Cambridge, who were the favourites, won the toss, and commenced batting with Payne and Young against the bowling of Barnes and Udal. The weather was ideal, the wicket good, and the play full of incident from the very first. The game opened in a sensational manner, Payne hitting in hurricane fashion and actually crediting himself with all the first 45 runs scored by his side from the bat in a quarter of an hour off seven overs. He punished Udal for 34 in two overs—14 off the first and twenty from the next—by means of seven 4's, a 2, and a 4 overthrow, whilst later he obtained four 4's off an over from Martin. Fifty went up in 20 minutes, and Payne reached 52 out of the 61 in 25 minutes. When 73 had been scored for the first wicket in half-an-hour, Payne was dismissed for 64—an innings composed of fourteen 4's, a 3, two 2's and only one single. His innings was naturally keenly appreciated by everybody, except the Oxford men and their supporters, and doubtless had a good effect upon his side. His timing was perfect, and his on-play particularly brilliant. Eyre then joined Young, who had been playing a steady but useful game, and together they added 56 for the second wicket in three-quarters of an hour. Neither Buchanan nor Page reached double figures, and when the latter was bowled by Udal lunch was taken, the score then being 151 for four wickets, Young not out 48. After the interval the attendance increased considerably, and at one time there must have been quite 15,000 persons on the ground. Young, who, after batting for a couple of hours, reached 50, found a useful partner in Keigwin, who helped him to add 45 for the fifth wicket in three-quarters of an hour, but his best supporter was Colbeck, with whom he put on 131 for the sixth in 90 minutes. The last-named went in at a somewhat critical time—when five wickets were down for 196—and played a very great game for his side. He showed very sound defence, but hit hard whenever opportunity occurred. During his partnership with Young, Martin was no-balled by Carlin for going over the crease, but the bowler, hearing the call, recovered himself with the ball still in his grasp. It was not until the following day that the no-ball was erased from the score-sheet, and the total altered from 361 to 360. When he had made 89, Young was almost bowled by Branston, but shortly afterwards he succeeded in reaching three figures, scoring 103 out of 267 in 215 minutes. He then played more freely, and when 113, was bowled by a no-ball from Udal, but no importance could be attached to the occurrence, as the batsman, hearing the call, lashed out wildly at the ball. After Colbeck's dismissal three men were sent back without scoring, and speculation was rife as to whether Young would succeed in carrying his bat through the innings. The old Reptonian, however, played a very unselfish game, endeavouring to make as many runs as possible ere the innings closed, with the result that he was finely caught one hand low down in the slips by Branston for a capital innings of 150 made out of 360 in 275 minutes. He gave no chance, and hit twenty-two 4's, nine 3's and nine 2's. He played very well indeed on the off-side and to leg, and credited himself with the third highest individual score ever made in the Inter-University match. Udal bowled magnificently throughout, and thoroughly deserved his success. He varied his pace with sound judgment, and made the ball come very quickly off the pitch. The Oxford fielding was very good, and Bird at the wicket performed well, although his name does not appear in the score. The Cambridge batting was uneven, for, in a total of 363, six men made only twenty-one between them. The Dark Blues had an hour's batting at the end of the day, and, after losing Payne at three, and Gordon at sixteen, had made 58 for two wickets when play ceased. On Friday morning Foster and Buxton remained together until the third wicket had put on sixty-two in forty minutes, and than a period of slow play followed, only a dozen runs being added in half-an-hour. Napier and Morcom were bowling splendidly, and it was almost impossible to take a liberty with them. After batting for 155 minutes, Foster was bowled for 41, not having scored during the last half-hour he was in. Wright, after being at the wickets for an hour, was bowled for 9, and, although Barnes made 15, seven wickets were down by lunch-time. Udal was quickly dismissed after the resumption, but Branston stayed in for 80 minutes for 34, and played a most serviceable innings. Martin was soon afterwards bowled, and the innings closed for 187. Napier took five wickets for 68, and bowled better than his figures would lead one to suppose. Possessing a lead of 173, Cambridge preferred to go in again to making their opponents follow-on and there can be no doubt that their policy was sound. Payne and Young were again deputed to open the innings, and, although the former made some powerful strokes, he did not meet with such success as in the first innings. He was bowled for 21, made out of 33 in 20 minutes. The second wicket added 32 in about half-an-hour, and, when Young was sent back at 70, after batting for 65 minutes, three of the best wickets were down. Buchanan and Page then put on 92 together in just over an hour, and curiously enough, were out off successive balls. Neither man played a great or even a confident, innings, but their stand was of great value to their side. Colbeck and Keigwin added 80 together for the sixth wicket without being separated in the last half-hour, the Cambridge score being 192 for 5 wickets when stumps were drawn, or 365 ahead with half their wickets in hand. It was evident on the Saturday morning that the over-night not-outs had received instructions to hit, for they added 56 in twenty-five minutes before Colbeck was dismissed; altogether the sixth wicket realised 81 in fifty-five minutes. The innings was then declared closed, and Oxford were set the heavy task of obtaining 422 to win in 375 minutes. With only a single scored, Foster was missed in the slips by Buchanan off May—a mistake which proved very expensive indeed—for with Payne he made fourteen for the first wicket, with Gordon 42 for the second, and with Buxton 79 for the third, ere being caught at the wicket for 77 made out of 121 in an hour and a-half. He hit well after his early escape, but was again let off when he had made 3. He reached 50 in 65 minutes, and altogether hit nine 4's in his plucky display. When Buxton was sent back for a useful 28 four wickets were down for 130, and at that point lunch was taken. After the adjournment Barnes was bowled without scoring, the Dark Blues at that point being 291 behind with half their wickets down. Branston then appeared and was content to play a steady game whilst Wright hit. Together they put on 35 for the six wicket ere the old Carthusian was given out stumped—a decision the accuracy of which was very generally questioned. Bird, the captain, assisted Wright to add 60 for the seventh wicket in an hour, although he scored only a dozen himself. Wright, when apparently set for his hundred, was caught by Buchanan off May for a most serviceable innings of 79, which contained fourteen 4's, the majority of them drives. Before he had made a run he was bowled by Napier by a no-ball, which went to the boundary. He reached 50 in an hour and a-quarter, and obtained four 4's off an over from Branston. His defence was strong, but he also hit well when opportunity offered. There was an unexpected stand at the conclusion of the innings, Curwen and Martin actually putting on 90 for the last wicket in 55 minutes, Martin, who hit hard and often, making 56 of the number. The innings realised 327, which was decidedly good against the Cambridge attack, especially as half the wickets were down for 130. That the better side won there can be no reasonable doubt whatever. W. M. Payne kept wicket splendidly, and dismissed seven men, and will, altogether, have good cause to remember the game. Eleven hundred and twenty-two runs were made for 36 wickets in the match, which Cambridge won by 94 runs. Score and analysis:—

GENTLEMEN vs. PLAYERS.—Centenary Match. Played at Lord's on 9th, 10th and 11th July. The Gentlemen won by 45 runs. About 15,000 persons were present on the opening day of this important match, for which two capital sides had been chosen. Owing to an injury, Fry did not assist the Gentlemen, whilst the Players were without Hirst and Arnold, who were not well enough to assist. The fact that the match marked the one hundredth anniversary of the first meeting of the two sides—on Lord's original ground, where Dorset Square now stands—lent much additional interest to the encounter. Jackson, who was making his first appearance in an important match this season, captained the Gentlemen, and, of course, won the toss, as usual. The batting was opened by Spooner and Foster against the bowling of Gunn (Pavilion end) and Fielder, and on a wicket obviously over-watered, some most interesting play was witnessed. With only 13 runs scored Spooner was bowled by Fielder, who disposed of Perrin leg before-wicket two runs later. Thus early it was apparent that run getting was no easy matter, and Foster, after being missed three times off Fielder—by Hayes, Hayward and Lilley—was bowled for 10, made in three quarters of an hour. Bosanquet and Jackson then came together, and naturally played a slow and watchful game. Fifty went up in seventy minutes, and soon afterwards Haigh and Lees bowled for Gunn and Fielder. Bosanquet played the brighter cricket of the two, but Jackson, though much slower, showed very strong defence and played a most valuable game for his side. Bosanquet, after batting for fifty-five minutes reached 50, and although Rhodes went on for Haigh and Fielder for Lees, no separation was effected prior to lunch, when the score was 102 for three wickets Bosanquet being 51 and Jackson 26. In the second over sent down after the adjournment Bosanquet was caught at the wicket off Fielder. He hit seven 4's, and of the 79 runs added in eighty minutes for the fourth wicket, claimed 56. Two runs later Hutchings was disposed of in a precisely similar manner, five wickets then being down for 109. Without any addition to the score Crawford was clean bowled, three wickets having gone down for 7 runs since lunch. Jessop then appeared, and having scored a 4 and a 3 off Fielder, and a 4 off Rhodes, was bowled by the former, who had so far taken every wicket which had fallen. All this time Jackson was playing a sound, defensive game, taking no risks, but making vigorous hits when opportunity offered. On the advent of Martyn some very bright cricket was seen, the newcomer evidently being determined to knock off Fielder, whom he punished for three 4's in an over. Jackson also obtained a 4, all run, off the Kent man, and 150 went up in one hundred and sixty minutes. At 161 Martyn, having made 26 of the 34 added for the eighth wicket in fifteen minutes, was caught by Haigh at mid-on off a very lofty hit. Six runs later Jackson, after batting two hours and a-half for 40, fell to a catch behind the wicket, and, without any addition to the score, Brearley was bowled, innings closing for 167, made in three hours. Fielder immortalized himself by obtaining the whole of the ten wickets at a cost of but 90 runs, thereby establishing a record for the Gentlemen vs. Players' match. The wicket certainly suited him, but it was, nevertheless, a wonderful performance against such run-getters, and with Gunn, Haigh, Lees, and Rhodes on the same side. His deliveries came very quickly off the pitch, and he maintained a splendid length. The Gentlemen made a very much smaller score than had been expected, and it was anticipated that the Players would experience little difficulty in reaching their total. In Brearley's first over Hayward, when he had made a single, unfortunately played a ball on to his body and was obliged to retire for a time. Tyldesley then joined Bowley, but no stand could be made against Knox and Brearley. Bowley was bowled at 2, and Tyldesley sent back 6 later. Denton, after making a lucky 3 off, Knox, was missed in the slips by Foster—a mistake which gave the Gentlemen a great deal of trouble. At 16 Hayes was sent back, and 1 run later Rhodes also was disposed of, four of the best wickets thus falling in half an hour for 17. Hayward then appeared and from the first ball he received played very confident cricket. Denton, too, made many fine strokes, and together the two men added 88 for the fifth wicket in an hour and a quarter. Upon the arrival of Gunn an appeal was made against the light, but play continued although the light was certainly rather defective. Gunn made 13 of the next 18 runs before being caught, and when Hayward was caught in the slips at 136 stumps were drawn for the day, the players, with three wickets in hand, being then 31 runs behind. Hayward batted nearly two hours for his score of 54, but, although it was a most valuable contribution, it could not be considered one of his best displays. Martyn kept wicket superbly, standing up to the fast bowling of Knox and Brearley, and allowing only one ball to pass him. During the day seventeen wickets fell for 303 runs, the cricket being most interesting throughout. On Tuesday morning Lees joined Lilley, and so well did the pair play, that the Gentlemen's score was passed without further loss. Altogether the eighth wicket put up 40 in half an hour ere Lees was bowled. Lilley and Haigh added 16 for the ninth partnership, the former then being sent back for a most useful 31, made in forty-five minutes. Fielder gave little trouble, the innings closings for 199, or 32 ahead. Knox obtained half the wickets for 73 runs, and was beyond doubt the best of the Gentlemen's bowlers. When the Gentlemen went in the second time, Spooner was seen at his best. He and Foster, who opened the innings together, made a splendid stand, but were both somewhat lucky. The arrears were rubbed off in half an hour, mainly owing to Spooner, who was playing a very bright game. Foster, when 6, was missed in the slips by Rhodes off Fielder, and in the following over was almost bowled. He played a far slower game than is his wont, and at one time scored only a single in half an hour. When he had made 29 Spooner was missed at the wicket off Lees, a mistake for which the Players had to pay a heavy price. When the 50 went up after fifty minutes' play Spooner had made 37 and his partner 11. The Lancastrian continued to do the major portion of the run-getting, and reached 50 out of 77 in eighty minutes. At lunch-time the score had reached 82, which gave the Gentlemen a lead of 50, with all their wickets in hand. After the interval the hundred was sent up in ninety-five minutes, and shortly afterwards Foster, when 34, was almost caught in the longfield by Hayes, who would have brought off a great catch had he held the ball. Of the first 108 run obtained by the Gentlemen as many as 40 were singles. After batting for one hundred and fifteen minutes Foster reached his 50, and a quarter of an hour later the 150 was recorded. With 6 runs added Foster, who had scored 67 out of 156 in one hundred and thirty-five minutes, and had hit seven 4's, two 3's, and three 2's, was caught by Hayward at mid-off. His innings, which was a most serviceable one, was by no means one of his best. Perrin followed in but did not stay long, as, after completing his thousand runs for the season, he was sent back for eight, the second wicket falling at 180. Spooner, after batting for two hours and forty minutes, was caught by Fielder for 114 made out of 211 in three hours. Apart from the mistake when he had made 29, he gave no chance, and hit fifteen 4's, four 3's and seven 2's. It was a very great display indeed, the ease and grace with which he scored being most marked. Hutchings succeeded in reaching double figures, but then, as in the first innings, fell before the attack of the all-conquering Fielder. Bosanquet and Jackson were soon sent back, six wickets then being down for 229, when Jessop came in. Four runs only were added when Crawford was caught off Lees, the Gentlemen thus being only 201 runs on with three wickets in hand. The change which had so quickly come over the game was almost dramatic for, whereas the score was up to 156 ere the first wicket fell, as many as seven were down for 233. Neither Martyn nor Knox made much resistance, and when Brearley came in last man at 272 the innings appeared likely to close within a very few minutes. Jessop, however, hit out in most delightful and daring fashion, and, obtaining the majority of the bowling, took the total to 321 before Brearley succumbed to Fielder. The last wicket added 49 in half an hour, and Jessop carried out his bat for 73 made out of 92 in sixty-five minutes, having hit ten 4's, a 3, and seven 2's. He played a splendid game, and the fact that he obtained his runs when they were most needed adds lustre to his performance. At the conclusion of the innings play ceased for the day, as rain was falling somewhat heavily. On Wednesday, requiring 290 to win, the Players commenced their second innings with Hayward and Bowley against the bowling of Brearley and Knox (Pavilion end). Only 15 runs had been obtained when Bowley, after batting 25 minutes without scoring, was bowled by Knox, whilst at 19 Tyldesley, after making a lucky stroke to the boundary off a yorker, fell to the same bowler. The Players' disasters did not end here, however, for three runs later Denton also was bowled by the Surrey amateur. Hayes at this critical point partnered Hayward and, both making some fine strokes, the total was advanced to 54, when, owing to a misunderstanding, the two men found themselves at one end, the result being that Hayward, who had made 34 in 65 minutes, was run out. Rhodes then came in, and shortly afterwards Knox, who was evidently tiring, gave place to Crawford. The total was taken to 89 when Rhodes was caught in the slips by Bosanquet off Brearley, the fifth wicket having added 35 in just over half-an-hour. In John Gunn who followed in Hayes found a useful partner, and it was whilst they were together that the hundred was sent up after the innings had lasted 115 minutes. Hayes made some very fine strokes all round the wicket, and reached his 50 in 105 minutes. At lunch-time the pair were still together, the score being 145 for four wickets. After the adjournment only two runs were added before Hayes was leg before wicket to Knox. He made a faultless 55, out of 125 in 351 minutes, and hit five 4's, Lees then joined Gunn and another good stand was made, the new-comer hitting very hard and often. Lees made 13 of an over from Knox by means of two 4's, a 3, and a 2, but, when 28, was missed in the slips by Hutchings off that bowler. At 201 Gunn played on to Knox, after batting very well for 85 minutes and helping Lees to put on 54 for the seventh wicket in 35 minutes. At this point the players, with only three wickets in hand, required 89 to win. When 8 had been added Haigh was caught, but Lilley, who had Mead to run for him, and who was missed at the wicket when he had made 3, assisted in adding 23 for the ninth wicket before Lees was caught in the slips off Brearley for a hard-hit 51, which took 65 minutes to compile. The last wicket put on a dozen, and at 12 minutes past four the Gentlemen had won a splendid match by 45 runs. Knox bowled beautifully in each innings, and thoroughly deserved his success, but Fielder, after his great performance, was unfortunate to find himself on the losing side. Score and analysis :—

ATHLETICS.

A. A. A. CHAMPIONSHIPS.

In splendid weather and before an excellent attendance although the mammoth enclosure of the Chelsea Football Club was nothing like full, the Amateur Athletic Association decided their annual championships on Saturday. Capital sport was seen, and the times in the main were very good, although the hundred yards and hurdles were slow, through being run against a strong wind. The sprint track, too, was far from good, but there was a striking improvement evident over last year, as far as the quarter-mile track was concerned. From first to last keen and exciting racing was the rule, and seldom, if ever, have the races been better contested. Nine previous holders competed, and seven of them were successful in retaining their titles, the losers being B. J. Blunden and J. Smith, the latter of whom has always been considered a lucky champion.

The winners are practically an "All British" lot—Scotland claiming three (including Kirkwood), Ireland two, Wales one, the West Indies one, and England seven. The Americans were in no wise fully represented, the only two to turn out being C. B. Bacon, of the Irish American A.C., who was not equal to standard in the Half, and J. P. Hagerman, of Los Angeles, a protégé of R. W. Wadsley, the old sprint champion, who was himself in attendance. Hagerman did 22 feet 8½ inches in the Long Jump, a very respectable performance, but turning out in the Hurdles immediately afterwards he was unable to do himself justice. A pleasing feature was the success of one of our visitors, the West Indian cricketer, A. E. Harragin, in the Pole Jump, although he only scored by means of a walk-over. His style is very pretty to watch, there being none of the gymnastic efforts of past holders about it, and it was no mean performance to clear 10 feet 4 inches in such an easy manner. But for the wind, Harragin would doubtless have taken a standard medal in the Hurdles as well.

100 YARDS FLAT RACE.

Challenge Cup, presented by Prince Hassan. British Amateur Record—9⅘secs., by A. F. Duffey. American Amateur Record—9⅗secs., by A. F. Duffey, Georgetown University 1902. Best Championship Performances—10secs., by A. Wharton, 1886; C. A. Bradley, 1893 (up hill); R. W. Wadsley and F. W. Cooper, 1898; A. F. Duffey, 1900-1; D. Murray, 1901; and by J. W. Morton, S. L. H. 1904. New Zealand Amateur Record—9⅘secs., by T. MacPherson, of Sydney, N. S. W., at Auckland, 6th February 1901; and by J. H. Hempson, at Canterbury, N.Z., 6th February 1892. World's Professional Record—Doubtful.

Heat 1: J. W. Morton (holder), S. L. H., 1; J. T. Wood, Salford H., 2; E. Chamberlain, L. A. C., 3; W. R. Matthews, Polytechnic H., 4. The champion won with ease. Time—10⅗ secs.

Heat 2: H. J. Pankhurst, Salford H., 1; W. Murray, Co. Dublin H., 2; J. A. Millar, L. A. C. 3; E. H. Clube, S. L. H., 4. Pankhurst was early in front, and won by a long yard. Time—10⅗secs.

Heat 3: W. Halswell, Edinburgh H., 1; A. Longhurst, S. L. H., 2; J. P. Wardle, Blackheath H., 3. Longhurst was leading at 70 yards by a full yard, but Halswell put on steam, and finishing strongly, won by eighteen inches. Time—10⅖secs.

Heat 4: L. F. Tremeer, L. A. C., 1; H. Watson, L. A. C. and S. L. H., 2; P. C. Fenwick, Swansea and Highgate H., 3; S. H. Thompson, Birchfield H., 4. The popular old Poly. boy won by a foot. Time—10⅖secs.

Heat 5: Dennis Murray, Co. Dublin H., 1; F. Rivers, Boots A. C., Nottingham, 2. Murray was always in front, and won by two yards. Time—10⅖secs.

Final

J. W Morton, S. L. H.	1
Dennis Murray, Co. Dublin H. ...	2
W. Halswell, Edinburgh H. ...	3
H. J. Pankhurst, Salford H. ...	4
L. F. Tremeer, L. A. C.	5

Getting away to a splendid start Morton just led at fifty yards, and won comfortably by three-quarters of a yard. Murray being a foot in front of Halswell, who beat Pankhurst on the post Time—10⅖secs.

220 YARDS FLAT RACE.

Challenge Cup, presented by Mr. G. V. A. Schofield.

British Amateur Record—21⅘secs., by C. G. Wood, 25th June 1887. American Amateur Record—21⅕secs., by B. J. Wefers, 30th May 1896. World's Professional Record—21⅘secs., by H. Hutchens in 1885.

Heat 1: C. H. Jupp, L. A. C., 1; P. C. Fenwick, Swansea and Highgate, H. 2. Jupp had inside string, and had caught his men on the bend, but Fenwick disputed every yard of the run home, and was only beaten by a yard and a half. Time—22⅕secs.

Heat 2: A. Longhurst, S. L. H., 1; S Hurdsfield, Salford and Birchfield H., 2; Nigel Barker, Sydney University, 3. Hurdsfield was inside, but never appeared like coming through till fifty yards from home, when he spurted well and overhauled Barker, but lost by a yard to Longhurst. Time—23⅕secs.

Heat 3: A. Hargreaves, Southport H., 1; L. F. Tremeer, L. A. C., 2; S. H. Thompson, Birchfield H., 3 Hargreaves was well away, and won by two yards, although Tremeer made a big effort. Time—22⅘secs.

Heat 4: H. J. Pankhurst, Salford H., 1; H. Watson, L. A. C., 2; J. P. George, S. L. H., 3. At one time, Watson looked a winner, but in the straight Pankhurst came out and won by two yards. Time—23⅘secs.

Final.

C. H. Jupp, L. A. C.	1
H. Pankhurst, Salford H	2
A. Hargreaves, Southport H. ...	3
A. Longhurst, S. L. H.	4

There was no mistake about this final. Jupp ran grandly, and won well by four yards. Time—22⅗secs.

QUARTER-MILE FLAT RACE.

Challenge Cup, presented by Mr. R. T. Digby, M. P., British Amateur Record—48⅕secs., by H.C.L. Tindall, Cambridge, U.A.C. at Stamford Bridge, London, 29th June 1889, and E. C Bredin, 22nd June 1895. American Amateur Record—47secs., by M. W. Long, N. Y. A. C., 1900. (Straight course.) Best Championship Performance—Record by H. C. L. Tindall, as above. World's Professional Record—48⅕secs., by R. Buttery, at Gateshead, 4th October 1872

Heat 1: W. Halswell (holder Edinburgh H), 1; C. C. Davies, Polytechnic H., 2; C. Stanfield, Herne Hill H., 3. Stanfield made play and led into the straight, where he was beaten, Halswell going to the front and winning easily by one and a half yards. Time—51⅕secs. Davies was inside standard.

Heat 2: J. B. Densham, L. A. C., 1; F. J. Paveley, Highgate H. 2. A. Goodall, L. A. C., led off, but soon gave way to Paveley, who was beaten by Densham in the straight. Time—52⅕secs.

Heat 3: L. J. de B. Reed, S. L. H., 1; J. P. George, S. L. H., 2; N. C. Barker, Sydney University, 3. Reed led all the way and won by a yard from George, with Barker and F. B. Gibbins, Polytechnic H., about two yards away. Time—51⅕-ecs.

Final.

W. Halswell, Edinburgh H.	1
J. P. George, S. L. H.	2
J. B. Densham, L. A. C.	3
L. J. de B. Reed, S. L. H.	4

The holder showed remarkable form. Taking the lead in the back straight he came right home with a magnificent spurt, and won by ten yards. Time—48⅘secs. George recorded—50⅕secs., while Densham finished in 51⅗secs. Reed practically collapsed.

HALF-MILE FLAT RACE.

British Amateur Record—1min. 54⅘secs., by F. J. K. Cross, Oxford U. A. C., at Oxford, 9th March 1888. American and World's Amateur Record—1min. 53⅘secs., by C J. Kilpatrick, at New York, 21st September 1895. Best Championship Performance—1min 55⅕secs., by E. C. Bredin, L. A. C., at Northampton, 1st July 1893. World's Professional Record—1min. 53⅕secs., by F. Hewitt, at Christ Church, New Zealand, 21st September 1871.

Heat 1: J. Woolley, United H., 1; B. J. Blunden (holder), West of Scotland H., 2; C. B. Bacon, junior, Irish American A. C., 3; C. A. Wickham Jones, S. L. H., 4. Also ran:—F. Heyes (L. A. C.), G. Eyre (L. A. C.), A. W. Grubb (Highgate H.), E. G. Ace (Swansea A. and C. C.), and G. N. Bower (L. A. C.) Woolley went off at a great rate, and covered his first quarter in 57secs, leading by twelve yards. Although Blunden went after him, the leader was never caught, and won by three yards. Time—2mins Bacon and Wickham Jones were about two yards outside standard.

Heat 2: A. Astley, Salford H., 1; K. Hellstrom, Ranelagh and L. A. C., 2; J. F. Lintott, Ranelagh and L. A. C., 3. Also ran:—A. W. Clay Thomas (S. L. H.) H. Armstrong (Darlington H.), C. P Hines (S. L. H.), R. C. McLinnett (London Hospital), G. A. V. Connolly (Blackheath H.) A slow race till the last 250 yards, when Astley came away and won by three yards. Time—2mins. 2⅕secs.

Final.

A. Astley, Salford H.	1
J. Woolley, United H.	2
J. F. Lintott, L. A. C.	3

Once again Woolley forced the pace, running the quarter in 57secs. Making every post a winning one, he led by eight yards from Blunden in the back straight, the holder being clearly beaten. Then Astley went up, and catching Woolley in the straight, he won by, say, two yards. Time—1min. 57⅖secs. Lintott was just inside the standard.

ONE MILE FLAT RACE.

(Standard, 4mins. 30secs.)

Challenge Cup, presented by Mr. C. B. Lawes.

British Amateur Record.—4mins. 16⅘secs., by J. Binks, Unity A. C., at Stamford Bridge, London, 5th July 1902. American Amateur Record—4mins 15⅖secs., by T. P. Conneff, at Travers Island, 30th August 1895. Best Championship Performance—Record as above. World's Professional Record—4mins. 12⅗secs., by W. G. George, at Lillie Bridge, London, 23rd August 1886.

G. Butterfield (holder), Darlington H. ...	1
J. McGough, Bellahouston H. ...	2
J. W. Lee, Heaton H (Newcastle) ...	3
F. A. Knott, S. L. H.	4
A. J. Robertson, Peterborough A. C. ...	5
H. L. Hart, Sparkhill H.	6
M. P. S. White, Blackheath H. ...	7
L. J. Manogue, S. L. H.	8

A. J. Robertson made play at the start, and led for two laps being practically level with J. W. Lee at the bell. Lee now spurted finely, but in the back straight Butterfield went up and won, despite McGough's fine effort, by about five yards. Time: Quarter, 60⅕secs.; half, 2mins. 9⅕secs.; three-quarters, 3mins. 18⅖secs.; one mile, 4mins. 18⅕secs. McGough's time was 4mins. 19⅕secs., J. W. Lee 4mins. 22⅕secs. Knott and Robertson were just inside 4mins. 26secs., Hart four yards outside standard, and the other two six yards behind him. Hawtrey retired at the bell.

FOUR MILES FLAT RACE.

British Amateur Record—19mins. 23⅗secs., by A. Shrubb, South London H. at Ibrox Park, Glasgow, 11th June 1904. American Amateur Record—20mins. 15⅘secs., by W. D. Day, at Bergen Point, N. J., 16th November 1889. Best Championship Performance—19mins. 48⅕secs., by F. E. Bacon, at Huddersfield, 7th July 1894. World's Professional Record—19mins. 25⅖secs., by P. Cannon, at Glasgow, 8th November 1888.

F. H. Hulford, Birchfield H.	1
Jas. Roberts, Sefton H.	2
W. A. Shee, Salford H.	3
J. Smith (holder). Salford H. and Bradford H.	4
J E. Deakin, Herne Hill H. ...	5

Also ran:—J. G. Beale (Poly H.), B. C Long (Poly H.), G. Butterfield (Darlington H.), H. C. Hawtrey (L.A.C.), W. H. Brooks (Highgate H.), H. E. West (Redhill and Reigate H.), G. F. Piper. (Belgrave H.), F. S. Cleveley (St. Bride I.A.C.), H. Hobbs (Queen's Park H.), E. F. Judson (Blackheath H.). W. T. Clarke (Sefton H.) P. Bishop (R.A.C), J. Howard (R.A.C.), W. A. Cooke (Watford A. C.), J. Price (Small Heath H.)

Deakin led at the mile (4mins. 48⅕secs.). Smith then went up and led at two miles (10mins. 5⅕secs.), and three miles (15mins. 20⅘secs.). With half a mile to go, Roberts took the lead and went away, followed by Hulford and Shee. At the bell Roberts was a yard in front of the Londoner, but in the back straight Hulford went to the front and led round the bend. Coming into the straight the pair were locked together and a collison occurred with quite unforeseen results, both men practically stopping. Hulford walked past the tape in 20mins. 27⅖secs., Roberts being fifteen yards away, while the next three beat standard.

TWO MILES WALKING RACE.

(Standard, 15mins.)

BISLEY, ENG.

THE SUB-TARGET GUN COMPANY.

Gentlemen,—It affords me pleasure to testify to the value of the Sub-Target Rifle, one of which was set up on the steamer, and was in constant use by the members of the Canadian Rifle Team during the voyage from Montreal to Liverpool and afterwards at the Canadian Headquarters at Bisley, where it was in almost constant use. I consider it of great value in the instruction of recruits in holding and sighting, and also in detecting and correcting the individual errors of eyesight. For practice in trigger-pulling it is of great advantage, even to the experienced marksman.

My daily use of the Machine at Bisley, was, I feel, of advantage to me in my work on the ranges, where I was winner of the King's Prize.

Very truly yours,

BISLEY CAMP, SURREY,

THE SUB-TARGET GUN COMPANY.

Gentlemen,—Having used the Sub-Target Rifle frequently during the N.R.A. Meeting at Bisley, just closed, I am pleased to testify to its value in promoting steadiness in holding, sighting and trigger-pulling.

To the recruit it must be especially useful in these respects, as the tell-tale "needle" points out every "fault" of the man. I believe that its general adoption and use by the Army, Navy, Volunteers, Rifle Clubs and in the Public Schools would go a long way towards making a nation of reliable shots for Imperial Defence."

Very truly yours,

There were several disqualifications, and the race was not a pretty one to watch. At the mile, Yeomans, Negus and R. E. Wilkinson (Sefton H.) were together. Two laps later Wilkinson was disqualified when taking the lead, and just afterwards Negus collapsed, leaving Yeomans about 80 yards in front of Creasey, and he was never caught, winning by 50 yards from the same walker. Time: 14mins. 20⅘secs. All who finished were inside standard, their approximate times being:—Creasey, 14mins. 35secs., Harrison, 14mins. 42secs., Thompson, 14mins. 45secs., Metcalfe, 14mins. 48secs, Butler, 14mins. 52secs., Sarel, 14mins. 57secs.

TWO MILES STEEPLECHASE.

Challenge Cup, presented by Messrs. James and Wm. Waddell.
A. Russell (holder), Walsall and Thomson Houston H. 1
G. Wigginton, Birchfield H. 2
C. Guy Holdaway, Polytechnic H. 3

Also ran:—A. Williams (Kent A. C.) and E. G. Ace (Swansea).

It was a poor race, only the holder showing any from at all. Wigginton walked through the water to the evident disappointment of the crowd. Eventually the holder won by 110 yards; Holdaway 80 yards further away. Time: 11mins. 14⅘secs.

120 YARDS HURDLE RACE (10 flights).

ROWING.

THE WINGFIELD SCULLS.

The two amateur scullers, A. Hamilton Cloutte, of the London R. C., and St. George Ashe, of the Thames R. C., who competed last evening in the preliminary heat of Wingfield Sculls (Amateur Sculling Championship of England) over the Thames University Championship course, had both competed for the trophy and title previously, and each had been returned the winner once.

There was a good tide running when preparations had been made for the start. Ashe had the Surry station.

The wind was off the Middlesex shore at the start, and caused popply water all the way to Hammersmith, but after that the conditions were much better, and there was comparatively smooth water to the finish. From the signal both men sculled 33 strokes in the first minute. Cloutte caught the water first, but Ashe went in to a slight lead at the end of half a minute only to be almost at once dispossessed. Sculling strongly through the rough water, the London man gradually drew away, and was clear at the Thames R. C. boathouse, and a length and a half away at Craven Steps (time: 3mins. 25secs) At the mile-post the leader had further increased his advantage (time: 5mins. 48secs.), but he steered erratically up to Harrod's, and Ashe, who spurted, decreased the distance between himself and his opponent, so that Cloutte could only claim two lengths through Hammersmith Bridge (time: 10mins. 23secs.). In the smoother water at the bottom of Chiswick Reach, however, Cloutte went away again and had a big lead at Chiswick Church (time: 15mins. 35secs.) The race was practically over, Cloutte still going further ahead, and Ashe, rowing all out, was beaten fifteen lengths. The leader's time to Barnes Bridge was 20mins. 38secs, and to the winning post 21mins. 38secs. Cloutte will now meet H. T. Blackstaffe, of the Vesta R. C., in the final to-morrow (Friday) evening.

METROPOLITAN REGATTA.

There was a smaller entry than usual for the Metropolitan Amateur Regatta, held on Monday over the usual course on the Thames, between Putney and Hammersmith, and all the events were decided without preliminary heats. This, however, necessitated as many as five crews rowing in one heat. J. de G. Edye, of the Auriol R.C., who showed good form at the opening of the season at Staines, had a fairly easy task in beating his only opponent, C. F. Rey, London R.C., in the Junior-Senior Sculls, which opened the proceedings, and London and Thames R.C.'s had another duel in the Senior Fours, which fell to London. The winners have strengthened their crew since Henley by including D. C. R. Stuart, the Cambridge stroke, as bow. There was a great fight for the Metropolitan Challenge Cup for Junior Eights. Towards the close London and Vesta singled themselves out from the other two crews, London securing the verdict by four feet only. The Junior-Senior Fours was another fine struggle, in which Auriol secured the honours by a length and a half from the Anglian, but it was only nearing Harrod's Wharf that they could gain their winning lead. As the winner of the Diamond Sculls at Henley, H. T. Blackstaffe, Vesta R.C., declined the London Cup for Senior Scullers, which race he had won eight times in the last nine years. This reduced the field to three, but there was still an international flavour about the event, as M. Manno, the Buda-Pesth sculler, was opposed to Captain W. H. Darell and St. Geo. Ashe. Manno showed pace at the start, but failed to stay, and Darell eventually won well from Ashe. Thames took the Champion Cup for Senior Eights from London by two lengths, and Vesta won the Old Barnes Cup from Thames and London crews. Bowers and Phelps, the youngest firm of Putney boat builders, had a successful day. Craft built by them won the Senior Eights, London Cup (for scullers), Junior-Senior Sculls, and Junior Sculls. Messrs. F. Fenner and G. H. Vize, of London and Thames R.C. respectively, umpired the races. At the close Lady Hay-Currie presented the prizes to the successful crews and scullers. The weather was warm, and sultry at times, but it was fine beyond a slight heat shower.

SWIMMING.

LONG-DISTANCE CHAMPIONSHIP.

The thirtieth annual Long-Distance Amateur Championship of England was decided on Saturday in the Thames over the usual course, starting opposite the Anglian Boat House, near Kew Railway Bridge, and finishing at Putney Pier, the distance being about five miles 60 yards. There was a record entry, a record number of starters, and the race was won in record time. Of the thirty-eight entries received, only four failed to start, the principal absentees being F. H. Naylor (fifth in 1905) and M. H. Blackmore, while thirty-one completed the course.

Shortly after the start, Taylor drew to the front, followed by Jarvis and Harvey, and passing Grove Park Taylor led at 7mins. 48⅘sec., Jarvis, 8mins. 4secs., Harvey, 8mins. 22secs., but at the Ship Hotel Taylor only led by 11secs. Owing to his coach being on the wrong side, Taylor who used the trudgeon stroke throughout, swam a very erratic course. Jarvis, using the right over-arm, now began to draw on the leader, and on reaching the White Hart their times were:—Taylor, 17mins. 23⅘secs.; Jarvis, 17mins. 26secs; and Harvey (using the left over-arm stroke), 18 mins. 2⅘secs. A fine race was seen during the next half-mile. Jarvis all but caught Taylor, but the latter, sprinting away, led by twenty yards off Thorneycroft's Yard, the times at Chiswick Church being:—Taylor, 30mins. 25⅘secs.; Jarvis, 30mins. 38⅘secs.; Harvey, 32mins. 1sec. The leader, having the best of the tide, passed under Hammersmith Bridge in 42mins. 37secs., with a seven yards lead.

Jarvis was now moving in excellent form, and amid a mighty shout he went to the front off Harrod's Wharf, in 46mins. 9secs. At the mile post he had increased his lead to thirty yards in 51mins. 27secs., at which point Taylor, making a grand effort, came up hand over hand. Excitement was now intense, and when they reached the Fulham Football Ground two yards covered the pair. Spurt for spurt they covered the last hundred yards, but there was no alteration in the order, Jarvis winning for the eighth time in nine years in 1 hour 3mins. 40secs. He beat his previous best, made in 1903, by 8⅘secs.

AMATEUR S. A. 100 YARDS CHAMPIONSHIP.

The 100 yards national championship was decided last night at Nottingham, at the Nottingham S. C. Gala. There were five entries, the starters being the present holder, Zolken De Halmay, (of Budapest), whose time was 59secs., J. H. Derbyshire, Manchester (amateur champion of the Northern Counties), Cecil Healy (amateur champion of Australia), C. M. Daniels, (amateur champion of America, and winner of the 100 metres championship of the world at the recent Olympian Games at Athens), and G. H. Carlisle (half-mile and 220 yards champion of Notts). The race proved a most exciting one, Daniels, Healy, and Derbyshire being together all the way, and at the finish there was only a touch between Daniels, the winner, and Healy, who led by two yards from Derbyshire Halmay gave up at the end of 78 yards. The time, 58⅘secs. constitutes a record. Healy swam the distance in 59secs., and Derbyshire in 61secs. Healy was fast gaining on Daniels at the close.

REMARKABLE SWIM BY J. WOLFFE.

Jabez Wolffe, a well-known member of the Amateur Swimming Club, who gave much promise last year among the competitors for cross-Channel swimming honours, and who is now training at Dover for an attempt to swim from Dover to France during the present month, made a remarkably fine swim to-day, covering eighteen miles from Dover to Ramsgate in water at a temperature of 57 to 59 degrees.

Wolffe left the shore at Dover this morning in a small lugger with attending boat, at 8-30, accompanied by his trainer, Walter Brickett, D. Macdonald, a Ramsgate boatman acting as pilot, and A. Harvey, the Southern Counties Swimming Champion, who is training at Dover with Wolffe.

In half an hour after the start Wolffe had fetched up off the South Foreland, and half an hour later was off St. Margaret's Bay, where he was closely watched for some time by spectators on shore. From this point to Deal Pier Wolffe kept along at a steady pace, being once or twice checked by off currents. He passed Deal Pier Head at ten minutes past twelve, the piper playing "Cock o' the North," as he passed, much to the amusement of a large number of people who had assembled on the Pier Head. A number of persons came out in boats, and followed him for a considerable distance towards Sandown Castle. The coast steamer Edward William passed quite close to the swimmer, the passengers crowding to the side to watch the performance.

When nearing Sandown Castle the effect of an adverse current was felt, with a freshening breeze, which set up a nasty lop on the water, which frequently splashed into the swimmer's face Through Pegwell Bay Wolffe had to pull very hard, but he never seemed to tire, and arrive off Ramsgate about half-past three.

Off the Harbour there was a very strong tideway, and the water was considerably broken. Wolffe had a hard struggle to get through, but he finally got into Ramsgate Harbour at 3-48, swimming right into the Harbour in the presence of a crowd of people, who cheered and waved hats and handkerchiefs as he swam bravely and shoulder high in to the post.

Captain Webb and Jabez Wolffe are the only two swimmers who have made this Dover-Ramsgate swim, and finished right in the Port. Wolffe proposes to attempt the Channel swim on the 14th.

Wolffe accomplished the distance of eighteen miles in 6 hours 35 minutes. This is much quicker than the record of the late Captain Webb, who in 1875 covered the course in 8¼ hours.

RECORD SWIM BY MISS KELLERMAN.

In anticipation of her attempt to swim the English Channel, Miss Kellerman, who is feeling the benefit of her training at Broadstairs, decided to try a test swim to the Goodwin Lightship. This is a performance which, for many reasons, no one had yet accomplished The variety of the tides stands in the way of success, and unless a swimmer be speedy, failure is inevitable. The reputation of the Goodwin Sands does not impress the enthusiast with any particular wish to make his or her acquaintance with them, consequently other landmarks have always been selected by swimmers seeking public fame.

Miss Kellerman, on the morning of the 9th instant, set forth on her journey at ten minutes past four. The temperature of the water was 60 degrees, In view of the complication of tides, it would have been better had the start taken place an hour after high water. Miss Kellerman set out at a brisk pace, her head well above water, both arms thrown gracefully forward, and her body rolling forward easily. Her stroke varied from 33 to 39 a minute. She shot straight out from the bay on a beautiful sea in the direction of the Goodwin Lightship. The monotony of the swim was not relieved by the presence of one or more companions, who would have cheered her on her lonely journey by spells of sprinting. "Tucker" time came in thirty-five minutes, when a little custard was taken. In 1 hour 10 minutes a dense fog was ahead, and the atmosphere was decidedly cold. Despite the dreary outlook, Miss Kellerman swam at great speed. The wind freshened, and the swimmer, settling down into hard work, made rapid headway for the Lightship, but only the booming of the fog horn kept the swimmer straight. In 3 hours and 20 minutes Miss Kellerman was swimming across a strong tide, and the water was loppy. It was hard work, but without any variation she finally completed her self-imposed task. When she was abreast of the Goodwin Knoll Buoy, and half a mile from the fatal Goodwin Sands, the tide was spent, and after swimming eight miles and a half in 3 hours 34mins. 52⅕secs., Miss Kellerman boarded the boat. She was warmer than when she started, and her voice quite clear and strong, these being indications of unimpaired strength and vitality.

On Friday next, Miss Kellerman leaves London for Paris where she will compete in the Seine against Caulus (last years' winner), Burgess, and Billington. She will immediately return to Broadstairs and continue her preparation for the Channel swim.

Hunting.

THE GORDON'S HORSE HOUNDS.

22nd July.—Met at the 5th milestone on the Mysore Road, a really goodly gathering being present. Crossing the road and the railway, the Master (Mr. Gledstanes) drew through some scrub, and it was not long before the deep notes of some of "the Duke's" lot proclaimed the fact that the villain had been there. Shortly afterwards, however, the chorus died away and not even a whisper was heard. Evidently, the jack knew the purlieus of Gangahalli village well, also probably its henroosts and running the village in a series of twirls he naturally temporarily beat a pack that has only been introduced to native villages about six weeks ago. Grasping the situation however, the Master was round the village like a shot and quickly hit off the line on the other side. From here they ran at a good hunting pace in a south-westerly direction, the country being by no means easy and awkward nullahs frequent. An esteemed friend of mine—the first whip to wit—disappeared into one of these and essayed to catch his horse on rising. But the horse, albeit a trusted comrade, had other intentions, and that first whip watched the remainder of the run, so long as he could see it, from the crest of a hill. Continuing to run on the north of the Mysore Road and Railway until they had covered about four miles, the pack turned sharply left-handed and as they crossed the line near Kengeri Station, their jack was evidently not far in front. But he was a regular "old customer," and first puzzling hounds in a watery nullah, he doubled short back in another which was full of trappy quicksands. Here there was considerable grief—and incidentally language—but no real damage. Nevertheless he fairly beat hounds and huntsman at this point, albeit the nature of the country favoured him, and he well deserved his life. Certain sportsmen on their way home subsequently saw a very draggled and disreputable old dog jack crawling along the railway in the Bangalore direction. Hounds were not within trailing distance at the time, but—well! so far as deponent is concerned I doubt if there would have been a holloa had they been handy. A good jack is a positive quantity in the Bangalore country which is of value.

The pack had hardly lost their plucky old quarry when they were away again like wildfire, but the Master on mounting a bit of rising ground, descried a buck and doe chinkara, accompanied by a "butcha," in front of them. Forthwith a ride resembling that of "Richard Bullen" ensued, to stop the pack, and this was accomplished by Mr. Gledstanes and his whips just as the plucky little deer were beginning to tire But they had then lived before hounds at racing pace for quite three miles. A good day with lots of galloping. The popular first whip's horse was subsequently recovered by his trusty syce, but the animal was a veritable pincushion.

26th July.—Agram village was the fixture and a field of about sixty turned up including the British Resident, the Yuvaraja, and no less than five habits. (How could Facey Romford say that ladies in the hunting field were a nuisance?) A very long draw to the south of the Sarjapur Road resulted in nothing, and hounds horses, and men were becoming a bit tired, when an "electric thrill" shot through the pack in a nullah near Belandur village. A false alarm it seemed for though hounds feathered keenly, they could not own to the line outside the nullah, and hopes again sank to zero. Mr. Gledstanes, however, has whipped in to Colonel Wapshare in bygone days, in other words he has been educated in a good school, and drawing his own conclusions as to the direction in which the jack was likely to have travelled, he drew forward in that direction. And with success, for an eager interrogative whimper gradually swelled into a jubilant affirmative chorus, and it was a case of "sit down and ride." The country, barring certain awkward casuarina topes, was not on the whole bad, and the scent improved as they got on better terms with their jack. For a couple of miles they went as straight as a line, but he then turned under the tank bund near Haralkente village, and finding the pursuing chorus still too near, swung right-handed again through a truly awful paddy field. "Squelch—squelch," went everyone through mud and water, but whilst taking it out of the horses and the latest arrived hounds, which hereabouts naturally began to feel their want of condition tell, he also took it out of himself. Reaching the Ossur Road near the 6th milestone, he dwelt a bit in a casuarina tope, but the pack quickly made the little cover too hot to hold him and on its further side he had just topped the bund of a small tank, when there was a snap and a snarl, a cascade of hounds and all was over. A good fast twenty minutes' gallop in which all the five "habits" went well. They included Mrs. Stirling, Mrs. Mackenzie, Miss Harris, Miss Saunders, and Mrs. Wortabet, and the latter lady most fully deserved the brush with which the Master presented her. Shabash! The 30th Lancers are showing Bangalore real good sport and they deserve the warm thanks of every sportsmen who loves to see hounds work and horses gallop.

"SOAPEY SPONGE."

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

THE meet of hounds on Saturday, 21st instant, was at the 6th milestone on the Kurmund Road and, in spite of the terrible weather, a few sportsmen arrived at the meet without having been blown over the precipice. It was blowing a full gale in a downpour of rain and the weather was very thick. Everyone who got to the meet admitted the impossibility of hunting or attempting to hunt on such a day, and the Master took hounds back to kennels with an excellent knowledge of what a really bad monsoon day could be like.

On Monday, 23rd instant, Sandy Nullah Toll Bar was the scene of the meet. It was still raining and still blowing, but not quite so badly; and at times we were enveloped in thick fog, accompanied by a driving rain. A jack was discovered in the first draw in Beadnell's Shola and a holloa from the syces on the top of the hill proclaimed that he had gone away. Hounds hunted him slowly in rings round Hamlet Wood, Hearty Shola and Beadnell's Shola. Once he looked like facing the weather, for hounds, slipping out of the bottom side of Hearty Shola, ran down to the road at Pirate Shola. The Master gave the jack credit for going and had to make a long forward cast round a bog before he discovered the line below Bracken Wood. Hounds hunted slowly back and through Hamlet Wood to Bracken, where the jack was practically lost, but his line was found again and hounds ran hard as if for Wenlock; turned short back out of a bog and chivied him round Beadnell's again, when down came the mist enveloping us in darkness.

Those riders who were lucky enough to get away with them followed hounds over into Bracken, where the jack was flushed and with hounds right on him he had to go somewhere, and that pretty quickly, if he wished to save his brush. Three weeks ago the Master stopped an earth permanently under some big rocks in the Yemakal Valley and it was of this supposed haven of rest that the jack bethought him as, hotly pursued from Bracken Wood, he made the best of his way there. Unattended by the Master and with but a select few of the field up, including Captain Dennistoun, Captain Vane, Mr. H. P. Hodgson, Captain Duff and Mr. Dove Wilson, hounds ran like distraction through Wapshare's Hare Shola and Bacon Wood, whence Mr. Hodgson and Mr. Wilson were their only attendants. The jack tried the abovementioned earth and found it closed. He had no time to wait, for hounds were close to his brush, and rolled him over close to Bamboo Shola.

At noon on Tuesday last we met at Sultan Shola, near the 6th milestone on the Kurmund Road. It was a slightly fine day, but the weather was still very monsoonish and there was thick mist over the hill tops most of the time. There was not so much rain and wind as usual however. We first drew down the valley below Nedunkod Mund, when Captain Dennistoun viewed a jack on the hill west of the stream. Hounds were laid on and hunted him slowly to Samkedu Mund, where they could do nothing more with the line. We then drew on down the valley as far as the Yemakal Valley stream and then turned off towards One Tree Hill, where Captain Duff viewed a brace of jack. They ran together till close to Yemakal Shola, where hounds ran the line of one of them, which turned right-handed across the swamp and over the hill, turning afterwards up the valley towards Thukkurai Mund. Hounds then ran through the bottom of Karanmuda Shola and up the precipitous hill to the west of it, then turned left-handed along nearly to the Mekod Stream, then again left-handed over the tops of the hills just north of the Kurmund Bridge path, on down the hill as if for Nedunkod Mund, then left-handed to the stream below Sampedu Mund and sharp back right handed to ground in a sunken watercourse half a mile south of Yemakal Shola where they killed their jack underground, though over two hours' digging failed to relieve the corpse. This was a trying run of 55 minutes from strat to finish.

On Thursday, the hounds met at the Golf House at 8 A.M. The Master and his whipper-in, through the Secretary of the Gymkhana, had kindly provided coffee, biscuits and even strong drink, to fortify the field against the fatigues of the day, and we started full of hope, for the wind had dropped and it was a hunting morn. We trotted down to the municipal crossing and started to draw the Downs with New and Mills' Coverts on the way, and, although it was a fortnight since we visited these coverts, they failed us to-day, probably owing to the fact that this particular part of the Downs is a favourite one with the herdsman, whose dogs hunt and disturb the ground very early in the morning. Jackal Shola was also unproductive. We then trotted on to Rallywood and just as we reached the covert hounds flashed away on what proved to be the heel line of a jack from Rallywood and some minutes elapsed before hounds' heads were set in the right direction. They hunted slowly, leaving Monkey Shola on the left, to Tiger Shola, which we painfully climbed. Jack must have waited on the top, for a couple of hounds raced away close at him from there, leaving Andy Plantation on the right. It was hard work trying to catch them, as they ran through Democrat, Gaylad and Limerick Sholas.

"Now give a loose to the clean generous steed;
Flourish the whip, nor spare the galling spur;
But in the madness of delight forget
Your fears. For o'er the rocky hills we range,
And dangerous our course; but in the brave,
True courage never fails."

Once the Master had a real chance of getting hounds together, but the field viewed jack breaking covert on the far side and pursued without any hounds, save two or three couple galloping with the horses which naturally picked up the line. In the Nunjanaad Valley hounds got together for the first time since leaving Tiger Shola and they hunted their jack up and down and in and out of the nullahs and small sholas in the Nunjanaad Valley. Twice they looked all like catching him and there were two very tired jack in the valley before the Master stopped hounds but I am not sure whether they were more tired than the hounds or the horses we rode. The day's sport did not compare well with the capital day we experienced on Tuesday when hounds hunted for 55 minutes in capital form and killed their jack.

SECUNDERABAD JUNIOR TOURNAMENT.

ROYAL ARTILLERY vs. 20TH DECCAN HORSE.—After many postponements, owing to wet weather, the opening game in the tournament was at length decided on the 21th ultimo. The ground was very slippery and there was a high wind throughout the game. The Deccan Horse had the best of the exchanges all through, their opponents showing lack of combination. In the first half play ruled fast and even, the Deccan Horse scored 1 goal and 3 subsidiaries and the R. A. 1 goal and 1 subsidiary. The second chukker saw the Deccan Horse attacking, but neither side scored. The third chukker was fairly even and there was no addition to the score, but in the fourth the Cavalry put one goal and a subsidiary to their score, the Gunners scoring a minor point The Deccan Horse continued to have the best of the game and in the next period hit 2 goals; they adding 3 minor points in the last chukker ran out victorious by 4 goals and 7 subsidiaries to 1 goal and 2 subsidaries. Teams:—

7TH ROYAL FUSILIERS vs. HYDERABAD FATTEH MAIDAN GYMKHANA.—This match was also played on the 26th ultimo, an excellent game being witnessed. In the opening periods the Gymkhana pressed and put on 2 goals and 2 subsidiaries, the Fusiliers only scoring one minor point. Then the Fusiliers got going and play was very exciting, the third chukker closing with the score Gymkhana 3 goals 2 subsidiaries, Fusiliers 3 goals 1 subsidiary. Fast and even play continued, both teams adding to their score. In the last few minutes the Gymkhana registered 2 goals and when the bugle sounded they were left winners by 6 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 5 goals and 1 subsidiary. Teams:—

Semi-Final.

26TH LIGHT CAVALRY vs. 20TH DECCAN HORSE.—These teams met in the semi-final round on the 28th ultimo. The Light Cavalry had the best of the game and won by 5 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 2 goals and 1 subsidiary. Their opponents played hard throughout. The 26th opened the scoring and at the end of the first chukker had scored 2 goals and 2 subsidiaries to the Deccan's single goal. The second period gave the 26th a goal and the opponents a minor point, and in the third chukker the 26th put on 2 goals and the Deccan Horse one. The fourth chukker was devoid of score, but in the fifth another goal to the 26th enabled them to win as stated. Teams as before.

Final.

26TH LIGHT CAVALRY vs. FUTTEH MAIDAN GYMKHANA.—These teams met in the final on Monday evening before a large gathering, which included the British Resident and his Staff. A fast game took place, but the Cavalry were the superior team and were eventually victorious by 5 goals and 5 subsidiaries to 2 goals and 2 subsidiaries. Teams:—

"All flesh is grass," remarked the barnstorming tragedian as he thrust a handful of hay into the caves of his tights.

A phrenologist says that "fullness under the eye denotes language.' When the fullness is caused by another man's fist it denotes very bad language, generally.

One of a party dining at a by no means swell restaurant looked at the compound mentioned on the bill of fare as butter, and said it was oleomargarine. Exception was taken to his pronunciation of the word, and as each one had different ideas on the subject, it was agreed to ask the waiter. Upon hearing what the trouble was, he looked at them for a moment, and then flicked the flies from the sugar in an absent-minded manner.

"Well," he at length remarked, "I have to pronounce it butter, or else leave the place."

I. F. A. SHIELD TOURNAMENT.

SEMI-FINAL.

H. L. I. vs. DALHOUSIE F. C.—There was a large crowd at this match on the Calcutta ground on Wednesday. A heavy downpour of rain in the second half spoilt the game. Play was very even at the start, Prike and Holley for the Dals and Innes and Lieutenant Malcolm for the Military being conspicuous for some good runs. The H. L. I. put through on one occasion, but the point was disallowed on the score of offside and the interval arrived with a blank sheet. On changing ends the Highlanders assumed the aggressive and several hard shots were sent in. Prike got away for the Trades team and sent in a smasher, Lees, however, got to it and saved. The H. L. I. took up the attack once more, and after an unsuccessful attempt by Innes, Lees put through. The Dals tried hard to equalise and Prike almost put them on terms, but the ball was got away to the other end again and Lees registered a second point. Play ruled fast and Dalhousie made desperate attempts to reduce the margin. They could not get through and Lees adding a third goal shortly after, the soldiers won by three to nil, and qualified to meet Calcutta in the final. Teams:—

H. L. I.—Lees, goal; Howard and Renton, backs; Robson, Harvey and Munro, half-backs; Collins, Lieutenant Malcolm, Lees, Allen and Innes, forwards.

DALHOUSIE F. C.—Mackenzie, goal; Reynolds and Jackson, backs; Storrie, Stewart and Wiggles, half-backs; Ball, Woods, Prike, Holley and Stimson, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. Lees, Rangers F. C.

Final.

H. L. I. vs. CALCUTTA F. C.—An immense gathering lined the ground on Saturday to witness the final game in the tournament. The afternoon was a perfect one for football and an excellent game was witnessed. The result was a pointless draw, though Calcutta had had the better of the play. The H. L. I. were the first to attack, but the ball was soon taken to their territory, where Lees was called upon to save in turn shots by Binning, Sherman and Fyfe. He defended his charge in excellent style and the ball was taken to the other end, where Dods was kept busy. The H. L. I. gained a couple of corners, but they were cleared. A free kick against Calcutta was finely disposed of by Dods, and then the C. F. C. forwards got away, Binning and Sherman testing Lees with a couple of hard shots, which he cleared. In the second half the Calcutta men returned to the attack. Fyfe, after a nice run, passed to Sherman, who appeared to have the goal at his mercy. He missed the ball, but Binning got to it, his shot being cleared. Occasional runs were put in by Lieutenant Malcolm and Innes, but the Calcutta backs stopped them and once more the H. L. I. goal was visited. Fyfe headed the ball into the goal post; Drew next got possession, but his shot went over the bar. Lees in goal played a marvellous game and disposed of shots by Fyfe, Drew, Ansell and Binning, Calcutta, were unable to score in spite of their repeated efforts, and the game ended in a pointless draw.

The match was replayed last evening before another big crowd. Lieutenant Malcolm and Binning were absent from their respective sides, Devlin and Dick taking their places. Calcutta scored a goal in the first half, Fyfe heading in from a corner, and in spite of repeated efforts the Highlanders were unable to get level. The C.F.C. thus won by a goal to nil.

Calcutta.—Dods, goal; Gahan and Cooper, backs; Ansell McConnell and Crawford, half-backs; Binning, Cooper, Fyfe, Drew, and Foster, forwards.

H. L. I.—Lees goal; Howard and Renton backs; Robson, Darcy and Munro, half-backs; Collins, Lieutenant Malcolm, Lees, Allen and Innes, forwards

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL IN CALCUTTA.

OLYMPIANS vs. HOWRAH SPORTING.—This match in the third round of the Trades Cup was played on Friday last, the 27th ultimo, on the Olympian ground. The wind spoilt the game to a very great extent. Immediately after the start Olympians commenced to press and kept their opponents penned in for the first ten minutes. Howrah then broke away and scored what proved to be the winning goal of the match. The rest of the game was one long attack on the Howrah goal, but it must be said that the Olympians' efforts were of the feeblest description and were easily repulsed by the Howrah halves and backs, who seldom allowed a shot to reach their goalkeeper. To show the one-sided nature of the game it may be mentioned that the Olympian goalkeeper only handled the ball once.

Result :—Howrah Sporting one, Olympians nil.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IT was a great pity that the rain should have interfered so greatly with the matches in the semi-final round for the I. F. A. Challenge Shield, and, indeed, it speaks volumes for the excellent condition of the C. F. C. ground that football should have been at all possible in such weather as we experienced on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week. If the enthusiasm of the Caledonian's supporters could have in any way affected the issue of the match Calcutta would have been badly beaten on Tuesday. Although their victory of one goal to love was by no means brilliant, it was sufficient to put them into the final which was, of course, what they wanted. The game was terribly sticky and there was a powerful amount of sliding and slipping, so that the field almost represented the interior of Kealman's Rink at the beginning of the season. Caledonia's superior pace in the forward line, which would undoubtedly have told in their favour on a dry day, was much discounted by the surface slush and the Calcutta passing was almost martial in its regularity and precision. Wade and Chandler bore up bravely as long as they could, but they were fairly worn down at the close of the game, and Binning just ran up in time to shoot a goal at close quarters before the Caledonia backs could realize that the ball had gone from one wing to another right across the mouth of goal.

The weather conditions were even worse on Wednesday when the H. L. I. met Dalhousie on the C. F. C. ground. The rain poured down incessantly from 3-30 P.M. to 5 and then ceased to gather strength for a torrential fall during the half time interval. The Dalhousie forward line was very weak in this match, Stimson, who took Gibson's place at outside left, being very slow on the ball and too easily deprived when in possession. Reynolds and Jackson were constantly repelling the H. L. I. attacks. It was not until the last quarter of an hour that the H. L. I. were able to score and then they put on three goals in succession, mainly owing to the speed of Lieutenant Malcolm.

The result of the final tie between H. L. I. and Calcutta played on Saturday came as a great disappointment to the supporters of either side. I wrote some time ago about the size of the crowd which turned out to see Calcutta beat the South Lancs. Saturday's crowd was about three times as large again. The C. F. C. ground was in perfect condition and looked as true as a billiard table. If it is generally admitted that Calcutta had the best of Saturday's game, it must be equally admitted that Renton at back and Lees in goal saved the game for the H. L. I. Had it not been for these two players Calcutta must have scored three times in the last five minutes. The game was of an intensely exciting character throughout and it became perceptible towards the close that the strain was telling on temperament of certain of the military players. One incident whereby McConnell, the Calcutta centre half, was openly insulted on the field, should certainly not have been overlooked by the Referee. Lieutenant Malcolm and Binning both suffered injuries to their nether limbs during the progress of the game.

What a tremendous lot of bickering and dispute there has been in football circles lately. First of all there was the Howrah-Dalhousie incident, about which the usual crop of letters have appeared in the dailies complaining of the I. F. A. Council's treatment of Gibson and Smith. Mr. Stimson of the Dalhousie F. C. is the only one of these letter writers who has had the common courtesy to append his own name to his effusion. Of the others "Spectator's" and "Fair-play's" it can only be presumed that they are afraid for obvious reasons to disclose their identity. It is all very fine and large to demand the disbandment of the I. F. A., but will "Fair-play" or "Spectator" kindly inform us what substitute they propose to introduce. Other subjects of dissension have been the Customs' protest against the Referee, Sergeant Butterworth, in their Shield Tie with the H. L. I. The warning of two Y. M. C. A. (Wellington Branch) F. C. men off the field in a junior competition, and the raiding of the Sovabazar ground the other evening by an infuriated crowd of Babus thirsting for the blood of the National Association goal-keeper for no apparent reason. The Trades Cup competition has evoked scores of petty protests, complaints and quarrels such as the Babu's soul delights in. And yet football is considered a sport. Some would rather have it as subject for the mature decisions of a High Court Judge.

CALCUTTA INTER-OFFICE COMPETITION.

The final stages of the Inter-Office Golf competition at Barrackpore were reached last week end, and the tournament is now completed with Messrs. George Henderson and Co., as winners, their aggregate total being recorded as 607. Their team consisted of Messrs. H. R. D. Munn, A. S. Drew, C. Alexander, H. E. Holden W. Ross Craik, and A. D. Wilson, who are to be congratulated on their victory, for though by no means the best side on paper, they almost alone played up to form. Not many of the best local players were included in the competition and the individual scoring was mostly poor, 86 by Mr. P. H. Browne, of Messrs. Mackinnon Mackinzie and Co., and by Mr. H. W. Dick of the National Bank being the best cards registered. Another year it would be far better from a golfing point of view if each team was reduced from six players to four, or if the tournament was conducted on the knock out match play principle. Altogether fifteen teams returned their scores, the details being as follows, and so closed a competition which has at any rate afforded much amusement and discussion during the dull months of the year.

George Henderson and Co.	607

THE MADRAS TOURNAMENT.

SUFFOLK REGIMENT vs. M. V. GUARDS.—This match, one of the opening games in the tournament, was played on the M. C. C. ground on the 23rd ultimo. The Guards were without Captain Stephenson who was unable to play, but they put up a good game nevertheless. After some even play the Suffolk attacked and Wilson opened the scoring. Continuing to press Fordham added to their score before half time. On crossing over the Guards played hard and a fine run and pass by Blake enabled Denton to put through. Encouraged by their success the Volunteers made great efforts to get on terms and play ruled fast to the end. There was no further scoring, however, the holders of the cup winning by 2 goals to one. Teams :—

SUFFOLK.—Denton, goal; Jarvis and Tilbrook, backs; Peacock, Lieut. Stubbs and May, half-backs; Fordham, Sparrow, Capt. Wilson, Bullard and Candler, forwards.

MADRAS V. G.—Gillon, goal; Scott and A. Laybourne, backs; Conquest, B. Laybourne and Moresby, half-backs; Steele, Eagles, Blake, Marcar and Ingham, forwards.

2ND CHESHIRES vs. 40TH BRIGADE R. F. A.—Played on the Engineering ground on the 23rd ultimo. The Cheshires went away at the start and after an abortive corner a goal was scored by Turner. They continued the attack, but the Gunners relieved and taking the ball down forced a corner. Nothing resulted and the Cheshires returned to the charge. They obtained two corners in quick succession, but failed to convert and half time was called soon after. Up and down play on resuming was followed by an attack on the Artillery goal. The ball was cleared and scrummaging took place at the other end. The Cheshires again got possession, however, and the Gunners' goal was stormed. Turner and Trueman both sent in hot shots which were finely stopped, but Simpson managed to find the net. Fast play gave place to another attack in the Artillery's ground and after one unsuccessful attempt, Harris scored the third goal, the Cheshires thus winning by 3 goals to nil. Teams :—

40TH R. F. A.—Mellor, goal; Golding and Lieut. Clover, backs; Humphreys, Lieut. Farran and Sheppard, half-backs; Capt. Parry, Lieut. Duke, and Lieut. Butchart, Harrison and Hawthorne, forwards.

CHESHIRES.—Wakefield, goal; Price and Edwards, backs; Lieut. Savage, Rossell and Lieut. Simpson, half-backs; Woods, Park, Lieut. Turner, Trueman and Harris, forwards.

M. C. C. vs. ESSEX REGIMENT.—These teams met on the 24th instant, the match ending in a win for the M. C. C. by 2 goals to one. The initial play was fast and Ogden was conspicuous for some fine runs. A good bout of passing terminated in Fuller putting the ball through. The Essex next pressed and obtained a corner, nothing resulted, but they continued to attack and three more corners accrued. All proved fruitless and the first half ended with the M. C. C. attacking. On changing ends Ogden got away and registered the second goal for the M. C. C. Then the Essex men had a turn, but could not get through. Up and down play followed and a corner to each team was not improved upon. The game was a fast one, the ball being alternately at either end till the Essex got way and Pattison put through. A foul against the M. C. C. within their own semicircle looked as if their opponents would draw level, but Murray cleared and Ogden took the ball down. The remaining play was rather in favour of the Madras C. C., who eventually won as stated. Teams :—

ESSEX.—Coulson, goal; Russell and Cramp, backs; Lieut. Bowen, Chivers and Parker, half-backs; Naylor and Lieuts. Cooper, Raymond, White and Pattison, forwards.

M. C. C.—Dawes, goal; Faith and McIver, backs; Irwin, Strouts and Murray, half-backs; Fuller, Ogden, Clarke, Layard and Coles, forwards.

SUFFOLKS vs. 52ND R. G. A.—On the 25th ultimo the Cup holders met the R. G. A. team and won a decisive victory by 11 goals to nil. The Suffolks attacked all through and in the first half registered 5 goals. The game continued to be a very one-sided one in the second moiety and six more goals were added. Captain Wilson and Pte. Fordham were responsible for most of the scoring. Teams :—

SUFFOLKS as before.

Semi-Finals.

M. C. C. vs. MANCHESTER REGIMENT.—There was a large attendance to witness this match on the M. C. C. ground last Thursday evening. The game was a scrambling one and resulted in the defeat of the home team by a goal. Each side attacked in turn at the start and then the M. C. C. pressed for a while; they were unable to score and after a spell of slow play the Manchesters got away and obtained a corner. Faith cleared, but they got the ball again and Browne hit a goal. The M. C. C. tried to equalise and Clarke, Coles and Ogden were conspicuous for some smart runs, but nothing came of them and the teams crossed over. The Manchesters forced the pace at the beginning of the second half and put on two corners, neither of which was improved upon. Uninteresting play followed and then the home team attacked, but could not score. Dawes was again called upon to save and after he had cleared Ogden and Layard tried to get through. A scrimmage in front of the soldiers' goal took place and a goal seemed imminent, but they got the ball away and time was called soon after. Teams :—

MANCHESTERS :—Nadin, goal; Fletcher and Jones, backs; Pilling, Oreagh and Whitely, half-backs; Lieut. Browne, Kershaw, Langley, Pearson and Forde, forwards.

M. C. C. as before.

2ND CHESHIRES vs. 2ND SUFFOLKS.—A disappointing game was witnessed between these teams on Thursday. Play was for the most part slow and the cup holders were defeated by a goal to nil. The Cheshires were the first to attack and a corner resulted, the Suffolks cleared and taking the ball down Wilson had a shot which Wakefield kept out. The Cheshires obtained another corner soon after. The ball was again got away and Wilson made two attempts to score. He was unsuccessful and Trueman getting possession took the ball to the Suffolks' goal, where after a scrimmage Woods put through. A fruitless corner to the Suffolks was the only other point worthy of note in the first half. When play was recommenced each team forced a corner and then the Cheshires pressed for a space. The Suffolks broke up the attack however, and a determined onslaught was made on the Cheshires' citadel. Wilson sent in a hard shot which was stopped and two other attempts being unsuccessful the Suffolks retired beaten as stated. Teams as before.

MANCHESTER REGIMENT vs. 2ND CHESHIRES.—The final was played before a large crowd on Saturday and ended in a victory for the Manchesters by a penalty goal to nil. Justice Boddam gave away the Cup to the winners.

Boxing.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP OF CALCUTTA.

THE Theatre Royal was packed on Friday evening to witness a boxing entertainment, the pièce de resistance of which was a fifteen-round contest between Bill Fisher and Gunner Vickers of the 75th R.F.A. for the Championship of Calcutta. Those concerned with the organisation of the show must be congratulated on its success, for everything went smoothly, and apparently all present were satisfied. Mr. W. O. Rees officiated as Referee, Mr. Frank Smallman held the clock, and Mr. Vernon was Master of the Ceremonies. The programme opened with a four-round bout between two light weights—"Dixie Kid" (8-10) and Harry Johnston of Australia (9st.). The coloured boxer, who is a remarkably well set up little man, soon had the better of his opponent, the Australian crying enough in the second round.

Next came a five-round bout between Gunners Hood (9st. 7lbs.) and Evans (9st. 6lbs.), both of 75th R.G.A. The contestants were very evenly matched and the fight went the full five rounds, Evans eventually winning on points. Hood got a nasty cut over the eye in the first round and when he came up in the second his left optic was closed. But despite this disadvantage he fought pluckily and the mill was a sprightly one throughout.

The last of the preliminaries was a four-round contest between Phil Pickering, erstwhile a sparring partner of Jack McAuliffe, and Gunner Walker of the 75th R.G.A. They fought at catch weights, about 11st. each, and the four rounds were gone through. Pickering was more than a match for his crouching opponent and administered some heavy jabs with his left. Walker rushed in repeatedly, but could make no impression on his opponent, who boxed in good style and won on points.

FISHER vs. GUNNER VICKERS.—Fisher stands 5ft. 7¼ins. and weighed 10st. 11½lbs. He won the championship from Govia a couple of years ago, knocking him out in seven rounds. He has also met Spernick of the K.O.S. B's. and Lce. Corpl. Swan of the Royal Irish Rifles. Vickers is the same height and weighed 10st. 12½lbs. He has done a lot of fighting in England and America and is light weight champion of the West of England. He beat Smith for a light weight competition at the National Sporting Club, London, and has met, among others, Ted Lee, Tom Rooney, Geo. Roach, Kid Davis, W. Gardiner, D. Thomas, Kid Johnson, Sanders Short, and Bobby Dobbs.

Both stripped well, Fisher looking in better condition than his opponent, who has not been long out of hospital. They soon got to work and Fisher forced the pace; he got in some hard punches on the jaw and when the gong sounded went to his corner with the lead on points. In the second round Vickers pulled himself together and came home with some telling jabs above Fisher's heart. The coloured man, however, kept his right going and had the best of the closing stages of the round. The third round found Vickers showing signs of distress and Fisher administered some hard punishment, eventually flooring the gunner. He rose, however, at the seventh beat and kept going till time was called. The fourth round ended the fight, for Fisher waded in and with a terrific punch on the mouth floored his man, who was counted out, Fisher being declared winner amidst great enthusiasm.

After the fight Lance-Corporal Swan, Royal Irish Rifles, who on a former occasion beat Fisher on points in a six-round contest, and Private O'Gorman, of the Royal Munster Fusiliers, challenged the winner, and it is understood these challenges will be accepted.

NAINI TAL FIFTH GYMKHANA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

FOR once the gods were kind and the gymkhana on Saturday 21st July, took place in perfect weather. Fields ruled rather smaller than usual owing to the absence of the Government House party who are on tour in the plains.

The following is a list of the entries and winners. The committee are to be congratulated on their selection of a most popular and amusing programme, everything passing off without a hitch, the conditions being easily understood by all competitors and leaving no excuse for a mistake.

CIRCUS STAKES.—Gentlemen to lead their ponies unsaddle from first to second post, saddle and trot to third post, unsaddle and trot bareback to finishing post.

Entries :—Mr. Cheeke, Mr. Gould, Mr. Farr, Captain Rice.

Won by Mr Gould, who bumped home a street ahead of the rest.

CRACKNEL STAKES.—Gentlemen to gallop to a table on which will be found cracknel biscuits, soda water and cigars.

Gentlemen to eat a cracknel, drink small soda, whistle first bar of God Save the King, light a cigar and gallop to finishing post.

Entries :—Captain C. H. Bayley, Mr. Cheeke, Mr. Gould, Mr. Farr, Mr. Jackson, Captain Rice.

Won by Mr. Bayley, who eat, drank, smoked and whistled with the greatest solemnity and marvellous rapidity.

THE GURKHA RACE.—Round the Flats a great crowd of men turned up and as usually I could neither catch nor pronounce the name of the winner who easily outstripped his fellows

BOTTLE BREAKING STAKES.—Ladies to gallop to a given point, dismount, hand their ponies to syces, run fifty yards, break three bottles, run back, mount and gallop to finishing point.

Entries:—Miss Murray, Mrs. Lawrence, Mrs. Goodfellow, and Miss Impey.

This was won by Miss Impey. The ladies were much out of breath from their exertions in running and their aim consequently very wild.

RESCUE STAKES.—Ladies to gallop to a given point leading their partner's pony, dismount, run to their partners who are tied up, untie them, run back hand in hand, mount and gallop to finishing post holding hands.

Entries :—Mrs. Goodfellow and Mr. Jackson, Mrs. Lawrence and Mr. Gould, Mrs. Strange and Mr. Cheeke, Miss Murry and Mr. Martin, Miss Impey and Major Talbot.

A good race, all being well up.

Miss Murray and Mr. Martin won by a length.

HORSEWOMANSHIP STAKES.—Ladies to walk from first to second post, halt, and on the word of command passage in line from second to third post, canter from third to fourth and rein back from fourth to finishing post.

Any lady not passaging properly will be disqualified.

Entries :—Miss Murray, Mrs. Lawrence, Mrs. Goodfellow, Miss Impey.

Won by Mrs. Goodfellow. Easily.

Mrs. Lawrence whose pony was very wild being second.

FEATHERED BIPED RACE.—Ladies to bring their own birds and drive them with the assistance of their partner over a given course.

No guiding or leading by hand allowed, light parasole and canes only to be used.

Entries :—Mrs. Woodyatt and Mr. Jackson, Mrs. Goodfellow and Mr. C. H. Bayley, Mrs. Lawrence, and Mr. Gould, Mrs. Gilbert Cooper and Mr. Martin, Miss Murray and Mr. Cox, Miss Impey and Mr. Talbot.

Won by Mrs. Gilbert Cooper and Mr. Martin's Duck, the only bird to complete the course.

This was a most laughable sight, the feathered bipeds doing their best to run in any direction except the right one. (Fouls) were numerous but no objections were lodged.

A WELL-KNOWN PHYSICIAN AND SPECIALIST gave the undermentioned prescription to a lady suffering from nervous disorder and affection of the skin, caused by indigestion :—She should drink

as it did not require any preparation, being in powder form; a spoonful could be mixed into a tumbler of water at the dinner-table, and the Barley Water was made.

INBREEDING ON THE TURF.

THE April number of Baily's Magazine contains, among other matters, an article entitled "Herod Blood," in course of which occurs a passage which affords text for curious speculation. Having received the facts which show that Herod blood still predominates in the most marked degree in modern racehorses, though the blood of Eclipse is "gradually pushing it aside," the writer, Mr. S. C. Burke, proceeds to comment upon the ascendancy of the Eclipse male line and the slow disappearance of the Herod blood: but the gist of his paper—or let us say the point which appeals to us—is the fact on which he lays stress as to the breeding of these two old sires: "a curious point about the pedigree of both Herod and Eclipse is that this same Spanker blood has been handed down to us through only one channel, and that by the incestuous mating of Spanker and his dam. The produce of this mare was the granddam of Betty Leedes who, in her turn, was the dam of the two Childers. This piece of incestuous mating seems to have been the rock on which the British thoroughbred was built, for it will be found on examining all the old pedigrees that their strength lies in their inbreeding to the two Childers (the No. 6) family." Examination of their pedigrees, most conveniently perhaps in the "Horse-Breeder's Handbook" by the late Joseph Osborne, will reveal the details of ancestry, and confirm Mr. Burke's further observation that Eclipse was the more inbred horse of the two. From the fact that the blood of the more inbred horse is gradually ousting that of the less, he argues that greater prepotency attaches to the blood of the more incestuously bred horse and goes to nature in search of evidence to support his contention. Up to a certain point we must allow that he makes out his case. We cannot get away from the fact that the conditions under which wild or feral horses live are all in favour of the closest of incestuous breeding. The master stallion remains in command of his drove of mares brooking no rival and driving away his own sons as soon as they are old enough to display passion: under such circumstances it is obvious that a drove of wild horses consists of individuals incestuously bred. When the master stallion, through efflux of time, surrenders command of his mob, he is ousted almost infallibly by one of his own sons who has joined battle with him when the old horse endeavoured to expel him from the drove: and the son taking up the position of the sire, incestuous breeding continues and repeats itself with little variation save by such accident as may throw in the way a stray mare from a broken up drove or a bachelor stallion which succeeds in luring away a few mares to form a fresh drove. Regarding the normal course of horse life under normal conditions from generation to generation, we must acknowledge that nature intended the horse to be produced by closest inbreeding and that such close inbreeding produces benefits which we must accept as existing if we cannot analyse them. Now by some subtle and mysterious influence a closely inbred horse is best fitted for the existence he leads in a state of nature: we must take this to be so; Nature does not make mistakes in these vital matters: but does it follow that the closely inbred horse is the best fitted for the very artificial life of the racecourse? Mr. S. C. Burke investigates the antecedents of Derby and Oaks winners since the year 1800 and he finds that "the male line of Eclipse has been successful in 70 Derbies as compared with 25 won by representatives of the Herod male line. In the Oaks 62 winners are sired by direct male descendants of Eclipse while only 28 can be claimed by Herod." Of the dams of winners 55 were got by Eclipse horses and 36 by Herod horses. This is worth noticing, but we venture to suggest does not prove the case for incestuous breeding. True, the conditions of racing in the beginning of the 19th century demanded more of the staying quality than they do nowadays: but is the preponderance of the Eclipse successes due to the old sire's more incestuous breeding? We cannot think that the case may be called proven, though we grant the very extreme probability that incestuous blood is likely to retain its prepotency through a longer series of generations than blood less inbred. Mr. Burke goes further: he produces evidence to show that "there is some natural force which is always working to place the Eclipse male line on top. It is quite evident that the male line of Eclipse cannot be swamped and that the blood gets stronger and stronger the older it grows." It would seem as though we must admit that the method of breeding which suits the horse in a state of nature also suits it in its artificial state. We apologise for putting forward a statement so self-evident as that Eclipse blood has been used because, and only because, it has at all times been successful in getting racehorses to run under whatever conditions have ruled at various periods since its merits were proved during the last quarter of the 18th century. The family of the thoroughbred is unfortunately too small to provide us with parallel cases which should help to prove or disprove the theory: and unless the owner of some great horse should be public spirited enough to try the experiment of incestuous breeding with him to his own daughter and to repeat the experiment more than once we are not likely to obtain any new light on this curious point in horse-breeding.

It was, we believe, an axiom among the "Feeders" or trainers of game cocks in the cock fighting days that a nest of incestuous game eggs was worth a score of others not incestuously produced. The fact is not one which helps us at all in coming to any opinion in connection with the horse: but as an example of the success of incestuous breeding for a definite purpose, and that one which tested the creature's natural powers to the utmost, it is worth notice. Of course it is no more than elementary knowledge of bird life would lead us to suspect: the cock is a polygamist, he resents the intrusion of outsiders on his domestic preserves, and if afforded a chance would, as a matter of course, interbreed with hens of his own begetting. In a word, we may assume that among animals and birds gregarious in the degree in which horses and fowls are gregarious, e.g., with one master male ruling a number of females, incestuous breeding is the natural law and produces young best fitted for the battle of life. And we may fairly suppose that given a good horse such as Eclipse, inbred as was Eclipse, that horse will have in him in its highest degree those qualities concentrated which confer upon him his merit, and that this concentration makes for the prepotency which is asserted through many subsequent generations.

A solemn old scientist printed the fact that by bathing the feet in tepid water a man could double his circulation, and now all the editors of our daily journals are having tanks fitted to their offices.

One of the biggest handicap trials on record was that of Delight for the City and Suburban. His trial horse was that famous miler, Saccharometer, who just previously, in the Lincolnshire Handicap, had only been beaten a neck with 9st. in the saddle, by Treasure Trove, to whom he was conceding no less than 49lbs. After this Treasure Trove carried a penalty, and won the Great Metropolitan in a trot.

For the City and Suburban Delight was apportioned 5st. 9lbs., and there was a long dispute between his owner and trainer as to whether he should be tried with Saccharometer at 2st. or 21lbs.

"It's a great task," said Mr. Clarew. "It's like putting Saccharometer to the City and Suburban at 7st."

Goodwin, the trainer, however, had his way, and the pair were tried at 21lbs. Delight winning with such ease that in Goodwin's opinion the result would have been the same if they had met at 10lbs.

After this it was not a question of price in backing Delight for the City and Suburban, but as to how much money could be got on, and 2 to 1 was closed with freely at the finish. Of all the certainties ever known in racing, perhaps this was the greatest, and, as might have been expected, Delight sailed home by himself.

Sporting Notes.

RACING is once again in full swing in Calcutta. We opened our season with an excellent afternoon's sport last Saturday. The entries were disappointing with only fifty horses in; but considering there were only two scratched out of this number, in the result matters were as brisk as most people could wish.

This week, with all the races bar one handicaps, the response given by owners has been much better and the number of entries for next Saturday amounts to eighty. As a matter of fact, however, this is not quite so good as it appears at first sight, as of this eighty the Monsoon Plate monopolises no less than thirty-one. This is an absolute record and if the bulk of them start we do not know how they will manage, as we feel certain that not more than sixteen can possibly crowd into one line at the 6-furlong post. In the cold weather once we saw a field of seventeen start for a 5-furlong race, but then it must be remembered that the course is considerably wider at the cold weather 5-furlong post than it is at the Monsoon 6 furlongs. It is quite possible there may be twenty-three or twenty-four runners for this event, in which case six or seven horses would have to start in the second row, which will naturally considerably minimise their chances of winning. Of these thirty-one Mr. Galstaun and "Mr. Field" have three apiece, while J. D. Scott has no less than four to his credit, over and above Mr. E. J. Marshall's Master Charlie, so he ought to be able to select something pretty near the winner from among this lot. Then again Mr. Marshall, in conjunction with Mr. Paris, has two more in the Hastings stable, Mornine and Goldstamp. The trainer of this stable, Wishart, has also his own horse, Warstripe, entered, the winner of the Summer Plate on Saturday last. The smart little horse, Winklet, is also more or less of this stable and is entered in the name of Mr. Paris. So quite a number of these horses may be said to have more or less relative interests. Mr. N. R. Chowdhury has entered Leda and Bouquet, both useful. Four of last Saturday's winners are among the lot, namely, Warstripe, Devil's Limit, Solace and Duplex II. Swindle (late Bassini) is also entered.

Old Springlock won this identical race, the Monsoon Plate, carrying 10st. 12lbs.; while of the rest of next Saturday's field The Chump finished third carrying 8st. 11lb. and Honest Lady was fourth with 9st. 4lbs., while Goldstamp, 8st. 3lbs., and Pylara, 8st. 9lbs., were among the "also rans." Handellian won the Sprinters' Long Distance Plate last March. Trencherman is a horse that has come down in the world, from an erstwhile aspirant to the Viceroy's Cup. He ran only four times last year and with no success. Bouquet and Leda won two and three races respectively last season, while Downland won the Welter Handicap for horses last March and Gal the Amateur Handicap the following meeting, beating Winklet, by whom she was being conceded 3st. and 5lbs.

The Fort Plate for horses which have never won a race of any description value Rs. 50 or over has attracted fourteen, twelve of them being in different interests. This race is not a handicap, the heights being 9st. 3lbs. all round, and we like that smart little horse Cyril the best of the lot, and being very compact and closely coupled he should go well through the mud. Craigendarrie is bound to run well and so must Calina, which Mr. Galstaun got out from England at the same time as Craigendarrie, but subsequently sold to Mr. Mackenzie. Harold is entered for this race as well as for the hurdle race, but as Mr. Galstaun has already two others entered for the hurdle race he would doubtless prefer to go for this race. This however is out of the question, the terms of the race being for horses which have never won a race of any description. Harold has won no less than four races during the past season, namely, one of the open hurdle races at the last year's Monsoon races, two flat races over Rs. 50 up at Asansol, and dead-heated with Corrie Roy in a hurdle race up at Lucknow. It is extraordinary how careless some people can be about entering their horses. During this time he was the property of Timol. Leading Lady should find 9st. 3lbs. more to her liking, and Lord Chippendale should run an improved horse.

There are eleven down for the Pony Plate, six of each competed last week, the best of these being Wal and Kathleen II., and the one time champion, Gentle Lady, who has probably not come all the way from Dehra Dun for nothing. Ping Pong is entered again for Mr. Galstaun, he also having Gowan. The others are Marie Lloyd, Kalyani, Ivanhoe II. and Miss Beryl, and they have all run several times in Calcutta, especially the last named.

Turning to the jump races there is a liberal allowance of three figuring in the card, and good fields should go to the post for two out of three, in fact both the August Plate and the Amateur Hurdle Plate have attracted as many as nine and ten entries each. The entries of the Pony Hurdle Race, however, are nothing to boast of and they have only scraped together five for this event, the only one new to the game being Belle Cole. The other four are all past masters at the art—Whitefoot, Bones, Discussion and Shylock.

The August Plate has, as we said, nine to its credit, and we do not think any weight that the handicapper may allot Hoop Iron will stop him getting home this time. Smallman will not be running any risks with him and it is therefore improbable that the horse will get the chance of running off as he did last Saturday. He is, however, a shifty customer over his fences, and it may be argued the other way, namely, that once having found he can run off when he wishes he may be all the more prone to do it again. His best performance in India was when he won the King's Plate, value Rs. 10,000, in January 1905, when Applause, Mallard and Acetine all finished behind him. Harold won over this course last year and Scotch Thistle last week. Bucentaur, Rustler and Watchfire are the balance of last week's field, while the three additions are Don Q., the winner of last year's Tollygunge Plate ; Parole, also a winner over this course last year, and old Pope, who has not won a race for two years. Next to Hoop Iron, Don Q. and Scotch Thistle are the best.

There are ten entered for the Amateur Plate and we should see a field of eight or nine runners strip for this event. Riccaton is a non-starter and on paper the race is nothing more than a gift for Nevermore, the winner of this year's Calcutta Paper-chase Cup. The horse however is said to be nothing like himself, and of course a horse must be fairly fit to win a hurdle race. Mr. Pugh has Ynyslas and Gleam entered and both should run well. The chesnut mare has, however, never yet started over hurdles, whereas Gleam has been fired, and with a doubtful leg may not have had sufficient work. Our old friend, Sylvia, we are glad to see still to the fore, and we should like to see her win one more race. She also is, we understand, rather short of work. Orphan Boy and Cain, both small horses, are going strong and should run well. Lady Gold is a very uncertain jumper at the best of times. Ryong does not seem to be possessed of much of a turn of foot : his only essay in the racing line was last February in the Native Cavalry Grand Annual Chase, when he was placed second on the winner being disqualified for going the wrong side of a flag. We are afraid he is a bit slow for the Calcutta "hunter."

The racing on Saturday was good and the going was as good as we ever remember seeing it. If going like that could be obtained throughout the cold weather it would be a bad business for the dealers ; for what a long life the Calcutta race-horse would then have. The flat races were all 5 furlongs and the Amateur Plate with catch-weights over 11st. was pretty smart in 1-8, with the Maiden Horse Plate 1-6¾, and the Summer Plate 1-5. It was a bad day for the books, as in every race bar the hurdle race the favourites got home with unfailing regularity. Of the horses left in there were only two scratched, but in spite of this only three races afforded 1, 2, 3 betting.

Murchison, Wishart's new light weight jockey, accomplished a very good performance by winning on Warstripe, considering the saddle slipped right round under the horse when coming round the bend. It goes to show what a soft thing the race was for him.

Most of the races appeared to be pretty well cut and dried beforehand on paper, and so in effect they turned out to be and it is probable that several of the "neck" finishes only went to show how easily one or two of them won by. The first race was the Pony Plate for which Wal went out backed down to 3 to 1 on. He won as he liked from Golden Tip, who seems to have taken a new lease of life and ran in good form, very like what we used to see, so apparently his absence from the turf has not caused him to lose his cunning. The other three ponies soon abandoned their efforts to pursue the speedy Wal.

The Amateur Plate was also little more than a walk-over for that fine English mare Devil's Limit, this being the first time she has been extended in India, her two runs at the end of last cold weather being of no importance. Though she kept alongside Ynyslas all the way and only won by a neck, she could have had no difficulty in winning by several lengths. There was a good field of ten runners, all G. R's. Dreadnought finished third a length and a half behind Ynyslas with Lord Chippendale fourth half a length behind him. The weight apparently anchored Leading Lady, who is a weedy, but speedy, little mare.

The Trial Hurdle Race came next and here again there was one horse sticking right out of the bunch, and this was Hoop Iron, the winner of the King's Plate the year before last, after which a Monsoon hurdle race must be a bit of a come down ! Butt he hurdles have to be taken into account and these proved Hoop Iron's undoing, as after endeavouring to run off at the fourth flight he ran right into and jumped the wing of the fifth flight and so took no further part in the proceedings. This left Scotch Thistle in command, having occupied a forward position throughout, and with Hoop Iron out of the way Sheldrake had no difficulty in bringing Scotch Thistle in a winner by 10 lengths from Bucentaur, who finished 10 lengths in front of Haut Boy. Bucentaur, however, failed to draw the weight when he came to weigh in and so was disqualified. Watchfire was lying second up to third flight, but he here got right into it and knocked all the stuffing out of himself.

Solace was installed a money on favourite for the Stand Plate, but in spite of this there was very nearly an upset in this race, as Kathleen II., ridden by Mr. Evers, got right up to him and Hard after a tight finish only got home by a head. Their nearest attendant was Ping Pong, three lengths behind, with Lady Min three lengths behind Ping Pong, so barring the first two it was a strung out finish.

There was another very close finish in the next race, the Summer Plate, which also boasts the best field of the day, eleven going to the post. Had not Warstripe's saddle slipped he would undoubtedly have had an easy enough win, as it was Murchison only scraped Warstripe home by a short head from Nirvana, who appeared to run gamer than usual. Spinglock, the winner of this race last year, was third a length behind, with Goldstamp fourth.

A good day's racing was brought to a close by the Maiden Horse Stakes, for which seven went to the post. The books were not spared here either, for Duplex II. who was an even money favourite got home by a length and a half from Batanzos. Harold finished third and Wake Up fourth.

J. D. Scott has thus lost no time in opening a victorious campaign with two wins and a second out of five runners. Mr. Deakin has the riding of the horses in this stable, so he has a very nice chance of many winning rides. Mr. Evers had a good outing, scoring one win on Devil's Limit and three seconds. The professional element did not have much of an afternoon of it.

Metalwing, we hear, has broken down after his school last week, and we are sorry to hear Mr. "Cowper," who has charge of him, has been laid by the heels with a very sharp go of fever.

In spite of the heavy rain on Monday night, there was some schooling going on on Tuesday morning. Parole (Mr. Barrow) and Narwanah (Northmore) went over four flights, the latter jumping right away from Parole at every hurdle. Parole was jumping very stickily indeed and will have to be very much quicker over them on Saturday if he wishes to be in the hunt at all. Mistlebird (Mr. Pugh) and Zig Zag (Mr. Glen) then went over three flights of the pony hurdles, the former not caring at all for the first hurdle and trying to stop. The next lot to go were Hello (Northmore) and Nevermore (Mr. Turner), with Ryong (owner) following in their wake. Of course Hello with the difference in weight had all the best of it and will probably be running in next week's open hurdle race when there are again three hurdle races figuring on the card. The field for this should comprise such ponies as Energy, Zig Zag, Moonray, Mistlebird, Geebung, Lady George, Branga and two or three more.

A shikari subscriber has just sent us a photograph and a description of a splendid barasingha head got in Oude three or four months ago. It is a 34 incher (the record is 41 inches), but its remarkable feature is its symmetry and the fact that it exhibits no less than twenty distinct points, ten on each horn, and the brow antlers are each 13 inches. Can anyone give details of a better head—in the matter of points—than this ?

First entries for the Poona Races are published in our issue of date.

We have to acknowledge, with thanks, the receipt of a copy of Vol. XVIII of the Racing Calendar issued by the Calcutta Turf Club. It embraces the period from 1st April 1905 to 31st March 1906 and is as complete and indispensable to the racing man as ever. Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., the printers, have turned the book out in their best style.

The Hyderabad Polo Tournament is fixed to commence on the 1st October. It is open to any Regiment or Corps in India. Any Gymkhana or R. A. and R. E. Officers may combine to form a team, or members of the Civil Service in any one Presidency. The winning team to receive a Cup, value Rs. 1,000, presented by H. H. the Nizam. This Tournament will, we hope, attract a good many outside teams. For some years now, the Golkondas have proved themselves invincible and won the Cup year after year ; so that this year it would make the matches more exciting if they had some fresh teams to tackle.

It is not generally known that butterflies are used for food by the Australian aborigines. The insects congregate in vast quantities on the rocks of the Bugong Mountains, and the natives secure them in millions by kindling fires of damp wood and thus suffocating them. Then they are gathered in baskets, baked, sifted to remove the wings, and finally pressed into cakes. The Australian natives are great devourers of other insects and grubs, many of which they take down raw.

In all civilised countries we find the movement for the protection of birds is gaining ground, and it has taken a strong hold in South Africa. We learn that at the monthly meeting of the Griqualand West Farmers' Association a motion as to the indiscriminate shooting of small birds by excursionists and others was discussed, and it was ultimately decided to write to the Game Protection Society, Kimberley, requesting them to introduce a measure protecting the following specimens of small birds :— Turtle dove, Namaqua dove, hoopoo, bockmakerie, swallows, water wagtails, kingushers, storks, including heron and hammerkops, and owls.

An American contemporary, Shooting and Fishing, extracted from our paper the article that appeared some time ago on the extraordinary vitality of a tigress ; this has elicited a communication from a reader of that journal, who writes :—

"The article on Vitality of a Tiger moves me to give another instance of the failure of the 'supposed dead certain knockout shot, a brain one.' Only in this instance the shot was an accident, and the victim a man. The case was so remarkable that I wish to state in advance that it was well authenticated and placed on record in medical journals. I have personally known for years and have talked about it, with men who knew the man and helped care for him after the accident. Once when I told the story to my physician in the city and remarked, 'I suppose you think that a big story,' he replied, 'Oh, no, I know all about that case. It was published in our medical journals.'

"The occurrence was as follows: During the building of a railroad years ago in Vermont, a big, brawny Irishman was tamping down a charge of powder in a rock. In some way he struck a spark that exploded the charge, and the tamping iron was blown right up through his head. It entered in one side of his face, knocked out several teeth on that side, passed up aslant through his brain, and came out on the opposite side of the head. The wounded man was carried in a cart to the village hotel near by, and one of my former neighbours and informants saw the doctor twist up a soft silk handkerchief, insert it in the wound, and draw it up through the head. As it came out particles of the brain adhered to the handkerchief. When a room was in readiness the Irishman arose from his chair, saying he thought he could walk upstairs. Of course, he was not allowed to do so, and my neighbour helped carry him up to the room. He recovered."

The polar bear is the only wild animal that likes a trip on the water, according to a French scientist who has studied its behaviour at sea. He is quite jolly when aboard ship, but all other animals violently resent such a voyage, and vociferously give vent to their feelings until sea-sickness brings silence. The tiger suffers most of all. He whines pitifully, his eyes water continuously, and he rubs his stomach with his paws. Horses are bad sailors, and often perish on a sea-voyage. Oxen are heroic in their attempts not to give way to sickness. Elephants do not like the sea, but they are amenable to medical treatment.

Further steps are being taken in South Africa to stop the destruction of big game, and with this object a Bill has just been introduced in the Natal Legislature which will apply to Natal and Zululand. The Bill absolutely prohibits the destruction, even under special permit from the Governor, of the elephant, white rhinoceros, eland cow, roan antelope, buffalo, or koodoo cow. Anyone who wishes to obtain a permit to shoot hippopotamus, black rhinoceros, buffalo, koodoo, or eland bulls must take out licenses costing from £15 to £30 for this privilege. Natives, however, are accorded special privileges under this legislaton.

Curious instances occasionally occur in which the birds which the cuckoo designs to become the foster-parents of its young do not prove as complaisant as in the great majority of instances. The Director of the Field Museum at Chicago has described a remarkable case in which a small warbler three times put in a fresh floor to the nest, in each case burying an egg of the American cuckoo, or cowbird, as well as its own eggs in the first instance. It appears from this that the warbler felt a strong objection to the intruded egg, and repeatedly took this means of getting rid of it. A similar case has come under own notice in England ; a nest of that scarce British breeding species, the marsh warbler, was found to have a large and conspicuous lock of wool forming part of the lining, and beneath this lock of wool was subsequently discovered a cuckoo's egg. The cuckoo in this case had not the persistency of the American cowbird, and the attempt to make the marsh warbler a foster-parent was not repeated.

It has always been an accepted statement that the African elephant is incapable of being tamed and utilised for labour in the manner which is frequent with the Indian species. The Congo authorities, having previously imported a herd of Indian elephants, with a staff of trainers, without any great success in acclimatising these alien immigrants, have lately undertaken the task of attempting to domesticate the native African animal. The experiment seems likely to prove unexpectedly successful. Twenty-eight young elephants are now being trained, and some of them have already been used with success on railway works, though they have apparently none of them been yet educated for as long as twelve months.

In an interesting article which appears in the Cornhill Magazine, Professor S. Alexander gives his impressions on the intelligence of dogs. In the course of his remarks he says : The intellectual education of my dog has been almost entirely technical. Literary training I have found to be possible only in a very restricted form, although it is extremely significant. For the rest, he has been schooled in certain practical occupations, and has acquired a certain amount of what, on the analogy of manual training, I may call "buccal" dexterity. Neither in his linguistic nor in his technical education can I trace the growth of character which underlies such education among children and makes it liberal. Though in the course of these exercises he has acquired moral qualities, he has not acquired them through the exercises themselves, and accordingly his moral education may be considered apart from his intellectual education. His education has been limited by the deficiency which makes the difference between him and a child. . . . He has learned the golden virtue of self-control, or, in another form, obedience. But his actions are based on habit, and on a certain considerable inventiveness determined by desire. They are a kind of outgrowth of instinct, as, indeed, all well-based action must be, and it is of great interest to me to observe in his different actions just where they fall short of real instinets because they are artificial, and where they fall short of human action because they are essentially instinctive. Roughly speaking, what distinguishes him from children is that though he learns to do things he does not learn their meaning. He can take means to ends, but he does not know why he must take them. He does not analyse situations but takes them in as a whole. He knows the hang of things but does not know why they hang together. . . . His use of language is limited but it is most instructive. He has acquired a reasonable vocabulary of some dozen or more words and phrases—bone, cat, boots, slipper, stick, dinner, postman, brush (his own brush), come out, bed, paw, good dog, and bad dog. They are signals to actions, and are unaffected by qualifications. "Bone" and "no bone" mean the same thing to him when the word bone is pronounced with identical intonation. When some one has said "cat" in his hearing he is not reassured by being told that there is no cat until he has been to see for himself. Each word pulls a trigger in him and discharges an action. He has not arrived at the stage of considering the word and its meaning for its own sake. His condition of mind is much like that of an admiral who should fire when he hears the word torpedo-boat. To speak strictly, his words are not language at all, though they serve the same purpose. In some cases it is not the word he acts upon but a corresponding intonation or gesture. . .

I am far from saying that my dog has no ideas and does not act upon them. On the contrary, I easily observe in him both memory and imagination. I do not indeed know that he sees pictures when he dreams. I do not happen to have found him growling at his visions, but he can certainly retain ideas in his mind. His brush is kept in a corner of my study, and when he is there he will get it when ordered. But sometimes he will fetch it from the ground floor. He has not been taught to do this, and it always takes a little time to impress the order upon his mind ; but he will at times do it, and this suggests that he must keep the idea of the brush vividly before his mind. But I question whether his idea serves any purpose except to keep alive in his mind the signal which is given him. ... His intellectual exercises do not seem to me to have left any marked trace upon his character. He succeeded in them from the force of his own desire and persistence. They did not teach him the perseverance or attention or industry which should lead him to learn fresh dexterities His whole moral education consisted in the lesson of obedience or self-control and his dexterities (for I hate to call them tricks) depended upon his having learned this lesson, and they fortified it. But his morality is limited like his intellect, and even more so. It is an affair of artificial habit built up on instinct.

It is satisfactory to note now railway communication gives easy access to the Eastern Bengal rivers and shooting grounds, that the planting colony in the Surma Valley are bestirring themselves in the matter of game preservation, and they should not lack support from fishermen and other sportsmen in town in their efforts to put a stop to the indiscriminate slaughter that goes on ; despite the restriction of gun licenses and establishment of forest reserves. Just at present the community is concerned with the fisheries, especially those in the upper reaches of the mountain streams beyond their estates, over which they have no control. Both hilsa and mahseer all this month and the next will be running up to spawn and though it is too early yet for the erection of the mat weirs the drag net is brought into requisition night and day. It is not only the plantation coolies and sportsmen who suffer, but the villagers in the lower waters complain, so we trust in the interests of all that the drag net will be prohibited altogether, and the close woven mat weir replaced by a jaffry of such regulated mesh as to allow of immature fish passing through. Those fishermen who rent the bheels also need looking after, as these lagoons will soon be draining. The dodge resorted to with these is to bund up or weir the outlets from time to time as the water falls, until the fish are enclosed in semi-fluid pools when the best are taken out, the residue left till the place dries up, and then kites, hawks, adjutants, otters and jackals destroy all that is left, the major portion, however, rotting in the sun. Bheel fish, it may be advanced, are not in much request, but it must be remembered that the majority of these bheels are fed by mountain streams so that the more valuable fish have to traverse them in returning to the main rivers on their way to the sea and so get sacrificed with the coarser. It may seem that in suggesting the abolition of the mat weirs we should be interfering with the time-honoured custom of the hill men who adopt them in securing the annual harvest for the sun-dried fish they so much affect, but, as with their destructive jhuming and grass firing, it is no use arguing with them as to the interests of future generations. They must be prohibited from indulging in these suicidal pranks.

We see the subject of deep sea fisheries is again on the tapis, and though still pinning our faith on the entrance to the Mutlah and off Fraserganje as fishing grounds would direct attention once more to the Sundip Channel. Chandpore is fast rising into a considerable town, and if one would put on "well" boats the steam traffic up to Goalundo is now so regular and frequent that there should be no more difficulty in getting sea fish to Sealdah by the E. B. R. in trucks, than in bringing it to Billingsingate from Grimsby or Yarmouth.

for a spell, when it was suddenly whipped off into midstream. On recovery and the line being reeled in an 11lb. pike was at the end ; the hook not being visible the fish was cut open and a 1lb. trout was found in the stomach, who, in the first instance, had taken the bait to be immediately pounced upon and bolted whole by the voracious pivets.

The Bombay Mud sports on Wednesday afforded some good sport both for competitors and spectators. After an off week on account of the wet, a dry week brought out a large crowd both inside and outside the rope. The Postillion race was easily won by Mr. A. D. Shanks, who led his second mount at a smart pace, Mr. Barraclough being second. In the Putting Stakes Mr. G. D. Rice and Mrs. Stanley Reed were successful, with Mr. Barraclough and Mrs. McCausland second, and Mr. Shanks and Miss Sells third. The Spring Chicken Stakes, one of the comic events, was won by Mr. Shanks, Mr. Barraclough again being second, and Mr. Bruce third. The Aunt Sally Stakes served once more to show off the fantastic method ladies adopt for throwing and created plenty of amusement. Miss Sells and Mr. Ph. Jupe took first honours with Mrs. Nash and Mr. E. C. Griffin second, and Mrs. McCausland and Mr. Barraclough third. Mr. G. D. Rice won the Victoria Cross race with Mr. Hill and Mr. Barraclough close behind, while Mr. Griffin won the Pony Scurry after an excellent race, closely followed by Mr. Jupe and Mr. Boothby.

Athletic Notes.

IN connection with the recent boxing match between Fisher and Vickers, a correspondent writes to us expressing surprise that the Editor of this paper should have let slip the opportunity of promoting sport by leaving it to a daily contemporary to make all the arrangements for the match. Our correspondent is mistaken. The Editor of this paper has in the past done his full share in promoting boxing in Calcutta and will continue to support any bonâ fide effort in this direction. He was asked to referee in the match between Fisher and Vickers and only his absence in the mofussil on the day fixed for the meeting prevented his acceptance of the responsibility. But he was able to advise the backers how to set about getting up the match, he found them a referee, and having satisfied the Commissioner of Police of the genuineness of the match, ere he left Calcutta, was mainly instrumental in obtaining permission for the holding of the show. Indeed it is quite possible that without his assistance the match would not have come off. What more he could have done under the circumstances we fail to see.

The hot weather regatta of the Madras Boat Club has been fixed for the 23rd instant. The Calcutta Rowing Club finds itself unable to send down a crew, but the Royal Connaught Boat Club, Poona, will be represented in the fours.

A walking race is to be held in Simla on the 25th instant. The competition, which is open to both ladies and gentlemen, will take place round Jakko, a prize being presented by Messrs. Max Mirck and Company. Entrance fees will be handed over to Lady Minto's Nursing Endowment Fund.

A regatta was held at Naini Tal on the 28th ultimo and in spite of the dull weather attracted a big attendance and provided excellent sport. The seven events on the programme were carried through successfully. Mr. Coode won the Open Sculls and Tika Ram the waterman's race. The mixed fours brought out three crews, the winners being Mrs. Garvie, Mrs. Mercer, Mrs. Muir, Mr. Ransford, Mrs. Lawrence (cox). The P. and O. Paddling race was rowed in two heats, the final being won by Miss Cruickshank's crew composed as follows :—Miss Cruickshank, Miss E. Cruickshank, Mr. Bailey, Mr. Alexander and Mr. Naylor. The mixed Canoe Race, for which four pairs entered, was won by Miss Yetman and Mr. Naylor after an exciting finish with Mrs. Du Pre and Mr. Ransford. The Double Sculls was won easily by Messrs. Gould and Ransford steered by Mr. Du Pre.

George Hackenschmidt is not content to remain a wrestler only, for he has announced his intention of taking up boxing as an additional diversion.

The Russian has lately been practising with some of the best exponents of the art, and it is said that he has greatly impressed many well-known judges. Hackenschmidt has even gone so far as to say that he would like to go to America and try his luck with Jeffries, so that we may shortly expect to hear fresh news of the champion wrestler in quite a new rôle.

In our issue of the 20th ultimo we made some remarks on the growing dissatisfaction with the present method of deciding the English Lawn Tennis Championships. In The Field to hand by this mail we find from the pen of Mr. C. E. Dick, some criticisms on all fours with ours : he writes :—

"The unfairness is in allowing the holders of the championships of the previous year to stand down, until called upon to defend their titles, or in other words, to play one match, while on the other hand the challenger or challengers, as the case may be, have had to play numerous gruelling matches, and in most cases under a sweltering sun, which must, and does tell on them by the time the championship round is reached. I had it remarked to me, when I made a suggestion to some friends of mine, that a change should be made in the method of deciding the Championship, 'that the champions had got there, and were entitled to the advantage of not having to play through the meeting,' but with this I am entirely at variance. We are essentially a nation of sportsmen, and our only wish is to see the best man win. Because a man is the best player in 1905, it does not follow that he must also be the best in 1906, although he may retain his title through having only to play one match, and that against an opponent worn out both mentally and physically by his previous exertions.

"I do not mean to suggest by this that Mr. H. L. Doherty is not the finest player at the present moment, but what I do wish to infer is that we have no proof of this, as he and Mr. F. E. Riseley did not meet on equal terms, the one being fresh, and the other worn out.

"Take, for instance, the Amateur Golf Championship, where the strain is even greater than at lawn tennis. To such an extent have the previous hard-fought matches told on the players, that by the time the final is reached the standard of play is generally most mediocre, and sometimes very bad, as was the case this year. Now, under these circumstances, were a player of the calibre of Mr. John Ball to be in possession of the title of Amateur Champion, I venture to prophesy that were he only to be called upon to defend his title when challenged by the player who successfully played his way through the large number of aspirants to championship honours, it would be a few years yet ere the title was wrested from his keeping, not necessarily because he was the best player, but for the reason stated above, viz., that the men would not meet on an equal footing.

"I think I am right in saying that tennis, lawn tennis, and the Wingfield Sculls are the only cases where holders of championships have not to compete with all comers to retain their titles, and I hope the committee of the All England Lawn Tennis Club will seriously consider this point and further adopt such a course in future as will entitle all who aspire to become champions to compete on equal terms. Were this done, I feel sure it would meet with the approval of all lawn tennis players and the public in general, whose only desire is to see a fair and square match and the best man win."

The Calcutta Rugby League, for The Indian Field Challenge Cup, opened last Saturday with matches which will be found reported further on. This is the third year of this competition and the cup has been won so far by the Calcutta F. C. and the West Ridings.

Our Bangalore Correspondent writes :—The cricket season is getting into swing, but there has not been a great deal of interest at present. The Gymkhana have beaten the Mounted Infantry, and been beaten by the Essex Regiment by a few runs in a low scoring match. It has always seemed rather a pity to my mind that the Bangalore cricket season is associated as a rule with considerable rain and wet wickets. At their best the Gymkhana ought to be a really good side this year. Captain Standage's experience is invaluable and he can still make runs and bowl wickets, whilst as a skipper he is second to none. Marsden of the Pioneers, an old Cheltenham eleven boy, has long ago proved his worth in Ootacamund and Madras, and if I expressed my private opinion I should call him the best bat in South India at this time. Cooper of the Essex Regiment can also play a careful game, and his hitting when set is absolutely terrific. Mr. Pattisson and Captain Jacomb (Essex Regiment), Mr. Ridpath (The Carabiniers), Mr. Meldon and Mr. Cornes are all more than useful as allround cricketers, and Mr. Thorp (Mounted Infantry) is also good. There is a multitude of others who might possibly develop into excellent cricketers with a little practice, but there is rather a dearth of cricket talent amongst the rank-and-file of the British garrison. This is unusual, there being generally a few shining lights.

Yorkshire beat Worcester by an innings and 10 runs.
Lancashire beat Leicester by an innings and 41 runs.
Susex beat Somerset by 7 wickets.

The Northern India Racket Tournament opens on 31st August at Murree, and though there are but four events, the conditions are such that there should be no lack of entries. For the first, the Open Singles Championship, Mr. C. R. Bunbury, I. C. S., offers a challenge cup and this competition is open to all amateurs in India. Major S. H. Sheppard, D. S. O., R. E., offers a challenge cup for regimental doubles. There is also a challenge cup open to pairs from the Public Schools, and the handicap doubles are open to any pairs whatever whom the Committee will handicap at their discretion.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes :—The R. G. A. gave the City Club a most terrible whacking in the Harwood League on Tuesday, beating them by eight goals to one. The first goal for the gunners was scored two minutes from the start by Cornish, while a second was added as quickly. When some five minutes later a third was scored it became evident that it was to be a walk-over for the gunners, who kept adding to their score with monotonous regularity, the only serious attempt by the City Club resulting in a goal almost on the call of time.

The following day the gunners had a harder tussle, their opponents being the Bombay Gymkhana. The gunners pressed hard several times in the first half and frequently got dangerously near the goal, but the backs were safe and half time came with the score love all. At the re-start the Gymkhana bucked up well and looked dangerous for a time, but the gunners pressed them back and eventually succeeded in scoring the only goal of the day.

Another game was played on Friday between the Royal Scots and the City Club, the latter again succumbing to superior weight. The Scots had an easy game and scored four goals to the Club's nil.

Saturday being a holiday the annual cricket fixture between the Bombay Gymkhana and the Parsees came off, starting in the morning and resulting in an easy win for the Parsees. The ground was in good condition and both sides put in strong teams. The Gymkhana won the toss and went in first, but opened most unpropitiously. Powell and Christie faced the bowling of Dubash and Mehta, and Powell was clean bowled by Dubash's second ball. Monteath joined Christie and they put in a dozen each before they were separated, but Streatfield, who took Christie's place, was out at once for a duck.

Elliot and Cadell made a good pair, most of the work being done by the former, who made twenty-one, the best score of the side. Sanderson with 4 and Priestley and Coombs with one each were quickly dismissed and Stileman appeared to get set. Cheetham however was caught by Wadia off Mehta for five, and Stileman was not out for 17, the total score being only 90. The Parsees made a very different show. Mody and Chothia went in as the first partners the former making 76 and both being bowled by Stileman. Saklatvala took Chothia's place and made eight, and Dubash, who followed on, ran out for ten. Kanga played very carefully for 16 and play then subsided a little, the only other good score being made by Pocha, who put 31 together before Monteath caught him off Cheetham. Mehta for the Parsees seems to be in as good form as ever, taking 7 wickets for twenty-six runs and getting six maidens out of seventeen and a half overs. Stileman was the best of the bowlers for the Gymkhana, but his 4 for 54 shows up badly with the work done by Mehta, and even Cheetham's 4 for 33 was better in some respect though not much good bowling.

"'Not me!' she cried, indignantly, as she resigned a Manchester engagement after the first night of Robinson Crusoe, in which she had played Robinson, 'there's too much realism about this. What with a goat that butts me in the dress-improver till my head swims, a parrot with disreputable habits, a puppy that worries my private finery to rags in the dressing-room, and a cat that has kittens in my make-up box, I'm going back to the halls.' And she did."

A Teacher in a Board School was endeavouring to explain the meaning of the word "harness" to a group of young urchins.

"Now, Jenkins, what does your father put on a horse?" inquired the teacher.

"Well, sir, if it's a racehorse he generally puts all he's got on it," replied the youthful scholar.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 20th July 1906.

THE unexpected news of the death of Lady Curzon has been received with sincere sorrow, and though sympathy can do little for Lord Curzon at such a moment, it is warmly and universally given. Though it was generally known that Lady Curzon's health had not been entirely satisfactory since her severe illness at Walmer two years ago, her condition does not seem to have been considered grave until very shortly before her death. She was one of the most sympathetic and intelligent, as well as one of the most beautiful of women. In the day of Indian trouble, when famine and disease were rampant, Lady Curzon was foremost in giving relief and help wherever needed; and the skill was remarkable, with which she, without any of the traditions of English official life behind her, adapted herself to the position and duties of wife of the Viceroy of India.

The verdict of the jury on the Salisbury Railway accident will commend itself to reasonable men in that while it condemns the excessive speed at which the train was travelling, it attributes the disaster, not to that, but to the driver's disregard of the regulations. All the evidence regarding the rate of speed, points to the conclusion that in itself the speed was not dangerous, but the sharp twist in the line rendered it so at that spot. The Superintendent of the line stated that while in his opinion the derailment was consequent in the speed he himself "would not mind travelling ninety miles an hour on a straight road." The death of Mr. Sentall on Saturday brings the roll of victims up to twenty-eight.

In answer to a letter from the Kensington Borough Council, and a Memorial from residents in Onslow Square, the Commissioner of Police makes the welcome announcement of his intention to show less mercy in the future to that unmitigated nuisance the "Buzzer," than he has hitherto done. The evidences of danger and discomfort from the noise, vibration, and smell of most of the motor-'buses now running, are beyond dispute, and the Kensington Borough Council in no way overstates the case when it says that in consequence houses on the routes are being vacated in considerable numbers "with most deplorable results to the district from a trading and rating point of view." The inhabitants of Onslow Square aver that it is difficult to continue to occupy the front rooms of the houses in that prettiest of squares, that the vibration cracks the ceilings, and that the value of the property has seriously depreciated, several tenants, having left, and the vacated houses remaining empty. It is good hearing that Sir Edward Henry now feels "that the weight of public opinion requires that he should exercise more stringently his powers of control over public carriages." Having shown a more than reasonable amount of tenderness to the motor industry and the omnibus companies, he will, it is hoped, show now some consideration to the unhappy dwellers along the routes of the Buzzer."

The House of Lords has the courage of its opinions. The Committee, which has been considering Lord Reay's Juvenile Smoking Bill, report in favour of immediate and drastic legislation on the subject. The Committee objected to Lord Reay's Bill in that it penalised only the seller of tobacco to a person of tender years, and not also the purchaser thereof; and also because the penalties, involving forfeiture of the license on a third conviction, appeared to them excessive. They recommend legislation making the possession, or use of, tobacco by any one under sixteen a criminal offence. The young male person under sixteen will hardly consider the suggested alterations an improvement upon the original Bill, and his grievance at this unblushing attempt to interfere with abstract individual rights may be commended to Messrs. Keir Hardie, Byles and Company when their championship of their dusky friends begins to pall.

The announcement of the death of Mr. Alfred Beit has evoked some remarkable expressions of esteem and affection from those who were in a position to know him best. His enormous wealth made him the target for the ignorant prejudiced abuse of a class with which we are all too familiar, and which has scant sympathy with a man who spared no effort to promote the greatness of the Empire in the part of it with which he was connected. Mr. Beit early fell under the influence of Cecil Rhodes whose schemes fascinated him from the first, and to their success he contributed in no slight degree. He saw the inevitable struggle for South Africa before it came, and did all that in him lay to secure its termination in favour of his adopted country. When war came he gave aid generously, and after the relief of Ladysmith but for his help the Imperial Light Horse could not have been rehorsed in time to go to the relief of Mafeking.

His friends, both at home and in South Africa, testify to his simple kindly nature as well as to his public spirit. One of his most remarkable characteristics was his extraordinary memory. Without any apparent effort be remembered the smallest and most trivial events which came under his notice, and to Cecil Rhodes he served almost the purpose of a note-book, to recall anything which he himself might have forgotten. It is reported that the bulk of his fortune, estimated at anything from nine millions to thirty millions sterling, will be found by his Will to be vested in the Rhodes executors, to be applied to the same purpose as was the bulk of Mr. Rhodes' estate. It is known that he has endowed on a lavish scale a university, a technical college, and a secondary school, between Pretoria and Johannesburg.

The Sub-Dean of the Chapels Royal gave an interesting description of the cellars under St. James's Palace, to the London and Middlesex Archæological Society when it inspected the Palace on Saturday. The cellars, which are of immense extent, occupy the entire basement of the State apartments, and consist partly of two arched vaults now completely filled with wine in wood, the property of His Majesty, excepting a few butts belonging to the Prince of Wales, whose cellarage at Marlborough House is limited. Beyond the vaults are nine apartments, adjoining each other, which were formerly used as living rooms for servants when the Court was in evidence at the Palace, but are now filled chiefly with wine in bottles. Some time ago, as the result of the fall of a cask, one of the flagstones was cracked, and a sub-cellar, of which the present generation had no knowledge, was revealed. The atmosphere was found to be quite pure thanks to a shaft admitting fresh air. At one end was a place for draining off surplus water which was apt to flow into St. James's Park at high tides. This sub-cellar was capable of holding 10,000 bottles, but two old-fashioned bottles, and a small tree were its sole contents when it was opened.

The resignation by Colonel Sir Henry Hozier of his post of Secretary at Lloyd's is greatly regretted in the City. Sir Henry's career has been somewhat remarkable. After passing out of the Staff College with the highest honours in 1863, he took part the following year in the Danish War; and in 1866 acted as War Correspondent for the Times in the war between Russia and Austria. He went with Lord Napier to Abyssinia, and in 1870 was attached to the Headquarters Staff of the German Army. He has been Secretary of Lloyd's since 1874. He is much interested in politics, and his services in organising the Liberal-Unionist party after the great split were invaluable. He was made a C. B. in 1897, and a K. C. B. in 1903.

Even the Chronicle beloved of Radicals, condemns Mr. Winston Churchill's attempt to pay off old scores against Lord Kitchener, and at the same time to gratify the passion for advertisement which is the keynote of his character. In the course of a series of answers to questions anent the Natal Rising the Under-Secretary for the Colonies went out of his way to accuse the present Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Army of discreditable conduct. It is well known that during the Nile Expedition Lord Kitchener's hand was heavy on War Correspondents, and on Wednesday Mr. Churchill saw an opportunity of paying off an old grudge. It is almost inconceivable that even C. B. should allow a subordinate member of the Government thus to insult the holder of, perhaps, the most responsible position in the Empire.

Somethings after all are managed better in Ireland. To the ratepayers of Poplar and West Ham may be commended the action of certain ratepayers of Glenties, who, with a rate of eight shillings in the £ to meet, raided the board-room of the Guardians and compelled them to rescind the resolutions raising the pay of the workhouse officials. By the system prevailing in Ireland the peasants know what rates they pay, and take these effectual means of keeping them down. If the same system prevailed here there might be some hope of the working class protecting in an equally effective, if more orderly, manner.

