or their houses of mud or leaves, sometimes on a door or a wall, sometimes on a tree and sometimes in a hole, and finding insects to stock them with surprising energy and success In the hot weather, when water is scarce, one has only to go to any place where there is soft mud to see a dozen wasps making up little balls and flying off with them. Some kind, especially a black "bee" with a white patch on his tail, put on outer coating of white or red or black on their nests, and know where to find clay of those colours. I have seen the darkening of a room cause a mason bee that was building in it to change the coating on its house. After some days, if the nest be broken up or the comb torn open, the larvæ or pupæ will be found in separate cells inside ; and the state of the larder may also be observed. Sometimes a large wasp is seen dragging a large cockroach or cricket it has found and stung across the ground to a hole where it intends its young to be brought up. Ants—of many kinds and sizes : some eating only grain and sweets, some only insects and sweets, and some anything whatever. Sir John Lubbock, now Lord Avebury, has taught the world how to study ants in their threefold division—like honey bees—of drones, queens and workers ; otherwise, males, females and neuters. As I have spoken of sorting the multitude of insects that swarm round the lamp on monsoon evenings, I ought to mention a number of winged ants of different kinds (not the "flying ants," which belong to the next order) that appear among them These are the males and females of various sorts of ants which we commonly see in the neuter, or undeveloped and wingless, form. Ants are hymenoptera because their males and females are all winged, although the mass of workers are not. Another thing to be mentioned is that at the beginning of the rains we see a whole population of some kind of ant migrating to a drier spot, and each carrying a little white thing in its mouth Those white things, nearly as large as the ants, are absurdly called eggs : they are really chrysalises. Why only one or two species of ants thus transport their pupæ, has not, I believe been yet discovered. The saw flies, or wood-borers, (terebrantia), which with their larva, live in plants or wood, like carpenter beetles, belong to this class. Another genus of hymenoptera, which will be found in books under the name proctotrupes, has the extraordinary faculty and habit of swimming under water for hours at a time It does not swim like a water beetle or water bug, but with its wings, like a water-ouzel. This discovery was made many years ago in Europe ; and it suggests what discoveries are possible in the far wider field of India.

VI.—NEUROPTERA. This word means "nerve-winged ;" but "lace-winged," or "net-winged," would better describe the order ; for the hymenoptera and diptera have nerves in their wings, but the wings of this order are simply a net work of fine nerves. The difference may be seen in a moment by comparing a wasp's wing with the wing of a dragon fly. The order, as Zinnæus fixed it, is discarded by modern entomologists, who nevertheless are hopelessly at variance what to do with it. The principal difficulty arises from the fact that whereas dragon flies and may flies have active pupæ, the pupæ of caddisflies and ant lions are inactive. Even the device of calling half the families pseudo-neuroptera does not dispose of the strange family of termites For all this, to the common man or woman who simply wants to place an insect where he will find it again, the chewing mouth and reticulated wing make a sure and satisfactory sign.

Coming to the families, dragon flies are familiar to everybody, with their great eyes and gaping jaws, as they sail about rapidly at a height of twenty feet in the air, hawking gnats, midges and flies, or else rest on the end of a twig. They are of several sizes and many colours. Their larvæ live in water, where they carry on similar devastation, till the time comes for them to change into pupæ, and after a turn at that they crawl up the stem of a water plant and take up a position. Before long the skin bursts, and the dragon fly comes forth and takes to the air. There is a family of common insects like dragon flies ; only their bodies are slender, they hold their wings closed behind them, they do not often rise more than three or four feet from the ground, and they prefer perching to being on the wing. Ant lion flies are like these flies just mentioned ; but their wings are very long and are folded at their sides, like a moth's. They have large eyes, sharp jaws, and short, knobbed antennæ ; and they fly in a violent, jerky manner. The most common species is found in nearly all parts of India. It is an inch or more in length, and the wings extend beyond the body, like the fly last described, it has a small head and thorax, and a long, slender abdomen. It flies by day. The larva of this species is the common ant lion—so common that had not many intelligent persons assured me that they had never seen or heard of it, I should consider any account of it unnecessary. It, or another of the same genus, is well known in Europe, and in India its funnel-shaped pits, one inch wide and deep, are found in almost any place when there is fine sand If a small ant or other insect fall in, or be thrown in, the lion, concealed at the bottom, jerks up sand, to prevent it from scrambling out, and then drags it under and devours it. This larva,—looking like a small grey spider—may be dug out with the finger. There is a large species of the fly, six times the size of this one, which flies at night, and has dark spots on its wings. It is common in Bombay and down the Malabar coast, and in parts of the Deccan. Its larva has not been certainly identified in India, but is believed to live in holes and burrows and to prowl about in search of prey. Anyone seeing the larva, may take it for a spider the size of a large bee; but if it have six legs it is probably this insect. There is an allied family of flies with long, knobbed antennæ, and a rougher, hairy appearance. I have found one in Lucknow, in size midway between the two species just described.

The hairy-winged caddis fly, despite its moth-like appearance, bears the unmistakable marks of this order. It is very well-known in England, and a full description of it can be found in books. There are more species than one in India, and their larva have the same habit of living in cases made by themselves under water. The mantispidæ and mantispa, or "mantis flies," are a curious family and genus of small and not uncommon insects which look for all the world like minute mantises till an examination of their wings shows them to be neuroptera. I have found one species, straw coloured, not half an inch long, and as fine as a hair, occasionally in Calcutta and commonly in Lucknow. They have a mantis's clawed arms, with which they catch microscopic prey, but they do not turn about their heads as mantises do. As in the case of all neuroptera, the larvæ are quite unlike the perfect insect: they made their way into the egg-sacs in spider's webs, and feed on the eggs. The mearmorphosis is complete.

By their wings and mouths the termites, or so-called "white ant," belong to this order. But they alone, outside of the hymenoptera, have the social organisation of bees and ants, with queen, drones and neuters, and a fourth class, soldiers, which guard the entrances of the ant-hills, and, with their long sharp jaws, draw blood from a finger inserted in the hole, or cut in two an intruding insect. The workers and soldiers, being immature, are wingless. There has been no Indian Lubbock to study their ways, which still remain a puzzle. Thus much is known, that the so-called "flying ants," which appear in swarms at the beginning of the monsoon, and in a short time drop their wings, are the males and females of a new generation setting out to seek a home and found a colony. The queen, at any time in the rains, can be dug out of an ant-hill, and is found to be a helpless, grub-like creature distended with eggs, to the size of one's little finger. There are at least two species of termites in India, a large and a small species, and the difference of size appears both, in the "white ants" and in the 'flying ants."

VII.—DIPTERA. Every two-winged insect belongs to this order, mosquito, gnat, midge, house fly, blue bottle, gadfly, "sheeptick', crane fly, or the English "daddy long legs," and innumerable others; and every one sucks its food: they have neither lips, nor jaws, nor teeth. The variety seems endless: some are of fairy loveliness, some sparkle like gems, others are richly painted, and others, again, are dull and ordinary. Some live on plant juices some on sweets, some on filth and putrid substances, some on the blood of man and animals: a few are savage and overpower other insects before sucking the juice out of them. The jungles of most Indian hills are infested with biting flies—of kinds which bite without inflaming like mosquitoes. But there is, in the Eastern Himalayas and the hills about Assam, a monster, one inch in length, which drives its stiletto into man and beast, causing blood to trickle from the wound. Then there is the not less formidable "bee killer,' or "robber fly' (asilus), which pounces upon moths, hornets, and even tiger beetles, impaling them with its rostrum and sucking their juices. The ravages of the innocent-looking bot fly among flocks of sheep are well-known; and the tse tse scourge of Africa is also one of the two-winged order.

Many species lay their eggs in water; others in all sorts of substances, fresh and corrupt; other in the nests of hymenoptera like so many of the hymenoptera themselves; others on the skin of large animals; and others in still more unlikely places All the species have the wings (only two) of hymenoptera, and not the network wings of neuroptera. Their metamorphosis is complete. If we could force ourselves to keep a maggot and feed it and be good to it, we should see it turn into a motionless chrysalis like a dark red seed, out of which a fly would soon make its appearance, and show its gratitude by sitting on the point of our nose and refusing to leave us.

Such are the seven orders into one or another of which any insect that comes before us may be placed with certainty after a glance at its wings and its mouth. One in a thousand is so aberrant or anomalous that it makes an interesting puzzle; but the other nine hundred and ninety-nine are sure.

A NATURALIST IN THE N.-W. HIMALAYAS.

PART II.

IN January and February there is but little to be done amongst the Rodents which inhabit the higher hills—but at about 5,000 feet and below that elevation a good many rats and mice can be collected.

The common mouse of the Jhelum valley must, for the present, be called Mus bactrianus. This mouse, in its winter coat, is brown or rather rufous brown on the back and sides, the coloring is fairly uniform throughout, but the sides are inclined to be slightly more tinged with red than is the back: underneath the coloring becomes fainter and gradually merges into grey, in some specimens to nearly white The tail is dark above and light below. The whiskers are fine, and dark in coloring.

Measurements. ♀ B & H 3·06" tail 2·60" h. foot 0·50" ear 0·10"
♀ " 3·10" " 2·50" " 0·65" " 0·50"
♂ " 3·20" " 2·40" " 0·60" " 0·50"
An exceptionally large ♀ was B & H 3·80" tail 2·90"

To compare Mus bactrianus with the Mus from the higher ground is interesting.

Description. The specimens were obtained in September in Ladak. We find the coloring on the back not so uniform as in bactrianus, this is not to be wondered at owing to there having been procured before the winter had really commenced. The color, however, is much lighter, there is not nearly so distinct a rufous tinge. Whiskers very long and white.

Measurements. ♂ B & H 3·51" tail 3·15" h. foot 0·81" ear 0·62"
♀ " 3·25" " 3·01" " 0·82" " 0·61"

The great length of the hind foot at once strikes one—and the longer tail is also a marked difference; amongst all my specimens of bactrianus only one has a tail of 3 inches.

If successful in obtaining a large series of the house mouse from Ladak, the experts at home will be able to work them out, but it is far from easy to get specimens from the distant villages of north-east Ladak during the winter, and I am afraid some time must elapse before the mice will be properly classified.

Up A more popular subject than small mammals is that of the geese and ducks. There is, however, but little new to be said. The barred-headed Goose Anser Indicus breeds in Ladak, I have also found the Brahminy or Ruddy Sheldrake eggs in Changchenmo and towards the eastward of that valley.

The Smew (Mergus albellus) followed by young was observed on the Shyok and in the Nubra valley in July. The eggs of the common teal in my collection are labelled Iceland, 12th June. The Redcrested Pochard eggs, Holland, 14th May, those of the Scaup came from Iceland, the tufted ducks' eggs are from Sweden, the Mallard's from Kashmir where this duck occasionally stays to breed, the White-eyed Pochards' eggs from the same locality. Once or twice I have flushed the Pintail and the Gadwall in July but could not find the eggs, nor have I ever succeeded in obtaining either the young or eggs of the common teal in any of the lakes of Kashmir, Ladak or Western Tibet. The lesser White fronted Goose (Anser erythropus) is a very rare visitor to the North-West Himalayas, but Anser albifrons is far from uncommon in winter. The Mute Swan (Cygnus olor) were seen in one or two places during February, and appear to be more frequent visitors than formerly.

Of other birds, Ruticilla erythronata (Eversman's redstart) and Cyanecula suecica (The Indian Blue-throat) were found at about 5,000 feet in February.

TRAVEL IN CHIN LAND.

REALITY AND A VISION.

IT is a pelting day towards the end of June. The rain descends in sheets, a persistent chilling downpour that is only experienced in the hills. An equestrian splashes wearily through the red brick mud, picking his way gingerly over the rough-cut track. He is drenched to the skin and the very marrow in his bones has frozen.

"Splish splosh"—"Splish, splosh' treads his equally drenched steed through the running rivulets of semi-liquid mire, as it turns its head from the driving blast To go out of an exasperating crawl is impossible The path, formed of hard red clay, is as slippery as a sheet of ice and trends everlastingly up or down. The traveller dismounts to stretch his cramped limbs, and trudges despairingly onwards in the vain hope of restoring the circulation to his numbed legs. A mile of plodding through the endless sludge is enough; he pulls up to mount once more his faithful nag, but finds that a colony of leeches has attached itself to his calves and shins As he stands there endeavouring to disengage these lusty blood-suckers from his person, he perceives the whole road is one moving mass of them all converging with slow but persistent arch-like strides on one object—himself Hastily the vagrant throws his leg over the saddle and hurriedly quits the pestilential spot. Anon a collection of a few corrugated iron roofs heaves in sight. Shelter and warmth at last muses the nomad. Ha!—he little recks of the difficulty of obtaining that latter comfort. But here we are at length before the noble portals of Bamboozleum Camp. The wayfarer at once alights, a piteous object forsooth Runnels of water trickle off his coat-cuffs; his breeches have soaked up the moisture like a sop and cling in unseemly folds about his shivering thighs. At every step jets of muddy liquid squirt out from the eye-let holes off his boots. He enters the rest-house in search of the warmth of which he stands so badly in need. A two-roomed tenement it is, divided by a wooden partition He gazes around the apartment in despair. In the left hand corner rests a charcoal stove, with a capacity of somewhat less than half a cubic foot. Along the further wall stretches a lob-sided bed. An almirah and some shelves occupy another wall, a three-foot square table blocks up the centre. One regulation pattern wooden chair smirks smugly at the intruder, and a couple of its canvassed backed brothers groan imploringly from pegs in two opposite corners where they have been placed through lack of space on the floor, for be it remembered this cell tapes the magnificent proportions of twelve feet by twelve. "A charcoal stove in a kennel like this, if lighted, is courting asphyxiation," soliliquizes the new arrival.

Warmth at all risks, though,—anything for warmth. Outside the wind howls and shrieks dismally, dashing the huge raindrops with unabated fury against the grime-besmeared window panes. Currents of air permeate the chamber, but to localize their inlet is impossible, for the doors are without exception warped. Shelter indeed—but warmth?

'Here, lugale—a whisky and hot water sharp and durwan light that stove."

"So the bungalow is going to be improved is it, but sanction not yet received" queries the itinerant.

'Huzoor—so they say."

"M—yes. Not the first time of asking

How drowsy I feel. Can it be the potent fumes of the potato juice and water that has brought on this sudden lassitude. I can't possibly reason now. Everything seems so peaceful, and why shouldn't I sleep! Anon my head sinks on my arms and I am in the land of dreams. Dreams did I say? No mortal under the influence of natural sleep could ever have seen those visions. Yes, visions—call them visions. On they come one after another. Will they never stop? Hustling and jostling one another these vague shadowy phantasies race kaleidoscopically past. My brain reels with dizziness. Images half form themselves, but are swept off in the general vortex of ruin. Will these spectral fancies never cease to whirl? Crash—Ah! at last those eddying imageries have vanished, and in their stead I see things clearly limned.

But where am I? Such a building I have never seem the like of before. I find myself in a spacious room. The walls are made of some bright greyish metal. Is it aluminium? No, it is much too hard for that extract of clay. What a comfortable apartment. All the furniture, too, composed of the same material. Tables, chairs, in plenty there are, and snugly ensconced in one corner is a perfect bed-stead which invites the weary voyageur to lay himself down and sleep. But no sleep for me now, I must examine this strange lodgment and its equally strange contents.

Good,—what's the meaning of this apparition? Hermetically sealed in a glass case stands the grinning skeleton of a human being. At its feet reposes a portion of an ancient and well-thumbed book, and at its side rests a rusted old stove. The sight of this corroded article seems to drag up from the long vista of by-gone scenes a faint wave of recollection, but it has passed in an instant and I turn to scrutinize another stove of evidently quite modern manufacture. What a genial warmth it diffuses, but how is the heat generated! I open the shutter, but am dazzled by a minute ball of metal glowing at a white heat. No odour and no fumes are discernible. Its identity is a mystery. However it radiates a generous heat that is extremely acceptable. How the rain descends outside. Torrents and sheets beat up against the windows. Ah, that curious sensation is again creeping over my person. The scene appears familiar, but yet it is buried in the depths of semi-oblivion and cannot be definitely recalled. But what is that humming, rushing swishing noise without? What is that gigantic, shadowy form, looming out of the maze of watery vapours! I am out in the verandah in a second.

Shades of my ancestors—an aërocraft. There—emblazoned on its glistening brow in letters of crimson is its name

THE CALEDONIAN CLOUD-SCRAPER.

But it arrives on a perfectly peaceful mission. All is bustle aboard and soon the monster disgorges a part of its human freight. A flunkey of dusky hue bows obsequiously and ushers in the visitors to the mansion. What puny little creatures they all seem to be. I stare at them one and all in utter amazement. But the wind flows chill outside, and I would fain be basking in the ardent glow of that mysterious stove. I have barely made myself comfortable when a side door springs open, and escorted by the diminutive lackey enter a Lilliputian dame with a youth and girl at her train. Ah, I muse the very embodiment of a modern Mrs. Grundy. The elderly spinster strolls languidly up to the glass case, raises her lorgnettes and scrutinizes the skeleton with droll amusement.

"Ample—so this is the remains of the ancient Chin, is it!" queries the matron

"I assure you not, Madam: this——" "Ah, but my good man," interrupts her majesty, "in my Bædeker it distinctly states—here, I will read it out to you 'in a portion of the long undisturbed range of mountain, anciently known as the Chin hills, at a spot called Bamboozleum Camp (easily reached by aërocraft in 24 hours from Edinburgh) may be seen the unusual spectacle of a perfect specimen of the now long-extinct Chin.'"

"No doubt, Madam," replied the valet, 'that interesting specimen will be found in another apartment. This particular skeleton was unearthed only this year in an extraordinary novel at the back of this mansion. Its original lived exactly ten centuries ago in the pre-historic year of 1904, and was undoubtedly an Ancient Briton.'

"How very interesting,' from the belua donna.

I hear a faint murmur emanate from the jaws of the skele-"Interesting, indeed: and you mistake me for a Chin do you; if I was 1,000 years younger, I'd waltz off this pedestal and shake those false ivories—no I suppose you call them metals, for the elephant must have been extinct these 500 years—down your grizzly throat. But you wait, I'll have my revenge for your insolence.' "Yes, Madam," continued the guide, "a tale hangs about this thing's decease: there are some as say that he poisoned himself on account of love.

"Love—bah—another relic of those barborous times.

A meaning glance passes between the youthful pair behind.

"All right you saucy puss—a case of sour grapes, I should say," mumbles the skeleton, 'when I was in the land of the living it would have been a sorry sort of man that would have taken two glances at the likes of you." "But I think this piece of innocent looking scrap-iron——.'

"Iron!" interrupts the spinster—"iron, oh yes, I remember now one of the ancient metals"—"Yes, madam, this old stove—they used to burn charcoal in those days. I think was the cause of his death, at least we may judge so from this book of the Waste Paper Department. The custom in those times seemed to be for travellers to enter their names in a book, and most of them are not legible now but one of the lot has passed some remarks which are wonderfully well preserved considering the age."

"The present little art gems should be relegated to their proper place, the [illegible] museum, before they suffer damage at the hands of some chilly and exasperated wayfarer, an act of vandalism that would be greatly deplored.'

"Yes—I expect you were an ugly old thing in your time,' was the parting shot as the beldame turns to leave

But the cabinet at that instant is violently tipped forward, the doors fly open and the skeleton parts at the hips The upper portion is jerked forward and next moment the ancient spinster is encradled in the circle of rits, the head flops over her shoulder, is held by a wire, and the gleaming jaws grin revengefully within kissing distance of the rapidly-purpling face.

Shrieks rend the air—shouts resound in my ears—I am violently shaken by an unseen force.

* * * * *

"In the name of all the saints, lugale, what are you roaring about, and how did I come to be stretched full length on the floor with a cut head?"

"Good heavens, I see it all now—that infernal charcoal stove." "Here—durwan—do you see that stove? Well, drown it smash it to atoms, hurl it down the khud and damn the act of vandalism.

Red-tape, and a hide-bound conservatism, I murmur, as I bathe my bleeding cranium, have been as often as not the cause of the break-up of many a man's constitution

MORVEN.

Rather an interesting question was raised the other day as to the places on the earth's surface which are plagued by the presence of those scourges of the fresh waters of warm countries, known under the various names of alligators, crocodiles, caymans, and gavials Someone lately referred to alligators in Australia, whereon the editor of a well-known evening paper not unnaturally confessed to doubts as to whether there were alligators in Australia, though the other man-eating denizen of the waters, viz., the shark, is in places common enough. It proved that there are any numbers of alligators in the rivers of North Australia. In what are the tropical regions of the great island continent. These long-lived, hideous, and most destructive creatures are found from the Amazon northward to a considerable distance up the Mississippi, where they grow to a great size They are also common in the rivers of the larger West Indian Islands; and, besides being found in every river in Africa, from the Limpopo to the Nile, are denizens of the waters of India, Borneo, Cochin China, and China itself. In prehistoric days they were found in England, and their remains are still discovered from time to time in the mud of Hordle Cliffs on the Solent.

TO MOTORISTS

THE BEST OILS FOR MOTOR CARS.

Wilburine for cylinders .. Rs. 6-8 per gallon Tin. | Valvoline for Bearings, etc. ... Rs. 5-0 per gallon Tin.

Extract from the "Autocar."

LUBRICATING OILS.—[2422]—It may be instructive to your numerous readers to have the experiences of a motor car experimentalist on the behaviour of lubricating oils for motor work. In the first onset I tried various sorts of oils, all of which left deposits of carbon and gumming matter in the cylinders and valves. These deposits are serious drawbacks, not only to the working of the pistons and valves, but also interfere with the proper sparking at the ignition plugs. I then tried the Valvoline Oil Co.'s oils, using "Wilburine" for the cylinders and "Valvoline" for the bearings, etc.; these being quite pure mineral oils, no deposits either of carbon or gumming matter were left. Every time the pistons, etc., have been examined they were quite bright clean and well lubricated. The valves also keep in good condition and require very little regrinding. I have been quite free from sparking troubles since using the above lubricants. Any dust that alights on the working parts is easily wiped off, whereas with other oils dirt stuck fast through gumming.

Very much smaller quantities of these oils ("Wilburine" and "Valvoline") about one-third to one-quarter, are required, which more than balances the extra first cost. The wearing surfaces are besides in a magnificent condition. These advantages —viz., high-class lubrication, freedom from deposit in cylinders, gum in bearings, absence of sparking trouble, are too important to be neglected by any motorist.

There is a tendency to use various greases, instead of oils. Engineers have over and over again proved that greases give much greater frictional losses than oils; with motor car engines and bearings the lubricant that gives the least possible friction is the best.

I have referred to the advantages the motorist gets. I will mention another advantage these oils have to those whom the motorist passes, viz., the absence of the fried-fish-shop smell so often noted. Several persons have been very much struck by the absence of smell; even when the car has been standing for some time with the engines running, no trace of offensive odour has been apparent to the bystanders.

I mention these experiences, having no interest in the Valvoline Oil Co., that others may be benefited and save themselves trouble and their neighbours some annoyance.

PREHISTORIC PORTRAITS.

THE traveller in many parts of Ladak cannot fail to have been struck by the sight on many smooth faces of rock of rude, although life-like, sketches of ibex and other indigenous wild animals incised in the stone. Many of these portraits appear to have been executed very recently—we have seen some in which the grooves in the black stone still showed the white dust produced by the graving tool; but others seem to be of great antiquity, although in a country with the ancient records of Tibet it would be rash to say that any of them date from prehistoric times. Be this as it may, these pictures closely resemble those drawn by the Chukchis and the Eskimo of Arctic America, both of whom have Mongol blood in their veins and are noted for their artistic skill in carving pictures of the indigenous animals of their respective countries on their implements, weapons and ornaments. Possibly, then, the artistic traits of this nature displayed by Eskimo, Chukchis, Ladakis, and the prehistoric hunters of Europe may all be due to a common ancestry.

If this be so, the truthfulness to nature of the pictorial designs of the Ladakis and the Eskimo may be used as an argument in favour of the authenticity and fidelity of those of the prehistoric inhabitants of Europe. In any case, the incised portraits of the wild animals of Ladak, executed by the natives of the country, have a more than ordinary interest; for they are precisely comparable to the representations of the animals of a long past epoch left by our prehistoric ancestors of the polished and the chopped stone ages on the walls of caverns in Europe, or, more commonly, on fragments of mammoth ivory, reindeer antler, or bone found with other debris in these caverns. Nor is this all, for the prehistoric inhabitants of North-Western Europe have been regarded by many authorities as more or less intimately related to the Chukchis of North-Eastern Siberia and that such uncivilised people as the Eskimo and such a comparatively untutored race as the Ladakis are capable of artistic productions of this nature, removes any doubts that may exist as to the capacity of primitive man for similar attainments.

It is almost necessary to make this statement, as ideas appear to be current that the presumed prehistoric drawings are, in some cases at any rate, modern productions. This idea appears to be largely due to certain allegations which have been made with regard to some of the sketches from the celebrated cave of Kesslerloch, in Schaffhausen, Switzerland. These, it is said, were drawn by schoolboys at the time the cavern was first explored. Possibly the assertion may be true in some small degree; but if it be so, it is not of the slightest importance, for it is quite certain that no schoolboys could have drawn with such fidelity to nature such unfamiliar animals as reindeer and bison, while the mammoth, with its hairy coat and long curved tusks, they could not have depicted at all. Again, all the horses of the cave-men are represented with short upright manes and large heads like the wild horses of Central Asia, whereas had they been drawn by modern artists it is quite certain they would have been depicted with the long flowing mane of the domesticated breeds. Moreover, all the cave-sketches and sculptures indicate animals which, from the evidence of their fossilised remains, are definitely known to have existed in Western Europe during the prehistoric epoch. Had they been the work of forgers of a later period, it is quite certain that not only would species like the mammoth have been conspicuous by their absence, but that the portrait gallery would have included animals foreign to Europe at the epoch in question.

Apart, then, from the possibility of the occurrence among them of a few modern forgeries, the portraits of animals found in the caves of Europe may be unhesitatingly accepted as the work of prehistoric men who lived among, and were familiar with the animals they portrayed. And we cannot but marvel at the skill with which they recorded the salient features and distinctive characteristics of the various species thus faithfully, although rudely, depicted.

So far as we are aware, these prehistoric portraits have not made known any species of animal with which science was otherwise unacquainted. They have, however, apart from their antiquarian interest, a very considerable importance to the zoologist. Without these sketches, we could not, for instance, have possibly known, that the prehistoric horse of ancient Europe was a hog-maned and large-headed animal like the new extinct tarpan of the Russian steppes, or the wild Przewalski's pony of the Mongolian deserts. These sketches have also afforded important evidence in favour of the opinion that the onager, or smaller Asiatic wild ass, was an inhabitant of Western Europe in prehistoric times. It may be added that, if we had not the testimony of the frozen carcases from the Siberian tundras, these prehistoric portraits would have afforded the only evidence that the mammoth was furnished with the coat of long and shaggy hair which made it externally so unlike its existing cousin the Indian elephant.

While some animals, such as the reindeer, the horse, and the mammoth, are depicted very frequently in these prehistoric portraits, others, like the great cave-bear, are very seldom shewn, while yet others, like the gigantic Irish deer, so far as we know, do not appear at all among the series. The absence of any contemporary portrait of the species last mentioned is indeed a matter for regret, for its mere bones and antlers are insufficient to enable us to restore with confidence all the details of its external form and appearance. American naturalists have indeed restored this creature with the short tail, large light rump-patch, and uniformly coloured coat of their own wapiti, from which it differs widely in the form of its antlers. From these latter, it is much more probable that the Irish deer was modelled on the lines of the modern fallow deer, and that it had a comparatively long tail and (in summer) a dappled hide. Were a contemporary sketch available, the point would be settled at once. May we venture to hope that such an invaluable art treasure will some day be discovered!

To survey, even very briefly, all the portraits of his contemporary animals left us by prehistoric man would obviously be impossible within the limits of a single article, and we must therefore content ourselves with the mention of a few of the more interesting and important types.

Of the mammoth, in addition to our well-known sketch depicting the monster in a stationary attitude, and showing to perfection the curved form of the huge tusks and the long shaggy coat, there is a second (from the cave of Langerie Basse) displaying the head of one of these elephants in full charge. The curious feature about this sketch is that it seems to represent the trunk fully extended, whereas, as we all knew, the Indian elephant' (unlike its African cousin) when charging has this delicate organ carefully rolled up out of harm's way. The trunks of the Indian and African species, it may be mentioned, differ markedly in structure, that of the former being by far the more delicate organ. Now, from the similarity of their teeth, it is almost certain that the Indian elephant and the mammoth must have had trunks of the same type, and if so, it is scarcely conceivable that these appendages were not carried in the same manner. We thus appear to have grounds for charging the prehistoric artist with inaccuracy in this respect; perhaps, if the indictment be true, he may be excused on account of the difficulty of gaining a true conception of details in the rush of a herd of mammoths! Reindeer, as exemplified by the well-known sketch from Kesslerloch, are depicted with marvellous fidelity to nature; and from the great expansion of the brow and bez tines, coupled with the great length of the beam of the antlers, it may be inferred that the prehistoric race was more near akin to the Novaia Zemlian and North American Barren Ground types than to the Scandinavian form.

Equally characteristic are the shetches of the bison, the two heads on ivory from La Madelaine showing in an unmistakable manner the broad and convex face, the short horns and shaggy mane. Still more noteworthy are the sketches of the entire animal recently described by Messrs. Capitan and Breuil from the cave of Font-de-Gaume, in the Dordogue, in which the characteristic elevation of the withers is shown in a somewhat exaggerated manner. These sketches are especially valuable on account of being coloured. Unfortunately, it does not appear that the sketches in this cave include one of the wild ox or aurochs; if this had been the case, we might have had further testimony that the colour of this species was black. In other caves sketches of the aurochs are far from uncommon, and serve to shew that the artists fully realised the striking difference between that animal and the bison.

Much interest attaches, as already mentioned, to the representations of the prehistoric horses. These, as a rule, indicate a heavy-headed hog-maned animal, which was probably very similar to the tarpan and the Mongolian wild pony, although, judging from its fossil remains, in many cases at any rate, considerably superior to the latter in point of size. In all cases in which the true equus caballus is depicted the characteristic horse type of tail is indicated by the thickness of this appendage, and the ears are often drawn of so small a size as to be quite inconspicuous. There is, however, one very remarkable drawing of a member of the horse family from the Kesserloch cave which has given rise to a considerable amount of discussion. It shows a big-bodied, small-headed animal, with a concave profile, well-developed ears, and a thin rat-like tail. It has been suggested that this sketch indicates a second species of true horse; and several explanations have been suggested to account for the presence of two closely allied species in the same area. There, however, are quite untenable; and the probability is that the sketch depicts one of the races of the smaller species of Asiatic wild ass,—the onager or ghor-khur. Evidence in favour of this view is afforded by the slender ass-like tail, the concave profile of the face, and the large size of the ears, as compared with those of many of the contemporary portraits of the horse. From certain markings on the body, it has, we believe, been suggested that the sketch indicates a striped animal; but the markings are no more pronounced than in the figure of a reindeer from the same cave, and in both cases seem to be the artists' attempts at shading.

Did space permit, we might refer to representations of many other species, but the foregoing is sufficient to indicate the great zoological interest attaching to man's earliest known attempts at animal portraiture.

HENLEY ROYAL REGATTA.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Friday, 8th July 1904.

THE following are the results in the finals of the events at the Henley Regatta, which was most successful. Third Trinity were in great form winning the Visitors' Challenge Cup, the Stewards' Challenge Cup, and the Silver Goblets. Mr. L. F. Scholes, the Canadian sculler, who represents the Don R. C., Toronts, won the Diamond Sculls, beating the previous time record. Details.—

Sporting Notes.

THE heavy rain which fell in Calcutta during the latter end of last week rendered anything, except the slowest of slow work impossible. The Ellenborough, being the least marshy ground was utilized by the majority of trainers and owners, but nothing but trotting and slow cantering work took place. Sunday and Monday, however, dried the place up a bit, and on Tuesday the going was excellent, so much so in fact that considerable surprise was expressed at the outer half of the training track not having been opened. The powers that be having decided otherwise, however, some fast spurts were indulged in across the centre of the course, and a fair amount of jumping was also witnessed. The first to go out were a trio from Smallman's string, Hello, Harold, and a new one whom we did not recognise. Harold looks to have improved out of all knowledge since last season, and both as regards his condition and the way he moves, leaves little to be desired. Hello struck us as looking a bit out of sorts, but he was a bit of a ragged looking customer, and that did not prevent him from proving himself a real useful horse last cold weather, when comparatively lately landed. Up to the present we do not see anything to beat him in the C. W. A. C. race at the first meeting

Bell Brand and the pony Norman were schooled a couple of times over the two flights, in the straight; and the pony is a beautiful lepper, and is very quick away from them, in fact he will take a lot of beating for the pony jump events. Bell Brand was not jumping too well; seemed a trifle uncertain as to where to take off, and inclined to put in a hasty "short 'un" at the end.

Flash, Sylvester and the pony Young Rake also went a school, the two last-named fencing admirably. Flash was a bit reluctant, and Jack Spillain had to exercise his most persuasive powers to get him to the other side of the timber. This fine horseman subsequently had a very rough ride on Mr. Galstaun's unnamed chestnut who after clearing the first flight in great style proceeded to "go to market" in earnest, and had anyone else been up there would no doubt have been a dissolution of partnership. Spillain, however, takes a lot of shifting—almost as much as Mr. "Soapy" Sponge from a comfortable county house!

Euryalus who is evidently being readied in a hurry for the All-Comers' Stakes at Tollygunge, went a three furlong spurt with "Mr. Dudley" up, from which we conclude that he is to have the mount on Saturday. This combination should be dangerous. Rosalea and Not Yet went a couple of three furlongs spins, and Western Queen went three furlongs on her own, about three-quarter pace.

We are indebted to an esteemed daily contemporary for the list of entries for the next Tollygunge Gymkhana to be held on the 16th instant. They will be found in the usual place. On the whole the entries are fairly satisfactory, but a large number of them being double entries, fields may dwindle somewhat when it comes to starting declarations. The All-Comers' Stakes should—as we predicted—provide the best field, and assuming that Nicotine and Pierette regard the July Stakes as being more their class, there should still be six or seven left in. If he starts there should, we imagine, be nothing in it but Morris, though when it is a case of G. R.'s, it is rash to pick a winner without knowing who is to perform in the pig skin, and Euryalus with "Mr. Dudley" up will take some catching. All the same we would, granting a competent jock, pick Reinzette to follow Morris home.

The July Stakes should also furnish a good field and if Winklet goes we should not look elsewhere for the winner. May B. and Pierette, however, are both useful, and the latter, if the going is decently firm, will probably show herself a different mare from what she was in the mud. In the Tum-Tum Stakes Cyclone—provided he has a jockey who can "remain"—should be the only one in it.

Snapshot should have no difficulty in disposing of the rest for the Ladies' Bracelet, over 3 furlongs, and for the Pony Flat Race we like The Owl, provided she is ridden by some one who can be trusted not to lose his way and wander off into the jungles.

As regards the terms of the match, the Executive have been somewhat reticent, and we are uncertain whether it is 3 furlongs on the flat, or 1½ miles over fences, or any distance and course veering between these two, so that all we can say with regard to it is "may the best horse win."

Our Poona Correspondent writes:—Their Excellencies gave a State Ball on the 7th to which the world and their wives to the number of nearly half a thousand went. The band and the floor left nothing to be desired and everything was excellently done and thoroughly enjoyed, so I gather.

Polo and cricket have naturally had but a poor look in since the advent of the welcome rain regarding which we were all beginning to get a bit anxious. The Nizam Cricket Club were, however, just in time to tackle the Poona Gymkhana—and perhaps wished they hadn't been, as the followers of Mahomet made a very poor show against the trundling of Umfreville and Greig and were dismissed for the ignominious total of 38. For the Gymkhana Greig and Thew each annexed 63 and the total for the innings was 224.

Andrew Clarke, the veteran trainer, has had a slice of real bad luck in losing the neat little English mare Dorade (the property of Mr. Murdock of Bombay, I believe), under peculiar circumstances. The filly was sent a half speed gallop and was seen to drop back and pull up lame. So lame that Clarke gave orders for her to be straightway walked to the Army Veterinary School at Wanowrie. After going about a quarter of a mile the mare dropped down as if shot, and all efforts to get her on her legs proving futile, the horse ambulance was summoned. She, I believe, never got up again, and on the following day the poor brute's agonies were ended by the merciful bullet, a post mortem confirming the diagnosis of a fractured back.

That good but peculiarly unfortunate horse Friar Tuck has, I hear, been again laid up with fever and is, of course, out of work. The Indian climate apparently do s not suit his constitution. There seems a fate against high class, high priced English horses for the nonce, Friar Tuck, Carabine and the curious tempered Presbyterian.

The final game in the English Inter-Regimental Polo Tournament was played on the 9th instant at Hurlingham, resulting in the 17th Lancers beating the Horse Guards by seven goals to six.

Sportsmen who intend shooting Chitral way will be interested in the game laws of that State, which we publish to-day in our Shikar Columns.

Our Secunderabad Correspondent writes:—We have at last bid farewell to the hot weather and are enjoying cool breezes and refreshing showers. There is doubtless a great amount of rain in store for us however, and it is to be hoped that the majority of it will have come down before the "Secunderabad week." It will be remembered that the races last year had to be postponed twice owing to the rain.

The first entries which closed on the 25th ultimo are good there being an average of eight for each event. In the capable hands of Captain Roome, the popular Secretary for the Races, everything promises to be on the best lines and the idea of making this meeting the first of a series on a par with the races of a few years back, when Hyderabad Mulkapet could boast of decent sport seems to be within the range of realisation.

On the 23rd July, the first day of the races, a a dinner and smoking concert will be held at the Club and a dance has been arranged for the 28th.

The billiard tournament at the Secunderabad Club concluded last Saturday, the Cup going to Major Cloete who beat Colonel Dobbs by 33. There was no second prize although the entries were large.

Motor car fever is beginning to attack Hyderabad although the number of motorists at present is small, a fact perhaps due to the restrictions imposed on motor car owners in Hyderabad City. I am told, however, that enquiries for the best and most reliable makes are on the increase, while quite a flourishing little trade has commenced in petrol, now procurable in the bazaar. Motor bicycles and trailers are owned by several officers in the garrison, and there is more than one car which finds stabling accommodation in the Cavalry lines at Bolaram.

Pro Bono, in our Correspondence columns, makes a suggestion for grappling with the Calcutta syce nuisance which we commend to the consideration of all owners of racing establishments.

The Ceylon Fishing Club, says Mr. E. M. de C. Short, in his report for 1903 on the Nuwara Eliya District, to which the Assistant Agent acts as Honorary Secretary, imported 30,000 ova during the year, and turned out 6,733 fry into the Club waters. The Club has now ninety members, and trout fishing in Ceylon has come to stay. Breeding experiments are about to be made locally, and it is hoped that the risky and expensive system of importing ova will soon be discontinued. The engagement of an expert from England is under consideration, and a movement in favour of asking for State aid has been initiated. A good deal of time is devoted to this work.

Rather late in the day the Assam paper reports a nasty accident to Mr Bather, of the Dulabcherra tea estate, south Sylhet, when extracting cartridges from his gun on return from a shoot. Our contemporary has it that "one of the bullets! exploded, inflicting severe injuries to the calf of Mr. Bather's leg." Whether the so-called bullet was a shell or not has not transpired, but we hope those dangerous and unnecessary missiles are not again coming into fashion, as many lamentable accidents are on record when they were in vogue.

Major James Harrison, traveller and sportsman, has just returned to England after an adventurous period of big game hunting in the great forests of Central Africa. The natives declare him to be the only white man who has seen the recently-discovered animal, the okapi, alive in its native wilds. Major Harrison recently related the story of his experiences. "I started a few days after Christmas," he said, "and made my way down to the Stanley Forest, where the pigmies are. I saw many of the pigmies. They used to keep away from us on our approach, but afterwards hung on our rear. They are keen little people and good hunters; none was over 3ft. 10in. in height. Failing to find the okapi I worked up to Jabir, and thence into the great forest of De Melley. The trees of the forest were so interwoven with tangled creepers and underwood that one had often to crawl to make one's way through it. On the sixth day in the forest we came on the spoor of okapi. We had been following it for hours when, on suddenly turning round a bush, I saw an okapi not more than fifteen feet in front of me. It was an animal something like a giraffe, some ten or eleven feet high, of a tawny grey in colour, with stripes over the loins. It was gone like a flash into the thicket long before I could get my rifle from the native who was carrying it. I never saw the okapi again." Deducting the time occupied in actual hunting, Major Harrison covered the distance from Lado on the Nile to Boma at the mouth of the Congo in thirty-six marching days. It is worthy of note that Major Harrison is a strong believer in the administration of the Congo Free State, which he considers humane and beneficent, and he further is strongly of opinion that the Lado Enclave is well "run."

Full reports of the first two days of the Bangalore Races appear among our Turf news to-day. Ayrdale won the Maharaja's Cup on the second day, the race being run in torrential rain which necessitated two of the races on the card being held over for next day. Some of the Calcutta stables showed up well.

At Poona, on the 10th instant, George Stonhill, the jockey met with an accident when riding Fireup. He was doing a half-mile gallop with Miss Windsor, both belonging to Mr. A. W. P.'s stable; the horses collided fracturing Stonhill's leg in three places. He was conveyed to the Sassoon General Hospital where he will be laid up for some time.

The remains of a whale were washed ashore near Alutgania in Ceylon on the 1st instant. A correspondent to the Times of Ceylon describing the incident writes:—The information was wired by the Assistant Government Agent of the Province to Dr. A. Willey, Director of the Colombo Museum. He left Colombo the same day, and after inspecting the carcase, decided to secure the skeleton for the Colombo Museum. When Dr. Willey saw it, the huge carcase had been partly broken up, but he expected to save the skeleton. It was that of a cachalot or sperm whale—the oil-yielding whale of commerce (Physeter macrocephalus)—and bore traces of having been shot with a harpoon gun by whalers. The left half of the upper jaw had been shattered and broken off. Measurements taken showed the skull to be 5 feet in height, while the length of the head to the end of the muzzle was 16 feet. The two nasal bones, which would make the head longer, had broken off. The width of the head was 5 feet 5 inches. Dr. Willey estimated the length of the whale to be about 40 feet. As the usual length of a full-grown sperm whale is about 80 feet, the specimen washed ashore at Athuruwela must be that of a middle-aged one. The whale had probably been killed two or three weeks before, as there was hardly any flesh left on the skull except a few tendons, though the body had a quantity of flesh without any skin.

Athletic Notes.

THE following are the entries for the I. F. A. Tournament:—

Calcutta (holders), Royal Irish Rifles, Rangers, Hornets, Dalhousie, Caledonians, Y. M. C. A., Howrah, Chinsurah, Sova Bazar, Hare Sporting and the King's Own.

The Lahore and Mian Mir Hockey Tournament opened at Lahore on the 1st instant, when the Volunteers defeated the Chief's College by three goals to one, after a well-contested game. The next game was between the Hornets and the North-Western Railway, and resulted in an easy win for the Railway by seven goals to nil. In the second round the Volunteers beat the Government College by seven goals to nil, and the North-Western Railway beat the South Wales Borderers by 7 goals to two.

The final game in the football tournament for the Surma Cup was played on the Calcutta ground on the 11th instant. The teams were the "C" Company, King's Own and "B" team, Calcutta. The soldiers were too strong for the homesters and won by four goals to nil, Ennis (2) Critchley and Ashworth putting through.

B. Jayaram, the Southern India native cricketer, while playing for London County vs. Old Charlton the other day compiled 103 not out.

The following are among the most important county cricket results last week:—On the 8th instant the South Africans defeated Hampshire by an innings, and the match between Kent and Yorkshire was abandoned. On the 9th July the Gentlemen beat the Players at the Oval by an innings and 39 runs. Eton beat Harrow by an innings and 12 runs. Derbyshire beat Leicestershire by 306 runs. Sussex and Essex drew.

It is stated that the negotiations between Sir Thomas Lipton and the New York Y. C. are likely to be brought to a successful issue, in which case a challenge for the America Cup will be given for next year.

M. Théry, the winner of the Gordon-Bennett Race, met with a serious accident, near Kirchberg on the 23rd ultimo. On his return journey to France, his motor-car was upset in a ditch, and he sustained a fracture of the foot. M. Théry continued the journey by rail. We give details of the race in our London Sporting letter.

Mr. F. A. G. Medd, who some seasons ago used to take a prominent part in Calcutta rowing, is doing well at home with the London Rowing Club. He was rowing bow in the L. R. C. crew who contested the final with the Thames R. C. in the Walton Fours and was No. 2 in his boat in the Walton Eights Challenge Cup: his crew won both their preliminary heats, but succumbed in the finals. Medd rowed at Henley in the L. R. C. crew for the Thames Challenge Cup.

Says London Opinion:—"In punting, endeavour to remain in the punt as much as possible. You will find there is very little room for you on the pole, and, if there be but one pole, the other people in the punt will miss you. Besides, it isn't punting.

A boat may be made to move through the water (1) with the bow foremost; (2) stern foremost. As a general rule, however, the first method is to be perferred, as the bow, being the sharper end, more readily cuts through obstacles to the boat's progress—such as other boats, etc.

In sailing, remember that a sufficiently low bridge may always be depended upon to lower your mast and sail for you without the least antecedent trouble on your part.

When steering, keep the boat's head steadily directed towards some conspicuous mark in the distance, such as a large barge or steam tug approaching from the opposite direction. When you have reached it, another similar object may be selected, if it is found necessary to continue the voyage.

An imitation of the course of a heavy coal-cart zig-zagging up a steep hill has no corresponding advantage in a crowded reach of the river.

A boat-hook is adapted for catching hold of things, but should not be used upon the persons or apparel of people in other boats in order to attract their attention—though, of course, it will do this.

It is, after all, a secondary use of an oar to refresh the passengers in the stern by splashing them with cold water.

Three blasts from the whistle of a steam launch may be taken to mean "What the—! Where the—!! Why the—!!!" or words to that effect.

At a Special Meeting of the Amateur Rowing Association Committee, held 15th June last, the following alterations in the Laws of Boat Racing were passed:—

Law VII. That the words "liable to disqualification" be substituted for the word "disqualified" so that the law may read as follows:—

"No fouling whatever shall be allowed, a boat or boats committing a foul shall be liable to disqualification."

Law VIII. That the word "scull" be inserted after the word "oar" in each case, so that it may read:—

". . . Any competitor by his oar, scull, boat or person comes into contact with the oar, scull, boat or person, &c. . . ."

Law XII. That the following words be added, viz.:—

"but he may disqualify a competitor for a foul without an appeal being made provided that he does so immediately upon the foul occurring."

Law XVII. That the words "if he thinks proper" be deleted and that the following words be inserted after the word "may," viz.:—"except when he disqualifies a competitor for a foul without an appeal being made," so that the law may read as follows:—

"The Umpire may, except when he disqualifies a competitor for a foul without an appeal being made, reserve his decision provided that, &c."

At a Special Meeting of the Committee held on 13th July it was to be proposed that:

The following Law be substituted for Law VI of the Laws of Boat Racing:—

"A Boat's own water is the best course it can take from the Station assigned to it at the start to the finish, provided that it leaves ample water for any boat which started upon either side of it to pass on that side, when such boat is in a position to enforce its right to that water."

The Calcutta Golf Club Cleek Competition will begin on the 16th instant and run on to the 23rd idem.

We hear that a few Calcutta motor bicycle enthusiasts intend cycling up from Silliguri to Darjeeling next Doorga Pujahs.

We have to acknowledge from our friends, Messrs. Combridge and Co. of Bombay, a copy of their Literary Review for the current month.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes:—A final meeting of the Committee which had in hand the arrangements to send a native cricket team to England this year will be held next week to read the report of the Honorary Treasurer (Mr. A. H. S. Aston) and the Honorary Secretary (Mr. R. S. McG. Shepherd) in connection with the winding up of the scheme. At the last meeting held in February it was decided that no call should be made upon the guarantors, but that the expenses incurred by the Committee, roughly a sum of twelve hundred rupees, should be deducted proportionally from the subscriptions in hand. This has been carried out and each subscriber has had a refund of his subscription less 12 per cent.

It has been recognised that the Committee made a mistake in trying to work the scheme from Bombay and that it would have been better for the success of the undertaking had separate Committees been formed in all the chief cricket centres in the country. Thus Committees at Calcutta, Madras, Lahore and Allahabad would have been able to work up an interest in the scheme in their respective provinces and at the same time to co-operate with the Bombay Committee. It is, of course, useless at this time writing about what might or might not have been done, but should the scheme ever be taken up again I trust it will be on the lines suggested. [And advocated by us from the outset. Ed.]

The Bombay Telegraph team met the Rovers in a League match last Tuesday evening and, as usual, had all the worst of the game. The Telegraph men have not taken kindly to soccer and are greatly handicapped inasmuch that they never have any new blood to draw upon. In the game under notice they were quite outclassed and had the Rovers not slackened off considerably in the second half the margin against the Telegraph—5 goals to 1—would have been heavier. In the latter half the Telegraph men had the wind of the Rovers, but unfortunately not the science, and they were able to score the only goal they have made so far in League matches this season. The Rovers who played with great dash in the first half when all five goals were registered continue to show lack of condition and unless they improve considerably between this and the dates fixed for the tournament will fare roughly at the hands of the military teams. The Telegraph who have lost every one of the six matches played up to date are at the bottom of the League table where they are likely to remain.

Perhaps one of the best games we have had so far was that on Wednesday last between the cup holders, the Royal Garrison Artillery, and the Naval eleven from H. M. S. Perseus. The game was certainly the fastest I have witnessed this monsoon and the form of both teams, especially in the first half, was very good. The Naval custodian struck me as being the best in Bombay. Time after time in the latter half, when things were going in favour of the gunners and the sailors were penned up in their own country, he saved in the most brilliant fashion and I don't believe there is another goal-keeper in Bombay who would have saved half the shots that he stopped, some of which were very hot. The gunners' custodian gave an almost equally good account of himself and guarded well in the first half when the sailors were pressing. It speaks well for the defence shewn by both sides that despite the fierce combined rushes that marked the play at intervals the game ended in a pointless draw. The back divisions on both sides defended well and fed the forward lines judiciously, while the passing of the forwards was generally good. At the conclusion of the game the opinion was freely expressed that the Perseus' team will run the cup-holders closely this year for premier honours.

The Gymkhana and the Telegraph, the two weakest teams in the Harwood League, met on Thursday when both sides showed form distinctly above anything else they had previously shown this season. In the first half there was really nothing to choose between them and the Gymkhana were somewhat lucky to score a few minutes after the start. Nothing further was scored until play was resumed after the interval when the Telegraph started a series of offensive tactics which culminated in a well-deserved goal. Play waged fast and furious during the remaining fifteen minutes and with only ten minutes left the Gymkhana from a free kick scored the winning point.

On Friday evening the Casuals met the Military, the latter being assisted by several civilian players, and, after a fairly fast game, the new club had to admit defeat by a goal and three tries to nil.

There is ample evidence in the large crowd that lines the ground during the progress of a Rugger match that the old popularity of the game in Bombay is being restored. I learn on what I believe to be reliable authority that Madras will send a team to Bombay for the tournament in September.

Turning to cricket Captain L. M. R. Deas, of the Supply and Transport Corps, the fast bowler, will not, I fear, after all be able to play for the Presidency. He only returned to Poona last week from England and is now under orders for Quetta where by the end of the month the cricket of that station will be receiving his valuable assistance. It is a far cry from Quetta to Bombay, a four days' journey by rail in fact so it is hopeless to expect that Deas would be able to return to Bombay in less than a month after having left the place.

At one time on Wednesday it was feared that the usual weekly mounted sports would have to be abandoned as it rained steadily from early morning right up to 3 o'clock, close upon two inches of rain having fallen. The weather cleared, however, as the afternoon advanced, and although the ground was in a shocking condition necessitating the abandonment of the Ladies' Tilting Competition and the Jumping Competition for Horses, the other events on the programme duly came off. The Individual Tilting and Tent-pegging was, considering the state of the ground, well contested and was won by Donald Graham with W. E. Crum second. The Polo Ball race, in which the contestants had to hit a polo ball round a given course and finally between two posts, hardly saw poloists at their best, owing to the slippery condition of the ground which made anything like hard riding extremely dangerous. The event was won by L. Barraclough with D. Graham second.

The most interesting item on the card was the event for Ladies and Gentlemen which had the merit of being amusing. The conditions were, the gentleman had the ride a certain distance and place a cocoanut on a post, while the lady's part consisted in knocking the nut off with a polo ball. The gentleman had then to pick up the nut and return to the starting point. The result of the competition was a win for L. Barraclough and Mrs. Dyson, with Mr. D. Graham and Mrs. McCausland second. The evening closed with the usual scurries for ponies and horses which, however, on this occasion were devoid of interest on account of the state of the ground. The Pony Scurry was won by D. Graham with A. Ash second. The Horse Scurry fell to J. St. J. Graham with F. H. Greig second. Although a certain class of people make it a practice to attend the weekly mounted sports regularly they have not much interest for the general public and I doubt if the regular habitues of the Marine Lines Maidan derive much pleasure from their outting. The reasons for this are, we see week after week the same limited number of competitors competing in the same events and as a rule the same competitors winning with unfailing regularity. This kind of thing is apt to grow somewhat monotonous and unless the Honorary Secretary can induce more competitors to enter for the various events and make more changes in the programme the Mounted Sports will never hold the high place that they should in the estimation of the Bombay sporting public.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Friday, 24th June 1904.

THE Park is crammed these fine afternoons. The tendency on the part of the flights that settle in chairs is to draw nearer and nearer the sunk garden every season: in time I shall look for friends somewhere about Grosvenor Gate and eventually in the marble arch region. It is quite the thing this year to have tea in Kensington Gardens: so I judge from the numbers of carriages there whenever I pass about 5 o'clock: I doubt whether this will last very long, though. The big function of the week was the Nursery Rhyme bazar at the Albert Hall which was opened by the Queen on Tuesday afternoon. It was uncommonly well done: the floor was built up to the level of the lowest tier of boxes and an arrangement in blue muslin made a most effective canopy. Every stall holder adopted a nursery rhyme by way of device, and the effect was distinctly good. Last night they wound it up with a dance, and then went home to bed happy in the knowledge that they had cleared £11,000, after paying all expenses, for the Victoria Children's Hospital.

To-day being the King's "Official" Birthday they are trooping the colour. Time was when I used piously to attend that function; but upon a day I discovered that you could see it ever so much better at rehearsal, and if I want to take a country cousin now it is to the rehearsal he or she goes. The Coaching Club meet on Wednesday at the Magazine, drew a bigger crowd than usual, for no reason apparently save that it was a glorious day. There is a certain sameness about coaching meets at the Magazine and the impossibility of getting a fair view of the whole makes is rather an ineffective spectacle.

The "hot fit" is passing rapidly away and the authorities give indications of being more concerned with retrenchment in Army matters than with measures calculated towards efficiency. Lord Donoughmore told the Lords on Tuesday that the Government accepted in principle the suggestions made for the reduction of the Regular Army at home. Not the least noteworthy feature of the discussion was Lord Lansdowne's spirited defence of the financial department of the War Office, that department on which the Esher Commission put its mailed fist so heavily and as most people think so justly. He said that the strictures passed by the Commission were resented by both civil and military sides of the War Office. He ought to know. There have been persistent rumours lately of cabinet dissensions on the subject of military policy, but I suppose Tuesday's debate in the Lords must be held clearance of the air.

Lord Dundonald's reply to his ministerial critics in Canada has been made through the press, and Reuter gives us a long summary of it, with the remark that the document has caused a great sensation. One can quite believe it. In 1902 Lord Dundonald made his report on the Militia in two parts: The second part contained the outline of his scheme for re-organising the force: this was suppressed by Sir Frederick Borden who described it as secret, private and confidential, though it was marked none of these. In 1903 Lord Dundonald was requested to "modify" his report: because "it was so strong it might embarrass him." He did so and Sir F. Borden struck out whole pages all of which Lord Dundonald intended for public information. Among the deletions were references to the condition of the permanent corps which Lord Dundonald pronounced unsatisfactory. "Last year for instance, permanent corps with an establishment of 995 were 207 under strength and had 277 enlistments and 154 desertions." When Lord Dundonald organised an Ordnance Corps, Sir E. Borden was "anxious to have a number of senior and highly-paid posts:" and Lord Dundonald gave way so far as to admit one Colonel, a second in command with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel and three other Lieutenant-Colonels. Soon after this had been arranged Lord Dundonald left for the North-West: and as soon as he left Ottawa the Minister of Militia ordered the A. G. to prepare an order increasing the Lieutenant-Colonels of the Ordnance Corps to seven. This for a corps of about 100 men! "In this connexion it must be remembered that the most elementary requirements of the Militia were neglected for want of money." Referring to the action of Mr. Fisher in striking out the name of a gentleman recommended for a Commission, Lord Dundonald notices as a singular coincidence the fact on the day this case came up Mr. Fisher was acting for the first and only time he ever did act for the Minister of Militia. He tells the people of Canada frankly that as regards their preparedness in a military sense they are "living in a fool's paradise." It is a treat to read this bold outspoken indictment of politicians and their works.

The strange case of Sir Charles Eliot presents interesting possibilities. I cannot remember a responsible Governor taking so extreme a step before: but there can be no use discussing it in the dark. So far we have Sir Charles' telegram to go on and no word from the other side. The "East African Syndicate" to whom, Sir Charles alleges, Lord Lansdowne ordered him to grant lands on terms "unjust and impolitic" is a mining and prospecting concern with £50,000 capital and which numbers among its shareholders the Duke of Abercorn, Earls Grey, Roberts, Denbigh, of Chesterfield and of Verulam, to say nothing of a regiment of commoners whose names are reminiscent of the syna-

Sir Charles resigns his Commissionership rather than obey the order to grant lands to the Syndicate when grants are refused to private persons; telegraphs to the Prime Minister demanding a public inquiry into the circumstances of his resignation: and takes the first boat from Mombassa, home. The Government cannot well refuse the inquiry demanded and we can wait for revelations, if there are any to come.

The London County Council has awakened to the fact that there are limits even to the patience of ratepayers, and has exhibited this week distinct anxiety to check its enormous expenditure. The Council, if I am not mistaken, has a debt of rather over forty millions, and has come to the conclusion it ought to stop: the flag of distress appeared this week when it declined by 71 votes to 41 to sanction a trifle of £145,000 on a new tunnel under the Thames at Woolwich, because the finances could not afford it. Furthermore it has been deciding to create a real sinking fund at the rate of £250,000 a year with an eye to the extinction of Metropolitan or County Council stock. It does not seem quite necessary to extinguish the whole debt: why should the present generation of ratepayers be saddled with the cost of improvements whose benefit future generations will reap?

London pauperism shows such a steady increase during the last few years that the L. C. C. might well turn its beneficent attention to that question. On the last day of the first week in June 1901, relief was given to 99,008 persons: on the same date 1902 to 101,862 persons: on same date 1903 to 104,818 persons: and on same date 1904 to 109,494. The greater increase is in the number who entered the workhouse: the position is aggravated by the fact that this has been a beautifully fine June and in many parts farmers complain of inability to get labour to save the hay. I can answer for it myself that beggars are largely on the increase in London: latterly the beggar armed with the protective wisp of boot laces or handful of match boxes has invaded the Park of an evening, a thing unknown for many years part.

On Tuesday the Lords had a field day with the Chantrey Bequest and after some discussion agreed to Lord Lytton's motion for a Select Committee to enquire into the administration of the fund which now amounts to £2,000 or £3,000 a year. The question whether the trustees do or do not properly administer the bequest seems to me capable of very easy answer. Let them produce a list of pictures bought with prices paid, and therewith a list of pictures which have been sold by the painters thereof to private buyers since, with the prices paid, comparison of the two lists would surely show whether the Chantery Bequest trustees had, on the whole, bought wisely during their twenty-seven years of work.

The Governors of St. George's Hospital at a special court held on Tuesday, decided by a large majority not to remove the hospital from its present site. The majority opined that the present is not a favourable time for an appeal to the public for funds for the purpose, and the majority are probably quite right. The alternative scheme is to utilise the newly acquired Knightsbridge site to build with the view of extending the erection into a new hospital, and negociations with the Duke of Westminster for purchase of adjoining leaseholds for £23,700 were sanctioned. The great majority of "cases" come to St. George's from the districts South of it, and the idea was to seek a new site in that direction. Temptation lay in the preparedness of a firm of agents to give £350,000 to £375,000 for the present site "the best site in the world" as somebody truly called it on Tuesday.

The Japanese seem to be taking a hint from Boer methods. The correspondent of a Russian journal states, on the authority of wounded Russian officers that the Japs tell off marksmen to shoot officers. Apart from the inherent probability that Japan would adopt so effective a method as we, to our cost, found it in South Africa, the returns of killed and wounded support the statement. Of three regiments and three batteries 73 Officers or over one-third of the total were put out of action in one fight and in another all the officers of certain detatchments were killed. The heavy losses explain why reserved officers have been called out in Warsaw and Russian Poland.

For lack of other sticks to beat the Government with the C. Bees have been working Chinese Labour hard again. A considerate cooly died of beri beri on the voyage to Durban, and the opposition rose like one man at the golden opportunity. A callous Deputy Speaker refused to put a motion for the adjournment of the House that the case of that cooly might receive adequate attention, and in spite of the uproarious indignation his decision evoked, honourable members were obliged to content themselves with a squabble over the tobacco duty. Then we had Mr. McKenna and the old story of Mr. Gallaber over again, and a very characteristic evening's "debate," as mistaken convention calls it, squandered time. I should dearly like to see put in force the Rule which forbids publication of parliamentary proceedings: lack of publicity would have a marvellous effect in checking these floods of futile talk.

The Royal Society's second conversazione was held on Wednesday evening. The most attractive exhibit was Mr. Enock's colour photographs of living moths and butterflies in various stages: a veritable revelation in colour photography. Very curious and interesting too, were Mrs. D. H. Scott's series of photographs to illustrate the growth of plants, whereby the slow development of a fortnight is shown on the screen, in a few seconds. The exhibition of "spontaneous electrification of radium" was I fear lost upon an unscientific mind which could not grasp the marvel.

A futhur communication is promised concerning the future education of candidates.

I have had five days in which to make up my mind about Mr. Alfred Austin's comiedietta, curtain-raiser. "A Lesson in Harmony" which now precedes "A Fairy's Dilemma" at the Garrick. It is not very easy to find the right word for it. The thing is pretty, it is nicely written, and the folks are natural enough; and if some aspiring playwright had written it for a country house amateur company and the country house company had acted it well, one would have said it was clever and showed promise. It is very very simple. Philip Leslie (Mr. David Domvile) is grown remiss in his attentions to his Ida (Miss Jessie Bateman) though they have not been married very long. Otho Hazlewood, dramatic author (Mr. Bourchier) comes to stay, and by tactful address shows the wife that cold mutton is not the stuff on which to "feed the brute" and that a passion for white waistcoats is really no serious blemish in a character otherwise good. He gains Ida's ear and then operates on Philip with equally good effect. "A very daisy" as Bunthorne might say: there is really nothing in the thing: the epigrams are numerous but not sparkling "matrimony was instituted that cold mutton might be eaten" does not impress me as coruscating: and that is a fair example. Mr Bourchier was very well suited as Hazlewood the commonsense bachelor guest: for Mr. Domvile and Miss Bateman there was little scope for acting.

Dramatic mems. "Who's who" is gone from the Savoy after a short and unsuccessful career. "The Money Makers" has vacated the Royalty but its vitality is far from exhausted and it has found a home at Notting Hill Gate. Mr. Forbes Robertson has revived "Mice and Men" at the Duke of York's: Mr. Charles Cherry is the Captain Lovell originally played by Mr. Ben Webster; and this I think forms the only conspicuous difference between the new cast and the old. Madame Sarah Bernhardt opened her fortnight's season at His Majesty's on Monday with La Sorcirèe. Madame Rejane as mentioned last week is at the Prince of Wales', and last night put on "La Parisienne." Also there is a very strong French company in possession at the Avenue, so you see on the whole we are not badly off for French drama at present. The "Alcestis" of Euripides was the play at Bradfield on Tuesday: the play was exceedingly well done, and my sympathies were with those who had to play in the unsparing light of a hot sun: strange the difference between the orthodox histrionic atmosphere of footlights and the light of day.

The Clement Scott matinee yesterday at His Majesty's rather recalled the old Aquarium announcement "Twelve Hours' Constant Entertainment for one shilling." The show began at 1-30 and was not over till after six. Sir H. Irving appeared in "Waterloo" and recited "Eugene Aram." Mr. Tree appeared in the third Act of "Herod": three little plays "Flower o' the Rose," "The Conversion of Nat Sturge" and "The Marchioness" were played; and it was announced that £1,250 had been realised for Mr. Scott who is lying seriously ill at Broadstairs.

