The next twelve days were spent in almost continuous marching without any event to break the monotony, any detailed account of which could but weary the reader. Perhaps, however, a few extracts from my diary might be useful to anyone intending to travel by the same route.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 8.

A IS marked with the Queen, 7, 6 of hearts. Z must put on the Ace of diamonds, as it is not absolutely certain that B holds the Queen. Having done so, it looks—at first sight—as though he ought to lead the 3, in order to make certain of saving the game with two tricks in the suit. He is in no danger of losing the odd trick, however, and should lead out his clubs. If either opponent holds five, this will appear at once, and he can then change his tactics and lead the diamond. If A holds four clubs to the Knave, Z cannot win the game, as A B will make one trick in clubs, and the Queen of hearts and diamonds. If B holds four to the Knave, however, and the Queen of diamonds, he will probably go on with diamonds in preference to leading spades up to Y, and Z may still win the game. If the clubs clear Z can make all the remaining tricks (assuming that B holds the Queen of diamonds) by keeping the Ace, King, 10 of spades, and 10 of hearts, as Y's four last cards; for his seventh club forces A to unguard hearts or spades, and B to unguard diamonds or spades.

BRIDGE PROBLEM No. 9.

Score: A B, 26; Y Z, 0. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares no-trumps. Y's and Z's hands are as follows:—

Y's Hand (Dummy).

Hearts, Q, J, 4; Diamonds, A, 5, 3; Clubs, A, Q, 2; Spades, A, Q, 10, 6.

Z's Hand (Dealer).

Hearts, 9, 8, 3; Diamonds, J, 10; Clubs, 10, 5, 4; Spades, J, 8, 7, 4, 2.

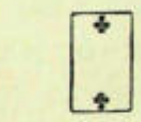
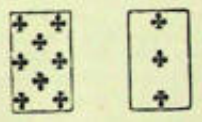
Y.



A. B.



Z.

How ought the dealer to go on with the hand, and why?

Seffart, the famous horse-tamer, at one time kept a riding school at Bath, where he received gentlemen between the hours of ten and twelve, and ladies from twelve to two. In its heyday the City of the West was a favourite camping-ground for Irish adventurers and fortune-hunters on the look-out for impressionable heiresses. Among these was a very persistent specimen, a Captain Flanagan, who was pressing his attentions with great assiduity upon the daughter of a wealthy cotton-spinner who was taking lessons from Seffart.

As the elopement of a young lady with one of these Lotharios, whom she was in the habit of meeting at the riding-school had got the horse-tamer into hot water, he now kept a strict look-out, and abided strictly to his rule of separating the sexes during exercise hours. One day Captain Flanagan, who had purchased a ticket for the season, strolled in at a quarter to twelve.

"You can only ride for a quarter-of-an-hour, sir," said Seffart.

"All right," answered the Captain; but, doubting him, Seffart put him up on a tricky horse called Fortunatus.

"Time's up, Captain" said the proprietor of the riding-school as the clock struck the hour.

"I shall not go yet," was the cool reply. "I've paid for two hours and two hours I'll have."

"But you agreed to go at twelve," persisted Seffart.

"Then I've changed my mind."

"But I haven't," said Seffart, quietly. "Now, am I to treat you as a gentleman or as a blackguard?"

"What do you mean, you scoundrel?" roared the irate Irishman, netted at the aspersion on his "honour."

"The ladies are waiting. Will you go?" pursued Seffart.

"I will see you d . . . . d first," was the response.

Seffart said no more to the Captain, but called to the horse, "Hi, Fortunatus; up, lad!" at the same time making a sign with his whip. In an instant Fortunatus reared bolt upright, and almost at the same moment was on all fours again, striking out with his hind legs. The most perfect horsemanship could not have withstood such a trial, and the gallant Captain, turning a somersault, alighted on the tan.

"Now, take that fellow out," said Seffart, and before Flanagan knew where he was two grooms picked him up, and, carrying him through the place where the ladies were waiting, dropped him into the road.

When he had gathered himself up out of the mud Captain Flanagan had the mortification of seeing Miss Cotton-spinner laughing at his discomfiture, and another romance was thus nipped in the bud.

THE A. A. A. AND ITS RULE.

IT is not pleasant for those interested in athletics and anxious above all things that they should be conducted in an honourable and sportsmanlike fashion to read the reports of the Amateur Athletic Association and note the malpractices with which the Committee, from time to time, are requred to deal. The A. A. A. has done an enormous amount of good work in its time, and the rigour with which its wisely framed rules are enforced has been the means of working incalculable benefit to the athletics at home. The account of the proceedings of the Southern Committee of the Association, held on 30th August, contains reference to various misdeeds which have earned for the offenders various punishments from reprimand to permanent suspension. It is curious in these days of easy travel, close interest in athletics and wide publicity that there should be men possessing the courage or—the impudence—to compete under false names with the purpose of gaining some undue advantage: but such cases occur. One man, F. W. Wilson, was found guilty of "aiding and abetting his brother H. A. Wilson to run in his name and also of entering from a non-existent club." We can understand that one of two brothers resembling one another as brothers often do, might pass for the other successfully at a meeting among comparative strangers, and this being possible unprincipled men might take dishonest advantage of the resemblance. But surely none other than a fool of the densest would enter for events at a meeting as member of a club which has no existence! The assumption of his brother's initials points to the exceeding likelihood that H. A. Wilson thereby gained some advantage in a handicap: and was therefore a man versed in matters athletic: and for a man possessing any acquaintance with the machinery of athletic organisation to suppose that he could "bluff" the executive by inventing a club and escape detection shows a daring, or a stupidity that surprises us. A worse case was that reported by South Wales Committee, in which an amateur allowed a professional to run in his, the amateur's, name at the Builth Wells meeting. The dishonesty of the proceeding again is only equalled by its reckless stupidity. One unknown amateur might succeed in passing himself off as another equally unknown to fame; but athletics have their band of devoted followers who make a point of attending every meeting within a day's journey and to these the persons of regular competitors, as professionals are, must be perfectly familiar: for a professional runner therefore to enter himself in a name not his own is to invite enquiry. With almost equal hope of success might an amateur rider permit a jockey of repute to "ride in his name." Yet a third case of personation was dealt with, a man named Woods, of the K-nt Athletic Club, was detected running in Army races under another name. The offenders, when dealt with by the Committee in two of the three ca-es—were permanently suspended and we do not think less drastic punishment could have been inflicted. Cases of personation are fortunately not very common in these days, but it is impossible to do otherwise than deal severely with the offence when it occurs. To assume the name of another whose achievements are less good than those of the competitor who conceals his own name is perhaps the meanest mode of gaining an unfair advantage known to the unscrupulous. It was, we believe, comparatively common in former days when the "Sheffield Handicap" was a bye word and races, professional races, were bought and sold almost in the open market as it were, but new times have brought new modes of thought in athletics as in other departments of life and the higher standard of morality which the A. A. A. makes it a chief duty to nurture and enforce has obtained very general acceptance.

We have found occasion in these columns to remark upon the high standard of sport which prevails in our own country by comparison with that observed in others. It is, perhaps, well that we should receive reminders that, high though our standard is believed to be, there are, in the most carefully tended fold, black sheep whose exclusion must be compassed if sport or athletics are to be kept clean and above reproach. It was necessary when Englishmen met Englishmen and none others: it is more than ever necessary now when international meetings are of frequent occurrence and our athletes find themselves pited against those of other countries. We have "set the tune" in the world of sport and athletics and only ourselves can keep it; the proudest boast that the Briton can claim is the reputation for playing fair he now enjoys and any one who swerves from the straight line must expect no mercy. Individual liberty is much, but national character is more, and leniency towards swindling—for personation is nothing else—would be a fatal mistake and one for which we should pay heavily. The rule of the A. A. A. has been essentially firm and just: it has succeeded in drawing that difficult distinction between the professional and the amateur and upon the A. A. A. rests responsibility for it that the malpractices, shifts and dodges that disfigure professionalism be kept out of amateur athletics. Its firm handling of the offences to which we have referred show that the Association is fully alive to those responsibilities.

Sporting Notes.

THE most interesting sporting event of the past week has undoubtedly been Signorina's victory in the Western India Stakes at Poona. Handicapped within four pounds of Prince Lyon, who ran second to Dalkeith in our Trials last year, she won this ten thousand-rupee stake in a canter, a performance which places her in the very foremost rank of the long distance horses now in India. When she walked off with the Cooch Behar Cup carrying 7st. 3lbs. and beating Cherson, Nat Gould and Sacristan II., we believed her a wonder, but what are we to think of her now.

Robinson chalked up two more winners on the Third Day, but on Thursday was twice beaten a neck by Evans, whose misfortunes on the opening day were so much before the public. The Handicappers were fairly successful in the Hurdle Races apparently, as Thomond carrying top weight was made a hot favourite on each occasion, but could only get seconds to a couple of less fancied light weights.

Wishes very often give birth to definite forecasts, and some interested people have been lately declaring that an October Meeting in Calcutta would certainly be held. So far as we can gather there is no prospect of further racing in these parts until the December Meeting, unless the Tollygunge Club carry out their proposal, advertised some time back, to hold a couple of Gymkhanas in November.

The investigation instituted by the Calcutta Stewards into the running of The Chump at the Fifth Monsoon Meeting was carried out thoroughly last week. After considering the evidence given by the owner, trainer and jockey and an examination of the bookmakers' tallies, the Stewards decided to suspend Hard's license for twelve months. This is a severe sentence upon a man who has to support a family on his earnings as a race rider, though doubtless well deserved; the officials probably had this fact in their minds when considering their sentence, and have, we understand, tempered justice with mercy by allowing Hard the freedom of the training track during his suspension. As to the salutary effect of the Stewards' action there can be but one opinion. It may be a mere fancy on our part, but at the Sixth Meeting, that is to say, last Saturday afternoon, there seemed to be a marked difference in the atmosphere. In the Scotch Thistle and Bouquet races, more particularly, we noticed some refreshing good riding. So may it always be.

After flattering race-goers with the idea that they were going to see a fine dry afternoon's sport, the weather broke up on Saturday morning into a deluge, which made the course infinitely more sloppy than it had been on the previous Saturday. Needless to say, under such conditions, the favourites were very little in evidence throughout the afternoon, and backers were quite unable to spot the mud-larks. Cain was a red hot favourite in the Amateur Hurdle Race and on form his chance seemed to be more than a good one, his only serious opponent being Ryong. The last named is a workman of the first order through the slush and being ridden in a most determined fashion cut down his field in the first six furlongs and thereafter ploughed his way home alone. Cain chased him at a respectful distance, but the up-country horse showed himself a real stayer and won his race in hollow fashion. Everyone was pleased to see Mr. Robertson score a win and we hope this is the forerunner of similar delights in the up-country military chases, when he can enjoy the additional pleasure of wearing his colours himself. Lady Gold did not run up to her recent form and twice parted company with her rider: fortunately she was not at the time of the mishap in a position to interefere with the rest of the field, but we tremble to think of the unnecessary and additional risk to which the other riders are exposed so long as this kind of danger runs loose in their midst.

The Open Hurdle Race, notwithstanding the state of the going, was one of the best races we have seen this year. Narwanah, the newcomer, took them a rare burst over the first three flights and successfully smothered that old rogue, Pope, who as usual affected extreme exhaustion directly he discovered that an effort was required to enable him to keep his place. Parole and Rustler, the public fancies, lay handy throughout, and when the light weights stopped galloping White took Parole to the front. Watchfire kept with the leaders and astonished those who had seen his recent trial gallops, but entering the straight his bolt was shot. Parole and Rustler seemed to have the race between them at this point, but Scotch Thistle suddenly appeared, making a very strong run on the inside of the course. Catching the leaders between the last two flights he answered gamely to Sheldrake's call and pounded home a winner by a length. This was a very nicely ridden race, and it must have been a most exhausting effort to hold and drive these big striding horses through the sea of mud to which the course was reduced.

The public refused to desert Cyril in the Autumn Plate, but there seemed to be a certain amount of money going for Leda, as presumably the better of Mr. Chowdhury's pair. Baichan had the mount and rode a very resolute finish, only to secure third place to Bouquet, who won with astonishing ease, and Nirvana. Then came a dreadful upset, but a magnificent race for those whose interests were not bound up with the favourites. Carnival carried a certain amount of money, and was only beaten into third place by about half a length; Mr. Dass must have been a little disappointed in the midst of his pleasure at the success of little Lollipop, whose chance was utterly despised, since that success involved the defeat of Carnival, but as the latter was also just beaten by Mr. Pugh's mare, the saving of the stakes to the stable will make up for the annoyance he may possibly feel at having missed the beautiful long prices on offer about the winner. Lollipop paid Rs. 660 on the totalisator over the win, but only Rs. 53 for a place.

In the Pony Hunter Flat Race Zig-Zag was made favourite on the strength of rumours as to a private gallop, which made it worth Mr. Deakin's while to suspend his duties as judge in order to ride. The pony ran well, but when it came to racing the top weights strode through the mud and beat him very easily. The distance was hardly far enough for Branga, and Energy is a real smart mare on the flat; moreover so much dead weight must have told heavily on Mr. Evers' pony. Mistlebird was unable to struggle along under the weight, of which she had her full complement; she is a pretty little mare, but only a little one, and will never win while the handicappers maintain their present high opinion of her abilities. The last race proved a very easy victory for a well-known sleuth hound, who scandalised his connections in the Stand by breaking away from his attendant and rudely interfering with the race before the eyes of the entire public. He romped home in front of Lord D, who beat all the horses with almost as much ease; all the placed horses came from the same stable in this race and the favourites, The Chump and Winklet, made no show at all. So ended a disastrous day for backers, but the weather seems to be really lifting at last and possibly we may be given a dry day and a better chance at the last Meeting. Good old Hope—what unfortunate beings we should become if she deserted us!

Entries for the Seventh Monsoon Meeting promise a card full of good races; all seven events have filled well and the Consolation Plate for horses shows no less than twenty-seven applicants. Of these the great majority are double entries, in fact all except Bell Dhu, Ruby, Defendant, East Ferry and Sal, so that there is a reasonable prospect that the field will not exceed the safety limit, which we place at twelve or fourteen on the present Monsoon track in heavy weather. In the Open Hurdle Race Pope is a notable absentee and Narwanah is once more seeking fame upon the flat. The Amateur Flat Race should give an interesting Handicap, but it must be rather an ordeal for the officials to be expected to bring Devil's Limit and Queen of Hearts or Riccaton anywise together, according to book form.

We congratulate Mr. Pugh on his return to the saddle; his little mare, Manon, nearly pulled off a very nice stake last Saturday and was undoubtedly unlucky to lose. He should be in good time for the Mussoorie Meeting, at which Calcutta will be strongly represented this year, as we hear that a number of local sportsmen are going that way for the Poojahs.

The Indian Polo Association's Championship Tournament will be held in Calcutta, beginning on the 26th December.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—The mud sports were hardly as interesting as usual. The events were good and the competitors numerous, but somehow there was a lazy air over the whole proceedings. The section jumping was easily won by Mr. Crum, Mr. Barraclough, Captain Crosse and Mr. Griffin. Mr. Crum also won the "Cutting the Turk's head," and tilting at the ring, while Mr. Mathew, nominated by Miss Andrews, won the Covent Garden Stakes. The Moonlighter Stakes were funny as each rider had to bring with him a lighted Chinese lantern. Had any one cared to walk his horse he would have been an easy winner, for as it was not one of the competitors got home with their candles alight and no points were awarded. Captain Mackie and Mrs. Nash won the Affinity Race, followed by Mr. and Mrs. Crum and Mr. Griffin on Mr. Reed's Old Boy won the Pony Scurry, followed by Mr. Barraclough on Mr. Yates' Red Mullet. The Horse Scurry was won by Mr. Barraclough on Mr. Cruther's Bundook and after a keen struggle Mr. Griffin displaced Mr. Mathewson for second place.

Complaints are often whispered about the great quantity of grog some women can plant behind their blouse fronts without allowing it to testify to its whereabouts; in fact, it has been openly stated, but not proved, that drinking is on the increase amongst our "First Families." The story runs that not long ago a certain lady who was present at a certain "function" at Simla was seen to swallow glass after glass of sparkling champagne without a wink, and as she proceeded to sample her third bottle she turned to a neighbour and softly said: "I do hope they'll give us some good whisky after this. I'll want it, I know, for I get as full of gas as a big balloon after drinking those wretched 'mineral waters'!"

For some years past a good many dog-owners in Calcutta have felt the necessity for an Association having for its objects the furthering of their particular interests, the encouragement of breeding, the importation of good stock and so on. With the annual recurrence of the Tollygunge Club Horse and Dog Show this want has been emphasised until, after the very great improvements associated with the last show, the suggestion that the time was ripe for co-operation found very general acceptance. Mr. E. A. Lyon, who was mainly responsible for that success, has received sufficient encouragement since the show to warrant him in opening negociations with the Northern India Kennel Association, of which the Rev. W. Bush is Honorary Secretary, and the outcome of certain correspondence was an invitation to several local gentlemen interested in the matter to attend a meeting at 8, Mission Row last Friday evening. There was a fair attendance and many more wrote in supporting the movement though prevented by business from being present.

Mr. E A. Lyon, having been voted to the chair, referred briefly to the subject that had brought them together, dwelt on the necessity for safeguarding owners' interests if the holding of shows and the importation and breeding of dogs were to be properly carried out, showed how behind Calcutta was when compared with Lahore, Mussoorie, Bombay and other places where the N. I. K. A. rules were adopted and where the quality of exhibits and the general standard of dogs was markedly better than elsewhere and suggested that in Calcutta should be formed a branch of the N. I. K. A. He then quoted from the Association's shows rules in order to give those present an idea of their scope, and as these are of interest to most dog-owners we reproduce them in extenso below. He also read a letter from Mr. Bush, in which he suggested that the next Dog Show in Calcutta—if run under N. I. K. A. rules—should be a Championship one and promised on behalf of the Association three specials for exhibiting members; this should certainly prove an attraction to up-country members of the N. I. K. A. and result in increased entries.

The entrance fee to the N. I. K. A. is but Rs. 20 and the annual subscription is Rs. 16 which carries with it a free copy of the Association's excellent little journal: we shall be surprised if there are not fifty Calcutta members enrolled ere the end of this month.

After some discussion it was resolved that a branch of the N. I. K. A. be formed in Calcutta and that the Association be asked to accord its sanction thereto. Also that a Committee consisting of Messrs. E. A. Lyon, H. Tremearne, and W. S. Burke be entrusted with the preliminary arrangements and that as early as possible another meeting be called at which progress can be reported, the officials appointed and the branch properly started.

Appended are the rules for the regulation of Shows, held under the N. I. K. A.

1. Registration—At all Shows held under N. I. K. A. rules all exhibits must be registered, unless already registered at the English Kennel Club, in which case it must be intimated on the entry form. The registration fee will be Re. 1 for each dog.

2. Affix or Prefix.—Affixes and prefixes can be registered free of charge, but no prefix or affix that has already been registered at the English Kennel Club can be used in India, except in the cases of dogs bred in England and already registered at the Kennel Club, with their breeder's prefix or affix.

3 Distinctive Nomenclature.—No two dogs of the same breed can be registered under the same name, nor will the names of any well-known dogs at home be accepted for registration.

4. Registration of Puppies.—All puppies to be eligible for the Association Special Produce prizes must have been registered within six months of their birth.

5. Dogs the bonâ fide property of Exhibitors.—Every dog exhibited must be the bonâ fide property of the exhibitor. 11. Right of Appeal.—In all cases of objection or appeal the objector and appellant shall be required to deposit a sum of Rs. 16 each, which shall be forfeited if, in the opinion of the Local Committee, or of the Association Committee, the objection or appeal is of a frivolous nature.

19. Breeder.—When the puppies in any litter are divided by the owners of sire and dam, in accordance with mutual agreement as to service, or as regards joint ownership of a brood bitch, the puppies falling to the share of each shall be held to have been bred by each. A bitch lent on breeding terms must be entered as the joint property of the two owners.

20. Wins.—No member can at any Show win more than one Special given by the Association.

21. Classification.—At all Shows held under N. I. K. A. Rules the following definition of Open, Limit, Novice, Junior, and Puppy shall be observed when it is found desirable to hold such sub-divisions:—

Open.—Open to all; no prize winners debarred.

Limit.—For dogs that have never won one 1st or two 2nd prizes in England or two 1st prizes at Shows held in India under N. I. K. A. Rules, wins in puppy classes excepted in both countries.

(i). Special for the owner of the best dog of any breed who has joined the Association within the year.

Donors of Prizes at Shows held under N. I. K. A. Rules cannot compete for their own prizes.

At Shows held under N. I. K. A. Rules no prize may be accepted by the Show Committee and offered by them for competition, which is offered by a breeder for the progeny of his own dogs only.

The Poona Open Polo Tournament ended in a win for the Poona Gymkhana, who beat the Bhopal Gymkhana in the final by 5 goals and 2 subsidiaries to 2 goals and 3 subsidiaries. Details will be found in our Polo columns.

Poona maintains its reputation for being the reverse of a good place for horses. The Kour Saheb of Patiala's Regio has just succumbed to fever and we hear that the Maharaja of Cooch Behar's C. S. Cup winner Bells is suffering from the same complaint.

The third entry for the Civil Service Cup, which closed on Saturday, is H. H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar's ch aus m Coin II. by Zariff—Kathleen.

Baron Silver, according to an American paper, is the fastest trotter for his size in the world, standing almost 18 hands high and weighing 1,475 pounds. He is but five years old, says our contemporary, and although royally bred on both sides, it was never expected, with but seventy days of work on the track, all told, that he would develop such remarkable speed as he has already shown, stepping a trial mile in 2 : 15¼, says Rider and Driver. He travelled one-nalf inch over thirty-nine feet per second. Mr. H. A. Busby, the amateur reinsman, who brought out this sensational green trottter and who afterward made his wife a wedding present of him, says that at no time yet has he ever called upon Baron Silver to do his best, fearing on account of his extreme natural speed and size that he might break him down. However, he has shown throughout his work that he has staying qualities and seems as fresh and good at the end of four or five miles driven close around 2 : 20 as in the beginning. Great Eastern, it will be remembered, was in his day the largest horse on the turf, but Baron Silver has him distanced now in point of size. Inquiries are coming from all parts of the world concerning him. Many offers ranging away up in the thousands have come from millionaires, horse fanciers and circus men, but Mrs. Busby declares she will not part with her pet. Baron Silver's breeding is, as near as it can be traced, as follows: Bay gelding, foaled in the spring of 1900, Ohio born; was sired by Outcross, a registered grandson of Mambrino Patchen; dam by Gold King, son of Ambassador, he by Geo. Wilkes.

Mr. Busby says that the big trotter was in great demand last fall, secretaries all over the country writing him to exhibit his horse at their meetings as the star attraction, hundreds of dollars having been hung up as the inducement, but all offers were declined with thanks. Some persons have tried already this spring to lease or buy Baron Silver outright, but Mrs. Busby will not sell or lease her horse, and if her present plans are perfected it is quite certain that the big beauty she loves so well will not be driven any fast miles until he will be asked to trot a record late in the fall, although he may be seen in public exhibition before that time.

Our Home exchanges received this week tell us of the death, at the Sledmere Stud, of that celebrated mare Plaisanterie. Actually how good a racehorse Plaisanterie really was cannot be estimated, for she ran only twice in England, and was not extended. But that she possessed extraordinary merit cannot be doubted, for in the Cambridgeshire she conceded 2lbs. at weight-for-age to Bendigo, and beat him easily, while she was reckoned in this race the same animal as St. Gatien, who did not get a place. Plaisanterie had a marvellous career in France as well as in England in 1885, crediting her owner, M. Bony, with twelve races on her native soil. The filly was only once beaten as a three-year old, and then by a short head. In the circumstances the weight given to her in the Cesarewitch—7st. 8lbs.—was not prohibitive, and in heavy going she won in a canter. Then she carried her 14-lb. penalty—making her burden 8st. 12lbs.—to victory in the Cambridgeshire, and thus added to a record which has never been eclipsed. She and Foxhall are the only dual winners of the Cesarewitch and the Cambridgeshire. Of the two performances the filly's was a trifle the better, as she carried a pound more weight than Foxhall at weight for sex in each event. Sir Tatton Sykes bought her at the conclusion of her racing career.

It seems as if England will have to look to America in the future for sporting dogs, as several that have been imported have given great satisfaction recently on the moors. Some time ago Mr. Teasdale Buckle, when in the United States, bought several dogs and took them to England for breeding purposes, as he believed they were superior to English sporting dogs. Amongst these was a setter puppy, Ightfield Rob Roy, which was purchased for Captain Heywood Lonsdale, and later carried all before him at the Lanark Field Trial. There are a number of American dogs on the moors, but those owned by Mr. F. C. Mackay are, perhaps, amongst the best; and that this is so is proved by the fact that these setters have accounted for more birds than any other team of dogs this season.

This is not a bad "babooism." "Sir, I have not received the Day Book Copy Forms despatched under your invoice No. 60 of 7th September. The packet I think gone to ash tray."

There is a man-eating tiger in the Goilkera jungles which form part of the Porahat Estate situated in the Singhbum District. A good chance for a poojah shoot and a Rs. 200 reward offered by Government. Goilkera is on the B.-N. Railway.

The Gunners at Secunderabad ran a very enjoyable paperchase on the 11th instant. Most excellent going was had throughout the long course and a very fine finish was fought out between Captain Tudor, "S" Battery, R.H.A., and Captain Cowie, R.A.M.C., the first named winning. Several ladies were out, too, and some rode the course.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes:—The Gordon's Horse Hounds have been having real bad luck lately owing to unpropitious weather and an absence of jacks. They are, however, going to hunt in Mysore during the Dassara festivities and it may be confidently hoped that the country which saw such grand sport a quarter of a century ago, when Mr. W. Vinicombe Davy hunted the hounds of H. H. the late Maharaja of Mysore, will provide present day jacks who can also run and stay.

It may interest your readers to know that H.H. the Maharaja of Mysore's horse, Munderah, has been temporarily brought away from the stud farm at Kunigal and is doing good work with a view to having another shot at the blue riband of the Indian Turf. Much nonsense has been talked concerning this horse's soundness, ring-bone even has been mentioned. He is at present under the care of that eminently practical trainer and excellent judge, Tom Ferguson, and with regard to his soundness I quote Tom himself, who said to me the other day: "There isn't a sounder horse on the track." He may be expected to give a very fair account of himself in the Viceroy's Cup, other things being equal, and though it is, of course, very early days yet to prophesy, he will not I think be so very far away when the next Viceroy's Cup winner passes the judge's box. He did not run badly last year, and he was then certainly not fit.

A skittle polo tournament on the American system is now just concluding here. Fourteen teams entered and as this means about a hundred and fifty games, it is obvious that it could not be reported at length. Until just lately the Carabineers' first team seemed almost unbeatable, but in their final match the Palace team piled up such a terrific score against the second team of the Imperial Service Lancers, that they apparently just won by a point. The exact score I "disremember," but it was something like sixteen or seventeen goals, and as the tournament is calculated on three points to a goal, this game counted for a lot. Polo such as this is really rather a farce. From the resistance made by the Imperial Service Lancers, it seemed as though they would have done as well if mounted upon Commissariat mules. The Yuvaraja, Mr. Heale, Gopalraj Urs and Major Warner were the regular members of the winning side, but latterly Major Warner's place has been taken by a native player!

We have lately had opportunities of testing the virtues of "Mars" oil, samples of which have been submitted to us by the manufacturers. It is an antiseptic preparation designed to preserve all kinds of leather from the effects of climate whether dry or damp, and as such should have a strong claim to the consideration of Anglo-Indians. To sportsmen it specially appeals, for it has a wonderful action on shooting boots, fishing gear, harness and saddlery, athletic and motor gear,—in short it is good for leather wherever it is used. It seems to open the pores and permeate the hardest leather, renders it soft in an incredibly short time and not only waterproofs it, but preserves it against mildew, mould, heat or dry rot. What more would ye my masters? We have tried it on our favourite snipe shooting foot gear, on ammunition bags, leggings and fishing lines and in our opinion it nourishes, softens, and waterproofs while it requires no rubbing in.

The German War Office long ago recognised its merits and we are told it is the only leather oil used in the German Army. Our military readers may be interested to read what an English officer thinks of it. He writes:—

From Lieutenant-Colonel Pollock, Commanding Spectator Experimental Corps.

HOUNSLOW,
29th June 1906.

You are aware that my men's boots were treated with "Mars" oil to render them soft for the march to Windsor. We have continued to use this oil until the supply which you kindly sent on my application for that special purpose was exhausted. In my opinion "Mars" oil is an excellent dressing for the soldiers' boots; indeed I think it the best with which I an acquainted.

(Sd.) A. POLLOCK,
Lieut.-Col.,
Com. S. E. C.

We may add that the "Mars" Oil Company of 10 and 12, Milton Street, London, E. C., invite application for agencies in India.

"Salvarol" is another of this Company's preparations—a capital thing for gun barrels, or locks, fishing reels and anything that should be protected from rust.

In the columns of the Pioneer "Lesser Florican" puts in the following timely plea :—

Sir,—As the snipe season will shortly commence, if it has not already commenced, will you please let my petition be known to all sportsmen in India through the medium of your widely-read paper. I am but a poor florican, a pretty bird to look at and—it makes me shudder—a tasty one to eat, judging from the ruthless manner in which my species is shot down, but at the best of times I am a slow, clumsy flyer, an easy mark for the veriest tyro with a gun ! But do people realise the chief reason why I am so loth to take to flight, and why I do not fly fast and far when I am on the wing? I ask you, Sir, if you heard and saw a gang of robbers coming to attack your home would you run away as quickly as your legs could carry you and leave your wife and children to take care of themselves? No ! and nor do I ! How many sportsmen shoot my kith and kin, year after year, ignorant of the fact that we floricans, when the snipe come in, usually have just commenced our household duties, have laid our eggs or possibly have already hatched our young ! Can you wonder then that we do not take to flight until absolutely driven to it, and then only fly for a short distance if we do not fall victims to the eager but ignorant sportsman meanwhile ?

I saw recently, in one of the Bombay Natural History Society's journals, a note by a gentleman that a a friend of his had said that nowadays he only shoots perhaps one of us during the season, whereas formerly he shot several, and why ? Simply because year after year we are murdered during our breeding season and our eggs are left to rot or our young to perish of starvation ! If you can induce sportsmen to leave us alone, or, better still, induce Government to protect us strictly throughout our breeding season, and until our young are strong enough to look after themselves, we shall increase and multiply beyond belief, and you would not hear the complaint that there are nowadays so few floricans. We are slowly but surely being exterminated !

The Ooty hunt races are reported in our Turf columns. The attendance on both days was excellent, especially on the Downs. His Excellency the Governor was present on both occasions and rode one of the competitors in the Hunt Cup. The racing on the Hobart Park course was not particularly noteworthy. There were five races and in four of them the favourites rolled home easily. The fifth, however, was a great upset, Mr. Campbell's Sirdar winning most unexpectedly. The completeness of the surprise may be judged from the fact that the totalisator paid more than Rs. 70 on the Rs. 2 ticket. On Saturday there was a big crowd at Newmarket to witness the steeplechases. His Excellency had invited a large number of people to lunch on the Downs and nearly everybody in the station was present. Those who attended the races included H. E. Sir Arthur Lawley and Staff, the Hon'ble Mr. Fraser, Resident in Mysore and Mrs. Fraser, General Sir Charles Egerton, etc. The race of the day was the Hunt Cup, which is a point to point steeplechase over a course not less than four miles long, over fair hunting country. Fourteen competitors turned out for this, including His Excellency who order Admiral, Riccy Dicky, the horse ridden by Captain Heseltine, the Master of the Hunt, was favourite with Major Glyn's Right Angle a good second. Neither of these horses, however, were placed, the winner turning up in Captain Popham's Tocsin, with Mr. Colin Mackenzie's Brigadier second. His Excellency was seventh past the post. The programme included a new race, the 2nd Battalion Cheshire Regiment Point to Point Race, open only to officers of the regiment. This resulted in an exciting finish by Mr. C. A. R. Matteison's Kettledrum and Captain Crookenden's Dolly, the verdict being a dead heat.

Athletic Notes.

"ONE from up-country" last week wrote to a local contemporary asking why the Calcutta Football Club or team could not take their defeat at the hands of the Glosters "like gentlemen." We utterly fail to see that they have taken it in any other way. They played all they knew, were beaten, have entertained the visiting teams right well and, like true sportsmen, have extended to all-comers the hand of good fellowship. Surely the C. F. C. cannot be held responsible for those dear well-meaning but mischievous persons who have a penchant for writing to the papers ?

A perusal of the English sporting papers and journals devoted to motoring convinces one that nowadays the one idea seems to be to rush from place to place in the shortest time possible and to see as little as possible on the way. The old proverb, "Make haste slowly" is quite out of date, and "Make haste furiously" has superseded it. In travelling by motor how few think of admiring the beauties of the scenery passing along, the only thought is to try how much discomfort can be caused to unfortunate people on foot or in horse-drawn vehicles by smothering them with dust in passing them at the highest rate of speed possible, leaving behind them a trail of offensive petrol. It must follow that when the love of Nature ceases to exist so surely will the love of Art as depicted in the representations of Nature on canvas.

The love of beauty in every form seems gradually dying out. A motor is preferred to a beautiful horse with glossy coat and supple, graceful limbs. Old artistic bridges in brick and wood are taken away, and hideous iron structures are erected in their stead. Even our girls are now losing their soft feminine lines and turning into muscular, flat-chested, angular beings with sunburnt faces and arms—all in this prosaic age seems to be for use, not ornament.

Mr. E. H. D. Sewell, the old Anglo-Indian cricketer, had a good time of it in the matter of run-getting in the recent tour of the Granville (Lee) Club. His scores were :—

96 } vs. Blue Mantles, on 23rd August.
89 } vs. Eastbourne on 24th and 25th August.

which give an aggregate of 451 runs for twice out.

As will be seen in our English Sporting Letter this week another channel swim has ended in failure ; but at least the failure has been distinguished. Burgess has come nearer to completing the full distance than he did before, but he never had more difficult conditions to contend with, nor had he, in some senses, accomplished more in previous swims. The water was excessively rough—so much so that most people on the tug accompanying the swimmer were sea-sick. So was Burgess himself, but he did not give up for some hours, though at last he was forced to do so by severe pain. It has been the fashion this summer to laugh in a good-humoured way at the Channel swimmers, and perhaps some of the exhibitions deserved ridicule. But how many of those who have laughed could swim even a quarter of a mile in a heavy sea ?

One point emerges fairly clear from the many records of attempts to swim the Channel. That is, that Captain Webb had exceptionally good luck in getting across as easily—or, rather, as soon—as he did. The different permutations and combinations of wind, weather, and water, resulting in rough and cold seas or strong drifting tides are so large in number that it can only be by exceptionally good fortune that a swimmer comes through the test successfully. It is not always realised how enormously the tides affect the actual time which must be spent in the water. Captain Webb, on 3rd July 1875, swam twenty miles, from Blackwall to Gravesend, in 4 hours 53 minutes ; but when he swam the Channel, seven weeks later, the twenty-two and a half miles from Dover to Calais took him 23 hours 45 minutes.

The Police Cup Football Tournament, open to all native regiments in Burma, was won last Saturday at Mandalay by the 90th Punjabis who beat the 72nd Punjabis by 2 goals to 0.

The Calcutta Rugby Union Challenge Cup was won by the West Ridings who beat the United Services in the final by 4 tries to nil. Details in our Football columns.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—The Rovers' Tournament is the chief attraction in Bombay at present. One of the hardest games was that between the Bombay Gymkhana and the Royal Scots. The general opinion was that the Scots had a fairly easy thing, but the play proved otherwise, though they were the better of the two teams. The first few minutes showed that the game was to be both fast and strong. Both sides showed good combination and breaks up the field were frequent, but at both ends the backs were too strong and half time came with no score. At the opening of the second half the Scots gained a slight advantage and pressed hard for some time, but Haines and Ross were ready for all emergencies and cleared repeatedly when the ball was dangerously near their goal. Twice the Gymkhana looked like scoring, but were forced back and the game ended with nil all, and though time was extended for ten minutes the day's play ended in a pointless draw. When next they met play was very different. The Scots came out prepared to do or die and in the first half had put up three goals while the Gymkhana had failed to score. The second half saw the Gymkhana playing up better, but they failed at critical movements so that the Scots left the field victors by three to nil.

The Leicesters and the Cheshires put up a good game. Both teams came down with a big reputation and the crowd to witness the contest was the biggest of the week. The Cheshires were a bit slow. The Leicesters led off and carried play down to the twenty-five immediately, but the ball was cleverly headed back and tight play followed and then after some loose play in which the Cheshires shone, play was taken back to the Cheshire goal when after two or three fruitless efforts Hubbard got the ball and placed it well into the net. From an off side at the commencement of the second half the Cheshires got a good advantage. They did not retain it long for the greater pace of the Leicesters outmanœuvred them and about midway through the half Cunningham sent in another shot to the Cheshire goal which defeated Truman. Once after this the Cheshires really looked like scoring, but failed and the game ended with the Leicesters' two to nil.

A weak game was that between the 10th Hussars and the 7th Brigade R. F. A. ending in a handsome win for the Hussars. They scored only one goal in the first half, but in the second they put on pace and got through the posts three times to the gunners once, the latter going to pieces towards the end. An interesting match, however, was played by the local Telegraphists and the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. The Scotsmen by dint of hard work got a goal in the first half, but the effort tired out both teams a little and scoring was quicker when they changed ends, so that each scored two goals in the second half. The Telegraph men have improved wonderfully and next year, at their present rate, should be a very formidable combination.

As is usual at the close of each English cricket season, statistics are arriving in batches, but there is news by this week's mail of one record, which will not lightly be beaten, and that is George Hirst's achievement of scoring 2,000 runs and capturing 200 wickets. Add the value of the great little Yorkshireman's fielding, and that all his best work has been done for his county, and very often for his county in difficulties, and it is not difficult to echo the universal verdict which acclaims him the best cricketer in England. This week's mail too brought the details of Yorkshire's sensational defeat by one run at the hands of Gloucester, and one cannot help feeling that it is hard on the county of the White Rose to lose the County Championship by so narrow a margin. Never mind; Lord Hawke and his men will not grudge it to Kent, as fine a side and as good sportsmen as themselves, and well deserving a turn.

By the way Kent are aiming rather a nasty blow at Middlesex with their proposed substitution of five years' residence for two as the minimum qualification for an imported cricketer. Yorkshire will support them, and so will most of the counties, but Surrey will not like it with the Queensland crack, A. Marshall, qualified in existing circumstances to appear for them next season. But the idea is a sound one, in the interest of the game nevertheless, and fine cricketers and good fellows as Trott, Tarrant, Locke, Phillips, Mignon, Vogler and company are, they are not in their right place when they represent the county of the Walkers. Lancashire and Sussex are also somewhat notorious offenders in this respect, and Surrey have been in the past: while if the birth qualification were enforced the latter county would to-day lose Hayward, Hobbs and Lees. Each cricketing county has its own good men, and plenty of them, and ought to be made to rely on them; otherwise cricket must sink, as it shows only too many signs of doing, to the level of league football.

Meanwhile Hayward is in hot pursuit of Abel's record for the maximum number of runs during a season, and seeing that with at least a fortnight's more play he is well within 100 runs of it, appears certain to surpass it. He has struck, for him, a bad patch lately, and Surrey failures have promptly been laid to his door, but he, like Hirst, has saved his county over and over again, and he at least deserves all the satisfaction to be got out of scoring 3,310 runs or more when the record is five short of that number. A more laudable ambition is that of Wilfred Rhodes, the other great Yorkshireman, namely, to be played for All England for his batting: and judging from his performances during the last month very many things are more unlikely.

The Tollygunge Club Foursomes Tournament, which has been in progress for the past six weeks and which aroused much interest among members, has been brought to a conclusion by the victory of Messrs. F. H. Stewart and J. D. Guise, receiving five strokes, who, playing Messrs. Norman McLeod and L. Trunniger in the final tie on level terms, beat them very decisively by seven up and five to play, though it is only fair to say that neither of the latter couple was in anything like his best form. The two C.C.C. cricketers, whose chance was considered a very good one from the start played well and steadily throughout the competition, and none of their opponents got within a four-hole margin of them. The tournament attracted no less than 68 entries, and to avoid two scratch men entering together, a minimum aggregate handicap of eight strokes was required from each couple, which proved a very successful innovation. The course was on the whole in excellent order, and the ties were got through with unusual but very commendable punctuality. Messrs. Stewart and Guise take first prize and first optional sweepstakes, Messrs. McLeod and Trunniger scoring the second in each case.

The Calcutta Football Club place kicking competition was decided on Tuesday evening. Among the entrants were Messrs. Drew, Dick, the brothers Siddons and O. J. Barnes, and the greatest of these was Barnes, who won with the very good score of 7 goals out of 10 shots.

The autumn meeting of the Calcutta Swimming Club was a distinct success. The happy inspiration of holding it after dinner brought out quite a large gallery and the committee will be well advised to make the change permanent. The Viceroy's medal handicap—alas! that it should be found expedient to make it one—was won by Mr. Watkins, who, giving away starts up to 28 seconds, came through with a grand spurt in the sixth length. Some of the competitors in the diving display did many pretty things and in the Ladies' Costume Race other things were done—not quite so pretty. Full results appear further on.

London Week by Week.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Friday, 31st August 1906.

An uneventful week (reckoning from mail day to mail day) came to a close this morning with two widely differing incidents to attract general attention. Lady Campbell Bannerman's long and tedious illness ended in her death yesterday at Marienbad. It was by no means unexpected: I understand that her condition was regarded as practically hopeless before she left this country and her return was not expected by the most sanguine among her friends. Lady Campbell Bannerman was one of those women who exercise vast influence behind the purdah: she appeared little in public—and indeed her health forbade her to do much even as a party hostess when her husband attained to the position which compels party entertainment on a large scale. As a woman of exceptional ability she had always closely identified herself with Sir Henry's political life, and was regarded as a strong influence therein while her health permitted continuance of interest.

* * * * * *

The other incident is political, but as it promises large developments demands reference. Mr. Long in Dublin by his recent straightforward speech has "drawn" Sir Antony MacDonnell. The latter writes to Mr. Long a letter in which he practically admits his possession of correspondence inconvenient to the members of the late Unionist administration. In Sir Antony's opinion the time is not come to make this correspodence public and he expresses doubt as to whether that time ever will come. In the meantime he makes public certain confidential matters of moment which passed between his chief and himself and so adds another to the list of his indiscretions. He has said too much and too little, and the general feeling is that the business cannot be allowed to remain where it stands.