The season at Covent Garden draws to a close; a fact of which we were reminded on Tuesday night by the production of "Don Giovanni," as—for some reason not altogether obvious—this opera is seldom given until the end of the season is well within sight. The performance, which was an excellent one, drew a full house; Signor Battistini's impersonation of the title rôle was in all respects admirable, and Mdlle. Destin and Signor Caruso added to their laurels. But the finest performance this season—if not the very finest that has ever taken place at Covent Garden—was that of Aïda on Saturday evening. Mdlle. Destin has the gift of identifying herself completely with the characters she personates, and Aïda is certainly one of her greatest parts. On Saturday the beauty of her singing, and the pathos of her acting combined to make her interpretation a remarkable one. Signor Caruso sang magnificently, and showed himself a fine actor, and Signor Battistini shared in the triumph. So much enthusiasm is seldom shown at Covent Garden. Signor Luccini is distinguished by having three of his operas performed this week. The popularity of "Madame Butterfly," which is to be given this evening, threatens to eclipse that of "La Bohème." Mdme. Giachetti makes the daintiest, and most fascinating of little Japanese girls, and renders the music with great feeling.

An autumn Italian opera season of eight weeks is promised, Messrs. Rendle and Neil Forsyth having made arrangements with the San Carlo Opera Company of Naples. The season will begin on 4th October and as special engagements have been made with Mdme. Melba, Mdme. Giachetti, and other well-known artists, success should be assured. The Moody Manners season of English opera at the Lyric opens to-morrow with "Lohengrin" and is to last five weeks.

That the oddly-named piece, "The Prince Chap," produced at the Criterion on Monday, hails from America is obvious from some of the phrases employed, and from the way Santa Claus is dragged in neck and crop. Though it has apparently been, in some degree, adapted for English audiences the story is not strong enough to make an evening's entertainment, and, truth to tell, fell somewhat flat. It opens in the studio of William Peyton, a struggling sculptor, who, unable to make a living in America, has come to England, leaving behind him Alice Travers, to whom he is engaged. To him enters a former model, now married unhappily, who tells him she is dying and asks him to take care of Claudia, her little child of five. Peyton consents, and the lady forthwith dies on his sofa. In the second act, Claudia, now eight, is still with Peyton, when Alice Travers turns up, and accusing him of being the father of the child makes this the pretext for breaking off with him; though the fact that she is already married to a rich New Yorker would seem to render any further reason superfluous. Ten years elapse; Claudia is eighteen, and all Peyton's artist friends are in love with her. Alice, now a widow, reappears, and suggests to Peyton that their former engagement might with advantage be renewed. The sculptor being by this time in love with Claudia declines, and after a few explanations Claudia falls into the arms of "the Prince Chap," consenting to marry him without delay. The story is padded out with characters of the Dickens-and-water type; a comic porter, a faithful old servant, a "Marchioness," little servant girl, and artists of the Bob Sawyer and Ben Allen stamp. A clever and pretty little girl, who acts naturally and intelligently, impersonates Claudia aged five; at the age of eight she is represented to the full as prettily and intelligently by another child, and at eighteen the part is taken by Miss Janet Alexander, who brings an attractive personality to the task. Mr. H. R. Roberts does his best with long and extremely uninteresting part of Peyton. A good insight into the character is given in the first act when Claudia asks him if he "is someone's mother in trousers." When Mr. Roberts gets a good part he will probably make a hit, but no one could do himself justice as William Peyton. The house on Monday was friendly, but the piece is too thickly overlaid with old-fashioned sentimentality to be a success.

A revival of "La Petite Fonctionnaire" was the performance with which Mr. Gaston Meyer elected to begin the eighth week of his season, and a good house welcomed Mlle. Jeanne Thomassin and Mr. Galipause as the Postmistress and the Vicomte. Both were in capital form, and the piece went briskly. Other productions at the Royalty during the week have been "Petite Peste," in which Mlle. Regnier is ideally suited with the part of Marceline; and "Petit Chagrin," which suffers from the fact that it is obviously written for a "star;" the compensation being in this case, the "star" is such an one as Mlle. Regnier. Mr. Gaston Meyer has, this season, given us several new French plays, and it may be hoped that one result of bringing French plays and players to England will be to put an end to the practice of "adapting" good French plays into indifferent English ones.

The South-Eastern Railway Company at last sees its way to rebuilding the Avenue. The original plans are to be carried out, and Mr. Cyril Maude hopes the early part of next year will see him opening "The Playhouse." It is singular that the Avenue was originally built with a view to compensation at the time when it was taken for granted that the South-Eastern Railway would require the site for an extension of Charing Cross station.

Miss Rosina Filippi has given two invitation matinées during the week at which her pupils and others appeared. That on Tuesday was chiefly remarkable for the dancing and reciting of Rita Legero, a little girl who does not look more than seven. She danced most charmingly in a street scene called "In the Italian Quarter," and it is difficult to imagine anything more irresistibly funny than the humorous composure with which she recited "The Bald-headed Man," in which she imitated in turn a small boy who seeing a bald head for the first time, pesters his mother with questions anent the phenomenon, the distressed mother, and the enraged owner of the bald head.

Of the making of books about India there is apparently no end since the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales; and one of the latest, "The Vision of India," by Mr. Sidney Low, is also one of the best. Mr. Low accompanied the Royal party as a special correspondent, and reported on the tour as a journalist, but he did not keep strictly to the Royal route—making sundry détours on his own account, and his vision of India is not a réchauffé of what he sent to the newspapers. He records his impressions, and there are few prominent aspects of Indian life on which he does not touch. He takes a cheery view of most things Indian. The book contains a number of interesting and attractive photographs.

The underground electric lines progress surely if slowly, and it is hoped that the end of the year will see the Great Northern, Piccadilly and Brompton railway ready for use. The completion of the extension of the City and South London Railway is promised in the spring; and in a couple of months the "Bakerloo" system will have been extended from Kennington Road to the Elephant and Castle. The "Bakerloo" authorities intend, it is said, to alter their system of fares, the present charge in some sections giving the advantage to overground traffic.

Mr. Imre Kiralfy has a bold scheme for a suggested rebuilding of large portions of the East End, which he described at a meeting at Toynbee Hall a few days ago. It is nothing less than converting the Mile-end Road into an immense boulevard, for which its fine proportions are well fitted; and the rebuilding of Spitalfields on a plan which he claims would allow for double its present population, with a liberal reserve of gardens and open spaces. Shadwell, also, would be benefited by a scheme of terraces, arcades and fountains. Mr. Kiralfy contends that these improvements would result in a financial success, but so long as foreign Jews are allowed to oust our own working class from the district there is not much inducement to embark in them.

Mr. Crookes, M. P., is hard to please. He complains that instead of an inquiry into the industrial and financial condition of Poplar, which was promised, to his mind nothing has been done except to secure evidence against the Labour representatives of that highly favoured spot. This is Mr. Crookes' way of letting his Right Honourable friend, the President of the Local Government Board, know what he thinks of him. Mr. Crookes entertains the pious belief that when all is explained the country will approve the actions of the Poplar Guardians. His smug satisfaction is almost as astounding as some of the facts brought to light by the inquiry of which he so strongly disapproves.

Much good work stands to the credit of the British Empire League, and in nothing has it done better than in founding the British Empire Club, where those interested in the work of the League may meet on a social and non-party footing. The British Empire League has succeeded where the Royal Colonial Institution and the Imperial Institute did not even make an effort.

In recent months very rapid additions have been made to the death-roll of veterans who fought both in the Crimea and the Indian Mutiny. The name of Colonel F. G. Savage Curtis is now added to the list. With the 6th Dragoon Guards (Carabiniers) he took part in the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and participated in the siege and fall of Delhi. After exchanging into the Inniskillings he fought in the first Boer war. He afterwards commanded the troops in Natal, and before he retired was Acting Adjutant-General for Cavalry at home.

WILD-FOWLING IN CHIH-LI.

EASTER and a Chinese festival falling together B——, S——, and myself decided to spend the four days' leave they would bring us in a trip after wild-fowl on one of the many canals in the vicinity of Tientsin where we then quartered. We chose the Lutai Canal, as being the most convenient, and offering us more chance of sport in the limited time at our disposal.

This canal leaves the Pei-ho River at Tientsin and flows into the Peh-tang River just below the city of Lutai. Midway in its forty mile course it passes through the marsh of Si-li-hai; Anglicé—"The thousand li sea." Although these dimensions are a bit exaggerated, yet its extent and nature make it an excellent wild-fowling ground, and this we intended to make the scene of our operations.

A Thursday evening saw us embarking, with the necessary complement of cook, "boys," guns and cartridges, on one of the many Chinese house-boats which ply for hire on the river.

These craft are of the ordinary junk type with a house erected amidships leaving a clear deck space forward. The "house" is divided into four compartments, separated from each other by paper walls and sliding doors. The forward compartment is merely a cupboard; the second is larger, and has a raised bunk (very ricketty) running down the length of one side and a small folding table on the other. The third is all bunk, the whole floor being raised some two feet, so that one has to crawl into the place on all fours, and once inside it is impossible to stand up. In this the Chinese (when the boat is occupied by them) sleep packed like sardines from wall to wall. The fourth and sternmost one, is kitchen and, I believe, sleeping place for the skipper of the boat. The outside walls of the boat are, like the inner, composed of lattice work and paper. This we discovered in the middle of the night has its advantages, for when the atmosphere gets a bit stuffy one has only to thrust a finger, fist, or foot through the paper to obtain the requisite amount of ventilation. The crew consists of three men, who have their work cut out for them, as the only way of getting the boat along is to tow or pole. There is a mast carrying a huge slatted junk sail, but as the boat can only sail before the wind, it is very seldom of any use. Wishing to get on to our ground as quickly as possible, so as to make the most of the short time we had, the importance of speed was urged upon the crew, and they assured us that we should be in Si-li-hai early the next morning. One of our "boys" unearthed an Union Jack, which he had secreted unknown to us, from the bottom of a Gladstone bag, explaining that it would be of the greatest assistance to us. If, he said, we flew that everybody would think that we were some big officials and would therefore clear out of our way, so that we should go "plenty quick." The Jack was accordingly attached to a pole at the stern. As a talisman it was not a success, for it was unable to overcome the series of adverse circumstances which delayed our voyage that night.

After going some way up the river we found that the fair-way was absolutely blocked by junks of all shapes and all sizes filling up the river from bank to bank. It was caused by the bridge of boats spanning the river some half mile further up stream, to pass through which all these junks were waiting. It would be opened, we were told, in about an hour's time, when we could take our turn with all the other junks. This did not suit us at all, so we told the boatmen to try and push through. It took us about an hour to worm our way through this mass of shipping, the Union Jack enthusiast helping by much abusive language and by frequently displaying the Jack to those boats who did not get out of the way quick enough to suit his taste. The bridge of course was closed, and covered with traffic, but more shouting brought out an Austrian sailor who was in charge of the bridge. I, being the only linguist of the party, was detailed as spokesman, and French being the only foreign language I know the argument was long but eventually successful. The bridge was opened for us to pass through and quickly slammed in the faces of two or three junks that tried to sneak through in our wake.

Dinner that night was not a pleasant meal, for we were passing through some of the most unsavoury purlieus of the Chinese city. The Chinaman's system of drainage is simple to a degree; everything is dumped down the bank and the river, like the Kodak Company, "does the rest."

When we did at last get clear of these reeking waterways, we were brought to another halt by a "Li-kin" station. These are barriers placed across the canals to prevent boats passing either in or out of the city without paying the necessary octroi duties on their freights. The Chinese official in charge was soon overawed (by the sight of the Union Jack) and we were allowed to pass through.

I was wakened in the middle of the night by the sound of a heated three-cornered argument. It was being conducted in Japanese from the shore, and Chinese and English (with a strong Irish brogue) from the boat. It appeared that we had got to one of the locks on the canal, and that the Japanese lock-keeper had let us pass in, but refused to let us pass out until the lock dues had been paid. This our "boys" had refused to do, averring that the "b'long Blitiss" and as such should pass free. The noise of the argument woke up B——who went outside, but not even his presence, assisted by the efforts of the Anglo——phil "boy" and the Union Jack, would move the lock-keeper. So we had to discard the Jack in favour of the almighty dollar to enable us to proceed.

This, and adverse winds and tides delayed us so much during the night that daybreak still found us in sight of the Viceroy's Yamen at Tientsin. For the same reason our progress all the morning got slower and slower as the water in the canal got less and less. About mid-day it ran out altogether, and there were we, over fifty miles from the sea, left by the tide high and dry in the middle of China. There was nothing for it but to wait patiently until the tide should return. About three in the afternoon the water began to trickle in and by four we were afloat once more and spinning along with a flowing tide and a following wind. In spite of this sunset saw us that evening still far from our destination with nothing to show for our first day's leave but five teal and a couple of hare which we had picked up in an evening's stroll. About nine that night one of the boys put his head in at the doorway and said "Goose have got." On going out to see we found that they were there in large numbers. It was pitch dark, and we could just dimly make out the low mud banks of the canal while out of the darkness beyond and overhead came the rustle of many wings and the cries of many wild-fowl. We stayed and listened to the chorus in which were mingled the "Honk, Honk" of the geese with the clatter of wild-duck innumerable. Well content we retired to bed with rosy visions of the next day.

Up before the sun we were ready to start off the moment his rays should reveal to us our surroundings which we had not seen the night before. We found we were in a vast expanse of marsh and waste land, stretching unbroken to the horizon, where the silhouettes of a few Chinese villages broke the sky-line. Here and there open pools of water fringed with reeds reflected the rays of the morning sun. A few sails of junks sticking, apparently, out of the mud marked the course of the winding canal. The "Life" of the landscape was made up by a few Chinamen gathering fresh-water crabs and mussels in the mud, and by the wild-fowl that were everywhere. Great strings of geese and flights of every kind of duck were on the move in all directions. Some geese were still feeding in the mud, while Manchurian cranes and "cockilly" birds of all descriptions were wading in the shallows. We only had to make our choice and then decide on the method of approach. Our first move was after some geese that were feeding in the open about two hundred yards from where we then were. A little way up the bank of the canal a water-cut ran out into the plain, the little bank beside it passing within easy shot of the geese. On the further side of the geese two Chinese grave-mounds rose out of the plain. They were about four hundred yards from the geese and about a hundred yards from each other, and would afford excellent cover to two guns. Also their position was such that the geese if put up from the water-cut would probably pass over one or other of them.

Accordingly it was arranged that B—— and S—— should get behind these while I should attempt a stalk up the water-cut and get a shot at them from there.

Waiting beneath the shelter of the canal bank until B—— and S—— were safely under cover of the mounds. I started my stalk up the water-cut. Bent double, in mud and water half way up my thighs, I crawled carefully along. A friendly tuft of reeds giving me more shelter I slowly raised my head and took my bearings. No, not far enough yet, but the geese were still feeding peacefully quite unconscious of my approach. On again and another careful peep. Still a bit further, but this time the birds seemed a bit uneasy. The ones nearest to me had stopped feeding and had their heads up in the air trying to fathom the meaning of that strange rustling they had heard in the water-cut beside them. Starting on again I thought I should never reach a tuft of reeds which I had marked down as the most likely place for a successful shot. Every minute I expected to here the rustle of the wings. At last I got to it, and peering through the reeds there they all were but very disturbed. There were two about thirty yards away from me, and rising to my feet I brought down the further of these two before he had got under way, and my left barrel accounted for the other. Away went the rest straight for the two graves, but before getting there they swerved to the left, going outside S—— who was on the right. However, they were near enough for him to bring down one.

While waiting for me to complete my stalk B—— and S—— had noticed a large flight of teal go down into a pool of water surrounded by reeds some half mile away. Leaving the boatmen, following us with spare cartridges, to sit down where they were we started to walk towards this pool under cover of the reeds. B——, who was on the extreme right, reached the edge of the reeds first. He had scarcely entered them before all the teal rose, two of them dropping to his gun. S—— and myself rushed forward and got into the shelter of the reeds. For the next five minutes the birds kept going round and round the pool, not daring to pitch on the water again and not wishful to go away, giving us a shot every time they passed over our hiding places in the reeds. However, it did not take them long to make up their minds that the locality was not healthy and away they went straight over the other side of the canal. Those few minutes added eight teal to the bag.

The boatmen having come up we asked them where was the best place to go to next, but like all Chinamen there were of no assistance to us. They have absolutely no idea of a "shikari's" work in the usual Indian meaning of the word. We were absolutely ignorant of the ground and therefore had to trust mainly to luck. While we were debating the matter one of the boatmen suddenly ejaculated "Ya-dza" (duck), and we turned round to find a couple of mallard just dropping down into the pool. Exactly whose birds they were I don't know, but as we all fired at once they were a particularly mangled pair of mallard when we retrieved them.

We were all three feeling the want of breakfast now, so we went off to another pool situated in the direction of the boats, but unfortunately this was untenanted. One more teal which we collected while walking along the canal bank was all we added to that morning's bag.

After breakfast we decided to go out after snipe as the birds which had been on move before breakfast had by then all settled down for the day and being ignorant of the ground the chance of our finding them was very small indeed.

Between the pools of water there were generally small strips of marsh with perhaps a small trickle of water running down the middle. These nearly always gave us two or three snipe, one little channel being particularly good. There had been a fringe of reeds along the sides but this had been lately burnt. Whether it was that the ashes were still warm, or whether there was some other form of attraction. I cannot say, but this strip, not a hundred yards in length, yielded three couple of snipe.

One of these small channels led us to an open pool much bigger than the other ones we had seen that morning. On the farther side were a number of small mat huts, while in the water beneath them were a number of sampans, in which there were a few Chinamen. On going over to find out what they were, we discovered that they were a party of Chinese "Hunters." These men remain out on the marshes during the whole time that the geese, duck, and snipe are "in," and supply the markets in Tientsin and Pekin with large quantities of birds. The two former they shoot with punt-guns mounted in their sampans, and the snipe they snare. These punt-guns are of native manufacture and are distinctly ingenious in design. Muzzle-loading, and double-barrelled, but instead of the barrels being side by side as in European guns, they are placed one above the other. The upper barrel is also tilted at an angle to the lower, the apex being at the breach end. The guns are mounted in the bows of a small sampan which the Chinaman propels while lying at full length upon his stomach. Having approached to within range of a mass of birds sitting on the water, the lower barrel is loosed off into the brown of them. This is where the curious placing of the barrels comes in, for a second after firing the first barrel the upper barrel is discharged. This being tilted upwards gets the birds as they rise from the water after the first shot, without the gun having had to be shifted at all. Both barrels are pretty well filled up with shot so that the bags they make are enormous. They had evidently had a good time the night before as we saw two sampans filled up to the gunwale with birds ready to be sent off to market.

With these gentry about that part of the marsh was closed to us, so we struck back for the canal, to find some spot for the evening flight, shooting as far away from them as possible. We could see the Jack flying from the mast of our boat, where it had been hoisted as a beacon, some good way down the canal, so stopping a passing sampan we got a ferry down The casual Chinaman we found, was always ready to help one in any little way like that, they were always delighted to see us, for we were a great source of amusement to them. They would carry us for any distance without expecting any payment, there never being any whining for "Bakshish" After lunch we sent our boatmen to borrow hoes from anywhere, while we looked for a place for the evening's flight shooting. We decided upon the place where we had got our first geese that morning. In front of us was a large expanse of mud on which were the traces of many geese, and behind us was an open expanse of water with the usual fringe of reeds. When the hoes arrived we cut sods and built ourselves butts just on the fringe of the reeds.

The first thing to come along was a flight of teal giving us excellent shots as they dropped down to the water. A few minutes after they had gone, a few heavy ducks came in, at which only B——, was able to get a shot The sun had been down some little time, leaving the eastern sky a mass of gold and crimson across which were splashed great inky clouds like the smoke of many factory chimneys. A few stars in the blue overhead gleamed brightly through the frosty air. In front of us we could just make out dimly the silhouette of the clumps of reeds that dotted the marsh. Presently away in the east was a faint "Honk! Honk!" A little blurr against the sky, which resolves itself into a number of dots as it draws nearer and nearer, these soon becoming individual geese, then two shots in rapid succession, and the whole crowd, except one, swerve higher into the air and pass over. The exception drops with a thud to the ground not five yards from my butt. He is stone dead, and we turn our faces to the east once more. Here are some more, but they pass us well away to the right, but the next lot come right over us giving us each a shot. Then there was a lull, for the advanced guard of the army of geese had passed and we waited for the main body. It was almost dark now, and the birds could only be seen dimly against the glow that still hung in the eastern sky. But the sound of their wings heralded their approach and they were on to us before we quite realized it. At the first we each brought down one. But that was all, for on the first sound of the guns the whole lot swerved upwards and passed over right out of shot. For half an hour we sat there while the geese passed over us without giving us a chance. Never have I seen geese in such thousands, and, I suppose, I never shall again, unless fate should carry me back to North China. Although tantalising, yet it was a sight well worth seeing, and one which I shall never forget. S—— brought down a straggler who was not following the examples of his fellows, and was foolishly flying low. It was almost pitch dark by then, and we found some difficulty in picking up our birds, and still more in finding our way back to our boat as they had omitted to hang out a light.

Dinner that night was one of the best meals I have had, being composed of some of the duck, geese and snipe we had shot that morning washed down with beer. A pipe outside listening to the same old chorus of geese that we had heard the night before and we retired to bed well content with our bag of ten geese, fourteen teal, a couple of mallard, and seventeen couple of snipe. The last thing before we got to sleep we heard the booming of the Chinese punt-guns away off in the distance.

The morrow was a repetition of the day before, except that our flight shooting in the evening was an absolute failure. We sat in the same butts under the same canopy of geese, but they had learnt by the experience of the night before and all passed over us well out of shot.

There was an amusing incident that relieved the monotony of the evening's shoot. B—— after waiting some time saw three geese coming straight for him, and flying low so that he thought that at last he would get a shot. To his chagrin just before they reached him they suddenly swerved outwards and upwards and passed by well out of shot. Evidently something had alarmed them and loth to believe that it was himself he carefully raised his eyes above the level of the butt to see the cause. There it was as plain as a pikestaff: a solitary Chinaman wandering along a path not twenty yards from his butt. B—— rose from his butt and cursed him by all his Gods. Now B—— is very long and very red, and was clothed in a long poshteen. On his head he wore a fur cap, the ear pieces of which projected like two great wings on each side of his head. The Chinaman had been wandering along thinking that he was the only human being in the vast plain which stretched for miles before him, so when a strange apparition, rendered more weird by the gloaming, rose out of the solid earth at his feet and gesticulating wildly utter strange shrieks he got a shock which practically shattered his nervous system. Certain that the figure before him was some particularly malignant form of "Devil" that dwelt in the marsh, he gave a despairing yell and fled the way he had come. After going about a hundred yards at record speed he looked round to see if he were being pursued. To his horror the aparition had disappeared, for B—— had sat down in his butt again. This only confirmed him in his opinion and he fled again. Long after he had disappeard in the darkness we could mark the course of his flight by the despairing yelps and by the splashings as he fell in and out of pools of water.

That night after dinner we weighed anchor and with regret headed down the canal for Lutai.

The next morning we had got well clear of Si-li-hai, for the banks on each side were ploughed fields. We saw some geese in these fields and managed to get one by taking the sampan up a small water-cut which led past them.

The canal at that spot came round in a great curve, so sending the boat on to meet us further on we walked across the intervening fields on the chance of picking up a hare or plover. We got one hare when we had nearly reached the boat. It went away in front of B—— who shouted out "Mark," and fell to S——. The shout and the shot seriously alarmed a woman who was working with a party of Chinamen and women in the fields some three hundreds in front of us. She took to her heels and fled across the fields to the river bank, cutting the most extraordinary figure as she went. She was a "small-footed" woman, and her poor bound up feet sank at every step into the soft plough land while the spasmodic movements of her baggy sleeves and her voluminous red trousers as she tried to force the pace gave her the appearance of an ungainly automaton that wanted oiling badly. We watched her until she disappeared over the bluff bank of the canal and then continued on our way without thinking any more for her. B—— on the right was the first man to reach the bank and to our surprise no sooner had he done so than he went into fits of laughter; S——, the next to him, followed suit to my great surprise. They stood there looking down into the canal swaying with laughter, the cause of their merriment being hidden from me by a bend in the canal bank. Suddenly B—— flung his gun and cartridge bag on the ground, and tearing of his coat flung himself into the canal, S—— still continuing to laugh on the bank. In a minute he, too, disappeared over the edge. Then they both reappeared dripping wet and covered with mud. It appeared that the report of the gun and the sight of the "Foreign Devils" had brought back to the mind of the lady (she being young and attractive) memories of the ways of the foreign troops who had lately been employed in quelling the Boxer disturbances. Perhaps she may have had bitter personal experience, or perhaps it may have been only hearsay, but anyhow this time she was not going to take any chances, and she fled to hide under the bank of the canal. Hidden there she thought she would be safe, but to her horror she suddenly became aware of one of the "Devils" standing on the bank straight above her so she continued her flight sneaking along under cover of the bank. The tide was out and there was a strip of soft black mud between the water and the bank in which her wee pointed feet sank like a couple of sharpened pegs. It was her antics here that caused B——'s merriment. Then S—— reached the bank exactly above her, so deeming escape impossible, she flung herself into the canal. History does not relate whether she wished to escape across the canal, or whether she wished to find an honourable grave, for she swam quite strongly for a couple of strokes bouyed up by the air contained in her "unmentionables," these formed a great balloon on the surface of the water and gave rise to the gales of laughter which I had heard from a distance. But the air in these was soon exhausted and then the good lady began to sink. Then it dawned on them that she could not swim and was drowning before their eyes So B—— flung himself into the water and pulled her out. They laid her on the bank quite unconscious. Her relations came up then and were perfectly callous over the whole affair. They seemed to think it was quite an ordinary occurrence.

We were soon out of the canal and into the broad river. The banks were full of blue rock pigeons and as we sailed up close in shore they gave us some very nice sporting shots. But we soon tired of this, for we found it meant constant launching of the sampan to collect the slain.

We arrived at Lutai late in the afternoon, and with sorrow we hauled down the Union Jack and packing up our belongings quitted the boat.

Although the "bag" might have been larger, yet the novelty combined with congenial companionship made it one of the most enjoyable trips we had done, and we all three determined to repeat the experience on a more extended scale at the next opportunity.

FACTS CANNOT LIE?

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—Your correspondent "Sandgrouse" in your issue of 21st June says he has "unearthed several facts" out of the U. P. Game laws, and, adding a "few notes" on them "ventures to think" they are the "views" of "those who have taken the trouble, as he has, to thoroughly investigate the matter." He then proceeds to place before your readers these "facts," "notes" and "views."

His facts are unearthly indeed—the foundations on which they rest having no terrestrial connection whatever excepting with his own imagination From the fifth line of his letter one begins to perceive the unreality of his "facts." "I venture to think," "it may be assumed," "stratagems," I have a strong suspicion," "may possibly," "perhaps," "statistics would most probably prove," "my meaning is clear," thus it appears to me," "as far as I can see," "perhaps," "I think not," "these unsporting devices might be resorted to." If "Sandgrouse" had any real facts to place before your readers they should have been plainly stated with the proofs supporting them—unconnected with his thoughts, assumptions, stratagems, suspicions, possibilities, perhapses veiled meanings, appearances, the limits of his vision, etc., etc.

With the aid of these thoughts, assumptions, etc., he proceeds to depict the superior officers of the Forest Department in the darkest colours. His meaning is clear enough. Forest Officers practise mean stratagems, they are given to making false reports to Government for their own selfish ends, they scheme to get authority for their private shooting in sanctuaries, they are actuated by the grossest selfishness in preventing outside sportsmen from entering Government Forsts, they complaisantly allow exempted officers to appropriate three or four forest ranges at a time for their own use, they are debased enough to enter into conspiracies with exempted officers to exclude other sportsmen from Government Forests, they are so utterly untrustworthy that Government must employ a separate agency for fixing the number of deer to be shot, they are disloyal enough to disobey Government shooting regulations. They are, in short, a mean, untrustworthy, dishonourable, disloyal, grossly selfish crew of schemers and conspirators banded together to keep out, at all costs, the sporting public from the forests under their charge!

It is unfortunate at this particular time, when shooting regulations are undergoing revision, that spiteful letters of this kind should appear in the public press grossly maligning the officers of the Department who are empowered to administer the regulations and rules made by the supreme and local Governments. If a sportsman has facts and views which he considers will help towards the framing of a suitable law for the protection and preservation of game, surely it is unwise, to say the least, that they should be published in newspapers along with gross abuse of the very Department that has the control of the arrangements ordered by Government.

At the end of his letter "Sandgrouse" makes an attempt to dilute the spitefulness of his remarks (which he calls "uncomplimentary"!) by stating that he "does not mean that these unsporting devices are universally practised," "but they can be resorted to by certain persons (Forest Officers) under certain circumstances!" A good example of a distinction without a difference.

In common justice to a great Indian Department it is necessary to put on record a protest against "Sandgrouse's" letter. I trust Sir, that in an early issue you will be good enough to insert the above.

Saturday, 14th August 1906.

THE Monsoon Races opened this afternoon in sultry weather, but despite the heat there was a big attendance. The Knights of the Pencil were present in force, nearly thirty firms standing up—twenty too many in the opinion of a good many people. The course was in excellent order and the sport first class. It was a backers' day throughout, for favourites won in five of the six events, the only good thing that came untied being Hoop Iron's failure in the hurdle race. Scotch Thistle, however, carried a good deal of money. Details :—

THE PONY TRIAL PLATE.—Rs. 750 to the winner. Rs. 150 to the second, Rs. 75 to the third. For Arabs 14-2, C.-B.'s 14-1, and other ponies 14 hands and under, which have never won a flat race value Rs. 500 or upwards. 5 furlongs.

Mr. J. D. Scott's b aus g Wal, 10st. ...	Mr. Deakin 1
Mr. T. G. Evers' ch aus g Golden Tip, 10st. 5lbs.	Owner 2
Mr. C. Pearson's br aus g Rhymer, 8st. 4lbs.	Mr. Piper 3
Mr. R. Powell's ch aus g Vanity Fair II., 8st. 4lbs.	W. White 0
Mr. A. N. Dass' ch aus m Meta, 9st. 2lbs.	Hard 0

(Winner trained by Owner.)

Totalisator paid Rs. 12 on the winner, and Rs. 12 and Rs. 19 for places.

BETTING : 3 to 1 on Wal, 6 to 1 each agst. Golden Tip, Meta, and Rhymer, and 10 to 1 Vanity Fair.

Wal who ran prominently from the start took command at the turn. He was challenged by Golden Tip at the distance but kept going and won by a length and three-quarters; half a length between second and third. Time—1min. 9secs.

AMATEUR PLATE.—Rs. 500 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. For horses which have never won a flat race, hurdle race or steeplechase of the value of Rs. 50 or over. 5 furlongs.

Mr. A. G. H. Macpherson's b aus g Riccaton, 11st.	Mr. Campbell	0
Mr. Dudley's b aus m Leading Lady, 11st.	Owner	0

Totalisator paid Rs. 19 on the winner, and Rs. 13, Rs. 13 and Rs. 21 for places.

BETTING: Evens Devil's Limit, 5 to 2 agst. Yayslas, 4 to 1 Leading Lady, 8 to 1 Dreadnought, and from 10 to 1 to 20 to 1 the others.

Devil's Limit, Narwanah and Yayslas were most in evidence at the start, the last named leading round the bend. Devil's Limit, who was lying second with Dreadnought, went to the front after passing the distance and won hard held by a neck; a length and a half between second and third. Time—1min. 8secs.

THE TRIAL HURDLE RACE.—Rs. 1,000 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A hurdle race for horses that have never won a hurdle race value Rs. 800 or over. 1½ miles over 7 flights of hurdles.

(Winner trained by Smallman.)

Totalisator paid Rs. 37 on the winner and Rs. 18 and Rs. 90 for places.

BETTING: Evens Hoop Iron, 3 to 1 Scotch Thistle, 6 to 1 Bucentaur, and 10 to 1 the rest.

Scotch Thistle, Watchfire, and Bucentaur led over the first hurdle, Hoop Iron in front of the others. At the turn Scotch Thistle went to the front with Watchfire and Hoop Iron next in order. Watchfire pecked at the third obstacle and Hoop Iron went up second, taking the lead at the culvert. He jumped the wing at the fifth flight and was out of it leaving Scotch Thistle to go on and win by five lengths; ten lengths between second and third. Bucentaur finished second but was disqualified, his jockey failing to draw the weight. Time—3mins. 9secs.

THE STAND PLATE.—Rs. 750 to the winner, Rs. 150 to the second, and Rs. 75 to the third. For ponies 14-2 and under which have never won a flat race value Rs. 500 or over. 5 furlongs.

Everyone who writes much, spends Rs. 5-0 to Rs. 10-0 a year for steel pens, penholders, evaporated ink, etc., besides from nothing to hundreds a year, according to the value of his time, for seconds lost at each dip. One "Swan" costing, say, Rs. 10-0, will last a lifetime, waste no ink and save much valuable time.

"Swan" Fountain Pens have the reputation of many years behind them. They have seen service on the battlefield, on the sea, in the desert, in Antarctic Regions and have everywhere proved invaluable to their owners. All hands suited.

Satisfaction warranted.

LINGFIELD.

NUMERICALLY, the fields were fairly strong, and sport of that nature to maintain briskness on Friday last. Though there was one discordant note to be chronicled, and that was occasioned when an objection was lodged against Black Arrow, following the easy victory of Colonel Hall Walker's colt in the Lingfield Park Plate. Perhaps the complaint was made with the view of forming a precedent. Be that as it may, it did not strike the public as a very sportsmanlike move, though there can be no disguising the fact that Black Arrow did get away in action, and probably he interfered slightly with Sancy in doing so, but if objections are to arise from such causes there will be no end to them. However, it was overruled by the stewards.

Lingfield Park Plate—Of 3,000sovs.; the owner of the second receives 300sovs., and of the third 100sovs., the nominator of the winner 200sovs., of the second 100sovs., and of the third 50sovs. 1¼ miles.

Mr. W. Hall Walker's bl c Black Arrow, by Count Schomberg—Black Cherry, 3yrs., 7st. 13lbs. (car. 8st.) ...	B. Lynham	1
Mr. W. Bass' b c Sancy, by Diamond Jubilee—Dame Agneta, 3yrs., 8st. 5lbs.	O. Madden	2
Lord Howard de Walden's b c His Eminence, by Royal Hampton—Altessa, 3yrs., 7st. 13lbs.	W. Higgs	3
Duke of Portland's Quair, 3yrs., 7st. 5lbs.	J. H. Martin	4
Mr. R. Dalgleish's Buckminster, 3yrs., 8st. 5lbs.	W. Halsey	0

Betting: 5 to 4 agst. Black Arrow, 3 to 1 Sancy, 100 to 15 His Eminence, 7 to 1 Buckminster, 10 to 1 Quair.

Won on a tight rein by a couple of lengths; a head between second and third. Buckminster was last. Time—2mins. 8⅘secs.

Subsequently Mr. Bass, the owner of Sancy, lodged an objection to the winner, on the ground that Black Arrow did not start from a standstill, and seriously interfered with Sancy by jumping across him. The Stewards (Captain W. Hope Johnstone, Captain Pigott, and Mr. C. S. Newton), after short deliberation overruled the protest.

Oak Tree Handicap—Of 150sovs.; second receives 10sovs.; 5 furlongs, straight.

Mr. A. McMicking's br f Var, by Perigord—Varra, 3yrs., 8st.	W. Higgs	1
Mr. J. East's b m Frances Isobel, 5yrs., 8st. 2lbs.	J. W. East	2
Mr. C. Meyer's b g Dying Duck, 3yrs., 7st. 2lbs. (car. 7st. 3lbs.)	W. Saxby	3
Mr. E. Carr's Amelia, 3yrs., 7st. 11lbs. ...	J. H. Martin	4
Mr. J. de Rothschild's Mistle, 4yrs., 7st. 9lbs.	F. Templeman	5
Mr. J. Craig's Crescent, 3yrs., 7st. 10lbs. ...	A. Templeman	6
Mr. C. Marnes' Bosco, 3yrs., 7st. 5lbs. ...	C. Trigg	7
Mr. W. H. Millard's Fair Anna, 6yrs., 7st. 11lbs....	O. Madden	8
Mr. L. E. Homan's Scotch Mistake, 3yrs., 7st. 3lbs.	J. Wilkinson	0
Mr. W. Horwood's Co-partner, 4yrs., 7st. 5lbs. (car. 7st. 7lbs.)	Alford	0

(Winner trained by Schwind.)

Betting: 5 to 2 agst. Amelia, 7 to 2 Var, 4 to 1 Frances Isobel, 7 to 1 Scotch Mistake, 8 to 1 each Fair Anna and Bosco, 10 to 1 each Crescent and Dying Duck, and 100 to 8 each others (offered.)

Won very comfortably by a length and a half; half a length divided second and third. Time—1min. 1⅗secs.

The minor events on each day's card at Lingfield were looked to to provide the most interesting racing. The richly endowed Lingfield Park and Great Foal Plates cut down to extremely small proportions, the presence of Black Arrow and Polar Star not only restricting the opposition, but causing the markets to become quite commonplace. On the second afternoon there was not even an objection to arouse excitement in the proceedings, and there could not possibly be anything particularly thrilling about the facile manner in which Polar Star carried off the Great Foal Plate for Colonel Hall Walker, who thus had the exceptional good fortune to win both the principal events of the meeting. Singularly enough, Mr. W. Bass supplied the second on each occasion. Doubtless the large crowd attracted to the pretty enclosure on Saturday was due to the alluring prospect of a pleasant retreat from the sun's scorching attentions, afforded by the sylvan shades of the paddock and course.

Eleventh Year of the Great Foal Plate—Of 1,000 sovs. (750sovs. to the winner, 100sovs. to the nominator of the winner, 50sovs. each for the owner and nominator of the second, and 25sovs. each for the owner and nominator of the third. 5 furlongs, straight.

Mr. W. Hall Walker' ch c Polar Star, by Pioneer—Go On, 8st. 9lbs. ..	B. Lynham	1
Mr. W. Bass' b or br Colt by Teufel—Lucretia Borgia, 8st. 11b. ..	O. Madden	2
Lord Derby's b f Vada, 8st. 3lbs. (car 8st. 5lbs.)	D. Maher	3
Mr. A. M. Simon's The Drudge, 8st. 4lbs.	J. W. East	4
Major E. Loder's Spring Chicken, 8st. 8lbs.	B. Dillon	5
Mr. Elliam's General Stossel, 8st. 11b. ..	C. Trigg	6

Betting: 4 to 1 on Polar Star, 8 to 1 agst. Vada, 10 to 1 Spring Chicken, 100 to 7 Lucretia Borgia colt, 20 to 1 others (offered.)

Won by three-quarters of a length; four lengths was the margin between second and third. The Drudge was a bad fourth, Spring Chicken (eased) fifth, and General Stossel (who was very backward in condition) tailed off. Time—59⅘secs.

Starboro' Selling Handicap—Of 200sovs.; winner to be sold for 50sovs. 6 furlongs, straight.

Mr. E. J. Percy's b m Van Voght, by Almoner, dam by Neophyte, aged, 7st. 3lbs.	H. Robbins	1
Mr. R. C. McKerrow's br c Rosethorpe, 3yrs., 7st. 9lbs.	J. H. Martin	2
Mr. J. M. Walrode's br f Morna, 4yrs., 7st. 5lbs. (car. 7st. 7lbs.)	W. Higgs	3
Mr. E. Carr's Ready Wit, 3yrs., 6st. 7lbs.	E. Piper	4
Mr. T. Sherwood's Merely Mary Ann, 3yrs., 6st. 9lbs.	S. Rees	5
Mr. P. Nelke's Wiseton, 3yrs., 7st. 13lbs.	W. Saxby	6
Mr. W. G. Steven's Wild Despair, 5yrs., 7st. 10lbs.	A. Templeman	7
Mr. C. Ribbert's Mixed Dance, 3yrs., 7st. 10lbs.	C. Trigg	0
Mr. P. Neate's Daylesford, 5yrs., 7st. 8lbs. (car 7st. 9lbs.)	O. Madden	0
Mr. E. A. Wigan's Palladia, 3yrs., 7st.	W. Daws	0

(Winner trained by Raisin.)

Betting: 5 to 2 agst. Rosethorpe. 9 to 2 Daylesford, 5 to 1 each Mixed Dance and Merely Mary Ann, 6 to 1 each Wiseton and Morna, and 100 to 8 each others (offered).

Won very easily by a length; half a length divided second and third. Time—1min. 9⅕secs. The winner was sold to Mr. Barrow for 105 guineas., and Daylesford to Mr. R. C. de Crespigny for 65 guineas.

NEWMARKET.

In every detail the Second July Meeting proved more charming than the first. Newmarket is not complete without the King, and double lustre was shed on the meeting by the welcome presence of the Prince of Wales, the Royal party being met by a large and representative company. The attendance from Town was a fairly good one, the new comfortable arrangements in the half-crown ring having caught on with the humbler followers of the national sport, the course splendid, and fields lacking little in both quality and quantity.

Beaufort Stakes (Welter Handicap)—Of 10sovs. each for starters, with 300sovs. added; second receives 30sovs.; Beaufort Course, from starting post of B. M. to finish of New T. Y. C. (seven furlongs).

Mr. J. Barker's br f Gay Primrose by Victor Wild—Miss Primrose, 3yrs., 7st. 2lbs. (car. 7st. 3lbs.)	W. Saxby	1
Mr. J. Craig's b f Paddy's Darling, 3yrs., 8st. 7lbs	H. Randall	2
Lord Derby's b or br c Vedas, 4yrs., 8st. 13lbs.	D. Baldwin	3
Mr. G. A. Prentice's Dumbarton Castle, 6yrs., 9st. 7lbs.	O. Madden	0
Capt. J. G. R. Homfray's Marlow, 3yrs., 8st. 7lbs	W. Halsey	0
Mr. Jersey's Vergia, 5yrs., 9st. 2lbs. ...	H. Jones	0

(Winner trained by H. Sadler.)

Betting: 13 to 8 Dumbarton Castle, 100 to 30 Foresight, 4 to 1 Paddy's Darling, 5 to 1 Lady Honora, 10 to 1 each Marlow and Vergia, 100 to 7 Gay Primrose, and 20 to 1 Vedas (offered).

Won by a length and a half; three lengths divided the second and third. Dumbarton Castle was fourth, close up, Foresight fifth, Marlow sixth, and Lady Honora last.

Dullingham Plate—Of 1,000sovs.; second receives 100sovs. and the third 50sovs. Suffolk stakes course (1½ miles.)

Mr. Heinemann's ch c Malua, by Marco—Harem, 3yrs, 8st. 10lbs ...	W. Higgs	1
Mr. W. Bass' ch f Gold Riach, 3yrs., 8st. 10lbs.	O. Madden	2
Mr. W. R. Wyndham's b or br c Athi, 3yrs., 9st. 4lbs.	W. Halsey	3
Mr. J. H. Houldsworth's Drumgrange, 3yrs., 7st. 2lbs	W. Griggs	0
Sir E. Vincent's Black Auster, 3yrs., 7st. 12lbs.	C. Trigg	0

(Winner trained by F. Day.)

Betting: 11 to 8 agst. Gold Riach, 2 to 1 Malua, 4 to 1 Athi, 100 to 8 Cherry Ripe, and 25 to 1 each others (offered.)

Cherry Ripe won by a head from Malua, who was a similar distance in front of Gold Riach, Athi, three lengths further off, was fourth, and Drumgrange eased towards the finish last. An objection to the winner on the ground that allowances were claimed for him at scale instead of over night, as stipulated in the conditions, was sustained and he was disqualified, the race being awarded to Malua.

Soltykoff Stakes—Of 5sovs. each for starters, with 300 sovs. added, for three year olds; second receives 50sovs. New T.Y.C. (5 furlongs and 140 yards).

Count de Berteux's b f Peach, 8st. 5lbs. ...	W. Higgs	2
Mr. Ernest Dresden's b c Saxham, 8st. 9lbs.	B. Lynham	3
Mr. J. B. Joel's Earlston, 8st. 12lbs. ...	H. Randall	4
Mr. Jersey's Petchora, 8st. 5lbs. ...	B. Dillon	5
Mr. Douglas Baird's Meadow Rue, 8st. 5lbs.	O. Madden	6
Sir E. Vincent's Macedon, 8st. 9lbs. ...	B. Carslake	7
Mr. E. Carlton's Tydides, 8st. 9lbs. ...	C. Leader	0
Mr. J. Reiss' Allargue, 8st. 9lbs. ...	W. Halsey	0
Col. E. W. Baird's Mesquite, 8st. 5lbs. ...	F. Rickaby	0

(Winner trained by G. Blackwell.)

Betting: Evens Saxham, 6 to 1 agst Turpitude, 7 to 1 Earlston, 100 to 8 Petchora, 100 to 7 each Mesquite, Peach, Donna Caterina, and 20 to 1 each others (offered.)

Won by a head; two lengths separated second and third, with Earlston close up fourth.

With His Majesty again present, the club enclosures were well filled on Wednesday and the new stands satisfactorily patronised. Such good galloping has not been enjoyed for some time, and the character of big fields instituted on Tuesday was well sustained.

July Handicap—Of 500sovs.; second receives 50sovs., last six furlongs of Bunbury mile.

Won by three-parts of a length; four lengths divided second and third, Hawthorn was fourth, Ninny fifth, and Tit for Tat last. Time—1min. 9secs.

The King accompanied by the Prince of Wales, set a good example in seeing this, one of his favourite meetings from start to finish, and the Royal example was generally followed by society of rejoicing in the luxury of a day out of doors, untrammelled by the rigorous rules of fashion. Thanks to the railway, which, while spoiling Newmarket revenues, has done so much for visitors, the public again mustered in force, and the executive may be well satisfied with the appreciation accorded their new stands. Needless to say that after the rain the going was perfection, and sport well up to standard.

CRICKET.

Eton vs. Harrow.—Played at Lord's on 12th, 13th and 14th July. Eton won by four wickets.

For this match Eton had five old choices and Harrow four, the former side, except that Benson appeared instead of Baggaley, being the same as played against Winchester. Harrow, winning the toss, commenced badly, Brandt being stumped at six, and Bird caught and bowled at 25. Both men were dismissed by Sprot, who bowls slow leg-breaks. When 42 had been scored in half-an-hour Falcon was caught at the wicket, and Crake, the captain, came in. With Eiloart he effected a good stand, the 100 and the latter's 50 being chronicled stimultaneously. At 102, however, C. E. Hatfeild sent back Eiloart and Osborne in three balls, the partnership for the fourth wicket having realised 60 in twenty-five minutes. Eiloart made 54 out of 96 in fifty minutes, and showed fine nerve at a critical time. Royle, a son of the Rev. V. F. Royle, made some good hits, and scored 14, by means of three fours and a two in one over from E. C. Hatfeild, but was bowled in the same over. Crake, who reached 50 after batting sixty-five minutes, was helped by Long to add 44 for the seventh wicket in twenty-five minutes. The seventh wicket fell at 174, and the 200, without further loss, was reached in 125 minutes. Bierdermann claimed 32 of the 46 runs added with Crake for the eighth wicket in thirty-five minutes, the majority of his runs being obtained by powerful square cuts. At 230 Crake, after scoring 68 out of 188 in 115 minutes, was out to a fine left-handed catch in the slip. He had played a splendid innings, his play on the leg side being excellent. Laverton was out first ball and the innings closed for 230 made in two and a-half hours. C. E. Hatfeild, the Eton Captain, took half the wickets for 56 runs, and might well have kept himself on longer. In ten minutes before lunch Eton scored five runs without loss. During the afternoon the ground was visited by the Prince and Princess of Wales, their three children—Princes Edward and Albert of Wales and Princess Victoria Mary of Wales—and Princess Louise (Duchess of Argyll). After the adjournment C. E Hatfeild was sent back at 26, of which he claimed 22. Tufnell, after batting forty minutes for a couple, was out at 36. Here, however, the Harrow success ended, for P. Pearson-Gregory—a son of T. S. Pearson-Gregory, who has played for Middlesex and Leicestershire—and Gibson added 163 together in about two hours. Gregory, who promises to develop into a very useful player, hit well all round the wicket, but was let off when 59. He scored 90 out of 173 in two hours and quarter, and hit thirteen hours. Gibson, who batted just over two hours, made some fine stokes, and hit seven fours in his 77. The sixth wicket fell at 208, but H. S. Hatfeild and Gold remained together until stumps were drawn, when Eton with four wickets in hand, were 17 runs on. During the afternoon rain stopped play for an hour—from 4-40 until 5-40—and many persons left the ground thinking no more play would be possible. On Saturday, H. S. Hatfeild and Gold remained together until the seventh wicket had put on 65 in forty minutes, after which the latter and Sprot added 32 for the eighth in half-an-hour. When the last-named was finely stumped, eight wickets were down for 305, but, so well did Benson and Curtis bat, that it was not until 365 that the innings closed. The Harrow fielding was of a high standard throughout and Bird appeared to be the best bowler on the side. In a minority of 135, Harrow commenced their second innings disastrously by losing Bird at 25 and Eiloart at 33. Brandt and Falcon, however, stemmed the tide, and added 47 for the third wicket in three-quarters of an hour. Brandt was out at 80, and two runs later Crake was bowled. With 16 added Osborne also was disposed of and half the side were then dismissed for 94. Royle obtained 13 in an over off C. E. Hatfeild, but, having made 18, was sixth out at 128. Lang failed and then, with only three wickets in hand, Harrow were still three runs behind. Everything at this point suggested an easy victory in store for the Etonians, but once again the proverbial uncertainty of cricket asserted itself, for Falcon, who had been batting well, undismayed by the disasters, found so captall a patner in Griffin that together they put on 62 for the ninth wicket in 35 minutes. Falcon batted for two hours and a-half for his 79, and played a very great game indeed for his side. Too much praise could scarcely be given to both him and Griffin for their sturdy play at a most critical time. Despite their fine stand, however, the innings closed for 229, and Eton were set only 95 to win. Against Eiloart and Bird the first three wickets fell for 7, and it was felt that almost anything might happen. Pearson-Gregory, however, again played a great game, and, although he gave a chance, one could hardly overpraise his display. The sixth wicket fell at 70, Pearson-Gregory then being out, but Naylor, who was missed at the wicket by Brandt, and H. S. Hatfeild obtained the necessary remaining runs without being separated, Eton winning ten minutes before time by four wickets. On the second day the ground was again visited by T.R.H. Princes Edward and Albert of Wales and Princess Louise (Duchess of Argyll). Score and analysis :—

GENTLEMEN vs. PLAYERS, &c.—Played at the Oval on 16th, 17th and 18th July. Drawn.

Considering that as many as five inter-county contests were being decided on the same days, the Oval authorities succeeded in obtaining very good elevens for the above match—the fiftieth played on the Surrey ground between the Gentlemen and the Players. The reduction in the price of admission from a shilling to sixpence was apparently appreciated, seeing that during the first day as many as 6,558 paid for admission. On a good wicket the players commenced batting with Hayward and Iremonger against the bowling of May and Napier. Iremonger, when he had made 6, was caught at slip by Crawford off a no-ball delivered by Napier, and, when 28 had been made in half an-hour, Hayward was yorked by May with a ball which broke the off-stump. The downfall of the Surrey crack naturally came as a disappointment to the spectators, but Hayes, who followed in, batted in a bright and easy style, and the early disaster was soon forgotton. Iremonger succeeded in completing his 1,000 runs for the season, and 50 went up in as many minutes. Hayes made several delightful drives, but at 96, after the second wicket had put on 68 in forty-five minutes both were clean bowled. Gunn and Quaife then came together, and three figures appeared at the end of eighty-five minutes, the total at lunch being 120 for three. After the interval the pair played a very sedate game until, at 158, Gunn was fourth out, the wicket having put on 62 in an hour. King then came in, but, with 1 run added, Quaife, after being in seventy minutes for 28, was caught by Colbeck in the slips off Odell. This brought King and Hardstaff together, and it was during their partnership that the best cricket of the day was seen. The Notts player gave no chance whatever, and drove and hit to leg in capital style, giving a very bright and attractive display. He was sixth out at 238, having made 44 of the 79 added for the sixth wicket in forty-five minutes. Soon after his dismissal Payne was injured on the hand, and Lawton kept wicket in his stead. King found two more useful partners in Lees and Trott, the former helping to put on 89 for the seventh wicket and the latter 45 for the eighth. When the innings, after lasting three hundred and fifteen minutes, closed for 365, King was left to carry out his bat for 89. It was an almost faultless display, and, if somewhat slow, was certainly attractive. He made his runs out of 207 obtained whilst in in one hundred and sixty-five minutes and hit a dozen 4's. With the close of the innings, play ceased for the day. On the second morning Wood and Payne opened the Gentlemen's innings to the bowling of Lees and Gunn, and only 10 runs had been made in half-an-hour before Payne was bowled by the latter. Crawford then came in, and, giving a good display, helped to add 43 for the second wicket in 30 minutes. Upon the arrival of Lawton some free and vigorous cricket was seen, the newcomer hitting up 40 out of the 44 put on with Wood for the third wicket in 22 minutes. He hit eight 4's, and was sent back by a capital catch on the part of Gunn. The first scoring was continued after his departure, for Jessop and Wood put on 50 for the fourth wicket in 25 minutes the Gloucestershire captain claiming 38 of the number. At lunch-time Colbeck and Wood were in, the score being 199 for four wickets. The former played an attractive game, reaching 50 in an hour, and staying in whilst 89 were added for the fifth wicket in 70 minutes. He hit eleven 4's in his 54. "W. G." was given a very warm welcome upon going in to play his 150th innings for the Gentlemen against the Players, and the cheering was renewed when the old gentleman made a capital hit to leg for 4 off Lees. When the total had reached 242 Wood was bowled by Trott for a valuable and steady innings of 68, which lasted three hours He hit five 4's, and was twice missed—the fast time before he had made a run. At 252 Lord Dalmeny, Napier, and "W. G." were all sent back and, the last five wickets falling for 22 in 25 minutes, the Gentlemen were left 107 in arrears on the first innings. Lees bowled very well indeed throughout, and his analysis of five for 84 was better than the figures would lead one to suppose. When the Players went in the second time Lord Dalmeny kept wicket instead of Payne, who was still suffering from the effects of the injury to his hand. With only nine runs scored Iremonger was bowled by Crawford in trying to drive, and this, so it happened, proved to be the first of a series of disasters, for at 17 Hayward was caught low down at cover-point, Quaife was run out at 26, Hayes played on at 30, and one run later John Gunn was bowled, half the side then being out for 31. At this critical point Hardstaff joined King, and so well did the two play that they took the total to 153 without being separated, the Players, when stumps were drawn for the day being 260 runs on with five wickets in hand. Hardstaff played the better cricket of the two and gave a very attractive display. King, when he had made 31, was missed in the long-field by Lawton—a mistake which proved expensive. Owing to an injury to a finger Odell was unable to bowl in the second innings of the Players, and his loss was naturally severely felt during the long partnership. Yesterday the not-outs added considerably to the score without either giving a chance. Altogether they added 182 runs for the sixth wicket in 140 minutes, and in coming together as they did at a most critical time and quite changing the aspect of the game they merited very great praise indeed. King batted for 150 minutes and except for the chance he gave when 31 made no mistake. He hit four 5's—two in an over off May—and six 4's and made his aggregate in the match 177 for once out. Lees then joined Hardstaff and so freely did the run-getting become that sixty were added in twenty-five minutes before the former was sent back. Four runs later Hardstaff too was disposed of after scoring 104 out of 246 in 177 minutes without a mistake of any kind. He scored well all round the wicket and hit a five and sixteen 4's. The later men hit out and Trott and Strudwick added 41 for the last wicket very quickly. The Gentlemen were set 443 to win, and by lunch-time had made 8 without loss. After the interval "W.G." and Wood made a prolonged stand, reaching 53 in as many minutes and scoring 94 together in 90 minutes before the latter was caught in the slips Grace played sound cricket, and his success—on his fifty-eighth birthday—delighted the crowd. After batting for an hour and three-quarters he reached his 50 to an accompaniment of tremendous cheering. Payne made many fine hits, and one over from Gunn scored three 4's and a three. The second wicket put on 70, of which the Cambridge wicket-keeper claimed 48. "W.G." remained in until 201, when Trott caught him off Jayes for a capital score of 74. The Master played a good, sound game until he reached 50, although he was somewhat slow, but afterwards it was evident that he was feeling the exertion, when he had made 59 he was missed in the slips, but he innings was, nevertheless, an extraordinary one for a man of his years. The rest of the innings was noticeable only for a fine display on the part of Crawford, whose batting probably saved the Gentlemen from defeat. When stumps were drawn seven wickets were down for 277, the young Surrey amateur carrying out his bat for 71. Score and analysis :—

ATHLETICS.

IRELAND vs. SCOTLAND.—At the Ulster C. C. grounds, Belfast, on Saturday, the twelfth encounter in the athletic arena between Scotland and Ireland took place in the presence of some 2,500 spectators. The weather was gloriously fine. The general impression was that Scotland would prove the superior team, and as results turned out this proved to be correct, for they won seven out of the eleven events on the card, and in addition had the distinction of lowering an Irish record when in the Quarter Halswell beat Day's figures by ⅘sec. In the High and Long Jumps Ireland's representatives easily held their own, while in the Half-mile Crawford's success was a bit of a turn up. The finish for the Mile between McGough and Murphy was brilliant, and this proved to be the grandest event in a fine afternoon's sport. On the whole Scotland completely deserved their fine victory, as they were undoubtedly the superior team. Details:

HALF-MILE RACE.—J. F. Fairbairn Crawford, Ireland, 1; G. N. Morphy, Ireland, 2; W. D. Anderson, Scotland 0; T. Vallance, Scotland, 0. Vallance led for two-thirds of the distance when he gave up, while Anderson was beaten half-way up the straight. Three hundred yards from home Fairbairn Crawford assumed the lead, which he kept to the finish, defeating Morphy by four yards. Time—2mins. 10⅕secs.

100 YARDS RACE.—J. P. Stark, Scotland, 1; D. Murray, Ireland, 2; W. Halswell, Scotland, 0. Murray led till fifty yards from home, when Stark passed him, a fine finish resulting in a win for the Scotchman by six inches. Halswell being two yards away. Time—10⅕secs.

HAMMER.—T. R. Nicholson, Scotland, 157ft. 5ins., 1; L. A. Kiely, Ireland, 141ft. 4ins., 2.

HIGH-JUMP.—Con. Leahy, Ireland, 5ft. 9½ins. 1; J. B. Milne, Scotland, 5ft. 8ins. 2; P. A. W. Watson, Scotland, 5ft. 7½ins., 0; G. M. Mayburry, Ireland, 5ft. 6ins., 0. Subsequently Leahy did 6ft.

220 YARDS RACE.—W. Halswell, Scotland, 1; J. P. Stark, Scotland, 2; D. Murray, Ireland, 0; H. Thrift, Ireland, 0. Murray led for 150 yards, when Halswell passed him and won by a yard from Stark, who just beat Murray on the tape. Time—23⅕secs.

ONE-MILE RACE.—G. N. Morphy, Ireland, 1; J. McGough, Scotland, 2; A. M. Matthews, Scotland, 0; J. F Fairbairn Crawford, Ireland, 0. As the last lap was entered on the Scottish pair were leading a few yards 200 yards from home, Matthews and Fairbairn Crawford retired twenty yards from the tape. McGough was leading, but immediately Morphy drew level, and in a desperate finish gained the verdict by inches. Time—4mins. 33⅕secs.

HURDLE RACE.—R. S. Stronach, Scotland, 1; D. Carey, Ireland, 2; L. A. Kiely, Ireland, 0; R. S. Stewart, Scotland, 0. Stronach had an easy tack, eventually winning by four yards, with Kiely just defeating Stewart for third place, close up. Time—15secs.

PUTTING THE WEIGHT.—T. Kirkwood, Scotland, 45ft. 7ins., 1; Barrett, Ireland, 44ft., 2.

QUARTER-MILE RACE.—W. Halswell, Scotland, 1; J. F. McEvoy, Ireland, 2; H. Thrift, Ireland, 0; W. D. Anderson, Scotland, 0. McEvoy shot to the front at once, and led for half the distance, but here Halswell, who was going beautifully, went past him and won in easy style by a few yards. Thrift finished a poor third and Anderson gave up five yards from home. Time—50⅖secs. (an Irish record).

LONG JUMP.—Peter O'Connor, Ireland, 22ft 7½ins., 1; H. R. Neilson, Scotland, 21ft. 7ins., 2; Con. Leahy, Ireland, 21ft. 4ins., 0.

FOUR-MILE RACE.—S. Stevenson, Scotland, 1; H. C. Hawtrey, Ireland, 2; T. Jack, Scotland, 0; J. Guild, Scotland, 0; H. Muldoon, Ireland, 0; T. Downing, Ireland, 0. The lot raced in close order for ten laps, when all but the two placed men gave up. Five laps from home both men were going at it steadily, the Scotchman being a few yards in front. Entering the straight Hawtrey made an effort to pass his opponent, who, however, responded gamely and won by eight yards. Time—20mins. 53secs.

RESULT.—Scotland, 7 points; Ireland, 4 points.

ROWING.

THE WINGFIELD SCULLS.

For the fourth time during his career as an amateur sculler, H. T. Blackstaffe, of the Vesta R. C., has won the Wingfield Sculls, the trophy symbolic of the Amateur Sculling Championship of Great Britain and Ireland, by beating A. Hamilton Cloutte of the London R. C.

Blackstaffe's connection with this race—one of the oldest of its kind in the world, having been instituted since 1830—dates back to 1895, when he competed unsuccessfully against the Hon'ble Rupert Guinness and Guy Nickalls. He did not scull the following year, but was successful for the first time in 1897, when the Hon'ble Rupert Guinness (the holder) did not defend his title. In the 1898 and 1899 the Vesta man fought out the issue with B Howell (Trinity Hall, Cambridge), the latter winning the race on each occasion. The following year he was beaten in the challengers' heat by C. V. Fox, of the Brigade of Guards R. C. (the eventual winner that year), but was successful in 1901. Blackstaffe did not compete in 1902 and 1904, but was second in 1903 to F. S. Kelly, of the Leander Club, and won last year from St. George Ashe, of the Thames R. C.

Conditions were generally favourable for a good race, as the tide was coming up smoothly, although a slight wind was against it for the most part over the full course—from the University Stone at Putney to the University Post at Mortlake. Still it was a nice evening for a race, and the scullers did good time to Hammersmith. Cloutte had the Surrey Station, and was shown up by the veteran coxswain, Dr. Sheard (London R. C.), from a cutter stroked by J. T. Phelps, junior, and steered by Jack Gibson. Blackstaffe also had a cutter, from the bows of which Ed. Cass, of the Vesta R.C., acted as pilot, but a stretcher breaking after passing Hammersmith, the holder sculled merrily along unattended. He was well ahead at that time, Harry Sims was steering. One of the Thames Steamboat Company's craft, the Empress Frederick, followed the race, and carried the starter and umpire, Mr. G. E. B. Kennedy.

At the signal, Blackstaffe, on the Middlesex Station, was the first to catch the water, but Cloutte, got away in the first few strokes, and was slightly ahead at the end of half a minute's rowing. This state of affairs did not last long, as by the time that a full minute had gone Blackstaffe had obtained a lead, which he never afterwards relinquished. Cloutte pulled 36 strokes in the first minute against 35 by Blackstaffe, but afterwards the competitors sculled at about the same rate. Blackstaffe continued to go ahead steadily, and was clear opposite the Thame R. C. boathouse. At Craven Steps both men were going smoothly, but Blackstaffe was moving the quicker, and his time return was 2mins. 39secs. for the distance. The Vesta man from that point kept up a good pace to Hammersmith Bridge, which landmark he "touched" in 8mins. 36secs., six lengths ahead, and drew right away up Chiswick Reach. He just escaped being run down by the careless occupants of a sailing boat coming down the river before the wind opposite the Bull's Head, at Barnes, and won comfortably by ten lengths. Cloutte was 22secs. behind at Barnes Bridge, but spurted up and minimised his defeat at the end. The winner's time at Chiswick Church was 13mins. 52secs., Barnes Bridge 19mins. 3secs., and finishing post 23mins. 10secs. The loser rowed hard to the end, but was never able to go the pace set by Blackstaffe. The victory was a very popular one.

SWIMMING.

THE CHANNEL SWIM.

Jabez Wolffe, whose attempt to swim the English Channel had been postponed several times, started from the South Foreland on Tuesday night at 11-39, and during the next day made excellent progress. At 6 o'clock in the evening he was eight miles of Cape Grisuez and was then going well. But at 9-45 he was taken out of the water when about 7 miles off the French Coast.

RACE ACROSS PARIS.

Thousands were present at this interesting event which took place on Sunday.

Bougoin, the winner is but eighteen years of age, and follows the occupation of an engineer. He commenced swimming in 1903, and in June of that year finished second in a 100-metre race behind Vasseur. In the World's Championship over 500 metres he finished ninth, being the first in the French division. He represented France at the Olympic games at Athens, but was not seen to advantage. On his return he joined the ranks of the professionals, and although unwell at the time finished second in the 500 Metres Championship of France. He competed in the Through Paris Race last year, but retired at half-distance, while, strange to say, he could only finish second in the eliminating trials for selecting the last four Frenchmen to compete on Sunday last. His average speed was 2½ miles an hour. Result:—

Hunting.

THE GORDON'S HORSE HOUNDS.

29th July.—"Take not out your 'ounds on a werry windy day." Thus the immortal Jorrocks, and his sound wisdom was exemplified when the 30th Lancers pack met at the 5th milestone on the Hoskote Road. It was a real bad day, and the best pack in England could have done no more than Mr. Gledstanes and his seventeen couple of great up-standing hounds. The wind fairly howled over the hills and just when there was a chance of a gallop, down came a chilly shower and obliterated what scent there was. Upon this occasion we almost got warm and ran for quite half a mile (!) but from the beginning it was clear that not much would be done. Any amount of trouble was taken by Mr. Gledstanes and his whips, but there was absolutely no scent and though hounds spoke to a line on two occasions after the half mile spurt, their heads went up almost immediately and a jack might have been in the next field without the jack being any the wiser. Consequently the matter became hopeless and the Master had to take his hounds home.

2nd August.—A rather warm morning and a good many absentees. But the latter fact was easily accounted for, people having been dancing at the farewell ball to General and Mrs. J. Eccles Nixon a few hours before. Mrs. Stirling, however, was out as usual as fresh as a rose and going great guns. It was a morning which began with any amount of promise and died away in a very disappointing manner. Hounds had hardly entered the first bit of scrub when they were away at a great pace. No one viewed the jack, and the whole business was mysterious. For half-a-mile they ran like smoke and then—up went their heads and all was over. They could never touch the line afterwards and to quote the dear old hunting grocer once again he seemed to "'ave vanished into thin h'air." Certainly the "ship" couldn't have "beat 'im," for there were no sheep about. But in some sugarcane fields there was a great commotion. Two jacks broke, one with three couple of hounds close after him and the other with the body of the pack at his brush. A first whip has to be self-denying and Mr. Walker had a hard ride to stop the three couples which drove their jack close past him. By the time he had managed it the rest of the pack travelling at a tremendous pace—by the way what price the Tickham hunt, their representatives here are fairly too fast for the "Duke's"— had practically coursed their jack—a very fat dog—for a mile and broken him on a rocky hill. Mrs. Stirling, of course, got the brush but it was not a run that was really worth anything. Trotting back to try for the line of the other jack, Mr. Gledstanes touched it once or twice but hounds could never really run, and he had to be given up. It is quite clear at present, that in Bangalore, it is necessary to get away on fair terms with your jack to hope for a good run. Whatever the cause, scent seems to vanish with marvellous rapidity.

But there are some rarely keen votaries of the chase in Bangalore at present. The British Resident, the Yuvaraja, Colonel Leader, Major Hayes, Major Roe and—heavens! I forgot to put the ladies first—Mrs. Wartabet, Mrs. Stirling, Miss Saunders and Miss Goodrich, all go as if they had a spare neck at home. Bangalore ground is stony, Bangalore nullahs are nasty but nobody seems to mind. Looking forward to a record run or two, and also to the advent of Colonel Wapshare, the late Master of the Gordon's Horse Hounds, in about a week.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

THERE was a bye day on Saturday, 28th July, hounds meeting at noon at the 5th milestone on the Avalanche Bridle Path. It was a favourable day for sport, the weather being grey with glimpses of sun now and then, varied by occasional mists and heavy showers. The Master took us along the Bridle Path for nearly a couple of miles and then crossed the bog at the bottom of the Shola which runs along the valley of the Muthugar Stream. Here Major Glyn viewed a brace of jacks, but after hunting at a slow pace into the covert, hounds could do nothing more with either of them. The Master now moved off to Gartree Hill, into which Captain Dennistoun had viewed a jack, but scent was so indifferent that hounds could barely own to a line at all. Eventually, however, they carried a line up into the Shola west of Muthugar Stream and on, hunting round about the Sholas in a thick fog and heavy rain.

The Master then moved off in a homeward direction and hounds picked up a line in the rough ground near Sambhur Shola, above the Nunjanad Village. This line they carried slowly to a small Shola on the top of the ridge, whence they hunted at a good pace down the north side of Sambhur Shola right into the valley close to the Avalanche Bridle Path. Then with a sharp right-handed turn up over the plough by the hut east of Nunjanad Village, back through Sambhur Shola and finally lost their jack in the south arm of the Shola. One member of the field, when hounds began to run, lost himself in the fog and after leaving his tired horse (where he is unable to say) in charge of a native arrived in Ootacamund just too late to stop the search parties that had been sent out with horses, etc., to scour the Nunjanad and neighbouring hills for him.

The hounds met at Wenlock Shola on Monday, 30th July, at 8 A.M., a nice morning sun shining through the clouds occasionally, a fairly large field was out. Major Glyn viewed a jack at the bottom of Wenlock Shola and hounds were taken straight there. They picked up the line at once and hunted the jack past Wapshare's Hare Shola to the east of Bacon Wood, checking for a moment in the wood, then down the Zemakal Valley to ground in a sunken watercourse south-west of Zemakal Shola. After leaving the road by Bacon Wood hounds had made the pace a cracker, having seldom run faster this season. The time of the run was 20 minutes. After sundry mining operations and burrowings in the bowels of the earth by Timmy, the native whip, the jack was bolted and killed. We then drew on up the Zemakal Valley and hounds soon hit off a line running nearly to Zemakal Shola, then back up by Karamuda Shola and on to the Krurmund Path, near which a herd of sambhur coming blundering right in among the pack, they changed on to a big stag, which soiled almost at once in the Krurmund Stream just below. The Master then took hounds along the Krurmund Path, when, viewing a jack near Sultan Shola, they ran at a great pace for about ten minutes, finally driving their jack to ground near the waterfall on the Mekod Stream, in a sunken watercourse, where they killed underground. After more mining, lasting over three hours, the jack was unearthed and the hounds duly rewarded. Hounds were back in kennels at 4-15 P.M. after a long day out. Scent was pretty good.

On Tuesday the meet was at the Fern Hill Lodge Gates at noon. The Master drew down the Avalanche Bridle Path until just below Denmark Wood, when Captain Dennistoun viewed a jack going over the hill. Hounds hunted him down to Fairlawns Bridge and then back again through Denmark to Woodstock, out of which five sambhur appeared, hounds taking no notice of them. Then we went on viâ Dairymaid and across the stream and the Melkundah Road into Cairn Hill, where the jack was lost. We then drew Druid and Dudley Shola, a jack being viewed out of the latter. Scent was so indifferent that hounds could barely own his line at all. They carried it into Jackal Shola, but nothing more could be made of it. This was one of the worst scenting days of the season.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

CALCUTTA vs. CUSTOMS.—This was one of the opening matches in the Rugby League and was played on the Calcutta ground last Saturday. The home team were all over their opponents and eventually won by 28 points to nil. Shortly after the start the Calcutta three-quarters got away and Burnett scored a try. The same player got through again and both tries were converted. A rush by the Calcutta forwards looked as if they would score, but Vears touched down. The Customs here got away once or twice, but were soon pulled up and Turner rushed through with a try for Calcutta. In the second half the Calcutta forwards dribbled the ball over the line and the major points were added. Then Weatherhead got away and scored a try, the place failing. Calcutta continued to press and Arthur dropped a goal. Edwards, of the Customs, was next prominent for a good run, but nothing came out of it and the home team scored once more before time, Heilgers crossing the line; the place kick hit the post. Calcutta thus won by 4 goals (one dropped) and three tries (28 points) to nil. Teams :—

CALCUTTA F. C.—Dick, back; Maclean, Siddons, Burnett and Turnbull, three-quarters; Weatherhead and Arthur, halves; Heilgers, Kerr, Butler, Ker, Dunlop, LeCocq, Stewart and Todd, forwards.

CUSTOMS F. C.—T. Vears, back; Maitland, H. Vears, Edwards and Cuniffe, three-quarters; Shave and Warden, halves; Dempster, Pettie, Jewell, Devereix, Thompson, Wilson and Waddel, forwards.

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS vs. ARMENIANS.—Played on the 4th instant, the Fusiliers winning by thirteen points to three. The Armenians had out a scratch team but played hard to the end. Their opponents were not long in scoring, the forwards rushing down enabled White to get over with a try. Leathly adding the major points. Shortly after another forward rush terminated in a try, Walker taking the ball across. The place kick failed, but before the interval they registered a third try, Brenham crossing the line. Mathewson converted, and the Fusiliers changed ends with a lead of thirteen points to nil. The Armenians played a better game in the second half and the Fusiliers were unable to CALCUTTA vs. WANDERERS.—The Wanderers turned up on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday with thirteen men and after considerable delay the game was started. The home team simply swamped their opponents and in the first half scored three goals and a try. Messrs. Heilgers and Ker played for the Wanderers in the second half, but Calcutta were still too strong, and adding a goal and two tries, ran out winners by four goals and three tries (25 points) to nil.

UNITED SERVICES vs. NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—Played on the Fusiliers' ground on Tuesday, the home team winning by a penalty goal to nil. The game was not a very high class display and the forwards had most of the play, scrums being very numerous. It was evenly contested, however, and the Services had hard lines in not scoring. Teams :—

FUSILIERS.—Dignan, back ; Freer, Butterfield, Mr. Ritson, and Lewis, three-quarters ; Rudd and Kaye, half-backs ; White, Walker, Robinson, Mathews, Leathly and Messrs. Ovans and Staples, forwards.

UNITED SERVICES.—Tobin, back ; Shevlin, Mr. Harty, Captain Cowie, and Bromage, three-quarters ; Mr. Stevens and Pte. Maxwell, half-backs ; Messrs. Hill, Lillburn, Cooper, Boucqut, and Ptes. Barlow, Adams, and Humphreys, forwards.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IT is significant of the equality of form displayed throughout the past "Soccer" season by the two leading teams that one should have captured the League Trophy and that the Shield should have fallen to the other. Indeed, the respective careers of Calcutta and the H. L. I. on the football field since last May most assuredly entitle them to claim "honours easy." The four occasions on which these teams have met during the season have produced two draws and two wins for Calcutta, but although this fact might reasonably be supposed to establish the superiority of the civil team, it must not be forgotten that the League record of the Dum-Dum men is superior both in points and goals

The final struggle for the I. F. A. Shield on 1st August, contrary to expectations, produced a somewhat disappointing game in which neither of the above teams was seen to advantage. The absence of Binning and Lieut. Malcolm from their respective sides seemed to paralyze both forward lines and the match may virtually be said to have been fought out by the defence rather than by the attack. In this connection, it is only right to make special mention of the magnificent game played by V. Cooper, which, for the nonce, quite overshadowed that of his redoubtable rival, Renton. I consider Cooper to have been the chief factor in Calcutta's win on Wednesday, notwithstanding Fyfe's brilliant but solitary goal, which secured the verdict to his side. Calcutta has now a record of five wins in thirteen years. Dalhousie can point to two, whilst the remaining six are all claimed by military teams.

When in the very opening stages of the "Soccer" season, the elder Sherman crocked his knee hopelessly, things certainly looked very dark for the C. F. C. and this misfortune was further augmented by the retirement of Cooper from the football field. However, the arrival of Fyfe put matters on a more satisfactory basis, whilst Drew, the captain of the team, showed considerable sense in putting Binning and the younger Sherman to play together on the right wing, though it was not until quite late in the season that these two sprinters thoroughly settled down to their positions. The satisfactory filling of the left extreme position provided a source of infinite worry to the C. F. C. Selection Committee until Forster appeared and solved the difficulty. McConnell, a recruit to the C. F. C. half-back line played grandly throughout the season and may be said to have shown the most consistent form of any individual player in Calcutta.

Dalhousie have had a miserable time of it this season, and never once figured as likely Shield winners. Their League form was far behind that of 1905 and they received their quietus in the semi-finals of the Shield Tournament. Storrey at back and Mackenzie in goal are two very useful recruits. Of the others it can only be said that Stimson and Stewart, though deserving of all praise for so nobly rallying to the aid of their old club, are well past the days of active football. Mr. Stimson, I feel sure, would be a most valuable asset to the newly formed Referees' Association, his acquaintance with the game being both peculiar and extensive. Prike has been very much off colour, and was never the Prike of last year's Shield final when he took the Calcutta goal by storm.

The H. L. I. have undoubtedly proved themselves the most consistent of all senior clubs, their League record being particularly good. In Lees (goal) and Renton (back) they have two players of sterling abilities and there will be few who will wise to disagree with me when I say that the like of Renton's plab has never before been seen in Calcutta. The H. L. I. forwary line suffers considerably in comparison with the defence, and had Lieut. Malcolm been able to play for his team throughout the season, the result of the Shield competition might well have been different.

The Northumberland Fusiliers have made a most favourable début on the Calcutta football field and may confidently be expected to render even a better account of themselves next season. Their best effort was the defeat of Dalhousie on 2nd June to the tune of 4 goals to love. Drum-Major Horne stands out pre-eminent in the Fusiliers forward line, whilst their goalkeeper showed excellent form.

The Caledonians, though they did bravely during the season, scarcely came right up to expectations. When they defeated Calcutta by 1—0 on 2nd June, it was thought that they were within measurable distance of the Shield Championship, but, thereafter, they fell on evil times and could only win a couple of matches in the second half of the League Competition. But they are a gritty crew—these men of Caledonia—and already the determination to do great things next season is strong within them. The two Rossers came along just too late to be of any great value to their forward line, but if they can be induced to play for Caledonians throughout next season they should undoubtedly prove a very formidable reinforcement.

The records of Howrah and Rangers are very similar and call for no particular comment. Rangers are slightly better on goal average.

Y. M. C. A. Valete.

The deliberations of the Sub-Committee selected to create a legislative basis for the Calcutta Referees' Association are now before me and it looks as if we were at last going to have something definite in the shape of control of referees. Hockey and Association Football are to have separate Committees of at least 8 members, and all clubs affiliated to the I. F. A. are eligible for membership on payment of an annual subscription of Rs. 5. These two committees are to be examiners of all applicants for the C. R. A. Badge and, in order to make a start, have the power to invite a limited number, of recognized authority, to join as referees without passing any test. Calcutta has a plethora of referees of recognized authority who recognize their own authority as keenly as they recognize their physical incapacity for running up and down fields for 50 minutes. I would suggest that all referees whose physical shortcomings are more than plainly evidenced by the circumference of their waist belts be legally restricted to a porridge diet during the football season. We should thus get quite a lot of useful men as active referees who whilst engaged in supporting the bar of the particular club which enjoys their membership are now content to dispute the decisions of their more energetic, and, by the same token, infinitely more honourable brethren.

THE GUINDY CUP.—The fourth and last qualifying round in this competition was played off on the 28th ultimo in perfect weather. The best score of the afternoon was Mr. C. Morrison's (scr.) 55, which establishes a record for the new course. Mr. Annan also played very sound golf and returned a net 56, which enables him to compete for the Cup. Scores :—

Mr. C. Morrison	55	scr.	55
Mr. D. Annan	60	4	56
Mr. F. M. Robinson...	64	3	61
Rev. R. H. Stevenson	70	8	62
Captain Cotter	74	12	62
Mr. R. Littlehalles	76	12	64

The following have now qualified for the Cup :—Messrs. J. M. Brown, C. Morrison, F. M. Robinson, F. Bell Scott, C. L. Bidie, J. H. Bewes, D. Annan and J. H. Peebles (junior).

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

20th July 1906.

IT is once more holiday season, when London is beginning to look like a City of the Dead, when the great Railway termini convey one and all an impression of pandemonium and indescribable confusion long rows of luggage laden vehicles bar the entrance and when after a patient struggle "on y est arrivée" one has to walk warily to avoid the "by your leave" (generally a quite superfluous formula) porters who barge into one from behind, from before, from starboard and from larboard, but still on the whole one does not resent anything, that is, if you yourself are going to make a journey to far away holiday resorts, where the goal is the Links, the river or the moor. Nothing matters when the wicked (employer) is to cease from troubling and the weary (employed) is to rest, for three weeks, a month, or longer. The Golf courses so hardly used for ten months of the 12 are now enjoying their much needed holiday too, and in proportion as they have immunity from the foot and club of the golfer, so will the seaside links round our islands be infested and over run by devotees, and dévotees from the big cities. At last we get to the golf, but with the exception of a few not vitally important or interesting events, there is little to chronicle—the legal and other professions have, however, been engaged in serious matches with other professional clubs and societies, the Stockbrokers for instance tried conclusion with the London Soliciters Society at Ranford and the Press beat the Bar at Huntercombe, in the first mentioned match, the "House" represented by Messrs. Fry, Smirtee and Lingen won the singles by 4 to 1 but lost the foursomes by, to 1½. The other match was a much more evenly contested affair, the paper people being only 1 to the good on the singles, an advantage which they lost in the foursomes by—3. Both sides were very strongly represented, including Messrs. H. H. Hilton, H. W. Beveridge, T. Marsfield Hunter, F. Newnes (the recent winner of the Parliamentary Handicap), B. Darwin, Hal Ludlow, A. J. Robertson, etc. Soon these friendly matches will be abandoned until another season, and indeed most have held their annual home and out contest which has become so important a part of the golfer's plan of campaign.

Another interesting match was recently played on the beautiful course of the Northwood Club, when Mr. George Edwards' team met, the "Green Room Club," nine aside. Several well-known men played on either side, such as Messrs. Rutland Barrington. Gerald du Maurrier, Fred Terry, etc. We certainly associate these Green Room beaux much more intimately with the "Mikado," "Peter Pan," and the "Scarlet Pimpernel" than with Tee shots and stymies, but on the whole, although there was nothing particularly brilliant or forcible in their exhibition, the play on both sides was quite up to the average "Society" match and was under handicap. The Green Room Club proved too much for Mr. George Edwards' Team and won the day by 11 points to 4½, the singles by 6½ to 3 (the quarter being for the bye) and the foursomes by 4½ to 1½.

But the match which has probably engrossed the most attention during the past ten days, is that which Sir Ralph Payne-Gallwey played against William Hunter over the Redmund Club Course at Sudbrook Park. The course is a fine one, laid out in the grounds surrounding a beautiful Georgian House, built by that Duke of Argyll who distinguished himself by marrying the beautiful Miss Gunning, the estate has since passed to the Crown and the Club now rent it at something over £600 per annum. The match to which I alluded just now, and to which, after an apology for degressing, I now revert, has been described as a "Freak" match, because Sir Ralph backed himself to play round with a bow and arrow and concede a third to Hunter, who merely golfed in the orthodox fashion. From each tee the archer loosed an arrow with his curious looking Turkish bow, and when he reached a green, he replaced the arrow with a ball and putted out in the usual manner. It was a most interesting encounter and ended in favour of the mere Golfer by 5 up and 4 to play. The respective scores were as follows:—

Sir R. Payne-Gallwey: out 4, 4, 5, 5, 4, 4, 5, 3, 5=39; in 4, 4, 3, 5, 3, 4, 3, 4, 4=34=73. Hunter: out, 3, 4, 5, 3, 3, 4, 4, 4, 4= 34; in 5, 5, 4, 4, 4, 4, 3, 4, 4=37=71.

When a beginner at golf I once heard a challenge given by a learned judge, a keen toxopholite, to play a similar match under the same conditons over the Littlestone Links, but the challenge was received with scorn and the contest never came off; this was years ago! On Monday, 16th July, the return match was played between the bowman and the clubman, but on this occasion the third which the archer conceded to Hunter was not given and playing even, the match was halved.

The long spell of dry weather has made record breaking quite a common occurrence, especially in Scotland, where on dit Mr. Robert Maxwell did a marvellous round at North Berwick, holing that extremely difficult course in 67 strokes, and at Montrose Mr. Watt compiled a 73.

Lovers of Littlestone,—and they are many,—will be glad to hear of an improvement in this fine course. The 13th hole, which prior to the incursion of the sea in 1901 terminated in a magnificent flat green, and has since then been somewhat shortened, now culminates in a beautiful undulating green. Up among the sandhills of late, the Green Committee have been very busy making structural alterations and exhuming many bunkers; perhaps it is intended that these should be looked upon as improvements, but the Links are before my prejudiced eye in all their virginal beauty and the changing of a flat green into an undulating one, and the erection of artificial bunkers on a natural seaside links has no charm for a native and a rabid Conservative! The mention of this word brings to my mind Cornwall, where just now two very important contests are being held, one (to many the minor one) is the fight of the Bodmin Seat in the Commons, where the old-fashioned, missles—eggs and mud—are being handed about indiscriminately, and the other is a professional Golf Tournament at Bude, the exponents of the game being Braid, Taylor, Herd and Rowland Jones; originally Harry Vardon had accepted the invitation of the committee, but was prevented by illness from taking part and his place was filled by Jones, who by sterling Golf, eventually came out winner. The event was held in connection with the Clubhouse extension, the course despite the prolonged drought being in excellent condition. The proceedings commenced with a 36 hole medal round. At the conclusion of the 1st 18 holes, Braid and Jones led with 71 and 70, respectively, followed by Herd 74 and Taylor 75. A large gallery followed the Champion, but had they confined their attention to Jones, they would have seen every whit as fine an exhibition of Golf. All the four played magnificent Golf, and a 71 by Taylor in the afternoon and 72 by Herd whilst Braid and Jones took 75 conclusively showed the splendid form the quartette was in. With his 70 of the morning plus 75 in the later round Rowland Jones finished winner with 175, the other players tieing for second place with 176. The Ladies are not yet able to settle satisfactorily when their "county year" shall begin. At the recent meeting of the Central Committee, it was resolved to revert once more to the common or garden way of reckoning A. D's, i.e., from 1st Jaunary to 31st December. Divisional matches to be concluded by 31st October and the finals to be played in November. So many different schemes have been tried that unless one is a very keen county player one really—to quote a familiar but vulgar expression—"don't know where 'e are"!

CALCUTTA SWIMMING CLUB.

THE two lengths handicap in clothes attracted the very meagre entry of five, of whom four only faced the starter on Friday evening. The race was well contested but we should like to see more entries. Four out of a membership of about 300 is a very poor show indeed. Appended are results:—

	Start.	Nett Time.
1 J. S. Munro	2secs.	57secs.
2 R. Jones	4secs.	57½secs.
3 A. Munro	2secs.	not taken.
4 A. Bergman, scratch		not taken.

The next event on the card is a three lengths handicap, which is fixed for to-morrow evening.

NOTES OF A COCKNEY NATURALIST.

Out-of-the-way Park Birds.

WISE birds who know when they are well off still continue to come to Town. I do not remember seeing the Redwing mentioned as a London bird by any writer except myself. I saw one or two in the beginning of 1905 in Regent's Park and recorded this in Country Life, but last winter a whole flock haunted the same spot in this Park for weeks together. I saw them first in the beginning of December, and they were still there in the first week of last March, so that they had quite made themselves at home. Very likely the few birds of the previous winter had introduced their friends, but the Redwings were still rather wild in great contrast to the very tame Blackbirds and Thrushes in the parks. The Missel-Thrush now breeds regularly in Regent's Park, but this bird also has not yet become, in most instances, as tame as his relatives.

A gold-crest Wren is not the bird one expects in London, somehow, but last November I saw one in Regent's Park within a few yards; very likely this tiny bird often occurs in London, but seldom comes on to low trees, and so passes unnoticed.

A Curious Friendship.

Last year I several times observed in St. James's Park a couple of bachelor drakes, one a specimen of the well-known Mandarin Drake and the other a Carolina, the "Wood-duck" of American sportsmen, going about together. They seemed to love each other like David and Jonathan and their association continued all the year, although occasionally they would both make love to the wife of a mated Mandarin. This individual was so keen on driving off his fellow-Chinaman, that he gave the astute American a better chance of making the running than he might otherwise have had. But the little duck was loyal and no mesalliance took place.

This spring, however, I noticed a sad change of front in the Carolina drake; he had abjured the company of his Chinese friend, and attached himself admiringly to a bachelor Brahminy drake. It was very funny to see this big tall Sheldrake stalking quietly along, while the little Yankee bird waddled on his short legs after him, occasionally turning to rush at his former companion who lingered wistfully in the wake of his unfeeling friend.

THE HIGHER HIMALAYAS AND BEYOND.

THE RETURN TO LADAK.
Chapter IV.

ON the day following, our return journey was commenced, and, we again pitched in the abode of Tibetan mouse-hares, where we had, five days previously, camped.

My shikaris and self deviated from the route taken by the caravan, and explored another bit of country, where at 9-30 A.M. we saw in the distance a larger herd of yak. It was half past four in the afternoon before we came up with them, when we discovered by the aid of the telescope, that the herd consisted of twenty-five cows and ten calves. This was rather what we had expected, as, I believe, it is very seldom, if ever, that a good bull is found in company with a large herd.

Snow fell during the next three successive nights and the cold was bitter. By skirting the base of the hills, we carefully avoided, on the return journey, the "slough of despond," through which we had previously struggled.

On arriving at "Hot Spring," we picked up the two ponies and man which had been left there, and I was able to ride once more. Provisions were now at a very low ebb, salt, sugar, and the Ladakis' flour had given out. I then discovered that instead of bringing sufficient flour for two months as they had been told, they had only brought enough for about a month. This shows the necessity of looking to all these details oneself. However, in a few days, we hoped to arrive at our base-camp where a certain amount of provisions had been left behind; perhaps too, the man sent back to Phobrang would have returned with fresh supplies. In the meantime, owing to the solicitations of the coolies, I stalked and shot a couple of good buck, which would keep them going for the next few days. The day before this I shot a "kyang," a specimen of which I wanted. Hundreds of "kyang" are always to be seen scampering over the plain in all directions. Funny looking beasts they are too, as they stand about 150 yards away gazing intently at one; whisking round, they gallop away about fifty yards, then curiosity overcoming caution, they turn and gaze once more, this performance being repeated several times until they finally disappear in a cloud of dust. The "kyang" has more the appearance of a donkey than a horse. I asked the natives if it had ever been captured and used as a beast of burden, in the same way that the yak has been domesticated: they said that it had been tried, but that it always died when taken below about 14,000 feet.

On arriving at Tab-mar-maroo, we found that the man sent to Phobrang had not yet returned, but nevertheless, we were very glad to pick up the ponies that had been left there.

"Teaser" was very pleased to see his master again, and also the two men, who reported that a wolf had been prowling round every night, trying to get at the sheep and goats. There being a bright moon that night, I sat up some time, but of course he did not put in an appearance. There was now no chance of running short of meat, as we still had five sheep left, so I shot no more antelope, having already shot more than I wanted for trophies. The following day, while camp was being moved to Shung, I had a last look for yak. Whilst stalking a wolf, a herd of yak appeared round the corner of a spur, and seeing us, dashed off over the next hill. Following them up on the remote chance of there being a good bull amongst them, I crept within 300 yards, and counted thirty-eight cows and about six small calves.

Sighting my hand-camera instead of my rifle, I managed to take a photograph of them but not before they had placed another 300 yards between us and them.

On arriving at Shung we found the remains of the yak that had died there, but the wolves and lammergeiers had been busy at work, so there was not much to be seen except the poor beast's horns and skin.

From here into Ladak was accomplished in one march, and we crossed over into Kashmir territory on the last day of July. Two days later we arrived at the Konka-la, and halted to leeward of a large sandstone rock, When we had camped here before, a large hollow, close to camp had been filled with snow; now, this had nearly all melted and revealed plenty of luscious green grass, for which I have no doubt, the ponies were extremely thankful. During the march that day there had been two terribly cold blizzards, one at 10 A.M., and another at 2 P.M., each lasting about an hour, and glad we were when the tents were pitched.

At Pamzal I had a beat for hares in the scrub that here borders the banks of the Chang-Chemno river, but only secured a couple. The nearest grass was about a mile and a half down the stream. On the way to Panlung, at a camping place just below the Massemik-la, I met M., of the Royal Artillery, on his way to Tata-Hore, a valley leading out of the Chang-Chenmo, to try for antelope.

On topping the pass, my dâk-coolie, whom I had sent on ahead, was met with a bag full of newspapers and letters, the first I had seen for seven weeks. The receiving of one's mail after a long interval is quite an event. Letters are quickly torn open and scanned, later on to be perused more leisurely. The two or three latest newspapers—(usually a month old; but no matter),—are the first to be looked at, the remainder numbered off and read in rotation. They may have to last; for a month, perhaps longer, before any more are obtained and by that time, even the advertisements will be read with interest. It is impracticable to carry a number of books on expeditions of this sort owing to their bulk and weight, and the few books that are carried should be ones that will bear reading over and over again, such as Shakespere, Whittaker's Almanack, etc. The latter, as everyone knows, affords a vast amount of useful information and instructive reading, but even the knowledge of the "number of births in Scotland in 1841," the fact that "Public Library at Shoreditch is open from 9-30 A.M. to 10 P.M.," and that "in the first week of April the walls and ceilings of common lodging houses have to be white-washed," begins to pall after a bit. So, as I remarked before, when letters and papers do arrive, it is an event, and they are read, re-read, and then carefully kept to be read again.

We were up before dawn next morning, as it was a march of nineteen miles to the village of Phobrang, a long march for the ponies in their exhausted condition. At length, the few huts and yellow fields of stunted barley that comprise the village came into view. It was quite refreshing to see once more signs of a human habitation, and the little willow trees scantily scattered about here and there, appeared as shady harbours, inviting to repose.

I presented the camp-followers, that evening with one of the last two remaining sheep, a bottle of whisky, and some tea for the Kashmiris. In the Ladaki camp, the noise of singing and revelry continued far into the night. On the morrow, lean ponies were changed for fat ones, the coolies from Phobrang received their pay and "backsheesh" and at 10-30 A.M. we were once more on the move.

At Lukung, General B. was found sitting under the one solitary tree in the place; wading on my pony across the stream, I shared his blanket, while he regaled me with anecdotes and chocolate, in return for which I lent him some maps of the country to which he was proceeding.

Two marches farther on, Tankse was reached, and the tents pitched in the shady "bagh." Before leaving, more pay and "backsheesh" had to be doled out. I was quite sorry at having to part with my faithful Ladakis, a race as yet unspoiled by the advance of civilisation, for though very dirty, they were always willing and cheerful, a wonderfully hardy race, seemingly capable of enduring almost any hardships. While they were with me, they had no sort of shelter, but would roll themselves up in their long sheep skin coats, sleeping with the snow falling all over and around them, and dig themselves out in the morning. Often in my tent, shivering with the cold, although inside my bed piled high with blankets, rugs, and coats, the snow and wind battling against the canvass, I would hear my Ladakis merrily singing outside, as though they were enjoying it.

Whilst re-crossing the Chung-la, (17,600 feet), I met a native "buniah" riding a pony and carrying one of the little black Lhassa dogs, somewhat resembling a small "King Charles" spaniel. He was a clever little beast; he would run along after the pony and at the call of his master would jump up on to the saddle in front of him. These dogs are very difficult to procure. I offered the man a good price for his, but he appeared to be very fond of it, and would not part with it.

As we would be passing within a march of Leh in two days, I sent a coolie on ahead to bring out some stores and meet the caravan again at the bridge that spans the Indus at Marsahong, just opposite the famous Hemis Lamasery, which is about three miles up a small valley on the left side of the river. The first part of the journey between Marsahong and Miru, along the bank of the Indus is hot and dusty, but improves on turning right-handed up the Gya nullah. At Upshi, I endeavoured to obtain the services of the local shikari, who had been recommended to me, but he was away from the village Just before arriving at our destination, however, we met the man on the road, and he undertook to show me Ovis Hodgsoni and Goa, or Tibetan Gazelle, both of which I had come to look for in this direction.

"GAMENESS" IN THE HORSE.

THE incident recorded in connection with the Hillgrove (New South Wales) race meeting on 17th April last contributes one more piece of testimony to the astonishing gameness of the thoroughbred horse—and not necessarily of the thoroughbred since most of us can recall examples of staunchness or indifference to acute pain in horses which were not pure bred. The case to which we refer was a sufficiently striking one of the kind: it appears that in the principal event of the meeting the horse, Cogwheel by name, collided with the first furlong post with such force that it broke off in the middle, and, being carried forward, fell end on in such wise that Cogwheel in his next stride fouled the broken end. The point entered the groin and passed right through to the back. Nevertheless the unfortunate animal went on till he reached the winning post where, we read, "he stopped, staggered and fell." The fact that Cogwheel died within half an hour does not surprise us when we hear that many hands were required to draw from his body the stake, which was 3 feet 3 inches long.

The astonishing thing is that the protruding portion of the post did not interfere with the horse's movements to an extent which would attract the notice of his jockey: another unaccountable thing is that the onlookers failed to notify the rider that something was seriously amiss. These contingent matters however may be passed by for the moment while we seek a few more examples to illustrate the quality under discussion.

At Randwick in April last, as mentioned in our columns a few weeks later, Merry Jest fractured both fetlocks while running in a steeplechase. It is clear that one fetlock gave out when the horse was still a mile from home, as he dropped back from the rest. Nevertheless he was kept going and cleared all the fences, only being pulled up when entering the straight after taking the last jump. That negotiated the horse was in such a state the rider was obliged to pull him up. The idea was that in taking this last jump the other fetlock gave out: the amazing thing is that it did not do so earlier in the race: the whole weight of the horse would practically fall on the remaining sound leg alighting after each jump and the strain and jar thereon would naturally be more felt by the structures as the muscles tired. It speaks volumes for the condition of Merry Jest and his general soundness that he should have struggled as far as the last jump, apart from the wonderful gameness displayed. In this case again we pause to enquire how it was the rider did not discover that the horse was dead lame a mile from home. It is quite impossible that a man, or for that matter a boy, who is sufficiently at home in the saddle to be given a mount in any race, could have ridden a horse with a broken fetlock half a dozen strides without discovering that something was very wrong indeed. Several cases of horses breaking a leg in a race and running on afterwards but only until the rider could bring his disabled mount to a standstill have been recorded.

By an unfortunate coincidence the next example of gameness under such circumstances again dates from Australia. In 1899 at the Rosebell meeting a horse named Wonga fractured one hind leg below the hock early in a hurdle race ; yet actually ran the race out to the end. When he finished we read that "the bone was protruding through the skin" and the "jockey seemed surprised"! The unfortunate horse naturally fell behind as soon as the mishap occurred, but the rider, intent we must suppose on making up lost ground, did not know that the gallant horse under him was literally travelling on three legs.

Turning to ancient history, students of Turf literature may remember the case of Mr. James Merry's Sunlight who went to the post for the St. Leger of 1870 as third favourite. Sunlight was a nervous illtempered horse, and after saddling for the race did his best to unship his jockey, Snowden : his trainer, Waugh, brought a horsewhip into use and with it reduced the animal to a state of tractability sufficient to make him join his field under the starter's orders. When the flag fell Sunlight went away "with his terrific speed:" before he reached the hill he was seen to be falling back and those interested in the 11 to 1 chance they had taken saw Snowden pull up, dismount and then start homeward leading a very lame horse. His near hind fetlock had been fractured : but he was quite game to go on. This accident was however only the means of revealing the full extent of Sunlight's extraordinary gameness and of explaining his bad behaviour before the start. A short time before, about three weeks, Sunlight had been stabled at York to run in the Great Yorkshire Stakes : the lower half door of the stable was by some carelessness left unfastened when the horses were being brought out : this half door opened inward, and Sunlight, fidgetting out, caught and closed it under him in such fashion that his whole weight rested on the narrow top with his forelegs on the ground in the yard. An attempt was made to cut the door down with hatchets, but the only tangible result was to produce a spectacle like a slaughter-house with the splinters and the struggling horse. Eventually Sunlight was literally lifted and hauled out into the yard by main strength. Of course he could not run in the Great Yorkshire Stakes, but a week later he seemed well enough to do a gallop, and a fortnight after that he seemed quite fit to keep his St. Leger engagement, which he did with the result stated above. After he had been destroyed (on account of the broken hind fetlock) Waugh was moved to have investigation made into the injuries Sunlight might have sustained in the stable door accident : the post mortem revealed four broken ribs : and one of the four had not, even then, three weeks after the mishap, begun to knit! This perhaps offers as notewortly an example of gameness as we could find. For a fortnight Sunlight had been doing his work on the training ground, such work as a clever trainer like James Waugh would give a promising Leger candidate who had a week's idleness to make up and only a very short time to do it in. The horse had earned a reputation for ill-temper, and to that defect naturally was attributed his more than usually bad behaviour : whereas the real reason lay in the pain the poor beast was suffering from the broken ribs. No doubt the pain reached the climax when he was girthed up to go out for the St. Leger ; but all through his last two weeks' preparation he must have suffered cruelly every time his girths were drawn up and relaxed. Any man who has had a rib or two broken can form some idea of the pain caused by the friction of the fractured ends when he moved we write from personal experience.

Whether it would be strictly fair to charge with inhumanity jockeys who have endeavoured to ride out to the end of a race horses that have sustained a serious accident like the fracture of joint or limb is a subtle question. Indifference we fear must be laid to their charge : but frankly we cannot satisfy ourselves that the suffering caused is as great as it appears to be. We may draw a parallel between the injured horse running under such conditions and the stag, tiger or other animal endeavouring to escape with a leg broken by a bullet. We know that a stag will travel an enormous distance with a shattered leg : we know that a broken leg does not prevent, but rather stimulates, attack by the tiger thus wounded. There can be, we think, little doubt that excitement in the one case and fear or rage in the others, induce what we venture to call a mental torpidity to pain, and therefore the injured animal is disabled only in a strictly physical sense. An animal does not realise the extent of its misfortune when a limb is broken: the suffering we apprehend is entirely physical ; and the physical pain, as we have suggested, seems to be dominated by the mental passion, excitement, fear or rage which is uppermost at the time. Hence perhaps the wonderful exhibitions of what we call gameness in the injured racehorse. He feels the injury but he feels it in the main, if not exclusively, as a handicap which disables the limb and forbids him to put forth its powers. That he does suffer, and that the more acutely for his brave endeavours, when pulled up, needs no proof : but while still running, more especially with other horses, we conceive that his narrow mental powers are concentrated on the effort to do his best and that he does not feel the pain which will make every fibre in his body quiver, later on when, to put it colloquially, he "has time to think about it."

Sporting Notes.

THE second Calcutta Monsoon Meeting will be remembered for some time—months, perhaps, even with our proverbial Anglo-Indian short memories—for certain distressing incidents connected therewith. Four horses fell (two to rise no more) one amateur rider was badly injured, another in lesser degree, a professional jockey had two bad falls and had two horses killed under him—killed to all intents and purposes, though the "friendly" bullet in each case performed the last sad rites. Quite early in the day, indeed in the very first race, disaster was ushered in when poor old Shylock, gallant little hero of many a tough struggle, fell at the third hurdle in the Pony jump event, broke his leg and gave T. White a good shaking up. Then followed the August Plate—a hurdle race for horses—and this signalised the last appearance of that good performer over sticks, Don Q., who came down at the second flight, broke his back and gave T. White about as much heavy falling as he could have wanted in one afternoon. White is new to Calcutta and had hard luck ; he is said to have ridden over hurdles in Australia. But what of the hard luck of the owner of these horses? Shylock and Don Q. were both the property of Mr. J. M. Rodocanachi to whom the sympathies of very many racing men and others, local and mofussil, has naturally gone out in full measure.

We have mentioned the "friendly" bullet. In the case of Don Q. it undoubtedly was so ; but in that of the miserable Shylock we confess ourselves at a loss for a word to describe the FIVE attempts to put an end to his suffering. It seems incredible but IT TOOK NO LESS THAN FIVE SHOTS, longo intervallo, to give Shylock his quietus. Can anyone imagine anything more revolting, or conjure up a picture of inhumanity more stupendous than that exhibited by the person who was responsible for this record in incompetence? And (we give it as we heard it on the course) the supply of cartridges ran short at one period of this disgraceful bungling?

The spectators were beginning to look for mishap by the time the saddling bell was rung for the Amateur Hurdle Plate ; they were soon enough provided with it. At the very first obstacle Ynyslas, with Mr. R. A. C. Pugh up, barged into it, came down and gave her rider a severe shaking which will probably incommode him for some days. When the fourth hurdle was being negociated that uncomfortable acquaintance of our youth Mr. Atra Cura again asserted himself ; this time it was Sylvia who came down and Mr. E. W. Antram was seen lying quite still when the field had swept by. Both riders, we are very glad to say, are on the mend, but in the case of Mr. Antram, whose skull was fractured, it is somewhat surprising to hear that his injuries were not materially aggravated by the treatment he received on the course. First a coolie rushed at him and tried to sit him up and failing in the attempt let him down "flop," so to speak. Then there was only one ambulance! and as this was being utilised for Mr. Pugh, poor Mr. Antram had to be left to await its return! Meanwhile two well-meaning, but unskilful, soldiers seized his extremities and dragged him about a bit, and some time after this homicidal onslaught the ambulance arrived!! This will, of course, never occur again ; but what a pity such contingencies are not provided for and how sad to think that nothing short of much quite avoidable suffering can emphasise the necessity for keeping abreast of the times in such matters. It was humiliating to hear the full flavoured Antipodean comments on this contretemps : for apparently they manage these things a great deal better "down under."

There is one other matter to which we take this opportunity of referring—the plethora of bookmakers. In the opinion of a great many people the presence in the big enclosure of the mob of fantastically named, sable pencillers is little short of a nuisance. Many punters say they do not particularly object to these merchants in the abstract and that, were they grouped together in such manner as to be easily avoided, they would not resent their presence so much ; but seeing that a large number of them are nothing more than "twenty-rupee wallahs" their room is far preferable to their company for they interfere with the transaction of business between regular race-goers and the recognised bookies.

Results of the racing are given elsewhere. The afternoon was, like the curate's egg, good in parts : the rain-laden clouds gathered ominously throughout, the while it was tolerably cool ; but the forbearance of the rain god wore out before the programme was got through and the last race witnessed a complete wash out. Favourites, or second favourites, got home in five races. The third race—the Pony Plate—furnished a surprise in the victory of Ping Pong, the favourite, Kathleen II., finishing a good third ; the fourth race—the Amateur Hurdle Plate—saw an 8 to 1 chance roll home in the outsider Lady Gold, while the good totalisator dividend of Rs. 279 to win was paid on her. The cognoscenti considered the owner's pilotage would be too much of a handicap for the mare, but she "got there all the same" and those who had not backed her together with those who held cheap the riding talent on board were left thinking.

The handicapping was, we think, quite good ; one has only to look at the results to see that the newly installed adjuster of burdens is all there.

As regards the prospects of sport held out for the next meeting on Saturday, there is little to complain of. The entries total 73 against 80 last week, and another good all round card is provided, comprising, as it does, three jump events—two amateur and one open. The one disappointment, viewed from the standpoint of entries, is the Amateur Pony Hurdle Race. For this it was anticipated there would be at least eight or nine candidates, and most of them runners, and it was only on the promises of good support that the Stewards framed the race. It is quite likely that the half dozen scheduled will go to the post, but even so there ought to have been a better response. Geebung, Lady George, and Wivenhoe were all spoken of as likelies, but none of these names appear. Of those down, Energy seems to stand out by herself, and the difficulty will be to find riders for the bottom division, and at the same time bring the field together without crushing Mr. Holmes' mare out of it. Report makes out Mistlebird to be a greatly improved pony, but on book form she is entitled to a handsome allowance from Energy. Zigzag acquitted himself well last season in the paperchases under Mr. Le Mot's guidance, but was laid up with fever at the commencement of the rains and so far has not sported silk. Of the others, Moonray is probably entitled to most consideration, but she will want a very liberal allowance of poundage to put her on a level with a pony of the stamp of Energy. Branga is one of the bashing, tearing tribe in the matter of jumping, whilst Knockout has not yet appeared over sticks, though he evidently has a fair turn of foot on the flat. Altogether it does not look a very exciting item, and the handicapper will probably experience some difficulty in putting them together.

To deal with the other amateur event, viz., the Amateur Hurdle Handicap, the three most noticeable omissions are Nevermore, Ynyslas, and Sylvia. The former never showed like a winner at any part of the race last Saturday, and as we are given to understand the horse's legs are not quite as clean as they might be, Mr. Holmes is undoubtedly doing the right thing in not taking any further risk with him. Paperchase Cup winners of this stamp are not thrown at one's head every day of the week, and if he cannot beat the field he has just met at even terms, there must assuredly be something wrong with the horse and a rest is the only thing to put it right. He will probably return to Bangalore shortly, where Wishart is procceding immediately prior to taking up some of his string to Poona. Ynyslas hurt herself in the shoulder and will probably not be fit to run till the latter meetings. Taking a line through Gleam's running, this mare must have been right in it but for her accident, so Mr. Pugh is to be doubly condoled with. Whether she could actually have beaten Lady Gold is a matter of opinion, but if the second string could have run the latter to two lengths, then it is only natural to infer that the first string of the stable would have been very much more thereabouts. Our own opinion of the race is, that Cain and Orphan Boy cut their own throats by going the pace they did, and it was then purely a question of the fittest horse winning—the article appearing in Lady Gold. A real good mare she must be, too, as she was "amiss" at the time and consequently not capable of her best effort. In addition to these three, the field will be reinforced by Fusilier, Jorrocks, Jacinth, Leading Lady, and Ryong—quite a satisfactory nucleus for a good race. Jorrocks, though a good winner at Tollygunge Club, has never yet met a field of any great pretensions and has always moreover had a good pull in the weights. If he is lightly treated here, he may quite possibly shake the best of them up, but we do not put him down in the same class as the first five that finished on Saturday. Leading Lady ran disappointingly in the Amateur Plate but must be counted a good mare for all that, though we don't know how she jumps. Fusilier seems to be off colour and hardly likely to prove dangerous; nor do we expect any opposition from Ryong or Jacinth. The former is reported to be temporarily laid on the shelf (his sporting owner unfortunately ditto): whilst the latter, we fear, must be included in the category of "Has Beens."

The Ellenborough Plate, the remaining open hurdle race, has eight down, and Hoop Iron will undoubtedly have more of a steadier meted out to him than on the last occasion. Rustler and Harold from the same stable are entered, and if the big gun fails, they have a saver in Harold, judged on his last handicap. Both Rustler and Parole performed ingloriously in the August Plate, and if it is the latter's true form, he must have come down very much in the hurdling world, as his last record in this direction reads:—(1) Parole 10-8, (2) Scotch Thistle 9-5, (3) Kittylea 11-0, (4) Harold 10-1, (5) Hello 10-4. Pope, though looking wonderfully well in himself, seems to have lost all signs of his old time dash, and it doesn't look as if Watchfire was going to pay hay and corn bills this Monsoon. Bucentaur, we hope, will be given a good chance; he has been genuinely twice run out to the bitter end, and on this score alone deserves all the consideration the handicapper can give him. We hope also that owners will not overlook T. White in the matter of mounts if they have any going. The regrettable accidents that occurred last Saturday were in no wise his fault, and nothing more than sheer bad luck. We understand he is a capable horseman over fences and now that his own stable is shorn of his jumping tackle, it would be hard lines in the extreme if he was unable to pick up mounts outside.

The Kidderpore Plate (7 furlongs), the only horse flat race of the afternoon, has brought the large number of 27 into the fold, so there seems a possibility of its being converted into two handicaps under the new ruling. When split up into separate interests, however, the returns do not work out much above a dozen, as all the large stables are doubly or trebly represented, whilst Wishart and Jack Scott have each four under their charge. With such a paucity of light weight jockeys in Calcutta, it is impossible to bring a mixed field like this together, ranging as it does from Hoop Iron to Queen of Gems; and a divided handicap is the only method of coping with the difficulty. Both the Pony events have filled satisfactorily, the Pony Handicap Plate (for 14-2's) being accountable for a dozen entries, and the Small Pony Handicap for only one less. J. D. Scott weighs in with a quartet for the former (Despedido's name appearing for the first time), whilst Mr. Galstaun is also accountable for three. Silphue, on his initial running at Tollygunge Club, looks as if he might furnish into a good pony, but he has a good deal of condition to make up yet. Belle Cole is one that ought not to be lost sight of here, and her running at the end of last cold weather makes her out quite useful. Taken on the whole, it is a very good class, even field, especially for the Monsoons. Their ought to be eight starters forthcoming out of the small pony race, as with the exception of Mr. Galstaun's pair (Gowan and Rosalea) they are all entered in separate interests.

A telegram from Poona states that the Junior Polo Tournament began there on Monday. There are seven teams in and two ties were successfully got through. In the game between the Poona Horse of Aurungabad and the Royal Engineers from Kirkee the cavalrymen found it a comparatively easy business to defeat their opponents by 7 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 1 goal and 2 subsidiaries. The match in which the 29th Lancers from Sirur met the 33rd Cavalry from Ghorpuri was a different affair; it was both fast and smart and after a very equal struggle the Lancers won by 5 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 3 goals and 1 subsidiary. On Tuesday the match was between the 93rd Highlanders and the R. A. who had to take the field with a weak team. The Scotchmen were "all over" the Gunners and won by the substantial margin of 7 goals and 4 subsidiaries to nil. Full details hereafter.

We publish the prospectus of the Darjeeling Sky Races in to-day's issue. The dates fixed are the 25th, 27th and 29th September—during the Durga Pujas—and entries close on the 24th idem. All the races are for Rs. 49 cups.

The Mussoorie Horse and Dog Show has been fixed for the 22nd proximo: we are glad to see that the dog section is to be run under N. I. K. A. rules.

Quetta held its third pagal gymkhana on the 4th instant before a fairly numerous and interested company. The Pony Obstacle Race for Gentlemen, over a 1½ furlongs course and five assorted obstacles, was won by Lieutenant Gretton, of the 7th Lancers. The issue of the Distance Handicap Race for Ladies resolved itself into a keen struggle between Miss North and Mrs. Tobin, the first named winning. The conditions of the Noah's Ark Affinity Academy Stakes were: gentlemen run 20 yards to their affinity with a sealed envelope containing the name of some animal. The lady to open the envelope and draw the animal on cardboard provided. Gentlemen then run to winning post with cardboard and paper with name of animal. The event was won by Miss Loring and Captain Vernon Harcourt. The Isaak Walton Plate in which fish, rods, baskets and other piscatorial gear played a prominent part, was won by Miss Hodgson and Mr. Eliot. The Hidden Treasure Competion fell to Miss Loring and Captain Vernon Harcourt.

Certain alterations in the prospectus of the Rawalpindi December Meeting will be found advertised among our Sporting Notices to-day.

Amateur gardeners will soon be busy with their annuals and cold weather vegetable sowings: to their aid comes Mr. S. P. Chatterjee, of the celebrated "Victoria Nursery," Narkuldanga, near Calcutta, with a well got up illustrated catalogue. We have to thank him for a copy.

The Shillong Races are fixed for the 25th September and 3rd October. Entries closing on the 24th September and 2nd October respectively. Good programmes have been arranged for each day and further prospect of success seems assured in the fact that Mr. C. H. Holder is Honorary Secretary and Mr. E. C. Stuart Baker is on the Committee.

Spalding's Athletic Goods Catalogue for 1906 is a publication replete with attraction for all who play any sort of out-door and in-door game: a copy reached us by last mail and a perusal of its pages helped to revive memories of the by-gone days when running shoes and football jerseys were common objects of the household and a cricket bag held some of one's most cherished possessions.

Inspector Sweeney, a zealous officer of the Calcutta S. P. C. A., has recently displayed his activity in securing the conviction and punishment of an aged Mohamedan quack who, having broken the backs of numerous lizards kept them in that condition indefinitely while he extracted fat or oil from their wretched little bodies—said oil being much esteemed as a specific for the cure of certain diseases peculiar to Mohamedans. This particular form of cruelty is not only typically Moslem, but it is neither new nor remarkable in any way, though it has come as a painful revelation to many good people in Calcutta. It has been practised in India by Mohamedan "doctors" for ages, and was exposed in the series of articles which appeared in The Indian Field three years ago, entitled "Natural History for Beginners."

Now that a prosecution has succeeded in respect of the lowly lizard we have hope that ere long the perpetrators of the fiendish cruelty in respect of snipe and other live game exposed for sale in the Calcutta market, and to which we have so frequently directed attention, may be brought to book. It was pointed out to us that as the snipe was not a "domestic animal or fowl," the S. P. C. A. could not interfere; but what about a lizard, is this insignificant reptile entitled to more legal consideration than one of the most esteemed and most numerous of our water game birds?

The editor of an Italian paper recently received a letter couched in the following terms:—"Sir,—One does not send seconds to a scoundrel like you. I box your ears by letter instead. Please, therefore, regard both your ears boxed by me, and be happy that I have not used my stick." The editor replied: "Incomparable adversary,—Conforming with your demand, I regard my ears as boxed by you by letter, for which I cordially thank you. Beaten by letter. I blow your brains out with six revolver shots in the same manner. Regard yourself as a dead man when you have read the last line of this letter. I salute your corpse."

His Honor Sir Herbert Thirkell White, K.C.I.E., Lieutenant-Governor of Burma, has just consented to become President of the Burma Polo Association; we congratulate the B.P.A. on the distinction.

A Birmingham angler who had brought his rods down to the city to be repaired was accosted the other day by a semi-inebriated stranger. "Caught anything?" asked the inquisitive one. "No; I haven't been fishing," was the reply. "Oh! I see; just going. Well, I wish you luck." "You're wrong again," said the angler, good-humouredly. "I am not going fishing." The questioner steadied himself, and seemed nonplussed for a moment, and then a look of returning intelligence came over his face. "Cer'nly, sir, cer'nly, I unnerstand. You've just brought these rods as a 'blind' to the missis. And you're goin' to have a l-little g-game, eh?"

In June last, while fishing in Gillespie county, Texas, writes someone in an American paper, I came suddenly upon two wild turkey hens with their young, a bit larger than quail. They hurried away, across an open space, and into some brush about a hundred yards distant. I seated myself under the shade of a sycamore and began trying for bass.

Some ten or fifteen minutes later the hens began to call in a low, motherly way, as if some of their brood were absent, and they kept it up for some time. After a while one of the hens, with neck stretched high, deliberately walked across the open ground, directly toward me, all the while calling for the lost. She could see me plainly, for I was in full view, and during the time that she was coming I caught a bass and moved about. But she kept coming, although I rose up and got a minnow from my bucket to bait my hook.

She came on until she was within sixty feet of where I sat, when I saw a young one jump up within twenty feet of me, and run to her. Then both went rapidly to the flock, and suddenly all were quiet.

Now that hen could not possibly have seen the young one squatted in the grass; nor could she have heard it, for it made no noise. How, then, did she know that one of the fifteen young ones was out? Could she count? Certainly she did know it was out, and came back, into my very presence, to get it.

A diabolical contrivance for the destruction of fish has been invented by an American. In carrying this invention into effect, says the wily Yankee, "a suitable vessel is provided, such as a power-boat with a suitable electrical generator, and from the sides of the vessel is suspended a netting composed partly of electric conductors, such as metallic wires which are placed in circuit with the electric generators or generators on the vessel, so that the fish coming in contact with such netting will be submitted to a shock of electricity, which will have the effect of stunning them and causing them to float on the top of the water, where they may be gathered up in hand-nets and deposited in the boat or on shore." Yes; the idea seems excellent, but somehow reminds us of the well-known directions for killing fleas. Ordinary nets would, we should say, capture the fish equally well, and as for killing them after, why, a rap on the head is sufficient!

The evening sale in the Park Paddocks recently held in England attracted a large and fashionable crowd and some good prices were realised. When Malua, who had been awarded the Dullingham Plate, was led in, there was naturally much curiosity as to how much he would fetch. Mr. Tattersall asked for a first bid of 3,500 guineas, but failing to get this, the horse was withdrawn. Subsequently the auctioneer announced he had received fresh instructions, and the son of Marco was brought back, being eventually purchased by Reginald Day on behalf of Mr. George Faber for 3,400 guineas.

The Mussoorie Autumn Meeting will be held on the 27th and 29th September, entries closing on the 1st, 15th, and 23rd idem. Two attractive cards are put forward for each day, all races are of the value of Rs. 125, Captain J. Pinney is Honorary Secretary, and for the rest we refer our readers to the prospectus advertised in the usual place.

Athletic Notes.

WE see it stated in some of our daily contemporaries that the Major H. F. Vanderzee, R.A., Ordnance Deparment, who recently died in England, was the erstwhile athlete and long distance runner who figured prominently at the Ballygunge C.C. and Bengal Presidency Athletic meetings many years ago. This is quite wrong. The Vanderzee who so distinguished himself was "J. H." of that ilk, and he was then in the Hyderabad Contingent; moreover—poor fellow—he died years ago in Africa after having been mauled by lions!

The Madras Rugby Tournament is to be held during the week 24th to 29th September.

The Annual Tournament of the Royal Western India Golf Club will be held at Nasik from September 10th to 15th; the programme includes the usual long list of handicap events for gentlemen and ladies, and from what we can gather at this early stage, there is every prospect of the meeting keeping up its reputation.

Kent beat Sussex by an innings and 131 runs.
Somerset beat Middlesex by 10 wickets.
Hants beat Derby by 160 runs.
Yorkshire beat Lancashire by 107 runs.
Leicester beat West Indians by 24 runs.
Kent beat Lancashire by an innings and 195 runs.
Surrey beat Middlesex by an innings and 92 runs.
Essex beat Sussex by 10 wickets.
The following matches were drawn:—Warwick vs. Worcester, Surrey vs. Notts, Worcester vs. Somerset, Leicester vs. Yorkshire, Warwick vs. Derby.

British rowing men all over the world are looking forward with interest to the impending race between Cambridge and Harvard. It is fixed for the 8th proximo and will be rowed over the Putney to Mortlake course and may eventuate in a good race; private advices assure us that Cambridge, who are doing very good work, feel confident of victory.

The latest juvenile billiard phenomenon is an Australian lad of 14 named George Gray, and good judges declare him to be the best of his kind ever seen. He has been studying the game under his father's tuition for the past couple of years, but it was only in the last few months that the gift (for it really is a gift) came to him. He is quite a phenomenon, with a knowledge of the table and all the tricks with the balls that is most marvellous for one so young. His strongest point just now is with the losing hazard stroke; on the 18th June he compiled no less than 171 of these, making a record break for Australia with 513. Next he played Mr. J. Nesbit (a good amateur) 500 up, and beat him by over a hundred, his first break being 102. It is intended that he shall continue practising for another 12 months before going on tour, when in all probability he will create quite a sensation in the billiard world. Here are some of his recent performances:—

" 21—70 red losers, equal to 210.
" 25—71 red losers, equal to 213.
" 27—151 red losers, equal to 453.
July 3—165 red losers, equal to 495.