Various items: As the Pilgrim's Dinner on Saturday evening Mr. Choate gave Lord Roberts a most pressing invitation to visit the States, which invitation was backed up by several telegrams from various prominent Americans, delivered during the dinner. Lord Roberts, undauneted by recollections of Lieutenant Hobson's experience said he hoped soon to go over to America. A statement showing the position of Lord Anglesey's affairs has been issued to his creditors: his liabilities are about £256,000; and if this figure be not swelled by subsequent claims creditors may hope for a dividend of 3s. in the pound a few months hence; and be paid in full with 1 per cent. on their claims by 1911 if the Marquis lives so long. He has assigned all his property, real and personal, to trustees who are to pay him an annual allowance of £2,000 a year. Mr. Arnold White thinking the Russian circular on the "genesis of the War" for use in schools unfriendly to this country, wrote to a Russian friend for explanations. The friend replies that the text is "seriously garbled" by the translator, and that the document represents not official Russian opinion but "that of the educated, cultured, thinking and learned classes." The Automobile Club in Piccadilly held itself prepared for large rejoicings on Friday evening last, but the victory of M. Théry left the agreeable duty of firework and illumination display to France, and Piccadilly was left to it wonted sober calm. No doubt you have all particulars of the Gordon-Bennett race from other quarters: the principal comment on it heard among non-motoring people was on the absence of fatal accident. They did not seem to want the prophet Dr. Dowie in France: he came back from Boulogne very quietly on Friday night, hurried secretly to Liverpool and embarked on Saturday for New York; where it is hoped he will remain. Mrs. Percy Sladen has devoted £20,000 to the promotion of scientific research, in memory of her late husband some time president of the Linnæan Society. Mr. Sladen was more especially interested in geology, zoology and anthropology: and the trustees are to employ the income for researches in these fields. Considerable sensation was caused on Monday by the announcement that Mr. Sievier had been arrested on a charge of perjury committed during a private examination in bankruptcy in December 1898. The arrest was said by counsel not to have arisen out of the recent slander case. Bail allowed, two sureties of £3,000 each. Certain young hooligans, ornaments of the Aberdeen University, distinguished themselves last Friday by hustling the Alake of Abeokuta, tearing his clothes and knocking off his topi. Little has been said of the actual outrage, but I learn that the Alake bore himself with great dignity. The University authorities "dealt with" the affair: I hope the cane figured in the dealing. Jewels belonging to Mrs. Langtry were sold at Christies on Monday: they brought £5,374.

VETERINARY PATHOLOGY.

WE are indebted to the publishers for a copy of the first volume of Veterinary Pathology by Messrs. Friedberger and Fröhners, to which is added notes on Bacteriology by Dr. G Newman. The work runs to 500 pages dealing comprehensively with all the diseases horseflesh is heir to. To the profession there is nothing new, the book being an elaborate compilation from many authorities. The unprofessional will find it a standard reference, the copious index rendering diagnosis rapid and accurate. The joint authors do not confine themselves to equine maladies but treat of those afflicting the animal world from cattle down to the smaller rodents. The work has been translated into English by Captain M. H. Hayes, to whom credit must be accorded for the manner in which the task has been accomplished.

ANOTHER JUNGLE BOOK.*

MR. A. MERVYN SMITH has recently produced a book dealing with various phases of sport and existence in our Indian jungles. As far as the turn-out of the volume is concerned we can have nothing but praise; it is well printed, and the illustrations are good in most cases, especially in respect of the photograph reproductions; but we cannot regard Sport and Adventure in the Indian Jungle as a serious contribution to the literature of Indian "Shikar" nor do we suppose the author's intention is to be taken save cum grano sa is.

Mr Smith was, and perhaps still is, a mining engineer whose burrowings underground and alignments on the surface necessitate protracted sojourns in the wilds. He is a tolerable observer and not slow to catch on incidents and situations likely to furnish copy, and when these are not ready to hand, he has evidently a lively imagination on which to indent. No amount of salt will help some of us to swallow certain chapters in his book. But we are by no means sure that the author intends us to do violence to our common sense and sporting experience by making the attempt; for we cannot always expect (nor do we need) entertainment from bald yet strictly accurate narrations, these, unrelieved by a spice of fiction or the introduction of, shall we say, "controversial matter" would be dull reading unless treated by sportsmen of more than average literary ability as one of which Mr. Mervyn Smith does not wish to pose. His stories are interesting and readable at any rate. They appeared years ago in the columns of The Statesman in which there ran concurrently, if our memory serves us, with a warm discussion of how the tiger seizes his prey, and to which controversy Mr. Smith contributed several letters. We have said the author is not a master of style; but, while we are ready to be indulgent on this score, we are not prepared for such slipshod writing as in the chapter "After Bison in Chota Nagpore," page 251, in which we are told that "one of the shots took effect and broke its hind leg below the knee." Our italics. We should much like to come across these curious Nagpore bison (gaur) which are provided with hind knees!

THE DEATH OF THE BANIKOLA MAN-EATER.

SOME years ago, when I was stationed at Morelgunge, a notorious man-eating tiger had taken up his quarters in an island of one of the estuaries of the Megna. It roamed about a good deal levying toll from among the Molongie salt-makers. As I was then practically my own master, and with nothing particular on hand, I decided to see if I could not put an end to the dreaded man-eater's depredations. Wishing good-bye to my hospitable friends, I got on board my houseboat, or pansee, after dinner, and was soon dropping down the broad Megna. Towards the afternoon of the following day, we found ourselves at the mouth of a small creek and where we were met by a deputation of villagers, who informed us that the man-eater's main haunts were in some hurtal cover to the east of a village called Bisenpore, but as the monster roamed about a good deal there was no knowing exactly where to look for him. There was one thing in favour of the brute being brought to bag, that was that, with the exception of some three or four pools, which contained fresh water, all the rest were dry. All the streams and creeks about this part of the country contained nothing but brackish or salt water, so the man-eater had to resort to these pools containing sweet water to quench his thirst. The house-boat was accordingly taken as near to Bisenpore as practicable. Nothing noticeable occurred during the first night of our arrival. The following morning, I waited till 10 o'clock for news, but having received none, I got out of my boat and had a stroll along the bank of the small stream we lay in; after going for a short distance I came across the pugs of what appeared to be a fairly big tiger and noticed that one of the front paw's impressions had only three toe marks, so if these pugs were those of the man-eater he must be either deformed or crippled.

The third day after my arrival news was brought, late in the afternoon, that a man had been carried off the day previous from the outskirt of a village called Banikola. The unfortunate victim was one of a half dozen or so who were returning from the neighbouring hât. Early the following morning, I made a move towards the village where this last tragedy had been enacted. As the boat could only travel a short distance, I had to trudge on foot the remaining distance. On getting near Banikola village, I was met by a crowd of the inhabitants, who pointed out to me, from a distance, the place where the unfortunate man had been struck down. After a good deal of persuasion I managed to induce a score or so to accompany me towards the spot, the main landmark of which was a fairly big peepul tree rising well above the surrounding vegetation. We made our way forward, I with gun in hand acting as the leader, followed by a couple of stalwart boatmen with the spare guns, while the villagers brought up the rear. As the country was bare for the first part of the journey, not much precaution was necessary; as we got nearer the spot, I noticed that a few crows were perched on the topmost branches of the peepul tree, while a couple more rose suddenly cawing loudly and after circling once or twice settled alongside the other ones. This looked rather suspicious, and as we moved forward, it was with every sense on the alert. We were, however, soon relieved on seeing a couple of jackals trot out from the identical patch of grass whence the crows had flown out. We soon came upon the remains of the man-eater's last victim; the tiger had only eaten some of the stomach, and had sucked the blood by severing the jugular arteries. The crows had been picking at the eyes, so that the orbits were now empty, but the jackals had not yet begun their feast.

Close under the peepul was a pool of fresh water, about a couple of hundred feet or so in diameter, with fairly raised banks on all sides, and though the cover was patchy there was still a fair amount of it round the place. I soon made up my mind that the best way to get a shot at the tiger was to take my seat for the night on a machan built on the peepul tree. It was now only 10 o'clock, so I made my way back to the boat, telling the men that I would be back at 3 o'clock. At the appointed time, I was back at the place of rendezvous and found that a machan had been duly rigged up some fifteen feet above ground. By means of a ladder, I was soon up in my perch and comfortably settled down for my vigil, my faithful henchman, Ebrahim, taking his seat alongside of me. I waited till 10 o'clock without seeing anything but a couple of otters that soon ran into the pool and were lost sight of among the rushes that fringed the pool's edge. I was now beginning to feel very sleepy and had perhaps just dozed off, when I was suddenly awakened by my man digging me in the ribs, and I next saw him pointing to the opposite side of the pool, I could not see anything; the only thing that seemed to strike me appeared to be a log of wood lying along the ground. I had not noticed this before, but this might have been an oversight on my part and it might after all have been but a ridge on which the moon's rays did not properly strike. The man alongside of me swore that the thing I saw lying was the tiger, as he had seen it move. As the distance was much too far for a safe shot, especially in the uncertain light, I had nothing else to do but to watch and wait for fully twenty minutes, and while I watched the "thing" did not budge. I had, however, occasion to turn round for a few seconds to speak to my man, when on turning round I found that, the apparition had disappeared. I knew now that the man was right, and that which I had been watching for some time was nothing else but the arch offender and slayer of nearly forty human beings. I watched till 2 A.M. when seeing no signs of the tiger, I again began to doze off and must have gone off to sleep, for it was nearly 3 o'clock when I was rudely shaken up by my man saying that a tiger was under the tree. In my excitement to look round towards where the man was pointing, I very nearly slipped off my machan. I could not see anything at first and just as I got hold of my rifle, the tiger, from a distance of some sixteen paces charged with a murderous growl. I instantly blazed off both barrels in his direction. I do not know if the shots took effect, but in any case it scared away the brute, for we did not see anything of him again.

For the next three days I got no further news about the doings of the man-eater, and was almost thinking of giving it up as a bad job and returning to my place, when early on the morning of the fourth day a man rushed in greatly excited with the news that a woman had been carried off from a village some six miles distant, and on making further enquiries, I found that the victim was coming back from a pool where she had gone to bathe when she was pounced upon. I at once made a start and at 11 o'clock found myself at the spot. The village in question, lay some two miles inland and close alongside of it was a narrow creek fringed with tall hogla reeds, a very likely haunt for a tiger. A score or so of villagers soon took me over the ground and showed me the place where the woman had been struck down. Close to it was a very big tamarind tree, on which they told me the tiger used to jump and watch for people either returning from the pool or going along the path. On going up to the tree, I found the trunk a good-deal scarified, as if by claw marks, and some twelve feet or so from the ground was a thick lateral branch on which a tiger could easily have found a seat. There was, too, a good deal of undergrowth and a certain amount of jungle about the place.

I decided to sit up in a machan on the tamarind tree and to tie a buffalo calf as a bait. As this tamarind tree was far from the village and in a rather lonely part, I thought there was a good chance of the tiger putting in an appearance before sundown. Having made all the necessary arrangements, I made my way back to the boat. The afternoon was very sultry and I expected a storm, but luckily it kept off and enabled me to get safely to my machan. This was some fifteen feet from the ground, and I must say was very comfortable, as the main foundation of it was a nawar bed I had sent out. The bait, a buffalo calf, was tied some twenty feet from the tree, and I could distinctly see on all sides of it. The hogla jungle was some four hundred feet away right in front of me. It was now about four o'clock, so I had still a couple of hours, sunlight. As usual Ebrahim sat by my side. I knew that the tiger, if anywhere near, must be among the hogla, so I carefully watched the cover. After fully an hour had elapsed, I suddenly saw a huge round yellow head looking straight towards the tree. After looking round for about a couple of minutes or so the head vanished, but not for long, for it was soon out again about fifty yards or so nearer; the slanting rays of the sun falling on the tiger's head showed all his features distinctly. The brute was now looking no more towards me but at something else to the right that had attracted his attention. At one time both ears were pricked forward, while at another they were laid flat against the head; the lower jaw also at times seemed to droop. By the expression of the tiger's face I knew at once that something else beside the buffalo calf had taken up his attention. I was not long in finding out what it was, for on looking in the direction of the brute's gaze, I saw to my horror some half a dozen men coming along the village path and following each other in Indian file. They were still a good way off and as they came nearer, I could hear them talking loudly among themselves as if to frighten away the tiger, if anywhere about. They were now about four hundred yards or so away, when the tiger suddenly disappeared in the jungle.

What would be his next move was what I eagerly looked forward to now. I could not possibly allow another human being to be sacrificed, and the only way I could do so was to warn off the men or frighten away the tiger by firing. A man-eater is not, however, an ordinary tiger, and I wondered if the sound of firearms would scare him away. I was just making up my mind what to do, when all of a sudden the tiger glided out of the cover and lay almost flat along the ground. Having had a look round he now hurriedly made his way to a small nullah or dry watercourse, and having got there began at once to move forward. I could only see the top of his head and the tip of his shoulders as he moved in a very snake-like and undulating motion. I saw at once what the brute was about, for the nullah passed under the tree and he was making his way along it and probably intended jumping into the tamarind tree to have a better view. The position was getting now intensely exciting and interesting. The tiger got up to within a couple of hundred yards of the tree when I brought up the eight bore to my shoulder and I carefully followed every movement of the monster. Ebrahim, who was now all in excitement, eagerly whispered to me, "Fire, sir, fire! for the tiger is sure to jump into the tree, for have we not taken possession of his seat of observation." A hundred yards now intervened between the tiger and the tree; he might now rush up and jump into it, so I decided to fire as soon as the distance had been a little more reduced. Suddenly the tiger stopped and raised himself and placing his two front paws on the edge of the nullah looked in the direction whence the talking came. This was my chance, taking a long breath and carefully aiming at the shoulder I pressed the trigger. My shot was answered by a deafening roar. Owing to the smoke—for it was in the days of black powder—I could not see anything for the first few seconds; but bending low, I managed to catch sight of the monster pawing the air, as if fighting with the imaginary foe. I at once let him have two more barrels, on receiving which he fell back in the nullah, but soon recovering himself made for the tree, in a half-bounding, half-rolling sort of gait, and every now and then falling forward. Though the smoke had divulged my position, I knew the brute could not possibly get to where I was seated, so I waited till he was under the tree, when I let him have a shot in his head, at a distance of 10 paces, on receiving which he pitched forward on his head, a few gasps and all was over.

The villagers, who were coming along, on first hearing the shots followed by the tiger's tremendous roaring had all bolted towards the village. But curiosity having got the better of them, they had pulled up and climbed among the topmost branches of the nearest trees, from where they had seen everything that had taken place. On seeing us get down from our tree, and standing alongside of the tiger, some of the boldest got down from their perches and came running towards us. When about a hundred yards or so away they stopped and hailed us to know if the tiger was still alive. On being assured that it was quite dead, they came nearer. The people in the village had also heard the shots, for we were soon surrounded on every side by crowds of delighted villagers, who eagerly volunteered to carry the body of the defunct tiger to the boat. A stout pole was soon cut and with the aid of some creepers the dead tiger was slung on it, and twelve men, six on each side, carried it between them. The tiger measured 9 feet 1 inch as he lay and was past his prime, one of his front paws was deformed, probably the effect of an old bullet wound.

SIGOL.

GAME LAWS IN CHITRAL.

THE following game laws have been issued for Chitral:—

(1) Certain districts and nullahs, which will be notified from time to time, are reserved for British officials, civil and military, on duty in Chitral.

(2) In all other districts than those mentioned, shooting is free under whatever arrangements the military may make

(3) Persons wishing to shoot big or small game in the reserved tracts and nullahs must obtain a license from the Assistant Political Agent for the purpose. The fund so raised will be administered by the Assistant Political Agent for the preservation of game.

(4) Licenses will be of two sorts:—(a). License costing Rs. 30 will permit the holder to shoot the following animals: Markhor, 5; ibex, 6; oorial, 6; panthers, unlimited; snow leopards, 1; bears, black, 1; bears, brown, 1. (b). License costing Rs 15 will permit the holder to shoot the following animals: Markhor, 2; ibex, 3; oorial, 3; panthers, unlimited.

The period embraced by the above licenses will be from the 15th October of one year to the 17th October of the next. License-holders will also be permitted to shoot game birds between the 15th September and the 15th March.

(5) The use of magazine rifles in the reserved nullahs is prohibited.

(6) The Chitral nullah and the nullahs between it and the Awriet nullah on the right bank of the Lutko river is reserved for the military.

(7) Except in the above district reserved for the military, driving with men and dogs is prohibited.

(8) The Jingoret nullah is considered a sanctuary. No shooting of any kind is allowed in this nullah.

(9) The Assistant Political Agent will make proper arrangements every year for the destruction of as many females of game animals as may be desirable in the reserved tracts and nullahs.

(10) The distribution of shooting nullahs among license-holders may be arranged by themselves in whatever way is most convenient.

Shooting.

CALCUTTA REVOLVER CLUB.

THE fourth monthly prize meeting was held at the Club Range on Saturday morning, the shooting was with the left hand at 20 yards range. The first prize was won by Mr. J. K. Chase with a score of 38.

An American preacher at the conclusion of his sermon said "Let all in the house who are paying their debts stand up." Instantly every man, woman, and child, with one exception, rose quickly to their feet. "Then," said the preacher, after they had seated themselves again, "let every man not paying his debts stand up." The exception noted, a careworn, hungry, cadaverous individual, dressed in his last summer's suit, slowly rose. "How is it my friend," asked the preacher "that you are the only man not to meet his obligation?" "I run a newspaper, he meekly answered, "and the brethren, here who stood up a moment ago are my subscribers, and—" "Let us pray" exclaimed the preacher hastily.

TIBETAN MASTIFFS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—You lately had a note suggesting the securing of a few stock mares and stallions of the true Tibetan breed, and it is to be hoped some non-official member of the "Mission" will act upon it. There is, however, another rare and splendid friend of man that could be had from the "roof of the world," the Tibetan mastiff to wit. Outside their own country these magnificent dogs are seldom seen, and it is difficult to define the genuine breed. Two were presented to Dr. Campbell, of Darjeeling, in 1852, and one of their descendants was bought by a Mr. Humphrey of the C. S. six years later. This was a splendid creature—a dog—in form not unlike the St. Bernard that Albert Smith used to introduce to his audience in London, but with a thick coat of rather fine hair not at all resembling the animal figured in Wood's Nautral History. The Bhutea dog bears no resemblance to his big congenor to the north, and what few animals come through the Shipka are but big editions of the Mongolian poodle, the Akas of Assam aver that Tibetan traders are now and again accompanied by wolves (sic) when visiting the trading marts on the upper Dirung, which may reasonably be said to be big dogs, but they refuse to part with them. Judging from Mr. Humphrey's specimen, the mastiff would hardly survive one hot weather in the plains, for that animal had to be sent up to Cherrapunji from Sylhet. Mr. Sarat Chandra might afford some information on the subject, for if one could get even a pup home he'd carry all before him at the dog shows in the old country. Some of our non combatants with the mission should be able to secure specimens when the looting of Lhassa takes place.

CANIS MAJOR.

A MOTORIST'S MOAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you or any of your readers give me their experiences of motor bicycles in Bengal or any other part of India?

My chief trouble, and it seems inevitable that there must be trouble with motors, is caused by the accumulators. I am some hundreds of miles from the nearest dynamo, and on the last three occasions on which I sent an accumulator to be recharged, it returned without any acid and with the terminals damaged. A gleam of hope relieved my despair when I saw the advertisement of a Calcutta firm announcing that all troubles arising from accumulators were at an end, as they were selling a motor bicycle by a well-known English firm, fitted with a magnetic igniter. I at once wrote asking for particulars of what was, I hoped, to be my salvation. After a dignified delay, my hopes were blasted by the reply that "we regret we have no particulars of the magnetic igniter, but the bicycle is the best made, etc., etc., price, Rs. 1,000." I have already had the fullest replies, particulars, and prices from two firms in America about their magnetic igniters, but with a patriotism which is but ill-rewarded, I prefer a British-made article. The British "magnetic igniter" merchant won't help me by advertising, at least I never see his advertisements (nor do you, Mr. Editor!) and when the Calcutta middleman does so for him, the latter doesn't know what he is advertising about. Can any of your gentle, intelligent, and suffering readers (I refer to accumulators!) stretch out a hand to save me from this pit of despair into which I am sliding?

MOTOR.

[We regret we cannot help our friend. We believe these "Magnetic Igniters" for motor cycles are not kept separately in Calcutta. He might, however, try the Simms Manufacturing Co., Welbeck Works, Willesden Lane, London; they are considered the best makers of this sort of thing, and they probably make for the firm referred to by our Correspondent ED.]

THE CALCUTTA SYCE PEST.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Apropos of the letter which recently appeared in the Pioneer, referring to the case in which a khansamah recommended by an enterprising firm in Bombay, who appear, to judge from what one hears, to accumulate an astonishing number of budmashes on their registers, was awarded the praiseworthy sentence of two months' rigorous imprisonment, may I be permitted to offer a suggestion, which may be of service to a few of your readers in regard to obtaining at any rate one class of servants? The servant question is rapidly becoming more and more vexed, chiefly owing to the utter supineness of the powers that be, and I venture to predict that it will not be many years before Chinese servants will be imported for service in the presidency towns where, needless to say, the servant class is seen at its worst. I do not propose to occupy your valuable space by alluding to what appears to me the simple and obvious solution of the difficulty, namely, a properly managed system of police registration of all domestic servants. This system—which I am informed is carried on with most excellent results in Colombo—is too obvious a remedy to need comment, beyond the remark that our police have a natural objection to any innovation which would increase their work, and the local authorities are too inert and too babu-ridden to insist upon any such innovation.

My suggestion, and it is, I admit, "only a very little one," as the servant girl said in Midshipman Easy, has reference to syces.

My experience, and I have employed several score of syces in various parts of India, is that, take him by and large, the Calcutta syce is the absolute worst obtainable. He is lazy, ignorant, and impertinent, and the worst point about him is that, owing to the ease with which he can obtain employment, he is independent in the extreme. As to where he comes from I do not know nor care; as to where he will go to when he dies I can only have a sincere and trustful hope.

I am not writing this for the benefit of the owner of a single office gharry hack, a sort of equine motor car, nor for those criminals who give a "contract" to their syces for the feed and keep of their animals, and who thereby not only ensure their unfortunate slaves being fed on refuse, but render it almost impossible for sane persons to obtain syces on any other terms. These people, I know, do not feel the need of good syces or efficient stable management, but for the Calcutta sportsman, more especially the owner of half a dozen horses or so, who is obliged to be away from home the greater part of the day on business, I would point out the advantage of getting a good native orderly, a pensioner from a cavalry regiment, and allowing him to import his own syces from up-country. I will not dwell upon the good that would be done in this way by providing employment for ex-cavalry soldiers, but will put the matter in a manner more likely to appeal to the general public—an appeal to their own pockets. An old cavalry trooper can be easily procured at about Rs. 15 per mensem, and provided he is a good one—as most of them are, though there are ex-sowars of all sorts—he will more than save the cost of his wages to his employer. He will, for instance, if allowed a free hand, obtain syces from his own country, who will be willing to work in Calcutta at about Rs. 8 per mensem, he is also, provided he is properly treated—and if he is not he will not remain long—absolutely loyal to his employer, and can be trusted to see that the syces do not rob either the horses or the master, and to carry out orders implicitly in the absence of the latter. I write with a considerable experience of cavalry orderlies and know whereof I speak. Of course there are black sheep in every fold, and I do not recommend the employment of any ex-sowar who turns up in Calcutta on the chance of employment, but I am sure that any Commanding Officer of a Native Cavalry Regiment would willingly recommend a trustworthy pensioner on application being made to him.

There is one point I would add, that to ensure satisfactory results, it is essential to procure, or to allow the orderly to procure, all the syces that may be necessary from up-country. This he will have no difficulty in doing provided that their rail fare is paid, and their return fare, in case of dismissal, guaranteed. To merely instal an orderly in charge of Calcutta syces is useless, as the free and independent Calcutta coolie, who has the impertinence to allude to himself as a syce, will not put up with the zubberdasti of an orderly, and if the latter is any use it will merely result in the syces leaving en masse.

I should apologise for trespassing upon so much of your space, but I write in the hope that my experience may be of service to some few lovers of horseflesh who, like myself, have suffered from the tyranny of the Calcutta syce, aggravated as it is by the ignorance and callousness of a large proportion of Calcutta horse owners.

Secretary and Clerk of Course.—H DONNE, ESQ.

First Day, Saturday, 9th July.

THE attendance was very large at the opening day of the big Bangalore meeting and the enclosure presented a very animated appearance. The racing was unequal, and on the whole a day which was expected to have been real good goods for backers must have panned out badly for them. There was a temporary difficulty as to the fees to be paid by the bookmakers, and for a short time there seemed to be some danger of a repetition of the Rangoon trouble, but eventually matters were amicably arranged by the guarantee of Rs. 1,000 per day to the race fund. A red hot favourite in Cocos went down in the first race, three to one being laid on him, and Lancer probably did Major Dougall, of the Carabiniers, a good turn. If so, no one will rejoice more than deponent in the luck of a good sportsman. Again a three to one on chance lost his backers their money in the next race, Gallant being considered to be the only thing in the Arab Plate. Rubric would probably have been better backed, but he looked decidedly on the big side. In a real good finish he just held his own and won by a short head, long faces being once more prevalent. The next three races may be dismissed as exercise canters for the winners, but Bundook ran extraordinarily badly in the Horse Trials. It was stated afterwards in some quarters that he had cut himself and pulled up lame. Certainly he was in a bandage after the race, and it seems doubtful as I write whether he will run on Tuesday. The magnificent finish in the last race has already been alluded to and the mail is going! One thing struck one as peculiar. Though there were too splendid finishes during the afternoon, no one seemed able to work up much excitement, and the horses went by with scarcely a sound from the stand or enclosure. Query—why? Was there no money on, or are people in India more self-contained than at home? Details:—

THE PADDOCK PLATE, Rs. 750.—Of which the second pony will receive Rs. 150. For English and Australasian ponies 14-1 and under. 14-1 to carry 10st. 7lbs. W. I. Penalties—Winners of a race value Rs. 200 or over once, 4lbs.; twice, 7lbs.; oftener, 10lbs. Winners of races of the value of Rs. 1,000 or over 5lbs. additional for each such race won. Cumulative. Allowances—Maidens allowed 7lbs. Entrances—1st June, Rs. 15; 15th June, Rs. 15; 1st July, Rs. 35 (when the race will close), with Rs. 15 more if not struck out before 8 P. M., on Thursday, 7th July 1904. 5 furlongs.

Major W Dougall's ch aus g Lancer, 9st 8lbs	Penton 1
H H Aga Khan and Aga S Shah's ch aus g Cocos, 10st 7lbs	Robinson 2
Lieut-Col J Desaraj Urs' br aus m Mamao, 10st 8lbs	Lansdowne 3
Capt Darley and Neilson's b aus m Felicity, 9st 11lbs	Elliott 0
Major Smyth's b a g Lowrier Rose, 9st 8lbs	Koops 0

BETTING: 3 to 1 on Cocos, 3 to 1 agst. Mamao, 4 to 1 Lancer 5 to 1 Lawrier Rose, and 6 to 1 Felicity.

From a fairly good start of which Felicity got the worst and Lancer and Cocos the best; the former made running to the half-mile post, where the favourite and Mamao, were racing together second. At the distance Cocos came through, but Lancer always held him safe, and won fairly comfortably by half a length, two lengths between second and third. Time—1min. 8secs.

THE ARAB PLATE, Rs. 1 000.—Of which the second horse will receive Rs. 200. For Arab horses. W. A reduced 7lbs.; Penalties—Winners of a race value Rs. 200 or over once, 4lbs.; twice, 7lbs.; oftener, 10lbs. Allowances—Maidens allowed 7lbs.; Ponies 14 hands and under allowed 7lbs. Cumulative' Entrances—1st June, Rs. 20; 15th June, Rs. 30; 1st July. Rs. 40 (when the race will close), with Rs. 20 more if not struck out before 8 P. M., on Thursday, 7th July 1904. 1 mile.

Lieut-Col J Desaraj Urs' ch a h Rubric, 9st 3lbs	Melsom 1
Mr Mahomed Hajee Ibrahim's ch a h Gallant, 8st 13lbs	Heroo 2
Mr S W Webster's b a g Dersion, 8st ...	Hoyt 3
Capt Darley and Mrs Stewart's ch a h Selpme, 7st 11lbs	Elliott 0
Col A Sprot's ch a h Harefoot, 9st ...	Burns 0

BETTING: 3 to 1 on Gallant, 5 to 1 agst. Rubric, 8 to 1 Derision, and 10 to 1 each Harefoot and Selpme.

Rubric got away from a good start and led practically the whole way from the seven furlong post to the finish.

Gallant and Derision ran in the order named behind him until a furlong from home. Here Gallant made up ground on the leader, and at the second enclosure joined issue. A terrific finish followed, the favourite being just beaten by the shortest of heads with Derision four lengths away third. Time—1min. 55⅘secs.

THE HORSE TRIAL, Rs. 1,200.—Of which the second hores will receive Rs. 200, and the third Rs. 100. For Horses. W. A and C. Allowances—Maidens allowed 7lbs. Penalties—Winnear of a race value Rs. 200 or over once, 4lbs.; twice, 7lbs.; oftener, 10lbs. Winners of races of the value of Rs. 500, and upwards amounting in the aggregate to Rs. 5,000 or over 5lbs. extra. Entrances—1st June, Rs. 25; 15th June, Rs. 35; 1st July, Rs. 45 (when the race will close), with Rs. 25 more if not struck out before 8 P.M., on Thursday, 7th July 1904. 1¼ miles.

Mr A W Grosser's b aus g Wallgrove, 10st 11lb	O'Neil 1
Lieut-Col J Desaraj Urs' ch aus g Courara 9st 4lbs	Melsom 2
Mr J McJohn's b e g Bundook, 9st 8lbs ...	Koops 3
Major F C Logan-Home's bk aus g Pope, 9st	Capt Randall 0

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Wallgrove, 3 to 1 agst. Bundook, and 10 to 1 each Courara and Pope.

Wallgrove got away from Courara with Bundook next. In the dip Bundook dropped back last and a long way last at that Wallgrove was never approached, and won in a canter by three lengths, Courara being six lengths in front of Bundook who had passed the pulling up Pope. Time—2mins. 14⅘secs.

THE HIGH GROUND PLATE, Rs. 750.—Of which the second horse will receive Rs. 150. A steeplechase for horses. Weight—W. A. C raised 2st. Penalties—Winners of a steeplechase value Rs. 200 or over once, 7lbs.; twice, 10lbs.; oftener, 14lbs Winners of steeplechases value as above of the aggregate value of Rs. 4,000 7lbs in addition to above penalties. Allowances—Maidens allowed 7lbs Entrances—1st June, Rs. 15; 15th June, Rs. 25; 1st July, Rs. 35 (when the race will close), with Rs. 15 more if not struck out before 8 P.M., on Thursday, 7th July 1904. About 2½ miles S. C.

H H the Sultan of Johore's b aus g Gaulme, 11st 7lbs	Koops 1
The Hon Mr A A Apcar's ch aus g Senator, 10st 7lbs	Burns 2
Major W Dougall's b aus g Quandong, 10st	Hoyt 3

BETTING: 3 to 1 on Gaulme, 5 to 1 agst. Senator, and 6 to 1 Quandong.

An exercise canter of the commonest kind for Gaulme, who won pulling by five lengths, which might have been fifteen or probably fifty for that matter. Quandong had had enough half-a-mile from home and was pulled up. He may, however, prove a useful horse in his class. Time—5mins. 31⅘secs.

THE PONY TRIALS, Rs. 600.—Of which the second pony will receive Rs. 100. For Arab ponies 14 1 and under. Arabs 14-1 to carry 9st. 7lbs W. I. Penalties—Winners of a race value Rs. 200 or over once, 4lbs.; twice, 7lbs.; oftener, 10lbs. Winners of race value as above of the aggregate value of Rs. 2,000, 3lbs. of Rs. 5,000 7lbs. in addition to above penalties. Allowances—Maidens allowed 7lbs. Entrances—1st June, Rs. 15; 15th June, Rs. 25; 1st July, Rs. 35 (when the race will close), with Rs. 15 more if not struck out before 8 P. M., on Thursday, 7th July 1904. 5 furlongs.

Capt A S Toogood's g a g St Gris, 7st 2lbs	O'Neil 2
Aga Mahomed Jaffer's b a h Nippon, 7st 7lbs	Gooloo 3
Mr Reuben's g a h Bisthan, 8st 2lbs ...	Kamad 0

BETTING: 6 to 1 on Ptarmigan, 5 to 1 agst. St. Gris, 10 to 1 Bisthan, and 20 to 1 Nippon.

Bisthan and Nipnon were first away, but Ptarmigan went past without an effort, and made the remainder of the running, winning in the easiest fashion. St. Gris was permitted on sufferance to get within three-quarters of a length, but the other two were tailed off. Time—1min. 10⅘secs.

THE SUBSTITUTION MACINTYRE PLATE, Rs. 350.—Of which the second horse will receive Rs. 100, and the third Rs. 50. A handicap for horses. 6 furlongs.

Mr N R Chowdry's ch aus g Tecoota, 8st 9lbs	Lansdowne 1
The Hon H Thelluson's b nth am m Madeira, 8st	Hoyt 2
H H Aga Khan's br aus g Beadsman, 9st 8lbs	Robinson 3
Mr A Stewart's b e g Carburton, 9st 6lbs ..	Capt Randall 0
The Hon A A Apcar's br aus m Sister, 8st 11b	Bennett 0
Major A C Hamilton's b aus g Scissorman, 7st 8lbs	Melsom 0
Capt Unthank's ch aus m Firecat, 7st 2lbs	Kamad 0

BETTING: Evens Beadsman, 3 to 1 Carburton, 5 to 1 Tecoota, 6 to 1 Sister, 10 to 1 each Madeira and Scissorman, and 20 to 1 Firecat.

Tecoota rushed to the front of a good start—good, that is to say, with the exception that Sister was badly left owing to her own fault. Mr. Chowdry's horse held the lead throughout, but it was the finest finish of the day. Old Beadsman challenged at the distance and at one time looked as though he would win, but he died away under the weight, and Madeira coming with a terrific rush at the finish, passed Beadsman and all but snatched the race on the post. Time—1min. 18secs.

Second Day, Tuesday, 12th July.

The second day was to a great extent spoilt by torrential rain. Only three races were decided and the other two races will take place to-morrow at noon. Details:—

SUBSTITUTION LEONIDAS PURSE.—Rs. 350, second to get Rs. 100, and third Rs. 50. A handicap for ponies. 6 furlongs.

Mr Kindersley's br e m Freda, 7st 5lbs ...	Hoyt 1
Mr West's ch aus m Firebrand, 7st 8lbs ...	Elliott 2
Mr Symond's bk aus m Cleopatra II, 10st	Heroo 3
Mr Webster's br aus m Flight, 6st 8lbs ...	Kamad 0

BETTING: 5 to 4 on Freda, 2 to 1 agst. Cleopatra, 5 to 1 Firebrand and 6 to 1 Flight.

Freda made all the running. Firebrand and Cleopatra joined issue at the distance and a fine race was won by a short head; same distance between second and third. Time—1min. 23secs.

THE EASTERN PLATE, Rs. 350.—Rs. 200 to the winner, Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third pony. For Arab ponies 14-1 and under. 14-1 to carry 10st. 7lbs. W. I. Penalties—Winners once, 4lbs.; twice, 7lbs.; oftener, 10lbs. Allowances—Maidens allowed 4lbs.; ponies which have not won a race of the value of Rs. 150, or over 3lbs. extra. Entrances—1st June, Rs. 10; 15th June, Rs 15; 1st July, Rs. 20. ½ mile.

Mr Moss-King's b a h King Cobweb, 9st 2lbs	Hoyt 1

Lt-Col Desaraj Urs' b a h Delight, 9st 5lbs	Melsom 3
Mr Reuben's g a h Bisthan, 9st 2lbs ...	Heroo 0

BETTING: 3 to 1 on King Cobweb, 4 to 1 agst. Derision and 5 to 1 Delight.

Derision made the running from King Cobweb: at the turn for home the latter dropped back and the cry was that he was beaten, but he came again on the outside and won easily by a length; three lengths between second and third. Time—1min. 29⅘secs.

H. H. THE MYSORE MAHARAJA'S CUP, Rs. 4,000.—Of which second horse will receive Rs. 500 and the third Rs. 300. A handi cap for horses. Major Logan-Home's b aus g Corrie Roy, 7st 4lbs	Kamad 0
Mr Thelluson's br n am m Madeira, 7st ½lb	Hoyt 0

BETTING: 3 to 1 each agst. Misty and Wild Raven, 4 to 1 each Wallgrove, Trenton and Ayrdale, 5 to 1 Leonidas, 6 to 1 each Bundook, Rapid Pilgrim, Corrie Roy and Madeira and 10 to 1 Goldsmith.

The race was run in a furious storm of rain. Half a mile from home Trenton was leading. from Ayrdale, but Trenton died away and Ayrdale won from Wild Raven by three-quarters of a length; about three lengths between second and third. Time—2mins. 29⅘secs.

The two races left over on the second day were decided on the 13th with the following results:—

SUBSTITUTION HEBBAL PLATE.—Rs. 350 to the first Rs. 100 to the second, Rs. 50 to the third. Half mile.

CALCUTTA COURSE CHAT.

AGAIN things are beginning to shape up for the coming Monsoon races in August, and considering how near we are to the first meeting, the horses generally want a good deal of work yet. The past week being all against any quick work; but this morning (Tuesday) most of the charges were slipped along a bit, and, weather permitting, this will be the order of things three days a week, for the remainder of the month.

Mr. Galstaun—who is personally looking after his little lot—and his ponies will take all the beating but I do not think punters will want to look much outside this trio for their money's worth. The first-named is well filled out, and with a little fast spurting, she will be cherry ripe on race day. Then there's Rosalea to be kept in view.

Howe, had out Mr. Bert Allen's string, Nataliant Pat C, and Coal Queen putting in a bit of fast work. I, will be interesting to see how the Cape Pony, Pat C, foots it when the colors are up. I'm told he will be all there.

Four of Smallman's then moved at quick time, Hello leading at the finish. Spillain went two flights of the Horse hurdles, with Bell Brand, shaping well. This same hard riding Jack put in a bit of real graft on a brute, who cleared his first hurdles if he were at Flemington, and then did a circus dance, right on the course rails, but Spillain was not to be denied, and his mount was got back, and made to negotiate the other hurdle.

Beazley was out on a chestnut, doing slow work. Also Mr. Evers on May B., whilst Bloss on a grey, "Hash," and Mr. Wilmot on another started on the far side over the hurdles, the grey taking charge, and only being steadied at the hurdles in the run in. This grey has a great turn of speed and I must give him a little more attention in my further notes.

Later on Mr. Dudley did some schooling; and then put Bellmeah over the hurdles—a few flights. These are a good looking pair, and fit like a glove. The horse is a well-bred one, and has gained no little fame in the ould country, so look to it Wales, when the jump races are on.

THE TURF.

ROYAL WINDSOR MEETING.

A TWELVEMONTH ago the Windsor June Meeting had to be postponed owing to the course being under water, and, as the proprietors experienced the hostility of the elements on several other occasions, it was only in the correct order of things that they should be favoured on the 18th instant. The weather was delightful, and seldom has a larger attendance paid for admission to the enclosures, a leavening of Guardsmen from the adjoining barracks adding colour to the scene.

NEWCASTLE MEETING.

When the Newcastle and Tyneside electric trams are properly linked together that magnificent racing venue, High Gosforth Park, will become much more easily accessible, and, great as is its present popularity, it ought to have even brighter days in store for it. The chief of its fixtures is the Summer Meeting, and as this always fills in a holiday week it receives an amount of patronage which warrants the management in asking that it may be extended to four days. Should the extra date be granted by the Stewards of the Jockey Club it is proposed to promote a big handicap on the Friday, and, by making a complete week's racing in the North, it is hoped to obtain additional support from the South-country stables and also from the professional element, whose presence, of course, always livens up matters from a speculative point of view.

THE NORTH DERBY of 1,275sovs. for three-year-olds. One mile and a half.

Mr F Alexander's br c Andover, by Rightaway—Sister Lumley, 9st 7lbs ...	W Lane	1

(Winner trained by Braime.)

BETTING: 3 to 1 on Andover, 8 to 1 each agst. Lochryan and Bolsover, and 10 to 1 any other.

Andover caught Lochryan on the post and made a dead-heat of it; a length and a half away Inverkeithing was third, whilst Bolsover was close up, fourth, and Killigrew last. A division of the stakes was not agreed upon, and it was arranged to run of the dead-heat after the last race

DECIDER BETTING:—5 to 1 on Andover The pair raced in close company throughout Andover winning a good race by a head.

THE FIRST YEAR OF THE TWENTY-THIRD GOSFORTH PARK BIENNIAL STAKES of 227sovs. for two-year-olds. Five furlongs.

Mr R Dalgliesh's The Laird, 8st 7lbs ...	G McCall	0
Rear-Admiral Lambton's Pelopidas, 8st 7lbs	Maher	0

(Winner trained by W. Pavson.)

BETTING: 9 to 4 agst. Tarquinius Superbus, 5 to 2 Chuckaway, 3 to 1 Pelopidas, 7 to 1 The Laird, 8 to 1 Tuning Fork, and 10 to 1 Vexation.

Won easily by four lengths; a head divided the second and third. Chuckaway was fourth and Pelopidas last.

For the Plate, or, as it is more commonly called, the "Pitmen's Derby," the field was in accordance with overnight anticipations, Nestor, although on the spot, not competing through a fear of his breaking down. This left the field exactly ten strong. Of these the Southern stables were responsible for no fewer than seven, and when one of the Northern trio, Palmy Days, gained an easy victory in the popular livery of Mr. J. G. Baird Hay; there was a burst of cheering which recalled the scenes of unbounded enthusiasm which greeted the triumph of Cliftonhall last year, and that of Osbeck the year before. Palmy Days, a fine, long, raking mare, was turned out in far better fettle than when she gained third place in the Manchester Cup, and she was most decidedly the belle of the paddock. The narrow Merry Andrew was as light as ever; Servitor and Seahorse II. had a sour, ill-tempered appearance, and Roseburn was so heavily bandaged in front as to create an impression that he was liable to break down. The ungainly Sandboy looked trained to the hour, and Pradella carried such a fine polish that at the last moment she ousted Palmy Days from pride of place in the quotations, the Middleham mare suddenly going out from 2 to 1 taken freely to 3 to 1 offered. Third in request was the bantam-weight, Pieria, but the parties connected with Merry Andrew, Sandboy and Cock of the Roost took a sanguine view of the situation, whilst the local public, displaying an infatuated allegiance to the colours of Mr. C. Perkins, would not be stalled off Roseburn.

THE NORTHUMBERLAND PLATE (HANICAP)—Of 925sovs. Two miles.

Mr J G Baird Hay's bl or br f Palmy Days, by Trenton—Pallanza, 4yrs, 7st 11lbs	Heppell	1
Mr W Hall Walker's b c Sandboy, by Ravensbury—Sandblast, 4yrs, 7st 11lbs	G McCall	2
Mr G Miller's ch g Merry Andrew, by Xury —Merryfoot, 5yrs, 8st 6lbs (inc 12lbs ex)	Rollason	3
Mr W M G Singer's Pradella, by Tarporley —Poppy, 5yrs, 7st 11lbs	O Madden	0
Mr C S Newton's Servitor, by Forager—La Niche, 6yrs, 7st 13lbs*	Maidment	0
Mr Spencer Gollan's Seahorse II., by Nelson—Moonga, aged, 1st ...	Randall	0
Mr C Perkins's Roseburn, by Petros—Harton Rose, 4yrs, 7st 7lbs*	Sharples	0
Mr F Langstaff's Catty Crag, by Wolf's Crag—Nobody's Child, 4yrs, 7st 7lbs...	Finlay	0
Mr H J Newman's Cock of the Roost, by Best Man—Galinne, 4yrs, 7st 5lbs ...	E Wheatley	0
Mr Leopold de Rothschild's Pieria, by St Frusquin—Pie Powder, 3yrs, 6st* ...	Hunter	0

*5lbs. apprentice allowance deducted.

(Winner trained by Peacock.)

BETTING: 5 to 2 agst. Pradella, 3 to 1 Palmy Days, 7 to 1 Pieria, 10 to 1 Sandboy, 10 to 1 Merry Andrew, 10 to 1 Roseburn, 10 to 1 Cock of the Roost, 20 to 1 Servitor, 20 to 1 Seahorse II., 50 to 1 Catty Crag.

Cock of the Roost emerged from the paddock a long way before the remainder of the field, but he was brought back, and led the parade from Sandboy, Pieria, Catty Crag and Servitor, with Seahorse II. next, and Palmy Days last. The canter was taken in the same order, and after a slight delay the barrier ascended to a good start, although Servitor half whipped round and thereby lost at least a couple of lengths. Catty Crag jumped off in front of Cock of the Roost, Palmy Days, Pieria and Pradella, but on fairly settling down Catty Crag was followed by Palmy Days, Pieria, Cock of the Roost, Pradella, Merry Andrew and Seahorse II. At the first turn Palmy Days was taken to the front, but going along the back stretch Seahorse II. drew out with a three-length lead of Palmy Days, Cock of the Roost, Pieria and Merry Andrew, Servitor still whipping in. At the half-way Pieria became second, with Palmy Days third, Cock of the Roost fourth, Sandboy fifth, and Merry Andrew sixth, and in this order they went along the lake side. Upon reappearing in view six furlongs from home, Palmy Days was leading, being just clear of Pieria, Merry Andrew, Sandboy, Servitor and Cock of the Roost, whilst Roseburn had now dropped into the rear behind the hopelessly beaten Seahorse II. Entering the straight, Palmy Days slipped away with a long lead of Merry Andrew and Sandboy, with Pieria next, in front of Pradella, and although Sandboy took second place below the distance, Palmy Days remained virtually unchallenged, and, amidst tremendous cheering, she passed the post four lengths in advance of Sandboy; half a length away Merry Andrew was third. Pradella was fourth, Servitor fifth, Pieria sixth, Cock of the Roost seventh, Roseburn eighth, and Seahorse II. last. Time by Benson's chronograph.—3mins. 25⅘secs.

THE TWENTY-SECOND GOSFORTH PARK BIENNIAL STAKES.—Of 187sovs., for three-years-olds; colts 8st. 12lbs., fillies and geldings 8st. 9lbs., with penalties and allowances. One mile and a quarter.

(Winner trained by C. Lund.)

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Apelles.

Causey Park waited on Apelles to the distance, when he drew out and won easily by four lengths.

THE GIBSIDE ALL-AGED SELLING PLATE.—Of 246sovs.; weight for age, etc. Five furlongs.

Mr J S Jackson's ch g Hand in Hand, by Tanzmeister, dam by Despair—Star of the Evening, 4yrs, 8st 11lbs* ...	Sharples	1

Mr M D Peacock's f, by Xury—Lady Salisbury, 2 yrs, 6st 9lbs	Heppell	0
Mr J T Whipp's Polly Jones, 2 yrs, 6st 4lbs*	Hunter	0

*5lbs. apprentice allowance deducted.

(Winner trained by Armstrong.)

BETTING: 11 to 10 agst. Hand in Hand, 3 to 1 Cherry Park, 5 to 1 Mont de Piete, 6 to 1 Ringburn, 7 to 1 Lady Salisbury filly, and 10 to 1 any other.

Won easily by three lengths; two lengths divided the second and third. Polly Jones was fourth, Ringburn fifth, Fair Meddler sixth, and Lady Salisbury filly last. The winner was bought in for 380 guineas.

Contrary to the usual practice, the Newcastle management does not study economy on the last day of its Summer Meeting, and yesterday's card was an exceptionally strong one, embracing as it did the Seaton Delaval Plate of 1,200sovs., the Gosforth Park Cup of 500sovs., and the Newcastle Handicap of 300sovs. To complete the attractiveness of the programme it was known that the Royal colours would be sported for the first time in the history of the Gosforth Park racecourse, and, as His Majesty's Rosemarket was to be opposed in the Seaton Delaval Plate by Coldstream, Livingstone, and other highly-tried youngsters, it was not surprising to find the attendance, as on the two previous days, greatly exceeding the average of recent years. As a matter of fact, the receipts on the "Pitmen's Derby" afternoon were not so large as last year, but the cheaper rings were crowded to excess, and 3,000 more people passed through the turnstiles than when Cliftonhall won for Mr. C. Perkins twelve months ago. The course were well to the end of the meeting, and although the weather was dull and threatening it fortunately held fine to the close of the proceedings.

THE SEATON DELAVAL PLATE.—Of 1,080sovs., for two-year-olds. Five furlongs.

sures testified to the satisfactory dimensions of the attendance. Of premier interest was the Gatwick Selling Handicap, which was omitted from the card a twelvemonth ago and was previously of the value of a "monkey." On the 22nd instant it was raised to 1,000sovs., and brought a cosmopolitan party to the post. Such equine aristocrats as Achaicus, Sweet Duchess filly, and Marozzo, who were making their first plunge into questionable society, were included amongst the combatants, together with such seasoned platers as Cerillo and Energetic. This pair stand out as forcible illustrations of the old adage, facilis descensus Averni, and it is not a little curious that each started his downward career at the same time, viz., on the Tuesday of the December Sales in 1902, when Energetic was drafted out of Mr. Houldsworth's select establishment for 330 guineas to Mr. Southall, and Cerillo was purchased out of Mr. Frank Gardner's lot for 650 guineas by Mr. Parrott, since which they have experienced divers vicissitudes. Energetic was genuinely fancied, but made an indifferent show, whilst Cerillo (wearing blinkers) was the last to pass the post.

CRICKET.

M. C. C. AND GROUND vs. LEICESTERSHIRE.—Played at Lord's on 16th and 17th June. Leicestershire won by an innings and 153 runs. Against a weak M. C. C. eleven the greatly improved Leicestershire team gave a splendid account of themselves. On the first day of the match they scored 418 for the loss of five wickets, and although on the next day they only increased their total by 43, they twice dismissed their opponents for a small score on a wicket which was showing signs of wear. The chief features of the first day's cricket was the batting of Knight and King who, during a partnership which lasted for three hours and three-quarters, increased the total by 291 runs. Knight was batting for about five hours for his splendid innings of 203, which comprised an 8 (4 for an overthrow), a 5, and twenty-seven 4's. Tarrant, who made 84 not out in two hours and a half, was the only man who did himself justice in the first innings of the M. C. C., although J. T. Hearne kept up his wicket for nearly an hour. In the follow-on, Tarrant again did well, and Board played a very useful innings. Score.

SOMERSET vs. WORCESTERSHIRE.—Played at Worcester on 20th and 21st June. Somerset won by an innings and 114 runs. A remarkable innings by L. C. H. Palairet, and fine bowling by Braund were the chief features of this match. Braund found his length, and kept it, and in the first Worcestershire innings took eight wickets for 81. In addition to this he helped Palairet to put up 117 for the first wicket in a little more than three-quarters of an hour. At the end of the first day's play, Palairet was not out 197, a wonderful innings. The total was 314 for seven wickets, and Somerset were 140 runs on. Palairet was dismissed on Tuesday morning soon after he passed his second hundred. He had batted for three hours without making a mistake, and among his hits were thirty 4's. No other Somersetshire man did much, but when Worcestershire went in again they had to face a deficit of 178. Cranfield and Braund bowled so well that six wickets fell for 37, and seven for 50, and Somerset gained a victory much more easily than they could have anticipated. Score.

LANCASHIRE vs. KENT.—Played at Tonbridge on 20th, 21st and 22nd June. Lancashire won by 107 runs. Although Maclaren and Poidevin made only two runs between them, while R. H. Spooner and Tyldesley made only moderate scores, Lancashire did fairly well in their first innings, thanks chiefly to fine play by Garnett, Sharp, Hallows and Cuttell. Kent made 58 without loss before stumps were drawn. Hearne scoring 13, and Humphreys 33. On Tuesday, E. W. Dillon played a good innings, but the chief feature of the Kent batting was the play of C. H. B. Marsham, who missed his hundred by five runs. The tail did well, and when the innings came to an end Kent were only five runs behind. When stumps were drawn Lancashire, with six wickets in hand, were 148 runs ahead, Tyldesley being not out 79. The next day, last six wickets fell for 79 runs, and Kent had to make 233 runs to win on a wicket which was beginning to wear. They began badly, and although Dillon, Seymour, Blaker and Fairservice did their best to save their side, Lancashire always seemed to have the game in hand. Score.—

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY vs. SUSSEX.—Played at Brighton on 20th, 21st and 22nd June. Sussex won by an innings and 93 runs. The University bowlers could make very little impression on Sussex in the first innings, and when stumps were drawn on Monday Sussex had scored 452 for eight wickets. C. B. Fry made his sixth hundred of the season by beautiful cricket, his 150 being put together in two hours and a half; his hits included twenty-two 4's. The first wicket partnership between Fry and Vine produced 217 runs in two hours and ten minutes. Killick returned to form and played a splendid innings of 60, while E. G. Read, a Worthing amateur, made a successful début. At the end of the day Newham was not out 35 and Leach not out 27. On Tuesday these two men remained together until the total reached 551, the partnership producing 108 runs in a little over an hour. Tired with their long outing most of the University team failed to distinguish themselves in the first innings, but Wilson hit finely, making his 55 runs in a little more than three-quarters of an hour, while Mann also played well. Cambridge had to follow on with 346 to make before they drew level. When the day's play ended they had lost half their wickets and were still 208 runs behind. Fry and Hopley played well, on the following day but the University never seemed likely to avoid defeat by an innings

THE SOUTH AFRICAN'S TOUR.

MATCH v. MIDDLESEX.—Played at Lord's on 20th, 21st, and 22nd June. Drawn. A not very strong Middlesex team did only moderately well on the first day of this match, no one except Bosanquet ever being at all comfortable against Kotze's bowling. At the beginning of the match Middlesex lost two men before a run had been scored, both caught by Halliwell, who was standing back to Kotze. Tarrant was missed before he had scored, and very shortly afterwards Bosanquet was caught at slip, but fortunately for his side he was given not out on appeal. He then proceeded to hit with great power, and in the course of a stay at the wicket of an hour and twenty-five minutes, he hit sixteen 4's in a total of 110. Headlam played a good game at the end of the innings. The South Africans made 170 for four wickets before stumps were drawn, Shalders playing very well indeed. Mitchell was not out 26, and Llewellyn not out 9. On Tuesday Llewellyn and Mitchell increased the total by 61 before they were parted, but the tail did badly. Nevertheless, the total exceeded that of Middlesex by 15. In their second innings Middlesex found Schwarz too good for them, and half the side were out for 71, Schwarz having taken four wickets for 8 runs. The tail played up finely, and the South Africans had the task of making 211 to win. It may be mentioned that K. I. Nicholl was out first ball in each innings. At the close of the day the South Africans had scored 52 for the loss of two wickets. Yesterday, Llewellyn and Tancred both played very fine cricket but, except Halliwell and Schwarz, no one else did much, and when the last man went in nine runs were required to win. Amid the greatest excitement the game was brought to a tie when Kotze was bowled by Trott.

MATCH v. WARWICKSHIRE.—Played at Edgbaston on 16th and 17th June. South Africans won by ten wickets. On the first day of this match the South African team scored 200 for the loss of six wickets against a total of 237 by Warwickshire and thus had decidedly the best of the game, although no one could have anticipated that they would win by such a large margin as ten wickets. At the commencement of the Warwickshire innings Fishwick and Kinneir batted so well that 76 went up for the first wicket, but from this time the bowlers always held their own, Sinclair and Llewellyn both being in fine form. When the South Africans went in Tancred played a great game for a couple of hours and was still undefeated when stumps were drawn; his score was then 95. Sinclair made 29 in about ten minutes, and Llewellyn and Schwarz both played well. On Friday Tancred was out soon after reaching his hundred, but Snooke and White made such a fine stand for an hour and ten minutes that when the innings came to an end their side had a lead of 106. As there was nothing the matter with the wicket it was only reasonable to suppose that Warwickshire would have no difficulty in wiping off the deficiency, but although the first two wickets produced 69 runs, the batting afterwards broke down so badly that the South Africans only had to make 42 to win. Glover played a fine not out innings of 73 for Warwickshire, but Willie Quaife failed to score in either innings. Score.—

ATHLETICS

L. A. C. SUMMER MEETING.

Many of those who assembled at the Stamford Bridge Grounds, Fulham, on Saturday the 18th instant, did so for the reason that it was imagined that this would be the last meeting of the L. A. C. on the ground which they have held for more than a quarter of a century. It was in the spring of 1877 that they removed from "old Lillie" to an enclosure of their own a little further away, the Lady Mayoress performing, if we remember aright, the opening ceremony, and since that time many remarkable records have been accomplished. Space will not admit of allusion in detail here, nor is it necessary, for the welcome news was forthcoming during the afternoon that the new purchaser had consented to the club remaining in possession until Michaelmas, thus enabling their autumn meeting to be brought off at Walham Green—an occasion for which we trust an especially attractive programme will be arranged. There was plenty of variety in that presented on Saturday, though the field event naturally made things drag a trifle, and with favourable weather, there was a capital muster. The "old brigade" were there in goodly numbers, for was there not a Veterans' Handicap to be decided? The result of this plainly showed, however, that the weight for age allowance is not altogether an equitable one. One yard was allowed for each year over thirty-five, but David Basan, who has evidently been at work, literally romped home, though the next three were close together. There was a good deal of harmless chaff over the contest, in which the limit man, the veteran J. E. Fowler-Dixon tried his hand—at his time of life—at sprinting, but broke down badly and was lame for the rest of the day.

100 YARDS RACE (for Challenge Cup presented by Mr. W. Waddell, 1870).—L. F. Tremeer (holder), 1; C. H. Jupp, 2. The latter, who took some time to get really going, was beaten, after a good race, by about half a yard. Time—10⅖secs.

100 YARDS HANDICAP (first in each heat to start in the final)

Final Heat.

A B Horner, 9 yards start	1
E C Kenny, 6½	2
F J C Shepherd, 7	3
H P Phillips, 8	0
L F Tremeer, 1	0

A fine finish, inches only separating Horner and Kenny and also the second and third. Time—10secs.

PUTTING THE WEIGHT.—E. Barrett, Polytechnic H, 37ft. 8in., 1; E. E. B. May, 37ft. 2in., 2; A. J. McHutchon, London Highland A. C, 36ft. 8in., 3; W. E. B. Henderson, L. A. C. 0; A. E. Flaxman, L. A. C., 0; P. G. Masters, L. A. C. 0. May was ahead till the very finish when Barrett created a surprise.

880 YARDS RACE (for Challenge Cup presented by the late Mr. Jas. Waddell, 1870).—H. W. Workman, 1; H. Elliott, 2; E. S. Ward (holder), 3. Workman at once made the running, Ward lying last for a time, but subsequently taking second place. At the orchard end in the last lap Elliott regained that position, but was beaten by the Cantab by eight yards; five between second and third. Time—1min. 57⅖secs.—a decidedly fine performance.

150 YARDS BOYS' HANDICAP (members' sons and brothers).—R. Minton (5 years 5 months), 72 yards start, 1; W. E. Pelling (3 years 8 months), 100, 2; L. M., Shepherd (10 years 9 months), 20, 3; H. Venn, junior. (13 years 9 months), was at scratch, Ivor Lotinga (1 year) on the limit, 140 yards, but this infant prodigy did not turn out, and an elder brother (aged 4 years 1 month) declined to take up his position on the track—which was measured on the grass.

120 YARDS HURDLE RACE (for Challenge Cup presented by Reginald Hanson, Bart., 1883).—J. B. Densham, 1; J. H. Jarvis, 0; A. Trafford, the holder, did not compete, Jarvis came to grief at the eighth obstacle, but Densham then had the race in hand and finished alone in 18secs.

HALF-MILE RELAY RACE (L A C vs. South London H); teams of four; each man to run 220 yards.

L A C: L F Tremeer, H Watson, C W Fox and C H Jupp 1

S L H: E H Clube, H O Whibley, E H Montague, and J B Densham 2

Tremeer left off with an advantage of about a yard (time 24½secs.), which Watson had at the completion of the second furlong (48½secs.), increased to five yards. Montague, however, got the better of Fox, who was only just in front (time 72½secs.) when Jupp took up the running. The last-named, however, ran in fine fashion, and, with the wind favouring, covered the furlong in even time reaching the "worsted" about nine yards in front of Densham, the time for the full journey being thus 1min. 34½secs.

120 YARDS HURDLE HANDICAP (first two in each heat to start in the final).

Final Heat.

T F Cox, owed 6 yards	1
J H Jarvis, owed 5	2
H P Phillips, owed 16	3

Another excellent race, a yard dividing each of the placed men. Walters came to grief. Time—18⅘secs.

150 YARDS VETERANS' HANDICAP (members) (one yard per year over 35).—D. Basan, 2¼ yards start, 1; H. H. Minton, pen. 2 yards, 5¼, 2; E. H. Pelling, 3¼, 3; B. C. Green, 3, 4; E. F Vowles, 1, 0; W. C. Kirby, 1¼ 0; R. W. Turner, 1¼, 0; W. Lotinga 1¼ 0; J. P. Shuter, 2¼, 0; J. M. K. Lupton, 4¼, 0; A. J. Fowden 11, 0; H. H. Griffin, 11¼, 0; J. E. Fowler-Dixon, 18¾, 0. Basan gave an astonishing show, and, having the race in hand thirty yards from home, won easily by four yards; the next trio were close together. Time—16secs.

440 YARDS HANDICAP (first three in each heat to start in final).

Workman did not start. Another exciting struggle was won by the limit man by rather more than a yard ; three yards between second and third, with Rees less than a yard away. Time—50⅘secs.

THROWING THE HAMMER.—E. E. B. May, L. A. C., 131ft. 2in 1 ; A. E. Flaxman, L. A. C , 112ft., 2; W. E. B. Henderson, L. A C., 111ft. 9in., 3; P. G. Masters, L.A.C , 0; E. Barrett, Polytechnic H., 0.

200 YARDS RACE (for Challenge Cup presented by Mr. S. K. Holman, 1888).—C. H. Jupp (holder), 1 ; L. F. Tremeer, 2 ; J. B. Densham, 3. This time Jupp made no mistake, and, taking the lead, won the greatest ease by seven yards, Densham about four yards further behind. Time—22⅘secs.

HIGH JUMP.—W. E. B. Henderson, L. A C , 5ft 7⅛ins., 1 ; E. S. Ward, L. A C , 0. Only two competed, and the latter, after his previous exertions, was at once out of it, failing thrice at the first leap set.

ONE MILE HANDICAP.—A. Grossman, Liverpool University, 100 yards start, 1 ; F. B. Thompson, L. A. C., 127, 2 ; F. S. Thomson, Civil Service A. C., 105, 3 ; E. S. Ward, L. A. C., 60, 4 ; P. A. Casserly, L. A. C., 63, 0 ; E. F. Judson, Blackheath H., 80-0 ; S. W. Fowler Dixon, L. A. C., 112, 0 ; H. E. M Martin, S. L. H., 122, 0 ; E. R. Small, L. A. C., 172, 0 ; H. F. Pash, L. A. C., 125, 0 ; H. D. Montague, Malden H., 132, 0 ; G. L. Hosking, Blackheath H., 135 0 ; H. G. Sydes, L. A. C., 142, 0 ; E. F. Vowles, L. A. C., 145, 0 ; H Templeton, Kent A. C., 165, 0 ; C. H. Spendlove, Ranelagh H., 275 0. Spendlove still led at the half-distance, with the field closing up. Thompson figuring to advantage, whilst Ward was going well. The limit man was just in front when the bell rang, but Grossman then assumed the lead, and though Thompson made a big effort down the far stretch, it was seen on entering the stretch that Grossman held the race safe, and he eventually won by eighteen yards. Thompson a few yards from the tape seemed likely to collapse, but by a great effort recovered himself, and just gained second honours by a yard, about the same distance separating Thomson and the virtual backmarker, Ward. Time—4mins. 16⅘secs.

AUTOMOBILISM.

THE GORDON-BENNETT CUP.

The fifth International motor race for the Gordon-Bennett Cup took place on the 17th instant, in the presence of a large gathering of spectators and the leading motor experts of Europe. The weather was fine, and the whole of the proceedings passed off most successfully. Among the Royal and distinguished spectators present were the Emperor William, Prince and Princess Henry of Prussia, Princess Frederick Charles of Hesse, the Grand Duchess Anastasie of Mecklenburg-Schwerin and her sister the Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Mr. Charlemagne Tower (the United States Ambassador to Germany), Prince and Princess Solms, Colonel Holden (president of the British Automobile Club), Mr. Orde (the secretary of the Club), Mr A. Armour (the American millionaire), and many others.

The race was run over a course 87 miles long, and each competitor had to cover the course four times. There were seven controls, at each of which, as well as at the start and finish, officials of the German Automobile Club were stationed. The course throughout its entire length was well sprinkled with westrumite for the purpose of laying the dust, and this it succeeded in doing most thoroughly, to the great satisfaction of both contestants and spectators.

The Emperor William arrived at the starting point at twenty minutes to seven o'clock from Homburg, and precisely at seven o'clock the first competitor was sent on his way. This was Jenatzy, one of the representatives of Germany, who, as the winner of last year's race, was entitled to this position of honour by the regulations

At the end of the first circuit, the order of the leaders was : Jenatzy (Germany), Thery (France), Edge (England), and Girling (England) fourth. By the time the second circuit was completed Thery had passed to the front, the aggregated times at this stage being : Thery, 4hrs. 46mins. ; Jenatzy, 4hrs. 47mins. ; Edge, 4hrs. 51mins. Soon afterwards Edge had to halt owing to one of his tyres going wrong, and finally Thery won the race amid much enthusiasm, Jenatzy being second.