London is beginning to wake up. Every day sees an increase in the number of laden cabs with sun-browned families within. I can't say that the waking up is accompanied by much stir. Quiet though it is I always like London in August, especially if we are vouchsafed enough wind to give us the sense that the used up air is being carried away and fresh air left in place of it. You can get a cab without trouble: you can, an' your taste so lieth, choose—yes select deliberately—the seat of your preference on the top of the motor-'bus. When you go into a shop, so far from having to wait, you are the welcome prey of from two to six unusually polite salesmen. Then there are always a few people who remain in town when others go away, and of these a proportion do so because they have sense enough to avoid crowds and not money enough to go far that they can escape them: and among these people one discovers congenial spirits You may make acquaintances during the season; but you make friends out of it.

There has been a gentle counterblast to the movement represented by the Children's Country Holiday Fund this year. It is not a very agreeable thing to protest against, but the complaints of farmers and fruitgrowers from places where town children are sent by the charitable grow too loud to be ignored. The children naturally and densely ignorant of the circumstances surrounding them contrive to do a terrible amount of mischief in field, orchard and garden. Turned out of doors to amuse themselves they do so at others' expense and the unfortunate others have no redress. Country holidays are no doubt good for the children, but they are very bad for the dwellers in the country districts.

An exhibition of Lord Curzon's Asiatic collections has been opened this week at Bethnal Green Museum. His former Excellency collected with enthusiasm and discretion; and his curios represent the art of the East from Persia to Siam in gold, ivory, base metals, wood and lacquer. It is a very convenient opportunity of comparing the attractions of strictly Oriental work with that which has been qualified by Occidental influence, and were Bethnal Green somewhat less remote I imagine that the crowd of discriminating visitors would be much larger. 'Arry and 'Arriet, however, seem to appreciate the show very thoroughly and their comments on various exhibits if lacking in discernment are attractive in their originality.

The change in the method of examining for Sandhurst has produced a remarkable result. Last year, you may remember, the plan was introduced of a qualifying exam. (held by the University of London) followed by a competitive with fewer subjects than in the old exam. The result is best shown by comparing figures: in 1904, 624 competitors went up for 196 vacancies: this year only 240 candidates were forthcoming for 198 vacancies, and these 240 had not been weeded out by medical examiners.

I has not made up my mind which sin of William Jackson lends the play its title. W. Jackson has four major sins to his account, and use of the plural would not, I suggest, impair the attraction of the name while it would release enquiring minds from a dilemma. Before the curtain went up on Tuesday night at the Lyric Jackson had "done time" for manslaughter: he had smitten and accidentally killed a man who had kissed Annie with whom Jackson was either "walking out" or "keeping company." I am not sure which. Anyhow it does not matter. Jackson got five years for it and when he came out and the curtain went up he found that Annie had become Mrs. Valentine. He had really no right to be surprised at this: he had anticipated the privileges of matrimony and Annie, anxious to provide her unborn child with a father, had married Mr. Harry Valentine without, I apprehend, making very close enquiries concerning that gentleman's character. Mr. Valentine is a book-maker in a small way; he is generally drunk, and sober or drunk he ill-treats his wife. W. Jackson (being the hero) nobly vows to release her: whether he acquired the gift of language he possesses in the course of his profession—he is a sailor—or in jail matters not; but he is voluble to boredom. He still loves Annie and witnessing Mr. Valentine's treatment of her threatens to smash him if he does not behave better. The wanton behaviour of Mrs. Alfieri complicates matters: she flirts with Valentine, with Mr. Higgins, a draper and would do so also with Jackson, who, of course, would "scorn the h'action." Mr. Alfieri, Italian restaurant proprieter, is a jealous man. He detects his spouse in the act of giving Mr. Higgins the latch key, so that they "may have supper together": the noble Jackson recovers the key for her and contrives that it shall fall into Mr. Valentine's ready hands. Valentine comes to supper and as Jackson has calculated is stabbed dead by the jealous Alfieri. Meantime Jackson has tried to persuade Annie to elope with him: she has refused and still refuses after her husband's murder for which, quite properly, she holds Jackson largely responsible. Before curtain fall, however, she relents and the pair are to be united. The reception accorded W. Jackson and his sons was mixed: the outrageous bad taste of some of the dialogue, particularly that objectionable discussion about funerals after Valentine's murder, evoked symptoms the reverse of flattering.

* * * * * *

The character drawing is not satisfactory. Of Jackson with whom we are, I suppose, expected to sympathise, you can form your own opinion. Mr.

Ernest Leicester had a thankless task to make anything of a character so blemished. Mr. John Tresaher had an easier task to present the uniform iniquity of Valentine and Mr. Robert Pateman was very good as the jealous Italian. Miss Ruth Mackay was the immoral Mrs. Alfieri, and Miss Nina Boucicault played Annie: Annie is the best drawn character in the play and Miss Boucicault made her a weak, well meaning, conciliatory woman, harried by her miserable circumstances. It is depressing play and the humour is not the least depressing part of it.

Mr. Charles Manners closed his Grand-Opera-in-English season at the Lyric on Saturday with an interesting speech. He let his audience into financial secrets which are worth repeating: he said that he made £450 over his first season at Covent Garden and thought he had made a splendid start. On the strength of it he enlarged his company paying from £150 to £200 a week more in salaries, and embarked on a second season: he lost £1,200 over the venture. Then came the large talk about National Opera and Opera in English and Mr. Manners thought it would be worth putting to practical test the question whether there was demand for English opera or not, so he took Drury Lane for two months; and lost between £5,000 and £6,000. When giving "Eugene Onagin" at the Coronet in the early summer he mentioned to the audience that he was going to try another pucca London season. He took the Lyric, and in his speech on Saturday said that when he signed the contract would gladly make the whole business over to anyone who would take it, giving his own and his wife's services with £1,000 down to help him through. To his amazement the season produced a profit and he means to have another. He deserves success for his pluck.

It appears to me that the "book" of Grand Opera in English needs very careful writing: the common-place remarks incidental to any dramatic dialogue will pass in Italian or German—in any foreign language—but when rendered in our own mother tongue they are apt to sound fatuous. The most talented actress cannot sing such remarks as "You look distraught: I fear you slept ill last night" or "I must go into the house: and give some orders" with a really good grace, and it seems to me that this intrusion of the deadly common place makes for the comparatively ill success of Grand Opera in English—in London at all events: in the provinces audiences are evidently less critical, as Mr. Manners explained that it is only the support accorded him in the provinces that enables him to enjoy the expensive—or at least risky—luxury of a season in town.

Another triumph for the "Halls!" Miss Marie Tempest is billed to appear at the Palace where she will sing three songs every night in return for "the biggest salary on record." The Morning Post makes the rather happy suggestion that an authenticated copy of an artist's contract, showing of course the salary, would make a more efficient advertisement than the ordinary flaming poster.

There is nothing like keeping up to date. "The Flood" at the Hippodrome is to subside in order to make room for another grand sensational spectacle, "The Earthquake," which, it is promised, will be more wonderful than the Deluge, which has charmed London for so long.

That much thrashed out topic "Kissing the Book" has been well exercised this silly season. Mr. Arnold Foster as chairman of the Otley bench has solved the difficulty so far as his court is concerned by presenting a dozen New Testaments bound in a material which will permit of their being wiped clean.

The Spectator Experimental Company raised by Colonel Pollock were paraded on Tuesday for inspection with the 1st Grenadier Guards. Sir John French, who inspected them, spoke very highly of the company, observing that the men fully realised Colonel Pollock's aims. Will the experiment be turned to practical account? That is what people would like to know.

An extraordinary double murder has created a sensation in Essex. On Thursday of last week an elderly couple named Watson drawing water from a neighbour's pond were shot dead by the son of that neighbour who objected to the proceedings of the victims.

The Home Secretary has reduced the sentence of five years passed on Hugh Watt, ex-M. P., to one year: no reason assigned.

TIGER SHOOTING IN UPPER BURMA.

MY second tiger was bagged at K——, under circumstances by no means exciting. On the contrary they were rather tame. News was brought to me while I was breakfasting alone in the Public Works Bungalow at K——, that a cow belonging to a native of India had been killed that morning, and that the herdsman (a Gurkha) had witnessed it's death, and that the tiger had gone off and left the bullock I hurried out to the spot which was about three miles from K——, arriving there at about midday and found the cow lying in a fairly open space, but surrounded by a certain amount of tall grass and fairly dense bamboo jungle and undergrowth. There were also a few trees here and there about the place. One with handy branches grew invitingly within a few yards of the carcase. I soon had a platform erected amongst it's branches at a height of about 11 feet from the ground and, as the "kill" was about three miles from the nearest village, K——, in a quiet locality, I sent back all the men who had come out with me and entered the "machan" alone at about 4 P.M. in case the tiger should pay an early call. Luck favoured me; for a little before 5. P.M., shortly after the sun had disappeared for the evening behind a bank of huge black clouds which had been looming up steadily over the horizon, I happened to glance behind and below me to a distance of about 50 yards and caught a glimpse of him slouching slowly along towards the "kill" as if terribly bored with the whole business. I watched him as he came slowly up and halted under my tree for a few seconds to look at some rubbish, the remains of some of the material which had been used in the construction of the "machan," and the appearance of which he evidently did not at all care about. After having a good look at this and sniffing at it he appeared satisfied and then walked over in a leisurely manner to the kill, alongside of which he lay down on all fours with a low satisfied grunt. Then opening his mouth with an audible kiss and seizing the dead animal by the nape of the neck with his powerful jaws with the intention no doubt of removing the carcase to some heavier jungle close by, he rose on to his fore legs to put more power into his effort, but the "kill" which as usual, had previously been firmly lashed to stakes driven deep into the ground, held fast to its moorings. Relaxing his grip for a moment he was about to change his hold when I fired, aiming for the back of his head. The bullet took him exactly where I wanted it to go, and he rolled over on to his right side motionless, without a groan, shot dead through the brain, the ball passing out of his mouth into the ground, where I afterwards recovered it. A long continued sighing was the only noise which emanated from his lips and nostrils as life ebbed rapidly away. He turned out to be a very heavy tiger, 9 feet 4 inches long, but with only a fair skin, the hair being exceedingly short and not of a good colour. The circumstances connected with the shooting of my third and last tiger (on the 2nd January 1905) which I wounded and then followed up on foot accompanied by a party of Military Police Gurkhas and Burmans, bring back very unpleasant recollections which can never by effaced from my memory, for it resulted in the mauling and subsequent death of one of the men with me at the time. It is the first time during all my "shikar" experiences of the past 20 years that anything of the kind has ever occurred and I trust it will be the last. I was encamped at a village named S——, in the District of M——, situated on the banks of the Irrawaddy River—breakfasting under canvas with two other men when my clerk came rushing up to the entrance of the tent with the news that a tiger had killed a cow during the small hours of the morning at a village named P——, situated on the bank of the river about a mile and a half above S——. Directing may clerk to send word out at once to the headman of P——, to see that no one removed the carcase of the cow, I hurried through with breakfast and, ordering my pony to be saddled, galloped out to P——, with the object of superintending the erection of the "machan" with a view to sitting up for the tiger the same evening. The cow I found lying in the jungle with it's neck broken, some 20 to 30 paces from the cartroad leading into the village which was distant from the scene some 150 yards. This tiger was evidently a noted cattle lifter, for he had often been heard of in these parts, and, although he committed his last offence in such close proximity to the village, no one heard a sound. He had evidently helped himself considerably in his first meal, for some big junks of beef, probably 15 to 20 pounds, had disappeared from the cow's hind quarters. After turning out the villagers, I had the carcase dragged out on to the road, where to begin with I had it securely staked down to the ground. As there was not to be a vestige of moon during the night, I was obliged to have the platform rigged up as low as possible to enable me to see anything at all. Owing to the absence of trees in the vicinity of the road I was obliged to have three poles inserted in the ground as supports in the shape of a triangle amongst the bushes by the side of the road upon which, at a height of about eight feet, a seat, or double platform large enough for one person only, was constructed, facing the road and "kill" which lay along the centre of the roadway. After seeing the "machan" completed to my satisfaction—a matter of three hours hard work—I cantered back to S——, and after bathing, changing, and having some tea—galloped back to P——, and entered the "machan" at 6 P.M. All noises were gradually subsiding; but hark, what are those sharp, harsh, grating, purring sounds from the jungle behind me, which appear to be drawing nearer and yet nearer. I listened peering down steadfastly at the "kill" which I could just see dimly lying out along the bare portion of the road not more than twelve paces in a straight line from where I was seated. At first I thought they were leopards, but they turned out to be two hungry jungle cats, which having scented the dead cow from afar, were dying to get within eating distance of the same, but dare not attempt it, knowing full well that it was the spoil of the dreaded midnight prowler, and that if he found them there it would be all up with them. Presently both animals which had been moving fussily around the "kill" for a long time making a great show of coming right up to it for a mouthful but could never apparently screw up enough courage to do so, suddenly scurried away in a terrible hurry and disappeared for good. I was certain now that they had winded the tiger and that the latter could not be far off. Getting my "cosmos" ball and shot gun which was now at full cock, noiselessly forward into position, I leant over, and remaining motionless kept my eyes fixed on the carcase in front of me, the outline of which could now only be seen with difficulty. It was an exciting moment as anyone knows who has sat up alone on a dark night and within springing distance waiting for a tiger to put in an appearance. In order to be able to see the muzzle of my gun easier when aiming at the tiger, the small white circular night sight being quite invisible without a moon, I had tied on at the muzzle over the foresight in the shape of a triangle to the height of about half an inch, a small roll of white cotton cloth which served the purpose well, although I could only just see it when the gun was at my shoulder. It was now 7 P.M. and quite dark. I could barely see the carcase as it lay out at full length along the bare brown patch of pathway which showed up along the centre of the roadway. Suddenly, without any preliminary warning, the "kill" in front of me, at which I had been steadfastly peering until my eyes felt like starting out of my head, was blotted out of my view and I knew the tiger had caused the transformation and was now standing between me and it, like a huge black shadow. There was a death-like stillness for about three or four seconds and then a loud sniff followed by a crunch and the breaking of sinews and bones as the tiger seized the cow by the neck and pulled and tugged for all he was worth to try and remove it. The stout pins and rope, however, withstood all his mighty efforts, although they were continued for the space of half a minute. I could not, in the position he was then in, see him clearly enough to risk a shot, moreover he appeared to me to be all over the place and I preferred to risk a shot only when he was lying on all fours feeding. Just then a buffalo which had evidently got scent of the tiger broke loose from the village and came careering along the road towards the carcase. This was evidently too much for the tiger, for all sounds from the "kill" ceased immediately, and he disappeared as quietly as he had come. The buffalo swerved off the road on seeing the body of the cow, and then breaking past the platform upon which I sat nearly carrying me and it away, with him in his mad rush, dashed headlong away and disappeared in the jungle with a terrific clatter.

I was terribly disappointed for, of course, I never expected to see the tiger again. All became still once more and the minutes went past like hours. I was determined to give the tiger two full hours' grace before descending and giving it up as a bad job, but the animal turned up sooner than I excepted, within an hour in fact, when the "kill" received the same violent treatment as on the first occasion. This time, however, having failed in his efforts to remove it, he began feeding upon the hind quarters of the carcase lying out at full length along the road broadside on to me in the exact position I had hoped to see him occupy. I waited for some minutes till his suspicions had been thoroughly allayed, and his teeth were well home in to the meat, meanwhile hardly daring to breath or move a muscle for fear of alarming the brute. I raised the end of the gun over the parapet of leaves in front of me and taking a long careful aim for what I took to be the tiger's shoulder, pulled the trigger. A succession of short, sharp, angry grunting roars split the air, as the animal evidently hard hit dashed headlong over the carcase to fight an imaginary foe. Although I was unable to see, from the cloud of smoke which hung between us and hid everything from view, what the brute was really doing during the few seconds he roared, snarled and fought over the body of the cow, it was evident to me from the diabolical sounds emitted, that he had been badly, if not mortally, wounded Presently all sounds ceased and then a few feet beyond the "kill" in front of me I heard the rattle of some dry bean pods on some dead bushes and then all was quiet.

I waited for fully twenty minutes without moving or uttering a sound in case his majesty should be lying up close by, having meanwhile loaded up both chambers of my gun with cartridges filled with slugs and 4½ drams powder, and then drawing my whistle from my pocket I blew several shrill calls to bring up my men. They were not long in putting in an appearance with two hurricane lanterns. I shouted to them when they were about 80 yards off to hold hard and not be in too great a hurry. After we had shouted and yelled ourselves hoarse for some minutes, and conversed with one another at a respectable distance, the men came on along the road holding their lanterns high up above their heads whilst I stood up and covered their approach with my gun. As they came up I descended from the "machan" and with my men, carefully examined the "kill" and the surrounding ground for any marks of a bullet hole. After a lengthy inspection we noticed that the tiger after being hit had in his rage or agony sprung on to the cow's head and worried it, pulling off one horn with its teeth during the mad struggle which ensued after my shot. There was also a spot of blood on the carcase of the cow which had evidently fallen from the tiger's mouth. This was a good sign, one man said; "he has been shot through the lungs" and "we will find him in the morning close by, dead," was the verdict of another man. I mounted my pony and taking a hurricane lantern in one hand galloped back to S——, where I arrived in time for dinner.

On the following morning I was off again to the scene of yesterday's adventure accompanied by three Gurkhas (Military Police Sepoys, part of my escort of 25 men allowed me by Government when out on tour in the Kachin Hills), one of whom was the Havildar or Sergeant in charge, and all of whom had expressed a keen desire to accompany me on the morrow. Three Burman village policemen of S——, also begged to be allowed to come. There were seven of us all told, four or five too many perhaps. It was a case of footing it of course. Elephants there were none and no one would undertake to either lend us their buffaloes or drive a herd ahead of us in orde that the tiger, if still alive, might be induced to charge them and enable me to shoot before the animal could get home on to anybody. We had not followed the trail many yards into the jungle—about 80 or so perhaps altogether—when we came upon two pools of blood and impressions of the tiger's form on the grass, where the brute had evidently lain down and rolled about the night before. Village Police Constable Maung Po, one of the most experienced of the men of our party, who, like his two confréres, was armed with a muzzle loading Enfield musket, the Gurkhas having their Martini Henry Rifles, now turned to me with a look, and in an undertone said, "Sir I am afraid it is a case of having to shoot again should we come up with him for he is alive." I thought this was coming. Down to zero sank all my hopes at once of ever seeing the tiger again. However there was no getting out of it now, although according to some people I ought now in the face of this evidence to have turned backat once with my men and taken no further risk. I pushed on regardless of all consequences. To cut a long story short let me say that after taking on the blood spoor for another 150 yards or so and crossing the dry bed of a small nullah a few feet in width, all traces of the wounded animal disappeared. Casting carefully around for these my men scattered slightly to right and to left of me in crescent shape with no one anywhere ahead of me. We were then only about 250 yards from the village, the spoor having led us round in a semi-circle inclining back towards the village. The jungle here showed signs of becoming a little denser than any we had as yet passed through. Two men, viz., Maung Po, the village policeman already referred to, and a Gurkha Sepoy, had branched off together to my right, two other men again, viz., the havildar and a village police constable turned off at right angles to my left, whilst the two remaining men, a Kachin Sepoy and village constable who had dropped to the rear a little some 20 yards behind me, also turned off to the right and began walking along up the dry bed of the stream we had just crossed over. We were all busily engaged looking ahead and stooping, scanning the ground for the lost blood spoor and had hardly parted company many seconds when my ears were greeted by a succession of short grunting coughing roars from my right, in the direction taken by Maung Po and his companion.

The whole affair was over in ten or fifteen seconds. The tiger, according to Maung Po, which did not come along at any pace, made a bee line for the Gurkha who was standing some three paces to his right, having evidently spotted him from the beginning, he having on a pair of white cotton trousers, a fact which somehow in the excitement of the moment when starting on the trail, had escaped my notice. Maung Po, who was more sensibly dressed in Nature's garments principally, having nothing on but a dark coloured silk loin cloth tucked up in front and behind according to the custom of the country, jumped to one side, and at a distance of about six paces, fired at the tiger's shoulder as it came on at the Gurkha round a clump of bamboos, failing however to stop it. The sepoy, according to his own statement and that of Maung Po's, elicited by me afterwards, fired at the tiger when it was three paces from him hitting it rather low down in the face below the right eye, the bullet eventually finding a billet in the muscles of the neck where it mushroomed as fast as I could shoot. Fortunately there was not much chance of hitting the Gurkha by mistake, as when I appeared upon the scene the tiger was standing broadside on to me in an open space affording an excellent shot. The brute had its head down, and with closed eyes was silently chewing away at the man's leg, whilst the Gurkha, whose screams were most unnerving, was engaged with the fingers of both hands clawing away aimlessly at the tiger's face which paid not the slightest attention to his movements, but continued its horrible work. I wondered at the time that this action on the part of its victim did not infuriate the animal and make it relinquish its grip to a more vital spot higher up the man's body. Maung Po, whose companionship at this time was most acceptable, stood calmly by me with an empty gun whilst I loaded and fired. My first shot did not seem to trouble the tiger at all, for he paid not the slightest attention to it. It may have been a miss, of course, for I was feeling far from comfortable and the whole situation was not conducive to steady shooting. My second shot hit him hard in a vital spot, for leaping up several feet into the air and snarling like the devil he turned a complete somersault and fell a few yards away clear of the prostrate man. Hurriedly ejecting the two empty cases and loading the right chamber only, I finished him with a third shot.

After loading both barrels, I threw a few sticks at the body in order to make sure that he was dead and then seeing that it remained motionless, I scrambled over a couple of fallen logs which lay between me and the wounded Gurkha who sat up on my approach, and after asking for a smoke said in a somewhat broken voice that he was afraid his time had come. I cheered him up at once and told him that he would soon be all right. After removing his garments I examined his wounds which at first sight, although deep and badly lacerated, showed that on vital organs had been perforated. They did not appear to me at the time to be fatal. Of course it is well known how quickly and easily the whole system is poisoned by bites or wounds inflicted by any of the "felidæ" and how rapidly a wounded man, even though possessed of a powerful constitution, succumbs to his wounds. Snatching along new white muslin turban some two or three yards in length from the head of a Kachin Sepoy who was standing close by, I bound up his wounds as quickly as possible and had him carried into the hospital at S——, within an hour after the occurrence. The wounds, of which there were about six in all, were situated on the front and upper part of the right thigh, between it and the groin, but nearer the groin if anything, and there were also one or two deep punctures and scratches on the lower part of the back. When the wounded man told me he could not move his injured leg I guessed at once that it had been either broken, or was dislocated at the hip. It turned out to be the latter. The femoral artery had also been partially severed, so at any rate the native Government Hospital Assistant at S——, informed me after the unfortunate man's death which occurred on the following morning at 3 o'clock when he passed away in an unconscious state.

The tiger measured 10 feet 4½ inches and was a very heavy beast in his prime with an enormous head and huge forearms and pads. I found that my first bullet, the one fired from the "machan" at night, had caught him fair on the top of the neck, at the junction of the neck with the shoulder, missing the spinal column by a very little indeed.

RIVER AND LAKE FISHING IN INDIA.

V.

IN my last article treating of artificial baits, I did not mention flies. These, however, will be mentioned later when discussing the subject of fly fishing, a form of the gentle art which is indulged in much less frequently than it might be, owing to a common but mistaken belief that the mahseer is not a fly taker.

I will now go on to the subject of natural baits, and of these only two sorts require particular mention, viz., small fish and frogs. The sort of natural bait which is most successful depends largely on local conditions; for instance, in rivers running between dry and rocky banks where frogs are not common, you might fish all day with a frog and take nothing, while in those rivers which have low marshy banks where frogs exist in large numbers, this form of bait is occasionally more successful than any other. In all places, and under all circumstances, however, a small fish is the natural and normal food of the mahseer, and during the periodical migrations of the small fry, in March and April, and again in October, these are the best, and frequently the only bait that is of any use. When small fish have been running up stream and have assembled in countless myriads at the foot of a fall or any other obstruction which bars their further progress, I have frequently used a spoon or phantom minnow without touching a fish, and have then had on a mahseer every time I put on a natural bait. When mahseer are taking either spoon or natural bait equally well, I infinitely prefer the spoon for two reasons; it is easier to work if the water is not running strong, and it involves much less trouble and loss of time in starting work again after taking a fish, but mahseer are frequently shy of the spoon, though they may be taking natural bait well, so unless you know your water before hand and know just what is the best bait to use in it, it is as well to have both at hand. It is frequently difficult to get natural bait of the right sort and size just when it is wanted, and it is therefore a useful thing to know that "formalin," which is obtainable from almost any chemist, is an excellent preservative. Natural bait bottled in formalin will remain untarnished in colour and thoroughly sound for use, for at least a fortnight, probably longer, and you can therefore lay in a supply of natural bait beforehand. Methylated spirits of wine will serve the same purpose if it is only desired to keep the bait for a couple of days. The smell of the spirits passes off in the water and does not deter the fish from taking.

Many of themethods of mounting natural bait for spinning, which you see illustrated in books on English angling and in price lists, are utterly useless in India. Most of those which are shown bristling with hooks are for taking the pike, a voracious brute which is not easily choked off when it means business, and whose long mouth requires a plentiful garnishing of hooks on the bait to improve the chance of one or other of them being properly fixed in its jaws. It is not so with the mahseer. His mouth and lips furnish an excellent hook hold and ordinarily one-lip hook and one treble side hook are all that you require. If you are fishing over a fall casting into foaming water from a bridge, and letting your bait out further and further by degrees, the ordinary flying mount of a spoon is all that you require, the head treble being passed through both lips, and one hook of the lower treble being fixed in the body in such a way as to give the bait a slight bend and ensure its spinning; you need not be very particular about this, as a "wobbly" spin is just as taking as any other. If, however, you are casting from the bank, when you have to let your bait work down and across stream, and when greater accuracy in spinning and neatness in the appearance of the bait are necessary, a single lip hook should take the place of the upper treble. When the perfection of accurate and careful spinning is required, a baiting needle is necessary, with which a length of stout salmon gut or wire attached to one treble hook should be drawn through the bait, starting from the vent and coming out at the mouth, one hook of the treble being carefully inserted into the belly and the shank of the hook drawn up to the vent; the requisite slight bend should then be given to the body, and the mouth should be sewn upon each side of the length of gut, by a couple of turns with a needle and thread through the lower lip and nostrils of the bait, finishing with a neat knot under the chin. The gut should then be attached to the trace.

Personally, I rarely use a baiting needle, as the process of putting on the bait is troublesome and the bait is liable to slip down and get out of shape. I find that the same results can be obtained with less loss of time by using the mount outside instead of inside the fish with a lip hook, but as very many skilled fishermen consider the other way to be the only one of any use, I place it before you for consideration. Almost the only occasions when I use leads for spinning are when using natural bait from a bridge into a run beneath. Fishing with a spoon under the same circumstances, you may occasionally require lead, but it is generally possible, with a little management, to make the spoon grip the water and start working almost at once, while it is frequently impossible to prevent a natural bait, from skipping at first, thereby causing the risk of one or both hooks of the mount coming out. The lead should be placed on the cast about three feet above the bait, and just below a swivel for choice.

I have no personal experience of using frogs as bait, but I believe the best way of mounting the bait is to use a lip hook through both lips, a tail hook to which the hind legs of the frog, stretched almost to full length, should be tied, and if you fancy it, a couple of side trebles hanging from the head of the mount which can be tied to the side of the bait with thread to keep them in position. The bait should then be let into the water from the head of a pool, and allowed to drop quietly down stream, checking the line constantly, to give the appearance of a frog swimming in the current. Here, however, I am open to correction, and having, as I have said, no experience of this style of fishing, which does not appeal to me in any way, I may be treading upon dangerous ground, in attempting to deal with the subject. The frog should, of course, be killed first by knocking it on the head.

Fishing for mahseer with live bait is another method which has not many attractions, but at times, when the water is too discoloured for spinning, it is the only method by which mahseer can be taken. It is, however, uncertain and unsatisfactory. The "picketting" of a live bait in the manner described by Colonel Parsons in "The Rod in India" is another form of "ledgering," and the mount appears to be unnecessarily difficult to apply. The first essential in using a live bait is that it should be handled, and kept out of water, as little as possible. The mount should therefore be one which can be applied rapidily, and with the minimum of damage to the bait. The only method which I have used myself, and which I have frequently found successful, is to use a small lip hook through both lips, and to fix one hook of a treble in the side, just below the dorsal fin, taking care to place the latter so that it lies inside the skin only, up to the bend of the hook. If thrust into the body, the bait dies almost immediately. A weight should be attached about three feet above the bait, and the latter should then be swung out as gently as possible into the stream and the slack line wound up. I use a twelve-bore bullet, beaten rather flat on both sides, as a weight. If not flattened, the bullet is liable to be rolled about by the force of the current. The weight should be attached to the line or cast by a piece of fairly stout thread passed through a hole bored through the bullet. It is most important that this thread should be considerably weaker than the cast, so that in case of entanglement in the bottom, a pull will free the line from the weight by breaking the thread. A mahseer takes this bait sharply and the resistance of the weight is sufficient to strike the hook into his lips.

A paste bait made of atta slightly stiffened with a little cotton wool to prevent its being washed off the hook is often successful especially when used below a flour mill on the stream, and very heavy fish can sometimes be taken in this way, when more sporting methods fail. The same weight should be used as for picketting live bait, viz., a flattened bullet, but instead of placing the weight above the bait, it should be at the end of the line, and the baited hook, or more than one if you wish should be attached to lengths of gut, or even line, about 9 to 12 inches long, above the weight, at intervals of about a foot apart. The hook can be attached to short lengths of line if fishing in coloured water, as being on the bottom the fish apparently take the line for weeds and are not afraid of it. A slighly stiffer top than that used for spinning should be used, and the slack should be wound in. The rod, which should be kept entirely stationary while fishing, should be raised sharply, but not with a jerk, when a sudden movement of the line at the point where it cuts the water, shows that a fish has taken the bait. This method is one which a sportman, fishing for sport and not for the pot only, would be reluctant to adopt until other methods fail. It is one, however, which is much in vogue among native fishermen in canals, and in rivers in the plains when the force of the current is not so impetuous as it is higher up. It has the disadvantage of being much hampered by the troublesome attentions of turtles.

WHITE KAKUR.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—With reference to "S. H. C's." query in your issue of the 6th September, I would refer him to the Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society of 2nd November 1905.

Amongst the animals presented to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales by His Excellency Sir Chandra Shumshere Jang Bahadur Rana, G. C. S. I., Prime Minister of Nepal, were two white "kakur."

SHOOTING ROUND AGRA.

(ON THE RIGHT OF THE JUMNA.)

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—A little below the Taj, on the right bank of the Jumna, near the ruined Wense Tannery, is some rough ground where there are a few grey partridges, jungle-bush quail and hares. Occasionally, too, one may get sandgrouse, and a stray black partridge. I mention this bit of ground particularly, as it illustrates how very close to a large station it is sometimes possible to find game. I have notes of getting there once, 6 grey partridges, 3 sandgrouse, 2 grey quail, and a hare. Another time 1 black partridge, 4 greys, 6 jungle-bush quail, a pigeon, and a hare. Two miles down river from the Taj, are some ravines and grass jungle. Here chinkara are always to be found, occasionally a black buck. There are also sandgrouse, grey quail, and a few grey partridges. It is a favourite feeding ground for the flocks of koolun which arrive in the cold weather. One day I saw a hyena there. To get at this ground one drives half a mile up the Fatehabad road, and takes a narrow track which branches off to the left. The path is not good, but it enables one to get a trap up to within a mile and a half of the grass jungle.

Near the Fatehabad road itself, there is very little on either side until eight and a half miles from Agra. Here there are tracks of uncultivated ground on both sides of the road, but at some distance from it, and the country holds plenty of game. Black buck may be found on either side. It is perhaps better to go on to Dhoki Tanna, 13 miles out, as this is in the very centre of the best ground. Dhoki itself is on the edge of a plateau, below it for two miles towards Agra stretches a level plain. This holds numbers of antelope. My notes record heads of 22 and 22½ inches from here. Behind Dhoki, on the high ground, there are ravines which hold a few chinkara. There was one with a very good head which I saw several times. He used to issue from the rough ground behind Dhoki, to go and feed in the plain just below the ridge. The small game shooting is excellent; one gun can easily average 25 or 30 head a day here. Black partridges are scarce, but by carefully searching the tamarisk along the river banks, and the occasional patches of sugarcane, one can generally get a few. Greys are very numerous: as they often lie in the crops. One sometimes gets very pretty shooting. Down in the plain where the black buck are, there is a sandy stretch which is a favourite resting place for sandgrouse: I got nine brace there one day. The little chestnut headed jungle-bush quail are also found in fair numbers, while the bushy ravines are full of peafowl. These latter are very shy and the best way of getting them is to use a rifle in the evenings, when the cocks sit out on the knolls calling, and may be stalked. Dhoki, from its high and airy position, is a good place to camp. The villagers are obliging and one can get beaters without difficulty.

The Fatehabad road has fine trees along both sides, and when driving along it one should look out for green pigeons, which always visit any pipal which happens to hold plenty of fruit.

To go back along the road to the ninth milestone from Agra; one can work from here across country towards Shamshabad. Most of the land is cultivated but there are occasional stretches of rough grassy, undulating ground. All round here, from the Fatehabad road to Digner Village, on the Shamshabad road, are favourite haunts of sandgrouse; the difficulty is to find the birds, as they move about a great deal. The fields on the right of the road near the ninth milestone are almost always a sure find. Koolun, too, often feed here, but one must have a rifle for them, as the ground is fairly open. In the United Provinces, where there is a big river running through the country, one cannot sit over a watering place for sandgrouse, as in the drier parts of India. One has to depend on finding them in the open. As they always croak when flying over, it is often fairly easy to discover the particular places they affect. . . . . .

Perhaps some of the very best country round Agra, is the maze of thorn jungle and ravines lying to the left of the Gwalior road near the Khara Nuddee. To reach this in a trap one should drive as far as the second irrigation canal from Agra on the Gwalior road, and then turn down and follow the channel, until within about a mile and a half from the little river. This means a good distance altogether, so a second pony should be posted half way. Owing to its being just beyond an ordinary drive this country is little disturbed, and there are plenty of chinkara, some of them with good heads. In the cultivation near the ravines black buck are numerous, so that with any luck one may get decent bucks of both sorts on the same day. Grey partridges, sandgrouse, hares and peafowl are all very plentiful. Also there are often bar-headed geese on the little river.

If instead of going to the left along the canal, one drives straight on along the high road, a bridge over the Khara Nuddee is reached about three miles on.

Beyond the stream there is a small thatched nest house, on high ground to the left of the road.

This is also good country, but owing to its accessibility, far more shot over than the more distant ground previously described. One chinkara in particular, with a very fine head, was well known to Agra sportsmen as frequenting the ravines close to the bungalow on the right of the road. Away to the left, behind the rest-house and two or three miles off, are many little nallahs, where chinkara can always be found. The whole country swarms with hares, and there are plenty of grey partridges, but no black. I have seen lesser bustard (Likh) here in the rains. Going up stream one soon comes to open plains where there are black buck, horns, however, as a rule poor.

Sandgrouse, too, are constantly met with all about here. There is a cutcha road from Agra to Jagner. All round Jagner there is splendid shooting, but it is 35 miles off so I do not propose to describe it here.

Eleven miles along this road is Nagla Birja, where there is a certain amount of game in the rough bush country away to the left. Further on at Nagla Kamal, 22 miles from Agra, there is excellent small game shooting. Black and grey partridges, quail, sandgrouse, hares, peafowl, and green pigeons. Between Nagla Birja and Nagla Kamal, and 16 miles from Agra, is Ragerol. Here besides small game, there are black buck with verw good heads: 3 I got here, were 23¾, 24, and 24¼ inches respectively. Just off the road to Fateepore Sikri is Karaoli P.W.D. Inspection Bungalow. Close to are some disused sandstone quarries, in which thorn bushes, and grass have grown up affording cover. As soon as the crops have been cut, these quarries swarm with hares, and very pretty sport may be had with a rook rifle. There are also lots of grey partridges, some green pigeons, and a few black buck. I got one of the latter with a 22 inch head not far from the bungalow.

Fateepore Sikri itself is a charming place to stay a couple of days at, and affords excellent shooting. There is an old masonry bund going right across the valley below the ruined city: this used once to hold in the waters of the lake, now alas! dry.

One can walk along the top of the bund which is used as a path, to the far side of the valley. Here there is a rocky ridge, beyond which we find a fine grassy plain. After the rains this plain becomes a jheel, and at the end of October, duck, teal, and snipe are to be found there. Later on in the season the jheel dries up; if is essentially a place to be exploited early. The dry shooting is also excellent. There are a few black and plenty of grey partridges—grey and jungle-bush quail, hares; lots of common sandgrouse, and a few painted ones. Also black buck, some with good heads. One or two panthers have been shot at Fateepore Sikri, but I do not suppose there are any left now. Ten miles out on the Muttra road, a bridle path along which one can drive leads down to Surwa ferry and on the Jumna (this is near Rankottah).

This is a first rate place for getting crocodiles of both sorts—across the river are black buck, black partridges, and green pigeons; while among the ravines on the right bank are chinkara. I have also seen wolves here. On the same road, but nearer Agra, is Sikandra. This is a favourite hunting ground for the "G. T." from Laurie's Hotel. However the energetic sportsman who will cross the ferry and walk several miles down stream, will find plenty of game left. The tamarisk jungle along the banks of the river is one of the few places near Agra where one can always depend on getting a few black partridges. The high ground down stream is a favourite resort of sandgrouse. Sikandra's is where the Hotel Shikari always takes "G. Ts" for a shot at gharyal. About a mile below the ferry there is a high bank on one side of the river, and sand flats on the other. Here the gharyal regularly sit out, and sun themselves. Sometimes near Sikandra one comes across geese and koolun. It is also a certain find for grey quail; they stay there all the year round. Nearer Agra, there is rough ground on the right bank of the Jumna, where I have never failed to get sandgrouse. One can get at this place by a road which goes from the Civil Lines across the canal right into the middle of the ground. At the end of the road there is a good sized bagh, with thick trees, and it is near this that the sandgrouse are usually to be found. They come down in the evening.

The rough grass near the river also holds a few chink, and I once got a very fair one here.

Last of all one must not omit the rain quail. The best sport I had with these birds was on the Agra maidan, just behind the little cemetery. Here, in a few days, I got 70 brace. In the monsoon large patches of weed make their appearance at the edge of the maidan, and it was in these I use to find the quail. I have also got them on the Infantry Rifle Range. As rain quail are driven by the rain out of the low lying ground in which they live for the rest of the year, they naturally select high well drained places where there is suitable cover. They are so uncertain that ground full of them one year may hold none the next.

Saturday, 15th September 1906.

THE attendance this afternoon was a small one and it was anything but a good day for backers. Not a single first favourite came through and there were some big upsets notably the wins of Lollipop, Scotch Thistle and Bouquet, the totalisator paying some handsome dividends. The heavy rain during the day had turned the course into a swamp and times were slow in consequence of the heavy going. There were no accidents, but riders in the last race of the day must consider themselves fortunate, for a couple of dogs wandered on to the course and got in among the horses, as they came round, one of them, a greyhound, racing Lord D all the way up the straight. Details :—

Second Day, Thursday, 13th September 1906.

THE attendance would have been larger this afternoon but the big cricket match accounted for the absence of many. Nevertheless the enclosures were well filled. An interesting card was put through and exciting finishes witnessed. The punters had a fair day, though Young Cardigan's win in the Dealers' Plate was a big surprise and Nurse Kitty's victory in the Kharakwasla Plate also rather unexpected. Third Day, Saturday, 15th September 1906.

The meeting this afternoon was witnessed by an enormous gathering; those who had come up to see the finish of the Parsee-Presidency cricket match being enabled by its early close to also attend the races. Excellent racing was the order of the day. The hurdle race opened the proceedings and provided a big upset, Greenstone, who went out at sevens, beating the favourite easily. Messrs. Goculdas and Nanjee won the Wanowrie Plate with Bay Middleton, while Balayeuse from the same stable carried off the Autumn Plate. Fifteen started in the Western India Stakes, Signorina once more giving us a taste of her quality for she let the others make the running to the turn where she came away and wearing down all opposition placed another big race to her credit. Precious won the Bedouin Plate from a field of seventeen and in the last race of the day we were treated to a fine bit of horsemanship, Robinson showing that he had lost none of his skill by the way he brought Matalgia through his field and won on the post. THE TURF.

HURST PARK.

THE attandance at Hurst Park on Friday last was a poor one. Bright sunshine afforded a delightful contrast to the Scotch—misty, murky morning that kept folks in town, but the weather was not wholly responsible for the falling off in the attendance, all who can get there being out of town, and perhaps the Jockey Club will some day see that there's too much racing. Owners, trainers, bookmakers, and the talent combined could do with less, as horses are being run off their legs, and stables cannot stand the perpetual draining tax of travelling expenses and hotel bills.

VYNER HANDICAP—Of 200sovs.; second receives 35sovs., and the third 15sovs. 7 furlongs, straight.

Mr. H. Barnato's b f Absurdity, by Melton—Paradoxical, 3yrs., 7st. 12lbs. H. Randall 1

Several prominent Turfites, including Lord Coventry, Lord Lurgan, and Mr. Jersey, were amongst the company in the paddocks, but the attendance, despite the Saturday half-holiday, did not show the improvement expected, and we shall have to wait till after York for the return of the seaside brigade. Better going could not have been wished for; one had only to contrast the baked surface of the "Hurst" with the beautiful green ribbon of going to see how handily the hydrants had adapted themselves to the situation, and capital fields were the rule.

YORK AUGUST.

Sunshine flooded the city on Tuesday, and, as usual, a representative gathering of the most prominent patrons of sport in the North filled the members' enclosure and lawn, the dainty costumes of the fair sex making a pretty picture. Green as an emerald, the course was in capital order, thanks to the recent rains, and no fault could be found with the fields for an opening day.

Like Doncaster, Newmarket, Ascot, Goodwood, and Brighton the sport of kings is to a very great extent free to the public at York, as no tax is made on visitors to the Knavesmire. Here one sees a thoroughly representative muster of the county of many acres, all united in the general bonds of sport, while in the enclosuses the rank, beauty, and fashion adorn the occasion. Another glorious morning brought the strangers within the gates early astir on Wednesday and the narrow gates were so crowded that one recognised the potentialities of the old Ebor race to charm, and the crowd on the course was one of the largest we have ever seen here, a grand muster for the occasion. Though hard, the going was beautifully green. The clay soil underneath, through lack of rain, was a bit hard, but not so much as down South, where the dust has been beaten out of the turf as from a carpet.

DUKE OF YORK STAKES—Of 400sovs. added to a sweepstakes of 10sovs. each for starters; for three year olds; second receives 30sovs. and the third 15sovs. 1¼ miles.