Peccant motorists in the United Kingdom were mulcted to the tune of £12,474 in costs and fines during the official year 1905-06. If offences increase in proportion to that of the use of these machines, the Home Secretary will reap a tidy harvest. Licenses during the same period brought in close upon £100,000, but as a considerable enhancement in this line is contemplated by the authorities, it is estimated the revenue from the service will be doubled the ensuing year.

The last mail brings a rumour to the effect that the Revenue authorities contemplate taking advantage of the new craze and licensing balloons, but upon what grounds they would base their claims to assessment it is difficult to define. The air-ship kicks up no dust, nor damages roads, the air is, we presume, free to all who like to take a flight in it, speed depends on the wind, which is certainly beyond the aëronaut's control. The ubiquitous bobby could not patrol the atmosphere, while in the event of a collision there is no likelihood of any witnesses being left to appear in court.

Our Bombay Correspondent writes:—The Telegraph team and the Rovers met in the Harwood League early in the week. As was expected, the former won easily. It was by no means, however, a walk-over, for from start to finish the play was fast and exciting though the Telegraphists had the best of the game throughout. The Rovers had little chance for showy work in the forward line, but their defence was excellent and many a time a determined rush for their goal was pulled up short and the ball sent to mid-field. Eventually the Telegraph won by 3 goals to 1.

The sensation of the week was on Wednesday when the Royal Scots broke their record and had their record broken. Hitherto they have played without a single goal being scored against them this year, but the Parel Gymkhana, with a borrowed man, managed to find their net. The other side of the picture was the Scots ensconced firmly round the Parel goal which they found with distressing regularity to the tune of seventeen times, the match resembling rather pratice at shooting than anything else. The other match of the week was between the Bombay Gymkhana and the Telegraphs, a very sporting game in which the former won by 1 goal to nil.

The Gymkhana has been busy this week in various ways. The Mud Sports took place on Wednesday and "all went merry as a marriage bell" till a storm of rain came on with such violence as to soak even those who got shelter in the tents. The entries were good and fortunately the rain came on only before the last event. All the ladies' items were keenly contested. Mr. W. G. Palmer, Captain Nash, and Captain Markie were placed in that order in the tent-pegging with swords while Mr. C. G. Stileman was easily first in the jumping, Mr. Crum being second and Captain Markie third. Mrs. McCausland and Mr. Barraclough won the egg and spoon race, but the best event (for the spectators) was the musical chairs won by Captain Markie, with Mr. J. Parkin second and Mr. Griffin third. It is an event, however, to be condemned, for it proved by no means good for the tempers of the horses and it is not likely to be included in the programme again. Mr. and Mrs. Crum won the affinity race with tennis racquet and ball, while Mrs. Nash and Mr. Griffin were second. Then came the rain which postponed the pony scurry for a time and made the going fearfully bad when a start was possible. Mr. Chadwick jumped away at the start and at half the distance was leading by almost five lengths, but was picked up gradually and won only by two. For second place there was a magnificent race in which Mr. Boothby beat Mr. Rice by inches.

Saturday was filled with the Hindu-Gymkhana cricket match. The day started with a heavy storm which was repeated at intervals and when play started the ground was very sticky. The result was that the Gymkhana, who went in first, made a very poor show. Opening with a duck by Elliott, Monteath did little better and it took Powell considerably over an hour to make his 33, the only score of the side worthy of note. The innings closed for 76. The Hindus opened just as inauspiciously for their first man failed to score and was out second ball, but the man who took his place made a stand and the second partnership put on 29 and 45 each. A nine and a fourteen followed with, amongst others, a 29 and a 20, beyond that the total eventually reaching 184 or considerably more than double the Gymkhana's record.

The changes which have taken place in the Bombay Gazette during the past six weeks have introduced something new in the way of journalism into the Western side of India. With three editions a day it does not leave the public long to wait for its news, but the latest move of coming out on Saturday evening with the results and betting from both Poona and Calcutta makes it seem quite like Fleet Street along the Esplanade Road.

Another sad example of the danger of over-exertion at athletic exercises is afforded in the almost tragic end of that fine young athlete, Mr. G. H. Maxwell, Assistant Superintendent of Telegraphs, Lucknow. He never recovered from the extra strain he imposed on himself during the Ranikhet Week at Naini Tal, in which he won the sculls, rowed in several races, and was prominent in the football and hockey competitions, and died on Monday at Lucknow at the age of twenty-five. Many friends in Calcutta will be deeply grieved to hear of his death: a cheery companion, keen in all branches of manly sport and no less energetic in his profession, his career, so painfully cut short, was one full of promise. He seemed to excel in whatever he took up and had a way of attaining high proficiency almost at a bound. Calcutta oarsmen will long remember his sensational win in the Senior Sculling race for the Power Cup in 1903; he was an absolute "novice," indeed he had never been in a light craft till about three weeks before the event, yet in the race he sculled away from the others as he liked, and in the final left his opponent practically standing and exhibited such form as justified the belief that, given the opportunity, he might have worked his way into the front rank of scullers at home.

The following teams have entered for the Durand Football Tournament:—(1) Black Watch; (2) Gordon Highlanders; (3) Royal Scots Fusiliers; (4) Cameronians; (5) Shropshire Light Infantry; (6) Gloster Regiment; (7) Royal Sussex Regiment; (8) West York Regiment; (9) North Stafford Regiment; (10) South Stafford Regiment; (11) Royal Irish Regiment; (12) Bedford Regiment; (13) 1st Royal Dragoons (holders); (14) 3rd Hussars; (15) 12th Lancers; (16) Highland Light Infantry; (17) Simla Volunteers; (18) New Club; and (19) Wiltshire Regiment.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 27th July 1906.

THE funeral of Lady Curzon took place very simply and quietly at Kedleston on Monday. The composition of the immense congregation which filled St. Margaret's, Westminster, at the Memorial Service held at the same time, was a striking evidence of the unusually widespread regret caused by her death, and of the univeresal sympathy with Lord Curzon.

With the week after Ascot the season reaches its zenith; and now it has, very decidedly, taken a considerable turn on the waning side. The general impression seems to be that its existence this year has been, so to speak, of a spasmodic character. Tradesmen, as usual, aver that business has not been as good as in days gone by—they are careful to avoid dates—but no outward and visible signs of the Simple Life meet the observant eye. Entertainments have been fairly numerous, and feminine raiment has never presented a more fragile and ephemeral appearance—both important factors in trade. It seems more than likely that before many more years have passed over our heads the recognised London season in the summer will be a thing of the past. Race meetings will go on and so long as there are Courts there will also be big balls, but not a few are beginning to realize that the conditions of London in the summer months are now by no means enjoyable. The popularity of the late autumn and winter season is increasing: both dancing and theatre-going are more enjoyable in winter than in summer; what stands in the way is sport. However, it is now not impossible for men given the inclination, to hunt in the shires during the day, and dance in town at night.

In the clubs little good is said of Mr. Haldane's scheme—seldom or never has one heard anything so generally condemned. Mr. Brodrick's and Mr. Arnold Forster's both found at least some backers, but so far the only good thing said of Mr. Haldane's bantling is that it restores the former period of enlistment—seven years with the colours and five in the reserves. One redeeming feature of it, for which we should be devoutly thankful, is that for the present, at all events, no reduction of the Army in India is proposed. It is not to the credit of the professional members of the Army Council that no soldier has resigned as a protest against the scheme. A soldier of Lord K. of K.'s fibre is badly wanted, who will stand or fall by his opinion of military needs. With the present egregious Government in power Messrs. Byles and Co. have more influence in shaping our military policy than have Lord Roberts, General French, or Sir Ian Hamilton. It is to be noted that the practically defunct third battalion of the Coldstreams has just been declared the winner of the Roberts Cup, in open competition with the whole Army; and that it has a full complement of officers, men, and reservists, and, several candidates for commissions on its waiting list—and has therefore filled up the cup of its iniquity in the eyes of the Labour M. P.'s.

There was pretty shooting on Saturday at Bisley, when Captain Davis, of the St. George's Rifles, won the King's Prize with the magnificent score of 324; beating Trooper Craster, of Rhodesia, by one only. Both are Public School men, and at school they learned to shoot—Captain Davis having shot in the Marlborough team some years ago, for the Ashburton Shield, and Trooper Craster in the Clifton team, for the same event. Captain Davis, who is a London Stockbroker, went, like so many more Volunteers, to South Africa to fight for Imperial supremacy, and served under Sir Redvers Buller. He fought at Laing's Nek and in the Biggarsberg, and was promoted to a Captaincy in the Army while yet a Lieutenant of Volunteers. Trooper Craster, who went out to Rhodesia some years ago, is an engineer at home on leave, and as he happened to be here during the Bisley meeting it seems to have occurred to him, almost casually, that he might as well compete. The revived Lords and Commons Match for the Vizianagram Cup, presented by the Maharajah, excited much interest. The compulsory use of the new shortened Lee-Enfield Rifle occasioned some criticism, as though a shortened barrel has obvious advantages in warfare, there is much scepticism as to its efficacy for match-shooting, at fixed targets. The Lords being the victors by 18, the Cup, one of the handsomest prizes in the exhibition tent, will be handed over to the custody of the Lord Chancellor for the next twelve months.

The Moody-Manners Opera Company made a good beginning on Saturday evening, when an excellent interpretation of "Lohengrin" was given at the Lyric, before a large and enthusiastic audience. The part of Elsa was sung by Madame Fanny Moody even better than when she sang it in London last, and Mr. Pembroke's Lohengrin was eminently satisfactory. Mr. Manners played the part of the king with dignity; his magnificent bass voice appearing to great advantage. The chorus, which in the Moody-Manners Company has always been noted, fully lived up to its reputation. The orchestra at times showed lack of finish, but doubtless as the season progresses it will improve. Other operas given during the week were Tannhäuser, Faust, Travatore (with Madame Blanche Marchesi), Cavalleria Rusticana, and Eugene Oneghin. The last is much more attractive on the small stage of the Lyric than on the large one of Covent Garden, where much of its effect was lost. There seems to be every prospect that the experiment of English opera at cheap prices will be a success.

The chief theatrical event of the week has been the production of "Down Our Alley," Mr. Bourchier's version of "Crainquebille," at the Garrick, on Wednesday night. It is quite a short play, and cannot be said to be either an attractive, or a convincing one. Scene 1 takes place in Mean Street—Morning. Scene 2. A Police Court. Scene 3. Mean Street—Night. The plot is slight in the extreme. A costermonger is accused by a vindictive policeman, with whom he has already had a "difference," of obstructing the street with his barrow, and of using bad language to the police. He is taken before a magistrate and sentenced to a short term of imprisonment. When he comes out his old pals avoid him, though they cheered him to the echo during the police court proceedings. In his extremity he is reduced to trying to get back to prison by repeating his insult to the police. This fails, and finally he is saved from despair by the man who was the original cause of his trouble. The scene of street life in the first and third acts are moderately amusing, but scene No. 2 is a travesty of any possible London police court. Mr. Bourchier's make-up as the coster was capital, and his conception of the part amusing, but "Down Our Alley" is hardly likely at any time to have a successful London career. It was preceded by "Monsieur de Paris," in which Miss Violet Vanbrugh was brilliant, as usual.

This, the last week of the French season at the Royalty, has been unusually interesting, as Mr. Antoine, who is ending his career as an actor, has appeared in several of his favourite parts. On Monday he played in two little farces, and also in "L'Enquête," a satire on examination by the juge d'instruction in French criminal cases. The subject is the unpleasant one of the possibility of an epileptic committing a murder without the slightest consciousness of having done so. M. Antoine's personation of the epileptic juge d'instruction was powerfully realistic throughout, and held the large audience spell bound. His dawning horror as the truth grew upon him that he was the murderer and the epileptic attack again seized him was a wonderful bit of acting. M. Antoine's career has been a strange one. He began life as a clerk in a gas company, and later started a little theatre at Montemartre with an enthusiastic band of followers; here he gradually became known to fame, and now he is going to undertake the management of the Odéon Theatre in Paris, and thereby become a Government official.

The last performance of "The Man from Blankley's," for the present season, was given at the Haymarket last Friday. Mr. Louis Calvert will make his essay in management at the New with "Amasis," Messrs. Fenn and Faraday's light opera, the scene of which is laid at Memphis. It is said that an excellent chorus has been engaged; Miss Ruth Vincent will appear as an Egyptian Princess, and Mr. Rutland Barrington as Pharaoh. The Egyptian scenery is being painted by Mr. Clement Barnes, whose work in "The Shulamite" will be remembered.

Of the new turns at the Palace the best is "My Wife," a play without words, in which Mr. Paul Martinetti, as a henpecked husband, reduces a militant wife to a proper state of subjection, by much the same means as those which Petruchio found so effective. The sketch is amusing, its chief fault being its length. Other new-comers are Chanti, who changes from one national costume to another very rapidly; and Miss Jose Collins, who inherits her mother, Miss Lottie Collins's, ability. No date has yet been fixed for the re-opening of the Coliseum. The last of the many proposals anent the Lyceum is that it should be re-opened as the home of a hundred minstrels, singers, and comedians.

An unusual amount of public interest was shown in Mr. Austen Chamberlain's marriage last Saturday, and in the enormous crowd outside the church Birmingham and the bridegroom's constituency were strongly represented. That the bride and bridegroom were quite secondary objects with a large proportion of the crowd was amusingly evident from the loud expression of disappointment heard on all sides when it became known that Mr. Joseph Chamberlain was unfortunately not well enough to be present.

The Metropolitan is one of the unlucky exceptions to the generally prosperous railway half-year and it was unfortunate that it fell to its lot to lead off the half-yearly meetings. The declaration of a drop of 1 per cent. in the dividend was not unexpected, and as a matter of fact has had a worse effect on the District stock than on that of the Metropolitan itself, as the former has suffered most from electrification. The Yorkes invasion has ended sadly, having produced a very poor specimen of electric traction, and made the last state of the poor old "District" rather worse than the first. Given ordinary care there seems to be some hope for the Metropolitan in the future, when the suburban traffic shall have had time to develop. The directors of the South-Eastern may be congratulated on the steps they are about to take to improve the accommodation for cross-Channel passengers at the Admiralty Pier at Dover. The present accommodation—or rather lack of it—is nothing short of a national disgrace, and it is satisfactory to find that the directors are, at last, alive to the need of improvement.

The Majority has made a record. This valuable organ "of all who work for wage or salary," which came into existence with such a flourish of trumpets and beating of big drums on 10th July, has not proved even a nine days' wonder, as it joined the goodly company which its name suggests only five days later, on 14th July. The reasons given for its premature demise are curious. It was, we are told, an unqualified success—the second issue claimed to have establised a record in getting 370,000 copies on the market,—but with its fifth, the proprietors decided that their resources were unequal to the battle, and that they could no longer indulge in an expensive luxury. Passages in the last leader of the now defunct Labour organ hint at mysteries, and we are assured that "when the history of journalism is written the financial story of the Majority will not be the least interesting chapter." That may or may not be; but there is no possible shadow of doubt that the Majority just departed is not the only one that might, with advantage, commit the happy despatch.

Mr. W. J. Bryan, one of the candidates for the American Presidency, has an article in a recent number of the New York Sun which vividly illustrates the perils of the globe-trotter who rushes into print on subjects of which he is profoundly ignorant. In the course of various remarks, Mr. Bryan is good enough to observe that "British rule in India is far worse, far more burdensome to the people, and far more unjust, if I understand the meaning of the words, than I had supposed. . . . . The Government of India is as arbitrary and despotic as the Government of Russia ever was, and in two respects it is worse." Other observers who have stayed long enough in India to understand what British rule really is, will appreciate Mr. Bryan's opinion at its true value. [Oh! for a little Russian despotism at the present moment in unhappy Bengal.—Ed.]

The report lately issued by the Committee appointed to investigate the question of providing civil employment for soldiers and sailors of good character, covers the whole ground of the inquiry, and Sir Edward Ward and his colleagues speak out with commendable frankness on the absolute necessity of making some future provision for the men if the services are to attract a desirable class. The Committee roundly assert that much more employment might be found for ex-soldiers and sailors in public departments than is the case at present, without detriment, and even with advantage, to the public service. With the present Government in bondage to the Labour M. P.'s and Trades Unionists there is small hope of this common-sense proposal being carried into effect. Already the Parliamentary Committee of the Trade Union Congress has confirmed a resolution protesting aganist any preference being given to ex-soldiers and sailors, on the ground that it would be "detrimental to the public service and to the rights of civilians." The fact that ex soldiers and sailors are not likely to be duped by the Trades Union gang does not, of course, bias the gentlemen of the Parliamentary Committee in the smallest degree. But what can C. B. be expected to do in face of such an expression of opinion from his masters?

Of Royal Commissions there is no end! That on Motor Cars issued its report yesterday. As it covers 82 printed pages the Committee evidently have not shirked work, and several of their recommendations will be warmly welcomed by most of us. The first is by no means the least important—that any general Motor Car Act should deal with tractive engines as well as motor-cars. (It is almost impossible to compute the annoyance and injury caused by what are practically goods-trains of a peculiarly noisy type, blocking the traffic by day, and making night hideous and sleep impossible, in what were, until lately, quiet thoroughfares.) That the revenue derived from the taxation of motor-cars should be spent on the improvement of roads; that the speed limit of motor-cars weighing from two to three tons, and having non-resilient tyres, should be reduced to five miles an hour; that annual registration, with a small yearly fee, should be enforced; and that the emission of smoke or visible vapour on a public highway in such quantity as to cause annoyance, and the causing of excessive noise or vibration, should be an offence, are all recommendations that allow one to hope for some mitigation of the present intolerable conditions. The Commission holds out but little hope with regard to the prevention of dust beyond an improvement in the road surface. The recommendation on the question of speed is certain to rouse much difference of opinion, as while advocating more stringent rules against reckless driving it proposes to abolish the speed limit of twenty miles an hour. Unfortunately it is by no means easy to prove when driving is reckless and dangerous, and the districts in England must be few in which a greater speed than twenty miles an hour does not constitute a very real danger.

The farewell prize-giving at Cooper's Hill yesterday must have been but a melancholy function to many of those who took part in it. The President, Colonel Sir John Ottley, stated in his report that since its foundation, thirty-five years ago, the college has supplied 979 men to the Indian Services, and he emphasised the fact that the training required by the young engineer in India is altogether different from that suited to a man whose work will lie in Europe. As very little of the special training in question is given anywhere except at Cooper's Hill, the inference may be drawn that the Indian engineer of the future will probably have to go without it. The fellowship of the college was conferred on Mr. Hyde, the engineer student at the head of his year, who also gained the scholarship given by the Secretary of State for India, the O'Callaghan and Calcott Reilly Gold Medals; and but for the fact that the rules prevent his receiving more than one scholarship, he would also have taken the Fellows' and the Vice-President's scholarships. Sir John Ottley remarked that in days gone by such a record of proficiency would have had its reward in a commission in the Royal Engineer—but these days are not as those.

A new method of advertising British goods, for which there is much to be said, has been hit upon by the "Floating Exhibition Syndicate." It proposes to fit up a steamer as an exhibition, in which various British firms will be represented, and which will visit the principal ports, not only of the Empire, but of China, Japan, South America, and of other regions which are of importance as markets. At each port the Syndicate hope to induce a prominent official to "open" the show, and visitors will be welcomed as sightseers as well as customers. Each of the three decks of the steamer will be turned into a large exhibition hall, and the exhibits will be of all kinds, from heavy machinery to light articles. The first port of call is to be Montreal, and later Quebec, Halifax, Havana, and the West Indies will be visited.

The moist heat of which we are having just a suspicion in London to-day, has been causing terrible suffering in New York, and has been greatly increased by the scarcity of ice. As is usual during these heat waves much public indignation is directed against the Ice Trust, which, it is averred, has been guilty of conspiracy to restrain trade. It has fixed retail prices, and anybody venturing to sell below these is speedily hustled out of the business by devices unseen but effective. The result is that a host of small dealers who used to sell ice at reasonable prices, and distribute it evenly over the city, has been driven out of business by the Trust, and since then the price has more than doubled. The Trust has been successfully prosecuted in several towns, and prosecutions are said to be pending in Philadelphia, Boston, and other places.

All opposition has now been withdrawn to the Westminster Improvements Bill, by which new streets and the widening of existing streets between the Houses of Parliament and the Army and Navy Stores are proposed. That area will, therefore, before long rival that scene of desolation, the lower end of Regent Street. It is quite unnecessary to be away from town, for even a few weeks, to miss familiar landmarks. This morning I walked down a street in Kensington and found that within less than a fortnight a block of twenty or thirty flourishing shops had been wiped out of existence and the usual notice that flats would be erected on the space was to be seen.

The pending reduction of the Brigade of Guards from ten to eight battalions has caused many changes to be made in the moves which had been already arranged, and for the winter months, at any rate, the 1st Guards' Brigade at Aldershot will be reduced from four to two battalions. It is also stated that the Guards' Camp at Pirbright will be permanently closed at the end of this season.

ONLOOKER.

Shikar.

A PANTHER YARN.

TAKING advantage of an offer of a few days' hospitality in the hills during the hot weather, I had my shikari togs and a few other necessary articles packed up and, leaving the place in the temporary charge of the Babu, Munshi and chowkidars, I left by the evening train for my destination. Twelve o'clock saw me at the terminus of the railway line, and I then had five days' pony riding to my host's residence. Arriving there about midday I had not been many minutes in the house before the servant came in to say that a man had brought khubber of a kill some three miles away. A cow had been killed and partly eaten by a panther. All the other Europeans were away from the station, and so with the permission of my hostess I said that I would go and try and add to the number of my panther skins, and then summoning the shikari, we started off for our steep climb. It was fully 3 o'clock by the time we reached the hill, which was on one of the byepaths in a gully leading down from the hillside. After a good look round we decided to locate ourselves on the ground about twenty yards from the kill, which was under the shade of a small bush.

Unfortunately we had no cover; only just the plain ground and in full view to anything that came down to the kill. This we proceeded to improve on by sticking branches into the ground in front of ourselves. While doing so I heard a light splash in the stream about forty yards behind us, and called the shikari's attention to it, only to get the answer "Kuchh nahin sahib" followed up by the assertion that the brute would not come out before dark.

I then said that if that were so I did not intend to sit down on the level with any hill panther and, on a dark moonless night, take snapshots at him, but would clear away when it got dark. The shikari then proceeded with his temporary fence and presently I heard the crackle of some twigs on the hill above me. I called the shikari's attention to this, but he only grinned when I suggested that it was the panther and went on solemnly with his work. I was not mistaken, however, as a minute later a bird gave out its frightened cry and I knew that the panther was near, and that my jungle knowledge had not played me false. I said nothing but got ready and shortly after I caught sight of an immense brute coming down the path we had come.

After some minutes of suspense it suddenly appeared within six feet of the kill, but vanished at once as it caught sight of the shikari at his work. I gave up in despair, but by some most unusual good luck the animal, in going away, crossed a small open spot at a slow trot and I took a chance shot at it. It was successful, for after the two first bounds the brute stopped, turned towards us and came straight for us as hard as he could gallop. I pulled the shikari into a bush just in time, for the animal passed over the very spot where we had been sitting, and he fell down into the stream at the back of us and began to groan. The shikari wanted to go and finish him off, but I said "No, wait." Presently the groaning stopped and I cautiously went forward to see. I caught sight of his back, but being unable to decide as to his being dead or not, I told the shikari to throw a stone at it while I stood ready with my rifle. After three or four attempts he hit it, and as it did not stir I walked up and saw that its head was under water.

He was a fine brute for a hill panther, being seven feet six inches long, measuring in a straight line between his nose and the end of his tail. Indeed, very few of the plains panthers reach to more than that. The natives of the place were very pleased as it had killed several of their cattle besides a number of goats and dogs innumerable.

We commandeered two men to take the beast to the house and it took them all they knew to get it there, although it was all downhill. After skinning it we found out that the heart was burst in two or, rather, that the base of the heart was burst open as if cut into with a knife. The beast showed extraordinary vitality as it was fully one hundred and seventy yards away when my bullet hit him and he came back past us and went another forty yards to the stream. There is not the slightest doubt but that he saw us when he came to the kill and after being wounded he deliberately stopped and came straight for us, and if he had only been lightly wounded, he would, in all probability, have given us a hard fight for it as my time being occupied in pulling the shikari back, I had no time to reload my rifle till after he passed by.

M. B

MIXED SHOOTING.

SOME years ago now, I had a letter from an old friend, W—b, asking me down to see him, saying also that a tiger had taken to killing people about the place, and that he had seen a man killed by a tigress and her two cubs. Having finished all the business I had, a fortnight after receipt of his letter I started and reached his place at 2 P.M. next day. He then showed me the place about 200 yards from his bungalow, where the man had been killed. It was raining at the time when he saw a man crossing some paddy fields. As he was walking across a narrow bund a tigress sprang on him, caught him by the shoulder and dragged the poor wretch to some high ground. The brute then sat down and purred three or four times, when her two cubs came running up. On the cubs' arrival she got up and licked them all over, purring the whole time; in the meanwhile the man, who was evidently not much hurt, slowly rose and made a run for it. The tigress was on him again and brought him back; the same thing happened twice again, when the brute, at the man's third attempt to escape, got angry and shook him violently, the cubs having come licked the man's face and began playing with his arms and legs. This all happened in broad daylight about 4 P.M; about 5½ P.M. the tigress dragged the body into a small nullah. On my friend's going to see next morning there were nothing but a few bones left. I dreamt that night of tigers and panthers chasing me all over the country.

We had been there two days when we heard of some good shooting on the road to D——g——. We went and got a good bag of snipe, teal and hare. We started to come back rather late and took a short cut past some rather heavy jungle on to the cart road. My friend, who was leading, on reaching the road shouted to me to come quick; he then told me that a tiger had caught and taken a cart-man into the jungle by the side of the road and the bullocks had run away with the man's cart. This was true enough, as we found one of the bullocks had fallen in a field and the cart was upset. It was too late to try and help the man, who had been most likely half eaten by that time. However, we arrived on the ground early next morning, and though we beat the jungle backwards and forwards many times got no sign of a tiger; having found the man's head and chest they were buried. We then went to a bheel two miles away and got a few birds. On our return at dusk, passing the place where the man was killed, I saw a light coloured object crouching behind a bush. I immediately, without a moment's thought, fired at it with a Meade's shell. On my firing the tiger (it was a tiger) gave a roar, charged for a few yards, fell over, recovered and crept into some long grass. We came again next morning and found the brute dead. I always swear by a Meade's shell when properly loaded. Tigers, panthers, bears, etc., never go far after being hit. In fact I have been in two or three very tight places with panthers and bears when a Meade's shell has given me a free pass and opened the way.

Its a grand place T——a for tigers, panthers and wild boar, but unless one is able to borrow an elephant one has to risk it on foot, or give up shooting. The natives about there are more afraid of a boar than a tiger or panther, as they say a boar has no conscience but will charge anything—and through a crowd, whereas a panther or tiger will, as a rule, never attack a man alone (except confirmed man-eaters), but always try and sneak off.

We were after a panther one day which had been doing a lot of damage in some villages close by, killing bullocks, goats and dogs. We traced it to some low bush jungle on beating. A shot was fired by one of the party with a small bore rifle at the animal as it sneaked from bush to bush, hitting it behind; it then sneaked into a nullah with some heavy grass. As it was bleeding a good deal we decided on following. On beating the grass I heard a low growl to my right, on looking in that direction I saw the brute ready for a spring not three yards away. I knew it was useless my trying to run for it. As I brought the gun up, with a roar it made its spring, the shell catching it fairly in the breast dropped it like a snipe. The wound was terrible; the shell on entering had made a small hole, but on its exit one's fist could be shoved into the hole, the back bone was smashed to little bits. Now had this been an unexplosive bullet I would probably have been badly mauled. When on foot I always use what I think the most likely missile to kill my game with the least possible trouble and danger.

A most amusing incident happened this trip, there were numbers of wild boar and one in particular with fairly large tushes had been known to have ripped several men, some dangerously. I was told that the men had a nice place for me whilst they beat. A wild plantain had been felled and rested against another about 5 feet from the ground. I got up the slippery trunk and made myself as comfortable as I could at the point of contact. The beat was half way through when I heard something rustle on the dry leaves below me. On looking down, my foot slipped and away I slid nearly on to the backs of three big boar. I had hold of the gun the whole time. On recovering I saw all three a short distance off looking at me and evidently meditating whether to charge or not. I did not leave them long in doubt, the first shot killing one outright, the second shot severely wounding another which was recovered about an hour or so afterwards.

The villagers used to come and tell me about a small panther which used to stay in some bamboo jungle close to the Balasun river, and though I have been after it many times have never even started it. One day they came running to my tent saying that they had it all ready for me. So off I went. I was placed in a splendid position where one could see all round for about 15 yards. The beat came steadily on when a huge wild boar made its appearance and came up to the tree on which I was sitting and began rubbing its back against the trunk. On my giving a low "hiss" it was a caution to see how that boar ran. I often wished to see boar netted, but never once have I seen one caught; they either jump over the net or swerve to one side. Hare were netted in great numbers.

Six miles from T——a there is a big bheel. Some years it swarms with duck and teal, in other years not one is to be seen. I was fortunate in getting there when the bheel literally swarmed with duck and teal of all sorts. One morning early we reached the bheel, when the conversation held by different kinds of waterfowl led us to believe we would make a good bag, nor were we disappointed, for in the mists rising at sunrise the water was alive with duck, and on the banks numbers were seen. Having never been fired at, one could get within 20 yards before they took wing. The first we came up to were a large party of the pink-headed duck (Anas caryophylloca), two shots were fired as they were swimming about and two more when they rose. These four shots accounted for seven. After this for about an hour the firing was rapid as ducks and teal came overhead, and to the sides and pitched into the water within range. I saw a large gaggle of teal after the first two shots were fired make straight away. It struck me that they settled nearly a a mile away behind a large clump of bamboo. At 12 o'clock, after collecting the morning's shoot, which included the Pinkheaded Duck, the Gadwall (Chaulelasmus streperus), the Shoveller (Spatula clypeata), Whistling Teal, the White-eyed Duck (Aytha nyroca), and the common Teal (Querquedula crecca). The White-eyed Duck when only winged is difficultto get, as it keeps diving about and sometimes gets into a clump of reeds with only its bill above water. We got under a large jack tree and had breakfast. After breakfast and a pipe I made for the place I had seen the teal go to. I found there was a deep nullah with about 2 feet of water which led right past the bamboo clump where I had seen the teal settle. After keeping on past the bamboo clump, for ¼ of a mile, well within cover, every now and then peering over the banks, I at last saw the teal all in a bunch sitting on the banks. Taking advantage of every tuft of grass, I got within close range, and did not hesitate to pour in a murderous volley of No. 6 shot, which killed 12 outright and wounded half a dozen others. On my way back to where my friend was taking it easy, I got a Ruddy Rail (Porzana fusca). A small strip of grass beside the bheel led me to think I could get a quail out of, but on putting the man I had with me in to beat whilst I walked the water side in line with him, up got a Bittern (Botaurus stellaris) which I promptly knocked over with No. 8 shot. On the whole we had made a very good bag that day so returned home contented. A day before Xmas I told my friend I would bring floriken and if possible woodcock for our Xmas dinner. I had to beat more than a mile of high lemon grass before the first floriken got up, after which I got two more. I then had to go about a mile to a jungly nullah where I had some days before observed woodcock marks. After a good deal of beating I got the only one that was flushed—a fine hen bird.

RIVER AND LAKE FISHING IN INDIA.

III.

IN the matter of lines there is not very much to be said, but going upon the principle adopted in a previous article on reels, a few hints as to what should be avoided may be useful.

Never use a twisted line for spinning. However heavily they may be varnished, or whatever means you may adopt to counteract the tendency to kink, such lines will always kink, and this quite prevents you from making a long and true cast, besides causing infinite trouble in winding up. Plaited or braided lines are an absolute necessity, and of these there are infinite varieties. The best sorts of braided waterproof lines are very expensive in India, the prices running from Rs. 15 to 18 per hundred yards, but the cost may be greatly reduced by using an expensive line for the first fifty yards only, with a backing of a cheaper but equally strong sort. Tapered lines are undesirable for spinning. They are frequently used at home for fly fishing for salmon, as the weight of the thickened part enables a good cast to be made in a strong wind, while the tapered end ensures the light fall of the fly upon the water, but for spinning you require a line which will run off your reel and through the rings of your rod with uniform friction throughout. Every European tackle shop has good waterproofed braided or plaited lines for sale. The first part of the line, i.e., the part which is next to the trace, and which is constantly in the water, should be made of silk; the backing can be a cotton or hemp plaited line, if the saving of expense is an object.

So many plausible imitations of good silk lines are made, that it is very difficult for a beginner to distinguish between a good line and a worthless one, but you can at any rate remember that a line which feels in the least sticky or gritty, or has shining specks on its surface, is a bad one. Stickiness means that the line has not been properly dried after the waterproofing process: grittiness and specks mean that it has been dried too rapidly: in either case the waterproofing comes away from the surface after a little use, and the line becomes sodden and rots quickly.

If a waterproof line shows any "knuckling," i.e., if light coloured rings appear on it at short intervals, all the knuckled parts should be removed at once. They mean that the waterproofing has worn off, at these places, and that the water has penetrated the line. The waterproofing prevents the line from drying through and through, when the water has once penetrated, and a dangerous rotting process is established.

Lines are made, and frequently used by rod fishermen, of unnecessary thickness. For instance, looking through the price list of one of the best English makers, I find lines graded as follows:—

A. Extra, extra, extra thick
B. Extra, extra thick
C. Extra thick
D. Thick
} for salmon fishing.

E. Stout medium, for sea trout fishing.
F. Medium, for Loch fishing.

Etc., etc.

Now, if I were purchasing one of these lines for mahseer fishing, I should certainly discard A, B, C, and probably D. To put it generally, the thickness of your line should be such that a four-inch reel should hold two hundred yards of line easily, and if you are going to fish large rivers, where fish of forty to sixty pounds are not uncommon, this is the minimum length of line which you should have on your reel.

Always test your line by a strong pull before use, and remove any part of it that seems weakened by immersion in the water. Never buy a line for mahseer fishing from native shops. I have seen and purchased lines from them, which had every appearance of being equal to the best sorts, and have almost always found them markedly inferior.

We now come to the traces used for spinning. These, like the lines, are often unnecessarily thick. You will see them advertised of nine-ply gut, or even more. No self-respecting mahseer, especially in a river that is much fished over, would think of taking a bait attached to a trace as thick, and quite as visible in water, as stout whipcord. Traces of single salmon gut are quite sufficient for rivers where you only expect to get fish up to ten or twelve pounds, but if you exercise a certain amount of care in casting, you will, I think, find traces made of single wire just as satisfactory and very much stronger, except for very small spoons, when gut is preferable, being more flexible. For heavy fishing, traces of treble twisted wire are all that are required. I have had traces of treble twisted wire which were no thicker than stout single salmon gut, but which would hold about thirty pounds of dead weight.

If using gut, never commence fishing till your trace has been thoroughly soaked. If you do not possess a cast box with felt layers which can be moistened when placing the trace in it, a common duster, or a pocket handkerchief, soaked in water and squeezed out until it remains damp but does not drip, is a good makeshift, but you should be careful that the coils of the trace are not doubled over when placed in the folds. The covers of an old book cut down to about 6" by 5" can be used for carrying the damp duster, and will prevent it from creasing. Bore two holes about four inches apart in the long sides of each cover. Tie the two covers together with stout cord on one side, to form a hinge, and attack two or three inches of cord to the holes on the other side, so that the two covers may be tied together with the damp cloth between them, and you have an improvised but useful trace carrier. If you have any distance to go to get to the river on a hot day, the trace case must be covered up and protected from the air, to prevent evaporation.

Single and treble wire traces can be obtained at any European tackle shop in India. Wire traces should be wiped dry after use, rubbed with vaseline and placed in a stout envelope, or better still, in a leather case with a flap and button, which you can get made up in any bazar, for two or three annas.

There is perhaps no item in the whole of your fishing outfit, in which you can economise so thoroughly, and without loss of efficiency, as in your traces, especially those made of gut. Purchase your gut, of the very best sort obtainable, from a good shop, buy your own swivels, which you can get in India, if you like, and make your own traces, and you will effect a saving of quite 50 per cent. by doing so. Never use blued swivels, they rust quickly, and also rust the gut at the ties. German silver, or nickel swivels are the best. See that both heads of every swivel work very freely. Wire for making traces can be obtained from most tackle shops, and for treble twisted traces the fine wire used for native musical instruments is useful, but it should be very carefully inspected, and any hanks showing the slightest signs of rust should be rejected. Twisting your own wire traces is, however, troublesome work, and the twisting is liable to be uneven.

Swivels $\frac{7}{8}$ths of an inch in length are the largest you can possibly require, even for the heaviest fishing. Personally, I very rarely use them longer than $\frac{5}{8}$ths of an inch. Whatever the material used, whether gut or wire, it should always be doubled in the eye of the swivel. Before making up a gut trace, every piece should be thoroughly soaked beforehand. If after use the gut shows any discolouration in the knots attaching it to the swivel, these should be cut off and the gut retied to the swivel. It only means the loss of an inch or so in the length of the cast, and saves breakage at the tie when playing a fish. Six to seven feet in length is sufficient for a trace; my ideal trace is one seven feet in length with a single swivel at each end and a double one in the centre.

A last word of advice before leaving the subject of traces. Never make them of gold or silver gimp. It is useless in India and will generally play you false.

YUBA BILL.

At a wedding feast recently the bridegroom was called upon, as usual, to respond to the given toast, in spite of the fact that he had previously pleaded to be excused. Blushing to the roots of his hair, he rose to his feet. He intended to imply that he was unprepared for speechmaking, but he unfortunately placed his hand upon his bride's shoulder, and looked down at her as he stammered out his opening and concluding words:

"This—er—thing has been forced upon me."

In the barber-shop the scissors clicked merrily away and the barber's dog lay on the floor close beside the chair, looking up intently all the time at the occupant who was having his hair cut.

"Nice dog, that," said the customer.

"He is, sir," said the barber.

"He seems very fond of watching you cut hair."

"It ain't that, sir," explained the barber, smiling. "Sometimes I make a mistake and take a little piece of a customer's ear!"

GROUSE FOR THE HIMALAYAS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—What has become of the attempt to establish an aviary for wild birds at or near Darjeeling? Grouse should do well at that elevation on many of our mountain plateaus and though heather seeds are non est the wealth of grasses, I think, might furnish ample substitutes. Vermin there are, but these are not more numerous than on the moors of the British Isles, and the golden eagle, farther to the eastward, disdains such small fry as birds. Stoats are in evidence but very rare, and the snakes that penetrate to these heights admit of being kept under by rewards. It was shown some years ago that almost in every isolated wood or sholah water in sufficient volume is found that could be led into channels to damp down the grass, preventing the spread of fires over preserved areas without soddening the ground enough to inconvenience the birds, and as the young broods are fully on the wing when the annual firing takes place, it would cost much to fence in woods here and there, keeping the undergrowth moist enough to stop the flames running into them. Genuine heather could be introduced at small cost, while clover seed is cheap enough to be scattered broadcast His Highness the Nizam, H.H. of Cooch Behar, and other sporting noblemen have succeeded well enough in the conservation of big game, and one hears that the Bijni reserve is becoming well stocked, it is as well, therefore, that similar attention should be accorded to game birds. There would be no great difficulty in netting 100 grouse (20 per cent. cocks) in March nor in transporting them to India, and if turned down in May, when the new growth is generally well forward, they ought to do well.

While on the subject I might mention that a good deal of thrown up tea land, where the bushes have run up into veritable trees, would make excellent spinnies for the country pheasant, jungle fowl and wood pigeon, and these places are near enough to the factories to prevent poaching.

A CHINK OF NOTE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Eleven miles from Agra the Gwalior road crosses a bridge over the Khara Nuddee stream. On the far bank of the little river upon some rising ground stands the rest-house, a tiny thatched bungalow. The railway also crosses the stream some three-quarters of a mile higher up, to the right of the road. There is a railway station, Bhandai, on the Agra side of the Khara Nuddee. Between railway and road is a network of ravines. Away to the left the stream sweeps round behind the bungalow, but the curve is a gradual one, and the tangle of winding glens, which borders its course lower down, is separated from the rest-house by two miles of cultivated table land. This is just the sort of country most specially beloved by Gazelles, and that they should be plentiful is only what one would naturally expect. I have had many interesting stalks in the endless succession of hill and valley, far to the left of the road. There distances being greater, and the extent of broken ground very large, the game is little disturbed and anyone who knows the habits of the Indian Gazelle should seldom go home empty handed. My story, however, is not about Chinkara in general, but one in particular, a veteran well-known to Agra sportsmen. This buck's usual haunt was the rough ground to the right of the road This uncultivated stretch is very circumscribed in area lying as it does between railway and road, which are only three-quarters of a mile apart.

On the other side of the railway track, which here runs on an embankment, is a flat cultivated plain. Then too beyond the bungalow, on the Gwalior road, the ravines soon die away into corn fields. It will be thus seen that the buck's domain was bounded by the railway on one side, the high road on the other: by the river at one end, and cultivation at the other. Khara Nuddee was rather a favourite hunting ground of mine, so I often went there. I saw the historical buck several times, and examined him carefully through glasses I estimated his horns at a good 13 inches. This chink was still in good health when I left Agra at the end of 1903, and may be possibly flourishing now. I should like to be able to collect a history of his adventures, for they must have been many. Being close to the bungalow, where shooters were wont to spend the night, and also within a short walk of Bhandai railway station, it was only natural that this buck should receive a lot of attention from people who coveted his fine head. I made three attempts at stalking him, but though I had had considerable experience with chink, and flattered myself I knew all about it, I never succeeded in getting a shot. One thing that struck me as curious was the invariable good luck which attended that buck, whenever he did make a small mistake. Once I saw him feeding within long shot of the railway. I was out in the fields on the other side of the embankment, and the wind was right, so that I looked on getting a shot as a certainty. Just, however, as I was coming nicely up behind the embankment, a train came along, and the chink cantered away with his harem. Gazelle bucks usually have three or four does in attendance, but occasionally, like Mahomedans, they increase the number of their wives. The Khara Nuddee buck, and also another one on the other side of Agra, near the Tundla road, had each nine or ten ladies in their train. The Tundla road buck I managed to bag eventually in spite of all his watchfull sponses, but in the case of the Khara Nuddee one the faithful does frustrated my evil intentions. I had watched the buck vanish into a big ravine quite near the bungalow, and with the utmost precautions crept from point to point, till I reached a rise over the top of which I expected to view the Chinkara within easy range. I peeped over and there they were right enough, but in some way they had suspected danger, and the does were in a mob covering the buck so that I could only see his horns. Then with a scuttle of fairy hoofs away they all went like the wind, the buck indistinguishable from the rest till well out of range.

Indian Gazelle are very attached to one spot, and where they are not harried, one can depend on finding them day after day near the same place.

The Khara Nuddee buck was not however always at home, and I often found no signs of him between the railway and the road. No doubt these absences were after he had been specially badly frightened by a visitor from Agra! A determined hunter always gets his game at last, for if one sticks to the same animal persistently a day is sure to come when he is caught off his guard. Perhaps therefore by now the horns of the Khara Nuddee chink may be adorning the bungalow of some persevering sportsman.

FLEUR-DE-LYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I have read with great interest in The Indian Field of 28th June "Pheasant Shooting in the Himalayas." The Koklas and Chir are quite unknown in Darjeeling or Sikkim. We have the Kalij (Gallophasis melanotus), the Monaul (Lophophorus Impeyanus), the Sikkim Horned Pheasant (Ceriornis satyea), and the Green Blood Pheasant (Sthaginis cruentus). Taking the Kalij Pheasant first. Its n t anything like as numerous as it used to be some 12 or 14 years ago. Indeed, some places near to Darjeeling where four or five could be shot in an hour or so without the sportsman moving off the public road not one is to be seen now. The Kalij in Darjeeling will soon become extinct. I lay all the blame on the forest chowkidars, who snare them in great numbers. If any European is seen without a pass near or in any forest out rush the chowkidars and threaten to prosecute him if he shoots a bird. This has happened to me more than once. Only last January I shot a Green Pigeon which fell within the forest boundary. I had just picked up the bird when a forest peon rushed up breathless, making use of all sorts of abuse. Naturally I went to meet him, when he said the Baboo has told him to catch me. I asked where the Baboo was, to call him. The Baboo came, a dirty fat Pahari. We squared matters all right. Two years ago a forest officer told a friend of mine that he had seen me poaching in a forest reserve. This was certainly not the case, as I had not fired a gun for three months before. Forest peons have often brought me pheasants for sale in season and out of season. Let the sportsman go out of Darjeeling in parts of Sikkim and Bhutan and he will get the finest pheasant shooting in the Himalayas, and numbers of birds will be brought to bag; but wherever there is a forest peon he (the sportsman) will have great annoyance and not a bird will be seen. In parts of Sikkim where there are no forest regulations, I have seen Deer, Pheasants, Jungle Fowl and Partridges feeding in the fields close to large villages. The sportsman in Darjeeling (and elsewhere I fancy it must be the same) must bear in mind that all game is strictly kept for the forest Baboos and peons.

Kalij are still to be met with in numbers in Sikkim and Bhutan. I never liked shooting with beaters, the whole hill side gets disturbed, and if one is lucky a couple of shots are procured as the b rds pass with tremendous speed. I far prefer taking a couple of dogs, and if the birds are above the pathway, some very pretty shooting is to be had, as they get up with a cackle and fly up into the nearest tree or over one's head. Its a strange thing, but it has often happened when I have been out. We have marked six or seven birds settle on a tree; on reaching the tree not a bird is to be seen. My plan is when the jungle is at all open to make a man pitch stones into the tree, when the birds fly out. I once saw two Kalij settle in a tree. I made a man pitch stones in, but nothing moved. As it was gettig late I sat down to have some grub. After eating I had a rug spread, lighted my pipe and lay down. On looking up I could scarcely believe my eyes, there was the head of a Pheasant just above a clump of leaves not a dozen yards above me. It concealed itself so well that not one of the three men I had with me had seen it. On firing out flew the other, which was badly missed.

I have put up the Kalij, Jungle Fowl and Partridge out of the same bit of jungle.

The Monaul I do not believe will be found anywhere in British Sikkim now. I used to shoot them at Sundukpho and Philoot, but that was three or four years ago. Out of British Sikkim I have found them in numbers close to a place called Zangpho; they love to stay in the most precipitous places, where walking is abominable, loose rocks and terrible precipices. It also requires a hard knock to bring an old cock Monaul to bag. No. 3 shot is about the best. I quite agree with your correspondent that "it is worth going a long way to shoot," and not only their splendid plumage, but the bird, after being skinned and stewed or made into a curry, is a dish a hungry sportsman enjoys. October is about the best month to go after Monaul.

On a fine October morning the air is so crisp one feels up to walking any distance, and on the high hills the Monaul frequents one gets hungry—seldom tired. I can recall many happy days I have spent on those hills and nice bags of Monaul and Partridges brought into camp. Dogs are to be employed in shooting Monaul, and the best time is early morning. On being flushed by dogs they get up with a "Click, Click" and settle within 50 yards or so. On again being disturbed the flight is for about half a mile I was one day very unlucky, not having shot anything. Game had been seen, but as it sometimes happens one could not get within range, when one of my coolies, who had been to collect firewood, came and told me he had seen a hen Monaul on some rocks close to. On going to the place nothing was to be seen. Before turning to go back to camp I had another look round and there within 10 yards was a hen crouching behind a rock. We had passed and repassed it a dozen times and it had not moved. The colour of the hen Monaul is similar to the colour of a grey rock, so its no wonder it escaped being seen by any of the keen-eyed Paharis.

The Sikkim Horned Pheasant or Red Pheasant is still to be found in the Darjeeling district from 8,000 up to 11,000 feet in oak forest, where there are clumps of bamboos. On being flushed by dogs they get up with a loud whirr and the call is something like "Quock, Quock" and repeated until they settle in a tree, when the call is changed to "Waa, Waa." The Paharis kill and snare numbers in the breeding season by mimicking the cry "Waa." The Red Pheasant is about the easiest bird to shoot. It drops readily to a charge of No. 6 shot and does not fly fast. Its a perfect wonder they have not been quite exterminated yet.

Now comes the Green Blood Pheasant (Sthaginis cruentus), the cock being one of the handsomest birds I know with its green breast and blood red spots, and its green and white tail with its crimson border; the hen being a plain bird—brown with a bluish ash top knot. I used to get numbers years ago, but now one has to go further, out of British territory in fact. They are very difficult to flush even with dogs. When they do get up seldom fly far, sitting on trees or bushes close to never trying to conceal themselves. They are not worth killing for the table, not being anything like a Monaul or Kalij.

I was once shooting at a place called Shampo when I put up some Blood Pheasants and amongst them two big brown birds, which I took at the time to be hen Monaul. I marked one sit in some low jungle. On walking it up the dogs after some trouble flushed it, and on knocking it over I was glad to find I had shot a Himalayan Snowcock (Tetrogallus Himalayensis). Since then I have shot two in the same place.

RETURN TICKETS AT REDUCED FARES.

First and Second Class Passengers.

1. During the period from the 10th September to the 3rd October 1906 inclusive, return tickets for 1st and 2nd class passengers, available for one calendar month from date of issue to completion of return journey, will be issued for any distance over 100 miles at single fares. Similar tickets will also be issued for stations distant 100 miles or less on payment of fare as for 101 miles.

Example:—

A ticket issued on 10th September 1906, will, under this rule, be available for completion of return journey up to the midnight of 9th October 1906.

The outward journey must be completed in all cases within the same limit of time, after commencement as allowed for single journey tickets, vide paras. 15 and 21, pages 82 and 84 of the monthly Time Table and Guide. One day is allowed for break of journey for every 100 miles or part of 100 miles, but no break of journey will be allowed at a station short of 101 miles from the point the journey was commenced.

Intermediate Class Passengers.

2. Return tickets will be issued during the same period and under the same conditions as to distances to intermediate class passengers, at a charge of two third class fares. Tickets under the concession will be available only between the stations named on the tickets, and not for break of journey.

General.

3. Tickets purchased at the Calcutta Offices (Fairlie Place and Chowringhee) will be available by trains from Howrah on the day of issue or the day after. Tickets taken at these offices for Monday's Mail trains are procurable on Saturdays. Tickets purchased at the Burra Bazar Office will be available on the day of issue only.

4. The return concession tickets for 1st, 2nd and intermediate class passengers will be accepted to secure reserved accommodation, provided the accommodation is available, on the following scale—

Class.	Tickets required to secure a reserved compartment.
First – .. – .. –	Four
Second .. .. – .. –	Five
Intermediate (lateral compartment) ..	Eight

5. The return concession tickets do not entitle the holder to any additional concession, such, for instance, as that under which women servants are, on payment of the next lower class of fare, permitted to travel with ladies or children in first of second class compartments. Children's tickets will be issued at half the concession rates.

Monthly Suburban Tickets.

6. Monthly Suburban tickets for September 1906, between any two stations, Howrah to Burdwan, including the Tarkessur Branch, will be issued to purchasers of tickets for August 1906 at three-fourths only of usual rates, subject to the minimum charge.

Saturday, 11th August 1906.

A CHAPTER of accidents this afternoon marred the sport to no small extent, the three hurdle races on the programme accounting for much grief. Mr. Rodocanachi lost two good horses —Shylock breaking his leg in the Pony Hurdle Race and Don Q. his back in the August Plate—both had to be shot. Sylvia and Ynyslas came down in the Amateur Hurdle Plate, Mr. Antram being badly hurt, necessitating his removal to the hospital and Mr. Pugh receiving a severe shaking. The rain held off till the last race when it came down in torrents. The racing was good on the whole and is commented on in our sporting notes. Details :—

PONY HURDLE RACE.—Rs. 750 to the winner, Rs. 150 to the second, and Rs. 75 to the third. A high-weight handicap for ponies 14-2 and under. About 1 mile over 6 flights of hurdles.

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK.

THE King, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, was met by Prince Christian, and with the seal of Royal approval so deeply stamped, the meeting commanded a large and representative attendance. Thanks to the recent rain, the going, which has been kept green by the constant use of hydrants, was pretty good, but the dry nature of the soil was attested by the clouds of dust that gathered along the roads. Early on it looked as if we were in for a wet day, but this fact did not affect the exodus from Waterloo, and glorious sunshine rewarded visitors, the day being well rounded off by the success of a most popular favourite in Llangibby in the big event of the day.

(Winner trained by Hon'ble F. Lambton.)

BETTING : 13 to 8 agst. Freeborn, 3 to 1 Plum Blossom, 7 to 2 Bonniface, 8 to 1 Spume, and 100 to 8 each others (offered).

Won very cleverly, having something to spare, by three parts of a length ; a similar distance divided second and third. Time—1min. 4⅘secs.

The Sandown executive, with two big cards to play, did not put all their eggs into one basket, and though the glamour of the meeting in a measure died out with the gallant victory of Llangibby, the National Breeders' Produce Stakes promised to furnish an interesting contest, though the culminating point would have been reached had Slieve Gallion happened to have been included in the race. Although His Majesty and the Heir Apparent were unable to be present, Royalty was represented by Prince Christian, and another brilliant gathering, including most of the leading patrons of the national sport, did justice to the occasion. With the London season so nearly approaching its end, society came down in force. The half-holiday folk helped to swell a capital muster, which the road brigade made an important item, while Tattersall's was crowded. The going was getting a bit hard, but at the same time was fairly good for this sandy soil, and the racing most interesting to see, the remarkable performance of Lord Rosebery's smashing colt, the nearest parallel to which was Peter's performance in the Royal Hunt Cup years ago, being alone worth the journey ten times over.

NATIONAL BREEDERS' PRODUCE STAKES—(For the produce of mares covered in 1903)—Of 5,000sovs, the breeder of the winner receives 300sovs. and breeder and owner of the second each 200sovs., and the breeder and owner of the third each 100sovs., nominator to be considered the breeder. 5 furlongs.

LIVERPOOL.

Although we have it upon the authority of the indefatigable Clerk of the Course, Mr. E. Topham, that the attendance was but a shade, if anything, below the average for the opening day, there was, in comparison with many Liverpool reunions, an absence of that life and bustle that has gone to make the fixture so popular with all grades of North and South Country sportsmen, and it is the sincere wish of everyone that the powers that be will see to it that such a deterrent clashing will not happen another year. Considering the long spell of summer weather that we have had, the going was in first-rate order.

Won by a length ; a similar distance divided second and third. Time—2mins. 20⅗secs.

Precisely the same dull features characterised the second act as were noticeable at the opening stage. If anything matters were even more lethargical, fields considerably smaller, and the racing from a general standpoint lacking in any conspicuous distinction. Fields were of meagre strength, thirty-two horses only being seen out for the seven events, and even under this poor circumstance backers did not have altogether the best of the exchanges, for the very hot favourites three of them odds-on chances, suffering defeat. Moreover, the light for binoculars was not as clear as on the opening day, though the whole environment again basked in glorious sunshine.

LIVERPOLITAN PLATE (Handicap)—Of 500sovs. ; second receives 30sovs. and the third 15sovs. 1½ miles.

BISLEY, ENG.

THE SUB-TARGET GUN COMPANY.

Gentlemen,—It affords me pleasur to testify to the value of the Sub-Targe Rifle, one of which was set up o: the steamer, and was in constant use by the members of the Canadian Rifle Team during the voyage from Montreal to Liverpool and afterwards at the Canadian Headquarters at Bisley, where it was in almost constant use. I consider it of great value in the instruction of recruits in holding and sighting, and also in detecting and correcting the individual errors of eyesight. For practice in trigger-pulling it is of great advantage, even to the experienced marksman.

My daily use of the Machine at Bisley, was, I feel, of advantage to me in my work on the ranges, where I was winner of the King's Prize.

Very truly yours,

BISLEY CAMP, SURREY,

THE SUB-TARGET GUN COMPANY.

Gentlemen,—Having used the Sub-Target Rifle frequently during the N.R.A. Meeting at Bisley, just closed, I am pleased to testify to its value in promoting steadiness in holding, sighting and trigger-pulling.

To the recruit it must be especially useful in these respects, as the tell-tale "needle" points out every "fault" of the man. I believe that its general adoption and use by the Army, Navy, Volunteers, Rifle Clubs and in the Public Schools would go a long way towards making a nation of reliable shots for Imperial Defence."

Very truly yours,

ROWING.

HARVARD vs. CAMBRIDGE.—The Press Association says a proposal was made by the Harvard crew, who had beaten Yale in their annual boat race, on 28th June, that a race should be arranged between the Harvard crew and a crew representing Cambridge University. Mr. Rudolf Lehmann, M.P., as an old Harvard coach, was asked to act as intermediary, steps were taken to communicate with the members of the recent Cambridge crew and others who might be required, and with the exception of one, who had gone abroad, all who were applied to have consented to row if wanted.

It may, therefore, be taken as certain that the proposed race will be rowed. The probable date is 8th September, when the tide will serve in the afternoon, and the course will be from Putney to Mortlake. The Cambridge crew will begin to practise, at Bourne End, on 6th August.

As it was impossible at this time of the year to summon a formal meeting of the Cambridge University Boat Club, Mr. Goldsmith, the president of the club, had to content himself with consulting as many old Cambridge oarsmen as could be got together at short notice.

PROFESSIONAL PUNTING CHAMPIONSHIP.—This event took place at Maidenhead and resulted in a victory for W. Haines, of Old Windsor, who gained his eighth success. In the first heat he beat F. Nicholls of Sunbury by 1½ length in 9mins. 28secs., thus getting to within 1sec. of his own record after which H. George, of Oxford, was victorious over C. Clark, of Sunbury, last year's runner-up in 9mins. 41secs. In the final Haines beat George rather easily in 9mins. 30secs., although to the Rye Peck where the holder turned best it was a very good race.

SWIMMING.

HALF-MILE ENGLISH AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—For the half-mile amateur championship of England, which took place in the River Weaver at Runcorn on Saturday, there were eight entrants. The Australian, Healey, failed to send in his name, while another notable absentee was E. Forsyth, who held the title in 1904. The affair was looked upon as a certainty for H. Taylor, Chadderton S. C., and this proved to be the case, the mile champion winning easily. Indeed, Taylor placed another record to his credit, his time for the distance (11mins 25⅘secs.) beating the previous best—by Kieran at Leicester in 1905—by 2⅘secs. Of the other competitors, P. H. Lister was the most prominent, the Hyde Seal man finishing second. 45 yards behind the winner; while the third position was filled by T. S. Battersby, Wigan S. C.

Officials:—Starter, Mr. J. Warriner; timekeeper, Mr. R. Beattie (Northern Counties' A. S. A.).

The weather was beautifully fine, and there were about 7,000 people present. All the entrants took the water. A good start was effected, and the men were placed to swim four lengths, each of 220 yards. Battersby at once took the lead, and maintained it until fifty yards had been covered, when Taylor overhauled the Wigan man. After the first lap had been negotiated Taylor held an advantage of four yards over Battersby, while five yards in the rear was Rathbone, with Lister at the latter's shoulder. At the half-distance Taylor led by fifteen yards from Battersby, with Lister, half a yard away, third. At this junction Rathbone retired, others were practically tailed off. Taylor continued to augment his lead, and was finally successful by 45 yards. Result:—

H. Taylor, Chadderton S. C.	...	... 1
P. H. Lister, Hyde Seal S. C.	...	... 2
T. S. Battersby, Wigan S. C.	...	... 3
F. Lees, Hathershaw S. C.	...	... 0
D. Morris, Blackburn S. C.	...	... 0
D. Sadler, Newton F. and S. C.	...	... 0
J. Rathbone, Verdin S. C.	...	... 0

Won by 45 yards; two yards. Time—11mins. 25⅘secs.

THE CHANNEL SWIM.—The plucky experiment by Horace Mew, the Shanklin amateur, in attempting to swim across the Channel on the strong spring tides, led to an exceedingly interesting and, in some respects, phenomenal swim of twenty miles on Tuesday. Owing to the abnormally low temperature of the sea for this time of the year, Mew failed in his object of swimming from Dover to Calais, but he achieved sufficient to show that the cross-Channel swim is possible on the spring tides to a fast and powerful swimmer under ordinary conditions and temperature.

Mew's start was made from Dover beach, between the Admiralty Pier and Shakespeare Cliff, at 2-26 in the morning. It was then quite dark, and there were drifting banks of dense fog, with occasional flashes of lightning. Mew, who uses the under-arm side-stroke, averaged during his swim from 33 to 34 a minute. The temperature of the sea, taken at starting, was 59, but this fell to 57 further out, and then to 56, whilst at times it was as low as 53. Mew's progress was very fine from the commencement. He was two miles out from the shore in 44 minutes. Three and a quarter miles from the shore was the record of the first hour, which was quite a phenomenal performance. He was six miles direct on his journey at the second hour, during which Pilot McKeen had slightly altered the course in order to get Mew as far eastward as he wished him to be to get the best effect of the outsetting from the Goodwin Sands.

At the termination of the fifth hour's swimming, Mew was ten miles from his starting point. There was then a strong westerly drift, but this had been anticipated, and Mew showed some very fine and powerful swimming at this time. He was at eight o'clock almost in a line with Dover Castle, and Weidman, the Dover Channel swimmer, at this time entered the water to accompany Mew, whose position at the end of the sixth hour was south-east of the Varne Buoy. He was in some nasty broken water, known to the seamen as the "Ripple," along the edge of the Varne Sands, which are dangerous in rough weather. It was a stiff fight through this foot by foot. It was in this water that the lowest temperature was recorded, the thermometer going down to between 53 and 55 degrees, and Mew shivered severely, and complained of the icy coldness of the water.

From 9-30 to 10 o'clock it was painfully apparent that the swimmer was pretty badly chilled, and at times he was shivering all over. He also frequently changed from the side to the breast stroke, showing that he was in difficulties. Mew was advised to sprint a little in order to improve the circulation, but his limbs would not respond to the effort for any length of time. In spite of every attention however, Mew's condition became worse, and he was advised to give up. He swam to the tug, and touched the ladder at half past ten, thus finishing a swim of eight hours four minutes' duration. Mew was so cramped with the cold, and upset by his failure, that he lost his hold of the ladder, and would have sunk in his semi-conscious condition, but for the prompt and valuable aid of Weidman, Burgess and others, who secured him, whilst webbing was got under his arms, and he was hauled aboard in a very exhausted condition.

The bearings taken immediately the swim was ended showed the Varne Lightship west by south, and the Varne Buoy north-east by north, making Mew ten and a half miles direct on his course to France. In the swim and drift he had covered twenty miles. The tug's head was then set for Dover, which was reached about two hours later, by which time Mew was sufficiently recovered to walk to his hotel. In a conversation with our correspondent later in the day, Mew stated he had never swam in such extreme cold water, and it was that which caused his failure.

TENNIS.

THE M.C.C. CHALLENGE PRIZES.—The 40th annual match for the Gold Prize of the M.C.C. was played at Lord's on the 23rd instant. The contestant were E. H. Miles, the holder, and Major A. Cooper Key, who won the all-comers' competition, and afterwards defeated H. E. Crawley, the holder of the Silver Prize. Miles showed superiority at all points of the game, and at the end of sixty-five minutes' play had gained an easy win by 3 sets to love, the score being 6—2, 6—1, 6—2. Miles aggregated 18 games to 5, and 96 strokes to 61.

The first two games in the opening set went to Miles, but Cooper Key equalised at 2 all. Miles, however, playing an excellent floor game, secured the next four games, and took the set at 6—2. Miles won the first game in the second set, and after deuce three times, the challenger made it 1 all. The latter met with no further success, Miles, with a sequence of five games, winning at 6—1. Cooper Key led at 2—1 in the third set, but Miles then secured five games in succession, and won at 6—1. Deuce was called three times in the fourth game, and three times in the sixth, although Miles thrice found the dedans.

J. Fennell marked the match.

SCOTTISH SPORTING ITEMS.

J. Wolffe, who just now is attracting some attention as a Channel swimmer, was first a member of the Glasgow South Side S.C. previous to joining the Glasgow Dolphin S. C. His father is in business in Glasgow. Nixon, the West of Scotland C.C. professional, is a Sussex man by birth, and is also qualified to play for Yorkshire. He was to play for the latter county at Headingley this week, but had to decline as he promised to play for Scotland against the West Indians at Edinburgh. A tit-bit of the West of Scotland Harriers sports next Saturday is an international cycle race between Wigan C. C. and Grand National C. C. Wigan will be represented by Ben Jones, Clarke, Sherrat, and Cartwright, and the Grand National by D. Flynn, Gould, Lindsay, and Connelly. The Scottish section of the Professional Golfers' Association now numbers 60, and includes all the leading professionals resident in Scotland. Nearly all the best of the Scottish professionals have migrated to England. J. W. Morton and A. Astley will compete at the West of Scotland Harriers' sports on Saturday, the latter in a limited half-mile handicap. Regret is generally expressed that the Scottish Football Association did not join the Football Conference at Berne, where the International Football Association was recently formed. It is not too late yet, and perhaps a move will be made at an early meeting of the S. F. A. Committee. The Scottish junior football clubs commence the season on Wednesday, 1st August, and the seniors a fortnight later. Corporal McKenzie, 5th Lanark R. V., who won the Daily Graphic Cup at Bisley last Tuesday, is a playing member of the Cowal Shinty Club. Councillor Stevenson, ex-president S. F. A., has resigned his connection with the Falkirk F. C. Miss Rosa Symons, lady cyclist, who was record breaking last week from Land's End to John o' Groats, was mobbed in Perth, where her knickerbocker costume was not approved of. The Scottish contingent of the Canadian bowling party left Glasgow and Edinburgh for Liverpool last Thursday en route for Montreal, per S. S. Virginian, where a cordinal welcome awaits them. The team is much stronger than the one which toured in Canada a couple of years ago.

Hunting.

POONA AND KIRKEE HOUNDS.

HUNTING in Poona is now in full swing and the hounds, a very fast lot this year, are in A1 condition. A fresh pack of 25 couple selected and brought out by the Master, Colonel Sheringham, were landed in Bombay on 8th June and after a very short time began their schooling in this country, so that by the end of the month "cubbing" had resulted in several kills. Weather conditions have been favourable from the first and scent has been invariably good, but the heavy and continued rains have by this time brought on such tremendous crops that the chief difficulty to contend with this year is to find a bit of open country where hounds can hunt with any decent fairness to themselves, for nothing is more disheartening nor exhausting to them than drawing the dense sugar and jowari crops which abound on all sides. To do this it is necessary to go some 6 or 8 miles out towards Bombay or Nagar, and many a motor load of sportsmen and keen ladies has been conveyed to the distant meets where the Master and his whips have been in readiness by 6 A.M.; another feature of this season's hunting has been the giving of breakfast, several prominent members of the Hunt having shown their proverbial hospitality by entertaining the field after hunting at the various points most convenient. It has been encouraging to notice the large numbers who have turned out and the indefatigable whips whose services must be invaluable to the M. F. H. are as keen a lot as could be found in Asia, nor are the ladies behind hand, and with so able a horsewoman as Mrs. Richardson, the popular wife of our most popular General, to set an example by her constant appearance in the field it is no wonder that the number of "habits" should be over a score, while H. E. the Governor of Bombay gives encouragement all round by coming out so regularly. During the six weeks of hunting already accomplished, there have been naturally some disappointing days from various causes, but on the whole it has been universally declared that 1906 has already beaten the record for first-class hunting. hounds are staunch and when once fairly away are astoundingly fast, the pace having more than once proved too much for horses. It is proposed to have during September, a standing camp at Coinchwad, a capital hunting centre on the Bombay road and if this be arranged we may look forward to some real treats, for the jacks thereabouts are plentiful and as straight necked as one could wish.

LOYALIST.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

7th August.—A bye day at the Kennels was fixed with the hope of snatching a bit of sport near home: after drawing the sugar behind the East Lancashire Mess blank, a move was made over the Canal and after some patient work in a heavy jowari crop hounds drove a strong jack away, hopes ran high that he would take the Cavalry Racecourse and make for the hills across the open, but a jack is no fool, and with only a few hundred yards between him and another dense crop he crossed the railway and got into covert almost before we had settled into our saddles, hounds continued to hunt and the field waited on the road with as much patience as a hot sun and swarms of flies would allow for another half hour or so. At length finding the work in covert was exhausting the hounds the Master collected them and tried the country towards Glubet Hill, but this was fruitless so hounds were taken home.

9th August.—A meet at the R. A. Mess is always popular and on this occasion a very large field turned out, it was a hot, dry morning without a vestige of dew and the Master's head was shaking sadly when he moved off to try what luck could be wrung from the big nullah behind the Kirkee Racecourse. We had hardly gone under the bridge which crosses the G. I. P. Railway than hounds burst into song and once more we hoped we were in for another of the "real good things" to which we have many times been treated this year, but when it was found that a jack had sneaked from the nullah in full view of the pack it was seen at once that "who whoops" must follow very quickly and in no time hounds were breaking him up with as much determination as they would an English fox. Considering again the heavy crops which this season are a source of joy to the cultivator, but perplexing, to say the least of it to an M. F. H., the only thing now to be done was to go for the jacks in the Botanical Gardens and though "grousing" from the field rose and fell like summer thunder, they waited with a certain degree of hope as hounds were heard whimpering from time to time, at length a jack broke with hounds fairly well on him but like the wily varmint he is, he took a bit of dry and dusty road where scent was impossible and while hounds were casting he saved his brush by disappearing into such a hopelessly thick clump of prickly pear that the Master would not let the hounds risk the certain result of injuries which drawing such poisonous stuff must involve. It was now getting rather late and it was put to the vote whether any more hunting should be tried many, indeed by far the greater number, of the field now left but a dozen or so of the keenest expressed a wish that the "Powder Works" compound should be tried, however, after some more fruitless work on the way there one by one these fell away and everyone turned to the R. A. Mess where Major Butler and his officers entertained most hospitably and did their best to make up for an unlucky and disappointing morning.

12th August.—Sixth milestone Nagar Road. Those of us who enjoyed a day here about a fortnight ago looked forward to another meet pretty keenly and we have had a most enjoyable day with a variety of sport. In spite of a first rate dew scent was cold in the early morning but things warmed up and hounds hunted steadily until they hustled a whopping jack out of a heavy bajri crop, he took us at a good rousing pace to Wagholi Hill where he was joined by another of his kind and the pack separated, after some 20 minutes of rather perilous going over rocky country the hounds with the Master ran their jack to ground on the side of the hill and without loss of time he took them to join the rest and found that they had also marked their quarry to ground. The sun now became intensely hot and for a time we feared that sport for the day must cease some timely clouds and a merry little fox, however, came to our aid and once more dispelled dull care, after giving us a short spin the fox doubled back through the pack escaping in a marvellous way and taking refuge in a high crop he was left there, and the Master turned his attention to more satisfactory hunting. After crossing the road hounds hit off the line of a jack near the 7th milestone and we were rewarded with a real good run, of 46 minutes sometimes spinning over good open country, sometimes over high ground with scent poor and hunting slow, and sometimes in nullahs where scent improved at once, until in a roundabout way we reached the village of Chahowli on the river where the jack at last jumped down a well, and it was with difficulty the whips prevented hounds from following him; with the help of some natives he was at length saved from his suicidal madness and given a chance of saving his brush or at least to die an honourable death. Captain Gordon, a most keen sportsman, and the second whip seized him by the neck and rode with him to a neighbouring hill where he let him go, but hounds with their blood up were not to be denied and picking up his line they quickly ran into and killed him, the spoil was fairly shared when the brush having been given to Captain Gordon they broke up "the remains" and fed with evident satisfaction on a meal they richly deserved.

LOYALIST.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

ON Saturday, 4th instant, the Ootacamund hounds met at noon at the Pykara Bridge. The sun was hot and the first line that hounds picked up was stale leading only to an earth below Kengoda Hill, where hounds marked their jack to ground. The earth was quite small and when the Master put his whip in the jack barked at him like a dog. Timmy, the native whip Pincher, the terrier, and two squibs all shared the honour of speedily ejecting him and he was tied up in Timmy's turban. Timmy rode proudly over the downs to shake him down and give us a hunt. Unfortunately, the jack became very savage under this treatment. He bit his way out of the turban and made straight for an earth in some rocks not 200 yards away. A long draw followed and although I cannot say we did not find, yet we had no sport until a jack, viewed away from Briar at 4-30 P.M., saved and redeemed an otherwise indifferent day. Hounds ran him through Wapshare's Hare Shola, back to and over the Pykara Road to Bacon Wood, across the Yemakal Valley to an earth which had been successfully stopped and thence to Yemakal Shola, through which hounds bustled him without giving him a moment's rest. They did capitally and once we really thought they had him. Then they brought a line out of the shola, which fizzled out below the Pykara. It is impossible to say what happened to our jack for hounds changed in some inexplicable way just when they looked like killing. This was an excellent run over half an hour in length.

On Monday we met at 8 A.M. at Andy Plantation. It was a nice pleasant morning. Hounds picked up a line almost at once on the west side of the bay opposite Democrat Shola and ran over the hill west of Limerick Shola, down over the crossing in Paon's Valley, through Middle Bit Shola, along the ridge at the south end of Sambhur Shola, then along above Nunjanad Village and left-handed straight for the junction of the Melkundah Road and the Avalanche Bridle Path, the pace increasing as they went until they were fairly screaming. Most of the field were riding a more or less stern chase as far as Sambhur Shola, where, by keeping right-handed along the top, they picked hounds up again. On they went, along the ridge south-east of the Melkundah Road, down the scrubby hillside, over a very boggy bottom, up another precipitous hill, down to the stream again and finally killed half a mile from Yetalur Village. This run lasted 50 minutes as hard as hounds could go and a 4½ miles point—at least six as hounds ran. The oldest member of the hunt remarked that he had never seen hounds run that line before. There were 15 couple out and 13 were up at the finish, the other two having run into and killed another jack. We now started in a homeward direction, but news having been received that a couple of panther had been seen going into Parlock Wood from Governor's Shola, the Master considered it wise to take hounds home and organise a beat the same afternoon. This was done, but unluckily without success. A good day's sport.

On Tuesday there was a bye day, hounds meeting at noon at the Rifle Butts. We first drew Hanging Shola blank and then crossed the Seegur Road and Demon Valley. On the ridge behind Rocky a jack jumped up almost in the middle of the pack. He turned right-handed up by Talahunda Mund over the top of Mutanad Hill and ran down to the Seegur Road, when hounds checked. The Master made a cast by Black Bridge, over the Connemara Road and hounds hit off the line in the young Bluegums above the 5th milestone on the Connemara Road. They ran fast straight through Hanging Shola into Aramby Wood, just where the Arpthill Road comes out on the downs, turned left-handed above Brookhampton and on reaching the open turned up right-handed into the covert, the jack being finally lost in the middle of the dense jungle inside the catchment area. After riding right round the wire fence and back, the Master, having collected hounds, drew Brooklands, whence a couple of jacks were viewed away, but scent having taken a decided turn for the worse nothing could be made of either of them. We then came home.

ABLAKI.

THE GORDON'S HORSE HOUNDS.

THE doings of the 30th Lancers' pack since I last wrote do not call for lengthy comment. It has been practically hopeless to look for runs for the country has been as dry as a bone and scent almost a negligible quantity. However as some very heavy rain has fallen during the last 24 hours things will now no doubt improve. On the 5th instant the fixture was the fifth milestone on the Dumlur Road and hounds quickly picked up a line to the north of the road and ran hard through some casuarina topes to the top of some rising ground.

Here the jack swung to the right, and puzzled the pack around the huts of the small village. Casting forward and re-crossing the Dumlur Road, Mr. Gledstanes failed to recover the line but not long afterwards a jack was found in a nullah and afforded a fair run. They bustled him along well for a couple of miles when some formidable fields of sugarcane were entered and these were so dry that not a particle of scent would lie within them. (As a by the way it may be remarked that this is often a difficulty with the Ooty hounds at the beginning of the season. Scent lies well on the dewy downs, but so soon as a shola is entered the merry chorus dies away.) Well, our jack clung to his sugarcane and could not be induced to break, so he was at last reluctantly left. A third brief gallop was obtained on the road home, a line being picked up, crossed a corner of the Agram plain and the Carabinier's polo ground, but it resulted in our jack running us out of scent. A very disappointing day but without scent hounds cannot hunt.

9th August.—Only a moderate field reached the sixth milestone on the Oosoor Road on the morning of the 9th August and the weather and country were still unpromising. However the meet was graced by the presence of three ladies, Miss Saunders, Miss Goodrich, and Mrs. Traill, and after a touch of a jack had been obtained and lost to the east of the road, a jack was found in some sugarcane fields. He broke at once and led the pack at a swinging pace for a mile and a half, when he mysteriously vanished near a village called Devachickanhalli. It is noticeable how often the Bangalore jacks dodge hounds near villages and one is led to infer that they actually enter them. Once more a find resulted from the drawing of some sugarcane and hounds got away on fair terms with their jack. For three miles they run hard and straight and then dry sugarcane topes afforded him a haven of refuge. Some delay ensued but the Master recovered the line by a particularly wily cast and getting away at his brush they ran him at a great pace for another half mile and killed, Miss Saunders being presented with the brush. It was distinctly a better morning than the last, indeed there was some very pretty hunting and fair galloping, but scent was again a bit catchy. There would seem to be plenty of jacks about, however, hounds are well and even better sport must come.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL IN CALCUTTA.

OLYMPIANS vs. C. DE M. KELLOCK, ESQ.'S XI.—For this match, which was played on the Olympian ground on Friday, the 10th instant, Mr. Kellock had got together a fairly strong scratch XI, including several Calcutta and Customs players, while Olympians were without Baldwin and Thomaides of their usual team. In the first half Olympians scored through Kingcome and Bagot, while in the second the scratch XI first scored, but Kingcome again scored, this player was in very good form throughout, a pleasant game ending in favour of the Olympians. Score :—Olympians, three ; Kellock's XI, one.

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

SIX clubs, the same number as last year, have entered the Calcutta Rugby League competition for The Indian Field Cup, which began on Saturday, 4th instant, and will terminate on Saturday, 8th proximo. Each club plays ten matches.

On the initial day Calcutta beat Customs to the tune of 28 points to nil, while the Northumberland Fusiliers defeated the Armenians by 13 points to 3.

The Wanderers scratched in their first match against United Service, and turned up short to play Calcutta in their second, with the result that the latter club scored an easy victory—29 points to nil.

The Wanderers are quite a new club and, I am told, are likely to capture a number of unattached players, so that with a little perseverance and a decisive answer in the negative to that cry, so familiar on the touch line last year—"Are we down-hearted?'—things may quickly brighten and shape towards victory.

Rugby, as played in Calcutta this year, does not appear to be in nearly so progressive a stage as it should be. It is wrong, however, to form a strong opinion on this point so early in the season. The various teams are going through the chopping and changing process, and no doubt another few weeks will bring a great all-round improvement. So far I have been chiefly struck with the uninteresting character of the games, and for the present, we avoid personal criticism. Of the matches played up to the end of last week all save one—Customs vs. Armenians—have been very one-sided, and all have been devoid of back play.

What is more unseemly than a long series of scrums with forwards puffing and blowing ; a score seldom results and to a casual observer it seems strange that nearly one-half of the team should be standing idle, while the forwards are so locked together that it is well nigh impossible for any of them to break off with a dribble.

Certain it is that until our clubs insist upon their forwards putting out—I don't mean letting out—the ball to their backs, the game will never "take on" or arouse a proper enthusiasm, which, after all, is as essential to the prosperity of Rugby as to any other game.

Of the matches we have seen, it appears to us that as a rule the forwards get into the scrums merely with the intention of breaking through their opponents, or else, where a few of the more educated endeavour to send the ball back, its course is interrupted by an ignorant second or third row man kicking it forward, instead of heeling it out. For one or two of such offences the culprit should be degraded. And in this connection I may remind non-playing members of committees that the only way to discover the true merits or demerits of a forward is to disregard, as far as possible, the general phases of the game and never take eyes off the forward in question for at least ten consecutive minutes.

Caledonians, after some vacillation, did not enter for the League. They should get ready for the Challenge Cup competition. It may be of a more open nature than is expected.

So far the Armenians do not seem up to last year's standard, but like all other clubs, they have not yet got into their stride. With Rosser, Gregory, Cooper and Brown on their roll-call, they should soon settle down and give a good account of themselves.

Calcutta have quite a number of new players and are particularly well off for halves, of whom Arthur, so far, is facile princeps. They apparently have considerable misgivings as to what their three-quarter line should be. It is said Barnes is a bad tackler, otherwise he should be well worth his place. I hope to see him play a game where plenty of tackling will come his way, as, in my opinion, he is an improved player.

The Northumberland Fusiliers are keen on the game, but have not yet mastered its fine points. Their forwards tackle well, but are much too scraggy and kick the ball recklessly. They have plenty of time for practising and have a couple of officers in the forward ranks who will soon see that the scrummagers learn to know that it is better to leave the ball alone than kick it to an opponent.

Great reports come from Darjeeling of the West Ridings. They play two or three matches a week (and have been doing so during the whole of July) between teams drawn from the various regimental companies. They are certain competitors for the Challenge Cup.

SPHINX.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

CALCUTTA vs. ARMENIANS.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday. The visitors were two short throughout and never troubled the home team at any period of the game. Soon after the start Siddons got through but the try was not converted. Arthur next crossed the line and Buckler placed a goal. Siddons after a good run scored another try, and Mallet added a fourth. Both the place kicks were unsuccessful and Calcutta crossed over leading by a goal and three tries (14 points) to nil. Continuing to attack in the second half they had all the best of the game. Maclean rushed over with a try and later Siddons running through passed to Kerr, who scored between the post. The major points were added. Then Kerr, Siddons, and Maclean got over in turn, Siddons' try being improved upon. The Armenians could not pierce the Calcutta defence and the home team thus won by three goals and 6 tries (33 points) to nil.

CUSTOMS vs. UNITED SERVICES.—These teams met on the Customs' ground on Tuesday evening, the wretched state of the turf spoiling what would otherwise have been a good game. It was keenly contested from start to finish, but play was almost entirely among the forwards. The tries were scored from forward rushes, Cooper (two) and Harty getting over for the Services, Edwards and Goldsmith for the home team. The ball was so heavy and greasy that none of the tries was converted. The United Services ultimately won by three tries to two.

ST. JOSEPH'S vs. ST. PAUL'S.—An excellent game was provided by the two schools at the Shrubbery ground on Thursday, the 9th instant. The continual mist and drizzle which prevailed all the morning cleared up before the match and for once the elements proved kind. The Officers of the Duke of Wellington's regiment were "At Home," and the West Ridings Band afforded a pleasant diversion, while a big and interested gallery watched what was admittedly the match of the season. The teams were :—

ST. PAUL'S.—Dalley, goal ; Dalley and Egan (captain), backs ; Sims, Beale, and Toogood, half-backs ; Allison, Shaw, August, McNaught, and Catchick, forwards.

McCoy won the toss and chose the pavilion end. Immediately after the whistle there was quite five minutes of feverish work. The growing excitement of weeks, the high strung condition of the players themselves, and the absorbed attention of the spectators combined to produce a spell of intense interest. Slowly the ball worked its way in spite of momentary checkings with August, Shaw, and Allison towards the North Point goal, till the brilliancy of the defence restored confidence and self-possession to the College forwards, not however until a corner had been made and cleared. Time after time Allison made heroic efforts to defeat that wonderful understanding between the half and full-backs, and as often to the credit of Wood, Ready, and Cones, his attempts were definitely checked. The runs towards the St. Paul's goal became more frequent, the pretty dribbling of Augier leading to praiseworthy interruptions from Beal and Egan. From a run down the right wing McCoy centered to Augier, who, failing to stop the ball altogether, sent it accommodatingly to Salt, who, with a good shot, scored the first goal for St. Joseph's. Many such goals would have been the result had it not been for the good play of Sims, the left half. A minute later Augier from a run half the field scored with an extremely difficult shot, a really clever piece of individual play. Score : St. Joseph's, 2 ; St. Paul's, nil. The next piece of work came from Catchick, who, getting clear away from Boyd, took the ball up the wing, and centred, but Ready was there and sent it into safety. The Whistle now sounded half-time with the score as above. The feature in the second half was the remarkable goal-keeping of Dalley ; but for his fine play and presence of mind the score would have been augmented on several occasions. At this period of the game McNaught for St. Paul's and McCoy for St. Joseph's went back to strengthen the respective defences. After a series of brilliant runs, in which Dominy and Chopin did good work. McCoy, from a centre from the left by Augier, shot the third goal. Soon after time, was called the score standing at 3—0 in favour of St. Joseph's. For St. Paul's School, Dalley, Beale, and Egan were the best of the defence, while Allison and Shaw shone among the forwards.

There can be no distinction made with regards to the St. Joseph's team for they were all brilliant, and that individual brilliancy was capped by a most perfect combination, a thing which their rivals lacked.

ROYAL FUSILIERS' TOURNAMENT.

THIS tournament was held at Trimulgherry on the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th instant, and was a great success. There was a big attendance on each of the three days, the arrangements were excellent, and the contests keen and interesting throughout. Captain Tudor, "S" Battery R. H. A., refereed, Captain Cowie and Mr. Yates officiated as judges, and Captain Guyon held the watch. The prizes were given away by Colonel Worlledge, commanding the Infantry Brigade, who congratulated the management on the success of the show, the winners on their victories and the losers for the good spirit in which they accepted their defeats. A New York man was taking about Opie Read the brilliant author and journalist.

"Read, you know," he said, "founded the 'Arkansas Traveller.' He edited that excellent paper for ten years or more, and made a great success of it.

"They say that in the spring of 1885 a reporter for the Traveller died. He was a fine young chap. A visitor to the office, the day after the funeral, found the editor and his staff talking about his loss disconsolately.

"'It has been a sad loss, friends,' the visitor said. 'A sad loss indeed.' He sighed and looked about the room. 'And I am pleased to see,' he went on, 'that you commemorate the melancholy event by hanging up crape.'

"Opie Read frowned.

"'Crape?' he said. 'Where do you see any crape?'

"'Over there,' said the visitor, pointing.

"'Crape be durned,' said Read. 'That isn't crape. It's the office towel.'"

Excited Youth (to country hotel-keeper) : "There isn't a bit of fishing about here! Every brook has a notice warning people off. What do you mean by luring anglers here as you do, with the promise of fine fishing?" Hotel-keeper : 'I didn't say anything about fishing in my advertisements. If you read them carefully you will see what I said was 'Fishing unapproachable.'"

SHALL SPORTSMEN PURGE SPORT?

THERE would seem to be the text for very animated discussion in an article entitled "Sport at Westminster," which appeared in Baily's Magazine for June over the familiar signature of "Borderer." The writer, reviewing in a reminiscent and temperate vein the spirit now prevailing among the Law-givers, opines that Parliament would be justified in making an end of so-called "spurious sports" if they see fit to do so: his leading argument being that "so many self-styled sportsmen are trying to spoil sport by artificial means—hunting, shooting and coursing semi-tame animals, and calling it sport," and that such travesty of sport is likely to taint purer sport in the eyes of those who know nothing of any sport spurious or pure and is therefore a source of danger to the latter. Such doctrine of course has not been allowed to pass without challenge, and among others a writer in the London Sportsman took "Borderer" to task for the principles he proclaims maintaining that, by acknowledging the defects, from a sporting point of view, of such pursuits as carted deer hunting and pigeon shooting, the door is open for attack on legitimate sport by people who know nothing and care less about it. The argument used by "Cosmopolitan" in fact is, in brief, "this is the thin end of the wedge: it is the duty of every sportsman to resist its insertion."

Now we are strongly of opinion that there is a very large and influential body of sportsmen who are of "Borderer's" way of thinking. The men composing it are the sportsmen of the truest type whose standard of sport, whose idea of what constitutes sport is the highest: these do not defend the hunting of the carted deer as sport; they may, and quite consistently, defend it against the charge of "cruelty" knowing that the measure of uneasiness caused the quarry is of the slightest; but while repudiating the charge of cruelty brought by the noisy sentimentalist they regard the business with indulgence not unqualified by contempt allowing that a carted deer gives a decent gallop and may be sanctioned for the recreation of those who cannot manage to hunt with foxhounds. The real opinion of the genuine sportsman concerning carted deer hunting may be elicited by him who has courage to announce that he is going to take his pleasure with the "staggers" in preference to meeting a pack of foxhounds. Such preference may be supported by the statement that the chooser's liver is sluggish and he wants to be sure of a gallop, but this we suggest is in itself almost self-condemnatory. What is really required is that carted deer hunting should be ruled out of the list of sports and catalogued by itself as an exercise. As regards pigeon shooting there is not much to say for or against it in a sporting sense: it appears to be going out of fashion; and might we suggest be allowed to die a natural death as a recreation which has outlived its popularity rather than be cut short in its old age to a pœan of triumph raised by the sentimentalist brotherhood.

The point of issue, however, is whether it is better for true sport that its followers should withdraw their countenance from the "spurious" sports so-called with the object of intrenching their own position which they believe would be unassailable were they to leave for demolition the weaker outworks garrisoned by "spurious sportsmen." There is much to be said for the view that they would do wisely to be true to their real convictions: attack necessarily stimulates the spirit of opposition that is latent in the mildest of us; and the folly and exaggeration which humanitarians have brought into play in their attacks on carted deer hunting and pigeon shooting have been enough to inspire antagonism in the breast of a curate whose soul does not soar above croquet. But is it wise to defend at all hazard the weak outworks when their retention is likely to weaken the defence of the main position? It is permissible to doubt whether many would suffer very acutely by the abolition of stag-hunting; we ourselves lean to the view that its abolition would merely reinforce the fox-hunting fields to some extent, for we imagine that the number of men who devote themselves exclusively to the "staggers" is very insignificant.

There is, of course, the thin end of the wedge argument to consider. It may be conceded that the sentimentalists, flushed with their success in capturing a position sportsmen had ceased to defend, would brace themselves for further endeavours and try to carry the war into the fox-hunting and harrier field—even as they recently attacked other hunting. Is the thin end of the wedge argument not liable to receive too much attention? History seems to suggest that it may be regarded too seriously. Oliver Cromwell and his Puritans stopped horse-racing, bull and bear baiting: the Puritan was "top dog" for a time, he was an extremist and as an extremist he went the full length of his tether when he got the chance. But for how long did the Puritan régime last when the Protector had been gathered to his fathers? We can measure its life in the pages of history: and the measure is by months. Suppression compels reaction as inevitably as the swing of the pendulum compels its return. Ardent Puritans lived to see horse-racing, also-bull baiting and the other old sports restored to their place, and more: they were restored among the pastimes of the age and they held their place for centuries with not a few additions in the shape of dog fights and kindred joyful spectacles thrown in to atone for lost time: they flourished after the Restoration under the Stewarts, reached their climax under the sovereigns of the Hanover dynasty: and they only went to the wall with the development of public opinion. Suppose the sentimentalists allowed to work their will in the present year of grace: imagine them, on one of those waves of public opinion which are among the most obscure and curious of social phenomena, making an end of every sport that in their opinion involves "cruelty." How long would the effect of that wave continue? We do not believe it would last twelve months; we doubt much whether it would possess vitality enough to remain operative for six. Inevitably reaction would follow and an era of sport restoration would set in like a tide bringing back not only what modern passing sentiment had swept away, but much more in its train. It is difficult to know which factor is the stronger, public indifference or public virility and commonsense: either is suspended on occasion from time to time: but the latter surely assert themselves sooner or later, and generally sooner.

There remains one factor in the situation, a very vital one that increases every generation. Sport of all kinds involving the chase of game whether with hound or gun must of necessity become more and more artificial not only at home but in all countries with the spread of population. Fox-hunting we conceive is likely to enjoy a longer lease of life than some people think: hunting men perhaps do not all recognise that there is just a touch of artificiality in the sport, but if they do they accept it as inseparable from modern conditions. That sport is obviously artificial which depends for its continuance on the maintenance of game by artificial means; and without the good-will of those who actively preserve foxes—by leaving them alone—the sport would very speedily disappear. The aim of those who have the interests of sport at heart should be to guard against artificiality as far as they may. We should hear much less about the vulgarity and stupidity of pheasant shooting were the method of producing large stocks of birds less absolutely artificial: reaction against huge bags seems to be setting in among some of the larger landed proprietors in England and the indication is a wholesome one. It were better we apprehend that the sportsman set his own house in order than that he should leave it to the sentimentalist to bungle the business for him.

Sporting Notes.

A SPECIAL article on Flat Racing in England, dealing with the period from the Lincoln to the Goodwood Meetings, will be found in our Racing columns to-day.

Congratulations to the Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar on Great Scot's first win in England. At Lewes, last Friday, he won the South Down Club Welter Plate of £100: the distance was a mile and a quarter and he carried 11st. 11lb.

By this week's English mail we received the list of nominations for the Derby of 1908. The entry which totals 301 has only been beaten once, in Diamond Jubilee's year, when 302 horses were nominated. His Majesty has now entered four youngsters by Persimmon. The biggest individual string is that of Mr. H. Cholmondeley in whose name appear no fewer than eleven of the Sledmere yearlings, among them two Flying Fox colts and two young Gallinules. The other sires represented are St. Simon, Orme, Ayrshire, St. Frusquin, Isinglass, Ladas, and Diamond Jubilee. Colonel Hall Walker has nominated ten, of which four are by Gallinule, two by Count Schomberg and the others by Ladas, Persimmon, Carbine, and Orme. There is no near relation to Black Arrow among them, his dam not having been covered in 1904. Other owners and breeders well represented are the Duke of Portland, Lord Wolverton, and Mr. W. Bass, with six each. Lord Derby, Sir R. Waldie Griffith, Mr. L. de Rothschild, and Sir John Robinson, each nominated five, and those with four strings are Lord Rosebery, Lord Howard de Walden, Sir R. Jardine, Mr. A. James, and Mr. E. Kennedy.

Mr. Farquharson's Dalkeith has so far failed to uphold the reputation which he took home with him. Following on the poor form he showed in the race for the London Cup, he has again run last. This time at Newbury in the Netheravon Handicap for which nine mediocre performers started. Details of the race will be found in our English Sporting letter.

The Goddess of Misfortune seems to have taken the Calcutta Monsoon Meetings under her wing and she ought to be enjoying herself. Not content with the havoc she made at the Second Meeting, she took quite good toll again last Saturday. We are glad to say Mr. Antram and Mr. Pugh are both out and about again, both having gone for their first drive on Monday evening. Mr. Antram, considering he came near fracturing his skull, has had a wonderful escape and a remarkably speedy recovery. We saw him out driving on Monday evening with a couple of very handsome black eyes. We understand he leaves for a sea trip to Burma this afternoon.

The accidents which occurred at the Third Meeting were not of such a serious nature we are glad to say. The Amateur Hurdle Handicap was again accountable for one of them. Poor old Fusilier, who seems clean off at present, and is never at the best of times too careful a jumper, came down a nasty crack at the last hurdle giving Mr. Ballantyne, who was riding him, a spill which resulted in a sprained wrist or thumb, quite a minor detail these days!

The other accident of the afternoon came about in the race before, and it was fortunate that in such a large field there was not a still greater mess up, and that the results were not more serious, not only on account of the large number running but also owing to the fact that a fall on the flat is nearly always more serious than one over jumps. It is now, however, abundantly exemplified that to run a field of sixteen round the bend by the Ladies' Golf Course is a decidedly dangerous proceeding. The Stewards were, however, of opinion that as the Kidderpore Plate was a 7-furlong race the field would have strung out sufficiently by the time they got to the bend. This, however, was not the case, so that the bumping and crossing round this bend can be better imagined than described. In the scrimmage that ensued the second favourite Cyril came down with the result that Goldstamp, who was immediately behind fell on top of him, their respective riders, Watson and Murdiston, both getting heavy falls, and one of them had to be brought back in the ambulance. Each of them was reported to have broken his collar-bone, but we believe we are corrrect in saying that this mishap occurred to Watson alone. Cyril escaped scotfree and is entered again for next Saturday, but not so Goldstamp, who injured her shoulder and will not be running again for some little time. This mishap altered the whole aspect of the race, as many of the other horses were naturally interfered with, notably the favourite Devil's Limit, whom many think would have won had it not been for this general upset. As it was W. White cleverly extricated the outsider Pylara from the mêlée and won the race by two and a half lengths. "Everything comes to him who waits," and Pylara, who has now been on view at a considerable number of racing seasons in Calcutta has at last got home. The last accident of this sort which took place in Calcutta was three or four years ago, at the end of the season when Norton and O'Neill got to grief in a 5-furlong race at the hospital corner, and if our memory serves us rightly Mr. Paris was in this instance also the unfortunate owner of O'Neill's mount, which had a good show in the race.

This accident has decided the Stewards to divide the Oriental Plate into two handicaps as they did at the second meeting, although the number entered falls short of that entered for the Kidderpore Plate, there being twenty-five entered in the Oriental Plate as against twenty-eight in the Kidderpore Plate, but then again the distance is 5 furlongs as against 7 furlongs which makes a considerable difference. If the Kidderpore Plate had been split up there is little doubt there would have been several more horses running as several representatives were taken out of the larger stables partly owing to the increased risk and partly owing to their having other representatives running. We would suggest that it would be a wise policy if the Stewards sent a written warning to all jockeys about the rule that no rider may cross another till he is two lengths ahead of the horse on the inside of him. As a matter of fact this rule is one that is considerably winked at in practice, and is in our opinion much more at the root of last Saturday's accident than the actual overcrowding at the turn.

The entries for the Fourth Monsoon Meeting, though good in a way, are not altogether satisfactory to all concerned, in that the card itself is unsatisfactory by reason of its unevenness. Two bad races mar the best of programmes and this is what has taken place in next Saturday's card. Firstly the pony hurdle race has just managed to fill contrary to expectations. As a matter of fact with its six entries, most of them are mere padding and we shall probably see not more than a trio strip for this event, whereas either of two alternatives would have afforded a good race in its stead. If this race had been allowed to fall through and a new one had been remodelled with Rs. 500 to the winners instead of Rs. 750, the race might have attracted most of the runners in last week's Pony Amateur Hardle Race as well, and then we should have had quite a decent race. Or if the race had been struck out altogether then either another Amateur Horse Hurdle Race or Flat Race in its stead would have afforded a good field and an excellent race. Last year at the Fourth Meeting there was a Welter Handicap over 5 furlongs which brought out no less than twelve runners, and which was won by Pretender. With so many of this class here at present it seems a pity that they could not have been catered for at this meeting. This all the more so as the small pony class appears to be nearly moribund in Calcutta as the Maidan Plate, a 5-furlong flat race, has only seven entries, and is a race which attracts very little local interest, and which will do well to be placed first on the card in consequence. It would be well in future years to leave this class as padding for extra races when extra races are required. Rezia and Wal, both winners to date, are the best of this crowd.

The much travelled Wishart has returned again to Bangalore. He will next put in an appearance at Poona, whither he is betaking himself with a selection of his Bangalore string. Murdiston, the light weight jockey, is left behind in charge of the Hastings stables which include Warstripe, Mornine, Winklet and Goldstamp.

It was said that Nevermore, who ran so disappointingly in the Amateur Hurdle Race at the Second Meeting, was to be sent back to Bangalore. He has, however, been blistered and is to be sent to Darjeeling to the care of Mr. A. Price, who left for Darjeeling on Sunday, but is returning for Saturday's racing.

Hello has changed hands after all and is now the property of that well-known sportsman Mr. "Holmes," in whose name we find he is entered in the open hurdle race on Saturday next. This race, the Belvedere Plate, has produced nine entries, seven of which were entered last week, but of which only four went to the post, namely, Parole and the three which afforded such an excellent finish, Hoop Iron and the two half brothers Pope and Scotch Thistle, both black and both Lochiels. We ought with luck to see a good finish again this week, though we have not at the time of writing these notes seen the allotments of the handicapper. Hoop Iron now that he has again won, will have to go up to the region of 12st. 10lbs., so it is quite possible he may not run this week. Gleam, who won the Amateur Hurdle Handicap last Saturday, is also entered, but she is now meeting very different company to what she has hitherto been in.

The Oriental Plate has the large entry of twenty-five in which seventeen different interests are represented. Mr. Galstaun and Mr. J. D. Scott have three representatives apiece, the former having Springlock, Hande'lian and the once Viceroy's Cup favourite Pure Gold, while the latter has Sweet Sound, Honest Lady and Duplex II. Mr. Scott seems to make a speciality of the big 14-2 which can run either against horses or ponies.

The Entally Plate which is for horses that have not won a race of Rs. 50 or over since March 1904 has only a mediocre lot, though there are seventeen entered. Several "has beens" are among this lot, notably Fotheringay, Bundook, Defendant and Gentle Lady, though we are quite prepared to see the latter come out and win any day.

The big Pony Handicap has got a very smart lot of fourteen entered, which would be quite good class even for the cold weather, here Mr. J. D. Scott has in no less than five. It should be a race which will take some winning.

First entries for the Lucknow Autumn Meeting, which closed on the 15th instant, are published to-day: we also republish the entries up to date for the Army and Civil Service Cups.

Second entries for Poona Races also appear in this issue.

First entries for the Quetta Autumn Meeting are published to-day, and right good they are: second entries close on the 26th August.

Mr. Harry Goldspink returned to India last week and is now at Poona, where, doubtless, at the forthcoming meetings he will renew his acquaintance with his many Western India clients.

On Monday morning we observed a couple of sections of iron railings erected on the wall that is to surround the new Grand Stands on the Calcutta course. We trust the Executive do not intend to adopt this truly hideous pattern. A light, low balustrade, or better still pillars and chains, would answer the purpose quite as well and serve to set off the club enclosure; the iron work we saw placed in position will give the place the appearance of a jail or a slaughter-house yard, while being obviously quite out of keeping with the general elegance of the other extensions and improvements.

A rampaging, one-tusked elephant is doing much damage on the banks of the Dhansiri river in the Golaghat sub-division: a reward of Rs. 50 is offered for his destruction.

The late Mr. Sanderson's celebrated shikar elephant "Hilda," frequently referred to in his writings, has just died at Mysore, aged about eighty.

Of the three Birds of Paradise which the Committee of Management of the Zoological Garden have recently acquired at considerable trouble and expense, two (Twelve-wired Paradise bird) are exceptionally rare, and have never before been imported to India. They are exhibited, along with other species of Paradise birds, in the "Murshidabad House."

Three Indian chiefs from the reservations in British Columbia landed at Liverpool this month for the purpose of presenting a petition to King Edward to protect their game reserves, fearing that, if game continues to be killed at the present rate, the tribes will be in danger of starvation during the winter. The chiefs were all got up in Indian costume, with buffalo robes and eagles' feathers.

Two Europeans—at least we suppose them to be such—Messrs. Foster and Kennedy, employed in a Cawnpore firm, were out hare shooting last month when a dispute arose with some villagers who committed a violent assault on the sportsmen—the usual large mob of cowardly ruffians armed with lathis. The case has gone into Court and we trust the aggrieved parties will come out on top, though we have not much hope, judging by the way such cases usually end nowadays.

Big game in the open and in the terais of the Northern and Eastern Districts of Bengal must be having a lively time of it by being washed out of their haunts, just at the season when the young are making their debut; the grass knolls which usually afford secure enough asylum for lying in having been rendered untenable, the luckless beasts being forced on to the lower slopes of the hills. Deer, tiger, and leopard have been met with on hill roads and on some tea gardens, where we are glad to learn, so far as the former are concerned, strict injunctions against molesting them have been issued; as for the latter they are generally well able to look after themselves. The authorities in out-of-the-way sub-divisions need to be on the alert for the slaughter among defenceless creatures when crowded together on isolated high lands is, naturally, considerable. By last accounts, however, the waters were subsiding, but the abnormal rise has shown that game in the submerged districts is as plentiful as of yore.

A proposal has been set on foot to revive the North Punjab Fishing Club; details will be found in the letter which appears among our Correspondence to-day.

To Burma big game shooters the news of the withdrawal of the prohibition which has hitherto prevented the shooting of wild elephants, will be very welcome. It is said that the epidemic of anthrax among Government elephants, has, resulted in the abandonment of the Katha kheddahs.

An announcement regarding the products of the famous Bundrole Orchards appears among our small advertisements. We have tested the pears and are disposed to wax enthusiastic over them: we must confess we had no idea such excellent English fruit could be produced out here. Verb Sap—try them!

Athletic Notes.

THE Durham L. I. Boxing Tournament was a distinctly good show. Full details further on.

Colonel Goodwyn's Challenge Cup, offered for the best half-mile runner in the Devonshire Regiment, now stationed at Rangoon, was won this year by Corporal Lawless.

On the 14th instant an interesting ten-round boxing match was brought off at Trimulgherry between Lance-Corporal Kelly and Private Munday of the 13th Hussars. Kelly weighed in at 8 stone and Munday was a stone heavier; but a very close contest ensued, and after ten lively rounds the referee declared it a draw.

The South Indian Motor Union propose to hold reliability trials during the Xmas holidays, provided sufficient entries are received. The trials are open to all motorists, and they will take the form of a run from Mysore to Madras, divided into three stages. The first day's run will be from Mysore to Bangalore, 87 miles; the second day, from Bangalore to Katpadi, 130 miles; and the third day from Katpadi to Madras, about 80 miles

Mr. John Alexander Trant Bramston, whose death this month at the early age of twenty-six is recorded, will be remembered as one of the leading amateur golfers of a few years ago. The son of the Rev. John Trant Bramston, assistant master at Winchester College, he was educated at Winchester and Magdalen College, Oxford, where be graduated in 1904. As a golfer he showed great promise, and in 1900, when he was only nineteen years of age, he reached the semi-final round of the amateur championship at Sandwich, being then beaten by Mr. James Robb, the present holder of the amateur championship, by three holes up and one to play. He represented Oxford against Cambridge, at Sandwich, on four occasions. In his first year, 1900, he finished 12 up on Mr. H. G. Nevile, and Oxford gained a record victory of 69 holes to nothing. During the next three years Mr. Bramston played at the top of the Oxford team. In 1901 he lost to Mr. N. F. Hunter by two holes after leading nearly all the way ; but in 1902 he beat Mr. H. C. McDonell by eight holes and in 1903 he defeated Mr. E. B. Swatton by nine holes. In 1902 he played for England against Scotland in the experimental international match at Hoylake, and lost by five holes to Mr. Robb, who showed brilliant form. In the amateur championship, on the same course, he was defeated in the fourth round by the ultimate winner, Mr. Charles Hutchings. Mr. Bramston, who learnt most of his golf at Westward Ho won the Kashmir Cup} and other match trophies played for annually on those links, while, in 1902 and 1903, he secured the Hants and Isle of Wight championship. In 1902 he reached the semi-final of the Irish Open Championship at Portrush, and was only defeated, after a tie, by Mr. H. H. Hilton, who eventually won. Mr. Bramston went to the United States with the Oxford and Cambridge team in 1903, and accomplished some excellent performances, one of his best being the winning of the Homewood (Chicago) Country Clubs' Cup with a record score of 75. Unfortunately consumption subsequently caused the breakdown of his health, and he was seldom seen in competitions. He went to Mundesley Sanatorium and to the Continent, but the end came ere he had attained his twenty-seventh year.

The final game in the Trades Cup Football Tournament was played on the Dalhousie ground last Thursday when Mohan Bagan beat the Free School by two goals to nil.

Another very successful regatta was held at Naini Tal on the 11th instant. There was a large number of spectators and the event provided close and interesting racing. Rain fell during the afternoon, but it could not damp the ardour of the competitors. The opening event was the scratch fours for which three crews entered, an exciting struggle ending in a quarter length victory for Mr. Gould, Captain Marshall, Mr. Naylor and Mr. Milward steered by Mrs. Du Pre. The Ladies' Fours in which the spinsters met the married ladies came next and resulted in a win for the married ladies represented by Mrs. Mercer, Mrs. Weir, Mrs. Woodyat and Mrs. Garvie with Major Woodyat cox. The P. and O. Paddling race was run off in heats and in the final honours rested with the crew comprising the Misses Cruickshank, Captain Cruickshank and Messrs. A. and G. Cruickshank. The Scratch Pairs was won by Messrs. Muir and Coode, Mrs. Dawson cox, and the Waterman's race by Jemadar Deb Singh. A mixed Canoe race closed the proceeding, Mr. Naylor and Miss Tyndale winning by half a length.

The warming of the waters of the English Channel to their summer level of temperature has elicited the usual crop of attempts to cross to France without utilising the services of the Calais mail-boats. So long as it is made under reasonably natural conditions, the attempt to swim across the Channel is a fair and sportsmanlike undertaking, and may fairly claim the interest of all who concern themselves with outdoor pastime and sport. The varying power of the tides, which carry the swimmer in a succession of zig-zags, adds an element of that "glorious uncertainty" which is the essence of most real sports, and make it impossible for the feat to be achieved by unaided mechanical endurance. There is little, however, to be said in favour of the attempt of a man to nurse himself across the Channel by means of a fleet of tugs and a panoply of eccentric feeding bottles, such as have been employed in recent summers by one or two of the aspirants to the honours of Captain Webb. Even if successful in its aim this would be no more swimming across the Channel than to be hoisted by a regiment of guides to the top of the Wetterhorn or Monte Rosa can truly be called mountaineering.

"What's bred in the bone," etc., is evidently still a truism in connection with punting. Since 1891, one or other of the Brothers Haines have won the Professional Championship no fewer than thirteen times. The victory of "Bill" at Maidenhead, as noticed in our London Sporting letter, was very easily attained, and—for the first time—separate rypecks were used. His runner-up, H. George (Oxford), had therefore no possible grievance this time.

The Bechtler Cup Hockey Tournament begins at Mussoorie on the 2nd proximo.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—There has been little of interest this week in the sporting world. The Royal Scots on Wednesday played and won their twelfth game in the Harwood League beating the Y. M. C. A. by a goal to nil after a tough fight. They now stand with 24 points to their credit and are pretty certain to win the League, in fact they can hardly lose it in any event. The Parel Gymkhana beat the Bombay Gymkhana by a goal to nil on Friday and thoroughly deserved the win for the Gymkhana are far too slack.

The Gymkhana mud sports on Wednesday were a little more lively than usual owing to the introduction of mounted single sticks. Eight teams competed, the idea being to knock off the opponents cockades. The first round saw the Light Horse Pony Troop beat the Royal Scots, the Light Horse No. 1 Team beat the 104th Rifles, the 113th beat "The Three Musketnrs" and "The Degenerates" beat the Light Horse No. 2 Team. In the second round the Light Horse No. 1 Team and the 113th Infantry was knocked out and in the final the Light Horse Pony Troop was victorious after a keen fight with "the Degenerates." The Deck Quoits Stakes was won by Mrs. Royd and Mr. L. Barraclough, Mrs. Greenfield and Captain Mackie being second and Mrs. Hogge and Mr. Webb third. The Parisian Stakes provided plenty of fun, especially the parade before the judge, Mr. Greenfield, the event being won by Mrs. Leiton and Captain Mackie. In the Pony Scurry Handicap Mr. G. D. Rice's Jack First ridden by Mr. Palmer came in an easy first with Mr. Barraclough and Mr. Stewart coming in close together. Mr. Yates' Ginger ridden by Mr. Griffin won the Horse Scurry, Captain Mackie being second and Mr. F. R. Hill third.

The only interesting cricket match of the week has been a two days' contest between the Poona Volunteers and the Parsee Gymkhana. Play started on Thursday on a heavy wicket, the visitors going in first and making a very poor show indeed. Captain Rutter put up 34 in the second innings, but this was the only respectable score of the Poona team and the Parsees won early next morning by nine wickets and three runs.

The following five teams have entered for the Bombay Gymkhana Rugby Tournament : The Welsh Regiment. Quetta, South Wales Borderers, Karachi, 10th Hussars, Y.M.C.A. and Bombay Gymkhana.

The St. Joseph's boys, Darjeeling, have again demonstrated their superiority at Hockey by carrying off for the third year the Eroom Challenge Cup. In the final they beat the R. G. A. by 12 goals to 1.

Essex beat Leicester by 5 wickets.
Kent beat Gloucester by 10 wickets.
Northampton beat Derbyshire by an innings and 85 runs.
Kent beat Somerset by 354 runs.
Lancashire beat Surrey by 6 wickets.
Yorkshire beat Warwick by an innings and 90 runs.
Notts beat Middlesex by 5 wickets.
Hampshire beat Worcester by 131 runs.
The West Indians beat Northampton by 155 runs.
The matches Yorkshire vs Middlesex, Sussex vs. Lancashire, Notts vs West Indians were drawn.

The final game in the football tournament for the United Cup was played on the Sova Bazar ground on the 20th instant, when the Northumberland Fusiliers beat the Y.M.C.A. by 4 goals to nil.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 3rd August 1906.

THAT the appearance of the town undergoes a more marked change during the week preceding Goodwood than during any other seven days out of the three hundred and sixty-five, is a statement which I imagine few will contest, and this year has been no exception to the rule, despite the fact that each year sees more people leaving town earlier in the season. The railway termini are now the only unpleasantly crowded places—or rather the only places crowded at all. The usual noble army of trippers invades Piccadilly, Bond Street, and Regent Street, and considerably more French, German, and American—especially this last—are now heard than one's mother tongue. Judging from scraps of dialogue I overhear, the fact that we are not enveloped in a yellow fog, and that the sun occasionally shines in London in August, is a cause for much wonderment, and self-congratulation to some of these hardy explorers.

A number of important alterations in the railway time tables show that the good progress made during the last few years will be maintained. The Great Western Company carries off the honours of the season for improved and accelerated service. Last month the direct line to Exeter was brought into use for express traffic, and this month sees the opening of the Fishguard Service to Ireland. The Beaconsfield line, which at present reduces the distance to Oxford considerably—though unhappily not the fares—will, when finished, be the shortest route from London to Birmingham. As regards the West of England and South of Ireland the Great Western need fear no rival. Notwithstanding the opening of the short cut to Exeter, the service on the old Great Western road has been improved, and at the present time no fewer than five trains run over the London-Bristol stretch at about fifty-nine miles an hour. Both in time and distance the Fishguard route to the South of Ireland will be shorter than any other. Fast turbine steamers have been built for the crossing, and a morning and evening service, taking passengers between London and Cork in about thirteen hours, will also give excellent connection with many other places on both sides of the Channel. Although the Fishguard harbour was built primarily for the Irish traffic, hopes are indulged that some day it may be used for ocean liners as well.

The London North-Western is running its usual extra summer tourist trains, and has greatly improved its cross-country work between Yorkshire and Lancashire, and Cardiff and Bristol. Through carriages now run between Leeds and Torquay by the Severn Tunnel. The Midland Company, as usual, duplicates its Scotch services, and with one of its up expresses has resumed the long distance run from Leeds to St. Pancras without a stop, doing the whole journey from Carlisle to London in just over six hours. A weekly fast excursion to Scotland is a new venture. The Great Eastern Company has just instituted dining-cars on the trains to Hunstanton ; their first appearance on the Cambridge line. As the Brighton Company has acquired some engines which are larger and more powerful than their service at present requires, one hopes that when the widenings of the line are complete, some trains that are at least second-rate may be looked for. Though part of the enlarged Victoria station is now in use, there is still much to be done, both in London and down the line. For passengers by the suburban trains the new arrangements can hardly be as convenient as the old, as they must now leave the station almost half way down Buckingham Palace Road. The South-Eastern remains the only considerable British railway on which no provision whatever is made for meals in the trains, the possibility of getting a good meal on the boat train, would often be particularly acceptable.

The death of Mr. Toole removes the last link with the greater actors of the past. He was an established favourite with London playgoers when most of the prominent actors of the present day were at school. For forty years he was pre-eminent in his special line—broad comedy, with pathos as one of its chief elements—and when he retired from the stage he left no successor, for the gifts with which he held his public are given to but few. Like many other actors Mr. Toole began life in a "business house," but he was an actor born, and when little more than twenty, acted as an amateur at a benefit performance at the Haymarket, with such marked success that he then and there took to the boards as a profession. His first engagement was in Dublin, he then went a short tour in the provinces, returning to London, which he never left again for any length of time, in less than two years. He began at the St. James's in 1854, then went to the Lyceum for a short time, and thence passed to the position of leading comedian at the new Adelphi, on its opening by Webster. For years he delighted audiences at the Adelphi and Gaiety with occasional tours in the country, and one in America, and one in the country, until 1879, when he undertook management on his own account at the Folly, which he re-named "Toole's Theatre." The house remained one of the most popular in London up to its demolition in 1895. Mr. Toole then meditated building for himself, but private griefs on the death of his son and his daughter, in rapid succession, shook him greatly; incipient paralysis set in, and for many years before the end he lived at Brighton a confirmed invalid.

Of the great number of characters that Mr. Toole created—a mere list would be lengthy—not one survives to the present, and not one of them would command an audience now. His power was in himself, not in his materials which were flimsy enough. Of the six London theatres in which he delighted crowded audiences not one remains. The St. James's and the Lyceum are not his St. James's and Lyceum: the Queen's, the Gaiety, and the Globe are gone; while the theatre to which he gave his name was demolished to make way for the extension of Charing Cross Hospital.

The leading events of the Covent Garden opera season have been the production of Massenet's "Le Jongleur de Notre Dame," and the revival of Gluck's "Armide." It is to be hoped that the first—which is a unique modern example of the mediæval play—will be reproduced next year. "Armide," beautifully mounted and interpreted, proved even a greater success than was expected, and to this result the fine corps de ballet from Brussels contributed in no small degree. The revival of the ballet has been an important feature of the season. The two German additions to the repertoire cannot justly be said to be successes, indeed one of them was not attempted a second time; and the other "Der Barbier von Bagdad" is only suited for production at a smaller house. Covent Garden becomes more cosmopolitan; as instead of being exclusively devoted to opera sung in Italian, as was the case a few years ago, French and German operas are now heard in the language in which they were written.

The second week of English opera by the Moody-Manners Company at the Lyric is partly made up of repetitions of works given last week, but with various changes in the cast. On Wednesday evening "Tannhaüser" was given before a crowded house, which was not slow to record its appreciation of an excellent performance. In a letter to the press, Mr. Charles Manners suggests the formation of a union, to be called the "National English Opera Union," the object of which would be the promotion in every possible way, of the love of English opera. To this end Mr. Manners makes most generous offers of help.

Despite the dog-days "The Girl Behind the Counter" attracted a full house when, on Monday night, she made her one hundredth appearance at Wyndham's. Some changes have been made in the cast—Mr. Hayden Coffin still woos ardently the girl behind the counter, in the person of Miss Isabel Jay—there are one or two new songs, and several up-to-date topical allusions. Altogether the piece went gaily, and a lengthy career seems to be before it. Nor did the weather affect the audience at the St. James's on Wednesday evening when "His House in Order" reached its two hundredth performance. There have been no changes in the original cast, and in several respects the play goes better than at first. Miss Irene Vanbrugh and Mr. Alexander are as effective as on the first night, and Mr. Nigel Playfair's personation of the all-important Major is now one of the best performances in the piece. Thursday next will see the production of the Egyptian light opera "Amasis," at the New, and after that the next event of interest will be on 1st September when Miss Ellen Terry appears in Mr. Tree's revival of "The Winter's Tale," at His Majesty's.

The wrestling craze has broken out anew. On Monday M. de Rougemont—whose name was on everybody's lips not so many years ago, in consequence of some astounding adventures which he published—gave an amusing display with a turtle, in the waters of the Hippodrome. Among the adventures narrated in his book few created more incredulity than his boast of being able to ride on the back of a swimming turtle, and his present performance is undertaken with the object of making his assertion good. That the art of turtle-riding is still in its infancy was amply demonstrated on Monday. de Rougemont, seizing the turtle—which appeared to have no hankering after the water— by the scruff of its neck, so to speak, thrust it in, and immediately followed it into the water. Whether his subsequent performance may fairly be described as riding the turtle, is an open question. It is true, that sometimes he succeeded in seating himself on the turtle's back, but this the turtle promptly resented, and in a moment de Rougemont was unseated, and his steed made off for the other side. De Rougemont then warily bided his time, and remounted, only for another exhibition of turning turtle to be given, with the same result. Again de Rougemont mounted, and as he appeared to be riding with more ease, though all but his head and shoulders were under water, the curtain fell. Of the other turns at the Hippodrome, Buddha's Blackboard is an extremely clever exhibition of mysterious writing, and the evolutions of a troupe of lady cyclists, which includes some uncommonly handsome and graceful girls, are strange and beautiful.

The decision of the Government to abandon the military defence of the Scilly Isles has created considerable feeling among the islanders. During the last five or six years quarter of a million has been spent on the fortifications, which from time to time have been surveyed and approved by such well-known experts as Generals Sir Evelyn Wood and Sir Frederick Forestier-Walker. One part of the work is actually not quite finished; but the whole thing is to be swept away—guns, look-outs, electric plant for searchlights, etc.—so, it is reported, the recommendation of another expert. As the Scillies command the entrance to the two Channels, they are declared to be of considerable importance from a naval point of view. The roadsteads afford good shelter and anchorage; but skilful and careful navigation is necessary. During the naval manœuvres a few years ago, a certain Admiral performed what was considered a daring deed by taking his fleet into the midst of the Scilly group in a fog.

The fire in the G. P. O. letter box in Cranbourne Street on Sunday night is a matter of most serious importance to the public generally, if the report be well founded that among the half burned letters a small bottle was found which had evidently contained a preparation of liquid phosphorus, which would ignite the moment the bottle was uncorked. The police are said to have a theory that some one, fearing, for reasons of his own, the safe arrival of one or more of the letters, took this way of destroying them. Flames were seen issuing from the letter box by a chance passer-by, and the fire brigade were called up. A jet of water was directed into the box, and the fire was soon extinguished, but not before all the letters had been either destroyed or damaged. Unfortunately they were unusually numerous as there is no Sunday collection from this box. Many of the letters contained money; one had £55 in notes enclosed. It is the first "accident" of the kind that has happened, and the only wonder is that with our public letter boxes, practically at the mercy of every little street urchin who can possess himself of a match, or of any mischievous person of the type that places obstructions on the railway lines, it has not occurred before. In this case the remains of the letters are to be examined carefully by the police before being delivered to the addressees in the hope of finding some incriminating correspondence.

The Royal Commission inquiring into the duties and methods of the police has adjourned until October. The most important feature of the proceedings so far has been the failure of those injured innocents, the D'Angely couple, to put in an appearance. Considering the nature of some of the evidence they are hardly likely to accept the Chairman's permission to attend and give evidence at any future sittings of the Commission if they are so disposed.

The coming L. C. C. election already casts its shadow over most of the proceedings of the Council which literally at the eleventh hour has decided to lay up the steam boats for the winter. An amendment calling upon the River Committee to consider the question of discontinuing the service altogether was, it is almost unnecessary to say, defeated, but the Chairman of the Committee went so far as to admit the failure of the service, and the officials are to confer as to the desirability of continuing the service for another summer. The Chairman's confession of failure scarcely bears out a statement lately made by Lord Monkswell, ex-Chairman, L.C.C., to the effect that the boats were rapidly becoming more and more popular. It is true he then proceeded to explain that what he meant was that next year a loss of only £50,000 was anticipated. The Chairman of the Finance Committee solemnly announced that no increase in the Council's rate would be made for the next half-year. As this announcement is a matter of course for the half-year preceding an election it will evoke but scant gratitude from the ratepayers, who will scarcely be gratified to hear that part of the heavy education rate is to be expended on teaching Erse and Esperanto to such pupils as may desire to acquire these noble languages. That the pupils should first learn to know good English from bad, and to speak and write their own language with something like accuracy, is of course a detail below the notice of the gentlemen of the L. C. C.—indeed if rumour may be trusted some of the councillors themselves would be all the better for giving a little attention to this branch of education.