S. F. Edge, the British champion, was started seven minutes later, the other competitors following as under : Werner (Austria) at 7-14 ; Lancia (Italy), 7-21 ; Thery (France), 7-28 ; Hautvast (Belgium), 7-35 ; Girling (England), 7-48 ; De Caters (Germany), 7-55 ; Braun (Austria) ; 7-55 ; Cagno (Italy), 8-2 ; Salleron (France), 8-9 ; Augieres (Belgium), 8-17 ; Opel (Germany), 8-24 ; Jarrott (England), 8-31 ; Warden (Austria), 8-38 ; Storeco (Italy), 8-45 ; Rougier (France), 8-52 ; and De Crawberg (Belgium), 8 59. The only serious hitch in starting the eighteen competitors occurred in the case of De Caters, whose car obstinately refused for a time to get into motion, with the result that he lost fully a quarter of an hour. The trouble, it seems, was in the ignition apparatus. It was certainly unfortunate for the gallant German, as when he finally got under way he had company in the person of Braun, the pair starting at the same moment. Soon after the completion of the start the Kaiser, who had been gaily chatting with Ambassador Tower and others near him, returned to Homburg, but he was back in the grand stand in the ample time to witness the finish.

The course was admittedly a difficult one and in more than one part actually dangerous, and the majority of the competitors displayed more caution than is ordinarily shown on these occasion. Jenatzy was undoubtedly the favourite from the commencement, and he justified the popular confidence by finishing first in the first round, but when it was seen that he was cheek by jowl with Théry, who had started 21 minutes after him, there was considerable commotion amongst the expert onlookers, more particularly as the Frenchman was riding a comparatively unknown car, the 'Richard Brasier,' while the champion, of course, was on a German-made Mercedes The leading men finished the first round as follows :—

Jenafry, 1hr 26mins 56secs	...	...	1
Théry, 1hr 26mins 57secs	...	...	2
Edge, 1hr 31mins 44secs	...	...	3
Girling, 1hr 32mins 55secs	...	...	4
Jarrott, 1hr 35mins 18secs	...	...	5

On the second round Edge had the misfortune to get into trouble near Limburg with his brake, and was unable to resume until after considerable delay. He had been riding well, and his mishap aroused considerable sympathy. Several others came completely to grief. Opel broke down, as did the Italian Storeco, while Salleron and Decrawberg came into violent collision. The former was driven into a ditch, but fortunately escaped with no more harm than a severe shaking, and he re-started with his machine undamaged. At the end of the second round Théry, who had been riding superbly without a hitch, had secured first place. His time from the start, excluding as before, the time spent on the various controls, was officially stated at 2hrs. 53mins. 43secs. with Jenatzy (2hrs. 55mins. 29secs.) second, Girling 3hrs. 7mins. 21secs. third, Decrawberg (3hrs. 31mins. 11secs.) fourth, Decaters 3hrs. 32mins. 52secs. fifth, and Edge 4hrs. 4mins. 54secs. sixth.

In the third round the competitors began palpably to tail off and it became evident that the race lay between the leading Frenchman and German representative. At the end of the third round Théry was first in 4hrs 23mins. 40secs. and Jenatzy second (4hrs. 33mins 15secs.), both times being net. There were more mishaps in the concluding round, but the two leaders rushed along without a hitch of any kind, and finally the Cup was won by Théry, whose time for the whole distance (net) was 5hrs. 50mins. 3secs. Jenatzy being second (6hrs. 1min. 28secs.) Decaters was placed third, his time being 6hrs. 46min. 31secs. ; Braun, 6hrs. 79mins. 49secs. fourth ; Werner, 7hrs. 32mins. 11secs. fifth ; Lancia, 5hrs. 17mins. 54secs. sixth, Salleron, 7hrs. 15mins. 3secs. seventh.

POLO.

At Roehampton, in the final of the Public Schools Tournament, the Old Harrovians beat the Old Rugbians by three to two. In the preliminary of the Regimental Tournament, the 1st Life Guards defeated the 1st Lancers by three to two. In the semi final of the Open Cup, Roehampton defeated Rugby by four to three, Hurlingham by five to three The House of Lords consisting of Lord Wicklow, Marquis of Waterford, Duke of Westminster, and Lord Harrington, defeated the House of Commons, consisting of Messrs. Raymond Greene, F. S. Mildmay, Lord Willoughby, DeEresby and Mr. Winston Churchill. At Ranelagh for the Open Cup, Rugby, by six to three defeated Roehampton, and by seven to three defeated Handley Cross. Twelve teams competed. On Aldershot day, Tuesday, the preliminary ties consisted of four periods of eight minutes each, the semi-final lay between the Aldershot Staff and a team of the 8th Hussars, 21st Lancers and the 13th Hussars. Off these teams the Aldershot Staff and the 21st Lancers won their matches and met in the finals. The Aldershot Staff had considerably the better of the game and won by six to one.

SWIMMING AND WATER POLO.

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.

At the Bath Club, on the 23rd instant, the Inter-'Varsity swimming matches ended very much as expected, Cambridge winning for the fourth successive year. However, the Oxonians made a much bolder show than had been expected for tieing in two of the three swimming races that decide the contest they were only beaten in the odd events. However in both the team and waterpolo event which have no bearing on the actual match, the Light Blues were superior in every way. During the evening Misses Ada Lewin, Amy Daly and Mabel Andrews gave a nice exhibition of fancy swimming. The officials were : Messrs. W. H. M. Marx, H. E. Webster, G. H. Roke, W. F. Hill and H. L. Beale, all of the Otter S. C. Mr. W. H. Grenfell presided. Details :—

Verry had matters all his own way from start to finish, and in the end was content to win by a length of the bath from Morris. A very fine race took place between Fleming and Davis for third place, which, had it been secured by Cambridge, would have won them the match. In turn both led, but, staying better, Fleming got home first by three yards. Verry's time was 6mins. 56⅘secs.

This race ended in a tie, both scoring 5 points.

Webb showed excellent form, and won by three yards ; a yard between second and third. Time—68⅘secs.

The race ended in a tie—5 points each.

Cambridge, who won the first race—the other two being drawn—thus won the match by 1 event to 0.

TEAM RACE.

For this event the teams were exactly the same as those that took part in the polo match. Cambridge led from start to finish, and in the end won very easily by twenty-four yards. Time—3mins. 50secs.

WATER POLO.

Cambridge won by six goals to three.

Oxford defended the deep end in the first half, and within a minute had scored, Sutton, who had been allowed to get clear, scoring easily. However, the Cantabs then completely outplayed their opponents and scored goal after goal, Verry scoring no less than four, and Gibson, Craig, and Webb one each. Afterwards Oxford showed a decided improvement in their play, and throughout the second half, notwithstanding the fact that two of their men suffered from cramp, were doing better. They scored goals through Fry and Morris, and in the end were beaten by six goals to three.

Oxford : P. W. Low (Worcester) (goal), E. S. Morris (Hertford), and J. E. Raphael (St. John's, (backs), G. S. Hemming (Trinity), (half-backs), H. Fry (St. John's) H. W. Verney (Balliol), and H. Sutton (Jesus), (forwards).

Cambridge : E. P Canston (Pembroke) (goal), T. Kingdom (King's), and C. F. Loram (King's), (backs), H. R. Sanders (Trinity Hall), (half backs), A. C. Gibson Craig (Trinity), B. T. Verry (Pembroke), and W. R. V. Webb (Trinity Hall), (forwards).

ROWING

OXFORD UNIVERSITY CHALLENGE SCULLS.

The final heat of the Challenge Sculls was rowed on Saturday, the 10th instant Fine weather prevailed, but there was a strong south-westerly wind, which for the most part was dead against the competitors. Having drawn a bye, C. G. Kay Monat, University, had to oppose A. Roberts, Christ Church, but as was in the case of the previous heats the final produced a very poor race, and throughout the series the form displayed has been of a very mediocre character. Kay Monat had second station and rowing a long-tailing stroke, at once began to draw up, so that at the Weirs Bridge he was about a length and a half to the good. Roberts held his own pretty well until coming out of the Gut, where he took a course too close to the Oxfordshire shore and got right up against the bank. In the meantime Kay Monat had got in a line for home, although coming out of the Gut he went somewhat wide. From this point, however, under the guidance of Ned Bowles, he kept a splendid course, while his opponent, on the other hand, now came right across the river. The University sculler gained further ground along the wall and, although Roberts spurted, he was beaten after passing the Cherwell, twice he nearly brought his boat over, and finally Kay Monat passed the post an easy winner by about five lengths. The winner was admirably steered by the veteran sculelr, Net Bowles, who had also superintended his work during practice.

THE WEASEL.

Hunting.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

ANOTHER season with this distinguished pack is now upon us, and everything points to success. An old and trusted Master—probably the greatest expert in his own particular line, in India—a brace of "Whips," who have already come successfully out of their apprenticeship (and Colonel Sheringham looks for the high standard of efficiency he himself so ably sets); a pack of hounds that even at this early period have given us a taste of their quality. These be the ingredients—the whiskey, the sugar, and the lemon—that go to make a mighty pleasing brew. All that remains to complete the delightful concoction is the harmless, though necessary, water of a generous subscription and one need, I feel confident, have no doubt that the Poona public will fare in this respect, more especially since, I believe, His Excellency Lord Lamington General Sir Archibald Hunter, General Richardson, and many others have already promised their support.

Hunting! What a thrill the very thought of it causes? How it sends the blood coursing through the veins even of those of us who for one reason or another, be it lack of faith or loss of nerve, lack of wealth or loss of health, find ourselves unable to follow the pursuit we loved so well. Naturally hunting out here lacks much of the wondrous charm of the genuine article at home. It would be folly to argue otherwise. The climate, the country, with its ever pleasing variety of fences and "going." The green fields and the yellow-flowered gorse. The beautifully turned-out horses—the pick of the world. The faultlessly turned-out men and women—also the pick of the world All these make for an incomparable sport. Here in the arid East the ginger bread is scraped of part of its gilt. The sheet-rock and boulders of the Deccan are more sporting than beautiful, and it is, I was surprised to find last year, the fashion for sportsmen to adopt a costume as en grande tenue for the Indian hunting field that one would be ashamed to put on for the hunting of any self-respecting English rat. But even shorn of the outward splendour the innate glory of the sport still remains. "You many break, you may shatter the vase as you will, but the scent of the roses will hang round it still." But I have sadly overrun the line—as an old hound will at times from over zest. To leave generalizing and return to stern reality I have been wonderfully fortunate in having enlisted the sympathy of more than one good sportsman whose knowledge, perception and discretion I am sure I can trust and whose kindness in promising to keep one acquainted with the season's sport I most gratefully acknowledge in advance.

Yerowda Jail is ever a popular meet for those who are lucky enough to be without its grim portals, and a field of about thirty accepted the Master's invitation to a bye day on the 3rd of July, and must have blessed their stars that they did. It was an ideal hunting morning, cloudy and cool—pleasant enough to put any M. F. H. on good terms with himself, his hounds and the world at large. True to time the Master moved off in the direction and almost up to the Kalas Road, drawing some very likely looking wild ground, any one of the hillocks or hollows of which might well have held the ever-longed-for varmint, but it was not till a tight handed sweep of a mile or more had been made that a trace of sprightly little foxen were viewed away, making in the direction of the Jail. Of these, over freshly ploughed land, exuding the pent up vapours of an Indian soil, hounds could make nothing and, after making an unsuccessful cast in the large Yerowda nullah, Colonel Sheringham wheeled left-handed towards the sister hills. Out of a clump of rocks and cactus in the distance no less than a brace of jacks were viewed stealing away, heading, naturally enough, for the distant hills, and with commendable promptitude Colonel Sheringham clapped hounds on the line and with a great burst of music they streaked away to a breast high scent—such a scent as makes horses gallop all they knew to keep with hounds, and gives no chance to any hapless mortals who fail to secure a favourable start, and I hear there were a few thrusters who found themselves unexpectedly at the wrong end of the hunt to their chagrin and disgust. The going after the first half-mile was, I hear, wonderfully good, as after struggling through boulders and nullahs which required a bit of doing, excellent grass land and plough, not too holding, gave the gallopers a chance. Straight as the crow flies the jack, on which hounds got away, made his point for Temple Hill, the rocky fastnesses of which afforded him sanctuary with but little time to spare. Time from view to finish has been given to me as 12 minutes and "very fast without the semblance of a check" the verdict. In addition to the Master and his whips, who are ever where they ought to be, those bang up in the flight included Mrs. Arthur Lucas on a good looking bay waler, Mrs. Charles Beatty on her multiprize winning country-bred Vigilance, Major Elliot, R. A. M. C., on a fine weight-carrying chestnut, a Sergeant Major from Kirkee (who showed his appreciation of the good thing he had just enjoyed by taking an almighty crumpler right at the end of it), Mr. Hore on an Arab pony that seemed very much at home from all accounts over the rocks and stones, and doubtless there were others whose names or deeds of valour may have escaped the memory or observation of my kindly informants, in which case I can only express my regret at the unintentional omission of their claims to immortality in this chronicle. After a short breather which was earnestly needed by men, women, horses, and hounds, the Master drew back towards Yerowda and hounds soon hit on what seemed to be a stale line and while working it out patiently up jumped a frolicsome chinkara in full view. Hounds would have to have come straight from Paradise to spurn such temptation as this and before the whips could stop them they twist in merry cry till Mr. Armstrong and a native whip were able to gallop round them and administer justice. After this back to the jail where many people had wheels to take them back to Poona. Everyone seems to have been delighted with what was evidently a most sporting morning.

The opening meet of the season proper was appropriately a Lawn Meet in the grounds of Government House where Lord and Lady Lamington provided early morning refreshment for all. The meet was naturally of the Bank Holiday order, the dual attraction of gubernatorial realms and the prospect of being photographed proving baits to lure many that the "mere sport" would not have brought so far in the grey of the morning. Among others "too numerous to mention" in the fashionable throng were Their Excellencies, staff and a house party specially imported from Bombay hunting grounds, Sir Archibald Hunter, General and Mrs. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lucas, Mrs. Crowe, Major and Mrs. Cleveland, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Beatty, Colonel Channer, Major England, Colonel Henderson, Colonel Bull, Miss. Fulton, Miss Anderson, Mrs. Eaton Evans, and everyone was glad to welcome Mr. Lord, the Master of the Bombay Hounds, and Mr. Harter, his first whip. There was in all a field of close on a hundred which must have been a source of great gratification to Colonel Sheringham.

The actual venue was the Clock Tower and about 6-15 the Master made a move through Government House grounds in the direction of Aundh, drawing some fields of mixed crops, then wheeling right drew the Botanical Gardens which frequently holds a jack, but was on this occasion drawn blank much to everyone's disappointment. Entering the demesne again by the north gate the Master put hounds into some lucerne fields where no less than three jack broke away without delay, feeling that the succulent grass was not calculated to afford them very satisfactory cover. Of these a brace broke away in company towards Bamburder Hill with three or four couple of hounds in pursuit, and Major Elliott and Captain Bayford in attendance, presumably with the object of whipping them off. The main body of the pack settled down to a big dog jack and ran him at a good pace parallel with the Moota river till he found safety in an extensive mass of the abominable eastern growth yclept prickly pear in Bopari village. Hounds hunted him out of this hideous form of cover with great tenacity, eventually driving him out on a line almost identical with the one he came till eventually he went to ground in a drain close to the Government House stables. I have had so many and such varying accounts of the time of this little hunt that I can only give the "mean time" as 20 minutes.

Colonel Sheringham then jogged down the Aundh Road till he reached some pan gardens into which hounds threw themselves and it was speedily apparent that a jack was on foot. Pashan was evidently the point of this varmint, but hounds were dying for blood after their recent disappointment, and getting quickly on to the line raced after their quarry at a great pace till they eventually got a view after which they never gave him any real chance of escape and bowled him over near the foot of the range of hills—a smart burst of about seven minutes over good but heavy going Such a day of tumbling about and disasters has, I believe, seldom been known in Poona. The canal that runs through Ganeshkhind grounds coupled with a slippery take off and landing was responsible for most of the destruction, no less than four floundering in the mud at one moment. Among those who had the destruction of 'coming it' were Sir Archibald Hunter, Miss Fulton, Captain Laing, all of whom however chose soft falling. For more serious was this case of Captain Parry's good horse the Dane who slipped badly on taking off and broke its neck. Much sympathy was felt for the popular gunner on his loss. A photograph of the Field was taken and so ended a very enjoyable day.

SCARAMOUCH.

THE OOTACAMUND HUNT.

THE weather lately has been very wet and stormy and only very small fields have turned out at the meets during the past few weeks. Now, however, we are enjoying a break in the monsoon and a great many people are hunting again. Monday's (4th) meet was very wet and the many days of unceasing rain had soaked the country, but scent appeared fairly good except where water was standing on the ground. The meet was at Brooklands, and in the Covert near by hounds opened on a line, hunting it slowly across the road above Black Bridge. As it seemed to be bad the master took them back to the covert and drew it again without finding. On calling them out on the Sandy Nullah side they hit it off again and hunted over the brow of the hill above the Toll Bar, where scent improved. Swinging to the right they ran smartly down to the Demon Valley stream, which was in heavy flood and the jack changed his mind about crossing. Turning down stream towards the Toll Bar he took us up the hill again and then ran back into Brooklands. Another jack must have come into the covert while we were away for there were now two on foot. Hounds divided, a few couple forcing their jack out on the Demon Valley side, across the stream and up to Rocky. Not knowing that this was a fresh jack the master followed them and unfortunately parted company in the stream. The master swam out at one side only to find that his horse had gone back at the other. He followed the hounds on foot however, until a second horseman brought the horse back by the Black Bridge Guessing that the jack's point was Waterfall Shola he went there and found that hounds had run him to ground in the rocks. Meanwhile the rest of the pack had rattled the first jack round and round Brooklands until they killed him in covert. As everybody was wet to the skin and the field had gone home the master took hounds back to kennels.

Between this day and Thursday (7th) there was the break in the rains I have spoken of above and quite a large field was at Kandal Cross Roads that morning. We first drew Mills' Covert and a dog and a jack both went away. Hounds settled to the jack very quickly and gave him no chance, coursing him as far as Pearl crossing, where they pulled him down. We then moved towards Newmarket and when crossing below Rallywood picked up another line. Hounds hunted this through the bottom of Rallywood and then up to the Krummund Road where they checked. The master cast them forward and they hit off the line again and carried it into Monkey Shola. From this the jack declined to break and after hunting him up and down the covert for a few minutes we lost him. He probably got to ground.

We then drew down Rawling's Nullah and along the west side of Newmarket towards the Gold Mine Crossing, up stream again down Lawley's Course without finding. In Briar Shola we found at once and after running a ring in covert the jack broke across the road, ran through the upper part of the covert and came out above Herbert Plantation. He kept along the ridge, as if for Staircase, but, turning to the right, went down into the Yemakal Valley and then, swinging again to the left, entered Yemakal Shola. Hounds took him straight through and were away on the other side long before any of us could get there. He now crossed the valley, and the steep hill behind Karumuda Shola left us still further behind hounds. Past Tugurmund, however, we found the jack had entered an underground water-course and been killed there. This was a fast and severe run.

CYCLING AND MOTORING AT HOME.

LONDON, 24th June 1904.

THE Polytechnic Cycling Club have for some time now held the reputation of being the best cycle race meeting organizers in London and the first meeting of the year held by them last Saturday at the Crystal Palace track was in every way up to the average. It was a fine afternoon even if the wind was a bit troublesome to the competitors and a fair gathering of spectators put in an appearance. The event on the programme that proved the tit-bit of the meeting was the team race between four riders representing London and four representing the Rest of England. Both teams were evenly matched, London consisting of R. Janson, A. E. Wills, Leon Meredith and H. D. Buck, and the Rest by J. S. Benyon, E. Payne, C. E. Baker and A. Gell. Four heats over a mile decided the contest which resulted in a victory for the Londoners by 5 points the Rest of England have 21 points against them, to 17 against the London men. Next in importance was the five miles scratch race for the 50 guinea "Sportsman" Cup put up for the first time this year. Three heats were necessary and these were decided over a distance of two miles, leaving for the final heat over the full distance, as nice a body of speedy amateurs as any one might wish to see, who covered the five miles in 11mins. 437/5secs. The finish was of an exciting character E. Payne just snatching a victory from A. E. Wills by inches with R. Janson a good third. A one lap scratch race was won by George Calder with F. S. Wills second and A. J. Cherry, an old time racing man, third. J. S. Benyon lodged a protest against A. E. Wills for boring in the 5 miles event but the protest was overruled.

With a large proportion of the public a motor car is looked upon as a noisy ungainly vehicle that gives forth an unpleasant smell of burning oil similar to a badly trimmed domestic lamp. With the occupants of the car however, neither of these objections carry any weight, for in practice the noise is less than that of horses' hoofs and the iron tyred wheels of an ordinary carriage, and the smell does not communicate itself to the occupants of the car but is left behind. Not only so, but if the car is driven properly, and is kept clean there is no necessity whatever for any smell. The cause of smell is through oil being allowed to get on the working parts of the engine and so becoming scorched, but if all parts are systematically kept clean and free from oil there would be no unpleasant odour.

Considerable interest has been shown in a case that has been before the Lord Chief Justice in Dublin wherein a notorious cycle thief was charged with cycle stealing and ultimately sentenced to five years' penal servitude. This conviction provides a record punishment for such an offence, but, when the full circumstances are known it must be admitted that it amply fits the crime. The prisoner was one named Fern, and for years he had carried on a systematic trade, which consisted of stealing machines and selling them at a low price, lately to members of the police force. Since his arrest over a hundred machines have been traced to his nimble figures. He has served twelve months' imprisonment before for a similar offence, and yet, on his release, immediately returned to his old ways. One feels, however, that the police are greatly to blame, and purchasing these cycles at a low figure reflect gravely on their reputations.

As recently mentioned in this column, the time has arrived when the conditions governing the race for the Gordon-Bennett Cup should be revised. When the first race was held away back in 1900, no one ever anticipated that such keen rivalry would be shown by the different nations as is to-day the case, and in the wildest dreams, it was never once contemplated that to stand a chance of winning the trophy would mean the expenditure of many thousands of pounds. But such is the case to-day, and as an instance we will take the race just run in Germany and won by M. Théry, the Frenchman. The total cost of the race is estimated at no less a sum than one hundred thousand pounds. This figure is the estimate given by Mr. C. Jarrott, one of the English representatives who puts down the cost of each car to the makers as £5 000. Eighteen cars were entered in the race so the cost to the makers amounted to the enormous sum of £90,000 whilst making arrangements for the race and preparing and keeping the course, ran away with another £10,000, in all £100,000. It is not surprising, therefore, to hear, that a conference has been held between representatives of the various Automobile Clubs, where the suoject of revising the rules of the Gordon-Bennett race was discussed. So far we have not heard the result of the conference nor do we expect any drastic changes to be made. The English Automobile Club are in favour of the competition for the Cup being decided more on the lines of a reliability trial but this proposal is bound to receive a large amount of opposition from the French and German delegates.

The Automobile Club have decided to extend its fostering care to the small car of the voiturette class which may be purchased for any figure below £200, and from 29th August to 3rd September will be holding a six hundred miles reliability trial. The trials will consist of twelve non-stop runs of fifty miles each—two runs a day; all starting from the same centre and on consecutive days. There will be four classes: Class A. for cars not exceeding £125, Class B. for cars over £125 and not exceeding £150, Class C. from £150 to £175, and Class D. from £175 to £200. Hill climbing competition will also be included. Particular interest will be taken in these trials as they will bring into prominence cars that will appeal to those of moderate means. It is generally acknowledged that there is a large field open to the manufacturer who places on the market a small reliable car at a figure of about £150, for there are hundreds of people who would take up motoring if the prices were brought down to suit their pockets but who cannot afford the more expensive car nor wish to be troubled with the unreliable vehicles now on the market at £150 and under.

A cyclist proceeding along the Brighton Road last Sunday, paced by a motor bicycle had the misfortune to touch the back wheel of the pacing machine. Beyond having a nasty fall he was unhurt, but a motor car with three passengers aboard, following in the rear was upset. The driver of the car to avoid running over the fallen cyclist turned into the hedge and two of the passengers were injured, one sustaining concussion of the brain and several fractured ribs.

The National Cyclists' Union when allotting the races for the championships to the various centres have always been in the habit of including the two short events—the one mile and quarter mile—in one afternoon's riding. The question has now arisen whether it is a wise decision, for since the two distances are suitable for the same rider it means that a man must either give up his chance of winning both events or else put in herculean work by competing in both. A. L. Reed, found this out to his cost at Manchester last Saturday week. The mile championship was decided in three heats, each of which he won, and he then competed in the quarter-mile championship which likewise was divided up into heats. He won the first heat and dead-heated with Payne in the second, won the re-run by inches and then got up in the final hopelessly done up. He practically won six scratch races in one afternoon, and when whacked in the final of the quarter-mile event, the public seemed surprise. It is more than any man can do. If the Union arranged to run the mile event on the same afternoon as the twenty-five miles championship and the quarter-mile on the afternoon of the fifty miles championship it would be better for all concerned. The programme would in this way cater for the sprinters and middle distance riders, thus collecting together an array of speedmen that would be bound to attract a good attendance of spectators and so swell the coffer of the Union which, by the way, has been none too weighty of late years.

CRICKET CHAT.

THE Karachi Gymkhana have to be congratulated on two most creditable victories over the Borahs and the Parsees, and if any doubt existed before as to the team being the strongest the Gymkhana have been able to place in the field since 1898 when A. P. Douglas skippered the side, it has been removed by their recent performances. Against the Borahs in a low scoring match the Gymkhana with a total of 107 was able to claim a victory by 21 runs, a result largely due to the batting of G. T. Lucas and G. W. Wilson who scored 37 and 26 respectively and were responsible for more than half the total. Lucas' all round play was the chief feature of the match for in addition to his fine innings he captured six wickets for 28 runs. Strange to say although successful with the bat against the Parsees he could hardly do anything with the ball. the only wicket he took costing 35 runs. The match against the Parsees was a very exciting one and was won by the Gymkhana by 16 runs. Captain Price who scored 41 out of the total of 110 and Lieutenant Merriman who captured four wickets for 19 runs had the chief hand in the victory, but O. M. Barnes who took two wickets for 7 runs and E. B. Newton who took two for 27 including that of N. M. Dinshaw, the Parsee crack, whom he bowled for a duck, also deserved well of their side. F. L. Sprott for once in a way did not do much, scoring only 4. while Wilson who performed so well against the Borahs was dismissed for the same figure. None of the Parsee bowlers came out with particularly good analysis, N J. Mobed's three wickets costing 40 runs. I should mention that Captain Price in the slips brought off no less than five catches and his form in the match so delighted a Parsee admirer that he presented him with a bat at the end of the match. S. B. Contractor, a Bombay player, with 20 was top scorer for the Parsees. A second innings was commenced in which they scored 94 for six wickets. G. M. Dinshaw (37) and N. M. Dinshaw (33), doing well. F. L. Sprott, I hear on good authority, will be unable to get up to Bombay for the Presidency Match next month. He will be a distinct loss.

The Ahmedabad season should be a busy and interesting one judging from the pretentious list of fixtures arranged. Nearly all last season's players have left the station, but their places have been filled by several very promising players. The opening match, which was against Guzerat College, resulted in an easy win for the Station who reached a total of 269 against their opponents' 78. The foundation of this big total was laid by Major Clifford who compiled exactly 100 and J. C. Jukes who contributed 81.

An interesting match was played at Bellary recently between the Garrison and the School of Musketry resulting in an easy win for the latter by 164 runs. The Garrison team was far from being representative, C. W Watney, the old Sherbornian, H. J. H. Davson, and E Dickson, three of the best players being absent. The feature of the match was the bowling of V. de Hoghton of the Lincolnshire Regiment, who took eight Garrison wickets for 30 runs, seven of them clean bowled. Most of the School reached double figures, Lieutenant Watson (46) and Captain Matthews (46) being the largest contributors to the total of 235, while Lieutenant Mitford (34), Lieutenant Rolls (22), Lieutenant Homan (21), Lieutenant S. L. Wace (17) and Lieutenant Horn (16) all shaped well.

The Poona Gymkhana placed a team in the field against the local Mahomedan Club last week which on paper was strong enough to have given the Parsees a good game. The side consisted of Captain J. G. Greig, Captain H. K. Umfreville, the old Brightonian, A. D. Wilkins, the old Bedfordshire county player H. B. Hartley, a very promising new player, who has just joined the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, A. S. Noake, N. V. Thew, G. Thornton, S. Ussher, T. H. French, A. H. C. Kearsey and Captain Davidson. The result was an easy win for the Gymkhana by 185 runs, Greig and Thew each making 63 Umfreville who was making his début in Poona cricket bowled very well, taking five wickets for 16 runs. If he can keep up this form he will be a great acquisition to the Gymkhana in the department of the game that it is weakest. Of the new players in Poona this season the most promising are H. B. Hartley, S. Langton, Captain Umfreville, G Thornton, and N. V. Thew.

Two players whom I would bring to the notice of the Presidency Selection Committee are W. R. C. Laverton, of the Seaforth Highlanders stationed at Nusseerabad, who played for Harrow in several matches in 1899, and R. H. Montgomery, of the 1900 Tonbridge XI. The first-named is a good all-round player and when he can get a wicket to suit him is a very dangerous bowler. The latter is a hard-hitting bat and has made some runs at Quetta during the past season. The last match of the Simla season, between Visitors and Residents, which resulted in a win for the Residents by four wickets and 13 runs was hardly as interesting as the other matches that have been played at Annandale this season. For the Visitors whose team included General J. Spens, the old Hampshire county. A. G. G. Pullan payer, the well-known United Provinces player, Captain H. C. Laverton, of the Black Watch, Major Stainforth, the old Tonbridgian, Captain M. E. McConaghey, the old Cliftonian, and S. W. Coxon, the Calcutta player, General Spens (39) and J. C. Tritton (36) were the principal contributors to the total of 145. Lieutenant V A. Keighley (22), Captain Laverton (17), and Major Tod (12 not out) also reached double figures. S. N. Robinson and O. F. Lumsden the two well-known Lahore cricketers divided the wickets. For the Residents Captain F. G. Smallwood (36). Captain C. C. Onslow (31) Captain W. A. Stokes (25). and H. C. Sparke (26) made nearly all the runs. The principal batting averages in four matches are as follows:—E. L. French 31·1, Captain Smallwood 30·3, Captain McConaghey 25, Sergeant Mitchell 24, S. M. Robinson 17·3, and General Spens 16·4. H. Hensman has taken 18 wickets, S. M. Robinson 17, Laverton 11, and Lumsden 9.

FOOTBALL IN CALCUTTA.

CIVIL vs. MILITARY.—This match, arranged by the Calcutta League in the cause of charity, was brought off on the C. F. C. ground last Saturday. There was a huge gathering of spectators, and with pleasant weather conditions and an exciting game, the afternoon's sport was altogether a great success. The Military kicked off, took the ball down and Street was called upon to save. The Civilians worked the ball back and fast and even play followed. Rosser and H. Sherman being conspicuous. Each team forced a corner, but without further success, and the interval arrived with a blank sheet. On resuming, the game continued fast, and both goals were besieged, but the forwards failed to score. At last a foul against Reeves gave the Civilians their chance and Margrett sent in a high shot, which Roberts just saved, and Rosser being handy put through. The Soldiers played hard and Woodings equalised with a fine shot. Play ruled fast and exciting and each custodian was kept busy. From a centre by Kerr just before time Bonar beat Roberts, the Civilians thus winning by two goals to one. Teams:—

FOOTBALL NOTES.

THE West Ridings' team won their last League match against Howrah by two goals to love and thereby secured their position as third in the Competition with a total of 16 points to their credit and a score of 21 goals against 11; a most excellent performance. Howrah have escaped being last in the table merely by having a better goal average than the Y. M. C. A., so the struggle for the wooden spoon has been as close as that for the leading position.

On Wednesday the King's Own and Y. M. C. A. met on the Calcutta ground, the regimental ground being quite unfit for play. The soldier members of the Y. M. team turned out to a man, but did not seem to put much spirit into their play, the forwards being especially slow on the ball and missing several chances. The best man on the field was Stokes, who kept goal for the Y. M. Considering the state of the goal areas and the ball the exhibition he gave has not been equalled in Calcutta this season. Besides other brilliant play he stopped a penalty kick and of the three goals scored against him one was put in by one of his own side and another was from a penalty. The King's Own eleven made a very medium display, and on the whole the game was not very interesting to watch. The Y. M. C. A. thus finish their season at the bottom of the League table in spite of the support received from the military. The King's Own have a total of 19 points to their credit and a goal average of 3·3, and unless the premier Civilian Club have a run of luck against the Rangers, the Locke Cup will once more pass into the possession of a military team.

There can be no two opinions on the success of the League Charity Match on Saturday last, and it is to be hoped it will be made an annual fixture. The day was fine, the crowd was enormous (almost a record one outside the enclosures) and in good humour, and the whole show went with a swing from start to finish. Contrary to expectations the game was a most exciting one and so closely contested that the winners were not discovered till just one minute before time was called. Considering that most of the players had little knowledge of each other's game the combination displayed, was very good and there was very little selfish play. Street, whose right to the post of goalkeeper had been freely criticised, came out of the ordeal with flying colors and gave a tip-top exhibition. Margrett was also strong at back, though, of course, not up to poor Todd, and Bonar, who stepped into the forward line in the absence of H. Cooper, acquitted himself very creditably. The Shermans were as usual very prominent in the forward line, and though the halves were a bit shaky at times, the whole of the Civil XI worked well together and well upheld the honor of local football. For the military Roberts justified his selection as goalkeeper, and in the back division the three halves and Mellor were the recipients of a large amount of applause for the excellent defence they put up against a fast line of forwards. In the forward line the King's Own representatives were the pick. and Street had several stiff shots to tackle from the left wing, but the whole line gave an excellent display. A fitting end to the proceedings was the presentation of medals to the winning team by Mrs. E. F. Carter, and the League Committee are to be congratulated on the success which crowned their efforts on behalf of charity. The sum to be divided between the Hospital Nursing Institution, the Little Sisters of the Poor and a military charity is, I understand, well over a thousand rupees

The ties in the Trades' Cup Competition are being played off gradually, the Medicals, National Association and Mohun Bagan being still in the running. The most keenly contested game so far was that between the National Association and St. Joseph's, the former just managing to win by one goal after a draw. There have been the usual number of protests from the junior native clubs, but provided the weather keeps propitious, the competition will, no doubt, be conducted to a successful issue within the specified time.

"C" Company of the King's Own had no difficulty in disposing of the Calcutta "B" Team in the finals for the Sarma Cup which came off on Monday. Had the Medicals not been disqualified there would, no doubt, have been a different tale to tell and the chances are that the Cup would not have gone into the Fort. "C" Company are to be congratulated. They play a good game, and will most probably annex some more "pots" before the season closes.

The entries for the Shield this year are very disappointing. The 79th R. G. A. and West Ridings are not among the number so the only military representatives are the King's Own and the Royal Irish Rifles. Local sportsmen are particularly disappointed at the non-entry of the Dum-Dum teams as they have played such a good game throughout the League and seem to have a good chance of getting into the Shield finals. The Royal Irish are, of course, an unknown quantity and a lot depends on the draw, but with a little luck one of the Civilian clubs should annex the Shield The entries are:—Calcutta, Dalhousie, Rangers, Howrah, Y. M. C. A, King's Own, Royal Irish, Hare Sporting, Chinsurah, Caledonians, Hornets and Sova Bazar.

The League teams stand as below at present (Tuesday evening) and Calcutta will have to play one of the hardest games of the season to alter their position from second to first. The odds, at any rate on paper, are in favour of the King's Own retaining their present position but whichever club annexes the Cup they will have thoroughly deserved it:—

Teams.	Matches played.	Won.	Lost.	Drawn	Points.	Goals. For	Goals. Against.
King's Own ...	12	9	2	1	19	30	9
Calcutta ...	11	8	2	1	17	21	7

"TOUCH."

The latest rat-trap is described by a contemporary as a mirror which "tempts the rodents to drown themselves in water." The rat apparently looks at himself in this glass, and then immediately rushes off to the sink, turns on the water-tap, fills a pail, and pops in. It is a miracle that the distorting mirrors at Earl's Court do not have the same effect on mortals.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

16th June 1904.

PLACE aux dames! The Irish Ladies' Championship has been occupying the thoughts of all concerned or in any way connected with the event during the past week. Lahinch is a beautiful Links, well kept, well turfed, well bunkered, and well greened, an ideal spot for any trial of skill. The entry was not a very large one, but quite enough to enable the winner to feel that she had earned her victory, and deserved it thoroughly. Twenty competitors drew byes and passed unmolested into the second round; there was sorrow and disappointment when Miss Rhona Adair and Miss M. G. Stuarts cratched without playing at all, but Miss V. Hazlet got a w. o. from the former and passed straight away into the third heat, and Miss Gubbins disposed of Miss Exham, to whom Miss Stuart hads cratched. There were seven other w. o's. Miss Martin, Mrs. Sharman, Crawford, Miss McGaw, Mrs. H. L. Jackson, Miss Perry, Mrs. Maher, and Lady Aileen Wyndham-Quin, and it always seems a pity that it should be so "is there no remedy?" it's a vexed question, and one that will and can never be answered satisfactorily. In the second round all the three Misses Hezlet survived and all but the youngest had drawn byes at first, as also survived Miss Walker-Leigh, and these three went through the third and fourth rounds equally triumphantly, and with Miss Walker-Leigh entered the semi-final stage, when the Misses May and Violet, Hezlet were opposed to one another, whilst the youngest, Miss F., had as opponent last year's Open Runner-up—this match proved a close struggle, the latter winning on the 19th green. At the turn the players were all square, the next three went to Miss Hezlet, but missing her drive at the 15th, after halves at the 13th and 14th her lead was reduced to two, and she also lost the 16th which left her 1 up and 2 to go. Again missing her drive at the 17th her opponent took advantage and squared the match, and the home hole being halved, they went to the 19th, here Miss Hezlet found the bunker guarding the green and Miss Walker-Leigh getting down in a perfect four qualified for the final. Meanwhile Miss Mary Hezlet had also qualified by an easy victory of 8 up and 7 over Miss Violet, Miss Walker-Leigh in the final against Miss Hezlet secured the first hole in 4, Miss Hezlet, however, squared matters at the second by a perfect 4, and Miss Leigh did not again get the lead, she gained the third and by holing a long putt at the 4th was two up; Miss Walker-Leigh won the next hole, but Miss Hazlet took the following 4 and became 3 up at the turn. The 10th and 11th she lost, but took the 12th and eventually won the Irish Championship by 3 up and to 2 play. Whilst on the subject of this gifted lady, a word about the very excellent and most interesting book she has recently brought out, entitled "Lady's Golf" and which is published by Hutchinson and Company, Paternoster Row. The book has 33 illustrations, including pictures of a number of the best lady players in the act of making their strokes, is full of incident, most highly spoken of and reviewed, and is no cover most helpful and entertaining.

And now we must away to the little Cinque Ports Town, in the Corner of the "Garden of England" where Greek was meeting Greek. It was a difficult day for Golf at Sandwich on Saturday 4th June a strong wind blowing from the North-East when the Professionals International match took place This consisted of singles and foursomes and resulted in a tie of 8 matches each. Although two to the bad on the singles England was leading by 8 to 7 before the last four some couple came in with a win for Scotland which squared the great contest. The results of the singles were:

ENGLAND.		SCOTLAND.
Harry Vardon ...	0	James Braid ...	0

In the foursomes both Vardon and Gray, and Braid and Smith went round in about 79, and but for the fact that Vardon was putting badly the Englishman would have won the match. The results of the foursomes were:—

On Monday 6th, on the Deal Links, at the invitation of the Cinque Ports Club a 36 holes Stroke Competition was held by the Professional Golfers Association. In addition to the two prizes given by the Club there was a large donation to the benevolent fund. In consequence of the imminence of the Open Championship several of the leading professionals did not enter, fearing the strain, among those were Harry and Tom Vardon, Sandy Herd and Jack White. The weather was awful, and low scoring quite impossible. The two rounds resulted in a tie for first place between H. Harris (Brough), W. Fernie (Troon), and J. Rowe (Ashdown Forest) in 161. The morning prize of 18 holes was tied for in 79 by Harris, Wynne and Taylor, the afternoon prize went to Fernie in an excellent 76. Thirty nine Professionals returned their two cards.

The Open Championship! The entry of 144 for this event necessitated an extra day being set apart; the competition began on 7th June over the Royal St George's Links at Sandwich. Two rounds were given to the first two days and then a fresh draw took place, and those players who were 20 or more strokes behind the leading score were compelled to retire In the first round the best card returned was one of 75 by R. Thomson; (Braids successor at Romford). The weather was fine but a strong wind blew from the North-East the whole day. It was particularly bad in the afternoon, for it seemed to blow in strong gusts from every part of the compass at the same moment. The Amateur Champion, had a large following strange (or perhaps from a golfer's experience of 10 years I should say not strange) to say he was quite off his putting, and those of the spectators who had invested the previous week in a Norton's Schenektady Putter, now wanted to get rid of the mistakable tool!! Thomson's score of 75 was closely followed by Mr. Jack Graham's 76, heading the amateurs, and this was equalled by Harry Vardon, then came Tom Vardon, James Braid and J H. Taylor all with 77 and with an 80 some way down the list came the next amateur Mr. Maxwell. Again in the second round the early starters had all the best of the weather. R. Thomson playing consistently good golf somewhat surprised everybody by returning another low card of 76 which brought his qualifying aggregate to 151, but again the great point of his game lay in the putting, he was getting everything down on the green, and his figures were wonderful, considering that he three times missed his Tee shot going out. On this day those who were lucky enough to go round with J. Sherloch, the Oxford University Club Professional saw a feat hitherto unequalled in an open championship, that is, the return of a card totalling 71 made up as follows:—out 4, 6, 3, 4, 4, 3, 5, 3, 3=35. In 5, 4 3, 6, 5, 4, 3, 3, 3=36-71 he played two bad holes—a pulled Tee shot at the second and three putts on the 13th green otherwise his game was absolutely faultless. The Amateur Champion was again putting indifferently well, was off his driving, and his 88 compelled him to retire at the end of the day. It was left to the holder to establish a better standard for the compulsory retirement of those 20 or more strokes behind the best, which up to 6 o'clock was still R. Thomson's score of 151. Harry Vardon came in most opportunely or unopportunely with 73 which with his 76 the previous day made him 149. He played superb golf throughout the round; the gale had somewhat abated after 3 o'clock which materially assisted his long game. As on the preceding day the best return of an amateur was Mr. Jack Graham's repetition of 76—and curiously enough the second amateur's return Mr. R. Maxwell's showed also a repetition of his previous day's score 80!

All agog next day went out 52 players (of whom 29 were prosionals and only 6 amateurs namely, Messrs W. Graham, Maxwell, John Ball, Worthington, Mure Fergusson and Blackwell survived) to play in the final stages, of those 52 Willie Fernie, Amand Massey, and Pulford scratched, there had been much rain during the night and the greens were in consequence much less fiery, and there was an almost total absence of wind and sunshine which made the day perfect for golf. Braid seemed to be in a very comfortable position when his morning's card showed 69, by which he led the field at the end of the first round, but White followed up a morning round of 72 with a 69 and Braid was left to do another 69 to retain his lead on the third round aggregate. At the last Tee he had a 3 to tie with White; the excitement was intense, but after a magnificent drive within 40 yards of the bunker guarding the home green he overran the hole and failed to get down the 12 yards putt. Meanwhile Taylor, too, had arrived at the 18 Tee wanting a 3 to tie with White's aggregate, but the differences was that Taylor was 64 from 17 holes. In two fine shots he reached the green leaving himself a 10 yards putt to tie but the ball trickled along the edge of the hole and the four then brought his round to 68 and established a record for the Open Championship. Jack White is well worthy of the highest honours in the game, he was runner up on the same links five years ago, he now takes the Championship back over the Border to bonnie Scotland! As is well known to all by now the rounds of the first three heading the list were as follows:—

Jack White	... 80	75	72	69	296
James Braid	... 77	80	69	71	297
J H Taylor	... 77	78	74	68	297

Ten years ago when Taylor won the "Open" at Sandwich with 326 the score was considered a very fine one, five years later Harry Vardon won with 310 and now Jack White has brought it off with 296. These are remarkable facts and the rapid improvement in scoring is not to be accounted for by any equivalent change in the conditions. The Links are precisely the same length as ten years ago, and the Bunkers have undergone no change. Clubs too are much the same, and the only new factor is the rubber cored ball, but any advantage conferred by it was discounted this year by the extreme narrowess of the course which with the high winds blowing made the increased length gained by using the rubber cored balls a dangerous and doubtful blessing. The truth is the standard of golf is steadily improving in all the branches of the game. The old idea for stroke play was the "Safety" game, now all is changed it is neck or nothing. If a hole can be reached in 2 shots the attempt must be made whatever is betide and much practise has given players confidence to attempt and accomplish successfully the most daring strokes; and the whole game has thereby been elevated to a higher plane of achievement such is the condensed opinion of one who knows and understands and doubtless there is even more in it than meets the eye.

STRAY NOTES.

From Vol. XV, No. 4, of the Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society.

MELANISM AMONGST PANTHERS.

I DO not know if the information is of any value beyond being corroborative, but on 20th March, some forest employés working in the forest near Hopin in the Bhamo District of Upper Burma came upon a black female leopard with cubs in a large hollow tree. They returned to camp and came out with an elephant, which scared the mother leopard and she bolted. The men were then able to secure the cubs, one of which was black, while the other was the ordinary spotted yellow kind. The latter died, but the black one is alive and doing well, and I propose to take him home next month for the London Zoo. This seems to make it perfectly clear that the black leopard is only a freak.

The cub I now have has a number of solitary white hairs all over the body and legs, and the whiskers are pure white In certain lights the ordinary leopard spots can be distinctly seen, being jet black on a muddy black fur. I hope to watch the development of colour.

THE OCCURRENCE OF RARE BIRDS IN INDIA.

On the 7th instant a fine male specimen of the pink footed goose (Anser brachyrhynchus) was brought to me by a native shikari. The bird was one of a flock of about forty geese, probably not all of this species, and was shot on the banks of the Brahmaputra whilst working up stream preparatory to migration to North-East China. The colours of the soft parts were as follows:—Iris, red-brown; feet, brilliant crimson-pink; bill, brilliant crimson-pink; commissure of lower mandible, yellowish; nail, black, but the edges paler.

Mr. N. S. Mondy saw two birds, which he believed to be of this species, in a large gaggle of geese on a chur in the same river. He could not get near enough for a shot, but, even at the distance he was, the feet and bill were rendered conspicuous by their brilliant colour.

Mr More shot two female ducks (Anas zonorhyncha) on the Sissi bheel on the 6th March. The birds were two out of a flock of about forty. It would seem, therefore, that zonorhyncha and not poecilorhyncha is the typical form of spot-bill found in the extreme East of Assam. In Cachar, Manipore and Gowhatty the form is poecilorhyncha.

Outside span	... 43½"

According to Mr. R. Lydiekker, the gaur's head in this Society's Museum, the measurements of which are given above, is the largest specimen on record. The animal is said to have been killed by wild dogs in Salwen in Burma, and was presented to us by Mr. A. J. A. Jardine in 1897.

LATE STAY OF SNIPE.

Last hot weather an orderly came to me one afternoon and brought news that in some paddy fields that had recently been flooded by Burmans a considerable quantity of snipe had congregated together. As I had thought to see no more of these birds that season, I was somewhat sceptical as to the truth of the report. The first time on which I paid these inundated fields a visit, I had ridden thirty miles in the morning; but as two friends were arriving on the following day, I made up my mind to prospect the swamp and see whether it would be worthwhile giving them an outing. The following three excerpts from my shooting diary may be of general interest, not on account of the average number of cartridges per bird, for the shooting was very indifferent, but by reason of the dates and the size of the bags:—

29th March, Kalemyo.—16 snipe, 1 redshank, 1 snippet (shot by mistake out of a whisp); self out. My gun did not arrive from Kalewa till 4 P.M., light very bad, and birds wild; lost two more. Out of the last six shots only one bird was hit, which eventually settled in very high grass, but darkness interrupted the search. Expended 49 cartridges.

30th March, Kalemyo.—M—B—and self out in afternoon. Total 14 couple. I was not shooting as straight as usual as guns walked too far apart and birds got up rather wild.

4th April Kalemyo.—Self out. Birds wild and day very hot. One of my boots fell to pieces. 19 snipe. 50 cartridges expended.

On the first day I could not have commenced shooting before 4-30 P. M., as the fields under water were a full mile from my bungalow. As the extract shews, the last few shots were fired in semi-darkness. This, coupled with the fact that I had just arrived from a 30-mile ride, was hardly conducive to straight shooting. The second effort on 30th March was rendered a failure by the other two guns constantly breaking the line in pursuit of flushed birds that had got up out of range and settled again at no great distance. 4th April was the best day of the three, and, had not the sole of my boot come off, the bag would have been larger.

The heat of the sun was terrific, and it was almost an impossibility to keep the hands on the barrels after firing a right and left.

I did not again venture out after them as on the 13th April I was after gaur

These snipe were evidently on their migratory trip northwards.

Whether the flooded piece of land received new recruits every night between the above dates I am unable to state Even in the heat of the day the birds were extremely wild, but there was no lack of numbers. I am positive they were not there for breeding purposes, as the area was far too much disturbed.

KALEMYO, UPPER CHINDWIN. W. H. LANE, CAPT., I. A., 9th, February 1904. Burma Military Police.

In a recent number of the Journal (page 344) of this volume Captain Lester has a note on the occurrence of snipe at Anmod, near Castle Rock on the 7th, 12th and 20th of April. I recollect falling in with some on a later date and at a point further South namely, Honore (officially Honavar), in the North Canara District. On the 11th of April 1899, I found a number of snipe in a small path of rice in a sheltered valley, and shot four of them. Next day I got two in the same place. There were more, and I recollect that they seemed very tame; but I was shooting atrociously, and the area was so limited that they soon left it. Two years after, being in camp at Honore again, I went to the same spot on the 21st of April, but found only two birds. My impression at the time was that this was a place where seclusion and good fare tempted a few birds to defer their migration.

KARACHI, 2nd March 1904. E. H. AITKEN.

THE BOLDNESS OF PANTHERS.

A short time ago I was camping at the village of B. J. near M., in Central India, when khabar was brought to me of two panthers which had killed and eaten a young buffalo belonging to another village about three miles away; so I determined to try and shoot one of them at least. I at once bought two goats and tied them up and sat over one in a machhaan; they were both placed in nalas not far from the village, but nothing came near my goat the whole night and I heard no sounds of anything; but in the morning my native shikari told me that the other goat had been killed about 4 A.M., and that one hind leg had been eaten; so the next night I sat over this kill, and had the other goat taken back to the village

The kill was lying in the dry stony bed of a stream which at this spot had low banks; there were a few big boulders about, but these were not in the way for shootting. About twenty yards away there was a very small pool of water, but this was just out of sight of the machhaan, which was placed about 20 yards from the goat in a tree about 15 feet from the ground.

I got into the machhaan at 5-15, but nothing appeared, except mongoose and birds to drink, till 8-30, when a panther suddenly rushed up the nala, making a good deal of noise and seized the goat by the remaining hind leg and tried to drag it off, but it was firmly tied to a bush stump He then rushed away to the pool to drink and at 8-40 P.M. again returned to the kill. It was then only just light enough to see the panther, as the moon had not risen. I had two shots and missed both barrels, the panther going away to my right in some thin bushy jungle broken up with small nalas.

At 9-45 p.m. I heard a panther growl almost directly underneath where I was sitting, but I could not see it, as the machhaan and tree were in the way.

At 11-20 a second panther came and I again missed with both barrels; this panther was only a half-grown cub judging from its size; as it was very small indeed. It went away to the right front into the same piece of jungle as the first panther had gone.

From midnight till 1-15 A.M. there was continuous growling about 30 to 50 yards away to the right front, where the two panthers had gone. At 1-20 A.M a third panther came to the goat and began to eat, and this time I wounded it slightly, as in the morning we discovered a few drops of blood about 20 yards from the goat in the direction where it had gone, to the left front, but the ground was too hard for tracking, and we never found it.

At 3 40 a.m. a fourth panther started eating, but this time I had better luck and shot it dead first shot, the bullet entering the right side of the nose and breaking away two inches of the lower left jaw bone; he evidently died practically at once, as I never saw or heard him move again and we found him with his head lying in the middle of the goat's body.

At 4-3 A.M. there was a good deal of growling close to the goat but inside the line of bushes, and I could see nothing; but at 4-7 A.M. I saw a panther walking round the goat in a circle of about 5 yards radius, looking at the dead panther (a male—this, one the fifth, was a female). This time again I killed it first shot, the bullet breaking the back-bone, and I found her in the morning in the exact place where she was when I fired; she answered the shot with a deep growl, but I never saw or heard her move again, and she must have also died almost at once.

At 4-30 A.M. the moon went behind a big hill and it got very dark; however nothing more came and at 5-30 A.M. I got down and inspected the results.

The following are the measurements I took almost immediately afterwards:—

Height at shoulder, standing position ...	26	22½
" " paw stretched out ...	29	24¼
Length of hind leg from stifle joint to tip of paw	10	8¾

You will notice that in the male the girth of the forearm and length of hind leg are the same, 10"; but in the female the girth of the forearm is one inch less than the length of the hind leg.

The next night I sat up again over the same kill, but as this was my third night up I was very sleepy indeed. I had been unable to sleep during the day on account of the heat; consequently at 9-30 P.M. I fell asleep and did not wake till exactly midnight. I then discovered the second hind leg of the goat had been eaten and that it had also been moved about 4 yards; I managed to keep awake after this, and at 12-58 a panther came and started to eat, but I missed both barrels, and he never came again, and at 5-45 A.M. I got down from the machhaan.

This, I think, accounts for five panthers at one kill in one night.

There were the two I shot; and the half-grown cub and the wounded one (4) which cannot have been either of those I shot later, as both of them had only one wound; also there was the one that came first of all at 8-3 P.M. Now this may possibly have been the one I wounded later, or one of those I shot, but if either of these be the case, how can the one that came the second night be accounted, as it was much too big to be the half-grown cub? If it had anything to do with the killing of the goat it would in all probability have come the first night, or else it shows that panthers will eat carrion. It may possibly have been the wounded one, but as it was only evidently slightly wounded it would be quite able to kill food for itself. On the second night it did not appear to have anything the matter with it, and did not walk at all lame. Of course it is well known that panthers will return to a kill after having been shot at from a machhaan, but I did not know that a wounded beast would do so.

The Story Teller.

A PARK RANGER.

IT was rather early in the morning, and the lady on the next seat to mine, having performed her toilet, dropped the comb with which she had been preening her tresses into her handbag, and, taking a small flat bottle and a paper parcel containing food from the same receptacle, prepared to enjoy her breakfast. Partly from feelings of delicacy at disturbing a lady engaged in such intimate domesticities, and partly because I fancied I recognised in her one who had demanded alms (with menaces on being ignored) the previous evening, I turned my back and opened my newspaper. By mistake my newsagent had handed me the eccentric journal which strains at a race meeting and swallows the Stock Exchange, and it was while I was innocently searching it for the absent abomination that the sound of footsteps on the gravel, followed by the sigh of a tired man seating himself, caused me to glance at the opposite corner seat.

The occupant, a greyish-haired man, with beaming eyes and fresh coloured face, appeared to be absorbed in the beauties of nature. He cocked his head a little on one side, the better to appreciate the carol of an amorous thrush on a branch on the opposite side of the road, and took off his hat to permit the morning air to caress his perspiring brow. And such a brow!—so lofty, so shiny, so unwrinkled! A noble feature! He seemed to be aware of its beauty. He placed his hat on the seat beside him and turned his head in my direction His eyes encountered mine, and he nodded.

"These parks guv'nor"—I omitted to say that we were in Hyde Park—"these parks remind a man of the country just now, don't they? I'm a country-bred man myself.'

He paused to allow the revelation to sink in, and continued—

"That there skylark, now"—he jerked his thumb in the direction of the tuneful thrush—"he takes me back to my boy-'ood's days. I'm a plasterer by trade," he added, inconsequently; "been over to "Ounslow this morning." He lifted a dusty boot to attest the fact, and resumed.

"No, no—not plastering, guv'nor. After a job, though. But, Lord bless yer! you've no idea 'ow quick they're snapped up. Trade bad? You're right there. Fourteen of us after one job. What d'yer think of that?"

I expressed surprise at the statement, and to avoid further conversation opened my newspaper. My companion, however, was not to be rebuffed.

"You won't take it as a liberty if I asked you to let me 'ave a look at the outside sheet? You know—the advertisements. Per'aps I'll run across somethink suitable. I can turn my 'and to anythink almost."

Glad of an opportunity to shake him off, I handed him the portion of the paper he had asked for.

"Nothink to suit me there," he decided, after a perfunctory cruti iny of the columns.

I gave him the other half of the paper, but the result was equally disappointing. He thanked me and returned it.

"No racing news," I observed, as though I had hit upon the cause of his want of success.

"Good luck to 'em, I say, for not publishing it," returned my companion, fervently. "It is a 'orrible curse, racing is!"

He waited for my approval of the sentiment, but I adopted a non-committal attitude, and, taking my condemnation for granted, he went on—

"My old father's last words to me were, 'Don't back 'orses, and I'm proud to say I've never broke my promise. Why, where should I be if I 'ad?" cried my companion, as though his present position were the summit of earthly felicity. "Ah! I've seen some things appen through backin'' orses," he added, with a shake of the head—"things that'd make your 'air stand on end, guv'nor."

"Such as?" I suggested.

"Such as what 'appened to a mate of mine, Bill Tremlett by name. 'E was a 'appy man before 'e took to it, drawing 'is thirty-five bob a week regular, and living in a little 'ouse of 'is own down Leyton way, with a bay window and electric bells. 'E started with shillings in the usual way, same as they all do; but, Lord bless yer! 'e wasn't satisfied with that for long. 'E backed winners with shillings, and, thinks 'e, 'Why shouldn't I be doing this for quids?' Well, before long, sure enough, he was baving his sovereign or what not on a 'orse like any toff. Not satisfied with that, he started laying out 'is money on double events and treble events, so as to pull off somethink big. One day he'd got a sovereign on a treble, and the first two horses had come off. I don't exactly remember the amount Bill stood to win if the third horse came home, but anyhow, it was between fifty and sixty pounds. Well, Bill was a very excitable man, with a short neck, and he'd worked himself up into such a state when he knew his first two horses had won that his friends were afraid of his having a fit—apoplexy, ye now. Some of 'em were afraid 'e'd 'ave it if his horse won, and the others thought it more likely to 'appen if it lost, so between them they 'ardly knew what way to break it. As it turned out, Bill's third horse did win, and it was settled by those who knew it first that Bill should learn 'is good luck by degrees, for fear of the consequences.

"'Let's 'ear the worst,' said Bill, in a very chokey voice, when they came to where he was waiting; 'I can bear it.'

"'Sure?' asked one of 'em, patting Bill on the back to keep 'is blood in circulation. 'Well, your 'orse wasn't last, old man.'

"Bill swore a bit at that, because he thought they were getting at him; and then another one chipped in. 'There's no doubt about 'is trying, or 'e wouldn't have finished where 'e did.'

"'For Heaven's sake,' says poor Bill, going purple, 'let's know what happened! You're driving me silly between you.'

"'Well, old man,' said the one who'd spoke first, thinking it safe tourry things up a bit, 'you've saved yourself, I should fancy. You're 'orse was in the first three.'

"At that Bill gave a kind of a screech and a gargle. 'I guessed it!' he gasped. 'My blessed luck! Pipped by a head, I'll bet!' and down he went on the floor."

"Dead?" I said, as my companion stopped

He tapped his expansive forehead expressively.

"Clot on the brain," he replied. "Balmy to this day, and fancies 'e's first favourite for the Derby. Won't take 'is grub, except out of a manger—nor 'is drink, only from a bucket. Neighs at 'is missus and—"

I thought it time to cut my companion short. "Eleven o'clock," I said, looking at my watch.

"My word!" he exclaimed, briskly; "this won't do. I've got to go down to Woolwich. There is a chance of a job there, they tell me." He fumbled in his pocket, and found a crumpled something that turned out to be the return half of a railway ticket. He shook his head at it despondently.

"The fare's eightpence," he murmured, absent-mindedly "It seems a pity, doesn't it?" he continued, after waiting vainly for my comment on his former statement. "Mine's a workman's ticket, and I'm afraid they won't let me travel without paying the excess, and that's sixpence. What would you advise guv'nor?"

I advised walking, and with a look in which contempt and reproach were equally blended he left me without a "good-morning." Certainly, he went in the direction of Woolwich.

* * * * *

About a week later I found myself, somewhat later in the day, not very far from the spot on which I had encountered the anti-gambling plasterer. The fact that I was reading a sporting newspaper probably led me to think of him and his dramatic story of Bill Tremlett's downfall. As I placed the paper beside me and smiled at the recollection, a remembered voice fell on my ear. "Good morning, sir!" I started at the sound, thinking he had recognised me. Evidently, however, such was not the case. A moment's reflection reminded me that he would scarcely waste a salutation on one so unremunerative.

"I'm a countryman, mister,' such was the familiar preamble; and I was on the point of saying he had told me so before, when he continued: "Always been used to 'orses and such-like, and can't live without 'em. I shall be driving a pair"—he simulated the attitude of an omnibus driver pulling up suddenly—'come Monday. That ain't long, is it? Three days? Just so. I got the crib this very morning.'

"Ever drove a 'bus before?" he cried, in reply to my inquiry "Well, I should say so! I've drove 'orses, and I've owned 'orses, and I've backed 'orses pretty nigh all my life. What's going to win the Derby? This French 'orse, d'yer think? Backed anythink? No, not yet; but as soon as I get my first week's money I shall lay out a bit. Go for something, that's my maxim; and I never eld with a bob on this and a bob on that, winning 'alf-a-crown one day and dropping twice as much the next. Doubles an' trebles is my mark, and always was. Well, of course, you can't expect to pull 'em off every week, but once in a while they 'op up, and there you are. You've made somethink that'll take the missus and the kids to the seaside for a week or two, and such-like. My missus is like all the wimmen: as long as things go all right, never a word from 'er; but once yer luck's out, and may be you're a bit behind with the rent and what not, there's no 'olding 'er. About three months ago that's what appened. I 'adn't touched lucky for some time, and, says she one morning when I 'anded 'er arf a sovereign to lay out on a treble that I'd marked down 'What about the landlord?' 'E can wait a bit,' I said; 'we'll pay 'im 'is blooming rent a quarter in 'and if this comes 'ome.' Well, away I goes to my work, and during the afternoon I 'ear that my first 'orse 'as copped. An hour or so afterwards 'ome comes the second. Fours was the price of number one, and seven to two the other. The third 'orse was in the last race of the day, and you can fancy 'ow I felt when he romped 'ome at two's. Thirty-three pounds, fifteen shillings was my little lot, guv'nor, if you figure it out; and, what with meeting one and another of my pals on the way, and standing a round here and a round there, and lending a bob to this one and a bob to that, I was pretty full of beer and empty of everything else by the time I got 'ome. The missus was in bed and asleep, but I roused her out. 'Bill,' she says, looking at me with a sort of a tremble, 'you've been drinking!'

"'I have,' I said. 'And why not? I've won thirty-three pounds fifteen, and—'

"'The landlord!' gasped my missus, with a sort of a ketch and a gurgle in 'er throat. She's a stout woman with a thick neck, and, thinking she was going off with the thought of being able to pay the rent, I gave her a slap on the back to pull 'er together.

"'Never mind 'im,' I said, encouragingly; 'e'll 'ave his money to-morrer.'

"'Bill,' she says, going red in the face, ''e's got it! I paid 'im instead of puttin' the money on yer treble.'

"Lucky for 'er," said my companion, gloomily, 'she did go off this time. Down she went like a stone. It was a sort of a fit, a—er—"

"Clot on the brain?" I suggested.