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.
Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and our-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses

Halcyon days were spent at York, whose old-fashioned meeting came to an end too soon yesterday, and if only on account of the glorious weather, visitors will long retain pleasant recollections of the 1906 festival, to say nothing of the popular success of a pronounced favourite in the Ebor. The wave of excitement which spread itself on the winning post had in its ground swell borne away the great crowd which helped to make such a success of the Yorkshire carnival, but another mellow autumn day, if possibly the finest of three, tempted many wavereers to see the thing out and finish the meeting in sportsmanlike style. Hence the attendance was another best on record. The surroundings were most enjoyable, nor was the programme by any means lacking in interest as it included not only the Great Yorkshire, but the Gimcrack Stakes, the winning of the latter of which entails the onus on the owner of a speech discursive on Turf matters, as anxiously looked for, and certainly more widely read than that from the Throne on the opening of Parliament. The race itself is founded on such lines as to ensure popularity as the entrance money is only 5sovs. each (3sovs. forfeit), and the money added of such generous amount as to make the stakes well worth winning, outside of the particular honour attached thereto.

LANG'S

No. 2 ·360 BORE HIGH-VELOCITY CORDITE RIFLE

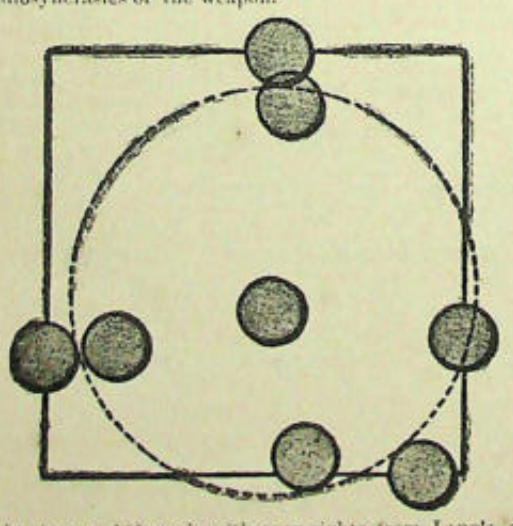
An ideal weapon: as the high velocity and consequent flat trajectory is combined with the stopping power of a ·450 or ·500 Black Powder Express.

VELOCITY 2,150 F.S., Striking Energy 3,280ft. lbs.

The accuracy is of the highest order, as will be seen by the accompanying diagram made by the Editor of the "Field" and not by a professional expert.

"FIELD," March 25th, 1905:—

"A trial series produced a remarkably fine group of eight shots fired alternately from the two barrels. . . . A very fine performance for a double rifle, very hard to beat. Shooting was conducted in a manner somewhat out of the ordinary routine, that is to say, the shots were not fired by a professional expert, but by one who had enjoyed no previous opportunity of acquainting himself with the idiosyncrasies of the weapon.



Eight shots at 100 yards with open sights from Lang's double barrel ·360 No. 2 nitro express rifle, using right and left barrels alternately. Centres of shots contained in parallelogram 2·15 in. wide by 2·2 in. high. All the shots cut a circle 2·1 in. diameter. Reproduced full size.

MADE BY the Editor of the "Field."

ARGYLLSHIRE, N.B.,
September 23rd, 1905.

". . . . about the rifle I am more than pleased with it, it has already accounted for 5 bucks and 2 stags. An American gentleman brought down a buck at 124 yards and Sir Wm. D. C. killed a stag at a distance of over 120. I think it is as perfect a weapon as science can devise. Sir Wm. D. C. wants to get one like it."

SWIMING.

THE CHANNEL SWIM.

MEW AND BURGESS.—Two unsuccessful attempts were made on the 28th instant to cross the Channel from England to France, one by the Yorkshireman, T. W. Burgess, and the other by Horace Mew, Shanklin S. C.

Mew started at 5 A. M. from opposite the Lord Warden Hotel, Dover. After he had covered about fifteen miles and got well out into mid-Channel, about nine miles across he was persuaded to leave the water. He was then feeling the effects of the rough seas encountered on the way.

Burgess entered the water from under the South Foreland Cliffs at 7-26. He used a left-hand under-arm stroke, instead of the over-arm he has used previously. In the first hour he was two and a half miles direct on his course. After two hours he was nearly four miles from the Foreland, with which he was in a direct line. Inside of four hours he was six miles out in the Channel from the South Foreland. Here an unusual occurrence happened. Suddenly Burgess, although swimming strongly was seen to be making no progress, and it was soon afterwards found that he had encountered a current which set him back strongly towards the English shore. To continue on his course would mean that the swimmer would get off the Varne Bank, which would be fatal to any swim, and probably to the swimmer. Burgess decided to swim back to England. He therefore turned round at half-past one, six hours from the time of his leaving England. The swimmer met some white-capped seas, and when the flood tide came it set off the English coast. He had to work extremely hard to make headway, and at 5-15 had equalled the time of the longest Channel swim this year—Wolffe's 9hrs. 50min. Burgess was now in a line with Dover Admiralty Pier, off which he finished his remarkable swim at 5-28, having been in the water 10hrs. 2mins. In the double swim he covered 25 miles swim and drift.

J. WOLFFE.—J. Wolffe, A.S.C., started at 8-34 on the morning of the 29th from the South Foreland to again attempt to cross the Channel. For the greater part of the time Wolffe had broken seas striking him in the face. He reached the French side of the Varne Buoy, and half-way across the Channel encountered very bad seas. As the result of abnormal drifting the swimmer got locked up in the whirling waters between the dangerous sandbanks of the Varne and the Bidge. For an hour, although the most desperate efforts to get clear were made by Wolffe, he did not advance a yard, and was being swept on to the shallows, where the tug could not possibly follow him. The position was most dangerous, and it was decided to advise Wolffe to abandon the swim. After a time he agreed to this, and at half-past four, after nearly eight hours swimming, he clambered aboard the accompanying tug. He had covered seventeen miles under the most adverse condition, and his leg gave him no anxiety. He intends to try again next July.

BURGESS AGAIN.—T. W. Burgess started from St. Margaret's Bay, near Dover, yesterday morning at 7-20, and a haze quickly developed. There was a fierce tide running eastward, which was carrying the swimmer at over two miles an hour on to the South Goodwins, over which he must have driven.

The usual means of communication failed, owing to the thick haze and through the day no information at all came to hand. The tug Commonwealth went out in the afternoon with a search party. For some hours she carefully searched the Channel in the possible limits of the swim, but returned in the evening, having failed to discover any trace of the swimmer or his accompanying tug.

In the evening, however, a pigeon arrived with an untimed message from the tug. The message stated that they could get no bearings as to their position, but Burgess was swimming strongly, and gave every prospect of continuing for many hours.

A second pigeon message, received at 8 P. M., stated that Burgess was driven across the Goodwins by the tide. Continuous soundings were taken on the tug until she found it absolutely dangerous to go any farther, and she left the swimmer in order to steam to the Calliper Buoy off Ramsgate, and pick him up again when he was across. The small feeding boat went in charge of the swimmer over the Sands. Burgess started off at a racing pace to get out of the dangerous position into which the tide had forced him. Judging from the position indicated, and the force of the tide, compared with Burgess' usual rate of progress, this message was despatched from three to four hours after the start.

Up to the time of telegraphing (10 o'clock) no further news had been received of the swimmer. A report was current that Burgess was six miles from the French shore, and had been reported by one of the lightships, but the accuracy of this cannot be traced.

WATER POLO CHAMPIONSHIP.

At Weston-super-Mare on Monday the final tie was decided before a large company. The teams were :

Polytechnic : C. More, goal ; W. G. Emery and E. Barrington, backs ; E. H. Hunt, half-back ; F. Woods, A. Hassett, and J. Hodgson, forwards.

Weston-super-Mare : A. Barnes, goal ; T. Bavey (Captain) and B. Dunn, backs ; Chas. Stradling, half-back ; T. Thould, Cecil Stradling, and P. Radmilovic, forwards.

The ball was first secured by Radmilovic, but he was robbed of it by Hassett, whose shot was feeble. Radmilovic soon proved a tower of strength, and beating Hassett, swam down the bath and scored the first goal for Weston amid tremendous cheers. He nearly scored another immediately afterwards. Radmilovic and Barrington were then ordered out of the bath for moving after the whistle sounded. Davey had a good try for goal, but failed, and Wood securing closed in equalised. After this the London goal had two narrow escapes from Radmilovic's shots, one touching the cross-bar. Hunt then sent in a grand shot, but missed the net. He, however, just after secured a second goal for the visitors, and at half time the score was : Polytechnic, two goals ; Weston, one. On changing ends the play became very fast, and Radmilovic soon equalised. A bout of clever passing enabled Cecil Stradling to obtain the lead for the home team. Hunt, however, got possession, and netted a third goal for the visitors. Radmilovic was not to be denied, and once more obtained the lead. Another pass gave Charles Stradling an opportunity which he cleverly improved. Hunt then scored for the visitors, but Radmilovic replied for the home team, and the game ended in favour of Weston by six goals to four.

BOXING.

THE IRISH CHAMPIONSHIP.

Twice this year Roche and Sullivan have decided the much-vexed question of superiority. On the last occasion Sullivan was not at his best, a boisterous sea voyage and the extraction of teeth the day before the contest militating against what he considered a great possibility of success. Sullivan did not show to advantage in more than three rounds, and during the remainder performed little better than a novice. Roche, very strong and very determined, fought well, and had Sullivan been equal to extending him thoroughly a sensational contest would have terminated hostilities. As it was, Roche, finding out early in the contest Sullivan's weak spot, fought from start to finish for the body and had easily won long ere Sullivan was finally dropped and unable to respond to the call of time. Ever since his defeat the Irish-American has pined for another meeting with Roche, and this was promised him before he set sail for America.

Returning to Ireland a bigger man in height and weight, negotiations were at once set on foot, and, Roche being willing, articles were signed at Sport Office to box for £100 and a £150 purse. The editor of Sport was stakeholder, and, having the appointment of referee, selected Mr. R. P. Watson, Sporting Life.

The present contest was one of 20 three-minute rounds at catch-weight, no hitting being allowed in clinches, and the ring being a 16 feet one. The seconds for Sullivan were Tommy Farrell, George Harry, Pedlar McMahon, and Friend as assistant ; while Roche had in his corner Bob Brown, Mick Tennant, George Clarke, and Dave McDonagh. Roche usually on the big side, was considerably fined down, while Sullivan was trained to perfection. The former weighed about 12st., and his opponent 10st. 8lbs. The house was packed to excess at high prices, despite the tropical heat, and a dense crowd waited outside. Soon after four Sullivan was in the ring and waited patiently several minutes for Roche. All arrangements from first to last were excellent, and the crowd behaved splendidly. When given the decision was received with great applause. Officials :—Referee, Mr. R. P. Watson (Sporting Life) ; time-keeper, Sergeant-major McConnell ; M. C, Mr. Day Whelligan, Birkenhead School of Physical Culture. Details :—

Round 2.—Roche missed a swinger and Sullivan started and got in some severe punches with both right and left, while Sullivan slipped down.

Round 3.—Roche cut Sullivan's lip severely, and had the best of bout.

Round 4.—Sullivan was bleeding freely, and Roche dashed in and fought fast. Sullivan joined issue, and Roche slipped on the boards, but was up quickly. In the last minute Roche chased Sullivan all over the ring.

Round 5.—Sullivan led off smartly, his face being considerably cut. Roche relied on straight left, which Sullivan could not stave off.

Round 6.—Roche fought Sullivan repeatedly to the ropes, and prevented his escape. Both were blowing hard, Roche being without a mark, whilst Sullivan appeared badly damaged.

Round 7.—Sullivan fought cleverly at all points, and was strong and busy with both hands. Roche, rather eager, had anxious moments, but dashed in time after time. Sullivan slipped him dexterously, and was a far better boxer.

Round 8.—Roche forced Sullivan on the ropes, and punished him with both hands. Sullivan was at one time on his knees. Manœuvring round, Roche worked Sullivan into the latter's corner, doubling him up. He drove Sullivan on to the bottom rope, in a sitting posture, with his legs on the ground, and at the same time delivered a blow. A foul was claimed, but not allowed, at the conclusion of the bout.

Round 9.—Sullivan became clever with the lead, and in getting out of danger showed good generalship, and smartly avoided Roche's rushes.

Round 10.—Roche appeared very strong. Sullivan opened well with the left, but at last a flush hit from Roche made him look very ill at ease, and when the gong sounded he retired very weary.

Round 11.—Sullivan, from sheer desperation, jumped in and made a brave effort. Roche met him with a terrific straight left that knocked Sullivan's head back. Here Roche made great headway, hitting without a return and showing wonderful mastery. The fight at one period looked like ending here, but Sullivan recuperated though seriously used up.

Round 12.—Roche, still without outward signs of the slightest punishment, was going wonderfully strong. A deal of clinching occurred here. Sullivan commencing for the first time to rest on his opponent who found difficulty in pushing Sullivan off.

Round 13.—This was to the advantage of Roche, and both exercised great caution. After stepping in repeatedly and threatening, they stood off cautiously, fearing a knock-out, but loth to throw away a chance of losing the coup.

Round 14.—A rather level meeting and uneventful. A deal of clinching took place, and the referee's voice was heard constantly calling on the pair to break away. Sullivan, who feared close quarters, in his exhausted condition, found it safer in Roche's close embrace than staying within range of the left hand.

Round 15.—Sullivan was repeatedly fought into his own corner, and Roche often missed dangerous swingers through impetuosity, Sullivan anticipating. As before, Sullivan was ordered to break away, and Roche leisurely threw him off.

Round 16.—Roche tried every means to drop Sullivan, but the latter cleverly got out of danger.

Round 17.—This was the worst of the series, neither doing work worthy of attention, both expecting the knock-out.

Round 18.—Roche had the best of this, and the referee's voice was continually heard ordering Sullivan to break away. Roche pushed him off with care.

Round 19.—Sullivan was looking depressed, and Roche was almost without a mark. Sullivan adopted his old tactics, resting on Roche. The referee warned him several times, while Roche did not appeal, but cautiously got rid of him. When at long reach, both swung desperately hard, sometimes missing blows that would, if fruitful, have ended the contest.

Round 20 (and last).—Sullivan led off, Roche carefully countered, and effective work resulted in give-and-take exchanges at close quarters. The gong sounded for the last time, and the verdict that Roche had won was received with a tremendous roar.

CYCLING.

CHAMPIONSHIPS AT NEWPORT.

The last of the series of amateur, and all the professional championships for 1906 were decided at the compact grounds of the Newport (Mon.) A. C. on Saturday. The track is one of the speediest in the kingdom, but a stiff wind militated against fast times. Some great contests had been expected between Syd Jenkins, the holder of the dash championships, and J. S. Benyon, the ex-amateur champion, but just as Benyon was taking train from New Brighton on Friday the sad news reached him that his brother had died suddenly, and in consequence of this he was an absentee. Jenkins, after winning the quarter and mile, decided not to mount in the five miles, in order "to give the other competitors a chance." In the amateur events W. A. Edmonds regained the honour of being classed an English champion. Leon Meredith, the 100 kilos world's ex-champion, escaped from an ugly accident in the final of the five miles in a wonderful manner. He collided with the judges' box, and was thrown up in the air. Luckily he escaped any serious injury ; but, due no doubt to shock, he did not mount in the 25 miles championship.

Officials.—Judge, Mr. T. W. J. Britten ; official timekeeper, Mr. Z. Wheatley ; standard timekeeper, Mr. R. J. Brind ; starter, Mr. H. Packer ; Honorary Secretary, Mr. J. A. Metcalf. Details :—

QUARTER-MILE PROFESSIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP.—Holder, Sdy Jenkins ; time—standard, 33secs. ; limit 45 secs.

Final.

Syd Jenkins, Cardiff, 1 ; Tom James, Mountain Ash, 2 ; H. Reynolds, Dublin, 3.

Reynolds obtained the inside position, and led for three-parts of the distance. Jenkins then dashed off and won by just over a length. Time—33secs.

ONE-MILE PROFESSIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP.—Holder, Syd Jenkins ; time—standard, 2mins. 20secs. ; limit 3mins.

Final.

Syd Jenkins, Cardiff, 1 ; Tom James, Mountain Ash, 2 ; H. Reynolds, Dublin, 3.

The Irishman lay a long way in the rear until the bell. He went off at a good speed, and 100 yards from home he held a big lead. He failed to last, and Jenkins, coming up fast, won by a length. Time—2mins. 33⅕secs.

FIVE MILES PROFESSIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP.—Holder, S. Jenkins ; time—standard, 12mins. 45secs. ; limit, 15mins.

Final.

Harry Reynolds, Dublin, 1 ; A. Donald, Perth, 2 ; Tom James, Mountain Ash, 3.

For the greater part of the last lap a desperate struggle took place between Reynolds and James. Ten yards from the post James sat up, and Reynolds won. Time—14mins. 3⅘secs. The beaten riders at mid-distance waited whilst Reynolds changed his machine.

TWENTY-FIVE MILES AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—Time—standard, 1 hr. 15mins. ; no time limit.

H. Crowther, Leeds, 1 ; Bert Andrews, Carmarthen, 2 ; C. V. Clark, Polytechnic, 3 ; H. Appleton, Bristol, 4 ; J. Bevan, Newport, 5 ; H. S. Hill, Cardiff, 6.

Leon Meredith and W. A. Edmonds were not among the twelve who started. Broom, of Cardiff, and Andrews spread-eagled the field repeatedly by their dashes. A lap and a half from home Andrews made his effort, but his judgment was at fault, for he found the sprint far too long, and half a lap from home Crowther had overhauled the Welshman, and eventually won by over a length. Time—1hr. 9mins. 25 secs.

FIVE MILES AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP.—Holder, Leon Meredith ; time—standard, 12mins. 45secs. ; limit, 15mins.

Final.

W. A. Edmonds, Bristol, 1 ; H. Growther, Leeds, 2 ; Bert Andrews, Carmathen, 3.

In the last circuit Meredith was forced on to the grass, and dashed into the hurdles surrounding the judges. He turned a somersault, but was practically uninjured. A table-cloth would have covered all the riders at the finish. Time—12mins. 2⅘sec.

HALF-MILE AMATEUR HANDICAP.

Final.

W. Raymond, Newport, 1 ; Syd Hill, Cardiff, 2 ; H. S. Hill, Cardiff, 3.

A fine finish, the three placed men being close together. Time—1min. 10⅘secs.

The story of the Frenchman who had nearly died of cold at Lyons, with the thermometer at 80 deg. in the shade, through going to sleep in his own ice-cart, is a curious one, and a long journalistic life may be predicted for it. It faintly recalls the story of the patent safe, which was recommended by its American vendor on account of its power to resist everything, from burglary to fire. One day, he declared, his office cat had been shut up by accident in one of his safes at the end of the day, and that night the office building caught fire. The fire raged three days, and when the safe was recovered from the debris it was white-hot. But when it was opened the cat was found inside frozen to death.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

THE hounds met on Thursday, 6th instant, at Municipal Crossing at 7-30 A.M., and at once moved off to New Covert which was blank. The Master then trotted to Bagman, at the back of which hounds winded a jack and a few moments later they were streaking away over the Home Downs, heads up and sterns down and the field after them galloping for all they were worth parallel with the Municipal Stream and down to Double Crossing. Hounds then crossed over the Pykara Road (when the jack had taken a turn to the left and then swung back and run the road), but the turn did not delay them. They swung with him as if glued to his brush, raced down the road nearly to Sandy Nullah Toll Bar and then made as if for Rocky. But turning right handed again they swung up the valley to Brooklands. They ran through the covert without the sign of a check and over the Seegur Road as if for Hawking Shola, but there again they swung to the left over the Black Bridge and then carried the line over the Seegur Road and down over the Thauts, marking the jack to ground just above the toll gate by the 6th milestone on the Seegur Road. This was a great hunt of 35 minutes' duration and over the cream of the country.

After some delay in getting hounds together (four and a half couple went to ground after the jack) the Master trotted off to Jackal Shola, but this did not hold and hounds picked up the heel line by Rally Wood. They were soon put right though and hunted slowly up to Bluegums. Leaving this on their left they began to run in the valley below up towards Staircase. This they climbed at top speed and in the mist on top slipped the Master and field and turning back sharp left handed on the top they ran through Round Shola to the corner of Andy Plantation, through Porlock Wood and back to Bluegums. Here we found them hunting in covert and after dusting their jack about there for some little time they pushed him into the open, round the hill and to ground in Rawling's Nullah, where he was left to give us (let us hope) another hunt.

On Saturday, 8th instant, hounds met on the 5th milestone on the Avalanche Road and the Master trotted off at once to Gartree Hill. As hounds neared it a brace of jacks were viewed climbing the hill side and hounds were at once in close pursuit. Up the hill they ran and then right handed down through the shola and away towards the Muthugar Stream, but turning right handed all the time, they ran almost parallel with the Avalanche Road for about ten minutes when, in a small shola, some delay was caused by sambur, pig and jungle sheep, but hounds stuck to their jack well, ran him back almost to where we first viewed him and then right handed back nearly to Kundathirigarai Mund where he got in, but was pulled out and killed. He was a fine old jack. H. E. the Governor who was out took the mask. As hounds were standing above the source of the Yerrumali Stream His Excellency viewed a jack on the opposite hill and hounds were soon on his line. Running their hardest over the hill, they skirted Middle Bit Shola and raced away for Limerick Shola and Hecuba Hill. Above Kuruthugulli they were brought to their noses, but the Master hit it off down the Corduroy, and hounds took the line into the Nunjanad Valley. Turning back right handed they ran through Kuruthugulli Shola and keeping along the hill tops were stopped by the Master not very far from where they found, as three fresh jacks had jumped up in front of them and our horses were tired out. This was a first-rate hunt of 40 minutes' duration and a very trying one for horses and hounds. So ended a capital day.

Andy Plantation was the scene of the meet on Monday, 10th instant, and moving off after a little law, hounds picked up a line in the usual place—on the right hand side of the bog leading to Parsons' Valley. They hunted slowly till they reached the saddle above Limerick Shola, where they settled down to the line in real earnest and ran at a great pace across the bog at the very top of Vokal Hill, where two couple of hounds took a line down towards the Emerald Valley, the remainder of the pack racing down the south side of Vokal Hill and straight along the ridge overlooking the Emerald Valley. Just above Kundathirigarai Mund Shola they turned right handed across the bog where one of the field, a gallant Lancer from the north, got in deep and required assistance for some minutes before he could be extricated. Back again hounds swung across the bog round the hill and straight on to the Krurmund Path, which they crossed. It had been more or less of a stern chase up to this point, but on rounding the spur hounds were seen running all together, a really pretty sight. Down they went into the valley and into the Mekad Stream (where it turns left handed before running off the Hunt Map) a bad crossing and the occasion of an unpleasant wetting to more than one member of the field, then due east up the side of the shola nearly to the Krurmund Path. Here, unluckily, hounds divided and having a big lead of the field the leading six couple ran on up Parsons' Valley again and so pulled down their jack in the open near Pichal Mund Shola which was viewed from a distance by the terrier boys who only arrived in time to retrieve the brush and one pad, the mask having been carried off by a vulture. Three couple of hounds turned left handed into Karamuda Shola followed by the Master and field, but after a short time the Master had them out of the shola and trotted along the Krurmund Path to pick up the rest of the hounds. We then went home as it was very hot and in Hunt Race week horses are none too plentiful. A real good gallop about nine miles as hounds ran, lasting a little over an hour.

ABLAKI.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

13th September.—Chinchwad. Hounds got on the cold drag of a travelling jack and for about ¼ a mile of feathering and excitement, but no sound, a solitary hound spoke; this gave the rest their cue and leaving the crop for grass they all opened at once: after this there was no more hesitation and they went with a rare rattle over a bit of A1 country; the jack took an excellent line and they drove him fiercely through several heavy crops over the Alandi Road; here he raced through another field or two seeking sanctuary at length on the side of a hill overgrown with babul, but hounds hunted him in grand style leaving him no peace until having been knocked over by "Novelty," they met with an ample reward for their most inspiriting display and killed their jack handsomely. It was a clinking good run of seventeen minutes' hardest going without a check from start to finish, the brush being given to Miss G. Gibb. Hounds after quickly demolishing their jack were taken back towards the 8th milestone with the hope of finding a second, but the whips were told that failing this the first animal that came, whether fox or chink, should be hunted; after going for about a mile and a half a chink jumped up and after their last week's chase hounds needed no cheering on to his line; with loud music and all together they went with great determination after their gallant adversary who fled by leaps and bounds, hounds and horses going their hardest; now and again he was viewed going like the wind; hounds stuck to the line increasing pace and music as they went till it was found by the twisting course they took the chink must be tiring, having stood in front of the hounds for at least half an hour; at this critical moment we entered a crop and as is usual with these animals he at once started a friend which being fresh and the hounds somewhat tired, ran them clean out of scent; in about another 15 minutes the horses of the small field now left had lost most of their shoes. Hounds were tired, sun was out and dew gone so hunting for the day was given up.

16th September.—The hounds stayed at Dapuri over night for the fixture at 8th milestone Bombay Road to-day and for the first time this season the air was quite cold when we went to the meet, a splendid dew giving promise of a run if we found. For the first half hour hounds were busy touching on stale drags, several times almost running but never quite getting away on a line, so as the sun was now rising brilliantly it was decided to look for a chinkara. The first Whip reported having seen three, so following the direction they had taken hounds drew up to them and a brace jumped up bang in front of them; three couple who were slightly ahead were away with them like a shot when a third chink rose behind them and in the midst of the body of the pack. Turning sharp to the right, as it is better to run one than two the Master accordingly turned with him holloaing like blazes and shouting "stop the other hounds;" this was done in a real workmanlike manner by Colonel Ball and Mr. Roberts (Bombay), so that before going a couple of miles with his chink the Master had the satisfaction of having the whole pack with him; soon the chink adopted the usual tactics, when tiring, of laying up in a stony knoll, but jumping up over the hounds went again as if he would never stop over a bit of lovely country. Catching a glimpse of him about 500 yards ahead of the hounds it was evident they were gaining on him and about half a mile further on they drove into some long grass in a swamp as though quite sure of their game; he just reached the edge of this covert, but his bolt was shot and he was pulled down as he was leaving it. Miss Bletso and the young Rajah of Akalkote who were both well up, each received a pad. Hunting was then given up as the sun was blazing with his usual Oriental vigour.

POONA OPEN TOURNAMENT.

SECOND TIES.

BHOPAL GYMKHANA vs. POONA HORSE.—These teams met on the 12th instant, an interesting game being witnessed by a large gathering. The first three chukkers were fairly even, then the Poona Horse went to pieces and their opponents won rather easily.

First Chukker.—The Poona Horse pressed, but the ball was sent behind. The Bhopal team then got away and hit a goal. A run down by each side followed and play was in the Poona territory when the bugle sounded. Score: Bhopal, 1 goal; Poona Horse, nil.

Second Chukker.—Fast and exciting play. The Bhopal Gymkhana hit a subsidiary. Up and down the ball went and there was little to choose between the teams. Score: Bhopal, 1 goal 1 subsidiary; Poona Horse, nil.

Third Chukker.—The Poona Horse hit a subsidiary and Norbury followed this up by scoring a goal. Even exchanges and then a run by the Bhopals ending in a goal. Score: Bhopal, 2 goals 1 subsidiary; Poona Horse, 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Fourth Chukker.—The Poona Horse attacked but their opponents got possession and obtained a subsidiary. Shortly after they again got going and hit a goal. Score: Bhopal, 3 goals 2 subsidiaries; Poona Horse, 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Fifth Chukker.—In this period the Poona Horse got to work and put on a goal and a minor point to their last score. The Bhopal team registered a goal. Score: Bhopal, 4 goals 2 subsidiaries; Poona Horse, 2 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Sixth Chukker.—The Bhopal team had the best of the game at this period, but could only add a minor point. Score: Bhopal, 4 goals 3 subsidiaries; Poona Horse, 2 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Seventh Chukker.—With a couple of minutes to go the Bhopal team lost no time and rushing away hit a goal, to which they added another shortly after. A free hit to the Poona Horse for a foul was unsuccessful and the game ended with the scores; Bhopal Gymkhana 6 goals 3 subsidiaries; Poona Horse, 2 goals 2 subsidiaries. Teams:—

POONA GYMKHANA vs. 10TH HUSSARS.—A splendid game was witnessed when these teams met on the 12th instant. The 10th Hussars were most fancied, but the Gymkhana put up an excellent fight and ran out winners by the narrow margin of a subsidiary. Score:—

First Chukker.—The Hussars immediately rushed down and hit a goal. Up and down play followed Kennedy almost equalishing. Score: Hussars, 1 goal; Poona Gymkhana, nil.

Second Chukker.—Each team attacked and shortly a determined onslaught was made by the Gymkhana. Two shots missed and then Reynard put them on terms. On resuming the Hussars hit a subsidiary. Score: Hussars, 1 goal 1 subsidiary; Poona Gymkhana, 1 goal.

Third and Fourth Chukkers.—Play ruled fast and exciting during these periods but neither team scored.

Fifth Chukker.—The Gymkhana equalised with a subsidiary and added another shortly after. The Hussars were hemmed in their own territory till Gibbs at length got possession and scored a goal with a long shot. Score: Hussars, 2 goals 1 subsidiary; Poona Gymkhana, 1 goal 2 subsidiaries.

Sixth Chukker.—The Hussars attacked, but the Gymkhana cleared and ran down with the ball. The shot was unsuccessful, but Herbert soon got the ball again and sent it between the posts. Score: Poona Gymkhana, 2 goals 2 subsidiaries; Hussars, 2 goals 1 subsidiary.

Seventh Chukker.—The Hussars made desperate attempts to get level, but the Gymkhana ably defended their charge and kept them out till the close of the period. Final Score: Poona Gymkhana, 2 goals 2 subsidiaries; 10th Hussars, 2 goals 1 subsidiary. Teams:—

THE FINAL.

POONA GYMKHANA vs. BHOPAL GYMKHANA.—The final game in the tournament was played on the 14th instant. H. E. the Governor was an interested spectator and there was a big gathering in spite of the counter-attraction of the Presidency-Parsee match. The game was a brilliant display and very even till the last period when the Poona put on two more goals and scored a popular win. The Bhopal Gymkhana were rather at a disadvantage as they had to play a substitute in place of Mr. Johnson, who had injured his hand. General Richardson gave a brief congratulatory address and Mrs. Richardson handed the Cup to the winners amidst great acclamation. Details:—

First Chukker.—Repeated attacks by Poona, followed by up and down play. No score.

Second Chukker.—Bhopal attacked and Poona had an anxious time. The visitors hit a subsidiary and at the close of the period Abdul Waheld added a goal. Score: Bhopal, 1 goal 1 subsidiary; Poona, nil.

Third Chukker.—Poona got going and Herbert and Kennedy put in a couple of good runs. Herbert started the scoring by hitting a fine goal, a minor point and a second goal scored by Kennedy were added before the bugle sounded. Score: Poona, 2 goals 1 subsidiary; Bhopal, 1 goal 1 subsidiary.

Fourth Chukker.—Bhopal began this chukker well and their number one hit a goal. Poona rushed down immediately after and Kennedy put them ahead with a long shot. Up and down play closed the period. Score: Poona, 3 goals 1 subsidiary; Bhopal, 2 goals 1 subsidiary.

Fifth Chukker.—There was no score though the Bhopal team made great efforts to get on terms.

Sixth Chukker.—Poona made some good runs, but their opponents cleared and put a subsidiary to their account. Score: Poona, 3 goals 1 subsidiary; Bhopal, 2 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Seventh Chukker.—With only four minutes left Poona attacked hotly and scored a subsidiary. The Bhopal Gymkhana replied with another. Poona were all over their opponents during the closing stages and Kennedy and Reynard registering a goal each. The final score read: Poona, 5 goals 2 subsidiaries; Bhopal, 2 goals 3 subsidiaries. MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 31st August.

FOLLOWING on the great development of electric tramway systems in and around our big towns, it is becoming necessary for the motorist to drive with great caution along those thoroughfares where a tram service is in operation. The congestion of traffic due to trams is becoming a serious problem, and accidents occur almost daily owing to the monopoly of the highways by these huge vehicles. To pass a tramcar in motion requires great care to avoid getting into difficulties with traffic proceeding in the opposite direction, and many motorists are, therefore, in the habit of passing on the near side, but it is rather doubtful as to what their legal position would be in case of accident. A sharp look out has to be kept to avoid running down cyclists, especially at night-time, for recently cycle riders have developed a habit of holding on to the sides of tramcars—a very dangerous practice, which should be promptly dealt with by the authorities.

During a short run last week-end into Surrey the great improvement which has manifested itself during the last year as regards road surface was very noticeable. It is evident that the local authorities are making strong endeavours to combat the dust evil. Some of the best stretches of road were those treated with tarmac, which not only makes an ideal surface, but there is practically an entire absence of dust. The bye-roads and lanes in this county are well worth exploring by motorists, as the road surface is generally very good, and although they are somewhat narrow yet there is very little traffic along them, and what one does meet with can generally be passed without much difficulty. Probably one of the most striking features in the development of motoring has been the manner in which horses have become accustomed to the mechanically propelled vehicle. It is now only on very rare occasions that one experiences trouble through meeting a restive horse. On the other hand, it has occurred once or twice in my own experience of late that horses left unattended have themselves drawn to the side of the road at the warning sound of the horn. To those however, who know any thing of horses this proof of intelligence will not come as a very great surprise. There are still occasions when the drivers of horse vehicles are inclined to be pig-headed and selfish, and wilfully obstruct the passage of a car, yet it would seem that they have at the same time great faith in the stopping power of a motor, and when they pull their carts across the road in front of an approaching car never seem to doubt that it will pull up in time to avoid a collision.

At least one of the brakes on a car should be easily reached and capable of quick adjustment. This requirement has been recognised by some of the leading makers, and in a particular feature of the De Dion and Siddeley car. In the latter design the pedal-operated brake can be quickly reached from the side of the car and by one turn or half a turn, as may be necessary, of a special fly nut the brake is instantly adjusted. It is unfortunately the case that drivers, unless they can make an adjustment quickly and easily, will delay doing what is necessary until perhaps an accident occurs.

The Automobile Association is rendering great service to both its members and motorists generally in the way of warning them against police traps. The main roads are patrolled by cyclist scouts, who not only give warning of police activity, but are also trained to be of use in case of tyre failure. A writer in the Motor has suggested that the Association has been formed for the protection of motorists who wish to travel at high speed, and to prevent them getting their legal punishment through being trapped by the police. The contention of A.A., however, is that by placing their scouts along the road they are doing a public service. Undoubtedly it is proving a very effective deterrent to the unfair police tactics hitherto employed in many districts. It is fairly evident that where a stright and deserted stretch of road is selected for the purpose of trapping motorists the main object has been to benefit the district revenues and if the A.A. scheme will defeat this sort of thing its existence is fully justified.

It has been found that the use of shock-absorbing devices on the cars are of great benefit to tyres, which last much longer under these conditions. There are many such devices on the market which can be attached to any car at a small cost, and we may expect their use to become general by the many tourists and others who make long journeys by road. The past season has not witnessed such a demand for small light cars as the previous two years. This is probably due to the good design and speed qualities of the tricars at present on the market. With these small vehicles, which are constructed on cycle lines, quite high speeds may be obtained, and the owner of moderate means is able to maintain an equal average with the man who owns a big four-cylinder car. The low power and slower speed of single and two cylinder light cars have always handicapped them.

That the motor boat industry in the country is receiving careful attention from the naval authorities was shown by the interest taken by them in the trials at Cowes and the recent acquisition of a motor torpedo boat which has been attached as tender to H. M. S. Mercury. It is said that there is a splendid opening for small motor craft in the Colonies for river service, both for the conveyance of passengers as well as merchandise. The rise in petrol which was forecasted early in the year has just come about, and is not likely to stop at the present figure, but will be gradually increased, practically the whole sources of supply being in the hands of the big American Oil Trust who have during the past few years rendered their position absolutely secure.

It is said that two foreign cars of 10 h-p., one American and the other French, will be shown at Olympia in November, both of which will be listed below £150. These cars are bound to excite a great deal of interest, but it is doubtful whether a really serviceable car of that power can be marketed at the figure.

CRICKET AT POONA.

PRESIDENCY vs. PARSEES.—The big match was played on the 13th, 14th and 15th instant and resulted in a win for the Presidency by six wickets. The Parsees won the toss and elected to bat, Pavri and H. Kanga going in first. The latter was missed by Hoare when he had scored nine and stayed till he made 31, when Priestley brought off a smart catch at the wickets, which sent him back. Pavri made 17 and was succeeded by Meherhomjee, who put up 24. The other members of the team did poorly and the innings closed before tiffin for 122. The Presidency then went in and after Cheetham and Airy were both out with the total at 20, Wigram and Chaplin came together and a long partnership ensued. They scored freely and a six hit by Wigram signalled the first hundred. A frequent change of bowling proved unsuccessful, for the Presidency players continued to hit all round the wicket. At length Kanga disposed of Wigram, who had played splendid cricket, his 80 taking an hour and 40 minutes to compile. Chaplin (not out 89) was joined by Turner, and then by Pattisson and the runs came quickly. With the score at 278 Chaplin was caught in the slips, having hit up 144 runs in two hours and 20 minutes, the result of attractive batting. He gave a single chance when he had scored 31. The remaining five wickets produced only 29 runs and the innings closed for 307. Mistri took nine wickets for 89 runs. On Friday the Parsees went in again. Pavri was run out when he had scored one and then H. Kanga and Meherhomjee came together. These batsmen made a determined stand and punished the bowling. After a partnership of two hours during which they had carried the score to 141, Meherhomji was run out with a well played 66 to his credit. Daruwalla joined Kanga and play slowed down a bit, then Kanga was beaten by Deas and retired after having played a faultless innings of 81. Mody was next in and runs came slowly. Shortly after the second century had been reached Deas bowled Daruwalla. Mody fell to Cheetham and of the tail Raja (27) and Mistri (18) were the principal run getters. The innings closed for 289 runs leaving the Presidency 104 runs to get. Play was continued and when stumps were drawn Pattisson had scored 9. Resuming on Saturday Pattisson was out leg before to Mistri with the score at 14 and Airy joined Rutter. Batting in great style they took the total to 57 before Rutter was bowled and heetham came in, but was clean bowled after making four. Wigram was next in, but was caught at point and Chaplin partnered Airy. For a couple of overs there was little scoring and then Chaplin began to hit hard and soon knocked up the desired runs and with 108 for 4 wickets the Presidency were left easy winners—a popular victory. CRICKET AT BANGALORE.

MADRAS vs. BANGALORE.—The big match of the Bangalore cricket season (at Bangalore that is to say) took place on the 8th and 10th instant, when Madras sent down a team. It was the lowest scoring encounter on record between the two sides, and some of the bowling averages were little short of marvellous. So far as the batting is concerned there is nothing to be said. It was a bowler's wicket and a difficult one at that, whilst the grass in the outfield was so thick that a boundary was of rare occurrence. The determined Cooper, who very seldom goes to the wicket without scoring, made 33 not out and 15 for Bangalore, but these (for him) feeble efforts, included several chances. The truth was that the wicket was so villainous, the best of batsmen could not hope to stay long, and the sound thing to do was to hit out and add as many runs as possible whilst at the wickets. For Madras Symonds who was skippering the visitors bowled well and added a patient 18 at the first knock, but the cricket was slow and uninteresting throughout the match.

It was a however, pleasant to see Symond's name again in a Madras cricket team. It must be fifteen years or more since he first achieved slow bowling triumphs and made runs and he seems perfectly able to do both still. The feature of the match was Liepmann's bowling for Bangalore. In the first innings of Madras he bowled three overs for three runs and two wickets, This was pretty hot stuff, but he utterly eclipsed his own previous performances in the visitors' second innings. He sent down sixty balls for three runs and four wickets, and seven of his ten overs were maidens. This will take a good deal of beating as a bowling performance, let the ground be as bad as it may. There is nothing else that needs comment in the game. Madras scored 56 at their first attempt and Bangalore only topped this by three runs. When the visitors went in again, five wickets fell for eleven runs and nine for twenty-five, but the last wicket added seventeen runs by stubborn cricket. On Monday Bangalore took about an hour and a quarter to make the forty runs necessary to win and lost four wickets in the operation. Score :—

CALCUTTA RUGBY UNION CHALLENGE CUP.

WEST RIDINGS vs. GLOSTERS.—The meeting of these teams on the 12th instant had been looked forward to with the greatest interest, but rugby enthusiasts were doomed to disappointment for the game was a poor one. The heavy rain had rendered the ground unfit for football and the West Ridings who appeared more at home in the mud than their opponents eventually won by 7 points to nil. The play was entirely with the forwards and scrum followed scrum. The Glosters got away on one occasion and the ball was grounded between the posts but they were pulled up for a forward pass. Play was then taken to the Glosters' territory where Morris dropped a splendid goal. The Glosters took the ball back to the Dukes' "25" and they had to touch down several times before they got away and took the ball over the Glosters' line, but it was brought back for a knock forward. The West Ridings attacked throughout the second half, but it was not till near the close that Hylands got over with a try which was unconverted. The Glosters played hard, but could not score and the game ended in a win for the West Ridings by a dropped goal and a try to nil. Teams :—

WEST RIDINGS.—Britton, back; Johnstone, Chapman, Ryan, and Whiteman, three-quarters; Hylands and Morris, half-backs; Lieutenant Liddell, Craven, Reilly, Porter, Bolt, McCormick, Waddington, and Smith, forwards.

GLOSTERS.—Russell, back; Lieutenant Ford, Lieutenant Ewell, Berry, Bagwell, three-quarters; Murray and Russell, half-backs; Prosser, Dance, Twist, Phipps, Bayley, Morris, Manon and Bloss, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. UNITED SERVICES.—Played on the 13th instant and ended after a very close game in a pointless draw. The game was replayed last Friday when the U. S. team beat the visitors by 10 points to 3 The opening play was very even, then Bombay had the best of some loose forward play and almost got over. But the Services cleared and Lilburn dribbled the ball down and punting over the back sprinted after it Assisted by Rowe he got over with the first try. Harty adding the major points. Bombay tried hard to get over but without success and the whistle blew half time shortly after. On changing ends a Bombay man made his mark and nearly scored from the resulting kick. The U. S. made a lot of ground by a series of good punts, but Bombay brought the ball back each time and at length Baker got possession and got over with a try. Sargent failed to majorise Bombay continued to press and several scrums took place in the Services' "25" Then Rowe got the ball and was away with it, ending up a tricky run by scoring between the posts. Harty converted and the Services thus own by 2 goals to a try. Teams :—

BOMBAY GYMKHANA.—Gilburn back; Mockles, Webb, Siddons, and Baker, three-quarters; Bridge and Sargent, half-backs; Cadell, Bamberger, Rutherford, Roy, Gilbert, Braund, Hewett, and Stevenson, forwards, UNITED SERVICES.—Kidner, back; Rowe, Warden, Bromage, and Edwards, three-quarters; Maxwell and Butler, half-backs; Harty, Lilburn, Cowie, Ansell, Kidly, Shevlin, Adams, and Tobins, forwards.