The authorities of the town of Nordhausen have been ignominiously worsted in a contest with the ladies of the place. With true German grandmotherliness they decided that dresses must be trainless, and that ladies who defy the regulation must be fined. Result—trains have become universal in Nordhausen.

The weather prophets, who at the beginning of the year prophesied all manner of evil of the coming twelve months, have so far seen their predictions falsified. 1906 has, up to the present, broken the record, and given us 240 more hours of sunshine than by the law of averages we were entitled to. Yesterday the thermometer marked 83 in the shade, the highest shade temperature recorded this summer, and in the evening the old dictum that "when the thermometer reachers 80 in the shade thunder almost invariably follows" was amply fulfilled. The storm was remarkable for the suddeness with which it broke for the hurricane, which only lasted a few moments, but was usually violent, and for the tropical rain which fell literally "in sheets," while the thunders and lightning were incessant.

The report of the Committee dealing with London cabs and omnibuses has been laid before Parliament, and will shortly be circulated. The Committee had three problems to consider: the first dealing with horse cabs, the second with public motor vehicles, and the third with the taxameter and the scale of fares. The most sweeping recommendation of the Committee are the abolition of privileged cabs—the railways terminus cabs—and the adoption of a system of the payment of one penny by each cab entering a station yard; and the introduction of the taxameter; and of short cheap fares, which have been an immense advantage all round on the Continent. The Committee recommend that for horse cabs the fare should be sixpence for the first half mile, and sixpence per mile afterwards; and few motor cabs eight pence for the first half mile, and eightpence per mile afterwards. They are in favour of the retention of the existing four-mile radius with some slight modifications; and they consider that the taxameter should be introduced for both horse and motor vehicles. The Committee, it is satisfactory to note, strongly sympathise with many of the objections urged against the motor 'bus, and declare that many of those on the streets at the present time involve a distinct infringement of private rights. They recommend that "heavy traffic, including motor 'buses, should be confined to main roads, and not be allowed to run hither and thither, invading privacy wherever it goes." It is to be feared that there is little hope of the recommendation being carried into effect.

Up to the present cabmen have strenuously opposed the suggestion of sixpenny fares, but the choice before them seems to lie between accepting some such system, as swelling the ranks of the unemployed. Sixpenny fares have undoubtedly brought fresh prosperity to the trade in foreign capitals, and in London there are thousands of people who would not in the least mind paying sixpence for a short distance in a cab, but will not pay a shilling. The introduction of the taxameter would probably lead to the increased use of cabs by women, who at present have a very vague idea of the fare they ought justly to pay, and almost invariably consider that they have been overcharged.

It is said that the Commission upon the South African War Stores will issue its report in the course of a few days, and that while sharp condemnation is passed upon certain contractors and officials, Colonel H. G. Morgan—apart from his brother's action, is held to have performed his duties honourably.

The King's inspection of the disbanded 3rd battalion of the Scots Guards at Buckingham Palace, and the speech he addressed to them at its close, have given the warmest satisfaction. The way in which His Majesty disassociated himself from the action of his Government was particularly happy.

The prospect of floating the Montagu does not become more hopeful. It is now thought probable that she will not be ready for the attempt to be made on the 5th as was intended, and it is reported that considerable further damage has been discovered by the divers. A heavy ground swell has been breaking over her lately.

The Government have undertaken to make an inquiry into the growth of the collections in the National Gallery, the National Portrait Gallery and the Tate Gallery; and of the spaces available for any extensions of the galleries that may be required. It is important that the space now vacant behind the Tate Gallery should be reserved for the future extension of the building.

The movements in favour of school rifle clubs, and of universal military training, are likely to receive an impetus from the "Boys' Bisley," which through the liberality of Lord Cheylesmare, was opened on Monday. The boys attending the camp belong to secondary schools which do not possess a uniformed cadet corps. Military discipline is maintained throughout the camp; the instructors are sixteen non-coms of the Brigade of Guards, and Colonel Horace Ricardo is in command. The keenness of the boys is said to be most gratifying to everybody coucerned, with the exception of the instructors, who are having a hard time of it, their hours of relaxation being broken in upon by the boys, who not satisfied with eight hours of duty a day insist upon special and extra instruction, especially in the mechanism and care of rifles.

About a month ago an appeal was published from Lady Minto on behalf of an association to provide skilled nurses throughout Northern India, and now a first list is published of subscriptions obtained in India. It can hardly he doubted that the appeal will meet—as it most assuredly deserves—with a generous response in England.

YARNS OF AN OLD FOGEY.

A NARROW SHAVE.

MANY years ago, I think it was in 1889, anyhow just after the late Duke of Clarence's visit to India, I had to demarcate the boundary between Travancore and Tinnevelly. This ran along the watershed, which again ran along the summit of the Western Ghauts ranging from 8,000 feet, which I think is the height of Angustia Malai, the highest point, to 500 or so where Ashamboo Pass crosses the Range. Most of the work was through heavy evergreen forests, but occasionally we came upon more or less extensive patches of splendid grass country with grass a foot to two and a half feet high and riddled with tracks of bison, sambhur and elephant. I frequently, too, came upon woodcock, but as I was after bigger game I never loosed off at them. The whole of the upper ranges are uninhabited; half way down, on the Travancore side, there were and are numerous tea and coffee estates, and the forests have been much cut over for temporary cultivation by "Mullai arasars" (Kings of the hills). These are a peculiarly wild tribe, and said to be closely allied to the Vedas of Ceylon. In the olden days they used, almost invariably, to build their huts up in high trees fairly close together, with bamboo ladders up to them. This was done chiefly to protect them from wild elephants, but also against the Tevar (robber) tribes of Tinnevelly and from the ravages of the low country people of Travancore. Even in my time they had not quite given up the habit, and I came upon at least two such congeries of arboreal abodes.

I remember in 1887 or 1888 a Dr. Schmidt of Leipsic University came up to the hills and stopped quite a long time with me. I had received orders to give him all possible assistance and I generally did him as well as I could. One day we walked down from Kannikittiadi Forest Bungalow, about 2,500 feet in the hills, to the nearest village of these people. As usual all bolted except the men who were old friends of mine and who had been with me on several jaunts after bison and other game. After great persuasion we induced the women to turn out too and my old German friend, an ethnologist of world wide repute, proceeded to produce all sorts of weird instruments and take measurements, putting his finger in their mouths to count their teeth, etc., etc I never saw people in such abject terror, all the soothing I could do was no good. In time the Doctor had finished and we went back. At dinner he told me he would like some further measurements, so we went down to the village again next morning, but my friends, the Karnis (another name for them), had vanished like last year's snow, not only from this village but from two others near by, nor did they return till they were perfectly certain that Herr Doctor had left the hills. They were very keen shikaris in a way and capital beaters, but had no use for bison at all, probably because they did not eat the meat, being caste men of sorts.

However to return to my story. I had some difficulty in getting coolies at first, as they have a dread of the high evergreen forests on account of leeches, flies, and last but not least devils. However I raised 30 and started from Papanasum (the washing away of sins) on the Tamburpurni river, one of the loveliest spots in India. After a tremendous climb we got to Valliar at 6 P.M. and camped. I had a small field officer's tent with me and gave my men the outer fly, contenting myself with the inner. My idea was to keep off the dew, which was very heavy at this elevation in April and May, the latter being the month of my trip. We had hardly been camped an hour however when a tremendous thunder shower came down which developed into a regular monsoon downpour for three hours or so. I was all right, but my 30 coolies had a poor time of it, and, as far as I could make out, sat in a ring round a fire, which they had lit under my outer fly, throughout the night. However, next morning they seemed cheery enough and we started off for our objective, Velatapil in Tamil or the Strathmore patnas, as known to planters. Three miles up and down, mostly up, brought us out on to a magnificent expanse of undulating grass downs interspersed with pretty clumps of "shola" and lots of water. My two gun men and myself immediately spread ourselves out to look for tracks while the main body went direct to the camp we hoped to find standing, one to which the Duke of Clarence was to have been brought for bison shooting, but at the last moment the plans were changed, and he went to the jungles near Ariankow instead, personally conducted, if I remember right, by Messrs. Fergusson and Knight, then, as now I hope, well known throughout Travancore. Our search for tracks was very disappointing, they were there right enough, but of all ages except the right one. The flies called "cadavai ee" (tiger fly) in Tamil were simply damnable, gad flies of the largest and the most persistent type, their numbers probably accounted for the disappearance of the bison. So we skirted round the edges of the grass and then made for camp which we found cosily built in a sheltered nook of the grass lands, on the opposite end to that we had entered from the forest. The whole camp was a triumph of Karni art, built entirely of irukuli sticks and leaves, and would have accommodated at least 100. I naturally bagged the hut meant for the Prince, and we all made ourselves comfortable for a long stay. I had no servant with me, properly so-called, but my two gun men, Tevars from a village near Papanasum, did all the cooking I wanted. My stores consisted of much bread, dried into rusks, army rations, Bologna sausage, sardines, rice, marmalade and cocoa and milk.

The next six days were taken up with work and nowhere did we come across a single fresh bison track. The rain was fairly regular, a heavy shower every evening and the mist very heavy. The grass had been burnt off in large patches in places and as young grass was coming up luxuriantly I daily expected to come across fresh tracks, and at last I did, the tracks of eight, with one splendid bull. Unfortunately this was late in the afternoon so I left them till next morning, making certain that they would come out into the grass again at night, when I could pick up their fresh tracks. I had a bad night, spending most of it in anxious expectation of the dawn, at the first glimmering of which I got up and found an impenetrable mist all over the country. While one of my men was boiling hot water for my cocoa I thought, thick though the mist was, that I would take a short stroll round and prospect for tracks. I had not gone 100 yards when I came upon warm droppings. I stood still peering around in the mist, which occasionally was lifted very slightly with an extra strong puff of wind, but not a sound. I crept along (barefooted) in the tracks when I came upon more droppings and froth, with the bubbles still bursting. Again I stood and listened, still not a sound, when suddenly with wild snorts away dashed the herd, which must have been within 20 yards of me, and listening too. The wind was all right, but they must somehow have got a whiff of me. After thundering along for a very short distance all was still again.

Knowing the geography of the country as I did, I knew they were still on the grass, so I followed up the tracks rapidly for about 200 yards and then stood and listened. Just for a moment the mist slightly cleared and then lifted, and there on the ridge of a small hill above me stood the whole herd, 15 cows and a magnificent bull. By the greatest good luck there were several fairly large boulders scattered about in the grass all round where I stood, so simultaneously with the lifting of the mist I simply dropped on the grass and pretended, and successfully too, that I was a boulder. The distance was a little too far for a certain shot and I waited patiently crumpled up as much as I could while they all stood at gaze, the most magnificent spectacle I have ever seen or shall ever see I suppose. Presently the old bull's head dropped and he proceeded to graze, only one cow was really very suspicious. She was looking dead at me, raising and lowering her head and peering hard at me in the most human manner. I shut my eyes (by the way always do this if any animal is looking at you suspiciously but can't make you out, it is the glint of eyes that gives away sooner than anything I know) The wind was blowing strongly from the sea and the mist appeared to have lifted for good, when suddenly up came another drift of thick mist, the boulder uncoiled itself and advanced at a double when puff! the mist was gone again and there we were looking at each other without more than 50 yards intervening. I immediately covered the old bull, who unfortunately was half turned away, and fired. The loud thud of the bullet told me of a hit and away dashed the herd into the jungle, going first down a steep ravine. They were all so jumbled together that I dare not risk another shot for fear of hitting a cow.

I must digress a bit to explain what followed. Narayana Tevar, my pet gun bearer, had said to me the night before, "Sir, I have been out with you often, but I have only seen dead bison. I have never seen an alive one and would like to very much." "Very well," I replied, "to-morrow I am crrtain to get a shot. When you hear it follow me up sharp and I will show you one if possible unless I kill at the first shot." A short and uninteresting conversation, but one which nearly cost me my life and lost me a magnificent bull. I know one has always a tendency to exaggerate the lost, be it fish, stag, bison, or elephant, but I had exceptional opportunities of judging this bull, and am convinced he would have run Ditmars' record Wynaad bull very close indeed.

Well then, at my shot which took place within 300 yards or so of camp, up came my friend Narayana Tevar and noiselessly we continued to track the herd till we got to the bottom of the ravine and there was a huge patch of blood, bright red and frothy, showing that I had made a lung shot. The bull had absolutely refused the hill and had skirted the ravine, going along a regular bison and elephant track. I followed cautiously, as the jungle was very thick, and within 40 yards came upon him standing stern on to me, with his head down, very sick indeed Then, oh fool that I was! Instead of raking him then and there I thought he was practically a dead bull and I turned and beckoned to Narayana to come and look. He, in his eagerness, came but too fast, tripped over a creeper or stump, fell heavily, and away dashed the bull down the ravine, before I could possibly get a shot.

I cursed a bit, but seeing the amount of blood which was all over the place I determined to send back to camp for my cocoa and toast and more coolies and let the bull die, or lie down and stiffen a bit. This I did, and after half an hour continued the track with Narayana, very contrite, and three or four low caste coolies, jubilant and expectant. Three times in the next mile did we come up on him lying down, but in such thick stuff that I could do nothing Why he did not fight, before he eventually did, I cannot understand. At least once he could have had us badly. The blood track was not so clear now and he was jinking about all over the place, and at last steadily and slowly went up a pass (made by elephants and bison) over a low ridge of hills. The top was very rocky and covered with low scrub, with a few stunted trees here and there. Here we lost his tracks for a bit.

I made a cast in one direction, sending my men on the opposite side. I could have sworn, and now swear, that I was going through stuff which would not hide a sambur, but it hid my friend all right. I must have absolutely walked up to him, all I know is that I saw and felt, simultaneously almost, what looked like a huge rock coming at me, his left horn got well under my left thigh, which was in advance; his frontal bone caught me full on the thigh and his right horn, I take it, must have been outside my left thigh, and so he tossed me, my rifle flying off, God knows where. I remember, when I came down, looking over my shoulder to see if he was coming back, and it was with a regular sob of relief I saw his great stern disappear over the low hills to my left. Well, I was badly shaken and hurt, but managed to limp along after him for another half mile, over very stony, rocky country; the blood track had almost ceased and to cap my bad luck, or rather bad management, a lot of fresh tracks crossed and re-crossed my bull's and I had to give it up. It was a very sick and sorry individual who staggered into camp that day. At night down came the usual downpour of rain which extinguished all hopes.

Next day I was so stiff and sore and swollen that I could hardly stand, much less walk. However, I sent out all my men, in the hopes of possibly finding him dead, to scour the country beyond where we left his tracks, but had no luck. On the third day, after copious lubrications of Elliman's, I went out on the grass in the morning and bagged a very fair bull, which is another story, and then had to go down, the rain was too heavy for work, and although it had driven away the flies and brought the bison, it had also produced innumerable leeches which were almost as bad a nuisance as the flies, or even worse, as leech bites often produce the most virulent ulcers, especially on poor blooded coolies, which fly bites never do. And so ended my narrow shave, the nearest thing I have ever had in my life and I don't want any nearer. For six weeks after my leg, from my fork to my knees, was a picture composed of every conceivable colour and shade.

BURMAH.

THE BREAK O' THE BAR.

I HAD heard of the fishing in Lake Koronis, in my home in the South, three years before the time of this story, and the abundance and size of its black bass had justified all my expectations. It was here, too, that I had met on my first trip the men whom I have since learned to know as the most conscientious sportsmen I had ever accompanied with on a fishing trip. There was Old Man Sherman: profane, kindhearted, ready to take tough luck with the rest of us, and good-natured except when the bass refused to take the bait; Uncle John Carson, who always had a string of children in tow the moment he was ashore, and who was loved by every youngster in the summer colony; jolly Dad Richards, whose humour was as natural as the breath of the southern wind and whose songs won his way into every heart; and, best of all, Con Cormack, the Isaak Walton of the lake, with a fund of information on fish and fishing always at his tongue's end. Cormack came up from St. Louis with Carson each year as a boatman, and he fished and studied fish with a vigour and persistence that made him a complete information bureau to the party.

The earlier days of the present season had given promise of great things for us. Old Man Sherman had arrived as soon as the law would allow the fish to be taken, and the stories he told us of sport he had found and big fish he had caught made our fingers itch for the familiar tug at the line we had come far to feel. Carson and Cormack, who knew every haunt of the bass in the Minnesota lakes, told equally thrilling stories of splendid struggles and large catches, and when we arrived later in the season we had great expectations of sport.

But for some reason the big beauties had ceased to bite. Almost in a day they disappeared as completely as if they had deserted the like. As day after day passed, in which we cast faithfully in every familiar rush bed and tried many new spots, with nothing but failure to report, we grew more disgruntled until the very atmosphere about us was pregnant with disappointment and disgust. All the delights of wooded islands and stony points reaching their arms far out into the lake, of clear water and sandy beach, of shady nooks where springs poured their cool water into the lake and the air was heavy with the odor of the woods, counted for nothing with us. Koronis had lost its charm. When a man has travelled seven hundred miles to try his chances with the gamiest fish in the northern waters, there is nothing that charms but the click of the reel and the sharp tug that tells that the struggle is on, and that all the skill and prowess of the fisherman is pitted against the wariest denizen of the inland lake. The most charming spot to him is the rush bed that shows the feeding ground of the bass, and the cheeriest sound to his ear is the occasional splash, followed by the quick flash of one of these beauties as it leaps from the water in pursuit of its prey. Pike had been biting nicely and there were plenty of other fish ready to take the bait, but the string caught by still fishing offered small temptation to the enthusiast of the casting rod.

I had come in early after a day of failure and waited on the verandah of Farview Inn to compare notes with the fishing parties as they straggled up and disgustedly dropped their tackle on the porch. I had been as successful as any of them. Old Man Sherman was first to arrive, and as he climbed the stairs from the dock he commented on his ill-luck in eruptions of profanity that were of a highly volcanic character. He had been gone since sunrise and had nothing to show for his day's effort.

"Hang the fishing!" he sputtered as he dropped into a verandah chair. "I've cast in every rush bed from Sanborn Bay to Eagle Point and I've hardly got a rise. It beats me where the fish have gone to."

I had nothing to offer in solution of the problem and was too disgusted to do more than grunt a reply. I had covered the same course and had failed. The old man lighted his cigar and we waited the other arrivals in silence. In a little while Dad Richards appeared at the top of the stairway lugging a string of pike and crappies. He had given up casting early in the day and had taken to deep water. At the sight of the fish Old Man Sherman went up into the air.

"Got a lady's string, hub!" He fairly snorted the words as Dad deposited the fish on the grass in front of the hotel. "Any old woman could catch them."

"Maybe she could, but when a fellow has to sell pills for a living for his family he can't spend a whole summer hunting stray bass. Short vacations keep a fellow from getting too particular as to the quality of his fishing. If I can't get bass I'll take bullheads." Dad was a salesman for a Minneapolis drug house and had to catch his sport between trips that took him out to Fargo over two lines of road.

"Well, I don't fish from anchor if I don't get another strike this season. Darn me if I will!" and the old man stamped upstairs to his room to get ready for supper. In a few minutes Carson's boat came in sight around Cedar Point and I went down to the dock to learn his luck. He showed me one lone four-pounder as the result of his day's fishing.

As we gathered outside after supper the disappearance of the bass was our one theme. We were all sore on our luck and nothing appealed to us as a substitute for the sport we loved. When one has formed the bass fishing habit he begins to feel the longing as soon as the first warm wind comes up from the South; and as the open season draws near this feeling grows into a passion that nothing will satisfy but the music of the reel. It had seized upon us with a force that kept us at high pressure every moment that we were on the fishing grounds. Was it any wonder, then, that we were sore? We knew that the bass would bite if we could find them, but where were they?

As Cormack came out from the dining room we turned toward him. He had fished in the northern lakes for ten years and his knowledge of the habits of the fish would enable him to solve the problem if it could be solved. He lighted his pipe and walked out into the evening glow.

"Well, Con, where's the fish?" I voiced the question of the crowd.

He smoked on in silence for some minutes. Out on the lake the moon was rising over Eagle Point, making a shimmering pathway of silver on the long stretch of water. The dark foreground of Koronis Island took on varied tints of green and brown and silver, which brought into darker relief the water in the shadow of its bluffy banks and gave a bold variety to the effect of lake and shore in the picture. It was one of those scenes that only the moonlight can produce and such beauty is indelibly imprinted on the memory. Out to the west Rush Island lay a dark stretch in the silvery water, and still beyond, in the evening haze, Island Number Three mutely told its story of the rare sport we had found along its shores. Cormack seemed absorbed in contemplation of its beauty, and as I asked the question he answered without losing one of the changes in the scene which the rising moon was producing.

"Four years ago we went up against this kind of a proposition on Pelican Lake. Mr. Carson will remember it, and I'll bet my summer's wages that the bass have done the same thing here. See that streak o' light from Cedar Point to the island? That's shallow water, and there's a bar running clear through beyond the third island and well out into the west end of the lake. Somewhere beyond that bar there must be a place where the bottom makes a quick drop into deep water, and if we can find the break o' the bar we will find the bass, and big 'uns, too."

"Bah! You can't expect to find bass in fifty feet of water," Old Man Sherman butted in. "They ain't deep water fish."

"Maybe not, but we caught all of our bass that August in water that deep, and they were better fish than you can get in the rushes in June."

"How do you explain it?" I showed all of my incredulity in my voice.

"It's simple when you figure it out. The high water has given them plenty o' feed and when the weather gets hot they follow the fashion and hunt cooler locations. This is why they are in the deep water. You fellows can fish the rushes if you want to, but I'm going to start in to find the break o' that bar to-morrow morning."

The theory was so reasonable that we decided to act upon it, and before bedtime we made our plans for the next day. Two men in each boat, provided with long anchor ropes and plenty of sounding line, were to search for the ledge where the bar dropped into deep water, and there test Cormack's plan of deep water fishing. Dad Richards and I were to work together.

We routed everyone out at daybreak next morning and bolted an early breakfast, packed our lunch baskets, and started. Dad rowed while I rigged up a sounding line on the way over which would cover bottom to a depth of seventy-five feet. We had fifty feet of anchor rope to hold us to the point where the ledge terminated in deep water. As soon as we reached the bar beyond Koronis Island we began sounding. Carson and Cormack were already beginning operations beyond Rush Island, while Old Man Sherman and his boatmen were pulling down to the flat beyond Island Number Three. As Dad rowed slowly out into the lake I passed out the line, feeling the drag as it pulled over the raises in the bottom or snagged in the moss. It required considerable care to feel the drag as the line sank deeper. Twenty-five, thirty, thirty-five feet slipped through my hands, and still the bottom sloped gently out into the lake. The forty-foot knot passed through my fingers without any change in the feeling.

"How far down now?" Dad stopped rowing for a moment.

"Forty-one-two-three—Stop her!" I yelled. Dad backed water so quickly that I lost my balance and sat down on the seat behind me hard enough to jar my teeth. The line sank quickly through my fingers to the seventy-foot mark and slacked.

"We've struck it, by thunder! Now for an anchor. Back up until we can catch the edge of the ledge." I was as much excited as if I had struck a mine. Dad swung the boat back about twenty feet and I dropped the anchor. It held at forty-five feet.

We reached for our rods and baited nervously. The casting passion was upon us and our ears ached to hear the click of the reel. In a moment Dad's bait whirled away a good hundred feet to the west along the invisible line of the bar and mine quickly sped an equal distance to the east. I felt it sink, down, down, deeper than I had ever dropped it before in my bass fishing experience. Slowly we began to reel in. Foot after foot was wound and nothing happened. This was not what we were used to in the rushes, where the fight was on as soon as the bait struck the water. I was beginning to reel in rapidly for another cast when Dad snapped his drag and the reel began to spin with a click that made every drop of blood in us tingle. Dad gave a quick pull and fairly danced as he yelled :

"Strike, by glory !"

"And he's a whopper !" I yelled back as I dropped my rod and reached for the landing net. Seventy-five feet out in the lake a magnificent bass sprang into the air, shaking its head in a mighty effort to dislodge the hook as it turned and the line surged straight down into deep water. Not a word was said as the struggle proceeded. Back and forth, fighting every inch of the line, the fish darted, and Dad burned his fingers as a more desperate rush caused it to spin out for twenty feet more.

"Keep a tight line or you'll lose him !" I screamed.

"Aw, shut up ! Don't you think I know that ?" The chronic bass fisherman resents any advice on how to handle a fish. Another splendid leap into the air, and as the fish struck the water it started with lightning speed towards the boat. Dad nearly had a fit trying to reel in fast enough to keep the line tight. The tension was getting almost unbearable and we fairly held our breath as the reel spun. Quick as a flash the line tightened and sank and the bass began to sulk. Backward it pulled, a dead weight on the line. Dad dropped the rod and began to pull in hand over hand. Slowly he dragged the now tired fish to the side of the boat while I passed the net under and landed it, where it lay gasping.

"We've struck it this time ! Gimme the scales ; he'll weigh seven pounds if an ounce." He hooked the scales into the mouth of the bass and held it up for inspection. "Seven pounds, full weight !" The war dance that Dad executed in his end of the boat came near resulting in a ducking for both of us. As I turned to cast again I heard a whoop from up the lake and we saw Cormack engaged in a fight with something big that he had struck. We watched the distant struggle for a moment, but were too much excited to wait for results. We cast again over the same course, my line tangling slightly in the throw. Dad reeled in without result. I straightened out my line and began working my bait home. Ten—twenty—thirty feet were wound on the reel when I felt a tug as if my bait had been swallowed by a bulldog. I struck, and trouble began. Up and down, back and forth my line sped, never slacking for a moment nor giving a chance to reel in. I watched for the leap into the air that would tell me I had hooked a bass, but it did not come. It was deep water fight from the first tug. My rod doubled ominously every time I allowed weight to come against it.

"Pickerel !" Dad spoke the single word as he reached for the anchor rope in case the fish should start to run out into the lake.

"Pulls like a whale !" I was beginning to feel the strain of the struggle. Like a flash the line slackened and I knew the fish had started toward us. I tried desperately to reel fast enough to keep the line tight, but I might as well have tried to distance an express train. I worked with all my speed to keep pace with the rush of the fish, and then—there are times when words only make feelings more intense—my line backlashed and tied in a hopeless tangle. Like a flash it swept under the boat and I braced for the end of the struggle. It came in an instant, and I dropped on to a seat with the consciousness of defeat and possessed with a madness too great for words. As a result of that backlash I was minus bait, hook, and twenty feet of silk line, and my fish was gone. Dad gave me some relief by supplying the language for the occasion. I lost fifteen minutes of precious time before my line was entangled and I had it ready for work, and by this time Dad had added another six-pounder and an eight-pound pike to his string. I was finally rewarded for my run of bad luck by landing a seven-pounder and two five-pounders during the next thirty minutes.

During the next hour we struck bass with a regularity that proved Cormack's theory beyond a doubt, and in the intervals we could see that Carson's boat was doing its share of business up the lake. This was even more sport than our wildest anticipations had pictured, and by the time the sun had begun to make its heat felt we had enough of a string to satisfy the most persistent sportsman. All we lacked was a report on Old Man Sherman's luck. But he could always be relied on to furnish something spectacular, and although this exhibition was a departure from his usual method, we were treated to a bit of fishing that kept the old man's reputation fresh in our minds. Dad had just landed a fair sized fish when we heard Cormack shouting up the lake.

"Stop him, Sherman ! Drive him ashore ! Clear the track down there ! Here comes Sherman and his motor boat !"

We watched the boat, moved by an invisible force, closing in the distance between them, and even as we looked it passed and began to cover the intervening space in our direction. As the boat drew nearer we could see the old man sitting in the bow with feet braced and hanging on to his rod for dear life. He had hooked something big. Up the lake Cormack was pulling for dear life to be in at the finish. As the boat passed up in stead motion Dad and I both stood up to see the struggle. Old Man Sherman didn't even look at us.

"Give him a whip, old man. Time him ! Get a record ?" yelled Dad. "What you got, whale or mule ?"

"Keep your line tight !" I bellowed, delighted at the opportunity to give the old man a bit of his own advice, even though that line could not have stretched an inch more without snapping.

The old man was too much engaged to vent his usual profanity on us and we joined in the pursuit. About a hundred yards beyond us the fish swerved suddenly toward the island and Sherman disappeared with a back somersault into the boat. He came up in an instant working his reel furiously and hurling out chunks of profanity that would make the water sizzle. The boatman backed water and between them they recovered the slack. In another hundred feet the fish began to sulk. Working the reel carefully, they pulled the boat by, and as they struck the beach the old man leaped into the shallow water and began to pull the line in hand over hand. In a few minutes he dragged the fish, struggling, upon the sand and the boatman sat down on it to keep it from flopping back into the water. As we pulled ashore the the old man recovered enough of his wind to sputter out :

"If I'd been blame fool enough to fish from anchor I'd have lost that pickerel."

We stood and stared at the fish. It was away ahead of anything we had seen in Koronis during the season ; a magnificent specimen of the great northern pike weighing twenty pounds if an ounce. As I walked around it I saw a piece of line sticking out of its month and I began to pull on it. It strung out for twenty feet and the butt of my weldless hook showed where it was fastened in the roof of the fish's mouth. I would have known that tackle if the fish should have been caught next summer.

"Hi, Dad, look at this !" I called.

"He's the fellow we had hold of this morning." Dad's eyes stuck out with envy at what we had missed.

The old man cut the hook out and returned it to me as a trophy of my loss, and the fish, mounted, now occupies a conspicuous place in his home in Omaha. It weighed twenty-two pounds.

"Well, that beats my record. Let's go in to dinner." Uncle John climbed into his boat and we all pulled for the dock. We had a string of thirty-eight bass between us that put to shame anything that had been taken from Koronis for many a year, beside having a number of other large sized fish. This run of luck continued until even our chronic passion for bass fishing had been satisfied. We had found the break o' the bar.—Western Field.

REVIVAL OF THE N. P. FISHING CLUB.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

Sir,—A proposal is on foot to revive the "North Punjab Fishing Club," which ceased to exist in the autumn of 1902. The club had its headquarters at Rawalpindi, and its main object was to maintain a staff of Water Bailiffs to enforce the protective provisions of Act IV of 1897 (The Indian Fisheries Act) and Rules thereunder, on the Sohan, Korang, Haroo, and Chiblat rivers in the Rawalpindi and Attock districts. The club also endeavoured to further the interests of anglers by placing boats on some of the rivers for the use of members.

Section 4 of the Act makes it a penal offence to destroy fish by the use of dynamite or other explosive substance ; and Section 5 forbids the destruction of fish by poisoning the waters. The Rules made under Section 6 of the Act, published under P. G. Notification No. 366, dated the 17th April 1900, forbid—

(a) the erection or use, in any waters to which the Rules are applied, of any fixed engine, viz., any net, cage, trap, or other contrivance for taking fish, fixed in the soil or made stationary in any other way ;

(b) the use of any drag-net ;

(c) the construction of any weir for the purpose of facilitating the taking of fish.

Offences under Sections 4 and 5 of the Act are punishable with imprisonment up to two months, or with fine up to Rs. 200. Offences under the Rules made under Section 6 are punishable with fine up to Rs. 100, and, when the breach of the rule is a continuing breach, with a further fine up to Rs. 10 for every day after the date of first conviction during which the breach is persisted in. The Rules further provided for the seizure and forfeiture of any fixed engine or net used in contravention of the Rules. The Rules have been applied to the best fishing waters of the four rivers mentioned above by P. G. Notification No. 905, dated the 2nd October 1900.

Under Section 7 of the Act any police officer or other person specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, either by name or as holding any office, may arrest without warrant any person committing an offence under Section 4 or Section 5 or under any rule under Section 6.

It will be seen that the Act and Rules give very considerable powers for the preservation of fish, if they can only be enforced. At present the Act is a dead letter, for practical purposes, as the police cannot be expected to carry out its provisions. What is now proposed is to entertain one or more water bailiffs, on pay of Rs. 6 per mensem, to be especially empowered by the Local Government under Section 7 of the Act, to patrol the protected waters in each of the four rivers to which the Rules under Section 6 have been applied, and to arrest persons detected in breaches of the Act or Rules. If this is done effectively and a few prosecutions are successfully carried through, it is confidently believed that the fishing in the four rivers will be much improved. Since the decease of the old Fishing Club, the number of anglers in Northern India has decreased and fishing has deteriorated. If it appears, from the replies to this circular, that the movement for the re-establishment of the club is likely to be well supported, steps will be taken to form a committee representative of anglers in Northern India, to settle details of subscription, management, etc.

It is hoped that all officers and others who receive this circular will give it their careful attention, and that a considerable number will express their willingness to join the proposed club, either as fishing or as non-fishing members. The latter would pay a smaller subscription than the former. The expenditure on water bailiffs, etc, will amount to about Rs. 50 per mensem, allowing two water bailiffs for each river ; and rates of subscription will, of course, depend on the number of subscribers.

Replies should be addressed to W. Malan, Esq., I.C.S., District Judge, Rawalpindi, the names of any officers prepared to serve on the committee being suggested at the same time. It is desirable to form the committee and hold a preliminary meeting at the beginning of the cold weather, with a view to the early entertainment of the minimum number of water bailiffs required for the protection of the waters concerned. The provision of boats and other facilities would be a matter for later consideration.

The following have agreed to form a provisional committee :—Brigadier-General J. A. Coxhead, C.B., R.A. Lieutenant-Colonel A. Hamilton, 25th Punjabis, and W. Malan, Esq., I.C.S.

Saturday, 18th August 1906.

THE third meeting attracted another large attendance and a programme of six events provided interesting sport. There were some close finishes and the public spotted the winners of three races But there were a couple of upsets—Pylara's win in the Kidderpore Plate, on which the Totalisator paid Rs. 253; and Gleam's win in the Amateur Hurdle Handicap. Both these events were attended by mishap. Fifteen started in the Kidderpore Plate and coming round the turn Cyril fell when leading and brought down Goldstamp. Murdiston, who was riding the former, escaped with a shaking, but Watson, Goldstamp's jockey, broke his collar bone. In the Amateur Hurdle Handicap Fusilier came down at the last hurdle and Mr. Ballantyne sprained his wrist Details :—

AMATEUR PONY HURDLE RACE.—Rs. 500 to the winner, Rs. 200 to the second, and Rs. 100 to the third. A high-weight handicap hurdle race for ponies 14-2 and under, which have never won a flat race, hurdle race or steeplechase of the value of Rs. 50 or over, the property of Members of the C. T. Sport in England.

LONDON, Friday, 3rd August 1906.

LIVERPOOL.

THE copious downpour of rain which fell throughout the Liverpool district in the small hours of Friday morning not only cooled the atmosphere to an appreciable extent, but freshened up nature splendidly and the track having been prepared for its reception by artificial watering, was rapidly rendered in tip-top galloping order—if anything, slightly on the yielding side. Before racing started the sun put in its welcome presence, and the day's sport was once again conducted under the most pleasant conditions, there being an absence of that tropical heat that was so very oppressive in the early part of the week. An improved tone was also given to the racing, and fields were on the up grade as compared with the two previous afternoons, while the attendance was a little larger, although a long way below the average for a Cup day. Regarding the racing there were several outstanding features, namely, the long run of success that attended horses owned by Lord Derby, the unfortunate defeat of Velocity, through being carried out of the course by Speculor, and the behaviour of Black Arrow at the post for the Atlantic Stakes.

(79TH) LIVERPOOL CUP (Handicap)—Of 1,400sovs., 50sovs. in plate, and the rest in specie; the second to receive 125sovs., third 50sovs., and the fourth 25sovs. from the stakes Cup Course, 1 mile and 3 furlongs.

(Winner trained by Hon. F. Lambton.)

BETTING: 8 to 1 on Black Arrow, 6 to 1 agst. Albert Hall, and 7 to 1 Vedas.

When the lever was pulled Black Arrow and Vedas whipped round, leaving Albert Hall to complete the course on his own, Vedas following for second money, the judge's verdict in favour of Sir E. Cassell's colt being a distance. Black Arrow afterwards went the course, but the Stewards disqualified him for third place.

NEWBURY.

Well patronised by the fair sex, the club enclosure on Saturday presented a brilliant appearance, and many leading sportsmen were of the company, including Prince Christian, who saw the first race from the Stewards' crow's nest, which Joe Thompson declares is erected wrong end on. Tattersall's was wonderfully well attended, as was the further ring, while the local people assisted to make up a most satisfactory attendance, and capital sport was enjoyed.

OGBOURNE WELTER HANDICAP—Of 250sovs.; second receives 30sovs. and the third 10sovs. 7 furlongs, straight.

GOODWOOD.

The presence of the King and the Prince of Wales, who were accompanied by the Marquis de Soveral, accounted for a large and representative attendance of society, who met before dispersing to all quarters of the globe, and several house parties, including that of Mr. and Mrs. Willie James, helped the Goodwood House guests in swelling the muster under the beeches at Goodwood on Tuesday Tattersall's Ring was, as usual, crowded, and the wisdom of the executive in reducing the price of a week's ticket was amply proved. The holiday makers swarmed all over the course or picnicked on Trundle Hill, the bright blue sky above their heads, the daisies under feet, careless of the names and prowess of the runners, but from their eyrie having a sweepstake on colours. The going was by no means bad, though rain is badly needed, and for Goodwood the fields were fairly strong.

GRATWICKE STAKES—Of 100sovs. each, h ft.; for three-year olds; second receives 200sovs., and the third saves stake. 1½ miles.

Headed by the King and the Prince of Wales, a goodly company made the lawn a thing of beauty, the charming toilettes of the fair sex finding a suitable foil in the dark, glossy green background, and the fresh air gave a zest to the appetite. Another big attendance has to be chronicled, and that mostly where its pressure was a benefit to the meeting, viz., in the enclosures which were extremely well patronised, a proof that the racing army are generally ready to meet the demands made on their pockets when kept within reasonable limits.

With the King and the Prince of Wales again present, the exigencies of fashion that made them inseparable from the Cup day were well observed, and society claimed the lawn for its own, presenting a picture which might even make Paris envious. In every department the attendance was worthy of a Cup day, the tax on trains and vehicles being more pronounced than ever, while the locals who came more to see the fashions than the racing, were in strong force up and down the course.

LANG'S

No. 2 ·360 BORE HIGH-VELOCITY CORDITE RIFLE

An ideal weapon; as the high velocity and consequent flat trajectory is combined with the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express.

VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD," March 25th, 1905:—

"A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.

ARGYLLSHIRE, N.B.,

". . . . about the rifle. I am more than pleased with it, it has already accounted for 5 bucks and 2 stags. An American gentleman brought down a buck at 124 yards and Sir Wm. D. C. killed a stag at a distance of over 120. I think it is as perfect a weapon as science can devise. Sir Wm. D. C. wants to get one like it." E. S. D., Capt.

PRICES FROM 20 GUINEAS.

ROWING.

DOGGETT'S COAT AND BADGE.—The annual race in this time-honoured contest was rowed this morning over the usual course from London Bridge to Chelsea. The starters were E. Brewer (Putney), J. Bushnell (Richmond), P. Corder (Christchurch), H. Cobb (Putney), H. Dyckhoff (Frith), and T. Fell (Chiswick). Early in the race there was a capital struggle between Brewer and Cobb, but the former went right away and won very easily in 31mins. 17secs. Cobb was second, Bushnell third, and Dyckhoff fourth.

PROFESSIONAL PUNTING REGATTA.

The annual professional punting championship and punting handicap, under the management of the Thames Punting Club, took place on Thursday, in Bray Reach, Maidenhead, in the presence of a large gathering of people from all parts of the Thames. The course for the championship was a mile, with one turn. There were four entries for the championship.

No fewer than 26 entered for the handicap. The distance was half a mile, with one turn.

The arrangement were, as usual, very satisfactory. They were made by the following committee:—Right Hon. Lord Desborough (Chairman), Colonel Poole, and Messrs. C. E. Capon, A. Carpenter, N. M. Cohen, A. O. Collard, F. Covell, A. Gordon-Dickson, C. R. Mullings, W. R. Nicholson, B. Rixon, Colin Romaine, J. H. Secker, and P. W. Squire. Mr. Carpenter was timekeeper and starter, and the umpiring duties were shared by Colonel Poole, Lord Desborough, Messrs. Squire, Mullings, Colin Romaine, and others.

The championship event was again won by W. Haines, of Old Windsor, H. George, of Oxford, being second. The champion had an easy win. The handicap went to W. Brooks, of Maidenhead, after a desperate race with J. J. Smithers of Staines, Brooks getting home by three feet only.

SWIMMING.

THE CHANNEL SWIM.—Jabez Wolffe, who has already made one attempt this year to swim the Channel, started on a second journey on Monday evening, leaving the shore at the South Foreland at 8-20. He had an enthusiastic send-off, and with weather conditions very favourable and a smooth sea, he was very sanguine of success.

During the first hour Wolffe covered about two miles. Everything was satisfactory, the temperature of the water being about 60 degrees. At a later hour the swimmer was off St. Margaret's Bay, and making good progress. At 10-40 P.M., Wolffe was between four and five miles from the English coast, between Kingsdown and the South Foreland Lights and was making very fine progress. The western tide had set in, and everything was in the swimmer's favour, the sea having settled down to a dead calm. The swim, however, ended in failure a few minutes before midnight. At that time he had been in the water for nearly four hours, and had made good progress, but his leg again began to give him trouble, and he decided that it was useless to persevere.

It will be remembered that on his first attempt this year, some ten days ago, Wolffe remained in the water nearly ten hours, and when he was obliged to give up on account of his leg failing he was only 5¼ miles off the French coast.

CHAMPIONSHIP OF FRANCE.

The second swimming tournament for amateurs was held on Sunday morning in the Seine, the weather being fine and warm. The banks of the river were crowded, and it is estimated that there were half a million spectators. Eighteen out of the nineteen who had entered fulfilled their engagement, and, as had been predicted by Jarvis, the record made by the professionals was easily beaten by the amateurs. Owing to the drought which has prevailed, there was heardly any current in the Seine.

The start was made at 8-38 this morning from the Pont National, and though Jarvis admitted that the seven miles and a quarter that had to be accomplished had never been swum by him before in such slack water, he was the first to show in front when the signal for the start was given. He maintained his lead from start to finish, and accomplished the distance in 2hrs. 42mins., whereas the record of Bougoin, who won the professional race over the same course and on faster-running water, was, as may be remembered, 3hrs. 6mins. 10secs.

Ooms, the Dutch swimmer, who was considered to have a very good chance was beaten by 10mins. 5secs. Maas, the Belgian amateur champion, was third completing the distance in 3hrs. 3mins. 20secs. Then came Rossi, the Italian, whose time was 3hrs. 6mins., followed by Altieri and Catanio, also Italians. Meijer, the Dutchman, was next, with Dubois and Theurist (Frenchmen), followed by Mademoiselle Marthe Robert (from Switzerland) and her sister Cecile, the others abandoning the race. Mademoiselle Marthe Robert beat the record of Miss Kellerman by 39mins.

A gentleman who has been on the Turf for a good many years, and knows as much as most people, and a very great deal more than some, lately had a horse at Newmarket which he wanted to try. He could implicitly trust his trainer, and he left it be secretly bruited abroad that the trial would take place at seven. But he travelled down to Newmarket the afternoon before, put up at unaccustomed and private quarters, and soon after three set off to see the question asked. Soon after four it was all over. His mare had answered most handsomely; and convinced that his secret was his own, he returned to bed, slept for a few hours, took a turn round about before breakfast, and found that every man in the town knew everything that had happened.

Horse-racing sprang doubtless from the people themselves, and was given increased importance by the quality and power of great and wealthy patrons. Thus, a rich ironmonger, who was sheriff of Chester in 1906, originated the St. George's Race, while James I. gave new importance to sundry race meetings in Yorkshire and Surrey, and Charles I. made the Stamford Race Meeting greater than it had ever before been ewmarket and Hyde Park races thus grew famous, and Charles II., with his successors William III. and Anne and George IV., made the fortunes of many a previously little known and yet old-established meet.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

ON Saturday last, 11th instant, hounds met at Sultan Shola and thither some thirty people wended their way to meet them at noon. The Master drew to the left of the Krurmund Road into Parsons' Valley and almost at once hit off a line, which hounds ran slowly for a few minutes and then could make nothing of it. As they were drawing again a sambur hind jumped up in front of them and after a ten minutes' hunt was pulled down and drowned in a stream. While a certain amount of rating and well earned chastisement was being dealt out to the offenders a jack was fortunately viewed away and hunted in a complete circle for about 15 minutes, being killed below ground. He was dug out and broken up.

As hounds were trotting off to draw again Captain Duff viewed a jack, but after running him a few hundred yards hounds marked him to ground, and although the Master did his best to bolt him and give us a hunt it was not to be, for he was killed in the watercourse in which he had taken refuge and had to be dug out. Though this was not the best of days so far as sport was concerned, it was most enjoyable and hounds well deserved the blood they got for the admirable way in which they hunted the first jack.

On Monday, 13th instant, we had a sunny bright morning for the meet, which was at the 7th milestone on the New Pykara Road at 8 A.M., and this state of things did not augur well for scent. The day turned out to be no better than was anticipated. A jack was found in Wapshare's Hare Shola and ran across to Wenlock Wood, where he took refuge in a drain. The terrier boys were left to try to get him out, in order that he might give us a hunt on the Downs, but they killed him in the digging and he was broken up later on.

Hamlet Wood provided jack No. 2 and some very pretty hunting on a really bad scent ensued, round Hamlet, Hearty, and Beadnell's sholas, and after ringing about for nearly 50 minutes, the jack took refuge in a hollow tree, from which he was evicted and broken up. A third jack was found in Staircase, but he also took to a watercourse for safety and there he was left.

Tuesday last, 14th instant, saw a fairly large field meet the Master at the Rifle Butts at noon. We first drew Burgan Wood blank, but from Hanging Shola a good jack was halloaed away. Hounds were running hard in covert, however, and a brace of jacks broke away over the Connemara Road. Hounds in the meantime rolled over and killed a porcupine with disastrous results, as we learn that, in addition to many hounds having been badly injured, one, Cyclops, died shortly after his return to kennels. Our sympathies are with the Master in his loss.

After the porcupine incident (and who shall say that the English, or shall we call it the Anglo-Indian Foxhound deteriorating when a pack can go, for and break up a porcupine) the Master quickly got the pack on to the line of a jack which had crossed the Connemara Road and this led the field far into the ghauts, where thick mist was hanging, and some little delay followed in collecting hounds. Brooklands was the next draw and here again bad luck pursued us, for a jack was viewed away but hounds had chopped a cub in covert.

From Rocky a big jack was seen stealing away, but though big in body he must have been small in courage, for he hopped into a hole when he heard the Master's halloa and was killed by the terrier underground. This was a most unlucky day, with great possibilities always interfered with by fickle fortune.

On Thursday, 16th August, fixture was at Rees' Corner at 8 A.M. and nearly seventy people turned out. Now seventy is not a large field in England, where one sees a Master coping with a field of seven hundred, but our Field Master is away and that field of seventy really committed almost as many enormities as one of seven hundred. "'Old'ard" explains our old friend, Mr. Jorrocks, "means that gen'l' men are to stop their 'osses, a thing easier said than done sometimes. Then if any unpunctual payer or troublesome stranger appears to be forrard he is sure to catch it."

ABABIL.

THE GORDON'S HORSE HOUNDS.

MUCH better sport has been seen during the past week and the 12th instant was productive of a really smart gallop. Meeting at the 4th milestone on the Kankanhalli Road, the Master drew over some cultivation without result for about fifteen minutes. Hounds then spoke to a line, and the pace improving we had to gallop hard for a mile and a half, a slight check taking place near Sarakhi Village. The country was very heavy after the rain and so fast did the pack travel that it was already "bellows to mend" with some of us. From Sarakhi Village they hunted slowly to the Anekal Road when they could not own it. A clever cast, however, recovered the line, and hounds now travelled with a breast high scent for another couple of miles, quite evidently pressing their jack all the way. Moreover there was more deep going than anything else and every horse out was sobbing when hounds got a view on a tank bund. He twisted and turned, doubling back almost through the pack, but was eventually pulled down on the tank bund. Distance from start to finish a good four miles. Time, just over twenty minutes. Mrs. Traill was presented with the brush, and other ladies who went well were Miss Saunders, Miss Harris, and Mrs. Stirling. Major Hayes and Mr. Heale were also prominent in what was a really good spin. Considering the heavy state of the country, the Master was wise in taking hounds home.

16th August.—The fourth milestone on the Mysore Road—there is any amount of choice in the country round Bangalore, but it is sometimes of the least of more than two evils—saw a moderate field out. It included, however, the British Resident and the Yuvaraja. There is not a great deal to be said about the morning's sport, except that hounds worked wonderfully well under great difficulties. The country was stony and scent did not seem to lie. A fox was viewed and hounds were laid on, hunting him round some rocky hills for a quarter of an hour before finally losing him. It was a long time before even a whimper was heard again, but then a hound spoke, then another, and the rapidly increasing chorus was good to hear. He ran straight enough and it looked as though it might be a good thing, but some mixed scrub and cultivation caused him to hang, and it was a difficult matter to evict him. However, after ten minutes' rattling up and down, he made up his mind to break and had actually got out of covert when some forsaken fools of syces deliberately stuck themselves in his way and shouted. Not unnaturally he turned back into the very jaws of the pack and was pulled down at the edge of the covert. It was a great pity. He seemed fairly straight-necked, and there might have been a run. So long had been the previous draws that the morning was now far advanced and the Master reluctantly compelled to take the pack home. Mrs. Traill and Miss Brook-Leggatt were the only two ladies out and both went well. Miss Brooke-Leggatt, especially riding a big pony belonging to a gallant Carabiner officer, was negotiating some places from which many men turned away.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

16th August.—The meet to-day was at Harris Bridge and a hot airless night was succeeded by a sultry morning; heavy dark clouds did their best to "make believe" a coming downpour, but, alas! owing to their presence the glistening dew so welcome at this time of year was only conspicuous by its absence. With these adverse conditions it was not susprising that the Master had to draw for at least an hour before a whimper broke from these hard-working hounds, and when at last they spoke to a line they dashed into a highish crop and killed their jack before it was well realized that one was a foot. A field of some 80 people were thus disappointed by Dame Fortune and as the sun by this time had dispersed the clouds many feared that sport for the day was over. A draw was made along the old Bombay Road which is honeycombed with foxes' earths, but better than a fox, the line of a jack was hit and hound were away. Gradually pace increased as the jack took a line through some low lying places, and an eager but not too impetuous field were soon going "hell for leather," the hounds with no one pressing them, but with their Master's well-known forward forarrd to cheer them on went their best and when after leaving Dighi on his right the jack headed for Mooshi the pace became tremendous and racing to view with a chorus of music they ran into and killed him by a brook after an excellent 20 minutes. Horses with white steaming flanks came in quickly, for the going except in a few boggy places was sound and good throughout the run and with so many fair riders around him it must have puzzled the Master to choose those who best deserved the orthodox mementos. The brush to Mrs. Richardson, who well mounted and going her hardest again set a fine example of riding and the mask to Mrs. Quinn, who was first up, Mr. Richardson being one of several who went a bit too far to the right when the jack left Dighi, was a distribution at which none could grumble. After a much-needed breather both for man and beast a move was next made for the coverts near Bopkhel which had been left on the early morning, the field responding at once to a request that they should spread out and keep their eyes open. After perhaps some 20 minutes or so a fox was viewed which gave us a bright little run to the river, but here hounds could make nothing of him and he was left. Some Sugar fields and other likely places yielding nothing hounds were taken to their cart at Harris Bridge and sent home. A sumptuous breakfast kindly given by Surgeon-General and Mrs. Trevor and most thoroughly appreciated by all was a pleasant ending to sport.

19th August.—Great Khondwa was the fixture to-day and from a sporting point of view, I think the second run fairly took the cake, but let me begin in an orderly manner with the day's proceedings and take them in proper turn. Owing perhaps to a rooted conviction amongst Poona people that the country in this direction is, to use a common expression, "rotten" a far smaller field than usual turned out; however that may be, those of us who responded, have, with one exception (I refer to the man who unfortunately had his horse cut rather severely) no cause for regret. Drawing along the nullah beyond the village the hounds dwelt some time in a pân garden, and whilst still busy here, a jack was viewed by the 1st whip half way up a hill some half a mile distant and the Master had the hounds out to his holloa like a shot, the jack having evidently left this covert before hounds entered it as no one saw him leave it. The moment they left the covert hounds settled immediately to the line and ran hard to the point where the jack had been viewed on the side of the bare hill and here to everyone's astonishment he was killed, for the crafty villain trying to evade his pursuers by hidding in a narrow watercourse only hastened his end. After the brush had been presented to Miss Burlton the draw was continued through the gardens and dense coverts that here abound; then the note of one hound raised our hopes again and these were heightened when one of the native whips viewed what he took to be a jackal crossing a bund; the Master, considering a native opinion doubtful, specially enquired again what he had viewed and an unwavering answer of "jackal" being given he at once cheered the hounds on a full chorus was the result. At this moment Colonel Sheringham viewed the quarry crossing another bund and saw directly it was an enormous cat, and as these huge jungle beasts do an immense deal of harm to the game of the country it was decided to let houdds kill him which they did after about ten minutes of very pretty hunting. After this when drawing up a neighbouring nullah hounds again became very busy and the Master was heard to remark "there's been a jack here lately." Passing under a bridge hounds showed that it was almost a certainty still it was a minute or two before they fairly settled, then we knew we were in for a good thing, carrying great head and every hound throwing her tongue they rose the hill, over the top and away across the plateau beyond, and so taking valley and hill, valley and hill, on and on they went until at length only the Master, his 1st whip, Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Weaver were really in it. So far I speak for myself, for at this point I regret to say I lost sight of the pack and had to take my place with the less fortunate, and I am told this hard riding trio had the greatest difficulty in keeping them in view, for each time they emerged from a steep ravine hounds were half way up the next hill until at last this bold hearted jack had made his point near a hidden bridge close to Katraj Tunnel, but before finally taking refuge in this retreat he essayed to throw off his pursuers in a dense crop of bajari and whilst hunting here many of the field were able to join in these mistaken tactics lost him his brush, for he was driven into some cactus and killed at the bottom of a watercourse after 42 minutes. This brush was given to Mr. Weaver, who richly deserved it, for he rides the line.

POONA JUNIOR TOURNAMENT.

ROYAL ENGINEERS vs. POONA HORSE.—This was the opening game of the tournament and was played on the 13th instant in the presence of a large crowd. The Poona Horse outplayed their opponents and eventually won by 7 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 1 goal 2 subsidiaries.

First Chukker.—The Poona Horse attacked and drew first blood, a goal being signalled

Second Chukker.—The Engineers tried hard to get level and Leslie hit a subsidiary, but the Poona Horse quickly got possession and scored 2 goals and a minor point. Score: Poona Horse, 3 goals 1 subsidiary; Engineers, 1 subsidiary.

Third Chukker.—Each team attacked in turn but there was no further scoring.

Fourth Chukker.—The Cavalry got away and hit a goal which they quickly followed up with another. The Engineers put in a good run but their opponents got the ball once more and registered a subsidiary. Score: Poona Horse, 5 goals 2 subsidiaries; Engineers, 1 subsidiary.

Fifth Chukker.—The Poona Horse scored a goal and Alderson hit a second shortly after. A run by Leslie for the Engineers was unsuccessful and the Cavalry took the ball down and hit a subsidiary. The Engineers returned to the attack and Leslie put the ball between the posts. Score: Poona Horse, 7 goals 3 subsidiaries; Engineers, 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Sixth Chukker.—The Engineers opened by hitting a subsidiary and play ruled fast throughout the period but there was no further score. Final score: Poona Horse, 7 goals 3 subsidiaries: Engineers, 1 goal 2 subsidiaries. Teams :—

29TH LANCERS vs. 33RD CAVALRY.—Played on the 13th instant, the 33rd Cavalry being defeated by 5 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 3 goals 1 subsidiary. H. E. The Governor was among those present.

First Chukker.—The 33rd pressed at the start and Kenworthy hit a goal. The 29th put in a good run but the ball was got away and Kenworthy going down hit a second goal. The 29th, however, returned to the charge and scored a goal. Score: 33rd, 2 goals; 29th, 1 subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—The 33rd worked the ball down and Wogan-Browne hit a goal. Up and down play ended in a run by the 29th who registered a minor point. Score: 33rd, 3 goals; 29th, 1 subsidiary.

Third Chukker.—The 29th got away and Harbord hit a goal which Birch followed up with a subsidiary. A minor point was then obtained by the Cavalry. Fast play followed and Birch added a goal to the Lancers score. Score: 33rd, 3 goals 1 subsidiary; 29th, 2 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Fourth Chukker.—Play ruled up and down and then the Lancers took the ball down and Harbord scored a goal. The Cavalry pressed for the remainder of the chukker but were unable to score. Score: 29th, 3 goals 2 subsidiaries; 33rd, 3 goals 1 subsidiary.

Fifth Chukker.—A vigorous period. The 29th dribbled the ball down and Willis hit the fourth goal. A fifth was added shortly after and the 33rd failing in their attempts were beaten as stated. Final score: 39th Lancers, 5 goals 2 subsidiaries; 33rd Cavalry, 3 goals 1 subsidiary. Teams :—

93RD HIGHLANDERS vs. ROYAL ARTILLERY (KIRKEE).—This game, on the 14th instant, was very one-sided and ended in the rout of the Gunners by 7 goals and 4 subsidiaries to love.

First Chukker.—Up and down play in midfield was followed by Kennedy hitting a subsidiary. Score: Highlanders, 1 subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—A fine run by Maclaine enabled Kennedy to put through. The Highlanders continued to press and Kennedy hit a second goal before the close of the period. Score: Highlanders, 2 goals 1 subsidiary.

Third Chukker.—Forbes took the ball down and Kennedy registered the third goal, and from the throw in he hit a fourth. A shot at the Artillery goal hit the post but shortly after Forbes obtained a minor point and Kennedy added another goal. Score: Highlanders, 5 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Fourth Chukker.—The Gunners got away and sent in a shot which went wide. A penalty for crossing was given against the R. A. team but nothing came of it. However Kennedy rushed down and shot a goal shortly after. Score: Highlanders, 6 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Fifth Chukker.—Kennedy got possession and scored a goal, the remaining play being slow and up and down the field. Score: Highlanders, 7 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Sixth Chukker.—The Highlanders continued to press and augmented their score by two minor points—both credited to Kennedy. Final score: Highlanders, 7 goals 4 subsidiaries; R. A., nil. Teams :—

FLAT RACING IN ENGLAND, 1906.

(Special for "The Indian Field.")

I—LINCOLN TO GOODWOOD.

NO one on his journey to Lincoln this March could have quoted with any accuracy "Now fades the last long streak of snow," for the winter had been of quite unusual mildness, with hardly a flake of snow or a touch of frost, and not once had steeplechasing to give way before inclement weather. But, nevertheless, the Lincoln Meeting seemed, as ever, like the beginning of a new life to those whose business or whose pleasure is connected with the throughbred horse; so much as to relative merits and fitness of candidates has to be taken on trust or hearsay that there is no limit to gossip about horses and their riders and all the pent up excitement of four blank months lets itself go in a kind of wild zeal to fancy and to back anything and everything. Among the "probables" and actual starters were many old and well-known candidates; there were two Royal Hunt Cup winners, Csardas and Andover, two previous seconds in Catty Crag with the heavy weight of 8st. 4lbs. and Wolfshall with 6st. 13lbs. There was Dumbarton Castle, a Stewards' Cup hero, old Dean Swift, who had not won a race for over two years but was always "thereabouts", and many others, making in all a field of 24 runners, including M. Ephrussi's five-year-old Frenchman Ob (Bocage—Glave), one of quite the first class in his younger days in France, and victor over Gouvernant, the would-be Derby crack. The betting before the day, as at the start, indicated Dean Swift as quite a good thing, for he was backed down to 9 to 2, with Roseate Dawn next in demand at a point longer odds, and, as so often the case, the betting gave a true forecast of the result, save a little "but", which naturally was in favour of the Ring, for the French horse Ob, ridden by Bellhouse, brought over for the purpose, and starting at 20 to 1, made a great race of it, and beat Mr. Joel's Dean Swift a short head, with Roseate Dawn third, but a length away. The British devotion to free trade is nowhere so prominent as in racing, and undoubtedly from many points of view it is a good thing for British racing that every now and again one of the important races falls to a foreigner. The Brocklesby Stakes of 1906 may be remembered in years to come as the first of the return to the old regulation allowing half-mile races for the juveniles during the earlier weeks of the season. The winner was an Orvieto filly, Luisis by name, who beat a field of 14 opponents at the long price of 20 to 1; but later events so far go to show that those behind the winner were but a poor mediocre lot, and Luisis herself has done nothing at all since.

One of the charms of racing is that, like human life, it is so delightfully inconsistent at times, with the most unlooked-for happenings; for who could anticipate a Grand National being won by a horse whose peculiarity was a pronounced tendency to break blood-vessels! and yet this year of grace 1906 has witnessed it! Mr. Morrison's John M.P. was all the rage for the great cross-country event; he had been under a cloud for over a year, suffering from shelly feet, and yet had won every contest in which he had taken part during the current season, starting off with a sensational victory in a small hurdle handicap at the s.p. of 100 to 1. The public naturally waited to see whether he should prove to be the selected of the stable, Sir Charles Nugent's, of which there were four representatives, and of course, with his well-earned reputation for training jumpers, whatever Sir Charles should select would become one of the first favourites. Two of his nominations were struck out, but at the last moment it was decided to let the old warrior, Drumcree (the hero of 1903), take his chance, though it became a matter of common knowledge that the utmost confidence was placed in John M.P., the son of Britannic and Guiding Star, so much so, that in a field of 23 he started favourite, although he was weighted at 11st. 10lbs., a great impost for a stranger to the course. Phil May, sold out of Sir Charles' stable, who ran well in 1905. Buckaway II., who was third in the same year, Kiora, the ship-wrecked New Zealander, Oatlands, the winner of the National Hunt Steeplechase, with many other true and tried jumpers, were of the field, but none of them had anything to do with the finish. Ascetic's Silver, who but a few weeks before had broken a blood-vessel, as was his wont, at Sandown, but who nevertheless had some confidence reposed in him, was ridden by the Hon. A. Hastings, and proved the winner, at 20 to 1, while the unknown Red Lad was second at 33 to 1, and Aunt May, a fine mare, was third at the same price as the winner. As is invariably the case, the field was soon strung out, John M. P. "coming it" early in the race, his example being followed by three-quarters of the competitors ere the 4¼ miles were negotiated. John M. P. was supposed to have been frightened by the crowds at the first water jump, but although he failed again afterwards, his owner has nevertheless been able to dispose of him at a long price, which did not transpire, though it certainly was over 3,000 guineas.

The second meeting on the new race-course at Newbury was held during the first week of April, and there is no doubt that Newbury is to become rapidly one of the most fashionable and sporting meetings; everything there is thoroughly up to date, and the number of training quarters in the immediate vicinity, coupled with the spendid train service from Paddington, combine to secure at once large fields and large attendances; and no doubt, ere long, the chief handicaps there will "catch on" and acquire a reputation equal to some of the long established races. We may skip over the Craven meeting at headquarters, where nothing worthy of note occurred, and get on at once to the first spring meeting at Epsom. The great Metropolitan Handicap did not attract much of a field, only nine going to the post, and the start was a poor one, for Mr. Singer's Harmony Hall, who was favourite, got practically left at the post, but he made up a deal of ground before the two and a quarter miles were done, and eventually finished second, beaten but a neck by the lightly weighted mare. Whinbloom, ridden by A. Templeman, the crack apprentice of last year. This, by the way, leads the note that the new rule as to apprentice allowances, where by the 5lbs. can only be claimed in selling races and handicaps of not exceeding £200, has been found to work with the greatest possible satisfaction to everyone, and there is now no upsetting of the work of the handicappers in big races.

For a wonder, there was some quite spirited anti-post speculation over the City and Suburban Handicap, for Dean Swift, Polymelus, Succory and Sir Daniel were all heavily backed, while commissions were worked to a somewhat smaller extent about Antonio, Donnetta, who at last seems to be getting properly "looked after" by the handicappers, and two or three others. Succory, Mr. Liddiard's three-year-old son of Symington and Bimetallism, was penalised 10lbs. for winning the Newbury Spring Cup of £1,200, but the victory was so easily gained that the penalty was thought to be of no account, and Mr. Faber's Cyllene colt Polymelus was generally fancied by the public, while Sir Daniel, one of those horses who are always going to win a big handicap and yet never make much of a show, has only to be entered in a race to be at once rushed upon as a good thing. It is indeed strange how some horses always are backed by the public, and never win, while others are always left alone, and yet are continually popping up at long prices. There was a fair field of 18 runners, but nothing of any particular class, as may be gathered from the fact that the highest weight carried was 8st. 2lbs., which was allotted to Polymelus and Donetta. Dean Swift had finished second to Robert le Diable in the "City" of 1904, and was placed third in the same race as well as in the Royal Hunt Cup and Cambridgeshire in 1905, so that with the moderate weight of 7st. 11lbs., and considering his excellent performance at Lincoln, it was generally recognised that Mr. Joel's horse had now his great chance of retrieving his laurels; and although both Polymelus and Succory were preferred to him in the betting at the post, he nevertheless at last did himself justice, and got back some of the money lost over him, by winning easily by three lengths, with Mr. Buchanan's Golden Measure second, and the game and genuine mare Donnetta third, the two actual favourites being quite out of it. Dean Swift an unsexed son of Childwick, and Pasquil, is a mean-looking, scraggy beast at best, but he has at least again proved that "every dog has his day"!

The Kempton Jubilee Stakes fell rather flat; first of all, there had been a very poor entry, and the meagre numbers were not redeemed by including anything like an Ypsilanti or Victor Wild, let alone a Sendigo or Minting, and the ridiculous practice of publishing the weights early in January, instead of after some of the current year's form was known, undoubtedly detracts from the general interest in the race. Sir Edgar Vincent's Donnetta, who had run very fairly at Epsom, was made favourite, and ridden by the celebrated Danny Maher won comfortably from 15 opponents, with St Wulfram second at 25 to 1, and last year's winner, Ambition, third. It is strange how races fluctuate in public esteem, and there is little doubt to my mind but that things would be improved with the Jubilee if the list was closed somewhere early in April, and the weights published shortly before the City and Suburban, as used to be the practice.

And now to deal with the classic races, which of course are after all the real backbone of the sport, even the more important handicaps yielding nothing like the general and sustained interest of a Guineas or a Derby, unless on those rare occasions when a Robert the Devil or a Sceptre is among the competitors. For the Two Thousand Guineas there was an average field, so far as number was concerned, but the whole dozen were colts, indeed it is but rarely nowadays that one of the weaker sex is started. Colonel Hall Walker's Count Schomberg colt, Black Arrow, appeared for the first time this season, but with regard to him there was a feeling of very great distrust, so abominably had he allowed himself to be dominated by his temper on more than one occasion in his first season, and yet there was the recent precedent of Diamond Jubilee to prove the possibility of a colt entirely overcoming bad habits and giving his better nature the victory over temper and evil passion, and it might be that Black Arrow would turn out a regenerated being. Then there was Gingal, the Carbine colt, who had done but indifferently as a juvenile, while the expectation that he would make a great improvement was fulfilled by his easy success in the Wood Ditton Stakes at the Craven Meeting; and another Carbine was Ramrod, who had won a couple of small maiden weight-for-age races. The Pretty Polly stable was represented by Admirable Crichton (Isinglass—Admiration), who seemed to train off altogether after his early victories in 1905 and others saddled were Beppo, by Marco, Sancy, who ran unnamed as the Diamond Jubilee—Dame Agneta colt, Gorgos, by Ladas out of The Gorgon, who was one of Mr. Arthur James' winners of the previous Goodwood meeting, and a few more of no account. Up to the last moment it was expected that the King would run his "dark" colt Nulli Secundus (by St Simon out of Nunsuch), but he was badly beaten by Gorgos in a trial, and it was decided not to run him, but to persevere with his preparation for the great Epsom event. Gingal was made favourite at 100 to 30, and others well backed were Bill of the Play (ridden by the unlucky Mr. George Thursby), Beppo and Admirable Crichton, while Black Arrow was regarded as nothing better than a 100 to 8 chance. It is a severe punishing course over which the first of the classics is run, and a horse not well advanced in his training does not have much of a chance of distinguishing himself. The only fault with the start was that Mr. Thurby's mount, Bill of the Play, got off very badly, and consequently played no part in the finish, which was most strenuously fought out by Gorgos (H. Jones up), Sancy (O. Madden), Ramrod and Beppo, in the order named, Gorgos winning by a head, and a couple of necks separating the other three. The s. p. of Gorgos was 20 to 1, which came as a surprise to stay-at-home brokers, for he was reported to have beaten Nulli Secundus easily in a trial and the King's horse had been favoured not a little by many clever judges. The One Thousand Guineas fell to Flair (St. Frusquin—Glare), who won so easily that the filly at once became a fancied commodity for the Derby, but going amiss a week or two later on, the pen was put through her name.

When I wrote last back end that no doubt one of these days Carbine would produce something approaching himself in merit, I of course had in my mind Gingal, his son from Pindi, the dam of Bass Rock, but though the particular was at fault, the sentiment proved correct, for there were three Carbine colts entered for the Derby, Gingal, Ramrod (his dam Esk) and Spearmint, the produce of Maid of the Mint, and it was the latter who, to anticipate, carried off the blue riband. Spearmint hailed from the same stable as Flair, Gilpins and many a shrewd head believed it was impossible that after the filly had gone amiss, any stable could be so lucky as to have a good enough "second string"; and besides, there was Lord Rosebery's dictum that a Derby winner is "never sold by auction" and had not Spearmint been knocked down as a yearling at the paltry figure of 300 guineas? However, facts are not to be denied, and Spearmint ridden by the American, Danny Maher, proved an easy Derby victor over 20 opponents, without one of the Guineas competitors being in the first five. Picton (Orvieto—Hesuba) was second with the unfortunate Mr. George Thursby up and the Duke of Westminster's Troutbeck (Ladas—Rydal Mount) third, and the King's horse Nulli Secundus last. It should be noted that Spearmint was not the favourite, that post of honour being filled by Mr. Pavefoy's Amphion colt, Lally, who cut up even more badly than his half-brother, Diadumne, in the memorable Jellah year, but still he was as well backed as anything at sixes, while Picton was quoted at 18 to, and Troutbeck at the backer's favourite price of 33 to 1. A fortnight later the Derby winner carried off the most valuable Grand Prix at Paris, which had not been won by an English horse since 1886, when all the Frenchmen were made backs of by his maternal grandsire, Minting.

A passing reference must be made to Pretty Polly, who may be anything, but in my opinion is by no means the marvel many would fain believe, for she has never encountered a Rock Sand, let alone a Sceptre, Ard Patrick, or even a Ravensbury. It is true she had no difficulty in winning either the March Stakes at Newmarket or the Coronation Cup at Epsom, but at Ascot she was fairly beaten into second place in the Cup. Mr. Joel's Bachelor's Button, who had won the Manchester Cup in fine style carrying 9st., was undoubtedly made vast improvement and in the Ascot Cup he was able to give 3lbs. and a length beating to Major Loder's mare, and it does not do to pay much attention to excuses for Pretty Polly on the ground of her being "off colour", for had she made good the odds of 3 to 1 laid on her, we should doubtless not have heard anything of such a tale of want of fitness.

The Epsom Derby meeting over, there is not much worthy of note going on in the Turf world till Ascot comes round, but then indeed are stirring times. Eheu, fugaces, anni labuntur! and every Ascot makes one think of the days that are gone, "sweet childish days that were as long as twenty days are now." Days when St. Gatien and S. Simon were still in active work on the racecourses, when donovan was a juvenile, and Wheel of Fortune was expected to achieve such wonders at the stud: but we have not to do with the past but the present! Dean Swift having at last won a great race, has become more reliable, for he followed up his City and Suburban victory by winning the valuable Trial Stakes on the first day of the Ascot meeting, while on the same day Mr. Singer's mare, Praisella, putting to scorn those who believed she could only act "in mud," cantered away with the Ascot Stakes at 1 to 6 to 8: and then came the "prettiest race in England," the Royal Hunt Cup. Quite a respectable field of 22 runners put in an appearance, and the betting took an unusually wide range, the price of 100 to 15 being freely offered on the field and accepted about Dinneford, Ravilious and King Charles, while 33's and 40's were on offer about some half-dozen of the competitors. One heavily backed horse was Roseate Dawn, who, on the strength of his forward running in the Lincolnshire and at Newbury, was honoured with the top weight of 8st. 12lbs. Dinneford, a son of Dinna Forget and Gracie, bred and owned by Mr. Reid Walker, and trained by A. Taylor at Manton, was a general fancy on account of his excellent and consistent running in the earlier part of the season; and King Charles, hailing from Middleham, came to the Royal Meeting with a great reputation which he had earned as a two-year-old when known as the Rightaway—Clydaria colt. The King ran a horse, Coxcomb, who was not of much class, but who was regarded as a fair place investment, and the others, it must be confessed, were a poor lot for such an important handicap. The start was a fair one, except that King Charles was baulked a bit by one or two others, but it did not matter much, for Dinneford made practically the whole of the running and won by a length, with King Charles and Roseate Dawn second and third, so that it was certainly not a good race for the ring. A week or two later, Dinneford proved good enough to win the first of the ten thousand pounders, the Princess of Wales' Stakes at Newmarket, and so there is little doubt that at that time he was a better horse than was generally credited. Lord Derby's Keystone II. (Persimmon—Lock and Key), who had easily captured the Oaks Stakes followed on with a victory in the Coronation Stakes of 3,000 sovs. and Lord Rosebery's two-year-old son of Ayrshire and Chelandry, by name Traquair, added the Coventry Stakes to his previous win in the Woodcote Stakes at Epsom. This colt is perhaps the best of his year, for he has not been beaten, and though he generally manages to get badly away at the start, yet his speed is such that he soon gets on terms with his field, and quickly leaves them all practically standing. But the two-year-olds have always hitherto been left for consideration in the latter half of this Annual Review—a practice which is convenient from all points of view.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

CALCUTTA F. C. vs. UNITED SERVICES.—A small, but critical, crowd watched this match on the C. F. C. ground last Saturday. The afternoon was ideal and the ground in a condition that invited fast play and a good exhibition by the back divisions, yet we cannot remember how long it is since we saw such a purely forward game. Throughout the first half the scrummagers had it all to themselves, indeed the Calcutta three-quarters only twice handled the ball. Though under a disadvantage as to weight and practice together the U. S. men decidedly held their own in the scrummages right up to half time; but they couldn't last it out and fell to bits after the first few minutes of the second half. Rowe made one or two brilliant but unsuccessful attempts to get away and Stevens, the brothers Cooper, Harty, and Cowie were frequently conspicuous; but Calcutta wore them down and after MacLean scored the first try, Weatherhead, Dick, and Heilgers also ran in—all within 15 minutes—and Drew converted two of the tries into goals, Calcutta thus winning by 2 goals and 2 tries (16 points) to nil. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Drew, back; MacLean, Wallet, Burnett, and Siddons, three-quarters; Wentherhead and Arthur, half-backs; Buckler, Dick, Kerr, Heilgers, Braund, Berridge, Bishop, and Le Coq, forwards.

UNITED SERVICES.—Tobin, back; Rowe, Bromage, Cowie, and Greenwood, three-quarters; H. Cooper and Stevens, half-backs; Bocquet, Hill, Lillburn, Cooper, Ansell, Kidby, Harty, and Adams, forwards.

CUSTOMS vs. NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—The Customs' ground was the venue of this match last Saturday. The game was all in favour of the military team who eventually won by a dropped goal and 3 tries to nil. Loose scrums in midfield characterised the opening play till from a scrimmage in the Customs' 25 Frere crossed the line. The place failed but Frere obtained another try not long after, the kick again proving unsuccessful. The Fusiliers continued to press and some smart passing terminated in a goal dropped by Lewis. On changing ends play was even for a spell and the Customs tried hard to score. Their efforts, however, met with no success and once more the military invaded their "25." Two attempts to drop a goal failed, but soon after Walker got over with a try. The major points were not secured and no side was called leaving the Fusiliers victorious by 13 points to nil. Teams :—

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—Dignam, back; Frere, Brenham, Butterfield and Lewis, three-quarters; Rudd and Kaye half-backs; Walker, Robinson, Pawson, Kellert, Mathews, Leathley, and Messrs. Milne-Holme and Ovans, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Jewell, back; Warden, Edwards, Vears and Fredricks, three-quarters; Petry and Dempster, half-backs: Hall, Noddle, Wilson, Carlton, Goldsmith, Devereaux, Hart, and King, forwards.

CALCUTTA vs. NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—These teams had won all their League engagements and a good game was expected on Tuesday, but this was far from the case, for Calcutta were all over the military team and eventually won by 51 points to nil. They opened the scoring shortly after the start and during the first half Kerr, Siddons (2), Arthur Burnett, Mallet, and Maclean all got over with tries. Drew who kicked excellently majorising six of the tries. The Fusiliers played hard in the second half, but were unable to hold the home team. Maclean, Dick, and Siddons (2) crossed the line, Drew converting three of the tries. The military were unable to score and Calcutta thus won by 9 goals and 2 tries to nil.

CALCUTTA F. C.—Drew, back; Siddons, Mallet, Maclean, and Burnett, three-quarters; Arthur and Weatherhead, half-backs; Buckler, Kerr, Heilgers, Ker, Bishop, Berridge, Le Coq and Dick, forwards.

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—Dingavan, backs; Bramham, Frere, Leathley, and Lewis, three-quarters; Rodd and Tomlinson, half-backs; Lieutenant Overs, Lieutenant Mellin Home, Lieutenant Staples, Pawson, Mathews, Robinson, Longden, and Walker, forwards.

ARMENIANS vs. UNITED SERVICE.—Played on the Customs' ground on Tuesday evening. The Services were two short and the Armenians had eleven men. A scrambling game was witnessed, the U. S. winning by a goal and 4 tries to nil. Cooper, Harty, and Lilltam crossed over with tries in the first half. Maxwell and Cooper after the interval. Harty converted Maxwell's try and the score at the end of the game was: U. S., 1 goal 4 tries (17 points); Armenians, nil.

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

I NOTICE that a writer in a Calcutta planting Journal takes exception to a portion of my remarks last week where I alluded to forwards "putting out" the ball to their backs. He had to go to the trouble of consulting a Scotch International whereas the ordinary schoolboy, who plays the game, would have given him a thorough explanation.

He wishes to know if I meant "heeling out!" Let him learn that a forward when sending the ball out of the scrum can legitimately use not only the heel, but the side of the foot (the usual method), the toe, ankle, or any part of the leg.

On Tuesday and Saturday last week the League Competition was continued. On the former day the ground was almost under water and back play was out of the question. Calcutta and Fusiliers had no difficulty in running up large scores against Armenians and Wanderers respectively, while Customs, who played one short, and United Services had a very hard encounter, the Service winning by three tries to two.

On the latter day, when the ground was in perfect order, the match best worth seeing was Calcutta and United Services. It was only in the last quarter hour that Calcutta managed to secure their four tries (MacLean, Weatherhead, Heilgers, and Wick) two of which were converted by Drew.

Calcutta unquestionably have a large number of playing members this year and it is not surprising to find some of them playing for other clubs. The two Coopers, Ansell, and Harty have secured places on the United Services team, and it will surprise no person if V. Cooper turns out an excellent forward. He certainly has plenty of weight and dash and ecured two tries in their match against Customs.

CALCUTTA.

What is a loss to the Customs is a great gain to United Services. I allude to Rowe. He played a splendid game on Saturday, and is well known to be very resourceful. His endeavours would have been attended with greater success had he been properly backed up and in future every member of his team should recollect there is always a chance of obtaining a "soft" score by keeping close to him when he gets off.

Of their other backs, Stevens was best. He was proved himself to be a half far above the average, and if H. Cooper, who played in the Cup matches last year for Calcutta, will only get on an "understanding" with him, a smart partnership should result.

It is pleasant to notice that Drew has again donned the jersey, thus enabling Dick, who has been playing full back, to go forward. The change should strengthen Calcutta, as Dick is a strenuous forward and Drew's goal kicking is seldom at fault.

The Calcutta backs did hardly as well against United Services as was anticipated. Mallet is no doubt fast and has a pretty swerve, but his hands do not appear as useful as they should be, nor is his tackling quite up to the mark.

The Armenians so far have not done much and were naturally in a difficult position when, with two short, they encountered Calcutta's heavy forwards. Apear played pluckily throughout and showed great determination in trying to avert the inevitable.

The match between the Fusiliers and the Customs, though not very interesting, had occasional bright spots. Edwards for the Customs took a deal of watching and made some good runs, as likewise did Warden, but neither could break through the defence. The soldiers' forwards were quicker in tackling and dribbling, and at times their backs handled the ball smartly, Freere being responsible for two of the three tries, while Lewis dropped a beautiful goal.

The Caledonians, though not entered for the League, are very much alive, and have arranged to play Calcutta "B" team once a week.

It is said Hyland, who successfully captained the West Ridings in the Final Cup Match last year, is playing better than ever. Of this there will be surer evidence next month. The West Ridings will play first in the Cup Competition in Calcutta and then go on to Madras, whose tournament is arranged to take place between the 24th and 29th proximo.

The Challenge Cup competition, which will come off between the 8th and 15th proximo is likely to draw larger entries than last year. Of outside clubs the West Ridings and Gloucesters are almost certain to put in an appearance, and it is hoped the Bombay and Madras Clubs, who are at present in correspondence with the Honorary Secretary of the Competition, will also be represented.

The following made up to end of last week shows the positions of the competing Clubs in the League Competition :—

3rd August 1906.

THE long looked for rain has come at last, in answer to the prayers in the churches and perhaps too, to the grumbles from farmers and gardeners who if it is fine want rain and if wet protest that sunshine is their one and only desire. At all events the rain has come locally and those privileged parts of the United Kingdom are rejoicing. There is not much Golf of any importance for it to interfere with, until Bank Holiday, for most players are occupied in getting to Links, or finishing up their work before departing for their much-needed holiday, but before the rain came record breakers were having a high old time, here and there and everywhere with the courses so dry that the average driver forgetting the cause, felt his bosom swell with pride and fancied himself a Braid or Blackwell as he saw his half topped tee shot, bounding gaily over the ground, out of sight and quite beyond his ken. Of course such a golf genius as Harry Vardon is expected to make records, and on his return quite recently from a golfing holiday (!) in Ireland he accomplished a truly remarkable performance on his own course at Sotteridge, the South Herts Club, when playing with Mr. A. C Lincoln and P. L. Smith, in a three-ball match At the 11th hole ardon took 5, which, as the distance from tee to hole measures 433 yards, is no surprisingly bad number his only 5 hole : in this same round he took only 31 for 9 holes, these including a 2, three 3's and five 4's, even for a Vardon not bad !

There is just now great excitement at the Hague over an International Golf Tournament. The hotels of Schevingen have presented two splendid cups and the matches are to be played half at the Hague and half at Schevingen. On 3rd August (to day) a medal bound is being played for a large silver basket presented by some ladies of the Hague Golf Club. Next day, an open competition for the two prizes already referred to as given by the Schevingen hotels. and on 6th August there are team matches, England is represented by teams from three clubs, one of these being from Sandwich. It is disappointing that the teams from Belgium and France are unable to visit Holland and take part in the competition. The owner of the land on which the Hague Golf Links is laid out is the Baroness Margaret de Brienen, who takes a lively and personal interest in the proceedings and has herself organised an English team to compete. The links are excellent and are situated about a mile and a half from the city.

A tremendous exodus has been made this year from London and Suburbia to the links on the north-east coast of Scotland, Dornoch, the capital town of Southerlandshire, being a favourite resort ; the Links are very fine, in fact there are two distinct and separate courses, the "long" being long, 6,000 odd yards in length and 'the short" being only 3,800 odd yards ; in addition to the golf facilities there is excellent bathing, and there are many places of interest which can and should be visited. Then Nairn the "Brighton of the North" year after year attacts many and oft times the same people, for Nairn lies in the centre of a great golfing chain of links on the southern shore of the Moray Firth ; both ladies and men's courses were laid out by old Tom Morris and are kept in first-class order. In the neighbourhood are Golf Links at Aberfeldy, Abernethy, Blair Atholl, Portessie, Cromarty. Dufftoun, Forres, Fortrose Grantown, Inverness. Pitlochry, Strathpepperwich, and many others. Then there is Brora and Tain, both boasting of first-class Golf Links and both situated in bracing spots, and in addition to the Golf there is fishing, bathing and other delights. No wonder the Londoner, jaded, weary, and disheartened by bad times, finds solace in his "Ain Countree," and leaves foreign tours to his American cousins, or to the non-golfer. Of course the West of Scotland offers too many attractions : Troon, Prestwich, Machrihanish, are all quite first class and then the West Coast is so beautiful that to the non-golfer it appeals in a not surprising way and mammas and daughters who do not play are not averse to spending papa's annual holiday and papa's money on excursionising up and down the coast. Ireland too is much sought after as a holiday resort · Portrush, Newcastle, Lahindi, Portmarnock are all full of pleasure seekers and Wales keeps opening new links. Of a truth Golf has done wondrous works, and should be encouraged by all classes, for it is wheels within wheels, and any pursuit or occupation that keeps hard-made English money in the United Kingdom is indeed worthy of all encouragemen. So long live King Golf ! and his noble and even increasing army of devotees and Divotees !

M. E. S.

THE GOLFER'S BEST FRIENDS.

ONE of those extraordinary people to whom statistics are of the main passion of existence employed part of this week in visiting the departure platforms of several of the principal London railway stations. In three hours, at Paddington, one hundred and forty-seven bags of golf clubs were transferred from hansoms to railway carriages ; in a similar time, at Waterloo, one hundred and eighteen at King's Cross, one hundred and sixty-six ; at Euston——but, after all, the mere figures are nothing except as showing the increase in the number of players ; the vital fact is that golfers are going out of town, and that the month of the year which counts more to them than all the other eleven is opening before them. For now is the time when the metropolitan golf-courses get the rest which they need so badly in order to recuperate from the attacks made upon them by the long-handicap man. It becomes almost hopeless to go down to your club, even on a Saturday or Sunday, without fixing up a match before hand, for to secure a casual one is getting more and more unlikely as a result of the summers exodus ; and your day's golf—or, at any rate, half of it—is quite likely to be devoted to taking out a club or two and practising the "mashie shot with a lot of cut on," so simple in practice, and so difficult to manage successfully when saving the hole actually depends upon its being perfectly executed ; or the running-up approach with an iron, or even lofting stymies—all of them things likely to be useful to you when that happy day at last arrives when you, too, can leave behind you the dust and turmoil of London streets, and feel, as you tread the springy seaside turf of the true links, with the sea-breeze in your face, and the flashing sapphire and emerald of the Atlantic before your eyes, that life is really worth living. But there is one club, by the way, that few golfers ever seem to think it worth while to practice with. You may see a man going out with his mashie or putter, and occasionally even taking out a driver to see if he cannot learn to slice or pull at will, but how few are ever observed wending their way with a niblick and a few odd balls in the direction of some secluded sand-bunker, or even a patch of "the rough"? Yet more holes may be saved and more matches won by the ability to get well out of sand or long grass at the first attempt than by any other shot in the golfer's bag, with the possible exception of the long putt frequently rammed home ; and this kind of shot is the very one of all others that demands a special kind of skill, and that is yet left more frequently than any other to be dealt with as occasion offers, instead of being carefully learnt beforehand. Why should this be? Is it that the appearance of the niblick is so repulsive that the golfer cannot bear to look upon it save in times of the acutest distress! Or is it that he is unwilling to recognise the fact that, with all his skill, he does occasionaliy, owing to some wholly undeserved misfortune, get into a bunker, or off the line in the gorse? Or does he think that it is a confession of weakness and that he will be laughed at by others is he is seen going out practising with a niblick! Let them laugh ; his turn will come all right later on. Half an hour spent with that best friend of man, the niblick, will not only teach a man a number of things he never knew before, but will provide him with enough exercise to make his appetite for lunch fully as hearty as if he had played a colourless eighteen-holes match. Many are the uses to which this admirable club may be put. Who has not felt a grim pleasure tempering his divine wrath as, in a cloud of sand, he has spouted his ball up on to the green from some deep foot mark right under the very face of the bunker! This, perhaps, at the third or fourth attempt, when a more intimate knowledge of the shot and the club would have enabled him to extricate himself in one. Then, again, take gorse Nothing but a niblick is any use here ; for the club must be heavy in head and strong in shaft to stand any chance of survival in an encounter with the apparently insignificant but really exceedingly tough stems of the golden bush. Of course, if you are "badly in" it will be wiser to drop and lose one, but many a ball is lifted which could perfectly well be played with a niblick reinforced by a little commonsense. Back-handed, for example, a ball can often be hooked out which it would be impossible to play in any other way or with any other club. In long grass, too which, especially at this time of year, forms one of the chief terrors of the game to the player who is inclined to deviate from the fairway, the niblick is generally the only club of any practical value ; and another word of advice may be given to those who encounter this pasticular hazard. Say you have sliced your ball, thirty yards into the rough grass from the tee at a longish hole. Three men out of four, even though they recognise that the niblick is their only salvation, will play straight on towards the pin, with the result that they only remove the ball from one position in the long grass to another twenty or thirty yards further on. No ; recognise that you are in a hazard, and a very bad hazard too, and play to get out of it. Play to get back on the fairway, not necessarily to get near the hole at all, and then possibly a long brassey may yet take you home, whereas forty yards nearer the whole, but with your ball still in the rought your chances of recovery are vastly inferior.

Then, again, with your ball lying right under a wall or hedge, but on the same side of it as the hole, the niblick again will prove the friend in need. To all appearance you cannot get at the ball at all to play any kind of shot ; but if you stand facing the wall, with your back to the hole, and "mow" at it with the niblick, taking quite a full shot, with the face of the club turned well over, but never allowing the sweep of the club to go higher than your knees, the most surprising results may often be attained and a shot of this kind, properly executed, may be safely relied upon to have such an effect on your opponent that he will certainly take three on the green at that hole. Water, too, is no hopeless difficulty with a niblick, if you do not mind a splashing, but this shot certainly does require practice, and there are not many who will practise, playing shots out of water. But take a niblick and a bal or two down with you to your dip before breakfast, and the necessary skill is soon acquired, to prove perhaps of the greatest value to you in some hard fought match when to lift and lose one would be fatal.

It is a great mistake to think that the niblick is a merely brutal club, to be only used out of sand. If you play "with your head" it may be made to atone for its lack of beauty by becoming one of the most useful and trustworthy clubs in your bag. Even through the fair green it may be used by those who find themselves unable to master the problem of how to put on "cut" in order to loft the ball high and drop it dead with no run on it, the laid black face supplying the place of cut. One man there is—and probably one only—who putts with his niblick; and he is unorthodox in other ways, for he invented Bogey, to be a joy to all who like a spice of competition without bothering to hole out their sevens and eights, and an abiding horror to the Royal and Ancient Golf Club. Any properly-written history of the "Decline and Fall of Scotland" should include a picture of Mr. Hugh Rotherham on the home green at St. Andrews, standing a yard and a half in front of his ball, with arms and niblick stretched out behind him, till the face of the niblick is as perpendicular as the face of a putter, and thus striking with unfailing accuracy of the ball into the hole, thereby winning a Bogey competition!—F. R. B., in The County Gentleman.

Boxing.

THE DURHAM LIGHT INFANTRY'S BOXING TOURNAMENT.

JUDGES :—Captain O L. R. Hampdew, 1st Oxford Light Infantry, and Lieutenant P. St. J. R. Woodhouse, 1st Durham Light Infantry.

TIMEKEEPER :—Sergeant G. Rogers.

The boxing tournament for novices of the 1st Battalion Durham Light Infantry, which was held in the lines of the battalion at Lucknow on the 14th and 15th instant, was fixed to take place at an earlier date, but had to be postponed owing to the inclemency of the weather. It is many years since Lucknow has had such a heavy monsoon, but the first break in the rains was availed of to hold the tournament. There was a large attendance on each occasion and some excellent contests took place, the feature of the tournament being the special six-round contest on the second night between Corporal Strath, Royal Dragoons, and Bugler Harris, Durham Light Infantry. Both men gave a capital display, but Harris had to stop in the middle of the fifth round owing to his knee giving way. The Feather-weights final was won by Private Bills, the Middle-Weights by Private Gorman and the Light-Weights by Private Berry. The prizes were distributed at the close by Brevet-Major E. A. C. Blake, 1st Durham Light Infantry.

FEATHER-WEIGHTS.

First Round.

Lce.-Corpl. Dixon vs. Bugler Watson fought a bye.

Pte.-Laws vs. Pte. McDonald fought a bye.

Pte.-Burns vs. Pte. Price. The pace was too strong for Price, who was knocked out early in the first round.

Pte. Bills vs. Pte. Smith. Bills won on points.

Semi-Finals.

Pte. Burns vs. Lce.-Corpl. Dixon. Dixon was floored three times in the second round and had to give in.

Pte. Bills vs. Pte. Laws. An interesting contest. Bills was awarded the verdict.

Final.

Pte. Bills vs. Pte Burns. The men fought evenly in the opening round, both receiving punishment. Burns had to give in during the second round. Bills won.

LIGHT-WEIGHTS.

First Round.

Pte. Berry a bye.

Pte. Marshall vs. Pte. Wilson. Wilson was knocked out in the third round after a plucky fight.

Pte. Davis vs Pte Wilson. Davis won on points.

Pte. Mulraney vs. Pte. Sharkey. Mulraney got home on the point in the first round and Sharkey was counted out.

Semi-Finals.

Pte. Marshall vs. Pte. Davis. Davis was knocked out in the first round.

Pte. Mulraney vs. Pte. Berry. A well contested fight. Berry secured the verdict on points.

Final.

Pte. Marshall vs. Pte. Berry. Marshall made a good display, but was unfortunate in getting his arm out in the first round. Berry won.

MIDDLE-WEIGHTS.

First Round.

Pte. Gorman vs. Lce.-Corpl. Dawson. Dawson was knocked out in the second round.

Pte. Dixon vs. Pte. Clasper. The first two rounds were evenly contested. Dixon obtained the verdict on points in the third round.

Final.

Pte. Gorman vs. Pte. Dixon. Both men put up a good fight, though there was a tendency to hit recklessly, the aim of which being to obtain a knock out. Gorman secured the verdict.

SPECIAL SIX ROUND CONTESTS.

Pte. Dixon, 1st Durham Light Infantry, vs. Corpl. Winter, Royal Dragoons. Winter was a good deal older than his opponent and it was at once apparent that he stood very little chance against the younger man. After two minutes' fighting Dixon got in a swinging hit on the point and Winter was counted out. The loser was loudly cheered for his plucky stand against a younger man.

In the six-round Light-Weights contest between Corpl. Strath, Royal Dragoons, and Bugler Harris, Durham Light Infantry, both men displayed great cleverness. The first three rounds were evenly fought. Strath punished his opponent in the fourth round. Harris' knee gave way in the middle of the fifth round and he was obliged to give in.

SIX-ROUND CONTEST.

Pte. Bloomfield vs. Sergt. Slane. Slane was knocked out in the first round.

FOUR-ROUND CONTEST.

Pte. Clasper vs. Lce.-Corpl. Dawson. The first three rounds were uneventful. Clasper played a waiting game, and punished his opponent in the concluding round. Clasper was given the verdict.

BANGALORE HORSE AND DOG SHOW.

THE Bangalore Horse and Dog Show may be called practically the concluding chapter of the history of sport in Bangalore for the year. Not but what we are promised a bright little Gymkhana meeting on Tuesday, and it is certain to go, for there are lots of sporting subalterns who all swear by their own ponies and the management is in capable hands. However, the show is the last really important event, and it took place yesterday and to-day.

The Honorary Secretary, Mr. Swifte, of the Carabiniers, worked very hard and conscientiously to secure success and was well backed up by the Committee. The British Resident kindly lent the pretty grounds of the Residency for the show, on each morning the Carabiniers held practically open house so far as breakfast was concerned, and the British Resident himself was also most hospitable. On the afternoon of the first day the Gunners were "At Home" and on the second day the "Essex Regiment." So much for the open-hearted hospitality which prevailed. Of the social side of the business I do not pretend to write nor would it interest your readers. There were a good many ladies, very pretty frocks so far as I am qualified to judge, the bands of the Moplah Rifles and the Essex Regiment played by kind permission and that is all I know about the matter.

Turning to the sport, I get on to firmer ground. The Committee were fortunate in securing the services of three most experienced people as judges, who were quite unconnected with Bangalore or the horses shown. Mr. Murray Aynsley, the Hon'ble Mr. Hodgson and Mr. W. H. Sprott could hardly be beaten in these qualifications. Also Colonel Atkinson is new to the station and Captain Clarke and Major Brandreth came in from the Remount Depôt thirty miles out. With the one or two others who assisted, the judging department could hardly have been better filled. The weather was fine, but during Thursday and Friday nights it rained heavily, this rendering the ground very slippery and probably accounting for the comparatively poor display of jumping. There were four competitions in this line, Native Troops, British Troops, Horses and Ponies.

Taking the natives first, the riding can only be described—with the one notable exception of the winner—as villainous. It is no good to hang on to a horse's head hard and then whack him behind. The only native who knew how to ride a horse over jumps was Duffadar Natha Singh, and he rode more than nicely; sat still, gave his horse his head at the jumps and so on. Also Natha Singh can play polo; he is the trusted back of Gordon's Horse. Also he can tent peg and very much, also he is the mainstay of the Master of the Gordon's Horse Hounds, The conclusion? Duffadar Natha Singh is a sportsman heart and soul and one of the best. The jumping for British troops does not call for much remark. The ground was a bit slippery, there were three or four falls and one at the wall which looked nasty, but turned out all right. The prize winners rode their horses fairly well and that is all that can be honestly said. Coming to the open jumping for horses, at the first ride Dispute, nicely ridden by his owner, was three points ahead and this even after he had unfortunately dropped four legs into the water by a pure accident. But Major Barnard's ride off for second place on Mosquito was far and away the best ride of the show, and the bay horse is a really clever "lepper." As a matter of fact he had been pulled about by a native competitor in the morning and had scarcely recovered his equanimity at his first run. In the pony jumping Colonel Leader's Blue Belle won easily, and it was a most popular win, but Cornet, the second pony, was well ridden by Mr. Morris and jumped cleverly.

How can I go through the whole show. It should have been mentioned that there were two clean bolts in the pony jumping, and two gallant young officers, a Carabinier and a Gunner stuck to their mounts like men for a good mile and a half run-a-way on each occasion. The ground was difficult too on each occasion ropes, wire and the crowd getting in the way, but both came safely to an anchor, one being assisted by a hefty whack on the nose from the "brolly" of an uncommonly popular staff officer! At least we called them "brollies" at Eton. The show of horses as a whole was good, chargers and polo ponies particularly so and the latter almost superlatively. Fitzgrafton looked a perfect specimen of a thorough-bred horse and Mallard almost equally well, although he has been shoved along a bit of late. (Ahem! Watson is going to Poona and wants to get a line). Concerning ponies, and especially polo ponies, a senior officer who has loved both horse and hound for many a year, told me that he had never seen such quality in Southern India, and with this significant comment I must close these notes as to the Horse Show.

As regards the Dog Show it was run by Mr. Hamilton of the Essex Regiment, and was far better than anything of the sort which has been seen in former years. Scotch Stag hounds, a splendid Tibetan dog, really well valuable bull-dogs, pedigree fox-terriers and endless other varieties of really well-bred runs were in evidence, and Mr. Murray Aynsley, Jimmy Watson and their assistants had anything but a sinecure in the judging. Only in one particular did your correspondent differ from the judges. The Tibetan dog was an absolutely magnificent brute and seemed deserving of the prize for the best dog in the show. But there! The winning bull-dog was said to have cost £50 and there were other canine aristocrats that had their claims. So perhaps it was for the best. How is this for a notice that was actually put up by a (would-be) native competitor. "One wonderful Irish slut naturally born with no tail."

"Another wonderful Irish slut naturally with a very short tail."

An Irish terrier dog, 18 months old, with a terrible feature!

(On enquiry I discovered that the "terrible feature" meant his resemblance to a lion.)

STRAY NOTES.

THE juice of the green pineapple is accredited in Java, the Phillippines, and throughout the Far East generally, with being a blood poison of a most deadly nature. It is said to be the substance with which the Malays poison their kreeses and daggers, and to be also the "fingernail" poison formerly in use among aborigine Javanese women almost universally. These women cultivate a nail on each hand to a long, sharp point, and the least scratch from one of these was certain death.

Certain portions of the Arctic regions form a sort of natural refrigerator for the birds. In Northern Asia are great swamps in which during the brief Arctic summer flourish myriads of berry-bearing bushes, cranberries amongst others. When the berries ripen and fall, they are covered by the snow, which preserves them until the following summer. Then the snow melts, revealing billions of perfectly fresh berries, firm, cold, and sweet. This crop the birds, when they arrive, find spread before them like a magnificent banquet.

Everyone knows that it is the beaver's custom to dam up small streams and build their thatched and mud-plastered log-cabins on the margins of the ponds thus made. The dam is made of logs and trunks wattled together and filled in with stones and earth, the whole cunningly bent against the current to withstand the pressure of the water. It is frequently reinforced by other dams just below that back up the water against the first, and relieve it of a part of the pressure. As the water rises, the beavers watch the shores carefully, and every depression in the bank likely to lead the water off to one side is promptly blocked, and the pond at last brought to the desired level.

Timbuctoo used to be a region of which most Europeans had heard little and knew less. But that hazy time is past now. Timbuctoo is being proclaimed to the world as a Nimrod's paradise. Quite recently a small party of sportsmen, "bagged" five elephants in the Goune district. It is declared that in more than one district of eighteen miles square more than two hundred head of elephant may be found. Altogether, it is claimed for this part of French Africa that it is a splendid region for big game, and that the attention of sportsmen should be directed to it.

A society called the American Bison Society has been organised in the States for the purpose of the preservation of the American buffalo. The Society has issued a stirring appeal to the public to assist it with funds and sympathy to effect its object. The New York Zoological Society, also, has offered to place a herd of buffaloes in the Wichita Forest Reserve in Oklahoma, if the Government will fence in a suitable range of about twelve square miles in area in the district. The United States Government has, we learn, accepted the offer, and as soon as the fencing is complete, the herd will be placed on the range. There are at present several fair-sized herds of bison in the United States, but they are all in private hands, and as each year they are getting smaller, it was felt that unless some steps were taken at once to preserve the breed, the American bison would ere long become completely extinct.

For some years past Dr. Lindsay Johnson has been investigating the eyes of animals, and has made some valuable discoveries of great interest to zoology. One of the most remarkable of these researches is a confirmation of Darwin's theory that man is closely related to the primates. From his investigations, Dr. Johnson has found that the eyes of all apes, including man, are practically identical. Each has the highly complex system of veins and arteries, and the direct or parallel vision. According to this authority, the dog has two ancestors, one round-eyed and the other ovaleyed. The first is the hyena and the latter the bear, through the raccoon. All animals exposed to chase by enemies, such as the hare, rabbit, and squirrel, can see all around, and all the rodentia squint. The lower an animal in the scale, the further is its eye from parallel vision. According to this authority also, the corpus niger, or black body of pigment, in the eye of the horse, which has proved such a source of speculation to the naturalist, veterinarians, and zoologists, reveals through the opthalmoscope a new means of tracing the ancestry and relationship of the horse. The eye curtain is precisely the same as that which is found in all tropical animals, such as the onega, camel, antilope, etc., and fulfils one important function—the protection of the eye from sunlight. Dr. Johnson's researches, according to Professor Ray Lankester, the celebrated zoologist, will necessitate a reclassification in one section of zoology.

An interesting addition has been made to the Palæontological Gallery at the Natural History Museum, South Kensington, in the shape of a reconstruction of the skeleton of a pigmy hippopotamus. The fossil bones from which this skeleton has been made were brought from Cyprus as the result of excavations carried on there by Miss Dorothea Bate, a young lady who has earned considerable distinction as an explorer of the caves of Cyprus and Crete. The finding of the remains of the present specimen is of great scientific interest, in that they prove to belong to the smallest species of hippotami, and Miss Bate's work is, moreover, practically a rediscovery of an almost forgotten especies first noticed by Cuvier as long ago as the early part of last century, though the locality from which the species came was not previously known.

The greatest road builders in the world are a species of red ants found in South America. In building a road they carry minute particles of clay, with which they line all the roads as well as the galleries and passages of their nests till they look as smooth as if cemented by a master mason.

Some idea of their number can be formed when it is remembered that the whole of this road of their tree, perhaps nearly half a mile long, is densely thronged with a multitude going out empty and coming back with their umbrella-like burdens, while thousands upon thousands swarm in the doomed tree. This vast army is under splendid discipline. The drivers are constantly running up and down giving their orders to the workers, which they do by touching heads for a moment. The individual so touched will stop, turn back, hurry forward, or show in some such way that he is following some command. But a better proof of the discipline is found in the fact that when the army meets with an obstacle, such as a log or a large stone, there is a jam of ants on both sides, and they run about in dismay and disorder. Instantly the drivers hurry up, showing the greatest excitement, and run over, round and under the impediment to find the best way out of the difficulty. When they have decided, they lead off the line of march in the proper direction.

When a selection of a level piece of ground has been made, a perpendicular shaft some eight inches in diameter and six or seven feet deep is formed. This is for drainage and ventilation, never for ingress or egress. If the ground slopes, the shaft is horizonal, the mouth, of course, being at the bottom of the hill. From the perpendicular shaft, commencing at the bottom, radiate galleries, like the spokes of a wheel, set at a slight angle. At the end of each series of galleries' spokes a circular gallery is made, forming, as it were, a set of wheels, one above the other.

In, or rather above, these circular galleries the nests, or dwelling places, are constructed. These are oval in shape and about a foot long. The narrow end of the oval is downward and opens into a roof of the gallery, and as the spokes always slope slightly toward the shaft no tropical rains, no matter how heavy, can enter the homes and breeding places of the ant.

The Story Teller.

THE REFEREE'S REWARD.

THERE is no doubt that I was very much in love with pretty Lucy Blake.

She was acknowledged by all to be the belle of Stickley, one of the outlying suburbs of London, and the girls of my native Broomfield were simply not in the same street with her. All who knew her loved her, even more for her sweet nature than for her pretty face and dainty figure.

She was such a thorough "sportsman," too. She would never take any advantage offered her at games; on the golf links or tennis lawn, at billiards or cards, in croquet or cycling, she could take defeat with a quiet smile and own the superiority of her conqueror, or she could, and often did, win without undue conceit.

Needless to say, I was not the only one in love with her; and although she was 21 the following March, and it was then Christmas, she had not shown the slightest preference for any particular one of her numerous suitors. She was good chums with all; but what man in love was ever satisfied with a chum?

Now to introduce myself. My name is James Sargent. I had the questionable advantage of a public school and university education; had never distinguished myself particularly either at study or sport, and eventually had drifted into the Civil Service, in which I held a comfortable position, drew a comfortable salary, and led a comfortable life.

At the time of my story I was 30 years old, and although, through a couple of unfortunate accidents, I had retired from active participation in the more bustling sports, I often refereed at football matches, and, indeed, was appointed a referee to the South-West Suburban Football League, in which Broomfield and Stickley were running neck and neck for first place. This carried with it a gorgeous silver shield for the club and neat gold medals for the members of the team.

It was Christmas Day, and the weather being fine and the roads in good condition, I thought a cycle ride would improve my appetite for dinner.

Naturally I went towards Stickley, which was about four miles away, and greatly to my delight I had not gone far when I saw Lucy's well-known figure riding in front of me. She did not see me until I overtook her, and then she pretended to be very angry because I had caught her napping.

However, I appeased her wrath, and after passing the compliments of the season, soon found myself urging my suit with more than usual fervency. I pressed her for a decisive answer, and although she seemed half-inclined to yield, I suppose the natural coquetry there is in every woman would not allow her to give in without a struggle. At last she said—

"If Stickley head the league, I will marry you before nex football season."

This took the wind out of my sails altogether, for I was an ardent supporter of Broomfield, and she knew it. I pointed this out, and also that it was hardly fair to allow such a serious question to both of us to rest on the result of football matches in which a little luck may turn the advantage to either side. But I argued in vain, and at last, putting on a deliciously domineering air, she closed the discussion by saying—

"What I have said, I have said; I withdraw nothing; I qualify nothing."

Then we both laughed, and the matter ended for the time.

The months passed by, and at the end of March there was only one more game to be played in the league. That was Broomfield vs. Stickley, at Broomfield. Early in the season Broomfield had played a drawn game, one goal each, at Stickley and now were considered to have a good deal the better chance.

The league table read:—

	Plyd.	Won	Lost	Drn.	Goals For	Agst.	Pts.
Broomfield ...	19	13	1	5	43	13	30
Stickley ...	19	12	2	5	42	13	29

Thus it will be seen that the club I belonged to had the better record, the advantage of playing on their own ground, and had only to draw to win the championship.

All my friends were jubilant, and I tried to be so also, but it was a dismal failure. My club's success meant that I should never win my wife, for I knew Lucy would keep to her word.

The eventful day came at last and in the morning, while at work in my office, I was rung up on the telephone by Jimmy Stewart, the secretary of the league, who informed me that as the chosen referee was indisposed, I was to take charge of the match.

"But I am a member of Broomfield Club, I can't referee for their matches," I said.

"That doesn't matter. I have wired the Stickley Club, and they agree—say they have perfect confidence in your fairness, and prefer you to any of the others. And, you know, now Gunner's laid up, you are the best available man, and you've simply got to do it."

"Oh, all right! Ring off!" I replied, inwardly cursing the chance that placed me in such an awkward position.

I am afraid that for the rest of that morning the Government got very little work done. My mind was in a turmoil, and I was torn 50 different ways by conflicting ideas.

"Stickley must win; I am referee, and they shall win. But Lucy will be there—she knows the game well, and if I don't do the square thing, it will be all U. P. with her. Then I won't referee. I'll ring up Stewart and tell him so. Hang the man! Why did he pick on me?"

I rang him up, only to find he had gone out and was not expected back. Then I raved and finished up with the heroic resolve to do my duty fairly and leave the issue "on the knees of the gods."

The hours passed by. I went and ate a miserable lunch, and then took train to Broomfield. Lucy was on the ground, looking charming in a blue tailor-made costume, violet toque, and white furs (blue and white are the Stickley colours), and humbly I tendered my votive offering of blue and white violets, which were accepted with a pleasant smile. Blake here came up and greeted me heartily.

"Good afternoon, Sargent! Are we to have the pleasure of getting a good beating to-day?"

"I am afraid so—that is to say—er—let us hope it is a good game, anyhow," I said. "I am referee this afternoon."

"You! Referee!" exclaimed Lucy in a startled tone.

"Yes; Gunner is ill, and I have to take his place."

Just then the teams came on the field, and I had to hasten off to take up my duties.

It was a ding-dong struggle all through the first half. Broomfield got one goal and once the ball was netted for Stickley, but unfortunately the player was just off-side, and I was in a position to see it.

"Just my luck," I thought, as I gloomily gave a free kick; "if I had been anywhere else on the field I could not have seen it, and should, as was always my rule, have given the benefit of the doubt."

Half-time came at last, and in the interval I again had a few words with Lucy. But she was evidently nervous and excited, and I was miserable, so I was not sorry when the game restarted and my attention was given to it.

Again the teams were evenly matched, and the game swayed from end to end of the field without material advantage to either side.

Ten minutes to go and still Broomfield led.

The spectators were excitedly cheering their teams, and then the Stickley right wing put in a beautiful run, tricked the half-back, drew the back, and centred.

Like a flash the centre-forward swooped on the ball and banged it past the goalkeeper into the net. Joyfully my whistle went and I pointed to the centre of the field.

The Stickley contingent yelled themselves hoarse, and the excitement was taking hold of the players, who realized that these last few minutes would indeed be a tense struggle.

I looked at my watch—only eight minutes to go.

Immediately after the kick off Broomfield went down the field with a rush and simply rained shots on the Stickley goal. It seemed as if they must score; the defence, excepting the goalkeeper, for the time seemed paralysed. But the goalie rose to the occasion; he was always on the spot and made some marvellous saves. But it seemed a hopeless task.

Oh, if the time would only fly!

Five minutes still remained for play, and just then one of the Stickley backs fouled a Broomfield forward within the dread penalty area.

For an instant I hesitated. I would not give the penalty kick. Who could say I saw it foul? But it was only for a second I would win her fairly or not at all, and, blowing my whistle, I gave the penalty.

The teams drew off to each side and the goalkeeper stood in his charge, faced by the opposing centre-forward, who was taking the kick. The spectators were silently awaiting the issue with hope or apprehension.

But what hope was there? I knew the Broomfield man to be a sure and safe kick, and thought the game settled.

Again my whistle sounded, and as the man went for the ball the goalkeeper jumped about as though doing a savage war dance. I suppose this gymnastic display somewhat disconcerted the kicker, for he sent the ball straight at the goalkeeper, but with such force as to bring him to his knees to save it from going into the net.

However, he held it and threw it away, but before the shouts of the Stickley supporters had subsided a groan went up, for the ball fell at the feet of a Broomfield forward, who at once shot with all his might at the far corner of the goal.

Straight and true went the ball, but the goalkeeper, with a superhuman effort, flung himself across the goal, and lying full length on the ground, just managed to tip the ball round the post. It was a wonderful save, and the partisans of both sides gave a rousing cheer.

Three minutes only were left for play, and the danger was not over yet, for the corner kick had to be taken.

The excitement was intense; the rival factions among the spectators were cheering and counter cheering. Victory depended on this kick, and the players were fully alive to the critical situation.

The teams crowded round the goal, and as the ball came down there was a struggle. It was a splendid kick; the ball curled in the air and came dropping right into the goal mouth. But just in the nick of time the goalkeeper jumped, got both fists to the ball, and sent it a good 20 yards up the field.

The first to realize the position was the Stickley centre-forward, who sprinted for the ball, and he was the fastest man on the field.

In the excitement of the game both Broomfield backs had edged further and further into their opponents' territory until they were up with the other players. Now they saw their mistake, for there was no one but their goalkeeper to save the situation. Up the field flew the forward, after him pell mell both teams, a roar went up from the spectators, and excitement was at fever heat.

As the Broomfield goal was neared the keeper seemed inclined to run out. The forward saw this, and with splendid judgment kicked the ball just about halfway between himself and the goal.

Goalie could not resist the temptation and rushed for the ball. What a race it was! The game depended on which got there first. But the forward's lure was successful; he had placed the ball on the right spot and reached it a fraction of a second before the goalkeeper. He flicked it to one side, and before the other could recover himself, had dribbled the ball into the goal.

It was a grand effort, and the best piece of football I ever saw.

Just as the men had lined up again my whistle sounded for time, and the teams went off, the Stickley men chairing their goalkeeper and centre-forward, who had won them the game and the league championship.

When I saw Lucy our glances met, and we understood each other. She whispered to me—

"Jimmy, if you had not given that penalty, I should have hated you!"

I will not go into details of our love making, but somehow our story got about, and not the least valued of our wedding presents was a silver tray from players in the league as a memento of my impartial refereeing.

CHAPTER V.

Shooting in Ladak

WORDS can but inadequately describe the extraordinary formations and vivid colourings of the rocks between Miru and Gya.

The strata, consisting of alternate layers of shale and sandstone, are folded and contorted in the most complicated and intricate manner it is possible to imagine. At some places the outcrops of shale have been eaten away and disintegrated far quicker than the corresponding strata of sandstone, leaving them rising vertically, like titanic walls, separated by narrow passages or alleyways. The picture is an impressive one, bearing witness to the potent and invincible forces employed by nature in the architecture of the earth.

Only halting a few hours at Gya to change the ponies, we pushed on another six miles to the south-east. During the march next day, we saw two "nyan" (the native name for the Ovis Hodgsoni) a female and young one. In a valley running down to the Indus at Tiri village, we found an encampment of shepherds with large flocks of sheep and goats. We stopped here for two days, whilst in company with the two shikaris. I searched the tops of the surrounding hills for "nyan" and goa.

Close to the camp was a large pit, like a dried-up well, about 20 feet in diameter and only 5 feet deep. It was lined with stone, and the coping overhung around the top, which was flush with the ground. On enquiry, I discovered that it was a wolf trap, into which a dead sheep or bullock is thrown, in the hope of attracting some marauding wolf. Unable to resist such an enticing meal, he is supposed to jump into the pit, from which he is unable to get out again, falling an easy victim to rocks hurled at him next morning by the triumphant villagers. I was unable, however, to find anyone who had ever seen a wolf caught in a trap of this description. I was up before daylight, and soon fruitlessly scanning every valley and scarp for "nyan" or goa. The shikari from Upshi, said that they had all been frightened away by the flocks of sheep and goats which had been grazing on the mountain-sides in all directions. This was undoubtedly a fact, as it was not till two days later, a good many miles away, that I first saw any. "Pipasiring," the local shikari, knew of the whereabouts of a flock of bharal (Ovis Nahura) therefore I decided to try my luck with these. It was a stiff and arduous climb to the top of the hill which they were supposed to frequent, but everything, even this hill, had an ending, and at last, panting and breathless, we arrived at the summit.

A brief survey, followed by a closer scrutiny of the opposite slope, revealed a large flock of bharal, some of them carrying good heads, reclining amongst the boulders. No animal is more difficult to distinguish in its natural haunts than the bharal. The bluish-grey colour of its coat seems to exactly correspond with the colour of the rocks amongst which it loves to repose. They appeared to be in an easy place for a stalk, so without more ado, we commenced operations. However, partly through negligence, partly through over-confidence, we made a mess of it, and the whole flock disappeared over a ridge before I was able to obtain a shot.

Shortly afterwards a momentary glimpse was caught of a goa as it dashed helter-skelter down the slope. Running forward to a small hillock, we peered over the top, but it had vanished from sight.

The next day was again blank, nothing even being seen, neither bharal, goa, nor "nyan," so camp was moved about seven miles to a place known as Patatak.

Better luck was, however, in store for us on the morrow. In the early morning a large flock of about forty bharal was seen feeding in a hollow. After the usual creepy-crawly business, the telescope showed them to be all females or males with small heads and not worth pressing trigger at. Suddenly from the centre of the flock, a goa appeared, stood at gaze for a few seconds, and galloped off; the bharal streaming away in the opposite direction. We were quickly on the tracks of the little gazelle which led on to a gently undulating plain; making a slight circuit, so as to have the wind blowing from the right direction, we came to a slight dip in the ground. Crawling on all fours up the opposite slope, I slowly raised my head, and saw the object of our search, unsuspiciously grazing about eighty yards away. I am ashamed to say the first bullet from my 303 was a clean miss, the second, however, caught him just behind the shoulder, before he had had time to realise from which direction he had been fired at. They are pretty little beasts, like the ravine-deer of the plains, with small, but gracefully curving horns, which in this case measured 11½ inches on the outside curve, a fair head.

After this, we explored a large tract of country in search of "nyan" but without success. On the return journey towards camp we had occasion to pass the same place where in the morning we had seen the bharal. There they were again, but this time, several old males seemed to have joined the flock. Just as we had completed a stalk, which would have brought us within about fifty yards of them, a kyang, which had been hovering about, gave warning of our proximity, by furiously galloping down the straight in front of us.

Whilst my shikari was muttering curses against the animal, and all its relations unto the third and fourth generation, rifle in hand, I looked up to see what had happened. The whole flock were quickly moving off, and were now quite two hundred yards distant. Selecting what appeared to be the biggest ram, I let drive, and rolled him over. Running to the edge of the valley down which they had now disappeared, I fired several more ineffectual shots at another one as they straggled up the opposite slope. The horns of the one shot only measured 23 inches, but I hoped to get some bigger ones later on, in the Nubra Valley.

The following morning, 18th August, camp was moved to Chawur not far from the borders of the Tsokr Chumo lake. Whilst the caravan was on the march, K. by the aid of the telescope, spied a male "nyan" about four miles away to our left. Perhaps at last our patience was to be rewarded. Owing to the fact that many parallel and deep valleys intervened it was some five hours before we arrived at the spot where he had been seen. Slowly backwards and forwards we quartered the ground for fresh tracks; except those of the inevitable and ubiquitous kyang, none were visible. I was beginning to think that friend K. had been mistaken, and that after all it was only one of these wild horses that he had seen; so, handing him my rifle, I wandered somewhat further afield with the intention of examining more of the surrounding country. It was the same old story; no sooner had I relinquished my rifle, than up jumped the ram, who had been lying down not more than thirty yards from me.

Cursing my stupidity, I shouted to K. to bring the rifle. But it was too late; before I could gain possession of it, I had the mortification of seeing the object of many weary days' search, clatter down the slope, and disappear from sight in the valley below. Hope mingling with despair, we dashed along the summit of the spur, but could see no signs of him anywhere. K. and Pipasiring, climbing a little lower down to obtain a better view of the valley below, to my horror put him up again. This was too much! He would never stop again until he had placed many miles between us, so, although he was between four and five hundred yards away, and my rifle was only sighted to 300 yards, throwing discretion to the winds, and trusting to luck, I took a very full sight, and fired. As was to be expected, a spurt of dust proclaimed the bullet to have hit the ground about fifty yards below him. Despondently, aiming higher, I let him have the left barrel as he was climbing the face of the opposite hill, scarcely troubling to observe where the bullet struck.

Speechless with vexation, my soul filled with bitterness, a bitterness which, I suppose, comes to every keen sportsman when he has bungled a stalk, I sat up and for a little watched him as he went.....Ah! if only I had only used a little more discretion when we were looking for his trace, instead of wandering aimlessly about. If only I had stuck to my rifle; and the crowning folly of all, if only I had gone down the nullah a bit lower myself, instead of sending my men to see if he was there. All might have been different, if only..... "sahib lugga!" came from K., startling me from my reverie.

There could be no doubt about it, for on looking through the telescope, the poor beast was still to be seen toiling up the steep incline, every now and then, halting to recover himself; so my last shot, by an extraordinary bit of luck, had hit him after all.

Telling Pipasiring to follow slowly on the trail, K. and I raced down the hill-side to the bottom of the valley and up a side nullah to try and cut off the wounded animal. Both arriving at the summit almost simultaneously, and only about 200 yards apart, we saw as he stood for a few moments to rest at the top of the hill that he had been hit far back. Knowing that the other man would be soon approaching on the trail and would start him off again, I fired, but was so out of breath that I missed him. A long stern chase ensued, entailing a vast expenditure ammunition, till eventually with only two cartridges left I got within one hundred yards waited for nearly twenty minutes to recover my breath, and put the poor beast out of his misery, by a well-directed bullet.