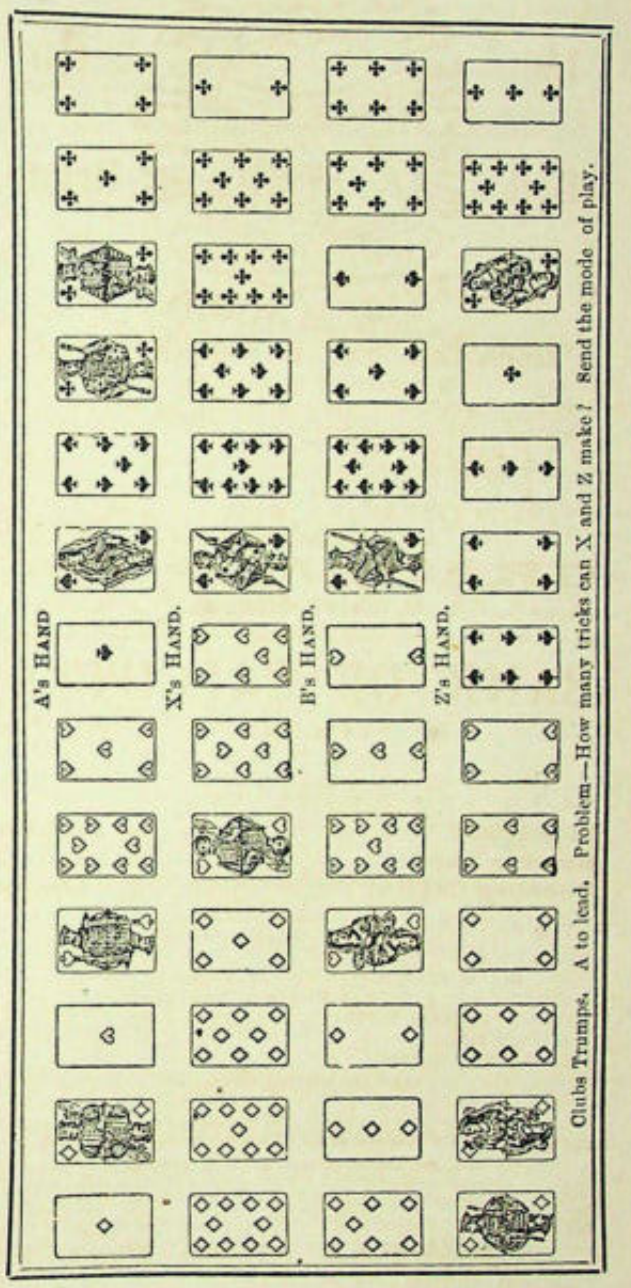
"That's what the doctor said," asserted the man, unsuspiciously. "She was ill for a month—kind of light-'eaded; fancied she was a race'orse, wanted a bucket to drink out of—"

"And neighed instead of talking," I put in. "I've heard of such a case."

"That's what comes of not backing 'orses, ye see," said the man, scratching his head and looking dubiously at me.

"This job I've got now," he said, harking back to surer ground, "it's all right, of course, safe as the Bank of England, if I can manage to get through the next three days. That's the point."

I put my hand in my pocket—for my handkerchief.



"Three or four bob, now," he continued, observing the movement, 'or say a dollar, would just do it. Not as a gift, mind yer—I m an independent chap, mister, and wouldn't ask it—but a loan, to be paid back when I draw my first week's money. Come to that, you could call for me at the company's office. Everybody knows Bill—"

"Tremlett!" I said, softly.

I think he remembered me then. He rose from the seat with a rather sickly grin, and walked away briskly. I have not yet seen him on the box seat.

DOUBLE DUMMY PROBLEM No. 18.

In an interesting article on the snakes in the New York Zoological Gardens, our American contemporary, Forest and Stream, gives some of the most peculiar characteristics of these reptiles. We gather from the article that snakes are extremely fastidious in the matter of food, and, should the meat be the least bit tainted, they reject it at once. Most snakes are fond of very young birds, and a plucked chicken is always offered to invalids, because it resembles a bird just out of the egg. In a snake's delicate tongue seem to reside all his sensory organs except that of sight. The snake whips out his tongue with lightning rapidity, and ascertains whether or not his food is fresh. If his preliminary investigation proves satisfactory, he goes ahead with his meal in a very leisurely fashion. The chicken is swallowed whole, as snakes do not masticate their food. The powers of accommodation possessed by their jaws, however, is something marvellous. A snake can easily swallow an animal four times its own diameter. In fact, boa constrictors manage to get into their throats even fair-sized deer and other large animals. In killing the prey in their native state they constrict it tightly in their folds until all movement on the part of the doomed animal ceases. The popular idea that they first crush the bones before beginning the swallowing process is erroneous. It seems that the gastric juices of snake's stomachs are so powerful that they dissolve even the bones and teeth of the animals they have swallowed. A peculiar fact is that on occasions, when the snake has accidentally swallowed one of its own teeth, the tooth will be found undigested; whereas the teeth of its prey always disappear in the snake's digestive process. The bite of the python, anaconda, and others of his class is not poisonous, but it is very painful. These snakes have well-developed teeth and powerful jaws. There are four rows of teeth in the upper jaw, and two in the lower. The teeth are very sharp. When a boa constrictor bites he shuts his mouth tightly, and pulls back with his strong neck muscles. This tears the flesh and makes a frightful wound.

FLAT-RACING IN ENGLAND DURING 1904.

I. LINCOLN TO GOODWOOD.

BY the end of January the acceptances for the Spring Handicaps are published, and those who, during the previous two months, have given racing and all connected with it a much needed rest begin to "take wings of fancy" if not of foresight in trying to anticipate the judges' verdict for the first great race of the year, the Lincolnshire Handicap; the over-speculative ones going even further in their almost invariably vain attempt to "pick the double" about that race and the Grand National Steeplechase. Contrary to the general expectation, the entries and acceptances for the earlier races were well up to, and in some cases exceeded, the average of recent years, some of the longer races doing particularly well, which was indeed welcome to those whose chief pleasure is in contests over a distance of ground where any disadvantage at the start or in the draw for places can be made good before the winning post is reached.

One of the earliest fancies for the Lincolnshire was Barbette, the three-year-old daughter of Avington and Breach, who had won the Gimcrack Stakes in good style, and this filly, trained at Middleham by I'Anson, was expected to redeem the disappointment of the stable caused by the unlucky defeat by Fulmen of the three-year-old Bread-Knife some twenty years back. Others about whom there was considerable speculation, were Sir James Miller's Cossack, though it was feared a mile was further than he would care to go; Mr. Joel's Wolfshall, whose sire Wolf's Crag had as a three-year-old won the race in 1892, and who had come successfully out of a trial with His Lordship and other smart horses; Mr. B. Ellam's Switchcap, who had won the Manchester November Handicap of the previous season; and lastly, Uninsured. This gelding, a son of Laveno and Surety, was bred in 1900 and was in charge of the astute Fallon at Netheravon; he had shown high-class ability as a juvenile, but as a three-year-old appeared to have entirely lost his form, for he had run four times without a win and, it will be remembered, was scratched for the City and Suburban Handicap of 1903 owing to some accident almost on the eve of the race, when he was generally recognised as one of "Fallon's good things." A field of twenty-three faced the starter, and there being no obstreperous Master Willie to make things generally unpleasant by his antics, they were got off on equitable terms and ran in excellent order to the distance, when Uninsured (who at flag-fall was favourite) drew to the front and won comfortably if not easily by a length from Wolfshall, with the 100 to 1 chance Stoic third.

In trying to find the winner of the Grand National Steeplechase it is, of course, generally the safest plan to regard only the chances of thoses horses which have previously acquitted themselves with credit over the course, and to ignore almost entirely all other "form," for the nature of the country that has to be traversed is so totally different to all other courses that horses which at Manchester, or even at Sandown, are "smashers," find themselves absolutely unable to negotiate the fences at Aintree, and down they come one after another before half the journey is over. Thus the grand old Manifesto will always secure a certain following whatever his age may be, and horses which have won there before or have completed the course satisfactorily are also invariably at shorter prices than strangers to the country, whatever their performances elsewhere may have been. But there are years when a recruit appears who is equal to the terrible 4½ miles with its 36 jumps, as when Shannon Lass won in 1902, and this year the race again fell to an outsider and stranger. A field of twenty-six put in an appearance, among them being Manifesto (now 16 years old, but as keen and festive as a juvenile—how he must know every ditch and fence!); the King's champion, Ambush II., whom the public were bent on backing till he started at the absurd odds of 7 to 2 when it is more than that about any horse getting round without mishap; Detail, who was second last year, and Kirkland, who was fourth; and Patlander and Inquisitor, both good winners during the preceding weeks; but as soon as they were despatched the sifting of the wheat from the chaff began and increased rapidly, Ambush II. coming down at the first fence, and before the last was cleared the field was reduced to but eight. The number of casualties, and the early stages in the race at which they occurred, were, no doubt, due to the fences and ditches being made higher and wider than ever before, but this seemed to make no difference to Moifaa, a New Zealand-bred son of Natator and a half-bred mare, who literally flew the obstacles as if they were not there and sailed home an easy winner at 25 to 1 from Kirkland, with The Gunner, an Irish horse of some little merit, third. The winner, who is an eighty-year-old (it is noteworthy that only once before in over forty years has a horse of that age won the Grand National, which is peculiar at least considering that chasers are generally supposed then to be at their prime) is a huge strapping horse, to whom weight would seem to be of as little account as were the fences, so that it is quite likely his owner, Mr. Spencer Gollan, may see him win again next year.

At last a Brocklesby winner from the provinces, after seven or eight consecutive years of the race falling to a Newmarket trained horse! How averages do tend even in such, as in all other matters, to adjust themselves! Vedas, the winner this year, is a son of Florizel II. and Agnostic, his dam belonging to the celebrated Agnes family, and was bred by Lady Meux; he is now the property of Mr. De Wend-Fenton and is trained by Robinson at Foxhill, and there seemed little doubt that he was something out of the ordinary, for his Brocklesby win was followed up by another victory a couple of days later at Liverpool, and the Sandown Park Stud Produce Stakes of nearly £1,500 fell an easy prey to him though he was conceding a good deal of weight to most of his competitors. At Ascot, however, in the valuable Coventry Stakes, the Brocklesby winner was beaten by two lengths at level weights by Lord Rosebery's Cicero, a son of Cyllene and Gas, who had previously won the Fitzwilliam Stakes at Newmarket and the Woodcote Stakes at Epsom, and is undoubtedly the best of his age so far. The second to Vedas at Lincoln, a Rightaway colt named Captain Jack, is thought by many to have the makings of a high-class performer about him, but he doubtless was by no means at his best in March and has not been seen out since.

If the charm of racing is its glorious uncertainty, then truly it is many years since there was such a delightful race as the City and Suburban Handicap at the Epsom Spring Meeting; there were wild stories going about with regard to several candidates, and for each the race was declared to be an absolute "gift." There was Cerisier, a four-year-old with a featherweight and one of the Derby field of 1903, who could not lose; there was Achaicus by Persimmon trained by R. Marsh, who, it was said, could fall down twice and win with his ears pricked; there was a supposed "good thing" from Netheravon in the shape of the Cambridgeshire winner Hackler's Pride, who was generally believed to have done something wonderful at home; and lastly, there was the Australian-bred Niphetos from Beckhampton, who was backed at the eleventh hour and came in a day from 33 to 1 to favouritism at 3 to 1. All these were "certainties," but the public, and indeed everyone, forgot that in the field there was Ayrshire's son Robert le Diable, the hot but disappointing favourite of a year before, and he now seemed to resent the ignoring of his chance, and being allowed to start at "forties offered," after holding a handy place from the start, he came out on the rails a quarter of a mile from home and won from his twenty opponents in a canter by three lengths, to the consternation of every spectator, with Dean Swift (3 years), second. Cerisier, who was third, has indeed climbed the Gradus ad Parnassum, if one may use such an expression in affairs of racing, for he ran fourth in Lincolnshire, then third in the City and Suburban, then second in the Jubilee, and on his next attempt he was "first at last" in the Haydock Park Handicap of 1,000sovs.

The great Metropolitan Stakes on the first day of the Epsom Spring Meeting afforded one of the best races of the season. The thirteen competitors included Mr. Bass's Grey Tick (the Cesarewitch winner), Elba, who ran third in the Oaks of her year and had defeated Sceptre on one of her "off" days in the Park Hill Stakes at Doncaster, and Mark Time, the happily named son of Marco and Semitone. The latter, who was a recruit from the jumping season, had shown such wonderful speed and stamina over hurdles, and had won over 1½ miles on the flat in the Hainton Plate at Lincoln by a dozen or more lengths and with such consumate ease that the long Epsom race was regarded as a good thing for him, and his backers had to be content with offers of even money. Weighted at 8st. 7lbs. (including a penalty) Mark Time carried the same impost as Elba, who, however, had the advantage of a year with him, and the race resolved itself into a match between the two. After a capital start, Mark Time quickly established a lead of some four or five lengths so that it looked as if he were "coming home on his own," but half a mile from the post he was challenged by Elba and a splendid struggle ensued, the mare at the distance heading the colt, who then came again only to be finally overhauled and beaten by half a length after a tremendous and exciting race during the last 100 yards. The race unhappily was not without accident, for Grey Tick was brought down by some mishap or other, and so badly injured that the aged son of Father Confessor had to be destroyed immediately.

The great Jubilee Handicap is one of the most popular of races, and deservedly so, for a good class field invariably goes to the post, and being run on a Saturday the metropolitan racegoers are able to make a real holiday of it at the beautiful Kempton Park. One of the first favourites for the race during such ante-post betting as there is now-a-days and the actual favourite on the course was L'Aiglon, a four-year-old son of St. Simon and Self Sacrifice, who will live in the memory of many as one of the bitter disappointments of the Turf; although he had been a great tip for the 1903 Derby he had not run as a two-year old, and in fact could not be properly trained at all during 1903; he had, however, this year evidently come to hand satisfactorily, for he had won the Esher Stakes at Sandown over 1 mile and 5 furlongs. The three-year-old Dean Swift, belonging to Mr. Joel, the second in the City and Suburban, was also strongly fancied, but perhaps the public were on the day of the race as keen on Ypsilanti as on anything else, in spite of a 10lb. penalty bringing his weight up to 9st. 5lbs.; his supporters, however, recollected that as a youngster he had captured a valuable stake at Kempton, that the Jubilee of 1903 had been won by him with 8st. odd, and that only a few weeks before he had with ease beaten a fairly good field over the same course in the Queen's Plate when carrying 9st., and they remembered how Bendigo, Victor Wild, and others had proved successful in Jubilees of the past with welter weights; and right soundly did they argue. There was not a large field, only sixteen being found at the post; they were got off on equitable terms by Mr. Coventry, and the public, who dearly like to see a good horse with a heavy weight holding his own, had pleasure in observing that as they came round the bend the top weight held a good place, and when at the distance Ypsilanti was leading, and, resisting the challenge of Cerisier, to whom he was giving over 3st., won with something in hand, their excitement and delight could only find vent in prolonged cheering. Not a big horse, but a splendid weight carrier, is Ypsilanti, and one with a courage and spirit of quite the highest standard, and so for the second time was the Jubilee won by the same horse in consecutive years.

There was more than usual interest attaching to the Classic Races so far as the Two Thousand Guineas and the Derby were concerned, though it must be admitted that the "Ladies' Races" were completely spoilt owing to the vast superiority of Pretty Polly to all of her age and sex, and perhaps too of the other sex, as to which, however, we must wait for the St. Leger running to show whether she is or is not such a wonder against all comers as some of her admirers claim to be the case. In the first place, St. Amant, Mr. L. de Rothschild's champion, and Henry the First, who belongs to Mr. Musker, were both thoroughly well beaten at the Craven Meeting in the Biennial Stakes and the Craven Stakes respectively, but then it was known that neither was thoroughly fit so early in the year, and the races named are proverbial for the undoing of the cracks. In the Guineas, however, they both ran, and with them John o' Gaunt, Santry, Airlie, Rydal Head, and others making up a field of fourteen runners. John o' Gaunt (Isinglass—La Flèche) who was ridden by Mr. G. Thursby, the brother of his owner, got very badly off at the start, or the story of the race might have been different, although he was thoroughly well beaten by St. Amant, with Henry the First some two lengths behind him third. The cracks next met in the Newmarket Stakes, and a paddock inspection satisfied most critics that Henry had made the most improvement of them all in the intervening fortnight. For this race St. Amant, on the strength of his easy victory in the Two Thousand, started an odds on chance, but here John o' Gaunt, again ridden by Mr. Thursby, got a good start and was coming along an apparently sure winner when his rider unhappily eased him, thinking the race was safe, and Otto Madden (splendid artist as he is) on Henry the First, who started at 14 to 1 in a field of five runners, took full advantage of the error, and making a supreme effort landed Mr Musker's colt a head in front of the other, and St. Amant, who appeared to put no heart into his work, had to be content with the third place four lengths behind the son of Isinglass. It was the old story of a good professional being ever better than a good amateur.

Obviously these happenings at Newmarket gave the Derby a far more open appearance as it was evident that St. Amant was a colt of moods and that Mr. Thursby would profit by his experience in the two races, while Henry the First had made considerable improvement which might further be enhanced by the 1st of June.

The ignominious display in the Guineas of Rydal Head, who was the best of the Kingsclere lot, led to J. Porter letting it be known he would not be represented in the Great Epsom race and, therefore, a small number of runners was anticipated though it was a general idea that the field would amount to quite a dozen, for there was Beckhampton to reckon with and possible eleventh hour forlorn hopes would put in an appearance. Meanwhile reports and rumours from France left it doubtful whether both or if not which one of M. Blanc's Flying Fox colts, Gouvernant and Ajax would be sent over to try and repeat the achievement of Gladiateur in 1865, and it was not until a couple of days before the Race that doubts were set at rest by the sending over of Gouvernant and the scratching of Ajax. There were the usual tall tales of the prowess of the French representative, and they really seemed to be well-founded, moreover the amount of French money invested on the colt, which made him an easy favourite at 9 to 4, 2 to 1, and finally 7 to 4, proved that his owner and trainer had the most unbounded confidence in his ability to win; and yet again the phenomenal Turf achievements of his sire were fresh in the minds of racing men, and the splendid family to which he belonged, Doncaster, Bend Or, Ormonde, Orme, Flying Fox, led many to believe that he would prove as invincible as his ancestors. There was, however, a feeling in some quarters that it was quite on the cards that a sire was not likely in his first season as a four-year old to get a son of anything like equal merit to himself, and that there was much to be criticised and disliked in his breeding on his dam's side, coming as she did of the outside No. 25 family. Scratchings at the last moment of Mousqueton and one or two others reduced the actual competitors to but eight and just at the preliminary parade commenced a thunderstorm with torrents of rain came on, which increased with great severity while the horses were being marshalled at the starting post. St. Amant, in blinkers and a hood, jumped off quickest, and before a quarter of a mile was run he had established a lead of 3 or 4 lengths and never being headed won with the greatest of ease, with the luckless John o' Gaunt (Mr. Thursby again riding him) second, and St. Denis, a colt belonging to Mr. S. Joel, and who had started at 50 to 1 a fair third, while Henry the First and the French Gouvernant were tailed off. It may, no doubt, be that St. Amant, with his hood and blinkers, did not feel the same inconvenience from the rain as did the others, or it may be that he was in the same generous mood as on the Guineas day, but his victory was as popular a one as could be imagined, Mr. L. de Rothschild being such a genuine sportsman and such a pillar of the Turf and this was his first Derby. Mr. Henry Chaplin, standing on the Club steps watching the stirring scene being enacted before him in such terrible weather, must have had his mind carried back to that eventful Derby of 1867 when in a snowstorm his colt Hermit won such a sensational victory. The third horse, St. Denis, by St. Simon out of Brooch, and therefore closely related to Sceptre, had not appeared in public before and the excellent show made by him leads one to anticipate a distinguished career for him later in the present season or during the next.

Pretty Polly has continued her brilliant achievements throughout the present season, winning the One Thousand Guineas, the Oaks, and later on the Coronation Stakes at Ascot, in her own inimitable style without the semblance of an effort, and all lovers of the race-horse are looking forward to the great Doncaster contest where she will be pitted against the best of her year.

The Ascot Meeting was a brilliant success in every way, being favoured with delightful weather during the day-time, and refreshing showers at night which prevented the heath from drying up, and secured excellent going throughout. The Royal Hunt Cup brought out the usual large field to the number of 28, and was won by the five-year-old Csardas (Ladas—Polka) who had run second to The Solicitor in 1902, and was the first Newmarket trained horse to win one of the big handicaps of the year outright, the nearest approach being the dead-heat of Roe O'Neill with Scullion for the Manchester Cup. Csardas had had an unlucky career hitherto, having run second four times as a two-year, and in his last race in that year being beaten a head by Minstead for the Middle Park Plate, and during the next two years he could never be properly trained, so that infinite credit is due to his trainer, J. Cannon, for his painstaking perseverance which resulted in the winning of such an important and valuable race. The Gold Cup afforded a most astounding result, the runners comprising Sceptre, Zinfandel, Maximum II.(the French horse who had won last year when he had nothing to beat better than Rising Glass and he "pig fat") and lastly, Throwayway, that unlucky horse who was always second last year and who had run third in the Chester Cup of the present season. Zinfandel having beaten Sceptre in the Coronation Cup at Epsom was favourite, a slight shade of odds being betted on him, then came Sceptre at 7 to 4, Maxium II. at 10 to 1, and Throwaway almost friendless at 20 to 1. The riders of the two favourites regarded the race as merely a match between them and were pleased enough to see W. Lane on Throwaway at once take up the running and so make the pace, and they allowed him to remain in front for nearly a couple of miles; but both quite forgot that he was a horse who could stay for ever and one of indomitable courage, so that when first Sceptre and then Zinfandel was asked to come out and win, it was found that the outsider had any amount in hand, and, answering gamely to his jockey's call, the latter won a clever race with Zinfandel second and Mr. Bass's mare third. There is no doubt that M. Cannon on Zinfandel and O. Madden who rode Sceptre were to blame for allowing such a turn up, but nevertheless Throwaway deserved, after all his ill-luck, to win a good race, and to be numbered among the Ascot Gold Cup winners is indeed a full and unexpected compensation. It is to be feared that Sceptre (dear Sceptre, as she is to so many of us) has temporarily fallen from her high estate, whatever the cause may be, for she was beaten by Zinfandel with some ease at Epsom in Derby week, then came her poor show in the Gold Cup, without any of the dash and fire of her former days, and lastly, in the Hardwicke Stakes on the fourth day at Ascot she was actually beaten by Rock Sand when in receipt of weight from him; Rock Sand to whom at Newmarket in the Jockey Club Stakes she had given over a stone and the most thorough and easy beating. It is indeed sad and painful to have to record these events, but her lovers cherish the hope she may yet come to her best again and before retiring to the stud treat them to at least one more of those brilliant and electric achievements which were so often associated with her in the past. May it be the writer's happiness in the next part of this Review to record the fulfilment of this wish; it would be too cruel to feel obliged to write of the deterioration of one's idol, without hope.

Sporting Notes.

THE Tollygunge Gymkhana on the 16th was a vast improvement on the former one, and some really good sport was witnessed. The rain fortunately held off, though more than once a heavy downpour seemed to be imminent, but the going was terribly sticky. This, however, did not interfere with the results, as in all but two events the popular fancy got home. The fields were highly satisfactory, ten in the July Stakes being the largest, and four for the steeplechase being the smallest of the day.

Proceedings opened with a race for harness ponies in which seven went to the post. Little Glencoe made all the running, but was just caught on the post by the favourite Flush, ridden by Mr. Turner, the judge being unable to separate them, with Tom a length and a-half away third. The owners decided not to run it off, a wise decision, considering the heat, the state of the going, and the weights to be carried.

The biggest field of the day turned out for the July Stakes, and considerable delay occurred before the flag fell to a very ragged start, in fact the starts throughout the card, if we except the match and the chase, were of the raggedest possible description. Winklet, steered by Mr. Holmes, was the popular selection, May B. and Planet being most fancied for places. There was no mistake, as Winklet coming to the front at the turn for home won nicely from Planet by half a length, with May B, a length away, third. Out of the field of five for the Pony Plate, Energy was made favourite, though many fancied First Guide, and the latter, we think, would have just about won, had not the flag dropped at a moment when he was facing the wrong way. As it was he took no part in the race and Lone Hand getting well away led to the distance where he was passed by Energy and Good Chat, the latter coming with a run on the post and landing the verdict by half a length from the top-weight.

The All-Comers' Plate provided a fair field of five and a real good race. Reinzette, Road Metal and Euryalus were all fancied, the first named slightly having the call. Euryalus was first away from an indifferent start, Road Metal coming to the front at the turn, but soon dropped back and Reinzette assumed the lead, and after a clinking good race home secured the verdict by a neck. An objection—has there ever been a Gymkhana without at least one?—was laid against the winner, on account of the rider, Mr. Galstaun having dropped a stirrup after passing the post, and the owner having picked it up and handed it to him as he was returning to scale. The Stewards, however, did not uphold the objection and the race was awarded to Reinzette. The chase proved a runaway race for Gauntlet, who neatly handled by Mr. Rees and fencing admirably, won by ten lengths, pulling double. Eight went to the post for the Ladies' Bracelet, and Energy getting well away led throughout and won comfortably by half a length. First Guide second and Mystery II. third.

The match proved a good race, the two keeping together the whole way and Ginger landing it by a neck, though had he not lost so much ground at the turn at the seven furlongs he would have won easily by several lengths.

Mr. Bodkin opened the case. He explained that the proceedings were taken by the Director of Public Prosecutions, in consequence of certain misstatements made by the defendant when he was being privately examined in bankruptcy. The defendant was made a bankrupt on May 24, 1892, and was an undischarged bankrupt until June, 1896. During the period under which his discharge was suspended—on December 20, 1894—a receiving order was made against him under a second bankruptcy, which resulted in January, 1895, in an adjudication. That adjudication was followed by a statement of affairs which disclosed debts amounting to £2,335 8s. 2d., and assets nil. The petitioning creditor in the second bankruptcy was a concern known as the London Universal Bank, with which a Mr. Cochrane was connected and the bankruptcy arose in consequence of the defendant having become liable, with his wife, Lady Mabel Sievier, with respect to a bill of exchange for about £2,300, which was not met. The defendant was described in that bankruptcy as lately of 28, Lowndes Square, and also as a Turf commission agent connected with a concern known as "Punch," of 8, Bennett Street, St. James's. An effort was made to expunge that description, but it was not successful. In July, 1897, an application was made by the defendant for his discharge in bankruptcy. The Registrar ordered his discharge, however, to be suspended until after October 26, 1899. What took place during the intervening period between October of 1897 and October, 1899, would be of great importance in this case. On October 26, 1899, Mr. Philip Samuels made an application for the private examination of the defendant in bankruptcy. The defendant owed him £2,350 on a promissory note or bill of exchange. The application was granted, and the sitting was adjourned until December 6, 1899.

While the defendant was an undischarged bankrupt, he lived in good style, and enormous sums of money passed through his hands. No doubt this attracted the attention of Mr. Philip Samuels, whom the defendant had not included in his list of creditors, as, of course, he should have done. In the petition for the defendant's further examination, it was alleged that while he was an undischarged bankrupt he acquired considerable property which he failed to disclose to the Official Receiver, including Park House, near Dunstable, where he had horses and carriages and was erecting additional buildings. It was also alleged that he had, during his suspension, purchased certain racehorses. There could be no doubt, said Counsel, that the defendant was connected with horse racing and other forms of sport, including cricket. He lived in as good a style as any man could wish to live. In 1898, while still an undischarged bankrupt, he took Park House, near Dunstable, already referred to. His solicitor was supposed to have taken it, but the defendant himself was the real tenant, although he had sworn to the contrary. He took the place on lease for fourteen years at £475 a year, which included the shooting rights, and proceeded to enjoy himself during his suspended animation. His solicitor took all liability, but he was a mere nominee. The place belonged to Mr Anthony Cumberland, the lord of the manor, and one year's rent had to be paid in advance. There was a peculiar circumstance connected with this arrangement. The defendant was connected with Mr. R. Sawyer, a commission agent, who in 1898 had an account at a bank in Shaftesbury Avenue. The defendant was authorised to draw on Mr. Sawyer's account, and make out cheques in his (Sawyer's) name. Mr. R. Sawyer and the defendant wrote so much alike that by request of the Bank authorities one signed "Robert Sawyer" and the other "R. Sawyer." Two cheques signed "R. Sawyer" were drawn in June, 1898. One was for £200 and the other for £175. Both those cheques were paid in respect of the first year's rent of Park House. An account was afterwards opened at Messrs Barclay's Bank, Dunstable, in the name of Sievier, and the defendant also had an account at Lloyd's Bank in the Strand. The defendant continued to live at Park House, took a great interest in the shooting, employed gamekeepers and gardeners, kept horses and carriages, and entertained teams of cricketers who played there. His mother, a very elderly lady, sometimes visited there. A Mrs. Masters was a frequent visitor, and Mr. Masters went there occasionally but not often. The defendant greatly improved Park House, and added a bungalow and a dairy at a total cost of £2,500, the work being carried out by a firm of builders at Luton. Twelve hundred pounds of this money was paid by the defendant while he was an undischarged bankrupt. The remainder—with the exception of £300—was paid by him after his discharge. The £300 was paid by a cheque drawn by "E. Masters" on a bank now defunct. "E. Masters" was probably Mrs. Masters. There were transfers between her account and that of the defendant, and within a comparatively short time £50,000 passed through. The account of Mrs. Masters was a small one. The cheque for £300 was paid a few days after the defendant was examined in bankruptcy, in December, 1899, and it looked as though the questions then put to him had had some influence upon him.

Counsel went on to say that the lease of Park House was afterwards assigned to the defendant by the solicitor who had taken it for him. Subsequently there was a dispute as to some shooting rights, and the defendant surrendered the lease on the payment of £650 and £350 for the improvements he had made to the property. There could be no doubt that the defendant was the real tenant; but when he was examined in bankruptcy on December 6, 1899, he said he lived at Park House with Mrs. and Mr. Masters, and paid no rent. He paid the taxes, he said, in order to get a vote, but the money was supplied by Mr. Masters. There was a bungalow, he went on to state, but it was paid for by Mrs. Masters.

There was shooting connected with Upton House, and he had been invited to shoot there. He denied having a banking account at Barclay's at Dunstable, and described the house party at Park House as a happy family. According to his account he lived there entirely on the generosity of Mrs. and Mr. Masters, and there was no agreement in writing. He added that he had not got a lease, and might be turned out of the house at any moment. Counsel went on to say the defendant stated that he had power to draw on his mother's banking account at Dunstable. It was, said counsel, remarkable to find how great an interest Mrs. Sievier took in horse racing if her son's statement as to the banking account was to be believed. In a very short time £34,922 was paid in by cheques chiefly drawn by betting men. The defendant sent cheques to well known men on the Turf, and there were occasional cheques for £50 each in favour of someone named Masters. The defendant himself gave £100 to the Bedford County Cricket Club, although he had sworn that he did not do so.

Mr. Avory pressed for something more definite as to the acts of perjury alleged to have been committed by the defendant, but Mr. Bodkin declined to say anthing more at present.

The hearing was adjourned.

Mr. M. Laurie, the Rangoon Municipal President, got a fall while out with the hunt on the 13th instant and broke his collar bone.

A correspondent asks why we contented ourselves with merely announcing the arrival of the steamer Fortunatus and suggests that we might have "spread" ourselves a bit over descriptions of the various shippers' lots brought up in her.

The days have passed when we pursued the gentle shipper with pocket book and pencil and gave our readers the resultant columns of minute detail and encomium. It didn't pay as a matter of fact. We are always pleased to respond to an invitation to cast an eye over any particular lot; but we have discontinued the practice of giving yards of free advertisement in this connection, considering our advertisement columns the proper place for such matter.

A skittle race meeting will be held by the Madras Gymkhana on the Island on the 23rd instant, when an attractive programme of five events will be discussed.

In California they have a method of destroying lost dogs by means of electricity. A small collar is attached to the dog's neck, and the batteries are connected with the collar. When the switch is turned on, a current of 2,300 volts is given the dog, whose life is so quickly snuffed out that he has no time to utter a groan or sound.

The annual meeting of the members of the Bombay Hunt was held at the Gymkhana on Friday for the purpose of making arrangements for next season's hunting and was largely attended. The finances of the Hunt were reported to be in a satisfactory condition and everything promises well for next season's hunting. A vote of thanks was proposed to Mr. J.A. Lord, M. F.H., for the excellent sport shown last season, and to Mr. Allan L. S. Roberts for having audited the Hunt accounts. A new huntsman has been engaged to take the place of the late W. G. Stacey, whose death midway through last season caused great regret. A committee consisting of the following gentlemen was formed for the coming season:—Messrs G. K. Remington, J. L. Symons, F. C. Macrae, H. E. E. Procter, J. A. Lord, M. F. H., D. N. Graham, and J. H. Symington with Mr. R. W. L. Dunlop re-elected as Honorary Secretary. With the exception of Messrs Lord and Graham all the above mentioned members have been connected with the Bombay Hunt for over twenty years. A curious proposal was made at the meeting to the effect that the Hunt should take over the management of the annual Point to Point Races which are held at the end of the hunting season. I say curious because the management of these Point to Point Races is in the hands of the Bombay Light Horse and has nothing whatsoever to do with the Bombay Hunt. The proposal evidently emanated from some members of the Hunt who are also Light Horseman, but as the Santa Cruz meeting is essentially a Light Horse event any interference on the part of the Hunt would have been unjustifiable, and this I am glad to say was the view taken by the majority of the members present, so the proposal was negatived. It is quite open to the Hunt to hold annual point to point races if they care to without poaching on the Light Horse preserves.

Our Bangalore Correspondent writes:—Tom Ferguson has just been to Madras to receive five horses lately purchased in Australia by Mr. Spooner-Hart, the Calcutta livery stablekeeper. These include Bassina, Fitzgrafton, Watchfire, Mick Power and Sauce, and all have landed and proceeded to Bangalore where they are now fit and well. I shall hope to say something more about them shortly, so far all I know is that they are all flat-racers.

Full particulars will appear elsewhere in your columns of the progress of the racing and polo in Bangalore. Bundook's campaign has been most disappointing, and he had to be scratched on a veterinary certificate for his engagement on the third day of the race-meeting. His owner, I know, thinks that the handicapper considerably over-rated Bundook's powers and that the weights he has carried here have had a good deal to do with his present lameness. Carburton is another well-bred one which has not performed well. Showing quality all over and having a great look of his dam—Mrs. Butterwick—he has only run one decent race since landing in the country, and that was on the 14th instant when he ran Harpist to a neck in the All-Horse Handicap. And then he was in receipt of two stone.

The owners, jockeys, trainers and bookmakers are making the place so lively that we scarcely know ourselves. Two race balls have already taken place at the Bowring Institute, and both have been great successes. Each was characterised by lavish hospitality and a champagne supper, and Bangalore residents as well as visitors were present in large numbers. On both occasions the room was prettily decorated, and at the second function the caps and jackets of the various owners were arranged on the pillars of the room giving a very successfully characteristic touch to the decoration. By the way I am sorry to note that Kamad got a hasty fall from Corrie Roy during the storm of rain which occurred during the running for the cup. He was unable to walk after the fall and did not, I noticed, do any riding on the third day's racing. Carrara broke down very badly after carrying 12st. 12lbs. to the front for a mile and a half in the jump event on the 14th instant, and it is, I hear, hardly likely that he will ever race again.

The Sonepore Gymkhana meeting has been fixed for the 23rd, 25th and 27th November.

Among recent purchases of horses for India are Hidalgo, Charleston, Banker and Jap, the two former by D. Norton and the latter by W. Moran who will shortly return to Calcutta.

F. Sheldrake, an Australian jockey, will arrive in Calcutta next month.

We regret to hear of a serious carriage accident which occurred at Poona on the 12th instant, the victims of which were Mrs. Charles Goldspink, her infant and nurse. While returning from the Empress Gardens, the horse attached to her gig bolted and dashed into a tree. The carriage was smashed and its occupants thrown out. Mrs. Goldspink fortunately escaped with only some bruises, but her nurse and child were not so lucky. The nurse had her shoulder fractured and the child its face cut. They were picked up and taken to the hospital by a native who was passing.

The steamer Wardha, which is due to arrive in Calcutta about the 24th instant, is bringing up a fine lot of thoroughbred horses and ponies, selected and imported for sale by Messrs O. M. D. Bell & Co., and these will be on view at the Race Course stables near the Kidderpore Bridge later on. We hear that Col. Mackay, who has recently joined the firm, will attend to the Australian side of the business, while Mr. O. M. D. Bell, who comes up to Calcutta next October with a further big shipment, will remain here.

Our Poona Correspondent writes.—A very unfortunate accident happened to the jockey, Stonehill, who is riding work for Mr. A. W. P's stable. From what I gather it seems that Stonehill on Fireup was going to do a gallop with the mare Miss Windsor (who is in the same stable a most troublesome mare whose malicious eccentricities in a race gave rise, if I remember rightly, to official enquiries last year. In the present instance the native boy on the mare was unable to keep her straight and "barging" into Stonehill broke his leg while in the saddle. Unable to stick on with his helpless limb, Stonehill wisely elected to roll off on the soft lest by "sticking to the ship" worse might befall him. There were, I hear, luckily a few people still on the course who went to the helpless lad's assistance and took him to the Sassoon Hospital where from all accounts he is doing well.

A most sporting cross-country competition took place this week between selected champions of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and the East Lancashires. Nine men from each regiment over five miles of good sporting country starting from a point on the Sholapur Road, towards Gibbet Hill and performing a right handed semi-circular course over some very broken ground and eventually finishing on the parade ground inside the race-course. Piper Wright, of the Highlanders, was first man in, winning with ease. Private Farrat, of the East Lancashire, was runner up with Private Marsden of the same regiment "placed." But in the "tottle up" the Highland men had the better of the count and won a most sporting competition which did credit to all concerned, and it is to the hoped is but the first of many similar friendly contests.

I regret to have to announce the death of the jockey, Allardice, at his residence at Wanowrie of appendicitis. His death at so early an age as twenty-three is all the more sad in that it was apparently due to injudiciousness on the poor boy's own part—an excessive dose of salts, followed by an injudiciously solid meal and neglect to call in competent medical advice till his case was past hope. He had recently arrived from South Africa, and came with the reputation of being a well behaved capable lad.

There is assuredly an excellent opening for a few really capable, light, or even medium weight boys just at present. A really brilliant one should make a fortune for the fingers of one hand must nearly suffice to account for those whom owners can put up with confidence of having every reasonable effort towards success provided by the steersman.

Taking advantage of a prolonged break in the rains (which must be most unwelcome to all, save cricketers) a friendly contest was arranged between the Poona Gymkhana and the 93rd Highlanders. The Gymkhana altogether under estimated the fighting quality of the Scotchmen and paid the due penalty by suffering an ignominious defeat, securing in their first effort a meagre 69. The regiment totalled the respectable sum of 149, their successful bowlers, Hartley and Langton, also shining in the batting department with 39 and 22 respectively, and Kennedy helped to swell the total with 30.

In their second attempt the Gymkhana, though too late, did a trifle better, getting 94 for 6 wickets.

On the same day a mixed XI of the men of the Lancashire Regiment and the lads of the Bishop's High School tackled the officers of the Regiment and failing to show the respect due to gazetted rank won by the useful total of 230 as against 139. The Lancashires have shown an excellently sporting example in this respect and the encouragement extended to the boys must do them an immensity of good in every way.

Andrew Clarke, the trainer, has apparently even yet not come to the end of his bad luck. Only the other day he lost the English filly Dorade, under the strangely unfortunate circumstances I have already recorded, and now he has suffered a further serious loss in the death of the English mare Ivy, from hydrophobia, so it is believed. Certain it is that the mare went raging mad, but there is no history of her having been bitten by a rabid dog or jackal. But it makes the luck none the less hard, and one can only hope that this sterling, honest old trainer will have a bumper season to recompense him for his recent adversities of Fate.

Sweet are the uses of advertisement. It has apparently been left to a laundry firm—and German at that—to achieve the acme of ingenuity in the catch penny line. "We provide our customers with new shirts. You only pay for the washing" these enterprising Teutons of the soapsuds and starch proclaim. After this we may with confidence look forward to being allured with such blandishments as "Please take your choice of one of our motor-cars. You only pay for the petrol," or "We earnestly entreat each of our constituents to accept one of our best Cee-spring Landaus, you only pay for greasing the wheels."

Rangoon has decided to have a Race Club of its own, and with that view a Committee are now busy over rules to be submitted at an early date to a general meeting of those interested in racing.

Lieutenant Ross met with a serious accident while playing Polo at Poona on the 16th instant. His pony coming down, rolled over him, and he was carried to hospital unconscious, in which condition he was when we went to press.

One of those bestial, yet miserably stupid exhibitions, a fight between a forest-bred lion and a bull is to be provided for the people of San Sebastian.

The encounter is to take place in the new bull circus, which accommodates 75,000 people, and extraordinary preparations are being made.

Herr Karl Hagenbeck, of Hamburg, is supplying the lion, which, we are told, will be a magnificent specimen of his kind. To ensure a spectacle that will be gory enough for even the bullfighting Spaniard, the lion is to be specially trained.

He will be starved for a few days, poor brute, after which a young bull will be driven into his cage. This will be repeated several times, a larger and stronger bull being chosen as victim on each occasion, until the animals are considered to be fairly matched for a fight. For the final contest, when it is expected the circus will be packed to its limits, a six year old bull, with magnificent horns will be driven into a specially constructed iron cage, having an area of 400 square yards. Here bull and lion will settle accounts in full view of the debased spectators.

The discovery of a guinea fowl's leg-bone in the ruins of Silchester shows that the bird was kept in Britain by the Romans. The bone is question was still surrounded by a copper ring, which looks as if the bird may have been a pet, or, at any rate, was regarded as somewhat rare. But there is reason to think that this form of poultry was very well known to the ancients. They were called "Numidian birds" by the Romans and "Meleagris" by the Greeks, who had a legend that the sisters of Meleager were turned into guinea fowls, and always wore mourning for their brother, the white spots representing tears on the black ground! They must have been brought from Africa to Greece very early. They were reintroduced after the Renaissance, but were brought to England very late. The name "guinea fowl," like that of "guinea pig," dates from the arrival of the Guinea fleet in London, just as the "Turkeys" were so called after the "Turkey" fleet trading with the Levant. Probably both turkeys and guinea fowls were imported by the Genoese into Italy, and thence exported, for it is on record that Genoese traders took great numbers of guinea fowls to South America in the year 1508.

There has been a good deal of mystification, largely deliberate, on the subject of the so-called "artificial" variety of the so-called "ospreys," but a writer in Knowledge has now conclusively exposed the falsity of the pretence that the plumes called artificial are not birds' feathers at all, and the wearing of them consequently unobjectionable. The plume, which is confessedly natural comes from the egret, and the "artificial" one from the rhea, and the only point which makes the use of the substitute less revolting is that it does not appear to be necessary for the purposes of fashion to kill the rheas, as is the case with the egrets, at the period of the year when in most instances their death involves the slow starvation of the unfledged young. Ladies who do not permit themselves to feel any distaste for wearing upon their heads fragments of song-birds or seagulls will not, of course, have any greater objection to the feathers of the rhea. But they can no longer shelter themselves behind the notions that these "artificial ospreys" of their milliner have not directly necessitated the widespread slaughter of bird life.

It was urged in excuse for a murder lately committed that the perpetrator had been bitten by a viper many years before, and that on every anniversary of the bite he became mad! The belief is a revival of an old myth which associated the snake with certain signs of the zodiac in which madness was supposed to be prevalent. The effect of the bite is, however, sometimes very lasting. A dog bitten by a viper completely lost its power of smell, and another its hearing. On the other hand, adders' fat was, and still is in some places, held to be a sovereign balm against various forms of blood poisoning and rheumatism. The old adder catcher in the New Forest has a whole list of ailments and injuries curable by it, and could always sell some to the men in charge of the New Forest hounds, who may have believed (quite rightly) that "extracts of adder" were a prophylactic against the bite. The pain of a snake-bite does not begin at once, as does the pain caused by the sting of a wasp or of a hornet. This is because the latter owes its venom to formic acid, while snake poison is of a different constituency.

It is commonly asserted, and apparently with truth, that woodcocks use their bills to assist them to rise from the ground, writes "Ardaros" in the English Field:—At first I thought this was due to the fact that the bird naturally bent its head when rising, but on one occasion when a cock was shot at and both legs broken the bird was marked down, and it rose again when approached, which it could not have done had it not got some assistance from the use of the bill. These birds nest occasionally in the north of England, and when sitting they invariably rest the bill on the ground. Another peculiarity is that, when observed, the sitting bird, with head drawn back and bill resting on the ground, also has its eyes closed. Is this due to the fact that in the woodcock the eye is very prominent, and is more easily seen than the sober-coloured plumage. Birds would frequently escape observation entirely were it not for the gleam of the eye. Time after time when a woodcock has been sitting she has allowed a near approach, but in no case has she been seen with the eyes open. It would be interesting to know if she shuts the eyes merely on the approach of an intruder or if it is her habit to sit with them closed, trusting solely to the ear for safety. It is so seldom that one has the opportunity for close observation of a nesting woodcock that any information as to the manner in which incubation is carried out is of interest.

Rumours of the death of that archfiend the Dongargarh maneater reached us some time ago and certain details connected therewith were placed at our disposal. But he had so often been reported as having been bagged that we hesitated to publish our information until sufficient time had elapsed to prove conclusively that he had at last ceased from troubling. Last April Captain Goring-Jones, the Adjutant of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Volunteers, determined to get the brute, and succeeded under rather peculiar circumstances. During one of the beats the half eaten carcase of a tigress was discovered, and, judging from the appearance thereof, it was suspected that a tiger had been dining off her. Captain Goring-Jones sat up for what might come along, and to his astonishment a huge tiger soon made his appearance, and was about to resume his repast when he was accounted for. The beaters, shikarees and villagers from miles around agreed that at last the scourge of the district had been removed, for the beast was quite well known to many who were prepared to swear to his identity; and as no further additions have been made to the long list of the Dongargarh maneater's victims for the last three months, it seems now pretty certain that we have heard the last of him.

Two young men named Otto, sons of a railway employé at Munmar, had a most uncomfortable experience the other day while out shooting in the Ankar Hills, close to the station. From the details given us it appears that while ascending a hill, they came across four men who had long guns, a hatchet and a sword. Supposing them to be Bhils out shikaring they entered into conversation, asking about their guns and where they obtained powder, and answered queries about their own rifles. The whole party moved off down a steep hill, when the natives suddenly attacked the young men, knocked them down, seized their rifles and beat them most severely, breaking the rifles over them. One received a severe wound over one eye, and the other eye being filled with blood he was unable to defend himself. The other man had his left forearm broken and was covered with wounds and bruises. Both were left unconscious on the ground. After a time they recovered sufficiently to crawl to a village a mile off, where the natives assisted them and drove them home in a country cart, where they arrived minus hats, rifles and some jewellery, and bleeding profusely. The District Magistrate of Vipchur was communicated with and the police telegraphed for. The latter arrived the following day from Nasik and instituted enquiries. At the scene of outrage they found the men's hats, stocks of the rifles, and some cartridges. The barrels had been carried off. The injured persons were able to give a complete description of their assailants, which was found to tally with that of four outlaws who have been wanted by the police for some time past. The police traced their movements some distance, and it is believed they have escaped into the Nizam's Dominions.

A telegram which appeared in The Englishman yesterday says that in the course of an expression of its views on the Game and Fish Preservation Bill which it approves generally the Madras Chamber of Commerce desires to protest emphatically against one proposal which is that the whole European community, not in Government service, should be required to pay higher rates and fees than the natives of the country and Government servants. The Chamber remarks that the Government of India does not attempt to justify this extraordinary discrimination against non-officials, and it submits that it is both unjustifiable and iniquitous. The Chamber can see no reason for the discrimination between any section of the residents in India, and it therefore strongly urges that sportsmen in India should be divided into two classes, viz., (1) natives of the country and all residents in India, and (2) visitors, which latter, considering they come to this country chiefly or solely for sport and are usually wealthy, may appropriately enough be charged higher fees than the former.

The Calcutta Light Horse held their first tent pegging competition on Tuesday. Fourteen competed Captain Pugh and Sergeant-Major Winkworth tieing for first place with 16 points each.

In the Bangalore Polo Tournament, which ended on the 18th instant, the Carabiniers beat the combined team of the R. A. and R. E. in the finals by four goals to two goals and four subsidiaries, vide details in our Polo Columns.

Owing to the heavy rain there was little or nothing doing on the Calcutta course last week. The track has not been opened yet, and as a consequence fast work has been restricted to short spurts across the centre of the course by the tank, a certain amount of galloping being also indulged in on the Ellenborough. All this is well enough in its way, but unless we get a spell of dry weather between this and the first meeting, there will be very few horses really fit to go.

Nothing of any interest took place on Saturday or Monday, but on Tuesday most of the strings were putting in a few spurts, and some jumping was also witnessed.

Hello and Harold were the first out and put in a smart spin across by the tank. They were followed by Bell Brand, Flash and Parole, who were sent along nearly top pace, the last named being out of it.

Rosalea and Not Yet from Mr. Galstaun's lot put in a couple of bursts and Western Queen also went three furlongs twice.

Daffodil and Blue Bell, both Mr. Deakin's, were schooled over four flights, the former clouting the timber in his usual light-hearted fashion. He does not seem to have acquired any additional respect for the hurdles from the rapping he gave his shins at the last extra meeting, when he gave his jockey such a rough ride. Norman (Howie up) went over a couple of flights. He was not fencing in his usual faultless style, but it looked rather as if that was due to undue economy in the matter of cinders on the take off side of the flights. Kittylea, steered by a native, put in a good school, lepping like a book.

Rezia, in Mr. Dudley's hands, also put in a school. She was jumping very much on the "safe" side, a fault in the right direction it is true, but one which, especially in the monsoon mud, is apt to result in a horse, as the saying is, beating himself jumping. However with these new hurdles it is just as well to make sure of getting the other side right way up. This was practically all the fast work, though All Fours (Mr. Gerald's), Fusilier (Mr. Myers's), Naiades (Mr. Raban's), Sunshine (Mr. Evers'), all were doing half speed galloping. Granted that the rain will see fit to hold off sufficiently for the opening of the training tract, there should be something worth reporting next week.

A policeman on duty in the Rue Saint Anne, Paris, last month was surprised to see a well-dressed man destroying a poster which advertised a cure for baldness. The policeman made a few observations to the man, and then made his way into another street.

Here he came across the same individual in the act of destroying with his stick another poster, which set forth the virtues of the same remedy for baldness. This time he arrested the man, and, says the "Advertiser" took him to the police commissary's office.

When questioned this destroyer of posters, who is a man of independent means, aged 45, took off his hat, and revealed a shining bald pate without a hair upon it.

'This is the result of a year's treatment," he said to the police commissary. "Not only did my hair not sprout but by applying this remedy I lost all the hair I had. Then I swore to be revenged, and my revenge took the form of destroying every poster I saw which boasted of the wonderful result from using this cure for baldness. I have already been arrested eleven times, but I shall continue my work of destruction."

A summons was issued against the man. But he was not in the least affected by this procedure. He simply continued destroying more posters.

Athletic Notes.

A NAMELESS correspondent has addressed the following lines to our esteemed contemporary of Chowringhee:—

"In to-day's issue of The Indian Field a correspondent asked where amongst the following towns the best football is to be seen:—Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Simla, and Lucknow. The editor replies, 'probably in Calcutta.' This reply is, I consider, absurd in the extreme. It is evident that the editor has never witnessed good football outside of Calcutta or he would never dream of making such a statement. If he were to see the Punjab Army Football Championship Tournament, which is played at Umballa, the Durand, Murray, and Rovers' Cups, played for at Simla, Lucknow, and Bombay respectively, he would probably get a shock. These are tournaments for which some twenty to thirty crack regimental teams enter. Calcutta football will not compare with what one sees at the above places. The only really good team that has played down here is the R. I. Rifles eleven."

This correspondent has our heartfelt sympathy: he confesses himself in the above communication to be entirely devoid of a sense of humour. We published this precious query as a specimen of what editors sometimes have to put up with; the Statesman's correspondent failed to recognise the pure inanity thereof or the utter futility of attempting to reply thereto, as delicately conveyed in our editorial footnote.

The final in the Lahore and Mian Mir Hockey Tournament was played in the Lawrence Gardens, Lahore, on the 9th instant. The contesting teams were the 1st P. V. Rifles and the North-Western Railway, a good match resulting in a win for the Volunteers by 2 goals to one.

The following are results in English county cricket matches last week:—Yorkshire beat Hampshire by an innings and 18 runs; Lancashire beat Worcester by nine wickets. The matches between Kent and Sussex, Middlesex and Essex, Notts and Leicester, and Warwickshire and Sussex were drawn.

The Madras Boat Club held a long distance tub sailing race on the Adyar on the 9th instant. The start was near the Elphinstone Bridge and the winning post the mound in the Adyar Club compound. Seven crews competed, and after a close and exciting race Mrs. Molesworth's crew won, Mrs. Alexander second, and Mrs. Thornton third. The following were the crews:—Mrs. Molesworth, Messrs. H. K. Warren and C. Babington, 1; Mrs. Alexander, Mr. R. F. Stoney, and Captain Alexander, 2; Mrs. Thornton, Messrs. F. H. Thornton, and R. Sharpley, 3; Miss Malden, Messrs. C. H. Chessall and W. B. Stephens, 4; Miss Spencer, Messrs. E. A. and F. H. Wilson, 0; Mrs. Josselyn, Messrs. J. Josselyn and W. W. Paul, 0; Mrs. Smythe and Mr. F. J. E. Spring, 0.

The drawings for the I. F. A. Tournament will be found in our Football columns.

We gather from the report of the seventy-eighth general meeting of the Standard Life Assurance Co., a copy of which has been sent us by the local manager, that the aggregate of new sums assured placed on the books during the year again exceeds the total for the previous year, and is the largest amount recorded in the history of the office. The claims by death, on the other hand, notwithstanding the increased business, are lower than in 1902. During the same period the Company's Funds have been increased by the very considerable amount of £371,000, and now exceed eleven millions sterling. The supervision of the investments in which these Funds are placed receives the anxious care of the Directors, and they are glad to state that throughout the year they have found favourable opportunities of making new investments for such monies as were available for that purpose. The ratio of the interest yielded by the whole of the Company's Funds, including balances in the hands of agents or otherwise unproductive, has increased during the year from £4 1s. to £4 2s. 7d. per cent., which will, doubtless, be recognised as a very satisfactory return on so large a sum.

The Board continues to devote much attention to the development of the various branches at home and abroad, and in the case of the great majority of these the progress during the year has been satisfactory. In South Africa, and in India more especially, the increase of the business, which had been temporarily checked by the Boer War, has been very marked, aided also in the case of India by the reduction in the rates of premium.

Those interested in life assurance will find something to interest them in the following figures which we extract from the report :—

Amount proposed for assurance during the year 1903 (6,454 proposals): £3,179,306 ; amount of assurances accepted during the year 1,903, and for which 5,408 policies were issued £2,407,916 ; premiums on new policies issued £98,495 ; purchase price of 171 new annuities £129,074 ; claims by death under 1,028 policies, during the year 1903, inclusive of bonus additions £695,579 ; claims under matured endowments and endowment assurances during the year 1903, 157 policies, inclusive of bonus additions £74,471 ; subsisting assurances as at 15th November 1903, amounted to £27,649,322, the number of existing policies being 57,371. Revenue £1,390,196 ; accumulated funds £11,014,317 ; being an increase during the year of £371,689.

The Calcutta Rowing Club Regatta fixed for the 30th instant (which date by the way has been appropriated for the football charity match) promises well, judging by the activity which prevails every evening at Kidderpore. So far there are four crews in the Class Fours and at present they are arranged as follows :—Services, Dr. W. C. Hossack, Captain R. C. Wilson, Lieutenant H. E. Szczepanski and Captain H. W. Gardiner. Banks, Messrs. C. V. Green, L. R. Carter, H. Longford, and A. J. M. Carroll. Peepulpatty Dug Ups, Messrs. F. R. S. Charles, J. Graves, G. Peddie, and G. Watson. Merchants, Messrs. H. W. Hales, H. S. Bull, C. S. Wilson, and J. M. LeCocq.

The following are certain entrants for the Junior Sculls :—Messrs. C. S. Wilson, H. S. Bull, and W. C. Burke and among the "possibles" are Messrs. J. A. Tassie, A. M. Grose, and G. Watson.

Practice for the Ladies' Race, which will be rowed in single sculling dinghies with coxswains, is very interesting : there will be at least six entrants we hear, and, from what the critics on the bank say, there should be a good race.

The preliminary heats will be decided on Thursday and Friday, the 28th and 29th instant, and entries close next Saturday.

A letter from the Honorary Secretary of the Calcutta Football League, published among our correspondence, tells us that a sum of Rs. 1,111 was handed over to local charities as the net proceeds of the booking at the late Charity Match. This is a large and satisfactory result and one on which we congratulate all concerned.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes :—Two fairly fast games of polo have been played this week in which I was glad to notice a general improvement in the form of individual players. This may have been due to the state of the ground which was in better order for polo than it has been since the rains set in, but I am inclined to think that practice has had as much to do with the improved form shown as anything else. Practice games are all very well in their way, but one would like to see those Tuesday and Thursday games vested with more interest than they are at present. In the absence, however, of military interest in local polo it is not possible to get up even a Civil vs. Military game.

Votaries of the "royal and ancient game" are girding up their loins in preparation for the Royal Western Indian Golf Club Tournament at Nasik in September and all the regular attendants at the links may be seen in the mornings getting themselves into their handicap form. Local golfers expect great things of W. P. Pechey this year.

The mounted sports on Wednesday were held in delightful weather and attracted a large and fashionable crowd. The entries were larger than they have been hitherto this season, a fact which afforded considerable satisfaction to the honorary secretaries, Messrs. Crum and Hill, who have left no stone unturned to make these meetings a success and who have frequently been obliged to work under the most disheartening conditions. The programme opened with the usual tent pegging competition in half sections and for this seven half sections competed, a great improvement on previous entries. The winners, Messrs. D. Graham and W. E. Crum had very good points while Messrs. Reddie and Hill and Symons and P. F. Fischer who were bracketed second were only one point behind. The jumping competition, which was second on the programme, did not fill so well and was an easy win for Mr. Greig with Mr. Fischer second.

The ladies tilting, always one of the most popular events, drew five fair entrants all of whom showed considerable skill. The first prize was carried off by Mrs. McCausland and the second by Miss Crommelin. The Lloyd-Lindsay competition, in half sections, also brought out a large number of entries and after a keen contest was won by Messrs. Graham and Crum with Messrs. Rutherford and Greig second. A new feature was introduced in the shape of a Dog Derby for which a dozen representatives of the canine species competed. Some of the doggies entered into the spirit of the thing and responded nobly to the cries of encouragement from their owners stationed away down the other end of the course, but others of pugilistic tendencies seemed more inclined to have a scrap than win fame for themselves and their proud proprietors. After a close and exciting race between some half dozen of the competitors the verdict was obtained by Mr. Roberts' dog with Mrs. Halliday's only a head behind. The Pony Scurry drew five starters and resulted in a win for Mr. Fischer's "Hira," (scratch) ridden by owner, by two lengths. Mr. McCausland's Sybarite (scratch) also ridden by owner and Mr. Spence's "Pepper" (50 yards) ridden by Mr. M. Gray were second and third respectively. The Horse Scurry attracted four entries Mr. S. Graham's. "Grey Leg" (30 yards) ridden by owner winning by two lengths with Mr. Fischer's "Dart" ridden by owner and Mr. Symons' "Surprise" ridden by Mr. Cook second and third respectively.

Turning to Soccer doings, two of the best games played in the Harwood League so far were witnessed on Tuesday and Wednesday evening and were so evenly and closely contested that no score was recorded in either of them. In the first game, which was between the Rovers and the Perseus team, play was of a most even nature both goals being attacked in turn, but brilliant saving on the part of the goalkeepers prevented any score. In both attack and defence there was absolutely nothing to choose between the two teams and for the second time in succession they played a drawn game, their first game ending in a draw of one goal all. A great crowd turned out on Wednesday to witness the game between the Royal Garrison Artillery (cupholders) and the Cheshires "A" team who are at the top of the league table. Both sides were very evenly balanced and the result was quite the finest display under the Association code seen this season. There was nothing to choose between the back divisions, with perhaps the exception that the Gunners' goal-keeper seemed the safer of the two, but the Cheshire's forward line showed slightly the best combination. The Gunners, played under a slight disadvantage in the first half having to face a strong breeze. The Cheshires did most of the attacking, but could not break through the impregnable defence of the Gunners' backs who played a grand game. Just before crossing over the Gunners asserted themselves and a lively time ensued in front of the Cheshires' goal. The latter were however, equal to the occasion and kept their goal intact. The principal feature in the second half was the good passing indulged in. The result of the game, a pointless draw, afforded much satisfaction to the partizans of the two teams.

On Thursday evening the Cheshire "B" team inflicted a crushing defeat on the Telegraph team by six goals to nil, which, curiously enough, was the margin by which they won their first league match against the same team.

An interesting Rugger match was played on Monday evening between a combined military and naval team and the Bombay Gymkhana which was won by the latter by a goal and a try to a goal. Montgomery Phillips, Kendall and Brand were most in evidence for the Gymkhana while the brothers Langhorne, Taylor, and Sneyd played a good game for the combined team.

A letter has been received by the Cricket Secretary of the Bombay Gymkhana stating that the Kathiawar cricket team will be unable to go on tour this year in consequence of the low state of finances owing to the failure of Messrs. William Watson and Company.

Far and away the best innings played by a Gymkhana batsman this season was that by A. H. S. Aston for the Gymkhana vs. Cheshire Regiment on Saturday. The old Harrovian has been displaying very consistent form this season and up to last Saturday was able to point to a batting average of 39·2. His highest innings had been 86 made against the United Services, but on Saturday he had the satisfaction of making his first century in India, playing a faultless innings of 114. At one time he was able to claim 100 out of a total of 144, but the last man, Coombs, hitting with great power managed to score 30 in ten minutes including six fours. Aston's century should make his selection for the Presidency team practically certain, and there seems every hope that he will make runs against the Parsees. His average is now 54·2 for five matches. The Cheshire Regiment managed to make a draw of the match.

News was received in Bombay by cable on Saturday morning of the death of Major H. B. Stanford, of the Royal Garrison Artillery in the Gulf of Aden. The deceased officer, who had been stationed in Bombay during the past eighteen months, left for England on Saturday, the 9th, on short leave, and although a bit seedy was not in a state to cause his friends any anxiety. His sudden death is much regretted by local sportsmen for, although not able to take any active part in games, he was always ready and willing to support any sporting movement.

The Madras Boat Club hold their hot weather regatta on Saturday, 3rd September, the following events figuring on the programme :—Club Challenge fours, half mile ; Junior Sculls, half mile ; Junior Pairs (with cox), half mile, Tub Mixed Pairs and Tub Sailing race.

The Automobile Association of Bengal is moving into the rooms below the Asiatic Society's Museum till recently occupied by the Photographic Society of India. Owing to the generosity of a member of the Committee of the Association, the room has already been fitted up with electric lights and a fan, and the furnishing of the premises is now being pushed on, with a view to providing members with a convenient and comfortable place of meeting. An inauguration dinner has been suggested, but this may perhaps be deferred till the cold weather, when a large accession to the ranks of motorists is confidently predicted by those who keep their eyes open to the signs of the times. About 50 cars have now been registered in Calcutta by the Commissioner of Police and this number does not include motor bicycles, which have a separate register. By the rules of the Association no entrance fee is payable by members until a certain number have been enrolled, but this number is likely to be reached shortly, so it is in the interest of all who possess motor-cars or bicycles, or intend shortly to do so, and who have not already joined the Association to lose no time in getting their election put in hand. Dr. Nield Cook, the Health Officer to the Corporation, is Chairman ; Mr. Oakley, Vice-Chairman ; and Mr. J. H. H. Rolfe, Honorary Secretary and Treasurer of the Association.

The revival of lawn tennis is shown by the keen interest taken in the championship meeting at Wimbledon, a full report of the concluding day of which will be found in "The Weasel's" letter. The fight in the singles between Greville and Riseley went to the latter owing to his splendid placing down the side line to Greville's back hand. The match between the Belgian champion and Hall Green, the champion of Homburg, was also highly exciting to the onlookers. It is rather difficult to say why lawn tennis ever went out of fashion. It was far the best game ever invented for garden sport, for it gave the maximum of exercise with the least real fatigue. Its temporary eclipse was possibly due to the fact that it is essentially a local game, and in every locality, after a certain time, the "form" of each player, and his relation to other players, became too well known. The results of the games, even doubles, were more or less a foregone conclusion.

First Motorist : "Coming for a motor trip ?"

Second Motorist : "Motoring, eh ! I call it bloatering."

First Motorist : "How's that ?"

Second Motorist : "Because if you don't 'kipper' sharp look-out you 'bloater' blazes !"

Among important county cricket results last week are the following : On the 15th Lancashire beat Derbyshire by an innings and 120 runs ; on the 16th the South Africans beat an England eleven at Lords by 189 runs. Drawn matches.—Surrey vs. Worcestershire, Kent vs. Yorkshire, London County vs. Warwickshire.

Our Bangalore Correspondent writes :—Amongst the many sporting functions which are now taking place in Bangalore, the noble art of self-defence was represented by a regimental boxing competition which was brought off at the theatre of the 6th Dragoon Guards on the evenings of the 13th and 14th instant. Most of the events were for novices and the science shown was therefore naturally not of a very high order. But there were some good bouts, and the competition was carried through with excellent temper and spirit. In the final for light weight novices, Sergeant Haig gave weight away and defeated Private Barker. The latter depended almost entirely on rushing and windmill hitting, but Haig shaped decidedly well, and having his man blown in the last round walked round him literally like the proverbial cooper round a cask.