FINAL.

WEST RIDINGS vs. UNITED SERVICES.—The tournament was brought to a close on Saturday last when these teams met on the Calcutta ground. The game was played in a sea of mud and needs little description. The West Ridings pressed throughout eventually winning by 4 tries to nil and it was only their indomitable pluck which saved the U. S. team from a heavier defeat. They played all they knew till no side and though the hard games on two consecutive evenings before the final had evidently told on them they did not relax their efforts a whit. They kept their opponents out in the first half and it was not till a couple of minutes before the interval that Hylands got over with the first try. The West Ridings pressed throughout the second period and Hylands, Ryan, and Chapman got over with tries, and an attempt to drop a goal by Morris was all but successful. None of the tries were converted. Final score : West Ridings 4 tries (12 points), Services nil. Teams :—

WEST RIDINGS.—Britton, back; Whiteman, Chapman, Ryan, and Johnston, three-quarters; Hylands, Captain Morris, half-backs; Lieutenant Liddell, McCormack, Craven, Porter, Riley, Rolt, Smith, and Waddington, forwards.

UNITED SERVICES.—Kidner, back; Rowe, Bromage, Edwards, Warden, three-quarters; Branham and Butler, half-backs; Harty, Lilburn, Hill, Cowie, Kidly, Ansell, Adams, and White, forwards.

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. ARMENIANS.—The game was chiefly confined to the forwards, the ground being in very bad condition owing to the heavy rain that fell in the morning. The Armenians made a better fight than was expected but got beaten by one goal, a penalty goal and a try to nothing.

Bombay had the best of matters in the first half and there was little to choose between the teams in the second. Webb made a good run and was responsible for the first try, while Conory, who was about the best of the visiting forwards, secured the second try in a forward rush. At times the Armenians attacked warmly and Gregory, by means of a good dribble, nearly scored. Many of their scrummagers were mere youngsters from the Armenian College and all round were a much lighter lot than their opponents. Peters was the best of their forwards, Gregory of their halves, and Apcar of their three-quarter line. His tackling and kicking were very good and on a dry ground some of his attempts to get through the opposing backs might have come off Some of the Bombay team had been travelling all night and moreover they were not familiar with each others play. This may account for many of them apparently taking it easy at times, at any rate they played better in their subsequent games. Bridge served Sargent well at half. The latter is an old Richmond player and showed that he had a perfect knowledge of the game though on this particular day was inclined to hold on a little too long. The visiting three-quarters had not much to do, but it was evident they were a useful quartette. Cadell, who has seen many years of football, led his forwards well and never eased off.

GLOSTERS vs. WEST RIDINGS.—Everyone, save the West Ridings, felt sad over the state of the ground last week when the soldiers met to decide which regiment was to play in the Final tie.

The sod could not have been worse, the mud was ankle deep, the players became unrecognizable, and thus the game between two excellent and well trained teams was, at least from a spectator's point of view, quite spoiled.

It was hard lines on the Glosters, who were favourites, that the same fate as last year should have attended them. They anxiously desired a dry ground, whereas the Ridings openly declared that their chances against their heavier opponents were better on a slippery field. They were correct as was proved by the result, a dropped goal and a try to nil.

The game was not long started before it became apparent that the Yorkshire men had made up their minds to depend chiefly upon the activity of their forwards and halves, their three-quarters being more for the purposes of defence than of attack. Scrum followed scrum in rapid succession, and gradually the West Ridings by loose rushes worked up to the Glosters' line, where Morris got possession and dropped a most praiseworthy goal, just as he was being tackled. After this the Glosters pressed and a very smart bout of passing took place amongst their three-quarters, and a score seemed probable but Berry passed back to his co-centre, Bagwell, who at that time was marked, instead of out to Lieutenant Ford, who had a clear field in front of him.

Though the Glosters were somewhat beaten in getting the ball in the scrums, still their halves had many opportunities, and Russell in particular. He got short runs on several occasions but spoiled whatever chances his side had by never transferring in time, indeed, he was generally on his knees before he thought of parting with the ball.

The Ridings had slightly the best of the initial period, but their superiority in the second half was very marked. The scrums became looser, and their forwards got in a deal of fast foot work. They played more unitedly than the Glosters' pack, and when hard tackling or mud slipping brought them down they were infinitely quicker than their opponents in regaining their feet. On several occasions they worked up to the Glosters' stronghold, but the latter repulsed them, sometimes by useful punts on the part of their backs, and, sometimes by vigorous forward rushes. They were not to be denied however, and finally, like a swarm of bees, settled down near the Glosters' line, and refused to leave until, within a few minutes of "no side," the ball having been forced over, Hylands and two of the pack pounced upon it, and between them secured a try, but the shot at goal failed.

Individual criticism on such a day is almost unfair and unnecessary. Lieutenant Ewell, however, was decidedly the best of the Glosters' three-quarters, and he stopped most difficult rushes in the pluckiest manner. Berry was disappointing after his performance against Calcutta, while Mason was about the best of the forwards, of whom, perhaps, the two heaviest were the least useful. The Glosters' full back struck one as being more reliable than his vis-a-vis, Britton. His tackling and picking up were admirable though his kicks found touch a little too soon. On the Ridings' side, Morris and Hylands got through a lot of work and were ever on the alert in tackling and dribbling, it apparently having been pre-arranged that they were not to attempt back play. Between the forwards, who were well led by Lieutenant Liddle, it would be difficult to draw distinctions. They all played well.

The heavy mud was anything but in favour of the Glosters, who did not seem to be so much at home in it as the West Ridings, and there be many who maintain that they are a better team on a dry ground.

Notwithstanding the conditions under which the match was played, a lively interest which continued to the end was manifested by the large crowd of spectators. Both sides put up a very hard fight. May Rugby long prosper in their regiments. It is a game which has moulded many a good soldier. Examples are numerous, but, in particular, I may allude to the case of two men, who, while serving with the Imperial Light Horse, won their V. C.'s in the late Boer war.

They were club mates and captained their club's first XV in successive years previous to their departure for South Africa on a football tour. Each modestly attributes his success to what he learned during many years' devotion to the game.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. UNITED SERVICES.—As arranged both teams took the field on Thursday last but neither side managed to score, and the first drawn game played in Calcutta this season resulted. The Bombay backs played much better than in their game against the Armenians and, though the sides appeared evenly matched during the first half, the United Services had much the best of the second. The latter were very weak in the back division, Edwards having disappointed, but Rowe nearly got over. Though nominally p'aying three-quarter, he seemed to have been granted a roving commission, as not only was he at times playing half, but even went so far on one occasion as to lend the scrummagers a hand.

The ground was in good order on the following day when the teams again lined out. Bombay were without the services of Conory, who was laid up with fever, and Palmer, who had his shoulder hurt in the previous encounter. Their places were taken by Braund and Siddons, junior, respectively. Bombay at once led off by some useful back play, in which Sargent, Baker, and Mockler were most prominent. For fully ten minutes they kept hammering at their opponents' line during which time, were it not for some forward passes and weak play, they must have scored. It was from a scrum near the Services' line that Lilburn got away right up the field with a fine dribble, cleverly managing to keep the ball out of touch, and after he had negotiated the full back, Rowe's pace came in useful and on the last-named player being brought down near the line Lilburn got over for a try which Harty easily converted.

The second half of the game was of an exciting nature. The United Services led off well but Bombay soon pressed by means of their backs, and eventually after some nice play by Sargent, Baker got possession, and, outpacing Kidner, scored a fine try near the posts, but Sargent failed in the attempt at goal. After this Bombay missed an easy shot from a free, but still continued to press, until Rowe, picking up within twenty yards of his goal line, put full steam on, dodged a Bombay three quarter, evaded the full and thus secured a most excellent try, which Harty converted. This magnificent run of Rowe's decided the game and no side was called a few minutes later.

The forwards on both sides were at fault for not letting out the ball better to their backs, but at the same time they worked hard. Lilburn showed great dash and was the best forward on the ground. Of the Bombay pack Cadell and Rutherford were always prominent, while Sargent at half was in rare form. Baker and Mockler, both of whom might have had more chances, were the strong points in the three quarter line.

THE FINAL.—Little interest attached to the game as it was a foregone conclusion that the West Ridings would win.

The ground was again in a deplorable condition owing to the heavy rain in the morning, but scarcely as bad as when the Glosters were knocked out.

A fair crowd stood around when the ball was kicked off and, somehow, one expected to see some bright bits of play but hardly anything of the kind took place.

It was hard luck on the United Services that, owing to their drawn game with Bombay, they had to play three matches on successive days, however they fought hard though, I think, many of them showed signs of needing rest.

The soldiers pressed almost during the entire game. In the first moiety they scored but one unconverted try, still the ball only visited their half of the ground on two occasions, on both of which its duration there was most temporary. The second period was of a similar nature to the first, save that the men from Darjeeling put a little more dash into their game and three tries resulted, none of which were converted.

Lieutenant Kidner played a very fine game for the Services, and were it not for his tackling and stopping of rushes the score against his side would have been very much larger. He has shown most consistent good form whenever he has donned the jersey during the season, and were it not for his habit of finding touch too soon, a rather serious fault when playing behind weak forwards, he might claim to be a full back of no small brilliancy.

Edwards was the best of their three-quarters. Not only did he tackle well but his kicking was most effective and well-judged. None of Rowe's individual efforts came off. He played half-back during the earlier portion of the game, but behind a beaten pack and opposed to Morris, never looked dangerous. Butler, the other half, stood well to his guns Of the forwards, none of whom were at their best owing to the previous two days' encounters, Lilburn, Cowie, and Harty were the pick. The last-named is good in the loose but is not a genuine scrummager. I could not understand why in kicking out from the "25" or in taking penalties, he almost invariably indulged in short kicks against a team faster than his own and much better dribblers. Near the end of the game, however, he discovered his mistake.

The soldiers did not seem to be nearly as good a side as when they played the Glosters, but this, no doubt, was because they had the game in their hands from the start. Their full did the little that came his way well. Of the three-quarters Chapman and Johnston appeared best while the halves both did well. Were it not for the fact that Hylands knows so much and was always within reach of the ball, as shown by his obtaining two of the tries after it had been dribbled over the line by his forwards, I would say Morris was the better of a good pair, at all events he did the more difficult things of the two. Lieutenant Liddle and McCormack were about the best of the pack.

The Calcutta Club held their annual dinner on Saturday at the Saturday Club. There was a goodly attendance and the Band of the Palamcotta Light Infantry played a pleasing selection of music. Appropriate speeches were made by Mr. F. W. Carter, President of the Club, Lieutenants Baker, Liddle, and Mr. Buckler.

Now that the Cup Competition is over a word of praise is due to Mr. Mackenzie. All arrangements were perfect save one about which he was not consulted—the weather. It is seldom that a Club is blessed with a more efficient or genial Honorary Secretary.

Northumberland Fusiliers scratched their League match with Calcutta F. C., arranged for last Monday, and accordingly the latter club have won The Indian Field Cup. Three matches in their fixture list were scratched by their opponents, and of the remaining seven they won all, having scored 27 goals, 1 dropped goal, and 5 tries, 217 points in all, while nothing was registered against them.

It is probable that Calcutta and the West Ridings will meet down at Madras and, if the ground is dry, a good game should result.

BOMBAY ROVERS TOURNAMENT.

MANCHESTERS vs. R.G.A.—This match was played on the Cooperage last Saturday, an interesting game resulting in a win for the Manchesters by 2 goals to 1. Play was very level in the first half, but the Manchesters managed to put on a goal scoring from a long shot. In the second period Johnson kicked another goal for the visitors; it was not long however, before the Gunners opened their account, but failing to score again they were beaten as stated. Teams:—

MANCHESTERS.—Pte. Richards, goal; Ptes. Cummings and Townsend, backs; Ptes. Ross, Higgins and Thomson, half-backs; Pte. Mottershed Drum-Major Milner, Ptes. Johnson, Davies and Fletcher, forwards.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. ROYAL SCOTS.—These teams met on the 10th instant, an excellent game ending in spite of extra time in a pointless draw. The game was replayed on the 12th instant, the Scots early asserting their superiority and winning by 3 goals to nil. The scoring was done in the first half, Kennaway being credited with all three points.

The civilians were confined to their own half almost entirely during the second moiety, but the military team were unable to add to their score. Teams:—

Referee: Mr. J. Chatt, Rovers.

LEICESTERS vs. CHESHIRES.—Played on the 11th instant a splendid game being witnessed. The Leicesters, who were runners up in the Richardson tournament at Poona, beat the Wellington team by two goals to nil. After even exchanges at the start Leicesters attacked and Hubbard opened the scoring. The Cheshires were then seen to advantage, but were unable to get through and their opponents led at the interval. The Cheshires attacked on resuming, but the ball was soon transferred to their own territory and Truman was tested. He cleared, however, and desultory play followed. The Leicesters pressed again and Cunningham shot the second goal. The concluding stages of the game were in favour of the Leicesters, though their opponents broke away occasionally nothing further was scored and the score at the finish was Leicesters 2 goals, Cheshires nil. Teams:—

LEICESTERS.—Corpl Robinson, goal; Ptes. Whitmore and Perkins, backs; Ptes. Harris and Belton and Lce. Corpl. Tamlinson, half-backs; Ptes. Fieldhouse and Jackson, Lce.-Corpl. Hubbard, Col.-Sergt. White and Corpl Cunningham, forwards.

10TH HUSSARS vs. 7TH BRIGADE R. F. A.—Played on the 13th instant, the Hussars winning by four goals to nil. They drew first blood, Morris scoring at the close of the first half. On changing ends the Gunners equalised. Even play followed and then the Cavalry men showed superior combination and shooting powers and putting on three more goals, Hartford, Morris and Woodburn being responsible won as stated above. Teams:—

10TH HUSSARS.—Pte. Woodburn, goal; Pte. Burt and Shoeing Smith Hattridge, backs; Ptes Seaton, Smith and Sweetland, half-backs; Ptes Binns, Hartford, Corpl. Edwards, Ptes. Morriss and Durant, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. S. N. Powell, Gymkhana.

A. AND S. HIGHLANDERS vs. TELEGRAPH.—This the last game in the first round was played on the 11th instant and resulted in a very close game. The Civilians gave a good account of themselves and were beaten by a small margin.

The Highlanders scored a goal in the first half, Turnbull heading into the net, and all efforts by the Telegraph to equalise were fruitless. On changing ends Edie put them on terms. Then the Argylls scored a goal. The Civilians attacked hotly and the Military were hard pressed. A couple of abortive corners to the Telegraph team were followed by a shot which once more put the scores level. Then the Highlanders made an attack and Quinn headed their third point. The Civilians failed to add to their score though they had hard luck on more than one occasion. Frequent fouls by the Military team during the closing stages of the game rather marred the proceedings. Teams:—

ARGYLL AND SUTHERLAND HIGHLANDERS.—Pte. Daly, goal; Pte. Reid and Lapsley, backs; Ptes. McMillan, Mowatt and Maclean, half-backs; Pte. Turnbull, Wright, Lce.-Corpl. Quinn, Pte. Dean and Corpl. Campbell, forwards.

TELEGRAPH.—Cooke, goal; Edwards and Nicholas, backs; Goodridge, Speechly and Woolen, half-backs; Greene, Taylor, Edie, Cowper and Hollman, forwards.

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

FIRST ROUND.

CAMERONIANS vs. ROYAL SUSSEX REGIMENT.—After aggravating postponements owing to heavy rain, the tournament opened with this match on the 17th instant in perfect weather and a large crowd watched the play. The Sussex men made quite a sensational beginning, for they started off with a rush and in less than three minutes had opened their score with a neatly placed goal. This, unfortunately, was their only success for the Cameronians set about the attack with such vim that they were soon bombarding their opponents' goal which, after several very narrow shaves, ultimately fell to a superb shot just before half time. The Cameronians led off at a great pace in the second half and got goal number two in a few minutes. Then was seen the best play of the day: the Sussex team's grand, though ineffectual, attempts to equalise brought about a very fine struggle. But their luck was none too good and the Cameronians eventually came through winners by 2 goals to 1; they might have done better but for the more than efficient goal-keeping of the Sussex custodian, and it is only fair to remark that the Cameronians' first goal was scored owing to Towner's impression that offside had been given against the kicker.

WEST YORK REGIMENT vs. 12TH LANCERS.—This game was played on the 18th instant. Quite early in it one of the Lancers was injured, but played on though little better than a passenger thenceforward. This handicap probably cost the Cavalry men the game, for though they did the greater part of the pressing they could not "get there" and were defeated by a goal to nil, said goal being scored by Gee in the first half. The Yorkshire men were lucky to win.

HIGHLAND L. I. vs. WILSHIRES.—Played on the 18th instant, the Wiltshires winning rather easily by 3 goals to 1. They attacked at the start and the Highlanders' goal-keeper was kept busy. Then the Wiltshire's territory was invaded and Delin scored the first goal for the H. L. I. The Wilts got away on re-starting and Lindsell equalised, and before the interval they had scored again Giddings putting them ahead. In the second period the H. L. I. had chances of adding to their score, but failed owing to poor shooting. The Wilts pressed again and forced a corner, the ball being headed in from the resulting kick. The Highlanders rushed down again and almost scored, the Wilts' custodian just clearing. Then the Wilts returned to the attack and the game ended in the H. L. I. territory.

He had invented a beetle powder, and he had advertised it far and wide. There came a day when a customer rushed frantically into the shop owned by the distinguished inventor—a chemist. The customer showed signs of intense agitation. "Give me another half-pound of your beetle powder! Quick!" he cried. "I'm glad you like it," said the chemist, proceeding with the order. "Yes," said the excited man. "I have one beetle already very ill; if I can only get home before he recovers and give him another half-pound, he'll die."

General O. O. Howard, the American soldier, shortly after the battle of Fair Oaks, in which he had lost his right arm, met General Kearney, who had lost his left arm in the same battle. "Never mind, Howard," said Kearney, "we will buy our gloves at the same shop!"

Garson: Don't mope, old fellow. Look on the bright side of things." Miles: "Which is the bright side of a bad headache?"

Wiseman: "Primitive men ploughed the earth with a sharpened stick." Slecombe: "You don't mean to say golf dated so far back?"

QUETTA DIVISIONAL TOURNAMENT.

THE results of this interesting tournament are given below:—

Novices (Light Weights, semi-finals):—Private Arnold, Warwicks beat Lce-Corpl. Wright, Warwicks, in three rounds after a very hard fight and Private Feeney, Warwicks, in four rounds after an even contest.

Novices (Middle Weights, semi-finals):—Private Nodman, Welsh, beat Private Jones, Warwicks, in three rounds; Private Bates, Warwicks, beat Bombardier Dowding, M. B., in two rounds.

Officers (Catch Weights, final):—Lieutenant Beaman, S. W. B., beat Lieutenant Woodward, Warwicks, in four rounds after an excellent display.

Novices (Catch Weights, final):—Gunner Sturgeon, 3rd M. B., beat Private Jones, Welsh, a knock out in the first round.

Open Feather Weights, final:—Private Turner, S. W. B., beat Private Davis, Welsh, in three rounds.

Open, final:—Private Sullivan, Warwicks, won against Lce. Corpl. Williams, Warwicks, who fouled in the first round.

Open Catch Weights, final:—Private Rickards, S. W. B., beat Private Smith, Welsh, in 20 seconds, a feigned knock out. No prize given in consequence.

Open Middle Weights, Final:—Private Mountford beat Private Barton, S. W. B. The former was very scientific and too quick for Barton's powerful hits.

Novice (Light Weights, final):—Private Arnold, Warwicks, beat Private Norreys, S. W. B., the latter being unwell in one round.

Officers (Middle Weights, Final):—Lieutenant Norton, 101st Grenadiers, beat Captain Carry, R. E. The latter pluckily entered to make a fight.

Novice (Light Weights, Final):—Private Bates, Warwicks, beat Private Norman, Welsh, in one round.

General Smith-Dorrien distributed the prizes.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Tuesday, 18th September 1906.

THE club brought their racing season to a close on Tuesday, 18th instant, when the annual autumn meeting was held. It was feared at first that this annual fixture would not be held owing to want of entries, but our recent notes on the subject evidently had the good effect of rousing the enthusiasm of members and sufficent entries were secured to make the races a success. The meeting was held after dinner, an innovation we strongly approve of. Taking everything into consideration the entertainment was a success and the executive are to be complimented on the result of their efforts.

The Honorary Secretary acted as Starter and Timekeeper, Mr. W. Bushby as President and Messrs. G. O. Rushton and G. H. Harnack did the judging. The prizes which made a fine display were given away by Mrs. W. Bushby.

The programme was as follows:—

MEMBERS' HANDICAP.—Two lengths (66 yards 2 feet).

Final.

		Start.	Nett Time
1.	N. Gerrand	15secs.	57"
2.	H. Beck	8secs.	51"
3.	A. Cornish	11secs.	54½"
4.	A. L. Clarke	10secs.	56"
5.	J. S. Munro	4secs.	51½"

The preliminary heats were contested on the 12th September.

THE BATH CHAMPIONSHIP.—Two lengths (66 yards 2 feet).

This item attracted the greatest interest as it brought together on a level the crack sprinters of the Bath. The winner turned up in S. Lawton, who won by two yards, the other four were all bunched together, G. Anscombe securing second honours, and The Indian Field Cup, inches only. Results:—

1.	S. Lawton ...	...	...	44½"
2.	G. Anscombe	...	...	46"
3.	Dead ∫ W. Waugh	...	...	46½"
	heat ∫ J. V. Watkins	...	...	46½"
5.	G. Brown ...	...	...	46½"

DISPLAY OF DIVING.

By Messrs. Beck, Brown, Clarke, Lawton, Finlayson, Anscombe and Rushton.

This item was much appreciated and loud applause greeted the efforts of each diver.

VICEROY'S MEDAL HANDICAP.—Six lengths (200 yards).

J. V. Watkins, the scratch man, had a most popular win in this race, a tempest of cheers greeting him when he overhauled the other two competitors.

1.	J. V. Watkins	...	Scratch.	2'-51"
2.	A. Bergmann	...	23secs.	3'-8½"
3.	R. Jones ...	...	28secs.	3'-23½"

EIGHTH LENGTHS TEAM RACE.

Results.

1. C Team Messrs. Watkins, Waugh, Anscombe, Beck. Time—3mins. 12⅕secs.

2. A Team Messrs. Lawton, Brown, Miller, Pike. Time—3mins. 21secs.

3. B Team Messrs. Govan, Bergmann, Wilkinson, Munro. Time—3mins. 21⅕secs.

COMIC EVENT.

This was down on the programme as a two lengths for ladies. The "ladies" turned out to be "great he things" dressed up in costumes which to say the least were original and evoked roars of laughter from the fair sex amongst the spectators.

The winner turned up in G. Brown, A. Cornish annexing second prize.

WATER POLO.—This match was played between "Past" and "Present" swimmers and although the latter had all the pace, the older generation showed far greater knowledge of the game and eventually the old 'uns won by the comfortable margin of 4 to 1. This item brought the evening's entertainment to a close and with three cheers for Mrs. Bushby the gathering spersed.

The Story Teller.

GREAT SCOT!

HE was certainly the most entertaining companion one could have on a long, tedious railway journey, and if he lacked that indefinable something which marks the true gentleman, one is apt to overlook such little matters in the average racegoer.

I am rather inclined to be uncommunicative with strangers, charm they never so sweetly, and to do my companion justice he seemed at first equally disinclined to enter into conversation. We were the only occupants of a first-class compartment in the special from Victoria to Chichester, on the opening day of the Goodwood Meeting, and I am still wondering whether we should ever have exchanged a single word had I not broken the ice. Usually the most methodical of men, I found to my annoyance that I had left my racing guide at home, and noticing that one lay by my fellow traveller's side, I ventured to trespass on his good nature.

"May I borrow your guide for a moment?" I asked.

The words had scarcely left my lips, when my vis-a-vis placed the book in my out-stretched hand, with a most affable smile, saying, as he did so, "With pleasure."

I looked up the reference, and was proceeding to return the book, when he waved it away, saying—

"Pray don't hurry; I have very little use for it. I don't set much store on form as a rule."

His accent puzzled me somewhat, and his words more so.

"Surely you are not serious; one can't afford to ignore form. Besides, the possession of this guide rather discounts your statement."

"Think so?" he asked, not in the least disconcerted.

"I find it useful to refresh my memory, but nothing more. Sounds like heresy?" he added, as he saw the look on my face.

"I must confess that form and I are very good friends," I replied, "but I am no slave of the book."

He laughed the sort of laugh which suggested that after all said and done our opinions on the matter were pretty well on all fours, and we soon began to chat about the glories of Goodwood. I suppose I got a bit too enthusiastic for my friend, who was making his first visit to the ducal park, for he relapsed into silence after a while, then suddenly remarked—

"I must say I'm just the least bit disappointed with what I've seen of English racecourses. None of them come up to Flemington."

As soon as he uttered the name of the great racecourse "down under" the mystery of his accent was explained.

"You are a Colonial?" I queried.

"Well, not exactly; my business is over there. I'm here for a trip."

He put his hand into his breast pocket, and drawing out his pocket-book, handed me his card, on which I read "J. Scott, Melbourne." I suppose it was a foolish thing to do, but after this I left I could not do less than return the compliment, and handed him my bit of pasteboard.

On arriving at Chichester I lost sight of Mr. Scott in the hurry and bustle, but emerging from the station found him standing in a bewildered sort of way, unable to make up his mind which particular vehicle to select to take him up to the course. His face brightened considerably as he caught sight of me, and it was with an appearance of real gratitude that he accepted my offer to let him share the landau I had taken.

"Are you going to stop in the town?" he asked me on the way up to the park.

"No; I always spend the fortnight at Brighton. I put up at the Metropole mostly. I sent my traps on there yesterday. Chichester's too sleepy altogether."

"I fancy it'll suit me to a nicety. I'm rather partial to these old-world towns."

Beyond occasionally catching a glimpse of my new acquaintance in the paddock or on the stand, I saw very little of him until we happened to meet on our way to the Telegraph Office on the last day of the meeting.

"How have they been serving you?" I asked, casually.

"Oh! not so bad," was the laughing reply. "I'm pretty well able to take care of myself, and I made up my mind not to bet heavily until to-day."

"Why to-day especially?" I asked. "It doesn't look like a backer's day to me."

"It won't be if a certain horse wins the Chesterfield cup," he said, mysteriously. "At all events, I've saved myself for a big splash. I'm wiring my agent to put fifty on for me, and that's about my maximum."

"I wish you luck," I remarked, rather hoping that he would mention the animal's name. "I'm just going to send my little investments off to my man."

"Look here, Mr. Mason," he said, impulsively, "you've been very kind to a stranger like me, and I shall be glad to return the obligation. The horse I came here specially to back is Great Scot."

"The Australian!"

He nodded and proceeded to fill up a wire form to his agent, and while occupied in the same process I added to my list a fiver for Great Scot.

"Is that enough?" I asked him, as I showed him the wire.

"Quite. I know what a good one he is, but I don't like letting people in, especially as I see you fancy something else in the race."

"You're more considerate than most people," I said, laughingly, as I handed my wire in.

"Going to Alexandra Park to-morrow?" he asked.

"No thanks. I've had a fair week, and shall stop at Brighton."

"May see you there next week," he said, with a nod, walking off into the paddock.

Naturally I watched the race for the Chesterfield Cup with something more than my usual interest, but to my intense disgust I saw Great Scot in hopeless difficulties quite early on, eventually finishing last, the race being won by my fancy, Gold Riach.

I looked about unavailingly for my Colonial friend, in the hopes of obtaining some explanation of this extraordinary display on the part of his great tip, but I have not since set eyes on him.

Upon reaching the Metropole that evening I was handed a wire from a friend, asking me to be at Alexandra Park on the following day, as he could put me on a good thing. Such chance are not to be missed, and accordingly I journeyed up to Town on Saturday morning, although a trifle against the grain. A block in the traffic opposite my commission agent's office reminded me that I might as well call in and give him my instructions for the day.

He was not in, but his clerk speedily took a note of my investments, and as I was going out of the door he called out—

"Oh, Mr. Mason, here's you account. I was going to post it to you, but you may as well take it with you."

I thrust the letter into my pocket hurriedly, and did not open it until I was sitting in the train en route for Alexandra Park Judge of my surprise when I discovered that the cheque was made out for £90 too much! Running my eye carefully through the various items, I came across an entry £20 Gold Riach, for which I was credited with £90 winnings. Satisfied there was some mistake, I decided to put the matter right with my man by letter, and dismissed the subject from my mind.

A jolly good dinner on the strength of the good thing at "A. P." materialising all right, and a rollicking evening in Town, made me delay my departure for Brighton till the following day. It was as well that I did so, for among the correspondence awaiting me at my chambers was a wire from Tomlin, my agent, despatched at two o'clock that day, which ran as follows:—

"You wire to send your cheque to Dolphin Hotel, Chichester; same was handed to you by my clerk to-day; please explain.—Tomlin."

Then, like an inspiration, the truth flashed across my mind. My Colonial friend, thanks to my folly in showing him my wire, had taken the liberty of having a "score" on Gold Riach, and with a bit of luck would have got off with my winnings, and the result of his "smartness," into the bargain. As it turned out, I was the richer by the nice little sum of £90!

THE BRITISH CONGRESS.

THE final struggle in the British Chess Congress at Shrewsbury attracted a large number of spectators. Atkins and Michell, with an equal score ahead of all competitors, made a real fight for supremacy; each player had rook, bishop, knight, and pawns, but Atkins' pawn position was thought preferable, as he had a dangerous passed centre pawn well supported. Just after the fiftieth move Atkins won a pawn, and rooks and bishops being exchanged off the game came to an ending with knight and four pawns against knight and three. On the fifty-seventh move Michell resigned the useless struggle.

Atkins thus retains the trophy which he won last year at Southport. Mercer beat Wahltuch in their adjourned game, and Parry beat Hamond. The final score in the championship tournament is therefore as follows:—H. E. Atkins, 8½, Chess Championship trophy and first prize, £60; Michell, 7½, second prize, £30; Lee Palmer, Shoosmith and Wainwright, 7, divide third and fourth prizes, £20 and £10: the scores of non-prize winners are Blackburne, 5½; Wahltuch, 4½; Hamond, 3½; Mercer, 3; Parry, 2; Brown, 1½.

Atkins was born in 1872 at Leicester, where he still resides. He has been very prominent in British chess for years, and also played with success in the International tournament at Hanover in 1902. Curiously enough, he made the same score of 8½ in the last two tournaments at Hastings and at Southport.

BRIDGE.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 9.

Z SHOULD lead the knave of spades, and, if A does not cover with the king, throw the 10 under it. This will enable him to lead the suit through A twice, whilst retaining a losing spade in dummy to put himself in with on the fourth round. If the finesse is successful, and B is not void of the suit Z will make five tricks in spades, three in clubs (including the one already won), since A is marked with king, knave, 9, and one in diamonds, winning the game. If it fails, he still has the chance—though not, perhaps, a very rosy one—of making a trick in hearts.

Some enterprising genius has invented a typewriter which can be held on the knee. The need of some word to distinguish the operator of the machine is now more urgent than ever.

"Come, mister, no one can sleep here!" said a policeman the other evening, who found a man lying on the grass under a tree in a park, and roused him.

"But I have a good excuse," replied the man.

"What is is it?"

"See that house over there? Well, please to do me the favour to go and ring the bell and ask if William Dockey is at home."

The officer went to the house, ascended the steps, and rang the bell. A head was thrust out of an open bedroom window, and a female voice demanded:

"Now who is there?"

"Madam," replied the officer, "is William Dockey at home?"

"No, Sir, and I don't expect him until daylight!" snapped the woman, and at the same moment a bowlful of water descended on the officer's head and half drowned him.

"Well," said the man on the grass, as the dripping officer came up, "you see how it is, don't you? I'm Dockey. That's Mrs. Dockey." "I think I understand," replied the officer. "You can remain where you are."

THE IBEX OF CENTRAL ASIA.

FOR some at least of the older naturalists an ibex was an ibex whether it came from the Himalayas or from the Alps, and it is therefore not surprising to find Brian Hodgson in his earlier days alluding to the ibex of the Himalayas as Capra ibex, or, in other words, as inseparable from the steinbok, or ibex, of the Alps. It happened, however, that long before his time a German naturalist, Meyer by name, had recognised the specific distinctness of the ibex of Central Asia from its Alpine cousin, and in 1794 he proposed for the former the name of Capra sibirica.

Forty-six years later Edward Blyth proposed the title of Capra sakeen for the Himalayan ibex; the name being derived from the Ladaki designation skin, iskin, or sakin.

That the Central Asian ibex, as a whole, is widely different from its smaller European relative is abundantly clear; so evident indeed is this that it will be quite unnecessary to point out in this place the distinctive characteristics of the two species. It is further evident that all the ibex of Central Asia—from Afghanistan and the Altai in the west to the Thian Shan and Ladak in the east—are referable to a single species, Meyer's Capra sibirica. In the case of a species having such an enormous geographical range, and with several of its local representatives more or less completely isolated from one another, it is, however, only natural to expect that great variation would be met with; and as a matter of fact such is actually the case. The recognition of such local races of the Asiatic ibex has been a slow matter, and perhaps all are not yet described, although, on the other hand, some of those which have been named are not really entitled to racial separation.

The late Dr. W. T. Blanford, who was very conservative in such matters, refused to recognize any definite local races of the species, contenting himself, in the Fauna of British India, with the following remarks:—"A very dark-coloured ibex is said to occur in Baltistan, but is, according to Skully, merely the old mate in winter vesture. Ibex from Siberia and from the Thian Shan mountains north of Kashgar have the abdomen and the back of the carpus and tarsus [fore and hind cannon-bones] white, contrasting strongly with the front of the legs, which is very dark brown. Colonel J. Biddulph, to whom I am indebted for calling my attention to this character, is of opinion that the Thian Shan animal is the true Capra sibirica and the Himalayan one distinct, in which case the latter would take the name of Capra sakin.

"Mr. R. A. Sterndale has described the head of an ibex purchased in Kashmir. . . In section the horns resemble those of C. sibirica. The horns are 52 inches long, dark-coloured, and remarkably curved round, much more than in ordinary C. sibirica; there are no knobs except near the tips. Three specimens are recorded and it is suggested they may come from the country West of Kashmir. Mr. Sterndale proposed to call this wild goat Capra dauvergnei if new."

In 1900 Mr. Lydekker proposed the name of Capra sibirica wardi for the above-mentioned dark-coloured ibex from Baltistan, while in the same year the Hon'ble Walter Rothschild bestowed the title of C. sibirica lydekkeri on the ibex of the Katutay range of the Irtish Altai. Subsequently Mr. Lydekker clearly defined and figured the Himalayan ibex as C. sibirica sacin, while still later other writers have named additional races. Quite recently Dr. Lorenz von Liburnan, who has visited some of the principal museums of Europe with the object of specially studying Central Asian ibex, has published in one of the serials of the Vienne Academy a review of all that is known on the subject, with the description of yet other new races. This paper is of such importance that a brief résumé cannot fail to be of interest to sportsmen in India.

As is usual when we have to deal with a large number of local races, a difficulty crops up with regard to English names. For the species in general the proper title is the Asiatic or Siberian ibex; and the various sub-species ought to be known as such and such races of that species. The Capra sibirica wardi should, for instance be called the Baltistan race of the Asiatic ibex. This is, however, somewhat cumbersome, and it is consequently generally known as the Baltistan ibex. On the other hand, this makes it appear as a distinct species. A way out of the difficulty would be to call the Asiatic ibex the skin (=skeen), or sakin, and we should then have the Baltistan sakin, the Katutay sakin, etc., which would make everything quite plain and simple.

Contrary to the opinion of Messrs Biddulph and Blanford, the typical Capra sibirica, according to Dr. Von Lorenz, is from the northern slope of the Sayansk range, in the neighbourhood of Munku Sardyk to the eastward of Lake Baikal. This Sayansk ibex, or sakin, is therefore Capra sibirica typica. In colour the whole of the upper parts are dirty yellowish white tending to a purer white on the middle of the back: on the belly the hairs are brown, with bluish tips; but the forehead, a ring round each eye, the occiput, the ears, and the sides of the neck are darker. There is a small white line on the upper and a larger one on the lower lip. There is a narrow dark dorsal stripe, and also an indistinct shoulder-stripe. The hind legs are brown in front and whitish on the outer side inferiorly, and there is some white on the hinder side of the forefoot near the lateral hoops Old bucks sometimes become almost wholly white. The absence of a distinct white saddle is characteristic of this race.

The ibex from the district known to Germans as the Bia Altai, in the neighbourhood of Lake Telezko (neither marked in the Times Atlas) has been named C. sibirica fasciata. It is said to be yellowish brown above, with a dark spot on the lower lip at the angle of the mouth, and a broad horizontal black band on the lower part of the foreleg; there is a light patch on the hinder surface of the lower portion of the hindleg, and a distinct whorl of hair on the outer side of the same; the ears are large and rounded, lighter inside than out; and the eyes are brownish red, instead of yellowish grey, as in the next race.

The Irtish sakin, C. sibirica altaica, is said to be wholly greyish brown in the summer coat, without a white saddle or neck patch. In the latter respect it seems to agree with the typical race, from which it differs somewhat in bodily form, the shape of the horns, and colour café-au-lait brown is said to be its general colour, with a dark dorsal stripe. The horns are light-coloured, and strongly curved at the tips. This ibex occurs at Tarbagatai. In the Katutay ibex, or sakin, C. sibirica lydekkeri of the Katutay range of the Irtish Altai, the general colour is umber brown, slightly lighter than that of the Thian Shan race in winter, with the face, forehead, neck patch, a dorsal saddle, and the hinder side of the lower part of the legs dirty or creamy white. The light saddle is intermediate in size between that of the Thian Shan and that of the Baltistan race, and is much expanded in the middle over the flanks. The horns are extraordinarily massive, with very large knots.

The Kobdo ibex, C. sibirica hagenbecki, appears to be widely distributed in Northern Mongolia, and is of a pale breadcrust brown colour, without a light saddle, and specially characterised by the presence of a callority on the knee-joint. The horns have a curvature similar to those of he typical race, but the knot in the middle are larger and more approximated; while there are also differences in their contour.

The Thian Shan ibex, which ranges southward to Lake Issik Kul and Kuldja is named C. sibirica almasyi; it is represented in the British Museum by specimens killed at Kuldja by Messrs. Van der Byl and Littledale. It is lighter coloured than C. sibirica lydekkeri, with a broader white saddle and much larger horns, which display several peculiarities.

The ibex of the Central Thian Shan, in the neighbourhood of Naryn, has been separated as C. sibirica merzbackeri. It is said to differ from the last by the lighter colour of the dark areas, the more distinctly defined dorsal saddle, and the much shorter, more divergent, and more heavily knotted horns.

More information is required with regard to the ibex of Tashkent and the Kara-kul, for the former of which the name of C. sibirica alaiana and for the latter that of C. sibirica transaliana have been proposed. The former is said to be rufous in winter, and in summer to lack the white saddle; but both these features are probably based on error, as rufous is the summer and grey the winter tint of all these ibex. Probably the two are identical; if they indicate a distinct race, the former name stands.

The Baltistan ibex, C. sibirica wardi, is a well-defined race, characterised by its dark colour, and the large white saddle, separated only by a narrow dark band from the white neck-patch. In point of size the saddle is in fact intermediate between the relatively small one of C. sibirica lydekkeri and the very large one of C. sibirica sacin. The horns are not unlike those of the Thian Shan race, but stouter, shorter, and narrower in transverse section.

As to C. sibirica daubergnei, of which the horns have been already mentioned, it is impossible to say anything definite at present. The horns are dark coloured.

The Himalayan ibex, C. sibirica sacin, as represented by a male in winter coat from the Zoji-lal (between Kashmir and Dras), is characterised by the whole back and the hinder part of the back of the neck being light brownish white, with only a narrow light brown dorsal stripe, becoming darker and broader near the tail. There is a narrow light greyish brown band along each flank; the shoulders and thighs are a darker brown; the under-parts are deep golden brown with a brown spot on the hinder side of the hind-foot above the hoof; and the head is brownish. The horns are relatively slender.

The Ladak ibex cannot, for want of sufficient material, be at present determined.

For the Gilgit ibex, which has very slender horns, Dr. von Lorenz proposes the provisional name of C. sibirica pedri, after Prince Pedro of Orleans, but it cannot yet be defined.

The Afghan and Chitral ibex, which (represented by a male from Chitral in the summer coat) has no distinct light saddle, and small and slender light-coloured horns, Dr. von Lorenz considers it will probably be found to represent yet another race It may be suggested, however, that (at all events so far as the Chitral animal is concerned) it is not really distinct from the Gilgit race.

Of the ibex found in Northern Sikkim and to the north of Lhasa nothing definite is known, and skins are much wanted.

The foregoing sketch, if it serves no other purpose, will at least enable sportsmen to understand the chief deficiences in our knowledge of the ibex of Central Asia.

Two passengers travelling got into conversation, and one was most attentive to the other, pressing cigars, papers, and refreshments upon him. Their destination was the same town, and No. 1 asked where his travelling companion intended to put up. The latter replied: "The George" Said No. 1, 'Oh, don't bot her about a hotel, come to my plan for the night" This completed No 2's astonishment at such extraordinary gushing kindness, and he felt compelled to ask the reason for such unlooked for hospitality, but was uncomfortably enlightened by his would be host replying:—"My wife says I am the ugliest man in the world and I just want her to have a look at you."

"I am inexpressibly sorry Mr: Smithers," she said, to learn that when you called the other day Tiger bit you." "Oh that's all right," he said with a forced effort to be cheerful. "No, it isn't," she sobbed; "the poor little fellow has been ill ever since.

Sporting Notes.

TURF sensations, like other misfortunes, often occur in bunches. The Calcutta enquiries are hardly ended before we have similar investigations in Poona. As regards this wretched business, a great furore seems to have been created. As we understand the matter, of the three starters in this Pony Steeplechase followers of form and other good sportsmen backed that fine pony, Key West, ridden by her owner, Mr. P. Fischer, while a few bolder spirits placed their rupees on Lucretia, belonging to Colonel Desaraj Urs and ridden by one Johnson. Suddenly a commission swooped down on the Ring and completely wiped out the third pony, Small Scotch, ridden by Reid, before the astonished owner could join in the fray.