The horns were very much broken away at the tips, and only measured 37 inches, but would probably have taped 40 inches if they had not been broken; however, I was lucky to get one at all as he was the only ram I had seen or saw during the trip.

Returning to camp I found a coolie had arrived with my letters and newspapers. The next four days were spent in marching back to Leh, unsuccessfully searching for bharal on the way.

The first march on the return journey took us to Tinksul encampment in the Tiri valley. Here, I purchased for the sum of two rupees a Ladaki sheep-dog, a puppy about six months old. Somewhat shy and snappy at first, he soon became most amicable, "Teaser" and he in a short time becoming firm friends.

"Tiri"—as I had named the new arrival—being young and frolicsome, was, however, at times rather a source of annoyance to old "Teaser," who took life more seriously, as he was perpetually wanting to play and romp, and being much the bigger of the two, poor "Teaser" used to sometimes have a rough time of it.

On arrival at Gya, I shot several pigeons, large flocks of which were feeding in the corn. In a valley just before this, we had seen a flock of eight female and three young "nyan."

It was fifty-nine days after leaving, that we again entered the capital of Ladak, having in that time covered, approximately, a distance of 705 miles.

Since leaving Srinagar, 974 miles had been traversed, four halts of one, and one halt of two days only being made.

CLUB SHOOTINGS IN AMERICA.

AMERICAN sportsmen led the way in the creation of game parks and shooting reserves on a large scale, and they appear likely to continue the judicious policy of "nursing" the game stocks of their country. There is every reason why they should do so: though the area of the United States is so enormous it is being steadily taken up, year by year, as farmers and ranche men seek new ground as cities grow up and mining centres develop. There are, fortunately for the sportsman, great ranges of barren and mountainous country interspersed with woodland and forest where the distinctive game of North America, the bears, deer, and other animals, still remain almost undisturbed rather by grace of the inaccessibility of their haunts than by the respect of the solitary hunter or prospector for the elaborate game laws. What his private shooting is to the wealthy Briton in the old country, so is the "club" shooting to the American sportsmen. Few Americans of wealth have leisure, or perhaps inclination to take up and preserve a tract of country for shooting purposes at their own cost, and the club shooting is the resource upon which men of sporting tastes and average means are obliged to depend. We do not know that the obligation involves much hardship! Let us take, as an example, the most recent of these enterprises, that of Western North Carolina, in which region a club was established last year. This body has secured exclusive "hunting" and fishing privileges over a larger area of wilderness than any similar body in the United States, the tracts held covering about quarter of a million acres or 400 square miles, most of it covered with forest and some 1,200 miles of trout and bass waters. The territory includes many of the highest mountains east of the Rockies and no doubt the big horn and white goat are to be found thereon. A great part of the land has been rented from the lumber companies who hold the cutting rights, but the operations of these bodies are not likely to interfere with the game preservation which is the first business of such a club. The work of the American shooting club in point of fact is little more than enforcing obedience to the game laws which, as we all know, do more than prescribe close seasons: they discriminate in most States between residents and strangers much to the advantage of the former. There are the dwellers in these regions to be considered: the Legislature cannot deprive them of their shooting and fishing rights when a club makes arrangements to enjoy the "exclusive" right to sport: exclusive must be understood in a limited sense: and the game wardens or keepers, to whom the preservation business is entrusted, can do no more than see to it that the mountaineers obey the State game laws. Should they be detected in breaches thereof the courts may in most cases be depended on to deal very severely with them. We read the other day in Forest and Stream that a man who had killed a mountain sheep in Colorado had been mulcted $450 in fine and costs: this animal has been absolutely protected in Colorado for a number of years and are now slowly increasing. When the American poacher comes before a sporting Judge he may look for small consideration. Over the tract acquired by the Carolina Club, we read, "game protection has always been a farce;"

in some districts deer and turkey have, in the expressive American phrase, been "hogged out;" and need a few years of rigorous protection to recover their former plenty.

The shooting club necessarily accepts certain responsibilities when it acquires certain privileges. It undertakes to provide the staff necessary to enforce observation of the game laws; though it would naturally make this matter its first care in the interests of the members. It also undertakes to protect the forests from fire; to restock waters with fish and the lands with game. The former operation is easy enough in a country where the culture of game fish has for years been carried on at numerous centres on a mammoth scale; the restocking of lands, we confess, seems to present difficulties since there are laws which forbid the carriage of game from one State to another.

The necessity for creating new game preserves in the remoter parts of the continent is emphasised by a circumstance which was recently discussed in the American sporting press. Many years ago a Mr. W. H. Jackson took up land near Nashville, Tennessee, and "parked" there a considerable herd of deer. Mr. Jackson seems to have been one of the pioneer farmers or cattle men, for the herd is mentioned as having roamed the park almost since the days of the red man. Now "the hand of progress and modern civilisation has grasped Belle Meade Deer Park" the work of road making goes on apace and the land is wanted for building purposes. The executor of the late owner was in a difficulty about the deer which numbered between 250 and 400 head—the vagueness of the census indicates the wildness of the animals. It was not possible to catch and sell them; and as they had been valued at $10 a head he could not reconcile it with his duty to the estate he administered to destroy them. From this rather unusual impasse the administrator was rescued by the State Game Warden, Colonel Acklen: that judicious official, mindful that deer in the mountains of Tennessee are now become very scare, propounded a scheme for the purchase of the Belle Meade herd and turning it loose to scatter over the country. This wise proposition of the Game Warden was qualified by the fact that the administrator could not give the deer away and that the official had no funds wherewith to buy them: the obstacle, however, was overcome, Mr. Jackson's trustee accepting $600 for the herd on the condition that they should be released within the boundaries of the State. Various sportsmen were appealed to, the money was found, and the thing has been carried through. By the time these lines appear in print the Belle Meade herd will no doubt have been broken up and guided to those districts where they are most in request. This method of utilising a game reserve which has ceased to be required by its owner, or has been overtaken by the relentless march of civilisation, seems to furnish a new and potent argument in favour of these institutions: it is a pity that the Belle Meade Park could not have been kept going, on perhaps a reduced scale, to serve as a stud farm whence the wilder districts of the State could be replenished with deer from time to time as required; but failing this the park has been made to serve the best possible ultimate purpose. Drastic measures were to be taken for the sufficient protection of the released deer for a time, and the interchange of blood between the Park bred herds and the strictly wild deer cannot fail to prove beneficial to the local race.

DOCKING PONIES' TAILS.

IN our issue of 12th July last we published an article under the above heading. We have been given to understand that this monograph has led to considerable misconception in certain quarters and we will now endeavour to rectify to the best of our ability this misunderstanding. It will be remembered that at the last meeting of the Burma Polo Association it was resolved that after the 31st December 1906, no certificate should be given to any pony with a docked tail which might be brought up for measurement.

We pointed out that this was likely to injuriously restrict the market for Waler ponies, and consequently it might be to someone's distinct advantage to introduce batches of country-breds judiciously in place of the ousted docked pony.

We further stated that we should not be at all surprised if it came to our ears that a certain mercantile firm in Rangoon about next January or February had made extensive arrangements to ship country-bred's from India in place of the boycotted docked Waler. We should have thought it quite superfluous to mention it, but as certain injustice has been committed we will state, for the benefit of our readers that the someone was certainly not the proposer of the resolution, and moreover that he was not even a member of the B. P. A. and that the mercantile firm, as far as we are aware, had no connection whatsoever with the proposer of the rule. As a matter of fact the scheme was being discussed by a totally different party in a railway carriage when our identity was unknown, and caused us a considerable amount of surprise.

Philanthropy and humanitarian principles are excellent things but it should also be kept in mind that the world is a wicked one and that the racer for wealth usually ignores both.

Sporting Notes.

IN our "Shikar" columns to-day we publish in extenso the recent notification regarding the amended Game Laws for the U. P. These are to supersede those passed in June last year and in respect of which a good deal of dissatisfaction arose in many quarters. We shall be glad to publish any comments our readers may care to make.

It is not often one hears of an elephant getting hydrophobia: a case occurred the other day at Palghaut where a large and valuable tusker succumbed to the malady after having been bitten on the trunk by a mad dog.

The Dehra Autumn Races have been fixed for the 11th and 13th October, first entries closing on the 9th September.

As will be seen by details in our English Sporting letter the Brighton meeting was marred by a couple of bad accidents. In the Brighton Stakes Horn Head fell during the race and gave his rider a nasty spill. Otto Madden was the victim of a sudden attack by a racehorse. Going down to the post on Centre for the Worthing Plate he was seized by Marigold IV., who pulled him out of the saddle by the neck and shook him as a dog would a rat. Releasing his hold he tried to kneel on him, but Brady, his rider, belaboured him about the head and caused him to desist. Madden was immediately attended to and when the mail left his condition, in all the circumstances, was perfectly satisfactory. In addition to severe laceration to his neck, the whole of the upper part of his body was very badly bruised, and he was sore all over. The shock to his system was great and it is likely to be some time before he can resume siding.

Great Scot ran in the Chesterfield Cup on the last day at Goodwood and finished last. Gold Riach, Velocity and Chauser filled the situations in the order named: the winner carried 7st. 12lbs. and Mr. Apcar's horse 9st. Alluding to the race "Vigilant" writes in The Sportsman.—"I do not think that Great Scot, who finished last, will do any good on a racecourse in this country, though he should be very valuable at the stud, being by Lochiel, the best horse ever got by the famous Prince Charlie."

The gods of the Turf were kind to Sysonby, son of Melton, so that the record of his achievements stood out pre-eminent among American thoroughbreds. The living Sysonby occupied the place of highest honour in the affections and confidence of the great sport-loving public—in death his distinction is to be no less notable. The American Museum of Natural History in New York has offered to mount the skeleton of the king of modern runners and place it in the most prominent niche in the Horse Alcove, and Mr. James R. Keene, who held for Sysonby an affection in no wise dependable upon the big bay's money earning performances has given a pleased acceptance.

This will be the first time the bones of a racehorse have been placed on exhibition at the American Museum of Natural History, and the officials there say it will be the last time. Sysonby has been selected for this unique preferment because, to a greater degree than any other racer, he typifies the highest development of the thoroughbred.

The members of the Western India Turf Club will hold their half-yearly general meeting at Poona on the 29th proximo. In addition to the ordinary business certain proposed alterations in the rules of racing will be discussed: We quote from the agenda paper:—

Rule 1. To delete the present definition of a "Maiden" and to substitute:—

"A 'Maiden' is a horse which has never won a race (value Rs. 50), other than a match or private sweepstakes at any recognised meeting in India or any other country."

Rule 91 (ii) (c) To delete clause (c):—

"When a penalty is imposed on winners of one or more races or on winners of an aggregate value, or on winners of a fixed sum without specifying the value of the race to be taken into account, the penalty shall apply only to winners of races in any country of the value of Rs. 200 and upwards, unless it is imposed in a race confined to Maidens, in which case it shall apply to winners of races of the value of Rs. 50 and upwards."

Rule 71. Delete the para :—

"The fees to Native Jockeys shall be half the amount allowed to other Jockeys, and substitute :—

"The fees to Native Jockeys who have won a flat race of the value of Rs. 500 or upwards shall be half the amount allowed to other Jockeys.

"The fees of Native Jockeys who have not won a flat race value Rs. 500 or upwards shall be :—

"For a winning mount on the flat Rs. 20. For a losing mount on the flat Rs. 10 irrespective of the value of the race.

"The fees for a winning and losing mount respectively in a hurdle race or steeplechase are double the amounts allowed in a flat race."

We have reached the end of the first series of the Calcutta Monsoon Races, and may pause and look around us before embarking on the second series which commences on Saturday week with the Fifth Monsoon Meeting, for which and for the following meetings the progammes made their appearance at the beginning of this week.

The total value of stakes at these four meetings of the Calcutta Turf Club amount to Rs. 27,900. This has been distributed among no less than thirty-three owners, though some of these have only secured but a few of the crumbs that fall from the rich man's table, while of the horses, fifty-two in all have brought in something or other towards paying for their corn bills. Rs. 2,000 has been annexed by Hoop Iron as the result of his two wins in the open hurdle races: there are four others which have secured over Rs. 1,200 including that smart little horse Cyril with Rs. 1,750, Solace, with Rs. 1,650 and Duplex II with Rs. 1,500, each of them having won a couple of races apiece. The next best winner is that game little hurdler Gleam with Rs. 1,300 to her credit, having run a dead heat on Saturday last in the open hurdle race after having won the Amateur Hurdle Race the previous week and run second to Lady Gold in the Amateur Hurdle Race at the second meeting. Last year she had two wins and a dead heat first to her credit in the Amateur Hurdle Races.

J. D. Scott up to date heads the list of winning owners with Rs. 4,550 to his credit for five wins plus place money. Mr. J. C. Galstaun runs him a close second with Rs. 4,425, while the only other owner to exceed Rs. 2,000 is Mr. Field. The appended lists show the present positions of owners and horses :—

The S. S. Wardha arrived in Calcutta on Saturday with a number of race horses. Mr. Potter came up on board her, and though he has only brought a few there are said to be two or three pretty smart ones among them, notably that well-known sprinter Lady Metal. She is a very strong big boned brown mare, broad chested, with the regular Metal head. Mr. H. E. Smith has a nice chestnut hurdler called Uriel, and a very smart 13-1 little racing pony called Native, destined for Burma. In addition to these there is a compact paperchaser for Mr. Dudley Myers. These horses are stabled at Smallman's, so also is Ulison, a big brown, said to be a very good performer. Steve Margrett has also sent up a couple of racers to the charge of Smallman, one of them. Spero, being by Grafton out of Esperence, well enough bred for anyone, Grafton being second to the late Lochiel in the Australian list of winning stallions, while Esperence is the dam of Dalkeith. He has landed well, but the other, St. Michael, has landed rather poor; the latter is out of Harmonist, that used to race here some while ago and was trained by Heywood. Up till the end of last year Spero had won only three races, the largest being a £100 race over a mile.

Mr. R. B. Lamo te also arrived by this boat and has brought several nice horses with him, including a 16-2 for Colonel MacAndrew and something pretty smart also in the paperchase line for Mrs. Paris. Mr. O. M. D. Bell was on board too, with Coin II., a champion pony for the Maharajah of Cooch Behar who, we understand, paid a long price for it, and a number of others.

Mr. Torr, who buys in Australia for the Indian market, has just made a couple of useful purchases in the brilliant pony Windy, and a mare called Sweet Marie. Since purchasing them they have each won a race. The pony Windy cost 380 guineas and has already been resold to Mr. Dartmoor, and will go to Heywood upon its arrival in India.

The Calcutta Fourth Monsoon was concluded on Saturday last and can well claim to be one of the most successful meetings we have had, with a series of exceptionally close finishes in nearly all the races, for which our new handicapper deserves full credit, especially as the afternoon served up several surprises, in fact in the last two races two rank outsiders got home. On these the totalisator paid the very remunerative dividends of Rs. 175 and Rs. 144 respectively. The handicapper comes out top when not a single favourite gets home during the whole of an afternoon and this is what took place on Saturday last, as every favourite went down throughout the whole card, and three fancied ones managed to get nothing better than second money. The going was very heavy and holding, which doubtless accounted in a great measure for the undoing of so many good things.

The rain kept off except for one light shower half way through, and the afternoon afforded a series of as close finishes as one could wish to see anywhere, except in the first race of the day, the pony hurdle race, the judge's verdict being :—

2nd Race— ¾ length, ½ length, 1 length
3rd Race—Dead Heat. 4 lengths, 1½ lengths.
4th Race—2½ lengths, ½ length, Short head.
5th Race—1½ lengths, 1 length, ½ length.
6th Race—A head, A neck, A neck.
7th Race—A head, ½ length, A neck

No one could wish for much closer racing than this.

The first race of the day was the Zeerut Plate and the four starters were a very scratch lot, Bones running very disappointingly, so also did Discussion whom we understand to be about finished. This gave Whitefoot things all to himself; he warmed up in the soft going, though he was pretty sure when he started, and won by 8 lengths from Pineal, who started at 10 to 1, pretty good odds in a field of four.

The Maidan Plate came next, and here was one of the upsets of the afternoon as the little fancied Ivanhoe II. won very comfortably by three-quarters of a length. He is an unmanageable brute to ride and at the distance he carried R. Morrison clean across the course right on to the outside rail along which he finished with Rezia second, half a length in front of Wal.

Last week the open hurdle race afforded a magnificent finish between the three out of the four competitors—Hoop Iron, Pope and Scotch Thistle and the Belvedere Plate gave us as fine a finish between Gleam and Parole, while of the former trio Pope finished dead last: the other two were absentees. A curious feature of the two hurdle races was that the two most fancied in each race finished last in their respective engagements. Bucentaur, who was considered a good thing and Pope being the two delinquents in the latter instance. Pope was never allowed to get clear of his field and after the fourth hurdle resigned the lead to Parole, who led into the straight, closely followed by Gleam, Harold and Rustler. Between the last two hurdles

Gleam collared Parole and actually led after the last hurdle, but Parole just got up again, the verdict being given as a dead heat. From the stand it looked as if Parole, the nearer horse, had won; but this is constantly the case as the finish to the hurdle race course is at a decided angle to the stand. Mr. Galstaun's pair, Rustler and Harold, finished next behind the dead heaters, Rustler being the nearest, four lengths away. This is J. White's first win in India, and he thoroughly deserved it after his two falls at the Second Meeting. Mr. Evers rode a great race on that game old mare Gleam.

The first detachment of the Oriental Plate figured next in the programme, all the ten nominations going to the post. Favoured by the heavy going and his light impost that well turned little horse, Cyril, scored a fairly easy win by two and a half lengths, outstaying the favourite Warstripe at the finish. Cyril is an own brother to Old Chappie, who ran second in one of last year's Grand National Hurdle Races in Australia. Mr. Galstaun on Bouquet finished within half a length of Warstripe, only a short head in front of his own horse old Springlock, who does seem quite capable of scoring this year.

In the Pony Handicap J. D. Scott elected to go with Kathleen II. on the strength of her being reported to have laid but Duplex II. in a trial. However she failed to act in the mud and finished almost last. The Chump also resigned in favour of Solace, which was considered the softest thing of the day and so she went out at evens. The stable unfortunately overlooked the improving English youngster Silphoe, who, ridden by his owner Mr. Galstaun laid out Solace by one and a half lengths, who finished a length in front of Marie Lloyd with Ping Pong fourth. The first, third, and fourth ponies in this race have all been summering up in Darjeeling at Singamari under Mr. Price's charge, which speaks well for the care he has taken of them.

Devil's Limit was the favourite in the Oriental Plate Number II., but she again proved a disappointment to her backers finishing as she did fourth only, while Downland, who also was fancied, failed to score. This race proved a considerable upset as Winklet surprised them all by coming out and giving Murdiston a win by a head, though the stable had nothing on the little horse. It looked, however, as if Lord D coming on the outside, as he did, was going to beat him or dead-heat with him. Lord D only finished a neck in front of Swindle, who looked like winning till his wind got him into difficulties at the distance. A neck also divided Swindle from Devil's Limit at the finish: this was absolutely first class.

And so it was in the last race of the day in the Entally Plate, when that old screw Bundook managed to get home by a head only in front of J. D. Scott's Lady Viola. Bundook's royal breeding, being by Persimmon, doubtless carried him through in this case. Wake Up, the favourite, only got third place with old Oom Paul fourth. This race was a regular collection of fossils.

The programmes for the next three Monsoon Meetings have made their appearance, and there is an intimation that there may possibly be another meeting—an eighth—on 6th October. There is only one more open hurdle race advertised and that is at the Sixth Meeting on 15th September. The "G. R. contingent" is well catered for with a hurdle race for horses at the Fifth and Sixth Meetings and a flat race at the Seventh, called the Amateur Handicap Plate, while for ponies they have a Pony Amateur Hurdle Race at the Fifth Meeting, followed by a Pony Flat Race at the Sixth Meeting. These races, of course, are all of the value of Rs. 500 and are for horses, or ponies, that have never won Rs. 500.

At the Fifth Meeting there is a 7-furlong race for horses, which have not won flat race over Rs. 500 since March, 1904, the remaining races being 6-furlong races, one for horses and one for 14-1's and under to be sold for Rs. 750, while the other race is for 14-2's. All these are Rs. 750 races.

At the Sixth Meeting, besides what we have already mentioned, there is a Rs. 1,000 7-furlong race for horses, a Giant Pony Plate of 5 furlongs and a 5-furlong flat race for horses, which have not won since March, 1904. At the Seventh Meeting, besides the Amateur Handicap Plate, there is the Poojah Plate of 6 furlongs of Rs. 1,000, there is a Rs. 750.14 2 pony race of 7 furlongs and a Horse Selling Race of 5 furlongs, of the same value. The two concluding races on the card are Consolation Races for horses and ponies of the value of Rs. 500, both of 5 furlongs for horses and ponies which have run at the Calcutta Monsoon Races, 1906, and which have not won either a flat race or hurdle race.

The doggy section of the Bombay sporting world and many other friends all over India will regret to hear of the death of Mr. George May from dysentery. His illness was very short, only last week he was making all arrangements for shows in the near future. Presumably his kennel will not be represented at Quetta and Mussoorie now. It was Mr. May who started the Bombay Kennel Association and he had very much to do with the success of the Dog Show there both with valuable advice and by the excellence of his exhibits which did much to keep up the standard of the show.

Messrs. Watts and Co., the renowned saddlers of Calcutta, have just moved into their new premises, No. 3, Dalhousie Square, East. Together with several other old established firms they have been turned out by the Government building operations which affect the vicinity of Government House, and it must have been a big wrench when they had to quit the comfortable premises in which they have carried on business for more than half a century. But they are well placed in their new quarters and when they have had time to settle down both they and their customers will doubtless appreciate the change, for at any rate there seems to be no lack of modern conveniences and up-to-date appliances about the new place. We wish the firm continued prosperity and trust our old friend, the hardy and genial "Jack" Eyears and his coadjutors may find that though "the old order changeth," success goes on without interruption.

At Poona recently the air has been full of conflicting rumours regarding the alleged misconduct of certain jockeys and the action taken by the stewards; we have so far failed in our endeavours to elicit anything definite and rather than place before our readers a garbled version of what has been happening we prefer to await information which we hope will be forthcoming in a few days. Meanwhile, by way of something to go on with, the Poona executive have issued the following notice, said to be the outcome of certain "signalling operations" by a jockey riding in the Monsoon Plate at the Third Extra Meeting: "The Stewards give notice that any jockey or person proved to their satisfaction to have made or to have connived at the making of any signal or sign of any description from the starting gate or elsewhere for the purpose of giving information will be warned off the Poona and Bombay course or other places where these rules are in force." Attention is also called to race rules 113 and 153 with its five clauses.

From British Columbia, the home of the Indian chiefs who are now in London to lay certain grievances before the King, comes a somewhat "steep" fish story. An angler was fishing for trout in one of the splendid rivers of that part of Canada. Several deer swam past his boat. A fine buck carried away the fishing-line on its horns. The angler went in pursuit, and eventually killed the buck. Then he made the discovery that during the chase a big trout had got on the hook. The deer weighed 200lbs. and the trout 10lbs.! Next!

Mr. Ernest Thompson Seton, a careful and painstaking observer, has recently stated that the speed of antelopes and of other wild animals is usually over-estimated It is in no case so great as that of a racehorse. The record for a mile set up by a racehorse is Caiman's mile in 1min. 38⅘ secs.; and that, Mr. Seton thinks, is probably the fastest pace recorded for anything afoot. It works out at over 36 miles an hour. Thirty-four miles an hour is, however, a more usual speed for a swift racehorse, and that is swifter than the prong-horned antelope, the speed of which Mr. Seton has worked out at 32 miles an hour. Lower in the scale come the greyhound with 30 miles, the Texan jackrabbit with 28 miles, the common fox with 26 miles, the northern coyote with 24 miles, the foxhound with 22 miles, and the American grey wolf with 20 miles. Man's fastest pace of something under ten seconds for a hundred yards works out at the rate of 21⅓ miles an hour, but his fastest "mile," 4mins. 12secs., is only 14 miles an hour. What, however, is the strong point with fleet animals is not their rate of speed, but the quickness with which they can get up full speed. This, their "muzzle velocity," is indeed a matter of life and death to them, for most predaceous creatures, especially the cats, give up the chase at once if they fail on the first dash.

Some amusing "howlers" have been written by school children in their essays on subjects relating to the farm-yard, for competition at the annual show of the Royal Lancashire Agriculture Society at Preston. Here are a few extra-funny ones:—"A young cow is sometimes called an ox." "The butcher kills the cow for its heart and lights." "Everything that lives on a farm are called cattle." "When a cow is alive it is used for to get milk, but when it is dead it is used for to get mutton." "In winter the farmer milks the goat and calls it condensed milk." "A young horse is called a donkey. A horse under twenty hands is called a pony." "Some donkeys are made ones, and others are not." "The flesh of the lamb is called veal." "In Africa the sheep's tails are not cut off, but the ends is made into butter." "If you put some eggs under the hen you will get young ones in three weeks' time. We cannot keep doing that with the cock, because it will not sit. We do not only get hens from the hen, but we get cocks as well."

That smart jump horse, Last Post, owned by Captain Leighton, of the Royal Dragoons, died at Poona suddenly on Tuesday. He was expected to do well in the military jump races.

The Bangalore Gymkhana race meeting, which was unavoidably postponed from last week owing to torrential rain, did not provide very exciting sport, but nevertheless it was great fun. In the "Bangalore Cup," two Carabinier and one R. A. subaltern came to grief, and Mr. Webster's looked a nasty fall. He was, as a matter of fact, slightly dazed by it, but his topee and the abundance of grass at present on the course prevented the damage being serious. Three animals from Wishart's training stable came out for the Substitution Race, all being apparently more or less "butchas." Stepaway, the winner, showed a lot of quality and won her race with consummate ease. There is not very much going on in the way of sport with the notable exception of the Gordon's Horse Hounds. Trap-shooting is being indulged in to some extent, but people do not seem very keen about it.

Athletic Notes.

WE are sorry to observe that things have gone from bad to worse in the Calcutta Swimming Club and the Committee have decided to abandon the Annual Autumn Meeting owing to the paucity of racing men. Only two faced the starter in the 100 yards handicap last week, and the race previous to this—the Variety Handicap—had to be cancelled owing to want of entries, and this, in a Bath with some three hundred members!

The Swimming Club is sadly in want of new blood to keep things moving. The older swimmers who raced seven and eight years ago cannot be expected to go on like Tennyson's brook, for ever, and though there are plenty of new members who would shape well there seems to be a lack of enterprise amongst them. They are quite content to look on, but racing is apparently too much fag. We think it would be a good thing if the Club were to take a rest next year and have no races whatever. Members would then probably clamour for competitions.

There have been some rather good billiard matches played at Lucknow lately. Private Black of the Durham L. I. took 250 points in a 750 up game against Mike Elias, "Champion of India"—whatever that may mean in this connection—and in a tight finish ran out a winner by 4 points. The defeated champion next took on the head marker at the Mahomed Bagh Club, gave him 80 in 200 and beat him.

No entrants having come forward for the Class Fours at the regatta fixed by the Calcutta Rowing Club for the 1st proximo, the fixture is off. After all it is doubtful whether the race could have been rowed on the present course, for with two crews abreast the outside blades would frequently be buried in the mud which has now encroached to such an extent as to render rowing unpleasant and racing impossible. The mud-larks are relentlessly carrying out their fell work, the filling in at the north end of the canal has reached to within a few yards of the C. R. C. pontoons; but we believe the question of a new site for the boat houses is now engaging the serious attention of the Vice-Chairman of the Port Commissioners and the Executive of the Club, and soon we hope to hear that the present anxieties of the members have been removed.

The Aga Khan Motor Trials were concluded on Thursday. Twenty-seven cars started and there were many casualities. The following were declared winners:—Lieutenant Ross, 10th Hussars, 10 h.-p. Renault; Mr. Fazulbhoy, Darracq; the Maharaja of Gwalior, 24 h.-p. Wolseley, and Mr. Simcox, I.C.S. 18 h.-p. S. and L.

Stinkle, stinkle, motor-car,
What a wretched thing you are!
Breaking roads up through the town,
When you are not breaking down!

Braving cabmen's persiflage
Out you rush from wild garage,
With rude sound and fury fraught
Cruel modern Juggernaut!

How shall we escape the reek
As you bubble, groan, and squeak?
Goggled driver, fouling air,
Hear us when we humbly swear!

Stinkle, stinkle, motor-car,
As our nerves you daily jar—
Imp of Hades—only worse—
Take our everlasting curse!

Dr. T. Clifford Allbutt's vigorous vindication of athletic games in an oration delivered on the Leeds Grammar School Speech Day will, remarks The Field, be welcomed for its statement of the disciplinary value of what too many persons persist in regarding as mere forms of amusement. His words will have the greater weight because, as Regius Professor of Physics at Cambridge, he is not likely to be insensible to the claims upon schoolboys' time of the study of science and other features of the modern curriculum which are supposed to be neglected in favour of school games. The Professor, however, while stating his case in a humorous manner, went so far as to advocate a law prohibiting men from playing golf until they are over thirty-five years of age, and expressed his dislike to seeing undergraduates playing tennis seriously—though one might consider playing frivolously to be much more culpable. In adding that he did not think games in which the player could not hurt himself or others to be of any use, Dr. Allbutt again indulged in hyperbole, adopting, as he did, the sentiments which have embalmed a certain popular stanza of the Australian versifier Lindsay Gordon, in spite of its very prosy phraseology. It could not be very seriously maintained that the value of a game is proportionate to the opportunities it offers of doing bodily harm to an opponent, nor, whatever may be the shortcomings of golf and lawn tennis as school games, can it be contended that their ethical product is absolutely nil. The defenders of these sports may console themselves by reflecting that, after all, Dr. Allbutt does not go as far as Mr. Rowland Hill and the Rugby Union Committee when they condemned Association football and hockey in an indiscriminate list of amusements that do not afford sufficient exercise or "healthy clearance of the system."

After reviewing the exhaustive experiments with all kinds, of moorum, tar, petroleum and other substances to secure dustless roads, the Engineering Section of the British Association has arrived at the conclusion that the only solution of the problem is the laying down of permanent material in blocks such as our stone sets. A very cursory glance at cars passing over these and those traversing on the usual metal shows the advantage and, really, with stone cut by machinery in the mofussil jails situated where stone abounds, we see no reason why in all cities and large stations these sets should not be adopted. They would last for three years and spare us the nuisance of the steam roller, besides causing less wear and tear to tyres, while mud and dust might be things of the past.

"We are going to see a fine struggle on 8th September." That was the general opinion of rowing experts after witnessing the Americans' initial outing just before the last received mail left London. They are a big, well-made lot of fellows, with an average height of 6 feet 0½ inch and an average weight of 12st. 6lbs., or 4lbs. more than that of the Cantabs. What is more, they are very experienced oarsmen, and row in style and form more nearly approaching our own than any other American or foreign crew yet seen. In characteristic fashion, they mean serious business, and get to work with truly refreshing zest. James Wray (the famous Australian sculler) is their coach, and both he and their coxswain (Mr. M. B. Blagden) insist upon "the full rigour of the game." So far they have made an excellent impression. It is plainly demonstrated that it is going to be a big race. The Harvard boat (built by Davey, of Cambridge, U S.A.) is 60 feet long, fitted with centre-seated slides and swivel rowlocks. Their oars are 12 feet 2½ inches long with 6¼ inch blades. The Cantabs also started well: Mr. Muttlebury has them in charge, and their form is quite sound. Their 1906 Inter-'Varsity race craft will be used again, and as far as possible the victorious crew vs. Oxford will do battle. Two changes will be necessitated, i.e., at bow and No. 7, while G. A. Scott (who steered the 1903 and 1904 crews v. Oxford) will act as coxswain. Latest order of rowing is as follows:—

CAMBRIDGE.—(Bow) A. B. Close-Brooks, J. F. H. Benham, H. M. Goldsmith, M. Donaldson, H. G. Baynes, R. V. Powell, B. C. Johnstone, D. C. R. Stuart (stroke), B. G. A. Scott (cox).

HARVARD.—(Bow) R. M. Tappan, S. W. Fish, P. W. Flint, G. G. Glass, J. Richardson, R. L. Bacon, D. A. Newhall, D. Filley (stroke), M. B. Blagden (cox).

The September Golf Meeting at Ootacamund commences on the 17th proximo. The programme will include the Ooty Championship, 36 holes by medal play; the Ooty Medal, 18 holes medal play under handicap; a Ladies' Prize 18 holes, medal play handicap in two classes; a handicap competition and a bogey sweep. There will also be a team match Nilgiris vs. The Rest consisting of singles and four ball foursomes. Entries are invited from members of any recognised Golf Club.

Mr. J. D. B. Gribble, a retired Civilian, died at Secunderabad on the 27th instant from dysentery. Many years ago he was a prominent member of the Calcutta Rowing Club and helped the club to victory in the struggles for the Hooghly Cup.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—Each year it is my pleasing duty to briefly note some specially good performances at the athletic sports of the boys of St. Joseph's College. This year some of them would challenge comparison with the very best of our English public schools. For the high jump two cousins (J. and H. Pereira) were left in and the latter failed at 5 feet 2 inches, whilst the former went on serenely, and finally cleared 5 feet 4 inches. A real good jump for a boy, and I personally witnessed it and the measurement. The same lad almost won the long jump with a nominal 17 feet 3 inches, but he took off a yard behind the tape and actually cleared 20 feet 6 inches. H. Pereira threw the cricket ball 98 yards 4 inches, and C. Kelly put the weight 30 feet 11 inches. The time for the 220 yards was not good (27 seconds) but the course was an oval and the ground wretchedly bad. The remaining events were mostly of the skittle order and call for no comment.

Cricket is somewhat handicapped at present by continual rain, but a match was got off on the 25th instant in which the Essex Regiment beat the Ulsur Amateurs, a fairly strong native side by one run. It is somewhat curious that this should be the second match during the last two months which has been won by a single run. The other game was the "Owners vs. Jockeys and Trainers."

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—They are progressing with the choosing of the teams for the Parsee-Presidency Match at Poona in the middle of next month. Major Deas is to be captain and up to the present the others who have been asked and accepted are Wigram (Deolali), Chaplin (Mhow), Turner (Rajkote), Cheetham (Bombay), Hoare (Indore), Heath (Satara), and Airey (Poona). Major Field will not play as he has a prior tennis engagement. For the Parsees the team will probably be Dr. Pavri, and Messrs. H. D. Kanga, D. D. Kanga, A. H. Mehta, K. B. Mistry (Ajmere), Bulsara, Warden, Meherhomji, Modi and Dubash.

An 18 hole golf match on the Pali Hill links between the local club and the Bombay Gymkhana ended in a win for Pali Hill by 1½ points after a keen match which produced some pretty play over one of the most difficult courses conceivable.

Attention has been centered during the week on the maidan where the Gymkhana have been getting through the various fixtures of the cricket week. Monday started the match between the Poona and Bombay Gymkhanas and some good play was seen. The ground was a bit wet, but it was some time before the sun dried it sufficiently to benefit the lowless much. The visitors went in first and made a fairly good start. Airey made a keen fight to keep his sticks up and as Coombs was bowling very well runs did not come very fast. Captain Rutter was soon out for three to Stileman, being caught by Priestley, while Ling fared no better and Wilson only put on eight. Airey put up 29 before a ball from Coombs puzzled him and he placed it neatly into Sanderson's hands. Headlam, only got five, being clean bowled by Coombs, but Chinoy did better with 16 and Major Umfreville made top score with 33, hitting freely till a slowish ball, with a lot of spin, fell back to Powell the bowler. Stileman rapidly dismissed Wilson, but a stand was made by Thompson and Fenton, who made, respectively, 25 and then was stumped and 15 not out, the total amounting to 152. Monteath and Christie opened the innings for the home team and after inspecting the wicket in the first over, set to work well. Monteath was out l-b-w to Airey at 22, while Christie was caught with difficulty by Chinoy in the slips off Ling for 38, the two having put up 50 in the first thirty-five minutes. Jukes took Monteath's place and opened badly but settled down more after and made 20 before Airey caught him off his own bowling. Powell and Harrington 2 and 3 respectively followed and then Elliot went in and knocked up 14 smartly, giving place to Priestley to join Sanderson, who made 19. When stumps were drawn for the day Priestley had 17 to his credit (not out) and Stileman was still batting for 26. On opening on Tuesday Captain Macdonald was filling the vacancy in the Poona team. Stileman left without increasing the overnight score, while Priestley only stayed in on a bad wicket long enough to raise from 17 to 23. Coombs made 8 and Otto was not out for a duck, the innings closing for 185. When Poona went in again they looked fairly in form but Coombs dismissed Airey for 10 and Fenton for 10. Lieutenant Ling was c and b Coombs for the same amount, and though Thompson played pluckily and made 17 he had little backing, for the rest of the wickets fell in an alarming manner. The innings belonged to Coombs altogether for, after taking five wickets for 43 in the first he got 7 for 20 in the second, one of which he caught himself as well as catching Headlam and giving a wicket to Otto. The innings closed for 69. Christie and Powell did all the work for the Bombay second innings, making 21 and 17 each not out and the innings closed, without the fall of a wicket and without an extra being scored, for 38 thus giving the victory to the home team by ten wickets and two runs.

Wednesday was wet and did not improve the ground for play on Thursday when it again rained a little. The game was between the Gymkhana and the Byculla Club, a very "friendly" match which the Gymkhana won handsomely. Cheetham was run out at 60, Powell was up to 53 before Macnaghten caught him off Hogg, Christie put on 29, Priestly 11, and Burney 4, while Stileman and Webb were not out for 24 and 16 when the innings was declared for 201 for five wickets. J. Monteath, with 20 before Coombs found his off stump, was the hero of the Byculla Club and the rest could not face the bowling. Coombs took 6 for 20 in 15 overs, 4 of which were maidens, while Stileman lost 3 for 8 in five overs. The innings only totalled 47.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 10th August 1906.

THE declaration that "London is empty" was on Monday last almost a bald literal statement of fact. In such perfect weather a very small proportion of holiday makers elected to remain in town, and the hearts of those of us who were not holiday making,—and those of railway shareholders also—rejoiced thereat. August is by no means the least pleasant month of the twelve in London, in spite of all one hears of exhausted air, germ-laden dust, and the last new ailment, the "August throat." To the contemplative mind there is something eminently soothing in the aspect of Piccadilly, Bond Street, and St. James's Street, in the present month—the north-east corner of the last-named street, is, by the way, a melancholy heap of ruins at this moment—and any discomfort caused by weather is not to be compared to the miseries one has to endure in January, February, and March.

The Royal Academy closed on Monday evening after a season that rumour says has been less productive of shillings than have been some in the past. The R. A. never reveals the secret of the attendance at its exhibitions, but rumour is, in this case, probably correct, as several causes might conduce to a smaller attendance this year than is either 1904 or 1905, two years in which the number of visitors is supposed to have been abnormally large. Though the attendance must be largely a matter of conjecture, it is an ascertained fact that the sales have not been good. Only about ninety oil-paintings have been sold ; some seventy water-colours and miniatures ; about a dozen works in black and white ; and a few of the smaller pieces of sculpture. As usual, complaints—loud and deep—are made that "something" is not done to attract buyers, or to make buying more easy, but I hear no suggestion as to the form the "something" should take, and it would seem not easy to suggest any action that would not savour somewhat of the tout. The highest price—£630—was realized by Mr. David Murray's "Farewell to the Forest," a clearing in a wood, with the ground littered with newly-filled timber ; Mr. Perugine's "Viola," which hung in the Eleventh Room, coming next, at £400. Mr. Stanhope Forbes sold his picture of Newlyn, "Evening in the Village" for £250 ; and Mr. Percy Wild's "The Ghost's Gallery," a picture of a child wandering with a dog through the corridors of an old house, found a purchaser at a hundred guineas. In the Water-Colour Room Sir Edward Poynter sold his study of a charming young girl in fancy dress, "Belinda," for £200. The Government has now decided to erect in Hyde Park—the exact position is not stated—Watts' colossal group, "Physical Energy," the cast of which was in the courtyard of Burlington House for so many months a couple of years ago.

The official announcement that no further steps will be taken to salve the "Montagu" was not unexpected, and the regrettable fact that occasional accidents are bound to happen, must be faced. There is, however, no reason why the consequences of the disaster should be worse than they need be. The "Montagu" counted as an important item in the Fleet, and when the Admiralty announced that she could not be saved, they should also have announced that another "Montagu" could be laid down at once. But to replace the "Montagu" would make a big hole in Mr. Keir Hardie's nest-egg for future Old Age Pensions, and the Government must needs respect the mandate of their masters.

Lord Cottesloe, as Chairman of the L. B. and S. C. Railway, had what was probably a unique experience at the half-yearly meeting of the shareholders last week, when he alluded to the receipt of "conscience money" to the amount of £1,200. The whole affair is "enrapt in mist'ry ;" all the Board knew being that a solicitor approached them with a statement that a client of his wished to pay over that sum to them, and the only information he vouchsafed was that the said client had never been connected with the company either as officer or servant, and therefore the offer was not made as reparation for embezzlement or any other defalcation. Any information regarding the circumstances in which the money came into his client's possession, the solicitor declined to give, and said that if the offer was declined he should advise his client that he might keep it with an easy conscience. The money was accepted and placed to the credit of the general insurance fund.

At the same meeting Lord Cottesloe alluded to the inconvenience, which I noted in my letter last week, as caused to suburban passengers by the L. B. and S. C. line, in consequence of the exit from the new portion of Victoria station being almost half way down Buckingham Palace Road. This it seems is only a temporary arrangement, while the old part of the station is being rebuilt, and when the whole of the work is completed the eastern side of the station will be devoted to the suburban traffic and the exits will be in pretty much the old position. Complaints as to the interruptions and delay in the traffic have been frequent of late, but that the disorganisation has not been greater is a matter for congratulation, seeing that the temporary transfer of the suburban traffic has involved the working of over two hundred and forty trains daily, in and out, under difficult and new conditions, in addition to the complete alteration of the signalling arrangements.

Of tobacco, many unkind—not to say offensive—things are being said at the present time. Science takes a jaundiced view of it. Mr. Brudenell Carter is certain that it injures the eyes, and strongly suspects it of malign influences over various other nerves. Sir Victor Horsley—who speaks disrespectfully of alcohol, strawberries, cherries, and lettuce also—denounces it as a nerve poison, and records his belief that "it must often have lowered, and can never have raised, the quality of the work done under its influence." That this last statement constitutes a libel worthy of exemplary damages, goes without saying since it is a matter of common knowledge that all the finest literature in our language has been turned out to the accompaniment of a pipe and that nothing else so effectually gains the flood-gates of one's ideas. But Sir Victor may have had some form of work other than writing in his mind's eye. It is possible to conceive that forms of work exist to which his statement might apply. In the United States how different is the attitude! As the smoker there likes his cigars new and green and his pipe tobacco fairly dry, the United States Department of Agriculture has been making a number of scientific experiments to find what chemical substances when placed in the neighbourhood of cigars or tobacco will keep them of just the degree of moisture to be desired ; and has now made out a list of chemical solutions, such as potassium sulphate, cadmium bromide, and manganese sulphate, which, when placed near tobacco or cigars, will keep it in the best condition.

The Globe presents to its honourable readers the following Babu story. A lady living in India sent to the local store for some lemon peel wherewith to make a pudding. After she had waited some time the following dignified and lucid epistle arrived from the Babu in charge. "Madam,—We have the Beecham peel, and the Cockle peel, but the peel of Lemon is out of stock."

The long list of new plays announced for early in September indicates an unusually early opening of the autumn theatrical season ; managers probably hoping to recoup themselves by autumn successes for losses during the season just closed, which is admitted to have been one of the worst on record. For 1st September "The Winter's Tale" is announced at His Majesty's, with Miss Ellen Terry as Hermione ; and the same evening Mr. Cyril Maude is to appear at the Duke of York's in "Toddles," an English version of Mrs. Tristan Bernard's "Tripplepatte ;" the performance to be preceded by Mr. Albert Chevalier's pantomime "The Scapegrace." Another regrettable clash occurs on 4th Septemper, when a "farcical comedy" called "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" is to be produced at the Waldorf ; and "Tristram and Iseult" at the Adelphi. It is to be hoped in the interests of both first nighters and critics, that some arrangement may be come to by which three double events will be avoided. Mr. Bourchier is busily engaged with rehearsals of Mr. W. J. Locke's dramatisation of his own novel "The Morals of Marcus," for which a strong cast, including Miss Lillah McCarthy, Miss Sadie Jerome, Mr. Aubrey Smith, and Mr. Sydney Valentine, is engaged. The important part of Carlotta is not yet allotted, but Mr. Bourchier promises an interesting announcement thereon. The production must be awaited with interest by all those—and their number must be legion—who have enjoyed Mr. Locke's extremely clever and amusing novel. Mr. McLellan, the author of "The Belle of New York," "Leah Kleshna," etc., is finishing a new play for the Vaudeville for which Mr. Ivan Caryll is writing the music. Mr. Seymour Hicks has finished a new musical play called "Everyone's Darling," with lyrics by Mr. C. H. Taylor, and music by Mr. Herbert Haines. When Mr. Seymour Hicks takes possession of his own theatre, Mr. Frohman will succeed him at the Aldwych with his New York success "Mdlle. Modiste," played by the original American Company. The run of "The Man from Blankley's" will be resumed at the Haymarket on Monday, 3rd September. Obviously there will be no lack of theatrical interest for those who return to town early.

The pieces, both dramatic and musical, which are still holding their own these hot August days represent in many cases the survival of the fittest, and with one or two exceptions the theatres which offer entertainment to the holiday-maker present him with a bill of fare which has already commended itself to the public taste. In most of the pieces now running some changes in the cast have been made, but without any material weakening of them. "His House in Order," at the St. James's, is the most noteworthy of the survivals, and in it Mr. George Alexander, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, and Mr. Herbert Waring are still to be seen. "You never can tell," is still in the bill at the Court, where Mr. Louis Calvert is still the old waiter. Much, and well-deserved, success is attending the revival of "The Geisha" at Daly's. Mr. Rutland Barrington is back in his old part of the Marquis Imari, and Mr. F. Wright, junior, is delightful in what was originally his brother's part of the Chinese servant. Mr. Huntley Wright is himself playing a Chinaman in another musical comedy "See-See" at the Prince of Wales, all the characters are Chinese, the "Mise en scène" is very pretty, and the piece seems to be altogether popular. "The Beauty of Bath" still holds its own at the Aldwych, to which Mr. Seymour Hicks has returned from his holiday. "The Dairymaids" at the Apollo is a tuneful and amusing little musical comedy, eminently adapted to the present time when most of us are more or less limp from August heat, and rather more than less depressed by the gloomy forebodings of the prophets who, at the moment, are by no means speaking smooth things to us.

Of the variety houses there is not much to chronicle. Both at the Empire and Alhambra the ballet is a conspicuous feature of the entertainment. At the former Delibe's charming ballet "Coppelia" is still being given, and the Watteau divertisement from "Cinderella," "Fête Galante," has been revived. "L'Amour," with Mr. Thomé's music and "Parisiana" are the leading items at the Alhambra. One of the chief attractions of the Palace programme is the series of bioscope pictures of Goodwood, showing the accident to J. H. Martin, the race for the Stewards' Cup, and other incidents of the meeting. La Milo still presents her Valasquez Venus at the Pavilion, and in addition, a new series of classical poses. Another novelty at the Pavilion is an "original Oriental episode," entitled "They never do that in Japan," which is presented by Mr. Hal Ford, assisted by the Pavilion girls. Harry Lauder has been welcomed on his reappearance, at the Tivoli, where Harry Fragson still sings "Most Politely," and where Miss Alice Kellander, an Australian contralto of some renown, has made a successful appearance this week. Next week Miss Connie Ediss will appear with Mr. Henry Lytton in a new comedietta at the Pavilion, by permission of Mr. G. Edwardes.

The verdict of the jury on the Handcross accident is very much what most people expected. The enquiry has been exhaustive, and all evidence bearing in the slightest degree on the probable cause of the accident has been most patiently sifted. The jury found that the accident was caused through the breakage of the machinery, brought on by the action of the driver in applying the brakes and that no criminal blame attached to anybody—and added a rider that this type of vehicle is unsuited to country roads. That no doubt is perfectly true; that particular type of vehicle having been designed solely with a view to the London streets, but a gradient like that at Handcross Hill is a danger to many types of vehicle—there have been three, more or less serious, accidents on it since the deplorable one to which the inquest was the sequel.

The thanks of all Imperialists are due in the first instance to Byles, M. P. and secondly to the Government, in that they were the first causes of the "Public Address which expresses to Lord Milner the deep-felt gratitude of 370,000 Englishmen for his splendid services. The Byles vote of censure brought to the surface those feelings of thanks which had hitherto been unspoken, and which, but for it, would probably have remained silent. The signatures to the Address are drawn from men of every walk in life—nearly a fourth of the total being described as those of 'working men.' Whether C. B. is as grateful to Messrs. Byles and Churchill as are Imperialists is another story."

The Postmaster-General has just issued his annual report for the year ending the 31st of March last. The increases in the number of letters is substantial, those delivered in London showing an increase of about 3 per cent. in place of the decrease of past two years. The increase in the number of postcards is less than that in recent years. The report points to an increase in the "Careless Public;" 4,599 letters with valuable contents having been posted with no address at all, the contents including £200 in cash and notes, and £9,766 in various forms of remittance. In one unaddressed letter were cheques to the value of £2,500. One wonders at the state of mind of the sender thereof! The number of insufficiently addressed letters with valuable contents also shows an increase, as does also the number of articles found loose in the post, which included £1,380 in cash, and £12,272 in cheques and other forms of remittance. The Postmaster winds up the statement with the remark that the value of the property thus entrusted to the mercy of the Post Office by a careless public has increased by no less than £33,000. A considerable increase in ordinary telegrams is noted, but the decrease in Press telegrams is striking, in spite of an enormous increase during January, in consequence of the General Election; the amount dealt with at the Central Telegraph Office on the night of 15th and 16th January having been exceeded only on three occasions twenty years ago. The general decrease in Press telegrams is attributed to the cessation of the war in the Far East.

General Cafe, whose death is announced, gained his V. C. during the Indian Mutiny. At the action of Ruhya, he carried away, with the help of four privates, the body of Lieutenant Willoughby, which was lying near the ditch of the fort; and later on the same day went to the rescue of one of the men who had helped to remove the lieutenant's body, and who was himself dangerously wounded. General Cafe, who was himself severely wounded in the same action at Ruhya, joined the Bengal Infantry in 1842, and had completed more than half a century of service before he was placed on the Unemployed Supernumerary List. The death of another officer who had seen service in India is announced. Colonel A. W. McKinstry, Commandant of the Duke of York's Royal Military School, died suddenly at the school on Wednesday, of heart failure. He obtained his first commission in 1875, and during the Afgan War of 1878-79 served with the 5th Punjab Infantry in the Kurrum Valley, and took part in the battle of Charasiah on 7th October 1879, and in the subsequent occupation of Kabul; receiving the medal with clasps for his service. He was appointed commandant of the Duke of York's School, where his loss will be very severely felt, in 1903.

Another stage in the unpleasant story of the South African War Stores was reached yesterday by the publication of the report of the Royal Commission. Though I have had time to do little more than look through it hurriedly, it is impossible not to be struck by its impartial and judicial tone, which presents an effective contrast to the unfortunate pronouncements of Sir William Butler's Committee. The Commissioners estimate that between June 1902 and March 1904 a "preventable" loss to the British taxpayer occurred of something between three-quarters of a million and a million and a quarter; "preventable" loss being in other words that amount of profit—above ordinary trading profit—to the contractors. But while this judgment agrees with the Butler Committee as to the extent of the abuses it differs from that report in a remarkable degree as regards their character. The Commissioners dissent altogether from some of the charges made by Sir William Butler's Committee; notably from the allegations of "cleverly arranged contrivances" for fraud which touched the honour of some of the higher officers. In fact, except in a few specificinstances, which are set out in detail in one paragraph, the report states that no such case is made out against any officer holding His Majesty's commission, or against any officers in charge of departments. The Commissioners deal in detail with the questions of responsibility, as obviously, since the loss was "preventable," responsibility must rest with some of the commanding officers. That it rests in a still greater degree with the system—or rather with the want of system—of Army Management, which sets young and inexperienced officers to carry through complicated transaction which require a business training, is amply proved. And since, in spite of the Peace at any Price party wars will no doubt begin, end, and have to be wound up, the reorganisation of the present haphazard system may be commended to Mr. Haldane's attention.

The production of "Amasis" at the New yesterday evening does not call for much comment. The music, by Mr. P. M. Farraday, hardly justifies the employment of the term comic opera, though it includes a certain number of tuneful, if somewhat catchy, numbers. The story has the merit of being consistent and simple. Prince Anhotep is betrothed to Princess Amasis, daughter of King Pharaoh, and the marriage is on the point of taking place when the Court is thrown into a state of consternation by the discovery that one of the sacred cats is missing. To kill one of these sacred animals is the worst crime known to Egyptian law, and of this crime Prince Anhotep is guilty, having killed the cat with a brick bat, which he threw at it from his study window, in a fit of temper, because it disturbed him while he was writing. The Prince is duly condemned to death; and the sentence is on the point of being ratified by the King, when Amasis entering with a venerable and musty volume, points out that by the penal code of Rameses the destroyer of a sacred cat must be brought face to face with his victim before he can be found guilty. Under this law the Prince escapes the penalty for his crime. Mr. Fenn revels in blood and torture; almost everyone in the piece is at one time or another, not only sentenced to death, but to tortures which are described with a detail which has neither charm nor humour. Mr. Cunningham, as the Prince, and Miss Ruth Vincent, as Amasis, were excellent; and the quiet humour of Rutland Barrington's Pharaoh was much appreciated. The singing of Mr. Milton, in the part of an Egyptian scribe—the one serious part in the piece—was one of the chief features of the entertainment. The two scenes, one in the King's Palace, the other in the courtyard of the Palace, were extremely pretty.

Yet another exhibition is proposed. This time it is the "Travel Exhibition," and report says that already many influential people have promised to lend their influence to it. Its object is stated to be the laudable one of bringing together "the various matters, facilities, and commodities connected with, or appertaining to, travel and the traveller." Everything which would be of use to the traveller will be exhibited, even to the condensed arrangements for caravan life. It is proposed to hold the exhibition in London, but the site has not been decided upon.

The Smart Set must be greatly comforted to learn that the "Rev. Dr." Clifford, whose opportunities of forming a judgment on their proceedings must be too extensive, does not agree with the opinion of the Rev. Father Vaughan. The Nonconformist conscience thinks that society with a large S. is becoming better and better, instead of wickeder and wickeder.—The Townshend case being still sub judice, I refrain from commenting on the extraordinary nature of some of the evidence.

ONLOOKER.

A good story is told of a noted vagabond known as "The Infant," chiefly because he was of enormous size and possessed a pair of hands very nearly as large as boiled legs of mutton. The police, being very anxious to keep this ruffian from disgracing an Ascot Cup Day, which the late Queen Victoria intended to honour with her presence, but not having any charge that could be clearly sheeted home to him just then, "ran him in" on a trumped up charge of "attempting to pick pockets," being probably believers in the old Jesuitical opinion that "in order to do a great good it is sometimes necessary to do a little wrong." When the charge was read out in court and "The Infant" was asked what he had to say in defence, he breasted the spikes and stretching his great prize-ham fists over them, said: "Look 'ere, yer Washups, look at them, and then say if they're the kind o' hands a man would go about with to pick pockets? Why s'welp me! I couldn't pick a pillow case or even a mattress with them!" Roars of laughter greeted that strange but good defence, and the Solons evidently recognised the utter impossibility of the feat, for they let "The Infant" loose on condition he took his great fists to some other country.

Customer: "What sort of a chicken do you call this?" Waiter: "That, sir, is, I believe, a Plymouth Rock." Customer: "Ah, I'm glad it has some historic interest. I thought it was just an ordinary cobblestone."

THE AMENDED GAME RULES FOR THE UNITED PROVINCES.

WE publish below the following Government notification and shall be glad to open our columns to a discussion thereon.

FOREST DEPARTMENT.

The 2nd August 1906.

No. 441—XIV-31-1906.—In exercise of the powers conferred by section 25, clause (i), and section 75, clause (d), of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878), and in supersession of notification No. $\frac{391}{\text{XIV-122-1904}}$, dated the 28th June 1905, the Lieutenant-Governor is pleased to prescribe the following rules as to hunting, shooting, fishing, the poisoning of water, and the setting of traps or snares in the reserved forests in the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh :—

UNDER SECTION 25 (I).

1. In these rules the word "hunting" includes tracking for the purpose of discovering the lie of wild animals.

2. The following acts are absolutely prohibited within a reserved forest :—

(1) Poisoning or dynamiting rivers and other waters.

(2) Driving or destroying birds or animals in the snow.

(3) Poisoning carcasses of animals.

Under section 25 of the Indian Forest Act the deputy conservator may sanction, subject to such conditions as may be necessary, the poisoning of carcasses of animals killed by wild dogs in order to destroy the latter.

(4) Spearing and running deer with dogs.

(5) Watching in the neighbourhood of water or salt licks between sunset and sunrise to shoot animals other than carnivora resorting to such places.

(6) The erection of dams, weirs, or fixed traps, the diversion of streams for the purpose of catching fish, and the driving of fish.

3. The following acts are prohibited within a reserved forest except as provided below :—

(1) The setting of snares or traps except with the written permission of the divisional forest officer.

(2) Hunting, shooting, or fishing, except—

(a) by a person holding a permit granted by a divisional forest officer ;

(b) by a person permitted by order of Government to hunt, shoot, or fish without a permit ;

(c) by a person authorized under the Elephant Preservation Act, 1879, to kill and capture wild elephants to the extent he is so authorized.

(d) for the purpose of destroying carnivora in the immediate neighbourhood of shabitation and cattle stations.

(3) The use of nets for the catching of fish, except—

(a) that in the river Ganges, Jumna, and Sarda, nets of which the mesh is not smaller than 1½ inch square may be used ;

(b) that in other rivers and streams drag, clap, and casting nets with a mesh not less than 1½ inch square may be used by right holders or persons holding permission in writing from the divisional forest officer ;

(c) by permit holders for purposes of bait.

4. The conservator may, with the previous sanction of Government, prescribe sanctuarise to be kept closed for a fixed number of years wherein all hunting and shooting shall be absolutely prohibited. This prohibition extends to all persons whether exempted or not.

5. The conservator shall divide the forests into shooting areas and shall fix the number of any species that may be shot in any one year, in any one area, and restrict shooting so as to prevent the fixed limit being exceeded. This restriction applies to both permit holders and exempted officers.

6. Permits of the following descriptions to hunt, shoot, and fish may, subject to the control of the conservator, be granted by a divisional forest officer for a shooting area in his charge in the case of permits under form A, for a river or group of rivers in the case of permits under form B, for the reserved forests of the provinces in the case of permits under form C, and for the Naini Tal and Jaunsar forest division in the case of permits under form D :—

(a) An ordinary permit in form A allowing the holder to hunt, shoot, and fish with rod and line subject to any restriction imposed under rules 4 and 5 above.

(c) A permit in form C allowing the holder to shoot game birds and ground game.

(d) A permit in form D allowing the holder to shoot in the hill forests of the Naini Tal and Jaunsar forest division subject to any restrictions imposed under rules 4 and 5 above.

7. (1) A permit in form A shall only be available for the person in whose name it is issued, and number of guns specified. Permits in form B, C, and D are personal that is non-transferable.

(2) Every person to whom a permit has been granted shall, on the demand of any forest or police officer, produce it.

(3) A permit granted by a divisional forest officer shall be valid only for the shooting area detailed therein, provided that wounded game may be persued into any other shooting area.

(4) A permit may be cancelled at any time by the conservator or divisional forest officer if circumstances render it advisable.

(5) The permit holder is responsible that the members of the party observe the forest law and rules and the conditions of the permit. If the divisional forest officer considers that any member of the party has committed a wilful breach of the said law, rules or conditions, he may cancel the permit : the whole party shall thereupon quit the forest immediately.

(6) Nothing in these rules shall be taken to exempt any person from liability in respect of any offence by fire injury to the forest or its produce or other offence punishable under section 25 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878).

(7) The holder of a permit shall encamp only on such camping grounds as are entered in the permit or have been set apart by the forest authorities, or in places specially pointed out to him by a forest official.

(8) The holder of a permit shall not shoot or allow to be shot at, any animal or bird, the shooting of which is not permitted by the terms of the permit.

The deputy conservator, when granting a permit, may give the holder special permission to shoot other birds and small mammals required bonâ fide for purposes of natural history.

(9) The holders of the permit shall not shoot or allow to be shot more than the number of heads of any species entered in the permit.

(10) The holder of the permit may take into the forests only the number of retainers and followers and of elephants, dogs, or other animals entered by the divisional forest officer in the permit.

(11) A charge of Re. 1 per diem for each elephant entered in the permit shall be paid (no separate charge shall be levied for fodder).

This charge and the permit fee shall be paid in advance. No charge shall be levied in the case of forest officers within their charges, or of person taking out an animal permit under rule 11, up to a limit of two elephants.

(12) On a permit holder vacating the shooting area, of which he holds a permit, he shall return his permit to such official as may be named on it after entry on it of the number and species of all animals killed by him and his party. He shall also report any breach of rule 8 (3) exempted persons and persons taking out an annual permit (form A) under rule 11 shall furnish similar returns to the divisional forest officer, shooting area by shooting area on the last day of every month, during which they may have been shooting in the forests, so that record of the number and species of animals killed may be kept up.

8. Permits in form A may be granted for specified time not exceeding 15 days, in form B and C for a period not exceeding one year, and in form D for a period not exceeding three months, on the following conditions, in addition to those entered in rule 7 above:—

(1) That the holder shall observe the close season for birds as entered in the permit.

(2) That the holder shall shoot only the game or edible birds entered in the permit, birds of prey, and vermin.

(3) That the holder shall not, without special permission of the divisional forest officer, endorsed on the permit, shoot the females of wild sheep goat, or antelope, not males without horns or with horns in velvet.

9. The following fees shall be paid for permits :—

		Rs.
Form A	By resident in India ...	10 each	For a permit for 15 days or less.
	By visitors from Europe and foreign countries	25 ,,

Form B.....As. 8 for 15 days or less, or Rs. 5 per annum.

Form C.....Rs. 5 for a period not exceeding one month, or Rs. 20 per an annual permit.

Form D.....Rs. 15 for a period not exceeding three months to cover big game shooting alone, or Rs. 25 to include game birds and ground game.

Not more than one permit in form A shall be granted for the same period in the same shooting area, and 15 days shall elapse between the grant of two successive permits in the same area.

10. A forest official shall be appointed to attend the permit holder to show the boundaries of the shooting areas within which the permit is valid and to accompany the party if deemed advisable by the divisional forest officer.

11. An annual permit may be granted by a divisional officer, subject to the control of the conservator, to official and non-official residents of civil districts in which Government forests are situated, on an annual payment of Rs. 100 ; such permit holders shall be entitled to hunt, shoot, and fish in the forests of that districts only, subject to the same conditions as ordinary permit holders and to be accompanied by two elephants free of charge, provided that—

(i) they shall not shoot in areas in which a permit in form A is in force ;

(ii) should they wish to take in more than two elephants, they shall apply for a permit in form A and pay the fees, under the ordinary rules.

Note.—The two elephants referred to above shall only be allowed in the forest during the period that the permit holder is hunting, shooting, or fishing in these forests.

12. (1) The following are exempt from the payment of fees being permitted to hunt, shoot, and fish on the same condition as permit holders.

(a) Gazetted forest officers within their charges.

[For the purpose of this rule the Commissioner of Kumaon shall be deemed to be a gazetted forest officer within the Kumaon civil division.]

(b) Within the limits of the Siwalik forest division British officers of the 2nd Gurkha Regiment, and non-commissioned officers and men holding passes issued by the commanding officer up to the 15th February in each year or such previous date as the conservator may declare the forests closed to ingress on account of danger from fire.

(2) In the Dehra Dun district within the arear leased to the Dehra Dun Fishing Association, its members are permitted to fish without permit.

13. Requests for permits shall be dealt with in order of priority of application. No such application shall, however, be valid if received more than three months before the permit is required. A register shall be maintained in the office of each divisional forest officer showing for each class of permit :—

(a) Date of receipt of application.

(c) Orders passed.

(d) Date of order.

14. No permit shall be refused merely on the grounds that a permit for a later date has already been sanctioned, but such permit shall only be granted for a period which does not infringe the interval established by the grant of a permit previously applied for.

Example,—"A" has obtained a permit from the 1st to the 25th April, "B" applies for a permit for 15 days from the 25th April, the prescribed interval of rest does not expire till the 30th April, "B" may therefore be offered a permit from the 1st to the 10th of May, provided that no permit has been granted in May, previous to the 25th. In the case of the refusal to grant a permit, the grounds of refusal shall be at once communicated to the applicant, who is entitled to appeal to the conservator, whose decision shall be final. A copy of the grounds of refusal shall be furnished at once to the conservator, who is empowered, if he sees fit, to exercise powers of revision.

Chief Secretary.

BRIGHTON PIER FISHERMEN.

IF there is any sunshine anywhere in England, Brighton generally gets it, and in the summer, when it is charmingly warm and bright, the great watering place is full of pleasure seekers, among them are a large sprinkling of fishermen. As the sea is not always calm, and boat hire runs expensive a great number of anglers do their fishing from the West and Palace Piers. I found it quite interesting to sit at the end of the West Pier and watch the fishing. Beyond the theatre and the numerous side shows which are at the end of the main pier, there is a sort of extension, at a somewhat lower level. This extension is carried out in a half circle enclosing a piece of water where the high dives and so on take place. Every night now, there is a sensational dive in flames. The performer is clad in a fireproof garment which has been soaked outside in spirit : he mounts to the high-dive platform, and when he is ready to jump off, an assistant applies a torch, and sets him on fire. He then jumps off blazing vigorously, and extinguishes himself in the sea. There is another platform at the side where a cyclist dives off, cycle and all, in the day time.

The low level extension is where the anglers do their fishing from. A great many of them are old men, and all the enthusiastic ones bring square fishing baskets of white wicker; these serve the double purpose of holding their gear, and fish if they catch any, and acting as a comfortable seat. The rods used are almost invariably short boat rods, seven and a half to nine feet in length ; while the reels are of the Nottingham pattern, three to three and a half inches in diameter. The paternoster is used by all, but varies a little in arrangement according to individual taste. A round flattened watch-shaped lead of about an ounce, seems to be the one most generally used ; and the bottom gut link, next the weight, is often lengthened to eighteen inches or so, in the "paternoster trot" firm, as described in the Badminton volume on Sea Fishing. This is because the water is shallow and bottom sandy, and therefore the fish expected are dabs and flounders. As flat fish feed on the bottom, the extension of the lowest link, and addition of an extra hook there, is likely to increase one's sport. The baits used are lug and rag worms, mussels and shrimps. The bait is got out to the required distance by casting from the reel after the ordinary Nottingham method. As bites do not come very fast, the rod is generally set over the guard chain at an angle of forty-five, and the slack line wound in many of the rods are furnished with a little bell, attached close above the pulley end ring. The tinkle of the bell or the movement of the top warns the angler when a fish is at his bait, and he then picks up his rod, in readiness for the strike. I was very interested in watching a lady angler : she was dressed in a workmanlike get-up of grey tweed, with a dark grey yachting cap covering her short brown hair. She had the usual square wicker seat basket, but her rod and reel were more elaborate and better finished than those of the male anglers. This fisherwoman's casting from the reel was a treat to behold: she shot her paternoster straighter and further than anyone else. Fortune alas! did not smile on her efforts, and she caught no fish, though I stayed to watch for a considerable time. In spite, however, of her bad luck, she did not look discouraged, and just as I was going away I saw her produce lunch from her basket, and set to work to attack it with a contented smile.

The short rods, as used by the Brighton Pier anglers, are to my mind all too stiff and clumsy for the small fish expected. So too the paternosters might well be made up of very much lighter gut than is customary. Seeing there is a lower stage close to the water, below the platform, where the fishermen take their stand, there would be no difficulty in using a net or gaff for a fish too heavy to lift out safely. Fining down the paternoster and red line, enables one to use a very light lead, and this, if the rod is correspondingly handy, is a great assistance in hooking shy biting fish. I always believe in fishing as fine as possible and trusting to good luck, combined with careful management, for getting out a big fish if one should be fortunate enough to hook one.

The angler on Brighton Pier spends his morning very pleasantly whether the fish bite or not: for as he sits comfortably in the sun fanned by the salt breeze, his ear is beguiled by the soft strains of the band on the upper platform. Also if he gets tired of watching his rod tip, he can relieve his eye by watching the gay holiday crowd above him.

MOTOR TIPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Punctures generally occur in the driving wheels. My theory is that the front wheel in passing over a nail or bullock shoe, tilts it end up and before it can get into a horizontal position again the hind wheel is on it. To obviate this I have a stout piece of leather, the width of the foot of the front mud guard rivetted on to it, and reaching to within an inch of the ground. I think this brushes aside many a nail, etc. I say so, because since using this device, I have been very fortunate in having very few punctures.

Another advantage is that should you get a puncture, or your tyres become flatter than they should be, the scraping of the leather on the road warns you of the fact.

FURTHER DETAILS ASKED FOR.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—With reference to "Pultney's" yarn entitled "Mixed Shooting" in your issue of the 16th instant I do not want to be hypercritical, but surely your contributor's friend did not stand still and allow a tiger (query tigress?) and cubs to do a man to death in sight of his bungalow and do nothing to help? Apparently, according to the story not going to the spot till "next morning."! Inthe immediately next story too "P" and his friend, although both had guns, did absolutely nothing, according to his own version, to drive the tiger off the cartman he had carried away practically before their very eyes.!! I hope, for the sake of our common humanity, that "Pulteney" has omitted some of the details; but as they stand his stories make gruesome reading and would have been better if never recorded.

BURMAH.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The dead-heat between Gleam and Parole in the Hurdle Race in the Belvedere Plate last Saturday opens up a question which requires looking into. Of course the fact of its so seldom occurring will probably be the reason why no steps will be taken in the matter, as it will not be considered worth while, but as such things as dead-heats do occur in jump races, though admittedly very rarely, that is sufficient for the matter to be looked into. The rule as to dead-heats compels owners to run it off unless they agree to divide. This is all very well as regards flat races, but when it comes to hurdle racing or steeplechasing it is quite a different matter, and should one of the owners refuse to divide the other has to take second money or run it off. This in most cases, as it would have been on Saturday, in this temperature and all that mud would have been nothing more than cruelty to animals, quite apart from being pretty certain to help to break the heart of or break down any good animal. Of course, as a rule, the owners do agree to divide as in the case of Gleam and Sylvia in the Amateur Hurdle Race last year, and of Harold and Corrie Roy up in Lucknow last February. In the Indian Grand National of January 1901 it will be remembered that Simon, after a very hard finish, just won by a short head from Euclid. How would it have been had one of the owners then refused to divide. A special amendment should, I think be, made to the rule providing that in the event of a dead-heat in a jump race, the stakes shall be divided unless both owners agree to run it off—thus transposing the present rule.

RACKET.

ARE YOU SUCCESSFUL?

Are you a dealer with ENTHUSIASM? If so you are on the right track. Or are you a dealer in words only? If the latter, I say at once, "Get out of the 'rut.'" It is the real Live Dealer that succeeds to-day. No half and half dealer is of any use to himself or to any other Company. I will tell you why before the close of this article. ENTHUSIASM (in caps, please, Mr. Printer) has built up more huge businesses in the world than anything I know of. It has often been said—times out of number in fact—that an ounce of help is worth a ton of pity. I agree with that, but I go further and say that one ounce of ENTHUSIASM is worth TEN TONS of advice. Consider the point, Mr. Dealer, and you won't be surprised at this assertion of mine. No matter what goods you are handling, if you don't go into it with energy and determination to succeeded, in spite of all opposition, it will be a miserable failure.

A dealer with enthusiasm doesn't know what the word failure is; it is not in his dictionary, he has no need for it to be—he doesn't know or recognize the word. He hasn't the time to think about such a thing. The word he has planted before his desk for daily reference is "Success." If a Dealer is stocking the productions of a Company, he is fully alive to the fact that he has the finest Goods obtainable. He also knows that the very best people residing in his Town will be regular and, what is more, good paying customers. He has, so to speak, the flower of his Town at his command. Why? Because the wealthy and better class people know from experience that his Company don t put any goods on the market until they can mark them "Perfect." That is half your battle overcome, Mr. Dealer.

Then, if any further proof was needed to put ENTHUSIASM into a Sleepy Dealer, he has only to sit down for five minutes and just consider the force and power behind his Company. Can he find it in any other Company in this or any other Country? I have no hesitation in saying he could not. Force will raise any man to a certain height, but enthusiasm will carry him many steps further. Those dealers (and there are many) who possess the right enthusiasm don't need any tip or suggestion from me to further the interest of their business. You cannot give "tips" to an enthusiastic dealer, he don't want them. He can find them for himself every day of the week. He goes about his work daily with a smilling face and a kind word to everyone and he gets what the Company desires, plenty of good profitable business. He knows that his banking account is creeping up at the expense of the "Dead Dealer" who is always waiting for something to turn up. What this Dead Dealer (for he is dead to everyone but himself) cannot understand is why that something don't turn up to his profitable advantage. Has he tried to make it? If he takes up the sale of the Company's Wares and is appointed by the Company as one of their accredited dealers, it is a slur on that Company if he is ashamed to push the sale of their productions.

The enthusiast never requires a reminder that he is getting a bit sleepy and that he is losing ground, on the contrary, he is being congratulated on his SUCCESS (the word he has on his desk for daily refererence). Don't you know, Mr. Dealer, that your success is also the Company's success? If you don't let me enlighten you on the point The dealer that has enthusiasm to his finger tips has yet to learn that trade is bad, and that his goods will not sell. If at any time he should require a "pick-me-up," he just goes to his desk and brings out the last balance sheet of his Company issued. It acts like magic With such figures is it any wonder that the enthusiasm in him kindles to red hot heat? Can't he truthfully say: "I helped to make some of that huge profit?"

Would any Company show such marvellous results if their goods were not the very best and reliable? Certainly not. Look about your Shop, Mr. Sleepy Dealer, and you will soon wake up to the fact what you have lost, by not entering into the sale of your Company's Wares with the same enthusiasm as your neighbour in another town. The best conducted musical saloons in India and England to-day, are Gramophone dealers. Why? It pays them to be. They get in the Gramophone customers the very people they were unable to reach before.

In conclusion, I would strongly advise all those dealers who are wavering as to whether they will succeed or otherwise, just to spare one day, and book direct to 7, Esplanade, East. There is not a single person employed in that building that has not the GRAMOPHONE ENTHUSIASM to his or her finger-tips. If he comes away from that building without some of that enthusiasm, then I say this to him: "Discard the Gramophone goods. You will never succeed"

ENTHUSIASM EARNS MONEY ENTHUSIASM EARNS MONEY

Motor chauffeurs may be roughly divided into two classes, those who have been fined and those who ought to be.

"I trust your honour will excuse me this time," said an habitual drunkard at the police court; "it is my misfortune—I am a child of genius."

"And what is your age?" asked the magistrate.

"Forty-two years."

Then it is time you were weaned. You'll have to do fourteen days away from the bottle."

GOODWOOD.

THE admirable example set by the King was not generally followed, a smaller gathering of society greeting His Majesty on the Lawns on the Friday last. The going was, of course, getting a bit hard, but the last day's card did not put a heavy strain on training establishments, as the programme was a light one. Still, the popularity of the meeting all through has been satisfactorily established, and the inevitable falling-off was most noticeable on the part of the holiday makers, the enclosures being again well filled. The executive did well in restricting the card to half a dozen events and making an earlier start, as it is a long journey from stand to station.

HURST PARK.

There was a little rain during Sunday night, but it speedily passed off, and the Bank Holiday proved about the finest and hottest day of an exceptionally brilliant summer. This being the case, it is not surprising that there was an exceptionally fine attendance at Hurst Park, for, although the members enclosure has occasionally been fuller than it was to-day, the outside public mustered in rare force, and were pouring into the ground when the opening race had been decided.

BRIGHTON

Glorious weather awaited visitors to Brighton on Tuesday. The town was very full of extra Bank Holiday makers, and most of them seemed determined on a day's racing, judging by the crowds that toiled up the sweltering approaches to the grand stand, for go which way you will, there's no cheating the hill. Under the management of the veteran Lieutenant Abbey, the arrangements of the executive gave every satisfaction, especially the new garage for motors, which in these days will form an indispensable adjunct to every course in the kingdom. Water is hard to come at on the South Downs; in fact, the whole of South Sussex seems to be suffering from a most inconvenient drought, so that the going was naturally a bit hard. The attendance all round was one of the best on record, the stands being well patronised, and the members' lawn well filled by a patrician company.

MARINE PLATE (Handicap)—Of 300sovs.; second receives 20sovs.; T.Y.C. (about 5 furlongs).

(Winner trained by J. Watson.)

BETTING: 13 to 8 agst. Horn Head, 5 to 2 Bonnie Earl, 4 to 1 Chicot, 6 to 1 Savernake and 10 to 1 Florette.

Won in a canter by five lengths; a length and a half divided second and third. Time—2mins. 3⅘secs. Horn Head fell four furlongs from home and Maher received a severe shaking.

Little difference was found in the number of people present at Brighton on Wednesday, and certainly for the last twenty years such a big muster has never been seen on either day, and for this the tram service is to be thanked. At Leicester and Doncaster the executive materially raise their fares on race days, but here the powers that be have stayed their hands when the possibility of taking advantage of a perspiring public was given them, and everybody can reach the course comfortably cool. All round the attendance was excellent, the fair sex making the stand a thing of beauty with their dainty toilettes, and the carriage brigade, as usual here, drew up in battalions. The going was very hard, but that could not be helped, and the sooner rain comes the better for Sussex.

ROTTINGDEAN PLATE—Of 200sovs.; for two year olds; second receives 10sovs.; T.Y.C. (about 5 furlongs).

Such a meeting as finished up yesterday is a credit to the town, and now that the executive know how to suit the public taste the meeting should improve its fortunes, as nothing succeeds like success. The absence of sunlight was a blessing to all who wanted to get about, as the shady spots—and there are some very awkward corners in stands still—were no longer congested, as it was much pleasanter in the open. Little falling-off was noticeable in the attendance, an excellent one in every department, and with the holiday traffic back into the old groove, the railway arrangements worked in more satisfactory style. Another representative company occupied the members' enclosure and the two stands, while the popularity of the national sport was proved by the big crowd of holiday-makers. On the way to the post in the Worthing Plate, Madden, who was riding Centre, was suddenly seized by Marigold IV., who rearing up caught his boot and pulled him off the horse, shook him like a rat and catching a fresh grip under the jaw tried to kneel on the prostrate horseman. Meanwhile, Prady, the Australian jockey, the rider of the foreignbred one, let his mount have it across the head and eyes with his whip, and Madden fortunately rescued, was brought back badly bruised and cut to the weighing-room. Neither Centre nor Marigold IV., the latter of whom Mr. Hugh Owen objected to as dangerous, were allowed to start.

ROWING.

CAMBRIDGE vs. HARVARD.—The Harvard University crew arrived in England on Friday last and a day or two after took up their quarters at Bourne End. Both crews have been at work, the Cambridge Eight making a good impression last evening.

CAMBRIDGE.

The Light Blues were not out in their boat until half-past eleven, and with the Herbernia in attendance, with Mr. S. D. Muttlebury on board, and several others, including Mr. Lehmann and his two little girls, proceeded up stream to the island. Paddling was the order of the day, but after returning and passing the bridge Stuart set his men a telling stroke, and they rowed for four minutes, the boat travelling fairly well towards Cookham. From thence the crew returned to the raft. In the evening Johnstone and Baynes were taken tubbing, and the eight was launched at ten minutes past five. The crew paddled just above Shaws, and on the boat being put about they returned to the bridge, where an easy was called. With a two minutes row the Light Blues arrived opposite Riverdale, and from that point they returned to the raft, several taking a swim before changing their clothes. Names and weights.

HARVARD.

The visitors from America were out at 11·45 and were the objects of much attention from a large gathering of spectators. They paddled up to the island in several pieces at the rate of 29 to the minute, making the boat move well, but it has apparently rather too much drag to make it look fast. The men, however, recovered their stroke in much better style than they have previously shown, and their leg drive was more pronounced. This will greatly affect their chances of winning perhaps the most important race of modern times. They only attempted two short spells, one in which they put in 29 to the minute and another in which they rowed 28. In the afternoon the Harvard men followed Cambridge out. They proceeded up stream to the bottom of the Island, and from thence rowed at 30 to 31 to Spade Oak Ferry, the boat travelling very well indeed. There was a large crowd present, the Cambridge men being keen spectators. Names and weights.

CYCLING.

THE WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIPS.

At the commencement of the present season the name of Francesco Verri was unknown in the ranks of amateur racing cyclist outside Italy. But when the English and France cracks visited Athens for the Olympic games the young Italian sprang a surprise upon all, winning every event in which he competed in, not by inches, but by lengths. Those riders at home who underestimated Verri's abilities were soon set at rest, for in the Paris Grand Prix for amateurs he confirmed his victories at Athens by winning from Ernest Payne, who on his return to England beat all and sundry. The World's Amateur Championship was then voted a good thing for Verri, and he confirmed the hopes of his large following by easily disposing of Delage and Rondelli in the final on Thursday last. It is rumoured that he will very shortly be seen in the professional ranks, and that he is capable of beating several cash riders who consider themselves something above second class. Strange to say, there is not an amateur left upon the path who has won a world's championship, Benyon being the last to go over.

Sunday last saw a good crowd assemble at the cycling track, Geneva, to witness the concluding events, and were treated to a couple of surprises. Ellegaard furnished number one by beating Gabriel Poulain and Bardonneau supplied number two by winning the amateur paced championship. Ellegaard is no stranger to championship honours, having won the professional sprint event three years in succession, viz., 1901, 1902, 1903, while he finished second in 1904 and 1905, and has now scored in 1906. Like the majority of first-class stars who visit Australia, his form suffered on return to Europe, but he trained on slowly and seriously, with the result that he has now regained his best form again. Leon Meredith must be considered very unlucky this year, as what with licensing, pacing, and tyre troubles, he has lost his title of world's champion, the newcomer being Bardonneau, the French amateur who is undoubtedly a rider of merit. Results:

100-Kilometres World's Amateur Championship—Bardonneau (France), 1hr. 52mins. 8secs. 1; Tutlax (Belgium), nine laps behind, 2; Eigeldinger, twenty-four laps behind 3; Bothlisberger, twenty-five laps behind, 4. Meredith, Draper, and Stanen retired. He would have been a bold critic who dared to remark that neither of the English representatives would have been in the first three, but such turned out to be the case. At the crack of the pistol Meredith made his way to the front and was soon hitched on to his pacemaker, Robert the holder, covering the first ten kilometres in the remarkable good time of 10mins. 18secs. for the pacing consisted of small motor-cycles with rollers fitted about one foot behind the rear wheel of the pacing instrument, thus barring the shelter considerably. After this, however, Meredith slackened somewhat, and Bardonneau, paced by Hy. Fossier—who has gained a reputation for building a small motor-cycle with the protection of a big one—then went to the front. Trouble soon came Meredith's way in the shape of a puncture and this cost him two laps, while a little later Bardonneau's tyre went. Joe Draper then commenced to show up prominently he having the services of that old racing crack, Jean Gougoltz, who has now turned pacemaker. The Frenchman, however, proved remarkably game, and managed to keep his lead. Just when Meredith looked like troubling the ultimate winner his (Meredith's) tyre went again, and a few laps later he experienced more tyre troubles, so retired disgusted with his bad luck. Nearing the hour the little Belgian was the only one to be near Bardonneau, but he had no chance, so the Frenchman ultimately won rather easily. Draper fell two laps before the finish, suffering from the heat.

The Pro. Sprint Championship.—The nine riders who qualified for the semi-finals were: Poulain (holder), Friol, Dupre, and Michaut (France), Elegaard (Denmark) Van den Born (Belgium), Mayer (Germany), Gardellin. (Italy), and Rettich (Switzerland). The first semi-final was easy for Poulain, he disposing of Gardellin and Michaux readily. The second was secured by Ellegaard, Dupre furnishing a surprise by finishing before Van den Born; while the third went to Emile Friol, who was followed home closely by Mayer and Rettich. The final:

Gabriel Poulain (France) ...	2
Emile Friol (France)	3

The flying Dane knew that he had a couple of the trickiest riders in the world to compete against, so he followed Krame's example of cutting out a fast pace thus guarding against any surprise sprints, or being shut in by his opponents. When the bell rang denoting the last lap, Ellegaard was leading, with Poulain on his back wheel, Friol being in the last position several yards behind in order to try and get in a runaway dash, but this he failed to do, for immediately he lay down to his work away went Ellegaard and Poulain. These two riders then fought hard against each other, and 220 yards from home were going all out. Poulain made a desperate effort to get in front, but Ellegaard on the inside, guarded his position, and finishing remarkably strongly, gradually forged ahead and won by half a length; Friol a bad third. Time for the last 220 yards, 12⅘secs. Before dismounting Poulain gave Ellegaard his hand, and the two were loudly cheered. Ellegaard then turned out for the tandem race, and with Van den Born as partner won with comparative ease.

ATHLETICS.

ARMY CHAMPIONSHIPS.

The twenty-seventh Army athletic meeting opened under the most favourable auspices at Aldershot on Tuesday, the fixture being under the patronage of General Sir John French. The attendance was large and fashionable, and better results were never obtained. There was quite a record number of entries, especially in the events open to non-commissioned officers and men, while those open to officers filled well.

The events were contested with characteristic zest, and many of the finishes were of the neck-to-neck order. Lieutenant Halswell created a sensation by losing the Officers' 100 yards, Allowing the Rev. Walkey to get a yard start at the crack of the pistol, he failed to overhaul him, and lost by nearly a couple of yards. He more than redeemed his position by winning the Army Championship Half-mile, hands down, by fifteen yards, in 2mins. 5⅗secs., his victory being the outcome of much enthusiasm. Private Howes, of the Kings, The Crystal Palace champion, won the two-mile Bicycle Race splendidly in 5mins. 42⅕secs., defeating Sapper Lester, of the Engineers, by some eight yards. The Quarter-mile Obstacle Race for officers was won by Lieutenant Kernan, and his victory was a popular one, as was also that of Lieutenant Tee in the Mile Bicycle Race. In the Tug-of-War the Leinster Regiment were easy victors over the Bridgers, but there was not a race or an event that did not call forth the pick of the Army athletes. At the close of the sports Lady French presented the prizes. Details:—

CALCUTTA CUP TOURNAMENT—Final Round.—Mr. Norman Hunter, the old Cambridge golfer, who holds the competition record of 74 for the championship course at St. Andrews, and Captain W. H. McAllan met on the new course at St. Andrews to-day in the final round of the Royal and Ancient Club's Tournament for the Calcutta Cup. Mr. Hunter owed 3 stokes, while Captain McAllan had a handicap of 1.

The result was a win for Captain McAllan by one hole up.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

ON Saturday, 18th instant, we met at Beadnell's Shola at noon and no sooner had hounds moved off to draw Beadnells than a thick mist came down off the Ghauts and delayed proceedings for half-an-hour. Hearty, Bracken, Wenlock, Wapshare's Hare, Briar and Rocky sholas, as well as Brooklands were all tried and failed to provide a jack, but later on Hanging Shola was found to contain a brace. One headed for the Ghauts and the other for Brooklands. The pack were quickly on the latter's line and ran nicely, with Brookland-on their right, to the Golf Course, where the jack squatted on the road and was very nearly chopped. Getting under way again, he swung right handed through Brooklands and away towards Black Bridge, where many of the field were delayed by an awkward crossing and one gallant sportsman took an unvoluntary dip. From Black Bridge hounds ran up the valley to Hanging Shola, away again at the top side, where the jack was viewed, and over the hill by the Rifle Butts to Bingham, when hounds must have struck the heel line of another jack, which they took to an abrupt end at the place where he must have been lying when disturbed. The scarcity of jack must have been due to a very wet night on Friday.

On Monday, 20th instant, the fixture was at Andy Plantation at 8 A.M. It was a true English hunting morning with a bite in the air and no sun. No sooner had the Master moved off then Captain Dennistoun hulloaed a jack away in front. Hounds were quickly on the line and ran over the nasty bottom in Parsons' Valley, over the hill and then up to Belangekad Mund. Then swinging left handed they pointed for Middle Bit Shola, but turned straight again to the left and headed once more for Andy Plantation. In the Parsons' Valley they turned left handed again and ran a smaller complete circle to where the jack had been originally found. After bustling him about in a small covert by the Parsons' Valley Stream hounds pushed him once more into the open and rolled him over handsomely within a few yards of where he was found. The run lasted 38 minutes and was an excellent one for hounds, as but for once, when the Master lifted them on to where he saw a hound in front on the line, they were not touched.

Bluegums provided us with a second jack and hounds raced over the Downs to Staircase, up that well-known track (how many moderate animals have cried enough before they reached the top and now it was "Bellows to mend" with many of the field), and over the top of Staircase ran the jack. But no rest here, for hounds were racing down towards the Yemakal Valley, swinging right handed through the top of Briar and so down across the Downs to Wapshare's Hare Shola, past Wenlock Wood to Khed Shola, where they checked and let up some of the greatly diminished field. It was not for long, however, as they took up the line again and carried it into Dormer Wood, where a long delay took place, the jack being several times viewed, dead beat. Away from Dormer he ran, with hounds close at his brush and so down to the Toda Coffee Shop, then right handed back through Khed Shola to Wenlock. Here hounds unaccountably stopped and though one at least of the pack appeared covered with jack's blood and he was more than probably killed in the shola, yet, sad to say, his carcase could not be found. This was a good point and a fine hunt one of the best that hounds have enjoyed this season.

On Tuesday, 21st instant, the meet was at noon at the kennels. The Master turned off to the Havelock Road and drew down the west side, but without result. Rockwood, Bingham and Hanging shola had no tenant, but a line was picked up between the latter place and the Black Bridge and taken over the Ghauts, where the Master stopped hounds. Brooklands did not provide the requisite jack, and a long jog brought us to Denmark Wood, where a brace were soon afoot. One took a good line away for Baikie and the Downs, but unfortunately the body of the pack swung back to Cairn Hill, where the remainder of the day was spent in bustling jack up and down its precipitous steeps, hounds returning to kennels at 6 P.M.

ABLAKI.

THE GORDON'S HORSE HOUNDS.

WHETHER the advent of their old Master, Colonel R. Wapshare, has brought luck to the pack, or from whatever reason, the last two days' sport shown by the "G. H. H." have been about the best yet obtained. Certainly from a hunting point of view the weather has been fairly propitious, that is to say if a "cloudy sky" in India is equivalent to its prototype at Home. For the last ten days there has been very little sun, and heavy showers are constantly falling.

19th August.—A moderate field, which included many of the planters who were in Bangalore for the U. P. A. S. I. Conference met Mr. Gledstanes and his whips at the 5th milestone on the Dumlur Road. Moving off over some cultivation, it was a very few minutes before a hound spoke, and after a moment or so of feathering on the line they began to run hard. The opening phases of the run were awkward, owing to rocks and stones over which it was scarcely fair to ask a good horse to gallop, but this was quickly succeeded by some oozy, marshy stuff near a tank, and if exhausting this was at least safer. Without a check they ran almost due south for a couple of miles, and then a wily double back almost on his own line, puzzled the pack for a few moments. The Master, however, quickly had them on the right track, and we started apparently for the scene of the meet again. The jack travelled, however, slightly north, and downwind, which naturally caused the pace to be not quite so fast. Near Dokenhalli Village he made a quick left-handed turn and once more almost retraced his steps. Two jacks were now on foot, another having broken from a mango tope, and the body of the pack temporarily went wrong. Two hounds, however (one of which by the way was Countess, the prize winner at the Bangalore Dog Show), stuck to their original quarry, and very nearly had him in a casuarina tope before the remainder of the pack were brought to see the error of their ways. Once together again they drove him, now upwind, at a great pace, and he was viewed not far ahead. Beginning to run a bit short, he was followed beautifully by hounds at every turn and was finally pulled down in a small nullah near Dumlur Village. Although not a straight-necked 'un, he was a strong and plucky jack and the distance covered must have been over six miles with two slight checks. Hounds well deserved blood for they both ran fast and worked admirably. The time from start to finish was about three-quarters of an hour and Mrs. Thomas was presented with a well-earned brush. A subsequent try for the other "varmint" which had so nearly saved his comrade's life in the mango tope, was fruitless as he had been too long gone. No less than five habits graced the proceedings, including Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Mackenzie, Mrs. Traill, Mrs. Stirling and Miss Saunders.

23rd August.—Old reminiscences were no doubt awakened in the minds of the hunt staff when Colonel R. Wapshare was seen carrying the horn once more, Mr. Gledstanes having temporarily abdicated in his old colonel's favour. The meet was half-way between the 5th and 6th milestones on the Oosoor Road, and some forty people were out. Notwithstanding the fairly lengthy trot to the meet, three ladies were in evidence—Mrs. Thomas, Miss Goodrich and Mrs. Mackenzie. (I wonder whether the former of these three ladies will forgive "Soapey Sponge" if he diffidently expresses respectful admiration of her riding. A more perfect seat on a horse I never saw.) Throwing off to the left side of the road looking towards Oosoor, Colonel Wapshare quickly struck a line and by the way hounds ran from the first it was easy to see that there was a burning scent. Leaving Yellakurte Village on the right they hesitated for a moment at the head of a small tank and then went to the right. Again turning right-handed, the jack hung for a minute in a casuarina tope, obviously seeking for breathing time. None was afforded him, however, for the pack forced him out into the open and quickly rolled him over. A fast hard gallop of about 2¼ miles. Mrs. Mackenzie won the coveted trophy for the first lady up. A deep and broad watercourse about half-way through the run stopped a good many people. In some scrub jungle to the east of the road the pack again spoke to a line, an again ran like wild fire in a southerly direction. He was a weak jack, however, and bustling him right off his legs they pulled him down after three-quarters of a mile, his brush not being considered worthy of the honour of the presentation to any fair lady. During this brief gallop, another jack had been viewed away from a casuarina tope by one of the field, but on being taken to the spot hounds could make nothing of it. Colonel Wapshare, however, still persevered, and near the village of Chudsundra picked up another line. Hunting steadily the pack soon got on better terms with their jack, and the pace improving, it almost looked as though a third kill might ensue. He was a good jack, however, and no doubt had a fair start, for he led us as hard as we could go for four miles on end with only a couple of slight turns and nothing worth calling a check. Reaching the Oosoor Road near the 9th milestone, hounds suddenly threw up their heads and the line was never recovered. It was a thoroughly good run and a fit termination to a fine morning's sport. Colonel Leader, Mr. Gledstanes, Mr. Kidd and several other good men and true came to grief of sorts in the course of the morning, but most happily there was no harm done. And—memories of Lucy Glitters! how good our Bangalore ladies are all round at negotiating a country.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

23rd August.—Pashan. Probably the Motor Trials to-day and an Extra Race Meeting accounted for the absence of several well-known faces, any way a smaller number than usual turned out; a few minutes' law was given to late comers, the state of the kutcha road between the Ganeshkhind Gates and the village of Pashan causing delay to those who came on wheels to the meet, and it was nearly 10 minutes past 6 A.M. when hounds were taken to a tempting looking sugar field. Hardly were they in than their rapid movements and many a whimper told that their keen noses had detected a jack and soon they were a busy hunting in chorus, after being bustled steadily for some minutes the jack attempted to break in what would have been an excellent direction, but being headed by an idiotic syce he doubled back amongst his pursuers who killed him at once; while this was going on another jack was viewed away from the same field and the Master lost no time in taking the hounds in his direction, placing the field well back; he tried a jowari field and the hounds were very soon on a line, but after proceeding some distance and half way up a stoney hill it appeared that the jack had been gone too long and the scent was too cold so anticipating an almost certain find in another direction Colonel Sheringham thought it useless to pursue a cold drag and perhaps waste the best part of the morning; accordingly hounds were whipped off and taken round the corner of the hill and down to the lake where they at once hit off the line of a third jack which had probably left its cover on being disturbed by the noise of the hounds. Some three-quarters of an hour earlier, hounds ran him well by the edge of the water and swimming the end of the lake lost his line in some crops on the far side; here, however, with the Master's help it was not long before they were put right, but still the scent was cold and for those interested in hound work some of the prettiest hunting imaginable was to be seen, for after reaching the top of another hill they slowly carried their line to the bottom of the valley where having left the Master almost in the clouds above them they could receive no help; with greatest perseverance they cast themselves from side to side, and slowly and steadily making it good as they went along they reached the far side of this wide valley. Until now there had been but little music, but at this point hesitation vanished and the entire pack burst into chorus and in a mass literally flew up the hill side in full view of the Master and field; then, indeed, we had to sit down and gallop to reach the spot where they had reached the summit, but it was in spite of our best endeavours we could but just arrive in time to see the hounds disappearing over the ridge and down another valley beyond. The line was now carried along the range just under the brow of the hill and the going along the top being good we rode chiefly by sound and were able to keep in touch with the hounds who had now worked up to their jack and were on excellent terms; thus continuing for some distance the jack was at length headed by some cattle keepers who turned him up the hill; he was viewed by the Master and hounds raced to his holloa as the jack sped away in almost an opposite direction. After this the hounds had it all their own way and running very fast until they reached the hill side overlooking Rothrud Valley they ran their jack to ground and killed him in his earth, after a run, it was agreed, of 50 minutes. In spite of severe pace at times and much hill work, horses went remarkably well and many of the field were thus enabled to be up at the death, the brush was given to Miss Gibb and the mask to Miss Wigby. It was now 9 o'clock and most of those who had enjoyed this run now returned to Pashan, where a tent with breakfast provided through the hospitality of His Excellency the Governor's Staff proved a magnet too strong to be resisted. The Master and his Whips, all absolute gluttons for hunting, decided, as it was still early, to carry on, and some half dozen sportsmen and one or two ladies were content to cast in their lot with the officials. On reaching the borders of the lake still another jack was put on his legs and after dwelling carelessly in a jowari crop for a few minutes he decided to take a bold line through some rice fields on a most precipitous hill. This run started close on the brush of the jack, so hounds required no help; he was probably a bit "bust up" at the very start, but still stood before them for 20 minutes, until he reached that stronghold for jacks covered with lantana bushes, near the Government forests, and though several fresh ones were on foot hounds stuck to their hunted jack until they killed him on the side of the hill: they grudgingly spared the mask and brush to Miss Burlton and ate every bit that was over. We were at this point quite 4 miles from the breakfast tent and it was worth the day's outing to ride slowly there through some of the prettiest country in these parts, rolling downs of brilliant green interspersed with teak trees in full-bloom, the rich reds of lantana other flowers adding the inevitable touch of Oriental gorgeous colouring to sombre hues which otherwise might have been a bit of old England. To say that breakfast at the end of some six or seven hours in the saddle was welcome, is a poor and inadequate way of expressing the thanks of those who enjoyed it most thoroughly at mid-day.

26th August.—Canal Bridge, Satara Road, was to-day's fixture, but rain, ceaseless, heavy and determined from 10 P.M. on the 25th throughout the night and steadily going on at 4-30 this morning made the possibility of hunting very doubtful. At 5 A.M. hounds were taken from the kennels, but on the way to the meet the rain was again so heavy the Master took them back and decided to wait for another half hour or so with the hope of getting a break. Weather improved by 5-30 when another start was made and the meet was reached 30 minutes later than usual, where, besides the Master and the four whips Miss Olive, Surgeon-General Trevor, Major Burlton, and Mr. Wiseman were in readiness. A jack was quickly found in the nullahs below Parbutti and he went straight up the hill to the Government grass preserve; hounds raced him round this big plateau several times and at length forced him over the brink into some cultivation a little lower down where he was killed. The brush was given to Miss Olive and richly she deserved it. After the hounds had eaten their jack they were taken to try some more nullahs in the direction of Dhankawdi. In a jowari field at the head of a nullah another jack was found; he also rose the hill and gave us a taste of the plateau above, but being pressed he sank the hill, gave us a nice gallop along a valley until he reached the canal which he crossed without hesitation and took refuge in the dense sugar fields on the other side; we hunted him around for at least half an hour. This sort of work is extremely severe for hounds, and although they were often close on their jack at the first favourable moment the Master called them off, all responding but one which resolutely remained hunting when we came away. To return to the subject of weather the rain which had only ceased for a few moments continued with various degrees of violence the whole time.

SEMI-FINALS.

POONA HORSE vs. 29TH LANCERS.—After many postponements occasioned by bad weather this match was at length brought off on the 21st instant. The 29th Lancers played hard but were no match for the Poona Horse who won by 6 goals 4 subsidiaries to 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

First Chukker.—The Poona Horse got away and immediately hit a subsidiary, following it up with a goal shortly after. Score: Poona Horse, 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—A goal to the Poona Horse was signalled and after up and down play another goal and a minor point were added. The Lancers hit a subsidiary at the close of the period. Score: Poona Horse, 3 goals 2 subsidiaries; 29th Lancers 1 subsidiary.

Third Chukker.—The Poona Horse pressed, but the Lancers averted the danger and play ruled even for a while. The Poona Horse, however, again ran the ball down and scored 2 subsidiaries. Score: Poona Horse, 3 goals 4 subsidiaries; 29th Lancers, 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Fourth Chukker.—Immediately at the start the Poona Horse registered a goal. Then the Lancers worked the ball to their opponents' territory and Harbord hit a goal. Score: Poona Horse, 4 goals 4 subsidiaries; 29th Lancers, 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Fifth Chukker.—A goal to the Poona Horse was followed by a run by the Lancers, but Harbord failed to score. The rain came down in torrents at this stage and continued till the close of the game. Score: Poona Horse, 5 goals 4 subsidiaries; 29th Lancers, 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Sixth Chukker.—Only a minute and 17 seconds were left and both teams were playing hard. The Poona Horse scored a goal and won as stated. Final score: Poona Horse, 6 goals 4 subsidiaries; 29th Lancers, 1 goal 1 subsidiary. Teams:—

29TH LANCERS.		POONA HORSE.
Mr. G. Hermans	... 1	Mr. B. Alderson	... 1
Capt. V. Birch	... 2	Mr. P. Norbury	... 2
Mr. H. Willis	... 3	Capt. W. Cooper	... 3
Capt. C. Harbord	(back)	Mr. G. Lucas	(back)

Umpires:—Captain Hewlett and Captain Davie.

93RD HIGHLANDERS vs. 10TH HUSSARS.—These teams met on the 22nd instant, but at the close of the first chukker torrential rain put a stop to the play. The Highlanders had scored three goals without response from their opponents and were considered to have a good thing when the game was replayed on Friday. Fortune, however, deserted them and the Hussars ran out winners by 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 2 subsidiaries.

First Chukker.—The Highlanders attacked but could not score. Towards the end of the period their opponents got the ball away and opened the scoring with a goal: they added a second before time was called. Score: 10th Hussars, 2 goals.

Second Chukker.—The 93rd were prominent and Kennedy hit a subsidiary. Fast play till the end of the period but no further score. 10th Hussars, 2 goals; 93rd Highlanders, 1 subsidiary.

Third Chukker.—Both teams played hard. No score.

Fourth Chukker.—The Highlanders attacked till the Hussars got an opening and rushing down hit a goal to which they added two minor points soon after. Fast play followed till the end of the period. Score: 10th Hussars, 3 goals 2 subsidiaries; 93rd Highlanders, 1 subsidiary.

Fifth Chukker.—Level play. Palmer of the Hussars and Forbes of the 93rd took falls but were unhurt. No score.

Near Dokenhalli Village he made a quick left-handed turn and once more almost retraced his steps. Two jacks were now on foot, another having broken from a mango tope, and the body of the pack temporarily went wrong. Two hounds, however (one of which by the way was Countess, the prize winner at the Bangalore Dog Show), stuck to their original quarry, and very nearly had him in a casuarina tope before the remainder of the pack were brought to see the error of their ways. Once together again they drove him, now upwind, at a great pace, and he was viewed not far ahead. Beginning to run a bit short, he was followed beautifully by hounds at every turn and was finally pulled down in a small nullah near Dumlur Village. Although not a straight-necked 'un, he was a strong and plucky jack and the distance covered must have been over six miles with two slight checks. Hounds well deserved blood for they both ran fast and worked admirably. The time from start to finish was about three-quarters of an hour and Mrs. Thomas was presented with a well-earned brush. A subsequent try for the other "varmint" which had so nearly saved his comrade's life in the mango tope, was fruitless as he had been too long gone. No less than five habits graced the proceedings, including Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Mackenzie, Mrs. Traill, Mrs. Stirling and Miss Saunders.

23rd August.—Old reminiscences were no doubt awakened in the minds of the hunt staff when Colonel R. Wapshare was seen carrying the horn once more, Mr. Gledstanes having temporarily abdicated in his old colonel's favour. The meet was half-way between the 5th and 6th milestones on the Oossor Road, and some forty people were out. Notwithstanding the fairly lengthy trot to the meet, three ladies were in evidence—Mrs. Thomas, Miss Goodrich and Mrs. Mackenzie. (I wonder whether the former of these three ladies will forgive "Soapey Sponge" if he diffidently expresses respectful admiration of her riding. A more perfect seat on a horse I never saw.) Throwing off to the left side of the road looking towards Oossor, Colonel Wapshare quickly struck a line and by the way hounds ran from the first it was easy to see that there was a burning scent. Leaving Yellakurte Village on the right they hesitated for a moment at the head of a small tank and then went to the right. Again turning right-handed, the jack hung for a minute in a casuarina tope, obviously seeking for breathing time. None was afforded him, however, for the pack forced him out into the open and quickly rolled him over. A fast hard gallop of about 2½ miles. Mrs. Mackenzie won the coveted trophy for the first lady up. A deep and broad watercourse about half-way through the run stopped a good many people. In some scrub jungle to the east of the road the pack again spoke to a line, an again ran like wild fire in a southerly direction. He was a weak jack, however, and bustling him right off his legs they pulled him down after three-quarters of a mile, his brush not being considered worthy of the honour of the presentation to any fair lady. During this brief gallop, another jack had been viewed away from a casuarina tope by one of the field, but on being taken to the spot hounds could make nothing of it. Colonel Wapshare, however, still persevered, and near the village of Chudsandra picked up another line. Hunting steadily the pack soon got on better terms with their jack, and the pace improving, it almost looked as though a third kill might ensue. He was a good jack, however, and no doubt had a fair start, for he led us as hard as we could go for four miles on end with only a couple of slight turns and nothing worth calling a check. Reaching the Oossor Road near the 9th milestone, hounds suddenly threw up their heads and the line was never recovered. It was a thoroughly good run and a fit termination to a fine morning's sport. Colonel Leader, Mr. Gledstanes, Mr. Kidd and several other good men and true came to grief of sorts in the course of the morning, but most happily there was no harm done. And—memories of Lucy Glitters! how good our Bangalore ladies are all round at negotiating a country.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

23rd August.—Pashan. Probably the Motor Trials to-day and an Extra Race Meeting accounted for the absence of several well-known faces, any way a smaller number than usual turned out; a few minutes' law was given to late comers, the state of the kutcha road between the Ganeshkhind Gates and the village of Pashan causing delay to those who came on wheels to the meet, and it was nearly 10 minutes past 6 A.M. when hounds were taken to a tempting looking sugar field. Hardly were they in than their rapid movements and many a whimper told that their keen noses had detected a jack and soon they were busy hunting in chorus, after being bustled steadily for some minutes the jack attempted to break in what would have been an excellent direction, but being headed by an idiotic syce he doubled back amongst his pursuers who killed him at once; while this was going on another jack was viewed away from the same field and the Master lost no time in taking the hounds in his direction, placing the field well back; he tried a jowari field and the hounds were very soon on a line, but after proceeding some distance and half way up a stoney hill it appeared that the jack had been gone too long and the scent was too cold so anticipating an almost certain find in another direction Colonel Sheringham thought it useless to pursue a cold drag and perhaps waste the best part of the morning; accordingly hounds were whipped off and taken round the corner of the hill and down to the lake where they at once hit off the line of a third jack which had probably left its covert on being disturbed by the noise of the hounds. Some three-quarters of an hour earlier, hounds ran him well by the edge of the water and swimming the end of the lake lost his line in some crops on the far side; here, however, with the Master's help it was not long before they were put right, but still the scent was cold and for those interested in hound work some of the prettiest hunting imaginable was to be seen, for after reaching the top of another hill they slowly carried their line to the bottom of the valley where having left the Master almost in the clouds above them they could receive no help; with greatest perseverance they cast themselves from side to side, and slowly and steadily making it good as they went along they reached the far side of this wide valley. Until now there had been but little music, but at this point hesitation vanished and the entire pack burst into chorus and in a mass literally flew up the hill side in full view of the Master and field; then, indeed, we had to sit down and gallop to reach the spot where they had reached the summit, but it was in spite of our best endeavours we could but just arrive in time to see the hounds disappearing over the ridge and down another valley beyond. The line was now carried along the range just under the brow of the hill and the going along the top being good we rode chiefly by sound and were able to keep in touch with the hounds who had now worked up to their jack and were on excellent terms; thus continuing for some distance the jack was at length headed by some cattle keepers who turned him up the hill; he was viewed by the Master and hounds raced to his holloa as the jack sped away in almost an opposite direction. After this the hounds had it all their own way and running very fast until they reached the hill side overlooking Rothrud Valley they ran their jack to ground and killed him in his earth, after a run, it was agreed, of 50 minutes. In spite of severe pace at times and much hill work, horses went remarkably well and many of the field were thus enabled to be up at the death, the brush was given to Miss Gibb and the mask to Miss Winby. It was now 9 o'clock and most of those who had enjoyed this run now returned to Pashan, where a tent with breakfast provided through the hospitality of His Excellency the Governor's Staff proved a magnet too strong to be resisted. The Master and his Whips, all absolute gluttons for hunting, decided, as it was still early, to carry on, and some half dozen sportsmen and one or two ladies were content to cast in their lot with the officials. On reaching the borders of the lake still another jack was put on his legs and after dwelling carelessly in a jowari crop for a few minutes he decided to take a bold line through some rice fields up a most precipitous hill. This run started close on the brush of the jack, so hounds required no help; he was probably a bit "bust up" at the very start, but still stood before them for 20 minutes, until he reached that stronghold for jacks covered with lantana bushes, near the Government forests, and though several fresh ones were on foot hounds stuck to their hunted jack until they killed him on the side of the hill: they grudgingly spared the mask and brush to Miss Burlton and ate every bit that was over. We were at this point quite 4 miles from the breakfast tent and it was worth the day's outing to ride slowly there through some of the prettiest country in these parts, rolling downs of brilliant green interspersed with teak trees in full-bloom, the rich reds of lantana other flowers adding the inevitable touch of Oriental gorgeous colouring to sombre hues which otherwise might have been a bit of old England. To say that breakfast at the end of some six or seven hours in the saddle was welcome, is a poor and inadequate way of expressing the thanks of those who enjoyed it most thoroughly at mid-day.

26th August.—Canal Bridge, Satara Road, was to-day's fixture, but rain, ceaseless, heavy and determined from 10 P.M. on the 25th throughout the night and steadily going on at 4-30 this morning made the possibility of hunting very doubtful. At 5 A.M. hounds were taken from the kennels, but on the way to the meet the rain was again so heavy the Master took them back and decided to wait for another half hour or so with the hope of getting a break. Weather improved by 5-30 when another start was made and the meet was reached 30 minutes later than usual, where, besides the Master and the four whips Miss Olive, Surgeon-General Trevor, Major Burlton, and Mr. Wiseman were in readiness. A jack was quickly found in the nullahs below Parbutti and he went straight up the hill to the Government grass preserve; hounds raced him round this big plateau several times and at length forced him over the brink into some cultivation a little lower down where he was killed. The brush was given to Miss Olive and richly she deserved it. After the hounds had eaten their jack they were taken to try some more nullahs in the direction of Dhankawdi. In a jowari field at the head of a nullah another jack was found; he also rose the hill and gave us a taste of the plateau above, but being pressed he sank the hill, gave us a nice gallop along a valley until he reached the canal which he crossed without hesitation and took refuge in the dense sugar fields on the other side; we hunted him around for at least half an hour. This sort of work is extremely severe for hounds, and although they were often close on their jack at the first favourable moment the Master called them off, all responding but one which resolutely remained hunting when we came away. To return to the subject of weather the rain which had only ceased for a few moments continued with various degrees of violence the whole time.

SEMI-FINALS.

POONA HORSE vs. 29TH LANCERS.—After many postponements occasioned by bad weather this match was at length brought off on the 21st instant. The 29th Lancers played hard but were no match for the Poona Horse who won by 6 goals 4 subsidiaries to 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

First Chukker.—The Poona Horse got away and immediately hit a subsidiary, following it up with a goal shortly after. Score: Poona Horse, 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—A goal to the Poona Horse was signalled and after up and down play another goal and a minor point were added. The Lancers hit a subsidiary at the close of the period. Score: Poona Horse, 3 goals 2 subsidiaries; 29th Lancers 1 subsidiary.

Third Chukker.—The Poona Horse pressed, but the Lancers averted the danger and play ruled even for a while. The Poona Horse, however, again ran the ball down and scored 2 subsidiaries. Score: Poona Horse, 3 goals 4 subsidiaries; 29th Lancers, 1 subsidiary.

Fourth Chukker.—Immediately at the start the Poona Horse registered a goal. Then the Lancers worked the ball to their opponents' territory and Harbord hit a goal. Score: Poona Horse, 4 goals 4 subsidiaries; 29th Lancers, 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Fifth Chukker.—A goal to the Poona Horse was followed by a run by the Lancers, but Harbord failed to score. The rain came down in torrents at this stage and continued till the close of the game. Score: Poona Horse, 5 goals 4 subsidiaries; 29th Lancers, 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Sixth Chukker.—Only a minute and 17 seconds were left and both teams were playing hard. The Poona Horse scored a goal and won as stated. Final score: Poona Horse, 6 goals 4 subsidiaries; 29th Lancers, 1 goal 1 subsidiary. Teams:—

Umpires:—Captain Hewlett and Captain Davie.

93RD HIGHLANDERS vs. 10TH HUSSARS.—These teams met on the 22nd instant, but at the close of the first chukker torrential rain put a stop to the play. The Highlanders had scored three goals without response from their opponents and were considered to have a good thing when the game was replayed on Friday. Fortune, however, deserted them and the Hussars ran out winners by 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 2 subsidiaries.

First Chukker.—The Highlanders attacked but could not score. Towards the end of the period their opponents got the ball away and opened the scoring with a goal: they added a second before time was called. Score: 10th Hussars, 2 goals.

Second Chukker.—The 93rd were prominent and Kennedy hit a subsidiary. Fast play till the end of the period but no further score. 10th Hussars, 2 goals; 93rd Highlanders, 1 subsidiary.

Third Chukker.—Both teams played hard. No score.

Fourth Chukker.—The Highlanders attacked till the Hussars got an opening and rushing down hit a goal to which they added two minor points soon after. Fast play followed till the end of the period. Score: 10th Hussars, 3 goals 2 subsidiaries; 93rd Highlanders, 1 subsidiary.

Fifth Chukker.—Level play. Palmer of the Hussars and Forbes of the 93rd took falls but were unhurt. No score.

THE SUB-TARGET GUN COMPANY.

Gentlemen,—It affords me pleasur to testify to the value of the Sub-Targe Rifle, one of which was set up o: the steamer, and was in constant use by the members of the Canadian Rifle Team during the voyage from Montreal to Liverpool and afterwards at the Canadian Headquarters at Bisley, where it was in almost constant use. I consider it of great value in the instruction of recruits in holding and sighting, and also in detecting and correcting the individual errors of eyesight. For practice in trigger-pulling it is of great advantage, even to the experienced marksman.

My daily use of the Machine at Bisley, was, I feel, of advantage to me in my work on the ranges, where I was winner of the King's Prize.

THE SUB-TARGET GUN COMPANY.

Gentlemen,—Having used the Sub-Target Rifle frequently during the N.R.A. Meeting at Bisley, just closed, I am pleased to testify to its value in promoting steadiness in holding, sighting and trigger-pulling.

To the recruit it must be especially useful in these respects, as the tell-tale "needle" points out every "fault" of the man. I believe that its general adoption and use by the Army, Navy, Volunteers, Rifle Clubs and in the Public Schools would go a long way towards making a nation of reliable shots for Imperial Defence."

Thursday, 23rd August 1906.

THE Hot Weather Regatta of the Madras Boat Club this evening, on the pleasant reaches of the Adyar, opposite the Club of the same name, was a more than usually interesting sporting function owing to the presence of a crew from Poona which was for the sixth time trying conclusions with Madras. The Challenge Event was a Four Oar race over 1,000 yards, which, however, owing to the depth of water in the river was reduced to 940 yards, the longest racing stretch that could be obtained. They also very sportingly entered for the Senior Pair Oars and a Sculling match, but these were not representative club contests, and for reasons which will appear later, were not quite satisfactory from a rowing point of view.

The weather all day had been cloudy, and we were saved from the glare of the setting sun on the waters ; but withal the afternoon was muggy. After the usual taking of photographs of the Challenge Crews and the rowing members of the M.C.C. which absorbed half an pour of valuable daylight and caused two races to be rowed in the murk, the real business of the afternoon commenced with the race for the Junior sculls. Ogden, who defeated Chessal in the preliminary heats, faced Davies in the final, the latter having drawn a bye. Ogden had no difficulty in winning, but the margin might have been smaller if Davies had not had trouble with his slide early in the race. The next event was the race of the day, the Challenge Fours between Madras and Poona. Poona were first afloat and took the eyes of all as they paddled down to the post, as a fine level lot, who rowed well together with a grand long swing that made their craft travel. It was known before hand that they would win, but we hoped, as we saw Madras go by to their station, that they would make the visiting crew hustle all the way. Poona led from start to finish, and maintaining their long swinging stroke all through without being hurried, won by a shade under two lengths in 2mins. 47⅘secs. Madras, though outclassed, stuck pluckily to their work, though the fact that more than one man on the boat was rowing short proved that they were rowed out. Poona received a great ovation on their victory, and from none more cordially than from the vanquished crew. The next event was the Club Challenge Fours. In the preliminary heats Wilson's crew beat Faith's crew by two and a half lengths. The final between Wilson's boat and Laing's boat produced a fighting race, first one leading and then the other. Half way down the course Wilson's crew asserted their supremacy, and rowing well together won by a length in 2mins. 45⅗secs.; also good time, considering the course was only 60 yards shorter than that for the great race. As both Murray and Wilson had been rowing in this race, it was decided to sandwich in the Tub Race to give them a rest for their next races. The Tub race, however, did not fill and Murray and Faith went out to meet Noke and Baldwin (Poona) in the finals for the Senior Pair Oars. This was a very unsatisfactory race, Poona after rowing a very erratic course, took their opponents' water and eventually fouled them. They stopped rowing and the Madras pair paddled home winners. Graham, of Poona, was to have met Wilson, of Madras, in a sculling match, but he was prevented owing to indisposition and Dorgan took his place. Wilson, though palpably unfit, sportingly went out and won easily. The race was run in the dark and requires no description ; but I believe Wilson led all the way and won easily. Appended are the details :—

SCULLING MATCH.
F. H. Wilson (Madras) beat J. Dorgan (Poona).
Won easily

The "pots" were given away at the Adyar Club by Mr. Justice Boddam, the President of the Madras Boat Club, who, in his speech, congratulated the Poona crew on their victory and their sporting spirit on having come all that way to avenge their defeat by Madras last year. The visitors received another ovation from the large gathering present.

THE SCULLING CHAMPIONSHIP OF THE WORLD.

WE now give our readers full details of the remarkable race between Towns and Stanbury on the Paramatta river on the 28th July, the result and brief particulars of which appeared in our issue of 2nd August.

The conditions, as far as weather was concerned, could not have been better if made to order. It was Spring-like, and almost calm. The rivals had progressed satisfactorily in their training up to the last week. Then alarming incidents occurred. Towns almost broke down, but recovered ; Stanbury was not so fortunate, and lost the race in consequence, after having it won. There was an enormous crowd at all points on the river. The three official steamers were well patronised at £1 (umpire's) 10/, and 5/. Five other large steamers took big loads, and there were innumerable craftof all sorts on the water.

Stanbury was boated in a craft made by Chris. Neilsen. Towns used one made at his own shed (the work of that artist, George Fearne, who trained Searle and others), and sculls turned by his own hands. In his training Stanbury was advised and assisted by Bill Beach, ex-champion, Jack Mitchell, of the Clarence (on water), and Jack Hancock (on land). Towns was trained on the water by Charlie (his brother), assisted by W. Fogwell, of Coraki, a prospective champion, and Joe Andreoli, the ever reliable, looked after matters in general.

Stanbury scaled 12-8, Towns 1-10.

Those who knew most about the matter expected Stanbury to beat 2 to 1 on. But it leaked out that he had met with bad luck, and a few including the Towns "stable," knew that, owing to muscular rheumatism, his chance was handicapped. It transpired after the race that his left arm was so troublesome that just prior to the start his medical attendant, Dr. Scott, had injected morphia into the limb to deaden the pain. The general run of the public knew nothing of this and expected Stanbury to win again. His supporters, notwithstanding this drawback, thought that he was so superior in pace that he would still succeed after a hard race.

THE CONTEST.

Mr. M. Rush, a veteran sculler, was umpire, and Mr. M. A. H. Fitzhardinge, an enthusiast, judge ; while Mr. W. L. Kerr was timekeeper. The southern position was won in the toss for choice for Towns, and Stanbury took the other.

With hardly a minute's delay they went off by mutual consent to a beautiful start, the water being smooth as glass, the tide on the turn, with them, and a light breeze behind.

The pace was a cracker at the outset, Towns, knowing that Stanbury was not all right, attempting to crack him up right away. As they left the Side Bridge and made for Uhr's Point, reached in 1min. 57secs., Towns had a very slight advantage, but they were almost immediately level again, and making across for the mile point the struggle was one of the keenest ever seen. First one and then the other would seem to have a few inches advantage, looking from the rear. At the mile, however, passed in the very fast time of 5 mins. 43⅗secs (a record for championship) Stanbury had perhaps a quarter's length advantage. The excitement was intense. The big man, however, appeared to have got his opponent's measure, and gradually began to go away. At Putney Point (8mins 50⅘secs.) he had fully a length's advantage. His supporters were now satisfied that their money was safe. Keen observers, however, could see that Stanbury was not holding his position with ease. To Tennyson, about two miles occupied 11mins. 17⅗secs., with Stanbury still in the lead, both men rowing their hardest. The general onlookers thought the struggle was over, and the steamers sent forth the usual "Cock-a-doodle-do." Stanbury had a three-length' lead, and appeared to hold his rival safe, but Towns livened up at Cabarita (below Mortlake, his training shed). The time here was 14mins. 8secs. Heading for Gladesville a great change came over the scene. Stanbury slowed down nearly to a stop, and Towns, putting in some vigorous rowing, drew up level, and was past the champion almost before it could be realised, and the race was all over in quite a different sense to what it had been a few minutes before. At One Man Wharf Towns had a good lead and Stanbury, being incapable of an effort, he went on, and passed Searle's monument, the historic winning post, with from 150 to 200 yards to the good. The excitement continued to be tremendous, and while Towns was cheered by his friends, there was a blackguard demonstration against Stanbury. The full time was 19mins. 53⅘secs.—a record for a championship race.