The heavy weight novices' final, between Privates Lambert and Raymond produced a fairly good fight, but it was only the unflinching pluck of the latter boxer which kept him going for three rounds, for

Lambert was the aggressor from start to finish. In the middle-weight novices' final bout an unfortunate occurrence took place, Private Stevenson, who was rapidly pulling up a majority of points, scored by Private Graham in the first two rounds, striking his man when down, and losing on the foul. It was apparently only the result of excitement, and not a deliberate foul blow.

Turning to competitions open to the regiment, Sergeant Haig was as successful in the light-weights as he had been in the novices' event. He had a real good bout with Private Costin in the final, and there was very little to choose between the men at the end. Haig, however, got the verdict on points. The final for the regimental middle-weights cannot be said to have been so good, Private Beeston hammering Private Foster from pillar to post throughout, and having him practically beaten early in the second round. But the two who faced one another in the final bout for the regimental heavy-weights put up a fine fight. Their style was very different, and Thorp had a tremendous advantage over Tye in height and reach. He swung the right with good effect on several occasions, and though Tye kept going gamely, the Judges' verdict in favour of Thorp was the only one possible. Major Hamilton refereed throughout, and announced after the tournament that this would be the first of other similar competitions. Several hundred rupees were given away in prizes.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Friday, 1*st July* 1904.

THE King had an imposing reception, marred only by the rainy and tempestuous weather, when he made his entry into Kiel harbour on Saturday afternoon, after an excellent voyage. The display which his nephew had devised in his honour, and for his edification was characteristic of the place, as although Kiel is given up to sport during the yacht race week it is for the remaining 51 weeks of the year simply and solely a great naval station. In the evening the Emperor gave a State banquet on board the Hohenzollern and, having buried the mailed fist for the nonce, made an eminently pacific speech in proposing King Edward's health. The King's speech in reply, is admitted, on all hands, to have been even more tactful and happy—if that be possible—than his public utterances invariably are, and it should do much towards calming the agitated nerves of some of our friends at home, and removing their fears lest Teutonic guile should use the occasion to wrest untoward concessions from us.

Though the King in his speech laid emphasis on the fact that his well-known interest in yacht racing was the chief reason for his visit to Kiel, as a matter of fact only on the last day was any considerable time devoted to the racing. On Monday the King was shown over the dockyard, and witnessed some racing by the boats of the German fleet, but the great naval review, which we were told, was arranged, and which was to exhibit to an admiring and envious world the spectacle of "the renewal in strength of the Sea power of the German Empire," for some reason did not come off. This is the first opportunity our naval officers have had of inspecting a number of German men-of-war, and from all I can gather, the result is they do not covet their neighbour's ships. Our Blue Jackets altogether declined to take the boat races seriously.

On Tuesday the yacht racing was of more interest, but the King spent the day at Hamburg, where all accounts agree he had a most magnificent reception, and with characteristic German hospitality was entertained by his magnificence, the Burgomaster, and the civil authorities at a luncheon which lasted two hours. The officers and men of the British men-of-war have had hospitable entertainment, and much cordial good fellowship has been evinced. Americans seem to have been much to the fore in all the social gatherings ; the largest yachts in the harbour were owned by Americans, and several of our correspondents note the courtesies lavished on American yachtsmen by both the Kaiser and Prince Henry. It is much to be regretted that many of those who had the best opportunity of seeing the Emperor at close quarters do not consider his health to be as good as might be wished.

The Seductive proposal by Sir John Leng that the Government should withdraw all contentious Bills at present before Parliament, and wind up the Session rapidly "in order to submit the policy of the Ministers to the judgment of the country," has not been accepted by the Prime Minister with the gratitude it no doubt deserved, but he seized the opportunity it gave to administer a much-needed warning to his "supporters" (N.B.—This is "writ sarcastic") as to the course the Government would take if "they fail to secure that 'day to day' support which is necessary in order effectively to carry on Parliamentary business." All sorts of reasons are given for this laxity in the attendance of Unionist Members. The Free-Fooders blame the Whole-Hoggers, and Whole-Hoggers the Free-Fooders, but a reason can be more easily, if not more creditably, found in the extreme dreariness, and the aid of unreality, of the debates. The Radical orator, though no doubt interesting enough to himself, is not as a rule inspirating. The most flinty hearted amongst us would not condemn an unlucky fellow creature to remain constantly within hearing of the "dreary drips" of House of Commons debate, but it is the duty of that fellow creature, if he be a Unionist M. P., to remain within hearing of the division bell. And if he does not, it is devoutly to be hoped his constituents will remember it when the long-threatened General Election takes place. "From information received" Mr. Balfour's warning has produced some effect.

The inaugural meeting of the International Congress of the Salvation Army at the Albert Hall seems to have been a model of skilful stage management, and a gathering which under less admirable organisation might easily have become a latter day Babel was a really impressive spectacle. However much some of its methods may offend our taste, it is admitted on all hands that the Salvation Army has done good social work, and probably its religious works has been on the whole, beneficial. The fact may, at least, be placed to its credit that, unlike many other religious bodies, its powerful organisation has never been used by its Commander-in-Chief in a spirit of political partizanships, but has remained true to its original purpose. Forty-nine countries in which the Army labours, were represented at the Congress. For some reason, not easy to determine, the Dutch contingent was given the place of honour, but the few Japanese representatives present undoubtedly received the most cordial welcome of the evening, and the programme informed all whom it might concern that this contingent included "The Saved Editor." The Australasian Delegates included a "converted footballer," and among the German was the "Drunkard's Brigade" with their ambulance in which they were wont to carry off their inebriated comrades to seclusion—and it is to be hoped—repentance. The women of the Foreign contingents were mostly garbed in the costume of their respective countries, and the familiar poke bonnet so inexpressibly hideous, evidently finds no favour in their eyes. General Booth made an excellent and effective speech alluding, with evident gratification to the interview the King accorded him. By the way the "General's" designation, in the Court Circular of that date, reads oddly. "The Rev. William Booth, Commander-in-Chief of the Salvation Army."

The Royal Agricultural show has again had good luck in the weather for its annual show. Last year it had the one fine week in the wettest and most dreary of summers. And this year the weather was almost perfect. The military display by the Royal Horse Guards was enjoyable, and would have been more so for many of us had the spur been more moderately used. The opinion was freely expressed by competent judges that it was frequently used without the slightest necessity on provocation. The Committee would be well advised to devote some attention to the rough and uneven surface of the ground before the next show is held. The attendance was more than disappointing. It was bad last year : this year it was even worse being the smallest that has been known for 29 years. With the exception of the show at Taunton in 1875—a very wet week—the 1904 show registers the smallest attendance since 1860. The loss on last year's show at Park Royal was over £9,000, and the loss this year must inevitably exceed that amount.

Of matters theatrical there is not much to chronicle. The French Company at the Avenue Theatre last week produced Yvette, a five act play of portentous length by M. Pierre Barton, founded on a story by Guy de Maupassant. The plot is of the slightest, and spun out to attenuation. Mlle. Marthe Régnier plays the title part with much charm, but the preternatural innocence and ignorance of Yvette make too heavy a demand on one's credulity, and the character thereby loses in interest. The Marquise Obardi of Mlle. Dorziat is a fine piece of acting, and M. Tarride as Jean de Servigny is good. On Monday night the same company produced "La Bourse ou la Vie" (a comedy in four acts and five scenes) by Alfred Capus, which promises to be one of their successes. The piece is witty, and is most admirably played. Mlle. Dorziat in particular, showing herself to be a brilliant comedy actress, and winning what is perhaps, up to the present, her most brilliant success this season. The plot can hardly be described as original. Jacques Herbaut finds himself too poor to keep up his position in Parisian Society and determines to retire with his wife to the country. His wife (Hélène), however, prefers Paris and means to stay there. Her old school fellow Pervenche introduces to them Brassac, a financier, under whose protection she is living. Brassac hoping that Herbaut will float him in society takes him into partnership. Brassac's business is rotten and speedily comes to grief. Brassac disappears and Herbaut is arrested. Le Houssel, a wealthy man of fashion, in love with Hélène suggests a transaction by which her husband's honour may be saved at the expense of her own. In a very brilliantly played scene he makes his proposal ; she indignantly dismisses him ; he is repentant, apologises, and is forgiven ; and she accepts the cheque which will give her husband freedom. All ends happily. Herbaut refuses the cheque, but Brassac who has returned to Paris in search of a rich lady with whom he has fallen in love, is arrested. The rich lady, touched by the risk he has run for her sake, marries him, and her millions set everything right. M. Bertrand admirably supported Mlle. Dorziat in the great scene between Hélène and Le Houssel, and M. Tarride scored another success as Brassac.

On Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon Mr. Tree gave a special performance of "Julius Cæsar" in which he, of course, plays Marcus Antonius ; Mr. Oscar Asche representing Brutus. This revival of the play is a remarkably fine one. Miss Margaret Halston is beautiful as Calpurnia, the acting all round is excellent, and the splendour of the scenery and the wonderful stage management fully sustain the reputation of His Majesty's. Mr. Tree brings his season to a close on Thursday next, with a programme consisting an Act from that (to me) most depressing of plays. "The Darling of the Gods," the Westminster Hall scene from "Richard II ; two scenes from "Twelfth Night" with Miss Tree as Viola, and "The Man Who Was." Truly a full and a varied programme.

There is something pathetic in the death of Clement Scott, following so closely upon the performance given on his behalf at His Majesty's Theatre. Though he himself was not destined to benefit from the exertions of his friends it must have been a satisfaction to him to know with what wholehearted zeal and devotion his friends came forward. The son of a clergyman, educated at Marlborough College, he was appointed to a War Office clerkship in 1860, but his chief interest even in these early years, was the theatre. In 1872 he reached the summit of his ambition by becoming the dramatic critic of the Daily Telegraph, and by means of his articles in that paper held for a time a unique position. But his temperament was too emotional for a critic, and he was often led by the impulse of the moment to pronounce verdicts which he must afterwards have regretted. It is needless now to recall his reasons for resigning his post on the staff of the Daily Telegraph and it is pleasant to know that before his death his relations with the leading members of the dramatic profession had been restored to their former friendly footing.

Yet another Ladies' Club ! This latest addition to the number opened its doors to members only last week. In point of position it is the most ambitious venture of the kind that has yet been made, being, I believe, the first Ladies' Club to invade the sacred precincts of Piccadilly. The new club, the Lyceum, has taken over the premises, 128, Piccadilly, lately occupied by the Imperial Service Club, together with many of the fixtures, and some of the equipment. The club is intended for ladies who are engaged in the professions, or are connected with literature, journalism, art, science, or medicine. The chair-woman of the committee is Lady Frances Balfour, and the subscriptions are extremely moderate. The entrance fee is only one guinea, the subscription for town members being three, and for country members two guineas a year. There are thirty-five bed-rooms which will be an immense convenience to country members, and for the catering a varied scale of charges has been arranged. There is a fine billiard-room, and a capital library, well supplied with books of reference. Altogether the "Lyceum" promises to be a notable addition to the number of Ladies' clubs.

From the World I cull the following paragraph :—"Some of the London correspondents have been commenting upon Mr. Winston Churchill's restless inability to sit still in his place in the House of Commons—a peculiarity which, it has been suggested, is the result of overstrain." Now I candidly confess that for some time past, when I have been in the House, the performances of Mr. Winston Churchill have had a fascination for me quite out of proportion to their importance. One of his favourite amusements, when not engaged in "going for" Joe, is to take a sheet of the Order of the Day, roll it up into a long, thin, stiff spill, twist that, with the utmost nicety and precision, into a triangle and throw it under his seat, then take up another sheet of paper, go through the same performance, and fling the completed triangle under the seat to keep company with its fellows. Occasionally the spill would be twisted into a knot, or a figure of 8 instead of the triangle. The whole thing seemed to be mechanical—almost unconscious—the consequence of "restless inability to sit still." And in my opinion the symptom of very serious nervous overstrain.

The second trial of Sophia Annie Watson on a charge of perjury in connection with her unsuccessful action against Major-General Fitz Hugh for alleged breach of promise, resulted in a verdict of guilty, and thereby what at one time threatened to be gross miscarriage of justice, was prevented. Watson had been under the notice of the police since 1889; there were four previous convictions against her, one of them a term of three years' penal servitude for fraud; and it was during her imprisonment in Lewes' Goal that she made the acquaintance of the unlucky General who was one of the visiting justice of the Gaol. To the average mind it appears unlikely that an acquaintance made under such unpropitious conditions should result in marriage—or even in a proposal of marriage—there was not, so far as the average mind can gather, a tittle of evidence to support Miss Sophia Annie Watson's statement, and the result of her action for breach was a verdict in favour of the defendant. The second act of the interesting drama showed Miss Watson in the dock on a charge of perjury. That the jury should leave their box for consultation seemed a mere form, and the announcement by the foreman, after two hours' consultation, that the twelve good men and true were unable to agree led one to ponder upon many things—chiefly as to whether trial by jury is the altogether unmixed blessing we are assured it is. The Recorder mildly inquired whether the twelve good men and true grasped the fact that by their failing to agree they were imputing perjury, not only to General Fitz Hugh but also to Colonel Isaacson, the governor of Lewes' Goal; but as after another hour's reflection they still found themselves unable to agree, they were perforce, dismissed.

At the second trial yesterday a new jury found the woman guilty without hesitation, adding a strong expression of their sympathy with Major-General Fitz Hugh; and the Judge sentenced her to four years' penal servitude, remarking that she had been convicted on the clearest possible evidence. The Judge's concluding remarks on the dangers to which Magistrates are exposed in dealing with designing convicts, strike me as rather wide of the mark. The risk of a convict bringing an action for breach of promise against one of the visiting justices is infinitesimal compared with the danger of having one's reputation at the mercy of an addle-pated Judge.

Various items: The sale of the art collection of the late Mr. C. H. T. Hawkins was concluded at Christie's yesterday. The collection, which consisted chiefly of snuff boxes and miniatures, realised over £186,000; the highest sum realised by an art sale for many years past. At a pawnbroker's at Brixton, there is on sale at the price of £50, a solid silver casket which the Edinburgh City Fathers did honour to themselves by presenting to "Charles Stewart Parnell, Esquire, M. P., on 20th July 1889." Along with the Burgess Ticket conferring the Freedom of their City on that gentleman. The casket was pledged about three years ago. A testimonial consisting of a cheque for £2,150, and a silver salver has been presented to Mr. Albert E. Southall, Secretary to the National Union of Conservative, and Constitutional Associations, in recognition of nearly twenty years indefatigable labours for the conservative cause. The preliminary inquiry in the Pollard Case, the Hooley and Lawson Case, and the Sievier Case, has in each instance resulted in the committal for trial of the accused. A committee has been formed to set on foot a fund for the support of the monthly journal founded by Miss Frances Power Cobbe, in which she advocated kind treatment of animals. Mrs. Roscoe, Poston House, Peter Church, Herefordshire, is the Honorary Treasurer. On the Annual Speech day at Rugby last Saturday, Dr. Jex-Blake, Dean of Wells, unveiled a window in memory of old Rugbeians who fell in the South African War. It is from a design left by the late Sir E. Burne-Jones, and has been executed by Messrs. Morris. On the same day Lord Methuen unveiled, at Clifton College, the memorial to the 43 old Cliftonians who fell in South Africa. The memorial consists of a pedestal of portland stone, bearing a bronze tablet on each side, and surmounted by a bronze statue of St. George.

LIONS VS. TIGERS.

AS your East African correspondent R. E. D., in your issue of 23rd June, has asked your readers to swop tiger yarns with him against his lion ones, I take him on declaring them "not good." I having four aces AND the "Joker."

By way of an "ante" I may mention that about 1871 there was a lion and tiger fight in Madras A few animals used to be kept caged in the "People's park," and a lion and tiger lived there on the "semi detached villa" principle with only a sliding partition between them. This was opened by mistake one day and I was told that the lion never had a show. He was laid out a "stiffy" inside of ten minutes. Not content with the mere victory "stripes" began to eat him beginning with his tail.

Of course there may be individual lions that can polish off individual tigers, that proves nothing. I knew a girl so good with the gloves (or without them for that matter) that she made most men who stood up to her look foolish. That does not prove that women are stronger than men. "R. E. D." must remember that the average lion measures only between eight and nine feet in length (the size of the average tigress) whereas stripes averages a foot longer, Leo, therefore, is outclassed. Stripes again has a longer forearm, which most people forget on account of his less erect carriage. So far, then, as power goes stripes takes the cake. Leo, however, has one very great protection in his mane. It not only forms a pad between Leo's flesh, and stripes' claws; but it baffles "stripes" who strikes or grabs at it instead of at solid flesh, besides getting in his eyes when at close grips. Notwithstanding all this there can be no doubt that tigers would win eighty out of every hundred fights.

In most tea districts the garden coolies are encouraged to keep cattle, the cowherds being paid by the management. And on all gardens there is a strong enclosure to keep the cattle secure in at night. In a certain garden this enclosure was formed by a massive seven foot high palisade. I know for I helped to build it myself. Six to nine inch diameter logs stuck on end in a three feet deep trench as close as possible, and cross braced with heavy timber. Nothing could get under or through or over, unless it had wings, and yet the big Hansi bull the agents had sent up to improve the breed of cattle was killed in it and carried out of it one night. At least he was locked up with the rest of the cattle one night and next morning, was found dead and partly eaten by a tiger, quarter of a mile or so off. I was away at the time but Truthful Jeames on my return assured me that not a post had been pushed aside, and the only way the bull could have been taken out was OVER that palisade. Stripes must have jumped in seized the bull and jumped back with the bull in his mouth. Truthful was a careful man, and whatever his own private opinions were never let them interfere with business, so he swore to the head cowherd that he must have forgotten to fasten the gate of the enclosure. It was always secured with a massive chain and a huge but primitive padlock. So he fined the cowherd a month's pay. It was no use the man protesting, that if such had been the case, the rest of the cattle would have been found straying all over the garden. When Truthful could save money he never neglected the chance.

The man, therefore, hoping that in a day or two stripes would return for another animal, borrowed an old "Brown Bess" with the intention of recouping the fine by the Government reward for killing the tiger. A few mornings after the man turned up at the bungalow with a tiger claw, and the following story. On the fourth night of his watch in a tree. Soon after the moon had risen, he saw a tiger step out from the jungle; and proceed with a quick slouching run straight for the cattle enclosure gate. It was full moon and almost as bright as day, and the man from his perch in the tree could see both inside and outside of the enclosure.

Arrived at the gate 'stripes" reared himself on his hind legs against it. Steadied the big padlock with one forepaw while he inserted a claw of the other into the key hole; and deliberately proceeded to pick the lock with his claw. This accomplished he pushed the gate partly open sidled through and closed the gate. Carefully selecting the fattest cow he chased her round to the gate, nosed the door open, thrust her through in front of him, closed the gate: and again reared up and was twisting his claw into the padlock to RE-LOCK IT, when the man fired. Whether he was wounded, or only just startled, the watcher could not say; but "stripes" gave a mighty leap, wrenching off his claw which remained in the padlock. "Then," said Truthful, the man showed me a tiger claw apparently but recently torn off a tiger as the muscle at its base was quite fresh. Truthful further remarked that he examined the claw and found rust on it; and on going to the cattle enclosure gate, he found the chain and padlock considerably scratched, and with slight blood stains. Tiger pug marks were seen leading to and from it. A longer search discovered the cow in question killed and half eaten by a tiger. Well, there's the story, and it must have been true for I saw the claw afterwards myself and, Truthful Jeames was a gentleman of some standing and well-known in his district, and is surely more reliable than the native who saw the lion FLING the donkey over the "Boma." That reminds me of a story told me by a dear old Scotch doctor. He's dead and gone this many a long year, let us hope he needs no punkas now. He had but one failing —whiskey.

"Indeed, it's the bad thing it is whatever," the old man would remark. "And that is why I like to put it out of the reach of you laddies." He did it pretty effectively for unless we had cared to tap him there was no chance of seeing it again. I shall be grieved if any of your readers doubt the veracity of my old friend.

"De mortuis" you know, and so on. I am free to admit though that there perhaps is a wee, wee drappie too much whiskey in the story and here it is as told to me.

He was making a short cut, on foot, from one tea garden to another; and had lost his way in the jungle. Coming to a stream some twenty yards wide which was in full spate from recent rains, he climbed a tree on its banks to see if he could spot a boat. Nary a boat could be seen, and he was about to descend when he saw a tigress and two cubs come down the opposite bank to the water's edge. Several times the mother tried to get the cubs to cross; but they funked the furious current, so the tigress swam across by herself. Naturally enough the doctor thought he had better remain where he was. Mrs. Stripes crossed but it was as much as she could manage and she lay in a small patch of grass recovering her wind. Presently, all unsuspecting of danger a wild sow, and pretty big at that, came by, whom Mrs. Stripes speedily converted into pork. Now the question was, How to get the meat to her progeny, who stood wailing on the farther side. What was the doctor's surprise to see her come to the water's edge; and scrape up a circular mound of mud about a foot high. Very carefully she firmed it down and trimmed its sides nearly perpendicular till its top was about two feet in diameter. She then went and brought the pig balancing the body with great nicety of adjustment on the top of the mound. "Then man," exclaimed the old doctor, "Ah saw as gran' a' St. Andrew's swing as ah iver wush tae see. The beastie just steppit back a step or twa, eyed the carcase then, wi a wee bit prancie forrard, she swung her huge left paw (I mind weel it was the left) catching the body, plump, and hiking it clean o'er the stream with a roar that wud ah frighted a Glascae crowd."

"Gosh man what a smack it struck the mud on the opposite bank just atween the cubs."

Here the o'd man generally concluded with—

"Ah'm just thinking laddie ye've had as much wheeskey as is guid for ye, so ah'll pit ye out the o' the way o' temptation"; and he'd promtly empty the bottle into his own tumbler.

Fishing.

FISHING IN KASHMIR.

MOST contributors of articles on fishing confine themselves to accounts of the sport they themselves have obtained in good localities and the thanks of all anglers are clearly due to them for the hints and information they provide.

But occasionally it may not be altogether out of place to describe places to be avoided. In this latter category Kashmir may not unjustly be classified.

To those primarily in search of a good climate and who would like the opportunity of a little desultory fishing thrown in, Kashmir will certainly commend itself. But I would never advise any man whose first aim was sport to go there.

I am speaking of localities on the Jhelum river ordinarily accessible by boat. On some of the routes into Kashmir, notably the Poonch and Bhimber routes, excellent sport is assured at the right time of year. But I have no faith in the fishing in Kashmir proper.

To anyone going up on two or even three months' leave no certainty of sport is offered.

That monster fish exist is not open to doubt as monsters have been caught and the fact has been crystallised into a hopeful tradition to stimulate flagging zeal.

Seasons, no doubt, vary considerably, but the first three months of the leave season, when fellows stationed in the plains are generally glad of a change, are practically blank months in Kashmir so far as Mahseer are concerned.

This year two Mahseer of 12 and 4 pounds respectively were caught at Sopor in May and during June upwards of a dozen were caught, but none I believe over 13½lbs. in weight, which, with respect to the number of anglers engaged works out to a fractional figure per rod per month.

In August, September, and the beginning of October, the prospects of Mahseer improve, but they are always uncertain and attended by mosquitos of large size. Men do say that roughly speaking, very roughly speaking, they attain the dimensions of a snipe, but I do not hold myself responsible for the truth of this.

So the case is as follows. In May, June, and July, there is practically no fishing. I speak of Mahseer only at present, and in August, September, and part of October, a few big fish are occasionally taken to an accompaniment of mosquitos.

I am not moved to write by the bitterness of disappointment, but simply in the hope that anyone who proposes to go to Kashmir during the first three months of the leave season mainly in search of Mahseer may have some warning of what to expect.

As a rule it is not easy to obtain reliable fishing information. Many people will recommend certain places where they know so and so killed goodness knows how many fish. On being further questioned as to dates they "cannot swear to the exact month, but it was somewhere about now." And so the misguided fisherman strains his banking account to reach some distant paradise only to find that fish are not shewing and is probably unable to incur the expense of immediately transferring his activity to some more promising locality.

Too much stress can hardly be laid on stating the dates on which fish were caught if an article on fishing is to be of any practical value.

Many fellows even disguise localities—e. g., "M. and I fished with great success in the River P. 4 miles from Z."—which can be of no earthly use to help struggling anglers to share the success they boast of.

Compared with the size of the country, anglers in India are by far too small a minority and too widely diffused to make the concealment of good localities in any way necessary, and it is difficult to perceive what other motive there may be. I imagine that most fellows in the plains would ordinarily endeavour to take leave at the beginning of the leave season and it is on this hypothesis that I am writing.

For good fishing therefore come not to Kashmir proper. From August to 15th October Mahseer may be caught, if you can stand the mosquitos. The only fish that I know of in Kashmir are four in number, Mahseer, Chiroo, Chuss and Roptoo or Hij. The latter I have not caught, but have seen it in the sacred fish tanks at Islamabad, which by the way are well worth a visit. The fish in them are perfectly tame and will eat from one's hand. They run from a few ounces to 9 or 10lbs. in weight and are all Chiroo, Chuss, and Roptoo, so far as I could judge.

English trout have been introduced into certain waters as an experiment, but their acclimatisation is still in process of development.

Working up the river from Murree I have fished at the following places during May and June with the poorest results: Kohalla, Domel, Hatti, or Hattian. Kitsahama 6 miles down from Baramula), every likely place between Kitsahama and Baramula. Sopor Dourak (on western shore of Wular Lake and about 10 miles north of Sopor). Banair (where the Jhelum flows into the Wular Lake). Soombal, Shadipore, Ningal, Pampoor, Bijwara, Kanbal (the highest point that boats can ascend the Jhelum and one mile from Islamabad), and in the Liddar River. I have also tried many intermediate likely looking spots on the river.

My experiences, of course, may have been unfortunate, but I don't think any man will produce good results from the river during these months. With regard to Mahseer at the most accessible places I will start with Baramula. A favourite place is just below the bridge where the water is very deep and very strong. Heavy sinkers are required, sufficient to strain an ordinary Salmon rod, so a short stout rod is necessary. Sopor is much the same, but with slightly lesser current. Spinning from an anchored boat is generally practised at both these places.

Dourak is still water and usually fished by trolling a long line. Ningal is also still water and later in the year Mahseer may be taken with a frog.

At Shadipore spinning is commonly practised either from the bank or from a boat.

Native fishermen occasionally capture, or get broken by, big fish by adopting a method more suited to Oriental patience than to European ideas of sport. They use a weighted line with a treble hook embedded in a big lump of atta. They drop this in a likely spot and await eventualities.

Chiroo and Chuss are nearly similar fish, leather mouthed and barbed and with small scales. The Chiroo has the larger mouth of the two and is adorned with spots, to which he owes his honorary title of 'trout.' But the similitude ends with his spots. Both are bottom feeders and may be taken spinning or with live bait, with mulberry, with atta or meat, and with the fly. As regards the fly I don't think they have any particular bias. The one I happened to use chiefly was a small "Thunder and Lightning" with which I caught Chiroo of a pound or so at Dourak and Sopor.

I do not remember having caught Chuss on a fly, but I believe they take it.

Chiroo, however, give no sport, but since they take a fly afford a certain amount of practice in casting.

The Chuss, if possible, is more of a "Swine-fish" than the Chiroo.

On a mulberry I have taken these fish in plenty up to 4lbs. or so. I use a tail hook and dropper and have frequently caught two at a strike. In still water they require a light float and quick striking. In fast water they hook themselves.

At Bijwara and at the junction of the Liddar and Jhelum rivers at Kanbal I have taken two and three dozen in a day of varying sizes. In August and September, when the river is low, these fish may be taken at the latter place particularly up to 16lbs., but not commonly over 6 or 7lbs.

They are, however, "swine-fish" and simply hang on the line till one has reeled up sufficiently to put a net under them.

During the first week in July I went to Baramula to try for Mahseer and also to do a little fly fishing for Chiroo. I found, however, that both Chiroo and Chuss were much off the feed, and a two pound specimen of the latter that I caught, I found to be in poor condition and much inflamed at the base of the fins and with sores or wounds on the tail and head.

Even small specimens of three inches long were similarly affected. I made enquiries from the native fishermen who told me that occasionally, not every year, a kind of sickness breaks out amongst them, which they attributed to heat, and that whilst in this state they would not feed. They did not seem to consider them unfit for food, if caught, but personally I should be very sorry to try one.

They also told me that Mahseer caught later in the year, particularly at Mingal, will generally be found to have the ventral fin much worn, in some cases almost worn away, which they attributed to the Mahseer having to hug the stony bottom of the Jhelum during their journey up from India, owing to the strength of the current.

I do not think that skill operates very much in Kashmir provided one spins deep enough, as fishing is mostly carried on from a boat where questions of concealment have no place.

In a big river like the Jhelum it is to a great extent guess work. A place is selected and heavy baits slung out and pulled in and slung out again, which may be good exercise, but is little else.

A man who goes to Kashmir chiefly for the climate and who takes up a rod and rifle with the intention of using them in a desultory fashion will probably be happy enough. But a man who wants fishing chiefly and who regards a temperate climate as an agreeable but non-essential adjunct will be better advised if he keeps away.

WHIST QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Will you kindly let us have your decision in this point that arose at whist the other day.

A
C

Two cards left in hand, B to lead. B leads a club, both C and D follow suit, but A trumps with the king of diamonds, having the nine of clubs in his hand.

This trick is left lying face up on the table.

A exposes his last card (the club) not playing it on the table, but holding it out in his hand in the act of leading, so that it was visible to all the players, and on an exclamation from one of his opponents, not from his partner, he attempts to rectify the error by placing his club in the previous trick.

Is he at liberty to recover his revoke on the plea that his next card not having left his hand is no lead but an exposed card?

T. S. P.

[A not having parted with his last card can substitute the club for the diamond. In the present case the penalty for an exposed card is of no use, and as a revoke has not been established no penalty can be exacted. ED.]

THE CHARITY MATCH.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—After meeting all expenses I have been able to forward a cheque for Rs. 370-8-6 to each of the following, as the profits of the recent Civil vs. Military Charity Match:—1. The Calcutta Hospital Nurses' Institution; 2. The Little Sisters of the Poor; 3. The Garrison Quartermaster for Military charities. The thanks of the League Committee are due to the players and those of the general public who supported the match by their presence inside the enclosures. Yours, etc.,

FISHING AT KODAIKANAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I should feel much obliged if any of your readers could give me information as to the fish and fishing at Kodaikanal. I recently came across the following in Thomas' "Rod in India" and it sounds rather promising:—"On the Pulney Hills, in the Madura District, is a sanatorium, about 6,000 feet above the sea, called Kodaikanal, and in it is a lake.....The best time seems to be May and June.....In January 1886, I put in 8 Carnatic Carp, and in May 1886, 20 Megalops Cyprinoides.

In the first week in June 1887, I sent up the young of Mahseer and of Carnatic Carp, and the gentleman on the spot to whom I consigned them wrote to me that he turned into the lake 19 out of the 20 Mahseer sent, alive and well, and the whole of the 60 Carnatic Carp sent, all vigorous but one, which however recovered. I have heard no news of them, though they ought to have made a show by this time and to improve the fishing in the lake."

He also says that before introducing these fish the lake swarmed with lesser Barils (Barilius gatensis), so there should have been no lack of food.

WHERE IS THE BEST FOOTBALL PLAYED?

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I have read your reply to the query of "Argument" in your issue of 14th July with surprise. As I happen to know, Mr. Editor, you have both played and seen a good deal of football in Bombay and Calcutta, and possibly in the other centres mentioned, I conclude that you were indulging in the mild diversion of pulling your correspondent's leg. Or do I detect in this an attempt, pardonable at this dull season, to start a controversy?

OLD FOSSIL.

[We have seen a fair amount of football in all three Presidencies, and we have experience of all sorts and conditions of queries—some sensible, some otherwise. We should say there ought not to be much doubt in which category to place that of "Argument." "Old Fossil" will find this subject referred to in a paragraph among our Athletic Notes.—ED.]

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I shouldn't have thought it of you? An old hand like yourself ought not to have fallen in with both feet over the idiotic question regarding "the best football" which you published in yesterday's issue of your esteemed paper which I read regularly, but do not pay for. My burra saheb is an advertiser. Verb Sap! Somewhere in Proverbs you will find old Solomon saying "Answer not a fool according to his folly, less thou be likened unto him"—by other fools,—vide paragraph in a local daily paper this morning! Surely the writer stands in need of the surgical operation considered necessary when certain Northerners are confronted with a joke?

JIGGINS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I do not endorse your opinion that the best football is probably played in Calcutta. I have seen splendid play there and old Internationals who were engaged playing almost up to their best form; and I have seen some terribly bad exhibitions there also. For that matter such has been my experience in Bombay and Simla. That's it—good, bad and indifferent play may be seen at each of the places mentioned by "Argument." Who can decide where the best is to be seen? I notice you, Mr. Editor, do not commit yourself to an emphatic opinion. But while the Presidency towns Simla and Lucknow are mentioned what price Allahabad, Secunderabad, or, say, Rangoon where I've seen some magnificent exhibitions of soccer, why have they been left out?

TRAVELLER.

[For the same reason, we presume, that found Kanchrapara and Krishnaghur neglected.—ED.]

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In reference to the enquiry of your correspondent "Argument," which appeared in your issue of 14th instant, I think the best football to be seen in India is at Simla, where most of the expert military teams come forward to win that much coveted trophy the "Durand Cup" which is always played before an enormous crowd and in the presence of the highest officials of India.

The Calcutta public will, I think, side with me in saying that Calcutta is getting played out so far as the competition for the I. F. A. Shield is concerned, for if you will kindly review the tournaments of the last few seasons you will see that the best and most exciting matches were played in the year 1901 when the redoubtable Royal Irish Rifles, who were the champions of India at that time, were in Calcutta and since then (although the League matches are somewhat interesting) the Shield Tournament has not been as interesting or of as high class as might have been expected.

Take this year for the Shield for instance, what a poor entry! Only one up-country team in—the Royal Irish Rifles, who will take all the trouble to come down all that way from Fyzabad.

I take this opportunity to ask the military teams within our Bengal Presidency or the whole of India, why they do not care to take more interest and come down to compete for the I. F. A. Shield. Let them answer, and after they have done so, I would ask the Secretary of the I. F. A. to do his best to remove the obstacles lying in their way so that we may be treated to better displays of football than we have had since 1901.

NON-FOOTBALLER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I see a correspondent of one of your contemporaries has been taking you to task for expressing the opinion that one probably sees the best football played in Calcutta. Every one to his own opinion of course; so, while I think you do not express the general verdict on this point [Oh! these good, literal people.—ED.] I am not at all prepared to endorse the opinion of the Statesman's correspondent, albeit made with such assurance, that tournaments such as the Durand, Murray, Punjab, and Bengal Army, show us the best football. I grant you military teams frequently show rare good form: but ofttimes spectators are prone to mistake mere pace and rush, coupled with a seasoning of gallery play, for skill and science, which, as we all know, sometimes has to knuckle under to other factors. Throughout the country there are good civilian teams, especially in the Presidency town. Some years they are especially strong, some years they are weak; and as the members thereof are subject to constant transfer, or frequently go home on leave just about the football season, they seldom have the same opportunities of playing together for lengthy periods, or getting up really effective combination as their soldier opponents. Nevertheless civilians very often show us some splendid games, even though they may not struggle through to the end in tournaments.

have times and again seen civilian teams beaten by "Tommy" teams, of far less skill, but with much more of the condition which plays such an important part in their successes. I by no means accept the dictum that we see the "best" football in our big military tournaments. I have often seen better football, from the science, skill, knowledge of the game and true sporting spirit points of view, between two rival civilian teams in a practice game, than in the finals of some of the tournaments the Statesman's correspondent drags to the front.

Third Day, Thursday, 14th July 1904.

A very long card was issued for the third day's racing in Bangalore, and although there was only one really close finish, there was some fairly good racing. Surprises were the order of the day almost throughout, and backers fared badly odds on favourites going down time after time. Carrara broke down badly in the steeplechase and certain sagacious persons, who had backed Senator for a place in view of this possibility drew their money. But everybody was sorry to see the old horse pull up dead lame, for he ran well, and led Madeira, to whom he was giving 25lbs. for quite a mile and a half. The other races are treated of in their places and need not be described here The bookmakers sportingly subscribed for four races on Saturday, so we were made practically sure of an extra day. From a social point of view, the third day's racing was a great success, although the early hour at which a start was made—2 P.M., kept the ladies away at first. Eventually the stand and the enclosure were well filled, and with four refreshment tents on the ground, (the Carabiniers, the Essex Regiment, and the 28th Light Cavalry were all "At Home") the most excellent of good fellowship prevailed. The early start was due to the uncertainty of the weather in Bangalore at present, and it certainly was a thousand pities that we were drowned out on the first day, especially during the race for the Cup. Everyone was glad to see Jimmy Robinson win the big race of the meeting on that honest little horse Ayrdale, but had the jockeys of Ayrdale and Wild Raven been changed, it is more than possible that the latter would have won. Details :—

THE YELLANDUR PURSE.—1 s. 750, Rs. 500 presented by Sir P. N. Krishna Murti, K.C.I.E., Dewan of Mysore, and Rs. 250 added from the fund, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 150. A handicap for C.-B. horses. ¾ mile.

Col J P Grant's b cb h Prime, 6st 10lbs ...	Melsom	1
Mr Jaffer Mahomed Mystry's b ch g Upstart, 10st 7lbs	Heroo	2
Capt J Randall's b cb m Miss Ascot, 8st 2lbs	Hoyt	3

BETTING :—2 to 1 on Miss Ascot, 3 to 1 agst Upstart, and 4 to 1 Prime.

Prime got away from Upstart with the mare last. The same order was maintained throughout, Prime having the race won at the distance. He made all his own running and won without being pressed by a length ; three lengths between second and third. Time—1min 23secs.

THE CAMBRIDGESHIRE.—Rs. 350, of which the second pony will receive Rs. 100; and the third Rs. 50. A handicap for Arab and C.-B. ponies 14-1 and under. ½ mile.

Mr S W Webster's b a h Syndic, 9st 7½lbs	Capt Randall	1
Aga Mahomed Jaffer's b a h Nippon, 7st 11lb...	Geoloo	2
Capt A S Teogood's g a g St Gris, 9st 6lbs	Hoyt	3
Lieut-Col. J Desaraj Urs' b a h Delight, 8st 11lbs	Melsom	0
Mr Reuben's g a h Bisthan, 8st 5lbs ...	Heroo	0

BETTING :—Evens St Gris, 6 to 4 agst Bisthan, 4 to 1 Delight, 5 to 1 Syndic and 8 to 1 Nippon.

Bisthan made running from Syndic and St. Gris, but at the turn for home Syndic assumed the command, and quickly having the race in hand he won in a canter by a length ; one and a half lengths between second and third. Time—56½ secs.

THE STEWARDS' PURSE.—Rs. 750, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 150. A steeplechase for horses. Weight—Handicap. About 2¼ miles, S. C.

The Hon H E Thellusson's b nth am m Madeira, 11st 11b	Hoyt	1
The Hon Mr A A Apcar's ch aus g Senator, 9st 6lbs	Burns	2
H H the Sultan of Johore's bk aus g Carrara, 12st 12lbs	Koops	3

BETTING : 6 to 4 on Madeira, 5 to 4 agst. Carrara, and 6 to 1 Senator.

Carrara pulling hard made the running at a strong pace and led by a length passing the stand for the second time. Senator meanwhile had tailed about 50 yards and seemed out of the race. Six furlongs from home, however, Madeira went to the front as she liked, and Senator having made up a lot of leeway also passed Carrara who was shortly afterwards eased. Madeira won in a canter by two lengths, whilst Carrara, who pulled up hardly able to hobble, was a distance behind the second horse. Time—5mins. 29⅗secs.

THE ALL-HORSE HANDICAP.—Rs. 900, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 200 and the third Rs. 100. A handicap for horses. 5 furlongs.

Mr Kelso's b aus g Harpist, 10st 3lbs ...	Heroo	1
Mr A Stewart's b e g Carburton, 8st 3lbs...	Hoyt	2
Mr N R Chowdhury's ch aus g Tecoota, 8st 7lbs	Melsom	3
Mr N R Chowdhury's b e m Nightingale, 9st 7lbs	Lansdowne	0
Mr M Lakshmi Kantharaj Urs' b aus g Gum, 7st 6lbs	O'Neill	0
The Hon Mr A A Apcar's br aus m Sister, 6st 12lbs	Bennett	0

BETTING : 3 to 1 on Nightingale, 5 to 1 each agst Harpist, Tecoota and Carburton, and 6 to 1 each Sister and Gum.

There was the usual performance by Sister at the post, which delayed the start and resulted in her getting practically hopelessly left. Tecoota also got off badly, but the other four raced almost level to the turn into the straight. Here the favourite fell back and Harpist assumed a commanding lead. He appeared to be winning easily, but a hundred yards from home Carburton made up a lot of ground, and got to the leader's girths. He rather chucked it, however, when Hoyt sat down to ride him, and Harpist retaining his advantage, won by a neck; Tecoota, three lengths away, was third. Time—1min. 6⅕secs.

THE EXCELSIOR PLATE.—Rs. 600, of which the second pony will receive Rs. 100. A handicap for C-B ponies 14-2 and others 14-1 and under. 5 furlongs.

Lieut-Col J Desaraj Urs' b aus m Mamao, 9st 8lbs	Lansdowne	1
H H Aga Khan and Aga S Shah's ch aus g Cocos, 10st	Robinson	2
Major W Dougall's ch aus g Lancer, 9st 8lbs	Penton	3
Major Gunn's br aus g Dandenong, 7st 12lbs	Heroo	0
Mr C P Graham' ch aus m Shot Silk, 7st 8lbs	Hoyt	0

BETTING : 2 to 1 on Cocos, 3 to 1 each agst Lancer and Mamao, and 6 to 1 each Shot Silk and Dandenong.

Cocos made the running, but in the straight Mamao came up and won by a length ; two lengths dividing second and third, Shot Silk was badly left and never in the race, which was a pity, as there was a good deal of money invested on her for a place. Time—1min. 8secs.

THE JULY PLATE.—Rs 1,200, of which the second horse will receive Rs 200. A handicap for horses. 1¼miles.

Lieut-Col J Desaraj Urs' b aus g Red Coral. 6st 13lbs	Melsom	1
Mr N R Chowdhury's br e m Bouquet, 7st 6½lbs	Elliott	2
Capt Wilson's, 3 bk e h Misty, 7st 12lbs ...	Heroo	3
The Hon Mr A A Apcar's b aus g Goldsmith, 10st	Penton	0
Mr A W Grosser's b aus g Waligrove, 9st 11lbs	O'Neill	0
H H Aga Khan's br e g Ayrdale, 9st 2lbs	Robinson	0
Mr N R Chowdhury's br aus g Wild Raven, 8st 6lbs	Lansdowne	0
Lieut Col J Desaraj Urs' ch aus g Leonidas, 8st 3lbs	Hoyt	0
H H The Sultan of Johore's b aus g Peppercorn, 7st 3lbs...	Bennett	0

BETTING : 5 to 2 agst Waligrove, 3 to 1 Red Coral, 4 to 1 each Misty, Bouquet and Ayrdale, 5 to 1 each Goldsmith and Wild Raven, 6 to 1 Peppercorn, and 8 to 1 Leonidas.

Red Coral was at once sent to the front and led at a strong pace from Goldsmith and Ayrdale, with Leonidas whipping in. The lot kept well together until half-a-mile from home, where Red Coral increased his lead, and Bouquet and Misty came through. All the heavy-weights were done with at the distance, and Red Coral striding away won as he liked by two and a-half lengths; a length dividing Bouquet from the third horse. Time—2mins. 11⅕secs.

THE DESERT HANDICAP.—Rs. 1,000, of which the second horse will receive Rs. 200. A handicap for Arab horses. 1¼ miles.

Mr Mahomed Haji Ebrahim's ch a h Gallant, 9st 9lbs	Heroo	1
Major A C Hamilton's ch a h Jack Horner, 7st	Melsom	2
Capt Darley and Neilson's ch a g Selpme, 7st 8lbs	O'Neill	3
H H Aga Khan's ch a h Sandow, 8st 10lbs	Robinson	0
Mr S W Webster's b a g Derision, 6st 7lbs	Bennett	0

BETTING : 2 to 1 on Sandow, 2 to 1 agst. Gallant, 3 to 1 Jack Horner, and 5 to 1 each Selpme and Derision.

Jack Horner made the pace very hot, with Derision next and Gallant a long way last.

At the five furlong post, however, the last named had caught his field, and gradually going through he challenged Jack Horner at the distance. For a few strides the latter struggled gamely, but then he died away, and Gallant won all out by four lengths. Selpme being the same distance behind the second pony. Time—2mins. 29⅗secs.

Extra Day, Saturday, 16th July 1904.

The attendance at the extra day's racing was distinctly poor, a fact which it is difficult to account for, as there was, so far as deponent knoweth, no counter attraction. Otherwise the day's sport was successful enough, although there was only one exciting finish, and that was a really fine struggle between Madeira and Bouquet in the fourth races on the card. Old Wadhurst astounded every one by winning the first race, but the twenty minutes of irritation at the post may well have had less effect upon him that on the others. He also got well away. For the rest the day was almost give and take between fielders and punters, but the latter must have had a bit the best of it, and on the whole the meeting should have done really well. They have been most sporting, however, in giving extra races and in subscribing to race balls, and the little difficulty which occurred on the first with regard to the course fees may well be forgotten. The Bangalore race week has been a decided success, marred only by the unfortunate storm of rain which ruined the race for the Cup, and cut short the second and principal day's sport. With regard to weather, however, it is distinctly not in mortals to command success, and the Bangalore Stewards and their energetic Secretary, Mr. H. Donne, are to be warmly congratulated. Details :—

THE SUBSTITUTION PENCILLER'S PLATE.—Rs. 350, of which Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs. 50 to the third horse. A selling race for horses. 5 furlongs.

Mr A C Tate's g aus g Wadhurst, Rs. 600, 8st 8lbs	Hoyt	1
The Hon Mr A A Apcar's ch aus g Senator, Rs. 1,000, 9st 6lbs	Penton	2
Major F Jollie's b aus g Best Shot, Rs. 1,000, 9st 6lbs	Robinson	3
Mr A C Hamilton's b aus g Scissorman, Rs 1,000, 9st 6lbs	Lansdowne	0
Mr Jacob Sait's b aus g Medowra, Rs. 900, 9st 3lbs	Heroo	0

BETTING : 6 to 4 on Scissorman, 2 to 1 agst Best Shot, 4 to 1 Medowra, 6 to 1 Senator and 8 to 1 Wadhurst.

About twenty minutes delay occurred at the post, Medowra persistently refusing to join her horses, and Wadhurst also giving trouble. When they did get away the favourite and Medowra were badly left and Wadhurst made strong running Scissorman came up into third place, but died away again, and Wadhurst won without being challanged by two lengths; same distance between second and third. Time—1min. 8⅕secs.

THE BOOKMAKERS' PLATE.—Rs. 350, of which Rs. 100 to the second, and Rs 50 to the third pony. A handicap for ponies. ½ mile.

Lieut-Col Armstrong's b e g Referee, 8st 7lbs	Heeroo	1
Mr M Lakshmi Kantaraj Urs' ch aus m Queen Cole, 9st 2lbs	Thompson	2
Mr L S Kindersley's br e m Freda, 7st 10lbs	Hoyt	3
Mr R Anketell-Jones' ch aus g Tight Rope, 7st 3lbs	O'Neill	0
Mr Aga Jan's b aus m Doris II., 6st 13lbs	Melsom	0

BETTING : Evens each Queen Cole and Referee, 3 to 1 agst Freda, 10 to 1 Doris II., and 20 to 1 Tight Rope.

Doris II and Freda, got away with Referee third. At the home turn the latter came round his horses, and quickly assuming the command won in a common canter by two lengths ; a length between second and third. Time—53⅕ secs.

THE ARAB PONY HANDICAP.—Rs. 350, of which Rs. 100 to the second and Rs. 50 to the third pony. A handicap for Arab ponies. 5 furlongs.

Major A C Hamilton's ch a h Jack Horner, 8st 11lbs	Lansdowne	1
Mr S W Webster's b a g Derison, 8st ...	Heroo	2
Major M N Smyth's g a h Diamond Rose, 8st 6lbs	O'Neill	3
Mr K Moss King's b a h King Cobweb, 9st 4lbs	Hoyt	0
Capt E. G. R. Peel's b a h Bayleaf, 7st 12lbs	Melsom	0

BETTING : 5 to 4 on Jack Horner, 5 to 4 agst King Cobweb, 4 to 1 Derison, 6 to 1 Bayleaf, and 10 to 1 Diamond Rose.

The lot got away well together, but Bayleaf streaked along at a tremendous pace and was soon three lengths in front. The length of a polo ground, however, is about far enough for this wonderful little galloping polo pony and he died away altogether in the straight where Jack Horner went to the head of affairs and won easily by 2½ lengths, Derision beating Diamond Rose a length for second place whilst the latter was a neck in front of King Cobweb.

Time—1min 11⅗secs.

THE GOLDSPINK PLATE.—Rs. 350, of which Rs. 100 to second and Rs. 50 to third horse. A handicap for horses. 9 furlongs.

The Hon H Thellusson's b nth am m Madeira, 9st 11b	Hoyt	1
Mr N R Chowdhury's b e m Bonquet, 9st 11lbs	Lansdowne	2
Major H C V Harrison's ch aus g De Wet, 6st 10lbs	O'Neill	3
Mr M Lakshmi Kantharaj Urs' b aus g Gum, 8st 9lbs	Thompson	0
Major F C Logan-Homes's bk aus g Pope, 8st 5lbs	Robinson	0
The Hon Mr A A Apcar's br aus m Sister, 8st 11b	Bennett	0

BETTING :—6 to 4 agst Bouquet, 3 to 1 De Wet, 4 to 1 each Madeira and Pope, and 5 to 1 each Sister and Gum.

A good start from which Sister rushed away—by the way she was run in a hood—and was leading at the five furlongs post by a couple of lengths. Half-a-mile from home Bouquet, Gum and Sister were practically level, but coming into the straight Madeira went to the front, and at the distance looking like having the race in hand. Bouquet, however, challenged and a good race resulted in a victory for Madeira by a neck ; two lengths between second and third. Time—2mins 1⅘secs.

THE SALAMAT PLATE.—Rs 350, of which Rs. 100 to the second and Rs. 50 to the third pony. A handicap for ponies. 1 mile.

Mr S W Webster's b aus m Flight, 6st ...	Bennett	1
Mr A West's ch aus m Firebrand, 8st ...	O'Neill	2

Mr A P Symond's bk aus m Cleopatra II., 10st 4lbs	Heroo	0
Major W Dougall's ch aus g Lancer, 9st 10lbs	Penton	0

BETTING : Evens Cleopatra II., 2 to 1 agst Firebrand, 3 to Lancer and 4 to 1 each Shot Silk and Flight.

Shot Silk cut out the work from Firebrand, and Cleopatra II. with Flight left four or five lengths. She caught her field, however, at the five furlong post and gradually came through, assuming the lead at the distance and winning by a length from Firebrand with Shot Silk about the same distance away third. Time—1min. 51⅘secs.

THE POLO SCURRY.—Rs. 200, of which the second pony will receeive Rs. 50. 2¼ furlongs.

Lieut-Col J Desaraj Urs' b aus g Swiveller, 12st	Lansdowne	1

BETTING : 2 to 1 each agst Mary Jane and Swiveller, 4 to 1 each Laurier Rose and Cossack, 5 to 1 Assegai, 8 to 1 Astrologer, and 10 to 1 Tight Rope.

Swiveller had the race in hand throughout, and won as he liked by three lengths ; half-a-length dividing second and third. Time—35secs.

CALCUTTA COURSE CHAT.

THURSDAY I drew a dead blank, as far as training was concerned, as after Mr. Bert Allen's Young Rake, Pat C., and one or two others had had a spin, Jupiter Pluvius took up the running (raining), and beat us all.

I had, however, the pleasure of making the acquaintance of "Stella," Mr. Barney Allen's new purchase.

She's a nice classy pony, shewing plenty of quality, and has been landed wonderfully fit and good looking from the S. S. Fortunatus.

Stella will go under the 14-1 standard, and Mr. Bert Allen, who has her with his string, will be racing her in the cold weather.

The grey referred to in my notes of last week, I now find is Mr. Pugh's March, doing its work, with its stable companion Odin from the far side of the course, and is generally at starting a handful for Bloss, but by the time he gets to the hurdles in front of the stand is fairly quiet, though going strong.

This horse races at his jumps, but makes no mistakes, and will take the field along a merry dance when at the real game; but there's a paddy, with a Meath connection, that will be having a hand or a foot in in the jig, and the lepping will be moighty diverting.

I had pointed out to me on the course a daughter of the famous hurdler—Stepaside, Mr. Gregory's good mare of years ago. I think the name is Mame, and I shall watch her doings with some interest, as there is an old time glamour about the dam, who is now comfortably quartered at St. Albans, England, the home of a genial Calcutta sportsman, a good fellow.

Saturday was a fairly lively morning, Mr. Bert Allen's string being the first to show out, Pat C and Coal Queen doing an attractive school, followed later by Young Rake and Natalina, Howie and Regan doing the piloting in each instance. The latter pair of horses were quickened up fairly fast at the finish.

Then Smallman took the floor with a couple from his stable who, being joined on the far side by two more, put up a bit of smart travelling of which Hello had the best, so some thought.

Mr. Dass is doing his own training this year and Mr. Galstaun is very obligingly riding Clynder for him. Any close observer could see the English mare had the foot of those sprinting with her; and in the July Stakes on the 6th proximo will be very near doing the trick. Some say Mr. Paris's Kilnerrin, others Bell This and Bell That; Credat Judæus, I say.

Mr. Mackellar did a bit on old Amalgam, to their mutual satisfaction; not so Jack Wall who, apparently, was unable to induce Mr. Atkinson's new purchase to go the straight course, an admittedly difficult matter under nearly all circumstances, but more so in the present as the horse, when shaped up for a start, would cut it at once for the rails. Probably he believes only in the regular game, and will have none of your schooling.

Harold and Flash put in a smart sprint. Mr. Galstaun's ponies were then slipped along. Mr. Chater being on Not Yet, and directly she got her head a bit towards the end of a couple to three furlongs sprint, she was really going by Western Queen and Rosalea. Repeating the same thing as they came round a second time for a further spurt. She's a rare bit of stuff, and the way these three, with Vanguard, have summered here, makes a humble scribe wonder why all the big guns have to go so far a field, during our dreadful hot months! They may have found the much-sought after "mare's nest," being of the gentler sex, which would make all the difference in the world of course.

Mr. Dudley had out Belmeath, and sprinted a few furlongs, with a couple of others, going with a wet sail. Mr. Cooper did a pound by the ancient Hailstorm, in view of the match in the afternoon. This might be accounted solid work. Mr. Evers on May B. was out, and a couple of Mr. Dass' unnamed ones went a breather. The morning was wound up as far as I saw, by Shooting Star, going by, minus the native walloping of last Tuesday.

Tuesday morning broke none too propitious, being ushered in with heavily laden rain clouds, and having rained throughout the night. There was a goodish bit of lepping to be got on with, and this sort of work always commends itself to the onlookers, especially those who have never been at the game, and are expectant of something turning up—a turtle mayhap.

Mr. Bert Allen's were the first out, Coal Queen (Howie), Pat C. (Regan), trotting twice past on the inside course, quickening up each time as they fronted the gallery consisting of a couple of men with dogs.

Hello (Howie), Harold (Regan), from Smallman's string, were moved a couple of times round to the evident satisfaction of their trainer.

Natalina and Young Rake put in a bit of sprinting across the open. Then came Bell Brand (Howie), Flash and Parole. This trio footed it pretty smartly, Bell Brand being most of the time in command till the finish, when it appeared as if Flash,—or was it Parole! just headed him. This was a smart spin.

Norman did a few flights of the pony hurdles by himself. He had a rider up of course; but otherwise, like Pat with his sweatheart, he was all alone.

Fusilier did a bustle past, followed by Mr. Chater on Western Queen, the mare going nicely.

Rosalea (Mr. Chater) and Not Yet (native) were sent twice round the inner going, coming home 12 annas, the former with the lead.

Blue Bell (should it not have been Grey Bell?) and Daffodil did a few flights of the horse hurdles, the latter jumping a bit ragged, and clouting the second hurdle heavily.

Mr. Raban exercised his own over the Ellenborough course, getting a wet jacket in the doing.

Bloss had out a number of Wishart's on the same course, but they are too far off to make any note of.

Cheer Up was taken out by little Regan, accompanied by Odin, with Mr. Deaken on Maid of Kent, but somewhat at a distance. So that the prospective mentor's advice was lost, or retained for a future day when within hearing.

Jack Wall did a longish school on Mr. Atkinson's new one, kidding his mount there was a run on, and so got a bit of pace up.

Florrie, the newly imported pony, was under the 14-2 standard on Tuesday morning. Her Australian performances stamp her quite of the first flight, and 'tis said, one, if not more of our pony racing magnates are already on the nibble. Florrie is quartered at "Tattersalls."

And yet another clinking pony is Mr. Dick Bence's Settle, but she appears to have been picked up like hot cakes, as I hear a binder of Rs. 5,000 is already down, from a well-known Ballygunge sportsman, the price being £800. This pony can't be stopped with a ton of potatoes up I understand.

Belmeath may elect to go on the flat at the first meeting. He is pretty sure to appear as a double entry, in which case he'll take his chance.

Merry Xmas, I hear, has quite recovered from his old complaint and Mr. Dass intends applying for leave to run him again, if he stands his next test.

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK MEETING.

THE Sandown management have ventured upon a radical alteration since the last fixture. This is no other than the abolition of the ten-shilling ring, the space which it formerly occupied being divided between Tattersall's and the five-shilling enclosure—a bold experiment, but one which seems likely to be attended with success. A new electric number board attached to the grand stand is a welcome innovation, and a novel electric apparatus for releasing the tapes of one of the starting-gates worked satisfactorily. An ideal summer's day attracted a fair number of pleasure-seekers to the Esher slopes, but the muster did not exceed the average. Some capital sport was witnessed, though there was nothing in the nature of a close finish.

THE SANDRINGHAM STAKES of 909sovs; weight for age, etc. One mile and a quarter.
Mr F Alexander's br f Bitters, by St Serf—Mara, 3yrs, 7st 12lbs ... W Lane 1

Won by two lengths from Valenza, who took second place at the distance; six lengths divided the second and third. Clonque was fourth, Stoic fifth, Caper next, and Salute last. Time, by Benson's chronograph, 1min. 45⅕secs.

Friday night's rain came most opportunely for Sandown, as, though a longer spell was wanted to soften the soil it wonderfully freshened up the course and made the track of an emerald green in contradistinction to the bare places, whence a rather heavy crop of hay of good quality had been already carted, and after the afternoon's sun had dried the standing grass the mowing machine was busily at work again. Fighting against a somewhat arid soil, the executive, by judicious top dressing, largely of peat moss, have coaxed Nature into a good crop, which science can improve each year.

'Twas a pity that the prospect of a wet afternoon should have thinned what might have been a record attendance, and two specials, full of visitors, had to make halt under cover of the station about one o'clock, while a sky full of rain was helped by a south-west wind to rattle down pretty heavily, but the worst was then over, and only a subsequent shower or two gave an April character to a bright afternoon.

A SELLING HANDICAP of 300sovs; winner to be sold for £100; second receives 5sovs. Seven furlongs.

Won by three lengths; six lengths divided second and third. Vernham was fourth and Zampieri last throughout. Time,—1min. 44⅘secs.

NEWMARKET MEETING.

The Newmarket July Meetings have never caught on with the Metropolitan division of racegoers, being beyond their beat, and hence, perhaps, their popularity with the old school of Turfites who prefer the national pastime when it is conducted "far from the madding crowd." The enforced absence of the King cannot but detract from the social lustre of the gathering, but the Prince of Wales was present on the 28th ultimo and amongst those who are entertaining parties for the reunion are the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, Sir Ernest Cassel, Lord Howard de Walden, Mr. and Mrs. Leopold de Rothschild, Lord Durham, Sir R. and Lady Waldie Griffith, Mr and Lady Violet Brassey, and Sir Maurice FitzGerald, who is acting as host to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. The weather was quite in keeping with the traditions of the fixture. The sun blazed down unceasingly from an azure sky, and the shade of the Plantation was eagerly sought, especially by the ladies, of whom there was a sprinkling. The general attendance—always thin—was attenuated to a degree in the public enclosures, but they were treated to some very fair sport.

THE JULY STAKES of 1,010 sovs., for two year olds; colts 9st, fillies and geldings 8st. 11lbs. New T Y C (five furlongs and 140 yards).

Lord Rosebery's ch c Cicero, by Cyllene—Gas, 9st	D Maher	1

*5lbs apprentice allowance deducted.

(Winner trained by Enoch.)

BETTING: 9 to 4 agst Hammerkop, 4 to 1 Peroration, 100 to 12 each Papola and Whistling Crow, 10 to 1 each D'Orsay, Falcon, and Goring Heath, 100 to 8 Servitor, and 20 to 1 any other (offered).

Won cleverly by three-parts of a length; four lengths between second and third. Hammerkop was fourth, Goring Heath fifth Falcon sixth, Servitor seventh, Emily Melton eighth, Padlock II next, and Love Game last.

All that is left of the stand at the top of the town is a small heap of débris, which the housebreakers will remove in the course of a few days, and the demolition of the obsolete little structure marks another step in the march towards the modernisation of racing at Newmarket. A moiety of the folk who trudged past the ruined site on their way to the vantage ground on the 29th seemed unaware of the transition, and the other half bore the loss with fortitude, if not with downright satisfaction. The Prince of Wales was out on horseback betimes this morning, and visited the race side, where the work was not of a very momentous character, however, His Royal Highness was present on the course this afternoon, and Prince Christian and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught were also prominent amongst a select and aristocratic assemblage. The conditions were characteristic of midsummer, and it was only a refreshing breeze from the east that prevented the heat from being excessive. Fields ruled very large for the time of year, and Mr Owen had his hands full, the large troops of combatants giving infinite trouble at the post, as a result of which it was impossible to keep the racing up to schedule time.

THE STUD PRODUCE STAKES of 1,072 sovs, for two year olds; colts 9st, fillies and geldings 8st 11lbs; with penalties and allowances. Five furlongs.

(Winner trained by R. Sherwood.)

BETTING: 4 to 1 agst Csardas, 11 to 2 St. Kilda, 6 to 1 each Captain Kettle and Extradition, 7 to 1 Altcar, 100 to 12 Over Norton, 10 to 1 Cades, 100 to 8 each Countermark, Gascony, and Vergia, and 20 to 1 any other (offered).

Cades and Csardas gave trouble at the post and the race started twenty-two minutes late. Vergia, on the right, made play from Countermark, in the centre, Morgendale, wide on the left, Csardas Captain Kettle. Killeevan, St. Kilda, and Cades, till about a quarter of a mile from home, when Vergia had shot her bolt and Morgendale drew out well clear of Cades, Gascony and Captain Kettle, and making the remainder of the running won by four lengths; two lengths divided the second and third, Captain Kettle was fourth, Vergia fifth, Extradition sixth, St. Kilda seventh, Countermark eighth, Csardas ninth, Over Norton next, and Killeevan last. Speculator, who was weighed for by Halsey, fell lame on his way to the post and did not come under the starter's orders. Time, by Benson's chronograph, 1min 46⅘secs.

A certain amount of glamour must necessarily attach to a ten-thousand-pound race, but the first of the mammoth stakes of the current season engendered less interest, perhaps, than any of its predecessors by reason of the one-sided complexion of the contest. The Princess of Wales's Stakes was only established as lately as 1894, and five of the first seven winners were three year olds; but horses of that age were barred from competing after 1900, it being contended that there were already sufficient temptations for owners to run their "classic" candidates off their legs, whilst the inducements to keep older thoroughbreds of the first-class in training were wholly insufficient. From the moment that it transpired that neither Sceptre nor Duke of Westminster was eligible to compete on the present anniversary (owing to the fact that their nominator had come under the ban of the Jockey Club), interest in the rich prize languished almost to vanishing point, and such a foregone conclusion did Rock Sand's victory appear that the presence of Sir James Miller's crack virtually paralysed speculation. The little that took place resolved itself into desultory attempts to place the first two, and, needless to say, very few could have selected Saltpetre to fill the second berth. Never since its inauguration has this event attracted such a meagre field to the post, the six who tried conclusions in Veles's year being the smallest party of combatants hitherto.

THE PRINCESS OF WALES'S STAKES of 10,000sovs., the second received 1,500sovs., the third 1,000sovs., the nominator of the winner 400sovs., and the nominator of the second 200 sovs.; weight for age, etc. One mile and a half.

Sir J Miller's br c Rock Sand, by Sainfoin—Roquebrune, 4yrs, 9st 2lbs ...	D Maher	1
Mr L Brassey's br c Saltpetre, by St Simon—Billow, 4yrs, 8st 3lbs	K Cannon	2
Mr J Musker's ch c William Rufus, by Milton—Sirmena, 4yrs, 9st 2lbs ...	O Madden	3
Sir E Cassel's br c Exchequer by Florizel II—Ways and Means, 4yrs, 8st 10lbs	Halsey	0
Duke of Devonshire's b or br c Cheers, by Persimmon—Applause II, 5yrs, 8st 7lbs	M Cannon	0

(Winner trained by Blackwell.)