Well all this added much interest to the proceedings and every body cleaned up their glasses to watch developments. The race was duly started and all went well until they came to the water jump, which at Poona lies on the far side of the course and well away from the Stand. Here Lucretia executed what is described as a "bungle," and her jockey fell to the ground. It seems, though this is not quite clear, that Lucretia was quickly caught and brought back to her unfortunate rider, but the latter was so far unnerved by the shock as to be unable to remount. This calamity obviously resulted in the race being left to the remaining pair, of which the favourite welter weight was far in rear. In this order they ran to the finish, but we gather that Key West made a "determined effort" to get up and only failed to do so by a narrow margin. It is further reported that her defeat was nearly changed into a victory owing to the rider of Small Scotch having eased his mount, as it would seem prima facie, thinking the race was over. The commissioners then proceeded to collect their winnings, but could hardly be surprised under the circumstances we have stated, to hear that the race was to be the subject of a stringent enquiry.

We gather that this enquiry was a complete one, entering into such questions as whether all the books alike laid against Small Scotch and if not, why not? For whom the commissioners were at work and even whether Johnson's injuries were so severe as to incapacitate him from rising from his prostrate and helpless posture on the turf, until the race had swept far away from the scene of his discomfiture. So far reaching were the suspicions aroused by the incidents of this race in the hearts of the spectators. It certainly is a curious story, and the sequel is a painful one. The Stewards have not yet published their decision, but it is rumoured that three or four people have been warned off for life. We refrain from further comment till we are in possession of the official verdict.

The seventh and final Monsoon Meeting in Calcutta filled up three very hot hours last Saturday afternoon, the colossal programme embracing eight races. Although we found it a trifle overtiring, the sport was well above average and several of the finishes were first class. This reminds us to respectfully congratulate the handicapper on the all-round success of his efforts amid his, as yet, strange surroundings. The Hurdle Race dwindled to three starters and of these old Parole, having apparently broken a blood vessel, had to be pulled up after the third flight. This reduced the affair to a match, but a real good one, and perhaps the most exciting tussle that we have seen over the sticks this season. Both Shelldrake and Northmore rode in most determined style and it was any one's race until they strode away from the last flight. Here Watchfire, whose style of galloping has improved out of all recognition during the past three weeks, felt the advantage in the weights, two stone twelve pounds, and shook off his resolute pursuer. Mr. Pugh is in luck's way this year; it is a pity that he was not present to lead in his two winners himself.

They fancied all sorts of things for the Selling Race, and particularly Narwanah, but Oom Paul had the race to himself from start to finish. Narwanah came on the outside rails in front of the stand, but the winner was very comfortable throughout. No bid was made for the winner, and the others were not enquired for. The stable evidently fancied Goldstamp for the Poojah Plate, and were justified in their confidence as Messrs Paris and Marshall's horse had no trouble with anything except the still unfortunate Nirvana. The English gelding led them all the way, his big weight notwithstanding and struggled desperately in the straight, only once more to take second place.

The Rampart Plate was a delightfully good thing for Solace, delightful that is to those who realised it in time. Whitefoot chased her all the way home, but the big mare won cantering. The Amateur Handicap was another real good race, and the owners of the lightweights gave them a fair chance by employing professional jockeys who could go to scale at the allotted weights. The result was very noticeable, as two rank outsiders in Queen of Hearts and Riccaton took the place money, beating off all the cracks except Celina an untried one in this class and a very easy winner. The Handicapper had brought these horses remarkably well together. Springlock was all the rage in the ring at the commencement of operations in the Consolation Plate, but a good deal of solid money went on the ultimate winner Downland. Fraser took her right out from the gate, secured a seven lengths lead, and slipped the entire field except Trencherman, on which Murdison rode a good race. He had not time to wear down the little mare, but came near enough to bustle her home from the distance.

Fotheringay and Sal carried the metal in the next event, but the two bottom weights made a match of the race. Baichan held a good place on the rails when rounding the bend but seemed to pull out in the neighbourhood of the Tree. It is difficult to judge distances and positions at the angle obtainable from the Stand, but whatever it was that happened Fraser on Manon got in on the rails and thereby won a splendid race home, wearing down Wake Up and winning handsomely in the last twenty strides. Another good stake for Mr. Pugh. More lightweights rolled home in the pony race which closed the proceedings, and one is beginning to wonder whether the mud and heavy going are really so prejudicial to the top sawyers as we are always being instructed is the case. We have Cyril, Scotch Thistle and Energy winning through the slush and now, on a nice dry day, up come all the little light-weights. Probably the moral lies in not generalising about matters racing.

The Calcutta Monsoon Races are over: we shall publish our usual review in an early issue. Meanwhile the tables giving the season's "Form at a Glance" are given in our Turf Columns to-day.

During the next ten days there will be any amount of Poojah racing; Shillong, Darjeeling and Mussorie. The Darjeeling Executive seem unable to attract many of the Calcutta contingent in spite of their comparative proximity to the droves of racing ponies in the Capital. This year Mussoorie seems to be the centre of attraction and we hear that Mr. Holmes is taking up Energy and other ponies, and that Mr. McCall will also be riding at the meeting. They will no doubt have to meet a red-hot contingent from Dehra Doon, where J. Scott seems to keep a selection of winners for every imaginable class of pony race. Mr. Turner has also departed in that direction and will probably be found at the Mussoorie Meeting.

Matters sporting at Quetta have recently been at very high pressure: we publish to-day reports of Horse Show, the Dog Show, and the Racing.

The prospectus of the Tollygunge Club twelfth annual Horse Show is out, and practically follows the lines of that of last year. The date fixed is Monday, 24th December—a public holiday—and the closing date for entries is Monday, 10th December, at 6 P.M. Twenty-eight classes figure on the list, and these cover nearly all those recognised at first class Shows.

The Karachi Autumn Meeting fixed for the 2nd, 4th, and 6th of October, has been unavoidably postponed to the 23rd, 25th and 27th October. First and second entries hold good, third and final entries close on the 11th of October.

Mr. A. W. Grosser died in Calcutta on the 21st instant: he was a Custom House agent and occasionally owned a race horse or two, notably Walgrove, Cyril, and Bassini, renamed Swindle, after the litigation between deceased and Mr. Spooner Hart.

An interesting article appears in our American contemporary, Shooting and Fishing, on the much-debated subject of clay bird shooting handicapping. The expert writer says that many systems have been tried in the States, but it is now the general opinion that there is no fairer plan than handicapping by distance. It has been proved that when a good shot misses the clay bird from the 16 yards mark, he seldom makes the same mistake twice in succession; but if he is placed at 20 yards or further, he may miss several, and never be certain as to the reason for his doing so. Every long-distance shot has to shoot as quickly as he can in order not to increase the distance from his target, and it is this top speed which often causes him to miss. It has been proved by experiments and tables worked out on averages that this system of handicapping is certain in its action, and that a 90 per cent. man when placed further and further back will, as if following a certain law, gradually lose his superiority and become an 80 or 70 per cent. man. And the reason is not difficult to explain, for, as the writer points out, at a short distance even the fringe of the load is going with sufficient force and compactness to smash a clay bird; but as every yard tends to diminish the striking force of the shot, and more particularly to spread it, it stands to reason that, leaving out the question of accuracy of shooting, which, naturally, suffers much more as the distance grows, a considerable penalty is imposed on the shooter. Why don't our clay bird shooters adopt this system, instead of the complicated and unsatisfactory method of counting by points?

The really first-class or crack game shot is an individual not met with every time you go out, remarks a well-known shooting authority in a London paper. I will undertake to say there are fewer such men associated with shooting than there are crack performers at any other sport or pastime you can name. In cricket each county has it experts; in football the same thing occurs; hard riders to hounds are plentiful enough, with scarcely a pin's value in the way of difference between any of them. Golf is the same; while at billiards twenty-four hours would get together two hundred experts or more. Similarly, of course, a hundred or two hundred shooters could be collected, and I will concede that they may be the best in Great Britain; but there won't be fifty really crack shots among them. For I maintain, in the face of all opinions to the contrary, that modern game shooting is the most difficult sport under the sun to-day to attain proficiency in, or in which to specialise as a crack performer. The editors of the Field (past and present) may always be accepted as indisputable authorities in the realms of sport. Any matter left to them for a decision is always held as decided once their fiat has gone forth. Very well, then; admitting this, let us take the statement they made some few years back respecting the full-choke gun and the users thereof. The Shooting Editor of the Field committed himself to the astonishing assertion that in all England there were but some eight or ten shooters possessing skill enough to use a full choked breech loader properly. All the rest, according to the authority quoted, would do better with an ordinary non-choke or cylinder gun. People rubbed their eyes a bit when this dictum came out—I remember it all quite well—but it was, and still is, about the truest utterance the editor of any paper ever commited himself to. Shooters don't like to hear this short of thing, though, and most of them think it strange that a strong, healthly man, young and vigorous, who has the time, the money, the opportunity and the desire to become a crack game shot cannot or should not become one. Well, into this aspect of the question I am not going to enter; I just state the case as it is, and let others prove me wrong. Like certain other celebrities, the shooter who develops into a first-class shot is born, not made; were it otherwise, will somebody kindly tell me why it is that out of, say, five sons in the one family born in the midst of a preserve, and all keen as mustard to excel, only one of them ever becomes a really decent marksman!

THE Calcutta Cricket Club advertises a special general meeting of members at the Eden Garden pavilion at 6 P. M. on Friday, 6th October.

A regatta was held at Naini Tal on the 11th and 12th instant in wretched weather. The following were the results:—Scratch Fours. Three crews competed, won by Messrs. Harcourt, Knox Weir and Stevenson (cox) Miss Fasson. Ladies Double Sculls.—Rowed in two heats, won by Mrs. Weir and Mrs. Du Pre, steered by Mr. Weir. Single Sculls Handicap.—Won by Mr. Sandis. Mixed Canoe Race.—Won by Miss Greenaway and Mr. Sinkinson. Will 'o the Wisp Race.—Won by Mr. Harcourt.

The Open Lawn Tennis and Badminton Tournaments concluded at Poona last week produced some good play, but entries were not as big as usual. In the tennis competitions the Men's Singles was won by Mr. Field who again secured the challenge cup, beating Mr. T. C. Lucas in the final. Seven pairs contested, the Men's Doubles, Messrs. T. and G. Lucas winning the cup for the second year in succession after a great struggle with Messrs. Arthur and Fink in the final. The Mixed and Doubles owing to scratching was reduced to four pairs, victory eventually going to Mrs. Scudamore and Mr. T. C. Lucas who beat Mrs. Quin and Mr. Arthur in the final. The Badminton tournament attracted very few entries. Only three men were in for the singles which ended in a win for Mr. Duxbury. The Men's Doubles also brought out three pairs. In this first round Messrs. McIver and Lucas decisively beat the Satara couple, Messrs. Arthur and Duxbury, and in the final disposed of Messrs. Jackson and Lowman: Four pairs entered in the mixed doubles which was won by Mrs. Wilson and Mr. Jackson.

With the advent of the Poojah holidays local cricketers will be beginning to make definite arrangements for the coming season. So far as is known at present it is not likely to provide any special features of interest, though we understand that the Behar Wanderers are likely to send down a team to play the C. C. C. at 'Xmas time, and there is just a chance of Bombay coming over again. We trust that they will manage it. The C. C. C. will have plenty of opportunity to try some of the new blood which they have wanted badly for some time past. L. P. E. Pugh, F. T. Paine and J. H. Hechle are now at home, and the two latter at least will not be back for the cricket season, while F. H. Stewart and H. J. Hilary will also probably be absentees for part of it, and we hear that B. E. G. Eddis will not be in Calcutta either. One very well-known county player is expected out, however, in the person of Major W. C Hedley, R. E., the Somersetshire all-round man, and he should be of the utmost value to the side both with the bat and ball, if he can find time to play, while it is hoped that Lord Francis Scott will be available more regularly this year.

Hayward with another innings or two to go has comfortably passed Abel's record, of 3,309 runs for the season, and has also equalled C. B. Fry's record of 13 centuries, but it cannot be said that he has finished up the season in anything like the form in which he went through the first two-thirds of it. Hirst on the other hand seems to shine more and more in each successive match, and he actually scored over 2,000 runs, and captured over 200 wickets in Yorkshire matches alone, a record which deserves to stand and almost certainly will do so for years. He and Rhodes and Denton had some merry knocks at the Scarborough Festival.

"In New South Wales," said a boastful colonial, "we have remarkably sudden changes of temperature. I have known it to be freezing at 6 A. M., and unbearably hot before noon." "Humph," commented an American dryly.
"That's nothing to the changes we have in the States! One morning I was playing at snowballs with my cousin. I threw a snowball, the sun rose and my cousin was scalded with hot water!"

London Week by Week.

Friday, 7th September 1906.

THE extraordinary heat wave—passed now, thank heaven—gave us something to talk about. Thursday week was hot enough, but Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday reduced one to a state of semi-liquefaction that recalled the East. From 93° to 94° in St. James's Park: up to 97° in Cornhill on Sunday more people than usual fled from town for the week end and they who sought the south coast were wise: they got cool nights at all events. This brief spell of great heat following a long period of drought produced many unexpected sensations in the shape of fires: we hear of barns, ricks, stacks, woods and moors becoming ignited. Where the harvest work is not yet over there have been several fatalities from sunstroke or apoplexy. One of the most singular incidents was that revealed at Cheltenham on Sunday night. Six horses had been sent home from the Dublin Show, and when the boxes were opened all but one were found dead, "the heat inside was intense," says the report, one would imagine though that suffocation rather than heat was the cause. On Tuesday night the rain came down in torrents and since than it has been decently cool. Eighty degrees in one's drawing-room at midnight is rather too much of a good thing.

The Long-Macdonnell affair has continued raging all the week, but until the possessor of the clue of the mystery of Sir Antony's appointment and retention in office after Devolution-scheme time, chooses to speak, our curiosity is not likely to receive much gratification. All the papers are agreed that the business must be thrashed out in the open when Parliament meets in October, but it is doubtful whether the rare unanimity thus exhibited by the press will find an echo in high places at Westminster. The commonly accepted report on Ireland concerning the personage at whose instance Sir Antony was appointed receives a colouring of distinct probability from the jealousy with which the secret is guarded.

The Select Committee on Cabs and Motor Busses has issued its report. It lays less blame on the heavy motor itself than on the bad road surface: for the awful vibration which has given rise to much reasonable complaint: and thinks the remedy should be sought in smoother roads. Very probably, but how to devise and maintain them? The Committee recommend use of the taximeter on cabs and with it a revised scale of fares. Sixpence for half a mile and a penny additional for every one-sixth of a mile: tariff to be double outside the four mile radius. The principle seems sound enough: but why not make the fare eightpence a mile and a penny for each furlong. Why create a new measure which answers no purpose at all?

On the first of this month came into operation a new scale of postage conceived for the special benefit of the blind. Under this, papers impressed on "Braille" or other raised characters for the special use of the sightless, may be sent at very low rates—up to 5lbs. for 1½d. and indeed the scale has been designed in such wise that a blind reader may receive as much reading matter as one with the use of his eyes for the same outlay in postage. I did not know that a special act had been passed to secure this reduction: it passed all its stages unopposed and undiscussed, whence its escape from public notice.

The treasure seekers in Tobermory Bay must be feeling sanguine. Last week they fished up a two pound silver salver and on Tuesday they recovered a duplicate of it. Beside these things such unconsidered trifles as cannon, arquebuses and anchor chain are not worth mention. It is known that the Admiral of Florence, from whose wreck these treasures have been obtained, carried a plate chest containing, among other matters, communion vessels and altar plate: and the recovery of those silver salvers leads the seekers to the reasonable conclusion that that plate chest will soon surrender its contents. The expert in charge of the operations, Mr. Cassar, is satisfied from indications recorded by his instruments that "masses of metal" are present down below. But do his instruments discriminate between cannons of iron and dishes of silver?

"A Winter's Tale" was produced at His Majesty's on Saturday before a large and warm but enthusiastic audience. The usual liberties, or rather more than the usual liberties, have been taken with the text: but as nobody, I believe, reads Shakespeare nowadays, such alterations and improvements pass unnoticed. Two or three points about the cast are to be noticed. Mr. Tree is not in it at all: Mrs. Tree is, as Paulina, and very well she acquits herself. Mr. Charles Warner plays the mad King Leontes: so raving mad a Leontes that you whisper to yourself "Drink" as soon as he comes on. Frankly Mr. Charles Warner over does it: his eyes roll, his jaws work, his tongue lolls,—I was going to add that his ears droop—so violent are his spluttering ravings. There is nothing fine about his frenzy: you feel it a shame that so mad a king should be left at large and that Hermione should be the victim of his jealous suspicions. I have read "A Winter's Tale" and cannot reconcile Mr. Warner with the text.

Nor did I much care for Mr. C. W. Somerset's Autolycus: Autolycus has always appeared to me a merry rogue whose outlook on life is exemplified by the sardonic humour with which he picks the clown's pocket. It may have been the heat of the night, which was intense, but Autolycus at His Majesty's was rather a leaden footed scallywag: he did not carry the laugh with him. As Hermione, Miss Ellen Terry has no great opportunities: they are not in the part. She was letter perfect and her memory played her no tricks: she, naturally, had a tremendous reception. I liked Mrs. Tree as Paulina: it is a part for an actress with power and, I will confess, Mrs. Tree was far more satisfying in it than I had expected. Miss Viola Tree was charming as Perdita, and both Mr. Day as the old shepherd and Mr. O. B. Clarence as the comic countryman were capital.

Mr. Comyns Carr's Romance "Tristram and Iscult," produced on Tuesday at the Adelphi, is the sort of thing that lends itself with peculiar facility to the stage: it is so delightfully, simply and seriously improbable in its mediæval recklesslers. I am not sure that it is a good plan to allow Tristram to enjoy visions of Iscult: the appearance of the lady in a disembodied shape provokes incongruous thoughts of triumphant theosophists and astral planes: and these are not in harmony with Malvian romance. 'Tis a brave play: four acts, (the last in two scenes) and full of action. Tristram suffering from a wound which wont heal is despatched to Ireland by his uncle King Mark of Cornwall to woo Iscult, daughter of the Irish King, for Mark and incidentally, to enjoy Iscult's healing powers for himself, Iscult's touch possessing curative powers superior to those of the faculty. Owing to the absence of newspapers and the disinclination of people in high station to write letters, nobody in the Irish court knows that it was Tristram who killed young Moraunt, Iscult's brother, before the curtain went up: it is reserved for Queen Oren, Iscult's mother, to discover this. Iscult has extracted a piece of sword blade from Tristram's wound and the fragment exactly corresponds with the piece broken from Moraunt's weapon! "Slay your brother's murderer!" says Her Majesty to her daughter. Of course Iscult declines: not because it would be unprofessional, Tristram being her patient, but because she has fallen in love with him. The Queen goes to do the slaying herself, but Tristram is not in bed. So rapid his recovery under Iscult's hands, he has gone off to enjoy a tournament. A paymin knight has wiped the floor with all the Irish chivalry and his claim of Iscult's hand is imminent, and, somewhat against the grain as it would seem, claims the hand of Iscult for King Mark. Once aboard the lugger-pardon: H. M. S. Swallow—bound for Cornwall, he discovers the fullness of his passion for Iscult. He cannot surrender her: they will die together. So they take poison, at least they thought it was poison, but the bottles, I suppose, had got mixed: such things do happen you know: and when it turned out to be a love philtre. I for one, was not surprised: and all ends happily except for King Mark who had sent Tristram to Ireland in hopes that he would be killed, being deadly jealous of that gentleman. I am not quite sure that I like the even monotone in which the players delivered the blank verse: it grew wearisome before the end. Miss Lily Brayton as Iseult, was admirably suited. Mr. Asche played King Mark with force and conviction, and Mr. Matheson Lang was the Tristram, rather a poet than a knight in his languorous passion, but then of course his wound might account for lack of "devil." The play was very cordially received.

"Toddles" at the Duke of Yorks is an English rendering of the French Triplepath: the scene is retained in France. It concerns the troubles of a peer who cannot make up his mind. Lord Meadows usually wants to do two or three things and so irresolute is he that he generally does none of them. The farce depends on the manœuvres of Lord Meadow's aunt, Lady Dove[illegible] and Mrs. Joblyn to catch his lordship for Constance, the latter's daughter. They get him to propose to her, and when he declines to go the mairie to be married they have him conveyed thither in pyjamas and overcoat. Hated thither he cant make up his mind to say "yes" and bolts: it is not that he is averse from Constance, but simply that he cannot make up his mind. Eventually the old women wash their hands of him and the sense of freedom has such a wonderfully strengthening effect on his mind he proposes to and wins the lady off his own bat. The play gives Mr. Cyril Maude one more opportunity of showing what a genuine actor he is. As Lord Meadows he was inimitable. Miss Lottie Venne was a perfect match-making mother and Mr. Alfred Bishop got a good deal of fun out of Mr. Joblyn's part. Not an epoc-making play, but amusing.

Mr. Arthur Bourchier has undertaken the duty of dramatic critic for the "Tatler." Nobody doubts his ability to do anything but find the time for the job: how Mr. Bourchier is going to carry on his work as actor manager at the Garrick and critic of plays, it may be at three on four other theatres per week, is not very obvious. His understudy will have a busy time of it. Mr. Bourchier has taken another step which gives rise to some discussion: he has decided to issue no invitations to the press until any new piece he has put on at the Garrick has run for six nights. Herein I think he is adventurously wise: I say "adventurously" because he proposes to dispense with press assistance for the first week: perhaps he "takes more stock" in the first nighters' report to their friends than in press laudation.

A clever and humorous little play is "Compromising Martha" by Mr. Keble Howard which officiates as curtain raiser to "The Man from Blankleys," revived at the Haymarket. Martha is an aged cottager who receives frequent visits from the curate and from Monica, the squire's daughter. In fact the cottage, unknown to Martha who sleeps all the afternoon, is their regular place of assignation, the squire being averse from curates as sons-in-law. A neighbour tells Martha, who determines to "catch 'em in the ack:" this is easily done and the curtain falls on the curate kissing Martha to buy her silence. Anything slighter could hardly be: but it is real comedy and capitally played by Mr. Tarver and Miss Elfrida Clement, as the principals, and if possible even better by Miss Florence Haydon as the somnolent Martha.

The "Earthquake" shook the Hippodrome to its foundations on Monday. Scene: South American City whose vast wealth is exemplified in the person of Ulysses I Parker, millionaire, whose friends with motor-cars, horses, ladies and drink provoke the denunciations of Father Dan, a bird of evil, but prophetic, note. Father Dan tunes his denunciations with the needful accuracy: so punctually does the thunder and lightning introduce the earthquake, we are inclined to put on Father Dan the entire responsibility. A noble earthquake it is when it comes: for five minutes it works awful havoc and leaves the weathy city at last a heap of smoking ruins. Fortunately there is a tidal wave to follow and put the fire out, I francied that I recognised in tidal wave the superseded "Flood."

Baboo Bannerjee's Egregions freak has done more to open the eyes of people in this country to the nature of the movement he has been leading and the character of the people taking part in it than any amount of sober description and argument. The general consensus of opinion is that the Baboo's coronation exposes the whole agitation in its true light as farce. I hope you in Calcutta do not feel much alarmed by the blood thirsty utterances of the new secret society. The idea of Bengalee Baboos combining to drive anything out of any where, unless it were hens from a dust heap provokes an indulgent smile.

Lord Amherst, of Hackney, who suffered such heavy losses through a defaulting solicitor, has decided to sell the gems of his famous library at Didlington. His collection of Caxtons is the finest in the world, consisting of seventeen volumes, of which eleven are perfect. Reckoning their value by modern sales these 17 books are worth about £30,000. The books are to be sold through Quaritch by private treaty.

HUNTING BIG GAME ON THE CONGO.

OF all the known large game regions in the world, Central Africa is still the most alluring. The sportsman-naturalist who is inured to the pleasantries of the mosquito, ant, sand viper and other pestiferous life, the jungles and the plains of Rhodesia and the Congo Free State east of the Lomami River are full of scientific interest and adventure.

The sportsman of the tropics is a different animal than the sportsman who hunts the northern latitudes. The man who pursues the large Kadiak bear or the grizzly in Alaska, who shoots ducks and geese as they swarm up and down the island bays off the west coast of Prince of Wales Island or further north where the ice floes gleam in the white Alaskan sun, has no hide and no temper for the pests of the air around the equator on the Black Continent. Having had experience of both latitudes, I pin my sporting purpose to the clean, the exhilarating north, and leave to British friends of the smooth-bore rifle all those vast and tangled areas where trophies of the chase are won in combination with fevers, poisoned feet and gangrenous hands. And yet, there is sport in Central Africa which, having no equal in North America, is worth the sufferance of every pest in the tropics. At least, that is my opinion.

The hippo, the rhino, the elephant and the lion are the Central African quartette which affords British sportsmen their greatest incentive to explore expanding British possessions between Capetown and Cairo. But these are only a small number of the species which abound from the Zambesi north along the Tanganyika lake region, through the higher regions of the Congo Free State—glorious Switzerland of the equator—up around the Albert Edward Nianza and far East into the Uganda Protectorate.

It makes a nature-lover's heart leap, and it renders civilization a nuisance and a bore to recall his freedom in so vast a region in pursuit of eland, okapi, buffalo, antelopes and gazelles, the sinister cheetah, the wild pigs, bucks, harte-beest, leopards, and the royal four already mentioned. The thrill of life behind the gun, the irrepressible physical ardor of the man in the woods, that wholesome sense of power which attends him who knows how to attend rationally to himself and his camp in the wilderness, are the glorious concomitants of the dangers and the hardship, the disappointments and defeat of the men who explore unknown lands and return to us with fat volumes in which brush, pencil, camera and pen reveal the resources of regions from which circumstances bar the tamer millions. These fat volumes, published at great cost by Englishmen who combine the gun and the pen, the net and the microscope, are enriching the sportsman literature of Great Britain much faster than a like activity is enriching the literature of America. It were a great advance in their sportsmanship if the American becomes more of an earnest naturalist and less of an expert shot or a bagger of quantity. Ineed, a wholesome outdoor literature is fast making him such. To discover new specimens, to treat them scientifically, to preserve them for our museums and to record their history mode of life, habitat, and relation to species is a form of sportsman activity which America should cultivate—in imitation of England, if you please to imitate her in anything!

So it is, therefore, that sportsmen and naturalists like Sir Harry Johnston, Donaldson Smith, F. J. Jackson, G. F. Scott-Elliot, Oscar Neumann, Sydney L. Hinde and a host of others have collected, classified and written such history of African mammals as the British and the Germans possess.

The bearing of arms and the shooting of game throughout the great Congo basin is now regulated by law. The Belgians are not notable sportsmen, albeit in Maeterlink they have produced a naturalist whose exposition of the philosophy of animal nature ranks him very high. Nor are they collectors of the flora and the fauna which abound in that million square miles of Africa's brown face governed by King Leopold. But they appreciate their sovereign's possession, and, very wisely, prohibit the slaughter of the elephant and the zebra. The elephant should be protected everywhere. In this respect they are in advance of the British and far beyond the dark horizon of the foul Portuguese in Africa. Instead of shooting the elephant with which and the tamed zebra they will develop the country, they prohibit his molestation altogether. The zebra, still wantonly pursued in British and in Portuguese territory, is also protected. The Belgians have discovered that the zebra is destined to be to Central Africa what mules are to the cotton States. They are therefore entrapping this tamable beast of burden in large kraals, making him friendly to man and hitching him to the plow and cart. The elephant is being preserved and propagated in selected areas along the Congo River. He produces ivory and pulling power. In the latter respect he excels all other animals. There are great herds of elephant in the Katanga country in the south-eastern part of the Free State.

When an Abyssinian Shoan kills an elephant in Emperor Menelik's domain, he is regarded as a great man and his performance counts forty men killed. If he kills a lion it counts ten men; a leopard five, and a rhinoceos four.

Persons who have never seen a wild elephant charge his pursuer, have no adequate conception of the fury which this wobbly circus fixture can manifest. The report of an insurance investigating committee is a quiet psalm besides the hurricane of dirt, trees, noise and fury with which the elephant can cause that "hurry up feeling" the little boy mentioned as inside him. The gun usually employed in shooting the elephant is either a ·577 express rifle or the favourite ·500 magnum of the British which when loosely held knocks a chip out of the sportsman's clavicle at each discharge. Notwithstanding this heavy smooth-bore arm, the elephant is seldom killed by the first shot, however accurately placed the shot may have been. It is well therefore to have your balloon ready when this pachyderm sees who disturbed him and loosens up his great pedals and hurls himself toward you. His onslaught is like an earthquake!

The lion is the favourite quarry in British Central and German East Africa. He, too, is as tenacious of life as a hickory. The method of killing leo in these regions is by baiting for him with a dead zebra, or a live donkey or goat tethered near a zareba made of brush and saplings and banana stalks. The bait is put out at night, the sportman and his gun carrier hiding till daylight in the zareba. Through the interstices of the scherm or screen, the lion may be observed attacking the bait. If it is live bait the pitiable terror it usually manifests at the lion's approach is quite enough to wake any somnolent sportsman to action. A scream and a thud, a cloud of dust and whirling hair: a terrible roar and greedy growl, and when the dust settles you will understand that your bait is being shredded and your opportunity come.

The shoulder shot with the ·500 magnum is the preferred body shot if your game is broadside on. I have known even this shot squarely planted at sixty yards fail to knock down a lion for more than six seconds. Indeed, the first shot is often the beginning of the sportsman's peril. A lion which skulks away at the approach of man will, when wounded, invariably charge his pursuer and maul him to death. I have known a case of three magnificent charges made by a lion hit twice in the shoulder by shots lacerating the heart, and once in the belly. A shot stopped him at each charge. Bleeding, groaning and roaring with tremendous voice, he arose the fourth time and wandered off four hundred yards and laid down against an ant hill. There he whimpered and whined for an hour before he could make up his mind to die. African lions firmly believe in this life and it requires skill and courage to successfully dispute their belief. A fair measurement for the lions found in northern Rhodesia, in Somaliland and in the Congo Free State is nine feet six inches to ten feet eight inches from tip to tip. Now and then sportsmen bag a blackmaned fellow, a quarry much superior to the yellow-mane.

The rhinoceros is the African bully. He also is tenacious of life, and charges the sportsman with a fine fury. His single tusk is a descriptive piece of animal machinery. The novice should respect the rhino for the damage he can do when aroused.

The wallowing hippo is seen in great herds on the west shore of the Albert Edward Nyanza and in practically all the rivers tributary to the great Congo. The natives eat his flesh with a greedy relish and nothing incites such a hullaboloo amongst the Congolese Negroes as an opportunity to participate in a hippo hunt in the lagoons and marshes. After locating a hippo "tunnel," the sportsman secretes himself and awaits a shot as the great slippery beasts disport themselves like sea lions in the water. They are exceedingly wary and difficult to kill. The first shot marks the disappearance of all the herd except the wounded fellow, who churns the water into mud and splashes it forty feet in all directions as he bellows and gurgles in his death agony. It is a hillarious time the fifty odd natives have who pounce upon the dying hippo, get ropes around him and drag him ashore. If you wish to observe the carnivorous instincts of the savage African native, give your black bearers unrestrained access to a hippo carcass. In twenty minutes every nigger belly will be full of hippo meat and every black face and arm and hand reeking with gore. There are no napkins.

The African buffalo, a wild ox quite unlike the American bison, is a fine quarry. He will offer a vicious fight and run down his assailant with diabolical venom.

There are leopards aplenty in the Congo hills, and their cough near a village makes the fowls huddle close and the goats let down their milk unbidden.

Hyænas are as numerous along the Congo as mosquitoes in lovely Jersey. If hyænas could vote the Belgians would have to get out of the Free State. These nocturnal pests surround your camp in large packs and make night hideous and sleep impossible. They snivel under your tent wall and often poke their snouts within four inches of your face as you lie awake. The hunding motif of Wagnerian opera is silence compared with these varmints of the Congo woods. It is my opinion that the hyæna is the strongest animal of its size and weight in the world. The wonder is they haven't the courage to attack man. The natives kill them with crude trap guns.

An account of the game birds of the Congo basin is a long story in itself. The ostrich is, perhaps, the largest. The safest place near an ostrich at bay is behind him. You will understand this after he has jabbed his foot into your stomach by a vicious, unannounced kick forward. It certainly does pain, but possesses a value as most experience does in teaching the victim to look out in the future.

Fishing.

BASS ON THE SOUTH COAST.

THE bass is quite one of the most sporting of our southern sea fish. When in the mood it will take a fly or spinner readily, and when hooked affords magnificent sport. Large schools of bass visit our coasts during the summer months, and it is to these shoal bass that one looks for sport. Large individuals keep more or less to themselves and are not often caught. The school bass run perhaps from two to five pounds in weight. At Shoreham, a little village not far from Brighton, a small river runs into the sea. The mouth of this has been artificially deepened to allow of vessels of moderate tonnage entering the back water which extends the whole length of Shoreham parallel to the sea. This back water has been dredged and deepened, and quays built along it so as to make it into a harbour. In the summer when the tide begins to run up the river and harbour shoals of bass may be seen coming in; no doubt to feed on the white bait, or herring fry, with which these land locked waters teem.

For some reason, however, not many bass have been caught this summer. The few I have heard of, were taken with lug worm off the Shoreham quays, none have succumbed to fly or spinner.

Besides the larger fish, there are hundreds of little fellows of a quarter to half a pound. These run high up the harbour, and are specially plentiful near the electric light works. These diminutive bass give very good fun with a fine paternoster, light rod, and ragworm presented on a small hook.

I rigged up some suitable gear, and had an afternoon with the little fellows lately, and found it quite amusing. They take the ragworm about midwater, and as they bite very quickly, sharp striking is necessary.

The feeding times seem quite unconnected with the state of the tide: for instance they seem to leave off biting altogether from half-past one to half-past three.

I tried to catch these small bass with a little spoon, but they would have none of it. Also they seem to decidedly prefer rag to lug worm.

When the little bass stop biting one can lower away the paternoster till it is on the bottom, and then dabs will be taken.

I have seen several people using floats for the little bass; this I think is a mistake as sometimes when one fails to get bites about midwater, the fish may be again found by slightly raising or lowering the paternoster.

The bass are close to the edges of the quays so that only a short rod is required: the lighter it is the smaller the size of bullet one need put on the paternoster. Needless to say it is far easier to feel these quick little nibbles, when the weight on the line is kept as light as possible.

The quarter and half pound bass are excellent eating, especially if fried in bread crumbs soon after they are caught.

SNIPE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The snipe appear to be well in in this district, as two friends of mine got 3½ couple on 13th and I got 8 couple on 15th in an hour and a half. This is fairly early for this district, but, of course, it is a particularly favourable year owing to the unprecedented amount of rain we have had. The semi-migratory duck also have begun to put in an appearance and everything, I am glad to say, points to a first-class season.

AN ALBINO KAKUR.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In reply to "S. H. C.'s" query in your issue of 6th September with regard to albinism in "Kakurs" (Cervulus muntjac) I would refer him to the Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society, Vol. XVI, No. 14 page 742. Major Manners-Smith sends a very interesting account of the variations of colouring observed in the muntjac and concludes his article as follows:—

"I am informed that the white 'Kakur' or 'Ratwa,' as the deer is called here, are uncommon, but are constantly occurring, and that several have recently been seen by the State shikaries. I hope to verify this statement by personal observation this summer." Major Manners-Smith writes from Nepal and it would be interesting to know whether he was successful.

A very good photograph of a white muntjac appears on the same page and also one of an albino black buck (A. cervicapra) which is now in the Lahore gardens, in the deer park, minus the rope and collar which are seen in the illustration.

EXILE.

BUADARWA, KASHMIR, 11th September 1906.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—April last I had occasion to go to Sikhim and left Darjeeling at 8 A.M., reaching the Teesta Dāk bungalow a little after 5 P.M., having walked the whole distance. On the way above Lupcho I saw a couple of pheasants whilst numbers of Partridges were calling inthe jungles both above and below the road. About two miles from the Teesta bungalow I saw three of the great hornbill one was evidently a young bird. I had unfortunately no gun with me being pressed for time I did not think it worth while taking a net or gun, a matter I regretted much afterwards. The next morning I left Teesta at 4½ A.M., and after crossing the bridge about a mile or so further on, at the junction of the roads, the one to Kalimpong and the other to Sikhim. I saw alarge panther trotting a short distance on ahead, but on one of my coolies giving a shout with a grunt it rushed into the heavy jungle below the road. At daybreak jungle fowl commenced their cheery call in every direction, whilst every now and then the bronze-winged dove would be seen feeding on the road and the bar-tailed tree dove could be spotted in the heavy jungle in twos and threes uttering their deep call of hoo hoo. When the sun began to set high the wealth of butterflies was quite startling—a perfect paradise for the entomologist, whilst lantern flies of every colour kept hovering above all the small streams and puddles on the way. I noticed several times on the way a big lizard with a long tail, a scarlet head and neck. As I am not well up in this branch of Natural History I could not exactly say what they were. The most noticeable amongst the butterflies were Ornithoptera Rhadamanthuss and O. Pompeus which were in great numbers on the different sorts of wild flowers, whilst all sorts of Papilio flew lazily up and across the road on the rocks and wet banks of the streams. Numbers of Laura atymnus were sitting or plying about. Euploea midamus, Limenites dudu and many others could be caught in 10 minutes. On the road could be picked up the wings of the atlas moth and also the wings of which had been eaten overnight by bats. Several times on my way back atlas moths would make a dash at the lighted lantern. On reaching the bridge which spans the Rungpho river, I had a most vexatious wait until I had arranged with the police to allow me to cross the bridge to the dāk bungalow from which place I would wire to the Deputy Commissioner for a pass to go on. On crossing I went straight to the Telegraph Office and wired for the pass which arrived late at night. Had it not been for this delay I could easily have reached Pakyong in the cool of the evening. When I left Darjeeling I knew nothing about a pass being required from the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling before one was allowed to cross the bridge. I heard from the natives about the place that there was any amount of good fishing to be got in the Rungpho river. I would like much to stay there a week or so and try what could be done.

The next morning I left for Pakyong. On the way came across small flock of hornbill. I also saw 15 grey geese in the river; they allowed me to approach within about 20 yards before taking wing. On my return I got eggs of several good birds. This trip to Sikhim was purely on business. I hope, however in a short time to send you an account of a trip in which both business and pleasure were combined and the different sorts of game shot on the way.

Fourth Day, Wednesday, 19th September 1906.

A PROGRAMME of six events was run through this afternoon. Fields were on the small side and with the exception of the Pony Champion Race nothing of much interest occurred. This event provided rather a sensation. Of the three starters there appeared nothing in it but Key West who was installed favourite. A heavy commission on Small Scotch, however, sent the latter up in the betting and she was quickly wiped off. The race itself was an extraordinary one, Lucretia fell early and Small Scotch soon established a tremendous lead of Key West. The latter came with a rush at the finish and nearly caught Small Scotch on the post. Interesting points were raised and it was apparent that a clumsy fraud had been perpetrated. A searching enquiry has been held; but the Stewards have not yet disclosed the result, preferring to do so in the W. I. T. C. Calendar which will be issued in a few days: we shall therefore await that publication rather than repeat the rumours which have been set afloat and which, if true, are yet without official sanction. Details:—

THE BREEDERS' PLATE.—Rs. 2,000; out of which second receives Rs. 400, and third Rs. 200. For country-bred horses which have not won flat races value Rs. 500 or over, of aggregate value Rs. 3,000 or over previous to 1st January 1906. W. A. reduced 4lbs. 5 furlongs.

BETTING: 6 to 1 on Lady-of-Quality, 5 to 1 agst. Philmore.

Philmore led to the turn where Lady-of-Quality came up level and won after a great race home by a neck. Time—1min. 6⅘secs.

THE PONY CHAMPION CHASE.—Rs. 2,000; out of which second receives Rs. 400, and third Rs. 200. A handicap steeplechase for Ponies 14-2 and under. About 1 mile, 7 furlongs, over Pony Steeplechase Course.

Lucretia and Key West led at the start, but the former fell at the second hurdle and Small Scotch went out with a long lead, Key West came with a belated run at the finish but could not get on terms with Small Scotch who won by a length. Time—5mins. 4secs.

THE POONA GRAND NATIONAL.—Rs. 3,000; out of which second receives Rs. 700, and third Rs. 300. A handicap steeplechase for horses. About 2 miles, 1 furlong, over Steeplechase Course.

Fifth Day, Saturday, 22nd September 1906.

Governor's Cup day this year was as successful as any of its predecessors. Perfect weather, a bumper attendance which included H. E. the Governor, who arrived in state, and many other notabilities, and excellent racing, all went to make the afternoon a most enjoyable one. Fields, compared with those on the other days during the meeting, were on the small side, the country-bred race resulting in a walk over, but the big race brought out no fewer than nineteen starters, and a great race was witnessed. Precious was installed favourite but was never in it, Sandow winning by a length from Mooreed. The Lawn Plate was a big upset, Omar, who was well backed, succumbing at the finish to the rank outsider Witness II. The Stewards' Purse was won by Apology, who started at fives, Admiral Crichton, and the much fancied Our State filling places. Killua found many friends in the Ganeshkind Plate and never gave them cause for anxiety, for he was well up all the way, eventually winning by two lengths. Matalgia served up another of his sensational finishes, beating Wakeful on the post by quarter of a length. Details:—

A TEACHER was giving a lesson on the circulation of the blood. Trying to make the matter clearer, he said:—"Now, boys, if I stood on my head, the blood as you know, would run into it, and I should turn red in the face!" "Yas, sir," said the boys. "Now," continued the instructor, "what I want to know is How is it that while I am standing upright in the ordinary position the blood dosn' run into my feet?" And a little fellow shouted: "Why, sir because yer feet ain't empty."

SWIMMING.

BURGESS'S CHANNEL SWIM.

Soon after four o'clock on Saturday morning the first authentic news of the swim was obtained by the arrival at Dover of the London tug Canada (Captain Egalton), with T. W. Burgess and his accompanying party on board. It was the grandest effort seen since Montague Holbein's attempt in 1902. Burgess was swimming for over eighteen hours, and in that time covered the tremendous distance of more than 42 miles. His nearest point to the French coast was about four miles, but when success appeared to be in sight he was carried away again towards the North Sea by a strong eastern going current. The dense haze that overhung the Channel all day was greatly responsible for the failure, as it resulted in the swimmer's position being a matter of guesswork throughout. Burgess's pilot states that the swim over the Goodwins is unique, and it is doubtful whether any other man, when he found that the position rendered it necessary to take this risk, would have continued. The condition of the sea there was such that the most powerful swimmers would hardly dare face the danger the water swirling and eddying over the sands and making such a turmoil as to nearly knock the breath out of a man's body. To add to the risk, the accompanying tug could not follow the swimmer, as she would have grounded, and she had to make a long detour on the chance of falling in with the swimmer again later. Burgess, therefore, was only accompanied by Pilot McKeen's boat. In the thick haze there was the possibility of not falling in with each other again; but Burgess was not going to be beaten by that consideration, and he determined to swim over. He had a big fight to achieve this, and was unable to use his ordinary stroke in this bad sea, turning on to his breast in order to keep his head clear of the badly broken water as much as possible. He made the best pace he could to get over this punishing part of the swim with the utmost speed, and after about an hour of it, when he was on the other edge of the sands, he was glad to go easy for a little while in order to rest, and had a bottle of hot bovril to pull himself together.