Wrestling.

LUCKNOW WRESTLING TOURNAMENT.

Referee :—Mr. H. Douglas.

First Day.

A FOUR days' Wrestling Tournament opened at Lucknow on Thursday, the 23rd instant, under the patronage of the Hon'ble Mr. Leslie Porter, C.S I., Commissioner of the Lucknow Division. The Committee consists of Mr. G.S.C. Cole, President, Mr. D J Daly, Mr F. Owen O'Neill, Mr. H. Douglas, and Nawab Ghulam Husain, Members and Mr. M. H. Eyre, Secretary. There are about forty entries, comprising well-known Indian wrestlers from Lahore, Jullunder, Ajmer, Quetta, Muttra, and Cawnpore, and several men of local repute. A storm put a stop to the wrestling before the day's programme was got through, the arena being filled with water. Of the seven bouts fought four were won and three drawn. The winners were Chundan Din of Lahore, Sidhi Dhoonga of Lucknow, Sheo Ratan of the 8th Rajputs, Lucknow, and Ahmed Jan of Lucknow.

Ahmed Jan gave an excellent exhibition of his skill. After a preliminary struggle for grip he downed his man and was afterwards on top of him. He then proceeded to stand him on his head and gradually turned him over from one shoulder to the other when he was declared the winner. The contest lasted five minutes.

Second Day.

A capital programme of eighteen events was provided on Saturday, the 25th instant, the second day of the wrestling tournament. The spectators included a number of Europeans, including military officers. The combatants in one event had evidently entered the ring with the full determination of sharing the stakes, but the fight had not proceeded very far when the spectators gave vent to their disapproval in no uncertain terms, and the two were disqualified. The other contests were fought with conspicuous fairness. The following were declared fouls : Jiu Jitsu ; pressing the arm back over the shoulder blade ; striking with the knee on the loins except when making a throw ; catching the ankle and knee and twisting it outwards, and striking with the closed fist in the face or on any part of the body.

After a contest had lasted five minutes the wrestlers generally found themselves in a bath of perspiration and it became next to impossible to obtain a hold. Having rubbed themselves with earth they proceeded afresh, but generally to little purpose, several of the contests resulted in draws. The most interesting of these was between Amir of Ghazipur and Fazl-ud-din of Gujranwala. The former had all the advantage in weight, but the Punjabee, whose pluck was much admired, averted a fall time after time. The men wrestled for half an hour without result, and showed remarkable powers of endurance.

Bhawani Din of Indore vs. Ismail of Jullander. This was a good fight. Ismail was too light for his opponent. Bhawani Din won.

Anbir of Cawnpore vs. Nur-ud-din of Lucknow. This contest was over in no time. The local man had plenty of supporters, but he succumbed to a throw which was perhaps the best of the afternoon.

Mahomed Shafi of Lucknow vs. Rahim Bux of Indore. The former won after a closely contested match lasting for several minutes.

Kapil Singh, 8th Rajputs vs. Abdul Kareem, of Bulandshahr. Kapil Singh was too good for his opponent and won easily.

Ibrahim of Lahore vs. Gujraj Chaube of Muttra. Ibrahim won.

Hawa of Lucknow vs. Uma Chaube of Muttra. When they had been wrestling for some time Uma Chaube applied an arm lock. The other freed himself after a great struggle and subsequently defeated his opponent.

Mangal of Cawnpore vs. Debi of Ajmer. The former won, the bout lasting 30 seconds.

Khuda Bakhsh of Khurja vs. Kadar of Lucknow. Khuda Baksh won, the contesting lasting five minutes.

Bisa of Lahore vs. Rahim Bakhsh of Lucknow. Bisa proved himself to be an exceptionally able wrestler and soon had his opponent at his mercy.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

CUSTOMS vs. WANDERERS.—Played on the 22nd instant on the Customs ground, the home team winning by two tries and a dropped goal to nil. The Customs attacked immediately and Edwards got over with a try which was unconverted They continued to press and Warden dropped a goal. A like score by Wilson just failed and the interval arrived soon after. On resuming the Customs again had the upper hand and attacked all through. Warden made an unsuccessful attempt to drop a goal, but just before time Hart crossed the line with a try. The placed failed Teams :—

CUSTOMS.—T Vears, back; Jewell, Warden, Edwards, and H. Vears, three-quarters; Petty and Hart, half-backs; Fredericks, Renny, Devereux, Goldsmith, Wilson, Simmons, Carlton, and Thomson, forwards.

WANDERERS.—Dhein, back; Hamilton, Rosario, Smith, and W. Griffiths, three-quarters; Cranenburgh and eigh, half-backs; C. Griffiths, H. Griffiths, Bozalt, Fisher, Murtough, Ewing, Bowens, and Mayers, forwards.

ARMENIAN F. C. vs. NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—These teams met on the Armenian ground on Saturday, a scrambling game ending in a win for the Fusiliers by a goal to nil. The home team had not their full complement of men. Lewes got over with a try shortly before the interval and Mathews converted. Teams :—

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—Dignam, back; Brenram, Freer, Butterfield, and Lewis, three-quarters; Rudd and Dickenson, half-backs; Pawson, Mathews, Johnstone, Longdon, Tomlinson, Bellet, and Mr. Mile-Honce and Ovans, forwards.

ARMENIANS.—Jordon, back; A. S. Apcar, King, and Durant, three-quarters; Boldy and Ivers, half backs; Martin, Grosser, Thaddeus, Carapiet, Marker, Basil, Joseph, and J. Apcar, forwards.

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS vs. UNITED SERVICES.—Played on the Fusiliers' ground on Tuesday evening, the home team winning by a goal and a try to nil. Scrums in midfield on starting were followed by an invasion of the Fusiliers' "25" Dignam cleared and the Northumberland forwards rushed the ball down, Rudd getting over with a try Mathews added the major points The Fusiliers continued to have the best of the game in the second half. Milne-Home played well and eventually got over with a try, the attempt to convert falling short. Final score: Fusiliers, 1 goal 1 try (8 points) to nil.

CALCUTTA vs. WANDERERS.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday. The game was very one-sided, the home team having it all their own way. They scored 4 goals in the first half and eventually ran out winners by 51 points to nil.

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IN regard to the League Competition it is highly unsatisfactory to find that some of the teams have turned up so ridiculously short that not a few of the fixtures have resulted in no game or a friendly practice, whereas on other occasions matches have been worked off without the full complement of players. A Committee is always justified in "dropping" a man who once disappoints without being able to give a very good reason. Indeed a Club's interests are often best served by selecting the keen player, who can be relied upon to take the field, in preference to the whimsical individual who, knowing his services cannot easily be dispensed with merely suits his own convenience quite regardless of any obligation to his club.

This state of things should not exist, and everyone hopes the various Committees and Honorary Secretaries will give the matter their serious attention and endeavour to remedy it. They no doubt have the interests of Rugby at heart and they must clearly see what an injury is being done to the game. Every sympathy, however, should be extended to those players who have fulfilled their engagements and pluckily fought at long odds against superior numbers, but what is to be said of those who have given their Honorary Secretaries either no notice, or an unduly short one of their inability or unwillingness to play.

The Northumberland Fusiliers, who won all their matches until they met Calcutta, cannot be congratulated on their performance against that Club. Their defeat did not come as a surprise, but that they should have suffered such a heavy one—9 goals and 2 tries (51 points)—did. Kerr, who is one of Calcutta's cleverest forwards, scored a very pretty try within the first two minutes, which was duly converted by Drew. This seemed to stimulate Calcutta and to demoralize the soldiers. Of the ten other tries obtained, eight of which were converted by Drew, the backs scored all save one (Dick). Siddons was responsible for four, Maclean for two, and Arthur, Burnett, and Mallet for one each. Needless to say with things going so merrily for Calcutta all their backs played well. Maclean and Siddons made some really good runs, and Arthur's try was worth seeing. The forwards undoubtedly gave their halves every opportunity, both of whom by well judged passes contributed largely to the success of the three-quarter line.

The Fusiliers appeared to be quite off colour. Where they chiefly failed was behind the scrum. Their backs tackled badly and instead of going for the man with the ball, hesitated and kept looking for him to pass. Fiere and Lewis, who have heretofore played some good games, got poor chances of showing up. Of the forwards, who were not so badly beaten as the score would indicate, Lieutenant Overs, Pawson, and Mathews seemed slightly best. Their front rank do not yet realize how necessary it is to get possession; otherwise the opposing scrummagers would not have been able to feed their halves so well and so rapidly.

While Calcutta was engaged with the Fusiliers the United Services were administering a beating to the Armenians. The latter were four men short and naturally had no chance of winning although through the instrumentality of Gregory and Apcar they were near scoring on one or two occasions. The Services got seven tries but, notwithstanding the dry ground, only managed to convert one.

Of the three matches listed for Saturday only one came off, Fusiliers vs. Armenians. The latter make a point of never "scratching" a match and although they find a great difficulty in getting their players together at present, better times are near when some of their last year's team return. After a game confined chiefly to forwards the Fusiliers ran out winners by one goal to nil.

Those who went to see the Customs vs. Calcutta match were disappointed. The latter's team was on the ground at 5 30 P. M., and after waiting some time both players and spectators became restless. Everyone was asking "where are the Customs?" though it was not seriously thought they had been kidnapped or had fallen a prey to an infuriated mob as happened to the Punjabis soccer team. At any rate towards 6 P.M. a search party, headed by the burly Calcutta captain, set out and, having visited the Customs' stronghold, found a few of them in perfect ease. Inquiries elicited the fact that they understood the match had been "declared off," a piece of news which seemed to surprise no one more than Calcutta's Honorary Secretary, who had not previously received any information to that affect.

Fortunately the Wanderers and United Services match had been arranged to be played on the Customs' ground. The former, who were short of several players, did not seem over anxious to carry out their fixture with the latter, and the United Services team crossed over to the adjoining ground and engaged Calcutta in a "friendly."

Of outside clubs, Bombay, the Gloucesters, and the West Ridings have already entered for the Cup. The first named has disappointed on other occasions, but it is satisfactory to hear that their visit to Calcutta is practically assured, and not only that, but also that they will be represented by a strong team.

It is likely an entry will also be received from the Somersets.

Lieutenant Kidner, who had the misfortune of having his collar bone broken in one of the early practices, will play full back for Calcutta in their Madras tour, vice Drew, who will be unable to travel.

If is believed that all the other members of the Calcutta team will make the journey, with the exception of Dick.

The positions of the teams competing in the League Competition were, at the end of last week, as follows:—

SPHINX.

THE RICHARDSON TOURNAMENT.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. EAST LANCS.—The first game in the tournament was played at Poona on the 21st instant between the above teams. The ground was slippery owing to the recent rain, a great game however was witnessed, the Scots eventually winning by two goals to one. The Lancs attacked at the start, but the Scots' backs cleared on every occasion and play was mainly in midfield for a while. Then the Scots got an opening and from a scrimmage before the Lancs goal the ball was put through. The Scots returned to the attack, but their opponents got away and obtained a corner. The attempt to equalise was a good one, but the Scots' custodian saved and play was transferred to midfield. On resuming after the interval the Lancs attacked and forced a couple of corners which were not, however, turned to account. The Scots got possession and a good run ended in their scoring a second goal. The Lancs played hard and invading the Scots' country found the net amidst great enthusiasm. Play was fast throughout the remainder of the game, but there was no further scoring.

LEICESTERS vs. R. F. A.—Played on the 22nd instant on a slippery ground the Leicesters from Belgaum winning by four goals to nil. Each side attacked in turn during the opening stages. Then the Leicesters pressed, their repeated efforts at length resulting in a goal. The Gunners tried to get level, but the ball was returned to their own territory and the interval arrived with the Leicesters still attacking. On crossing over the Gunners' goal was again besieged and a second goal accrued to the Leicesters. The R. F. A. team occasionally got away once obtaining an abortive corner. Play was for the most part in the Gunners' half and adding two more goals to their score the Leicesters won as stated.

SEMI-FINALS.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. A. AND S. HIGHLANDERS.—These teams met on the 23rd instant, the Royal Scots winning by two goals to nil. The Royals were first away and forced a corner, the ball being headed into the net from the kick. The Argylls pressed, but lost opportunities through erratic shooting. Up and down play was followed by a run by the Royals who put through a second time. Changing ends play was in midfield for a spell. A foul against the Argylls took the ball into their territory, but they cleared and made determined efforts to score. Up and down play with each team attacking in turn; the Argylls got in a long shot which just went over the cross bar and try as they might they were unable to reduce the margin.

LEICESTERS vs. CONNAUGHT RANGERS.—This match was played on the 24th instant, the Leicesters running out victorious by five goals to nil. The Leicesters rushed away at the start and scored a goal within the first three minutes. They returned to the attack and from a corner that followed put on a second goal. They continued to assert themselves and a third point was quickly registered. The Rangers were kept on the defensive and the Leicesters had hard lines in a shot which hit the cross bar. Before the interval they netted once more and crossed over leading by four goals to nil. The Rangers played a plucky game and their goal-keeper gave a good display, clearing several difficult shots. The Rangers tried to score but without success, and another goal being added to the Leicesters' score they won by five goals to nil.

10th August 1906.

ONCE more the annual contest between the leading Amateurs and the Professionals of Yorkshire has come off with teams of 12-a-side at Fixby, where the Huddersfield Club disport themselves. Last year the "Gentlemen" were quite unequal to the "paid players," but the table, were turned this year when the Amateurs scored six wins as against the adversary's four. Even the great Sandy Herd was unable to pull off his match against Mr. E. A. Lassen, although certainly things looked very black for the Amateurs when he was 6 down with only 7 to play; however, Herd, magnificent player as he undoubtedly is, quite broke down on the last 7 holes and the 18th tee was faced all square, and this being halved the battle was neither to the one nor to the other. Heading the "Quality" was Mr. H. H. Barker, the Champion of the White Rose county, and it was probably to a great extent owing to his intimate knowledge of his home course, that his victory over Edward Ray, the Ganton Professional might be attributed and he is certainly to be congratulated on emerging victorious here on his own course, over such a deadly and skilful opponent. The foursomes in the afternoon resulted in favour of the Professionals by four matches to two Appended are the rival teams and results:—

It will be seen that while 8 of the 12 were extremely close matches, there were yet 3 of the type run-away, but Amateur of whatever nationality or sex will be glad to see that even a team of 12 Professionals is not invincible, and why, Oh! why isn't there a golfing "Gentlemen vs. Players?" The idea has been advocated by more than one venturesome player—playwriter is the correct term here—and perhaps some day it will be put into practice.

* * * *

The 22nd Annual Tournament for the Calcutta Cup was begun on the new course at St. Andrews on Tuesday, 7th instant, in somewhat dull weather which did not matter in the very least. This competition differs from nearly every other one which is held, in that although it is played off in heats by match play—any of the actual matches can be halved and not decided by playing on till one or other wins a hole. In the case of a halved match both combatants have the satisfaction of passing into the next round. Play is under handicap and another idiosyncrasy of this especial Calcutta Cup is that up to 1902 the handicapping was by holes, but has since then been by the more general system of strokes. Thirty-four couples were drawn in the first heat, including players of all sorts and degrees—from Mr. Norman Hunter, who started at +3 and defeated Mr. N. D. Beaston-Bell—11 and Messrs Ellis and J. L. Low at +2 to others with a handicap allowance of 16 strokes. The only "plus" player who suffered defeat in the first round was Mr. J. L. Low, who lost to Captain Macallam (1) by 3 and 2. Five players got the luck of a walk-over and three matches were halved in the first round. In the second round only one match was drawn and there were no W. O's. At the conclusion of the second round there were ten couples left in, and the third round resulted in the survival of the 3 plus men. Mr. H. G. B. Ellis, however, succumbed in his next match to Mr. G. H. L. Simpson, who, with a handicap of three, beat him by 3 up and 2 to play. In the fourth heat Mr. Norman Hunter found a stiff opponent in Mr. Curtis, whom he only succeeded in defeating on the home green. Mr. Hamilton Fleming was beaten by Mr. J. Shaw in the third heat, but the plus man failed to pass the rubicon of the next round, where he fell to Mr. Cunan, who had been fortunate enough to get another life by halving in the previous round. With the exception of this tournament still in progress there is little else of moment to chronicle just now, but golf like every other natural thing is never at a standstill and from all that one sees and hears will in all probability be another Brook, "and go on for ever." As golfers we all fervently hope so!

GOLF IN BANGALORE.

MADRAS vs. BANGALORE.—The above very old opponents met at Bangalore to try conclusions on the 25th instant when the home side won a close contest by a single match. The teams were fairly strong and three rounds (27 holes) were played in each case, all the matches being singles. Colonel J. P. Grant subsequently occupied the chair at a golf dinner at the United Service Club, Bangalore, when the health of the visiting team was drunk with much acclamation. Results of the play:—

MEETING OF THE B. N. H. SOCIETY.

A MEETING of the members of the Bombay Natural History Society took place at the Society's Rooms on 16th August, 1906, Lieutenant-Colonel W. B. Bannerman, I.M.S., presiding.

NEW MEMBERS.

The election of the following 26 new members since the last meeting was duly announced:—

Captain W. B. Greig (Bombay); Major W. C. C. Leslie (Chakrata); Mr. A. Combi (Poona); Mr. R. E. Gibson, I.C.S. (Hyderabad, Sind); Captain F. C. Rogers, I.M.S. (Mooltan); Mr. H. J. C. Turner, F.G.S. (Fyzabad); Mr. C. A. King (Cooner P. O., Nilgiris); Captain A. E. Wood, R.A.M.C. (Fyzabad); Mr. J. E. Powell (Gaya, Bengal); Mr. Guy P. Boys (Allahabad); Mr. T. B. Codeland, I.C.S. (Oghi, Hazara District, N.W.F.P.); Mr. R. T. F. Kirk, I.C.S. (Ahmednagar); Surgeon-General G. Bomford, C.I.E., I.M.S. (Simla); Mr. H. R. Holmes (Balaghat, C. P.); Mrs. L. G. M. Barkley (Sunugalla, Ceylon); Mr. James Green (Wallington, Surrey, England); Mr. G. S. P. Percival (Ramnad, Madura District, Madras Presidency); Mr. W. V. Weston (Gonatea, Sainthea, E. I. Railway); Lieutenant-Colonel T. C. F. Somerville (Shwebo, Burma); Mrs. G. B. Adamson (Bombay); Mr. A. T. Weston (Papun, Lower Burma); The Mess President, 1st Battalion, 10th Gurkhas (Maymyo, Burma); Major L. G. Oliver

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE MUSEUM.

The Honorary Secretary, Mr. W. S. S. Millard, acknowledged receipt of the following :—

One phoorsa (juv.) (Echis carinata), Saugor, C. P., Lieutenant C. I. Brierley, I.M.S.; sixteen rats from Nasik, Mr. E. A NATURAL HISTORY SOCIETY IN BOMBAY 50 YEARS AGO.

Mr. Comber then asked permission to be allowed to say a few words about a paragraph that appeared in the "Bombay Gazette" of 9th July last under the heading of "Fifty Years Ago," regarding the formation of a Natural History Society in Bombay in the year 1859. He reminded the meeting that the present Society was formed in September, 1883, but from the extract that was printed in the "Bombay Gazette" it would appear that there had been a previous Natural History Society in existence in Bombay as its foundation was definitely alluded to and a list of members given, numbering 25. Mr. Comber then read the extract, from which it appeared that the original society was more of the nature of a purely field naturalists' club than a Society of working naturalists with a museum and premises on a more or less elaborate scale and a Journal that is practically unique as the production of a purely amateur club.

The Society of 1859 appeared to have mainly devoted its attention to excursions and subsequent dinners when "all manner of curious things" were exhibited and discussed.

Mr. Comber enquired whether any of the older members present had any recollection of this former Society, as it apparently was short-lived and no records of it seem to remain.

EXHIBITS.

A small collection of Otoliths or the earbones of fishes, amongst which were those of the Promfet, Indian Salmon, Stonefish, Ladyfish, Surmai, etc., presented by Mr. Joyce was exhibited.

PAPERS READ.

The following papers were then read :—

1. Some historical notes on the development of the complete Flora of the Bombay Presidency, by Rev E. Blatter, S. J.

2. Note on the Breeding of the Russell's Viper (Vipera russelli) in captivity, by Lieutenant-Colonel W. B. Bannerman, I.M.S.

3. Pelicans breeding in India. by C. E. Rhenius.

4. Some notes on Heterocera, by Lieutenant H. W. Kettlewell.

These papers will all be published in the Society's Journal.

STRAY NOTES.

THE belief has been generally entertained that the American moose, as also the closely-related European elk, is incapable of grazing on level ground, from the height of its shoulder and the shortness of its neck. A series of photographs taken in Maine and published in a New York sporting paper of a young bull moose clearly show that this belief is an error. The moose is seen grazing in a level meadow exactly like a horse, the long head being extended in a straight line with the neck so as easily to reach the ground. There is no sign of the awkward, straddling attitude which it has generally been believed that the animal is forced to assume if it wishes to reach the level of its own feet either for eating or drinking. It seems fairly evident that, in respect of feeding on the ground with the legs in a normal attitude, the moose are in the same case as the Cheshire cat; "they all of 'em can, and they most of 'em do."

Bats have two hunting periods in their daily existence—one at dusk, for the space of about an hour, and the other at dawn, for a rather shorter period. They are thirsty beings, and are never to be found where water is not procurable. Often one may see a bat flit across a pond and skim up a drop of water as it passes. Bats are wretchedly helpless on the ground, and are only able to shuffle along in a very lame fashion. In all Nature the shrillest audible note is the bat's squeak. Only very sharp-eared persons can hear it at all, and those who have been able to hear a bat cry when they were children find themselves unable to do so after they have reached maturity. Bats feed entirely on insects, especially night-flying moths.

A singular method of determining the height at which birds fly when they are migrating is recorded in the Morning Post. Two observers watched the moon's disc at night through small telescopes placed some distance apart, and from the different paths of the birds which were seen projected against the moon from the two stations, it was possible to compute the height and direction of flight of each bird. This method has been employed and further developed this year by Mr. Joel Stebbins and Mr. E. A. Rath, of the University of Illinois, and has been used to estimate not only the height at which the birds fly, but to find with much greater accuracy than has been possible heretofore the speed of their flight. The average height at which migrating birds fly is not more than 1,500 feet from the ground, but the speeds at which they travel appear to be greater than has of late years been believed to be the case. The minimum speeds of the birds observed varied from 80 miles to 130 miles an hour. It should be said, however, that the birds were flying with the wind.

Much discussion has taken place amongst naturalists and scientists as to whether animals like the stoat, which in extreme northern latitudes turn white in winter, undergo this process by changing their coats or by the bleaching of the hairs composing their dark summer dress. It has been demonstrated that the senile whitening of human hair is due to the presence of phagocytes, which devour the pigment bodies; and from microscopic observations recently made by the well-known French naturalist, Dr. E. Troessart, it appears that much the same kind of action takes place in the hairs of mammals that turn white in winter. Cold, by some means or other, causes the pigment bodies to shift from the normal positions, and to transfer themselves to other layers of hair, where they are attacked and devoured by phagocytes. The white winter coats of this class of mammals, therefore, are produced in a similar manner to the senile whitening of human hair, no actual shift of covering taking place.

Most of the nests used to make bird's-nest soup, which almost invariably forms part of the festal menus of the Chinese, come from Java and the Philippine Islands, where the sea swallow builds them in a very curious way. There are two kinds of these swallows, one smaller than a wren, the other double the size of the martin. Naturally, the nests of the bigger bird are most sought for, and they are about as big as a common coffee-cup. The bird builds in the caves and caverns in the walls of those precipitous coasts. They fill their crops with fish-spawn, glutinous weeds, and jelly-like animals, such as are always to be found along the coast; this matter the birds can disgorge, and after it is well mixed up into a slimy mass it does disgorge it, and starts about building its nest out of it. The swallow has a beak like a trowel, that is just the thing for the work. But trowel and all, it is slow work, and it takes a pair about two months to make the pretty, waxy-white nest. Now, if the nest-gatherer can snatch it away while it is still fresh, he will count himself lucky, for the whiter it is the higher the price it will bring. If the birds enjoy the use of it, it will grow darker and dirtier with each day, will hatch in about a fortnight, but even if the nest-hunter—Malay, Javanese, or Chinese—does not find it till after the birds are reared and flown, he will still grasp it as a prize. People who cannot afford fresh birds' nests are glad to get old ones.

The Story Teller.

THE GENTEEL A. B.

COUNTRY LIFE IN WILTSHIRE.

THE watchman allowed his gaze to rest upon me as in thoughtful appraisement; but he was not thinking of me, nor yet of the empty tumbler which he held upon his knee. He could not summon spirits to the empty tumbler, but quite evidently my last question had called up spirits from the deep places of his cavernous memory.

Did I ever go right inland and away from ports and ships with Bill Chasemore? Well, I should smile. I suppose that was about the most remarkable voyage ever I did make. Inland? Yes, siree: I reckon we got about as far into the bilges of England that journey as a man could reckon to go without carrying anything away.

Ports and ships—well, you may take it from me that, unless Noah got around there with his decked-in ark, the parts we struck haven't ever been reached by navigation, not by so much as a Mother Carey's chick. No, nor I don't reckon no sailorman was ever there before us, or if he was, he never returned to spin the cuffer.

It was when we was paid off after a third voyage I made in company with Bill Chasemore. We was in a house you may know, the Pig and Whistle, in Commercial-road, and it was full summer, I remember, and broad daylight long past the second dog watch. Bill had been adding to his outfit, which you would have said was big enough already for a whaler's slop-chest, and his conversation was most remarkable full of farming, and haystacks, and jims o' that sort. I was a bit dazed when he showed me his brown gaiters and the spurs he had bought; very bright and big they was, like a Portuguese admiral's. But it was Bill's plan of action that caught me right aback.

"But, Lord love ye, Bill," I says, "you don't suppose these land-owning dukes is going to be taken in by me doing farming stunts. Now I put it to you, Bill, as one shipmate to another, could any white man on an even keel take me for a country gentleman?"

"You can make your mind easy about that," says Bill; "for I shall have you rated an eccentric."

"Well, I don't quite see what I've done to deserve that, Bill," I told him. "You could see through a watertight bulkhead I'm no gentleman; but I am an able seaman. I'm no steam-boat coal-shifter: so I don't quite see why you should rate me an eccentric. You might as well call a man a turbine or a propeller at once."

But Bill, he had another explanation of eccentric. I tell you if that man saw a full-rigged ship sailing down the Ratcliff Highway he'd have a couple of explanations for you in a quarter less than no time, and you could take your choice. Also, it's waste of good watch below to talk about any difficulty in a scheme of Bill's, for he's got 'em all worked out by logarithms before ever you open your head, and the thing's as good as done while you're gassing about what course you'll lay. Last thing was, I was an old bos'un of Bills; sailed with him since I was no longer than a belaying pin, I had; and Bill was Captain Barlow, and he'd just been left a fortune, he had, by an uncle in the sea-boot and oilskin line in Port of Spain. But why in Port o' Spain, where as far as I know the niggers don't use sea-boots no more than tail-coats—well, you can search me. That's just Bill's hightoned way. I suppose he dropped his registered name in case we ran against any noblemen acquainted with his family. Anyway, we had papers made out accordingly, I know, for Bill showed me the beautiful cards he'd bought, with gold rims and all, like a liner's bill-of-fare—"Captain William A. Barlow." Then small and neat in one corner, "Trafalgar-square, London." Bill said that was the great resort of the nobility and gentry.

Well then, he had a letter, all written out fair, and supposed to be from some lawyer sharp in Port o' Spain, telling how his uncle in the sea-boot business had handed in his checks from a bowel complaint of some kind, blessing Bill's name, and leaving him bequeathed of every blame rope-yarn of which he died possessed, so help his goodness—as toney a document as ever you saw, with black trimmings, out of respect for the late lamented, and sealing wax and all, to beat the band.

Well, the long and short of it was, Bill said it was time we gave up seafaring and settled down to enjoy our fortune in the country. We booked our passages to a place called Salisbury, and had a wharf-rat of sorts wheel our duunage on a fore-and-aft trolley, while we kept a bright look-out for a likely anchorage. The wharf-rat put us on to the right place, after a bit, the White Ram Coffee Tavern, they called it; and I'm bound to say the living at that place was in A number 1 saloon style, and "full and plenty" in the matter of the whacks they served. They'd set down eggs and bacon before you there if you so much as winked an eyelid; and, as Bill said, you couldn't eat eggs and bacon too often, in the country-gentleman business. It was a regular part of the rating.

I don't mind telling you that I wished some of my old shipmates could have seen us on our travels, for there's no doubt we carried a wonderful deal of style; clear down to the water-line you couldn't have found a holiday with a telescope. Bill wore a stove-pipe hat of the highest registered tonnage—but fine-weather canvas colour, not black—that we'd bought in a pawnshop down Shadwell way. He had his marmalade-coloured pants goose-winged into a pair of brown gaiters that you could have fried an egg by in the sunshine. He had black boots, shiny, like wet rubber; and he wore spurs, as I said, like a dago Admiral. He had bought these from a fireman on a steamer trading to the Argetine ports, and there's no doubt they added greatly to our tonnage and style, for you could hear them rattling as we walked, like a capstan's pauls when you're turning fast to take in slack. As for me, I wore my long-shore blue navy-cloth, with peg-soled bluchers, and a hard hat Bill bought for me, with a flat top as broad as a hatch. I also had a collar, in the day-time, with a scarf given me by a lady friend in Shadwell, as fine as ever you saw, and pretty nearly every colour you could think of, all running in and out, like a sunset on the sea. Bill himself admitted I was clipper-rigged.

I just want to tell you about Salisbury, that it's got as fine a church as ever you saw, which is kept, I must say, in man-o-war style, and no expense spared. I should say the officers in charge must have a free hand, and, as you might say, no key used in the paint-locker. There is no sort of steamboat foolery about Salisbury; she is clipper-rigged, of the highest rating, with skysail yards on all masts. And there's no Yankee dodges in the place. Afternoon watch below every day, and all day Sunday; full time given for meals, and no hazing allowed.

Along about two bells, the morning after we came to our moorings at the White Ram, Bill and me, with all our bunting flying, brought up at the office of Mister Stoneman, the house and land agent. There was a loblolly-boy sweeping down as we got there, and Bill gave him one of the gilt-edged cards. But it seemed the owner hadn't come aboard yet, so we lay off a bit, making no way to speak of, in the street. About four bells the loblolly-boy hailed us, and in we went, a-booming. Bill, hung his stove-pipe on a hook inside the companion, and shook hands with Mister Stoneman, as if he might have been his owner.

Bill and the old gentleman were soon communicating at the rate of knots, and, by what I could make of it, Mister Stoneman was real pleased to see us. I thought he was going to hold prayers over Bill's late lamented in Port o' Spain: he certainly wiped his eye with a big bandana. But he brisked up over the matter of a country house for us—with deer and that, Bill said—and told us he'd no idea the sea-boot and oilskin business in the West Indies was of such magnitood. Bill said that, next to bananas, he reckoned it was the softest snap there was since the bottom fell out of sugar; and the agent he smiled in a solemn sort of way he had, and said that evidently the late Mr. Barlow had found it so.

Well, the upshot of it was, we were to take dinner at the old gentleman's house, but as he fixed it for two bells in the second dog-watch, we had dinner and tea, too, on our own first. Meantime, he gave us a sort of an album, full of pictures of fine houses, with stabling and conservaries and that, to float, a battle ship. There was writing in the book as well, telling you all about the fitting and rigging of these places, and how much they cost. The old gentleman asked Bill if he meant to rent or buy. Bill looked at him, kind of reproachful and sad, and he said "Oh buy, I think, by all means."

Well, now, I don't want to brag, but I may say that I think we became the most popular visitors in that part of the country, Bill and me. We spent three weeks at it, and that's pretty near all we did spend; for, what with carriages, cigars, liquor, and banquets, morning, noon, and night, I tell you we had our lockers full of free gifts. We was looking for what Mister Stoneman called "a nice, compact gentleman's estate," with deer in the garden, electric lighting throughout, and everything of A number 1 rating and man-o'-war style. It seemed to me that every one who had such a place was anxious to oblige us.

We might have been there yet, but for a little difference of opinion. We'd been having a slap-up banquet in the afternoon watch, with a nobleman called Sir William Cantrop, when he happend to ask Bill, in a roundabout way, how much the old boy in Port o' Spain had left him. Bill said he hadn't counted it up exactly, but he reckoned there might be the better part of a thousand. His lordship appeared to throw a sort of fit.

"A thousand—— What, sir?" he shouts.

"Pounds," says Bill; "English pounds, sterling; no depreciated Spanish dollars for me."

"But, good gad, sir," says the nobleman, all pink and blue about his gills. "What's the good of a thousand pounds to buy 'Cantrop' with? Why, damme, sir," says he, "the kennels cost more than that."

Bill looked kind of hazed for a minute, and then he brightened. "Well, it's the kennels I want to buy, me lord," says he "What did you think?"

But somehow, that particular banquet seemed to finish it. Old man Stoneman was as quiet as frozen mutton when we saw him that evening, and Bill said he thought we'd go and have a look at the Smoke again.

Next week we signed on aboard the Star of Greece, bound out with general cargo for Adelaide.

An old sailor struck inland, thinking he would like to try work in the country. He approached a farmer for a meal one day, saying he was willing to work, but that he knew little or nothing of country life. "I will give you a meal," said the farmer, "if you will round up those sheep on the common there and drive them into this fold. Come back when you've done it." In three hours' time the sailor came back looking hot, but happy. "Have you done the job?" asked the farmer. "Yes," replied the sailor, mopping his forehead. "You've been a pretty long while about it. Let's go and see them." Looking over the gate of the field, the farmer saw the sheep safely in the fold. "There's a hare sitting up among 'em," he exclaimed. "Do you mean that little feiler there," asked the sailor. "Why, that's the little beggar who gave me all the trouble. I thought it was a lamb."

Lovers of good, plain dogs, which have been allowed to grow naturally, will appreciate the story of the Cockney pedlar who went to a dealer in dogs and thus described what he wanted :—

"Hi wants a kind of dog about so 'igh an' so long. Hit's a kind of gry-ound an' yet it ain't a gry-ound, because 'is style is shorter nor any o' these 'ere gry-ounds an' 'is nose is shorter, an' 'e's not so slim round the body. But still 's's a kind o' gry-ound. Do you keep such dogs?"

"No," replied the dog man. "We drowns 'em."

UNICORN AND OTHER INDIAN SHEEP.

AMONG the collection of living Indian animals recently presented by H. R. H. the Prince of Wales to the Zoological Society of London, and now exhibited in the menagerie in the Regent's Park is a pair of the strange single-horned sheep of Nepal or Tibet. Of these "Unicorn" sheep, which have attracted much interest on the part of the public, practically nothing is known in English; and it does not even appear to be ascertained whether they form a regular breed, or whether they occur merely as occasional "sports" in a breed in which the horns are usually of the normal type. It is true, indeed, that in the early "forties" the late Mr. Brian Hodgson presented to the British Museum a couple of skulls of these sheep; but no mention of the breed (or "sport") appears to be made in that gentleman's admirable paper on the domesticated sheep and goats of the Himalayas published in the sixteenth volume of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. Neither is there any reference to Unicorn sheep in Darwin's "Animals and Plants under Domestication" or in Low's "Domesticated Animals of Great Britain," which latter professes to give an account of the more important foreign breeds. The same omission is noticeable in the elaborate papers published many years ago in the Transactions of the Vienna Academy by the German Naturalist Fitzinger on the various breeds of domesticated sheep.

The two skulls in the British Museum show that in the adult rams the horns, alike in shape, direction and size, are not dissimilar to those of the so-called Nilgiri ibex; but they are placed so close together that their inner surfaces become practically united, although a transverse section shows that the sheath of each horn is really complete and distinct. From their direct backward curvature, the horns tend to grow into the back of the neck of the animal so that, as in the British Museum examples, it is at least frequently the custom to saw off their tips. The living specimens in the London Zoological Gardens have the fleece partly black and partly white.

Those who may have the opportunity of observing these remarkable sheep in their native country will do good service to Zoology if they will state what that country really is and whether there is a distinct Unicorn breed.

There is another point of considerable interest in regard to the domesticated sheep of the Eastern Himalayas and Tibet. Darwin in his "Animals and Plants under Domestication makes a quotation from the aforesaid paper by Brian Hodgson in the sixteenth volume of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal to the effect that the long tail of the ordinary domesticated breeds "in most of its phases is an instance of degeneracy in these pre-eminently Alpine animals." The great evolutionist appears, however, to have overlooked the statement in the same paper that the Hunia sheep of Tibet always have short tails. This is a most important statement, and strongly suggests that this Hunia breed is much nearer the ancestral wild stock of domesticated sheep in general than is any strain, despite the fact that the former has wool in place of hair.

A further inference is that the shapo or urial of the Himalayas (Ovis vignei) is most likely to be the ancestral stock of the domesticated breeds, in which case the former ought properly to be designated Ovis aries vignei. The British Museum possesses a number of skulls of Hunia rams, presented respectively by Mr. Hodgson and Mr. A. O. Hume ; and the form of these horns is just what might be expected as the results of domestication of the wild shapo or urial. If the Hunia breed be the direct descendant of the latter, it would seem that we must regard the hairy coat of certain breeds of African sheep as due to reversion, and not as a directly inherited ancestral feature. This is in accord with the opinion of the Darwin, who wrote as follows :—

"As in sheep of all breeds the fleece naturally consists of longer and coarser hair covering shorter and softer wool, the change which it often undergoes in hot climate is probably merely a case of unequal development ; for even in those sheep which, like goats are covered with hair, a small quantity of underlying wool may always be found."

If then the Hunia breeds be the direct descendant of the wild shapo, its wool may be regarded as an ultra development of the under fur, or pashm which as in other Tibetan animals, is very abundant in that species.

The strongly arched chaffron, or "Roman nose" of the rams of the Hunia breed is, as remarked by Brian Hodgson, another feature due to domestication.

One point in connection with the Hunia breed requires elucidation ; and to this question some of the readers of the Indian Field can doubtless supply a satisfactory answers. It is commonly stated that the fighting rams kept by many of the chieftains in the Punjab, as well as by H. H. the Maharaja Gaekwar of Baroda, belong to the Hunia breed. If this be correct, it would be interesting to know whether they are bred in the plains of India or imported from their native Tibetan home.

In conclusion it may be mentioned that as is evident from the foregoing remarks we have still much to learn with regard to the origin and relationships of domesticated sheep and domesticated animals generally. And if only observers who have the opportunity would devote some of their attention to this interesting subject, there is little doubt that we should obtain results of far greater importance and value than any that are to be gleaned from the description of new subspecies of wild animals.

Sporting Notes.

THE Calcutta maidan has been in a state of swamp for the past week, and the "off" Saturday came in the nick of time, so far as the weather goes. The interval has apparently scared away the Dehra Dun contingent, in spite of an additional bait held out by the executive in the shape of an Extra Race for next Saturday. Several of J. D. Scott's lot would have been eligible for this event and his entries will be missed, but the advertised conditions have attracted a good deal of attention locally, and we understand that there is no lack of this class of performer in Calcutta at the present time. Scott did not take his horses away from the Ballygunge stables until the 1st or 2nd September, but it seems that he was only awaiting an opportunity to get them all away together on the mail. The railway authorities are not always prepared to attach an additional load of three or four horse-boxes to the mail trains.

Mr. Galstaun will be another absentee next Saturday, if he carries out his intention to see his colours on the Poona course. Tingey and Robinson have a fine string in training for the big Western meeting—Prince Lyon, Dulcimer, Killeevan, Diakkaway, Applause, Sainte Marquise, Dirty Boy, Rustile and Matalgia are amongst this branch of Mr. Galstaun's ever-growing stable, while he has Long Tom in Bangalore and a half share in Cherson as well as all the smaller fry we see mudlarking here in Calcutta. When his recent purchases in England are added to these he will have a strong hand indeed for next season's racing.

Although the Pony Selling Race has fallen through for lack of entries, there are six well filled events for next Saturday's Monsoon programme. The Bengal Plate has drawn twenty-three applicants, and if the executive repeat this popular experiment of splitting the handicap and doubling the prize money, we shall have to struggle through seven races, just one too many for a hot September evening. The September Plate has seventeen, including several new-comers, notably the disappointing Woodbine and the Plassey Plate attracts eight ponies, including that interesting performer Solace, who figures as a double entry.

The amateur hurdle races promise to be very interesting. In the Outram Plate both Sylvia and Ynyslas make their re-appearance. The latter has been suffering from fever, and in a spin over four flights with Ryong on Tuesday morning showed very poor form indeed. • When she has done a good trial gallop, it will be time enough to sing her praises. So far, her form over fences is purely speculative whatever the handicapper may say. Ryong on Tuesday morning showed up well beside the chestnut mare and with a very light weight he should not be without supporters on Saturday. Lady Gold will want a crushing parcel on her recent form, but the handicapper will no doubt recollect that the others are all clean-bred horses, and disregard the fallacy that weight is of little consequence to hunters—a view which has perhaps conduced to one or two recent runaway victories. It may serve the interests of sport in some little noticed direction, but no man with a natural affection for horses cares to see the good ones crushed out in order that an improving wastrel may cut their throats in the first four furlongs and eventually win in a canter.

Pink Un and Grey Goose swell the pony "hunters" field to eight, and they all look like starters. The handicap in this race when compared with that of the 18th August cannot fail to afford most interesting reading. Everyone concerned should work out a handicap for himself, compare it with the official list and put his money on the pony that has the biggest balance in its favour. If he loses, the handicapper is amply vindicated ; if he wins, his substantial profit will serve to assuage his legitimate grief at the errors of a hardworked official.

The new Calcutta race stands are now rapidly approaching completion and it is possible for the ordinary layman to understand the details of the main building. There is a great deal of space underneath the stand for which uses have yet to be found. On the weighing room side opening on to the Paddock, will be the Stewards' room, outside which will no doubt stand in future the crowds of punters who await the decision on "bumping and boring" enquiries. Alongside will be the Secretary's office and the Gentlemen Riders' dressing-room. The old weighing-in room is to stand as it is for the present, and the extra dressing rooms will relieve the want of space felt last season by the professionals. In the centre of the stand will be the cook-rooms communicating by an iron spiral staircase with the tea-room above, and further along, a private cloak room for the Viceroy, adjoining the main stairway. At the eastern end of the stand space will be found for the public cloak rooms and lavatories.

At the back of the stand are three stairways, one in each of the square towers at either end leading direct to the uppermost tiers of seats and the third in the centre under a sort of portico or verandah serving the sixty boxes which extend in two rows from end to end of the stand. The second row of these private boxes will no doubt be much sought after, but taking into consideration the pillars supporting the upper storey and the confectionery supported by the fair heads of the ladies in the front rank, the outermost line of boxes would seem to be undoubtedly "the chiz." The Viceroy's box, with one or two others for the Commander-in-Chief, and the Chief Justice (or can it be for the Bishop) will be out on a platform by themselves below the tiers of boxes. They form the central point of the stand and are approached by a flight of low steps from the front and by a gangway and descent from the central stairway at the back. The lower tiers of seats stretching away from the Viceroy's box on either hand will accommodate all but a Christmas week crowd, and these will no doubt be partitioned off for Turf Club Members, private ticket holders, trainers and jockeys and the general public in some such manner as in the former stand. It only remains to mention the fine airy room in the south-east corner behind the boxes which will serve the double purpose of a tea room on race days and a breakfast room for those who make a pleasurable business of watching the work on the training track throughout the cold weather. Altogether the improvement is a great one and later on when the paddock is extended and the totalisator sheds conveniently disposed of the encroachment on lawn space will not be noticeable. When viewing these huge stands, however, it is impossible to help wondering whether the proposed third stand will be really necessary, at any rate for some years to come.

Full details of the race for the South down Welter at Lewes, won by Great Scot, appear in our English Turf news to-day. After this win "Vigilant" of the Sportsman rather modified his condemnation of the horse, as expressed the week before, and extracted by us. He writes :—

This is a great triumph for Mr. Gilpin, for it is an undeniable fact that the old son of Lochiel had got sick racing before he left India last year. In Australia Great Scot was about the best three-year-old of his year, 1902-3, and I remember at the beginning of that year Mr. Yuille, who is a most careful man, wrote to me that he thought the colt good enough to buy for racing in England. Through him we can get some idea of what manner of animal Wakeful was, for he met her, when he was at the top of form, for the Champion Stakes (3 miles) at the V. R. C. Meeting, 5th March 1903, and the following was the result :—

Wakeful, 6yrs., 9st. 2lbs. ...	J. Barden	1
Great Scot, 3yrs., 7st. 12lbs.	Richardson	2
The Victory, 4yrs., 9st. ...	R. Lewis	3
Flagship, 5yrs., 9st. 5lbs. ...	Morrison	4
St. Ambrose, 4yrs., 8st. 7lbs. (alld. 7lbs.) ...	P. Gulnane	0

Won by twelve lengths ; three lengths between the second and third. Time—5mins. 29¼secs.

Great Scot himself won on the concluding day of that meeting, and he had also won the Australian Cup (2¼ miles) in fine style on the previous day, so it is pretty clear that Wakeful's merits have not been at all exaggerated. Mr. Apear gave 2,000 guineas for Great Scot to win the Viceroy's Cup, and this he did two years running. He was hard run as a three-year-old in Australia, and there is no wonder that his work in India began to pall upon him at last. A long rest and the change of going on English turf has evidently put fresh heart into him, and he is manifestly a wonder as regards soundness and constitution, but it would be too much to expect that at his age he should really be able to reproduce his best form here. It is enough that he has shown us he can still win races, and if he is retired to the stud next season it will not be difficult to fill his list at a reasonable fee. From the first time when he came into notice I have been hoping to see him in England and standing at some good stud, for he is the one horse of all others in existence to give us in full strength the best qualities of the Blair Athol line, and that, too, through Prince Charlie, who I really think was the best horse I ever saw. A great merit of this breed consists in the kindly, sober temperament, which was always characteristic of it, and Great Scot has inherited this in full measure, so that he will be particularly valuable for toning down the fretful, excitable Galopin blood. That he is so very closely inbred to Prince Charlie is all in his favour. He can hardly fail, under such circumstances, to sire great winners, and we do indeed very badly want one of these powerful, old-style chestnut horses. I am glad indeed that he has come.

As Great Scot, by his victory at Lewes on Saturday last, has now won races in three countries —Australia, India, and England—and is really a most interesting horse I may take it that his case is a fine example of the hard, staying thoroughbred that has never been pampered. I should not like to suggest that he is a really good horse to-day—he will not win a handicap this season unless the handicappers take a more lenient estimate of his capacity—but too much has been made of his bad running in India, and far too little of his good performances. For I happen to know from one who saw him win the Cups in India and who has known the horse intimately since his racing career began that his supposed faint-heartedness in India was not faint-heartedness at all, but simply a weariness of the flesh, as it were, the result of the climate, which never at any time agreed with the horse. And yet he won two Viceroy's Cups, a fine achievement when it is borne in mind that owners in India pay very long prices, as prices go in that country, for horses that are likely to appropriate that much-coveted trophy. In the first year—1903—he had only been landed five months—a short period for proper acclimatisation in the tropics—when he fairly worried a Bill of Portland mare, named Cretonne, out of the race and won the Cup for the first time. Then it was only after a hard struggle that he beat his field in 1904, and had he not been game he would certainly not have won. Both years his preparation was interfered with, not by unsoundness, but by fever and liver, a combination which frequently attacks imported horses in Calcutta. During the last Calcutta racing season, December and January, he did no better than finish second for the Viceroy's Cup, and realising that the horse was getting worse in the climate Mr. Apcar, decided to send him home, with the idea of putting him to the stud, though if he could win a race this season, so much the better. In Australia Great Scot was a really good one. He was about as good as Abundance, and these two shared first honours among the three-year-olds of their year. I can only repeat that a horse with a record like this, and embodying such splendid Blair Athol blood, ought to be in big request at the stud.

The English press comments on Great Scot's running afford instructive reading. One scribe declares that the Viceroy's Cup winner may have lost his speed but still retains his courage. Observers of his latest form in India will not corroborate this opinion, but if it be a correct one, the old horse may yet astonish them on the other side. It will be seen that his recent win was not altogether such a trumpery affair as some people make out and there was some very fair class in the field behind him. Another Austral-Indian performer with whom they may yet have to reckon in England is Dalkeith. We hear that the black gelding is only now beginning to show his true form, having been decidedly off colour since his arrival in northern climes. Bradshaw is still riding for Mr. Farquharson and means to try and live down the adverse comments of the English press correspondents and the unfortunate disqualification of one of his early mounts.

The Bareilly Race Club finds itself in a better financial position this year than it has done for some years past. The racecourse is in perfect condition, several alterations have been made since last year, and the new jumps that were up for the first time for the Spring Meeting have taken root and are most flourishing.

The Honorary Secretaryship, which has been held for the past three years by Captain Goodfellow, has now passed into the hands of Captain Teed of the 14th Lancers, who held this position last in 1903. Captain Goodfellow has been ordered to rejoin his regiment. It was intended to have held an Autumn Race Meeting, but the uncertainty of the manœuvres to be held at Agra has made this out of the question.

There will, we believe, be a good meeting in February when bigger money will be given than ever before.

We are glad to hear that Mr. P. W. Allen, the sporting Collector who had a nasty spill at the last meet of the Bareilly tent club, when his horse fell on him fracturing his pelvis, is well on the road to recovery.

Final entries for the Poona races closed on the 28th ultimo; they are published in our issue of date.

First entries for the Karachi Autumn Races are published to-day, and quite good they are.

Among the recent important equine arrivals in Calcutta are Mr. Lamotte's forty-five carefully selected racers, chasers, ponies, and hacks landed ex steamer Wardha and to which we made brief allusion in our last issue. The vessel had an ideal passage up, "millpond" conditions prevailing most of the way; as a direct result of this practically the entire shipment was landed well, indeed it is a long time since we saw animals put ashore in such condition as Mr. Lamotte's.

What a contrast to thirty years ago, the days of the old "windjammers," when horses were often nearly three months on board! We have lively recollections of those times—the furnace blasts that ascended from the holds—the stench, the pestiferous sand on which the unfortunate old warrigals stood throughout, the primitive fittings, the mortality and all the rest of it. It usually took these poor brutes something like two or three months to get into good enough condition to be shown. Nowadays they are usually open to critical inspection in a fortnight at most, and many walk ashore with no more trace of a sea voyage on them than might be looked for in a run up from Madras.

Mr. Lamotte's horses are standing at Messrs. Cook and Company's paddocks in Garden Reach, where we had the pleasure of looking them over a few afternoons ago. They are an exceptionally fine lot and well worth the attention of those on the look out for quality.

One of the first to catch the eye is a horse by Reproach, out of a mare by First Chester; he is a six-year-old, and has, we understand, never been tried, but he looks a steeplechaser all over, is remarkably fine in front of the saddle and is one of those who has landed in capital trim. Another well-landed one is Prince Moorefield, by Moorefield—Sweetheart, by Prodigal, a son of the famous St. Albans. A thorough-bred by The Friar exhibits nice quality; he has raced and won in Sydney. Next him stands Sandy, by Merridong—The Cripple, by Yatson, a well-bred and beautifully shaped one who has been successful in the Australian show ring. Passing on to the next box we have a big horse by Tattoo, by Tormentor out of Inveralia; he will carry a well-known lady rider in the paperchases next cold weather. He is stud-bred, a great lengthy fellow and should turn out well: he was in physic when we saw him. One that Mr. Lamotte bred himself is Mistake, by Riversdale, a nice cut of a paperchaser, with exceptionally good legs and all over quality. Our attention was next arrested by a little horse by The Gem. He is credited with 4 furlongs in 50¼ in a trial on the tan, though when they backed him he didn't win; this is another bred by Mr. Lamotte. A five-year-old by Marlborough, looks a great colt, he has a very intelligent head, rare shoulders and a great back. Quite one of the best of the lot is a young 'un by Sir William from Lassie, by Invader, untried, but brim full of promise. In the middle of the line are some A.1 hacks described to us as nice mannered, thoroughly broken, confidential and what not to suit all requirements. The show of ponies, from 13 hands to 14-2, is interesting, they are all of good class and have been thoroughly broken. One that fills the eye is a 13-3 by Zarriff the sire of H. H. the Maharajah's of Kuch Behar's Coin, whose arrival in Calcutta we recently noted—Zarriff is by Zulu, a Melbourne cup winner. Tom and Dolly, a pair of ponies full brother and sister compel one to pause opposite their boxes, Mr. Lamotte tells us he has driven them thousands of miles and describes them as absolutely tireless; exhibited as a pair, they have taken several prizes, and their wonderful action is the subject of general commendation. There are others in this shipment deserving of special mention; but want of space denies us the pleasure of alluding to them to-day.

Up to date the Mussoorie Dog Show promises very well, and from what we can hear, the giving of certificates is an idea that commends itself to exhibitors. The question of judging, as usual, presents difficulties; we trust they will be overcome.

Recent changes in the Executive of the Nilgiri Game Association have, we are glad to see, resulted in good sport. We read in the report presented the other day that the big game bag for the past season was—Bison 2, sambur 78, spotted deer 8, ibex (saddle backs) 8, tiger 5, panther 20, hyæna 2, jungle sheep 144, four-horned antelope 2, black buck 1.

The Committee are glad to note that nearly all license-holders have responded to the Honorary Secretary's appeal for particulars of their bag, and the above list may, therefore, be taken to be fairly complete.

The horns of the best sambur shot during the season measured 39 ins., and several were obtained of over 35 ins., which the Committee regard as a most satisfactory sign. The large number of jungle sheep killed is, however, viewed with some apprehension, and it may be necessary to take measures to protect these animals more effectually.

A special article on a recent trial of "Axite" against black powder will be found in our Shooting columns to-day. The results obtained were very good and should be of special interest to big game shooters throughout India.

The Irish colt Steinhager, by Count Schomberg—Benedictine, is on his way to India in charge of an Antipodean jockey named Carslake, a relation of the rather well-known turfite in Australia. Steinhager is a three-year-old and has run well and earned a few good brackets in the disthressful country. These include the Clonmel Nursery Handicap at Phœnix Park and the Scurry Handicap at Curragh last year. He has done well this year and has proved himself capable of staying the course for the Viceroy's Cup for which he is, of course, being brought out: he won three good races this year and was second in the Irish Derby last June. His sire, Count Schomberg, is by Aughrim—Clonavarn, the sire and dam of Up Guards, who won the Viceroy's Cup in 1900.

We read that a large number of Americans have this year rented deer forests and grouse shootings in Scotland, and the most prominent of these is, doubtless, Mr. Henry Phipps, the Pittsburg steel manufacturer and millionaire who some time motored across from Bombay to Calcutta. Mr. Phipps has succeeded Lord Burton in the lease of the famous Glenquoich Moors, and it is reckoned that it will cost him about £100,000 a year. Glenquoich has an extent of about 63,000 acres, and is famous not only for the excellent sport it furnishes, but also for its magnificent scenery. It is a land of beautiful glens, towering mountains, and charming lochs and rivers. Glenquoich Lodge is situated nearly in the centre of the domain, and it was so improved by Lord Burton, who spent no end of money in its decoration and electric lighting, that it is now one of the most confortable and elegant of country houses. It was at Glenquoich, in 1893, that Lord Burton obtained the record stag's head for Scotland with a grand 20-pointer.

In a despatch from Naples, it is reported that a swallow was recently brought down by a "sportsman" in the neighbourhood of San Vito. When the bird was picked up, a piece of red silk was found around its neck. From the silk was suspended a small roll of thin paper with the following message:—"Terni Prison.—Bear on thy light wings, oh, innocent swallow, the plaint of a victim of cruel society, who living in a tomb, calls down all the curses of heaven upon the wicked ones who have blighted his sunny youth and condemned him to eternal misery. If still alive, I shall be released on 7th September 1907." The message, which ended with a cheer for the Social Republic, was signed by a political prisoner belonging to an aristocratic family of Reggio di Calabria.

All interested in fish culture, especially those who have been following the numerous attempts made to introduce trout into Indian rivers, will read with pleasure of the recent successes achieved by the Nilgiri Game Association. At a meeting of the Association, held at Ooty on the 29th ultimo, the report presented set forth that in July, Mr. Wilson with Mr. Hodgson, Major Molesworth and the Honorary Secretary searched and fished the Parsons Valley stream from Krurmund crossing upwards, with a view to discover what had become of the fry turned out in March 1904, and to report on the suitability of the river for trout. The Committee has very great satisfaction in reporting that about twenty trout of all sizes from about six inches to twelve inches were seen, and one was caught by Major Molesworth. This proved to be a remarkably well-fed rainbow trout of $8\frac{3}{4}$ inches, in perfect condition. It was immediately returned to the stream. The above proves conclusively that the Association can at last congratulate itself on having successfully introduced rainbow trout, and on the still more important fact that the trout are breeding. Mr. Wilson made an examination of the food supply in the river and reports it to be abundant and that the stream is in every way suitable for rainbow trout to live and breed in.

Last Saturday afternoon Calcutta's light horsemen made a great success of their jolly little gymkhana held on the maidan facing the Stores in Chowringhee. The corps were "At Home" to their friends and in connection with this feature of the entertainment it occurs to us to remark that Messrs. Kellner and Company's catering was quite high class. There was a goodly gathering of the public, the corps mustered strong and there was no lack of entrants for the half dozen items that comprised the card. The Judges were:—Major Fishbourne, Messrs. R. H. A. Gresson, J. P. West and N. Macleod and taken all round they had to adjudicate on some fairly good performances. The following were the results:—

I—Individual Tent-pegging (2 runs allowed).—(1) P. L. Morgan, 8 points; (2) W. O. Rees, 6 points.

II—Individual Jumping—(2 runs allowed).—(1) J. Ballantyne 58 points); (2) G. Harvey 48 points; and (3) W. O. Rees and Johnstone Stewart a dead-heat with 46 points each.

III—Bucket and Ball Race.—Each competitor to ride down the course to start with a polo ball, drop it into bucket, catch a second ball thrown by his partner and drop it into a second bucket. Winner: G. Harvey, (2) T. Curtis-Hayward.

IV—The Pice Scramble.—Competitors carrying a small chati filled with bran will ride over two hurdles to a flag, dismount, hand over horse to syce and run to lady. The lady will find a coin hidden in the bran, hand same to competitors who who will run with it to the winning post. The bran must not be taken out of the chati nor the chati tipped over or the competitor will be disqualified. Winner: C.S. Perkins, (2) E. A. Watson.

V—Alarm Post Competition.—Winner T. T. Radmore.

VI—The Housewives' Plate.—Competitors to fall in mounted, carrying a needle, piece of thread, and button. On the command being given, each man will gallop over a couple of hurdles to his partner and dismount, and she will sew the button firmly on the sleeve of his coat, after which he will mount and gallop back over the hurdles. The first in with the button firmly sewn on to win. Winner: W. N. Winckworth.

We hail with satisfaction the announcement that the N. I. K. A. have written home inviting Mr. Jowett, of Shipley, the popular canine authority, to come out and judge at the Bombay, Lahore and Calcutta dog shows, and should he consent, the idea is to amalgamate the three shows into one big All-India Championship. It is said that Mr. Jowett may possibly prefer to be in the old country about Christmas time in which case, as an alternative, negotiations might perhaps be opened with Mr. Hood Wright, the well-known owner of and authority on the deer hound, as that gentleman is living in Ceylon. If the three shows would only combine (in the event of the judging and other arrangements being adequate) and the N. I. K. A. would contribute to the expenses we see no reason why the Championship idea should not be successfully carried out.

The Poona Junior Polo Tournament closed at last on Tuesday afternoon, when the Poona Horse beat the 10th Royal Hussars by 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 2 goals and 2 subsidiaries. Details elsewhere.

Athletic Notes.

THE final game in the Richardson Football Tournament, at Poona, brought together the Royal Scots and the Leicesters. The first attempt ended in a draw, but last Thursday, when they tried conclusions again, the Royal Scots won by 2 goals to 1.

When the Haskell ball case was before the London Courts some few months since a great point was made about the "click" of the golf ball, it being said that there was, on its first introduction, a dislike to the rubber-cored ball on account of its comparatively silent way of leaving the club, instead of the "click" made by a well hit gutty ball. That this criticism only illustrates once more the national disinclination to be pleased with any novelty, and has nothing whatever to do with the merits of the ball, may be seen from an account of a competition held recently at one of the Birmingham clubs, where some ingenious person presented a prize for competition, in playing for which the rubber-cored ball was barred, and only the old gutty allowed to be used. As might have been expected the scores were not materially affected by the reversion to the old ball, one competitor doing a 76 gross score, and most of them playing well up to their handicaps; but the remarkable thing was that, without exception, those players who had begun to play the game since the advent of the rubber-cored ball, and had never previously played with the gutty, complained loudly of the noise made by the latter ball—the "click" in fact, which the witnesses in the Haskell case insisted was so desirable and, indeed, almost indispensable!

Really, human nature seems more apt to deceive itself in the person of the golfer than in any other form! We all have our fetishes of grips and stances and little fads which, we almost convince ourselves, are the secrets of our triumphs—on those occasions when we do triumph—although we are occasionally haunted by an uneasy feeling that the fact that we are keeping our eye on the ball may not be wholly unconnected with our successes. But to think that the "click," once so desirable, should now be an abomination to the ear of the golfer!

Mr. Mike Elias, the cueist, continues his mofussil triumphs. He recently met Lieutenant H. M. Alexander, of the Somerset L. I., at Cawnpore, gave him 300 in a game of 750 at the Club and beat him by 25 points.

The invitation of the Colombo Cricket Club to Madras to send down a team of cricketers for the Christmas holidays, has been accepted and the team will leave Madras about the 21st December. The first match will be against the Colombo Cricket Club at Colombo; the second will be against Up-country at Darrawella, and the third will be in Colombo against an All-Ceylon XI of European cricketers on the C. C. C. ground. The dates for these fixtures have not been definitely fixed yet. The visiting team will be selected after the cricket season opens in Madras.

Kent beat Middlesex by seven wickets.
Surrey beat Derby by ten wickets.
Yorkshire beat Somerset by 389 runs.
Kent beat Hants by an innings and 37 runs.
Sussex beat Gloucester by four wickets.
Yorkshire beat the M. C. C. by five wickets.
The following matches were drawn:—Surrey vs. Middlesex, Worcester vs. Gloucester, and Sussex vs. Essex.

The final positions of the three leading counties in the Cricket Championship are as follows:—

Kent has won sixteen, lost two and drawn four; Yorkshire has won seventeen, lost three and drawn eight; and Surrey has won eighteen, lost four and drawn six.

The Bombay Rugby Football Tournament was concluded last Saturday when the Bombay Gymkhana and the Welsh Regiment met in the final, a good game resulting in a win for the soldiers by 3 goals (15 points) to nil. Details in our Football columns.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—The week has been particularly barren in sporting events. Very heavy weather lasting well into the middle of the week made it impossible to hold the mud sports and beyond that nothing happened except the miniature "Bombay Gymkhana Rugby Tournament." The Casuals were not on the list and the Y. M. C. A. very sportingly got a team together. The Welsh invincibles turned up to defend their holding and there was little doubt from the start that they were not going to have the cup taken from them. The Y. M. C. A. were only able to put in a very scratch team, but the Gymkhana made a good muster, infinitely better than was the case in the soccer league. On Tuesday the 10th Hussars met the South Wales Borderers and it proved a tame game. The 10th had an uphill task against infinitely superior players and they seldom crossed the centre line. At the start of play the Borderers went in with a will and within five minutes Baker had made a smart opening with a dropped goal. Not long after, at the close of some loose play, Williams got the ball out of a scrum and just placed the ball over the line, but Davis failed to convert. Nearly on the call of half time Cobner got possession after a tough struggle and scored a second try which was not improved. Some very keen play marked the opening of the second half, but the first serious work was done by Davis. Nothing resulted from some fine passing, but shortly after Baggins got the ball and after a remarkably tricky run placed the ball right behind the goal. Even then no improvement was made and another try by the same man had the same fate. The game ended by the Borderers winning with 1 dropped goal and 5 tries to nil.

The Gymkhana made even a larger hole in the Y. M. C. A. The former had the whole game in their hands and there was regular scoring throughout both halves, the Gymkhana winning after some pretty work by 1 goal and 8 tries to nil. The Welsh Regiment beat the Borderers on Thursday with some ease, in fact none of the preliminary games were very exciting. In the first half the Welsh scored a goal to the Borderers' nothing and improved their score in the second half, ultimately winning by 3 goals and 1 try to nil.

The final, however, was far more exciting. The Gymkhana knew they had a tough job and worked all they knew. In the first half they worried the Welsh a good deal, but in the second half they were overpowered and the Welsh won by three goals all scored in the second half. The Welsh thus keep the cup for another year as it must be acknowledged that they were infinitely the best of the teams entered.

We are pleased to find that the members of the Calcutta Swimming Club have resolved to remove the reproach of apathy recently levelled at them and have come forward so well in the matter of entries that the Committee have decided to hold the Autumn Meeting which will accordingly come off on Tuesday, the 18th instant, beginning at 9-15 P.M., an innovation which ought to be popular with those who cannot attend in the afternoon. The programme will comprise a 2 lengths handicap, a 2 lengths scratch race, the 6 lengths race for the Viceroy's medal, an 8 lengths team race, a water polo tournament, diving display and something in the way of "trimmings"—probably a "adies'" race.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 17th August 1906.

THE annually recurring miracle of St. Grouse was performed this year on the 14th—the 12th falling on a Sunday—and the estimable birds were on sale in London on Tuesday, at an hour at which their appearance was, considering the circumstances obviously supernatural, since it is impossible to suppose that they were shot on Sunday evening. [What about the supplies from refrigerators.—Ed ?]

To those obliged to drive along Queen Victoria Street at the present time, Fate is unkind. Cheapside is "up," and as a natural consequence. Queen Victoria Street is packed from morn to dewy eve, with a solid block of almost stationary traffic from end to end. It is probably quite necessary that Cheapside should be "up," and August is the most convenient season for the operation—but the said operation recurs with an irritating frequency. The report of the Traffic Commission makes one devoutly thankful that the streets are ever "down." It tells us that any one street lies at the mercy of no less than four public authorities—the L. C. C, the Borough Council, the Water Board, and the Postmaster-General—to say nothing of the smaller fry, such as gas, electric lighting, etc. And the fundamental principle guiding these bodies is that they must all act independently; there being nothing to compel them to the commonsense course of arranging their operations with some regard to the convenience of the public. The City Corporation have recently introduced a Bill which would subject these powers of street breaking-up to a central authority in each district, and to this Bill the Traffic Commission gives its blessing. Writing of London streets reminds me that the unsightly gap in Regent Street is being rapidly built up.

The general feeling undoubtedly is that the finding of the jury in the Townshend lunacy inquiry, fairly meets the justice of the case, and that it is by far the Kindest from the point of view of Lord Townshend's real interests, and puts an end to his chief troubles, inasmuch as it delivers him—or rather his affairs—from his benevolent and disinterested friends. Lord Townshend himself is the only person who comes out of the miserable enquiry with a shred of credit, and the Court is hardly likely to place any share of the responsibility attaching to the management of the estates in the hands of the lady who figured so prominently in the marriage brokerage game, and applied, rather previously as it turned out, to be appointed a receiver. The Benchers of Mr. Sutherst's Inn will doubtless note Mr. Justice Bucknill's comments on the conduct of that gentleman.

Lord Townshend traces his ancestry back to the time of the fourth Edward. The first Viscount Townshend was one of the Commissioners sent to bring Charles II. over at the Restoration; and the first Marquis served under Wolfe in the Quebec expedition, taking the command on Wolfe's death. He survived to become a Field Marshal, and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The late Lord Townshend, who combined politics with philanthropy, died in 1899 and was succeeded by his son, the present Marquis, who was born in 1866. Colonel Townshend, the heir-presumptive, who is a keen soldier, distinguished himself greatly in Chitral.

One almost feels sorry for the militant suffragists who were turned out of prison on Monday in such an ignominious fashion, just like ordinary, undistinguished persons who have "done time," and thereby were balked of their intended demonstration. Instead of being met by a horde of admiring females and driving away in a lordly motor amidst the waving of flags, and braying of bands, as had been planned, the hard hearted prison authorities, with a keen perception of what would be the cruelest cut of all, released them a day earlier than was expected, and without any notice to their friends. At a meeting held subsequently in Hyde Park, which was described with, perhaps, pardonable inaccuracy, as "a great mass meeting," one of the ladies developed the gift of prophecy, announcing amidst cheers the intention of herself and her friends to prevent the accession of Mr. Asquith to the leadership of the House of Commons when C.-B. shall be translated to a higher and serener sphere.

The enforced retirement of Dr. Ray Lankester from the Directorship of the Natural History Museum in Cromwell Road—technically the Natural History Department of the British Museum—is evoking considerable feeling. The Trustees of the British Museum refuse to assign any reason for their action; they are acting within their legal rights; but there should be some very powerful motive to induce them to dispense with such a distinguished biologist while he is still in the prime of his working life. When Dr. Ray Lankester gave up his Oxford Professorship, with its £300 a year for life, he, of course, knew [illegible] Servants are liable to removal at the age of sixty, but he also knew that the power of removal at that age is exercised only when the incapacity of the official is a serious disadvantage to the public service, and that the normal age of retirement is sixty-five, and in some exceptional cases, even seventy. To take advantage of a technicality to dismiss Professor Lankester on an inadequate pension—apparently the Treasury are unable to grant one over £300 a year—is hardly calculated to endear the service of the State to the highest talent in the country. It has been an open secret for some time past that relations have been strained between the head of the Natural History Department, and his official superior, the Principal Librarian at the British Museum, an all but inevitable result of the extraordinary arrangement which subordinates the holder of one of the greatest scientific positions to another official who has gained his laurels in the region of manuscripts or printed books. The Natural History Museum in the Cromwell Road has been severed geographically from Bloomsbury for thirty years, and it would be a gain all round if the severance were made complete.

The theatrical clashers threatened for 1st September and 4th September, have been obviated by Mr. Frohman and the Messrs. Shubert considerately altering their dates, and as at present arranged the 30th August is the date fixed by Mr. Frohman for re-opening the Duke of York's with "Toddles," with Mr. Albert Chevalier's wordless pantomime "The Scapegrace," as curtain-raiser. The cast of "Toddles" will include Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. Alfred Bishop, Mr. Charles Maude, Miss Lottie Venne, Miss Gertude Kingston, and Miss Beatrice Terry; and although the name of the translater or adaptor, has not been vouchsafed, full particulars of the scenic arrangements have been made known. Act I contains two scenes. At the spring, and Mrs. Joblyn's "At Home." Act II takes place at Toddle's Flat in Paris; and the first scene in Act III is the Mairie, the second on Hotel at Nice. The production of "A Winter's Tale" at His Majesty's on the 1st September will be interesting, as in addition to Miss Ellen Terry as Hermione, Mrs. Tree will appear as Paulina, and Miss Viola Tree as Perdita. The rehearsals are proceeding industriously. Mr. Bourchier has stimulated interest and curiosity by his announcement of the engagement of Miss Alexander Carlisle, an artist totally unknown to fame, for the part of Carlotta in "The Morale of Marcus," due at the Garrick on the 29th. On the 29th will be two first-nights, as on that date a new modern play, entitled "A Sin," by the author of "The Scarlet Pimpernel," is promised at the Lyric. When the Haymarket re-opens on the 5th September with the revival of "The Man from Blankleys," the first place in the programme will be given to that distinctly clever little one-act play of Mr. Keble Howard's "Compromising Martha."

The most interesting event of the week "at the halls" has been the production of Mr. George Rollit's amusing "United Service" at the Pavilion, in which Miss Connie Ediss and Mr. Henry Lytton appear. As Miss Connie Ediss plays the double part of a quondam chamber-maid married to a peer, and of her sister, still a cook in Maida Vale; and Mr. Henry Lytton those of Lord Knightbridge, who makes love to Lady Blenkinsop, the erstwhile chamber-maid, and Mike O'Flanagan, the cook's young man; quick changes are the order of the day, and are exceedingly well done. Miss Ediss has a couple of characteristic ditties which were admirably sung, the last one, the refrain of which is, "Oh I say," proving especially popular. Mr. Lytton contrasts his two characters very cleverly, and his song "London's the place for me" was a success. Though the piece cannot be said to be witty it pleased a full house. An original sketch called "Gardening" performed by Messrs. Harry Tate and Co. has been added to the programme of the Oxford. The dialogue is not remarkable, but a good deal of amusement is evoked by the pantomime presentment of various incidents which disturb the peace of the quiet owner of a peaceful—or what ought to be a peaceful—country garden. There is the inevitable tramp, who begs over the garden wall: the equally inevitable boy who, after smashing the cucumber frame with his cricket ball, comes asking the gardener to search for it. Then speech is impossible on account of the horns of the motor cars, and the motors themselves raise such clouds of dust that the garden is uninhabitable. It is all very funny, but the humour of the final disturbance specially appealed to the audience, when a big private motor car knocks down the wall, and comes right inside the garden, the driver smiling blandly, and perfectly content, because, though the garden is wrecked the car has escaped damage. The Watteau ballet, "Fête Galante," at the Empire, has proved an undoubted "draw." It is really a very charming conception, and the picturesque figures of the ladies and courtiers, pages, huntsmen, and others, who dance so gracefully in the Royal Park of Bean Sejour, help to make up a pleasant entertainment.

This is the last week but one of the English Opera season at the Lyric. On Wednesday the company offered a great contrast of styles, Wagner's "Tannhauser" being given in the afternoon, and Verdi's "Trovatore" in the evening. The representation of "Tannhauser" was a noteworthy one. Madame Fanny Moody sang and acted the part of Elizabeth to perfection, and was well supported. The chorus sang splendidly, and the much-abused orchestra has immensely improved. The audience, both afternoon and evening, were large and appreciative. There is a certain appropriateness in an operatic company at the Lyric, since the money with which the theatre was built was chiefly derived from the profits of Alfred Cellier's light opera "Dorothy," which had such a long run at the Prince of Wales's.

A four-week's season of German opera at Covent Garden, by a limited company, is promised after Christmas. The London Symphony Orchestra, a competent German chorus, and a Wagnerian stage manager from Germany having been engaged. The singers will be of the first rank, and an endeavour will be made to mount the Wagner works so as to reproduce the conditions at Bayreuth. Some matinées are to be given, and it is said that moderate charges will prevail throughout the house.

There has been no lack of new plays during the past six months—in fact the output has been enormous—but while real successes have been few and far between failure has been piled on failure, most of them, it must be admitted, being well deserved. Among successes Mr. Pinero's "His House in Order" holds first place. Produced on the 1st of February, it show every indication of running well on to Christmas. Mr. Shaw has held his own, the second act of "Major Barbara" being the most dramatic thing he has yet done. Mr. Barrie has had reverses, both "Josephine" and "Punch" failing to attract; and it cannot be said that either "The Perfect Lover" or "The Fascinating Mr. Vanderveldt" has added to Mr. Sutro's reputation. One of the brightest and freshest plays of the season was Mr. Sydney Bowkett's "Lucky Miss Dean," upon which "The Superior Miss Pellander," whose existence lasted only a month, did not improve. Of the numerous failures "The Macleans of Bairness," was the most signal example, with its run of only five nights; while Mr. Keble Howard's comedietta, "Compromising Martha," was perhaps the best first work of the season. Of the American plays the only one worth mention is "Raffles," founded on a novel by Mr. Hornung, and produced at the Comedy, and in which Mr. Gerald du Maurier was excellent. On the whole, there is a remarkable dearth of rising dramatists of promise. About a year ago the Playgoers' Club instituted a competition for hitherto unrevealed dramatists, the special object being to discover, and hand on to Mr. Philip Carr, for production, any play which seemed to them of sufficient merit. The result being the melancholy announcement that they had nothing to place in Mr. Philip Carr's hands.

Of the actors there is not much to say. Mr. Tree repeated a fine impersonation of Falstaff in Henry IV, and his "Colonel Newcome" had many admirers, chiefly be it said, among those to whom Thackeray is not a cult; and the same may be said of Mr. Tree's impersonation of Mr. Mackenzie, clever though it undoubtedly was. One of the most delightful things of the season was Mr. Cyril Maude's Dr. Pangloss. The "Tago" of Mr. H. B. Irving and the "Othello" of Mr. Lewis Waller were both admirable. There is much good acting in "His House in Order," while some of the best acting of the year has been, as usual, seen at the Court; Miss Florence Hayden's performances in "The Return of the Prodigal" and "Compromising Martha," being specially good.

The Gaiety Theatre has had an especially good twelve months, as its report shows, and the shareholders have reason to be grateful to Mrs. George Edwardes. After setting aside £8,000 for depreciation, a very liberal allowance, seeing that only £1,800, had been allocated the year before, a total dividend of 15 per cent. for the year, was distributed, leaving a balance of something over £1,000 to be carried forward.

Many rumours have been afloat about the future of the Coliseum, and now an authentic announcement is made that the debenture-holders have received an offer of £160,000 from Colonel Mapleson for the building. Should it be accepted, it is said to be Colonel Mapleson's intention to convert the Coliseum into a grand opera house to be opened all the year round. Whether there is room in London for another house devoted to grand opera, is open to doubt, but if Colonel Mapleson carries out the scheme with which he is credited, of converting the roof of the building into an open-air garden for the benefit of the audience between the acts, and where suppers would be served after the performance, his house would possess at least one considerable attraction over any other.

It is pleasant when respectable and learned authorities urge one not to thwart one's cherished inclinations. The members of the British Association lately assembled in conclave at York, vigorously attacked the fetish of early rising, and urge us to have our sleep comfortably out, and moreover to nod as nature inspires. The old adage, "six hours for a man, seven for a woman, and eight for a fool" is taboo, though Mr. C. B. Fry's pronouncement that every adult ought to have nine hours' sleep, and ten if he can get it, is probably a counsel of perfection to most of us. One wonders how the fetish came to be set up. Because it is exceedingly disagreeable to have too little sleep, the wiseacres have for ages been trying to persuade us that it must be wholesome. "Try the sunrise tonic, and keep fit," says the enthusiast, a tradition exists that a Bishop once followed the prescription, and in consequence was so proud all the morning, and so sleepy all the afternoon that he was determined never to try it again. The discussion at York were not entirely impersonal. It sprang from the recent experience of one of the chief speakers who had to withdraw his son from one of the greater public schools because the boy was suffering in cumulative measure from want of sufficient sleep. An outcry has been raised recently by some parents on account of their midshipman sons who are said to suffer from the system of watches. The best medical opinion seems to be that nine hours' sleep is quite insufficient for many growing boys. American business men are said to find five hours' sleep enough for them—a modest requirement which probably but few English men of business would endorse. Several interesting instances were given at York of the wonderful power possessed by great men of action of taking their sleep at will, and in, so to speak, concentrated doses. Lord K. of K.'s gifts in that line being specially quoted.

By the sudden death of Mrs. Craigie we lose one of the most individual of writers. Her first novel "Some Emotions and a Moral," published in 1891 when she was only twenty-four, met with the usual refusal from the first publisher to whom she submitted it—or rather he required an alteration in both title and denouement—conditions to which Mrs. Craigie refused to submit. She then took the manuscript to Mr. Fisher Unwin, and its publication immediately gained for her something like fame. Since then she has held a prominent place among novelists, although the novels that followed in almost unbroken annual succession up to 1898 did not always maintain the level of her first success. For a long time "John Oliver Hobbee" was supposed to be a man, Mrs. Craigie succeeding in keeping in the background. It was in 1898 that she made her first venture in dramatic writing, "The Ambassador" being produced at the St. James's in June of that year. Mrs. Craigie was a delightful companion and a firm friend, and her untimely death leaves a gap that will not be easily or quickly filled.

A somewhat sensational story appeared in some of the papers about ten days ago, to the effect that a steamer—said to be fitted up and furnished at great cost, and carrying a number of ladies and gentlemen of wealth and distinction had left Gravesend on a treasure-seeking expedition, bound for a small island, the whereabouts of which was naturally not divulged, but which was reported to be rich in minerals beyond the dreams of avarice. The main facts of the story appear to be true—the presence of the ladies and gentlemen of wealth and distinction being a myth—and the steamer Xema, now coaling at Cardiff will start to-morrow for the mysterious island off the West Coast of Africa. There is an unusual element of romance in the origin of the enterprise, but the promoters are said to have sifted the matter, and satisfied themselves that there is solid ground for expecting the affair to prove a success. The enterprise originated in the story of a sailor named Powell, employed on a tramp, who, six or seven years ago, brought to Capetown precious stones of great value which had been obtained—though how is still a mystery—from an island off the West Coast of Africa. Captain Jones, Powell's master, reported the matter to Mr. Griffeth, their manager of the De Beers Syndicate, who seem to have thought little of it. Jones therefore decided on the undertaking himself, and taking the chart, and Powell's description of the island, left South Africa in a small sailing craft, with a native crew. After an absence of several months during which he and the crew suffered great hardships, Jones returned to Capetown with stones in his possession which were valued at £15,000 and subsequently sold in a London sale room for £23,000. On the death of Jones the chart and description of the island got into the possession of a Capetown chemist, who disposed of them to Mr. Griffeth, who has now become the leader of the expedition. The steamer which has been chartered by the Collis Diamond Syndicate, is under the command of Lieutenant Temperley Grey, R. N. R., and the crew, with the exception of the leaders, some expert and miners, are all Naval Reserve men. The expedition has been fitted out at a cost of about £15,000, and the voyage is said to be likely to last from four to six months.

At an inquest held on two men who were struck by lightning while sheltering under a beech tree from the violent storm of a fortnight ago, it was stated—and it is a fact worth knowing—that ninety-nine per cent. of all the trees struck by lightning are oaks, and that beech trees are rarely, if ever, struck. And in this instance, although two out of the six men who sheltered under the beech were killed, there was nothing to show that the tree had been in any way injured.

A hoard of valuable coins has been unearthed at Colchester. Some workmen were hawking coins about, and three enthusiastic local antiquarians bought some. Judicious inquiries proved that the coins had been deposited in an earthern vessel of Romano-British make. It was badly broken, but the pieces have been collected, and the urn pieced together. The coins date from A. D. 250 to about A. D. 300. A new terror threatens us in the form of the peripatetic gramophone, which now adds its hideous noise to that of the piano organ and motor 'bus, which already made London life anything but a delight.

THE BIRD LOVER'S VADE MECUM.*

WE expected great things of Mr. Frank Finn's Garden and Aviary Birds of India and our expectations have been fully realised. We expected great things of Mr. Finn because he is a specialist in aviculture. It might almost be said that what he does not know of ducks and birds of the species that are caged is not worth knowing. He lives in an atmosphere of birds; when he is not in the Zoological Gardens he is visiting the ducks in St. James's Park or discussing practical questions in aviculture with various bird fanciers. There is not a bird shop in London that is not constantly visited by Mr. Finn. He was stationed for several years in Calcutta as Deputy Superintendent of the Museum and there spent most of his leisure in the "Zoo" or among the bird sellers. The result is that Mr. Finn is able to add to the learning of the Professor of Zoology the practical knowledge of the breeder and fancier. Much of this varied information is set forth in a most readable manner in The Garden and Aviary Birds of India. Our friend is essentially a teacher. Many clever men are unable to impart their knowledge. Mr. Finn is not one of these; his books are all admirably lucid. A P. W. D. man recently informed us that he thought Finn's How to know the India Ducks a wonderful book. He always took it into camp with him and it enabled him to identify every duck he shot; he had told dozens of men to buy it.

In his latest literary production Mr. Finn strikes out a new line: he covers much hitherto untrodden ground, dealing, as he does, with Indian birds from the point of view of the fancier.

He describes all the commoner garden birds of India (except birds of prey, game birds and waterfowl) in such a manner as to render their identification easy, especially with the aid of the many excellent illustrations the book contains. Each one of these birds is then further considered with regard to its adaptibility or otherwise to live in an aviary or cage. In addition to these, all foreign birds commonly caged in India, such as Java sparrows, canaries and cockatoos are described and their treatment in captivity discussed. The last chapter in the book is devoted to the management of captive birds and deals with such subjects as rearing young birds, taming wild-caught ones, diseases, accidents and transport.

It is thus evident that no one who keeps an aviary in India can afford to be without Mr. Finn's little manual. Even the "old hand" at bird-keeping will learn much from the perusal thereof.

Nestlings frequently fall into the hands of the would-be bird-fancier and he is at a total loss how to treat them, with the result that the unfortunate creatures die. Now that Mr. Finn's book has appeared no one need be in doubt how to feed a young bird provided, of course, its English or vernacular name be known.

The field naturalist will appreciate Mr. Finn's delightful book on account of its excellent descriptions of the habits of the species it describes. Mr. Finn has so intimate a knowledge of the vie intime of many birds that he is able to tell us many things about them which are not generally known. Take for example, the following passage anent crow pheasants. "Cock and hen are alike in colour, being glossy blue black with bright chestnut wings, black bills and feet, and bright red eyes. The young in first plumage have grey eyes, but vary a great deal in colour, some being dull editions of the parents, and others quite different. In these latter the black parts of the plumage are closely barred with white and the wings barred with black. Such birds are always bigger than others and may be, as Jerdon says, the hens, since in this bird the hen is rather larger than the cock. But if this is so, it is curious that all the birds in a brood are either hens or cocks; at any rate, I have never seen birds of the two types brought in together, which, one would think they should be if the colour were merely a sign of sex."

Mr. Finn adds that the barred forms make the better pets. Here then is a phenomenon which is well worth investigation The crow-pheasant is, of course, a cuckoo, and the young of some other cuckoos display strage variatons. The typical young cock koel is black all over, with the exception of a few faint buff bars, while the hen the is heavily barred with white; but we have seen numbers of young koels which are as heavily barred as the hen, but with buff instead of white. We have never been able to determine whether these are cocks or hens. Mr. Finn has not failed to notice this phenomenon in the young koel, for he writes "Young cocks may be found in female plumage and vice versâ."

We have already alluded to the illustrations of which there are 31. They are very good and add considerably to the value of the book, which, for convenience of size and general get up, is an example of Messrs. Thacker Spink and Co.'s best work.

PARTRIDGE SHOOTING IN THE HIMALAYAS.

THERE are three kinds of partridge got in Darjeeling and Sikkim: Arboricola torqueola (the black-throated hill partridge), Arboricola rufogularis (the rufous-throated hill partridge), and Lerwa nivicola (or snow partridge): the first Arboricola torqueola is found from 8,000 up to 12,000 feet in great numbers at about 10,000 feet elevation. They frequent bamboo jungle and are very difficult to flush, running with great speed through the thick bamboos, where even a small dog sticks in trying to get through, it is seldom one gets a shot. The best plan I find is to scatter them, and after half an hour or so, mimic the call, when they come running in calling the whole time and one or more shots may be had sometimes, in the early morning a covey may be put up in thin jungle and some very pretty shooting may be had. I once started about 10 birds in thin jungle and in ten minutes got four. On another occasion I had shot two birds when my dog ran into the jungle caught and brought out a partridge which must have been hiding in a hole. About September they may be seen on the roads with their young. More than once I have shot partridges off trees after being put up by dogs, but as a rule they light on the ground and run into dense cover.

Some years ago I had a man who used to shoot fairly straight. One day in October at an elevation of about 11,000 feet we heard numbers of partridge calling just below the road in some dense bamboo jungle. The man immediately forced his way through the bamboos for about 13 yards, sat down and started mimicking the call. I got tired of waiting, in the afternoon he came into camp with eight birds.

Arboricola rufogularis is found at an elevation of 1,000 feet up to 6,500 feet It is not by any means as numerous as Arboricola torqueola—the greatest number I have seen together were six. When after pheasants I have many a time put up this bird and it requires a quick shot to bring it down, as it flashes over the pathway with great speed. No. 8 shot is the best to use.

Lerwa nivicola is a very rare bird in Sikkim now, and the sportsman who is desirous of getting a specimen must go over bad ground and be able to bear any amount of cold. Two young birds were brought to me last August, but they both died shortly after I got them.

Some years ago, in January, on the Nepal side of Sundukpho I put up a couple and was fortunate enough to get both. I have seen them at Longree, where one day I came across about a dozen, but could not get close enough for a shot. The next morning I went to the same place and there they were again, this time I managed to creep within 25 yards and knocked over three birds.

RIVER AND LAKE FISHING IN INDIA.

IV.

THERE only remains one more question for discussion, before proceeding to the more interesting subject of how to fish for mahseer, and where to find them. The tyro in the art may well feel puzzled when he looks at an illustrated price list, by the vast number of artificial baits presented for his selection. It may perhaps relieve his bewilderment to be told that, for Indian fishing, a few standard artificial baits are all that he need take into serious consideration, not because the others are necessarily useless, but because if he does not take fish with these few, he is unlikely to do so with any others, and it is therefore superfluous to encumber himself with more articles than are really necessary.

Among artificial baits, I would place first in order of general utility, the spoon. This can be made in all shapes, sizes, and colours, as well as mounted in various ways. Every experienced fisherman has his favourite patterns, chosen from a practical knowledge of what he has found most useful in those rivers with which he is best acquainted, and there is no doubt that spoons of certain patterns are the most successful lures in certain rivers. Any rules that can be laid down must therefore be for general application only, subject to modifications for particular localities.

For general use, then, I consider that spoons gold on the outside surface and silver on the inside, are most suitable. If required for slow water, or for water which is not very deep, they should be made of thin metal; if for heavy water or deep pools, they should be heavy. Personally, I have a great dislike for lead weights on a trace, when using a spoon. They interfere considerably with a neat cast, and induce unnecessary noise and splash when coming into contact with the water; I hardly ever use them, except when fishing from a height, such as a bridge across a fall, when a certain amount of weight in addition to that of the spoon is necessary, to prevent the latter from "skipping" on the surface. I infinitely prefer having whatever weight is necessary, put into the spoon itself. It is then in the right place for ensuring a long and true cast, and for keeping the spoon at the required depth below the water. In some rivers, a spoon silvered on both sides is very taking, and it is also frequently useful were the water is slightly discoloured. You will see men, and good fishermen too, using spoons of extraordinary size when trying for heavy fish. Up to a certain point, I think that the motto, "The bigger the spoon, the heavier the fish," holds good, but I think this can be carried to extremes. I have occasionally, but rarely, used spoons exceeding 2½ inches in length, but my limit, as a rule, is 2 inches. No definite rule, however, can be laid down for the enticing of anything so capricious in its moods and appetites as a mahseer. I have taken fish up to 30lbs. on spoons from 1½ to 2 inches long, and in the same river when I have put on a 2¼-inch spoon in order to choke off the little ones when they were troublesome I have had fish from one two pounds hanging themselves upon these spoons. I noticed this particularly in some of the lower reaches of the celebrated Poonch river, within four or five miles of its junction with the river Tangrote.

The manner of mounting a spoon, again, is a matter on which opinions vary widely. The general consensus of opinion is in favour of flying mounts (i.e., mounts hanging from the head of the spoon only,) for light fishing, but many men whose opinions are worthy of consideration, believe that for fishing deep with large spoon, for heavy fish, the double mount should be used, i.e., one hook hanging at the head of the spoon and a second one at the tail attached to the spoon through a hole bored through the lower end. Those who favour the latter arrangement, generally prefer a wire attachment, to a split ring, considering that the latter is often weak and untrustworthy. Others of equal experience say that the wire attachment is troublesome to put on, that unless the greatest care be exercised the strain on the various strands of wire is unequal, thereby constituting a weakness, and that is a difficult and tiresome task to make the mount neatly and to finish it off nicely. Among such varying opinions you must make your own choice. My own experience is that I have used split rings for over 25 years of constant fishing, and have never, as far as I can remember, lost a single fiesh through the breakage of a ring. Of course, if you use a ring that is not properly tempered, and that gapes after you have put on your mount, either the latter or the swivel of your trace is very liable to work off the ring and lose you your fish: but that is surely your own fault for not discarding an obviously faulty ring.

For general fishing, I am all in favour of the flying mount, consisting of two treble hooks, bound to the same piece of gut or wire as the case may be, and hanging from the ring at the head of the spoon, but if exceptionally heavy fish are expected, the double mount, with one treble hanging from the head and the other from the tail of the spoon, is undoubtedly the stronger and more trustworthy.

In connection with eyed treble hooks for spoons, it seems worth while mentioning that not a single tackle maker in Great Britain, Ireland, or India, seems to have grasped the first principle required for ensuring a neat and equable spin of the spoon, namely, that the shank should be long. This is very easily proved. Take a treble eyed hook, attach it by a split ring to the head of a spoon, and spin it quietly in fairly slow water. Then, using the same spoon, attach a short loop to the head of the same hook, so that the bend of the hook hangs in about the centre of the spoon, spin it at the same pace in the same water, and observe the difference. In the first instance, the spoon wobbles, and if spun slowly takes an erratic side to side movement entirely unlike the natural movement of a fish; in the second, the spoon spins naturally and smoothly on its own axis. A quick and simple method of lengthening the shank of your top hook is to attach the eye of the hook to the split ring at the head of the spoon by another split ring, arranging it in such a way that two of the three barbs of the hook lie in the concave surface of the spoon while the third stands out at an angle. The split ring so used should be smaller than that in the head of the spoon. I don't know whether this sounds rather complicated, but if you try the experiment with these instructions before you, you will find it as easy as the proverbial lying introduced into facetious fishing stories. The top hook of the mount should hang so that the bend of it is almost in the centre of the spoon, the lower hook should have the whole shank clear of the spoon. For spoons up to an inch long, one treble or one single hook is sufficient, and to ensure proper spinning, the bend of the hook should hang two-thirds of the way down the spoon.

Next to the spoon, I consider the soleskin phantom minnow the most useful artificial bait, but except in the small sizes, this is more useful when the water is slightly coloured, than when it is quite clear. Minnows are coloured variously; either blue, green, or brown above, and silver or gold beneath. I personally prefer the blue and silver one. Phantom minnows hardly require description. They are all more or less similar in design, but those with a swivel in the head are the best. They are made in all sizes, but the largest you are likely to require is five inches in length from the tip of the nose to the bend of the tail hook. I rarely use them myself longer than four inches.

A Devon minnow is sometimes useful, either blue and silver or all silver, but it requires careful working; if drawn quickly through the water it is liable to skip, and if drawn slowly, to sink and catch in the bottom, or in rock.

There are numerous artificial baits, flexible and otherwise, advertised in price lists, but I think that if you confine yourself to the three already mentioned, you will have all you require.

A great saving in expense can be effected, by having your spoons made up of brass or copper, the former for choice, in the bazar, from an English pattern. A bottle of silvering fluid will give you the colour required for the concave surface, but you should see that your spoon is clean and entirely free from grease, before applying it. The coating of silvering fluid will turn a greenish yellow colour under the action of the water, after a time, and the fish will then seldom take the spoon, but it only takes about two minutes to clean and silver it. If you prefer, you can have the spoons silver plated by any native silversmith, and this lasts for some time. You can either make up your own mounts (they are not difficult to make) or order them from a tackle shop, giving the length of the spoon for which they are required, and insisting that the eye of the top hook be left clear, and not filled up with totally unnecessary tinsel, as the hook should work entirely freely on the split ring at the head of the spoon. Anything approaching a tight fit will cause your mount to stand out at an angle from the spoon, giving an unnatural appearance and greatly diminishing your chance of hooking a fish. You can always let down your mount, by using a second split ring as mentioned above.

The subject of natural baits must be held over for discussion in another article.

YUBA BILL.

It was at dinner in an American restaurant. The dessert was being served, and the stately negro waiters were passing pretty little pinkfrosted cakes to be eaten with ice-creams. A plate of them was held before a young lady, who looked them over, and said:—

"I don't care for any."

The negro waiter was moving away, when she saw, as she thought, a chocolate cake on the further side of the plate. She was fond of chocolate.

"Yes, I will," she said, reaching over for the little cake. "There is one with chocolate on it."

"Beg pardon, miss," said the negro, as she tried to pick up the tempting morsel, "but that's my thumb."

LIGHT AXITE VS. BLACK POWDER.

IT is nearly six years since we witnessed a trial with Cordite powder fired from black powder Express rifles, and we felt at that time that a new lease of life had been given to many an old favourite rifle which its owner had reluctantly contemplated discarding.

To sportsmen in India the need for a smokeless powder had always been a very real one and when Messrs. Manton and Company introduced this powder in 1900 and proved by trial locally that it was suitable for use from the old Express rifles, we realised that a very real want had been satisfied.

In the early days when Cordite was used from Express rifles the ordinary lead bullets were adopted and as the early or experimental stages were passed a lead bullet with a nickel base was substituted, the makers finding that the flame from the powder generated a temperature which often fused the base of the lead bullet and thus caused an occasional wild shot. It is admitted that Cordite is not perfect, principally owing to its corrosive effect on the barrels, high pressures developed under certain conditions and excessive flame temperature.

Messrs. Kynoch and Company have, after exhaustive trials, patented a new smokeless powder which they have called "Axite." The new powder has been thoroughly tried and is the outcome of many years of careful experiments. The makers, who are Government contractors, realising the defects in Cordite set themselves the task of creating a new powder which should show the best possible results as regards high velocity and low pressures and at the same time eliminate the disadvantages of Cordite. Messrs. Kynoch and Company claim that in Axite they have produced a powder in every way suitable for the soldier and sportsman.

Having printed in The Indian Field in July 1905 an account of a trial in Birmingham at which the British War Office and Admiralty were represented and all the leading gunmakers in England were present, we were much interested to know what steps our local gunmakers were taking to introduce the new explosive to the Indian sportsmen. It was a pleasant surprise when we received an invitation from our old friends, Messrs. Manton and Company, to witness a trial of Axite, and we spent a most instructive if somewhat wet afternoon at their range. Before giving an account of the trial which we witnessed we think a short description of Axite will be of interest, describing in what manner Axite is superior to Cordite, its appearance and performances in England. In the manufacture of Axite the main ingredients of Cordite are retained although the proportions are altered, ingredients are added which impart properties not possessed by Cordite and the methods of manufacture have been modified. From a glance at this wood cut, which represents a section of ribbon Axite, it will be seen that the shape of the powder has also been altered to ensure the flame from the cap reaching the entire surface of the strand or strip and also to prevent the strands of powder adhering to one another.

The makers claim for Axite a number of advantages, the most important of which we consider the following :—

A. That the corrosive effect of Axite is less than Cordite.

B. That with equal pressure it gives increased velocity and therefore flatter trajectory.

C. That the effect of atmospheric temperature on pressure and velocity with Axite is only half that with Cordite (a most important consideration for India.)

D. That the maximum flame temperature of Axite is considerably less than with Cordite the erosive effect is therefore considerably less.

E. That the residue deposit in the barrel after firing Axite reduces the friction between the bullet and the barrel owing to the lubricating properties possessed by Axite.

It is therefore practicable to use Axite cartridges giving higher velocities than can be employed with Cordite as with such velocities the latter would nickel the barrel by excessive friction

F. That the accuracy is greatly increased.

As previously stated the trial which we witnessed was one in which Messrs. Manton and Company set themselves to demonstrate the suitability of Axite for use from Express rifles which were originally built and intended for use solely with black powder, but we think that having claimed such superiority for Axite, a few of the results obtained by the makers at their trials will not be out of place and we have therefore taken the liberty of selecting a few from those published by Messrs. Kynoch and Company. In an article relating to a performance of a rifle or powder we often think that much interest is lost owing to the rifle or powder not being generally known to the reader, and we have therefore selected the ·303 rifle as being well known to sportsmen throughout India Many other calibre weapons were, of course, used by the makers before they considered that Axite had been proved superior.

4. "To demonstrate the accuracy of Axite seven rounds of 375/303 cartridges were fired from a machine rest at a target fixed 100 yards from the rifle; six of the seven shots could be covered by a penny piece and the seventh was just outside."

5. "In order to ascertain the relative heat imparted to a rifle by the explosion of Axite and Cordite, ten rounds were fired from a rifle, of Axite and Cordite, at intervals of 10 seconds, the temperature of the rifle barrel being taken before and after each series.

Rise in temperature of barrel with

Axite	Cordite

7. "The lubricating action of Axite was shown by firing a series of Cordite cartridges from a ·303 rifle in the ordinary way, followed by a second series, the barrel being lubricated between each shot by firing an Axite cartridge alternately with the Cordite cartridges.

The mean velocity of the first series of Cordite cartridges was 1,974 feet seconds The mean velocity of the second series of Cordite (after lubrication by Axite shot) was 2,071 feet seconds.

The increased velocity due to the Axite lubricating shot was therefore 97 foot seconds.

The above trials, although relating to high velocity rifles, are correct in a modified degree as regards the performance of Axite from black powder Express rifles.

It was with a view of proving this that we journeyed to Messrs. Manton and Company's range and witnessed there the following trials.

The cartridges used in this occasion were imported by the firm nine months ago and, knowing, as they do, the effect of the Indian climate, were stored by them in their magazines until they had passed through, perhaps, the severest test of all, namely, an Indian hot season. The rifles selected for the trial were a ·577 Magnum, taking the 3" straight case, burning 167 grains of black powder and a 560 grains cannelured bullet; a 500 Magnum rifle taking a 3¼" straight case burning 142 grains of black powder and a 440 grains cannelured bullet.

A commencement was made with the ·577 rifle, the range being 100 yards, the shooter was seated on the ordinary saddle back rest.

Six shots were fired from the right and left barrel alternately and on measuring the diagram we found that the six shots were in a space measuring 4¼" × 3¼". (Diagram A).

The rifle was then fired with cartridges suitably loaded with light Axite and a 560 grains nickel based bullet at the same range the diagram obtained measuring 5⅛" × 2⅛". (Diagram B).

The rifle was not cleaned out in any way during the trial and although during the afternoon some 30 shots were fired from the weapon the diagrams illustrated prove conclusively the lubricating properties possessed by Axite. During the course of the trial we ourselves shot the rifle with black and Axite powder and obtained much better results with the new powder, a very pleasant feature of which is, the small amount of recoil felt.

We also noticed that on firing an Axite cartridge from the barrels after using black powder the entire residue was removed and the barrels appeared to have been thoroughly cleaned and very slightly lubricated.

The ·500 Magnum rifle was then fired with black powder and the results obtained were far from satisfactory, the bullets showing a tendency to keyhole? The six shots occupied a space on the card of 8½" × 10½".

Messrs. Manton and Company's representative informed us that we might expect to see very different results when the weapon was tried with Axite and he proceeded to fire a further series of six shots from the same rifle with Axite. The diagram obtained with the new powder astonished us, and when after measuring the card we found the six shots were in a space of 4⅜" × 2⅛". we were quite convinced as to the accuracy and reliability of Axite (Diagram C).

Diagram B.

577 Magnum, "Axite" 560 grs. bullet. Range 100 yards.

The makers in the course of their experiments found that they could not obtain good results with the lighter weights of Express bullets and they have therefore discarded them, adopting the heavy cannelured bullets with a nickel base, this enables the sportsman to use a more powerful and effective projectile. We are informed that Axite cartridges cannot be obtained loaded with the light bullet, such as the ·340 grains, ·500 Express bullet, ·270 grains ·450 bullet and the ·520 grains ·577 bullet and as in their place we have the heavier 440 grains, ·325 grains, and ·560 grains bullets without increased pressures we see no cause for complaint.

We notice that with Axite and black powder fired from the ·577 rifle the elevation was the same, but in the case of the ·500 rifle the elevation was slightly lower with Axite. The difference in our opinion is slight, but with the knowledge, that a slight error in the sights has so often caused the loss of another record head being added to the bag, we would strongly advise all sportsmen who intend to give the new powder a trial, to have their weapons specially regulated for Axite, and this, we are informed, Messrs. Manton and Company are prepared to under take.

The afternoon selected for the above trial unfortunately turned out wet and the light from the shooter's point of view was far from satisfactory, still the shooting obtained was good and we consider conclusively proved the suitability of this new powder for the Express rifle.

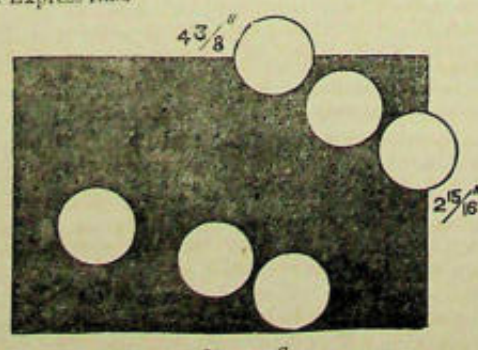

Diagram C.

500 Magnum, "Axite, 3¼" 440 grs. nickelbase bullet. Range 100 yards.

We hope these notes will be of interest to sportsmen throughout India that the new powder may be deemed as satisfactory by all who decide to give it a trial as it is by ourselves.

We shall at some future time report on the shooting of light Axite versus L. P. Cordite from Express rifles originally made and sighted for black powder.

AN ALBINO KAKUR.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Whilst out shooting to-day (25th August) in a South India jungle I came upon a white kakur or barking deer (Curvulus Muntjac). It was only about 50 yards from me. As I was not far from a road I thought at first that it must be a tame goat which had strayed. Whilst debating in my mind what the animal could be, it gave a couple of barks and disappeared in the jungle. We tracked it for same way and twice put it up, but being in very thick jungle I was unable to get a shot. The kakur was absolutely pure white and not cream-coloured.

I should be interested to know if you or any of your readers could inform me if an albino kakur has often been recorded.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In "Pulteney's" article on mixed shooting in your issue of 16th August, he relates how a friend of his saw a coolie killed and after having been played with for some time by a tigress and two cubs, 200 yards in front of his bungalow; in fact sufficiently close for him to hear the brute purring. This happened on top of a hill in broad daylight between the hours of 4 P.M. and 5-30 P.M. It would be interesting to know why "Pulteney's" friend did not take some steps to rescue the coolie or shoot the tigress, instead of watching the wretched man being slowly tortured to death from his bungalow verandah.

SOLITAIRE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I notice in your issue of the 16th instant, that you say J. H. Vanderzee died in Africa after having been mauled by lions. Quite true, he was mauled by lions, but he died in Burma, drowned in the U. Mai Kha, North Burma about 1900.

It was a very sad affair, poor Vanderzee had got one of these collapsible boats and got into it one day with his Kachin servant and a Gurkha orderly. They got upset in some way, and Vanderzee was drowned with the Kachin, whom he was trying to save, the latter not being able to swim. The Gurkha got ashore alright, but the bodies of the others were not discovered for two days afterwards.

Poor Vanderzee was a fine all-round sportsman, and had come to Burma solely to shoot elephant and tsine, he having shot everything there was to be got in India. His great ambition was to shoot every kind of big game in the world. He told me once that the next furlough he took, would be to the Rockies after grizzly, wapiti, and big horn.

He and I lived together for some months in the stockade at Sadon, and I remember seeing the fearful scars on his legs, which he got when mauled by a lion. As he told me of the occurrence, it may not be out of place to repeat it, if only to show that the lion is a much more formidable brute than the tiger. He said that he was out with a professional guide and hunter, a Dane whom he had picked up in Beira. They were walking in line about a quarter mile apart, with rising ground in front of them. He saw the Dane who reached the top of the rise first, suddenly drop on one knee and start firing. Vanderzee therefore doubled to his front and in topping the ridge, saw six lions cantering past him about 200 yards away the Dane having already accounted for two. Vanderzee immediately had a shot at a fine old male with his männlicher and dropped him, and then hit a second male in the leg. The first was done for and the second after lagging behind lay down.

Vanderzee then took his ·577 from his Kaffir gun bearer, and started to walk up the wounded lion. It lay with its head on its paws with its tail switch-ing from side to side, watching his approach, so he knew that it would charge as soon as he got close enough, but he never expected it would start its gallop from the distance it did. He had advanced to within about 100 yards of it when it started for him. He gave it the right barrel when it was about 50 yards off and saw it swerve off through the smoke, and hardly checking its speed came down on him from a fresh angle. He then gave it the second barrel when it was about 5 yards away, but at the same moment it was into him, and knocked him over. All he remembered afterwards was that the lion was chewing his left wrist, while it scratched his legs with its claws. With his disengaged hand he was pulling ·577 cartridges out of his bandolier, and throwing them over his head to his Kaffir, who mad with excitement was making desperate efforts to open the ·577, which had been sent flying behind him, when he was floored. Vanderzee told me that when he was being mauled about, he felt neither pain nor fear, but was merely wildly interested in the Kaffir's gambols, and wondered when he would be able to load the rifle. The lion was apparently too sick to rise to go after the Kaffir, and at last the latter managed to load up, and pluckily came up and blew the lion's brains out. His rifle was a

Holland and Holland, shooting 6 drs. and 656 grs. soft lead, the first shot hitting the lion in the side of the neck and the second in the chest.

These two shots would crumple up any tiger which would also hardly begin a charge further off than 30 yards however open the country might be. Although dreafully mauled, he was able to stand the treck and canoe journey to Beira, and caught a N. D. Lloyd Steamer to Cape Town. His hand was tied to the ceiling of the cabin the whole way, as he lay in his berth, to save it from mortification, which the German doctor expected. Thanks to his wonderful constitution, he soon pulled through, with no evil effects other than his left wrist being rendered practically useless.

POONA CLOSED MEETING.

Thursday, 30th August 1906.

THE Closed Meeting this afternoon was a great success. There was a big attendance, H E. Lord Lamington being among those present, the weather was perfect and the sport interesting. The first two races were won by favourites. Then came the Novice Plate in which the much fancied Little Gallant was beaten by Nowar. The latter was, however, disqualified for crossing. The remaining races were upsets. Susan, who went out at sixes, won the Pony Plate; White Heather (4 to 1 against) the Horse Welter Plate; and Lomond (5 to 1 against) the Arab Welter Plate. But the biggest surprise of the day was served up in the All Pony Plate when Mr. Forbes steered his pony Forget-me-Not home an easy winner. 20 to 1 against was obtainable about the winner from the books. Details:—

ARAB POLO PONY PLATE.—Winner, Rs. 200; second, Rs 100; third, Rs. 50. For bonâ fide Arab polo ponies registered I. P. A. and certified by Secretary of a recognised Polo Club to have played polo regularly up to time of entry. C. W. 10st. 7lbs. or over. 3 furlongs.

Mr. A. Miller's g g Cardinal, by Richelieu—Humphrey Clinker mare, aged, 10st. 9lbs. — C. Dickenson 2
Mr. R. Hustler's br g Revelation, by Tradition—Shade, aged, 9st. 5lbs. — D. Coleman 3

Other starters:—Blueskin, 9-7 (car.) 9-8 (Mr. Capton); Bellis, 13-0 (P. Regan); The General, 11-12 (J. Chevally); Corinthus, 10-13 (P. Cosgrove); Young Creswick, 10-7 (Glennon); Tarpon, 10-5 (Cox); Loddon, 9-11 (Macdonald); Boisdale, 9-11 (Sutherland); Arezzo, 9-7 (Scott); Officer, 9-7 (Carter); Talmud, 9-7 (Lovett).

BETTING: 5 to 2 agst. Bellis, 6 to 1 Isis, 7 to 1 each Corinthus and The General, 10 to 1 Revelation, 12 to 1 each Boisdale and Cardinal, 15 to 1 Blueskin, 25 to 1 each Loddon and Arezzo.

Bellis, Boisdale, and Blueskin led at the start in the order named. The first of the treble was negotiated by Blueskin, Boisdale, Bellis, Loddon, Arezzo, Isis, Revelation, Tarpon, and Officer in that order, while Talmud brought up the rear, and Corinthus came to grief. Loddon led out of the straight, followed by Cardinal, Isis, Boisdale, Officer, and Tarpon. Loddon fell at the back of the course, leaving Cardinal in charge from Boisdale, Isis, and Arezzo. Tarpon succumbed at the next fence. Boisdale and Cardinal jumped the sod wall together, followed by Arezzo, Officer, Isis, Bellis, Revelation, and Blueskin, with Talmud last. Taking the treble for the second time Boisdale led Cardinal and Officer, while Arezzo had gone back to seventh place. In the straight Cardinal and Boisdale changed places, and the former held his lead past the judge's box for the second time and round to the back of the course, while Arezzo had fallen back until he brought up the rear. The last named fell at the first of the treble for the last time, and at the succeeding fence The General, Boisdale, Bellis, Young Creswick, and Officer succumbed. At the next to last fence Isis and Cardinal were close together, half a dozen lengths away from the rest of the field. At the final hurdle Isis then drew away, and finished half a dozen lengths ahead of Cardinal. Revelation was half a length away third; Blueskin was three lengths away fourth, and Talmud, who was the only other horse left in the race, was a long way behind. Time—8mins. 10⅕secs.

THE TURF.

LEWES.

THE attendance on the first day was one of the best seen for a long time. It was a pity that the deferred rain did not fall in the night, as the roads were as loose as Sahara, and the trees and hedges choked with the same impalpable dust which does such deadly work in ragging the summer vegetation. The grass on White Hawk Down was by no means bad going, though we have seen it greener at this time of year. The light was good, allowing all the features of the superb landscape north and south to stand out with marked distinctness, and a pleasant breeze made the afternoon doubly enjoyable. The same breeze, however, nearly spoilt sport, as after the second race it brought one of those sea frets which sometimes last for days, and strengthening into a driving drizzle, it sent everybody to cover, while the jockeys in the Juvenile Selling Plate were soaking wet to the skin. It fortunately ceased as quickly as it began, and the sharp visitation was changed into a sweet one by the laying of the dust at the expense of a damp jacket.

Everyone who writes much, spends Rs. 5-0 to Rs. 10-0 a year for steel pens, penholders, evaporated ink, etc., besides from nothing to hundreds a year, according to the value of his time, for seconds lost at each dip. One "Swan" costing, say, Rs. 10-0, will last a lifetime, waste no ink and save much valuable time.

"Swan" Fountain Pens have the reputation of many years behind them. They have seen service on the battlefield, on the sea, in the desert, in Antarctic Regions and have everywhere proved invaluable to their owners. All hands suited.

Satisfaction warranted.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.

Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses

Mr. F. Lynham's Mistel Bird, 5yrs., 7st. 9lbs. ... ... H. Pike 0

(Winner trained by J. A. Clement.)

BETTING: 6 to 4 agst. Twelvebore, 7 to 2 Winnie K., 9 to 2 Levanger, 7 to 1 Tiraillerie filly, and 100 to 8 each others (offered).

Won a good race by a head; a length divided second and third.

From a monetary point of view the attendance was not of the best on Friday, but taking a line through the number of cards sold, the carriage enclosure, and cheap rings, 'tis supposed to be the best seen here for the past eight years. Nor was Saturday much behind it, the sea fret having laid the local dust, and made the roads Lewes side of Falmer good for driving through, but on the Brighton half, past Hollingbury Hill, where the troops are encamped, the ground was as hard as a chip, a fact attested by the chalky boots and gaiters of the Volunteers, who filled Brighton station during the early morning. The down grass had been freshed up, but the hardness of the going was shown by the dust hammered out of the down turf, and the strain on training establishments accounted for the sudden falling off in fields on the concluding day. Rain would have been welcome in many senses, but although the sky was cloudy the visitation kept off to the satisfaction of a goodly company.

SOUTHDOWN CLUB WELTER PLATE—Of 100sovs. 1¼ mile.

(Winner trained by Mr. P. P. Gilpin.)

BETTING: 5 to 4 agst. Scaraben, 3 to 1 Great Scot, 9 to 2 Filatrice, 6 to 1 Achaicus, 10 to 1 Eteocles, and 20 to 1 Vernham (offered).

Filatrice, whose tail was swishing, cut out the work from Scaraben, Great Scot, and Eteocles, while Achaicus brought up the rear. Seven furlongs from home the six were strung out in Indian file, and entering the straight Vernham dropped back last. A quarter of a mile from home Great Scot became second, and, wearing down Filatrice in the run-in, won cleverly by half a length; eight lengths divided second and third. Scaraben was fourth, and Vernham last.

LANG'S

No. 2 ·360 BORE HIGH-VELOCITY CORDITE RIFLE

An ideal weapon; as the high velocity and consequent flat trajectory is combined with the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express.

VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD," March 25th, 1905:—

"A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.

ARGYLLSHIRE, N.B.,
September 23rd, 1905.

". . . . about the rifle. I am more than pleased with it, it has already accounted for 5 bucks and 2 stags. An American gentleman brought down a buck at 124 yards and Sir Wm. D. C. killed a stag at a distance of over 120. I think it is as perfect a weapon as science can devise. Sir Wm. D. C. wants to get one like it." E. S. D., Capt.

PRICES FROM 20 GUINEAS.

KEMPTON PARK.

Always a quiet meeting, the one under notice proved no exception to the rule, but withal none the less enjoyable, as with society away on the seas, lochs, or moors, there was plenty of elbow room in lawn and paddock, the strength of the attendance springing from Tatter-all's and the public enclosures, with a fair muster on the part of the road division. A dull sky presaged rain, but after a heat shower or two the clouds packed away and those present enjoyed a glorious afternoon, a delightful breeze affording a welcome change from the enervating heat of the Sussex fortnight.

Much of a muchness was the attendance at Kempton as compared with Wednesday, the members' lawn being patronised by the old brigade, who have left off caring for yachting, grouse shooting, or the tables at Monte Carlo, and are setting a good old English example in seeing the season through. The paddock afforded a pretty picture, with the dainty costumes of the fair sex backed by the green sward, whilst, needless to say, a fairly good company filled the holiday rings. After the dry courses we have seen, it was small wonder that trainers sent their engaged animals to a course where there was no fear of a breakdown, and the racing panned out well, close finishes giving a zest to the sport.

ROWING.

CAMBRIDGE vs. HARVARD.—More heavy storms passed over this district yesterday, with intervals of brilliant sunshine, but fortunately no rain fell during the morning work. Neither crew attempted anything in the shape of a big trial. The Cambridge authorities have decided to give the bow seat to A. B. Close-Brooks, of First Trinity, and H. Shimwell (Trinity Hall). who has also been tried, will be spare man of the crew. Close-Brooks, like Baynes, rowed in the First Trinity boat at Henley, and now that he has settled down to rowing on what is usually the stroke side, should make a neat and capable oarsman. He belongs to a well-known rowing family, for his father and two uncles were all rowing 'blues" at Cambridge. In fact, in the sixties and seventies, the three brothers Close—John B., James B., and William B.—had a very big say in Light Blue rowing affairs. The Cambridge men are all fit and well, and the weights showed that they averaged exactly 12st. 5lbs. per man. Harvard have not been so fortunate as their rivals with their "bill of health.' Richardson has been slightly indisposed and out of the boat since Monday, Faulkner rowing at "5" in his place. Yesterday Glass developed signs of water on the knee, and to day he went to London for treatment by a specialist. L. K. Lunt, another substitute, was put in the boat in place of Glass, and as matters have turned out it is fortunate that the visitors have come over well provided with substitutes. Morgan, who rowed "3" against Yale, is understood to be sailing from the States to-day, but as he will only arrive a fortnight before the race, it is highly probable that Flint will retain the third thwart. The Harvard men hope to have Richardson and Glass back in the boat next week, if not before. It is announced that the crews have agreed upon Mr. R. C. Lehmann, M. P., as umpire for the race, and a better choice could not possibly have been made, for Mr. Lehmann is a persona grata with oarsmen on both sides of the Atlantic.

Cambridge were out at 11-30 with Mr. Escombe coaching. Mr. Lehmann and other friends were also on the boat. The crew went up to Stone House against a strong wind and through rough water in three pieces of paddling, with a couple of bursts of half a dozen strokes. After turning at the lower end of the island, they dropped down some distance, and then put in one minute's hard rowing, getting in 35 strokes well inside the 60secs. After another paddle to just below the Ferry, Mr. Escombe asked for a half-minute burst, and in this the crew got off very smartly and completed 18 strokes. This finished the morning work, and the crew paddled back to the raft.

Harvard went out at noon, with Wray coaching from the Rapide. Lunt and Faulkner rowed "4" and "5" in place of Glass and Richardson. The upstream work consisted of short pieces of paddling, and the boat was turned at the island. On the return journey the Harvard men put in two minutes' good work at 30 to the minute. Further paddling exercise followed, and the crew then returned to the raft, after being out 25mins. The crew tried a set of new oars.

Evening Practice.

Cambridge were afloat at 5-15, Messrs. Lehmann, Goldie, and Shimwell accompanying Mr. Escombe on the Hibernia. They paddled up through some rough water and against a strong breeze in capital form, and eventually turned 200 yards below the island. Another piece of paddling at 28 with one burst of half a dozen strokes, brought the boat to Spade Oak Ferry, where easy was called for a row at top speed to Bourne End Bridge. Stuart got off the mark in dashing style, with 19 strokes in the half-minute and 37 in the full minute. He kept his men going in lively fashion at 36 all the way, and reached the bridge in the excellent time of 3mins. 6½secs., nearly 10secs. faster than the earlier trial over the same stretch. The crew then paddled to Riversdale and back, and disembarked after being out forty-five minutes.

Harvard did not go out until 6-45, when Wray coached from the Rapide. They went up to Marlow Point in easy stages of paddling through the rough water, and then turned and paddled back at 26 to the minute to Shaw's Boathouse without an easy. Altogether, the crew covered about four miles, and were out forty minutes.

SWIMMING.

THE CROSS CHANNEL SWIM.

After several weeks spent in training in the Channel off Calais, the Italian long-distance champion swimmer, Davide Cattaneo, on the morning of the 14th started on his attempt to swim across the English Channel. The swim was an exceedingly plucky one, and Cattaneo had covered over twenty miles before he was eventually compelled to abandon the effort on account of cramp, a trouble which had been feared by those who knew the great difference in the temperatures of the Channel and the Mediterranean, where Cattaneo has carried out most of his big swim.

The conditions in the Channel on Tuesday morning were not at all favourable to the attempt, and T. W. Burgess, who had intended also to start from the French side the same as Cattaneo, gave up the idea of starting when he saw what a bad sea was running on the French coast, caused by a fresh south-west wind, which had sprung up on his voyage across Channel from Dover. Before returning to Dover Burgess's tug proceeded to Cattaneo's starting point at Sangatte.

The Italian swimmer entered the sea at seven o'clock the accompanying party being on the Calais steam trawler Jenette, and including M. Bresson, of Calais, who has made all the arrangements in connection with the swim. Cattaneo, who is a muscular young fellow, nineteen years old, has some very long swims to his credit, and is the holder of Lord Byron's challenge cup. He was greased all over before entering the water, and wore a combined mask and goggles. He swam a powerful side stroke, propelling himself swiftly through the sea.