BETTING: 100 to 6 on Rock Sand, 20 to 1 agst Exchequer 25 to 1 Cheers, 33 to 1 William Rufus, 100 to 1 Saltpetre.

Saltpetre was the first to leave the paddock, and cantered straight to the post, followed at long intervals by Cheers and Exchequer, William Rufus bringing up the rear. There was very little delay before Mr. Willoughby despatched the select party. Rock Sand being the first to show in front of Cheers and Exchequer, with Saltpetre whipping-in, this order being maintained until half a mile from home, where Saltpetre began to improve his position and William Rufus became slightly last. A quarter of a mile from the chair Cheers broke down and dropped into the rear, and Saltpetre took second place, with William Rufus and Exchequer in close attendance, but Mr Brassey's colt utterly failed to get on terms with the favourite, who made every yard of the running and won in gallant style by two lengths; three quarters of a length between second and third. Exchequer was placed fourth, only about a head behind. Value of the stakes, £7,185.

THE EXETER STAKES of 581sovs. for two year olds; colts 8st 12lbs, fillies and geldings 8st 9lbs; winners extra. Six furlongs.

Mr L Newmann's ch c Llangibby, by Wilfowler.

Sir J. Miller's br f Munera, 8st 9lbs ...	D Maher	3

(Winner trained by Mr. Gilpin.)

BETTING: 8 to 1 on Llangibby, 8 to 1 agst Koorhaan, and 20 to 8 Munera (offered.)

CRICKET.

YORKSHIRE vs. SOMERSET.—Played at Hull on 23rd, 24th and 25th June. Yorkshire won by seven wickets. The Yorkshire team has so often found Somerset a hard nut to crack that when at the end of the first day of this match two wickets were down for 80 against a Somerset total of 302, Yorkshiremen must have wondered whether their county would not have to submit to another defeat. Hirst was lame, and only bowled a few overs at a medium pace, but he managed to get rid of a dangerous man in Braund. L. C. H. Palairet played another beautiful innings, making the Yorkshire bowling look very simple while he was at the wickets for an hour and twenty minutes, during which he scored 70 runs; he made 50 out of the first 57 runs at the rate of a run a minute. Johnson, Lee, Robson, Woods, Martyn, and Hardy all made very useful scores. Myers bowled with great success for Yorkshire, disposing of Lee and Robson in his first two overs, and when after a rest he was again put on he at once dismissed two more men. When Yorkshire went in Jackson played a fine game and was not out 42 when stumps were drawn. On the next day Tunnicliffe and Jackson, the two not outs, raised the total to 177 before they were separated, the partnership producing 118 runs in an hour and a half. Jackson, who had been batting for three hours, did not make a bad stroke during his innings. Hirst was in great form, and although he was very lame, he made 90 runs in a couple of hours. Fortunately for Somerset the tail did nothing of importance, but Yorkshire were 26 runs on when the innings came to an end. When rain stopped play at about twenty minutes to six Somerset had scored 107 for four wickets, and were thus 81 runs on. It was not possible to resume the game on Saturday until two o'clock, and then the last six Somerset wickets fell for an additional 69 runs, Haigh dismissing five men on a soft wicket for 31 runs. Yorkshire now had to make 151 runs to win, and, thanks to fine cricket by Jackson, Denton, Tunnicliffe and Hirst, they own with great ease. In the course of the match Hirst scored 120 runs without being out.

LANCASHIRE vs. SOMERSETSHIRE.—Played at Old Trafford on 27th, 28th, and 29th June. Lancashire won by an innings and 136 runs. Although on winning the toss S. M. J. Woods decided that Somerset should bat first, his side reaped no advantage from this, for the wicket improved later in the day. The first four wickets fell for 45 runs, and although Woods kept up his end for nearly two hours, and played his best innings of the year, the total was small. Kermode made his first appearance in the county championship, and, took five wickets. When Lancashire went in R. H. Spooner was dispcsed of before he became very dangerous, but Maclaren and Tyldesley then kept together for an hour and three-quarters, during which the score was increased by 187. Both men played brilliant cricket. When stumps were drawn Maclaren was not out 108, and the total 240 for two wickets. The Somersetshire bowling was completely mastered on Tuesday, and after Maclaren was caught at the wicket for a splendid 151, made in three hours and a quarter, Hornby and Cuttell hit the bowling all over the field, each making over a hundred. Somerset had to make 414 in their second innings before they drew level, but the task proved too hard for them, although Palairet played a splendid innings. Score.—

ETON vs. WINCHESTER.—Played at Winchester on 24th and 25th June. Winchester won by eight wickets. The Etonians had the good fortune to bat first, but although Chinnery, Farmer and Balls played good cricket, seven wickets were down for 148 runs before lunch. Afterwards, the Eton captain, G. C. Campbell, hit so well that the total was reasonably large when the innings came to an end. When stumps were drawn Winchester had made 176 for six wickets, so that it was anybody's game. The best and highest innings of the day was played by Gordon. On Saturday, Teesdale, who was not out 24 overnight, played a great game, and although the tail gave him very little assistance, he was able to make enough runs to give his side a small lead on the first innings When Eton went in again Chinnery was bowled first ball. Three wickets were down for 35 and six for 69, but J. J. Astor played a brilliant game and saved his side from disaster. Winchester required 130 runs to win, and these were made in an hour and a half, Wright, the Winchester captain, playing a beautiful not out innnings of 53, while Gordon again distinguished himself. THE SOUTH AFRICAN'S TOUR.

MATCH vs. LONDON COUNTY.—Played at the Crystal Palace on 23rd and 24th June. South Africans won by ten wickets. On the first day of this match the South Africans, or rather three of the team, greatly distinguished themselves. Sinclair and Hathorn put on 174 runs for the fourth wicket in an hour and a quarter. The former was in brilliant form, his drives being exceedingly powerful ; he was only at the wickets for an hour and a quarter for his 103, which included twenty 4's Hathorn's fine innings of 130, which by contrast with that of Sinclair seemed almost slow, was nevertheless put together in the short time of two hours and a quarter, and was an excellent performance in every way. Halliwell also played good cricket, but on the whole the batting of the team was not remarkable. When London County went in Kotze met with such success with the ball that when stumps were drawn six wickets were down for 130. The only stand of importance made was 79 by Walker and Nicholson who were together for fifty minutes, the latter being not out 48. On Saturday the remaining four wickets only produced 38 runs, and London County had to follow on with 164 runs to make before they were level. As in the first innings Dr. Grace and W. L. Murdoch both failed, and with the exception of S. S. Harris' the Cambridge University cricketer, who played a splendid game, the batsman distinguished themselves so little that the South Africans had the easiest of victories.

All over the world the wonderful stimulating and sustaining properties of Bovril are known and valued. Some of the greatest scientists of the age have publicly recommended the use of Bovril. In Great Britain alone Bovril is regularly used in over 1,400 Hospitals and similar institutions. Bovril is without a peer.

ATHLETICS.

THE SCOTTISH CHAMPIONSHIPS.

The twenty-second annual championship meeting of the Scottish Amateur Athletic Association was held on Saturday afternoon at Powderhall Grounds, Edinburgh. The programme included the usual championship events, with the addition of a three miles walking competition. After a dull forenoon the latter part of the day was favoured with fair weather, and when the heats of the 100 yards were started there were about 3,000 spectators present. Results:—

100 YARDS FLAT RACE.—Heat 1: J. A. Campbell, Watson's College, 1; R L. Watson, West of Scotland Harriers, 2. Won by about half a yard. Time—10⅗ secs. Heat 2: J. P. Stark, West of Scotland Harriers, 1; R. Kitson, Bellahouston Harriers, 2. Won easily. Time—10⅖secs. Final: Stark 1; Watson 2. The men got away to a good start, but Stark easily forged ahead and won all the way. Campbell failed to reproduce his form in the first heat, and Watson was quite unequal to the task of pulling in the Glasgow man Time—10⅖secs.

PUTTING THE WEIGHT.—T.R Nicholson, Kyles Athletic Club, 42ft. 6in., 1; H. Walsh, Govan, 35ft. 5in., 2. Although the opposition was not serious, Nicholson did the best distance he has yet recorded in a championship throw.

HALF-MILE FLAT RACE.—J. McGough, Bellahouston Harriers, 1; W. D. Anderson, Glasgow Olympic, 2. M'Gough made his effort in the home straight, and drew away from Roxburgh, and although Anderson made a plucky effort to overhaul the leader, he failed to get on terms, and easing up near the tape, M'Gough won by two and a half yards; with Anderson second, and Roxburgh third. Time—2min 1⅖secs.

120 YARDS HURDLE RACE.—R.S. Stronach, Glasgow Academical, 1; R. S. Stewart, Edinburgh University, 2. This event was noticeable only for the jumping and running of the ex-champion who drew away from his men at the second flight and taking the hurdles in beautiful style, ran in an easy winner. His time, 16⅖secs., tied with the all-comers' Scottish record which had stood unchallenged at the credit of N. A. M'Leod (now in Calcutta) since 1892.

220 YARDS FLAT RACE.—R. L. Watson, West of Scotland H. 1; J. P. Stark, West of Scotland H., 2. Watson took the lead sixty yards from home, and although he never quite shook off Stark he held the 100 yards champion pretty safe, and finally won a splendid race by three-quarters of a yard. Time—22⅖secs.

THROWING THE HAMMER.—T. R. Nicholson, Kyles A. C. (distance, 154ft. 1⅘ inch), 1; R. M. Hardy, Glasgow Y. M. C. A (106ft.), 2. Nicholson with three of his six throws, beat his own Scottish all-comers' record of 153ft., made at Glasgow in August last, and a roar of enthusiasm went up as he wound up with a monster throw of 154ft. 1⅘in., which now stands as a Scottish record.

ONE MILE FLAT RACE.—J. M. Gough, Bellahouston Harriers, 1; S. Kennedy, Garscube Harriers, 2. Won by fifty yards. Kennedy get second place from M'Guffie by about a foot. Time,—4mins. 36⅖secs.

HIGH JUMP.—Milne failing at 5ft. 6⅘in., R. G. Murray, West of Scotland Harriers, cleared the height, and had the bar raised an inch, and succeeded here also. Amid some excitement, the bar was put up another inch, and Murray, clearing, did the best performance in the whole championship series, and beat J. W. Parsons' home record of 6ft. which has stood since 1884.

THREE MILES WALKING COMPETITION.—R. Quinn, Motherwell, 1; J. M. Wells, Edingburgh, 2. Won, amid much excitement, by three yards; twenty yards separating second and third. Time—2f mins. 33⅖secs.

QUARTER-MILE FLAT RACE.—R. L. Watson, West of Scotland H., 1; W. H. Welsh, Edinburgh University, 2. Welsh went off with a bolt and led in fine style until at the end he was challenged by Watson, who crept up until he was four wards in front of the old Scottish International Rugby three-quarter, and won by that distance.—Time—51⅖secs.

LAWN TENNIS.

ALL-ENGLAND CHAMPIONSHIPS.

The Lawn Tennis Championships were concluded at Wimbledon on the 29th ultimo under the most favourable condition, the weather being beautifully fine and the attendance large, and it is satisfactory, as showing the hold the game has acquired, to note the fact that the meeting just over is the most successful ever held upon the grounds of the All-England Club. The challenge round of the Doubles Championship was the great attraction, but, like the other final and championship rounds, turned out very one-sided, the brothers Doherty having little difficulty in retaining their title. R. F. Doherty is seen so little in English tournaments now that one expects some loss of form, but yesterday he displayed all his old reliability. He volleyed finely and, helped by his reach, played the overhead strokes with remarkable judgment. H. L. Doherty, too, was at his best, and when the pair were together at the net it seemed impossible to pass them except by tossing and lobbing. Here, too, the holders excelled, both waiting with exemplary patience for the proper ball to kill, but their opponents were at times over-anxious to bring off their favourite strokes, and Smith's drive and Riseley's smash too frequently found the net. Smith appears to have gone off considerably. The hard drive from the ball at the top of the bounce which made the Stroud player such a formidable opponent was yesterday only occasionally effective while Riseley's form was very in-and-out. In the third set the latter made a grand effort to stem the tide of defeat, and mainly off the old Cliftonians own racquet the Western pair gained three successive games. At all other times the supremacy of the old Cantabs was so pronounced as to be almost monotonous. The first three games of the match went to the holders, the first at 15, the second at love and the third after "deuce" was called Smith and Riseley then won a love game, but with scores of "game 15," "deuce," and "vantage" five times, and a love game to finish with, the champions took the set at 6—1. The brothers started the second set with a love game, and taking the second at 30 and the third after "deuce" was called, were well on their way to victory. Smith and Riseley gained the next at 15, but with the two following the Dohertys went to 5—1 and, after a game to each, were two sets up. The third set was the best contested In the first game "deuce" was called four times before the holders won, but in the second West countrymen failed to score an ace. Smith playing in very erratic fashion. The challengers took the next at 30, but the brothers, after "deuce" was called n the fourth game five times, established a lead of 3—1. It was here that Riseley was seen to such advantage. Cross driving and smashing in unreturnable manner, he and his partner gained the lead in a set for the first time in the match, the scores being called 4—3 in their favour. A love game to the Dohertys equalised the scores and then, with game—30 and game—15, the holders gained the rubber and retained their title. The remainder of the programme consisted of the final rounds of the All-England Plate, the Mixed Doubles, and the Ladies' Doubles and the result of the latter was quite contrary to anticipation. On paper, Miss Douglass and Mrs. Sterry are a pair which would require a lot of beating, combining as they do the best base line lady player of the day in the lady champion and the foremost one at the net in the lady ex-champion. Still they succumbed to Miss Thomson and Miss "Hurst" after as good an exposition of the ladies' four-handed game as one could wish to witness. To cut a somewhat long story short, Miss Thomson and Miss "Hurst" won the first set and Mrs. Sterry and Miss Douglass the second, so everything depended upon the third. Two games each were registered, and then a couple to Miss Thomson and Miss "Hurst" gave the latter pair a good lead. One game to each, and the following two to Miss Douglass and Mrs Sterry, made the score "five all" and interest began to rule high. Although the two concluding games went to Miss Thomson and Miss "Hurst," and, consequently, gave them the match, they were grandly contested, the rest being long and magnificently played. Miss Douglass drove finely from the back of the court and Mrs. Sterry smashed with some certainty, still, their opponents returned the ball in remakable fashion, the drives and cross-strokes being half-volleyed and the smashes lobbed back. The fine consistent play of the winners was immensely appreciated by the big crowd, and the ladies received quite an ovation at the finish, to be repeated when they left the court:—Details.

DOUBLE CHAMPIONSHIP.—Challenge round: R. F. and H. L. Doherty (All-England L.T.C.) (holders) beat S H Smith (Stroud) and F. L. Riseley (Clifton) (winners of the All- Comers Competition) (6—1, 6—2, 6—4).

POLO.

ROEHAMPTON CLUB.

It would be difficult to imagine a couple of more interesting matches than those which were witnessed in the semi-final round of the Junior Championship Tournament at Roehampton on the 30th ultimo. Tiverton first took the field against the Roehampton Wanderers. The latter managed to score two goals during the first ten minutes, but Tiverton drew level in the succeeding stage, and half-way through the engagement the board denoted three all. It was not until nearing the close that the Wanderers gained a further point, and they were therefore returned the winners by four to three. Sides:—Roehampton Wanderers.—Mr W. F. Beatty, Mr. H. Schwind, Mr. F. C. G. Menzies, and the Duke of Roxburghe, (back); Tiverton:—M. M. de Las Casas, Mr. J. C. de Las Casas, Mr. A. de Las Casas, and Captain Phipps Hornby, (back). After another stubborn contest Captain Hobson's team were defeated by four goals to three after they had been a point to the good at 3—2 at half-time. Of the play, however, the losers had much the better. The sides were:—Ranelagh Wanderers:—Mr. R. Grenfell, Major A. M. Pirie, Mr. Nigel Baring, and Captain H. R Lee (back); Captain Hobsons—Mr E.H. Brassey, Mr. W. R. Court, Captain G.W. Hobson and Mr. F. W. Barrett (back). For the final to-morrow the Ranelagh Wanderers and the Roehampton Wanderers have qualified. An ordinary match followed, the quartettes being: Roehampton—Mr. P. Bucknell, Colonel W.Gordon Renton, Captain E. D. Miller, and Mr P. W. Nickalls, (back); Soldiers.—Captain R. Carden, Major W. A. Tilney, Mr A. F. Fletcher and Colonel to. Portal (back); Roehampton proved successful by five goals B one.

SHOT In ordering, please specify the Abbey Improved Chilled Shot Company Ltd., Newcastle on Tyne.

N.B.—We also make Hard and Soft Shot, but strongly recommend Improved Chilled Shot for penetration. The only Company in Great Britain devoting its whole time to shot making.

THE HURLINGHAM CLUB, FULHAM.

More than ordinary interest attached to the match at Hurlingham on the 30th ultimo, for on each side were two players who will represent their respective countries in the match for the International Challenge Cup between England and Ireland, at the same enclosure, to-morrow. The teams were:—Houghton—Mr. C. T. Garland, Mr. F. Jay Mackay, Mr. A Rawlinson, and Mr. W.S. Buckmaster (back); Hurlingham.—Mr. Walter McCreery, Captain H. Wilson, Captain Hardross Lloyd, and Mr. John Watson (back). Captain F. Blacker umpired. Hurlingham had the better of the exchanges for a time, but were at length forced back, and just before the remount Mr. Garland gave Houghton the opening goal. It was not until the third instalment that the home quartette equalised. Mr. McCreery cleverly riding off the back and Captain Wilson sending the ball to its intended destination. Directly after the change of ends, Mr. Garland registered a second point for his side, who led at interval by two to one. From thence to the end Hurlingham did not experience the best of luck, and were only enabled to hit another goal, which was secured by Captain Wilson to the three put on for Houghton by Mr. Rawlinson (2) and Mr Mackay The result was, therefore, a win for the last-named contingent by five to two.

LONDON P. C. vs. 18th. HUSSARS.

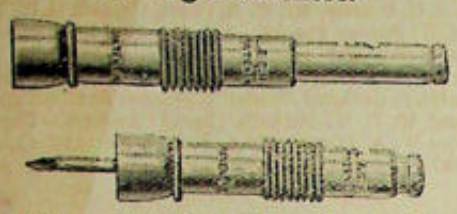
This game was played on the Crystal Palace ground yesterday afternoon. After some spirited play the Hussars won by five goals to three. The teams were:—London P. C. (mauve): Mr. M. Burge, Mr R. Fleming, Hon. L. Bruce, and Lord Wodehouse (back). 18th Hussars: (White) Mr Grigg, Captain Stewart, Captain Wood, and Captain Gosselin (back) Umpire: Major Peters.

THE WEASEL.

Hunting.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

WHEN the Executive of the Hunt issued a correct card of the Meets for no less than twenty-nine hunting days ahead, the general verdict, almost unanimously, was that it had been singularly ill-advised by whoever was responsible for the suggestion. For it certainly seems that such important considerations as excessive rain—or continued lack of it, or a series of prolonged runs must be seriously considered week by week in the arranging of subsequent meets. It was also considered indiscreet fixing on so eminently unpopular a trysting place as Lakri Pul for the second meet of the year, and it was deemed inconsiderate giving the Master so thankless a task at the beginning of the season when every reasonable effort should ordinarily be made to allure subscriptions by successful morning's sport. The hunting public clearly showed their lack of appreciation of the place selected by turning out in very sparse numbers, and as events turned out their anticipations were all too truly verified. I regret to have to record that, unless one were gifted with a greater sense of imagination than I, your humble scribe possess, it is impossible to veraciously manufacture an exciting account of the morning's doings. I believe that a meet at Lakri Pul means one of two things, either a tedious drawing of very extensive sugarcane swamps where hounds are lost to sight for an extended period and horses up to their hocks in slush, the covers being of such great expanse that getting a jack away is more or less hopeless. Or as an alternative the ascent of a steep range of hills so covered with hidden or semi grass hidden stones as to make galloping more hard on horses than the majority of humane owners care to submit their good steeds to. On this occasion the Master chose the latter alternative and ascended the range, drawing along the tops. Hounds got on a line, but could make nothing definite of it. Working along towards Pashun, Colonel Sheringham sunk the hill and drew some sugarcanes, but nothing more exciting than a red currant jelly adjunct rewarded the field. Failing to secure sport on the level, the Master then re-ascended Bamburda heights, whither only a faithful few I believe of the field followed him, and even their virtue was not rewarded as the Highlands also were drawn blank, and here ended what I am compelled to describe as an uninteresting morning. It is devoutly to be hoped that Lakri Pul will be eliminated in future from the meets of the Poona and Kirkee Hunt.



The continued scarcity of rain—a complete drought indeed for several days past naturally enough augured ill for brilliant sport on the following Thursday, but Verowda is as popular as the helpless Lakri Pul is unpopular, and a very large field assembled to do honour to the Master, hoping against hope for some sport, but feeling assured at any rate of excellent sporting going and an interesting part of the country. I hear there must have been nearly eighty people out. Everyone was glad to see His Excellency Lord Lamington out, and he is evidently very keen on the great game. Sad suspense was not prolonged, for in the first stoney nullah hounds opened on a line, and a stout jack was seen breaking away on the further side and hounds ran at a good pace for a mile and hope ran high. At this period when crossing a second nullah, a tantalizing little fox jumped up right under hounds noses and jinked away to the right, tempting hounds for the nonce from their legitimate quarry. How serious an interruption this was, was readily seen, when with very little delay Colonel Sheringham got hounds on to the line again, for it was at once apparent how evanescent scent was that morning for only with the utmost striving could hounds make anything at all of it. With admirable industry and patience hounds worked out the line, here at a walk—there with a little burst which must have made men hope the weariness was past and a run in store, only to have their ardour damped by a further prolonged check. Hares were plentiful to an irritating degree, and once a village pariah did it's utmost to tempt hounds astray. So the line was brought in a large right handed chukker, across the Ahmednagar road and towards the Mullah-Moota River till about a mile from the Palace of His Highness the Aga Khan, the jack was viewed crossing a bit of ploughland in the distance. The Master promptly, I hear, lifted hounds and they, fully appreciating the encouragingly fresh scent after that, rendered stale by even a few minutes delay on the parched earth, ran him to view, and racing into him bowled him over close to the road, and the little final gallop sent people home rejoicing.

HARDTMUTH'S

CIGAR-PIERCER

Is the Simplest and Quickest Device for Cigar-Smokers.

It is neat, the size of a small pencil case. When the knob is pressed, a small stilletto cuts a clean round hole at the very end of the "smoke," more air is produced, the wrapper does not unroll, the nicotine does not collect, and when you have once appreciated the advantages it brings to smokers, you will never be without a Hardtmuth's Cigar Piercer in your pocket or on your chain.

THE OOTACAMUND HUNT.

THERE was a bye day on Saturday (9th instant) and a fairly large field was out at the Rifle Butts. It was a cloudy, damp morning, with little wind and promised a good day's sport. The nullah between Rockwood and hanging shola was first drawn blank and after an equally unsuccessful draw on Hanging shola hounds hunted a cold scent from near the bottom of the shola towards the Segur Ghaut, at the top of which the Master stopped them.

We then moved on, drawing Toda Cathedral blank and then on along the top of the ghauts, the Master intending to turn his back on them and draw towards Rocky. Unfortunately, however, there were several puppies out and a hare jumped up in the middle of them on the edge of a shola. They broke away down the ghaut and there, in a few moments, changed on to a jack. It took some time to collect them, a gale having in the meantime sprung up. We drew Rocky blank and then crossed the stream at Sandy Nullah, drawing up the Gold Mine stream to Rawling's Nullah, up that and over Newmarket without finding. When turning down Blackmoor Vale Miss Hay viewed a jack on the south side of Bagwan and the Master laid hounds on. They ran up to Jackal Shola through it and across the Kummund Road to Monkey Shola then back over the road to Rallywood, through it, and over to Bluegums, where they changed on to a fresh jack. This jack took us back to the top of Rallywood where we lost him.

On Monday (11th instant) we met at Sandy Nullah Toll Bar in beautiful weather. They were nearly fifty people out. We first drew up the swamp above Pamela's Crossing and over into Dartmoor Vale, then on to Briar Shola which was drawn, but hounds never touched a line.

In the swamp below Wapshare's Hare Shola hounds spoke to a line and Mr. Haunzulsr viewed the jack stealing away round the hill. The Master laid hounds on and they ran the jack into Wenlock Wood. Here they were at fault for a few minutes, but got on him again and he broke at the top with hounds close behind him. He ran past Chemmund and then turned to the right, skirting the lower part of the covert, swinging to the left below the Toda Mund towards the valley. It looked like a good thing, but he went to ground almost immediately. Another jack was on foot here and a few couple of hounds who had overrun the earth got away on his line. As soon as the rest of the pack could be got away from the earth the Master took them along the line, the others had gone and found that they had crossed the Yemakal stream close to the Pykara River and away straight up the valley An attempt to nick in was unsuccessful and soon after we crossed the line of a travelling jack As there seemed no chance of overtaking the other hounds he let his lot settle down to this line and a very pretty run followed, the jack running an almost complete circle. Hounds pressed him very hard and at the end of about a quarter of an hour he tried to get to ground in a nullah and was killed there. Hounds were then taken home. The others had an extremely fine run, right across the Yemakal Valley parallel with the Pykara River, and had run their jack to ground close to the Krummund stream, a short distance from its junction with the river.

On Thursday morning (14th instant) there was again a fairly large field out at the meet at Golf Corner. It was a nice hunting morning and in the first draw, which was through Jackal Shola, hounds spoke to a line. They hunted this from the bottom of the shola up to the top, but were then at fault. They puzzled it out down to the bottom again and then went away across the swamp above Pearl Crossing and over into Blackmoor Vale. Slow hunting followed across the stream below Point-to-Point Tree, and then over to the spur above Double Crossing, where there was a check. The Master cast hounds to the left over the end of Newmarket to the nullah which runs down to the Gold Mine stream and the jack was viewed going over the hill towards Rawling's Nullah. The Master lifted hounds and they went away at a great place down into Rawling's Nullah and then as if for Governor's Shola Swinging to the right the jack now made for Staircase and actually entered it half way up on the south side, but turned back and made for Round Shola He ran through this and on to Monkey Shola, then back to Round Shola, where hounds killed him.

Thinking that hounds would run through Staircase the Master followed the ride through the middle and emerged above Herbert Plantation in thick cloud, to find that hounds had turned back. He then lost them for half an hour but they were at last brought back to Windy Gap.

We then drew from Khed Shola past Toda Coffee Shop Shola and found to the north of the Pykara Falls Road. From here we ran over a very severe line of country for about an hour, hounds being bothered a great deal by fresh jacks jumping up. At one time there were two in front of hounds, running almost parallel and a few hundred yards apart. One of them went to ground and then bolted while hounds were marking the earth only to run another by ring and return to the same earth where he was left. Hounds did not get back to kennels until 2-30 P.M. very tired. Scent was good all the morning.

THE BANGALORE TOURNAMENT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

BANGALORE, 15*th July* 1904.

ONLY six teams entered for the Bangalore polo tournament, and these include two combinations of Carabiniers, the Essex Regiment, the Imperial Service Lancers, the 4th Hussars, and a combined team of R. A. and R. E The first ties were decided on the 13th July, when two good games were played. But by far the best of the two was that between the Essex Regiment and the 4th Hussars, which (mirabile dictu) the infantry men won, and won fairly on their merits. They were certainly not so well mounted as the Hussars, but they were nevertheless the better side, more accurate in their hitting, better together, and no whit behind in the riding off department. Every one on the ground, probably including their opponents, was taken by surprise at the pace and dash they went off with, and they were a couple of goals to the good before the Hussars realised what a tough nut they had to crack. Then they played up for all they were worth, and perhaps had the best of the later phases of the game, but the Essex four defended stoutly, and most thoroughly deserved their win by the bare majority of a subsidiary. In the other game the Lancers were fairly with the R. A. and R. E. for the first three chuckers, but seemed to die away towards the end of the game. Details of the play :—

R. A. and R. E. vs. IMPERIAL SERVICE LANCERS.

First Chucker.—The Lancers came down, but Marshall pulled them up and took play to midfield, where the ball went out. The combined team then began to press, and Queripel taking a well judged pass from Wagstaffe, put the ball between the Lancers' posts. Even play characterised the remainder of the chucker, but nothing more was scored.

Score :—R. A. and R. E :—1 goal.
Imperial Service Lancers :—Nil.

Second Chucker.—After the ball had gone out of play a couple of times, the Lancers began to have the best of the game, and Murad Beg scored a subsidiary which went very near the posts. Queripel then got away with a fine run, the ball getting into a hole when he was nearing the Lancers' goal Marshall and Wagstaff also missed it, but Evans, with an accurate stroke, finished it out and scored a goal for the R. A. and R. E. The Lancers than had their turn, and after a foul had been given against their opponents, Murad Beg scored a goal.

Score :—R. A. and R. E. :—2 goals.
Imperial Service Lancers :—1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Third Chucker.—The Lancers pressed, and the ball went behind the combined team's line. They continued to have the best of matters, and Anandji Kadam scored a goal for them putting them ahead. Murad Beg followed suit and the Lancers' chances began to look bright, but just before the chucker closed, Wagstaffe hit a good goal for his side and the teams were again almost level.

Score :—The Imperial Service Lancers :—3 goals 1 subsidiary.
R. A. and R. E. :—3 goals.

Fourth Chucker.—From the start Queripel got possession, and coming away with a fine run he placed the combined team ahead with a pretty shot. Murad Beg retaliated and only a grand save by Evans prevented him from scoring. From the rest of the chucker the Lancers were mostly on the defensive, and Marshall scored another goal for the R. A. and R. E. before the bugle sounded.

Score :—R. A. and R. E. :—5 goals.
Imerial Service Lancers :—3 goals 1 subsidiary.

Fifth (and last) Chucker.—Three minutes and 49 seconds were left for play, and a scuffling goal quickly accrued to the R. A and R. E., but who actually scored it deponent knoweth not. Some good combined play between Wagstaffe and Queripel, which resulted in each scoring a subsidiary, was the only other noticeable feature of the game before the chucker closed, and the R. A. and R. E. retired comfortable winners.

Final Score :—R. A. and R. E :—6 goals 2 subsidiaries.
Imperial Service Lancers :—3 goals 1 subsidiary.

THE ESSEX REGIMENT vs THE 4TH (Q. O.) HUSSARS.

First Chucker :—Playing well together, the infantry team had all the best of the opening exchanges, and Bowen quickly scored a goal for them amidst applause. Still keeping up the pace they temporarily penned their adversaries and after Raleigh has a shot a subsidiary, Raymond scored a second goal, all four of the Essex team having a hand in the move which produced this point.

Score :—Essex Regiment :—2 goals 1 subsidiary.
The 4th Hussars :—Nil.

Second Chucker.—The Hussars attacked and only the sound defence of their opponents prevented them from scoring. Returning again, Neilson broke through and scored a neat goal for the cavalry men, the only point registered during the chucker, although the Hussars continued to have the best of matters.

Score :—The Essex Regiment :—2 goals 1 subsidiary.
The 4th Hussars :—1 goal.

Third Chucker.—The Hussars hit out, but the Essex men brought the ball back to the line and notched a subsidiary. Give and take play of a fast and exciting nature followed, and the Hussars were twice penalised for fouls, but nothing more was scored, although the chucker was a very long one.

Score :—The Essex Regiment :—2 goals 2 subsidiaries.
The 4th Hussars :—1 goal.

Fourth Chucker.—Play started in midfield, from which some nice combined work by the Hussars transferred it to the Essex line. Here the play became fast and furious, but for some minutes the Hussars failed to score At last Bell got past Raleigh, and with a good shot put his side on an equal footing so far as major points were concerned. The ball then travelled all over the field and the pace became very fast, both teams playing for all they were worth. The Hussars scored a subsidiary, and the game was becoming very exciting as the chucker closed.

Score :—The Essex Regiment :—2 goals 2 subsidiaries.
The 4th Hussars :—2 goals 1 subsidiary.

Fifth (and last) Chucker.—For a time the Essex men pressed but the Hussars then broke away, and the next few minutes were anxious ones for the infantry, one shot of the Hussars actually striking the goal post. Nothing tangible however, resulted, and Bowen was looking very dangerous near the Hussars' goal when the bugle sounded, and one of the best fought games of polo ever seen in Bangalore ended.

Final Score :—The Essex Regiment :—2 goals 2 subsidiaries.
Teams :— The 4th (Q. O.) Hussars :—2 goals 1 subsidiary.

THE SEMI-FINALS.

The Semi-finals were played on H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore's beautiful ground on Friday, the 15th instant, when Major Hamilton and the officers of the Carabiniers were "At Home." The Essex Regiment were rather unexpectedly beaten by the R. A. and R. E., but the winners were too clever for their youthful opponents in the sticky work. It was a good game, and both sides had bad luck in not scoring on several occasions, but on the whole the combined team deserved their win.

The 'A" Team of the "Carbs" was too good for the "B" Team, but it was rather a pity that they drew together.

Details of the play :—

R. A and R. E. vs. THE ESSEX REGIMENT.

First Chucker.—The combined team pressed, and from a scrimmage near their opponent's goal seemed as though they must score. Bowen, however, cleared, and play continued in midfield. Again the Essex goal was besieged and the infantry four were certainly not hitting with their usual accuracy. Raymond and Bowen at last took play to their opponent's end where the ball went behind as the chucker ended.

No score to either side.

Second Chucker.—"Off-side" against the Essex placed their goal in jeopardy, but Neave cleared finely. Bowen took the ball down and tried a long shot, but the ball would have gone wide had not Raymond picked it up very quickly and put it through with a neat back-handed stroke. Changing ends, Evans scored a subsidiary for the R. A. and R E.

Score :—Essex Regiment :—1 goal.
R. A. and R. E.:—1 subsidiary.

Third Chucker.—Queripel was prominent for the combined team and scored a subsidiary. They still pressed, and Wagstaffe taking a pass from Wagstaffe, scored a goal. The Essex men added a subsidiary as the chucker closed.

Score :—Essex Regiment :—1 goal 1 subsidiary.
R. A. and R. E.:—1 goal 2 subsidiaries.

Fourth Chucker.—This was quite the infantry men's chucker. For a few moments the R. A. and R. E. pressed, but Raleigh relieved most brilliantly, and was loudly applauded for an effort which took the ball from the mouth of his own goal to midfield. From now the Essex men had the best of the chucker, Raymond scoring a good goal; and Bowen adding a subsidiary which should have been another goal and was moreover the culminating point of a good run.

Score :—Essex Regiment :—2 goals 2 subsidiaries.
R. E. and R. A. :—1 goal 2 subsidiaries.

Fifth Chucker.—The Essex side should now have won, but the combined team pressed hard, and Evans, following up a subsidiary with a goal, were ahead. Nothing more was scored, and the R. A. and R. E. had the best of the chucker on the general play, although the Essex were dangerously near their opponent's goal when time arrived.

Final Score :—R. E. and R. A. :—2 goal 3 subsidiaries.
The Essex Regiment :—2 goals 1 subsidiary.

Teams :—(As in the first ties.)

THE CARABINIERS "A" TEAM vs THE CARABINIERS "B" TEAM.

First Chucker.—"A" Team at once manifested their superiority, and Swifte scored a goal in the first minute. The other side, however, played up and Cole hit a subsidiary. A period of give-and-take play was followed by Watson scoring for "A" Team, but the side did not appear to be hurrying themselves greatly.

Score :—"A" Team :—2 goals.
"B" Team :—1 subsidiary.

Second Chucker.—Although only two subsidiaries were scored by the first team of the Carabiniers, they had the best of the play throughout the chucker, and were palpably taking matters easily.

Score :—"A" Team :—2 goals 2 subsidiaries.
"B" Team :—1 subsidiary.

Third Chucker.—The second team woke up considerably, and for a time made their comrades gallop. Cole scored a goal for them, but this woke the "A" Team up and Watson retaliated with another. Swifte followed suit with another major point, but Dormer then became very conspicuous for "B" Team and a really fine long shot from his stick scored.

Score :—"A" Team :—4 goals 2 subsidiaries.
"B" Team :—2 goals 1 subsidiary.

Fourth Chucker.—Two subsidiaries and a goal went to the premier representatives of the Dragoons who were pressing almost throughout the chucker.

Score :—"A" Team :—5 goals 4 subsidiaries.
"B" Team :—2 goals 1 subsidiary.

Fifth and Sixth Chuckers :—From now until the "halt" sounded, "A" Team had all the best of the play, and Watson scored a fine goal, an additional subsidiary also accruing to the premier side. The only salient feature of the other team's play were some fine efforts by Dormer, who played a good game for the losing side throughout.

Final Score :—"A" Team The Carabiniers :—6 goals 5 subsidiaries.
"B" Team The Carabiniers :—2 goals 1 subsidiary.

Teams :—

"A" Team—Carabiniers.	"B" Team—Carabiniers.
1 Mr Rasch	1 Capt Cole
2 Capt Watson	2 Mr Dormer
3 Mr Swifte	3 Capt Moncrieff
Mr Gwyer (back.)	Capt Francis (back.)

Umpires :—General Nixon and Major Marsh.

THE FINAL.

CARABINIERS "A" vs. R. E. & R. A.

The final was played on the Maharaja's ground on the 8th instant. The Gunner and Sapper Officers were "At Home," and there was a large and fashionable assembly in addition to a huge gathering of the general public. The Carabiniers beat the combined team of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers by four goals to two goals and four subsidiaries after a good game. Watson for the winners was most brilliant and scored all the four goals. The Carabiniers were leading all through the match, but the Sappers and Gunners were doing most of the pressing towards the end, and had bad luck in their shooting, several subsidiaries going near. Marshall scored both their goals.

Teams :—

Carabiniers—Rasch, Swifte, Captain Watson and Gwyer.

Gunners and Sappers—Queripel, Captain Marshall, Wagstaffe, and Major Evans.

Umpires:—General Nixon and Captain Tufnell.

After the match General Nixon made a short speech, congratulating the winners and making special reference to the plucky games played by the Essex Regiment in the tournament. Mrs. Nixon presented the Challenge Cup to Captain Watson, captain of the Carabinies team and small cups to the individual members of the team.

CYCLING AND MOTORING AT HOME.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

LONDON, Friday, 1st July 1904.

THE race for the "Surrey" Cup was once the most important event of the London racing season, but then race meetings were not so numerous as they are now and challenge cups were few and far between. But the race still carries sufficient importance to attract a representative entry and a goodly assembly of spectators; some 5,000 people putting in an appearance at the Ravensbourne Club Ground Lee Green, on June 25th, when the 48th race for this trophy was decided. The present cup is the seventh of its kind, the six previous cups having been won outright by six riders each of whom secured three wins. Last year's winner Ernest Fayne, of Worcester, was a hot favourite for last Saturday's event, nor did he disappoint his supporters who had the satisfaction of seeing him win a well judged race by two lengths from A. E. Wills. This being his second win he has only to repeat the performance to make the cup his own property.

Under the Motor Car Act now in force in this country, local authorities on obtaining the sanction of the local Government Board may impose speed limits for cars travelling over certain roads in their district, the idea of the promoters of the Bill being to restrict the speed of cars in admittedly dangerous zones. Unfortunately many of the local councils are composed of a body of men who hate any innovation, and motoring particularly, and these have applied to L. G. B. for power to introduce a ten mile limit on all roads in their districts. Naturally the applications have been refused on the ground that a speed limit was unnecessary. This has raised a great outcry amongst the anti-motorists who abuse the Board for not allowing local authorities to be masters of their own streets. One man writing to an evening paper even goes so far as to suggest that the dastardly act committed on the Bath Road recently, when a wire was pulled across the road in order to upset motor cars was a reasonable reprisal for not allowing the local authorities to exercise this discretion in fixing speed limits. However, it is well as it is, as a motor papers says. "If the local authorities were masters of their own localities, England would probably be without railways to-day.

For the first time for some years the Woodford Meet of Cyclists which was held last Saturday, took place in fine weather. Clouds hovered about during the greater part of the afternoon, but no rain fell, and the fixtures proved the most successful ever held. This meet is organized by local cyclists who in fancy costumes parade the streets on their cycles whilst a large number on foot rush here and there amongst the public collecting alms in aid of local charities. It has been held annually since 1898 and during that time nearly £2,000 have been handed over to the hospitals, each year seeing an increase in the sum collected. Last year a record collection of £ 400 was made and it is anticipated that this year's total will exceed £500. The exact amount will not be known for some little time as there are a number of collecting cards not yet sent in.

G. P. Mills, who some fifteen years ago was one of the finest long distance road riders of the time, and who as a cyclist is always associated with the long record side from Land's End to John O Groats, since it was over this course or 886 miles that he pushed his solid tyred ordinary, pneumatic tyred safety, tricycle and tandem to record time, bringing the time for the distance down from 5 days, 1 hour, 45 minutes to 3 days, 4 hours. No other man has ever made the journey so frequently and with such success and so long as the road remains between the most Southern and Northern points of Great Britain so long will Mills' name be associated with it. And now Mills has covered the long stretch of road again only this time the push bike has been discarded and a motor bicycle utilized. The ride was undertaken with the view of improving upon the previous best on record which stood to the credit of T. Silver at 64 hours 29 mins., and so well did Mills progress that he beat this time by nearly 14 hours, the 886 miles being completed in 50 hours, 46 mins, 30 secs.

A doctor was recently driving a horse and trap near Blackburn when the horse taking fright at something in the road bolted, and ran into a party of cyclists who were more or less seriously hurt, one poor fellow in particular, who was run over and kicked about by the horse. Not satisfied with the damage it had done the animal continued its wild stampede until checked by colliding with a wall. Such an accident as this never finds its way into the daily London press, but had a motor car run amock and done half the amount of damage a report of the catastrophe would have occupied a leading position in the news columns.

Cycling records both on the road and path have been receiving attention at the hands of our amateur riders, both Leon Meredith and H B. Howard having improved on the previous best on the path and W. de Creux-Hutchinson on the road. The records attacked by Meredith were from the two to ten miles the shorter distance being covered in 5 secs. faster time than the old record made by Bothiat, and the ten miles in 29 secs. faster time than that standing to the credict of Hill made in 1901 at Canning Town. Howard had a try at the standing quarter and took 2-5 secs. off the previous best standing to the credit of C. F. Barden, the present time being 30 4-5 secs.

Personally, I always look upon road records as being the most credible performance of the two, especially when achieved without the assistance of pace-makers. The rider under these circumstances has not the slightest artificial assistance the result of the ride resting entirely on his own ability. Such a ride was that made by W. de Creux-Hutchinson, a member of the Vegetarian Cycling Club, who, unpaced, covered on Southern roads no less a distance than 305 miles in twenty-four hours the last six of which were ridden over roads made heavy and treacherous by a heavy thunderstorm. To achieve such a ride requires a large amount of pluck and dogged perseverance, for it is one thing to ride for twenty-four hours with pacemakers but quite another thing to continue riding for this space of time in glorious isolation, for in unpaced rides no cyclist is allowed to ride nearer the record breaker than ten yards, and must always keep in the rear.

A motorist has brought trouble upon his own head and upon the owner of the car he was driving, by exhibiting a fictitious registration number whilst driving through London. The car was numbered L.L. 421 and the suspicions of a policeman were aroused, because the index letters L. L. stood for Leeds and nothing like 421 cars had been registered in that town. He questioned the driver who endeavoured to bribe him with a sovereign to allow the matter to slip by, a bribe which the policeman did not accept. No doubt offering the sovereign to the policeman told against the motorist when he was brought up at the Old Bailey for a heavy fine of £ 50 was imposed and a smaller one on the actual owner of the car. The driver was the manager of a large motor emporium in the City.

CRICKET CHAT.

B Jayaram, the well-known Mysore cricketer who remained in England this season to play for the Indian cricket team, has been making some runs for London County, in recent minor matches in which, however, the bowling is not always to be despised. Last season Jayaram made two centuries for London County in minor matches, but when tried in first-class matches was not a success.

T. B. Nicholson, a well-known Madras player of the later nineties, who went out to South Africa with Lumsden's Horse, was helping London County in the match vs South Africans and did as well as any one else on the side with scores of 51 and 11. Among other Anglo-Indian and Indian players who have been taking part in club cricket at home, I notice the name of Captain A. M. Tringham, of the Queen's Regiment, who left his mark in Northern India cricket. Playing for Mr. F. L. Crabtree's XI vs. Charter-house Maniacs, he compiled 53 and took three wickets for 19 runs. E. B. T. Studd, the crack Behar Wanderer, who is at home on leave, playing for Harrow Blues vs Southgate on 18th June, had to be content with a modest score of 10. Sewell, the old Madras cricketer, continues to show fine form for Essex. Against Derbyshire he made 22 in the first innings and 53 in the second, the latter being top score. Against Yorkshire he did not get going, but reached double figures in both innings, his contributions being 21 and 29.

L. C. P. Milman, of the Gunners, a player who represented the Presidency against the Parsees in 1901, and who afterwards did well against the Authentics for Secunderabad, accomplished a fine all-round performance for Woolwich Garrison vs. Incogniti on 8th June capturing seven wickets (six clean bowled) for 39 runs and scoring 101. Two other well-known Anglo-Indian players participated in this match, viz, Captain S.F. Gosling, who played for Madras Presidency and for Mysore Province against the Authentics, and Captain H. Strong, of the Indian Army. Captain J. A. D. Pinney, of the Imperial Cadet Corps, Dehra, playing for East Gloucestershire vs. Incogniti, compiled 59. Captain Airey, another well-known Anglo-Indian player, made 42 for the Incogs. The last named also scored 51 and 37 for Incogniti vs. Sherborne School, 58 vs. Cirencester, and 43 and 13 vs. Cheltenham College.

The first match of the Bangalore season, Indian Services vs. The Rest, played on the 7th instant, has opened visions of an unusually successful season. The game was remarkable for several performances above the average, and of these the bowling of General Nixon deserves special mention. He captured seven wickets for 21 runs, five clean bowled and the other two caught and bowled. This performance for a veteran is one of the finest I have had the pleasure of recording for some years. The Indian Services who compiled 352 for nine wickets scored at a tremendous rate indeed I cannot recall any instance in Indian cricket where runs were ever faster. The first hundred runs were made in half an hour, in itself a notable achievement, and the next 150 runs in fifty minutes, so that 250 were made in one hour and 20 minutes, a truely marvellous rate of scoring. From this it may be inferred that the bowling was weak. B. E. A Manson, who played for the Presidency against the Parsees at Poona last year, was the principal contributor to this big total, his share being 91. Moss King and Captain Copeland with 53 and 49 were also greatly in evidence, while Hanson, Moore and Major Jollie all started the season well. It would be interesting to know if the rate of run getting in this match has ever been exceeded in a match in India.

The Simla season, which concluded with the match between the Visitors and the Residents, has not been a very eventful one despite the number of well-known cricketers who participated in the various matches. Totals of 200 and upwards were rare, and only on two occasions had the opposing sides a long outing in the field. Two individual scores of three figures were compiled, viz., 101 not out by the old Reptonion, Captain F. G. Smallwood, and 102 not out by the old Marlburian, E. L. French. The half century was exceeded on but four occasions, twice by Sergeant Mitchell with 62 and 57, and twice by the old Cliftonian, Captain M. E. McConaghey, with 52 and 78. E. L French comes out at the head of the batting averages with 31·1 with Captain Smallwood, 30·3, a good second. Captain McConaghey was third with 25·0, Sergeant Mitchell fourth with 21·4, and S. M. Robinson 17·3, and General Spens 16·4, next in order. The brunt of the bowling was borne by H. Hensman (18 wickets) and S. M. Robinson (17 wickets), but Captain H. C. Laverton (11 wickets), and O. F. Lumsden (9 wickets) occasionally did well.

Cricketers in Khandish district are having a particularly good time this season, and the principal stations in the district, Dhulia and Bhusawal are able to place very fair teams in the field. Last week a Dhulia team visited Bhusawal and won a low scoring match by 40 runs on the first innings. Although Dhulia got through two innings and Bhusawal had lost two wickets in their second inning, the highest scores in the match was D. H. Kotwal's 19 in the second innings for Dhulia, and R. E. A. Elliott's 19 in the first innings for the same side C. S. Campbell, I. C. S., who scored 3 and 17 not out for Bhusawal also bowled well, but in the latter department R. Pettingale, who captured nine wickets did best. The I C. S. was well represented in this match, G. S Curtis, E M. Pratt, W. C. Shepherd, R. E. A. Elliott, C. S. Campbell, and T. Maitland Kirwan all donning flannels.

The match between the Poona Gymkhana and Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders on the 14th instant has revealed a few fresh things about the strength of Poona cricket. Greig was not playing for the Gymkhana, neither were Colonel Hazelton, A. D. Wilkins, or A. H. C. Kearsey, but the team was for all that a strong batting side with B. M. Carroll, A S. Noake, G. Thornton, Captain J. M. Bruce, A. V. Thew, Captain H. K. Umfreville, Colonel Stevens, and Captain Hooper available. While Poona has been lamenting the want of a couple of really good bowlers, these have been available at any time in the persons of Lieutenants H. B. Hartley and S. Langton, of the Highlanders. They have each only donned flannels once this season previous to the match under notice, and then impressed the Poona critics with their all round form On Thursday they bowled unchanged against the Gymkhana and dismissed that strong batting side for 60 runs, of which no less than 17 were extras. Of the 43 runs made from the bat, Captain Umfreville and A. S. Noake made 27 between them. Langton took five wickets for 18 runs and Hartley four for 25. To show that their performance was no fluke, the same bowlers dismissed six batsmen for 94 runs in the second innings. The Highlanders totalled 149, Langton (22) and Hartley (39) showing good form, while J. Kennedy (30) played perhaps the best innings in the match. Langton has just been granted 90 days leave in India, so I fear will not be seen in Poona cricket any more this season. This is a thousand pities, as he is undeniably the best bowler in the station, now that Captain Deas has left for Quetta. With Hartley and Umfreville, to say nothing of Colonels Stevens and Hazelton, and of course Greig, the Poona attack will not be quite so week as it perhaps looks on paper. The form with bat and ball of all the players is now pretty well known, and the following side would be thoroughly representative of Poona cricket :—Captain J. G. Greig, B. M Carroll, J. Kennedy, H. B. Hartley, S. Langton, Captain H K. Umfreville, A. H. C. Kearsey, G. Thornton, A. S. Noake, Colonel Stevens, and Colonel Hazelton. If Major Leslie, of the Sappers, was playing this year he would be sure of a place in a representative Poona team, as when in form he is one of the finest bats in the Presidency.

Rajkot Gymkhana is not able to place a particularly strong team in the field this year, and last Saturday suffered a five wickets defeat at the hands of the Rajkumar College. The Gymkhana total was 97, of which C. A. Kincaid, of the I C. S., contributed 50, Captain Searle 10, and Colonel Kennedy 15 so that the other eight batsmen between them were only responsible for 14 runs, there being 8 extras in the total. K. S. Bhojrajji (36) and R. S. Lakhaji (25) were the principal rungetters for the College, and these two players also captured four wickets a piece for 30 and 39 runs respectively.

J Monteath, the old Cliftonian and Dharwar player, who represented the Presidency against the Parsees in the Bombay match last year, is in very fine form with the bat this season. A few weeks ago he played a fine inning, of 79 against Bellary, and in his next match took a century Against Hubli, a week later, he played another fine inning for 153, when no one else on the side could make more than 17. This match was also remarkable for another fine innings played by W. Bird, who contributed 114 to the Hubli total of 173. L. C. Crump again bowled well for Dharwar, taking five wickets for 51 runs.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

CALCUTTA vs RANGERS.—The above match, which had been postponed, was played on the Calcutta ground on the 13th instant, and concluded the League fixtures. The home team were without H Cooper, Binning making a poor substitute. Calcutta had the best of the first moiety, but just before half time Vears scored for the Rangers. After the interval Calcutta still attacked but missed several chances through erratic shooting : The game ended in a win for the Rangers by a goal to nil. The result of the match gave the shield to the King's Own Regiment, Mrs. Carter presenting the trophy to the team at the conclusion of the game. Teams :—

RANGERS.—Behrend, goal; Margrett and Anderson, backs ; Mulholland, Lees and Afflick, half-back; Pollock, McCready, Rosser, Maclay and Vears, forwards

CALCUTTA.—Dodds, goal ; V. Cooper and Gahan, backs; H. Sherman, Binning, MacDonald, V. Sherman and Stuart, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. J. Greig.

1ST ROUND.

KING'S OWN REGT. vs., HOWRAH —The tie between these teams was decided on the soldiers' ground on the 19th instant. The visitors, in spite of the inclusion in their team, of Woodings and Morris from the West Ridings, were unable to give much account of themselves against the superior play of their opponents, who did most of the attacking and won by three goals to nil. Jones (2) and Standish being responsible for the scoring. Teams :—

KING'S OWN.—Sinker goal ; Mellor and Stokes, backs ; Walton, Standish and Leonard, half-backs ; Jones, Golden, Quinn and Wittingham, forwards.

HOWRAH —Powell, goal ; Curtis and Annett, backs ; Hart, Morrow and Morris, half-backs ; Echlin, Woodings, Jackson, Smith and Linton, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. D. Walker.

DALHOUSIE vs. HORNETS —A large crowd witnessed the above match on the Dalhousie ground on Tuesday. The opening exchanges were very even and, after Dalhousie had obtained a corner and the Hornets missed from a "free," Crow got away and scored for the visitors. But the home team were not long in drawing level, Watts scoring from a pass by Bonar. After the interval play was very exciting, but neither side scored and the game ended in a draw of a goal each.

Teams :—

DALHOUSIE.—Street, goal; Stimson and Templeton, backs ; Phelps, Butler and Wallace, half-backs; Prike, Bonar, Watts, Stewart and Holly, forwards.

HORNETS —Gomes, goal; Pool and Anderson, backs; A. Rosser, L. Rosser, and Hollow, half-backs; G. Russell, Apcar, Simmons, Crow and Tankcred, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. G. Cook.

FOOTBALL NOTES.

THE much-looked-forward-to match between Calcutta and the Rangers, which was to make the winning of the League Cup a question of goal average only, came off on the C F. C. ground on Wednesday last, but contrary to the hopes of civilian supporters the Rangers won by one goal to love. and thus put Calcutta out of the running for the cup. The game was fairly evenly contested, the Rangers having rather the better of the first and Calcutta of the second half, but although Dodds in goal for Calcutta had a lot to do, Behrend had hardly any work owing to the poor shooting of the Calcutta forwards H. Cooper was absent and no one seemed inclined to take the initiative when shooting was required. On the whole it was an interesting match, but after Vears had scored for the visitors in the first half the excitement of the crowd abated considerably, as Calcutta had then no chance of winning the League Cup. For Calcutta the back division was in good form, Maunder and Ansell at half and Dodds in goal being prominent, but the forwards were quite off color. For the Rangers, Vears, Macready and MacClay showed up well in the forward line and Margrett and Anderson at back, though the latter was inclined to play foul at times.

The Rangers were enthusiastically supported throughout by the Fort contingent, and received three hearty cheers for their share in enabling the King's Own to carry off the Locke Cup, which Mrs. Carter presented after the match.

Thus ended the League season of 1904 and apart from one or two little incidents, which it is not necessary to re-open at this stage, a very successful season it has been. The final positions of the first two teams are not so close, as was anticipated during the last few weeks, but the difference of only three points between the first and fourth is an excellent guide to the keenness of the fight for the Locke Cup. Those interested in the League will, no doubt, like to compare this year's results with those of former seasons, and I therefore append the records of the winners and runners up since this now popular competition was inaugurated

From the above tables it will be seen that of the Civilian clubs Calcutta has performed most consistently throughout, having taken first place once and second four times out of seven competitions: the general opinion will no doubt be that they deserved better luck than to take only second place this season.

A few comments on the players. For the King's Own Jones has been brilliant at times and Carman and Whittingham have worked well together throughout the season and played most consistently. Quinn is the best of the halves, but inclined to display temper at times. Neither of the backs are brilliant, but Mellor plays a very fair game. Sinker, the present goalkeeper, has not been passed, but has been seldom troubled.

For Calcutta H. Cooper has shown himself to be, as in previous years, the best centre-forward or inside right in Calcutta. V. Sherman is excellent on his day, a deadly shot and a hard worker, but has lately been off color. H. Sherman is a good outside right, one of the best the Calcutta team has had, and will improve, but should not be moved from his place. Mounder has come on wonderfully and is twice the player he was last year. Crawford is a sterling player, seldom brilliant, but always reliable, and Ansell is a decided acquisition to the team and a hard worker. V. Cooper is improving at back, and is really good on a wet day. Dodds is good in goal, but takes lots of chances with running kicks.

For the West Ridings Woodings, Wilson, Grady, and Hullyer are all good forwards, and Turner and Reeves make excellent halves. The backs are rather weak, but Roberts in goal has saved his team time after time and is a brilliant, if somewhat, risky player.

For the Rangers Macready has proved himself to be a useful little forward and Vears is a smart winger; Rosser is a good shot and a dangerous man to have as an opponent, but is apparently a difficult man for his other forwards to work with. Lees is one of the hardest working halves in the League, and Margrett and Anderson are both safe backs, though inclined to use more force than necessary when "taking the man." Behrend is a very fair goalkeeper. The team as a whole have received a deal of help this season from three men from the 93rd Highlanders.

Dalhousie have a useful man in Dalling, who can play in any place on the field, and Bonar and Stewart are both hard working forwards and valuable members of the team. Prike also has proved a good left winger, though he has rather fallen off since the beginning of the season. In the half line Butler has improved wonderfully and Phelps and Evans both play hard. Stimson still plays a good game at back, but has had his day, and Templeton is good but erratic. Street has proved a great acquisition, and is the best man the Dals. have had in goal since Peake played for them.

In Wood, Howrah had one of the best forwards and centre-halves in Calcutta, and as captain he was invaluable to the team. It is a pity he had to leave Calcutta before the end of the season—Kerr is a good left winger and Curtis at back is sound though inclined to play a bit roughly. Powell has done well in goal.

The Y. M. C. A have a good centre-half in Pooler and a fair back in Scully Lamb was their best man, but he unfortunately will not be able to play again this season. Stokes in goal gave the finest display of the season against the King's Own, and the Y. M. C. A. are no doubt sorry they did not discover his powers earlier in the season. The Y. M. have an indifferent team as a whole, but there are some very good units.

If, as is rumoured, the Rangers are losing several of their best men, Calcutta should manage to get into the semi-finals of the Shield tournament, but whether they will get further or not seems to depend on the presence or absence of H. Cooper in the forward line. The winners of Dalhousie and the Hornets will put up a good game against the Royal Irish, and this match should be the best in the second round. Bar accidents, the King's Own should get into the finals, as they have had the luck to get into the weak half of the competition, but I do not think they will carry off the Cup. At any rate two good teams should be in the finals Shield, and the Charity Match on the 30th should therefore draw a good gate.

"Now, children," said a teacher in a Germantown school not long since, "let us see what you remember about the animal kingdom and the domestic animals that belong to it. You have named all the domestic animals but one. Who can tell me what that one is?" No one answered. "It has bristly hair, likes the dirt and is fond of getting into the mud," hinted the teacher helpfully. "Can't you think, Tommy?" she asked encouragingly of a small boy. "It's me," said Tommy, reflectively.

"SIXTY YEARS ON THE TURF."

THERE are few more delightful books to lovers of racing than Mr. George Hodgman's "Sixty Years on the Turf." "Hodgy," as he was called by his many friends from the late Admiral Rous and Sir John Astley down to his comrades in the Ring, is still hale and hearty and, though in his eighbtieth year, is to be seen at most Meetings at home with his characteristic silk hat, blue serge reefer suit, and the invariable twig of trefoil in the corner of his mouth; and truly none other than he with his long and unique experience could have got together such a book of reminiscences and anecdotes of the sport he loves so well. One of his stories of a handicap certainty which came undone is of his own horse John Davis (the son of the ever famous Voltigeur) in the Cesarewitch of 1869, for which race, though eight years of age he was handicapped at 6st. 12lbs. John Davis was tried for the race twice, and for the first time with Wildflower who had been an easy winner over the Cesarewitch course shortly before; "I put her in (writes Mr. Hodgman) with 2st. less than the old horse who simply played with her. Indeed he won with such a deal to spare that I did not see how under 6st. 12lbs. he could possibly be beaten in the Cesarewitch. The trial in fact seemed almost too good to be true." The second trial with Sir John Astley's Provider who meanwhile had won another race over the Cesarewitch course, and Wildflower again, confirmed the first, for again John Davis "cantered home from Wildflower with Provider beaten 150 yards," and so good was the form deemed that Fordham begged to be allowed to ride at a stone overweight. This Hodgman would not hear of; "George, how can I, for the Admiral's sake, do such a thing? Put up a stone overweight? No, the Admiral would never forgive me"; and, therefore, the mount was given to Sam Mordan, who seemed to lose his head completely and "instead of allowing his mount to stride out, as directed, he pulled and sawed him about singing, 'Mittith Thammy Mordan's husband will win the Thetherwitch to-day. Mittith Thammy Mordan will have her thewing machine to-night,'" and threw away by a length and a half a race which ought to have been won by 100 yards. It is owing to such unforeseen events that handicappers ever seem to be saved by some especial Providence from the consequence of mistakes or carelessness on their part.

The Derby of 1857, no doubt, belongs to the past generation of race-goers entirely, but it must have indeed been an exciting one from an account which "Hodgy" gives us of it. It was Blink Bonny's year and Mr. Drinkald who was at that time a prominent man in the racing world had a colt running which rejoiced in the most unclassical name of Black Tommy, and he started at 200 to 1. The colt's owner, however, must have had but a contemptuous opinion of his chance, for though he had backed him, it was a bet of £10,000 to a suit of clothes! Mr. Hodgman was "at the moment of the finish of the race standing with Mr. Drinkald in Tattersall's enclosure, when his Black Tommy flashed past looking all over a winner. In truth it seemed any odds on him. Thinking the stake safe in his pocket, Mr. Drinkald shouted out, 'Thank God, I've won the Derby, and not a soul is on but myself,'" for he was a man of a secretive and somewhat cross-grained temperament. His joy, however, was but momentary, for Blink Bonny's number was put up first, and Black Tommy's second.

Another Derby of which we are told is that won by Daniel O'Rourke in 1852. Hodgman had backed Stockwell, the sterling son of the Baron and Pocahontas and whose name is to be found in half the pedigrees of to-day, for the Two Thousand Guineas at 25 to 1 to win him £3,000 and for the Derby he had taken £10,000 to £200, so that when the colt won the Guineas he "stood on velvet." "Unluckily, however, Stockwell was afflicted with a bad gumboil, which had to be lanced. None the less, in spite of whatever he lacked in condition, he would, with plain sailing, have won the Derby"; but his jockey got closed in and Stockwell himself had his stifle severly cut. "The upshot was a victory for Daniel O'Rourke, whom Stockwell had thrashed in the Two Thousand, and whom he trounced afresh in the Leger." The Winner's owner was Mr. Bowes who next year was the fortunate owner of the Triple Crown Hero, West Australian, What a wonderful family is that of Stockwell: his sire The Baron won the Leger, his son Doncaster the Derby, his grandson Bend Or the Derby, and his great-grandson, Ormonde, all three classics; the latter's son Orme would undoubtedly have won the Derby at any rate if not all the three races but for the dastardly attempt to destroy him by poison, though he has compensated for this at the stud by siring Flying Fox, who, like his grandsire was a Triple Crown hero, and no doubt before many years are past a Derby winner will spring from the blood of the son of Orme and Vampire.

The reminiscences are not only of racing, however, and there is one capital tale of a shooting episode in which the author took a painfully prominent part when the guest of Mr. Carew of Epsom. A careless shot by Hodgman resulted in his missing the game but killing a fox, a crime for which he, of course, expressed contrition to his host, who naturally recognised that Reynard's death was due solely to accident; but the affair was quickly noised abroad, and when a few days later Hodgman strolled into Tattersall's was greeted by one of his friends with the query whether he had had any shooting lately. "Yes, Harry," replied Hodgman, "I had some on Saturday. Capital! I shot a d—d old pal of yours.—A fox!" and so turned the laugh against his would-be tormentor.

Mr. Hodgman writes much that is of the greatest interest on the subject of American jockeys, the death of first-class light-weights and other matters relating to racing, and he concludes his Book of Memoirs with an amusing account of his being mistaken for Mr. Gladstone at a small railway station, and of his being called upon for a "Speech! Speech!" to which he responded by calling out of the carriage window as the train moved off, "Thank you, gentlemen! So-and-so will win the Cesarewitch!"

May the delightful old gentleman retain his marvellous vitality and vigour for many years yet, for the pages of his "Sixty Years on the Turf" are full of evidences of his character as a high-minded, generous, and charitable sportsman.

"I read the other day," said A, 'of a dog which was daily given a penny to buy a bun with. One day the baker gave him one 'red-hot from the oven, and burnt his mouth. Next day he came with his penny, showed it to the baker, and then went over the road to the opposition shop and gave them his custom in future." "That does not beat my sister's dog," said B.; "he was given a penny a day to buy a bun, but he saved them up to the end of the week, and then had a blow-out on sausages."