The sea was a flat calm, with a temperature of 63, and but for the thick haze and strong tides the conditions would have been ideal for the swim. The haze served a good purpose in preventing the intense rays of the sun striking direct on to the swimmer, although it was unfortunate in preventing a true location of his position. Burgess's start had been made from St. Margaret's at 7-20, and it was 10-30 when he had safely cleared the sands, which gave much gratification to the accompanying party, who included Horace Mew, of Shanklin; J. A. Widman, of Dover; Dr. A. Wauchope Watson, and a few others. About 11-30 Captain Egalton, from the position of the East Goodwin lightship, judged the swimmer to be nine miles off the South Foreland. This greatly pleased Burgess, who later had another splendid bit of encouragement in the shape of an ovation from a fishing crew from his natal county of Yorkshire. He was delighted with this greeting from his brother "Tykes." The swim continued steadily in the thick haze. Burgess at times discussing the position with his pilot, and at four o'clock, when he was judged to be nine miles off the French shore, he expressed himself very pleased, stating that he ought to get across as he would never have better conditions of sea or feel more fit. Burgess has never been swimming in grander style, and that he felt fit was shown by his splendid appetite. He was thoroughly enjoying his food, his menu being cold chicken, his favourite red currant tart, grapes, bovril, and milk. It was night before an accurate bearing of the swimmer's position could be worked out. The coast lights commenced to flash out about 7 o'clock from the South Foreland, Grisnez, and Calais, the haze having thinned considerably. The bearing from these made Burgess eight miles off the French coast, which was a great disappointment, he and his party having thought they were nearer. He got a good tide and made excellent progress later, the position by 10 o'clock being four and a quarter miles off France. An hour later he was four and three-quarter miles away, the tide steadily drifting him away from his objective towards the North Sea. It was considered there was still a chance of the next tide setting him in, and although he was unwell at this time, the plucky fellow stuck to his task. Symptoms of cramp developing later, Weidman and Mew made ready to assist him if necessary, Weidman going into the water with Burgess, and Mew jumping into the feeding boat with the necessary apparatus to help Burgess out. The drift continued to the Outer Ruytingen Bank, and at 1 o'clock A.M. Burgess was so cramped that hot water was poured over him to give relief. He struggled on a little longer, but at 1-21 on Saturday morning had to acknowledge himself defeated, after a swim of 18hrs. 1min. The chart of his swim was subsequently scaled and showed he had covered 42miles.

24-HOURS' RACE.

The great twenty-four hours' swimming race was concluded near Paris on Sunday night. The English swimmers, were signally successful, namely, Thomas William Burgess, Montague Holbein and Horace Mew, who have pluckily attempted to swim across the Channel on several occasions. In the Paris race they were placed first, second, and third, whilst an English girl, Miss Burnett, of London, achieved the highly creditable performance of swimming during fifteen hours. The British athletes met in this contest the champion swimmers of France, Italy, and Belgium. Burgess's success is the more remarkable in view of the fact that he only completed his Channel swim of over eighteen hours (covering 42 miles) on Friday morning, after a ten hours' swim on his Channel attempt two days earlier. Notwithstanding all this, on Saturday evening, having travelled from Dover to Paris meanwhile, he coolly started on this twenty-four hours' completion. Mew, the Isle of Wight man, had been out with Burgess on his Channel swim, and was also travel-worn when he started. Montague Holbein, the Channel veteran, has been suffering from illness this summer, which prevented his projected cross-Channel attempt, and his friends will be pleased to see that he has so much recovered his old form as to be able to put in twenty-one hours' swimming. The contest for a great part of the time was watched by several thousand spectators, and at the termination the enthusiasm which greeted Burgess from crowds gathered on the island in the river and along the banks was intense.

There were eleven starters in the contest, including, in addition to the English competitors, Cattaneo, the Italian, who made the Channel attempt this summer, and Paulus and Bougouin, French champion swimmers. The majority of the swimmers made the error of starting off at too big a pace. The consequence was seen after the first six hours, when Bougouin and Paulus had to come out for rest spells. The conditions were that a competitor might take three hours' rest in twelve hours, and not be disqualified, although the swimmers who kept on would, of course, be increasing their mileage. Burgess took the lead in distance on the seventh hour, and from that time to the end of the twenty-fourth he was not passed. At the eight hour only the four Britishers had been able to go on continuously, Burgess, Holbein, Miss Burnett, and Mew having taken course to themselves in the order named. Holbein was swimming on his back the whole time, the other three using the side stroke. Burgess was much the fastest swimmer of the quartette, and the vigour of his strokes after his long swims of the previous few days was a surprise to everyone. The course in the River Marne was brilliantly lighted at night and was a scene of great excitement, the swimmers being cheered on by those attending them in the boat. Many enthusiastic sportsmen remained throughout the night. After resting two hours and a half Paulus and Bougouin recommenced the swim; Cattaneo also re-entered after his rest. It was then just the chilly, depressing time before daybreak. Burgess had now a long lead in distance, having covered 21¼ kilometres against Cattaneo's next best distance of 18¼ kilometres, Holbein 17¼, Mew 15¼ and Miss Burnet 13¼. At the end of nine hours Miss Burnett decided to take the rest authorised, and shortly afterwards Mew and Burgess also did so. Holbein however, kept plugging steadily along with his powerful back stroke, and for over eighteen hours he did not rest. This grand athlete had unfortunately neglected to provide himself with goggles, and as the sun's rays struck down piercingly he suffered a great deal of punishment with his eyes, swimming entirely on his back as he does. During the tenth hour Cattaneo was seized with severe cramp and had to give up. There were now only six left in the contest, and Bougouin was suffering greatly from exhaustion. At the commencement of the thirteenth hour only the four British competitors were in the water. Bougouin and Paulus re-entered later, but very soon the former had to give up as he was practically unable to move from exhaustion. Forty minutes later Miss Burnett acknowledged herself beaten by severe cramp.

In the sixteenth hour Burgess, Holbein, and Mew only were swimming, and looking as if they could go on for ever. Some of the competitors were greatly upset by their defeat and utterly broke down. Bougouin went quite light-headed before he was taken out of the water. At the seventeenth hour the position was: Burgess, 32½ kilometres; Holbein, 30½; Paulus, 28¼; Mew, 22½. Holbein's eyes were so painful that they had to be attended to whilst he was still in the water. After the swim had been proceeding seventeen hours and a half Paulus was defeated by cramp. Burgess, Holbein, and Mew were now left in the match, and after eighteen hours and five minutes' continuous swimming Holbein gave up. The ringing cheers which he received showed how his fine performance was appreciated by the spectators. He had covered 31½ kilometres. Twelve minutes later Mew gave up, his distance being 25 kilometres.

Burgess now had the course to himself, and was still swimming powerfully, covering 250 metres in an average of from ten to twelve minutes. To show how light-heartedly he was taking the swim, for some time he was holding up a sunshade to keep off the sun, and striking with only one arm, to the great amusement of the Parisian crowd. When the pistol shot announced the conclusion of the twenty-four hours Burgess had covered 44½ kilometres, and he got out of the water unaided. That he was not at all exhausted is shown by the fact that he used the trudgeon stroke during the last few minutes.

LONG PLUNGE CHAMPIONSHIP.

The annual gala promoted by the Bootle S. C. was attended by a very large company last night, the decision of the National Long Plunge Championship being the main feature. In this Major Taylor, Bootle, with a plunge of 82ft. 7ins. established a new world's record. Details:—

National Long Plunge Championship of England—W. Taylor, Bootle. (holder), 82ft. 7ins., 1; J. A. Barker, Everton S. A., 80ft., 2; G. Harrison, Bootle, 73ft. 2ins., 3; W. Watson, Southport, and T. W. Wright, Leicester, also took part in the competition. J. A. Jarvis, Leicester, being the only absentee. The previous record of 79ft. 3ins., was also held by Taylor.

CYCLING.

N. C. U. AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIPS.

The cream of metropolitan riders were competing in the championship meeting of the National Cyclists' Union at the Crystal Palace track on Saturday. A large number of spectators assembled, and found plenty to interest them. As one would expect at an affair of this character, the arrangements were perfect.

The holder, V. B Casey, was an absentee from the London Centre mile, in which was witnessed one of the finest bits of riding H. O. Buck, Anerley B. C., has shown of late. In the third heat he found himself quite thirty yards behind 300 yards from home, and yet managed to win by five lengths. In the final, however, he had a hard struggle to win by inches from that rapidly-improving rider, W. Lower, Balham C. C.

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.
Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses

Just at present in tandem racing there seems no pair to trouble J. Matthews and A. Rushen, Putney A.C., as in best and final they experienced an easy task to win in the mile tandem championship. At Athens, it will be remembered, they carried off winning honours in the tandem race.

Previous to the decision of the club championship connected with the Turner Cup Competition, Paddington lodged a protest on the ground that fourteen days notice had not been given in accordance with rule. Curiously enough, they came out successful in the competition, betting Putney A.C., with the aggregate of 18 points to 22.

Excellent riding by W. J. Pett, Putney A.C., proved the feature of the N.C.U. Fifty Miles Championship, and at one period he got within less than a minute of record. He was never really troubled, though many expected J. Draper, Anerley B.C., and H. C. Bartlett, Polytechnic C.C., would have pressed him more closely.

N. C. U. FIFTY MILES CHAMPIONSHIP.—(Holder, W. J. Pett; time, standard, 1hr. 50mins.)

Twelve riders entered, and of these the following started:—W. J. Pett, Putney A. C.; H. Harvey, Paddington C. C.; J. H. Bishop, Beaumont C. C.; H. King, Paddington C. C.; H. A. Ratcliff, Vegetarian C. C.; A. W. Hunt, Putney A. C.; C. H. Bartlett, Polytechnic C. C.; and J. Draper, Anerley R. C.

The Anerley member, quickly assumed the lead, and rode the first mile in 2mins. 18⅘secs. the holder being his immediate attendants. Both, well paced by tandems, kept in this position until in the second lap of the fifth mile Pett passed Draper, and took the lead. The holder's time for five miles was 10mins. 27secs. Very little distance separated the leaders until after the eighth mile Draper lost his pacers, which fact Pett turned to advantage. At the 10th mile (20mins. 27⅘secs.), he possessed a lead of a quarter of a lap, and by this time Harvey, Bishop, and Hunt had retired owing to lack of pacing. At the end of half an hour's riding Pett had covered 14 miles 2 laps, half a lap ahead of Bartlett, who preceded Draper by four yards, and the holder's time for 15 miles was 30mins. 41secs. When 17½ miles had been reeled off, Pett lapped Bartlett, and at 19 miles lapped Draper also, and the last-named rider then retired. The leader took 40mins. 53secs. for 20 miles, and 51mins. 37⅘secs. for the half-distance At the end of an hour Pett had nearly 29 miles to his credit, Bartlett being 2 laps in the rear, and Ratcliff a mile farther behind. Thirty miles occupied 1hr. 2mins. 7⅘secs., and 35 miles 1hr. 12mins. 55⅘secs. Pett was riding well, and it was announced that at 40 miles (1hr. 23mins. 38⅘secs.) he was but 58secs. outside record, Bartlett being second and Ratcliff third. Five miles farther on the time showed 1hr. 34mins. 41⅘secs. and Pett covered the full distance in 1hr. 45mins. 32⅘secs. Ratcliff, then five laps behind, had in the meantime ridden into second place, and managed to win a standard medal with his time 1hr. 49mins. 18secs. Bartlett had still two miles to go, and just missed a standard medal with his time 1hr. 50mins. 17⅘secs. Result:—

W. J. Pett (holder), Putney A. C., 1hr. 45mins 32⅘secs., 1; H. A. Ratcliff, Vegetarian C. C., 1hr. 49mins. 18secs., 2; C. H. Bartlett, Polytechnic C. C., 1h. 50mins. 17⅘secs., 3.

Hunting.

THE GORDON'S HORSE HOUNDS.

13th October.—The weather in Bangalore does not lend itself to hunting operations at present. The rain has gone, the dry crops are rising. Result, drought—little scent and an almost continuous covert over the whole country. However, in the face of difficulties there have been two nice little runs to chronicle since I last wrote. On the 13th we met at the 5th milestone on the old Madras road and hounds struck a line of sorts almost at once in some wet crops—so wet that the majority of us gave them a wide berth. After a small circle we got out of the "squelchy" stuff and ran for over a mile at a fair pace. But then a huge patch of stony ground, absolutely innocent of scent intervened, and as it was too big to get round and too hopeless to climb over, the Master reluctantly gave him up and further draws resulted in nothing. There was, however, a most alarming episode during the little gallop which by some special providence which looks after fair ladies ended all right. Mrs. Mellis, who is at present staying with Colonel and Mrs. Leader of the Carabiniers, rode straight into one of those curses of Indian hunting, a blind well, and disappeared bodily horse and all. It was a horrible thing, for no one knew whether the well was five feet deep or fifty. But Mr. Lloyd, of the Carabiniers, aided by many willing hands, went to the rescue, and marvellous to relate, first the lady and then her horse were brought to the light of day without serious damage. She was naturally badly shaken, but turned up smiling sweetly at the Carabiniers' Hunt breakfast later on. The well proved to have been about eight feet deep and to contain a fair amount of water, which probably saved a frightful accident. Even as it was the result seemed providential.

16th October.—Hebbell Tank. Mr. Gledstanes made a beeline for one of the few certain finds in the Bangalore Country, some sugarcane fields near Amruthalli Village. An almost silent draw of five or six minutes followed, when we became aware that hounds had sloped away at their jack's brush on the further side of the cave and that we were almost hopelessly left. It was no fault of the hunt-staff, but just one of those things that will occur. However maledictions and exclamations saw no wood, so it only remained to sit down and gallop our best. The going was fair and after a mile and a half we were almost on terms with the pack—at least some of us. But the jack entered a huge expanse of almost impenetrable scrub, where the pack worked like maniacs to get him through. Nearly twenty minutes, however, led to no result and the hounds were being collected, when they suddenly spoke to a line which at first looked like heel and were away again at a fair pace. Heel, however, it certainly was not, because in the first place scent will not lie so long in the present dry weather, and in the second place it gradually inclined to the south-west, away from the line we had come. For nearly another mile it was good fun, but then scent died away and the line was never recovered. He probably went to some rocky hills to the south, where a jack, which was almost coursed throughout the run, was killed a week or two ago.

Rowing.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOAT RACE.

FACTS NOT GENERALLY KNOWN.

THE Cambridge University Boat Club was founded in 1827, and the Harvard University Boat Club in 1846. The first English Inter-'Varsity race was rowed at Henley in 1829, and the first Harvard vs. Yale race on Lake Winipiscogee (New Hampshire), in 1852.

Oxford and Cambridge adopted the present Putney to Mortlake course in 1845, after having rowed from Westminster to Putney since 1836. Harvard and Yale first rowed a private match at Springfield, but the course since 1895 has been the Thames at New London.

Professional coaching obtained at Oxford and Cambridge up to 1846, when it was abolished, first by the Dark and then by the Light Blues. Professionals have always found favour at Harvard and Yale, but a modification of their style took place in 1872, as the result of the Yale captain's visit to England to study English oarsmanship. In that year a compromise between the old short "dig" to a longer and more logical sweep was adopted. This marked the first step towards the modern American stroke.

Oxford and Cambridge have always rowed their annual contests in eight-oared craft, but up to 1876 Harvard and Yale opposed each other in four-oared boats. In that year it was decided to row in eights and over a four mile course—changes attributed to English influence. Of one of the first American eights it was said, 'They keep their backs straight; but their rowing has a wooden appearance, and is devoid of elasticity; they hang at both sides of the stroke."

English and American professional crews have met each other at Paris, etc., as far back as 1867. The Harvard four vs. Oxford was the first amateur combination to visit England; and in 1872, an, Atalanta B. C. four went over to row a London R. C. four from Mortlake to Putney. In the result Mr. W. Stout and confrères won "anyhow." Since that time visits of American crews have been frequent. In 1878, the Columbia University crew carried off the Visitors' Plate at Henley.

Yale, Cornell, and Pennsylvania Universities have all sent crews to the Royal Meeting, but without success. The visits of Cornell, in particular, were most unfortunate. The 1878 four came in for much criticism on both sides of the Atlantic, while their 1895 eight proved themselves a very unsportsmanlike lot. It is hoped that Harvard and Yale especially will make a point of going over more frequently. As premier Universities of America, they will always be heartily welcomed—which can hardly be said of some of the others.

The chief rowing school of England is of course, Eton. The leading one in America is St. Paul's, at Concord (New Hampshire). Both send out an annual influx of matured oarsmen to the respective Varsities, and at both places the teaching and training of the boys are looked after by sundry Old Blues and other experienced "wetbobs." Rowing recruits from Eton are eagerly sought for by Oxford and Cambridge, and so are rowing recruits from St. Paul's by Harvard and Yale. In both cases the Old Boys have a very brilliant record. Other rowing schools in England include Radley, Shrewsbury, Westminster, etc., and, those in America, Groton (Massachusetts), and the High School of Worcester (Massachusetts.)

The English University Boat Clubs take an active part in outside aquatic fray, and their officials occupy a prominent position on the Amateur Rowing Association Council. It is different in America. Neither Harvard nor Yale send representative crews to outside regattas, nor do they apparently wish to have any voice in the general management of the sport outside the Universities. In both countries, however, great care is taken to develop the latent abilities of first year men, i.e., "Freshmen." Procedure differs somewhat, but to all intents and purposes the same admirable results are obtained.

MOTOR NOTES FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 7th September.

THAT the growth of a new industry has far-reaching effects into other branches of manufacture is strikingly exemplified by the many recent improvements in steel manufacture. The exceptionally heavy strains imposed on the mechanism of a motor-car under ordinary working conditions were in the earlier days of motoring responsible for many failures and roadside repairs, and it soon became evident that more suitable materials were needed for those portions of the mechanism such as the gears and axles. This demand has resulted in the production of special steels for motor-cars having great shock resistance and better wearing qualities, besides effecting an appreciable saving in weight. In this respect past experience in building high-powered racing vehicles to a strictly enforced weight limit has been of great value. Such severe tests as these long-distance races at high speeds provided have been invaluable in eliminating unsuitable material, in addition to revealing faults in design and construction. There has been a good deal said and written at various times in condemnation of such competitions, but had it not been for the lessons gained in this manner these races being practically "tests to destruction," we should be still using heavy, cumbersome vehicles instead of the perfectly controlled, easy running cars which are the direct outcome of the struggles for supremacy between rival competitors.

The Automobile Club Journal, in calling attention to the dearth of good drivers, says that applications from owners of cars for reliable drivers are so numerous that the club employment bureau is often in difficulty and cannot supply the demand It must be borne in mind that a good driver must not only be able to drive well, that being only the first requirement; it is even more important that he should have a sufficient knowledge of mechanics, and how to make necessary adjustments that will enable him to keep a car on the road and always in good working order. A man may be exceptionally clever at the wheel, but if incompetent in other respects his service is likely to prove very costly to the owner. The club has, on this account, instituted a series of examinations whereby applicants are tested for both driving and mechanical efficiency, so that owners may, by demanding to see this certificate, make sure of a man's capabilities. The best men, from a mechanical point of view, are those recruited from the big motor works, but on the other hand, they do not always make desirable servants, and chafe at the restrictions of private service after the freedom in the shops.

A friend who has been using special shock damping devices fitted to the carriage springs of his car informs us that in addition to greatly increased comfort in riding over rough roads, he has noticed that they have made a marked difference to the wear of his tyres which he finds last very much better than before he had the anti-shock devices fitted. There are several kinds of these fittings to be obtained now. Their action is to absorb any sudden shock on the springs, working very much on the principle of pneumatic door buffers. An official trial is about to be made of the Vieo spring wheel designed to supersede pneumatic tyres, and by means of springs mounted in the wheel itself to give resilient running while using solid tyres. The great drawback to all these patent wheels is their clumsy appearance, which certainly takes away from the smartness of a car. For this reason alone it is doubtful if they will ever become popular for pleasure vehicles, but there should be a great opening for them in the direction of commercial cars for quick parcels delivery.

The success of British-built cars and the increasing demand for them have forced the leading manufacturers in this country to make extensive additions to their factories. Among these may be mentioned the Wolseley Co., who, although they have practically doubled the size of their Birmingham works during the past year, are going in for still further extensions. This is in addition to another big works at Creyford, Kent. Then in Coventry the Daimler and Humber Companies are making big extensions in endeavouring to meet the demand for their cars. During the last two years Daimlers have won nearly every hill-climbing competition of note in this country besides putting up some fine performances abroad, notably in the Herkomer Trophy Race, and in America.

Entered in the Tourist Trophy Race are several new cars which have yet to make a reputation. The course in the Isle of Man has been altered from last year and made rather shorter, which should add to the interest of the race from a spectacular point of view, as the cars will thus be running much closer and will pass a given point more frequently. The Nottingham A.C. are holding their annual race meeting on the sands at Skegness next Saturday. This is a very popular meet, and in view of the exceptionally fine weather is certain to be well attended.

Mr. E. T. Stead, writing from France with reference to the Corpe Du Matin Trial, says that on the last stage from Havre to Paris the cars were sent over an absolutely impossible road, a soft track by the sea shore, and he, being the leading car, on reaching this spot sank into the sand. Mr. Stead was able to warn the majority of competitors, but altogether nine cars were "bogged" at the place. On learning the facts the committee naturally did not let this affect the placings.

CRICKET AT LUCKNOW.

DURHAM L. I. vs. REST OF THE GARRISON.—On Thursday, the 20th instant, a match took place on the Mahomed Bagh Club Ground, Lucknow, between the Durham Light Infantry and Rest of the Garrison, resulting in a victory for the former by two wickets. One or two of the best players of the Garrison were away, but the Durhams nevertheless achieved a very creditable victory. Their success was largely due to the fine batting of Mr. J. F. Burridge in the second innings, and to the bowling of Lieutenant Festing, who captured three wickets for 45 and seven wickets for 39. The Garrison batted first. Score:—

"It is strange that the fair sex and horses should always seem to be the subject of litigation, said Judge Philbrick at Blandford County Court last week. But why strange? As the poe' said:

No wonder that women and horses

For, if we'd neither one nor the other,
Why, what would become of the race?

The prisoner en route for the police court became quite confidential with his guardian, and remarked, in a contrite manner—

"There is one thing I am very sorry for.'.

"What is that?" said the officer, expecting to hear a confession.

"I had my hair cut last night," said the prisoner in a dejected one. "I might have saved that threepence. It's just my luck.'

RUGBY NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ENGLAND vs. SCOTLAND.—Such is the local appellation for a game which has become quite an annual event. Sides are selected from the Rugbyites resident or stationed in Calcutta, whose nationality belongs to one or other of the above-named countries. I don't say alleged nationality, for on the whole bonâ fide teams are picked, though perhaps in the case of an occasional individual too strict enquiry should not be made. At any rate, Germans, Jews, Irishmen et hoc genus omne need not apply. The match took place on Wednesday last and the ground was in capital order as may be gathered from the scoring on each side.

Quite a number of interested supporters came to witness the little International and at times they were treated to some very spirited play.

It was 5-15 P. M. when the ball was kicked off, and after the usual exchange of kicks Scotland slightly pressed and their backs getting the ball Dick, who was playing three-quarters, secured the first try which Drew had no difficulty in converting. After this the English representatives had an innings and worked right up to the Scotch line which they almost crossed, but relief was brought when the ball went behind from a penalty kick taken by Siddons. Soon afterwards the last-named player seeing the ball going abegging rushed up and dribbling past Drew secured a try for England from which Harty kicked a goal. Scotland then went down the field and before half time added another unconverted try.

The second period of the game started with scrums near half way and subsequently Butler obtained a free for the Englishmen, but a not very difficult kick had no result. After this Heilgers and Whittie were very conspicuous with a fine dribble and the Thistle representatives pressed hard, but the advantage obtained was neutralised by Buckler putting in a strong dribble right up to the Scotch line, where Drew was penalised for not putting down the ball and Cooper kicked a goal. Heilgers was again prominent with a fine dribble which when over the line Maclean fell upon and added another try to Scotland's score and Drew converted. From this on, save for a short while when Harty secured a try, the Englishmen were busy keeping their opponents back; however Arthur got through for a nice try and subsequently Whittie got possession out of touch and bursting through the opposing backs scored near the posts and the try was converted.

The game all through was keenly contested and the score of 21 points for Scotland to 11 for England about represents the play.

BOMBAY ROVERS' TOURNAMENT.

SECOND ROUND.

MANCHESTERS vs. EAST LANCS.—These teams met on three occasions before a definite decision was arrived. The first match was a pointless draw: in the second each team scored a goal, but when the game was replayed on the 19th instant the East Lancs. were victorious. They were the first to score and midway in the initial period netted a goal. The Manchesters made great efforts to get on terms, and although they had the best of the exchanges on resuming it was not till after their opponents had put on a second goal that they opened their scoring. Fast play followed in which the East Lancs. attacked and a third goal being put to their credit by Dunn. The final scores were: East Lancs. 3 goals, Manchesters 1 goal. Teams:—

MANCHESTERS.—Pte. Richards, goal; Ptes. Macallan and Townsend, backs; Ptes. Ross, Higgins and Thomson, half-backs; Drum-Major Milner, Ptes. McCabe, Johnson, Davies and Fletcher, forwards.

EAST LANCS.—Pte. Lowe, goal; Ptes. Duckworth and Smallwood, backs; Ptes. Slater, Alcock and Hartley, half-backs; Ptes. Simmons, Booth, Dunn, Naylor and Ainsworth, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. J. Chart, Rovers.

10TH HUSSARS vs. A. AND S. HIGHLANDERS.—Played on the 18th instant the Highlanders winning by four goals to one. They pressed throughout the first half and scored two goals, Quinn netting on both occasions. On changing ends the Hussars played up and obtained a good goal, Harford putting through. This success encouraged them and they played a much improved game. They were within an ace of equalising more than once and some exciting play was witnessed. At length Quinn got possession and passed to Dunne. Woodburne cleared his shot, but Quinn was handy and put it into the net. Continuing to press the Highlanders scored another goal before time, through Dunne, and won as stated. Teams:—

ARGYLL AND SUTHERLANDS.—Daly, goal; Kelly and Reid, backs; Mclean, Lapsley and Hempseed, half backs; Fleming, Dunne, Quinn, Mowett and Wright, forwards.

10TH HUSSARS.—Woodburne, goal; Burt and Hartledge, backs; Seaton, Mitchell and Sweetland, half-backs; Binns, Harford, Smith, Morice and Durham, forwards.

Referee:—Mr. J. Chart, Rovers.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. Y. M. C. A.—These teams met on the 20th instant. The Y. M. C. A., who had had a walk over in the first round against the York and Lancaster Regiment put up a good fight, but were defeated by five goals to nil. In the opening period play was even and the Young Men had only one goal scored against them, Parkes putting through. On changing ends the Military had the best of the struggle and adding four more goals to their score won as stated. Teams:—

ROYAL SCOTS.—Pte. Bryce, goal; Ptes. West and Foster, backs; Pte. Deathridge, Lce.-Corpl. Finnigan and Pte. Lakin, half-backs; Corpl Wright, Ptes. Webber, Smith, Ross and Parkes, forwards.

Y. M. C. A.—Rose, goal; Hildreth and Kelly, backs; Russell, Pooler and Kelly, half-backs; Tweddle, Billeter, Pratt, Carroll and Kiddle, forwards.

LEICESTERS vs. KING'S (LIVERPOOL) REGT.—Played on the 21st instant. The second half was marred by rain, play was poor and neither team scored. Final score: Leicesters 2 goals, King's (Liverpool) Regiment nil. Teams:—

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

SECOND ROUND.

ROYAL SCOTS FUSILIERS vs. GORDON HIGHLANDERS.—Played on the 19th instant a splendid game being witnessed. The Fusiliers got away shortly after the start and opened the scoring. The Gordons made desperate attempts to get level, but there was no more scoring in the first half. On resuming the Gordons pressed and forced several corners, from one of which they equalised. Play ruled very even till the end of the game. Extra time was played and the Fusiliers opened with a goal. The Gordons immediately got on terms, but another goal to the Fusiliers just before time left them victorious by three goals to two.

SIMLA NEW CLUB vs. SHROPSHIRE L.I.—This game was also played on the 19th and resulted in an easy win for the soldiers by six goals to one. The civilians were outclassed and the game was a poor display of football

BEDFORDS vs. SOUTH STAFFORDS.—These teams met on the 20th instant, when the Bedfords beat their opponents by three goals to two after a good game. The Staffords pressed at the start and forced a corner; the Bedfords cleared and taking the ball down scored two goals in quick succession, McCleverty and Dimmock putting through. Then the Staffords attacked and Haynes scored. The Bedfords missed an opportunity of augmenting their score soon after and half time found the Staffords attacking. On changing ends they continued to attack but lost chances through erratic shooting. A free kick to the Bedfords for a foul enabled them to put on a third goal. Dougherty next found the net for the Staffords and they tried hard to equalise but without success, the Bedfords thus winning as stated.

NORTH STAFFORDS vs. SIMLA VOLUNTEERS.—Played on the 20th the Volunteers being beaten by two goals to nil. The soldiers played one short during most of the game and had it not been for the good defence of the Volunteers' goal-keeper the score would have been larger.

1ST ROYAL DRAGOONS vs. 3RD HUSSARS.—Played on the 21st instant. Proceedings were fairly leisurely for a while, neither side seeming to be in a hurry to get at it, but eventually the Hussars woke up and nearly pierced the defence of the Dragoons who in turn attacked. Next the Hussars got down into their opponents' territory and, as the reward of some hot pressing, got a goal just before half time. Early in the second half the Dragoons equalised, but the Hussars were soon ahead again with a goal very nearly headed through. Nothing more was scored, and the Dragoons muffing at least two fine chances were beaten by 2 to 1.

ROYAL IRISH AND GLOSTERS.—A stubbornly contested game resulted when these teams faced each other. They were very evenly matched, both were good in attack and defence and on either side there were not wanting numerous expositions of sound combination and individual brilliance. But the Glosters found an opening—a difficult one 'tis true—and their right wing shooting successfully gave them the game by one to nil.

CAMERONIANS vs. BLACK WATCH.—The first half of this game—played on the 22nd instant—was of the sort known as "ding dong;" it was fought with strict impartiality up and down the ground, both goals nearly fell but not quite and at the interval there was no score. The Black Watch tried a little fouling in the next half and as the result of a penalty kick for their second offence the Cameronians scored their first goal. And the penalty kick brought up their score to two goals and left them winners by that margin.

WILTSHIRES vs. WEST YORKSHIRES.—An unsatisfactory game and a probable protest as a sequel. The Wiltshires won by a goal to love; but it was kicked after the whistle went for a foul claimed and when no one opposed the kicker. Most unsatisfactory for the losers.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

7th September 1906.

EVEN the rival attraction of partridge and grouse shooting and deer stalking cannot subdue nor make any appreciable difference in the number of golf players who enter for the many meetings which invariably take place in the beginning of "Tawny haired September." They are busy in Scotland in several places at once, Ireland is deciding its Open Championship at Portrush, beautiful bracing place to which, if a golfer once ventures, he always goes again and yet again, so great are its attractions, so good are its Links, and so admirable is the Northern Counties Hotel. This is the fifteenth Annual Open Championship of Ireland, and for the one in progress a record entry was received being only 13 less than that for the "Open" and eight more than that received for the Amateur at Haylake some few months ago. The previous highest total was 102 in 1904 at Newcastle County Down. Last year the authorities tried the experiment of changing the date from September to August but a serious dimunition in the number of competitors showed them the error of their ways and now the old plan of playing the first week in September has been re-adopted, but the alteration in date last year had one remarkable coincidence for, for the first time on record, this Irish Championship was won by an Irishman (Lieutenant H. A. Boyd); previous to that the honour had always accrued to a Scotsman or an Englishman; notable winners being Johnnie Ball, Harold Hilton and W. B. Taylor, these three each won it three times. In 1902 this meeting was last held at Portrush and attracted only 96 players—to-day there are 166 players, Ireland being represented (as is only right on their own country's finest green) by 60 players, England by 56, Scotland by 48. Proceedings opened with the usual International Matches, open only to Championship Competitors. The weather though dull was fine and some tremendous struggles ensued—perhaps the keenest being in the Anglo-Scotto match between the two top players, Messrs. J Worthington (Mid-Surry) and J. F. Mitchell (Royal Musselburgh) the latter after being dormy three only winning on the home green. Very general disappointment was manifested at the extremely poor game put up by the holder, Mr. Boyd, in his match against Mr. Beveridge (Scotland). Play in these matches was conducted on the Watson System; 24 players representing each country, 12 players for each match, it will be seen by the above complete lists how this system works out and how really admirable it is.

Afternoon, Monday 3rd September 1906.

Thus by a careful analysis and by painstaking addition he who runs may read that Scotland scored 31 points, England 24, and Ireland 15, and, as with the Ladies, both at Ranelagh and at Burnham so have the Scots of the superior six carried off the kudos and the cup (if there is one!) Next week the result will be known, at present we could only hazard, guess at the winner, and after the very wide-of-the-mark prognostication at Hoylake, one scarcely dares. At present the Yorkshire Champion, H. H. Barker, is a hot favourite and he has already come successfully through two rounds. As one who knows Marienbad, and recollects the extraordinary bulk of the majority of people who come there to lose their superfluous and "too, too solid flesh," one wonders in a vague sort of a way if all these weight carriers try golf as a reducer, and one tries to picture them making their own tees!! The prizes in the recent tournament held there were of sufficient cost and value to tempt even the most obese and unweildly to have a try,—a gold cigarette case studded with rubies and diamonds and a gold net hand bag with diamond studded lock would make even the fattest Polish jaw exclaim "almost thou persuadest we to become a golfer.

Aberdoney, what a pretty soft Welsh name and what a pretty, sandy, Welsh spot it is, has been very gay and very crowded. Some one can truthfully say—many notable players of either sex have been taking part in the manœuvres on the Links and a good many of these as one sees by the lists have crossed the channel to take part, they each hope a prominent one, in the Irish Championship, but ere they left Wales, they were very busy. Mr. C. R. Minchin, of Ascot, cried off the President's prize with 80, the same total also won him the Aberdoney Gold Scratch Medal, whilst Mr. Audrey with 77 plus 81 = 158 won the prize for the best net aggregate. The Alcock Bowl Tournament Competition under handicap was won by Mr. Bensley, a player from the Midlands, who defeated Mr. W. Buchanan in the Final, at the 19th hole, the winner who was conceding three strokes had naturally all his work cut out, he went out in 39 to his opponents 41 and the whole round was concluded in 82 and 87 strokes respectively. In the afternoon of the same day, Mr. Bensley coupled with Mr. H. Walker (also a Midlands player) won the foursomes tournament, they opposed and conceded one stroke to Messrs. F. Ridgway and M. Foster (one of the Fosters) were one up at the turn and finally pulled off the match on the 17th Green by 2 and 1. The mixed Foursome Competition at the same club was won by Mr. and Miss Cicely Foster 81—½ = 80½, next to them came Mr. Minchin and Miss Gilroy, a sister of Mrs. F. W. Brown, the Scottish International and Sussex player. Next week I hope to devote exclusively to the Welsh and Irish Championships.

Boxing.

LIGHT-WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP OF AMERICA.

JOE GANS of Baltimore, is the light weight champion pugilist of the world. For the past three years he has been thirsting after the title, chasing first Jimmy Britt, and then Battling Nelson, all over the American continent in search of a match, and now his wants have been appeased. So desperate did the Baltimore wonder become, that when Britt and Nelson were quibbling over their match for the title last year, which ended in such a sensational victory for the Dane, Gans came forward with the astounding offer to meet both pugilists in the same ring on the same evening. At that time the pretensions of Gans were practically unconsidered, for his offer was looked upon more as an advertisement than anything else. His staunchest supporters knew better, for they were quite cognisant of the fact that their protege was one of the pugilistic wonders of the age, and only wanted the opportunity to prove his undoubted worth. The claims of Gans to the title have now been justly proved, for at Goldfields, Nevada, on the 4th inst. he fought one of the gamest fights ever known with Battling Nelson, from whom he wrested the light-weight championship title after forty-two fierce rounds, in which science and heavy hitting were predominant.

One has only to cast his memory back a few years to recall some of the facts associated with several historic battles for the light-weight championship title. Boxing enthusiasts in England, as well as in America, are thoroughly in touch with the incidents connected with the struggle between the English champion, Jabez White, of Birmingham, who gallantly came over to the new country to meet Jimmy Britt, and, if possible, add further scalps to his belt. One of the pioneers of the English ring, and a giant of the older school—to wit, Charley Mitchell—was chiefly instrumental in the arranging of the fight, which was carried through at Woodward's Pavilion, San Francisco on 5th May last year. The struggle was one of the gamest ever known in America, and ended in the English champion being beaten in the last minute of the twentieth round, and Britt proclaimed the winner. Nelson was eagar for measuring arms with Britt, but almost three months elapsed ere negotiations were entered into and a match ratified. On 9th September the two great stalwarts of the light division opposed each other at Philadelphia, and a stubborn fight, lasting eighteen rounds, was the outcome, and the title once more changed hands into the keeping of Nelson. The fight on that occasion took place in the open, and was attended by some 30,000 people. Since that time the title has been in the keeping of Nelson, who has only once been seen in the ring since that time, and this on 15th March last, when he had a six rounds "mill" with Terry McGovern at Philadelphia, which was announced a draw, as both men were on their feet at the call of time.

A few months ago, when negotiations were opened, it was resolved to seek the best purse, and, if possible, arrange to have the match decided in a state where there were no restrictions existing as to the duration of pugilistic encounters. A tempting offer was held out by a syndicate at Goldfields, Nevada, where a large crowd could be commanded, and big sums guaranteed the boxers. Nelson naturally held out for a big sum, by virtue of his holding the championship, and ultimately it was agreed that he should take 33,500 dollars (£4,500), and Gans 11,000 dollars (£2,200).

The crowd was perhaps the largest seen at a boxing match in Nevada State for a number of years, and over 200 women were amongst the audience. A notable spectator was President Roosevelt's son, who has recently taken an interest in boxing matters. The weather was delightful, and the match was decided in the open. Gans won the toss, and chose the corner with the sun behind him. Wagering at the start was very brisk and odds of 10 to 6 were laid on Gans, who was soon established a strong favourite.

When the lads took the centre of the ring the excitement was great. There was little difference in build, although Gans' black figure looked more attractive. For the first half-dozen rounds the exchanges were of a light order, and considerable clinching was engaged in. In the tenth round the exchanges became fast and furious, and Gans began to hustle his opponent all over the ring with heavy left-arm punches. Twice Nelson was banged hard against the ropes in the twelfth round, but he took his punishment like a general. At the eighteenth round hugging tactics replaced fighting, and Nelson was repeatedly cautioned by the referee. At the end of the twenty-seventh round honours were very even, the Dane having made up a lot of lost ground. Both men showed vivid signs of fatigue, and as the contest advanced they became decidedly weak, and unable to strike a really effective blow. Gans proved himself the better fighter at close range, and at the thirty-third round he was far ahead on points. Four rounds later the contestants were staggering about the ring, and the exchanges were very few. The end came in the forty-second round, when in a clinch Nelson landed a blow below the belt, and the referee promptly disqualified him and awarded Gans the verdict. The end came suddenly, but the contest would not have gone many more rounds, as the principals were exhausted. The scene at the close, when Gans was proclaimed champion, was a memorable one.

CAREERS OF THE MEN.

Joe Gans.

Gans' name can be bracketted with George Dixon and the late Peter Jackson as one of the greatest of negro fistic wonders. Born on 25th November, 1876, at Baltimore, Gans is thus in his thirtieth year. He started boxing in 1894, when a mere boy, and his defeat of John Ball—a Baltimore boxer of considerable repute at that time—laid the foundation-stone of a most successful career in the pugilistic profession. In his second year in the "business" he beat Young Griffo—a victory which stamped him out as a first-rater. Since that time he has met the pick of the light-weight brigade, and very rarely did he meet with a reverse. This was the first occasion he had been opposed to Nelson, but he met and defeated the Dane's great rival—Jimmy Britt—two years ago. The following are the results of his chief battles :—

THE QUETTA DOG SHOW.

A DOG SHOW under the Northern India Kennel Club rules was held for the first time on 15th September in the paddock of the Quetta Racecourse. The entries numbered about 120 and included competitors from Rawal Pindi, Kasauli, Karachi, and Sialkote. The benching and all other arrangements were entrusted to the Rev. Charles Stewart, Chaplain of Quetta, and could not have been better. It was mainly due to his untiring efforts that the Show was such an unqualified success, and it is to be hoped that this will now be an annual show. The Hon'ble Mr. Tucker, C.I.E., Agent, Governor-General, Lieutenant-General Smith-Dorrien, C.B. D.S.O., the Murree Brewery, Messrs. J. Smith and Company, Quetta, and Messrs. Achenwall and Company, all came forward and offered valuable prizes as specials. Messrs. John Smith ran an excellent lunch on the ground for Exhibitors, Judges and Members of the Committee.

Captain Martin, 25th Punjabis, W. Preston, Esq., Karachi, and Captain Winter, R. A., Peshawar, officiated as Judges and gave universal satisfaction.

Results were as follows :—

CLASS I.—Grey hounds Open—Captain Sarel's Chum, 1; Sub-Conductor Douglas' Lola (commended), 2.

Only two competing. A poor class, winner bred by Colonel Delamaine. The winner had good loins, but was rather course in head, the second dog was wanting in substance.

CLASS II.—Bulldogs and Bull-terriers, Novice.—1st Colonel Peirse's Buller, a big skulled dog, but too long from nose to stop, too high on his legs, but well out at shoulders, good loins and screw-tailed to type, too long in the body and hardly up to show class. 2nd Captain Barrett's Venus, a dark-brindled bitch with a very badly carried tail, good body, but with no dip at shoulder.

Major Talbot's Jose won first prize in the Terrier Division.