The course of the accompanying boat was set for the South Foreland. The swimmer had about three hours' tide running up Channel, but he made excellent progress on his course towards England, and as the tide ebbed he was in a good position between five and six miles off Calais. After the shelter of Blanc Nez had been left, those on the accompanying boat had a lively time, the seas tossing the small vessel about like a cockleshell, whilst she often took in seas over the gunwhales. There was great difficulty under these conditions in feeding the swimmer, who took hot chicken broth and raw eggs. The temperature of the sea was 62, and Cattaneo seemed to stand it very well for the first three hours, but after this the temperature lowered at times two and three degrees, much to his discomfort. Although there was a fair amount of drift, he made excellent progress on the westward tide, averaging about two miles an hour on his course, but after nearly seven hours' swimming, and when he was in a good position about half Channel over, Cattaneo was seized by very bad cramp, and had to be taken from the water. He was carried back to Calais on the trawler.

Burgess, who has not yet entered the water to make any attempt this season, will start the first opportunity.

FIVE HUNDRED YARDS CHAMPIONSHIP.

The 500 yards English Championship was decided last night at Weston-super-Mare. Last year the race was won by Kieran, the Australian, who has since died, in the record time of 6mins. 7⅕secs. The competitors last night were Radmilovic (Weston-super-Mare), Battersby (Wigan), Foster (Bacup), Taylor (Chaddorton) (the winner of the mile race at Athens), and Harvey (Ravensbourne) (the holder of the Southern Counties mile championship). For the first three lengths of the bath—500 yards represented fifteen lengths—the competitors kept well together. Taylor then pushed ahead, and increasing his lead, won by three-quarters of a length in 6mins. 24⅘secs. Radmilovic was second, Battersby third, and Foster fourth.

PROFESSIONAL SWIMMING IN FRANCE.

The last of the International Parisian swimming championships and tournaments took place on Thursday afternoon at Joinville le Pont, close to Paris. In the presence of a record gate, the double tribunes and stands being crowded.

The feature was the meeting of D. Billington and J. Nuttall in the 550 yards p ofessional championship of the world. Among the other competitors in the event were :—Bonnet, Malraison, Randell, Malabre, Gondin, Peyrusson, and Bougouin, who recently won the swim across Paris from Billington, Greasley, and Co. Those taking part in the diving competition included :—Vaissade, Bernhardt, Mouraud, and Malabre.

Officials :—M. Manaud (judge), MM. Duc, Levy, Coquerelle. Muller (timekeepr), Loustalot (commissaire general), and Paul Maertens. Results :—

Professional 550 Yards Championship.—Billington 1, Nuttall 2, Bonnet 3.

200 Yards Race (no arms).—Won by Malraison.

GORDON'S HORSE HOUNDS.

26th August.—The opposite end of the country (Hebbal Cross Roads) saw us on the 25th instant and though usually a popular meet the field was only fair. But there had been a big theatrical show by the R.A.D.S. on the previous evening which possibly accounted for the fact. The Yuvaraja was out and Mr. Gledstanes once more hunted the pack, Colonel Wapshare being slightly indisposed. Mrs. Mackenzie, Miss Saunders, and Miss Moore represented the ladies' brigade when the Master moved off across the Rifle Range and all three went well in the run of the morning. It was a long draw before there was so much as a whimper, but then there was no mistake about its being the real thing and the pack began to run hard. He proved both a stout and a cunning "varmint," for he could not have had much of a start and yet gave hounds all they could do to account for him. After a half mile squelch through some paddy, the line ascended some higher ground and so soon as we left the cultivation scent began to fail.

Near Gedalhalli village they could not own it and with a strong wind blowing things did not look too well. Mr Gledstanes, however, was equal to the occasion and after a few minutes' delay hit off the line on some lower ground straight forward. Again they settled down to run, and for nearly a mile pointed due north, the going still being heavy. There was worse however, to come in this line, for after bending towards the railway, the pack turned right-handed, and gave us a good mile and a half of what can only be described as very wet snipe-ground. It said much for hounds' condition that they lasted through it and having turned to the right over the railway, the usual short running on the part of our quarry began to tell its own tale. Bustled up and down a casuarina tope by the pack, now bristling for blood, he made a final effort and just got safe into a mango grove a short distance away. It was his last effort, however, for in the mango grove hounds pulled him down and only the last obsequies remained to be performed. A very fair run of nearly four miles with only one real check. The distance does not sound great, but the run was severe, owing to the frightfully heavy going. Mrs. Mackenzie got the brush and amongst others of the first flight I noticed Colonel Leader going particulary "great guns."

The hospitality of Gordon's Horse at a Hunt breakfast this morning was well nigh worthy of Nonesuch Hall. About seventy people sat down to breakfast after the day's sport, including many ladies, the British Resident, and the Yuvaraja, a worthy scion of the State of Mysore, which a quarter of a century and more ago provided hunting second to none in India. But that is another story and for reminiscences a hunting article has scant room.

30th August.—The meet was on the Oosoor Road and a huge field met Colonel Wapshare, who is still here and his whips, including some sporting artillery and cavalry sergeants there must have been eighty people out, and no one could have gone home disappointed. There were all our ladies in evidence and right well they went. Drawing through cultivation and scrub in a southerly direction it was not long before the tuneful notes of some of "the Duke's" proclaimed a find and hounds began to run at once. For a mile and a half the pace was good, but the ground was favourable and the going sound and safe. Ten or twelve minutes of hard galloping and then it was a case of "hold hard." Not exactly a check, but a case in which hounds could not be bustled and the big field behaved well. They had their reward, for carrying the line staunchly over the cold scenting ground, the pack again began to run and pushed their jack hard. A large chain of casuarina topes loomed on the horizon and this was evidently his point for hounds pointed straight for the coverts and entered them. Scarcely were they in, when a jack was holloaed away to the east and the Master blew his horn manfully whilst the whips wrestled their way through the stinging branches after the pack. The latter, however, knew best, for when the whips got inside they found them actually killing in the covert and Mrs. Traill, first up of a hard-riding ladies' brigade, was presented with the brush.

Quickly the Master collected his hounds and tried for the other jack who had been viewed away from the casuarinas, but seventy or eighty horses had been over the ground and at first they could not own it. Later on when they did speak to his line in some scrub he was fairly caught napping and chopped by some of the speedier hounds before he could get fifty yards.

For some time after this there was not even a touch of a jack, but near the eighth milestone on the Oosoor Road there was a very decided affirmative in some sugarcane. He must have heard us coming and considered the locality unhealthy, for though hounds were away quickly enough he was never viewed. Running a big circle, he led us first away from Bangalore parallel with the road and then doubled back almost in the direction he had come. Fifteen or twenty minutes at a fair hunting pace saw a very decided check, but Colonel Wapshare, evidently divining the reason, lifted hounds over some dry, stony ground at once and hit off the line beyond. Now the pace improved so much that unless you rode hard you would be as the Yorkshireman said, "Wheer Coo's tail wur" (i.e.) very much behind, and as on a certain occasion described in last week's letter, it looked like a triple kill. But near the spot where he was found the chorus died away and notwithstanding energetic efforts the line was never recovered. Hounds and horses, however, had alike had enough, the sun was getting hot and the Hunt breakfast was in prospect, so that the most inveterate glutton for hunting could hardly have been sorry when the order for home was given. Certainly "Soapey Sponge," who, it will be remembered, always possessed a good appetite was not.

SOAPEY SPONGE.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

WE met on Saturday last, 25th August, at the 5th milestone on the Avalanche Road at noon. Rain had been pouring down since Thursday and it did not cease for one instant during the day. The Master made a move at noon into the Nunjanad Valley and hounds spoke to a line almost at once. In spite of the wet hounds hunted their jack beautifully in two circles and finally killed him within a mile of where he had been found. The time of this run was 20 minutes.

A second jack was found close to the Nunjanad Road, hounds drawing up to him very prettily before he was viewed away by Captain Duff. Swinging right handed he went nearly to the top of the opposite hill before he turned back down into the valley. Then he went right handed up the hill again and again to the right almost to the place where he was first viewed and hounds hunting his line very well along the top, ran into a watercourse. This run occupied about twenty-five minutes. It was an exceptionally good hound day in spite of the wet and there was some very pretty hunting.

On Monday, 27th August, the meet was at Andy Plantation. The Master trotted straight to Jackal Shola, in a bottom below which hounds picked up a line and began to run, but only slowly and the Master grasping the situation lifted them at a gallop to above New Covert, where they began to run in earnest. After running all over the home Downs the jack set his mask for Bluegums, which he skirted and ran on to Rallywood and then on to the Krurmund Road. Hounds here divided, the Master going on with five couple through Tiger Shola to Limerick Shola and from there down towards Andy Plantation. Here the jack ran the road, but hounds hit him off again in Governor's Shola and ran to Bluegums and from there to Rallywood, where the Master stopped them in order that he might go in search of the rest of the pack, who, with Captain Dennistoun in attendance, had meanwhile, after leaving Rallywood, run the road towards Sheffield. Then right handed through Bluegums without the slightest check to Staircase and then on to Briar Wood, from where they turned back behind Staircase and were unattended till they were picked up 30 minutes later in Governor's Shola. The Master did not draw again and so ended a most excellent day.

The following day (Tuesday), the meet was at the Pykara Bridge at noon. Owing to the deluge of rain the streams were all in flood and the Master decided not to try the Yemakal Valley, but drew over by the Toda Coffee Shop, where Timmy viewed a jack which took us over the Pykara Road and into the bottom end of Dormer Shola and then nearly to the top of Pykara Hill. Here we looked like recrossing the Pykara Road, but the jack turned short back and got to ground in some rocks in Road Shola.

On Thursday, 30th August, Rees' Corner was again the fixture, and excellent indeed was the day's sport enjoyed by the field who met the Master there at 7-30 A.M. Hounds moved off to draw New Covert, but on the way there picked up the line of a jack and hunted slowly parallel to New Covert, till the Master viewed a jack making his way towards Mills' Covert. Lifting hounds on to him he gave them a view and a merry, if somewhat short, hunt ensued, hounds rolling the jack over in the open at Newmarket Rallywood provided us with a second jack, who took us over the hill to Bluegums, where he just went in to the top of the covert and then came out on the same side, ran back through the lower half of Rallywood and over the Downs. Leaving Jackal Shola on his right he headed straight towards Ootacamund, but turned sharp right handed to Baikie. He did not go into covert however. He just touched the bottom of Monkey Shola, hounds running left handed from there down the Nunjanad Valley. They crossed the valley righ handed, running very hard. Below Kuruthugulih, they may have changed (let us hope not) as many jack were afoot, but without any check they ran right up the Nunjanad Valley, passed Nunjanad village and so into the Emerald Valley, heading for Avalanche, but they turned back right handed in another shola and killed the jack in the water of a neighbouring stream.

ABLAKI.

THE POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

30th August.—Chinchwad. If to-day's experiences are a sample of what we are to have for the remainder of the season, surely the most confirmed grouser will have nothing whereat to grouse. Thanks to the forethought and activity of our popular and enterprising Honorary Secretary, Mr. R. E. Enthoven, the camp arrangements for man and beast leave nothing to be desired, whilst his generosity on entertaining the field at breakfast after hunting this morning was an extra proof, if such were needed, of his genial and hospitable qualities as a host. On account of the distance from Poona, the Chinchwad meets have been arranged a quarter of an hour later, 6-15 A.M., and long before this time the road was full of traffic, motors galore, carriages, carts, tongas, with here and there a bicycle to convey the many sportsmen to the place where most of the horses had been sent overnight. The clerk of the weather, too, did his level best and we had the rare treat of a really cool fresh morning with a suggestion of rain, just the sort, in fact to bring roses to the cheeks of the human ladies and to stiffen the sterns of the canine ones, but enough of preambling and lets get to business. Soon after leaving the road on the right a hare jumped up which diverted the attention for a few seconds of the young and giddy members of the pack, but they were quickly brought to heel and in a few moments a jackal was started from a nullah on the midst of some low lying fields, he gave us a nice little gallop over really good country but the heavy rain had made some parts very holding and we had to keep our eyes well open to avoid boggy places, but this jack had no pluck and soon laid up in some rocks, from these, hounds quickly drove him and got a view so that in spite of his best efforts now to make up for his lost opportunities they soon ran into him and killed him below a deep bund.

A fox was found on the way back to our second horses and the hounds all together got well away on his brush, but as so frequently happens with these tricky little creatures, scent seemed to fail quite suddenly in a jowari field and when casting a chink which was lying down got up in the midst of the pack and frustrated further efforts altogether. Taking a longish chukker the Master was about to draw a likely looking nullah when hounds became busy on a line near and almost at once were away with a great head and a glad chorus taking a left handed course the jack pointed for the distant hills going at top speed; he was unfortunately headed and turned into a crop of jowari and the dread anxiety lest he should here be chopped was for a short time almost an agony of suspense and the relief which a joyful "gone away!' produced was if I may judge by my own feelings "worth a fiver" and now the pace became faster and faster so that one and all had to sit down and gallop their hardest in order to live with hounds, the well-known figure of Colonel Bull on his good grey mare was well to the front with Mrs. Sheringham close behind on a fast and clever roan, from the nullah not far from the 10th milestone over the Alandi Road and behind towards the Sisters we ran hard, hounds increasing their pace every moment.

Until at last they killed their jack close by a running stream. Many and hearty were the feelings of pleasure exchanged on all sides when steaming, white lathered horses were being slowly moved about, every one had ridden well and beyond a few shoes left in sticky places there was no grief. After Colonel Sheringham had given the brush to his wife, hounds broke up their jack with such determination that in a very few seconds nothing remained. It was still quite early, but as every one wanted to be home in good time for the closed meeting in the afternoon, and horses had mostly had enough, a move was made for the tents where, as I have already said, we were all extremely glad to avail ourselves of Mr. Enthoven's kind invitation to breakfast.

2nd September.—Chinchwad. For the second time we met at the camp here, and this popular fixture again produced a straight-necked jack on a nullah north-west of the camp. The hounds got away on his line almost before the field were aware of a find and took us all we knew to get on terms with the flying pack for the jack took everything as it came, grass, crops, nullahs always the same "forward away," for his point on the Shelwadi Hill. At last some paddy fields coming on his way took the running out of him and he was pulled down on a bund just in sight of his home; of the three or four hard riding ladies present it was difficult to know who went the straightest, but we may say honours were easy and the last trick went to Miss Burlton. After eating their jack, two couple of hounds were sent back to their cart on account of cut feet then a long draw resulted on another find, the hounds could not quite make out his line, but from their movements it was evident a jack was on foot when a view holloa settled the matter as soon as hounds were brought to the holloa the jack was at once viewed and the run was more like coursing than hunting and after about 7 minutes of terrific galloping he was pulled down.

THE SHWEBO TOURNAMENT.

IT had been hoped that at least six teams would be competing in this popular tournament. Owing to unforeseen circumstances, however, the Mandalay team fell through at the last moment, and Bhamo, who intended to enter two teams, telegraphed to say that they were unable to obtain the necessary leave. The field of competition was thus reduced to four teams, viz., Mandalay District, King's Own Regiment, Shwebo, and Myitkyina. Play commenced at 4-30 P.M. on Monday, the 13th August, and the finals were worked off on Wednesday, the 15th.

First Ties.

MANDALAY DISTRICT vs. KING'S OWN.

MANDALAY DISTRICT.		KING'S OWN.
Capt. W. H. Lane	... 1	Mr. Gibbon	... 1
Mr. Holman Hunt	... 2	Mr. Marshall	... 2
Mr. Forteath	... 3	Capt. Grover	... 3
Capt. Harding	(back.)	Capt. Borrett	... (back.)

This match was a walk over for Mandalay District, and they had it all their own way from start to finish. The King's Own put up a very plucky game, but their lack of combination let in their opponents time after time. They suffered heavily as well in the pace of their ponies which could not compete with those of the opposing side. The shooting of the Mandalay District team was far from accurate at times. This was no doubt due to the goal-posts, bamboos covered with red cloth, which were practically invisible against the dark green back-ground from any distance. The Mandalay District team won by 6 goals and 6 subsidiaries to 1 subsidiary.

Umpires:—Captain Carr and Mr. Keighley.

SHWEBO.		MYITKYINA.
Mr. Saunders	... 1	Mr. Lowis	... 1
Jemr. Maghi Khan	... 2	Mr. Keighley	... 2
Capt. Carr	... 3	Major Barnett	... 3
Mr. Hannyngton	(back.)	Naik Sowdagar Singh	(back.)

Myitkyina lost the services of Mr. Hughes at the last moment through fever. His representative (a native), however, played a good game. A most exciting tussle was witnessed, and up till the very end it was impossible to say to which side victory would fall. In fact, after the finish, some of the players themselves were a bit hazy as to the result. Both sides did their utmost to gain the lead and some excellent polo was witnessed. On the bugle being blown at the close of the match, the blackboard disclosed the scores as follows: Shwebo 3 goals and 3 subsidiaries, Myitkyina 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries.

Umpires:—Captain Harding and Captain Lane.

Finals.

MANDALAY DISTRICT vs. SHWEBO.

The same teams as before took the field. Some excellent polo was seen in this match, the pace was fast and both sides attacked vigorously. Jemadar Maghi Khan was in excellent form and proved very dangerous as No. 2 at times. Mandalay District began to press from the start and had the best of the game throughout the first chukker. In the second period the game was all in favour of Shwebo who took the lead. The reason of this débâcle was the failure of some of the ponies of the Mandalay District team to come up to the scratch when the game was at its fastest. In the third chukker, however, Mandalay District pulled themselves together, and by a series of good combinations put on 3 goals to their score in rapid succession. A hurried consultation as to ponies for the final period was held by the Mandalay District team, and resulted in Messrs. Forteath and Holman Hunt riding the same ponies a third chukker each, and Lane utilizing the ninth pony. This policy was purely a defensive one, but it brought about the desired result, i.e., it prevented the Shwebo quartette making good their disadvantage. The call of time left the Mandalay District team victors by 5 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 4 goals and 3 subsidiaries.

Umpires:—Major Barnett and Mr. Keighley.

THE QUETTA TOURNAMENT.

(By Special Telegram.)

JACOB'S HORSE vs. 37TH CAVALRY.—This match opened the tournament on Monday, 3rd instant. It was an utterly uninteresting spectacle. The 37th scored two goals in the initial period; then their opponents waded in and, piling on goals and subsidiaries right merrily, ran out winners by no less than eighteen goals and ten subsidiaries to two goals and two subsidiaries. The teams were:—

37TH CAVALRY.	JACOB'S HORSE.
Mr. J. P. Benn.	Mr. W. Allardice.
Mr. S. M. Bruce.	Capt. J. L. Lunham.
Major J. Talbot.	Mr. S. S. M. Paddon.
Mr. M. H. Lucas.	Mr. A. N. Gavin Jones.

WARWICKS vs. GYMKHANA.—This was a fast and pretty game and so closely contested that at the end of the sixth chukker the score was nine goals and three subsidiaries all. Lots of good combination was exhibited by both sides and for brilliancy and dash several players were frequently prominent. It was not till the last chukker, the seventh, that the Warwicks got ahead when by scoring two more goals and a subsidiary they emerged from a capital struggle winners by eleven goals and four subsidiaries to nine goals and three subsidiaries. Teams:—

WARWICKS.	GYMKHANA.
Mr. F. A. Macartney.	Capt. C. L. Peart.
Capt. A. S. Toogood.	Mr. L. M. G. Harcourt.
Capt. D. A. L. Day.	Mr. D. C. Gretton.
Capt. R. H. Brewis.	Mr. R. C. Dickinson.

"A" SCINDE HORSE vs. "B" SCINDE HORSE.—This game was played on Tuesday, 4th instant, and resulted, after rather a tame display, in the victory of "A" by 15 goals and 6 subsidiaries to 6 goals and 6 subsidiaries; six of these goals "A" piled up in the very first chukker. Captain Hislop and Mr. Giles hit 8 goals each. Teams:—

"A" TEAM.	"B" TEAM.
Mr. C. R. H. P. Landon.	Mr. H. R. Dyer.
Capt. A. F. Hislop.	Mr. W. B. Bell.
Mr. E. D. Giles.	Mr. G. S. Gordon.
Col. F. W. G. Wadeson.	Mr. J. P. Thompson.

FINAL.

POONA HORSE vs. 10TH HUSSARS.—After many postponements owing to bad weather the final game was played on the 4th instant before a huge gathering. H. E. the Governor and Staff and Generals Richardson and Elliot were among those present. The 30th Cavalry was "At Home" and the band of the 114th Mahrattas in attendance. An excellent game was witnessed, the Poona Horse eventually winning by 3 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 2 goals and 2 subsidiaries. At the conclusion General Richardson congratulated the winners and Mrs. Richardson gave away the Cup.

First Chukker.—Fast and even play till just before time the Hussars hit a subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—The Hussars attacked and added a goal and a minor point. Score: Hussars, 1 goal 2 subsidiaries; Poona Horse, nil.

Third Chukker.—The Poona Horse kept their opponents busy but they got away once more and hit a goal. Score: Hussars, 2 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Fourth Chukker.—The Poona Horse began to assert themselves from this period Norbury put the ball through with a long shot and added a second shortly after amidst great applause. Score: Hussars, 2 goals 2 subsidiaries; Poona Horse, 2 goals.

Athletics.

DISCUS, STONE, AND JAVELIN.

IT is characteristic of our innate conservatism that, despite the high reputation which, as a nation, we have so long enjoyed for all-round athletic proficiency and love of sport, there are certain games and exercises, new in one sense but old in another, but not in any sense to be despised, in which we are so far from excelling that it would scarcely be possible to find throughout the length and breadth of the land even a moderately skilled exponent of them.

For illustration one may turn to the Olympian games, which were held at Athens in the spring of this year. To the detached onlooker personally unconcerned in the various contests and merely viewing the whole as a spectacle, not the least interesting feature of that remarkable festival lay in the performances of modern athletes in the classic games of the Ancient Greeks. It was noteworthy that in none of these exotic events (if so one may term them), was there a single British competitor, though in each case the field included representatives of almost every country which had sent athletes, to the games.

Throwing the Discus, Throwing the Stone, and Hurling the Javelin were the three contests which, by reason of their unusual nature and the historical interest attaching to them, attracted peculiar attention ; and, seeing the success with which foreign athletes, other than native Greeks, competed in them, it is a matter of much regret that no British name appeared among the entries. If these "games" have found favour with Frenchmen, Germans, Swedes, Norwegians, Italians, and Yankees, and by them been practised with such good results, why should they continue to be ignored in this country ?

Throwing the Discus, as a traditional pastime of ancient days is familiar, of course, all the world over, for everyone has seen in picture, photograph, or facsimile, the sculptured "Discobolus." It may readily be imagined that curiosity among the spectators at Athens was great to see the famous game, not only played in actual fact, but played in the ancient Stadium, upon the very ground trodden by the god-like athletes who vied one with another for the branch of olive.

The discus itself is of wood, iron-rimmed, and faced on either side with bronze plates. Lentiform in shape, it has a diameter of 22 centimetres, or just under 6 inches, and a weight of 2 kilogrammes, or just over 4lbs. Two styles of throwing it are now recognised—the "free style" and "Hellenic style" respectively. The latter is an endeavour to reproduce the ancient method, and is based upon the attitude of the "Discobolus ;" the former is a concession to twentieth century up-to-dateness.

The invention of the "free style" is, indeed, characteristic of the modern athlete. When discus-throwing was first revived as a feat of strength and skill, it was fondly imagined that the latest discobolus, exhibiting a fit and proper reverence, would model himself upon his famous prototype, and emulate in the living flesh the dexterous grace of the sculptured stone. Not so, however, the ingenious modern athlete, who speedily discovered, in the person (need it be said ?) of a Yankee, that by twirling himself round and round, after the manner of a hammer-thrower, and so gaining an impetus otherwise unattainable, he could launch the missile further by many yards than by the traditional method, pose he as gracefully on the pedestal as you please. It is difficult to conceive of any artist finding in the modern discobolus a congenial subject for his chisel ; but what would you ? We live in a progressive age, and records must be broken, whatever the cost.

One is inclined to doubt, however, if even in the "Hellenic style" of to-day the methods of the original discus-thrower are truly reproduced. The framers of the rules, basing the latter upon the attitude in which the sculptor carved his figure, have insisted upon the thrower assuming, and maintaining, an initiative pose which is so cramped and contrary to a natural pose that one is tempted to think a mistake has been made, and the statue wrongly interpreted. It is surely obvious that no right-handed athlete desirous of hurling a disc, or any other missile, as far as possible would prepare to do so with his right foot advanced, thereby depriving himself of all the impetus which body-swing would impart. It is more likely that the thrower was wont to stand with his left leg foremost, and just prior to the moment of delivery advanced the right foot. The possibility of the sculptor having depicted the "Discobolus" in an attitude intermediate between those with which he began and ended his performance does not appear to have been considered.

As practised at the present day, discus-throwing is a game in which men of the heavy, muscular type excel. Sheridan, the American who was first in the "free style," is a broad-shouldered young giant, of thick-set, sturdy physique. Jaervinen, victor in the "Hellenic style," is a tall Finn, big-boned and powerful ; while Georgantas, the Greek, who was second in both events, is a lusty, bull-built fellow, deep-chested and strong of arm.

Throwing the Stone differs but little from the modern sport of Putting the Shot. The Stone—a lump of Pentelique marble, oval in shape, and weighing a little under 6½ kilogrammes—is delivered, however, with the impetus given by a short run. A line is drawn upon the ground, upon which the thrower may tread when making his delivery, but which he must not overstep. Up to this line as much or as little run is allowed as may be desired, and no restrictions are placed upon the manner in which the stone is carried during the run. It must be thrown, however, from the shoulder, and with one hand only.

From a spectacular point of view, Hurling the Javelin is more picturesque than either discus or stone throwing. The Javelin is a long spear with a slender shaft and an iron head, pointed but not barbed. Methods of hurling it vary. Some balance it, point uppermost, on the finger, and with but a short run jerk it (as it were) high into the air. Most, however, grasp the spear at the point of balance, where the shaft is bound round with twine for a hand's breadth, and poising it horizontally with backward-stretched arm as they run to the mark, hurl it forward with all their might. Properly lunched, the javelin flies true, its quivering shaft showing no disposition to turn in the air until the weight of the metal head causes it to curve gradually in its descent, and stick point downwards in the ground.

The javelin hurlers, indeed, were perhaps the most interesting figures of all in the Stadium, the Swedes in particular (who took all three places in the contest) being wonderful adepts at this ancient feat of arms. Some few who entered for the contest proved themselves clumsy spearmen even at their best, but for the most part the skill and dexterity displayed were remarkable. The fine cast by which the stalwart Lemming was proclaimed victor was announced, indeed as a "world's record."

Four years hence the next Olympiad of modern days is due, and perhaps by that time there may be some athletes in the field enterprising enough to attain proficiency in the ancient exercises and acquit themselves worthily therein at the Games of 1910. Of the three sports described above, javelin hurling alone can be considered strange. Stone-throwing should commend itself to the weight putter as a pleasant variant of his usual practice with the shot ; while discus-throwing (in the modern "free style," at all events), is an art which should come easily to the expert with the hammer.

Rowing.

NAINI TAL REGATTA.

Saturday, 25th August 1906.

ONE is really almost tempted to believe the rains are over. I am afraid this is too good to be true, as despite the fact that we have put on 45 inches in 20 days there is still a balance to be made up. On Saturday, the 25th, however, we had a beautiful afternoon and a good afternoon's sport.

The scratch fours always excite the most interest as they are drawn as early as possible and put in, as a rule, a good, solid week's practice. The "Middle" boat in this instance was the winner by half a length, "Inside" being second.

MIXED FOURS.—About half a length.

[Middle.]	[Inside.]	[Outside.]
Mrs. Woodyatt	Mrs. Porteous	Miss Yeatman
Mrs. Weir	Mrs. Du Pré	Miss Coffin
Capt. Marshall	Major Porteous	Major Woodyatt
Capt. Knox	Mr. Coode	Major Bayley
Cox Mrs. Lawrence.	Cox———	Cox Mrs. Reid

Miss Tyndale	Mrs. Oliver	Mrs. Goodfellow
Mr. Parr.	Mr. Barge	Captain Tyndale

Won easily by Miss Tyndale and Mr. Parr, the other two boats making a really fine effort at sinking each other.

[Inside.]	[Outside.]
Captain Knox	Mr. Naylor
Mr. Coode	Mr. Marshall Muir
Cox Mr. Du Pré	Cox Miss Tyndale

A walk over for the "Inside" boat, "Outside" dropping a scull. Some of the sculls are natural diggers, all date from prehistoric times, and it is often extremely difficult to keep the buttons inside. The state of the sculls is only equalled by that of the sliding seats most of which have been allowed to get into a bad state. I hear, however, that "this will not occur again."

Heat No. 2.

Major Porteous	Mr. Bayley
Mr. Jackson	Mr. Channer
Cox Mrs. P.	Cox Mrs. Tyndale

This was out and away the best race of the day "Outside" to within 50 yards of the line seemed to have it all their own way, but "Inside" came with a glorious spurt and amidst great excitement the judge gave a verdict of dead heat.

P. AND O. PADDLING RACE.

Four teams entered calling themselves Staff, Kumaonis, Gurkhas and Metropolitans. The latter consisting of Messrs. Bayley, Barge, Little, and Muir. Won easily by three lengths.

MIXED CANOE RACE.—Heat No. 2

[Outside.]	[Inside.]	II.	III.
Miss Coffin	Miss Fasson	Mrs. Porteous	Mrs Du Pré
Major Bayley	Mr. Muir	Mr. Coode	Mr. Bayley

MEN'S CANOE RACE.

Mr. Muir	Mr. Little	Mr. Barge
IV.		[Outside.]
Captain Tyndale		Mr. Naylor

In this event the competitors had to paddle standing up, no easy task. Won fairly easily by Mr. Barge.

MIXED CANOE RACE.—Finals.

Miss Coffin and Major Bayley having evidenly profited by the horrible collision they had witnessed in the first heat steered a marvellously straight course and won easily.

In the absence of Mrs. Henry, Mrs McTaggart distributed the prizes.

SIXTY-SIX MILES AN HOUR.

APART from the interest centred in the Ardennes race owing to the high average speeds which have always been made over this level course, there was the matter of detachable rims to add a new factor this year. The new device has not been an unmixed blessing to the manufacturers, as the additional weight caused by the rims had to be saved by further whittling down of the already dangerously light chassis. In most cases this was a work of no little difficulty, and as sixteen of the twenty-one starters in the race had fitted detachable rims there was no longer any chance of a competitor snatching a surprise victory, as might have happened in the race had not the merit of the detachable rim being so signally proved in the Grand Prix.

Yet another novel feature in this year's race was that soldiers were not employed to guard the course as heretofore, for the military authorities had refused to supply the men. The organisers had, therefore, to erect more elaborate barriers at dangerous points. Much regret was felt at the abstention of the Hotchkiss and Panhard teams, as these fast cars would have helped to make the race all the more exciting.

THE STARTERS.

A start was made at 7 A.M. on Monday, the order of departure being that given in the appended table, and intervals of a minute being allowed between each car.

1. Count d'Hespel (Corre), detachable rims.
2. Hemery (Darracq), ordinary rims.
3. Clement (Bayard), detachable rims.
4. Jenatzy (Mercedes), detachable rims.
5. Barillier (Brasier), detachable rims.
6. Pilette (Gregoire), ordinary rims.
7. Duray (De Dietrich), detachable rims.
8. Wagner (Darracq) ordinary rims.
9. Villemain (Bayard), detachable rims.
10. Mariaux (Mercedes), detachable rims.
11. Baras (Brasier), detachable rims.
12. Rougier (De Dietrich), detachable rims.
13. Hanriot (Darracq), ordinary rims.
14. Garcet (Bayard), detachable rims.
15. Salzer (Mercedes), detachable rims.
16. ——(Brasier), detachable rims.
17. Gabriel (De Dietrich), detachable rims.
18. Demogeot (Darracq), ordinary rims.
19. Keene (Mercedes), detachable rims.
20. Bablot (Brasier), detachable rims.
21. Sorel (De Dietrich), detachable rims.

Seven laps had to be covered, and the expectations that the race would be very hot were soon realised, for car after car attained a very high average pace. Wagner, on his Darracq, was amongst the fastest, and for the first 100 kilometres his average speed was over seventy miles an hour. For a considerable time it was impossible to say how the race would end, so evenly matched were the competitors, and the element of uncertainty prevailed to the end, for even when Duray had established his lead he was not able to get clean away, and put a big gap between himself and the rest of the field.

He was always hard pressed, and with the pace generally ranging well over sixty-five miles an hour for round after round the strain was terrific. Hanriot, on a Darracq, was making furious efforts to gain the leadership, and his bid for victory was very bold. Barillier, of the Brasier team, was also a likely winner, and Rougier, of the De Dietrich team, was driving at his best, and had to be reckoned with to the last lap.

Eventually, after one of the finest tussels yet seen, Duray, on his De Dietrich, proved the winner, and thus broke the long spell of cruel luck which has spoiled the chance of these sterling vehicles in recent races. Hanriot was a close second, being but two minutes behind, whilst Barillier was third. The times are as follows :—

		Hrs.	Mins.	Secs.
1.	Duray (De Dietrich) ...	5	38	39
2.	Hanriot (Darracq) ...	5	40	21
3.	Rougier (De Dietrich) ...	5	50	11
4.	Barillier (Brasier) ...	5	50	27
5.	Gabriel (De Dietrich) ...	5	52	14
6.	Clement (Bayard) ...	6	2	55
7.	Sorel (De Dietrich) ...	6	4	38
8.	Wagner (Mercedes) ...	6	14	46
9.	Salzer (Mercedes) ...	6	14	50
10.	Jenatzy (Mercedes) ...	6	15	9

Duray's time is considerably better than Hemery's record of last year, and the average speed works out at 66 miles an hour for the 375 miles.

Another report of the race gives Gabriel (De Dietrich) as third with Rougier (De Dietrich) fifth and Sorel (De Dietrich) seventh.

The winner, and also the second, fourth, and seventh past the post, had Michelin tyres fitted. Wagner, who broke the 100 kilometres record, and also the eighth and ninth men, were on Continentals. The winning De Dietrich car was fitted with a four-cylinder engine, having cylinders of 185 m.m. bore and 160 m.m. stroke, giving 120 h.p. The car weighed 1,000 kilos.

Wrestling.

LUCKNOW WRESTLING TOURNAMENT.

Referee :—Mr. W. E. Douglas.

Secretary :—Mr. M. H. Eyre.

Third Day.

THERE was another big house on Monday, the 27th August, on the occasion of the third day of the wrestling tournament on the Lal Bagh maidan. Among the attractions was Hari Chand, Mr. Sandow's pupil, who accompanied Mr. Sandow to the Far East last year and is the possessor of a gold medal for his defeat of Itonishiki, the Japanese Champion in a wrestling match at Shanghai in December.

Hari Chand gave a capital display, and though he did not succeed in throwing his opponent, who was a much heavier man he earned well-merited applause. The programme included a number of other interesting matches. Hawa of Lucknow gained an easy victory over Fazl-ud-din of Jullundur. Ibrahmin of Gujranwalla defeated his opponent in equally easy fashion. Amir of Ghazipur had even less difficulty in disposing of Fazl-ud-din of Gujranwalla, who stood no chance whatever with his redoubtable antagonist. Chota Saiyad of Lucknow won his match against Mir Baksh of Lahore ; Ismail of Luchnow beat Abd-ul-la Khan of Ajmere, and Barati of Lucknow defeated Harangi of Gayaji. The local wrestlers thus carried off the majority of the contests.

Fourth Day.

A number of good bouts were decided on Wednesday, the 29th August, the fourth day of the tournament, when the attendance showed a slight falling off. Unfortunately the event of the afternoon proved a fiasco, Ramzan of Kolhapur taking his opponent, Ganga Singh of Gurdaspur, entirely by surprise and defeating him in considerably under a minute. When the match started, Ramzan made a rush for his opponent, and forcing him across the arena, laid him on his back across the drain on the further side. The very unexpectedness of the onslaught secured him the verdict In another event a wrestler who had up to that time held the advantage incautiously placed himself in a position of danger and was at once defeated.

Fifth Day

Although Friday, the 31st August, was the fifth day of the wrestling tournament the interest of the public in the tournament continues to be well maintained. The Hon'ble Mr. Leslie Porter, C.S.I., Commissioner of Lucknow, was among the spectators. The various matches were well contested, eight out of fourteen resulting in wins. The match between Karim Bukhsh of Sialkote and Ganda Singh of Gurdaspur was for Rs. 700, each man receiving Rs. 300 before hand, and the remaining Rs. 100 going to the winner. Both men were magnificently developed and were in the pink of condition, but the contest did not come up to expectations. Ganda Singh remained on the defensive throughout, although the other afforded him plenty of openings. After the match had proceeded for an hour, with no definite result, it was stopped by the Judges, and there is a probability that the two men will meet again.

Sixth Day.

It would be difficult to imagine a scene of greater excitement than that witnessed on Saturday, the 1st instant, at the wrestling tournament in Lal Bagh. The news of the contest between Chhiddan of Lucknow—the local champion wrestler—and Bhawani Din of Indore had been well advertised for several days, with the result that the native public turned up in their thousands. The place was literally crammed by one o'clock and two hundred policemen were in attendance as a precaution against disturbance. The building had stood the strain of almost equally big audiences on previous days and there was nothing to show that the same would not be the case on Saturday. The immediate danger, however, was connected with the spectators at the extreme rear, many of whom were holding on to the cross beams above in spite of repeated warnings. The wrestling had been proceeding for about two hours when the whole of one side of the structure collapsed bringing with it hundreds of spectators, none of whom, fortunately, were hurt In the meantime those immediately in front made a rush for the arena, which was filled with a shouting, gesticulating crowd. It was sometime before order was restored. Inspector Botting, with a number of police, was at once on the scene and it was largely due to his handling that no accidents occurred the people extricating themselves from the fallen scaffolding with surprising celerity.

The incident was soon forgotten in the evident excitement of the big encounter. The two combatants furnished a striking contrast. The Indore man had all the advantage in height and reach and must have been fully a stone heavier, but favouritism rested with Chhiddan, who was more than a match for his opponent in agility. After some rapid preliminary sparring Chhiddan rushed for a hold but was borne down by Bhawani Din. A great shout went up when, shortly after, Chhiddan broke loose and toppled his opponent among the spectators. Both men had by this thoroughly lost control of themselves. Each time Bhawani Din reached out for a hold he received a sharp cut on the forearm and countered with a swinging blow on the other's neck.

Shortly after it was seen that Chhiddan was bleeding from a cut over the left eye. Feeling ran high among the spectators, and the Judges admonished the two wrestlers, but to no effect. The decision to adjourn the tournament until Monday was a wise one as a disturbance appeared inevitable. The building has meanwhile been thoroughly strengthened

Seventh Day.

The wrestling tournament was brought to a successful close on Monday, the 3rd instant. The principal feature was, of course, the contest between Chhiddan of Lucknow and Bhawani Din of Indore, but it was preceded by an exceedingly interesting but between Ibrahim of Gujranwala and Noor-ud-din of Lucknow, in which Ibrahim cleverly threw his opponent, thus gaining his third victory of the tournament.

When the other two took the floor Bhawani Din almost at once assumed the offensive and put forth all his strength to obtain a throw. For the first ten minutes he held a decided advantage, but did not appear to press it home. His opponent, however, stood any amount of gruelling, and it was soon evident that a draw would be the only result. The contest was more level afterwards, both men making a plucky fight. They continued for three-quarters of an hour, and were loudly cheered at the close, though it was generally conceded that Bhawani Din had made the better show.

A word of thanks is due to the Committee who have conducted the tournament.

A sum of about Rs. 4,000 was divided between the wrestlers—a hundred in number—on Tuesday, the 4th instant. The prize money of Rs. 625 divided between Bhawani Din of Indore and Chhiddan of Lucknow included a sum of Rs. 50 sportingly given by Mr. Goad, Superintendent of Government Railway Police, northern section. After paying all expenses incidental to the tournament the balance will go towards the Police Band Fund.

CALCUTTA RUGBY LEAGUE.

CALCUTTA vs. ARMENIANS.—The Armenians turned up on the Calcutta ground on Saturday without several of their team. The absentees were, however, replaced by men of the West Ridings team, who are now down in Calcutta. The game was a poor one. Calcutta were never extended and won by 24 points to nil.

CALCUTTA F. C. vs UNITED SERVICES.—These teams met on Tuesday last, the United Services putting up a good game, the Calcutta team being extended at last. Although they kept the ball in their opponents' territory throughout, the premier club were not brilliant. In the first half Whittey got over with a try and Pyne also crossed the line. After the interval Calcutta pressed but were kept out till just before time another try was obtained. All the place kicks were unsuccessful and Calcutta thus won by three tries to nil. Teams :—

UNITED SERVICES.—Kidner, back; Rowe, Cowie, Bromwich and Ford, three-quarters; Butler and Maxwell, half-backs; Harty, Tobin, Adams, Kidby, Milburn, Apthorp, Sheolin and Russell, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Drew, back; Pyne, Siddons, Burnett and Whiteley, three-quarters; Arthur and Weatherhead, half-backs; Buckler, Heilgers, Orr, Whitley, Ker, Bishop, Lecocq and Benedye, forwards.

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE last two numbers of a contemporary have just been placed in my hand. The "Grasshoppers" has again alighted upon me. Poor "Grasshopper" Is he still very angry, and does he still make reference to "a Scotch International," who by the way, should feel proud of the title as, in fact, he never was an International!

What mighty words—"titillation," "pedagogic," "Memphis." "Thebes," "Œdipus," all in a few lines of Rugby notes! Seriously, "Grasshopper," you startle me. Language to be envied by the leaders of the Bengali race. Your two "correct" ways for forwards letting the ball out of the scrum are useful.

The second seems slightly the cleverer. It is:—"If opposed to a heavier pack let the ball out by the middle man in the back row, putting one foot on the ball and shoving it out." The opposition being heavier, the ball, when put in, would naturally be between the two packs, or soon amongst the heavier forwards—then comes the middle man in the third or back row of the lighter pack and puts one foot on the ball and shoves it out. What price a shepherd's crook? Clearly it is unnecessary for the forwards in the front row to use the side of the foot!

The second meeting between the United Services and N. Fusiliers took place last week. On the first occasion the latter won by the narrow margin of a penalty goal (2 points) to nil. Their second match was nearly as evenly contested and the Fusiliers hardly deserved to win by so much as a goal (Mathews) off Brenham's try and a try (Lieutenant Milne-Holme) to nil. The latter was the most useful forward on the ground, and of the opposing pack Harty was most conspicuous but rather shirked the heavy scrums.

The Services had not their best team and Lillburn at half had to get the ball as best he could. Rowe in the three-quarter line, had little to do, mistakes by his partners being not infrequent.

On the same day the Wanderers with a full team played Calcutta on the latter's ground, and the match resulted in a very one-sided victory for the homesters by 6 goals and 7 tries to nil. The points scored (51) amounting to the same number as were obtained by Calcutta in their match the previous week against N. Fusiliers. Siddons, who showed great speed, was responsible for two or three scores. Burnett's try was a clever one. He took a very difficult pass high up in the air and, after evading three of his opponents, got over the line.

In spite of Gregory's efforts, some of the Armenian team did not turn up on Saturday to play their match with Calcutta. Most of the West Ridings were on the ground training so that the Armenians were able to requisition four of them and play a "friendly." Calcutta were weakly represented, both their half-backs and Maclean being the chief absentees. The game was a good one to watch although the last-mentioned club won rather easily by three goals and three tries to nil. The Armenians, assisted, of course, by the soldiers, tackled very keenly. Apcar showed up particularly well. The tries were obtained by Bishop (2), Pyne, Buckler, Siddons, and Whittie. Burnett, who in previous matches combined well with his three-quarter line and seldom erred in giving or receiving a pass, was disappointing and frequently knocked forward.

It is unfortunate that Calcutta should not have had at least one stiff match before the cup ties. In the first round they are drawn against what is thought to be one of the strongest teams. None of the League matches have tested the tackling powers of their backs, and Maclean, who is now down with fever, was most favourably spoken of in this respect.

The West Ridings have brought down twenty-seven footballers. They are not likely to run short, and all are most welcome. It is said that their Adjutant, Captain Little, a most useful forward is coming down from Darjeeling to take charge of the team.

Some of the Bombay Gymkhana men will arrive on Monday, the balance on Tuesday morning. The team will include about eight miltary men.

The League fixtures arranged for Saturday next will not come off until after the cup matches.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA RUGBY TOURNAMENT.

SOUTH WALES BORDERERS vs. 10TH HUSSARS.—The tournament opened with this game on the Cooperage on the 28th ultimo. There was a large crowd of spectators, but the game was not a very interesting display. The Welshmen asserted their superiority at the very start and it was not long before they scored, Baker dropping a goal. The Hussars' twenty-five was again invaded and Williams got over with a try. This place kick failed owing to the strong wind prevailing. Continuing to attack the Borderers registered another unconverted try before the interval. An attempt to drop a goal by the Welshman failed, but when half time arrived they led by a dropped goal and 2 tries to nil. On resuming the Hussars were kept in their own half and forced to touch down on several occasions. The Borderers, though they lost chances of scoring, crossed the line three times, None of the place kicks were successful though two were in easy positions. Final score : S.W. Borderers 1 goal (dropped) 5 tries (19 points) Erth Hussars nil. Teams :—

SOUTH WALES BORDERERS.—Davis, back; Baker, Davis, Portal and Baggins, three-quarters; Cobner and Williams, half-backs; Constant, Gardner, Courts, Tucker, Jones, Paul, Elliott and Jackson, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. P. T. Arnott,

SECOND ROUND.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. Y. M. C. A.—These teams met on the 29th ultimo, the Gymkhana winning very easily. The opening play was very even : then the Gymkhana got away and Shanks scored the first try. Baker failed to add the major points. Another unconverted try was registered shortly after, Palmer getting over. Roy just missed placing a goal from a free kick, and this was followed by two tries, Bamberger and Baker crossing the line. The tries remained unconverted, but Ash shortly after scored a fifth try and Carter majorised. Just before half time Webb got over, the Gymkhana thus scoring 20 points in the first half. On changing ends the Y. M. C. A., though playing pluckily, were kept on the defensive. A free kick to the Gymkhana was unsuccessful, but Baker put in a fine run and scored a try. Blair and Palmer also crossed the line, but all the kicks missed the mark. The Y. M. C. A. did not score, and their opponents thus won by 1 goal and 8 tries (29 points) to nil. Teams :—

BOMBAY GYMKHANA :—S. J. Gillum, back; Captain C. Reed, C. D. Baker, E. M. Webb and W. G. Palmer, three-quarters; H. Ash and H. Blair, half-backs; P. R. Cadell, A. D. Shanks, C. D. W. Bamberger, N. F. Roy, W. F. Rutherford, F. A. G. Roughton, B. S. Carter and J. S. page, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Pride, back; Rohotham, MacCheyne, Garst and White, three-quarters; Gunn and Moseley, half-backs; Cooper, Spencer, Widdop, Booker, Rose, Henderson, Picket and Wells, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Montgomery (Welsh Regiment).

WELSH REGIMENT vs. SOUTH WALES BORDERERS.—A splendid game was witnessed between teams representing these regiments on the Cooperage last Thursday. Although the cup holders won by 3 goals and a try to nil the Borderers gave a good exhibition. The Welsh Regiment rushed away at the start and the Borderers were forced to touch down. The Welsh attacked but were unable to get through the Borderers' defence till shortly before the interval when Daly raced over with a try. Reece converted. In the second half the Borderers held their ground and play ruled very even for a spell : then the Welsh gained a lot of ground by some smart passing and from a scrum near the line Pritchard got over. Reece just failed to add the major points. The Welsh continued to press for the remainder of the game and though the Borderers played pluckily and offered a stubborn defence the Welsh crossed their line on two more occasions, Harris and Daley adding a try each, both of which Reece converted. Final score : Welsh Regiment 3 goals 1 try (18 points.) S. W. Borderers, nil. Teams :—

WELSH REGIMENT.—Plumb, back; Pritchard, Jones, Mr. Montgomery and Capel, three-quarters; Daley and Harris; half-backs; Mr. Todd, Thomas, Jones, Howe, Howells, Reece. Davis and Durkin, forwards.

SOUTH WALES BORDERERS.—Davis, back; Baker. Davis, Portal and Baggins, three-quarters; Cobner and Williams, half-backs; Constant, Gardner, Courts, Tucker Jones, Paul, Elliot and Jackson, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Hebblethwaite.

FINAL.

WELSH REGT. vs. BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Played on the Cooperage last Saturday in the presence of a large gathering, the Welsh Regiment once again carrying off the trophy. This is their twelfth victory in the tournament, the only other team who have won being the South Wales Borderers in 1892, the Bombay Gymkhana the following year and Calcutta in 1903 The game was splendidly contested throughout and was by no means a walk over. The initial half was very even both teams doing good things but neither managed to score. On changing ends the Welsh began to press, but the Gymkhana try, backs did not allow them to get over. Half way through a scrum near the Gymkhana line enabled Thomas to score a Reece converting. Returning tothe attack Harris crossed the line for the Welsh and again Reece made no mistake. An excellent run by Montgomery ended in a try and Reece once more added the major points. The Gymkhana played hard, but there was no further score the result being : Welsh Regiment 3 goals (15 points), Bombay Gymkhana nil. Mr. Justice Russell congratulated the winners and Mrs. Kemp presented the Cup to Mr. Todd. In order to mark their sense of the splendid play and successful Rugby career of the Welsh Regiment, the Gymkhana had decided on this occasion to present each player with a Gold Medal. Teams :—

WELSH REGIMENT.—Plumb, back; Pritchard, Jones. Mr. Montgomery and Capel, three-quarters; Daley and Harris, half-backs'; Mr. Todd, Thomas, Jones, Howe, Howe ls, Reece, Davis and Durkin, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—R. E A. Bridge, back; Captain C. Reed, C. D. Baker, E. M. Webb and W. G. Palmer, three-quarters; H. Ash and H. Blair, half-backs; P. R Cadell, A. D. Shanks, C. D. W. Bamberger, N. F. Roy, W. F. Rutherford, F. A. G. Roughton, B. S. Carter and C. Gilbert, forwards.

RICHARDSON TOURNAMENT.

FINAL.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. LEICESTERS.—These teams met in the final game on the 29th ultimo, but neither side was able to score and the match ended in a draw. There was a big gathering at the replay on Thursday, the 30th and an excellent game was witnessed. The opening exchanges were very fast and each goal was visited in turn. Then the Scots settled down to attack and the Leicesters' goal-keeper was kept busy. The Scots forced a corner and from the resulting kick scored a goal. The Leicesters played vigorously and tried hard to get on terms, but there was no further scoring till the interval. On resuming up and down play was followed by an attack on the Scots' goal, but they got the ball away and after some even play in midfield the Leicesters' territory was invaded and a second goal netted by the Royals. The Leicesters did not relax their efforts and the Scots were compelled to defend. From a scrimmage following a penalty kick the Leicesters opened their scoring. With renewed vigour they returned to the attack and looked like drawing level on several occasions, but the Scots' defence was sound and all attempts were frustrated. The game thus ended in a win for the Royal Scots by 2 goals to 1. In the absence of General Richardson Colonel Whittaker Allan congratulated the cup winners, and Mrs. Allan gave away the trophy.

A young lawyer who was conducting his first case—the defence of a notorious burglar—approached an elderly member of the Bar in search of advice. "And how long do you think I ought to make my speech to the jury sir?" he inquired, anxiously. "I should say about an hour," replied the old hand. "An hour! Why I thought ten minutes would be ample! Why so long?" "Well," said his adviser, "you see they can't sentence him until your speech is finished, and the longer you talk the longer he'll be out of gaol!"

A traveller saw a woman take a man by the collar, drag him up the steps into a railway train, jam him down into a seat, pile up a Gladstone bag and two big brown baskets with loose covers and long handles at his feet and say—"Now, sit there until I help Mary Jane into the train, and don't move till I come back." When the woman reached the door the traveller said to her—"Is that man your husband?" "No," roared the woman. "He's my daughter's husband, and she hasn't spirit enough to say her soul is her own."

"Does your new chauffeur give satisfaction?"

"Yes; I think we are going to be very well pleased with him. He ran over two people yesterday and got away both times before any body discovered our number."—

The Story Teller.

SALLIE.

"WOMEN FOLKS," said Hank, the old Olympic Guide, "are beyond my comprehension. 'Specially the lone hand brand—and I reckon the Almighty never intended they should drive single ; but when one has been in single harness fer nigh on to twenty summers it is sometimes a mighty stiff proposition to break them into driving double. They become as skittish as a young colt and shy at every blamed crittur that bobs up sort of sudden, and if you ain't got a good tight rein on them, they jest take the bit in their teeth and go gallopin' off like a runaway pinto, else take to hysterics and cut more capers than a buckin' brone, with a tenderfoot hangin' to the saddle horn."

"Sallie Tupper was contrary to the general run of females. It took more than an ordinary field mouse to make her grab her pettycoats and go leapfroggin' fer a stump. Reckon it was 'count a her old dad, Ban, who was not afeared of any crittur that walked. He brought Sallie into the hills when she was a little bit of a lassie jest toddlin' around and at a time when even his dogs forgot the English language 'cause they heard it so seldom. She grew up among b'ars and cougars and took to killin' them off like a duck to water ; though she could never bring herself to kill a deer. Said she jest couldn't do it, fer they had such an innocent look in their eyes, 'specially when one wer mortally wounded."

"Waal, after Sallie had lived in the hills fer nigh fifteen years and her twentieth summer wer' comin' around, she wer' a fairly good lookin' piece of caliker or as the boys down in the cattle country would put it, 'ra lively lookin' heifer in skirts,' and still playin' a lone hand. She wer what you might call a panatella blond. Straight as a young fir and as strong as a mountain lion, which she sometimes reminded me of, 'specially if she wer riled considerable.

"Most all the young fellows in the village who had had any thoughts of becomin' a member of the matrimonial fraternity had tramped up into the hills to old Ben's cabin and laid his six feet two and winter's catch at Sallie's feet only to hit the same trail back again without Sallie. She didn't pear to be hankerin' after honors in that line, fer as Davy Ankers put it after Sallie had turned him down : 'She jest sort a smiled and said, "Davy, I've known you quite a long time and we have been powerful good friends. Why can't we keep on knowin' each other in the same old way. I ain't got time to get married with dad and the traps to look after.'"

"Now, I said all had tramped up to Ben's cabin and come back to forget that Sallie wer still unbranded. Waal, all had except one. He wer Tom Struthers, a strappin' young trapper from back in the hills. He had sort of been keepin' company with Sallie fer nigh on to two years, and was considered her stiddy by some ; though he never came nigh except once every few months when he came out fer supplies. Of course there wer nothin' definite known about it ; but we all sort of calculated as how they had it all fixed up betwixt themselves, and wer' biddin' their time till Tom had a little money laid by. Sallie wasn't tellin' any, and none dared mention it to him. He wer that sort of a man who keeps a close mouth, and owin' to the fact that he wer six feet two no one ever had the gumption to get inquisitive when he was nigh.

"Waal, thus matters stood along about the holidays, when one afternoon Tom's dog, Hec, marches up to Ben's door and began whinin'. Sallie opens the door and in he pounces jest like he wer to home. She takes a little rawhide package from his neck, unties it and out rolls a note from Tom. Now that wer nothin' unusual, fer her and Tom had been sendin' letters back and forward by old Hec fer a year or more. Of course no one knew of it up to that time.

"Peared like from the note, Tom had shot himself in the leg a couple of days before, and as inflammation had set in, he needed a doctor and needed one mighty bad.

"Now I reckon the ordinary female under them circumstances would have sot righ down and cried, else thrown a conniption fit and gone into hysterics. Not Sallie. The old man bein' away, she jest took down her rifle, strapped on a belt of cartridges, and grabbin' her snow-shoes, hot-foots it down the trail to Doc. Munger's. She showed Doc. the note and told him to get a move on as they had a twenty-mile tramp through the woods ahead of them.

"I reckon I never heard tell of any one accusin' Doc. of bein' over suplied with nerve, and I allow no one would have been guilty of that crime had he been present at that moment, fer he up and says, 'We can't possibly do it. There is two feet of snow on the ground and commin' down faster every minute. We would sure get lost and freeze before we got there.'

"'Hec will show us the way,' said Sallie, 'and who's goin' to mind a few feet of snow when a man's life is at stake. Reckon you can get along on snow shoes, can't you ? '

"'But,' says Doc, 'think of the timber wolves. They are plum near starved to death this time of year and it would be sure death to attempt to travel through the woods, especially after dark.'

"'H'm,' replied Sallie ; 'who's afeared of a few cowardly wolves ? You come along and I'll keep the critturs off. Reckon a few shots will keep them at a safe distance.'

"Still Doc. wouldn't go. He flatly refused to face the storm and the wolves, finally sayin' that they could send a few simple remedies back with Hec, and allowed as how Tom wer not injured very badly.

"Sallie wer dumfounded. I reckon she wouldn't have gone had it been just one of the boys 'stead of Tom. She knew Doc. had a reputation fer possessin' a good sized yellow streak ; but she never thought fer one minute that he would refuse to do what she considered his duty. She argued with him fer nigh twenty minutes, even breakin' down and tellin' him what Tom was to her. She begged and pleaded ; but it wer no use, fer he wer no use, fer he wer too darn much afeared of them wolves."

"Then Sallie up and showed the kind of metal she were made of. Wippin' away the tears, she stepped back aways and raisin' her rifle she says, 'Doc. Munger, you get your medicine case and put on your snow shoes ; for you're goin'. If you don't and be mighty quick about it, jest as sure as there be an Almighty above you, I am goin' to shoot you down like the coward you are.'

"Doc. started to talk her out of it, makin' all sorts of promises about goin' in the mornin' ; but she simply said, 'Hurry ! ' and he knew she meant it, too. The fire wer flyin' from her eyes worse than sparks from a wood-burnin' locomotive on an upgrade, and she had an expression on her face which said 'You are goin' to Tom's camp, snow or no snow, wolves or no wolves.' He wer not many minutes doin' as he were told either, fer as he said to me afterwards, 'Hank, I wer scart, down-right scart, and would rather face a snow bank thirty feet deep and all the wolves in these hills any time than get betwixt a feminine and the critter she loves.'

"So they started, Hec in the lead, to find the trail, Doc. next, lookin' as though he wer goin' to his own funeral, and Sallie bringin' up the rear with her rifle restin' in the hollow of her arm and determination written all over her. Now the wolves were a leetle bit cantankerous about that time of the year and I reckon I wouldn't a cared to have gone pienickin' in the woods at midnight, myself, and Doc., who couldn't hit a flock of barn doors with a base fiddle, wer'n't condemned by us fer bein' a leetle timid, still we all agreed that Sallie wer jestified in doin' jest as she did.

"Waal, I allow as how they had been on the trail about two hours when darkness set in. Doc., he said, they had better seek the shelter of some gully and halt till mornin'. Sallie wouldn't listen to it, and ordered him to march along and follow Hec. So on they went slippin' and sliddin' along the dreary trail. They had heard the wolves for the past hour callin' each other away off in the timber and gradually getting' nearer ; though as yet none appeared to have struck their trail. For two hours more they plodded along, Doc flounderin' around in the snow like a ship in a heavy sea minus her riggin' fer he were no expert on snow shoes. Finally one pack struck their trail and was comin' on a dead run behind them and lettin' out a yell at every bound from their hunger-starved mouths. Their cries wer answered by others from every side, who knew the cry of the chase and wer rushin' from all quarters of the forest to be in at the kill.

"They wer getting' a leetle too close fer comfort and Hec, who had been prancin' ahead, gradually slowed up and kept pretty close to Doc. One big grey crittur, a little more nervier than the rest, spied him and launched his gaunt body directly at him. The dog uttered a low whine and sprang to Doc's side. There wer a sharp report and one grey mass rolled over in the snow with a bullet from Sallie's rifle in his carcass. They hurried on, fer they knew that the pack would fight fer a few minutes over the dead body of their chief and it would not only give them a fresh start, but would also draw the wolves in front of them to the rear, which would give them a great advantage. Soon they could tell that the feast wer over, fer the yelpins wer drawin' nearer. The pack now had had a taste of blood, and, spurred on by that, wer more desperate and hungrier than ever.

"Doc's nerve had by this time dropped to zero, and he were fer climbin' a tree and waitin' till mornin.' Sallie wouldn't stand fer it. She knew that by mornin' they would be friz plum stiff, and then every hour might mean life to Tom. She orders him to follow Hec, sayin' she would keep the critturs off. Thus they traveled fer several hours, the deep stillness of the forest bein' disturbed only by the howlin's of the pack and the quick report of Sallie's rifle as she fired at a pair of gleamin' eyes. Every time she fired them wolves had another fight among themselves over the carcass of their brother, fer they pounced on him even before the very life had left his half-starved body.

"Sallie now counted her cartridges, and calculatin' the distance they had traveled, she came to the conclusion that they had between three and four miles to go, and saw that her ammunition would not last that long, fer the brutes were crowdin' them closer and closer after every shot.

"About this time they came to a deep canon or rather a deep gulch in the lime stone rock. Sallie called a halt as soon as they entered it, fer she saw that here she must make her final stand and attempt to stave off the critturs till daylight, or at least till Doc could get to Tom's cabin and return. You know timber wolves will not trouble you much in daylight, and as Sallie knew this she made her plans accordin'ly.

"'Doc,' says she, 'you go on ahead. Hec will lead the way to Tom's camp. Fix him up sort of comfortable and then hurry back with his rifle and a fresh supply of ammunition. I'll stay here and keep the pack amused. They won't cross over the hills, fer they will think that we are all here in the gulch.' What leetle bit of manhood Doc possessed seemed to come to the front, fer he up and says : 'Sallie, I can't do it. It will be sure death fer you to remain here. Let me stay and you go.' 'No,' she replied, and never a tremor swept over her face as she said : 'It is a doctor Tom needs and you do as I tell you and don't stand there thinkin' about it all day, fer every minute counts.' Doc jest simply had to obey, fer he wer too plum scart to do much arguin' and he saw that Sallie wer in no mood to be tinkered with ; though it 'peared to him that he wer leavin' her there to die.

"The gulch wer not more than ten feet wide and lined with boulders now covered with snow. Sallie crouched behind one of them, and fillin' her magazine fer the last time, prepared to put up a fight fer her life and Tom's. She could see the howlin" hunger-crazed pack lopin' around the mouth of the canon, snarlin' and snappin' at each outher and apparently seekin' a chief to lead them into the gulch.

"Waal, I reckon they kept that up fer fifteen or twenty minutes, when one a leetle more darin' than the rest marches in, the others sneakin' behind. Sallie fires, and while they are devourin' him she slips back to another boulder. She figured that it would take Doc at least three hours to get to the cabin and return to the other end of the gulch. If she could keep them off by firin' a shot every fifteen minutes or so her ammunition would hold out till his return.

"Thus shot after shot of her precious cartridges were fired, as she gradually worked her way towards the other end of the gulch, where she must wait the return of Doc. The gulch wer about two miles long and when she reached the other end there were three cartridges remainin' in her rifle, and she calculated that Doc could not possibly return inside of another hour. This time she waited till the leader was almost upon her before firin' ; then mountin' the largest boulder, determined to fight the critturs off when her last shot was gone. The two remainin' shots wer fired from this place of vantage and still no aid was in sight. The wolves wer becomin' wild with fightin' among themselves and waitin' fer the kill. They would try to climb up the boulder, and as each head appeared Sallie brought the butt of her rifle down on it ; but as she wer gradually becomin' exhausted and the brutes wer crowdin' her closer and closer since she had ceased firin', she wer about ready to give up.

"Suddenly her attention was attracted by the deep bayin' of a hound, and in a moment she recognized Hec's voice, and now that help was so near at hand she struck at the critturs with renewed energy, and fought them off till Doc entered the gulch and commenced firin'. He worked that rifle so blamed fast that the wolves were soon racin' back towards the other end of the gulch—more from the racket he made than from injury, fer I don't think that he ever hit a blamed one !

"They both filled their magazines, and as soon as Sallie had a breathin' spell, fer betwixt the cold and the wolves she were about all in, they started fer Tom's camp, Sallie still insistin' on bringin' up the rear. The wolves seein' them goin' and thinkin' they were about to lose the breakfast they had fought all night fer, got madder than a bunch of riled up hornets and made a final rush at them. Sallie and Doc worked their rifles like mad and pumped lead into the pack faster than from a Gatlin' gun. It were too much fer the critturs, though they got mighty close before they turned tail and went yelpin' back into the timber.

"They reached the camp jest as the sun wer risin' and clear tuckered out. Then Sallie collapsed, the moment she saw Tom, from sheer exhaustion. Now right there is were I can't understand women folks. Most of them go to pieces the moment they sight a mouse, but put them in the midst of real danger and they will put up a show of nerve that will put to rout even an old she bear with cubs,' specially if there is some crittur in the deal she loves. Their make-up is a mighty queer one, and your Unkle Hank is not goin' to attempt to analyze it, fer I reckon a Philadelphy lawyer with all his smartness would have to give it up as beyond his comprehension.

"Waal, they found Tom in a pretty bad way ; but in a few days he wer on the road to recovery, thanks to Doc's ministerin' and Sallie's nursin.' She stayed at the cabin till Tom could hobble around on crutches and I guess in the meantime they sort of fixed matters up, fer when spring came around they marched up before old Parson Adams, the sky-pi'ot at the diggins, and were tied as tight as the parson knew how—and I calculate as how it wer a purty stiff knot, if experience counts fer anything as he had been at the business fer nigh on to fifty summers, and no one ever heard tell of one of his knots bein' untied by the courts."—Western Field.

SOLUTION TO BRIDGE PROBLEM No. VII.

Z must win trick 1 with the ace of clubs, keeping Y's king as an entry card for his long diamonds. He should next lead a small diamond, finesse Y's queen and if that wins return the ace, followed by the 2, which should clear the suit. If A holds the king of diamonds singly guarded, Z wins five tricks in diamonds, two in hearts, and two in clubs, viz., nine tricks and game. If the king of diamonds is not caught, there is still a chance that the queen of hearts will fall to the ace or king, in which case Y's knave will make. It is no use leading the knave of diamonds at trick 2, as A, if he held the king, would certainly cover, and Z would be bound to lose one trick in the suit.

BRIDGE PROBLEM No. 8.

A and B are partners against Y and Z. Score : A and B, 24 ; Y and Z, love. Z deals and decleres no-trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows :—

Y's Hand (Dummy).

Hearts : 10, 9, 8, 5.
Diamonds : 10, 9.
Clubs : 5.
Spades : Ace, King, 10, 9, 6, 4.

Hearts : Knave, 2.
Diamonds : Ace, Knave, 3.
Clubs : Ace, King Queen, 10, 8, 6, 3.
Spades : 5.

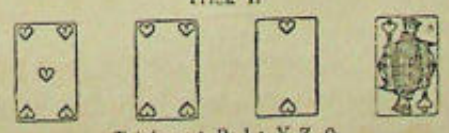
Y	A	Z	B

Trick I.



Tricks : A B, 1 ; Y Z, 0.

Trick II.

Tricks : A B, 2 ; Y Z, 0.

At Trick 3 B leads the king of diamonds. How ought the dealer to play the hand, and why ?

THE TROUT BECK.

RISING high up in the hills of Westmorland the trout beck issues from the placid waters of a mountain tarn and falls rapidly to the valley below. During the first few hundred yards of its descent the fall is so precipitous that no fish can live in its foaming waters. It drops from rock to rock in a series of cascades, beautiful to behold and lending variety to the somewhat desolate scene of the surrounding waste of heather and rock. The tarn above contains fine trout; half-pounders, fat and golden, are common, and occasionally a fish of double that weight will reward the angler. On a favourable day the fish rise freely to the fly, and will sometimes take a minnow cunningly offered, but there are times when the trout skulk deep in the pellucid depths, from which all efforts to lure them are vain. This is generally late in the season, in July and August, when the summer sun shines brightly upon the waters, and the fish rish only for a short half hour or so after sunset.

Down below, when the beck arrives at the upper reaches of the valley, it forms pools among the rocks and boulders where the trout abound, while in the shallows between the fish lie out when they are on the feed, and here they may be caught with small flies and finest tackle when inclined to rise. And so for half a mile the stream, ever widening in its course, runs between heather-clad banks or stretches of meadow where the black-faced sheep are the sole inhabitants. Higher up the hills wild life is varied, though not abundant. Red deer may be seen, wild and viewed only for a fleeting moment when startled from the hill-sides. Foxes are hunted on foot in winter, and a few martens, but seldom seen by human eyes, represent the rarer species of British mammals. Lower down the stream an occasional otter commits depredations among the trout, and furnishes sport for the pack of hounds from the neighbouring county.

At length the beck reaches the fields where the valley widens out, and where farms and homesteads dot the surrounding country. Here it is somewhat overgrown with trees and bushes, and in many places is so shut in by foliage that it is impossible to cast a fly, or to fish it from the bank in any manner. Here is the chance for the angler who does not despise the worm as a bait, and knows how to use it. No matter how bright the sun or how low the water, trout may be taken with the worm on fine tackle, and it is a method not to be despised where the fly is impossible owing to the want of water in the stream, or to the overgrowth of trees and bushes. Of course when the beck is in flood and the water discoloured, any fool standing on the bank can kill trout with the worm. But it is far otherwise when the beck is low and clear, for then some skill and knowledge are necessary to obtain success.

Using small hooks, mounted singly or as Stewart or Pennell tackle (that is, three or two hooks) on the finest drawn gut, the angler should wade up stream, casting his bait up, and letting the current bring it down towards him. He must know the places where the best trout probably lie and sometimes these localities are in the most unlikely-looking spots, to be recognised only by experience. A cast at the head of a pool, or the highest part of the running water in the shallows, will generally bring the best trout to basket, and the fish will take a worm when they will not look at a fly. Even in water and weather favourable for fly-fishing the worm will generally get the biggest fish. But it is not to be preferred on this account, and no one can say that it affords better sport than the fly, which is so clean and pleasant to use; only the great point about the worm is that it will take fish when the fly is useless. And when one's time and opportunities for fishing are limited, it is better to be able to go out and kill fish with the worm than to sit at home and do nothing because it is impossible to get them with the fly.

Our beck has now passed through some two miles of country, mountain valley, and plain, when it reaches the great lake that lies spread out for many a league embosomed amid gentle slopes or precipitous heights that rise sheer from its sombre depths. Here for a few hundred yards it flows over a pebbly bed, where the trout issue in numbers from the lake and ascend the stream. Where the water flows into the lake the trout assemble in great numbers, and good sport may be had with the fly at sunset, and far into the night. Here, perhaps, one's boat is in waiting. The trolling tackle may be got out, in hopes of catching one of those monsters which are said to lurk in the lower depths, and one can pull home in the cool of the night, across the darkening waters, round the tree-clad promontory where the gloom is gathering over the woods, and across the rippling bay to the haven of rest where the lights flicker and glimmer in the distance like will o' the wisps.

The gentle plash of the oars, the soughing of the wind among the trees, the cry of the heron, and the murmur of insect life where night's phantom army, the shadows of the forest, are advancing over the watery plain, all these will linger long in the recollection, to be pondered over with pleasure in deserts of the East. Those who have wandered in the pleasant places of the earth at least lay up for themselves sweet and abiding memories, and of these the trout beck is not the least.

CRUELTY IN SPORT AND ELSEWHERE.

ON more than one occasion we have expressed our lack of appreciation for that form of public entertainment which involves the performance of unnatural tricks by wild animals: more especially by animals which are held in respect by the sportsman who knows them as they are in a state of nature. It has often been a matter of curious speculation to us how long an enlightened public, or a section of it, would join with enthusiasm in any crusade against a sport which involves the death of animal or bird, while regarding with composure if not admiration proceedings which involve infinitely more pain and terror to the victim than does death by bullet or shot or through the instrumentality of hounds. Indication of the fact that the wild beast "tamer's" craft does mean cruelty to animals is forthcoming in a violent advertisement which arrests our notice in Times of 24th August. This utterance, an advertisement of a pamphlet or book by a lady, begins "Unnatural Antics of Quadrupeds to provide Amusement for Brainless Idiots at Public Entertainments" and refers to the apathy of the R. S. P. C. A. towards a business which "perpetuates the terrible cruelties practised on quadrupeds by their trainers." This mode of attack is not one that commends itself to any reasonable being; it has all the faults of the hysterical and would damage the best case in the world; but it is easy to understand the view of the writer who sees public attention roused into activity by attacks on stag hunting, otter hunting, and pigeon shooting, while the public conscience concerning real cruelties is allowed to remain dormant.

The attacks made on sport by the humanitarian fraternity have certainly been neither temperate nor well founded: and perhaps the fact that they make up in vehemence what they lack in knowledge and truth may explain the choice of method displayed in this opening fire upon the "performing" beast business. We should be glad to know that such a campaign was under the control of more level heads than that which dictated this advertisement; for as we have said there is far more cruelty in the circus ring than there is in the field of sport. The truth is the average member of the public does not realise in what "cruelty" really consists: death he regards with abhorrence and more particularly sudden death; hence he believes the humanitarian who inveighs against the cruelty of a sport which involves the death, though swift and practically painless, of beast or bird. He can understand the cruelty caused by brutal drivers to their horses and he approves the action of the magistrate who fines the callous starver of a dog. These are forms of cruelty he understands, but of the more subtle, or let us say, of the less obvious phases of cruelty he has no idea at all. An exhibition of "tame" lions performing unnatural antics appeals not to him not on behalf of the animals because no cruelty to them is enacted under his eyes—as he understands cruelty; his dominant feeling is one of unenvious admiration of the trainer who seems to carry his life in his hand, and very often, actually does do so.

Is the cruelty to which the lion or tiger is subjected in the process of education and performance less real than that inflicted by the gun or by the whip? Our own idea is that it is very much greater because prolonged. The performing lion only performs because he has learned that he must; and every beast trainer lays it down as an axiom that his pupils must be taught to fear their teacher. Nobody will have the moral courage to maintain that these tamed animals go through their antics in the circus ring because they like it and "take a pride in their work" as one trainer some years ago gravely assured an interviewer, on behalf of his lions and bears. If we were to guess at the mental attitude of the performing beast it can hardly be other than one of raging resentment restrained from offensive action by carefully implanted fear: and if it be not cruelty of the first order to keep animals in that state day after day, year in year out we confess that we do not know the meaning of the word. In our well considered opinion the life led by the performing animal involves a degree of cruelty past all comparison with that caused by deaths as inflicted by any form of sport. The circus goer who applauds the admitted courage and nerve of the trainer overlooks this aspect of the matter simply because it has not been suggested to him, though he would no doubt be roused to hot indignation were the trainer obliged to use his steel whip in public to reduce one of his unfortunate pupils to order in the interests of his own personal safety. It cannot be gainsaid that there is a vast deal of cruelty perpetrated under the eyes of humane and tender hearted people which is tolerated solely and simply because it is not recognised as cruelty. If the miserable monkeys which Italian organ grinders drag about the cold and wet streets of our English towns could speak, will anyone suggest that their first cry would be for release from a life of misery? Any condition more unnatural and more abhorrent to the animal than the lot of an organ grinder's monkey would be difficult to conceive: but the unhappy beast exists in thousands and within a day's walk of the offices of the R. S. P. C. A., avid as that Society is of "cases" for prosecution. Were one of these shivering apes offered the choice between its chain and a run for its life with a pack of terriers at its tail with liberty as the reward of escape, we have small doubt as which way its preference would lie: but imagine the storm of indignation that would follow the revelation that some abandoned brute in the shape of man had been hunting a harmless and engaging monkey with his savage dogs!

The public ideas on the subject of cruelty stand in urgent need of revision. Not long ago we were regaled by the humanitarians with a campaign, vigorous but brief and naturally abortive, against otter hunting: now, we observe, the same brotherhood have entered the lists once more against vivisection. The latter practice does not, of course, come within our purview and we are content to accept the dicta of scientific men who tell us that vivisection has been the path whereby much invaluable knowledge has been gained and could not have been obtained in any other way. We know that it offends the susceptibilities of many worthy people who owe any knowledge they may possess of the subject to the inflammatory publications and speeches of violent partisans, but if there be cruelty in vivisection it is not the cruelty against which rational men can inveigh; there is none of the element of wantonness in it: operations performed on anæsthetised beasts are performed with a definite purpose in view. It is, of course, open to the opponent of the practice to argue that it is unjustifiable for man to inflict pain on the lower animals in order to alleviate pain in his own body, but that is an argument manifestly unwise to use since its logical wider application would lead to the adoption of the Doukobor tenets which make it morally indefensible to use animals for service at all. If the vehement advertisement to which we have referred does anything to attract the energies of humantarianism into more legitimate channels than those usually discovered it will be fully justified of its lack of restraint.

THE CAMBRIDGE-HARVARD BOAT RACE.

London, Sunday, 9th September 1906.

A PHENOMENAL crowd witnessed this race from Putney to Mortlake yesterday: the enthusiasm was prodigious and the exultation over the victory of the Light Blues was of the most extravagant description. It was a good enough race, though Cambridge had the measure of the Yankees almost from the start. There was daylight between the boats as they shot under Hammersmith Bridge, this was increased to two lengths before the South West Railway bridge was passed, and by this distance Cambridge won. Time—19mins. 18secs. The record for this course is 18mins. 47secs. put up when Oxford won in 1893 and equalled by Cambridge in 1900. The crews, according to latest advices, were as under.

Sporting Notes.

A CERTAIN number of surprise packets were unfolded to the public view last Saturday on the Calcutta course, for which the heavy going, amongst other things, was possibly accountable. Of the four starters in the Plassey Plate, Whitefoot alone found little support in the ring, being on offer at "5's" a little before the start. But the looker-on is very apt to be deceived by appearances and without a sight of the books themselves it is idle to speculate as to the sources of the support accorded to the short-priced horses. The race itself was difficult to understand, and is better left without comment at the moment. An enquiry is in progress and it is an open secret that the running of a pony in this race has been considered a fit subject for official investigation. The Executive, may be trusted to deal with the matter effectually.

In the Amateur Hurdle Race there was no heavy betting and a very little support sufficed to make Ryong a favorite, and indeed at the finish both Cain and Leading Lady were apparently quoted at the same price, namely, 2 to 1. These kind of quotations must rejoice the heart of the layer, though it is marvellous that they can keep on finding people to accept them. But it is all a question of supply and demand, and the layer is fully entitled to do business at the shortest prices for which he can find takers. In the race Leading Lady won all the way, showing an improvement on her last running which everybody remarked. Looking back, however, we remember that she beat everything on the previous occasion, except Gleam and Lady Gold ; on Saturday Gleam was absent, and Lady Gold was not in the humour ; the false start being quite sufficient to upset her Ladyship for the day. Everyone seemed to riding a waiting race and they allowed Mr. Dudley to wait in front all the way up the far side of the course. Later on Ryong had a cut at him, but had lain so far out of his ground in the first half mile that the effort to get on terms proved overmuch for him. Leading Lady's victory was no doubt an easy one, but she was given every possible opportunity to make it so.

After this the public, headed by the stable, took a nibble at Carnival, but Nirvana had not much difficulty in getting home from the light-weights, and thereby gave Heywood another excellent advertisement were any such needed. Harold seems to be out of all form just now ; at the weight he appeared to have a nice chance. Next came the Amateur Ponies of which the public would have nothing but Knock Out, on the strength of his recent gallop with Moonray. But it is rash to rely over much on untried ones in this Monsoon going, as was well exemplified in this race. Branga and Mistlebird were again the only two in it and eventually the former rolled home a very easy winner, Energy taking third place.

The extra race gave Cyril an opportunity of stamping himself as the best performer seen out this season, and he sailed home in rare style for all his packet of weight. There was a big field behind him, and the whips were going at the finish like a couple of Gatling guns. The ladies in the Stand shuddered with horror and wanted to know why it should be necessary to flog horses so obviously beaten. It seems to be the fashion among a large section of the professional riders now in town to decorate the ends of their whips with huge pieces of flat leather, which purport to shield the lashes. These playthings, we imagine, add to the uproar without inflicting pain upon the horses, but why not carry a rattle at once ? There can surely be no object in pretending to hit a horse particularly hard in the neighbourhood of the Judge's box. Owners, whose colours are popular with the public, might perhaps ask their jockeys to reduce these "shields" to a reasonable size, because they spoil the look of the whole turnout to the artistic eye. But perhaps there is some real use for these unsightly weapons ; we refer to the subject with proper diffidence.

Before the last race we all ought to have gone home. Nirvanah closed with The Chump in the straight and after a bumping finish, in respect of which a fruitless objection was lodged, scrambled home by a neck, letting down the vast majority of punters. The Chump's objection was not sustained, and although the bumping was obvious the fact that the winner came from behind and wore down the objector no doubt weighed with the Stewards when they decided in his favour. So ended a somewhat eventful day's racing, and now for the next chapter.

The entries for next Saturday are excellent, although one race has fallen through. This will be replaced with a six-furlong race for 14-0 ponies which should easily draw a field. Kingpin, Swindle,

CALCUTTA.

We have the finest selection of Pianos and Musical Instruments in India to choose from.

Downland, Dit, Dreadnought and Sal are all newcomers for the Elysium Plate and make up a field of seventeen. The Open Hurdle Race has drawn ten, but we shall be surprised to see eight starters. Nirvanah and Turk are the new blood; the former does not impress the casual observer as likely to fight it out through one and a half miles of mud and the old grey horse promises no better for all his alleged victories in his own country. Branga and Queen of Hearts have swollen the Hunter field to ten also; but we anticipate that some difficulty will be experienced in finding light-weights to equitate all the good things at the bottom of this handicap. Twenty-two figure in the seven-furlong race, all sorts and conditions of horses, the handicap in this race alone must represent a day's work. Twelve ponies are after the prize-money in the Amateur Handicap, including the redoubtable Branga; 14-2 "pony" racing is a fine sport in its way, but we confess ourselves amongst those who have failed to fully appreciate its grandeur. Appearances point to a wet week end and more mud larking, but there is a glorious uncertainty about these matters which enables us to wish all and sundry a fine day's racing and a round turn of the Wheel.

From the summarized reports available at the time of writing it would appear that backers experienced a succession of severe reverses last Saturday at Poona although we notice that the favourites got home all right in the Arab races. First of all, Thomond was considered good enough to back down to 3 to 1 on for the Hurdle Race, only to succumb to Corrie Roy, who apparently slipped his field. Then came the Trial Plate, for which Prince Lyon had been specially prepared. It was doubtless Calcutta money that made him favourite, but he made no show whatever at the finish. He is a difficult horse to train and his new connection may not understand him as yet so well as did his late owner. Cherson, of whom so much was expected last season, scored his first win from Ballark, also an improving horse, and if he really gets back to his Australian form, we shall have him right out in front in the cold weather. Next came Signorina's defeat in the pony race: She started at 7 to 4 on.

With the end of the rains so near at hand a good many Calcutta park "hackers" are casting an anxious eye on the inner riding track on the racecourse. The efforts of the Turf Club executive last year were very nearly a great success. The sand proved a distinct improvement on the somewhat unpleasant refuse deposited in previous years, and it was not until late in the cold weather season that people began to complain of excessive dust. Now that a continuous water pipe has been laid completely round the course there should be little difficulty in giving the riding track an occasional refresher when the training track is being dosed. With this additional assistance a sand track would be a great boon to the riding public and perhaps the Secretary will forgive the grumblers and make another effort pro bono publico. Another little point in connection with this track is the draining, or perhaps we should say the lack of it. The Monsoon race track is this year decidedly improved, and it looks as though a a very little extra attention, which, of course, the public have no right to expect but merely hope for, would make the sand track rideable all the year round.

By the time the masons are done with the cold weather stands it will be too late to do much with the paddock and lawns for this season, and the arrangements will probably be more or less of a make-shift nature. A good many people would like to see the Ring moved nearer the racecourse or at any rate given a somewhat less cramped position than it at present occupies. Backers, whose representatives have the predominant voice in the settlement of these little matters, are always on the look out for opportunities to increase the chances of obtaining substantial odds for their investments. It is at least arguable that a Ring, in which the stands are all so close together as in the cold weather, is far more susceptible to the advances of a Commission than one scattered or extended in which each clump of "Books" have to make a separate market unto themselves. This subtle question affects only the big bettors and perhaps a few professional backers. Regulations of this kind do not help the small punter; nothing can help him much except a cheerful disposition.

The going last Saturday was about as bad as we remember it, there was no water actually lying on the surface, but the course was thoroughly sodden and very holding. It is doubtful whether anything more can be done in the way of draining, or otherwise, to improve matters, but possibly the change to the New Stand next year may give us a higher and drier section of the course to deal with. The water seems to drain down towards the Big Tree corner, irrespective of the direction in which the P. W. D. engineers lead their nicely sloped ditches and the present Monsoon course is little better than a swamp for some distance on either side of the turn. This in spite of the improvement effected by the Secretary, which is very noticeable in the straight.

The Hurdle course seems very much better than it was last year; the culverts at the approach to the third hurdle have proved a complete success, and now that the fourth pony flight has been finally located there remains little more to be done except to extend the big culvert on the Ellenborough side. This improvement has, we believe, been in contemplation for some time past, and will be carried out, if feasible, before next August.

Entries for the Mussoorie Horse and "Championship" Dog Show close on Saturday, the 15th instant. There are thirteen classes for horses and no less than fifty-two for dogs, nearly all with open, limit, novice and puppy sections.

We publish to-day a list of the winning jockeys and gentleman riders at meetings held in India from 1st April to the 6th instant.

Surely it would be difficult to find a finer example of "bilge" and inaccuracy than is exhibited in the following "notes from India" which a "Lucknow correspondent" recently shot into the rubbish columns of The Sporting Life:—"The Calcutta Turf Club has just paid an unique compliment to the Press. They have elected the well-known sporting correspondent of the Statesman, Mr. A. G. Macpherson, to be a Steward of the Calcutta Turf Club.

Few outside India can form an idea of the sources of income of the management of an Indian race meeting. That all bookmakers pay a regular fee is common knowledge; then there are fees paid by barkeepers, the Tommy Dodd tables, and the like. One would hardly believe that beggars would have to pay for the privilege of begging, yet at an important meeting on the Bombay side a syndicate of beggars pay 100s. for the season for permission to beg at the entrance gate.

There is a gleam of sunshine in the unfortunate episode of Lord Curzon's resignation. Every cloud has its silver lining. In the present instance the succession of Lord Minto helps to realise Lord Curzon's conception of an ideal Turf, if that reported American speech of his is to be credited. Lord Minto has been an ardent follower of the sport of Kings, and it is quite possible we may see his lordship often of a morning riding work on the Calcutta course, and the picture of the Viceroy riding the winner, say, for one of his staff for his own Cup is one that is not beyond the possibilities of realisation."

Mr. L. de Rothschild's racehorse River recently savagely attacked a lady cyclist as she was riding along the Bury Road, just outside Newmarket. The attack was made with as much viciousness as the onslaught by Marigold IV on Otto Madden at Brighton. The lady was riding her bicycle in the direction of the town when River, returning from exercise with the rest of the horses in the stable, dashed at her open-mouthed. The boy riding was unable to control him, and the horse had almost seized the lady when she jumped off her machine and, letting it drop in the road, darted into the velt—a small wood by the roadside. The same horse gave another remarkable display of unruly temper when he broke loose and galloped about Newmarket Heath for an hour before he was caught.

The Government of Ceylon has begun in earnest to tackle the question of game preservation. From the 1st instant, under a Government Gazette notification, the exportation for commercial or trade purposes of hides and cut horns of chital and sambur is prohibited for three years. Good.

We hear from a well-known Calcutta snipe shot, who is in Scotland this year very busy with grouse, trout and other pleasing matters, that the biggest bag of grouse made this season, up to the time of writing, had been obtained by Mr. Whitney, the American, whose party shot 470 brace on Holgate Moors, Durham.

An experiment of trying to land a man by means of a rod and line was made at Durrus, Co. Cork, the other day. Constable Kennedy, a champion swimmer, elected to "do the fish," and Dr. Lewis undertook to land him. The doctor attached a strong salmon hook to a belt fastened across the constable's shoulders, and the latter dived and turned and swam a number of times, but was being gradually hauled in when the line snapped. The trial is to be repeated. Of course, there is always a time limit in such contests, as an expert salmon-fisher would land his man at every trial if he were given time. The secret lies in exhausting his "fish" as soon as possible, but if the "fish" is an artful one and reserves his strength for critical moments, he can sometimes win on time. We saw a fish vs. man competition years ago at the Calcutta Swimming Bath; the angler, a Mr. Pertwee, won after a short struggle.

A rather curious panther shooting incident is recorded in a recent number of The Field by "E. J." who writes:—"I was sitting in a machan over a kill on 30th May for a panther, which came at dusk, and in the failing light I had a shot at the chest. She, for it subsequently proved to be a female, made off, and apparently halted about twenty paces away. I heard nothing for about twenty minutes, when she again went off for a short distance. Just at this time I distinctly heard another panther coming along, and, to judge from the noise, he attacked the wounded panther, who gave vent to a series of melancholy howls. All was again quiet, and presently I caught a glimpse of the second panther as he prowled round the remains of the goat, but he evidently was suspicious and would not come up to the kill. About an hour later I heard sounds of a further difference of opinion between the two panthers. After that I heard nothing further, and at daylight descended from the machan and cautiously proceeded in the direction from which I had heard the moans. I came across the panther I had shot at about fifty yards away stone dead, and, to my great astonishment, found that the second panther had eaten a considerable portion of her intestines, completely ruining the skin. When Nawab Khan, my orderly, came up we carefully examined the ground and discovered that the body had been dragged about twenty yards, the pugs of the second panther being clearly discernible. We could find no other pugs or trace of any other animal having approached the carcase. Is not this rather unusual?"

Two anglers intent on fishing came across a likely piece of water, on the bank of which the following warning was roughly scrawled on a blackboard: "Notice.—Any pursens fishin' here do so at there own risk as these grounds is privet. If there be any fish they ain't the sort to be temted by common worms or dough. Besides, there aint——" Apparently the board was not large enough, as the sentence thus abruptly terminated. The water, however, looked so inviting that the fishermen decided to take all risks. After fishing for some hours without getting a nibble, they heard a shout from a rough-looking farmer: "Ain't you read that there notice?" to which the culprits replied, "Yes; but the water looked so fishy that we really could not resist the temptation." "All right, misters," said the farmer; "no harm done; but, seeing you keeping on so steadily, I thought as how you had not read t'other side of board." The anglers rushed to the board, looked at the reverse side, and gasped. There was the continuation of the notice—"No blessed fish."

An example of rather "tall" revolver shooting is quoted in an American exchange. The man responsible for the story says: "One day I was riding on my black horse, obtained from Newbern, N. C., during the Civil War, when descending a hill, I saw what appeared to be a woodcock, standing on a sand bar of the stream I was about to cross. I spoke to my horse. He stopped at the word. I jumped from the saddle, and revolver in hand approached the bridge to shoot at the bird. I then saw that it was a snipe, and, by the way, I have known a snipe to remain in one spot long enough to enable me to go more than one mile from the meadow where I saw him, get my Westley Richards gun, and go back again, and shoot him, for he had never moved an inch from the place where I saw him. I raised my revolver and pulled. The first shot cut the feathers from his neck; the second struck him just at the back and broke both of his wings, and the third went into the mud at his feet. The bird settled gradually down, and when I reached him was stone dead."

Obviously the Yankee press correspondent is very far from played out yet.

In connection with the case of albinism in a kakur, reported in our last issue by "S. H. C." of Muttra, our readers may be interested to read some observations "R. L." has lately published in our London namesake on the subject of "Melanism and Albinism in Wild Animals." He writes: It has long been known that both black and normally coloured leopard cubs occasionally occur in the same litter, and that the same thing happens in the case of cubs of tawny-maned and black-maned lions. Till recently, however, such variations have been regarded as accidental; but the attention which has of late years been directed to the subject of colour heredity in hybrids affords ground for the belief that they are governed by definite laws, according more or less closely with those laid down by Mendel in regard to hybrids. Without recapitulating these Mendelian laws, it will suffice to direct the attention of sportsmen to the interest and importance attaching to accurate observations with regard to the number of cubs of each colour in such mixed litter, and likewise the respective colouring of the parents. Not that observations should be restricted to the two species mentioned above; the case of black wolves, black rabbits and hares, and black squirrels, and, in fact, all similar instances, are quite as important. Indeed, owing to the larger number of offspring in a litter, small mammals, such as squirrels, are of even greater value in this respect than the larger kinds, as affording better opportunities for ascertaining whether the Mendelian laws as to the proportionate number of the two colours hold good in the case of wild animals.

Alike in the case of leopards, lions (so far as their manes are concerned), wolves, and continental squirrels, melanism is a recurring phase in certain localities, so that black individuals are always in existence. So far as has been observed, the cubs in a mixed litter of any one of these species are generally either of the normal colour or black, and not intermediate between the two types. It is true, indeed, that in the case of the squirrel there are brownish individuals in some respects intermediate between the black phase and the normal red type; but it has been suggested that even these are not really a mixture of the two types, but merely imperfect developments of the black phase. Full records of the variations in the colour of leopard cubs according as to whether both parents are black, or either the male or the female alone black, do not appear to exist. It is known, however, that two black leopards may have a pair of black cubs or one black and one spotted cub; and there is also an instance recorded in which a black female leopard crossed with a spotted male gave birth to a pair of cubs spotted like the father. Whether there is any known instance of a pair of spotted leopards producing black cubs, and their giving rise to melanism de novo, I am unaware. Records of the same kind are wanted in the case of black-maned and tawny-maned lions.

As regards squirrels, it appears that in Germany many instances have been recorded of black parents giving birth to both black and red young; while a black female squirrel has been known to produce a wholly red, but never a wholly black, litter. On the other hand, the crossing of a black male with a red female resulted in one case in a wholly black litter.

Much fuller records—and some of these if possible for two or more generations—are required, however, before it is possible to determine how far the heredity of melanism among continental squirrels follows the Mendelian law. In this case also it is of importance to ascertain whether a pair of red squirrels will ever give birth to black offspring.

In the case of albinos, the starting point is altogether different since in most instances, at any rate the albino individual is the offspring of normally coloured parents, and therefore an entirely new product, or, in other words, a mutation. That albinism is hereditary—and, to a considerable extent, on Mendelian lines—is definitely known from observations on domesticated rabbits and mice. In the case of wild animals, according to a German authority, there appear, however, to be only two recorded instances of such an inheritance. In the one instance, a white doe chamois, which had been long familiar to the inhabitants of the village of St. Martin, in Graubünden, was seen in 1880 with a white kid, which was almost certainly the result of pairing with a normally coloured buck. The other case is that of a pair of coots, of which one was white and the other normal; in a brood produced by them in 1898 one white chick was observed.

Although these are the only two recorded instances I have met with probably other cases are known in which wild albino animals have given birth to white offspring.

Athletic Notes.

AS we foreshadowed some time ago Cambridge won the much talked of boat race against Harvard and won handsomely too, thus once again proving that in oarsmanship the Americans have yet something to learn, however superior they may be in other branches of athletics as a result of their peculiar training methods and an amateur definition that is far from being on all fours with ours. Our telegram gives a few details. We can well imagine the rapture with which the English crew's success was greeted, for though the crowd, as a whole, would not have grudged the Americans their victory if the Fates had been kind to them there is no disguising the fact that in athletics, and in all connected with rowing in particular, the Yankees are not popular at home—people have vivid recollections of their antics at Henley for example.

Mr. Muttlebury had sole charge of the Cantabs during most of their preparation, and James Wray, the professional, acted as mentor to the Harvard crew. Excitement over the race increased by leaps and bounds from the day the crews began work: the number of Americans who infected the towpath was legion, would listen to nothing predicting defeat, their attitude, as might have been expected, was that of boisterous optimism accentuated by the noisy and fantastic demonstrations of which this class of Yankee enjoys an unenviable monopoly. The Cantabs went on in quiet confidence and as we find they lowered the colours of the American oarsmen in right good style.

The last match of this sort between an English and an American crew was in 1869, when Harvard rowed against Oxford. The names of all the Oxford four—it was a four, not an eight, as now—have since been very familiar to rowing men, but perhaps the best known is that of Willan, who for so many years was judge in the Oxford and Cambridge race. It was estimated that there were nearly a million people along the banks of the Thames between Putney and Mortlake. The same differences of style which were doubtless apparent last Saturday were apparent then—the American stroke was faster, there was less body swing, especially towards the end of the stroke, the finish of the stroke was tugged home with the arms instead of being allowed to swing automatically on to the chest, and the water was "felt" with the blades at the beginning of the stroke instead of bring gripped hard and quickly, as in English rowing. The result was although the Americans led at the start—indeed, as far as Hammersmith Bridge—they put too great a tax on their arms, which are a vulnerable part of the body in the overwhelming strains of rowing; they became ragged and after Chiswick Church the Oxford four, who had rowed a trying stern race so far, had the issue at their mercy. The chronicles of the time give us entertaining details of the heroic struggle. When Oxford began to pass their opponents the American coxswain dropped one hand from his rudder lines and splashed water on the faces of his crew, to invigorate them. Whenever racing or rowing a course, the Americans of those days bound their heads round with handkerchiefs—a prophylactic which we do not understand, but which is still often practised by men-of-war's crews in rowing races. There was a great deal of betting before the race, and some extraordinary rumours were hatched. The result of one of them was that the Americans were afraid that their food might be poisoned, and though they had the appearance of continuing to consume their ordinary suppplies they lived, as a matter of fact, on a secret supply, which had less chance of being tampered with. The race was rowed before sliding seats were introduced; the Oxford men wore the usual straw hats, which replaced top-hats, and were the uniform, even during races, of those days, and they politely raised them as the Harvard crew passed the post six seconds after the race had been won.

Commenting on the event the week the last received English mail left London, a sporting authority wrote as follows:—So far, the coming race has been less talked about, perhaps because it was arranged suddenly and unexpectedly. After all, that is the best way to arrange such matches. It is not easy to regularise international matches, if only because in the shifting population of the universities it is impossible for one generation to bind its successors. Mr. Goldsmith, the president of the C.U.B.C., having received a challenge from Harvard, wisely allowed Mr. R. C. Lehmann, who knows all rowing men in both England and America, to arrange the match. Nothing was easier, as it happened, for Mr. Higginson, an old Harvard oar, who was asked to represent Harvard in the negotiations, was a neighbour of Mr. Lehmann at Bourne End. So quickly was the matter arranged that it has not even yet been officially sanctioned at a regular meeting of the C.U.B.C. That so "sporting" an event will be acclaimed by the next meeting of the C.U.B.C., in October, is, of course, certain, and no doubt the new oars in the Cambridge boat, Close-Brooks and Baynes, will receive their "blues," although they have not yet rowed against Oxford. Mr. Lehmann has very suitably been appointed starter and umpire of the race. He is trusted by both sides.

Some objections have been made—objections are always made to innovations, even when as excellent as this. It is said that no English University crew can possibly be expected to get "fit" in August, after the strain of the summer races and Henley Regatta. The answer to that is that Englishmen ought not, and fortunately do not, as a rule, calculate minute risks in staking their athletic reputation—otherwise athletics would cease to be worth while—and that the Cambridge crew (who are the best judges) are all anxious to row. The Harvard men, too, take their risks; they are training in an unfamiliar climate, and already two of them have been ill, and have had to give place to substitutes.

The Harvard crew are the same that beat Yale last June. The Cambridge crew are the same that beat Oxford last spring, with the exception of the two new men I have already mentioned, Baynes and Close-Brooks. Baynes was rowing in a college Lent boat last spring, and Close-Brooks is the son of one of the famous family of Close brothers, who rowed at Cambridge. As in the race against Oxford, Stuart is stroking the boat on the low side. The Harvard boat, which is only 60 feet long, is some 5 feet shorter than the Cambridge boat: the men sit in a staight line down the middle instead of alternately to either side, and swivel instead of fixed rowlocks are used. The average weight of the Harvard men is 12st. 6lbs., and that of Cambridge 12st. 2lbs. In the practice at Bourne End both crews rowed from Marlow Point to Cookham Bridge in the same time—18mins. 10secs. This looks exciting, but unless we know (which we never do) the exact relative conditions of wind and stream, and the exact amount of work the coaches exacted, such times are valueless. Rowing men judge by appearances—though fatal in most relations of life, this is the only true test for the expert eye in rowing. It seems that Cambridge will be as good as the crew that beat Oxford last spring, and probably better, as a harder "beginning" is taking the place of the more deliberate "beginning" which made them resemble a party of scullers in an eight-oared boat. The secret of all rowing is that whatever is done must be done together, and the Cambridge crew last spring were good because they possessed that secret in an unusual degree. But if they achieve a sharper beginning, and do that also all together, then they will be a better crew still. The strength, enthusiasm, and uniformity of Harvard are unquestionable. Ultimately it will be a test of styles. Let us hope, without being inhospitable, that the old lesson of the Henley course will be repeated, and that in a hard race the vulnerable parts of the body improperly used (I speak as an Englishman) will have to surrender to bodies which are not more heroic but are more reasonably employed.

Cricket slang, or rather, the filling of cricket reports with ridiculous expressions not used by cricketers, was a great feature of some of the newspaper accounts of cricket matches last year. Fortunately, there has been a change for the better this year, and matches are nearly always reported sensibly and without absurdities in language. There are, however, still exceptions. The following expressions, taken from the columns of an illustrated London daily during the last few days, may be commended to the curious: "Given a regular swine of a wicket," so the elegant passage runs, "Yorkshire can beat any second-class first-class county in two days as easily as an old maid can drink tea." "Hutchings pinched a moon." "Jessop is a queer cove to monkey with." "Dennett is a cartload of monkeys." "Goatly was bobbed by a well-picked-up one." Crawford "made a real Kohinoor blow." Iremonger was "dropped off an absolute percher." Knox "blew Warner and Douglas out." "Middlesex seem sure to be like the tea-leaves." What does it all mean?

The Bombay Gymkhana contemplate holding their Sixteenth Annual Sporting Meeting about the middle of next month. The joint Honorary Secretaries, Messrs. J. Henderson Grey and W. G. Palmer, have already arranged an interesting programme for the Sixteenth Annual Sporting Meeting to be held under the auspices of the Bombay Gymkhana during October. His Excellency the Governor is Patron, with Mr. Justice Russell, President; and there is an influential body of honorary stewards. The Mounted Sports will take place on 17th, 18th, and 20th October, and the programme includes a variety of competitions. The winner of the highest aggregate mark holds the Stewart Cup for one year. Mr. T. D. Moore won the trophy last season. There will be a golf tournament from 1st to 6th October under the management of the Committee of the Royal Bombay Golf Club. There will also be a Bowls handicap.

The Gymkhana Hockey Tournament at Naini Tal ended on the 30th ultimo in a win for the Depot who beat the Boys' Diocesan School by 2 goals to nil.

The annual rugger match—England vs. Scotland—will be played on the Calcutta F. C. ground on Wednesday, the 19th September.

Seventeen teams have entered for the Murree Hockey Tournament that is to begin on the 20th of this month. They are as follows:—(1) The Queen's Officers' team; (2) the Queen's Regimental team; (3) Royal Irish Fusiliers; (4) Royal Munster Fusiliers' "A" team; (5) Royal Munster Fusiliers "B" team; (6) 6th Mountain Battery; (7) No. 74 Company, R. G. A.; (8) No. 82 Company, R. G. A.; (9) No. 91 Company, R. G. A.; (10) the North Staffordshire Regiment; (11) the Northamptons; (12) the 1st Punjab Volunteer Rifles; (13) North-Western Railway Volunteers; (14) the Wiltshires; (15) the Black Watch; (16) the Seaforths; (17) and the Royal Irish.

The Walter Locke Shield has been won by the King's Own Regiment who defeated the Rangoon Gymkhana in the final by 3 goals to 1. The King's Own showed great form when in Calcutta, and twice won the Association League trophy, many friends here will join us in hearty congratulations.

The C. F. C. rugger team leaves for Madras on Friday, the 21st instant.

The members of the Calcutta Football Club hold their annual dinner next Saturday, the 15th instant.

The C. F. C. Place Kicking Competition will be held on their ground on Tuesday, the 18th instant, beginning at 5-15 P.M.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—Better late than never, but, this time very late, the match in the Harwood league, postponed from 14th July took place on Monday between the Royal Scots and the Bombay Gymkhana. Originally the game could not be played on account of the weather, but Monday gave them a good ground, not too soft and there was a good game. The Scots were in fine form, but they had all their work cut out to defeat the team put forward by the Gymkhana, who, had they played as well throughout the League, could have had a far better record at the end of it. The Scots had the best of the opening, carrying the ball right into the Gymkhana circle. A repulse lasted but a short time and it was not long before Dawson, who was pluckily playing in goal with a sprained right thumb, let the ball through. Put on their metal the Gymkhana retaliated well and later on succeeded in equalising. After the kick off the Scots made another great but fruitless effort, but before half time they were one a head of the Gymkhana. The second half was by far the better of the two. Both sides put all the beef they knew into it and the play warmed but slowly up and down the field. The Scots had a little the best of the game, but each side scored a goal and the match ended in favour of the Scots by three to two.

The cup was presented on Wednesday after a match between the Royal Scots and a combined team. The pick of the other teams were out to oppose the winners and it was undoubtedly the best soccer game of the year ending in a hard fought draw of one goal each.

The weekly Bombay Mud Sports came off after a week's interval on account of rain. Great praise is due to the Honorary Secretaries for the spirit they get into these events and for the variety they give in the programme. The entries on Wednesday were good and the events amusing at times. Captain Mackie and Mr. Barraclough tied for the individual tent-pegging, while Captain Mackie, and Messrs. Wilson, Crosse and Barraclough took first prize in the section tent-pegging. Mr. Wood and Captain Mackie were first and second in the jumping, but the missing word competition proved a failure as the ladies couldn't find the right word. The sentence was "you are old father William, the young man said, your hair has become very white and you——stand on your head, do you think at your age it is right?" The ladies should have known something about this, but the officials should have known more for (without hunting up an old favourite) as a correct quotation it stands quite at the bottom of the list. In the musical medley there was more success and Mr. Wood and Miss Hogge romped home with Captain Mackie and Miss Crawford second. Captain Mackie won the autograph race, while Mr. and Mrs. Crosse repeated former victories by winning the affinity race in which "lady to take the ring and the gentleman the peg" sounds rather as though the authors were bachelors. There was a good field for the pony scurry which was won by Mr. Crosse, Mr. Robertson and Mr. Boothby being second and third.

The Rovers' Tournament opened on Thursday with a match between the East and South Lancashires on a ground which became very slippery before the game had long started. Neither team is more than average, and though the East Lancashires scored three goals to nil they hardly deserved it. Only one goal was scored in the first half and the remaining two in the second half, accounted for by the fact that the South Lancashires fell all to pieces.

The second match was far better. The King's (Liverpool) Regiment met the Rovers and put up three goals which ought to have been scored by the Rovers' backs. The latter's forwards, however, were putting in some good work and frequently carried down to the King's goal, unsuccessfully.

Saturday saw the Manchesters meet the R. G. A. from Colaba and the visitors won by two goals to nil. Play was very even, but the Manchesters had the advantage of weight, though both teams frequently missed opportunities.

The Bombay and Parsee Gymkhanas met in a match on the maidan on Saturday, but the annual events are hardly as exciting as usual, for the latter had some of their best men absent. The home team went in first and Cheetham and Powell opened, the former putting up top score of 25, while Harkney was very close with 24. For the Parsees, Wadia, made 22 not out and N. M. Bhownaggree 14 not out, and with two men to bat, the game ended in a draw, the Gymkhana getting 105 and the Parsees 68 for 5 wickets. Coombs headed the list of the bowling with 5 wickets for 27 runs, while Law for the Parsees took 2 for 11.

Interest now centres in the Parsee-Presidency match at Poona next week. It is four years since the Presidency got a win, but they look like doing it this year. The teams, as far as arranged at present, are :—Presidency : Major Deas (Deolali), Mr. Turner (Rajkot), Major Wigram (Deolali), Lieutenant Chaplin (Mhow), Mr. Heath (Satara), Mr. Hoare (Indore), Mr. Cheetham (Bombay), Lieutenant Airy (Poona), Mr. Priestley (Bombay), Captain Bradfield (Aurangabad), and Mr. Pattison (Essex Regiment) with Mr. J. Monteath, a reserve.

The Parsees will probably be Dr. Pavri (Captain), Mr. Bulsara, Mr. Warden, Mr. Mistry (Ajmere), Mr. D. D. Kanga, Mr. H. D. Kanga, Mr. A. H. Mehta, Mr. Meherhomji, Mr. J. D. Mody, Mr. Daruwalla, Mr. L. Raju (senior) with Mr. Saklatwalla as reserve.

We read with regret among the obituary notices in the English papers to hand by last mail that of Jeremiah Gerald King, formerly a Calcutta broker. He was always ready to promote sport in his own modest way and for years rendered the Bengal Presidency Athletic Association good service by taking charge of the gate arrangements at their annual sports.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 24th August 1906.

THE evidence given at the Montagu court-martial left little doubt in any reasonable mind as to what the verdict must be. Captain Adair admitted that he counted on the fog signals on Lundy to warn him of danger, but could not controvert the wealth of evidence brought to show that such signals are notoriously unreliable : also he admitted that he had not read the special sailing directions for the Bristol Channel in thick and foggy weather, though the tides and currents in those waters are notoriously uncertain and dangerous. Then he had also to admit the mistake of allowing Mr. Dathan, his navigating lieutenant, to leave the deck at the time the vessel was not only approaching Lundy but when, by reason of stoppings and changes of course her position with regard to the island was, to say the least, very uncertain. Moreover he failed to satisfy the court that his orders were so peremptory as to oblige him to return to Lundy at all in a fog so dense that nothing could be seen beyond the vessel's bows. So the unfortunate business ends : one of our few first-class battle-ships piled up on the rocks off Lundy Island what time we have a Government that objects to defensive measures. It would be too much to hope that the loss of the Montagu will influence a change in the naval programme.

Wednesday was the hottest day we have had this year. At ten in the morning the thermometer stood at 80°, and in the early afternoon it reached 85° and there stayed till well on in the evening : it was 77° indoors at ten o'clock in a room which had been kept as cool as blinds and closed windows could keep it all day. There was not a breath of wind stirring and when you went out of doors the air struck you hot in the face in a way that recalled the normal experience of the east. A singular incident occurred on the river Severn where a barge loaded with naphtha suddenly burst into flames, the stuff had been ignited by the heat of the sun. Whether the heat had anything to do with it or not I do not know, but Tuesday saw an extraordinary invasion of flying ants which appears to have prevailed all over the south east of England. The insects appeared in millions in various parts of Kent and Sussex, and the pavements in London were alive with them.

The reports concerning the extent of damage and loss of life caused by the Valparaiso Earthquake have been unusually conflicting. This is, no doubt, due to the fact that telegraphic communication was very completely stopped and information came through various channels carried by refugees on horseback and it is evident that the report of each relating to what fraction he had actually seen was accepted as applicable to the whole. On Wednesday it seemed that the report had been vastly over coloured, but later messages, principally from private business houses, seem to indicate that the destruction at Valparaiso has been even greater than at San Francisco and that the surrounding districts have suffered as severely as the port.

That worthy, but not very tactful person, Sir Henry Cotton, has rushed into print to "explain" the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller. Sir Henry's view is that Sir Bampfylde did not understand the Bengali character : that while "it was open to him to have adopted a policy of tact and conciliation and concessions," he preferred "to follow a policy of repression," and was guilty of "various harsh and unsympathetic measures." Inasmuch as Sir Henry thinks it "is not possible to take any reasonable objection on principle" to the Swadeshi movement, and, by inference, to the measures adopted by agitators to foster it, his view can be understood if not appreciated. The strange thing is that a man who has known the responsibilities of Eastern Government should have the moral courage to write thus concerning "principle" to the exclusion of the manifestly expedient.

While on this subject it seems worth drawing attention to the very sensible article on the "Extension of Local Self-government" in India which appeared in the Times of Monday, 20th. The writer knows what he is writing about, and lays his finger with certainty on the weak spots of elective system in the East. Some of us have a precious low opinion of the electoral system wherever in use, but the writer of this article is particularly accurate when he says "The best men, the natural leaders of Indian society will not face a contested election .... will not solicit election or put themselves in competition with a candidate whom they consider inferior to themselves." All who have had knowledge of India since the Ripon Era, know that a municipal election means nothing more than a racial or religious quarrel.

Somebody signing himself "Volunteer Officer" has offered Mr. Haldane an idea for overcoming the difficulty of getting volunteer officers of whom there is serious dearth. He suggests that all volunteer officers who arrive at field rank should become de facto Justices of the Peace. So far as the direct results of such a step are concerned it is very likely it would work well : ability to write "J. P." after his name would be a real inducement to men of the class from which in this country volunteer officers are drawn. Whether the "great unpaid" would profit is another matter, but I imagine that the J. P.'s so added to the Commission would be at least as capable of adorning the bench as the G. O. M.'s once famous "workman" magistrates.

The advocates of female suffrage held a meeting in the Park on Sunday afternoon. The circumstance that the interesting martyrs who had been released from Holloway a few days previously were to speak, attracted a large and entertained if not strikingly sympathetic crowd. Mrs. Sparborough, gave Holloway a high character for "sweetness and cleanliness;" which excited some ribaldry among her hearers and some pertinent remarks on her prospects of enjoying these luxuries again. I am beginning to think that this suffragists' movement will enjoy a longer life than was anticipated ; its apostles seem proof against ridicule in its most naked and unsparing shape.

The fact that it is the silly season must, I suppose, be held accountable for the solemn warnings conveyed by naturalists' in the press—Fleet Street naturalists—against sharks at popular bathing resorts : fish, not thimble riggers or bridge players of respectable exterior being meant. These warnings against the "fierce denizens" of our seas—perfectly harmless to all and everything save small fish and fishermen's nets—serve to amuse by their portentous solemnity. The detail that never in the history of bathing in England has a basking shark hurt anyone carries more weight than the ponderous silliness of these "warnings" which always remind me of the famous precaution taken by the White Knight in "Alice" to protect his charger from the bites of sharks.

It is become a platitude this summer that "the river is out of fashion." The summer has been an ideal one for boating, but the boating fraternity once so large that the Thames was hardly wide enough to hold it, has become so reduced in numbers that they who let out boats for hire are in despair. The river is deserted ; above Reading, even on Saturday afternoon or Sunday you may scull for miles without meeting half a dozen boats where, ten years ago, your cox had his work cut out to steer a way through. Some people say it is the motor-car which has taken away the patrons of the river, but this I very much doubt, and I prefer the view of those who say the "river craze is past" Thames had its vogue for quite a decade and then it waned, people seeking their pleasure elsewhere.

You would not expect much in the way of theatrical news at this season when the list of advertisements "under the clock" has shrunk to ten theatres. The number would be eleven but for the circumstance that the road is "up" in St. Martin's Lane. It is stated that the career of the Lyceum as a music hall is likely to terminate and that the house will be "captured in the interests of melodrama." Melodrama has ceased to attract in London : if you wanted the fine old blood and thunder business you had to seek it in provincial towns. I happened to be passing through a large north of England town one day early this week and the sensational posters on the walls took me back twenty years. Such lurid attractions have not been seen in London for many a long day.

Next week will be a busy one. The Lyric opens with a play by Baroness Orczy and Mr. Barstow called "The Sin of William Jackson," described as a drama of East End life : Miss Nina Boucicault is to have a part in it and this serves as a recommendation ; the lady is one of the cleverest and truest actresses we have. Mr. Locke has dramatised his novel "The Morals of Marcus" and the result to be produced at the Garrick on Wednesday. The revival of "The Winter's Tale" at His Majesty's to-morrow week is noteworthy for the circumstance that Miss Ellen Terry is to play Hermione : 'twas ever hard to say farewell to the stage : Mrs. Tree is to be in the caste, and observe, as Paulina and Miss Tree as Perdita. Mr. Seymour Hicks is going to follow "the Beauty of Bath" with another musical piece called "Everybody's Darling ;" Miss Marie Studholme will have a part in it.

I never see Miss Studholme's name without thinking of the number of relations she used to have. It is more than ten years ago now and perhaps there is no indiscretion in mentioning it. I was connected with a certain London weekly, since dead, and on one occasion we gave as the pictorial supplement the portrait of Miss Studholme. The lady is more than pretty and that week's issue sold like wild fire : I remember we "went to press again" to meet the demand. On the Monday after and for a fortnight following the editorial baskets were deluged with letters from young men. I classified a selection : sixteen were cousins : two or three were uncles : one, bolder than the rest, thought she was his lost sister : four wrote on behalf of sisters who thought Miss Studholme was a school fellow : and all wanted her address. The lady has long made her name and no doubt all these relatives and friends are now able to write to her direct. Madame Clara Butt is making good progress towards recovery from an operation for appendicitis, which was performed a few weeks ago. She and Mr. Kennerley Rumford are going to Australia next year.

Nor is there much to say concerning the music halls. The dancer called "Le Domino Rouge" made her appearance at the Palace on Monday night and scored an undoubted success. Enveloped in a scarlet silk shawl she dances before a background of large mirrors : the result is bewildering and effective if rather tiring to the eye seeking to take it all in. The dancer is slim and sinuous and her dancing is a revelation—all on the tips of her toes. At a certain stage of the performance the mirrors vanish and where reflections were are six girls in Eastern dresses dancing within the mirror frames. As soon as your eye is reconciled to the change the mirrors appear again to reflect the six dancers before them. The "turn" caught on at once and was hailed with roars of gratification.

Miss Ada Reeve has returned from South Africa and made her appearance at the Tivoli. Her singing is always a treat ; "wickedly clever" as somebody described it. One of her new songs concerning the qualities desirable in the wives of cabmen was particularly good. Another Tivoli attraction is Mr. Fragson quite the cleverest ventriloquist I have ever heard : it was difficult to believe that the restless baby he was trying to soothe was not really there in the flesh behind the scenes : his imitation of the infantile cough and crying would be extraordinarily clever in any case : to produce the same sounds ventriloquially seems to me a stroke of genius.

The principal novelties at the Hippodrome are Gudzow, the Russian horseman and the Leamy troupe of girl gymnasts. Gudzow exhibits his useful faculty for hanging to his saddle by one stirrup—secured somehow to the girth—while he picks up his hat and other sundries from the ground. I have never been able to appreciate gymnastic performances that involve peril to the lives and limbs of girls and the Leamy troupe's turn partakes of this character : it is very graceful as regards some members, but the attractions of the performance are not enhanced by the display of strength of jaw given by those members who hold trapezes in their teeth. A dozen Arab equilibrists and gymnasts also find much acceptance with the country cousin.

It is, of course, the hour of the country cousin. He (and she) is with us in thousands this year: he is to be seen by the brake load contemplating the Albert Memorial: he occurs in knickerbockers and white worsted stockings in the Natural History Museum: he is "doing" the Houses of Parliament with a sixpenny guide book: he is writhing with pride and admiration in the Tube; and he mounts with cries of encouragement to friends below to the top of the motor bus. She is equally ubiquitous in wonderful and fearful garments: if it is difficult to say whence she came, more mysterous yet is the source whence she gets her clothes: but here she is enjoying herself on pavements glowing with the heat when the shady side of a haystack seems a paradise.

"East is East and West is West:" but if never the twain shall meet they may come with measurable distance of it. How is this for catholicity of view? Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, who died last July, leaves his real estate in Calcutta to his sisters "subject to their keeping up the worship of the deities at 70, Bulloram Dey's Street, established by his parents and grand parents," and he "dedicates his house at Benares to the worship of the Sib Thakoors and nominates his sisters Sabayts of the Sib Thakoors." And this broad-minded Bonnerjee directs that his sons shall be educated at Rugby and Oxford and his daughters at Girton and Newnham. I only hope the Thirty-nine Article difficulty will not stand in the way of the will of this sturdy adherent of his father's faith.

The District Railway Company proposes to seek greater prosperity by raising its fares. The expense of making the change from steam to electric traction has been great and the bill for repairs to rolling-stock out of all proportion to that for repairing the old stock; whence, I presume the contemplated change. But will it pay?

The G. W. R. have created a new route to Ireland, the sea passage being from Fishguard on the Pembrokeshire coast to Rosslare on that of Wexford, the distance is 54 miles and the Company are putting on new turbine steamers which will cross in from 2½ to 3 hours. This new route will render obsolete the comparatively recent Milford Haven-Waterford route. The advantages of the new route are summed up as "breakfast in London and sup in Killarney."

TIGER SHOOTING IN UPPER BURMA.

I.

I AM not prepared to say that tigers are as plentiful in Burma, as in India. If the sportsman will take the trouble to look for them, however, in the proper way, he will come across plenty of these animals. They are certainly not so get-at-able here, nor are they so easily located as in the land of Rajahs. As trackers and shikaries, the natives of India are, I think, perhaps on the whole more persevering workers with regard to tracking up and marking down animals than are Burmans. "Baksheesh" has, I daresay, a good deal to say to this. Rupees tempt the former more than the latter, who are not by any means money grubbers. Owing to the uninhabited state of many parts of the country, and the absence of large herds of cattle, tigers in Burma confine their depredations to hamlets situated usually at the foot of ranges of densely wooded hills, like the Yomahs, or in the midst of large stretches of virgin forest, or low-lying swampy forest. In most cases these wooded hills and stretches of grass, jungle, and forest in Burma are teeming to such an extent with game, such as sambur, pig, brow-antlered deer, barking deer, hog deer, tsine (Banteng or Bos sondaicus), and gaur, that tigers obtain a full meal whenever they require it without coming down to harry the small herds of outlying villages. In India, again, tigers are attracted to the neighbourhood of villages by the large herds of cattle which exist, and from which a toll is levied from time to time. The country being thickly populated, native hunters find it an easy matter to keep an eye on likely patches of jungle and mark down tigers till some "sahib," willing to pay for the information, comes along. Burmans, unfortunately, rarely take the trouble to give information when any of their cattle have been killed. The animals are invariably cut up at once, and the meat is either distributed or sold. In some districts tigers play great havoc with buffaloes, bullocks, ponies, mules, and goats.