Sporting Notes.

THE date selected for the Tollygunge Horse and Dog Show is Monday, 26th December.

We sincerely trust, writes The Indian Kennel Gazette, that the Executive of the Simla Show will take to heart the lesson taught them by the utter failure of this year's show. Five classes only filled out of thirteen, and there was scarcely a show dog among the exhibits. Not a single fox-terrier of any kind was entered. Owners of really good dogs will not send them or even enter them as long as the show is carried on in its prehistoric fashion, with its rotten system of judging. The Simla Committee has steadily refused to accept the rules of the N. I. K. A. and run a proper show, so this is the result.

The charge of perjury brought against Sievier has been dismissed.

At a meeting of the Rangoon Stewards held on Wednesday the 20th instant, it was decided not to hold a Sky Meeting on the 6th of August, owing to the swampy state of the course, but that a programme of future racing should be published as soon as possible. It was also decided that the Autumn Meeting should be held in the first week in December, and to have a one-day race meeting at the end of October; one day in the middle of November; one day during X'mas week; one day at the end of January, and hold the Spring Meeting at the end of February. The actual dates will be fixed later on.

Mr. Self, who returned to Calcutta a few days ago, will bet for Messrs. Champion and Co., at the Calcutta Monsoon Meetings and Mr. Brittain will make a new departure this year by coming out earlier in the season and starting operations at the Lucknow Autumn Meeting, which begins at the end of November.

The circulation of the Government letter regarding the proposed Game and Fish Preservation Bill has evoked some letters, among them the following to a Madras paper:—

"A Mysore Planter" writes:—Kindly allow me to issue a note of warning to all European sportsmen in India. The Government of India are circulating a Notification about preserving Game throughout India. This is a most excellent object. But, are the Government prepared to see that Game Laws are enforced? Are they prepared to spend a considerable amount of money on a special staff of Game Watchers, etc.? Or, are they going to leave it to the Police and other petty officials to enforce the Law? If the latter, it is foredoomed to failure, as it is in Mysore, where the Government have framed excellent rules but fail totally to see they are enforced, with the result that the Europeans are the only persons who take out shooting licenses, while the native is allowed to roam about the country with a gun as he likes. This gun is covered by a four-anna license, but there is nothing to prevent him shooting game, there being no Game Watchers or officials to take an interest in game preservation. Game Laws to be effective must prohibit a man using his gun on other than his own land without a shooting license. It, therefore, behoves sportsmen to have a distinct understanding with Government before accepting any Game Laws.

"W. W. M." writes:—I have read with great interest the letter from Mr. H. H. Risley, Secretary to the Government of India, anent the above Bill, and all sportsmen and naturalists will, doubtless, be much gratified at the evident earnestness of Government to solve this difficult problem. To the non-sportsmen, it may appear a very simple task to dole out measures for the preservation of Game in British India, but those sportsmen who know something about it will see that the real trouble lies in the fact that what might suit the requirements of one District would be wholly inapplicable to the neighbouring District. Government are evidently well aware of this, and their intention to a point a Special Officer to move about the country and report on the special requirements of each District is a splendid idea. I cannot, however, agree with their idea that this Special Officer should be a naturalist rather than a sportsman—and that for very obvious reasons—but if they can find a man who is a bit of both, and who knows the languages, and is endowed with an average amount of tact and commonsense, we need have no anxiety re the final rules and regulations. The proposed alternative suggestion, that Government should provide guns gratis for the shooting of any specially dangerous or destructive animal, will not, in my opinion, be of any service whatever. As an illustration, I may inform you that some years ago a Gowda used to bring me most heartrending tales of the destruction of his paddy by sambhur. I always, on such occasions, lent him a rifle, and, being a decent shot, he generally accounted for the animal. The curious part of it was, however, that the beasts used to travel three and a half miles from the Gowda's paddy field and die inside the boundary of my estate. I found him out at last, and also found out that sambhur never came near his fields, and that he had accounted for every sambhur within the boundry of my estate!

Re the visitor to India, in your leading article you say that it would be a very simple matter for him to say he intended remaining in the country and to make up his mind that India did not suit him after he had satisfied his craving for slaughter. This, I think, could be easily guarded against by Government refusing to grant shooting licenses to any one who failed to prove a residence of one year (more or less) in the country. In that event, the visitor would be compelled to admit that he had only come for a certain number of months shooting and Government could fleece him accordingly, and, I trust, substantially. If a man can afford to travel from Great Britain or Australia for a three months' sporting trip in India, he can also afford to pay Rs. 100 for a permit to do so, plus Rs. 50 for every bull bison he kills. I think it would be a mistake to charge him anything on tigers or panthers, but at the same time there is no doubt that he would ungrudgingly pay a good sum for the privilege. If the visitor, however, shoots any immature stags, fine him Rs. 100 for each one of them, and if he dares to shoot a cow or a young bull bison from sheer love of killing, fine him Rs. 200. The Rules re fines ought to be exceedingly drastic, as this is really the only way to prevent the destruction of growing game, and a substantial fine will be a useful lesson to the slayer "not to do it again."

With reference to small game, it is an indisputable fact that the country has been absolutely cleaned out and Government would be well advised in adopting stringent measures by absolutely prohibiting the use of nets. If any person, European or native, wishes to procure hare, partridge, or quail, let him do so by legitimate means, and give the animal a fair chance of its life. Only last month I was offered seven brace of partridge for Re. 1, but refused to purchase them on principle, and told the vendor, in no uncertain terms not to dare to bring any game to me. From subsequent enquiries I learned that this man is not a shikari by caste, but the representative of a gang of village loafers who net hare and partridge, for "sport" and spend the proceeds on liquor. Now, it would cost me about Rs. 2, more or less, to shoot seven brace of partridge, whereas it cost this gang nothing, as the proposed Regulations make no distinction between European and native. They must absolutely forbid the use of nets in any shape or form.

In my "griffin" days I have watched natives net fish during the low water season, and half a dozen men could easily catch more in an afternoon with a net than I could with rod in a month, even though I be an expert with the rod. What must the feelings of the members of a Game Association be after spending thousands of rupees to stock its streams with sporting fish, and after lashing the waters, probably unsuccessfully, for days with every well-known fly, to find, one morning, that the famous pools had been emptied during the night by a few men with a net? The very thought is nauseous. Again, I say, put the European and native on the same footing and let the latter angle with a rod only. If they choose to bear the expense of joining such Associations and bearing their due share in its extraordinary expenses for ova, etc., I have no doubt the Associations would welcome any number of them.

To turn to the figure of Rs. 1,50,000 paid as Customs duty from the destruction of our feathered friends, it is enough to make either sportsman or naturalist weep. This alone ought to be conclusive proof that regulations are urgently required. Rs. 1,50,000 revenue from the slaughter of our songsters! In very truth Government ought to be heartily ashamed of publishing such statistics; but, as they now, with evident good intent, inform us that the proposed Regulations are not to obtain revenue, we can well understand they have not accepted this enormous revenue without certain misgivings, and as the wheels of Government grind exceeding slow, may we now hope that, as they have begun to grind they will grind exceeding small, and put an effectual stop to this iniquity.

The only weak point in the letter under notice is, in my opinion, the references made to the Game Laws of Mysore. I know for a fact that these same laws, though no doubt good on paper, are absolutely a dead letter in practice, and though several enterprising individuals have instituted a few prosecutions successfully against infringements of the Game Laws, the fact remains that Brahmins in their private capacity do not, and cannot be expected to, take much interest in game, though they cannot be excused for bringing their private prejudices forward as an excuse for their utter disregard of Government Game Regulations. The Game Laws of Mysore have not been brought home to the Mysoreans—but we will see what Mr. G. E. Ricketts can do.

Mr. Risley's letter points to the appointment of one Special Officer only for the whole of British India, but this would be both impolitic and impossible. There are great opportunities in the scheme to combine the protection of game with sufficient revenue to pay the salaries of a dozen officers and their staffs. But neither 12, 120, nor 1,200 special officers will have the slightest effect in producing any lasting results unless they have the hearty co-operation of every Government servant and every sportsman.

Distemper is a disease which dog-breeders dread more than any other, and a remedy which always proves effective will, we are sure, be gladly welcomed. A correspondent of our contemporary, The American Field, who has had great experience in the rearing of dogs of all kinds, writes: "As a cure for distemper I have had great success with the most simple remedy. I have never lost a dog from distemper since using same, and have cured any number of dogs. This is the remedy: A teaspoonful of table salt every other day; usually two doses are sufficient if taken when first symptoms show themselves. I do not think this remedy will always cure if the case is allowed to run on too long before used, but I do know positively that it has always effected a complete cure if taken in time; that is, in cases I have treated. Every one familiar with dogs can easily detect the first symptoms of distemper by the little hacking cough and running water from eyes. That's the time to begin treatment. One tea-spoonful table salt should be put well back of the tongue, and the dog's mouth held shut until he swallows. The dog will vomit, and in some cases purge. This vomiting will relieve the dog's stomach of a green and yellowish bile, which seems to be prevalent in cases of distemper. This simple remedy is within reach of all, and well worth the trial."

Hunting a school of whales sounds uncommonly lively work to the uninitiated, but a whale-hunt on this large scale is no rare occurrence in the Shetlands, and is one of the most familiar elements of excitement in the islanders' lives. The whales are mostly of small size; but even so, it is a difficult and exciting business to hem them in for days and nights together, as in the latest case, which has just been reported, and to despatch them one by one till scores of the big bodies are lying floating and stranded all about. This latest school which has fallen the Shetlanders' way was to a great extent secured with the aid of girls. The fishermen's daughters of the neighbourhood, in the absence of their fathers and brothers, manned their boats (if the phrase still holds good) and kept the whales from making for the open sea by throwing stones at them!

There are some big pike in Rydal Lake. A good fish of 24lb. weight was captured a few days ago, and stowed away in his "little Mary" were found a wild duck, a water-rat, and a small jack weighing 2½lb. It will be seen that the "menoo" was substantial and varied.

Strange verdicts are often recorded, but the following one delivered by a coroner's jury down West would require something very unique to displace it from its prominent position in the ranks of strange findings:—They were local farmers, and the case was one of a keeper who had been found shot, and all the circumstances indicated self-destruction. The coroner outlined the case, and pointed out it was clearly felo-de-se. Then the good men and true got their heads together, and, in order to settle the matter quickly, one of their number said: "Well, it's like this. The coroner he's a doctor, and a well-educated chap, and says it's plain the deceased fell in the sea, and we can't go against that." So they agreed, and when the question was put: "Well, gentlemen, and what is the verdict?" the astounding reply came: "Found drowned."

In China the legend is cherished by the people that the invention of gunpowder is due to a Chinaman who lived in the mists of that antiquity for which they possess such a deep veneration. But no Chinese writer seriously claims that the invention is the work of any of his countrymen; it is regarded as having come to them from the "outer barbarians." There is, in truth, nothing in the military history of China during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries to lead us to believe that the Chinese then possessed an explosive, though there is little doubt that they used various kinds of combustibles which did damage to their enemies. Only in the fifteenth century do we hear of the use of gunpowder and cannon by the Chinese. It is extremely improbable that these were invented in China; but there are a number of facts now known which lead to the conclusion that the Chinese obtained their first gunpowder and fire-arms from Europe by land or water at the end of the fourteenth century, and that the invention was wrongly adopted as a national discovery before the arrival in China of the Portuguese in the sixteenth century. These are very clearly shown by Lieutenant-Colonel Henry W. L. Hime in his work recently published on the origin of gunpowder, which, though written more for military than sporting readers, gives the results of much research into the origin and progress of explosives from the earliest days, leading us inevitably to the conclusion that whatever the Chinese knew of gunpowder they acquired it indirectly from its real inventor, Roger Bacon.

Bacon was born at Ilchester, in Somersetshire, in 1214, and died about 1294. It is incontestably proved that he was the discoverer of the first recipe for the making of gunpowder, which he concealed in his writings by putting it into the form of an anagram. The proportions and ingredients he thus recommended were 29·4 per cent. of sulphur, 29·4 per cent. of charcoal, and 41·2 per cent. of saltpetre. The next complete recipe is that given in the MSS. of Dr. John Arderne, of Newark, a practising surgeon in 1350, who gives 66·6 per cent. of saltpetre, 22·2 per cent. of charcoal, and 11·1 per cent. of sulphur. But the invention and discovery was undeniably due to the researches of Friar Bacon, who not only made, but also fired, the first gunpowder. This is made quite plain by the author of the work referred to, who, at great pains in marshalling his facts, and the deductions drawn from them, extracts the secret of gunpowder manufacture from the writings of Bacon himself. To an English monk, therefore, must be given the credit of the invention of the first gunpowder, just as six hundred years later the world became indebted to Forsyth, a Scottish clergyman, for the percussion-cap, the real basis of all our many improvements in fire-arms during last century. Friar Bacon sought to conceal his discovery from the crowd in the opinion that scientific information was bad for the people "unable to digest scientific facts, which it scorns and misuses to its own detriment." His experience was embodied in the declaration by him that "the mob scoff at philosophers and despise scientific truth." Like most inventors, Bacon did not profit by his discovery, no more than did his successor Forsyth. By great research into records in many languages, Lieutenant-Colonel Hime has clearly exploded all claims to the invention of gunpowder except that of Bacon, of whose knowledge of its properties and of its mode of manufacture he must satisfy every reader of his historical work, by his most able and convincing process of reasoning, founded on what has evidently been most painstaking research.

Our Poona correspondent writes:—It is with very sincere regret that I have to announce the death of Lieutenant-Colonel H. D. Minchin, Cantonment Magistrate of Poona, which occurred about midnight on Saturday from disease of the heart. The deceased officer joined the service in the Royal Fusiliers and his natural bent soon prompted him to join the Native Cavalry with whom he served with distinction in Afghanistan and Burma. Later on in life, taking to the more peaceful life of a Cantonment Magistrate he served in Ahmednagar, Belgaum, and Poona, making himself in each place beloved and respected for his unvarying courtesy, firmness, and tact. His funeral was a most impressive ceremony and was attended by practically the whole of Poona. The long stretch of road extending from the Sholapur Cross Roads to God's Acre was lined on either side by officers and troopers of that splendidly turned out Regiment, the 33rd Cavalry, while the weird wail of the pipes of the Highlanders added to the solemnity of the sad ceremony. So went a good and honest man to his long rest, and few men had fewer enemies and more friends.

Sorry, too, am I to have to chronicle what I fear is a very serious accident to Lieutenant Ross, attached last year to that fine sporting regiment, the Buffs, and this year to their successors at Ghorpuri, the East Lancashires. While playing polo on Saturday, Mr. Ross' pony slipped up with him, the unfortunate young officer getting stuck in his stirrups, the pony rolling backwards and forwards over him more than once before assistance could be rendered and it is feared must, in its struggles, have kicked him on the head. Mr. Ross was picked up in an unconscious state and has remained so for almost a week his condition of health remaining practically unaltered, and one can but pray earnestly for the lad's speedy recovery.

Poona indeed has been over full with gloomy incidents during the past week. While Major Morris, the popular Secretary of the far-famed Club of Western India, was sitting in the verandah of his house close to the Club an obviously mad dog came into his compound and severely bit one of his valuable fox-terriers. Seizing a stick Major Morris at once gave chase, the hapless brute rushing out into the road where it immediately bit a servant and at least three other dogs. From there it rushed into the Club compound biting in its hideous career a poor little child and one of the billiard markers and was eventually overtaken and done to death in a neighbouring compound. How many other people and animals it had bitten it is, of course, impossible to say. Major Morris who acted with admirable promptitude throughout had the wounds of those bitten attended to at once and the people despatched without delay to Kasauli where also the brain of the miserable brute was sent to make the gruesome assurance doubly sure. The dog question in India is a big one and difficult to tackle with discretion, but the existing entire neglect of all precautionary measures in so important a Cantonment as Poona seems wholly reprehensible and it is a thousand pities that some brave man does not take the burden on his shoulders. For it means the lives of many.

Poona has not indulged in any very serious cricket up to the present, and the contest between the Gymkhana Club and the Telegu Cricket Club was intended more pour passer le temps than as an exposition of the gentle game. If it did nothing else, however, it afforded that veteran player, Mr. A. D. Wilkins, a further opportunity of showing how wonderfully he has played himself into form again at a time of life when most men have laid the willow aside for the golf club. His play was of the charming order, beautifully neat and correct without being irritatingly academic and having for the second time even thus early in the season passed the magic three figures he obligingly retired. Captain Greig, too, was out for a little mild dissipation and annexed 84 in characteristic style before he succumbed. With the fall of three wickets the Gymkhana closed with the score at 243 to which the natives of the benighted Presidency could only respond with a wretched 94.

Nor did the East Lancashire Regiment make a much bolder bid for victory against the Gymkhana Club, for the latter without the valuable assistance of Captain Greig notched up 299 for eight wickets to which the East Lancashires could respond with but a poor 86. It was regrettable that the fielding on both sides was very indifferent; this slackness is the curse of English cricket and the despair of really earnest cricketers.

An enterprising sportsman rejoicing in the name of Ahmed Khan is certain to get on in this world. For to cool impudence he adds a praiseworthy determination and an earnest desire to enjoy life and have a little fun for his money. Going to a native pagha in the city of Poona he announced to the horse dealers that he was the trusted master of the stable of an opulent sahib who had entrusted him with the purchase of a prancing palfrey. Completely taken in the usually astute horsey brotherhood bridled and saddled the steed selected by the customer who expressed a wish to "throw a leg over." Having mounted the champing steed, this wild raider galloped away to the consternation of the dealers whose vocabulary must, I opine, have been a treat to the bystanders, nor was the steed recovered till three days afterwards when it was found in some village called Sirur nearly forty miles away where this bold Lochinvar had disposed of it for the munificent sum of twenty seven rupees (bridle and saddle presumably chucked in!) But the gallant raider himself is still a free man. Peradventure he didn't chuck the upholstery in and got a relay in a like fashion at Sirur. One would really believe we were on the Afghan Frontier.

Everything on the Poona course is getting very ship-shape under Mr. Cursetjee Dunjisha's tender care and he is certainly to be congratulated on carrying on so well during Mr. Cecil Grey's absence. The jockeys have all come back from Mysore and Bangalore where that capital light weight, A. Hoyt, did remarkably well, though that finished horseman and popular artist, J. Robinson had not the luck which his skill deserved. Little Melsom, Mr. Bass' importation last year, also caught the judge's eye in his turn. There is a lot of fast work going on "putting the polish on" for the 30th when large entries (which close on the 25th) are expected. Mr. Galstaun has a couple of new English horses. A very useful looking pair and Tom Scott a good looking one from France, though whether she will recompense the Kour Sahib for the ill-fated Record Reign has yet to be seen. I will have more to say about matters racing next week when the great sport begins in earnest.

The "Salvitis Annual" alluded to in an advertisement among our casual notices is a little book on the horse, its ailments and treatment which we have no hesitation in commending to the attention of horse owners. Incidentally we may mention that The Australian Fodder Company, who issue the book, have for some time been in the Indian market with food and patent preparations which in other parts of the world, as well as in India, have earned for them and their specialities an enviable reputation.

Athletic Notes.

THE Athletic Meeting of representatives from Yale and Harvard and Oxford and Cambridge held at Queen's Club, on the 23rd instant, resulted in a win for the Americans by six events to three.

Among important home cricket fixtures last week are the following:—Kent beat Somerset by eight wickets; Lancashire beat Essex by ten wickets; Warwickshire beat Hampshire by an innings and 154 runs; Sussex and Surrey drew; the matches Yorkshire vs. Gloucester, and Notts vs. Leicestershire were abandoned owing to rain.

It would be extremely interesting if a census could be taken some fine Sunday morning during the summer at the various exits from London—including the Thames Bridges. Cyclists simply form a procession over Putney and Hammersmith Bridge. Recently a Mr. John Silver spent two golden hours counting the cyclists and motorists who passed the "Red Deer," Croydon, on a Sunday morning between 10 and 12 noon. Here is the result of his count:—

125 motors (cars and cycles), with 178 men and 50 ladies.
125 lady cyclists.
1,797 men and boy (push) cyclists.

2,047 in 120 minutes—say 17 per minute, average.

Nearly all of these were going into the country. It would be pretty safe to say 50,000 cyclists are awheel—if anything the number is under estimated—in London, on a fine Sunday.

In our London Sporting Letter this week will be found full details of the A. A. A. Championship Meeting and the finals at Henley Regatta, the results of which were telegraphed to us earlier in the month.

Those who went to the A. A. A. Championship Meeting had no reason to complain on the score of sport, for there were any number of exciting finishes, the climax being reached in the steeplechase, when Russell and Daly, after negotiating the water jump, both fell, and at the finish could scarcely stagger past the post. The honours were fairly divided between the countries which form Great Britain, Scotland carrying off three of the events and Ireland a couple, while between them they furnished the three dead-heaters for the High Jump, P. O'Connor—who easily retained his title in the Long—R. G. Murray, and J. B. Milne each failing to get beyond 5 ft. 9½ in. Only a couple of Frenchmen put in an appearance, but they did not go away empty-handed, Puissegur winning the Pole Jump, an event which in all probability will shortly disappear from the programme.

Perhaps the most noteworthy victory of the afternoon was that of J. W. Morton in the Hundred Yards. That the South London Harrier was a much improved sprinter everyone was aware, but few imagined he would beat Duffy until he had proved his ability to do so at Wolverhampton the week previous. Even as it was the American's friends were sanguine he would retain his title, and it was only Morton's exceptionally strong finish which gained him the award by a matter of inches, C. H. Jupp, who also came with a rush, in the last fifty yards, being only a foot behind the American. Shrubb, who now holds three championships, won both the Mile and the Four Miles, but in the former event he got a rare "tying-up," his old opponent, J. McGough, hunting him past the post with such persistency that the Horsham man fell on the track, utterly exhausted. Workman, as everyone expected, won the Half, while Jupp received consolation for his defeat in the "sprint" by carrying off the 220 Yards, in which his old opponent, L. F. Tremeer, ran remarkably well. That popular athlete, Dennis Horgan, regained his title to the championship in the Weight, but had no chance with T. R. Nicholson when throwing the Hammer, capital performances being achieved in each event.

The Queen's Own Hussars held their anniversary sports on the polo ground at Bolaram on the 21st instant. Major Agnew and the officers were "At Home" but the attendance was not large owing to the threatening weather. A lengthy programme was successfully carried through with the exception of the best Man-at-Arms competition which was not decided. The Scout competition was won by "C" Squadron, 4th Hussars, and the three prizes in the Skill-at-Arms competition, open to the Garrison, went to "A," "D," and "C" Squadrons of the 4th Hussars. The quarter-mile flat race open to the Garrison was won by Private Reardon, 1st Middlesex Regiment.

C. C. St. Clair, the champion heavy-weight pugilist, issues a challenge to Jack McAuliffe, says the Straits Times, any time or place within three months, and backs himself to knock him out in ten rounds, for any stake from $1,000 to $5,000, proper deposits to be made with a responsible party or paper. St. Clair also expresses his willingness even to box McAuliffe for gate receipts, if McAuliffe cannot get the backing.

By the English Mail this week we learn that in a match for Essex Club and Ground vs. Forest School E. H. D. Sewell scored 232; he also took nine wickets for 41 runs.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes :—A Meeting of the Bombay Gymkhana Cricket Committee was held on Monday, the 17th instant, to make the preliminary arrangements for the first of the two annual fixtures between the Presidency and the Parsees which is set down for the 23rd, 24th, and 25th August. The proceedings were purely informal, but in a discussion that took place regarding the present form of available players, the names of the following were mentioned :—Major Hon'ble T. W. Brand, Captain Hon'ble G. W. S. Cadogan, Captain H. K. Calston, and H. P. Chaplin (Mhow), Captain E. Campion and R. W. C. Laverton (Nusseerabad), J. Monteath (Dharwar), F. L. Sprott (Karachi), Captain M. D. Wood and Captain L. M. R. Deas (Quetta), Major H. E. Lowis (Baroda), Captain J. G. Greig, B. M. Carroll, A. D. Wilkins, Captain H. K. Umfreville, Colonel Stevens, J. Kennedy, H. B. Hartley, S. Langton, and A. H. C. Kearsey (Poona), J. E. C. Jukes (Ahmedabad), and A. H. S. Aston, J. L. Ainsworth, and E. E. Coombs (Bombay).

I learn on what I consider to be reliable authority that in the absence of a visit from the Kathiawar team this year an attempt will be made to get together a Guzerat team for a tour to Bombay and Poona. The idea is a capital one and could very easily be carried out during the last week in September. There are several very fair cricketers in Ahmedabad, Baroda, Broach, and Surat, and a team quite strong enough to give the Bombay Gymkhana a good game should be raised. Any way the nucleus of such a team could be found in J. E. C. Jukes, Major Clifford, F. W. Allison, Captain Lincoln, and H. R. Hume.

A Bombay golfer who has just returned from a week's holiday at Nasik is loud in praise of the new golf chambers recently built by the Royal Western India Golf Club. The chambers which are on the dâk bungalow principle remove all obstacles to repeated short visits by Bombay and other golfers to the famous Nasik links, and as a result the number of Bombay golfers who have taken a short run up to Nasik this year has been phenomenal.

The fifteenth annual Association Football Tournament, of the Bombay Rovers Football Club, which has now come to be regarded as one of the best tournaments held in India, will commence on the 9th September. Entries for the tournament close on the 5th and the ties will be drawn on the 7th September. The tournament, your readers will hardly need to be reminded, is open to all teams from India, Burma, and Ceylon. The present holders of the Cup are the Cheshire Regiment stationed in Bombay. The entries this year should be very good and it is hoped that several regiments that arrived in India last cold weather will enter teams.

I had not the space to make any remarks on the Harwood League game played last Saturday between the Cheshire, "B" team the Perseus eleven and the game deserved passing mention. The first fixture between these two clubs resulted in a win for the military combination by four goals to nil, and although the same eleven won the return game they were extended far more by their opponents than on the first occasion and were somewhat lucky to win by as much as three goals to nil. The first-half was stubbornly contested and was pointless. In the second-half, however, the military team gave evidence of better training and succeeded in scoring three goals. On Wednesday afternoon the Perseus eleven met the Telegraph Club and after a good game the naval team was able to claim a victory by three goals to one. The Telegraph Club have now lost every one of the eight games they have played.

A Rugger game on Monday afternoon between the Gymkhana and the Casuals resulted in a win for the former by a goal and three tries to nil, and proved somewhat uninteresting, the Casuals being quite out-classed. The play of A. M. Forrest, one of the Gymkhana three-quarters, was quite a feature of the game; he crossed the line twice after two fine sprints.

The usual weekly mounted sports were held on Wednesday afternoon and the entries were again large. The Maharaja of Dhar who is on a short visit to Bombay took part in the tent-pegging with swords and gave a fine display of skill which easily placed him first. The jumping competition was awarded to Mr. D. Graham, and the tilting and tent-pegging to Mr. Barraclough and Mrs. Dyson. The Postillion Race which was run off in three heats was one of the best events of the afternoon. The heat winners were Messrs. H. Symons, Ash, and D. Graham, the final being won by the latter. The Messenger Stakes was a new event. Gentlemen had to ride a certain distance and hand a letter to a lady, the latter had to work out a puzzle and hand the missive back to the gentleman, the latter then returning. Mr. Saunders with Mrs. Carnegy were the winners. The Pony and Horse Scurry Handicaps were won by Mr. Spence's Pepper ridden by Mr. McCausland with Mr. Fischer's Hira (scratch) ridden by owner second and Mr. Mathew's Blake (25 yards), and Mr. Fischer's Dart second (both ridden by owners) respectively.

The League match between the Royal Garrison Artillery (the Cupholders) and the Rovers played on Thursday afternoon ended in a pointless draw after one of the most exciting games played this season. While the Gunners are by no means the same reliable side that they were last year, defective shooting in front of goal being, perhaps, their worst fault, the Rovers have on the other hand shown distinct improvement during the past three weeks, and the successful way in which they defended their goal against the repeated attacks of the Gunners evoked the admiration of soldiers and and civilians alike. I hardly ever remember another game in which one side did so much of the attacking. From start to finish play was practically confined to the Rovers' territory, while shot after shot, particularly in the second half, was sent in for goal all of which were negotiated successfully by the Rovers' goal-keeper who played in the most cool and collected manner.

A Rugger game on Friday evening, between a mixed military and civilian team and a fifteen of the newly-formed Casuals Club resulted in a victory for the latter by two goals and two tries to two tries.

Major Hon. T. W. Brand, of the 10th Hussars, the old Etonian and Mhow cricketer left Bombay on Saturday for England on short leave and will consequently not be available to play for the Presidency.

H. Reynolds who is well-known to Madras and Calcutta cricketers, and who, in 1893, Lord Hawke's team considered to be one of the best batsmen they had met in India has been transferred to the Bombay Branch of the Commercial Bank from Northern India and will be available to assist the Gymkhana for the remainder of the season. This is a splendid piece of luck for the Gymkhana as Reynolds, who, I believe, some years ago played for Middlesex occasionally, is a very fine all-round cricketer. The Gymkhana have had a double stroke of luck this week as besides Reynolds another very promising player in the person of F. D. H. Joy who made his debut in the match against the Y.M.C.A. on Saturday, will be available for the rest of the season. Joy is an old Wykehamist and was in the Winchester XI. in 1898 and 1899.

All the cricket matches in Bombay on Saturday were played under conditions which favoured the bowlers and in only one match was a total of three figures recorded. The B.B. and C.I. Railway Club were defeated by the Parsee Gymkhana on Saturday by 41 runs, and on Thursday were badly beaten by the Cheshire Regiment.

The Cheshire "A" team met the Gymkhana in a League match on Saturday evening and had much the best of exchanges winning by five goals to one. The "A" team have established themselves warm favourites for the League Cup which, barring accidents, they should have no trouble in annexing this season.

The Charity Match organised by the I. F. A. will come off on the Calcutta Football Club ground on Saturday. Details will be found in an advertisement among our special notifications. Another advertisement which will interest our Football readers is that which refers to the Rugby Union Challenge Cup.

The P. and O. Steamer Sumatra, which arrived in Calcutta last week, brought back to "the coral strand" that popular son of Erin, Mr. W. G. Martelli, who is looking immensely benefited by his recent trip home.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, Friday, 8th July 1904.

WHEN, on opening my newspaper on Monday morning, I read in letters of the deepest dye, and nearly an inch long, the portentous announcement that it was "The Last Day," I sighed a sigh of heartfelt relief and thanksgiving. No more would my eyes be vexed with the warning that there were only four—three, two and then one—more day in which to repent, see the error of my way, and fill up that order form—not forgetting the necessary cheque—for my Times delivered free. In the (alas! long past) days of a tender and impressionable childhood I imbibed a touching reverence for the (at that remote period) all-powerful "organ," which its little weaknesses and mistakes of later years had not materially impaired. The name of Pigott had unpleasant associations, it is true, and there were one or two other little indiscretions which were best forgot, but when the Times, the Jupiter, took to advertising its wares, like unto any medicine-man, then indeed its glory had departed. One learns to be grateful for small mercies, and the managers at least refrained from heading the advertisement with "Alarming Sacrifice." "Frantic Reductions." "No genuine offers refused" in orthodox cheap-jack style. I am told that an immense number of orders for the paper on its new terms were received during the last few days the offer was open—over 2,000 are said to have been sent in on Monday, and as only a small proportion are believed to have come from old readers of the Times, its managers consider its circulation has been increased about 50 per cent.; a fact which it is to be presumed will console them for its undoubtedly reduced dignity.

By the death of Mr. G. F. Watts, R. A., which took place just after I closed my letter last week, the last of the giants of the artistic world is removed from amongst us. In an age of blatant self-advertisement, greed of notoriety, and worship of wealth, his life—one of the most dignified of any age—stands out, an object lesson. No artist of any time has been less influenced by personal ambition, or the desire of personal reward. From all such feelings he was absolutely free. In 1867 the Royal Academy did itself the honour of electing Mr. Watts, first an associate, and later a full member of their body, without requiring him to go through the form of entering his name as a candidate for election. Between the years 1870 and 1880 Mr. Watts devoted himself mainly to portrait painting, and during those ten years he produced a series of wonderful portraits, among which those of E. Burne-Jones, T. E. Millais, R. A., F. Leighton, R. A. Miss Alice Prinsep, Sir Edward Sabine, Miss Dorothy Tennant, Dr. Temple (then Bishop of Exeter), Matthew Arnold, Lieutenant Colonel Lindsay, Herr Joachim, Lady Constance Lawley, and Earl Cadogan, are a few of the names that occcur to me. In 1880 he also exhibited the portrait of himself which he had painted by invitation for the collection of portraits of artists painted by themselves in the Uffizi Gallery at Florence.

Among his portraits of a later date were those of Mr. Nassau Senior, the late Sir Andrew Clark, Lady Katherine Thynne, the Marquis of Ripon, and Alfred Gilbert. Besides these, which were exhibited at Burlington House, he contributed to the Grosvenor Gallery shows pictures of Mr. Gladstone, Mr. William Morris, Cardinal Manning, the Hon'ble Miss Baring, and the Earl of Lytton. He also painted several portraits which have never been exhibited. In the winter of 1881-82, a special exhibition of his work was held at the Grosvenor Gallery. No artist has been more generous in lending his pictures for exhibition, and he showed a special interest in the annual loan exhibition held in Whitechapel. Mr. Watts had already presented to the nation a large number of his finest works, and by the terms of his will most of the paintings in Little Holland House, at the time of his death, pass to the nation.

The ceremony of the installation of the "Constable of Dover Castle, Lord Warden, Admiral and Chancellor of the Five Ports, of the 'Antient Towns' Winchelsea and Rye, and of the Limbs: Ramsgate, Margate, Deal, Folkestone," etc., etc., is always picturesque and interesting; but a quite unusual amount of interest was evoked by the installation of Lord Curzon of Kedleston last week. In his speech at the luncheon, following the installation, Lord Curzon effectually disposed of the rumour that he is not to return to India, alluding with a maked emphasis to "the duties which I shall continue for some time longer to discharge in another part of the Empire." It is to be supposed that Lord Curzon does not consider a change of Government imminent.

The performance of Madame Sarah Bernhardt and Mrs. Patrick Campbell in Maurice Maeterlinck's poetic drama, "Pélléas et Melisande" at the Vaudeville, is in many respects a remarkable one. Madame Bernhardt's exploits in male attire do not interest me as a rule, but her Pélléas was exceedingly clever; and Mrs. Campbell, charming throughout, rose to greatnees in the parting scene by the well.

Dion Boucicault's old play "The Shaughraun" was well received by a large audience on its revival at the Coronet on Monday evening. One of the best and most popular of melodramas it deserves more respectful treatment than is meted out to it by the management of the Coronet, and the interpolation of would-be comic songs is to be regretted.

The chief theatrical event of the week has been the performance at His Majesty's, organised by the order of St. John of Jerusalem in England, for the benefit of the Ophthalmic Hospital in Jerusalem. The King and Queen, and many other Royalties were present, the house was crowded, prices ruled high—the pit was a guinea—so a substantial addition to the funds of the Hospital should result. The programme was a lengthy and varied one, concluding with a series of tableaux vivants representing the history of the order of St. John of Jerusalem from A. D. 1000 to A. D. 1557 arranged by Mr. J. J. Shannon, A. R. A., Mr. F. Dicksee, R. A., and other well-known artists in which many men and women of the "smart" world appeared. The run of "Mice and Men" at the Duke of York's ends tomorrow. At the St. James's "Saturday to Monday" has held on as Mr. Alexander could hardly have expected after the very tepid approval with which it was received when he produced it, and it will keeps its place in the bills until the close of Mr. Alexander's summer season next Friday. I hear that the Court Theatre is to be re-decorated, and its stage accommodation increased, and that Mr. J. H. Leigh intends to let it for a short season, and also for occasional performances of amateurs, dramatic clubs, etc. A well-equipped theatre in a fairly central position is much needed for occasional performances.

Last night Mr. Tree brought his season to a close, with "a review of the season" to quote his own words. He gave the fourth act of "The Darling of the Gods"—that most depressing of plays—the Westminster Hall scene from King Richard II., the second of the three acts into which he has divided "Twelfth Night"; and "The Man Who Was." At the conclusion Mr. Tree made a speech in which he announced that his pupils will give a public performance in the autumn, and that he will re-open with "The Tempest," in which Ariel well be played by Miss Viola Tree. Mr. Tree also expressed his confidence in Shakespeare as a paying investment, and his determination to resist the threatened conversion of the theatre into a Music-hall.

At the Imperial last night a new curtain-raiser preceded "Miss Elizabeth's Prisoner." The plot of the new piece "The Password" runs on time-honoured and familiar lines. Most of us have made the acquaintance both in fiction and on the stage, with the beautiful and fascinating Russian spy, the Conspirator on whom she is expected to spy, but with whom she is in love; and the villain, in whose power she is, more or less—generally more. All these old friends we meet again at the Imperial. Mr. Sugden makes a properly villainous villain, and Mrs. Charles Sugden was excellent as the beautiful Russian spy. The piece which is of the slightest, was fairly well received.

For this relief, much thanks, Mr. Balfour. The clear and emphatic statement made by the Prime Minister as to the intentions of the Government with regard to the dissolution, so ardently longed for by the Radicals, was much needed and will undoubtedly do good. We have been told so often by the opposition that this worst of all possible Government could not possibly stave off a dissolution much longer, that even those who are little given to placing faith in Radical statements began to think vaguely that there must be something in it. It is satisfactory to note that Mr. Balfour rates at their true value the result of the recent bye-elections which have been fought almost altogether on the Chinese Labour Question, and at which the stock Radical mis-statements—to put it mildly—have been more than usually numerous.

A strong feeling of indignation has been aroused among Unionists generally by the destruction of the Alien's Bill, and the triumph of Radical obstruction. During the seven days on which the committee sat three lines of one clause were passed, and two hundred and twelve amendments remained on the paper. The Attorney-General computed that at that rate the Bill would take five hundred and sixteen days in committee. After the opposition members of the committee had gone through the farce of lamenting the withdrawal of the Bill the committee agreed to report to the House that "having regard to the number of Amendments still to be proposed, and the late period of the session, it was impossible to conclude the proceedings on the Bill." A strongly worded resolution is being signed by metropolitan Unionist members, impressing upon the Government the importance of introducing the Bill again early next session. It is to be hoped that the working class electors will not forget the part the opposition has played.

Henley Regatta opened on Tuesday in the dullest of dull weather, and with an attendance which is laid by many who have attended for more years than they care to count, to be the smallest they remember. The knowledge that the race for the Grand Challenge Cup was practically a walk-over for the Leander Club, and the absence of foreign competition resulted in a natural lack of interest in the proceedings, and the only show of real enthusiasm during the afternoon was evoked by the performance of the Eton eight in the race for the Ladies' Challenge Plate. The Etonians rowing beautifully together simply walked away from New College the Oxford head boat. The result was a foregone conclusion from the start, and the "boys" won easily by two and a half lengths, in 7mins. 35secs. the fastest time of the day. Eton's victory was as popular as ever, and it is a long time since it sent as good a crew to Henley. Some little interest was created by the newly formed Granta Club of Cambridge, composed of men who have yet to gain the "blue," but although at one time they looked like winning they failed to hold Caius in the fourth heat of the Thames Challenge Cup. In the third heat First Trinity Cambridge was most admirably steered to victory by the Crown Prince of Siam. On Wednesday matters improved all round—both weather and racing being of a superior quality, which naturally led to a larger attendance. By far the most exciting incident of the day was the eighth heat for the Diamonds in which Scholes, of the Toronto Rowing Club, finished alone; Kelly, the Amateur Champion Sculler, being so exhausted that he was unable to finish, and had to be helped into the Thames Conservancy launch. In the Ladies' Plate the Eton boys gained another popular victory. On the whole the Regatta of 1904 seem to be considered an uninteresting one, and though the crowd on the tow path was as thick as usual, there was a falling off in the number of boats.

The result of the Chertsey election is satisfactory in more ways than one. Not only have the Unionists kept the seat, but it is a distinct gain to the morals of electioneering, and shows that the discreditable methods employed at Chertsey do not win the votes of the working men in an average constitueney. The Westminster Gazette, in a note in its last evening's issue, disavows Mr. Allen Upward and all his works. Radical candidates in future will be somewhat shy of invoking the aid of the poet of the Eighty Club.

Various items: Sir H. M. Stanley proved to be a richer man than was generally imagined. He left estate of the value of £145,000, the bulk of which goes to his widow and his adopted son; and among minor bequests is one of £500, to Mr. Arthur Jephson, one of his companions on the Emin Relief Expedition.

The attentions lavished on the American yacht owners at Kiel, by the German Emperor and Prince Henry, were the subject of general remark. Now we hear that His Imperial Majesty is so much annoyed at the manner in which the American yachts were sailed, that he absented himself from the prize distribution, and took no part in Sunday's racing. The announcement that the cab strike is ended is not of overwhelming public interest, as, but for the newspapers most of us would have remained serenely unconscious of the existence of said strike. That the number of cabs is greatly in excess of those required was amply proven by the fact that although the Derby week was astutely chosen for the experiment, practically no inconvenience resulted. By the new agreement between cab owners and drivers the men get a reduction of 1s. a day on the average price for hansom cabs under the Asquith award. Lord Strathcona has forwarded to the Lord Mayor, by request of the Canadian Minister of Finance, the £30,000 voted by the Dominion Parliament as its contribution to the Queen Victoria Memorial Fund. The record of Beaumont College, with regard to the South African war, is a remarkable one. At the unveiling, by Sir Evelyn Wood, of a memorial to five old Beaumont boys—officers, the Secretary of the Memorial Fund said, that with only 180 scholars the College was represented in South Africa by 115 officers and men. This is surely a much larger proportion than any other school can claim. Truly the patience of the British ratepayer is wonderful—and much to be lamented—when exercised upon that amazing product of the nineteenth century, our London County Council. Most of us have to pay, and dearly too, for our fads and fancies—not so the L. C. C. It pays out of the pocket of the confiding British ratepayer. The Report of the L. C. C. Tramways Committee presented on Tuesday shows a deficiency of over £8,000 on its operations during the year ended March 31st last.

The announcement "Projected invasion of England" effectually diverted my attention from breakfast, when it caught my eye on looking through my morning paper the other day, but my wonted calm returned when I found the invader is none other than the Prophet Dowie who fled so ignominiously from our shores quite lately. He, and his "Restoration Host," it is said, have decided to visit England in a fleet of gospel ships. It is significantly added that no date has as yet been fixed for the "invasion of England." The Prophet I doubt not, tempers discretion with his valour.

The construction of a motor torpedo boat has been decided upon by the powers that be at the Admiralty. She will be 130 feet long, with a tube on her deck that can be trained all round. The motors will be under a protective deck, below the water line.

Dr. Alexander Barton, the well-known inventor, has been severely injured at the Alexandra Palace, by an explosion which occurred during the filling of the retort which supplies the gas for his airship.

From the evidence given at the inquest on Sir William Rattigan, M. P., it appears that his motor car was in an unfit condition for use, and that a firm of repairers had given his driver a warning to that effect—which warning was not reported to Sir William.

THE SPORTSMAN'S BOOK FOR INDIA.

THE Sportsman newly arrived in India may, if he is posted to a place where books are at his disposal, find ready to hand scores and scores of volumes by writers of repute whose theme has been Indian Sport in all its branches; quite a respectable sporting library in fact. He may be able to consult the best authorities on the particular sports that most appeal to his taste, and he may thus obtain much valuable information. But it has been left for Mr. F. G. Aflalo to place in the hands of Indian sportsmen a single volume, which deals with every sport and game carried on throughout this huge peninsular and contains what is practically the essence of the writings of those who have made their mark in the literature of Indian field sports, and many of them by the way we are proud to reckon among the contributors to this journal. He has gathered round him writers whose claim to be considered authorities are universally allowed, and their writings in this instance not only teem with the very information which sportsmen require, and give in a concise and succinct manner the result of the experience of many years, but in the book itself a just proportion has been preserved in respect of the importance of the various sections thereof, which reflects the highest credit on the editor and those who have colaborated with him in the production of this most excellent book. Further than this a special word of praise has been earned by the publishers; the style and arrangement of the matter, the reproduction of the illustrations and the excellent coloured map are features which contribute largely to the volume which we consider in every way a valuable addition to our library.

Part I. deals with Shooting, and looking down the contents list one is reminded of that delightful old book by Major-General William Rice in that we have tiger and quail at top and bottom. Lieutenant-General Sir Montague Gilbert Gerard tells the tyro all he need know about the methods of circumventing our carnivora and how he should go about such matters as supplies, camp equipment and transport, while the few pages he devotes to rifles and ammunition, we specially commend to the careful attention of all young shikaris. Our Indian pachyderms are dealt with by General A. A. A. Kinloch whose Large Game Shooting in, Tibet, the Hymalayas and Northern India, is a sporting classic and it is superfluous to add that what he says concerning the rhinoceros and the gaur commands our respectful attention. To our mind the chapters on Himalayan and Kashmir Shooting, contributed by Captain A. G. Arbuthnot (R. F. A.), are most thorough and of the greatest utility. The big game is exhaustively dealt with, the surroundings and incidents of shikar in these regions most pleasantly described the various routes carefully followed out, and the game laws the small vocabulary, the extracts from diaries and other details connected with hill shooting, which are incorporated therein we have perused with the greatest interest. Nor must we forget to mention the photographs which, first class in themselves, will be found helpful to the text. The deer and antelope of the Indian plains and our small game have been taken in hand by Lieutenant-Colonel P. R. Bairnsfather. We think this section is rather weak: it is too sketchy, there is not nearly enough of it, a remark which applies more especially to the game birds. The giving of but one vernacular name for each species is of little assistance, seeing that not only in each presidency but in many districts such birds have different names.

Part II. is devoted to fishing and a most excellent part it is, Here Col. Bairnsfather has let himself go and the result is a really masterly dissertation on this important sport. The chapter on the mahseer is all good reading, but that on "Where to go for fishing in India" will be read and re-read by all Indian fisherman with particular pleasure and profit. Here we have set before us much that for some unaccountable reason has hitherto not been set down in print, and the special charm about it is the obvious fact that the work is not only that of a practical fisherman, but of an amiable enthusiast. Further value is lent to this section by the republished communications from correspondents from various parts of the country. The chapter on sea fishing by our old brother officer F. O. Gadsden (late R. I. M. may his shadow never grow less!) is all too brief, but what there is of it is practical and reliable and represents the experience of an angler who has dropped a hook in every water lying between the Persian Gulf and the Irrawaddy. Pigsticking, Polo and Hunting have been entrusted to the able pen of Major Neville-Taylor and insterspersed with the letterpress we have some really good photographs of types of hunters and chasers. Our friend Harry Stokes, whose steady progress up the ladder of current sporting literature, many friends in Calcutta are watching with kindly interest, has had a good deal to do with the production of this book. His notes on Racing, Steeplechasing and Paperchasing, are of the Multum in parvo sort and very useful withal, while the information he gives on no less than fifteen minor sports and games shows that he has a pronounced faculty for condensation. His chapter on Gymkhanas will be found useful to all who bear a hand in the running of such sporting gatherings. Rowing and boating have been dealt with by the editor of this paper, and a brief chapter on Cheetah Hunting by Major C. H. Clay winds up a book which may help us to profitably employ a spare hour, the while it will always occupy a prominent place among our books of reference.

A MORNING WITH A CHEETAH.

ONE DAY, when lunching with the British Resident at Baroda, I chanced to say that I should like to see one of the cheetah hunts for which Baroda is celebrated. The Resident most courteously said he would arrange for one the next day. Accordingly, about 5 A.M. the following morning two mounted orderlies appeared with a superb Arab horse from H. H. the Gaekwar's stable for me to ride After a cup of tea and some toast, we started for the scene of action, some six or seven miles out of the town. We soon came up to the hunters, and our steeds being exchanged for bullock carts, a procession was formed. First came a cart with a platform, on which squatted the head "shikarry" or huntsman, holding by a chain a beautiful cheetah, a sort of leopard. This animal was hooded and his eyes bandaged and the object of the hunt was to see him course and slay a black buck. Then I came, sitting in a similar cart with a shikarry, and two or three carts with native swells brought up the rear. After going about a mile over a broad open plain, a large herd of black buck were seen. The procession at once stopped, and only the cart with the cheetah moved on. I got on the platform not without some misgivings at being in such close proximity to the cheetah, but the keeper explained that it was quite tame and would not notice me. However, I kept as far away from him as possible. Now the driver began to stalk the herd of deer by driving round and round them in wide circles, gradually getting near, until when we were within some eighty yards of a fine black buck, which he had skilfully separated from the herd by his manœuvres with the cart. We then stopped, and the shikarry pulled the hood off the cheetah's face and slipped him. The moment the cheetah saw the buck he sprang off the cart, on the side away from the deer, and commenced stalking him.

It was a pretty and interesting sight to see the great cat-like creature crawling along on his belly and taking advantage of every bush or piece of jungle to hide behind and peep at his unsuspecting victim. When within about forty yards of him, the buck suddenly scented danger, and, throwing up his head, dashed off at a great pace. The cheetah at once dashed off in pursuit, covering the ground with immense bounds, and fast as the buck went the cheetah went faster, and in less than a couple of hundred yards had caught him up, and with one terrific spring gave him a smack on the hind quarters which brought him to the ground. The cheetah and buck rolled over in a struggling mass. We at once jumped off the cart, from which we had had a splendid view of the chase, and ran up to the struggling animals. By this time the cheetah had got the buck down, and was holding him by the neck. He snarled at us as we approached, and I kept a respectful distance, but the shikarry at once went up and cut the buck's throat. He then filled a wooden bowl with the blood and held it towards the cheetah, who at once let go the buck and plunged his head in the bowl, and greedily lapped up the blood. When he had had a drink the keeper had no difficulty in securing and hooding him again, and after a short rest we again went forth, this time with a fresh cheetah, as they had brought two out with them. A mile or so brought us up to another herd, and the same scene was enacted. Then came the turn of the first cheetah, as we decided to have another hunt; and now ensued a comical episode, at which I can laugh now, but at the time I thought it anything but a joke.

As we approached the herd, the keeper accidently unhooded the cheetah, but since we were too far off he tried to hood him again. The animal, however, had seen the buck, and got frantically excited, and his tail, waving rapidly from side to side kept hitting me like a whip, for remember I was on a small, narrow platform with him. "Let him go," I called out, but the keeper said, "koochparuani, Shaib." Meanwhile the cheetah was waltzing round and round the platform, trying to get away from the man. I crouched down and made myself as small as possible, but the great brute got his fore paws on my shoulder and stood up, gazing at the deer, which had begun to move off. I felt his hot breath on my cheek, and this was too much for me. "D—n you, let him go!" I roared, and so they had to, and giving me a parting flick in the face with his tail, the brute jumped off the cart.

And now ensued a splendid run, for the deer were alarmed at the noise, and were off like a shot. The shikarry wrung his hands in dismay, and said: "They have got too long a start and he will never catch them and then he will sulk, and I shall be unable to catch him for a long time." However, the cheetah stuck to his work, and in about 800 or 900 yards caught up and knocked the buck over. We had had enough excitement for that day, so one of the bucks was cut up and a big piece given to each cheetah, who greedily devoured it, growling and snarling when any one went near him. It was now getting hot, so we rested under a tree, and chatted over the events of the day. The head shikarry told me that when the Prince of Wales was at Baroda he conducted him to a cheetah hunt. "All had good sport," said he, "but nothing like that last run," and he added, the Prince gave him two hundred rupees; not being a Prince, I gave him twenty and twenty for the beaters, with which they all seemed pleased. Thus ended my day's sport with the Baroda cheetahs. It was a thing to see once in a lifetime, and was very interesting, but I should never care to see a cheetah hunt again. A good gallop on a clever Arab over rough ground after a gallant boar is worth all the cheetah hunts in India.

BAWARCHI.

AN AMERICAN TURKEY HUNT.

WE had been told by the farmer with whom we were stopping that we should keep a sharp lookout for turkeys when we happened, in our search for squirrels, to pass along certain paths which wound their way between the forest and the fields. A little vigilance was observed at first; then we became remiss, and although we often saw in the dusty trails the footprints of turkeys, our success in finding squirrels perhaps cloyed the desire for nobler game, and it might have been partly due to our desire to linger at the breakfast table in the early morning; or to sit at the same board when the lamps were lighted in the twilight of evening. The attractions were strong indeed. It would have been difficult to find a place where the inner man was provided for in such perfect manner, but it was our host's inflexible rule to break his fast and dine at those hours when the noble turkey was either leaving or seeking his perch in the lower branches of the forest trees.

So it happened that while riding along one of the trails one evening we heard a mighty clatter ahead, and got fleeting glimpses of wings and tail feathers as the big birds half ran, half flew to the rugged hills above. The undergrowth quickly swallowed them, and we rode on, knowing it was useless to follow over the hills, where the dry leaves were strewn so thickly.

Our routine was at once changed, and next day, before it was fairly light, we crept around the edges of a little group of low trees standing alone in a field which had been abandoned because it was often overflowed when the river was high. Beneath the trees was a tangle of briars and alders and sandburrs and weeds, and there it was we found the brown rabbits in winter; and there, also, the turkeys were said to be seen. At night the trees furnished a roosting place, from where the big birds could see any enemies that might seek to disturb their slumbers; in the day it was a close cover for them, and a little brook that flowed under the tangle of vines and weeds furnished them with water when they were going to or returning from the wheat fields in search of grain and grasshoppers.

We made little noise in our progress through this place, and often sat down to watch and listen. Scanning the trees resulted in seeing nothing, and it seemed we were misinformed as to the place, but on working through the grass a little further we heard sounds which caused us to rejoice. There was no mistaking the nature of the noise; it was repeated for some time, too, and then all was quiet.

Then began in earnest a still hunt, and it was only after we had crawled through the wet grass for some time that we saw heads now and then as the birds snapped up the grasshoppers. My friend was behind me, and we wanted to get into a position where we could deliberately select each a turkey and shoot at the same time.

At last we reached some low oak bushes, and from them we could see some distance beyond in the direction in which our game was moving, and after waiting with rifles ready for an age, as it seemed, a young gobbler hove in sight, chasing a gandy butterfly which soared just beyond his reach. Then two hens emerged from the tangles of tall grass and weeds, and we only waited to see the patriarchal old gobbler that followed. I whispered to my companion to take that gobbler—and we fired almost together.

The gobbler went down, but the hen at which I shot made a wild break for the forest. I took a snap shot at her as she scooted along, running, but trying to utilize her broken wing in flight.

The others scattered, and my companion wisely made sure of his gobbler before trying other shots. It was only after running at a killing pace across the open that I had a fair shot presented me. The hen had almost reached a high rail fence, and evidently she doubted her strength to cross it. It was nearly a straightaway shot, and holding high I fired, only to see the bird fall, get up, and, with a burst of speed, all but cross the fence. It was her expiring effort, and I found her dead.

Under a shady tree near the fence we sat and examined our prizes—for the sun was then warm—and discussed the few but exciting minutes just passed. Thoughts of breakfast sent us along, however, and after going up into the woods to a spring to slake our thirst, we walked briskly homeward without stopping to trouble several squirrels we saw on the way.

It was a cheery welcome that greeted us as we trudged up to the farmhouse with our burdens, and there was feasting at noon when our hostess served turkey and other good things to eat.

MOREAU.

SPORT SEVENTY YEARS AGO.

OUR readers may be interested to read the following shikar yarns which we cull from The Oriental Sporting Magazine of May 1833.

THE BEAR AND THE ALLIGATOR.

On a scorching day in the middle of June, 1830, whilst I was seated under a venerable live oak, on the evergreen banks of the Teche, waiting for the fish to bite, I was startled by the roaring of some animal in the cane brake, a short distance below me, apparently getting ready for action. These notes of preparation were quickly succeeded by the sound of feet trampling down the cane, and scattering the shells. As soon as I recovered from my surprise, I resolved to take a view of what I supposed to be two prairie bulls mixing impetuously in battle, an occurrence so common in this country and season, when, as Thompson says,

"———through all his lusty veins
The bull, deep scorched, the raging passion feels."

When I reached the scene of action, how great was my astonishment instead of bulls to behold a large black bear reared upon his hind legs, with his fore paws raised aloft, as if to make a plunge. His face was besmeared with white foam, sprinkled with red, which, dropping from his mouth, rolled down his shaggy breast. Frantic from the smarting of his wounds, he stood gnashing his teeth and growling at his enemy. A few paces in his rear was the cane brake, from which he had issued. On a bank of snow-white shells, spotted with blood, in battle array, stood Bruin's foe, in shape an alligator, fifteen feet long. He looked as if he had just been dipped in the Teche, and had emerged like Achilles from the Styx, with an invulnerable coat of mail. He was standing on tiptoe, his back curved upwards, and his tongueless mouth thrown open displayed in his wide jaws two large tusks and rows of teeth. His tail, six feet long, raised from the ground, was constantly waving, like a boxer's arm, to gather force.

The combatants were a few paces apart when I stole upon them, the "first round" being over. They remained in the attitudes described about a minute, swelling themselves as large as possible, but marking the slightest motions with attention and caution, as if each felt confident he had met his match. During this pause I was concealed behind a tree, watching their manœuvres in silence. I could scarcely believe my eyesight. What, thought I, can these two beasts have to fight about? Some readers may doubt the tale on this account, but if it had been a bull fight, no one would have doubted it, because everyone knows what they are fighting for.

The same reasoning will not always apply to a man fight. Men frequently fight when they are sober, for no purpose, except to ascertain which is the better man. We must then believe that beasts will do the same, unless we admit that the instinct of beasts is superior to the boasted reason of man. Whether they did fight upon the present occasion with cause I cannot say, as I was not present when the fray began. A bear and a ram have been known to fight, and so did the bear and alligator, whilst I prudently kept in the background, preserving the strictest neutrality betwixt the belligerents. And now, if the reader is satisfied that such a battle as this might have taken place, in the absence of any known cause, I will go on to tell what I saw of it as a witness.

Bruin, though evidently baffled, had a firm look, which showed he had not lost confidence in himself. If the difficulty of the undertaking had once deceived him, he was prepared to go it again. Accordingly letting himself down upon all fours, he ran furiously at the alligator. The alligator was ready for him, and thowing his head and body partly round to avoid the onset, met Bruin half-way, with a blow of his tail, which rolled him on the shells. Old Bruin was not to be put off by one hit; three times in rapid succession he rushed on the alligator and was as often repulsed in the same manner, being knocked back by each blow just far enough to give the alligator time to recover the swing of his tail before he returned. The tail of the alligator sounded like a flail against the coat of hair on Bruin's head and shoulders, but he bore it without flinching, still pushing on to come close to his scaly foe. He made his fourth charge with a degree of dexterity, which those who have never seen this clumsy animal exercising would suppose him incapable of. This time he got so close to the alligator before his tail struck him, that the blow came with half its usual effect. The alligator was upset by the charge, and before he could recover his feet Bruin grasped him round the body below the fore legs, and holding him down on his back, seized one of his legs in his mouth. The alligator was now in a desperate situation, notwithstanding his coat of mail, which is softer on his belly than back, from which,

"The darted steel with idle shiver flies."

As a Kentuck would say, 'he was getting up fast." Here, if I dared to speak, and had supposed he could understand English, I should have uttered the encouraging exhortation of the poet—

"Now, gallant knight, now hold thy own,
"No maiden's arms are round thee thrown."

The alligator attempted in vain to bite; pressed down as he was, he could not open his mouth, the upper jaw of which only moved, and his neck was so stiff he could not turn his head short round. The amphibious beast screamed in despair; but being a warrior "by flood and by field," he was not yet entirely overcome. Wreathing his tail in agony, he happened to strike it against a small tree that stood next the bayou; aided by the purchase, he made a convulsive flounder, which precipitated himself and Bruin, locked together, into the river.

The bank from which they fell was four feet high and the water below seven feet deep. The tranquil stream received the combatants with a loud splash, then closed over them in silence. A volley of ascending bubbles announced their arrival at the bottom, where the battle ended. Presently Bruin rose again, scrambled up the bank, cast a hasty glance back to the river, and made off dripping to the cane brake. I never saw the alligator afterwards to know him; no doubt he escaped in the water, which he certainly would not have done if he had remained a few minutes longer on land. Bruin was forced by nature to let go his grip under water to save his own life. I therefore think he is entitled to the credit of the victory; besides, by implied consent, the parties were bound to finish the fight on land, where it began, and so Bruin understood it.

LION HUNTING IN GUZERAT.

"May 11th.—At Wansa, Mega came in and said there were two lions and some cubs in a small patch of grass, about two miles from the tents. We went out on the Nawab's elephant, and had hardly entered the patch, when H. descried a lioness under a bush. He fired, and the first ball hit her, while the second, as she was slowly walking off knocked her down; she laid lashing her tail for some time, but at length got up and walked into the bushes. Immediately on this I perceived a lion about twenty yards in front, walking quietly through the bushes, and when we went on we found him sitting under a grass clump. We fired, and he fell, but afterwards got slowly away round some bushes. I kept my eye on him, and saw a few paces in front of him another lion walking quietly on. We found the lion again, and fired, when he rushed violently across the elephant's path, bleeding at the mouth and distressed; I fired a second time and broke his hind leg, which rolled him over into some grass, from which he afterwards crawled into a bush. After a short time we again found him, lying well exposed; we fired and he came at the elephant in front, though he was so terribly wounded. At the same instant I saw from the howdah a lioness coming on from behind, at full speed, and roaring furiously. H. knocked over the lion, and he retired; but the lioness came on with such rapidity, that I had not time to fire at her, and she sprang upon the elephant's hind quarters It was all the work of a moment, I brought my gun up at her when I first saw her, but could not lower the muzzle quick enough, as she came on like lightning. This, I believe, is a singular instance of an elephant being charged by two at once. The elephant ran on towards the lion and passed him, as we thought, in a dying state. We again found the lioness, and she sat down close to us and crouched; when we fired, she came on, and the elephant ran off I reserved both my barrels, and gave her the second when she was springing up, which hit her through the head and sent her under the elephant's hind legs; he then ran straight home. E returned in the evening, and found the lion dying; one or two shots finished him The lioness went into the thicket, and as it was getting dark we came home. Next morning I went on the elephant with Sooltan, and saw her lying under the same green bush where she and the lion had both been the day before. She was in the act of springing when I fired, and fortunately, striking her in the forehead, killed her."

"I told you in my last of our killing the lion and lioness at Wansa, and of the elephant running off more than five miles to the tents. On the 14th, K. came out to us, and when I arrived at the tents, E. asked me what I had seen. I told him six bustard but that my hand shook so from my not having slept all night, that I could not hit them, so I left them and in riding put up a sounder of about thirty hog, and rode and killed the largest, which was a sow. I then asked what he had seen. He said, in coming home he saw a large looking deer in a field, on his way to the Banass, and going up to take a shot, discovered that it was a lioness staring at him. We got Mega, and went out, but did not find her. We borrowed one elephant from the Nawab and took the other out, but he always turned when we pushed him into the thicket Mega then followed up the foot steps, and came in yesterday morning, informing us that she was very small, but that there was a lion about four miles from the tents lying near a bullock that he had killed the night before—a garee bullock, worth a hundred rupees—what a scoundrel! H. and K. would not go, as they could not trust the elephant, so E. mounted the new elephant, and I our old friend. We soon found the dead bullock, and immediately afterwards the lion, and I got a shot as he was going through the bastard cypress in the bed of the river (like Kandeish), but I don't think that tickled him up. He turned round and looked at us for a second or two; and though he was full of dinner, went off very fast into a thick place. My beast of an elephant kept turning round every now and then and trying to run home, but we always got him back. At last we put the lion up, and walked him twice up and down a strip of cypress, without being able to get a clear enough and near enough sight for a shot. E. fired at him, and he turned short round, passing him within ten yards, at the outside of the bushes, when he fired a ball into his side which made him give a tremendous roar, and sent me and my friend out of the place in double quick time. On going up, he was found lying on his belly, with his head on his fore paws, as in the act of springing, and stone dead. He was a most magnificent fellow, measured 11 feet three inches, and his mane was very shaggy and of a reddish brown.

COLLECTOR.

It takes a lot to disconcert some of the advertising tipsters, and in this connection an American paper mentions that on one occasion Dan Smith, a well-known New York "turf adviser," complained that people were pirating his "tips" and so, in order to dodge the offenders, sent out a bogus tip covering the first race with the horse he thought least likely to win, his genuine wire being issued later with a notice to the effect that the earlier one was a catch wire. The unlikely horse was Turnpike, 40 to 1, and it won by a street. Next day Dan claimed it as his "special good thing" in his advertising.

Shooting.

THE SPORTING "FLIRT."