CLASS III.—Spaniels over 30 lbs. Novice—1st Prize Captain Orr's "Jock, a fair headed dog but wanting in dew-lap, low to the ground, well feathered. 2nd Captain Woodhouse and Mr. Brock's Prince, a dog scarcely up to the same form. The third prize was withheld owing to want of quality.

CLASS IV.—Cocker Spaniels, Novice—Only three entries. 1st Captain Mitchell's Bobs, of good shaped body but lacking in head and underhung. 2nd Captain Sealy and Mr. Chichele Plowden's Petit Chow, indifferent coat and badly feathered.

CLASS V.—Scottish or Aberdeen Terriers Novice.—Only brought out three entries. Mr. Russell's Mac being placed first and Captain Toogood's Scotty being very highly commended. The winner was a nice dog, but with rather large head.

CLASS VI.—Smooth Foxterrier dogs, Open—1st Captain Jackson's Conjurer, a promising puppy with very good legs and body. 2nd Captain Jackson's Trickster, a splendid puppy, but too high on his legs, a class of high quality and one of the best of the Show.

CLASS VII.—Smooth Foxterrier Dogs, Novice—This was a repetition of Class VI as regards winner and second prize.

CLASS VIII.—Smooth Foxterrier dogs, puppies.—Conjurer and Trickster were again awarded first and second prizes. Miss Lincoln's Jasper was placed third out of a lot of six.

CLASS IX.—Smooth Foxterrier Bitches, Open.—1st Mrs. Gooch's Torrington Vic. 2nd Captain Jackson's Beaver. 3rd Captain C. B. Winter's Avon Missle. This was a fair class with six entries. Beaver was well ahead, but was placed second owing to an unfortunate accident which happened that morning and caused slight lameness.

CLASS X.—Smooth Foxterrier bitches, Novice.—This was exactly the same class and a repetition of Class IX.

CLASS XI.—Smooth Foxterrier bitches, Puppies.—Captain Jackson's Beaver was easily first of a lot of three.

CLASS XII.—Wire Haired Foxterriers, Open.—1st Captain Paterson's Sweet Dixie. 2nd Lieutenant-General Smith-Dorrien's Scindy Reserve, Mrs. Young's John. V. H. C., Mr. Money's Memo; H. C., Major Twigg's Cronje. Captain Paterson's nice bitch Sweet Dixie, was an easy winner, but she is on the leggy side and will not improve with age.

CLASS XIII.—Airedale Terries. Novice.—1st prize Captain Roosmalcocq's Dagnell Vic. V. H. C. Captain Roosmalcocq's Dagnell Tim V. H. C. Major Tabot's Remus. Dagnell Vic was the best coated dog, the others being silky, and not quite up to standard.

CLASS XIV.—Irish Terriers, Open.—1st Captain Moore's Toddy. 2nd Mr. Carter's Tim. V. H. C. Mr. Carter's Jelly. Commended Captain Macpherson's Ginger. The winner a nicely bodied dog, but marred by white on its chest, and not a typical head: the other dogs were hardly up to the kennel clup type.

CLASS XV.—Irish Terriers, Novice—1st Captain Anscombe's Skipper. 2nd Captain Moore's Toddy. 3rd Mrs. Carter's Tim. V. H. C. were Captain Macpherson's Ginger. Commended Major Twigg. The winner was just ahead of Captain Moore's dog—he is a nicely turned dog, with good bone.

CLASS XVI.—Dachshunds, Limit—1st Major Tottenham's Sambo. 2nd Mrs. Quinlan's Peter. Reserve Captain Hoggan's Pete. An indifferent class of four. The winner was lacking in head, the second was on the course side.

CLASS XVII—Fox hounds, Open.—The Fox Hound Class was quite a feature of the Show, the Quetta and Karachi hunt being represented. The two dogs Merlin and Dustman were bred and born inQuetta, and the fact of their winning from imported dogs shows that with care and trouble there is no necessity to send across the seas for dogs to hunt the wily jack.—Country-bred dogs have always been decried, but these two good pups were excellent in bone, substance and body properties. Quetta, as a health resort for dogs, is far too little known, and it is to be wondered at that more dog breeders do not avail themselves of its advantages.

Fox Hounds, Open.

1st Prize	Merlin	Captain Sarel (M. F. H.), Quetta.
2nd Prize	Dustman
3rd Prize	Winsome
Reserve,	Vanish, W. Graham, Esq. (M. F. H.), Karachi.

4th Pte. Clarke's Spaniel Tom.
5th Prize Corpl. Harris' Spaniel Buller.
6th Prize Gr. Wadd's Spaniel Wag.

CLASS XXIII.—Persian Greyhounds. Six dogs all of a type were shown, but what is the correct type of Persian grey hound? I am of opinion that these dogs are Seistanis or Afghanis and not true to Persia. It is a pity that some standard cannot be officially recognized and laid down. The dogs shown were fine dogs and the awards were as follows:—1st Mr. Barff's Zardin. 2nd Mr. Sprout's Fatima. 3rd Mr. Barff's Tenny. Reserve Captain Moore's Zuleika. V. H. C. Mr. Brown's Cyrus.

"And is this man to come into this court with unblushing footsteps with the cloak of hypocrisy in his mouth, and to draw fifteen bullocks out of my client's pocket with impunity?" asked a barrister. There was no reply

At a certain hotel a woman came down from upstairs and asked the clerk if she could get a glass of water. "Why, certainly, madam," said he, filling up a glass for her two minutes later she was back. "I don't like to trouble you," she said "but could I get another glass of water?" "No trouble at all, madam," said the clerk, handing her another glass. In about two minutes she appeared again. "Certainly, madam," said the affable clerk; "but may I inquire what you are doing with so much water," "I know you will just scream when I tell you," said the woman; "I'm trying to put out a fire in my room!"

THE QUETTA HORSE SHOW.

JUDGES:

Lieut.-Genl. Smith-Dorrien, C.B., D.S.O.	Major Patterson.
Lieut.-Col. O'Donnell, D.S.O.	Mr. Allen.
Capt. Toogood.	Capt. Cassels.
Capt. Marriott.	Major Talbot.
Capt. Quinlan.	Capt. Sarel.
	Mr. Gretton.
	Capt. O. Winter.

THE Horse Show held at Quetta on the 13th and 14th September was an unqualified success both from a point of the number of entries and of the quality of the horses shown. The entries totalled nearly 250, being twenty more than the number obtained last year.

Some handsome cups were competed for, and in addition to those provided by the committee the following cups were kindly presented:—

For cavalry chargers by 124th Baluchistan Infantyr
For infantry chargers by 35th Scinde Horse.
For Arab ponies other than Polo ponies by 37th Lancers.
For horses jumping by the Royal Warwickshire Regiment.
For the best horse in the Show by the Welch Regiment.
For the best pony in the Show by Lieutenant-General Smith-Dorrien.

CLASS I. (a)—Chargers, Cavalry or R. F. A:—Mr. S. M. Bruce's Dolphin, 1; Mr. E. Giles' Oxide 2; General Smith-Dorrien's John Blunt 3.

The winner, a nice deep girthed chestnut, with perfect manners, won from Mr. Giles' bay who was a good second.

CLASS I. (b)—For Infantry of B. F. A. Chargers:—A large class of eighteen entries saw General Smith-Dorrien's Belfast well ahead of his class, Captain Johnson's Robert being second and Major Twigg's Phyllis third.

CLASS II. (a)—Polo Ponies (Arabs):—A good class of Arab ponies were shown out of sixteen entries. Captain Marriott's Mick only just won from Captain G. Harcourt's Desmond Mr. G. Gretton's Opal being third. The winner was a high caste, nicely shouldered pony, but rather wanting in hocks. The second being excellent behind but falling off in shoulders. Opal, an excellent type of polo pony, but little wanting in middle piece.

CLASS II. (b)—Others:—General Smith-Dorrien's Belfast, 1; Captain Bay's Strawberry 2; Mr. Bell's Gingerwine, 3. A poor class, Belfast winning easily, Strawberry, a small roan, was placed above Gingerwine on the score of handiness.

CLASS II. (c)—Heavy weights:—A good class of fifteen entries. Lieutenant-Colonel Wadeson's Tam, 1; Capt. Borwis' Bluebell, 2; Mr. Gretton's Rudolph, 3; Major Minchin's Shaheen, 4. Tam is a nice clean shouldered deep girthed pony, showing very little of the country-bred. He was bred at the Saharanpur Depôt and was placed first without much difficulty. Bluebell and Rudolph, both hill ponies, won well ahead of the coarsely bred Persian Shaheen.

CLASS II (d)—Teams of 12 ponies that have been played in the tournament. The Warwickshire Regiment won with a nice even lot of ponies.

CLASS III (a)—Hacks:—Mr. E. Giles' Oxide, 1; Mr. E. Giles' Bimbo, 2; Mr. Paddon's Lady Alicia, 3. Oxide, a well-bred waler was ahead of his stable companian, who showed hocks of the country-bred type.

CLASS III. (b)—Ponies:—22 entries. Lieutenant Colonel Wadeson's Tam, 1; Captain Quinlan's Toby, 2; Mr. Gretton's Opal, 3. Tam won his second prize in this class. His rat tail somewhat detracted from his looks, but his quality enabled him to carry off the cup.

CLASS III (c)—Ladies' Hacks—Horses:—Mr. E. Giles' Bimbo, 1; Mr. Sarel's Proof, 2; Mr. Minchin's Zoe, 3. A smart lot of hacks well turned out.

CLASS III (d).—Ladies' Hacks Ponies. Colonel Wadeson's Tam won for the third time, nicely riden by Mrs. Wadeson. Major Patterson's Lady Molly a nice chunky pony, was a good second and General Smith-Dorrien's Muskerry was third.

CLASS IV.—Ponies other than Polo Ponies—Arabs:—Captain Harcourt's g a g Kelp, 1; Captain Cassel's br a p General, 2; Captain Toogood's b a p Malabar 3; Kelp is a nice pony, but that old hero of many fights, Malabar, was above the best in quality; exception might be taken perhaps to the way he moved his hocks, but he might have been placed above the General, who is course in neck and shoulders with weak hocks.

CLASS IV. (b)—others:—A poor class of ponies competed. Spot One would have won with ease, but lameness disqualified him for the first prize, and the awards were as follows: Major Patterson's Lady Molly, 1; Captain Day's Spot One, 2; Captain Hislop's Ragale. The third pony will probably improve with age, but he was shown in bad condition and has not quite the best of necks.

CLASS IV. (c)—Country-breds.—The best class of the show. There were no less than five ponies bred at the Patiala Stud amongst those shown, and they occupied first and second places on the list, which shows that this excellent farm has not yet seen its last day. Capt in Winter's Cherie was awarded the blue rosette, but on being withdrawn from competition the Cup was awarded to Captain Palin's Sabzi II, a daughter of the old veteran Blitz, and one of the few good ones he has ever sired. Mr. Allen's Mazurka was second and Captain Winter's Who Cares third.

CLASS V. Horses or Ponies in Single Harness:—Captain Quinlan's Toby, 1; Colonel O'Donnell's Tim, 2; General Smith-Dorrien's Lady Mystic, 3.

CLASS VI.—(a)—Horses Jumping:—As a rule the ponies in India generally show superior form to the horses; here it was the exception, and some good clean jumping was seen. Mr. Bruce's Rissaldar, taking his jumps in nice style, was adjudicated first, Mr. Giles' Bimbo second, Mr. Bruce's Dolphin third.

CLASS VI. (b)—Ponies:—Thirty-five entries turned out for this. Mrs. Quinlan steered Toby over the jumps in excellent style and in the run off won from General Smith-Dorrien's Belfast ridden by Captain Toogood.

Mr. Stewart's Micky Free, ridden by Captain Winter, was third.

The prize for the best horse in the Show was won by Mr. Giles' Oxide, General Smith-Dorrien's John Blunt being second and Mr. Bruce's Dolphin third.

Captain Palin's Sabzi II. won the prize for the best pony, with Spot One behind him, and Colonel Wadeson's Tam third.

Mr. Smith-Dorrien presented the prizes and the Hon'ble Mr. Tucker in a short speech conveyed the thanks of horse owners to Major Patterson and Captain Quinlan, to whose untiring efforts the success of the Show was due. The Sporth Club entertained the onlookers on the first day, the Welch Regiment acting as hosts on the second.

HORSE CLIPPING AND HORSE CLIPPERS.

HORSE owners will find something to interest them in the illustrated advertisement of the Chicago Flexible Shaft Company which appears in our paper to-day. Their specialities are horse clipping and grooming machines, and from the Enviable reputation which these enjoy all over America and in many other parts of the globe, and a perusal of the high art catalogue, with a copy of which they have favoured us, we find it not difficult to conclude that this very ingenious apparatus is peculiarly suited to the requirements of Indian horse owners.

A horse is a valuable asset, and should receive the best care possible. He should be well fed, comfortably stabled, carefully groomed and clipped in the early Spring. If he receives these attentions he will work well and improve in value. A horse lives under artificial conditions. In his wild state he required none of these attentions, for he was able to look out for himself. The domesticated animal, being worked under conditions that are in themselves artificial, must be kept in condition for such work.

The clipping of a horse in the early Spring is now conceded by all the leading vets to be as essential to a horse's well-being as snocing him or giving him a comfortable bed to lie on. A clipped horse dries out rapidly after a hard day's work, and will rest comfortably and be refreshed for the work the following day. An unclipped horse is liable to catch the heaves, pneumonia, and all sorts of colds, rheumatism, etc. More especially is this so in the early hot weather when his hair is long and he is "soft." If worked hard he will perspire freely and the moisture will be held by his long hair, and the food that should go o nourish him will be used to replenish the heat that is being constantly taken from his body by the mass of cold, wet hair. If clipped, the perspiration will evaporate almost as soon as secreted, and when put in the stable he rests comfortably and his food does him good.

Some years ago a Buffalo street car company (America) tested the value of clipping in the following manner: They owned 500 horses, and 250 of these were clipped early in the Spring and 250 were not clipped. A careful record was kept of results and it was found that of the 250 unclipped horses 153 were afflicted with coughs and pneumonia, while of the 250 clipped not one case of sickness was reported.

A man would not expect to enjoy very good health if he did hard manual work clothed with heavy underwear, a heavy suit and a fur overcoat, and after perspiring freely, as he naturally would, go to sleep without removing same. It is just as ridiculous to expect a horse to be in perfect health if worked under the same conditions.

The Chicago Flexible Shaft Company turn out clippers and groomers in many varieties, sizes and qualities; our readers would not thank us for launching out into a description of each, but we cannot refrain from alluding to one which strikes us as peculiarly attractive to Anglo-Indian horse owners and that is what is styled the "Stewart No. 1 Clipper," one of the firm's very latest developments. It seems to us compact, strong, most ingenious and from the encomiums passed on it, surprisingly efficient, so much so that it may probably achieve the distinction of being "the clipping machine of the future." We quote some of its claims to consideration:—

1. It operates practically without friction or wear.

2. Crank handle turns slowly, machine works rapidly. It's mere play to run it.

3. Gearing is enclosed in a case, beyond the reach of dust or dirt, and runs in oil.

4. This is a wonderful little machine that robs even the smallest horse owner of all excuse for not keeping his horses clipped.

5. Because of the large number of these machines sold, we are able to make a remarkably low price on them.

6. The machine is compact in form and can be packed in a very small space and even carried in a satchel.

7. It is guaranteed to last for 20 years!

It is most emphatically NOT a toy and we are asked to state that the seemingly ridiculous price at which it is offered is no criterion as to the quality of the material. The manufacturers aver that the gear box which drives this machine is made up of the very finest materials, all gears being cut from the solid steel bar, file hard. They guarantee this part of the machine for 20 years. Only the fact that they have commenced operations by making over one million of these machines will account for the ridiculous price of 25 rupees. Each machine is packed in box with oil can and grease for chain, all complete with instructions, so that anyone can use it. Furthermore, the Company have for the last six years made an offer to return remittance in every case where a user can claim to be dissatisfied with the machine, and it says a good deal for the quality of the goods that only in five cases has an application been made for return of purchase price. We are inclined to think that no finer clipper has been made than this machine, and, in view of the fact that the Company hold 90 per cent. of the trade in the world in these goods, it is obvious that they would not, with such a reputation at stake, put out this machine unless they could absolutely vouch for its merits.

The Naturalist.

STRAY NOTES.

ACCORDING to one of the authorities of the Smithsonian Institution, human life is in danger at an elevation of 25,000 feet, and at a considerably lower altitude bodily exertion becomes almost or quite impossible. Birds, on the other hand, according to the same authority, rise to an elevation of 35,000 or 40,000 feet, and at such heights sustain great muscular exertion for an indefinite period. In that respect, as in the matter of flight itself, they have a manifest advantage over the best of us. It is not to be supposed that most birds ever reach the great heights just mentioned, but it seems to be pretty certain that the great majority of even the smaller species when on their semi-annual migrations, move at heights beyond the power of the human eye to see them. Professor Gatke has seen sparrow-hawks arriving at Heligoland, "which, as they became visible overhead, appeared no larger than specks of dust, and, according to a moderate estimate, must have been at a height of not less than 10,000 feet. For about an hour the birds kept coming into sight, singly, and in groups of three or four, wheeling about in circles as they descended."

Different species come down in different manners. Ring-doves and woodcocks often precipitate themselves with the rushing noise of a rocket. Doves break their descent at a considerable distance from the ground, but snipe rush down to within two or three feet of the surface, and continue in a roving course at a very low elevation above it. Sometimes, with undiminished velocity, they sweep down to the rubble at the base of a cliff, where, suddenly, they are found sitting as quietly as if they had never been on the move. The wonder is that the bird has not dashed itself to pieces against the ground. Of the manner in which the smaller singing birds drop out of the sky upon Heligoland, Mr. Gatke says: "They are met with suddenly on fine, sunny morning in countless hosts, whose numbers go on increasing steadily, without the arrival of one of them having been noticed. Nor is it possible to say from what direction they have come. Chaffinches on the other hand, are seen to arrive in flocks at great heights, appearing like fine dust. After much wheeling about in the air, with loud cries, they descend and hasten to what few bushes and shrubs the island can offer them." Nearly every species descends in its own peculiar manner, but nearly all become visible at very great altitudes as scarcely perceptible specks.

If centenarianism is rare amongst human beings, there are animals with a much more extended term of life. The Hospital says the giant tortoise at Mauritius is known to have lived in captivity in the Court House Garden since 1764, s that it has been in existence for at least 150 years. "Drake," the venerable tortoise, which has lately died at the Zoological Gardens, was supposed to be still older It was captured in the Galapos Islands towards the end of the eighteenth century, and was brought to England 85 years ago. After several changes of ownership, he finally found comfortable quarters for his declining years in the Zoological Gardens. His exact age is unknown, but at the time of his capture he appeared to have a half-effaced date cut on his shell, of which the first two figures were 16, so that it is possible he may have lived in three centuries. Carp, crocodiles, ravens, and elephants are known, on excellent authority, to attain to a good old age, but it is impossible to tell even approximately the natural terms of life of animals living under natural conditions. If it were possible to know the age attained by the sperm whale or the great rorqual, we might guess at the age or rate of growth of some of the enormous extinct animals, because, large as they were, they were small in comparison with modern cetacea. Longevity in no way depends upon size, and the normal life of an animal is taken roughly as being three times the length of time it takes to attain maturity.

BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 10.

IT is quite impossible for A and B to win the odd trick, as, however, the cards are played, and irrespective of what A leads, Z must make a trick in hearts, spades, and two in diamonds.

Bridge Problem No. 11.

How ought the dealer to play the hand, and why?

A benevolent old gentleman one day saw a rural-looking man sitting on a stone wall swinging his legs and gazing earnestly at the telegraph wires. Going over to the yokel, he said—

"Waiting to see a message go 'long, eh?"

The man grinned and said, "Ay."

The benevolent old gentleman got on the wall, and for the next quarter of an hour tried hard to dispel his ignorance.

"Now," he said at last, "as you know something about the matter, I hope you will spread your knowledge among your mates on the farm."

"But I don't work on the farm," replied the rural citizen.

"Where then, may I ask?"

"Me and my mates are telegraph linesmen, and we are testing new wire."—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE CALCUTTA MONSOON RACES.

WE are again able to record an appreciable advance in the progress of Monsoon racing. Year after year these meetings grow in size and importance, the class of horses engaged improves and their number steadily increases. So abundantly have entries poured in during the season just completed, that the executive has been obliged on four occasons to divide the fields into two separate handicaps, a costly procedure, which naturally delighted owners. When contemplating the huge list of double entries in the Consolation Plate at the last Meeting it is natural to suppose that they were to some extent attracted by the hope of the prize money being doubled, the remedy thus aggravating the difficulty of over large fields. But who will complain so long as the procedure produces two such excellent races as the handicap in question. There are several new names among the officials this year and only one serious complaint has been raised throughout the season, namely in respect of the veterinary and ambulance arrangements on the day of the lamentable accidents in the three hurdle races. This complaint appears to have been largely based on a misunderstanding, but it has had the effect of effectually advertising the complete surgical and ambulance requisites now held in readiness by the executive. In all other respects, the seven meetings have run without a hitch and the only other growl that seems worthy of serious attention has reference to the experiment adopted in the betting ring. The electric fans could do little to dispel the great discomfort caused by the amalgamation of the inner and outer rings: race-goers in Calcutta have always prided themselves on the convenience and comfort of the maidan course and enclosures. The jostling crowds in the Monsoon betting ring this year have provided an exception to the general rule, but no doubt in the new enclosures next year this difficulty will be avoided. Considerable interest has been taken in the work of the newly-appointed Official Handicapper, and having regard to the difficulties which must beset the efforts of any one inexperienced in the vagaries of monsoon form in Calcutta, Mr. Kindersley has certainly scored a success. Possibly he has benefited by the experience of local experts in compiling some of his handicaps; but the fact remains that the Official Handicapper must take the full meed of praise or blame which the racing public have the right to bestow. In the forty-six races there were no less than six "head" victories besides several "necks" and many other close finishes.

Dealing first with the hurdle racing, as the most noteworthy characteristic of these meetings, it must be admitted that fields ruled comparatively small in all four classes, and unless an improvement is shown next year in the matter of entries we may expect to see the open pony events vanish from the Monsoon programme. Fields of three and four contested the two races this year, and unfortunately the first of these was marred by the fatal accident to Shylock. On the other hand the two amateur pony hurdle races drew good fields, and with the increased interest now being taken in pony paperchasing there is every prospect of a plentiful supply of entries in this class next year. As a matter of fact this year's races both resulted in run-away victories for Branga, whose powers the Handicapper entirely failed to gauge, but nobody grudged the double win to Mr. Evers, who is now one of the most popular gentlemen riders on the Calcutta course. The amateur hurdle race for horses produced some excellent racing, and everybody won in his turn. Too often we have seen the board swept clean by two or three horses, but when a horse like Ryong can win his race from the very bottom of the handicap, owners are encouraged to encounter the cracks. The best incident in this race was the close finish between Gleam and Lady Gold at the third meeting, when both riders treated the public to a fine display of horsemanship. Unfortunately there were two serious accidents at the second meeting by which two G. R.'s were on the shelf for the rest of the season. The open hurdle races for horses drew fair fields and resulted in some rattling good races; in these events the Handicapper was particularly successful. No weight could stop Hoop Iron in the first two handicaps, but on the second occasion he had to fight for his honours. There was a clinking finish in this race, a head and a neck dividing the placed horses. The dead-heat between Gleam and Parole at the fourth meeting bore startling testimony to the improvement in the so-called "Hunter" class as Mr. Pugh's mare did not stand out at all conspicuously in the latter. Although the last of these hurdle races dwindled to a match, the pair left in put up a magnificent race, probably the best of the season and reviewing the hurdle racing in two words it may be said to be "still flourishing."

Turning to the flat racing we find the "amateur" events at the bottom of our list. We are bound to say that these races as at present framed, could be very well dispensed with. Intended to encourage owners in the paperchase class they afford a hunting ground for specially preserved maidens brought to India for a much superior class of racing; something should be done to exclude the local racing stables from these closed races. These observations do not yet apply to the "club" pony races, but these will no doubt be similarly exploited before long unless the conditions are more stringently framed.

In the open races we again saw the now familiar spectacle of animals running indiscriminately as horses or ponies, Duplex II actually succeeding in winning a race in both classes. The small pony class began fairly well but faded away into unfilled races towards the end of the season, and the "fourteen two" class appears to be stifling all other pony racing in Calcutta. When this has been accomplished it will probably die out itself unless some steps are taken to change the present course of events in pony racing. All the open events for horses drew big entries and it is not too much to say that programmes could be filled week after week without any assistance whatever from the ponies. As already observed the class of horse competing steadily improves and it seems to be worth owners' while to bring their best handicap horses to Calcutta for these meetings; after all the life of a race-horse in India is very short, and it is not a bad plan to gather roses while you may.

The advent of Mr. J. D. Scott's string from Dehra Dun added greatly to the success of the earlier meetings, and Heywood's successes will probably encourage him to make an annual visit to Calcutta in August. The Monsoon races are rapidly losing their local character and already stand in the first rank of Indian meetings. It is surprising that so few of the better known jockeys find it worth while to face the monsoon climate. Murdison and Northmore are new arrivals, who have already begun to make reputations in Calcutta and both these riders must have been well repaid for their enterprise in exploiting the August races. The latter has also shown that he can ride a really good race over hurdles and the same may be said of T. White whose misfortunes at the second meeting attracted so much attention.

Among the gentlemen riders Mr. Deakin was very successful on the Dehra Dun horses, and Messrs Evers and Barrow, who are both in great form just now practically divided the amateur races between them. Mr. Pugh's accident deprived them of their keenest competitor, and we miss Mr. Hamilton's name on the winning list There seems to be no dearth of amateur talent just at present. We appened the usual lists of owners, trainers and jockeys, which speak for themselves :—

THE INTERNATIONAL BOAT RACE.

THE Cambridge Harvard race, which was decided on Saturday, the 8th September, was the first international University race between eights: and as such attracted as much attention as though it had been the first boat race in England between an American and an English crew. As long ago as 1869 a Harvard four met and were defeated by an Oxford four on the Putney Mortlake course: the race aroused much interest at the time albeit the style of the visitors rowing awakened more amazement than admiration. As a four the Harvard men were "generally disliked:" to quote from the Field of the time, "their excessive rapidity of stroke, the want of catch at the beginning, their comparative absence of leg work and body swing, the length of time during which their oar blades were kept in the water without adequate result, the peculiarity and unsatisfactory travelling of their boat, their clumsy oars and their habit of backing water with the back of their oars, created not only astonishment but something very much akin to pity." The idea that so singular a crew should pit itself against Oxford—which in 1869 had won the inter-'Varsity race for the ninth time in succession—seemed preposterous: and yet this much criticised crew got away with the start and led until the old ship at Chiswick was reached: there Oxford came abreast and eventually won by a length and a half after one of the most desperately contested races ever seen on the Thames.

We have thought it worth while recalling the criticisms passed on the American style of rowing 37 years ago, because the critics who watched the Harvard crews training during August did not spare comment. It was generally conceded that the Harvard men were a particularly fine lot and that the Cambridge men would have a poor chance against them in a weight lifting competition; but the possession of much muscle in a boat has never been regarded as a predominating advantage: the lighter crew is very generally the quicker, and great physical strength does not imply possession of the great staying power required if a crew is to last over four miles and row the race out to the last stroke. There were not wanting those who predicted victory for Harvard, the perfect unison of their work and, presumed, superior training carrying much weight. It is noteworthy, however, that the Harvard crew differed in one vital respect from the crew of 1869: the former rowed in the American style, or what has been regarded as the American style. In 1894 Mr. Whitney observed that the Oxford oarsman got a stroke of about 10½ feet against the stroke of 8½ to 9 feet made by the Yale Oarsman. The crew of this year adopted the English style: they rowed a longer stroke, put more leg work into it and a longer body swing: they renounced altogether the short quick style of rowing which was borrowed from the American professional sculler. To such an extent did they carry the adoption of British methods, they abandoned the time honoured American plan of getting away with the start. The 1869 crew and others, which subsequently came over to row at Henley, made a point of starting as fast as possible, going away and rowing for their lives until they were fairly rowed out: there was no attempt to husband strength: the idea seemed to be that if they could not succeed in rowing down opposition in the first half of the race there was no chance whatever of doing it in the second. This method no doubt answered when the opposition rowed in the same style: but when it comes to a long course and rowing against a crew whose staying power is their strong point it cannot succeed, and it is a compliment to the English method of rowing that the visitors should have adopted it so completely renouncing their own.

Both in style and tactics the Harvard crew followed their English opponents: they started without flurry though the Cambridge stroke took a leaf out of the American book and went away at a tremendous pace: we have seen the Cambridge victory explained by the "superb start," but comparison of accounts does not tempt us to accept the theory. It is worth observing too that the Harvard men put more body swing into their work than did the Cambridge crew: this is no doubt one of the results of Mr. R. C. Lehmann's coaching in 1879 and 1898: Mr. Lehmann did his utmost to teach the men to row in the English style and perhaps the innovation, like other innovations, has been a little overdone. The Harvard form throughout the race, measured by English standards, was excellent: they worked well together and never did less than 32 to the minute, while their opponents were content to row a steady 30; but despite their undoubted superiority of physique they could not go the pace. It may be that Harvard were unfortunate in their craft. Mr. Guy Nickalls, we observe, says they "lost lengths and lengths" by their boat alone. You had only to look at her to see that she was not a traveller: she was not built on travelling lines." The craft was one the crew brought over with them and was built by Davy, of Cambridge Mass: on dimensions the most conspicuous feature of it is that the boat lacked three feet of length by comparison with the Cambridge ship which was 63 feet long. In other dimensions there is very little to choose: the differences are to be counted by quarter inches.

One particularly satisfactory feature of this race is to be remembered: from the time the visitors arrived until they rowed, not a word has been uttered other than is becoming to the spirit of sportsmanship: everything has been straightforward and above board. The taint of professionalism which hung about the American crews at Henley in 1878: the ugly questions which—with only too good foundation as the event proved—were asked about the Cornell crew of 1881 and again the unsportsmanlike behaviour of the Cornell crew which rowed for the Grand Challenge Cup of 1895, have found no echo in this last visit. Everything has been as pleasant as was the case in 1896 when Hall sent over to compete for the Grand a crew whose demeanour showed that if America has some undesirables in the rowing world, she has also men who can most worthily uphold her credit in a sporting sense.

We have no doubt that a meeting so successful will be repeated and often repeated. The American Ambassador in his speech at the dinner which followed the race offered Cambridge a cordial invitation to send a crew out to the States. It would be an excellent thing if financial and other considerations should allow of an annual race between the winner of the 'Varsities boat race and the best eight the American Universities can bring to row against them. The British sporting standard seems to have found acceptance in American rowing circles and if duly nursed it will no doubt spread to others.

Sporting Notes.

THE Poona enquiry, to which we referred last week, has resulted in the infliction of the extreme punishment. Mr. Percy Fisher and his pony Key West have been warned off the Turf and disqualified for life. No more terrible penalty can be inflicted by a Turf Club and the practical result is that the culprits are excluded from every respectable racecourse in the world. And so ends the career of a brilliant athletic and prominent turfite. Oh! the pity of it. In this case there seems to be a general chorus of approval of the Stewards' action and it cannot fail to have a beneficial effect upon racing throughout India. The ex-bookmaker, who assisted in the scheme unearthed in this enquiry and the ex-bookmaker's clerk have been similarly punished, but not a word is vouchsafed as to the conduct of Johnson, the jockey, who was reported to have fallen off. Surely this man's connection with the plot, if any, should have been cleared up one way or the other.

Perhaps the most interesting feature in the New Stand and its adjuncts on the Calcutta course is the position of the Judge's box relative to the Stand itself. At least one hundred spectators will be able to look down above the box from a position entitling them to an opinion on the result of a closely contested finish. Hitherto the winning post has lain beyond the Stands, giving the spectators an oblique view which is merely deceptive. No one has therefore been in a position to so much as criticize the Judge's decisions, but that official's duty will now be more than ever onerous and difficult as his findings cannot fail to encounter severe criticisms. Surely it is time that this post ceased to be an honorary one. Starting, though requiring special knowledge and experience is, in our opinion, child's play in comparison with the strain of judging. Of course, it is a sound business principle to pay for no work which you can induce a man to do gratis. Trade on the love of sport and put your rupees in the bank, praising Allah, like old Hafiz, for his folly. But may not this economy be carried too far? It is over much to expect a man to learn forty or fifty different jackets, two or three hundred horses, and the faces of a small crowd of jockeys intimately as a Judge must to do justice to his work all in his leisure moments. Any such change as indicated may not be practicable at present, but we suggest that if the good sportsman, whoever he may be, who undertakes this very difficult work makes a bad mistake no one should criticize him except in the most moderate and considerate language.

A writer in the September number of the Badminton discusses at some length the financial side of English racing. In a careful calculation he estimates that the average cost of a race horse in training in England is roughly £200 a year. Taking four thousand as the average number of horses in training it follows that some £800,000 is laid out in out of pocket expenditure excluding, of course, the original cost of the horses themselves. The total value of the stakes put up at English meetings is here estimated at about £495,000, of which some two-thirds is subscribed by owners themselves in entrance fees, leaving a balance of about £165,000 to repay their immense outlay. These figures are surprising and the moral to which the author points is that owners are much too heavily taxed in England, in spite of the very large profits made out of racing by the limited companies licensed by the Jockey Club to hold race meetings under their rules and patronage. In France these things are differently managed and excess gate money over and above a fixed proportion of profit to the Clubs goes to swell the added money. This question touches us very narrowly in India and any suggestion which tends to encourage and assist the non-betting owner cannot fail to meet with sincere consideration. In England there are dukes and millionaires in plenty to uphold the morals of the Turf by racing for the love of sport even at a great cost, but in this country such characters are seldom encountered. The article we have referred to is well worth reading.

Mr. R. J. Farquharson, the Colombo owner, now trying his luck on the turf at home, does not make much progress. We have alluded to the comments on his jockey's riding in his earlier attempts we now find him being cautioned. We extract the following from Reynolds' Newspaper :—"After the discussion of the Great Midland Handicap Plate, the Stewards—Lord Aylesford, Mr. C. E. Walker, and Mr. Reid Walker—called upon the owner and jockey of Nightfall for an explanation of the manner in which the mare was ridden. After hearing their statements the Stewards expressed themselves dissatisfied with the explanation given, stating that they considered the orders issued by Mr. Farquharson most injudicious, and cautioned both as to the future."

This mail brings us advice of the purchase of another horse destined for India and bought specially with an eye to the Viceroy's Cup. We refer to the five-year-old chestnut gelding Sermon, by Friars' Balsam—Listen. He is now owned by those well-known Lancer sportsmen, Messrs. Wood and Badger, who are bringing out Bray to ride him and some others they have just acquired.

Sermon made his début at Ascot, where he ran unplaced to Rock Sand in the Coventry Stakes for two-year-olds. But in his next attempt, at the same meeting, he won the New Stakes as a rank outsider and beat Greatorex, Countermark and Post Obit—all at level weights. After this he ran second to Quintessence in the Exeter Stakes at Newmarket, second to Rock Sand, at level weights, in the Chesterfield Stakes, second to Chaucer in the Gimcrack Stakes at York, third to Rock Sand in the Champagne Stakes at Doncaster—William Rufus dividing them—and he wound up his first season by carrying off the Prendergast Stakes and turning the tables on Chaucer. He had two wins as a three-year-old—the Forty-Fourth Newmarket Biennial Stakes, and the Hurst Park Yearling Plate—and in half-a-dozen other tries he failed to get placed, his fulfilled engagements including the Two Thousand Guineas and the Stewards' Cup at Goodwood.

He did not run as a four-year-old ; but last year, trained by Mr. F. Lambton, he went out a dozen times, won the Soham Plate at Newmarket, and the Bury Handicap at the same place a month afterwards. Also he was on six occasions placed second.

Among other purchases of English race-horses for India we note that of Rosewater, a two-year-old colt by Merman—Rosy Dimple, and Empire, a three-year-old chestnut gelding by Grand Duke—Alberta.

The opening date of the Hyderabad Polo Tournament has been altered to the 8th instant. Two teams have scratched, namely, the Mysore Gymkhana and the Golconda "B," leaving the 26th Light Cavalry vs. Fateh Maidan Gymkhana and the 13th Hussars vs. Golconda Gymkhana.

It is with great regret that we have to announce the deaths on the 10th ultimo, at Mandalay, from cholera, of Captain L. S. Roome and Lieutenant D. H. L. Thomas, both of the Middlesex Regiment. On the Friday previous both these officers had been playing in a polo match against the Mandalay Battalion Military Police, the first ties of a local tournament. On Saturday night Captain Roome had put on the stage a most successful variety entertainment, by Monday afternoon both had crossed the Great Divide after an illness of only a few hours' duration. Our heartfelt sympathies go out to all ranks of the Middlesex Regiment in the loss of two such fine officers, senior captain and senior subaltern. This sad affair has cast a great gloom over the residents of Mandalay. Two more gallant souls sacrificed on the altar of Empire !

Some weeks ago we published among these notes a paragraph in which we alluded to the possibility of either Mr. Jowett or Mr. Hood Wright being able to judge at certain Indian dog shows and we further remarked that there was an idea of amalgamating the Bombay, Lahore and Calcutta shows into one big All-India Championship. Our contemporary the Indian Kennel Gazette takes us to task over this in its last issue. It writes :—

"It is certainly quite correct that Mr. Jowett was asked, but cannot fit in his dates as he likes to be at home at 'Xmas. It is also correct that Mr. Hood Wright has been asked, but also desires to be at home at 'Xmas, and if the Lahore Show is to be held during the 'Xmas week as usual, and this the majority of exhibitors wish, he will not be able to help at that show. But it is the first that we have heard that 'the idea is to amalgamate the three shows into one big All India Championship." We do not know who contributed that paragraph, but we do not think it at all likely that any such thing as an 'All-India Championship' will take place ; there are too many objections to it. It has never even been mooted. It is needless to say that, in the event of any one coming out to India to judge, the N.I.K.A. would put down a handsome donation towards the expenses."

We may say the paragraph was written by the Editor of this paper and we may remind our smart little contemporary that even in places quite far away from the little mofussil station in which the I.K.G. is edited it is possible for people to have "ideas" and to find opportunities for expressing them. Our contemporary remarks that "the matter has never been mooted :" perhaps not at Jullundur ; but it has been discussed in the little village of Calcutta by several people keenly interested in canine matters (including those who are taking an active part in forming the Calcutta Kennel Association or whatever its ultimate designation may be—the Editor of The Indian Field among them) and here the "idea" originated which fittingly enough found expression in a local sporting journal. We may add that the numerous objections to the All India show referred to by the I.K.G. were considered and some of them at least were regarded as surmountable. If all really interested in dog shows in India cared to work together for a common object it strikes us that the possibility of such a show is not so remote as "our esteemed" thinks.

In our English sporting letter this week will be found details of the Cambridge-Harvard boat race and three days of the Doncaster race meeting. It will be seen that on the day the Leger was run Great Scot finished third in the Rufford Abbey Plate.

The Umballa Horse Show has been fixed for the 6th November, entries closing on the 29th instant.

The fact that so early in the snipe season no less than three gun accidents have occurred suggests that a cautionary word or two will not be out of place. Very luckily none of these accidents were serious—indeed in only one case was a native slightly "peppered"—but the fact that three guns were accidentally discharged shows carelessness somewhere. To such as may stand in need of a reminder we cannot do better than reproduce these lines which appeared many years ago in Punch.

Never, never let your gun
Pointed be at any one ;
Though it may unloaded be
Matters not the least to me.

When a hedge or ditch you cross,
Though of time it causes loss,
From your gun your cartridge take
For the greater safety sake.

If 'twixt you and neighbouring gun,
Bird may fly or beast may run,
Let this maxim e'er be thine
Follow not across the line.

Stops and beaters oft unseen
Lurk behind some leafy green :
Calm and steady always be ;
Never shoot where you don't see.

Keep your place and silent be,
Game can hear and game can see ;
Don't be greedy ; better spared
Is a pheasant than one shared.

You may kill or you may miss,
But at all times think of this,
All the pheasants ever bred
Won't repay for one man dead.

The statistics for the year, just published, show that Loch Leven has recovered its old place as the finest trout-angling water in the British Isles. Over 17,000 trout have been captured in the course of the season, a number approaching closely to the average of the loch in the days of its prime. The troubles which lately beset Loch Leven began with the introduction—no man knows how—of the American pond weed, which in 1902 spread like a plague over great expanses of the loch, providing harbourage for hosts of pike. The effect was to reduce the catch of trout from 18,000 to 7,000, and in 1903 the season's yield was only 2,002. The war against the invader was successful, because the pond weed rapidly exhausted the essential elements in the soil, and played itself out. With the defeat of the weed it became possible to wage war on the pike, and there are now fewer of them in the loch than at any time in the past.

The usual figures relating to the destruction of wild animals and snakes in 1905 were published in the last issue of the Gazette of India. Two thousand and fifty-four human beings against 2,157 in the previous year are reported to have been killed by wild animals and of these 48 were killed by elephants, 26 meeting their deaths in the Assam Valley Districts. Leopards killed 401 persons, no less than 126 deaths occurring in the Central Provinces, man-eating leopards killing 48 victims in the Raipur district. Tigers killed 786 persons, there being 80 deaths in the Angul district. twenty-six in Palamau and 70 in Singbhum, all in Bengal. The mortality fell from 87 to 43 in Burma and also declined in the Central Provinces. Well-known man-eaters were destroyed in several districts in Bengal and the Central Provinces. There were only 153 deaths from wolves against 244 in 1904, and as usual nearly all the deaths occurred in the United Provinces. The crusades against these animals were carried on with considerable success in Rohilkhand, Badaun and Bijnor and in Raipur and Bilaspur in the Central Provinces. The mortality from snake-bite fell from 21,880 in 1904 to 21,797.

In Bombay orders have been issued for the supply to Government officers, institutions, Municipalities, and District Local Boards of the lancets designed by Sir Lauder Brunton for the treatment of snake-bite with permanganate of potash. In the Central Provinces also a large number of lancets were distributed to vaccinators and selected landholders and in several cases the treatment is said to have been successful.

The number of cattle destroyed by wild animals rose from 88,206 in 1904 to 92,277 and the number killed by snakes fell from 10,376 to 8,039. Of the former the number destroyed by tigers amounted to 30,683, by leopards to 44,845, by wolves to 9,232, hyænas to 2,422 and by other animals to 3,894. The greatest destruction occurred in Bengal, the Central Provinces, and Eastern Bengal and Assam. In Bengal the districts returning the highest mortality were Palamau and Hazaribagh. In the Central Provinces leopards are reported to have been responsible for two-thirds of the increased destruction, their depredations being as in previous years especially severe in Jubbulpore and Saugor. Much of the increase in the mortality is said to be due to better reporting, but in the main it is attributed to the gradual disappearance of game from the jungles. The fact that there has been a large increase in the destruction of human life and of cattle by leopards, while at the same time the number of the latter destroyed (925 as compared with 739 in 1904) is much greater than before is said to indicate that these destructive animals seek their prey in the neighbourhood of villages more readily than they formerly did. In Eastern Bengal and Assam the increased mortality in the hill districts is attributed to the ravages of wild dogs and in the plains districts to the heavy floods which in some places forced wild animals to take refuge in the villages.