The first tiger shot by me in Upper Burma was bagged in the district of M——, a place once famous for its big game—now, alas, terribly thinned out by the countless number of Kachin, Burman, Shan, and native hunters in possession of fire-arms, given originally in most cases for the protection of their crops. I was just stepping out of my bath preparatory to having breakfast after a hard morning's work with bison, a big bull in a herd of which, I had to my disgust, missed most disgracefully when the Goorkha "durwan" of the N——, P. W. D. bungalow came galloping along the track leading to K——, beside which my tent was pitched, and dismounting, shouted out to me in a great state of excitement, that a tiger had killed a cow that morning close to the village and was still feeding upon the carcase when he left N——. It was then about 10-30 A.M. The poor man had come along at such a pace, that he had fallen off en route, and barked himself badly in two or three places. As I was on my way to N——, to inspect an outpost there, the "khubber" suited me down to the ground. Jumping into my clothes I hurried through with breakfast and ordering my pony to be saddled, cantered off to N——, accompanied by the "durwan," who gabbled away to me about the tiger all the way. On my arrival at the village about 2 P.M. I learnt that no one knew anything about the animal or kill, but that a Shan on his way home early that morning had, when within about five or six hundred yards of N——, seen the tiger which had sprung backwards and forwards across the road in front of him several times, and had then disappeared. The Shan, it seems, thinking that the animal meant mischief had drawn his long fighting "dah" out of its sheath to defend himself with and had then bolted for the village after uttering a shout or two to frighten the animal. This had the desired effect, for he did not see it again. I now learnt also that an old emaciated cow belonging to no one, which used to wander round the village, had at last dropped down from sheer exhaustion and old age, and was lying helpless in a small clump of plantain trees situated within about 30 yards of the village, and about three paces from the high road along which the Shan had been travelling when he encountered the tiger. The whole affair had been grossly exaggerated and I saw at once what had really happened. The tiger had evidently been on his way to stalk the cow when the meeting with the Shan disturbed him and put an end to his plans. The encounter had evidently displeased who had showed his displeasure and discomfiture by acting as he had done. The villagers and the durwan of the bungalow, on hearing the Shan's story, had at once taken it for granted that the cow had been killed by the tiger, and although it was broad daylight when the affair took place, and there was a gun in the village belonging to the headman, no one thought for a moment of going out to see whether the cow had, or had not, been killed by the tiger

I settled the matter when my pack mules turned up with my kit and guns, by going and seeing for myself. It is marvellous what confidence is inspired in the breast of an oriental by the presence of a white man. Although they kept at a respectable distance behind me, some 20 villagers in all accompanied me to the scene of the supposed kill. Here I found the cow lying down untouched, and, of course, there were no signs of the tiger. The unfortunate animal, it seems from inquiries made by me on the spot, had for the past two days been left lying helpless where it had fallen in the blazing sun, without either food or water. Just what a Burman would do! They never think of attempting to put any animal out of its misery by killing it; they would rather allow it to die slowly by inches of old age, hunger, or thirst, it being against the Buddhist creed to take life except in self-defence. As it was full moon that night and there was some possibility of the tiger turning up, I made up my mind to sit up in a "machan" for him over the remains of the cow which, with the consent of the villagers, I intended putting out of its misery. This being done a small platform was soon erected for me by the villagers at a height of about 10 feet from the ground in the centre of three or four plantain trees which grew within about 15 feet of the spot where the carcase lay. Taking a revolver and my 12-bore "Cosmos" ball and shot gun, built to burn 4½drs. and throwing a heavy conical bullet of hardened lead, I entered the "machan" alone at 6 P.M., At 7-30, the moon having risen well up above the tree tops in a cloudless sky, everything was brilliantly illuminated. Drops of shining moisture, the result of a heavy dew, were now falling from all the bushes and trees around me, with a steady pitter patter. Suddenly from a neighbouring hillside, away in front of me, about a mile off where there was some very heavy cover, I heard a roar followed by others at intervals. These drew nearer and nearer, and then ceased altogether, as the animal approached the village. She, for it turned out to be a tigress, was noted for the noise she made when she began her nocturnal prowls. I was only hoping fervently that she would come near enough to the kill to obtain a whiff of the fresh meat and blood of the carcase, which, besides having its throat cut, had been disembowelled. She came much sooner than I expected, taking me completely by surprise. At 8 P.M, while I was leaning forward staring vaguely at the kill, dreaming of the past, my ball and shot gunlying across my knees, I was thunderstruck at suddenly seeing on the other side of the kill, within a foot of it, a shadow, a something that was not there before, which vanished again as noiselessly as it had appeared. It was the tigress which had come and gone again without so much as deigning to even sniff at, or look at, the carcase, far less give me an opportunity of levelling my gun at her. She turned her head, lifted it and looked me full in the face for a second, then moved off and disappeared round a bush on to the high road. Whether she saw me or not or suspected something, I am unable to say; at any rate, she did not appear to be particularly hungry. It was marvellous how the colours of her coat blended with her surroundings and made her partially invisible when standing in front of me with a full moon overhead. Thinking, perhaps, she might turn up again, I waited for another hour. She did not put in an appearance however, so I returned to the village, had dinner and went to bed.

My boy, on waking me in the morning, with my tea and toast, greeted me with the comforting news that the tiger had "done finished" eating the cow, his way of putting it that the tiger had had a meal at the carcase. I was in the "machan" again that evening at 6 P.M., determined not to be caught napping again. At 6-30 P.M., some way off from the edge of a neighbouring clearing, I heard a jungle fowl get up with a cackle and fly away screaming. Some monkeys also, which had been feeding close by, kept up an incessant chatter till it got dark, when all sounds ceased. These were distinct signs that the tiger was afoot, for I knew that no villagers were about here. Although no roars were uttered she made no secret about her approach this time, for about 7-30 P.M., after the moon had been up some time, I heard her moving stealthily along through the undergrowth towards the carcase. She did not hesitate once, but came straight on, being evidently quite unsuspicious of any danger. On reaching the body of the cow she sniffed at it once or twice and then suddenly throwing up her head, directed a piercing glance at the "machan." Her yellow eyes appeared to be looking straight into mine. Appearing satisfied with her inspection, she lay down on all fours, and after making one or two determined efforts to remove the carcase, gave it up as useless, and then set to and buried her teeth in the meat. I was determined to let her have plenty of time, so waited fully 5 minutes, during which she raised her head a number of times listening to every sound that came from the village. I aimed for a point between her neck and shoulders, and fired. A series of themost appalling snarls and roars followed my shot, as she dived out of sight with a crash into the undergrowth some five or six paces from the kill where she rolled about roaring and snarling in a manner exceedingly trying to the nerves. From the sounds emitted between her growls, she seemed to be alternately swallowing and ejecting mouthfuls of blood. As the undergrowth was about 5 to 6 feet in height here, I was unable to see any portion of her, or else I would have at once put her out of her misery by firing again. As soon as it became apparent to me that she was fast getting into a comatose and therefore harmless state, for she had also by now begun to breathe stertorously, the loud snoring noise she made being audible at a distance of at least 150 yards, I summoned up enough courage to climb down from my perch and get out on to the road, where I joined the villagers who were armed with spears and "dahs" I was exceedingly puzzled to know where I had hit her, and assumed that the bullet must have taken her about the head somewhere, and then passed down her throat.

Directing the villagers to make a big fire at a safe distance, and let me know when allsounds ceased, I went back to the bungalow and sat down to dinner. Shortly my ears were greeted by a series of yells and cheers from the direction of the kill. Guessing what had happened, I jumped up from the table, sending my plantain fritters flying, seized my gun, and was out of the bungalow and at the scene of the kill in a trice. As soon as they had heard the tiger's groans cease, the whole village, to the number of 20 or 30, had turned out in a body during my absence with torches and lanterns and, in spite of my warnings, had literally cut a passage through the undergrowth to the spot where the tigress lay dead, fortunately for them. I found them all congregated round the animal when I appeared upon the scene, busily engaged jabbering away to one another, and measuring the beast. My bullet—a concial one of hardened steel—had caught her fair below the right eye, crashed straight through the base of the skull fracturing it slightly without damaging the brain, and then continuing its course through her mouth and throat, lodged eventually beneath the skin of the left shoulder. She had really died of suffocation, loss of blood, and shock to the brain. The tape showed her to be only 8 feet in length.

AMONG THE KAFFIRS WITH A SHOT GUN.

ONCE a South African, always a South African. And it is supposed there are many besides the writer of this paper, who have been bitten with the charm of the sub continent which has so many pleasurable remembrances for all those who have traveled in the Land of the Kaffirs and participated in the sports that it affords. Everything there is so strange and likewise interesting; and it is needless to say that these impressions must forever linger on the mind of the man who has taken his walks abroad and found himself among more or less heathen people, who are so full of humor and splendidly made. The acme of coloured manhood may be found among the Zulus of Natal and their immediate neighbors. And truth to tell these very ideals of the Bantu race rather look down on Kaffirs as Kaffirs do on Hottentots, the last-mentioned with their continual "clicks" in their language, being strangely connected in tongue, at least, with the continual "clicking" baboon, of which more anon.

When I got into some of the wilder country of Cape Colony a curious thought crossed my brain. It would appear that the retentive memory was well stored away in the head. It was one of the wet Sunday evenings "at home" when the weather being so bad we were unable to visit the sanctuary and a devoted mother would show her child the pictures of volume after volume of the Old and New Testaments. Verily, I saw some of the very same scenes before my eyes: and the books also, that had been given to the family by ministers, or rather missionaries of the London Society, contained true realizations of all that is so quaint to the white man in the Dark Continent. Here indeed was food for the observer, among the beehive huts of the sons of Ham, those decent men and women in peace, but the incarnation of the very Devil himself in war.

There is something so delightful being among strange people. You know that to lose your dignity would soon mean your downfall, and that is the reason that no man who has not visited that far-off land can form any just opinion as to the right way to "handle" a Kaffir or treat a human being, who is to all intents and purposes quite a barbarian and in many instances an out-and-out savage. The terrible mistakes that have been made in South Africa have been because of the doings and machinations of European Governments who are unacquainted with the countries of Africa and their races, and turn a deaf ear to their representatives abroad, the while accepting the dictation of the stay-at-home politician, debater and wire-puller. These references are here given for one purpose: it is that persons should see South Africa for themselves and partake of the very excellent sport that there may be had by everyone who can afford the time and a little money. Big game shooting is terribly expensive. The larger carnivora, pachyderms and antelope have steadily retreated northwards with the ever-advancing march of civilization, and it is only the rich man who can follow ivory and horn into the vast recesses of that part of the world.

To-day I will ask my reader to come with me to the Eastern Province of Cape Colony, which has its port at East London. It can be swelteringly hot there at times, while the glare of the white streets is trying to the eyes, and you will now and then need colored goggles. Climb up the tiring hill from the wharves and you will see sea shells in the earth at a great altitude, while the most gorgeous butterflies flit past you, and beautiful dragon flies with their wings going at seemingly a million a minute rate, flash by in an instant. When you have seen the lions of the place and been entertained by the many-time Mayor of the town, Mr. David Rees (a more than hospitable gentleman who I believe is still in the good land of the living); then take the train and go on to King William's Town, just on the border of Kaffraria. The journey will occupy a night. At King William's Town you will find a very good river that has been well stocked with brook and rainbow trout and is a source of great satisfaction to the military stationed at that great center of Kaffirdom; also to the other white residents. But from the large number of skins of otters hanging outside the Kaffir stores you will at once feel that unless trapping is resorted to in no half-hearted manner that the long-backed, strong-tailed, punishing-jawed and short-legged fisherman of the river will take a terrible toll from the waters of the Buffalo.

But we will leave "King" and go on to Queenstown, or "Queen," as the pretty little quince-growing town is called. It was from here that the late General Gatacre set out to meet with his terrible reverse at the Stormberg. In the center of Queenstown is the market place, octagon-shaped. In Kaffir wars here would the whites laager while the ordnance could command all the eight approaches to the town; thus were the savages kept in check. But we will continue our journey now out to the wild veld and with our wagon, dogs, guns, Kaffirs and the general paraphernalia of a well ordered hunting expedition, our hearts are alive with joy and our brains afire with expectancy. And how glorious are the delights of the man abroad after sport, with all the enthusiasm of youth in his soul and the jangle and clash of the bourse left far, far away in the outside world. You are beyond Scandal and Rumor is a stranger in the land.

On the particular occasion of which we write we were five white men and all bent on shooting quail, guinea fowl, the different kinds of hares, rheibok, snipe, wild duck, rock pigeons, doves and whatever other kind of feather or furred game that came our way. There were a couple of rifles among us, but with the exception for buck or maybe baboon, these were not used, excepting for practice, the target being a beer or wine bottle set up on one of those baked-hard antheaps with which the veld abounds. Or in the event of a paan (a great bird and a splendid delicacy of the country) being seen his end would come through the means of a single missile of lead. Our dogs were English setters and one of them a young bitch, a daughter, by the way, of Champion Rockaway, the Long Island bred dog, which won all over the place here, was purchased in this country after a successful career, to afterwards become a champion in England, then to be sold to Mr. "Kil" Tiffen at the Cape, where the dog kept up his name and lineage, and sired extra good stock as well. Poor old Rockaway's bones are now beneath the sod under the sunlit skies, and star-impregnated firmament where may be seen the Southern Cross.

But you will want to hear about the shooting. The quail and hares are to be found on the veld in the long, slight grass; they lie well to a brace of dogs, and we always had plenty of quail to eat. To partake of the flesh of the "haas," or hare, was a great shock to the Dutchmen who occasionally came into camp. True to the teaching of the Laws of Leviticus, the Boer looks upon the hare as an unclean animal. In this connection it would be well to mention that the mushrooms we gathered, the Kaffirs considered poison, while the toad-stool appearing fungi that the blacks devoured the whites thought would effect their instant dismissal to that place where the Ethiopian believes he will be surrounded by wives, Kaffir beer and all the tobacco that he cares to smoke. Different people, different tastes.

But it was the partridge and guinea fowl shooting that was most enjoyed. Both are spendid birds, but guinea fowl play the very deuce with dogs. They, because of their running, demoralize the gun dogs, and you have to go after these packs of birds in the midst of a dense bush of mimosa that acts as a fringe of foliage to the great gaunt, bouldered and bare hills or mountains; it is impossible to stop the dogs from chasing. With the "Go back! Go back!" of the ever wild bird that we are so associated with in domesticity, the dogs lose their heads as the speckled birds run on and on like so many rabbits, to fly back over your head with great swiftness. That they take a lot of shot goes without saying. I have seen the lead (shooting with smokeless powder) smash into them and their feathers parting, and the bluesgrey spotted plumage dropping like so many snowflakes. But so great was the momentum of the bird that he would keep on his course, laden with his cargo of chilled No. 4 and drop, goodness only knows where! Because of the thickness of the bush it would be impossible to see where the bird fell, to die and become the hearty meal of the prowler of the night, for this place was infested with those artful but beautiful creatures, golden jackals.

Writing of jackals reminds one of a very strange sight one morning when your correspondent was out after mushrooms. On a kopje the day before had been noticed a lot of stale and broken remains of the palatable grower of the early day. Sheep had been grazing on this great mound of earth and rock the afternoon before and had played the old Harry with what was thought would help our breakfast of venison and winged game. All sheep are kraalled or penned at night because of the depredations of jackals and other wild beasts. Lambs had been taken and so poison was laid (which is legal, the strychnine being supplied by the Cape Government); and on reaching the hill in question with the sun just peeping over the eastern horizon of the undulating veld, it was to be bewildered with a curious spectacle. I had well marked or noted the formation or topography of the kopje, and surely enough there were the mushrooms bursting forth through the rich red loam between the boulders and stones; it did not take long to fill the haversack. The sun was now giving a more direct light, while every blade of grass glistened like silvered green with the extremely heavy dew of South Africa, the moisture that makes the very earth rejoice in a country where the rainfall is the making or breaking of the pasturalist. There were grey lumps here and different coloured things there. They were unlike the rest of the surroundings and weren't there the day before. With the curiosity of a monkey, I ventured forward. My blood ran cold, for there lay half a dozen vultures, some dead, the others alive! They had with their unerring eyes and greedy entrails, seen the poisoned baits laid for the jackals. From out of the blue heavens where they swung with the elegance and ease of the albatross of the Southern seas, they had descended thousands of feet to take a half-pound piece of jackal-killed mutton into a cleft of which had been placed the deadly powder. Paralyzed, some had died; others were dazed but alive. It was a strange and uncanny sight. To call for my companions was out of the question; they were too far away. To fire a shot or shots would only mean to them that the gatherer of the rapid-growing plant had got into a covey of birds. But what's that! By all the saints in Christendom there were jackals—beautiful golden jackals—lying here and there, stiff and stark in death! They had partaken of their last lamb! A Kaffir dog made the sum total of the evening and night's work.

Eventually we got the whole lot down to the camp and there was a deal of skinning. The vultures were very "musky" or musty in odor. One whose legs were completely disabled—paralyzed—because of the strychnine, I tried to keep. But he would not feed. He would enjoy the water I poured down his throat with the ecstasy of a man with "hot coppers." But he would not eat, and to put him out of his misery we knocked him on the head. Like his fellows, he measured 8 feet 10 inches from tip to tip. His picture was taken by our friend Mr. Leonard Flemming while the going as vogel was very strong. Mr. Charles Forrester had no compunction in taking him by the scruff of the neck, while his brother Robert took hold of his left wing and the writer looked after the right.

That good sportsman, Mr. Peet, of Fairfield, Whittlesea, was also there, and so we spent a glorious time among the Kaffirs with a shot gun. In some instances we were kept more than busy and we ate what we shot. Game goes bad in no time in South Africa, and it is the custom to draw a bird soon after he is shot.

Then, too, we lived on green mealies or corn taken out of the sheath or husk to be roasted in the embers of our fires, sometimes made of wood and the dried droppings of cattle. We observed Nature in her wildest and strangest form, and wished everyone in the world whom we knew were there to join us in our amusements and unspeakable delights. And tired with the excitement of the day, and with the "boys" (as the natives of all ages are called), singing their strange and monotonous songs in deepest of bass voices, we would fall away to sleep under that wondrous canopy of the Southern Hemisphere, where the night's sky is a crown studded with diadems and the heavens one unbroken mass of strange constellations and a conglomeration of stars that vie with one another in their exceeding brilliancy.

"Kawfee baas." You awaken and turn around out of your fast slumber "Mornin' boy; sakabona." It is your ever faithful Klembovi with your early morning steaming hot coffee. You drink, and throwing off your blankets jump out from under the wagon and make a quick beeline through the steaming wet grass for the creek below. Disturbing very large king fishers, other water birds and an army of water tortoises, already at work, you plunge into the handiest pool. You have some soap in your hand and you go through the usual ablutions in Nature's bath. Back again to the wagon for a good rub down and you are as fit as a fiddle. The frying pan is on the fire, while an impromptu spit is at work. You have the appetite of a horse, and yours is a world of content. But you recognize you must be away as soon as possible, for it will be too hot to work the dogs, yourselves and niggers during the middle of the day. Yes, get away while yet the day is gray and yours shall be buck, brown-winged partridge, full snipe, guinea fowl, hares, khoorhan, rock pigeons, doves, duck, dikkop, and the what-not of a mixed bag.

Assuredly there are worse occupations than being among Kaffirs with a shot gun.

Shooting.

SHOOTING FOR LADIES.

WHEN in America I had the pleasure of observing that it is not only Continental and English women who take to the shot-gun, but that the American girl can also hold her own with her husband, even when the male partner is notoriously one of the finest quail shots in America. I always thought that the sporting instinct was less in women than in men, but for no good cause that ever quite satisfied reason. Perhaps it was that men, even in uncivilised times, had been the followers of Cain, whereas the women, when they have been bread-winners at all, have confined their attentions to the arts of Able. Besides, was it not to be supposed that ladies, who may study their personal appearance without losing the respect of either sex, would have something else to think about, when in the field, than merely the best way of getting up to game and then adding it to the bag! I have had to give up my opinion that men are born sportsmen and women only become so, for I could name several who are perfectly miserable when they temporarily lose form and are never happy again until they have completely recovered it, and with it their self-respect.

The late Herbert Spencer and Mr. J. H. Walsh could by no means understand the domination of the gun. Neither of them could see how shooting that was unconnected with wood craft could dominate the minds of grown-up men, although both saw the possibilities of entertainment in pitting their own wits against those of the game. Curiously, nobody who has ever succeeded in measuring himself with success against the mere wings of the game, assisted by the wits of the keepers, has ever given the position away, and asserted that this pastime of killing is mere food for children. If such a genius ever should arise, for Mr. Spencer was not a shooter in this sense, nor was Mr. Walsh either, then it is to be hoped that he will relegate the sport not only to children, but will permit their mammas to take part in it, if only for the sake of bringing up the child in the way he should go.

There is one side of shooting that is quite neglected by the average man. But you never find a girl shooting in anything less than the best style to which her figure lends itself. Lately I have been coaching a lady shooter from the beginning. Everyone who remembers her first lessons will be aware that the arms get tired long before the elementary drill is perfected. Consequently, I was naturally both surprised and pleased to see that we began the second lesson at a point far ahead of the end of the first. "Now, don't bend your head over to the right to align the gun like you did yesterday," I said. "More like this, isn't it?" she queried and posed as if she saw a rabbit and meant to kill him. "That's first rate," I replied, "but how did you learn it so quickly?" "Oh," she replied, "I have a looking-glass in my room."

I wonder how many of the superior sex have had wit enough to find out for themselves just how clumsy they can look with the gun, and so correct their own faults. I confess it never occurred to me in the course of forty years' use of the weapon. But then I am one of those inferior beings who can be called "No lady," and feel no anger.

Were I to write a book about shooting, I think I would not address it to young shooters, as Sir Ralph Gallwey did in imitation of Hawker. I should address it to lady shots, and, of course, to young ones. Ladies are so different from men; they never think they were born sportsmen, nor that it is beneath their dignity to learn. That is a great failing with men shooters, who, having for the most part acquired from the gardener's gun and the keeper's boy their styles or want of them, along with their first lessons in the art, preserve all their faults as if they were treasures, until the bad stylists themselves are no longer able to toddle to the end of a ride. It does not matter. Their conservatism is their birthright; and the more bad shots there are, the further the game will go.

The lady shooter gets herself born differently. She has never been on terms either with the gardener's gun or the keeper's boy, or not terms intimate enough to take lessons from the one or to borrow gas pipes from the other. Probably the best shot of her acquaintance has undertaken the teaching; not that this by any means ensures success, for, as Mr. W. W. Watts, who is a professional teacher, has justly observed, there are very few good shots who have much idea how they do it themselves, and most of them have none at all. That is all to the disadvantage of the lady learner, for she has to listen to much conflicting advice, all oracular, and to be told what to do before she understands half the mere sporting terms used for her edification, if not for her admiration.

The most stupid thing to do is to place a loaded gun in the hands of a woman before she has learnt anything, and to tell her to aim at a mark and pull the trigger. She will do as you tell her, and it is twenty to one that she hits the mark as well as could be wished; but that is the last mark, either still or moving, she is likely to hit for a long time. The kick, or jump, and the noise together, will have unnerved her, and hereafter she will have to go through a long course of nerve recovery, before the pulling of the trigger will cease to be accompanied by a wobble of the weapon, for she will have become "gun shy." All rifle shooters who are fair shots must have recovered from the jerky stage of nervousness, but there are many moderately good performers at flying game who can never, never hit the sitting mark, and never seem to understand why. In a great number of cases it is because, without the excitement of game, they "funk" the let-off, and do not know it. Unconsciously they pull down the gun as they press the trigger. In this case a correct diagnosis is half the cure, but with ladies I am not so sure that the nerve once fairly alarmed is so easy of recovery.

Half the fun is in beginning early to shoot game, but if proficiency is really aimed at the fun must give place to patience and drill, until every angle of body and aim can be taken accurately and every movement of the body can be made during the time the gun is being brought to the shoulder. "Right about face; present; fire!" is all wrong. The two first, at least, must be done together, and as the left foot comes down the butt should at that instant, and neither before nor after, touch the shoulder.

The first lesson is a very simple one, and yet very few people seem to understand its value. The correct positions to assume when waiting for game are also correct when waiting, or resting, between the lessons of practice in presenting the gun. As the left arm will soon let the beginner know that the work is unaccustomed, and ache like rheumatism, it is well to learn how to be prepared in a position of ease for this arm. It is done by resting the left forearm upon the hip as the left hand grasps the barrels and holds in a position ready for presentation at short notice. It is a perfect "stand at ease" position, and ensures that, when the left arm is called upon for quick work, it is not already half tired. "It is such a simple lesson!" my lady tells me; and so it is, but you will see far more good shots in the course of a year than people who know how to manage a gun with ease, and safety, when in close proximity to a dozen others.

There are several good reasons why this attitude should not be maintained until game comes into range. In the first place, it is not wise to have to bring up the barrel with a sudden jerk to an angle of 45 degrees or more. The further the gun has to move in a given time, the more unsteady it becomes when it gets there; and besides this, the flash of the barrels, coming up sharp, will often scatter a covey of partridges, and convert them into swerving and screaming, impossible birds. It will always have this effect on teal and duck, consequently when the cry is "mark over" there is no better attitude than that of bringing the stock half-way up and pointing the weapon in the direction whence the game is expected.

Practice with an empty gun in a room is also best done from this ready position. It is labour-saving, and with no more exertion enables double the number of presentations to be made in a given time, for if the gun is held low down, and then presented quickly, it not only takes more work to bring it up, but the movement becomes quicker at the end (the same force has been acting longer), and there is apt to be a reactionary jerk when the gun knocks the shoulder. This is certain to frustrate the intentions of the shooter.

It was Lord Dundreary who discovered, to his everlasting sporting fame, that the rabbit was created six inches too short, so that "no fella ever could hit a wabbit." My lady found a pheasant at least four yards too short until she had practised indoors with a shot-gun, loaded with nothing but a cap and a wad. The most graceful of attitudes lose their grace if they are not rightly timed, because they also lose their balance, and so it happened that when pheasants rushed over tree tops, with the wind behind them, all the education of the looking-glass was knocked out of time. That did not matter; pheasants were created on purpose to defeat beginners. But that did not last long; the pheasant did not always triumph; he actually became an object of derision for his sloth after a little indoor practice of the most simple kind.

The way of it is this: Fix a cork on the end of a thin stick; charge the gun with a cartridge case loaded only with a well rammed home wad; light the room with a single light, and make, by means of the cork, moving shadows to be killed on the walls and ceiling. At first your pupil declaims against the unfairness of moving the shadows after she has got her aim, but that phase passes, and she learns to shoot where the thing is going to be, and not where it is. It is not fair, and not educational, to jerk the shadow; it must have a steady flight, just like a game bird, and, indeed, if you wish it you may carve your cork to represent pheasant on the wall, and the slower you begin to move it for your pupil the more rapidly will she become proficient.

As to danger, there is none. A fat wad would do no damage if it hit a person with only a cap behind it for propelling force, and on the score of economy you require only a re-capping tool and a box of caps—not a great outlay for becoming equal to the triumphant accomplishment of meeting a "rocketting" pheasant, or a down-wind grouse, in mid-air.

CARTRIDGE LOADING.

THERE are few sportsmen in these days who care to load their own cartridges. They all desire to have the best possible ammunition in their shot guns, and it is almost impossible for the amateur loader to rival in accuracy those who make a business of loading sporting cases, whether by hand or by the aid, more or less, of machinery. Both these manners of loading are, of course, subject to mistakes or accidents. But sportsmen are right in concluding, as the great majority of them now do, that the risks of accident or mistake are much less with the professional loader than with the amateur, however careful the latter may be in his operations. There are, of course, various amounts of machine work in the loading of large quantities of ammunition, from the labour-saving machinery to be seen in the larger ammunition manufacturers' premises in London or Birmingham down to the less expensive and intricate loading machine of the provincial gunmaker, which, for the limited amount of loading he has to perform, may perhaps serve his purpose equally well, always assuming that he is able to secure skilled labour when he wants it. That, however, is just where the provincial gunmaker fails, if he is to compete in price with larger manufacturers. He cannot afford to keep a skilled loader in constant work almost all the year round. He only requires such help for a few months in the year, and unless he is able to do all his own work in the loading-room, he has to turn on an apprentice or two to that department, whose work, with every care in the world, cannot compare with that executed by a skilled loader, who does little else during the year but load, nor can a more or less primitive machine in unskilled hands cope, as regards accuracy and regularity of loading, with the finer machinery and more expensive labour available to the ammunition manufacturer, whether that manufacturer makes his own powder, as well as loads his cartridges, or confines himself solely to the making and the loading of cartridge cases.

The sportsman who has to buy his powder, wadding, shot, and cases, in order to assemble these components into the completed cartridges, by the help of a more or less expensive loading machine, finds that he does not save much money by so doing, looking to the prices at which loaded cases are now sold. Nor will he find by loading his own ammunition the quality of it is improved. On the contrary, his amateur work, however carefully undertaken, has not been done with the skill of the professional, nor can the resulting cartridges equal in efficiency those that he is able to purchase already loaded. On grounds of economy as well as efficiency, therefore, even where time expended is of no account, amateur cartridge loading is a mistake. It is more of a mistake now than it ever was before.

Every year that passes over the world of sport adds to the necessity for the exercise of the greatest care, skill, and experience in the loading of sporting cartridges, if the best results are desired.

The powder may be of the very best smokeless variety, the shot may have been procured from the very best makers of that particular component, and the wads may be of the finest; and yet, unless the most exact proportions are observed, the most minute conditions adhered to, and the highest skill exhibited, in the assembling of these three components in the best procurable cases, containing exactly the correct caps, the best work cannot be expected from the ammunition, no matter however excellent may be the shot gun from which it is discharged.

The result of the last ten years' experimental research has taught us much in the manufacture of sporting explosives, caps, and cases, but it has taught us much more in the loading of them in the most skilful manner, so as to give the most effective results in a cartridge. All the signs point to a much greater advance within the next few years along the way to perfection in the composition of sporting ammunition. A movement is on foot to standardise the taking of pressures, for instance, which are one of the most important qualities in a cartridge, not only for safety to the shooter, but also as showing the strength of the explosive in the chamber of a gun for comparison with its other qualities of velocity and recoil, for all which exact values can now be ascertained very speedily, by the improved testing instruments that have recently been invented by expert manufacturers of explosives and ammunition.

A committee is now sitting to devise a standard instrument for testing of pressures given by any explosive to be valued by the use of copper instead of lead crushers, which fix more exactly the precise values of the pressures of propulsive compounds than could be possible with the present leaden one, however useful, commercially, the latter may be found. In this field the lead has been given by Colonel Holden, who, at the Woolwich laboratories, has devised copper crushers that are believed to be the most accurate possible in their results. They are of the shape of a small cone with a blunt apex, the walls being tapered all the way down to the base, so as to secure the registration of the very smallest pressures.

But while standardising of pressures by a standard pressure gun may be very desirable, so that manufacturers may all work to the same end by the same means, it is also likely that instruments already invented and employed for securing the testing of explosives, by ascertaining the values given by them for velocity and recoil as well as pressure, may be able to ascertain all three at one time. The use of such improved and composite testing instruments gives a great advantage to the manufacturers using them, enabling them to select the best relative porportions in the components of their manufactured products and to combine them in the manner that by testing by the most approved and up-to-date process has been found most effective in field results. The caps and the cases are made to suit the powder, or the powder, it may be, is manufactured to some extent to suit the caps and cases, and these cases are loaded with the wadding that has proved most suitable as regards results, the proper amount of pressure, and no more or less, is given to that wadding, regulated to a nicety by the best machinery, and the final step, the completion of the cartridge by the making of the turnover of the case, is taken with mechanical exactitude, precisely the same in every cartridge, so as to yield uniform results on discharge.

One has only to go through any large factory where cartridge-loading is being performed, either by powder or ammunition manufacturers or gunmakers, to observe the great amount of care and attention that are bestowed upon every single cartridge loaded. When it is remembered that every single component in these cartridges has had the same care bestowed upon its manufacture, when it is reflected that each component has gone through the most careful and skilful testing before it is used, and that the proportions in which each is assembled in the case are the result of prolonged experimental work by each manufacturer, it can be realized that the sporting cartridge, as sold to the sportsman, is a combination of science and skill that there is little chance of surpassing by the best amateur effort, and that a penny cartridge is one of the triumphs of the century that is past.

But if the present sporting cartridge is a marvellous production of mechanical and scientific skill, it is plain enough from what we know of all that is being attempted at this moment on the lines of ballistic research that the cartridges of a few years hence will be as great an improvement as regards results in shooting as the present one is on the muzzle-loaded cartridge of fifty years ago. Ammunition experts are still experimenting and improving separately and all together. In the multitude of councillors there is said to be wisdom, but it is equally certain that in the joint efforts of all the leading experts in sporting ballistics there is advance and improvement in sporting ammunition. The ammunition trade is not standing still, resting on its laurels. Improvement is its watchword and combined effort has recently been its mode of procedure towards advantageous results in cartridge manufacture.

That improvement is to be the result there can be no doubt, and that improvement will be caused by greater agreement as to the most effective loading, on standard conditions, the observance of these conditions being easily ascertained and settled by the universal adoption of the same standard testing instrument, for which the ammunition and powder manufacturers are now striving to secure for the ultimate benefit of the world of sport.

NOTES ON SHOOTING AROUND AGRA—I.

SIR,—It is often extremely difficult for a new-comer to get hold of reliable information, as to the shooting obtainable in the vicinity of his station. If, therefore, old hands would leave a record in the columns of The Indian Field of the sport to be had round each place that they know well, it would prove a valuable guide to young fellows arriving raw from Home. Anyone can obtain good sport by going far afield, but it is not often that one can afford the time to go long distances. It is the shooting within an easy afternoon's drive that one gets the most pleasure out of. It is so satisfactory to be able to go off after lunch and get back in time for dinner, with a nice little bag; obtained not through the agency of a number of beaters, but simply through possessing a little local knowledge. Some of my happiest days have been spent poking about and learning the country, accompanied by one man to carry the bag. There is another point, shooting in this way is extremely cheap, so that the sportsman gets a good deal more fun for his money.

To take first of all the Tund a side, or left bank of the Jumna. If one drives across the Bridge of Boats, and turns up stream along the Aligarh road, about a mile up, the Rambagh is reached. Here some rough ground on the left of the road begins. This strip between river and road increases in width as the latter gradually gets further away from the Jumna. From the Rambagh for two miles along the left of the road, one can get grey partridges, hares, and occasionally grey quail. Among my notes are recorded two brace of greys and three hares one day, and four brace of greys and three hares another. On the RIGHT of the road there is very little till we get to the 47th milestone. Here the rough ground on the LEFT becomes bolder in character, and gradually merges into a network of ravines. On the RIGHT there is a cultivated plateau some three-quarters of a mile wide, its far edge runs in a series of nalas down to a valley, along which flows a small stream, tributary to the Jumna.

Chinkara and black buck are now met with on BOTH sides of the road. The plateau on the right is a favourite feeding ground in the evenings and early mornings. The animals come up to the cultivation through the little glens which lead up from the stream. There are, however, no black buck hereabouts with respectable heads, but some of the chinkara go up to eleven inches, and one of twelve inches was shot on the left of the road in 1902. One particular chink I knew for over a year. He was so regular in his habits that by going to the plateau about 5 in the evening one was certain of seeing him. His cunning was extreme, and it was most amusing and instructive to pay a visit to his feeding ground, and try to get a shot. One evening just before dusk he made that fatal mistake, so often committed by gazelle, of hiding himself behind a thin bush, and so got shot through it. Near the 47th milestone a kutcha road branches away to the right of the high road. One can drive two and a half miles down this till a fair sized village is reached, beyond which the road becomes very bad. On the right of the village are jungle-covered ravines, which hold plenty of small game. The villagers are always glad enough to act as beaters, though they are very poor hands at it. Nevertheless with any luck a couple of guns should get 50 head between them here shooting all day. The cover on the right holds great numbers of hares and wild pea-fowl. There are also plenty of grey partridges, some quail, and to the left of the villages, sand grouse, and good black buck. Chinkara are few.

By driving along the Aligarh road (instead of turning off at the 47th mile) one can reach fair black buck country; there is a bungalow, too, where one can put up.

Now going back near the Bridge of Boats, we see the Tundla road branching off at right angles to the Jumna. Three miles along this we find good country on both sides of the road. My notes record the bagging of an eleven and three-quarter-inch chinkara near here on the left of the road and another just under eleven, on the right. There are black buck too, but none with good heads. On the right of the road is capital rough shooting; plenty of grey partridges, a fair number of sandgrouse, and down in the grassy bottoms near the Jumna a few grey quail and black partridges. These are also, of course, numbers of hares, and very frequently flocks of koolun. Along the river itself one may get an occasional shot at duck or geese.

The country on the left bank of the Jumna opposite and below the Taj, is not very good. It is so highly cultivated, and thickly grown, that little can be done without beaters. One must not omit to mention the ubiquitous blue rock, these birds are numerous everywhere, and often afford very pretty shooting. There are always people in the compound who are glad of pigeons, if one despises them oneself. As a matter of fact the young birds, which can readily be picked out, are excellent as salmi, or in pies.

In the Monsoon one may find rain quail in any suitable cover on high well drained ground. Also one occasionally sees likh, or lesser bustard; I have several times observed these birds near Agra: they are, however, usually unapproachable.

FLEUR DE LYS.

INFORMATION SUPPLIED.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In reply to "Burmah" and "Solitaire" I omitted stating that my friend was an old man, in his 75th year and in a bad state of health; his son who used to go out with me, was away at the time; had he been there I have not the slightest doubt the man would have been saved. When the cartman was caught my old friend's son was some distance ahead of me; we had galloped over three miles and the guns being carried by coolies were far behind: we did what we could before it got dark, shouting and even pitching in clods of earth, we waited until the guns arrived by which time it was pitch dark. After firing some shots into the jungle we we came away as it certainly would have been madness entering a heavy jungle at night where a ravenous tiger was enjoying its meal. I trust now that "Burmah" will not think that it was through lack of "our common humanity" that I did not rush into the jungle with a riding whip to save the man's life; had we had our guns with us it would have been a different affair.

PULTENEY.

LAUNCH OF AN "ANCHOR" LINER.

MESSRS. BARCLAY, CURLE & CO. (LD.) launched from their Shipbuilding Yard at Whiteinch, on Thursday, 23rd August, a large steel screw steamer for the Indian Service of the Anchor Line, of the following dimensions:—Length, 440 feet; breadth, 53 feet; depth, 32.6 feet moulded, with a gross tonnage of 6,200 tons, and a deadweight capacity of 8,600 tons. The vessel, which has been built to the highest class of the British Corporation, will be fitted with triple-expansion engines, the cylinders being 29½, 49, and 81 inches diameter, with 4 ft. 6 in. stroke, and will have three large double-ended boilers working to a pressure of 180 lbs.

There will be ten powerful steam winches, one of them, with warping ends, being placed on the poop for facility in handling the vessel in port.

Everything possible has been done to enable the vessel to load and discharge large cargoes with despatch. All holds and 'tween decks are fitted with longitudinal girders supported by four vertical tubular pillars in each compartment.

The 'tween decks are unusually lofty, being 10 feet in height. The petty officers, cooks, and stewards will be accommodated in the topgallant forecastle, which is 48 feet long, and the crew in the poop, which is also 48 feet long. The bridge deck extends to 156 feet, under which the engineers are berthed, and the remaining space is available for cargo or coal. The captain and officers will be berthed abaft of the navigating bridge on the boat deck. Superior accommodation has been provided on the bridge and promenade decks for 90 first-class passengers in two and four-berth state-rooms, which are exceptionally large and airy. These are painted enamel white, and are furnished with everything conducive to the comfort of passengers, including electric fans.

At the fore-end of bridge deck the saloon is placed, which is a spacious apartment. The woodwork is entirely of polished oak of light shade, with white Linerusta on the ceiling. The furniture is also of oak.

From the saloon a handsome double stairway leads to the music-room on the fore part of the promenade deck. This room is panelled in satinwood, with inlaid tulip band, the panels being decorated with artistic mouldings, and the ceiling covered with French Linerusta of suitable pattern.

This room will also be used as the ship's library, and be furnished with the necessary bookcase, also piano and writing tables. On the after part of the promenade deck is the smoking room. This apartment is panelled in walnut. The upholstery work is in blue and gold moquette, and the ceiling is covered with French Lincrusta. From this room there is a special stair leading down to the accommodation on bridge deck.

Both music and smoking rooms, in addition to sidelights, have large skylights for light and ventilation.

A nursery has been provided: also special accommodation for Ayahs.

The vessel is fitted throughout with electric light, including a searchlight for navigating the Suez Canal by night.

An insulated chamber for storing meat, vegetables and fruit has been provided, the refrigerating machine being placed in the engine room.

As the vessel left the ways she was named "Castalia" by Miss Winifred Anderson, 10, Park Terrace, Glasgow.

The "Castalia" will be despatched from Glasgow and Liverpool on her first voyage to Bombay in November, and will be commanded by that most popular personality, Captain Blight, late of the "Assyria." She is expected to make the passage in 22 days.

NOTICE.

DOORGA POOJA HOLIDAYS.

Return Tickets for 1st and 2nd class Passengers.

1. During the period from the 10th September to the 3rd October 1906, inclusive, return tickets for 1st and 2nd class passengers, available for one calendar month from date of issue to completion of return journey, will be issued for any distance over 100 miles over this Railway including the East Coast Section, Mourbhanj State and Parlakimedi Light Railways at single fares. Similar tickets will also be issued for stations distant 100 miles or less on payment of fare as for 101 miles.

RETURN TICKETS FOR INTERMEDIATE CLASS PASSENGERS.

2. Return tickets will be issued during the same period and under similar conditions to intermediate class passengers at a charge of two 3rd class fares, between certain stations (particulars of which can be had at all B.-N. Railway Booking Officers) being over 100 miles distant from each other.

These tickets will be available only between the stations for which issued and not to any intermediate stations, or for break of journey.

3. The return concession tickets for 1st, 2nd and Intermediate class passengers will be accepted to secure reserved accommodation provided the accommodation is available, on the following scale:—

Class.	Tickets required to secure a reserved compartment.
First	Four
Intermediate	Eight

4. The return concession tickets do not entitle the holder to any additional concession, such for instance as that under which women servants are, on payment of the next lower class of fare, permitted to travel with ladies or children in 1st or 2nd class compartments. Children's tickets will be issued at half the concession rates.

MONTHLY SUBURBAN TICKETS.

5. Monthly Suburban tickets for September 1906 between any two stations, Howrah to Haur, will be issued to purchasers of tickets for August 1906 at three-fourths only of usual rates, subject to the usual minimum charge.

For further particulars see notice exhibited at stations.

Saturday, 8th September 1906.

THE attendance this afternoon was thinner than usual owing, no doubt, to the threatening weather. The recent rain had rendered the course extremely heavy going, good sport was witnessed nevertheless. The public were not fortunate in their selections and the metalicians had decidedly the best of the deal. Cyril once more proved himself a good 'un and won the Bengal Plate in fine style carrying top weight. Branga annexed the second Amateur Pony Hurdle Race, for which Knock Out was most fancied. Nirvana at last secured a winning bracket after running second so many times. The last race of the day was won by Narwanah, who beat The Chump by a neck. An objection was lodged against the winner for bumping and after a lengthy hearing over-ruled by the Stewards. Details:—

THE PLASSEY PLATE.—Rs. 750 to the winner, Rs. 150 to the second, and Rs. 75 to the third. A high-weight handicap for ponies 14-2 and under. 6 furlongs.

First Day, Saturday, 8th September 1906.

THE big meeting was inaugurated this afternoon. There was very big gathering including sporting men from Bombay and Calcutta, the weather conditions could not have been better and the racing was excellent. Six races were down for decision, the principal event of the day being the Trials. This was won by the Kour Sahib's Cherson. Ballark, who ran second, should have won, but Evans was unable to assist him at the finish. It appears Evans has been wasting severely to be able to ride in this race and has overdone it. He failed to do himself justice in the Lilliputs and Maiden Plate and on pulling up at the finish of the New Plate, in which he was riding Little Admiral, he fell off unconscious. He is, however, doing well now, but will be absent from the saddle for some time. Messrs. Goculdass and A. Nanjee's stable did well, providing three winners—Bay Middleton in the Lilliputs, False Start in the Maiden Plate, and Gun Metal in the New Plate. The Yerrowda Plate was won by Corrie Roy and Mr. R. R. S. also put a win to his credit. At the close of the races the Stewards had the horse Resident produced for identification, the South Australian turf authorities have telegraphed to the Western India Stewards stating their conviction that Resident is a new name of a horse disqualified in Australia and asked for a verification of his description, but the local authorities have only been able to discover the correspondence in the off hind white foot and in no other essential. Details:—

THE YERROWDA PLATE.—Rs. 2,000, out of which second receives Rs. 400 and third Rs. 200. A hurdle race for horses. W. A. and C. raised 7lbs. R. C. and distance over 7 flights

"What is the meaning of 'alter ego'?" asked the teacher of the beginners' class in Latin.

"The other I," said the boy with the curly hair.

"Give a sentence containing the phrase."

"'He winked his other I.'"

A statistically-inclined American tells us that whilst it costs £300 to convert a citizen of Chicago to Mormonism, it only costs £8 to make him a Christian Scientist. We are left to speculate what it would cost to convert him into pork sausages.

The latest story, says the Winning Post is one of the motor hearse which was carrying its prey to the burial ground. A small boy, dashing in front of it, was caught by the wing and flung into the gutter. Jumping up practically unhurt, but severely shaken, he shouted to the grim chauffeur, "Don't be greedy."

"Judging from Miss Thumperton's treatment of the organ," sarcastically remarked the choirmaster, who objected to the new organist engaged by the rector, "you prefer to buy your music by the pound."

"Well," replied the rector, quitely, "It isn't always supplied by the choir."

STOCKTON.

FINE, though somewhat gloomy, weather saw the three-day meeting in, but what brightness was lacking meteorologically was made up for in the splendid day's racing that was forthcoming, interest in which was sustained throughout. Fields kept a good level, whilst nearly every event was contested with a stoutness that was refreshing at this dull period in the racing season. The going could not possibly have been improved upon, fast times being evidence of this.

Won in a canter by a length ; six lengths between second and third. Time—2mins. 49⅘secs.

The dull, smoke-laden atmosphere of Tuesday gave place on the 22nd instant to brighter skies and altogether pleasanter weather conditions, which was an additional inducement for Durham sportsmen to lend their patronage to this, one of the most enjoyable meetings of the whole year with Northerners. The attendance was, if anything, even more influential and representative, and again there was scarcely a dull period noticeable throughout the whole proceedings, though the exchanges went very much in favour of the book-makers, with three heavily-backed odds-on favourites failing to realise expectations.

HARDWICKE STAKES—Of 500sovs. added to a sweepstakes of 10sovs. each for starters; for two-year-olds ; nominator of the winner receives 75sovs. and owner and nominator of the second each receives 25sovs. out of the stake. T.Y.C., 5 furlongs.

Mr. A. Bailey's b f Orwell, by Matchmaker—Queen of the Rivers, 9st. 2lbs. ...	O. Madden	1

Mr. C. F. Hildyard's Heworth, 5yrs., 8st. 6lbs.	J. Priestman	0
Mr. H. Lawson's Galloper, 3yrs., 7st. 13lbs.	A. Vaux	0

(Winner trained by Hugh Pawney.)

BETTING : 9 to 4 agst. Coronbus, 9 to 2 Rosebury, 5 to 1 Harmston, 6 to 1 each Japan, Charis, and Rare Find, 8 to 1 Heworth, and 20 to 1 Galloper.

Won easily by two lengths ; same between second and third. Harmston (ran well for six furlongs) was fourth, Coronbus fifth, Heworth sixth, and Galloper (never prominent) last. Time—1min. 40secs.

There was again an immense attendance, and one way and another Stockton is making headway to an abnormal degree. It is indeed a rival to Newcastle and York and take away the St. Leger, and it even disputes seriously with Doncaster.

DURHAM COUNTY PRODUCE PLATE.—Of 1,000sovs. ; for three-year-olds ; nominator of winner receives 150sovs. ; owner and nominator of the second receive 50sovs., and owner and nominator of the third each receive 25sovs., 1 mile and 2 furlongs.

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.
Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses

Our Testing Room is in charge of
Mr. F. R. DUBBIN, D.B.O.A. (Lond.)

BURGESS' CHANNEL SWIM.

Although T. W. Burgess, the Yorkshire amateur long-distance swimmer, failed after covering about twenty miles in his attempt to swim across the Channel on Saturday for the Alexander Cup, the effort was one of the finest that has ever been made. The swim was of a very remarkable character, as the greater part of it was made in a gale of wind and in heavy seas, which it is doubtful if any swimmer except the giant Yorkshireman could have lived in for any length of time. Battling with these seas for a great part of the eight and three-quarter hours that he was swimming, proved too much, however, for even Burgess' tremendous strength. To show the kind of sea which Burgess swam through, it may be noted that it was the first time that the small boat was unable to be used for feeding purposes. This had to be carried out part of the time from the tug. The swim throughout was replete with sensational incidents.

It was four o'clock on Saturday morning when the London tug Canada (Captain Egalton) left Dover with Burgess and the accompanying party for the starting point at Langdon Stairs, between Dover and St. Margaret's Bay. An interesting fact was that Burgess had decided to try Captain Webb's course for the first time since the only successful attempt to swim across the Channel. This course was to start with two hours of the western-going tide, and thus do much to avoid the risk of getting hung up at the Varne or the Goodwins. It was 4.35 when Burgess entered the water, and he encountered a stiff wind the first hour, when the high Foreland Cliffs acted as shelter. Burgess was struggling along through valleys of rolling seas which were making a plaything of him, the accompanying tug, and boat. The greatest care had to be taken in handling these to prevent any accident to the swimmer. Burgess was striking 27 to the minute with his powerful left over-arm stroke, but the seas prevented him getting in his best work, it being dangerous to kick out too forcibly in such seas, as the kick is sometimes out of the water. The big Yorkshireman struggled very cheerfully, however, the only approach to a complaint being that he always had bad luck with the weather on his attempts. Out of half a dozen in three years' attempts, he has only had one favourable day, and then after fourteen hours he had to give up through an injured leg.

Burgess in this first hour's swimming on Saturday covered 3¼ miles, 1¼ of which represented actual progress across Channel, and the remainder the weasterly drift. The end of the second hour found him 4¼ miles out from the Dover Admiralty Pier, with Lydden Spout, between Dover and Folkestone, where Montague Holbein made several of his starts, bearing north by west. The third hour's bearings showed Burgess to be 7½ miles from his starting point. The sea showed no improvement, and the only way that the swimmer could be fed was by placing the refreshment in corked bottles, and throwing them from the tug to him into the sea, whence he picked them up, uncorked them with his teeth, and took it as the chance offered. It was noticeable that he was only taking liquids during all this period, which was unlike Burgess, as he is a big feeder. The reason was that he had shipped a good deal of water in the heavy seas, and this was causing him much discomfort.

During the fourth hour an incident which occurred which caused a good deal of anxiety. The tug, as is usual on these swims, was showing the signal "not under control" to act as a warning for shipping to keep clear. This signal apparently escaped the notice of a large foreign barque, which was driving down before the wind fast on to the steamer. The Canada's steam whistle was set going to draw the foreigner's attention, but there was no alteration of course. So threatening was the position that Pilot McKeen shouted to the swimmer who was ahead of the boat and tug, to swim back, and got the steps over the tug's side in case of emergency. Burgess swam back, with the dry remark, "This isn't the way to Calais." Just then the barque's head swung round, and she crossed the bows of the tug, having a very narrow escape. The barque was the Guapax, of Arendal, and when they realised what was taking place the crew crowded to her side and cheered the swimmer, who was now on his course again. Later, she ran out a string of flags signalling good luck.

The French cliffs were looming through the haze when the fourth hour's bearing was taken, showing Burgess to be seven miles directly across Channel. An endeavour was made now to get Burgess to take some solid food to keep up the temperature of the body, but Burgess declined, as he was feeling seasick. It was no wonder, after the tossing about that he had undergone, and on the tug, which was often shipping seas, few escaped mal de mer. Several swimmers accompanied Burgess in the sea, but, with the exception of Weidman, the Dover Channel swimmer, no one was able to stand more than a few minutes of the buffeting, and one or two were victims to sickness on coming out. During the fifth and sixth hours Burgess underwent a very bad time, but he kept going steadily ahead. Dr. Watson, who was in medical charge of the swim, gave him remedies to combat the sickness and cold. When he had been swimming seven hours the bearing showed him to be ten and a half miles on his course reckoned from the end of Dover Admiralty Pier. The westward drift had taken him about half-way between Dover and Folkestone and with the flood tide he now had the South Downs due north of him.

It was very encouraging to the swimmer at 11-40, when the mail steamer from Calais passed in close proximity, and the passengers thronged the side, waving hats and handkerchiefs, whilst the syren sounded, and was responded to by the tug. Burgess had been so unwell that Dr. Watson decided to give him a glass of champagne. Burgess recuperated wonderfully after this, and asked for something solid to eat. He was given some chicken-breast sandwiches and a few grapes. It was decided, in order to give the swimmer a rest, to put the tug's head round, so as to give him a lee shelter in the heavy seas, as he was at this time beyond half-way across Channel. The pilot decided that this course was quite safe, as it would in an hour or so bring Burgess into the strong tide setting out from the Goodwins towards France.

By 12-39 Burgess had beaten the second longest Channel swim of this year—Horace Mew's 8hrs. 4 mins. About 1 o'clock, however, Burgess was seized by severe internal pain, and although, hot drinks, etc., were given to try and counteract this, the swimmer became chilled, and had to abandon the effort at 1-24 after just over eight and three-quarter hours' swimming. He swam to the tug's ladder, and was assisted on to the steamer where he was given a hot bath.

The bearings showed Burgess was in mid-Channel when the swim was abandoned, ten miles out from the English shore with Grisnez south-by-west and the South Foreland north-west. Including the drift he had covered over twenty miles. The sea was so rough that at times he disappeared in the trough.

Burgess was given a very cordial reception on landing at Dover, where his various plucky attempts to conquer the Channel have made him very popular.

If Burgess starts again next week it will be the anniversary of Webb's swim which was made on the last of the August neaps. Dr. Watson states that Burgess was beaten by a lowering of temperature, brought about by his being unable to take enough solid food as the result of the nausea caused by the rough sea.

In order to give a good test to the leg which he injured on his recent cross-Channel swim J. Wolffe yesterday decided to make a six hours, practice swim in the Channel. He actually swam for six and a half hours and as the leg showed no trace of fatigue he has determined to make another attempt to swim across Channel this season.

ATHLETICS.

GRASMERE SPORTS.

The enthusiasm with which these time-honoured games were greeted yesterday was as great as on any former occasion. For fourteen events on the programme there were close on 300 entries.

The first event was the local wrestling, which was won by Fawcett, old Hutchinson Helsington being second. The principal wrestling events, however, were those for heavy and light weights, open to the country. In the semi-final of the heavy-weights the judges considered it necessary to "blow out" both Jack Strong and M. Steadman. This left Studholme, Great Broughton, and J. Bowman, Penrith, to contest the final for the championship, and the latter gained two of the three falls and won the belt.

The light-weight wresting proved extremely interesting. In the semi-final, F. Dent, Pegswood, threw W. Birkett, Ennerdale, and J. Wallace, who had defeated last year's winner, H. Fisher, in the previous round, had a bye. Wallace had a hard struggle in the final, but won the belt, gaining two of three falls.

Very keen interest is shown in the guides race and hound trial, and as they are competed for at the height of the gathering, the scene is a memorable one. The hounds ran a long course of over seven miles along the breast of the fells which surrounded the enclosure. Mr. Walker, of Grasmere, obtained first prize with Gay Lass.

Last year's winner of the guides' race, Dalzell, Keswick, was a popular favourite. The course up the steep sides of Buttercrag was heavy on account of recent rains, and difficult. Dalzell, however ran with characteristic gameness, and although sternly pursued by Fleming, Backbarrow, in ascending the hill, he ultimately won comfortably in 12mins.

The results of other events were as follows :

Long Leap.—J. Harrison, Beston-in-Lonsdale, 20 feet 6 inches.

High Leap.—F. Birkett, Keswick, 5 feet 1 inch.

Tug of War.—Cartmel Fell.

Pole Leaping.—S. D. Dickinson, 11 feet.

Heavy-weight Wrestling (picked men).—T. Kennedy, Cleator Moor, beat J. Robinson, Cockermouth.

Mile Race.—W. M. Scott, Witherslack, 1 : H. Lancaster, Backbarrow, 2 ; J. Heslop, Wasdale, 3. Time—4mins. 45secs.

SCOTTISH SPORTING ITEMS.

Lieutenant Halswell has won 101 prizes during his athletic career. This season he has gained six championships and two International races. He also established five new Scottish records. Manchester City has made another capture in Kelso (3rd Lanark). Last week W. Boss went round Blackhill golf course, Glasgow, in 70, which is equal to the amateur record. The Celtic F. C. drew no less than £820 at their recent two-day amateur athletic meeting, and no better sport could be desired. Only four entries have been received for the 220 Yards Amateur Swimming Championship of Scotland, namely, W. H. Haynes (Edinburgh Wynnan) (holder), W. Hope (St. Barnard's), A. Fisher (Belmont), and W. Law (Belmont). The statement made in a London paper that the late Captain Webb was trained for his Channel swim by Marquis Bibero is wrong, as he did not meet Bibero until three years after his feat. Webb was trained by F. E. Beckwith in Lambeth Road Baths, and also took big trial swims down the Thames, so a Glasgow friend of Webbs asserts. G. B. Tincler, the famous Dublin ex-amateur distance runner, is doing at present the Scottish Highland games circuit. He won the special mile race at Inverary last week. The Scottish International Selection Committee will be the same as last year, with two exceptions—Messrs. D. Campbell, Paisley, and J. G. Morrison, Falkirk Amateurs, are new-comers. Andrew McGuigan, of Newton Stewart, has signed for Accrington, and Andrew Swan, an old Galloway player, for Blackpool. Cricket has had a grand innings in Scotland this season, and some tall scores have been recorded. No fewer than sixty-three individual scores of a century and over have been made. The S.A.S.A. have had before it the basis on which the dispute with the Scottish Swimming Union may be settled, and have appointed a committee, consisting of Messrs. Pettigrew, McKay, Taylor, and Hunter, with the secretary, to bring the matter to an amicable conclusion. The S.A.S.A. have completed arrangements for the wate sion.

polo international against Wales, which is to be played at Penarth, on 12th September, and that against England will be decided on 12th October. Scotland's team against Wales will be W. Brown (Dundee) (goal), J. Baillie (Wynman) and S. Siller (Western Baths) (backs). G. T. Cornet (Inverness) (captain) (half-back), J. Rose (Wynman) J. Keddie (Leith Victoria), H. Cochrane (South Side, Glasgow), and J. S. Yuille (South Side), (forwards). The Scottish Bowling Championship, which was played in its later stages on the Queen's Park green, Glasgow, last Friday and Saturday week, was won by Gala, who carried off the McEwan Cup, gold medals, and £20. Thomas Logan Whitevale, won the Rosbery Cup and medal and £20 in the single-handed championship of Scotland by 21 to 20 from Alex. Goldie, Springhill. The Irish Football League are advertising in the Scottish papers for competent referees for their matches—fees, including expenses, three guineas. Irvine, of Glossop, has been booked by St. Mirren, as well as Macer, Belfast distillery.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Oh! We'll all go ahunting to-day,
For Nature looks smiling and gay.

THESE were appropriate lines for a lovely morning, such as Saturday's (1st September) and they must have come to the minds of nearly all who jogged along the Avalanche Bridle Path to the meet at the 5th milestone at noon. On our arrival, the Master told us that four jack had just been viewed close to the meet—a good augury. Hounds moved off nearly due west and had only gone a few hundred yards when Timmy's whistle and Captain Vane's view holloa proclaimed a jack to be a foot. Hounds took up the line down the little stream that runs towards Avalanche, then turned right handed over it and up the hill; then to the left again, never dwelling a second and carrying a fine head, they pushed him over the Muthiriga Stream and uphill. Turning right handed at the top (had they done so at the bottom some horses and riders would have been better pleased), they ran along the top, turning left handed over the Jerrumuli Stream, over the next hill and over the Kundah's Stream. Then they turned right handed, pointing as if for Sambur Shola, but turned short back to the left again, and now it is "catch 'em if you can, Sir," as they ran up to Middle Bit Shola. But they do not touch it, but swing left handed again and keeping over the top, sink the hill into Kundathiriyarai Shola, where the jack was only two or three hundred yards in front of hounds. Here there is not the smallest doubt that they marked their jack to ground, but before the Master could find the exact place sambur, pig, jungle sheep and what not had tried hounds' patience too far and they were divided in all directions.

Some considerable time was lost in collecting hounds and the Master then drew along the Bottoms toward Parson's Valley and so up to Andy Plantation, but without result. This morning's hunt was quite as good as the most ambitious could want, hounds running well together and pushing their jack along in a way it did one's heart good to see. Blood was the only thing wanting to make a fine wild sporting hunt over a rough country perfect. The time of the run was about 45 minutes.

On Monday, 3rd instant, Andy Plantation was the fixture. No need for the Master to look far for a jack, there is always a line just down by the Parson's Valley Brook and it would seem that all the jack use the gap at Andy Plantation as a sort of Piccadilly in the early mornings, so certain is one of finding a line here.

Hounds, then, picked up a line immediately they left the meet and away they streamed over the two new crossings (so welcome and quite new, having been only just made under the orders of His Excellency the Governor) and so up Vogel Hill, a long and stiff climb for horses pressed all the time by their anxious riders. At the top of Vogel Hill, after running at top speed for perhaps ten minutes, hounds divided, some going to the left, while the Master, with the main body of the pack, turned sharp to the right. Then a mist came down, but hounds ran on and eventually marked their jack to ground in a watercourse on the Mekad Stream and not very far from Waterfall. Some of the leading hounds went to ground and killed the jack there, leaving him in the hole and Captain Duff, regardless of mud, went to ground and retrieved the body. After breaking up this first jack the Master trotted off to find the other hounds, which he soon discovered in the charge of Captain Dennistoun and Captain Vane, and then proceeded to draw Bitanjekod Mund, in which were both sambur and jack. Hounds were stopped from running the former, but two couple slipped away unnoticed on the latter and were only stopped by Timmy late in the afternoon by the Avalanche Tea Estate. Later another jack was found in Woodstock and run to earth in Denmark Shola, from which refuge he was dragged by a hound and eaten. This was a real good day.

On Tuesday the meet was at the Pykara Bridge. A stale line was hit off close to the plague camp and hounds puzzled it out patiently, prettily and carefully for about a mile. Then Captain Duff viewed the jack and at his holloa a thrill went through the pack.

Where now are your sorrows and cares, ye gloomy ones?

And where your aches and pains,
ye complaining ones?

One whimper has dispelled them all! And so it had. Away we went, top speed, down to a small brook. No crossing! no matter, it is jumpable, so away up the other hill and down to a deep crossing. And now hounds have beaten the field and are climbing up the steeps of the Ghauts. At the top the jack turned left handed and so to ground in the Sholen Tea Plantation. This was a first-class fifteen minutes, fast enough to please the most difficult. A second jack was found in Road Shola and another jumping up at the same time, hounds divided, five and a half couple racing along with the Master through Paragon Shola as if for Kengodu Hill, but swinging sharp left handed back to the Toda Coffee Shop and so back to Road Shola. Heron beaten jack was viewed, but hounds must have changed, for they were racing on over the Pykara Road to Dormer Wood. The mist was now so thick that it was difficult to find hounds. The Master eventually collected them all, but did not get back to kennels until 7 P.M. after an excellent day's sport.

AJLAKI.

BOMBAY HUNT ANNUAL MEETING.

THE annual general meeting of the Bombay Hunt was held in the Bombay Gymkhana on Wednesday. Mr. J. H. Symington occupied the chair, and there were present: Messrs. Webb, Campbell, Owen, Shanks, Franks, Burney, Forbes, Bowen, Bruce, Rundle, Wilson, Farraclough, Croft, Lord, Meyer, Blair, D. N. Graham, Crum, Macnaghten, Gillum, and F. B. Hill.

Mr. Alister Forbes, Honorary Secretary, read the notice convening the meeting and the minutes of the last general meeting were taken as read.

It was proposed by the Chairman, seconded by Captain Meyer, that the report of the Committee for the season 1905-1906 be adopted, and the accounts passed, and this was carried nem. con.

It was proposed by Mr. D. N. Graham, and seconded by Mr. Macnaghten, that a pack of hounds be purchased for next season, and this was unanimously agreed to.

It was proposed by Mr. W. E. Crum, and seconded by Mr. J. C. G. Bowen, that the following gentlemen be elected (with power to add to their number) to form a committee for the season 1906-1907, viz:—Messrs. Cecil Gray, D. N. Graham, H. E. E. Proctor, J. H. Symington, J. H. Meyer, J. L. Symons, and R. W. Harter. This was carried nem con.

It was proposed by Mr. D. N. Graham and seconded by Mr. W. E. Crum, that Mr. Alister Forbes be requested to carry on the duties of Honorary Secretary. This was carried unanimously.

It was proposed by Mr. J. C. G. Bowen, and seconded by Mr. A. E. Lord, and carried unanimously "that the committee be empowered to appoint a Master and to make all necessary arrangements for the purchase and shipment of hounds."

The Chairman proposed, and Mr. H. Blair seconded, that the thanks of this meeting be tendered to Mr. Allan S. Roberts for having audited the accounts of the Hunt without remuneration. This was carried unanimously.

It was proposed by Mr. D. N. Graham, and seconded by Mr. W. E. Crum, that the best thanks of the Hunt be tendered to Mr. Choonilal Hiralal for again having supplied the Hunt with coals free of charge for use in the Kennels during the past season, and carried unanimously.

It was proposed by the Chairman, and seconded by Captain Meyer, R. E., and carried unanimously: "That the hearty thanks of the meeting be conveyed to Mr. R. W. L. Dunlop for the able and successful way in which he has hunted the hounds during the past season."

A vote of thanks to the Chairman terminated the proceedings.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

6th September.—Chinchwad Camp. The earlier stages of to-day's work were wholly devoid of entertainment and when a fox was found he proved himself master of the situation, a chinkara appeared on his line thus helping him to save his brush. Much time was spent in drawing every likely sugar field without result. It was reserved for the coverts on the other side of the Bombay road to give a fillip to the languishing fortunes of the early morning, when a young jack stole away from a jowari field near the 12th milestone; then ensued a short burst, it being a case of touch-and-go with the fugitive all the way, hounds hustled him for a short distance when he crossed the road and dwelt for a few minutes in a heavy cron, from this hounds drove him and a subsequent flutter ended in another victim to the season's death roll. Soon after this hounds pushed up a cub who did his youthful best to give us a run and took a line over a bit of delightful country; this was exhilarating while it lasted, but pace told on him and his pursuers ran into, killed and ate him all too soon. We were most hospitably entertained at breakfast by Colonel Stanley Paterson and the officers of the gallant 93rd.

9th September.—Chinchwad Camp. Another large contingent turned up to-day and were told at once that as the bound cart had broken down it would be necessary to draw the country homewards, distance from kennels being already fully 13 miles. The country in this direction abounds with knolls, small elevations covered with boulders and thickly overgrown with lantana, several of these where two or more jacks have been found during the season were first tried, but produced nothing, so a move was made until the covert opposite the 8th milestone was reached; having been left quiet for some weeks a certain find from here was expected, but alas! it proved a further disappointment and covert after covert was drawn with like result until at last, what seemed to be the line of a jackal was hit; it was always somewhat doubtful as the second whip had viewed a chinkara not far from this spot, though he assured the Master it had gone in an opposite direction, for news, what happened afterwards, I am indebted to Colonel Sheringham, who told me himself that suddenly when crossing a knoll a brace of chink jumped up in front of the hounds; he stopped them from the bigger of the two and cast them to the left with the hope of recovering the line of the jack, and this he seemed to have accomplished when the hounds went off on a hot scent; however after going about half a mile he again viewed the other chink; this was two much for him, so not to disappoint the field of a gallop and saying to his second whip "we'll kill this chink" he cheered hounds on; after being very hard pressed for about a mile the chink lay up thinking hounds would flash over him; finding himself mistaken he jumped up from the top of a stoney rise and one or two of the hounds made a snap at him as he bounded off their heads and went away in full view; his speed now soon enabled him to get out of sight and they were again brought to their noses, but without any lessening of pace which was a cracker; the chink now lay up a second time, but rising again went clean away from the body of the pack who scarcely caught sight of him and the rest of the run which lasted about half hour an at top hole speed was done by scent; once when crossing some big boulders hidden in long grass it was very hard for horses to keep near hounds, but this was the only bad bit of country we encountered, the rest being lovely turf intersected with rivulets and stone walls; once again we came upon a rocky knoll around which hounds flung themselves with ears cocked, and although the chink made a last gallant effort to escape by springing high in the air he was seized by the hounds and the Master quickly despatched him by cutting his throat. It was a fine hunt and after a foot each had been presented to Mrs. Wniacke and Miss Trevor, the venison was sent home to be distributed amongst the Hunt officials.

LOYALIST.

THE GORDON'S HORSE HOUNDS.

3rd September.—Met on the Sarjepur Road about six miles out, and Mr. Gledstanes was again in command, Colonel Wapshare having been compelled to return to Simla. Found at once in some cultivation and a fair gallop resulted. The jack was not very straight-necked, however, and, like many men in a fog, seemed continually inclined to "ease off to the left." However wherever he went hounds were always with him and they eventually ran him into a casuarina tope near the 9th milestone on the Sarjepur Road, where they dusted his jacket up and down until some lucky hound got the first snap and all was over. Not a bad little gallop at all, but there was better to follow. From some sugarcane a jack was viewed away and the view holloa was quite up to Leicestershire form (I wonder who it came from). Quickly the Master had his hounds on the line and for the next twenty minutes it was a case of getting through the casuarina tope and finding out which way hounds had gone on leaving them. Something after the fashion of "Tom Brown's" Rugby "bull-dogs" the hunt staff were always there, but the difficulties in the way of going and casuarinas proved almost too much for the field who "tailed" rapidly. The road was again reached near the same spot where the first jack was killed and here practically the whole of the field turned their horses' heads towards Bangalore. Not so the M. J. H (with a dash under the "J"). Where his hounds went he and his whips were going and persevering, fortune favoured the brave and he got up in time to see them make their second kill of the morning and recover the trophies. This was a good but very trying run of about half an hour.

6th September.—Fifth milestone Mysore Road, stony-hearted country and not much prospect of sport. It has to have its turn, but it must be confessed that this is "a most impracticable country." However, had it not been for an accident, a run would probably have been obtained, albeit under difficulties. After a brief burst on the south of the railway line, which could not be recovered on the other side, Mr. Gledstanes drew for some time without result. Then they were away from some rocky hills near the village of Naghalavi, and although no ground could have looked less like carrying a scent, lo! and behold it was there and for two miles they ran fast. Lord! what ground. Loose stones, nullahs, quicksands in the bottom of these, everything about as bad as it could be. People funked for their horses' sakes, not their own (at least so they said) and it is a fair question whether they were not telling the truth. After two miles at top speed they were still running hard, when three or four antelope crossed the line bang in front of the pack and naturally enough they broke away. However, if galloping was required there it was, for more than another mile was compassed as hard as we could go before hounds were stopped. Subsequently a long draw and no result.

9th September.—An almost unequivocal blank day which requires no description. Hounds spoke to a touch of a jack now and then but could never own it for long and notwithstanding much perseverance the Master was compelled to take the hounds home without a run. "The best laid plans o' mice an' men, etc." In fact half a dozen or half a hundred quotations fit a case like this, but the long and short of it was that the G. H. H. had a blank day and none of them were fit to speak to this morning.

THE QUETTA TOURNAMENT.

SECOND ROUND.

WARWICKSHIRES vs. 37TH CAVALRY.—The tournament was continued on Thursday, the 6th instant, when these teams met and rendered a good enough account of themselves. True the Cavalry men won by a very substantial margin, but the defeated team played up throughout with indomitable pluck. Up to the fourth chukker the Warwicks did not at all badly; but after this they were outplayed and in the end the 37th won by 11 goals and 8 subsidiaries to 1 goal and 2 subsidiaries. Teams:—

37TH CAVALRY.	THE WARWICKS.
Mr. J. P. Benn.	Mr. F. A. Macartney.
Mr. S. M. Bruce.	Capt. A. S. Toogood.
Major J. Talbot.	Capt. D. A. L. Daly.
Mr. M. H. Lucas.	Capt. R. H. Brewis.

THE STATION vs. 35TH SCINDE HORSE.—A very much closer game was this. In the first chukker the Station team scored a goal by a fine run by Palin. The second chukker showed some fast play, Cassels and Giles doing good work, and a good shot by Ready forced the ball through the posts, and a subsidiary by Cassels ended the chukker. The end of the third chukker brought the score to 2 goals and 1 subsidiary all, but in the fourth chukker, the 35th added a goal to this score. One more goal was added during the fifth, and it looked a soft thing for the 37th during the sixth chukker. A foul by Hislop moved the game to the 35th end, and the Station team scored 3 subsidiaries to 1 subsidiary of the 35th. The seventh chukker ended the game, the time limit having elapsed. Ready scored a subsidiary, and a foul against Hislop resulted in Cassels hitting a goal for the Station team. The Station team then pressed the 35th, but failed to improve, and the sound of the whistle found the Scinde Horse winners by 4 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 3 goals and 5 subsidiaries. Teams:—

THE STATION.	35TH SCINDE HORSE.
Capt. G. B. M. Sarel.	Mr. C. R. H. P. Landon.
Capt. R. A. Cassels.	Capt. A. F. Hislop.
Capt. R. H. Palin.	Mr. E. D. Giles.
Capt. B. T. Ready.	Col. F. W. G. Wadeson.

THE FINAL.

37TH LANCERS vs. 35TH SCINDE HORSE.—This game was played on the 8th instant before a big and fashionable crowd. The Political Department Officials were "At Home" and the general arrangements were complete and efficient. Sad to relate the standard of play hardly came up to popular expectation, for the Lancers, quite early in the proceedings, evidenced their superiority in practically all respects: they were better mounted, and faster, their combination was excellent and their hitting often a treat to watch. It was a fast game. Scoring opened in the first chukker in which the 37th put on two goals, while the 35th failed to trouble the scorer, but they began in the next period when Colonel Wadeson got a goal. They put on three more goals in the next three chukkers, but could not stem the tide of victory, for their opponents continued increasing their advantage and finally ran out winners by 11 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 4 goals and 3 subsidiaries. Mrs. Smith Dorrien presented the Cup to the winners, and the General improved the occasion with the time-honoured "few well chosen words."

POONA TOURNAMENT.

POONA HORSE vs. 33RD CAVALRY.—These teams met in the opening game of the tournament on Monday before a large crowd of spectators. H. E. the Governor being among those present. An excellent game was witnessed, the Poona Horse winning by 4 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 3 goals. Play ruled level throughout and the winning hit was not made till just before time. Teams:—

POONA HORSE.		33RD CAVALRY.
Mr. R. W. Grimshaw	... 1	Duffadar Fuzaudali Khan ...	1
Mr. P. Norbury	... 2	Mr. F. H. B. Passy ...	2
Major W. G. Cooper	... 3	Major A. G. Wogan Browne	3
Mr. G. W. C. Lucas	(back.)	Duffadar Alyarkhan	(back.)

Umpires:—Mr. Vaughan and Captain Hewson.

13TH HUSSARS vs. BHOPAL GYMKHANA.—The game was fairly level at the start: the Bhopal team scored 2 goals 2 subsidiaries to the Hussars 1 goal and 3 subsidiaries during the first three chukkers. Then the light Bhopal team began to over ride their oppents and their superior combination was evident. They added to their score and eventually won by 4 goals and 3 subsidiaries to the Hussars 1 goal 4 subsidiaries. Teams:—

BHOPAL.		13TH HUSSARS.
Ressaldar Sher Golam Ahmed	1	Capt. T. H. S. Marchant	1
Capt. Abdul Wahed	... 2	Capt. E. W. Twist ...	2
Capt. Imtias Ali Khan	... 3	Capt. F. G. Bayley ...	3

AUTOMOBILE NOTES FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 24th August 1906.

THE general exodus from London at the close of the season has, during the last two or three years, witnessed an increasing use of motor-cars for making long journeys. A car has much in its favour for this purpose. Troublesome delays at railway stations are avoided, and the travellers are practically conveyed from door to door, and their journey completed under the most pleasant conditions.

Shooting parties who have to travel to out-of-the-way places find a car indispensable, and the demand for a vehicle suited to the conditions has resulted in a special type of car being produced. While high speed is not essential, the motor must have ample reserve of power, and the gearing be arranged so that the roughest roads can be successfully tackled while carrying a heavy load. Often it is necessary for the car to go "across country" in the wilder districts. This type of vehicle has also been found of great use as a means for conveying luggage to country houses. Motorists were at one time prone to load as much luggage as they could get on to a touring car, which, besides leaving very cramped accommodation for the passengers, caused trouble with the tyres and springs through overloading. Wiser methods now obtain, and luggage is sent on usually by rail to a convenient station, whence it can be collected by the car.

It is very necessary before commencing a long journey to give one's car a careful overhaul and make what adjustments may be needful. See that the repair outfit and tool-kit are both complete, and carry a sufficient number of spare inner tubes to allow of good ones being inserted without delay in cases of puncture.

The results of the Scottish reliability trials once more indicate the superiority of British cars, which provided the winners in three out of the five classes. Classification by price does not seem to have been entirely satisfactory, however, and there has been some considerable talk in regard to the special Darracq, which secured the gold medal in Class 4. It is felt that by entering this car the agents of the French firm were evading the spirit of the rules. However, to win is after all, the chief consideration, and if Messrs. Darracq are prepared to sell duplicates of the winning car at the price stated in the entry form no objection can be sustained.

The win of the Richard Brasier in the big class was a particularly good one, as Mr. Ross Browne says that owing to the strikes in France the car was barely finished in time to ship it across and then had to be hastily fitted with a body which would conform with the rules, and was driven hard overnight to Glasgow. There was thus no time for turning up, but with the exception of one anxious half-day when the throttle showed an inclination to stick, the car ran perfectly throughout the trials.

The practical value of such trials has been often questioned, but there can be no doubt that had it not been for a stimulus of this nature each year the motor trade in this country would have been very backward. These events have enabled the home manufacturers to carry out practical tests of their designs and improvements in competition with the best foreign makes, and the results have naturally had a great effect in eliminating weak points in design and thus making for greater reliability. Reliability is after all, the chief requirement, and a car which is manufactured on the simplest lines is the one which will run best and can be most easily maintained.

Daimlers have made a great showing this year at hill-climbing contests, and in their class have "swept the board" in all big events. The question of horse-power rating has come in for some discussion on this account, and it has been suggested that the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders should consider the matter, with a view to having cars rated on uniform lines, so that purchasers may easily compare the various makes. At present the declared horse-power varies with the actual power given off in nearly every make, some makers giving the actual brake horse-power, while others underrate the power, and thus give to their cars a fictitious efficiency value when it is seen that a car of their make apparently only half the power of its rivals has beaten them by a wide margin.

Six-cylinder cars are likely to be many at the Olympian Show in November. One of the latest is that of the Lanchester Company, of which more favourable reports are to hand respecting its trials. Notwithstanding that neither heavy vehicles nor motor-boats will be exhibited at the November show, the applications for space have been so numerous that the sizes of stands are even smaller than last year. Heavy vehicles will not be exhibited till early in the coming year.

At the present time a very interesting trial is taking place in France which has been promoted by "Le Matin" to take the place of the Circuit European, which was abandoned through lack of sufficient support. The present trial, which has now run half its course, is divided into three classes, namely: 1. Wheels; 2. Consumption; 3. Reliability. The total distance will be close on 4,000 miles, and the course is arranged so that the competitors will experience every class of road surface, from best to very bad, while in the mountainous districts the cars' climbing powers will be severely tested. Two English Siddeleys are taking part, and making a very good showing in the daily runs

The Ardennes Circuit was contested on 13th August over the historic course in Belgium, which is considered to provide the most sporting race of the year The result was a win for the De Dietrich driven by Duray, who covered the distance at an average speed of just over sixty-six miles an hour—a truly splendid performance. All the competitors used the new detachable tyre and rim which had such an important bearing on the Grand Prix result. With this rim and tyre a replacement may be made in an incredibly short space of time.

The number of motor-cabs on London streets is steadily increasing, and they are becoming quite a usual feature on the ranks. A new cab made by the Argyll Company was driven down by road from Scotland recently. This vehicle provides seating for four passengers inside. The driver's seat is placed over the motor, the wheel base being kept short, and a good lock provided on the steering, so that it can be easily controlled and turned in traffic. The rapidly increasing number of motor omnibuses and industrial vehicles shows unmistakably what a great change is taking place in London traffic conditions. It cannot be doubted that this development must be for the public welfare in securing cleaner, healthier streets, and also, by providing a more rapid means of transit, enabling workers to live further afield.

During the present week a series of motor-boat races are being held at Ostend.

Wrestling.

WRESTLING IN THE LAND OF FELL AND DALE.

WRITING of the athletic sports at Grasmere a special correspondent says:—

It surely must be nonsense what people say about wrestling in Cumberland and Westmorland dying out. Wrestling is ordained by the nature of the country. You walk through Surrey, and you see it was meant for cricket; or you walk over the Down 5 of Berkshire, and you see that they were meant for horse training; or you examine the inviting flat walls of a Spanish church, and you see that they were meant for basque pelota. Similarly you see the country gradually arranging itself for wrestling as you come by train towards the Lake District from the south. The mellowness, the gentleness, the touches of warm red in the houses give way to something more grey and sterner. The trees become smaller, as though they belong to a province of combat. The houses are white or grey. All the red is gone.

WRESTLERS BY ENVIRONMENT.

The green hedges are replaced by grim stone walls, and so you are in the land of fell and dale, which produces strong thighs and long backs, and these thighs and backs were made for wrestling. As you drive along the road to Grasmere from Windermere and Ambleside you see the whole idea reduced into one of the most perfectly compacted mountainous pictures in the world. This picture is formed by the mountains that make a tremendous barrier across the sky at the head of Lake Windermere. It may be said that all these mountains—Coniston, Old Man, Chaife Heights, Weatherlam, Pike of Blisco, Crinkle Crags, the Langdale Pikes, and even perfectly formed Bowfell, are only hills. But the fact is that this wonderful screen is so symmetrically made and the eye is led up by such cunning gradations from small to great, and then to greater still, that the whole effect is Alpine in nobility.

Yes, these hills which you must labour up almost on all fours have produced the weight-lifting power which is necessary for wrestling. They make the history of Grasmere inevitable. The sports field at Grasmere lies at the foot of a characteristic ridge of fells, very narrow at the top and as steep nearly as the side of a house. As you sit in the grand stand this ridge rises up in front of you. On the bare, precipitous slopes of it the guides' race is run. On the verdant lawn on which the grand stand is placed the wrestling matches are held, and those spectators who are not in the stand make a ring round the lawn. There are coaches and carriages, too, all round, on which people sit and watch and have picnic luncheons, and it all looks rather like Lord's cricket ground reduced in size.

ORLANDO AND CHARLES.

In Cumberland wrestling the fall is won directly a man is thrown to the ground. There is no need to pin the shoulders down as in Græco-Roman wrestling. Here at Grasmere all is ended just when the Græco-Roman catch-as-catch-canners would be getting to the serious work. Were it not so the Grasmere sports would last all the year round. As it was, several matches went on at the same time. Many of the men had their tights embroidered with wonderful flowers or designs in silk or wool—the work of their womenfolk, who were now straining to get a glimpse of how the charm worked from the swaying ranks of people round the ground. Boys wrestled, men with white hair, who had gained in experience what they had lost in elasticity, wrestled. The boys seemed to be young Orlandos temerariously trying a fall with the Charleses of the profession, and who knows that there was not some Rosalind who saw it all dimly from the crowd, and was ready to say afterwards, "Sir, you have wrestled well and overcome more than your enemies."

THE FINAL.

Let us hurry to the final, which we arrived at quicker than any one could have hoped for. That terrible phrase of dismissal "blawn oot" had sounded for many. The final for the heavy weights—what had happened to that bogey Hexham Clarke, and why were both young Stedman and Strong, of Blackpool, to whom Hackenschmidt had taught a thing or two, disqualified?—was between Bowman, of Penarth, and Studholme, of Great Broughton. Bowman walked on to the ground, elephantine, stolid, clamped about with iron bands of strength, with a bovine neck and a hand that would make you tremble if he patted you. He is a horsekeeper by trade. He sat down on a wooden box and the box quaked Studholme, who is a miner, is lank, sinewy, and has yellow hair. In London he would have commanded immediate popularity, because the crowd would have felt that he was the occasion for the cry, "Go it, Ginger!" But Grasmere has other ways. Each man won a fall, and then came the thrilling third fall. They seemed to lift one another upwards in the crunching embrace of a bear till they stood on their toes. They swayed this way and that, leaning backwards and forward—and then the crash. Studholme was underneath. Bowman had won again. They came in to the committee-room. They argued. Studholme drank beer out of a bottle, and Bowman drank out of the same bottle. It seems that Studholme would like to wrestle Bowman again any day, and could easily beat him. The committee-man who entered the result in a book said to Bowman, with what I thought was a majestic or judge-like assumption of impartial ignorance, "Let's see. You won last year, I think."

Cricket.

CRICKET AT LUCKNOW.

The cricket season may be said to have opened in Lucknow on Thursday, the 6th instant, when the Officers of the Garrison played the Non-Commissioned Officers and Men on the Mahomed Bagh Club ground. The pitch was in fair condition, and the weather, except for a brief period in the afternoon, was cloudy and was not unsuited for cricket Play commenced at about 10-30, the Officers batting first, Major Grove played an extremely good innings for his side. The Officers' first venture realised 145 runs. Their opponents started scoring freely, but then slowed down, the innings closing for 96. The Officers in their second innings made 164, while the Non-Commissioned Officers' second innings realised 91. The Officers thus won by 122 runs, the game closing shortly after five. Lieutenant Festing took 5 wickets in the first and 7 wickets in the second innings. Score:—

CRICKET AT POONA.

POONA GYMKHANA vs. BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Played on the 5th and 6th instant Poona winning by an innings and 159 runs. They won the toss and took first knock, and at the end of the opening day's play had scored 316 for the loss of 5 wickets. Bradfield was in splendid form: he smacked the Bombay bowling all over the field, and was still batting with 146 to his credit when stumps were drawn. Ling also played an excellent innings and was out leg before just as he completed his century. The home team declared their innings closed the next day and sent in the visitors to bat. The Bombay first innings produced 77 runs, 37 of which were scored by Cadell: six members of the team retired for blobs. In the second venture 96 was put up, Monteath being top scorer with 26, Priestley next with 21, hughes. Hallett (14) the only other to reach double figures. Poona thus won as stated. Score:—

CALCUTTA RUGBY UNION CHALLENGE CUP.

FIRST ROUND.

UNITED SERVICES vs. NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—The competition began on Friday evening with the match between these teams on the Calcutta ground. The game was not a particularly brilliant exhibition of rugby, and the United Services won by twenty points to nil. Up and down play and loose scrums characterised the opening, then the United Services were awarded a penalty kick for offside against the Fusiliers. Harty was successful with the kick. Rowe next put in a good run but was brought down and the Fusiliers attacked. Edwards, however, got possession and was mainly instrumental in securing a try. The place fell short but the United Services were soon pressing and Edwards dropped a goal. The Fusiliers got away but could not get past Kidner, and Edwards relieved the pressure with a good punt. Then Rowe got the ball from Cooper and ran in with a clever try, Harty converting. The Fusiliers attacked but were kept out and Cooper going away dribbled the ball down and scored another try to which Harty added the major points. The Services thus won by 4 goals (one penalty and one dropped) to nil. Teams :—

UNITED SERVICES.—Kidner, back; Rowe, Bromage, Warden and Edwards, three-quarters; Cooper and Butler, half-backs; Hill, Lillburn, Cowie, Kidby, Ansell, Tobin, Adams and Harty, forwards.

FUSILIERS.—Dignam, back; Freer, Lewis, Butterfield and Paine, three-quarters; Rudd and Tomlinson, half-backs: Milne-Home, Ovans, Staples, Pawson, Walker, Leithley, Kellet and Fishburn, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. B. C. Cumberlege.

CALCUTTA vs. GLOSTERS.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on Saturday when the visitors won by 17 points to three. The Glosters attacked at the start and after a few minutes Berry securing dropped a fine goal. The Calcutta forwards were next conspicuous and Heilgers nearly got over. Pyne was left in possession and he jumped the Glosters' back and got in with a try. The place kick was unsuccessful. The Glosters' three-quarters next got away with a good run but were pulled up by Buckler. Determined rushes by the visiting forwards were stopped by brilliant tackling and the interval arrived without further score. On resuming scrums in midfield was followed by a nice passing run by the Glosters. Murray eventually getting over. Russell converted. Calcutta tried hard to get on terms and gained a lot of ground from a free. A second free almost resulted in Drew kicking a goal, the ball hitting the bar. They continued to press and were on the point of scoring on several occasions. At length the Glosters got away and Murray picking up smartly got over with a try which Russell again improved upon. Shortly after Frost got over, but the major points were not added. Calcutta next attacked and Siddons made a brilliant run being stopped almost on the line. The home team were unable to score and the game ended in the Glosters' 25. Final score : Glosters 3 goals (1 dropped) and 1 try (17 points), Calcutta 1 try (3 points). Teams :—

GLOSTERS.—Russell, back; Lieutenant Ford, (Captain) Lieutenant Ewell, Berry and Cagwell, three-quarters; Murray and Russell, half-backs: Prosser, Dance, Frost, Phipps, Bayley, Morris, Mason and Bloss, forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Drew, back; Siddons, Maclean, Burnett and Pyne, three-quarters; Arthur and Weatherhead, half-backs; Buckler (Captain), Heilgers, Kerr, Dick, Whittie, Berridge, Bishop and Le coq forwards.

Referee :—Mr E. Martelli, C.F.C.

WEST RIDINGS vs. SOMERSETS.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Monday, rather a one sided game resulted in win for the West Ridings by 22 points to 5. In the first half the Somersets were kept on the defensive most of the time. Hyland opened the scoring but his try was unconverted. Porter next got over, and Johnstone added a third, neither being improved upon. A run by the Somersets was stopped and Hyland got his three-quarters' going Chapman eventually getting over. Wilson added the major points. A fifth try by McCormick was unconverted and the West Ridings led at the interval by 17 points to nil. On changing ends the Somersets gave a better account of themselves, but were slow. Romans scored a try and added the extra points himself. Play ruled even for a spell and then Ryan crossed the line with the sixth try for the Tykes, Wilson being successful with the place kick. No side arrived shortly after with the scores.—West Ridings 2 goals and 4 tries (22 points), Somersets 1 goal (5 points). Teams :—

WEST RIDINGS.—Britain, back; Johnstone, Chapman, Ryan and Whiteman, three-quarters; Hyland and Wilson, half-backs; McCormick, Seaman, Reilly, Porter, Rolt, Metcalf and Lieutenants Liddle and Kennedy, forwards.

SOMERSETS.—O'Neal, back; Chambers, Captain Paterson, Evans, and Allen, three-quarters; Fear and Harp, half backs; Romans, Williams, Geen, Phillips, Murray, Francis, Turner, and Lieutenant Everett, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. Thornhill.

SECOND ROUND.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. ARMENIANS.—This game was played on the Calcutta ground on Tuesday last. The Armenians turned up three short and were supplemented by soldiers. The ground was very slushy and play almost entirely with the forwards. Bombay attacked at the start but Apcar relieved on several occasions, his kicks into touch gaining much ground. Offside against the Armenians gave the visitors a chance but the attempt to place a goal failed. Play continued in the Armenians twenty-five, but it was not till a few minutes before time that the Bombay men opened their scoring. Webb crossed the line and Sargent added the major points. The second half was a scrambling display : though the Bombay Gymkhana attacked most of the time the Armenians played pluckily and made their opponents work hard. Bombay were awarded a free kick for illegal tackling by one of the Armenians and Sargent placed a goal. Coury got over shortly after and Bombay thus won by 2 goals (1 penalty) and a try (11 points) to nil. Teams :—

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—S. T. Gillum, back; C. D. Baker, E. M. Webb, W. G. Palmer and F. C. Mockler, three-quarters; A. E Sargent and R. E. A. Bridge, half-backs; P. H Cadell, N. F. Roy, C. D. W. Bamberger, W. F. Rutherford, C. E. L. Gilbert, A. C. Hewitt, H. B. Stevenson and J. D Coury, forwards.

ARMENIANS.—Saddler, back; Apcar, Gregory, King and Durant three-quarters; Ivers and Carroll half-backs; Peters, Martin, Basil, Marker, Joseph, Mercado, Simmons and Blake, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. R. C. Cumberledge, C.F.C.

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE ground was rather heavy for the League match last week between Calcutta and the United Services, neither of whom had their best teams in the field. Calcutta won by three tries to nil and, though frequently attacking, did not deserve a larger score. Kidner playing full back for the Services, saved time after time, and were it not for his good display the match would have been deadly dull. The Calcutta forwards were lackadaisical to a degree and their backs frequently bungled the greasy ball, as did also their opponents.

Having been beaten in both their League matches by the Northumberland Fusiliers, the United Services have had the satisfaction of knocking them out in their first Cup Tie. The forwards on each side fought hard and there was little to choose between the packs, but in the matter of backs the soldiers were poorly served. Their halves did a little lady-like tackling, but showed no combination and rarely attempted passing, possibly just as well they did not, as I have scarcely ever seen a weaker three-quarter line. Lewis got in some useful kicks, and, without being good, was the best of them, but there seemed to be little life in the line. Freer seldom handled the ball and Pain, the few times he got it, seemingly waited to get tackled.

The Fusiliers' forwards, however, were never idle, though sometimes a little erratic, and headed by Lieutenant Milne-Holme and Pawson made several good dashes, but always found the opposing custodian, Lieutenant Kidner, at home. The latter stopped rushes and tackled in good style, but his lengthy kicks were ill-judged in so far as they found touch too soon. Of the winning three-quarters Rowe was the pick. He made some nice runs the best of which secured for him a try. Edwards was also good and dropped a goal from a rather difficult angle, but the other two did not show to advantage. Had Killburn been playing half instead of Cooper there would have been a deal more passing. Butler did well and seldom lost an opportunity of feeding his backs, but Cooper was frequently at fault in passing wildly and generally forward. He was always on the move but his side never knew what he was about to do. His pass to Butler who transferred smartly to Rowe, which resulted in the latter's try, was decidedly smart, as was also his intercepting a pass earlier in the game, which, by the way, resulted in nothing as he kicked right into the only man in front of him. As I have said the forwards all played hard. Harty, their captain, was best, his goal-kicking, tackling, and following up being very useful, and Lillburn came next. The score, four goals (one dropped and one penalty) and a try to nil, slightly over-represents the strength of the respective teams.

A great deal of interest centred round the match between the, Glosters and Calcutta, and the large crowd of spectators that assembled were treated to a really good display. As every one knows, Calcutta laboured under the great disadvantage of not having had a single hard fight in the League matches, so that it was a matter of conjecture how far they could be relied upon when opposed to a good side. The Glosters, too, had some misgivings as to how their team would work as the sandy and rocky soil at Sabathu is not conducive to hard games. Lieutenant Baker, last year's captain, who was unable to play owing to a knee injury received a few weeks ago, is largely responsible for the training of his team and is to be congratulated on his work.

As was expected, the game was a very hard fought one, and a dry ground, the absence of wind and sun, and an excellent referee gave each side a fair chance.

Within a few minutes after starting, the Glosters worked up to the Calcutta line and Berry, receiving the ball under the bar, dropped a goal in lightning fashion. Both teams then settled down to work in a determined manner, and attacked in turn, Pyne securing the only other score in the first half. He received a nice pass from Arthur, raced up to the Glosters' custodian, who, being ignorant of this player's kangaroo jump, went for him low, and must have felt not a little surprised when he found himself collaring air. Drew's attempt to convert was good, but the angle proved too difficult.

Four points to three in the Glosters' favour at half time about represented the difference in play.

After the interval, Calcutta in no way slacked off, indeed their forwards were having the better of matters, but still visitors added largely to their score. Soon, however, Murray gave a nice pass to Berry, who rushed in for a try, from which Russell kicked a goal.

This was the most meritorious of the Glosters' scores, and I think the subsequent two tries, one of which was converted, were of a lucky nature, but they both showed how quick the visitors were in seizing opportunities. Siddons was more or less responsible for one by a wild pass, which was neatly picked up on the bop by Berry, who speedily scored. The other was obtained by Frost kicking and following up.

Seventeen points to three appear to indicate a bad beating, but such was not the case. Arthur, Heligers, Whittie, and Siddons, were as near crossing their opponents' line as could be without actually accomplishing the feat. The Glosters, however, thoroughly deserved their win, and I don't think they had a really weak spot anywhere or it would have been taken advantage of. The Calcutta forwards were the mainstay of their team. They were more skilful than the visitors in getting the ball in the scrum, but did not always send it out satisfactorily. They were also slightly better out of touch and in the loose, but for a solid shove the Glosters were their superior.

It is difficult to single out any for a word of praise. Heilgers and Kerr were, perhaps, a shade the best, with Whittie, Buckler, and Dick almost as good. Thanks to the home forwards the Glosters' backs did not often get the ball, and when they did they made no mistakes. Their fielding seemed particularly good and I think the decisive win is largely to be attributed to the fact that whenever the ball, and it was not seldom, did go out to the home backs, the Glosters' halves and three-quarters were down upon them like wolves and they were not harassed in the same way when their turn came. Arthur, who was well partnered by Weatherhead, played a good game, and after receiving from the latter, made most of the openings, but, I think, on two occasions he should have given Siddons a chance. The centres, Maclean and Burnett, were opposed by a stronger and faster pair. The former, apart from some tackling, did not do much, and apparently had not got over the fever from which he suffered a few days previously. Both were slow in their movements and got "bottled up" too often. That the backs were beaten is shown by the fact that the wings seldom got a pass, indeed Siddons was not given one during the whole game. Near the end, however, he picked up and swerving past Ford almost secured a try. Drew compared badly with the Glosters' full back. His fielding was poor and when the tries were obtained he did not seem to be about. The visitors had a sound three-quarter line and on the day Berry and Lieutenant Ford were the best. I hardly think Murray and Russell were as scientific as the opposing pairs of halves, but their work, and especially their tackling, was most effective. Their forwards were also a very sound lot with no stragglers.

The game throughout was fought on the best of terms, and though the tackling was of the most determined nature, as it should be, there was not a single bit of rough play or unpleasantness. The winners are to be heartily congratulated.

The Somersets deserved a better fate than that which befel them at the hands of the West Ridings in their first round A good footballer and sportsman like Captain Patterson will feel nothing daunted by the rather severe beating of two goals and four tries (22 points) to one goal (5 points), and it is hoped his team will again make their appearance in Calcutta next year.

The wet ground and very slippery ball prevented a good exposition of the game by either side. It was noticeable, however, that the Somersets had some very useful men on their team, but taken all round they appeared rather an uneven lot. The West Ridings struck me as not being so good a team as that which represented their regiment last year. Hyland did a few fairly smart things but was not brilliant. Most of the tries were obtained in rather an easy fashion, but at times the Yorkshire backs showed up well. Their forwards are rather on the light side, and were frequently hard pressed by the Somersets. It will be interesting to see how Lieutenant Liddle's pack copes with the heavier Glosters.

BOMBAY ROVERS TOURNAMENT.

FIRST ROUND

EAST LANCS. vs. SOUTH LANCS.—Played on the Cooperage, the East Lancs. winning comfortably by three goals to nil, after a poor game. The East Lancs. attacked during the opening period and Booth drew first blood. Then the teams pressed in turn and both made mistakes. The rain came down heavily just before the interval and there was no further scoring. On resuming fast and even play gave place to an attack on the South Lancs. goal, Dunn scoring the second point. The South Lancs., though they played hard were unable to get through and their opponents putting on another goal, won as stated. Teams :—

EAST LANCS :—Lowe, goal ; Duckworth and Smallwood, backs ; Slater, Maunsell and Heartley, half-backs ; Simmons, Dunn, Booth, Naylor and Ainsworth, forwards.

SOUTH LANCS :—Gregson, goal ; Roach and Cook, backs ; Collins, Gibbons and Johnson, half-backs ; Jackson, Hulbert, Prytherick, Pixton and Briscombe, forwards.

ROVERS vs. KING'S (LIVERPOOL) REGIMENT.—This match was played on Friday, the King's (Liverpool) Regiment from Neemuch beating the local club by three goals to nil. They had the best of play on the opening stages and the Rovers' goal was besieged. The King's forced a corner from which nothing resulted, then a shot by Wilkinson grazed the cross bar. The Rovers cleared, but the King's were soon back again in their territory and Forshaw opened the scoring. The same player added a second point before half time. On changing ends the King's attacked, but the Rovers back played well and their goalkeeper did several good things. The ball was kept out and the Rovers taking it down attacked. They obtained a goal but did not improve upon it. Their shots were all cleared and the King's returning to the charge scored a third point. Watson putting through. Teams :—

ROVERS :—Walton, goal ; Ives and Chapman, backs ; Coppin, Pulley and Spilling, half-backs ; Watson, Christie, Jefferies, Green and Silver, forwards.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

24th August 1906.

WHAT visions does not this date conjure up, scenes of bloodshed, memories of foul and hideous treachery, sounds of the warning bell of St. Germains l'Auxelleroi, the signal of the massacre of the trusting, unprepared, confiding Huguenots—more than 300 years ago, never will that black night in August be forgotton even without Millais beautiful picture, which one meets here, there, and everywhere—to remind us and to bring back to our memory the massacre of St. Bartholomew, but what has this to do with "Golf"?—nothing! absolutely nothing, except that the date carries us away from our British Isles, and on 24th August 1906, one sees and reads of the approved modern way of celebrating the festival on the Continent, with ball and club, not with ball and blunderbuss. In Switzerland the Engadine Championship Meeting took place on the 18 holes course at Samaden, near St. Moritz; for this event a qualifying round was first played, the eight players who returned best scratch scores being eligible to take part in the tournament; those who succeeded in establishing their right for play being Messrs. T. K. Frost, H. Lambert, H. L. Gaw, W. A. Boot, R. L. Macleay, A. de Rothschild, J. Tarver and C. Depew. In the semi-final round Mr. Gaw beat T. K. Frost by 7 and 6, and J. Tarver at the 19th hole with Mr. Macleay became eligible to contest the finals. The Ladies' Championship was played at the same time, and was perhaps more interesting by reason of the presence of the holder, Lady Margaret Hamilton-Russell, who, it will be remembered, was Open Lady Champion in 1893-94-95. Lady Margaret in the semi-final found a formidable opponent in Miss Tarver, whom she only succeeded in defeating at the 19th hole. In the final against Miss DuCane, she had an easy victory by 5 up and 4 to play, and for the second year in succession is Lady Champion of Switzerland, and in the Men's event Mr. H. L. Gaw very easily disposed of his opponent in the finals, Mr. J. R. Tarver by 7 up and 6 to go.

Whilst we are on the "Continong" mention should be made of the invasion of Golf into Russia. It seems scarcely congruous that whilst such terrible events are drawing the attention of the civilized world to this nation and country, there should be time, leisure or inclination to establish even the Royal and Ancient Game in that distressful country; but still, on 15th August, the first Golf course in Russia was opened on the Kolomiaghi Race-course, a mile or so outside St. Petersburg The membership includes most of the foreign ambassadors, and Count Nirod, a well-known sportsman, whose knowledge of horseflesh induced the Russian Government to entrust him with the purchase of Galtee More some time ago, is president of the club, The services of Rendall, of Bromley have been engaged as professional, and the opening ceremony consisted of a match, a foursome, between Princess Volkhousky and Mr. Percy Henderson (of the British Embassy), and Mr. H. S. King and Mr. A. Zoppi (the Honorary Secretary) The course is at present only a 9-hole one and is, according to our ideas, somewhat short but two of the holes measure 500 yards in length and in time a full 18-hole course will be established, let us hope that the Golf fever will take such a hold on the Russian people, autocrats and plutocrats alike, that revolutions, nihilism and schism will find no place there and peace and golf will freign supreme.

Then in Austria the game has found a firm footing; there is even a championship giving on at Carlsbad, that beautiful fashionable health resort, where fat people get rid of their too solid flesh, and where thin people put on the necessary "avoir du poids" all with the aid of the miraculous nauseus "Spriidel." I know it well, that life at Carlsbad not as a drinker at the fountain, as lean or fat kine but as one who looked on and assuredly the introduction of Golf will come as a boon and a blessing to thousands who between the drinking hours find time hang heavily and who are ennuiyeed and satiated by bands of all kinds of music. The list of prizes and competition at the meeting which commenced on Friday, 17th August, was most imposing and the value of the trophies immense. The competition included players from all parts of the world, there being naturally a preponderence of British and Americans. The winner of the Championship of Austria was a youth from the New York Athletic Club, aetat 17, Mr. S. B Whitehead, and his victory in the big event, 36 holes medal competition, debarred him from competing in the minor competition: in the scratch medal competition for a very beautiful prize presented by His Serene Highness Prince Max Egon von Fürsternberg, Mr. L. Diaz Albertini of Cub, came in first with 90. The handicap prize given by Count Paul Szapavy was won by another American, Mr. S. W. Bates, of Boston (Mass.), with a nett score of 74.

But now let us come back from the scenes of revelry abroad, and let us land at Folkestone and proceed by motor, just a little 5-mile trip to Hythe, where the Annual Open Amateur Match Play Tournament was being held. Twenty-three couples entered for the Borough of Hythe Challenge Cup. In the third round, consisting of eight couples, two of the matches were very exciting and only ended on the 21st green between Mr. H. Kershaw (15) and Mr. J. Douglas (3), and Mr. J. H. Brooke (9) and Mr. W. H. Foot (8), the first named winning in both cases, and both succumbing in the next heat. Finally Mr. Aste beat Mr. Humm by 4 and 3 to play. In the 36 holes Medal Handicap Competition Consolation Stakes Mr. Kershaw and Mr. Thorpe tied at 142 nett.

Meanwhile is the Army Cup Competition forgotten? set us hope not, for it is steadily, though slowly, progressing and nearing its end. The 3rd Coldstream Guards have scratched to the 1st Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, and the other match in the semi-final heat is between the Black Watch and the 2nd Seaforths, both teams include well-known Scottish players and it seems only right and fitting that the finals should be between teams from the Mother Land of Golf.

The Great Pros. are having a great time just now, on they go from place to place, what a truly delightful, enjoyable, healthy life. Braid met and defeated Vardon at Dornoch in a 36-hole match, the weather was fine and quite 1,000 enthusiastic spectators witnessed a fine display of Golf. In the morning both players were round in 75 strokes and the match stood at all square. After the third hole in the afternoon Vardon's play somewhat deteriorated and Braid stood 4 up at the turn and he eventually pulled off the match by 5 up and 4 to play. On Tuesday, 21st, on the Innerleithen Club 9-hole course, Sandy Herd gained a good victory over Harry Vardon by 3 up and 1 to play. Vardon's 71 in the morning beat Major Wolfe-Murray's previous record by 1 stroke, and in the afternoon Herd with a very fine 69 made yet another record of the 18 holes and his 32 out made up as follows: 4, 3, 3, 3, 5, 4, 4, 3, 3 = 32, was a brilliant display indeed.

STRAY NOTES.

A NEW pestilential fly is said to have been discovered in German East Africa by Dr. Koch. He had been informed that rats were infected with plague in the Rubens Mountains, and he proceeded there to investigate the matter. He found, however, that the rats were not infected with plague, but the wholesale deaths of rats in the district were due to a fly which stung or poisoned the bodies of the vermin. Further investigation showed that the boils caused by these parasites appeared only on those parts which came in contact with the ground, from which it appeared that the fly laid its eggs not upon the rats directly, but upon the ground, possibly in the rat-holes, where the rats when crawling in and out were readily inflicted. Earlier observers have described similar pests found in boils on the skin of men and various mammals.

A few days ago a North American king snake was received by Messrs. R. Green and Son, of the Bedford Nurseries, Covent Garden. The king snake, which measured about 3 feet in length, was placed in a case in which were several large ophidians of different species, and a few moments afterwards it was noticed that a fight was in progress between the king snake and one of the other snakes, slightly over 5 feet in length. Before the manager could prevent it, the king snake had not only killed its adversary, but succeeded in swallowing about a foot of it. The victim was released with difficulty, after which his majesty consoled himself by swallowing three white mice.

An interesting correspondence has been going on in the Times on the "strange sea-creature" viewed by Dr. A. J. Butler off Berry Head. Dr. Butler's statement was that he saw a singular and, to him, unrecognisable creature contorting itself on the top of the water, and described it as being about six feet long by four or five inches wide, of a buff colour, and having the edges of its sword-like body serrated. Dr. Günther writes to suggest that the creature was probably a ribbon fish (Regalecus), a fish generally found at great depths, and very rarely seen near the surface. Possibly Dr. Butler's regalecus suffered its sea-change from the depths to the surface in consequence of a fight with a cephalopod, or some other monster.

Among the recent additions to the London Zoological Gardens is an interesting creature known as the kusimanse, a West African member of the civet family. This creature, whose near relations are familiar by the name of ichneumon and mongoose, is of a brown hue, the fur being tipped with yellow. The new arrival has been housed with the squirrels, and it is to be hoped that it will thrive, as members of the civet family are not particularly well represented at the Zoo.

NOTES OF A COCKNEY NATURALIST.

Skunks in London.

As an animal whose reputation, if not high, is at least wide, the skunk always commands attention. It has been kept at the Zoo, but I have never seen it there, as this was many years ago. I was thus much delighted to see not long ago at Green's the animal dealers in Covent Gardens, a family of skunks, consisting of the old female and two puppies, or kittens, or whatever one would call juvenile skunks. They had been operated upon before shipment from America, so as to render them incapable of ejecting their scent, no doubt by excision of the glands. But they maintained the natural instincts connected with this form of artillery, stamping and erecting their tails when irritated. This is, I believe, supposed to be their way of giving warning that they are "going to begin," but after all, squirrels, which have no stench to emit, do much the same.

The tail of the skunk is also supposed to be a sort of danger-flag, conspicuous at night by its whiteness, but in these individuals it is as much black as white, indeed, the whole colouration of the animal is a combination of these colours, black below and black with white stripes above.

When deodorized, as a skunk must of necessity be if one is not to be compelled to treat it with exaggerated consideration it is said to make a nice pet. But it has another drawback besides its scent, and a far more serious one if report be correct. This is its liability to hydrophobia, or at any rate its power of communicating the disease by its bite. It seems that Indians were long aware of this, and it is generally believed by whites also. President Roosevelt, in his most interesting book, Big Game Hunting, accepts the story, saying that the terrible result of the skunk's bite occurs "in certain districts and at certain seasons;" he also says the creature will persistently burrow into a hut, and hunt about among the inmates. Of course nobody wants to molest an animal with such unpleasant powers of reprisal; but this is not enough for the skunk, which will often settle down on a sleeping man and actually begin to eat him—much as rats are at times known to do. It is not astonishing that the enthusiasm for skunks is limited, and so the sight of a live one over here is indeed a zoological privilege.

The Story Teller.

HER LITTLE FLUTTER.

There is probably no surprise that is more unwelcome than that of a person returning home from a journey before he is expected. Even the man who has been granted half-a-day's holiday by a considerate employer is usually received by the wife of his bosom with mixed feelings, that of annoyance being the most predominant.

Mr. George Fletcher was, as a rule, the most methodical of men, a rare thing for a commercial traveller, but then Fletcher had several little peculiarities not usually found among his brethren of the road. He neither smoked nor drank, and from the cradle upwards had been warned never to bet. If Fletcher told his year-old wife that he would be home on a certain day, home he was, and found all ready for him in a style that made him bless the day when he got married.

A thoroughly good chap was George, and so was the partner of his joys and sorrow, but she was a bit more of a goer than her staid hubby, and her pet vice was the not uncommon one with ladies of "having a bit on." Of course it was all done on the quiet, had Fletcher merely heard a suggestion, or the faintest hint of the fact there would have been trouble. As already stated, Fletcher was the most exact of men, and the punctuality of his arrival home on the indicated day was not of the kind that breeds contempt. It is a poor rule, however, that admits of no exception, and George found himself one time with twenty-four hours in hand, and like the devoted husband he was, hurried home from Leicester to his pretty little flat in Kilburn.

Any other man than George Fletcher would have sent a wire; not so George, he was of a saving turn, and when he landed home, met with the usual reward of the man who dares to come home unexpectedly, he found the place deserted.

It was a bit chilling, but George was a philosopher, and took it as a matter of course that Flo should have gone round to a friend, and let the maid have the evening out. He made the best of it, and was changing into his smoking jacket when his eye suddenly lighted on a telegram lying open on his wife's dressing-table.

Thinking it was probably the reason of her absence, he picked up the wire and read the contents:

"Charlie," muttered Fletcher to himself, a little bit taken aback. "Who the devil is Charlie?"

He knew all his wife's relations, and as he ran them over could not remember one with the Christian name of Charlie. Picking up the telegram again he looked at the date and the office of despatch. It bore the same day's date, and had been handed in at the Newbury office.

At this George Fletcher changed colour; he was perfectly certain that none of their mutual friends hailed from the Berkshire town and an uneasy feeling crept over him.

"Trifles light as air are to the jealous proofs strong as holy writ" our poet tells us, and for the first time in his life George Fletcher began to experience the pangs of jealousy. Sitting there with that telegram spread out before him, Fletcher began to "reconstruct" his wife's crime on the most approved Sherlock Holmes fashion, and at the end of half-an-hour had thoroughly made up his mind that his wife had gone to meet a certain "Charlie" who, if no friend of his, was undoubtedly a very dear friend of his wife's, as she was implored not to miss him.

The more he thought about it the more certain did the truth of his suspicions appear to poor George, but being a man of infinite resource, Fletcher hit upon a great plan to bring her guilt home to his erring spouse. Accordingly, he let himself out of the flat as quietly as he had entered, and, unnoticed, took up a position from which he could see all that went on without being observed himself. He would watch for his wife's return, doubtless accompanied by "Charlie;" then he would slip off to an hotel and turn up at the hour appointed on the following evening, and tax Flo with her perfidy. Once or twice during his long wait George began to think what a fool he was for his pains, whether perhaps he was suspecting his little woman unnecessarily, and whether he ought to be spying upon her like that. Just as he had half made up his mind to return to the flat, a smart hansom drove up to the entrance to the mansions, and his wife sprang lightly out. She was in evening dress, he noted with a pang, but no one was with her; "Charlie" would evidently follow later.

Had George Fletcher obeyed the impulse that prompted him to speak to his wife he might have spared himself some very uneasy hours, but jealousy had got the upper hand, and he wanted to be quite sure. With this object in view, George remained in his hiding place until all lights were out in the flat, and the clock had struck one. The following hours he spent in a small hotel he knew of, and the next day was one of the most miserable of his life. He longed for six o'clock in the evening to come, with a curious sense that he had been unjustly accusing his wife in his own mind. Yet such is the strange nature of the jealous mind that George could not bring himself to go then and there to his flat and have it out.

It was quite six o'clock, in fact nearly half-past, before he summoned up sufficient courage to arrive home. His wife perfectly radiant, greeted him with a smile of welcome that struck Fletcher as being a trifle overdone. Never had he seen her in quite such high spirits, and it seemed to him that she was labouring under some excitement, which she was vainly endeavouring to hide under an assumption of gaiety.

"They're all alike," he muttered, "born actresses every one. I suppose that beggar did turn up, after I left."

Flo had got his favourite dinner for him, but to her great surprise, instead of tackling it in his usual form, Fletcher went very slow, and seemed to her quite unaccountably moody.

"What's the matter, George?" she asked at last. "Anything gone wrong while you've been away?"

"You're a nice one to ask that," he said, looking up at her astonished face. "Oh, it is no use playing the pretty innocent with me, Flo, if you've had enough of me, say so, and we'll part company at once."

"Whatever are you talking about, George? You must be off your head."

"Sane as you are, and saner, for I do know how to behave myself. Haven't I always been a good husband to you Flo?"

"Of course you have," she replied, looking at him in blank astonishment; "but I don't understand what you are driving at, all the same."

"Did you know Charlie before you married me?" asked Fletcher.

"Charlie?"

"Yes, Charlie; don't pretend you don't know him, he's a great friend of yours"

It was just as well for Fletcher that his wife knew him to be a teetotaler, for his words could only mean one of two things, either he was drunk or a fit candidate for a lunatic asylum. She looked as if she thought the latter place would fill the bill, so far as he was concerned.

"Yes, don't look at me like that," he roared, "can you deny that he sent you a telegram yesterday telling you not to miss him?"

The look of blank astonishment slowly faded from Mrs. Fletcher's face, and peal after peal of laughter broke from her.

"Why, you silly boy, Charlie is a racehorse."

"A racehorse?"

"Nothing more nor less. Now the murder's out, George, I don't mind telling you that I often have bets on racing, and this was a wire from a special man who sends me something good; I won quite a lot of money over it."

"But isn't it rather——"

"Bad form for a woman to bet George? Well, old boy, not worse than reading other people's wires. Where did you sleep last night?"

CHAPTER VI.

Leh to the Nubra Valley.

The British Joint Commissioner had returned during my absence, but had quickly to depart again to see about a bridge which had been washed away somewhere on the Indus. This was a disappointment, as I had hoped to gather from him information with regard to the route down the Shayok, which route, I had now determined upon for the return journey to Kashmir.

However, G., of the Bengal Cavalry, was staying at the bungalow, and so, what with tales of sport and comparing of notes, it was not till the early hours of the morning that we retired to rest.

The next was a busy day, making bandobust for the journey to the Nubra and Shayok valleys.

What remained of the stores had to be unpacked, repacked and replenished; trophies of the chase, curios, and all things superfluous packed up separately in order to be sent straight back to Srinagar.

Food for the servants had to be purchased, transport engaged, letters answered, and a hundred and one other details seen to before everything was at last ready for the start on the morrow.

Our road was now the Central Asian trade route which leads over the Karakoram Pass to Yarkand. At Kardong Polo below the Pass (17,560 feet) of that name I halted a day to try for shapoo (ovis vignei), but saw no sign of any.

At Leh all the baggage had been placed upon yaks, as, at this time of the year, the top layer of snow on the north slope of the Kardong Pass, usually melts, and freezing again into a slippery sheet of ice, it is almost impossible for ponies to retain their footing. The bones and skeletons of ponies, being strewn about at the bottom of the snowy scarp, bear a gruesome testimony to the danger of the descent.

Fortunately the really bad bit of the road only lasts for about half-a-mile; nevertheless, it was not until, after several anxious moments, when a few yaks had slid a hundred yards or more down the incline, that we got them safely to the path beneath, most of them with their legs cut and bleeding.

At Karodong village there is a small, but shady plantation in which to camp. Yaks were here exchanged for ponies.

The next stage is to Kharchar, a distance of twelve miles The old road along the edge of the Shayok River had recently been washed away by a flood, but a new one had been partially built.

At Kharchar, I met a "sahib," who had just returned from the Karakoram—near Panimik, a pretty village in the Nubra Valley, of which I was very soon to make the acquaintance; he had received "khubber" of that extremely rare feline, the Tibetan lynx, but had not obtained a shot at one. I wasregally entertained by him that night at dinner.

Near the junction of the Nubra, a quite modern and civilised. looking bridge spans the Shayok.

The sandy river mouth is covered with thick jungle, which reminded me very much of the "jhow" jungles, those favourite haunts of the wild boar, on the banks of the Jumna and Ganges. The glare from the white sand was hot and dazzling as a furnace, and I was glad to don the smoked spectacles which I usually carried. This burning sand was altogether too much for poor "Teaser's" feet, which became quite sore, so often after this he had to be carried in a basket by a coolie. The march continuing up the Nubra, camp was pitched at Taggar or Kiggur, the river being here about two miles across. Panimik was reached on the following day. About four miles from Taggar, the old palace of the Nubra rajahs is clearly visible on the opposite side of the river. Most of the road leads through avenues and clearings which wind in and out of the jungle and afford a pleasant shade after the blinding glare of the white and. A few miles further on is a grassy plain covered with a deposit of soda, and here also a hot sulphur spring trickles out of the rock. Around the latter a bath had been built, but it had not yet become the resort of the fashionable invalid.

Across the river, high up on the bleak and lonely mountain-side, stood a monastery, solitary and isolated.

With one's tent pitched on the green and springy turf, with apple, walnut, apricot and pear trees in full fruit all around the green fields of corn rippling in the breeze it was difficult to believe that one was in Ladak, that land of desolate wastes and sandy deserts.

But when the village and trees are left behind, beneath the compassionless rays of the mid-day sun, with nothing on which to rest the eyes but the eternal sands and rock, the realization returns with redoubled force, until a village is reached once more.

I had read that a nullah opposite Panimik was the favourite haunt of ibex, but on questioning the "lumbardar" or head-man of the village and the local shikari, they seemed very doubtful as to there being any big ones. Nevertheless, I determined to see for myself, and accordingly we crossed the river by a bridge about two miles higher up, and leaving the 80lbs. tent and heavy baggage at Kabet, ascended the nullah with a small tent and sufficient supplies to last for four days. The ascent was extremely steep, especially for the coolies, lightly laden though they were, and it took as several hours to cover about four miles where we found a spot, flat enough on which to bivouac.

The evening was spent in scanning through the telescope the surrounding craggy hill sides for ibex, but none were to be seen. The two shikaries and myself were up long before dusk next morning, and the first streaks of dawn showed my tent as a small white speck several thousand feet below. The day proved quite fruitless, not only were no ibex seen, but not even any fresh tracks, and we returned to camp quite tired out.

The local "gamekeeper" was again carefully questioned as to whether or no there were any ibex here. After a good deal of cross-examination, I elicited the information that out of about ten "sahibs" who, during the last eight or nine years had been here in pursuit of ibex, a few had obtained small heads of about 34 inches, whilst the others had either not seen any or considered animals carrying such small trophies not worth shooting at. He admitted, however, that at a place a few marches lower down a big head of 48 inches had once been obtained.

The upper portion of the Nubra Valley above Changlung, only about three marches higher up was to him, practically, a terra incognita, but he said, that, at this time of the year when the snow over the top of the river had melted, it was almost impossible to proceed any distance in that direction owing to lack of bridges, and also that he had never heard of any big ibex having been obtained there. This was extremely disappointing news to me, as I had expected to bag some good heads in this valley. If we marched higher up and did not get any there, there would not be sufficient time to try another place, so after a good deal of consideration, and as K. knew of a good nullah for ibex lower down the Shayok, we decided to return.

I had always read and been told that enormous ibex heads were to be obtained in the Nubra Valley. Perhaps, as is usually the case with the Oriental, when it suits his purpose, the man was lying so as to save himself the trouble of accompanying us any further; or perhaps on this occasion he was speaking the truth, and the big horns are obtained on the far side of the Karakoram Pass and are sent back to Leh, viâ the Nubra Valley, which thus gets its reputation for large ibex heads.

On the left bank below the Sarsar Pass, near a camping ground, called Margisthang, was some very good bharal ground, this much the man was quite certain of; but the year before, having shot some very fair bharal, and my object now being ibex, I did not trouble to visit the place.

Our way now led southwards down the right bank of the river till its junction with the Shayok, when it branches off right-handed along the bank of the latter.

This road down the Shayok River, from the Nubra to Kipalu a large village in Baltistan, is not much frequented either by sportsmen or travellers. As far as I could learn, during this year only one "sahib" had passed along it.

The first three and a half miles led over a rough track on the mountain side, thence down to the sand in the river-bed. At Charasa, the old palace of the Nubra Rajahs which we had seen from the opposite bank, was passed chukor partridges were frequently flushed by the way-side, but as the season for small game shooting had not yet opened, they were allowed to fly away unmolested.