A LITTLE while ago, I was sitting smoking with a rural medical friend in his surgery, says a writer in the Shooting Times, when the conversation drifted round to the subject of modern improvements in sporting weapons, and the doctor unburdened himself thus:—

"I'll tell you what it is. 'Modern improvements' have spoilt many a fellow who'd have made a rattling good sportsman without them. Of course, I don't say that in a general way, we haven't progressed in the right direction—don't advocate, say, a return to single-barrelled muzzle-loaders or, going still further back, to the original instinctive method of attempting to pot your game by heaving half a brick at it—but more than half the so-called 'modern improvements' are mere fancy fads that have made many a man into a restless flirt—never happy unless he's coquetting with this latest invention or t'other original discovery, instead of quietly forming a steady attachment to the tools that have proved decently useful to him. There's a growing tendency among the rising generation of sportsman to attach too much importance to the weapon and too little to the man who handles it. But it isn't the angler with the five-guinea split-cane rod, with improved lockfast joints and fitted with fancy patents from butt to point, who always brings in the biggest basket of trout; and I know farmers with old hammer-guns that belonged to their fathers who could wipe the eyes of half the owners of the latest single-trigger, hammerless ejectors in the kingdom Let the new-fangled sportsman—the sporting flirt, I call him—make five clean misses in succession and he's off to the gunsmith to improve his gun; but let the old-fashioned sportsman do the same thing, and he's off home to improve his shooting with a little quiet practice. It's a sort of new brain disease, this craze for the latest novelty, and the germs of it are largely spread and fed by the advertisements in the sporting Press. There was young Saplash, who used to rent the fishing and shooting here. He had it bad. He was about the worst case I ever came across. Gosh! if that man had made a clean right and left with an ordinary hammerless gun he'd have been fit to cry with vexation, because he was certain if he'd only had one of the latest Bunkum's patent six-shell repeating 12-bores he'd seen advertised in the Puff and Powder that morning he'd have been able to bring down his three birds just as comfortably. If he saw a new improved collapsible knuckle-jointed landing-net announced—one of those things, you know, that are specially adapted to double up and lose you your best fish of the day just as you are lifting it out of the water, and then spring out straight and hit you in the eye when you cuss it—he'd have it. If there was a new game-carrier came out, he'd have it; and if he'd as much as heard of a patent double complex spring gaff, his life would have been a perfect misery until he'd got one of the infernal machines, and was accidentally jabbing the point of it into the calves of everybody's legs he came across while showing them the tremendous advantages of the new arrangement. I've seen that man, when the rise was fairly on, and he might have been basketing his score of trout comfortably, wasting the golden opportunity in wrestling with a patent automatic reel that jerked in the line like a spring tape measure just as the fly was coming over the snout of a feeding fish, and shot it out like a coastguard rocket-line whenever he attempted to give the butt—seen him wrestling with the patent cussedness till the sweat ran off his face in double handfuls, and all the time he had a good serviceable ordinary check reel in his pocket that would have been equal to the occasion every time. And it was only last spring that I had him under my hands—and had a pretty tough job of it, too, to pull him through—with a bad bout of compound pneumonia, got through idiotically fooling [illegible] out when he hadn't the least occasion in a suit of new-fangled sportsman's waterproofs that had evident by been constructed on the entirely novel and original principle of rigidly excluding all air, while they let in all the water. A man of that sort is amusing at first, but his chronic yearning for the latest novelty gets to be a bore to his friends, and I got pretty sick of Saplash's everlasting practical encouragement of the inventive cranks. But I scored off him at the finish, and I believe I did him some good at the same time. You see, like most forms of mental affliction, young Saplash's mania usually broke out strongest in a certain direction, and that was in the direction of new powders. As soon as a new powder was on the market he simply went mad on it till another novelty was announced, and I positively believe that it gave him more feverish joy to be missing game with the latest explosive than it would have done to be hitting hard and clean with the farmer's friend—the old black powder. Of course, he'd run up the whole gamut of 'Amberite,' and 'Ballistite,' and 'Thunderite,' and 'Bellamite,' and goodness only knows what fancy brands besides; and whenever he'd temporarily exhausted the list he'd be mooning about, as miserable as Alexander yearning for new worlds to conquer, waiting for the next 'ite' to be invented, so that he could give it a trial. It was during one of these intervals, when there actually hadn't been a new patent sporting explosive put on the market for more than a fortnight, that he dropped in to see and worry me about things generally. Soon he jerked the conversation round to powders, and asked me:

"'Say, from your own experience, doctor, which powder do you think gives the best all-round results in actual practice?'

So I gave it a name off-hand.

"'Great Cæsar!' he gasped; 'I never heard of that powder before.'

"'What! you haven't!' I exclaimed; in surprise. 'Why I thought everybody knew of it! I've used it for years, and hope to use it for years to come. It's absolutely reliable.'

"I tell you, it was something pathetic to witness his mortification at the discovery that there had been one the market for years a powder he'd never even heard of

"'—I—I must get some at once, and give it a trial. I'll write up to town for some to-day,' he stammered, feverishly.

"'No need to do that. I've a good stock in, and I'll send you a pound or so up this afternoon,' I suggested, and he grasped my hand in fervent thankfulness at the thought that he could try the powder at once, and save the tormenting agony of waiting until he could procure a supply from town.

"So I sent him up a parcel of the powder, and I understand he spent the evening in loading cartridges with it. The next morning he was out betimes boiling with enthusiasm to blaze away his new fancy at the first mark that turned up, from a partridge to a ploughboy. By-and-bye a rabbit scudded across the ride. Up went the gun like a flash. First barrel missed fire; second barrel missed fire; and Bunny went home in the ordinary way to his friends and relations. Of course, Saplash was astonished. He slapped in a couple of fresh cartridges, and took aim at a rook that came flapping overhead, when both barrels missed fire as before, and the rook went sailing away, cawing derisively. Then Saplash got thoroughly mad, started snapping cartridges that wouldn't go off as fast as he could jerk them into the breech, and finally burst into my room like a volcano in an active state just as I was sitting down to breakfast. Name of a pipe! I reckon if his cartridges had been half as explosive as his temper he'd have had no particular trouble about 'em not going off.

"'Here, I say! Hang it all, that confounded powder you sent me, doctor—it's rotten—useless—isn't worth a rap!' he spluttered.

"'That's most extraordinary. I've always found it most reliable, and it's got a world-wide reputation,' I said.

"'Well, it's no good, anyhow. I loaded the whole blamed lot you sent into cartridges, and not a single one of 'em would go off. I've unloaded half a dozen, and in every case the caps exploded, and the powder's failed to ignite It's the rottenest sporting powder.

"'Sporting powder? Good gracious, man, you never said anything about sporting powder when you were here yesterday!' I put in mildly. 'You merely asked me which I considered from personal experience the best powder in actual practice, and I told you "Gregory's Powder," which, as I hinted, I've used for years in my practice; only, somehow, you seem to have fallen into the trifling error of attempting to administer the dose with a cartridge instead of with a spoon, in the usual way.'

"'Dose? Spoon? Then—then it's medicine!' he roared. 'And—and I'm fairly physicked this time!' he yelled, as he stuck his tail between his legs and bolted.

"I rather fancy that dose of Gregory's Powder did young Saplash a lot of good."

TOMMY BROOME.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—I shall be happy to know through your columns the career of Tommy Broome, the little English Jockey, who left W. Robinson's stable at Foxhill about three half years ago for Belgium when he had a retainer for three years, the little fellow being a personal friend of mine I am anxious to hear of his welfare. Hoping you will be able to give me some information.

COUNTRY-BREDS AND THE VICEROY'S CUP.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Will you be good enough to clear up the following points for me:—

Can country-bred horses run in the Viceroy's Cup,—what weight allowance do they get, if any? There has been an argument about this here, someone saying, a country bred would carry about 7 stone. Is this correct?

J. B.

Country-breds or any other class can run in the Viceroy's Cup which is W. F. A. and class for all horses. The scale for 1¼ mile in December is 3 yrs	4 yrs	5 yrs	6 and aged.

C.-B.'s	5-5	6-8	7-2	7-3.

A three-year-old would, of course, have to carry 6st—the minimum for any flat race. ED.

JUNGLE FOWL IN BURMA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—The following bags were made by a friend and myself last February in Upper Burma.

			Total		360

The total bag for the 18 days was 360 jungle fowl.
5 Barking Deer, 3 Hares.
8 Imperial pigeon.
5 Green pigeon.
2 Partridges.

We were on duty and moved camp 10 or 12 miles a day, shooting on the march. As some of these days our work took us into the jungle the bags were small as will be seen.

Have you any records of jungle-fowl shooting in Burma and is our best day anywhere near a record for either two guns or ½ of it for one gun.

"THIBETAN MASTIFFS."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—In reply to "Canis Major's" note, on Thibetan Mastiffs, which appeared in your issue of 14th instant, may I be permitted to make a few remarks? The mastiff, though a far finer dog in every way than his cousin the "Bhootea" or sheep dog of Thibet, has always struck me as being much more delicate and unable to stand the heat nearly as well as the Bhootea.

I succeeded in bringing down two pups in 1896 from Poolamsundar, the border land between Thibet and Tehri-Gurhwal. Before I bought them, the Thibetans assured me that if I took them beyond the border and kept them in India, they would die, unless I left them for a year or so, with shepherds, on the higher hills near the source of the Ganges, for at least one year to acclimatise them.

I did not heed the warning and brought them into Mussoorie in November, together with a couple of Bhooteas, and though I spent the winter in Mussoorie, I noticed the pups preferred sleeping outside, in spite of rain and snow to coming even into the verandah. However, before March, both were dead in spite of all I could do for them, whereas, the Bhooteas flourished for some years after.

With the mastiffs, I also bought two yaks, but with regard to them I took their late owner's advice and left them for a whole year at Hursil and had them brought down the following year. They stood the long journey to Bombay and the subsequent vogage to England admirably. Another "sahib" also tried the experiment of bringing down four yaks, the same year from the same place, but without "acclimatising" them as I had done. Two of his died before reaching Tehri (8 marches from Hursil) and the remaining two died just outside Mussoorie.

This experiment led me to believe that there was a lot in what the Thibetans said and to be successful in importing the mastiff into India, it will be necessary to acclimatise him on the border first. Pups born in India, of acclimatised parents will, I have no doubt, do well in our hill stations and "walk off" many a good prize at the shows.

I daresay others have also tried and been more successful than I was, whose experiences in print will prove much more interesting and valuable to would-be importers of the Thibetan Mastiff than mine can ever hope to be, but as "every mickle maks a muckle" I send you mine for what they are worth.

HUNTING DOGS FOR INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Periodically the question of breeding an all round hound for work in the plains of this country crops up, yet no one seems to reflect we have in the dhole or wild dog the nucleus of a breed that by selection and crossing, to tone down his non-amenability to discipline, would furnish us with an ideal animal. Many of the wild tribes do breed from dhole dogs, tethering out selected pariah sluts to be lined, and there are a goodly number of the progeny of these to be picked up in such places as the Nepaul terai, the Central Provinces, and similar jungly tracts where wild dogs roam. Even here in Calcutta the strain may be seen by a close observer acquainted with the dhole; though it may have come down through several generations.

For chasing jack in such open ground as on the Ooty Downs the plains of Behar or Bengal proper, the imported English fox-hound is suitable enough but for operating in scrub or forest jungle he's entirely out of place; his color is against him in bounding through bushes or over boulders, while both he and his congener the beagle with their lop ears are at great disadvantage compared either to the wild or domesticated pie, for these appendages suffer from thorns, the sharp cutting eka blades and harbour such vermin as ticks and leeches. The Rampur with his nearly naked hide and prick ear that all of the genuine cross exhibit runs scathless through any jungle while his dark slate colour is all in his favor in sombre places. He may not be up to the mark in pluck and tackling unless in packs, but training and careful entering from puppyhood as with other hounds works wonders in this respect, but I pin my faith more on the cross between a thoroughbred pie and the dhole, speaking from experience of one or two I have owned of the cross and the numbers I have seen in frontier and transfrontier villages. Even the kussied Kuki and Naga doggy destined for the spit when the time arrives, is trained for the chase and though feeding in the slack season is not of the character that would commend itself to our methods, when meat is available it is never given cooked as the people aver that with the blood in it rouses the taste for that inherent in all carnivorous animals when put to the chase. In breeding dogs for work, as distinct from doing so for pets, we have a good deal to learn from the less civilised hunters who follow the dictates of nature. Vegetable food either cooked or uncooked is never given in the hunting season, but when the animal's own instinct tells him it is needed he'll pick it up for himself. The cooked meal given in ig kennels at home has become a necessity for economy's ake and perhaps in the long off season is excusable, but it certainly is unnatural, though sanctioned by long usage. The original hound whether stag, fox, boar, or otter never had it.

If imported dogs are used, there is no doubt that to keep them up to the European standard fresh blood is requisite every third generation, but why we should import when we have such undeniable first class stock to indent upon either for using intact or crossing Savours of the ridiculous? What we want are working animals not something attractive to look it and though the comparison may be far fetched, there is as much difference as far as actual usefulness goes between the rough shod, cord clad game-keeper and the sporting masher just turned out of a Regent Street emporium, as between the white and black, red or livered-colored British fox hound, and the red wolf-like cross presented by the half-pie, half-dhole, or dull-colored Rampur.

O. K.

From Hungary, which seems to be a lively place, always something going on, comes the story that a priest in Lorincze refused to marry a pair who had been already civilly married at the Registrar's. The parties interested began to argue the thing out. Finally the priest, wearying of verbal strife, got home with a left hook on the bridegroom's ear in the style made fashionable by Mr. James J. Corbett. The wedding guests thereupon rushed into the ring, and put in such a spirited rally that the priest "went down and took the count." The bridegroom put the whole thing rather neatly as the party left the church. "I see now" said he, "why the distinction is drawn between a marriage before a registrar and one before a priest. The latter is not civil."

First Day, Saturday, 23rd July 1904.

THE races which were looked forward to with great interest commenced to-day in delightful weather. There was a brilliant assemblage of local society, among those present being Sir David and Lady Barr, General Sir James Willcocks, Commanding the Secunderabad District, all the Commanding Officers of the Garrison, and the leading Hyderabad Officers. Sir Kishen Pershad, Prime Minister of Hyderabad, was "at home" and the fine garrison band was also in attendance. There were good all-round fields and it may be said to have a been bookies' day. Captain Darley, the well-known owner and gentleman rider was very successful and came in for abundance of applause. Details.—

THE MILITARY CUP.—Rs. 150, and Rs. 50 to the second. For English and Australasian horses bonâ-fide chargers regularly ridden by their owners on parade. W. A. raised 2st. Allowances—Horses that have never won a flat race value Rs. 50 or more, 7lbs. Penalties—Winners of a flat race value Rs. 50 or more, once, 4lbs.; twice, 7lbs.; oftener, 10lbs. Winners of a flat race value Rs. 140 or more, 5lbs. extra for each such race won. Cumulative. 6 furlongs.

CALCUTTA COURSE CHAT.

THE heavy rain at midnight did not portend anything too good for last Thursday morning's gallops, but fortunately the morning broke with but a slight drizzle, that did not, however, interfere with the work though it was very close and stuffy; and the going, a quagmire. Keeping on the uplands, near the trees a few wise ones picked out a little better going.

The first out were Norman (Regan) and Coal Queen (Howie). They put in a smartish gallop, the 14-2 being away from the mare towards the finish. The latter is not yet near fit for real extension, of course this must be taken into consideration, as she's a nice stylish mover, and was taking on a much larger pony. Young Rake was then sent a quick piece by Regan, and acquitted himself well. He was followed by Natalina, and Pat C. putting in a working gallop, or a working wade across.

Bell Brand (Howie), and nother of Smallman's string, got away over to the Ellenborough, out of the view of the curious, and did what might be characterised as a sound bit of going, confirming the opinion of many that the first-named will have the foot of Clynder, Belmeath, Oom Paul, Hello; in fact, all and sundry that oppose him.

Not Yet (Mr. Galstaun), and Rosalea (Mr. Chater), had a ripping spin on the bit of dry going and Mr. Galstaun's old favourite, kitten-like, was drawing well away towards the finish. She is daily getting more symmetrical, and by the 6th proximo ought to be quite what her sporting owner could desire. Rosalea appears to be getting a bit too much of it.

Beazley on Parole, accompanied by one from Milton's, next essayed the pony hurdles, that is, the first one did, and went the course jumping in irreproachable style, albeit the take offs (and landing for the matter of that) was very soft. The exhibition was a good one, but no wonder the horse was doing a tiring finish, considering the state of the course. The one from Milton's was taking none at first, and cut it to the rails, eventually being got round a few jumps in indifferent style.

Howie was out on Flash, from Smallman's, and put in a bit of fast sprinting, followed by Pierette and Good Chat, who went slogging along and making way for Mr. Dudley on Clynder, W. White, on Belmeath, and natives on Planet, and Trollop. After a trot round on the Ellenborough, they were slipped across the open, all hard held, except Trollop, who just saw the others through and no more.

Jack Wall went his usual performance this morning, and Little Regan had out Mr. Deakin's Cheer Up for a gallop to quick time.

Saturday was a right enough morning, but the course was the course of Thursday, if not more so as regards going, which combined with the official measuring that was on at the big stand enclosure deprived this usually busy morning of much of its bustle.

The first out was, I believe, the pony Norman from Smallman's lot, but as the work was done by about candle light, we were in the dark as to result. This appears a bit paradoxical, but in matters racing it is thus.

Mr. Paris' Rathcoon, and Road Metal from Wishart's, put in an early bit of work, though in view of previous remarks, I hope may not be accused of making light of the gallop, by saying nothing electrifying was noticeable.

Little Tommy Regan took the big Harold out a breather, followed by Flash, Bell Brand, and Fusilier. Then Lynch's unnamed mare was slipped along a few furlongs smartly. She's a very nice cut of a horse, and one would imagine this astute trainer would know just what to send to India to nobble the oof.

Blue Bell from Mr. Maurice Turner's string, with Daffodil, went a long jumping school, the grey operating perfectly, but seems to be lacking in dash of foot, while with Daffodil the foot is there, but the jumping isn't. This horse appears to want catching hold of as he lands, and a few admonishings given not to be so ready to treck off to the left, by which so much ground is lost, to say no thing of the possibility of the jump being shirked altogether when racing.

After Mr. Dudley had put in Thursday's gallop on Clynder, I was not prepared to run across Mr. Galstaun hacking her half way round the Ellenborough this morning, and afterwards sending her along a gallop of about 3 furlongs to half a mile, with Mr. Dass's two new ones; so I am in doubt who is actually going to ride with the colours.

I also caught a glimpse of Belmeath (native), Planet (W. White), and Euryalus (Mr. Dudley), going slowly round the same course, after which the latter pair went very fast in the open on the high ground. There was nothing much separating them as they finished.

I noticed later, Mr. Dudley doing a much improved school on Rezia, the pony negotiating three flights in certainly improved form. I had an idea Rezia would have been more forward last year than turned out, but then jumping was a new game; now in such able hands, I think, I, as also Mr. Dass or was it Mr. Roy, will be recompensed for our disappointment.

I am sorry to hear "Mr. B.B," the owner of Second Thought, Rienzette, and Revelle, has met with a nasty accident, having been thrown from his horse and broken a leg. It's bad enough to get a leg crocked up, but to add to Mr. B.B's trouble, he will perforce be debarred from seeing any of his ponies racing for some time.

The course was opened for the first time on the 25th instant when the ponies Yuletide (Mr. Cowper), Good Chat (Mr. Evers), accompanied by Mr. Mackellar's horse Orphan Boy went a nice working gallop, over the pony hurdle course, leaving out the last two flights, and finish ing along the top. All jumped well, Yuletide in particular. This pony is in wonderfully good fettle just now.
Immediately afterwards, Odin (Mr. Wilmot) and Cheer Up (Bloss) started on the far side, and jumped the last three flights of the pony hurdles, afterwards being taken back and ridden over the last flight of the horse hurdles. Odin as usual, jumped perfectly and Cheer Up showed an improvement on his last display; but still wants a lot of schooling.

That fast improving mare Pierrette, belonging to Mr. K. Hamilton, came a half speed gallop of four furlongs; and later, March (Bloss) and Maid of Kent (Regan) ran along for three furlongs, the former gave a very poor display, the "Maid" holding her own comfortably all the way. March, who has the reputation of being very smart over a short distance, has been doing all her work in a trap; she will certainly have to show a vast improvement on this performance, to do any good in the maiden race at the first meeting, for which she is intended.

The usual contingent were out as usual from the other stables; but on this particular morning, I was paying all my attention to the amateur establishments.

T. Regan who came up with Mr. Bert Allen, and is working with Smallman, is a promising boy, he is only 14, and can go to scale a pound or two over 6 stone; he has ridden plenty of winners all over South Africa, and any one getting in horses at bottom weights, in the handicaps, will do well to secure his services.

Tuesday morning, the course was again open, and there was a bustle about things. Gallops were put in at a rate, following close on each other's heels, that in one particular smart scurry just consisting of three at the commencement, the two gentlemen in the stewards stand must have been exercised in mind to account for the four horses that finished nearly abreast. The extra one had been putting in a bit on his own, but took so long over the doing, that he was chased in a winner, by the other three. The ponies, Miss Beryl (O'Neil) and Blue Bell (native), from Wishart's went a smart five furlongs, the deal going to the first. Then another pair from the same stable, Morris (Bloss) and Pylara (native), went the same distance.

Mr. Galstaun next tried conclusions on Clynder with one of Mr. Dass's new ones ridden by W. White or was it Belmeath; and must have been satisfied that he is on a mare that will give him a big chance of figuring pleasantly prominent in a finish he will be riding on the 6th proximo.

Mr. Rodacanachi's Kittylea (Sheldrick) with Mr. Deakin's Invincible (native) next put in a bit of good going, the evergreen Kitty footing it as if time had no residential qualification down her street.

Daffodil (Sheldrick) and Blue Bell went five furlongs about 1-15, followed by Not Yet (Mr. Galstaun), Western Queen (Mr. Chater); but as the timing was considerably in advance of the above, 'tis quite clear they were only at pipe openers.

Kilnerrin (Bloss) and Rathcoon (O'Neil) put in a five furlong bout, the last half mile ticking out about 59secs.
Mr Evers gave May B a rattle along three furlongs, also Sunshine. Then W. White on Second Thought, and Walker on Reinzette, put up the smartest gallop of the morning cutting out the five furlongs at 1-14

Wall was on Macedon as also on "All Fours" a bit later. I have not heard of any disastrous results, though a climb down was evidently on. Profit (O'Neil) and Shylock (native) went a fast sprint from the five furlong post; the former jockey a little later, coming along a good 12 annas on Daphney. Little Regan on Cheer Up had the legs of Odin (Mr. Wilmot) Mascot (Mr. Maurice Turner), in their little set to from the four furlong post.
Bell Brand and Flash from Smallman's, put in their usual work, as also Harold Hello, Fusilier, and Norman. Howie, Johnson, and Regan having a busy morning in the saddle.

Mr. Bert Allen's ponies did their gallops in the cool of the morning before the break of day, so 'twas said, though I think I did see that nice mare Natalina outside the enclosure on exercise bent. During the morning I also noticed a couple of nags careering about on their own evidently having shifted their cargoes. One pulled up near Mr. Dudley's lot.
Beazley trotted Cerise twice round and Sid White put in a gallop on an unknown.

GENERAL CONDITIONS.

1. W. I. T. C. Rules.
2. Course and stable fees will be charged according to Poona Course Regulations, 1904.
3. Entrance money goes to the Fund.

4. The full advertised money will be given in every case except in the case of a "walk over," when only half the advertised money will be given, and according to Rule 140.

5. No entries will be accepted unless accompanied by a remittance for the full amount of such entries. Cheques and drafts must be made payable in Poona, in favour of the Secretary, W. I. T. C.

In W. I. Races the height, and whether Old or New measurement, and in W. A. Races the age must be stated.

New measurement means ponies measured since 31st March 1899.

Entries must be made on forms which will be supplied by the Secretary, W. I. T. C., on application.

With less than six entries on bona-fide separate interests the Stewards reserve the right to declare any race or steeplechase void.

6. Mares and Geldings allowed 3lbs., in all races, except selling races and handicaps.

7. In all races, other than selling races and handicaps, landing allowance will be given to all horses and ponies landing in India direct from country of foaling or from United Kingdom. To Arabs landed after 1st July 1903, 6lbs. To other cases if landed on or after 1st January 1904, 3lbs; if landed after 1st June 1904, 6lbs. (not accumulative). The allowance to be reduced by 3lbs, on a horse or pony winning one race value Rs. 200 and upwards, and to cease on his winning two races of that value and upwards after arrival in India.

8. Unless otherwise specified starting declarations for each race must be in the declaration box for that race, not later than half an hour before the time advertised for such race. The declaration must be in writing on an official form, which will be supplied by the Secretary, and must state the name of the race the name of the horse and weight to be carried, and the name of the Jockey, and must be accompanied by the amount due for Starting Sweepstakes (if any), for extra money for horses not struck out, for any fees due and for the Jockey's fee for a losing mount if not already paid.

Omissions or errors in the Starting Declaration will render the owner or person making it subject to a fine at the discretion of the Stewards.

9. Every person running a horse in colours or in colours other than those registered in his own or assumed name without submitting not later than two days before the race a written declaration of the colours which will be used will be fined Rs. 20 in respect of each horse so run. A declaration may be made of colours which will be used by the person making it throughout the meeting, in which case no further declaration will be required.

10. All telegrams to be confirmed by letter.

11. All communications to be addressed to the Secretary, Western India Turf Club, Poona.

CECIL GRAY.
Secretary, W. I. T. C.

POONA, 1st March 1904.

Sport in England.

(FROM OUR OWN SPORTING CORRESPONDENT).

LONDON, Friday, 8th July 1904.

THE TURF.

ALEXANDRA PARK.

A GOODLY company congregated under the shadow of Muswell Hill on Saturday afternoon to witness the race for the sixth London Cup, but the attendance, though well up to the average, did not reach record proportions. The more momentous struggle between the rival Blues at Lord's doubtless enticed many of the half-holiday folk from their steadfast allegiance to the sport of kings, and it may have been that the unsettled weather deterred a few from visiting the northern suburb. A succession of sharp showers fell during the day, but it was bright and cool in the intervals between them, and on the whole, the conditions were enjoyable. The big race attracted a capital field to the post, and both from a spectacular and speculative point of view proved an unqualified success.

THE LONDON CUP (HANDICAP).—Of 927sovs. One mile and a quarter.

Mr R H Henning's br c Foundling, by Trenton—Lady Charity, 3yrs, 7st 2lbs	Jarvis	1

* 5lbs. apprentice allowance deducted.

(Winner trained by Brewer.)

BETTING: 9 to 2 agst. St. Emilion, 9 to 2 Foundling, 7 to 1 Hands Down, 7 to 1 Priam, 8 to 1 Kilteel, 10 to 1 General Cronje, 10 to 1 Csardas, 10 to 1 Captain Kettle, 100 to 8 Raven's Flight, 20 to 1 any other (offered).

Csardas was the first to leave the paddock, and he was followed in the parade by General Cronje, Likely Bird, St. Emilion, Hands Down, and Kilteel, the last pair being Foundling and Lord of the Level. They turned and cantered in the same order, and a slight delay was caused by Csardas. When the signal was given Cerillo was left at the post and Likely Bird hung fire, St. Emilion being the first to show in front of Priam, Csardas, Eminent, Hands Down, Lord of the Level, Captain Kettle, and Debutante, with Likely Bird whipping in, to the turn out of the straight, where Priam took a slight lead of St Emilion, with Hands Down, Csardas, Eminent, Lord of the Level, and Captain Kettle next, and Kilteel dropping into the rear. On emerging into view about half a mile from home Hands Down held a slight lead of St. Emilion, Likely Bird, Eminent, Csardas, and Priam, but opposite the stands Foundling began to improve his position, and, getting on terms with Hands Down a few strides from the post, won an exciting race by a neck; three-parts of a length divided the second and third. Likely Bird was placed fourth, Raven's Flight was fifth, Eminent sixth, St. Emilion seventh, Debutante eighth, Csardas ninth, Priam next, and General Cronje last.

THE OAKLEY PLATE.—Of 272sovs., for two-years-olds; winner to be sold for 100sovs. Five furlongs.

Won in a canter by four lengths; three lengths divided second and third. St. Hilary was fourth. The winner was bought in for 210 guineas.

BIBURY CLUB (SALISBURY.)

Just as a tree that is transplanted undergoes a period of inanition before it begins to thrive in new soil, so the Bibury Club, transferred from its home at Stockbridge, passed through an acute and severe crisis extending over a couple of seasons. Happily the time-honoured institution is now fully acclimatised amidst the congenial surroundings of Salisbury, and it seems to be flourishing exceedingly and to have entered upon another lease of prosperity. The reunion is essentially a picnic gathering, and the sport is conducted on enjoyable lines. The entertainment on the 5th instant was of the usual varied description, and worked out fairly well, but the weather was just a little disappointing, the air being quite chilly at times, whilst the sun was obscured behind turbulent banks of clouds.

THE STEWARDS' PLATE.—Of 437sovs., for three-year-olds; colts 8st. 7lbs., fillies and geldings 8st. 4lbs.; penalties, etc. One mile.

* 5lbs. apprentice allowance deducted.

(Winner trained by Owner.)

BETTING: 4 to 1 agst. Silent Friend, 9 to 2 each Zanoni and Bridle Road, 5 to 1 the Stream of Gold filly, 8 to 1 each Gun Club and Country Boy, and 10 to 1 any other (offered).

Won by a length; four lengths divided the second and third Stream of Gold filly was fourth, Bridle Road fifth, The Kid II., sixth, Bachelor's Fancy next, and Gun Club last. Time, by Benson's chronograph, 1min 3⅘secs

A stroll in the Cathedral Close is the usual preliminary to a day's racing at Salisbury, and Turnites of all denominations are generally to be seen enjoying the cool morning air in the precincts of the venerable edifice prior to setting forth for the steep uplands The drive would be pleasanter and less of an ordeal if the local authorities paid more attention to the watering of the roads, which, in spite of an absence of sunshine, were inches thick with chalky dust. The solar rays asserted themselves as soon as the racecourse was reached on the 6th instant, and the afternoon was bright if somewhat close. The attendance was in excess of that of the last anniversary, and runners were numerous, but the proceedings were tame and featureless.

THE HURSTBOURNE STAKES.—Of 495sovs., for two-year-olds; colts 9st, fillies and geldings 8st. 11lbs.; penalties, etc. Five furlongs.

Sir J Thursby's ch c Standen, by St Angelo—Gravity, 9st	Mr G Thursby	1

* 5lbs. apprentice allowances deducted.

(Winner trained by H. Bates.)

BETTING: 6 to 4 agst. Thunderbolt, 3 to 1 Wild Lad, 7 to 1 Happy Slave, 8 to 1 each St. Joie and St. Rollox, and 100 to 8 any other (offered).

Won in a canter by five lengths; a length and a half between second and third. Wild Lad was fourth, St. Rollox fifth, and Yab last.

A potent factor in the success of the Bibury Club Meeting is the up-to-date management. It is highly satisfactory to owners and the public alike to have the first day's programme published in its complete form, with the order of running, some days in advance, and the abolition of over-night entries for selling races is universally commended. Situate as the present venue is in the heart of the Wiltshire training quarters, there has been no lack of competitors for the various events decided during the present fixture, and in the open contests, at any rate, the sport fulfilled expectations. Those confined to amateur riders did not pan out so satisfactorily, but Mr. Thursby, who steered four winners to victory during the two-day gathering in 1902 and two last July, again carried off the honours for amateur horsemanship with a quartette of triumphs, and he is facile princeps amongst the amateur jockeys of the present day. His efforts were not rewarded with success yesterday, however, and his handling of Fighting Furley in the Members' Welter Plate could not but give rise to a lverse comment.

THE CHAMPAGNE STAKES.—Of 397sovs., for two-year-olds; colts 8st. 12lbs., fillies and geldings 8st. 9lbs.; winners extra. Five furlongs.

CRICKET.

GENTLEMEN v. PLAYERS.—Played at Lord's on 4th, 5th, and 6th July. The Gentlemen won by two wickets. The teams for this match were hardly as representative of the full strength of English cricket as usual, chiefly because of accidents to well-known men, but for all that the sides were exceedingly strong. The wicket turned out to be bumpy at one end, and the Players did exceedingly well to score 327 in their first innings. Hayward, the choice of the eleventh hour, was naturally selected as one of the men to go in first, and he and Iremonger seemed likely to make a big stand, when the latter ran himself out. Then for a time the bowlers carried everything before them, and four wickets were down for 62. Hayward, who had been playing admirable cricket, was now joined by J. Gunn, and the result was a partnership of 51 in forty minutes. This was followed by a long stand by Hayward and King who quite mastered the bowling. It was not until the total was 201 that Hayward was dismissed for a masterly innings of 88, which had taken him just over three hours to compile. He had certainly justified his inclusion in the team. Another long partnership followed when Rhodes joined King; it produced 83 runs in an hour and a quarter. King's splendid innings then came to an end; he had made 104 in two hours and a quarter. After this Rhodes hit very hard. It may be noted that the last five wickets added 214 runs to the total. Hesketh-Prichard bowled well and if it had been one of his lucky days he would have had a far better analysis. The Gentlemen had to bat for five minutes and lost H. K. Foster before stumps were drawn with the total at 4. The prospect of seeing Fry and Jessop bat proved very attractive to spectators on Tuesday, although the weather was most unpromising. The Gentlemen, however, played a disappointing game, and six of them fell victims to Braund for 50 runs. Fry played good cricket, but found Braund difficult to deal with, and was out after making 32 out of 46. Ranjitsinhji was never quite comfortable, and was bowled by Braund at 60. Before another run had been made Spooner, who had been playing excellent cricket, was run out, and from that time Jackson alone was able to make any prolonged resistance to the bowlers; in his usual determined way when things are going badly with his side, he played a great game, and held his own for an hour and fifty minutes. Most of his runs were made during the last wicket partnership, Hesketh-Prichard holding out bravely while Jackson hit; this wicket put on 59 runs in forty minutes. Although the Gentlemen were 156 runs behind, the Players decided to go in again themselves, since they had no desire to bat fourth on a wicket which was not only not improving, but likely to become worse. The ball kicked considerably, and Hesketh-Prichard was so difficult to deal with that wickets fell rapidly. Hayward was caught at the wicket at 38, and at 42 three wickets fell, Braund and Iremonger being finely caught in the slips, and Denton bowled. A further disaster happened at 49, when Knight, after twice being hurt by a bumping ball, had one of his fingers broken, and had to retire. King and Gunn then made a much needed stand, and afterwards Rhodes, as in the first innings, helped King considerably. King took his chances, and his hits might have occasionally been described as flukes, but the ball was bumping, and it was a splendid performance of his to score over a hundred for the second time in the match, more especially as nearly everybody else was in great difficulties with the bowling. When stumps were drawn he was not out 105, with the total at 247 for eight wickets, so that the Players were 403 runs on. The innings was soon over yesterday morning. King carried his bat for 109, for which he was batting for a little less than two hours and a half, never missing an opportunity of making a hit. The Gentlemen now required 412 to win, and few of the spectators can have thought that they had much chance of accomplishing their task. But the wicket rolled out well and the amateurs made the very most of their opportunity. Fry and Foster began the innings and in half an hour put 50 on the board; they were not parted until the total was 85, when Fry was caught and bowled after playing admirable cricket for an hour. But this good beginning was followed by disasters. Foster was caught at the wicket with the total at 100 after playing a beautiful innings for 52 runs; and at 106 Spooner was finely caught and bowled with one hand by Braund. There did not seem much likelihood that the runs could now be made, but when Ranjitsinhji and Jackson came together some magnificent cricket was seen. It was pre-eminently a time when, if their side was to win, batsmen were required to show that they possessed grit. Ranjitsinhji has often proved that he has plenty of pluck, while Jackson is noted as being one of the most dangerous bats in the world when the situation is desperate, and the two men laid themselves out to wear down the bowling. For some time Ranjitsinhji scored faster than his partner, but when both men got fully into their stride they both played with delightful ease. Ranjitsinhji made his 50 in an hour, and Jackson reached the same number in an hour and a half. The score mounted quickly, and at the tea interval the total was 262 for three wickets, Ranjitsinhji being not out 97, and Jackson not out 60. The Gentlemen now required only 150 to win, so that the fortunes of the game had very decidedly veered round in their favour. With the total at 300 the splendid partnership was at last broken, 192 runs having been put on in two hours and a half. Jackson was then caught at the wicket for a brilliant 80. When Jessop was dismissed for two and Ranjitsinhji's famous innings came to an end soon afterwards, it seemed quite probable that the Players would win, despite the great stand by Ranjitsinhji and Jackson. But there were good men to follow, and Jones, Bosanquet, Payne, and Hesketh-Prichard all deserved well of their side, with the result that the Gentlemen won a most exciting match by two wickets. Jones played a great game at a most critical time.

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.—Played at Lord's on 30th June, 1st and 2nd July. Drawn. It is always so dangerous to prophesy as to the result of the University match, that although it was generally considered this season that Oxford were much stronger than Cambridge, very few cricketers ventured to say boldly that they would win. Oxford put seven Old Blues in the field, while Cambridge had only four. As the weather was all that could be desired and the wicket presumably perfect, it was regarded as a matter of great importance to win the toss, but the bowling always got up a little. On the first day Cambridge had somewhat the best of the game for, themselves scoring 253, they got rid of Raphael, Awdry, and Carlisle for 84 before stumps were drawn. At no time during the Cambridge innings was the batting very attractive, and the players seemed rather to imitate the professionals of former days than old University batsmen who had a well-deserved reputation for playing a game which was anything but tedious to watch. Keigwin's innings, which lasted for three hours for 38 was of inestimable advantage to his side, but it got on the nerves of those spectators who had come with the deliberate intention of watching the game. But to the great majority of the crowd it did not much matter whether runs were made at the rate of a dozen an hour or a hundred, for the University match seems to be regarded more than ever as a social event. Mann's innings of 42 was lively, and Wilson as usual hit hard when he had a chance. But on the whole the batting was tame, and most of the men were evidently so much impressed by the importance of the occasion that they were afraid to let themselves go. Napier bowled for a long time, with much judgment, but Martin, whose fast bowling was short and a little bumpy, seemed to cause more inconvenience to his opponents than any other man on his side. The Oxford innings began at about five o'clock, and the batting was no more attractive than had been that of Cambridge. The left-hand catch at point by which McDonell disposed of Awdry was one of the chief features of the day's cricket. On Friday, things went fairly well with Oxford as long as Evans was in; but afterwards there was a breakdown in the batting which gladdened the hearts of Cambridge men. This was due to the bowling of McDonell, who in the course of six overs took five wickets for 25 runs; if he could bowl as well when fortune does not seem favourable to him as when everything comes off, he would be a great bowler. Evans played a splendid game, and the more desperate the situation looked, the more he rose to the occasion. He was out at last in trying to make runs while the opportunity remained, after being at the wickets for an hour and forty minutes. With a very useful lead of 104 runs Cambridge began their second innings by scoring 64 for two wickets before lunch, but afterwards things went so badly with them that half their wickets were down for 128. At this stage of the game K. R. B. Fry joined Marsh, who had been playing a very sound and careful game, and during the partnership, the score was increased to 225 in an hour and a quarter. Fry abundantly justified his inclusion in the team, but his innings could hardly be described as great or brilliant, useful as it was. When stumps were drawn, with the total at 242 for seven wickets, Marsh—who had gone in first—was not out 106, which had taken him three hours and three-quarters to put together. Cambridge were now 316 runs on. At four o'clock a heavy shower interrupted the game for about fifty minutes, and a little before six another shower put an end to the day's play. When the game was resumed on Saturday morning Cambridge had a great advantage which was soon considerably increased. For, when another wicket fell at 293, Hopley joined Marsh, and the bowling was collared. In three-quarters of an hour the two men added 97 runs to the total, their play being exceedingly attractive. For some time before the closure was applied it was evident that Oxford's chances of victory were gone, but it was not until Marsh had exceeded by one run R. E. Foster's record of 171 for the match that their turn came to go again. Marsh was batting for five hours and ten minutes and thoroughly deserved all the applause which he received. As the game was to be prolonged to seven o'clock if there seemed a prospect of a finish Oxford had nearly five hours and-a-half before them, with 495 runs to make to win. They naturally played for a draw, but when six wickets were down for 128 it seemed almost certain that they would not succeed in their object. But thanks to poor fielding by Cambridge and opportune showers which kept the ball wet, Evans and Bird then pluckily kept up their wickets until a quarter to seven, when stumps were drawn. The play of Evans in the first innings had been noticeable as that of a cricketer of a high class; in the second innings it was that of a great cricketer. Evans showed splendid tactics; he evidently thought nothing about his own average, or the distinction of being able to make a hundred, and he managed to get most of the bowling in the cleverest way. In the end, he and his partner, W. S. Bird, who, like him, is an old Malvernian, were unconquered, having increased the total by 93 in an hour and-a-half, and deprived Cambridge of what looked like a certain victory. Evans was twice missed at mid-off from a hard drive, but as the ball was very slippery at the time, the fieldsman can only be regarded as unfortunate. If either of these catches had come off, seven wickets would have been down with about an hour and ten minutes left to play, and three players to follow, whose reputation as batsmen could not be considered great.

SURREY vs. DERBYSHIRE.—Played at Derby on 30th June, 1st and 2nd July. Surrey won by an innings and 103 runs. There was several alterations in the Surrey team for this match, while Bestwick was absent from the Derbyshire side on account of a strain. Derbyshire were batting all through the first day on a perfect wicket, scoring 373 for nine wickets. They began so badly, losing three wickets for 34, that for a long time the batsmen who followed adopted the most cautious tactics and Storer was at the wickets for two hours and forty minutes for his very useful 58. Later Gurgenven played a very attractive game, and made the highest score of his career as a first-class cricketer; he was batting for about the same time as Storer. The weather was very hot and oppressive during the day, and there were ominous signs of rain; but, happily for Surrey, the rain did not make an appearance on the morrow. Morton carried his bat for 56, an innings of considerable merit. For the rest of the day Surrey held their own, and when stumps were drawn they had scored 417 and had only lost half their wickets. Hayward was again in splendid form. He and Baker put up 87 for the first wicket, and at lunch time the total had been taken to 100 without further loss. Hayward was out at 157 for a wonderfully good innings of 91, which had taken him two hours and a quarter to compile. After this Hayes and Holland scored 105 in an hour and twenty minutes, and Sheppard and Hayes 100 in an hour and-a-half. Sheppard played a faultless innings. When stumps were drawn Hayes was not out 175, for which he had been batting for four hours, showing a perfect command over the bowling. There did not seem much probability on Saturday that the match would be finished, but Hayes and Lees put on 101 runs in a little over three quarters of an hour, and although no one else helped him much, Hayes continued to hit so frequently and with such power that when the innings was closed at about a quarter past one Surrey had a lead of 225 runs. Hayes was missed several times, but his cricket was of the most brilliant kind. He made 273 not out, the highest individual score of the season. He was at the wickets for five hours and-a-half and his hits included a six, a five, and 39 fours. Derbyshire began badly enough by losing

ROWING.

HENLEY REGATTA.

I wired you on the 8th instant the results of the finals in this year's regatta. The attendance was the biggest of recent years and the weather remained fine to the end.

The Diamonds, of course, attracted intense interest, and when Scholes passed me at Fawley I believed he would either be beaten or have to break the record. He did the latter, and my only regret is that his father, one of the finest sportsmen Canada ever produced, was not here. As it was Lou had one or two Canadians around, and they gave him what he deserved—a right royal reception, a pleasing feature to him and his friends being the generous cheers given him en route. At the same time, too much credit cannot be given his fine trainer, Eddie Durnan. In leaving the Diamonds for 1904 I think I can only repeat that they produced some grand races and in saying this I am glad to bear testimony to Cloutte's fine part. The previous record 8mins. 29secs. was made, I may add, by Howell in 1898.

The finals for the Wyfold Challenge Cup will no doubt be interesting to your Calcutta readers in that Mr. Medd, who was once, I believe, a member of the Calcutta Rowing Club, rowed bow in the London R. C. crew which were beaten by Birmingham. I append details:—

Immediately after the start given by Mr. F. I. Pitman from the Consuta, ably handled by the popular owner, Mr. Clutton, Leander, dashed in front, rowing 11, 20, and 34 in the first minute, Graham putting in 10, 19, and 37 strokes. At the top of the Island the favourites were clear, and at the Quarter-mile they led by a length and a quarter, rowing 36-37 to New's 34 in a minute. Passing Fawley, two lengths in front, Nelson was putting in 34 strokes, and the time of the Leanders there was 3mins. 29secs. but they were rowing very easily indeed. Subsequently they slowed down a bit, and practically finished paddling, the verdict being a bare length. Time—7mins. 20secs.

Final.

Bucks: L F Scholes, Toronto R C. Canada, 12st 3lbs ... 1
Berks: A Hamilton Cloutte, London R C, 12st ... 2

Mr. Fletcher, on the Hibernia, had the men at their stations in good time, and both the aspirants for championship honours then looked in the very pink of condition, Cloutte especially so. They were both a bit nervous, naturally, but still there was no delay at the start, and when the word "Go" was given Cloutte went off at a rare pace. In the first minute he rowed 10, 18, and 35 strokes, while Scholes put in 9, 19 and 36. At the top of the Island Scholes led by a canvas, his time to the Temple being 51secs., four less than Kelly did yesterday—a wonderful piece of rowing. At the Quarter-mile Scholes led by three-quarters of a length, and was nearly clear at the Rectory. Meanwhile Cloutte had taken a poor course, having crossed over to the Bucks shore and been compelled to go back as the Canadian kept on at his best pace, 37 to the minute. Passing Fawley Court, Scholes was rowing his very hardest, and, though he led (in four minutes) by a length and a half, it was evident that he realised he had a "stiff contract" on hand. In the most dogged manner the Londoner in his best style also held on, rowing 34 to the minute and for a time it looked as if he would draw up. The Canuck, however, put in a fine sprint, and, amidst the loudest cheering, cut the record, winning by a length and a quarter. Time—8mins. 23⅘secs. Cloutte also beat record, his time being 8mins. 28secs.—a magnificent performance for both men, and one worthy in every sense of going on the records of Henley.

There was nothing in the station when they started. In the first minute Caius rowed, 11, 20, and 39 strokes, St. John's doing 11, 21, and 40. At the top of the Island they were nearly level, but then Caius drew away, and at Remenham Farm led by a quarter of a length. Passing Fawley Caius led by three-quarters of a length, their time being 3mins. 38secs. From this home they had a clinking good race, St. John's sticking to their work in rare style. At the Mile, Caius still led, and though the Johnians spurted desperately they were unable to get up and the win in favour of Caius was a bare length. Time—7mins. 30secs.

Starting, Third Trinity put in 11, 21, and 41 strokes, Winnipeg getting away none too well, doing 10, 20, and 40. They were level for half a mile, but at the top of the Island Third Trinity led by a couple of feet, and they increased this at the quarter to a quarter of a length. Both rowed 34 to the minute passing the Rectory, where the Canadians were making desperate efforts to keep up the pace grandly set by Nelson in Third. At Fawley Court, reached by the Collegians in 3mins. 31secs. the Winnipegs were a length behind, but Henderson stuck to his work in the gamest possible manner, and though the visitors steered a comparatively poor course, they plugged on in rare style. Approaching the enclosure, Nelson once more put in a useful dozen and definitely settled the issue, although the finish was magnificent by both. The decision was "one and a half lengths," and the time 7mins. 30secs., this equally the record made by Leander in 1897.

The stream was as smooth as possible when they were despatched on their journey. Eton got away nicely, and in the first minute rowed 10, 20, and 39 strokes, Johnstone putting in 11, 20, and 38. At the top of the Island they were level. Opposite the Rectory Eton had a slight advantage, but both crews rowing their best, 33 to the minute, were going grandly. At Fawley Eton only led by three feet, their time being 3mins. 31secs. After this they had a grand race, and it was nip and tuck to the Mile, where the Etonians led by a quarter of a length. They then drew away, but had to row up to the very finish to win by a bare length. Time—7mins. 20secs.

At the end of the first minute they were absolutely level, but at the Rectory Third led by a foot, then rowing 33-34 to the minute. At the half mile the Light Blues were still only quarter of a length to the good. At Fawley Court, reached in 3mins. 44secs., Third had an advantage of three-quarters of a length, and were then going well, but University rolled a bit and lost some ground by some erratic steering, not altogether Robinson's fault. When eventually they settled down they spurted and drew up, but the effort came too late, and they suffered defeat by barely half a length. Time—7mins. 46secs.

They got away on perfectly level terms, and in the first minute they struck precisely the same strokes, 20 in the half and 37 in the full period. They were level at the top of the Island, and then Medd seemed to lose control, as the Londoners travelled erratically, whereas Birmingham kept on in good style, putting in 34 to the minute. At Fawley Court both crews were going for all they were worth, and they passed that landmark in 4mins. 50secs., the provincials being still slightly in front. Before the mile was reached, London, putting in 32 to the minute, drew up, but, boring over on the Bucks side, interfered with the "Brums," although they did not come together. Above the White House London took the lead, but hugging the Phyllis Court booms were unable to stall off a good and resolute challenge by Glover. Naturally they touched just before the finish, and London, being at fault, were disqualified by Mr. Pitman after passing the post in 8mins. 1sec.

Third cleared the island in 17secs. the same time as Kelly made yesterday, and were clear at the Temple. At the quarter-mile the Collegians were nearly two lengths in front, but the combined pair were going well at 32 to the minute, and drew up as the Farm was approached. Third shot by Fawley Court a length and a half to the good in 4mins. 3secs. and after this Taylor judiciously took matters easily, but at the same time kept well clear of Beresford and Blackstaffe, who eventually were beaten by two lengths and a half.—Time, 8mins. 33secs.

ATHLETICS.

A. A. A. CHAMPIONSHIPS.

Of the success of the championships on the Rochdale Athletic Ground on Saturday, results of which were duly telegraphed, there is no doubt. When a start was made at half-past two in the afternoon the attendance was not more than 5,000, but an hour later every place for looking on was occupied, and there could not have been less than 15,000 present. The afternoon was a triumph for English athletes in every way, for but one visitor was successful, Puisseger, of France, who won the pole jump. The absence of the 'Varsity men, who, in view of their match with the American colleges a few weeks hence, thought it best not to enter, was regretted, but this in no way spoilt what can only be described as one of the most successful meetings held by the A. A. A.

Jupp, who was third, made up his ground towards the finish, when he was a foot away. Time—10secs

At the pistol shot, Shrubb immediately made for the lead, but was shut in. He lay third for 150 yards, but then got round the field and went in front. Passing the stand the first time, he was a foot in front of Schofield, who retired immediately after the quarter-mile, Butterfield and Barker then lying second and third. At the half-mile Shrubb was a yard ahead of Butterfield, who was leading Barker and Binks, in the order named. In the third circuit, Butterfield was still second, but McGough had, in the meanwhile, run into third place. Half-way round the last lap, Butterfield made a dash, and taking Shrubb by surprise, headed the S.L.H. man for quite fifty yards. The holder went after him, and soon was in front again, but McGough then made an effort, and travelling at a fine pace pressed Shrubb so much that after winning by two yards, he fell down exhausted ; twenty yards divided second and third. TWO-MILE WALKING RACE.

Standard, 15mins. Challenge Cup, presented by Mr. J. E. Fowler Dixon. British Amateur Record—13mins. 24⅕secs., by W. J. Sturgess, Polytechnic H., July, 1897.

G E Larner, Brighton and County H	1
G Deyermond, Belfast	2
F T Carter, Queen's Park H, London	3
S S Winterbottom, Salford H	0
H Payne, West of Scotland H...	0
J McLachlan, Liverpool H and A C	0

At the start McLachlan assumed the lead, followed by Deyermond, Larner, Carter, Winterbottom, and Payne in the order their names are written. This state of affairs prevailed at the quarter and half-mile, when McLachlan was two yards in front. Going round a third time Deyermond and Larner passed McLachlan, who in an effort to get up to them was found guilty and pulled out. After this Larner passed Deyermond and at the mile was well in front, his time being 6mins. 50secs. To the end he had matters entirely his own way and won by eighty yards, Deyermond beating Carter for second position by twenty-five yards, with only Winterbottom of the others finishing. Time—13mins. 57⅖secs.

TWO-MILE STEEPLECHASE.

Challenge Cup, presented by Messrs. James and Wm. Waddell.

C J Straw, Warrington A C	3
W A Mercer, Widnes A C	0
G Still, Highgate H	0
J Roberts, Sefton H	0
J D Marsh, Salford H	0
H Barker, Salford H	0

A thoroughly interesting and very exciting race was seen. Daly and Roberts cut out the work at the start, but they were never much ahead of the others, a matter of eight yards covering the entire field at the end of the first mile. So matters progressed until the last mile, when, so warm had been the pace, but three were left on the track—Daly, Straw, and Russell. The second-named was soon out of the hunt, but a magnificent finish was seen between Russell and Daly. They took the last water-jump about thirty yards from the post together, immediately after which Daly, who was a trifle behind Russell, came down and brought the latter with him, Russell the smartest on his feet again, winning by three yards; ten yards between the second and third. Time—10mins. 55⅕secs.

WRESTLING.

GRÆCO-ROMAN CHAMPIONSHIP.

Although it lacked the dramatic atmosphere and anti-climax of the big match at the Olympia in which Madrali was disabled and beaten in less than a minute by Hackenschmidt, Saturday night's contest at the Albert Hall was a far greater success as an entertainment in the genuine wrestling sense. In Jenkins, Hackenschmidt met a foeman worthy of his steel, and though in the end a combination of strength and science triumphed over almost purely scientific methods, lovers of Wrestling were perfectly ready to admit that two finer wrestling showmen had never been seen on the mat together. It was a case of East meeting West, with the representative of the older hemisphere triumphant.

When the men got to grips, Hackenschmidt attacked in decisive style, and twice just missed with the flying mare. In less than three minutes he fixed his rival in a cruel body grip and swung him over on to the stage. Jenkins endeavoured to spring forward on to his feet, but Hackenschmidt's arms shot out like lightning, and he pulled his man down with the greatest ease. The American defended very cleverly, and failing to find an opening for an arm-hold, the Russian picked his opponent up with the intention of pitching him over his back. Jenkins smartly eluded his grip, and after six minutes both were on their feet. Hackenschmidt was forming the pace at a terrific rate, and three times lifted his man up and brought him to the boards with a magnificent display of strength, but it availed nothing against the American's skilful defence. Again Hackenschmidt attempted the flying mare but his hand slipped on his opponent's neck, and like a flash Jenkins gripped the Russian by the waist and had him down. The wrestling was now more even, and each man attacked in turn. The strength and science which the challenger exhibited were a complete revelation, and he kept his opponent at bay without much difficulty. When a quarter of an hour had gone, Hackenschmidt rushed in and swung Jenkins bodily round the stage, describing three circles before he threw him to the boards, but the American once more eluded his grip like an eel. Then the Russian braced himself for a big effort. Twice he twisted Jenkins over on to the one shoulder, and just as promptly did Jenkins, with a mighty contraction of his neck and shoulder muscles, snap the holds. At this point Jenkins mysteriously weakened. Hackenschmidt bore down on him with the power of a Hercules, and with a pedal action similar to a man pushing a heavy roller up a hill, forced his man over on his back, and with an irresistible half-Nelson gained the first fall in 20mins. 37secs.

In the second bout Hackenschmidt did most of the attacking, but Jenkins again put up a wonderfully plucky and skilful defence. Once the latter forgot himself and the rules by employing the leg-hold, but Hackenschmidt appeared quite unruffled by an act which ought to have been penalised by disqualification. Minute after minute sped by, but Jenkins could put on nothing more dangerous than a back-of-the-neck hold in answer to the Russian's arm-hold. Then Hackenschmidt brought the half-Nelson into play, but when Jenkins seemed in hopeless plight he extricated himself by a magnificent feat of wrestling, subtlety that evoked a tremendous storm of cheering. It proved his last expiring effort, however, for before he had quite recovered from the exhaustion which the struggle had engendered, the Russian had cleverly slipped on a second half-Nelson, and Jenkins was placed squarely on his shoulders in 14mins. 27secs.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HUNT.

SO far the season's hunting has been most successful. In 32 hunting days 11 brace of jacks have been killed and the large fields have shown that the sport is as popular as ever in the station. Monday (18th instant) was a splendid day, but the weather was rather wild and probably for this reason, the field was small. The meet was at Sheffield Corner and we first drew the covert beyond Audy plantation. Here, though a jack had evidently been about just before we arrived he was not viewed away. We got away on a good line, however, and crossing the swamp below the covert hounds swung left-handed and ran below Hearbe Cliff. From the top we could see the jack in front of them and had a good view of their work. Through the thick scrub and rocks they hunted him steadily and forced him out above Swamyar Bluegums.

He then ran through Tiger Shola and Sheffield and crossed the road at Sheffield Corner then going on into Governor's Shola. Hounds hunted him steadily through this nearly to the Toda School, above which he turned uphill and we reached the Krummund Bridge Road just as hounds crossed it, carrying a great head. The weather was now so thick that one could hardly see fifty yards ahead and hounds were running very fast. Just as we all thought it was a good thing down Parson's Valley they swung again to the right, and after running through several wooded nullahs re-crossed the Krummund Path and came back again to Governor's Shola. Here, after a few more minutes, they lost their jack near the Toda School, or rather the body of the pack did. Four and a half couple were reported to have gone into Shaw's Plantation. This run was 50 minutes hard going, and, considering the line the jack took, hounds stuck to him wonderfully.

After this we drew from below Bluegums over the hill towards Rallywood and at the bottom of this we found again. Hounds ran up the side of Rallywood which is nearest Jackal Shola and round the top to Bluegums. The jack was viewed away at the bottom and he then faced the open, pointing straight for Staircase. Turning a corner, however, he met a party of Todas, who headed him and he then ran round the Rawlings' nullah side of Bluegums, and, climbing the hill again, turned down to the bottom of Rallywood. Here a second jack jumped up in front of hounds and the two ran up through Rallywood, through Parloch Wood and Sheffield Corner, crossed the road and ran through the upper part of Monkey Shola. This looked as if Barkie were our destination, but, facing the open again, the two jacks ran round the top of one Tree Hill and made for the open Downs. At the head of the long swamp they swung to the left and went along the far side of Pearl Crossing to Brick Kiln Crossing entering Rallywood with hounds close behind them. Here they probably separated, but hounds hunted steadily over the saddle into Bluegums, when from their cry, they seemed to be close to their jack. Here they were completely lost, both by the Hunt officials and the field, and thinking they must have killed some time was spent looking for them in Bluegums. Nothing could be heard of them however, and after about two hours the search was given up. Just as the Master reached kennels, however, they began to come in from Aramby. They must have slipped away from the top of Bluegums and run straight down Blackmoor Vale and over the cream of the country to Aramby. Thus an exceptionally fine gallop was missed.

It was a nice hunting morning on Thursday (21st instant), and there was a fairly large field out at Sandy Nullah Toll Bar where we met at 7-45. We first drew from Pamela's Crossing up the swamp to Briar, in the lower part of which we found at once. The jack broke at the bottom and took us down Dartmoor Vale, hounds running very fast, across the Old Pykara Road, through Beadnell's Shola and over the Sholur Ghat, a short distance down which hounds killed him. The Master then drew the nullahs north of the Old Pykara Road and back from its junction with the new road; below Khed and Wenlock Sholas towards Wapshare's Hare Shola. In the covert on the side of the swamp below Wapshare's Hare Shola we found and had a fast short gallop through Wapshare's Hare Shola, across the Pykara Road at Windy Gap, down the long slope west of Bacon Wood, hounds pulling their jack down in the open half way between Bacon Wood and the big earths near Yemakal Shola. It is probable that we had a brace of jacks in front of us from Wapshare's Hare Shola, as from when we killed we had to gallop again, scent being too good for hounds to be denied. This jack took us below Yemakal Shola and for some miles up the valley before a check enabled the Master to have hounds stopped.

BLUE GUM.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

AFTER an unpleasantly prolonged scent-destroying drought a few nice gentle showers revivified fond hopes in the breasts of the hunting community in regard to the meet at Kalas, and Kalas is a very sporting and rightly popular portion of this hunting country. Consequently a field of some sixty ardent souls gathered "from left and from right" at the "village of the ford" and, determined not to trifle with the wayward goddess of scent; the Master gave not a moment's law, but on the tick of six moved off drawing the reeds along the riverside for half a mile or so. No jack, however, had delayed the performance of his morning ablutions to so late an hour and Colonel Sheringham next tried the big nullah north of the Lohogaum road and a whimper followed by the unanimous confirmation of the pack told the glad tale that the little ruddy rover was at home. With a commendable attention to urgent private affairs hound raced away in the direction of the twin sister hills—the well-known land marks of this part of the country. But the jack, for reasons best known to himself, changed his objective and ran parallel to the Lohogaum cart track, and after a brisk hunting gallop reached the babul cover close to the Octagonal tank where jinking right-handed he was viewed by the Master who rode up to his leading hounds and endeavoured to lift the main body of the pack. At this period of proceedings occurred apparently a "regrettable incident" which has been the topic of much discussion in hunting circles. Suffice it to say that one or two sportsmen, who assuredly ought to have known better, in a fit of temporary aberration imagined that they were foxhounds not human bipeds mounted on horses with the aggravating result of one hound being over-ridden and injured and a good jack headed and slaughtered when there seemed every reasonable prospect of this hitherto bright little gallop being continued. Nor was this the end of the tribulation for the local scribe in rating the rioter's indiscreetly let his own pen run riot and forgetting that a Master Huntsman—like the king—"can do no wrong" let slip a misleading expression or two which he very properly recognized called for amendment on the following day. We are all liable to err—even the youngest of us and apt to step in where angels fear to tread. Colonel Sheringham was possibly following hounds when some of his pseudo-critics were following their nurses. So ended unhappily what promised to be a most enjoyable run and a good jack met an undeserved fate. After a brief rest the Master jogged on past the jail in the direction of the Kalas ford. Yerowda Nullah was drawn blank but a subsequent one held a jack—a woefully faint-hearted one, too great a craven to run even for life and liberty and after a feeble spurt he succumbed and met a more noble ending than he deserved.

The Mess House of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders was the venue fixed upon for the 21st and a large field assembled and further mild showers augured well for a good scenting morning. After a brief delay for the refreshment provided by the 93rd, the Master moved on past the back of the Mess towards the Rifle Range pulling hounds into the Vale close by the Katruj Ghat road. After working patiently through different small patches of crop, hounds began to feather and near the bottom of the nearest hillock they made certain of their line and rose the hill in full cry. Away straight for Katruj over what I hear was a really ruggedy, rough country and apparently only those that took it as it came were really on terms with hounds for the pace was too good to let those who sought to pick their way have a look in with the front rank. After running at a rare hunting pace for thirteen minutes hounds had their first check in the garden lands surrounding Kondwa village. But though hounds worked the somewhat exclusive garden cover with great dash and keenness, the jack must have slipped through without a second's hesitation as by the time hounds picked up the line on the far side scent which had hitherto been excellent was with the increasing heat of the morning become weak and it was on a feeble scent that hounds worked out the task they had undertaken. The Master made a cast round a hill near by, but scent grew worse and hounds had eventually to admit inability to keep the line and a brave little jack lived to enjoy the honour of leading over half a hundred of the beauty and chivalry another day. Among those out were, I am told, Sir Archibald Hunter, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lucas, Colonel and Miss Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Beatty, Colonel Channer, Colonel Grantham, Colonel Bull, Mrs. Eaton Evans, Mrs. Morris, Captain Hopwood, Captain Hewlett, Colonel Lucas, and Mrs. Sheringham, the Master's wife. A very enjoyable morning it seems to have been.

SECUNDERABAD JUNIOR TOURNAMENT.

(By Special Telegram.)

MONDAY, 25th July 1904.

This tournament commenced to-day at Bolaram on the 4th Hussars' ground. It was grand weather and the ground was in splendid condition. The first match was between the 4th Hussars and the Secunderabad Gymkhana and proved a game devoid of much interest, there being an abundance of missing and little excitement. In the first chukker play was mostly in the Gymkhana ground, the Hussars making repeated runs to their flags and once scoring a subsidiary. The second chukker was fast and there was much up and down play, the Gymkhana cleverly saving their goal twice. In the third chukker the Hussars were on the offensive till after two minutes play when they scored a goal. During the fourth chukker the Hussars confined the play all through to the Gymkhana end and scored two more subsidiaries. Play was mostly in the Gymkhana ground in the fifth chukker, the Hussars had many chances, but failed to increase their score which at the end of the game stood—1 goal and 3 subsidiaries to love. The next match was between the 26th Light Cavalry, "A" Team and the 1st Lincolnshire, and proved much more spirited and exciting till the very end. In the first chukker the Lincolns pressed and got much the best of the game, scoring 2 goals in quick succession. The second chukker found the Cavalry playing up pluckily and they were on the offensive all through, and getting in some spanking shots notched 3 goals and one subsidiary, the score at the end of this chukker being cavalry 3 goals and one subsidiary to 2 goals by the Lincolns. The third chukker was fast and there was plenty of up and down play, several dangerous shots being saved by both sides. It ended in no increase to the score. The fourth chukker was most exciting of all; the Lincolns putting in all they knew and managing to put up 2 goals, whilst the Cavalry notched one and the score stood—Cavalry 4 goals and one subsidiary to 4 goals.

The fifth and last chukker was intensely exciting, both sides playing a fast and furious game up to the last moment. It was neck and neck and anybody's game, both sides being dead equal. Each added a goal to their score and the bell rang leaving the Cavalry winners by 5 goals and one subsidiary to 5 goals :— Teams :—