The number of wild animals destroyed rose from 16,122 in 1904 to 16,915. The number of tigers, leopards, bears, wolves and hyænas destroyed was 1,355, 4,811, 2,236, 2,016 and 554 respectively. The rewards paid for the destruction of wild animals amounted to Rs. 1,27,665 as against Rs. 1,07,033 in 1904. The total number of snakes killed fell fron 65,378 in 1904 to 64,117 and the rewards paid for their destruction amounted to Rs. 2,676 against Rs. 2,727 in 1904.

The number of licenses issued free of cost under the Indian Arms Act, 1878, for the destruction of wild animals or the protection of crops during the year was 8,901, against 8,489 in 1904 and the total number of licenses of this nature in force, including such as were valid from previous years amounted to 37,833 as compared with 37,720 in 1904.

We have this week had the pleasure of inspecting certain specimens of the taxidermy of which Messrs. A. Hartman and Co., the gun-makers of Calcutta, now make a speciality. They impressed us with the fact that the firm turns out first-class work and artistic withal. They apparently employ the best workmen procurable and with high class materials, the finest artificial eyes made, and close personal supervision we do not see why this branch of their business shouldn't receive the support it deserves.

Ere additional legislation is resorted to for the protection of English wild birds, it will be necessary to define what are and which are not aggressive ones, for at the instance of 110 representative fishermen, the Suffolk County Council have felt itself justified in rescinding the prohibition of shooting the tern or-long winged gull, whose wings are in request for women's hats. These birds it seems have multiplied to such an extent that their numbers in one division of the coast alone are estimated at 40,000 and as each is known to consume from 30 to 40 smelts daily it certainly would seem they needed thinning out. No doubt indictment will be made against other birds and some discrimination will have to be exercised in sifting these.

Our Shillong correspondent writes :—The Poojas have been fortunate in commencing with brilliant weather. By Monday, the 24th, the station was full of visitors with a fair number of horses with them for the races; though the long interval between the two days' racing has choked off many would-be runners. The tennis tournaments are in full swing and the Singles Championship looks as if it would fall to the Cachar representative who beat Mr. Bayley, the local champion, in the first round; bad luck being the main reason for his downfall. Mr. Marshall is probably a bit better class than the rest and should now pull through.

The appearance on Monday of "No. 1, Vol. I" of Calcutta's new evening paper, The Empire, is a matter on which we heartily congratulate all concerned in its production. We had a so-called evening paper some years ago, but its existence was brief enough to justify many in concluding that Calcutta didn't want anything beyond its morning papers. But here we have an enterprise of quite a different sort. With capital at its command, smart management, a big array of editorial talent, and considerable advertising support to begin with, The Empire should soon create its own demand, even if the impression still exists that an evening paper does not appeal to the Calcutta public. The experiment has succeeded in Bombay, why should a similar enterprise fail to catch on in Calcutta? The first issue of The Empire ought to satisfy most people. It is well turned out, well arranged, well written, and well printed. Its news is fresh, its literary style bright and attractive, while its display of advertisements should be comforting to its promoters. We heartily welcome its advent, wish it long life and prosperity and trust it may prove of real use to the public: if it steadily acts up to its watchword of "Fair play all round" it can hardly fail to do so.

Old Ben Griffiths, who himself it is reported once hit a ball into a passing train, used to tell an extraordinary story of a cricket match between Brighton and Lewes, on the ground of the latter.

"The match was all over, bar the shouting," Ben used to declare, "for our last man was in, and we wanted eighty-four runs to win. One of the batsmen, however, gave an awful crack to leg, and that did it."

"Did what?" the listeners would naturally inquire.

"Why, won the match. It was this way. There was an old pump at the edge of the ground, and the end of the spout was inside the boundary line. Well, that crack to leg sent the ball into the spout, and the fielders couldn't get it out nohow. They couldn't call "lost ball," for the ball was in sight. So they had to go to the nearest blacksmith's, and get a hammer and cold chisel to dig it out with, whilst we ran off the eighty-four runs."

Athletic Notes.

MANY lawn tennis players in India and Ceylon will receive the news of the death of Mr. Edward De Fonblanque, who held the Ceylon Championship for many years, and coming to India as a coffee planter in the Wynaad he twice won the Ooty Championship.

The Secretariat Football Cup Tournament at Naini Tal concluded on the 19th ultimo in a win for the East Surrey Regiment, "A" Co., who beat the Depot "A" team by a goal to nil.

A quaint Yorkshire custom was observed last month, when the contest for the possession of the "antient Scorton arrow" took place at Richmond, with the longbow and the clothyard shaft, at a distance of 100 yards. The trophy is a silver arrow, the origin of which is not known, but the records show that it dates back to the seventeenth century. The Scorton archers, for example, are recorded to have met at Scorton, a few miles from Richmond, on 14th May 1673, "for the annual exercise of shooting at targets for a silver arrow." With the exception of a break of ten years during the Napoleonic wars, from 1799 to 1809, the trophy has been shot for annually ever since, and Monday's competition was the ninety-eighth in unbroken succession, but the two hundred and thirty-third annual meeting. Numerous other prizes have been added, one of which is an "antient horn spoon," which goes to the worst shot of the meet. In his history of Darlington, Longstaff states that the arrow has frequently been shot for there. At first, it seems, the competition was confined to a radius of six miles from Eryholme, a village about midway between Darlington and Richmond, and would, therefore, include both towns. Subsequently the radius was extended to 20 miles, and later the whole of the country was included. In recent years the competition has taken place at Settle, in the West Riding, but Mr. C. Pownall, of Maida-hill, London, the winner last year, having the choice of the next place of meeting, decided that it should take place at Richmond, only six miles from where the Scorton archers originally met. After certain quaint ceremonies in connection with the competition had been carried out, each archer sent two or three arrows at the target before finding the range. In the result, Mr. P. Prince, Worcestershire, became the possessor of the arrow, and Mr. A. F. Hardy, of John O'Gaunt's Archers, won the silver bugle, being second.

We learn that the Calcutta Agent of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China has received a telegram from their Head Office advising that the Directors have declared a dividend for the half-year ending 30th June at the rate of 13 per cent. per annum free of income-tax.

The final game in the football tournament for the Walter Locke Shield was played at Rangoon on the 26th ultimo when the Y. M. C. A. beat the King's Own Regiment by 2 goals to nil.

The Durand Football Tournament was brought to a conclusion at Simla on Saturday, the 29th instant, before a record gathering, the game was fast and well contested, the Cameronians beating the Bedfords by two goals to nil. After the game, and before the distribution of prizes, General Scott said :—Your Excellencies, ladies and gentlemen,—Before asking Lady Minto to perform the tasks which she has so graciously undertaken, and for which, on your behalf, I desire to tender our most grateful thanks, I wish in the capacity of president of management to now briefly address you, but I shall interfere as little as possible in the business awaiting us. I do not propose to deliver a lecture on the science of football or on the qualities, both of body and mind, essential to make a man a good player. In the first place I do not possess the requisite expert knowledge, and in the second place after the admirable object lessons which these teams have afforded us as to how football should be played, it would be quite superfluous for me to say anything on the subject. But in view of the fact and there are so many people amidst us this afternoon who have come up to Simla for the first time this year, it might not be out of place to recall the history of this tournament, which, from its inception, has proved such a great success and has afforded to Simla residents and visitors so much pleasure for many years.

"This tournament was first begun in 1888, and it may interest you to know that we have on the ground this afternoon an officer who played in the first tournament. The Challenge Cup was presented by Sir Mortimer Durand to become the property of any team which won the tournament three years in succession, and this feat was accomplished by the Highland Light Infantry in 1895. Durand then presented another Cup, which was won by the Black Watch in 1899. Sir Mortimer Durand very generously presented a third Cup, and suggested that it should be an annual Challenge Cup and that a second Cup should be given to the winning team. This procedure has been followed this afternoon. We have to congratulate the winning team—the Cameronians—with all our hearts. We have also to congratulate the Bedfords on their admirable play, and also the other teams, who, although they have not been successful, have done their level best to win. I am sure, you will all agree with me that it is very gratifying to witness the great popularity of this tournament, and I am quite sure when I write to Sir Mortimer Durand he will also agree. This year there has been a record number of entries, namely, 19, which is five more than in any previous year, and the committee hope that this number in time will be doubled, and that every regiment that can possibly do so will in future enter a team for the tournament. One reads sometimes of the alleged deterioration in the physique of the British race. I think after the exhibition of play we have witnessed this afternoon there is no immediate cause for alarm, at any rate as far as the British army is concerned. In conclusion I wish to mention that we are greatly indebted to Captain Stares and Captain Timmis who have acted as referees, to Captain Walton and Mr. Weston of the Bank of U. S., who acted as Honorary Treasurer, and to Sergeant-Major Wheels. They have laboured most strenuously and the success of the tournament is in a great measure due to their efforts."

After the distribution of prizes His Excellency Lord Minto said :—"General Scott, ladies and gentlemen,—I should like to add a few words of congratulation to the winning team. I suppose I ought to have no sympathies, but I confess that owing to the fact that the Cameronians come from my side of the border I have a little weakness for them. The Bedfords played a splendid game, but I should like to have seen it a little closer. I must congratulate the management on their success. The number of entries this year is, I understand, better than ever before, and I only wish I had been able to see more of the game than I did. Sir M. Durand will, I am sure, be delighted to hear of the success of the matches, and I am certain that General Scott will take the earliest possible opportunity in communicating with him. I congratulate General Scott, Captain Walton, and the referees on the excellent management which they have secured and on the success of the matches generally. I wish the Cameronians the best of luck in the future and congratulate them most heartily on their victory."

Lipton, of tea, bacon and yacht fame, has not been able to induce the Americans to comply with his demand that the conditions of the America Cup be modified. It is said that in consequence of this the race will probably fall through.

At the recent regatta in Secunderabad a curious contretemps arose in the four-oared race for the Fardonji Challenge Cup. Two crews—the R. A. and the Gymkhana—went to the starting post, both boats filled and both crews had to swim for it ! Evidently someone whose business it is to look to the upkeep of the craft had been taking things easy of late. The race for the Double Sculls was won by Messrs. Burnett and Macnabb who beat Messrs. Sturge and Whitchurch comfortably by a length and a half. The Mixed Fours was won by Miss Cowie's crew who came in two lengths ahead of Miss Walker's crew. Captain and Miss Cowie won the Dongola race, the Canoe Race was won by Mr. Minniken and the Shikar Boat Handicap fell to Mr. Minniken also.

The Madras Rugby Football Tournament ended unsatisfactorily. Only three teams entered—Madras, Calcutta and the West Ridings. The two first named met on the 27th when Calcutta disposed of Madras rather easily by a goal and a try to a try or 8 points to 3. This left them in to meet the West Ridings in the final on Saturday, the 29th ultimo. The game was a pretty good one and very even, the result a draw with three points each. It was decided to replay the draw on Monday morning beginning at 6 o'clock ; but some dear, grandmotherly medical officer suggested sunstroke (before 7 A.M. mark it well !) and the meeting did not come off. The teams being unable to stay down in Madras longer forthwith returned to the City of Poor Men's Houses each agreeing to keep the Cup six months, the West Ridings having first call on it.

The King's Own Regiment beat the Y. M. C. A. in the Rangoon Rugby Tournament final on the 1st instant by a try to nil. The Y. M. played sixteen men during the first half !

London Week by Week.

Friday, 14th September 1906.

THE heat of which we complained so bitterly did not last very long : for the last few days we have had real autumn with cold nights and a nip in the morning air which harmonises with the falling leaves. Of news this week there is not much. His Majesty is returned home from Marienbad looking, as everybody agrees, remarkably well : and has been patronising Doncaster each day. There have been vague rumours afloat about the health of the Princess Royal, and yesterday it was announced by authority that she contracted a chill three weeks ago and that this was accompanied by high fever producing the inevitable weakness. Complications ensued, and last Monday Mr. Boyce Barrow and Dr. Abbott Anderson performed an operation since when H. R. H. has been making satisfactory progress. The nature of the operation is not specified : people talk of appendicitis, but that I suppose might be expected.

Mr. Haldane has produced a memorandum creating a General Staff for the Army. For particulars please be referred to the papers of yesterday which contain details of the scheme and Mr. Haldane's ideas of the uses and purposes of a General Staff. His scheme is based upon the recommendations of the Esher Committee of 1904, and is of course the subject of much criticism already. It seems a pity that he did not create his General Staff first and delegate to it the task of dealing with the army, but perhaps he knew that an efficient General Staff would insist upon keeping as much army as we had before the recent reductions. It would obviously never do to let the military requirements of the Empire interfere with the political requirements of a party.

The people of St. Helena are seriously disturbed at the prospect of withdrawal of the garrison from the island next month. The population, some 200 Europeans and 3,800 blacks and coloured people, literally depend on the garrison for a livelihood and the removal of the buyers of their farm produce spells ruin to them. Whether St. Helena deserves consideration as a factor in larger considerations it is not for the man-in-the-study to suggest, but it crosses one's mind that were we to find ourselves at war an enemy might find St. Helena and the station of the Eastern Telegraph Company distinctly useful.

It is now stated on "absolutely reliable authority" that the Government's Home Rule scheme for Ireland to be introduced next year provides for the acquisition of the premises occupied by the Bank of Ireland, these to be reconverted to their 18th century use as an Irish Parliament House. The old House in "College Green" has always been a sort of shrine in the eyes of Home Rulers and the Government ingeniously propose to offer the buildings as a sop to Nationalist sentiment which may atone for any shortcomings their new scheme may propose. It is reasonable to suppose that this project explains the fall in Bank of Ireland stock. In June it stood at 335 : this week it has continued its fall and stands at 324.

The Treasure seekers who sailed a few weeks ago in the Xema with sealed orders and mining plant for a diamondiferous island on the West Coast of Africa are not to have it all their own way. A syndicate has been formed at Capetown to organise an expedition which shall cut out the English party. Meantime the Cape Government surmising that the destination of both expeditions is one of the guano islands near Angra Pequena are issuing proclamation to forbid prospectors landing there at all. One would have thought a Government could make diamond seekers more profitable than guano diggers : indeed that it might be worth while allowing a few tons of guano to be spoiled in the richer quest : but perhaps the exceeding likelihood of a row between rival expeditions explains the prohibition.

The crowd on the banks and bridges last Saturday to watch the Cambridge-Harvard boat race was bigger than any that has assembled on the 'Varsities boat race day : and it was the very quietest crowd ever assembled. No cheering, no shouting : only a subdued murmur until the procession passed then there were transports and shouting enough for any one. Cambridge led from the start and so far as I could see and ascertain from friends Harvard never had a chance. The newspapers report very curiously : some bear out the view above expressed that Harvard were outclassed and that Cambridge might have won by ten lengths had they chosen : others affirm that the winners were rowing their hardest all the way and were completely done at the finish. It is well to show courtesy to the vanquished and this I think must explain the expression of the latter view.

"Mrs. Temple's Telegram" produced at the Waldorf on Monday proved to be a series of old friends worked up into a whole familiar enough fifteen or twenty years ago. Mr. Temple, of Curzon Street, Mayfair, was hung up all night on the Great Wheel at Earl's Court, but Mrs T. flatly refused to believe it : so Temple invented a friend Brown, resident at Pickleton-on-Thames, and induced an old friend, Fuller, who has just returned from abroad to be Brown. But Mrs. T. not wholly content with the Brown fiction has sent the telegram of the title and by strange coincidence it is delivered to Brown, coiffeur of Pickleton, who has often done Mrs. Temple's hair and believes the lady has fallen in love with him. Comes therefore Barber Brown, also Mrs. Brown, who has read the telegram and scents infidelity. The real Browns are dismissed as impostors when they arrive at Curzon Street, Fuller having been accepted as the right Brown : elucidation is provided by Mrs. Fuller, who calls at Curzon Street and is seen by Mrs. Temple falling into her husband's arms.

A cheerful bustling, improbable farce which seemed to please the house for all the antiquity of its machinery. For this I think credit must go to Mr. and Mrs. Morris, part author of the piece, who plays Fuller. He is delightful : calm, cool, grave, alert : he makes the wildest assertions and most incredible lies with such an air of conviction that his own belief in them seems manifest. He is a capital representative of the best type of American comedian. Excellent too was Mr. Victor Weddecombe as a comic manservant : he was a bit handicapped by his lines on occasion, but he got all the fun there is out of his part. Miss Sybil Carbile did Mrs. Temple, but a jealous, incredulous and rather vulgar woman is not well suited to her daintier methods.

The curtain raiser "His Child" is a powerful but gruesome and sordid piece of work and I was not sorry when the curtain shut out of my ken Nance and Liz and the troubles arising from the love of one man who had endued each with an illegitimate child. It was most admirably played, and if there are certain improbabilities in the piece, its intrinsic power sufficed to smooth these over.

I cannot say that Mrs. Dellápature (so the owner pronounces the name spelt De la Pasture) succeeds as well as a playwright as she does in the guise of novelist. There is careful delineation of character, clever dialogue and judicious manipulation of the puppetry in "Peter's Mother," but the average theatre-goer is not quite carried away by it. Truth to tell the play is dull : it starts gloomily and by the time the atmosphere begins to clear you are more inclined to look at your watch than the stage. Peter's Mother, Lady Mary, when hardly out of the nursery, married her pompous and selfish old guardian Sir Timothy Crewys, a Devonshire squire who had his own peculiarly narrow views of the duties of a wife. In Act I Sir Timothy is about to shuffle off this mortal coil what time Peter, his headstrong son, is starting for South Africa as a volunteer. Lady Mary is torn between her duty to her dying husband for whom she does not—and small blame to her—care a straw, and her desire to go and "see off" the idolised cub. Two years and more elapse and Peter comes home, minus an arm, plus a respectable war record and all or nearly all his deceased parent's unloveable qualities fully developed. Lady Mary, by this time, is prepared to console herself with John Crewys, Q.C., cousin of her first mate. She is only 37, but 37 is antiquity to one and twenty, and Peter does not or will not realise that his mother wants to marry again. The rest of the play consists of talk and the manœuvres of Sarah Howell, who gets engaged to Peter. Sarah does not want a mother-in-law hanging around, and favours the union with John Crewys : and so it works out in Act III.

* * * * * *

The weight of the play lies on the shoulders of Miss Marion Terry, who acts Lady Mary, and does it charmingly : but nothing could give the play vitality. There is too much talk : too many long and explanatory speeches in the style of early Victorian drama : these alone would handicap the piece heavily. Add thereto the inability to work up any interest in the love affairs of Peter and Peter's mother and you will realise that the thing drags.

The Alhambra presented a lively spectacle on Saturday night. The two largest boxes had been set apart for the Harvard and Cambridge crews and the men coming in rather late from the dinner at Prince's had a great reception. A feature of the programme was the series of biograph pictures of the race in the afternoon. This gave a remarkably good view of the whole race on a film 450 feet long carrying 16 pictures to the foot. The audience declined to leave the theatre without a speech: and at last in response to roars for "Cambridge" Mr. Scott, the cox, thanked the house and proposed cheers for Harvard.

The only novelty at the Halls that occurs to me is the appearance of Carl at the Empire. I thought when he came on that it was the familiar Little Tich parading in a new stage name. Carl is small: he wears those preposterous boots heretofore identified so closely with Little Tich: he is a born comedian and every whit as funny as the performer whose methods and mannerisms he has cultivated so carefully. The highest compliment one can pay him is to say that his faithful imitation of an established favourite is successively amusing: for if there is one thing a music hall audience will not have it is an unacknowledged imitation.

That sorry echo of the Tower of Babel yclept the Wembley Tower is being cleared away at last. Fifteen or sixteen years ago, the late Sir Edward Watkin, fired by the success of the Eiffel Tower, conceived the idea of erecting one a bit higher near London. An estate of 250 acres was bought at Wembley, a company was formed and 500 guineas was paid to the maker of the accepted design. Something over quarter of a million was wanted to rear the 1,200 feet of steel, and enough was subscribed to build the first storey 150 feet high: then supplies failed and there the Wembley Tower stuck. Messrs. Heenan and Froud, of Manchester, who had the contract for building it, have now the contract for clearing away the 3,000 tons of steal beams, struts and girders: they undertake to sweep the melancholy failure away within nine months.

Do you apruv of the nu sistem of fonetic spelling President Roosvelt supports for use in the United States? It appears to require the ellision of all letters that can possibly be dispensed with, and its supporters argue that it is merely anticipating inevitable change—even as we now spell "fysshe" fish. To drop again into reformed spelling some 300 words have been thoroly revised thruout and a catalog of them issued for the guidance of the Government printers in the States. Of course the case of America is exceptional: she has to assimilate a vast number of words from all European languages spoken by her great alien population. So had England in early times: but I see no advantage in reform by statute.

The L. C. C. have got possession of the embankment and have lost no time in destroying any pretensious to beauty it may have possessed. To accommodate the huge double-decked tram cars that are to be used—the lines running close alongside the pavements, the lime trees have been lopped and cropped till elementary commonsense suggests the obviously and preferable alternative of cutting them down altogether.

The population of these islands seems to be growing madder and madder. The Essex county lunatic asylum is so full that 500 patients have had to be distributed among other asylums about the country and a Lancashire Board of Guardians has urged the prohibition by statute of the mentally unsound. Wise Board of Guardians! but it is a delicate subject to handle.

Shikar.

AFTER TSINE.

THINKING I could fit in a couple of days after big game, I hurried up and did double marches till I got to X. in the P. distict, and getting in ahead of my transport, went and interviewed the Thoogyee who arranged for accommodation for me. All this time it had been pouring with rain. I got hold of two of my old shikaries who told me there were no bison about but plenty of tsine. They, however, expressed doubts as to its being any use in going out the next day if it did not clear up. Tracks in that district are absolutely wiped out in a few minutes when the rain means business, as I knew to my cost from previous visits. However the rain had stopped by nightfall and I decided to be off early in the morning. Luckily the morning was fine and we were on the tsine ground before daybreak. We soon picked up fresh tracks of a herd of eight with two bulls in it. The tracks were that of the evening before and were heading south by east to a very favourite jungle. By about 7 A.M. we were approaching a place that no tsine had passed without making a long stay in and I thought very likely we should find them there. It is a piece of sloping ground, giving an almost uninterrupted view for 300 yards north and south and about 200 yards east and west. A hill with steep sides covered with thick jungle enclosed it on the west, side, and a deep jungle-covered nullah bounds it on the east side.

We cautiously followed the tracks round the foot of the hill and saw no sign of the herd. But as they had spent several hours on the ground, it took us over an hour to find out where the tracks led out. The whole place was a maze of tracks, they had had been walking up and down to and fro, then they had apparently made up their minds to clear off, but after going a hundred yards, they had wheeled round and come back again and so forth and so on. No tracks crossed the nullah, a broad one and dry, either. At last I heard a low whistle and saw one of my men on the far side of the nullah about fifty yards down it. We crossed over and found he had got the tracks. The only way I can account for this is, that just after the tsine had walked down the nullah and then crossed it, a freshet caused by rain north of us must have swept down and washed the tracks out. The tracks then led on over undulating, rocky ground through fine jungle. Their big leaves are a source of trouble to the would-be shikari, as they make a most infernal noise if touched and one has to go very carefully. I passed the place where I had got an old solitary bull on my last visit, caught him asleep. The droppings we came across sometimes looked perfectly fresh and at other times the beetles had nearly covered them up.

We had just passed some beetle covered droppings and I then handed my rifle over to one of my men, as I thought we must be a long way behind the track, entered a dip and separated, some of the cows going straight on, one bull and some cows going to the right over a little eminence below which ran a nullah, and the other bull and some cows going to the left, I went to the right to have a look, one of my shikaries went to the left, the other shikari went straight on with my rifle. The fool of a man carrying my cooking pot and food had unnoticed by us walked straight on and was in front of the shikari carrying my rifle. I saw nothing in the nullah and concluded the tracks had wound round and gone on to where the two cow tracks led. I was walking back, when I heard a loud snort and saw the man with the rifle beckoning to me from behind a tree, with the idiotic coolie standing in the open staring to his front, I ran quietly down the hollow, I was wearing ropesoled boots and up to where my rifle was and got hold of it, just in time to see a fine bull with two cows behind him make off and out of sight instantly.

It was then 11 o'clock, and if ever I felt that manslaughter was justifiable, I felt it then. The brute coolie walked slop into the herd, who was not ten yards from him, if he had only used his eyes and stopped behind the tree, I could hardly have failed to bag a bull. They were grazing only fifteen yards off where the shikari was standing, but as the coolie was in front of him and on higher ground he was unable to stop him, before he disturbed the herd, as of course the herd would be visible first to the man who ascended first. I could not see them from the little eminence I had been on. As there was a stream close by, I decided to feed and with the aid of a fire soon had the cooking pot boiling. I believe in a decent meal if you are doing hard work and cold meat, bread, vegetables, and erbswurst with plenty of water added and then the whole lot boiled together, make you feel fit to go on again. My men always get about two-thirds of the contents, I always hand it over to them when I have had my whack. Burmans will eat anything a white man will and are very pleased to get it, especially these jungle wallahs. After an hour's rest we went on after the herd and came up with them again, but a loud galloping noise was all the satisfaction we got. They had been surprised once and were wary. I believe they only snort when they view an enemy, otherwise when they get one's wind or noise, they simply bolt. However they always pull up after going a hundred yards or so and stand and gaze and then off again, repeating it three or four times and then settling down to gallop. I have tried running after them and have found them at gaze, but as they always spot one first, all one gets is a view of a whirl of reddish dun bodies and white hindquarters, so I never run after them now. One's shikari on these occasions, as indeed whenever you catch the faintest glimpse of a bison or tsine, invariably urges one to "Pyit! Pyit Tsine ponkgyee!" regardless of the fact whether it is a bull or not. Apparently imagining one can direct the rifle correctly from any position. What they want is the meat and skin, and cow or bull makes no odds to them.

Well, about 3 P.M. I decided to chuck as the herd were going due east and we had several miles to cover before we reached the village, which we did just about dark. During the day we had passed old tracks all going south or south-east and none going north. So I decided to go out southwards the next day. I found I could not stop my transport for another day, as we had to arrive by a certain date which I had forgotten at first. So my transport went on. This seemed all right as all the tracks led towards my next camp, if I did a single stage, about ten miles, but by crossing the hills I could halve that.

I again made an early start and got well into the south and south-east jungles. To my disgust we passed the fresh tracks of two herds going north and going on found more fresh tracks, all leading north. It would have been impossible for me to have gone north and then south over the hills to my next camp in the one day. So we decided to make a big cast round, but up to 9 A.M., found no fresh tracks leading south.

After a consultation we determined to go straight away south to another lot of tsine jungles, as a case of kill or cure, if we did not find them there about six miles away, we should have to chuck. While going along, we heard a crackling in the jungle close beside us. I got my rifle and crawled into a thick bit of jungle and then clearish ground with a few big trees. I got along behind one of these and heard the noise close to me, a cow tsine came out, and I got quite close up to her and knelt down behind a tree. She passed along and then three more cows, but no bull. One of my men had come up to me and we followed the cows cautiously, they were walking at a goodish pace. Going to lead me to the bull I thought. After following them for about 200 yards, they disappeared. We cast all round and then one of my men spotted the whole crowd, six cows and not a bull with them and no bull tracks anywhere. So we left them to go north and went on south and came across, shortly afterwards, fresh tracks of a solitary bull tsine. These soon led into a dense bit of jungle, pretty nearly pitch black, and I went forward cautiously thinking he would be lying up in this bit. After going along bent down for about 20 paces, I heard a snort and immediately went down on my knee and glared into the darkness, but could see nothing and hear nothing. Suddenly, before I could come to the present, a black mass flashed from behind a bamboo clump and disappeared. There was no more noise and I came to the conclusion I had run into an old bull bison, who was waiting behind one of the clumps of bamboo about 20 or 30 paces from me. So I advanced cautiously, ready to fire the moment he came at me. I went on like this for about 50 yards, nothing happened, and I came out into clearer jungle. My men were close up to me and we could not make out where the animal had gone. I told them it was a bison I had seen. They then began to cast round and found the galloping tracks of the bull tsine but no bison tracks. How the tsine had managed to get away so quietly, I could not make out. My men said he was still in the thick stuff till we found his tracks leading out of it. I should say, in the majority of cases where people say they have seen black tsine, it was in dense jungle where everything looked black. I have no doubt but that this tsine was the ordinary colour, but owing to its being a cloudy day and the dense jungle he was in he looked black and very big, just the glimpse I caught of him.

Shortly after, while following up his tracks, we came across he fresh tracks of a couple of big bull tsine going our way i.e., south. So we turned off and followed them. It was very hard work tracking them as they kept more or less along the edge of a rocky range, running nearly north and south but bearing slightly east from us. The hills we had to cross to camp ran parallel with them and I was in hopes they would head for this ridge, as they did in fact several times, but always turned back to their original line. By about 3 P.M., we were evidently nearing them and I was in hopes of getting a shot. They had lain down once but moved on again. Suddenly to my disgust they turned due east and began climbing in real earnest. We topped that spur and then I could see the real range. If one wanted to get into it, it would be necessary to camp out, on the spur we were on and then start early to get back the same day. My men said that having come thus far the bulls would not stop till they reached the top, so I had reluctantly to chuck it as we had six to eight miles to go and climb the range I mentioned before as lying between us and camp. We got into camp about 7 P.M. I stopped en route for a drink of water and a buck with an old shikari, whose village lay on the far side of the ridge. He walked the remaining three or four miles into my camp with me, where I believe I gave him a tin of bully beef or something of that sort, as he gave me a lot of information about the jungles round his village. He used to live in X., but had moved south. He said he would put me up and show me a lot of tsine and bison any time I come his way. His son was one of the shikaries I had had out with me both days.

THE PRESERVING OF TIGERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Just before Parliament rose for the recess, Mr. Rees asked for the discontinuance of the rewards for tiger killing, on the plea that these beasts kept down the number of deer and other animals which damaged crops. The worthy legislator evidently does not read the annual butchers' bill of human beings and cattle, run up by the cat tribe. We shall next have someone proposing a pinjrapole for infirm crocodiles, homes for indigent cobras and places of refuge for scorpions, etc. It would do Mr. Rees, and others who think like him, good to take a boat trip through the Sunderbunds and note the number of bamboos displaying the ominous strips of red rag, indicating where some unlucky wood-cutter has fallen a prey to the creatures this ultra philantropist would protect.

A THREE-HORNED CHITAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I should be glad to hear whether you have ever heard of a three-horned chital.

This animal I shot in the Central Provinces had three distinct horns,—three bony pedicles, and three burrs, and skin in between all three horns. It had one horn on the offside, two on the near side. Measurements: offside horn 29½ inches, near side horn 30 inches, near side horn 20½ inches, not bifurcated at top. The third (small) horn was outside, had a brow antler, but was not bifurcated at the top. The other two are ordinary natural chital horns.

The animal itself was very large as it stood 39 inches at the shoulder and length tip to tail along the body was 73½ inches.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can any of your readers kindly give me any information as to the cost of living in New Zealand.

Would it come cheaper to take a small house or live in lodgings?

If in lodgings, cost of board, attendance, sundry, beer and spirits, etc.?

If a house is taken what about the wages of servants, how many can one do with? Any information about food, lighting, firing, and cost of clothes would be welcome.

Could a couple live on Rs. 250 a month quietly but comfortably?

A MEMBER OF THE MONGHYR CLUB.

Commercial enterprise had made rapid strides within the memory of the present generation. It is not long ago that during times of sickness or when appetite flagged and ordinary foods were not relished the sufferer had to be his own caterer. Beef-tea, the mainstay of the sick room, had to be prepared at home and with very poor results as a rule. Now, however, this one-time luxury is obtainable from every grocer or chemist in the form of Bovril with the important advantage that Bovril comprises the whole of the valuable properties of beef, both stimulating and nourishing, whereas beef-tea, even in its best form possesses no nutritive value as has been pointed out repeatedly by members of the medical profession.

Bovril is particularly useful as a gastric tonic and is relished and easily assimilated when appetite flags, but it is also much in vogue in many quarters for the enrichment of soups and other made dishes to which it gives an appetising flavour as well as increased nutritive value.

BETTING : 6 to 4 agst. Gowan, 5 to 2 Marie Lloyd, 3 to 1 Starlight, 4 to 1 Playful, 15 to 1 Fairyland.

Mr. Price was taking no chances and soon established Marie Lloyd in the best position on the inside, Gowan and Starlight close up. Entering the straight Starlight made a great effort and beating Gowan went after Marie Lloyd. The latter, however, full of running went on most gamely and won by a length and a half. Marie Lloyd was claimed after the race under the condition of the meeting, for Rs. 2,000, by H. H. the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, so that Mr. Price has lost his honest and gallant mare.

KAKINA POLO SCURRY.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by Raj Kumar of Kakina. For all bonâ fide polo ponies, which have been regularly played during the current season in the Darjeeling and Jalpaiguri districts. Best of three heats without leaving the saddle. Biddy was quickest away, followed by Pink 'Un, with Kudos close up. This order was maintained till the second lap where Pink 'Un went to the front, and keeping there eventually won by a length, Sir John coming up with a strong run at the finish just beat Biddy for second place.

THE COOCH BEHAR CUP.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by H. H. the Maharaja of Cooch Behar. For English and Australians 13-3 and under and Arabs and C.-B.'s 14-1 and under that have not won a race value Rs. 50 or over, since 31st January 1903. Mr. W. E Tayler's ch e g Tangerine, 10st. 10lbs.	Owner 0

BETTING : Evens Grand Slam, 6 to 4 agst. Home Rule, 3 to 1 each Gozo and Tangerine, 6 to 1 Constellation

Home Rule and Constellation raced together for the first lap with Gozo handy, but towards the end of the second lap Mr. Evers let Gozo go and he sailed passed the leaders eventually winning easily by a length.

Second Day, Thursday, 27th September 1906.

The card to-day did not provide anything out of the common in the way of racing, for with the exception of the great race between Tangerine and Chimes in the Chowrasta Handicap, the other wins were simply runaway affairs. An enormous crowd of spectators was again present, and must have done well on results as all the best backed ones got there. That great little pony Playful promises to turn out the champion of the meeting, as he did last May. He won his two races to-day with his mouth open and without turning a hair. The weather was very doubtful to commence with, and the Polo Race was run in a shower of rain and impenetrable mist. However, it cleared up after this and the rest of the card was run under the best of conditions. Details :—

HURLINGHAM VASE.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by Mr. J. C. Galstaun. A handicap for all bonâ-fide polo ponies which have been regularly played during the current season in the Darjeeling and Jalpaiguri districts. 1 lap.

Capt. M. V. Le P. Trench's ch w g Nino, 10st.	Owner 1
H. H. The Maharajah of Cooch Behar's ch aus g Carrots, 11st.	Capt. Wilson 2
Maharaj-Kumar Victor Narayan's ch aus g Locke, 11st.	Capt. Whish 3

BETTING : Evens Locke, 6 to 4 agst. Carrots, 4 to 1 Nino.

Unfortunately a false start in which Locke and Carrots completed the course, deprived them of whatever chance they had when they were eventually sent off. The fresh Nino was quickest off when the start was made and keeping ahead won comfortably by a length.

HIMALAYAN PURSE.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49. A handicap for all ponies 14-1 and under that have never won a race value Rs. 200 or over since 31st January 1903. 2 laps.

Capt. J. H. Bowes-Wilson's b aus g Playful, 9st. 12lbs.	Owner 1

Mr. L. J. Oakley's b aus g Home Rule, 8st. 4lbs.	Native 0

BETTING : Evens Country Boy, 2 to 1 agst. Playful, 2½ to 1 Chimes, 4 to 1 Home Rule.

Playful slipped his field and was soon well away in front followed at intervals by Country Boy and Chimes. At the far side Chimes went up to Country Boy and passing him went on in pursuit of the leader. Playful, however, continued going strong and romped home an easy winner by two lengths.

THE COMMISSIONER'S CUP.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by the Commissioner of Bhagulpur. For all ponies bonâ-fide the property of residents in the Darjeeling and Jalpaiguri districts. W. I. 14-1 to carry 12st. 7lbs. 2 laps.

Mrs. C. V. Humphry's b aus g Monarch, 11st. 3lbs.		0

BETTING: 6 to 4 on Gozo, 2 to 1 agst. Grand Slam, 8 to 1 Sir John, 10 to 1 Monarch.

A typical Indian file affair, Gozo leading and the rest following at intervals of two and three lengths. This order was maintained to the finish and was a sorry spectacle as a race.

THIBET STAKES.—For a Cup, value Rs 49, presented by the European Tradesmen (Messrs. Francis, Harrison, Hathway and Company, Messrs. Eroom and Company, Messrs. Newman and Company, Messrs. Smith, Stanistreet and Company.) A handicap for all Bhutias. 3 laps.

Mr. S. B. Hingun's g b pony Tibet, 7st. 7lbs.	Mr. Manly	1

Mr. Manley's gr bh g Lucky Boy, 7st. 7lbs.	Native	0
Mr. K. C. Gyalpa's br bh g Tiger, 9st. ...	Native	0

BETTING: Evens each Tiger and Tibet, 4 to 1 agst. Paddy, 8 to Charlie, 15 to 1 Lucky Boy.

Tiger was first away with Tibet close up followed by Paddy, and Charlie. At the turn near the stand Tiger cut the course, and Tibet went on with Paddy plodding after him well in the rear. Entering the straight Tibet had such a clear lead that he cantered on to the post eventually winning by four lengths; Charlie a length behind Paddy.

CHOWRASTA HANDICAP.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49. A handicap for Arabs and C.-B.'s 14-1 and under, others 13-3½ and under, that have never won a stake previous to this meeting value Rs. 40 or over. 2 laps.

Mr. A. A. Price's b aus m Chimes, 11st. ...	Mr. Evers	1
Mr. W. E. Tayler's ch e g Tangerine, 10st. 7lbs.	Owner	2
Capt. M. V. Le P. Trench's ch w g Nino, 11st.	Owner	3
Mr. A. F. Harvey's b cb g Kudos, 8st. ...	Mr. Manly	0

BETTING: 6 to 4 on Tangerine, 2 to 1 agst. Chimes, 4 to 1 each Kudos and Nino.

Tangerine was quickest off the mark followed by Chimes, and these two had the race to themselves. At the far corner Chimes challenged and a great finish ensued. Both of them were at it ding dong all the way home, Chimes getting the best of a desperate race by a head.

THE CURIO CUP.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by Mr. N. M. Master. Handicap for Arabs and C.-B.'s 14-1 and under, others 13-3½ and under, that have never won a race value Rs. 200 or over. 3 laps.

Capt. J. H. Bowes-Wilson's b aus g Playful, 9st. 9lbs.	Owner	1
Messrs. Daunt and Cresswell's b cb g Gozo, 8st. 6lbs.	Mr. Evers	2
Mr. A. J. Shillingford's b aus m La Cigale, 11st. 11lbs.	Mr. Metcalfe	3
Mr. L. J. Oakley's b aus g Home Rule, 8st. 8lbs.	Native	0

BETTING: Evens Gozo, 2 to 1 agst. Playful, 2½ to 1 La Cigale, 4 to 1 Home Rule.

Gozo got on the inside and held a useful lead for half the journey from La Cigale, when Playful, who had been lying handy, commenced to work his way up. Passing La Cigale near the stand the second time round, he challenged Gozo at the far turn, and the latter gave way allowing Playful to go on and win as he liked.

THE REGIMENTAL PLATE.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by the Officers of the 1st Battalion, Duke of Wellington's Regiment. A handicap for all ponies that have run on the First Day. 3 laps.

Mr. A. J. Shillingford's dun aus g Fairyland II., 8st. 9lbs.	Mr. Manly	1
Mr. Roland's ch aus m Gowan, 10st. 10lbs.	Mr. Chater	2
Mr. W. E. Tayler's b e g Country Boy, 9st. 10lbs.	Owner	3

BETTING: 6 to 4 on Fairyland, evens Gowan, 4 to 1 agst. Country Boy.

Fairyland whipped away at the drop of the flag, and getting half a dozen lengths in advance kept there to the finish; Gowan half a dozen lengths in front of Country Boy. This race was not a good example of the art of handicapping.

Third Day, Saturday, 29th September 1906.

The meeting wound up to-day most successfully. The weather was not all that could be desired, but it did not prevent a very large crowd from being present. Most owners have had a share of the loaves and fishes, and the public have had nineteen first or second favorites in twenty-two races. Captain Wilson's Playful has done best at the meeting, as he did last May; and Gozo has won a race each day, while top place for riding is easily secured by Mr. Evers with five wins, and a place in every other race he rode in. Young Mr. Manly also secured five wins, three of them being in the local Bhutia races, on a different mount each day. Everything that could be done for the convenience of the public, owners, and ponies competing was well carried out by the indefatigable Secretary, Mr. Kenneth Mackenzie, and everything went like the proverbial bell from beginning to end. The following are the particulars:—

THE BURDWAN CUP.—A Consolation Race—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by the Maharaj-Adhiraj of Burdwan. A handicap for all ponies 14-1 and under that have run but not won at the meeting. 2 laps.

Mr. W. E. Tayler's ch e g Tangerine, 10st.	Owner	1
Mr. L. J. Oakley's b aus g Home Rule, 8st.	Mr. Manly	2
Mr. A. F. Harvey's b cb g Kudos, 7st. ...	Native	3

BETTING: Evens Tangerine, 6 to 4 agst. Home Rule, 3 to 1 Kudos

Tangerine got away on the inside at the outset, and making all his own running got home an easy winner by a length.

GARRISON STAKES.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by Mr. R. Pymm. A handicap for all ponies 14-1 and under belonging to members of the Garrisons of Lebong and Jalaphar and Volunteers. 1 lap.

Mr. E. M. Liddell's dk br w g Sir John, 10st. 6lbs.	Owner	1
Capt. M. V. Le P. Trench's ch w g Constellation, 11st. 4lbs.	Owner	2
Mr. C. G. Smith's b aus g Swagger, 11st.	Mr. Evers	3
Mr. A. A. Price's b aus g Grand Slam, 11st. 8lbs.	Owner	0

BETTING: 4 to 6 on Grand Slam, 3 to 1 each agst. Constellation and Sir John, 4 to 1 Swagger.

Grand Slam behaved very badly to-day and bolted on the two occasions he was brought to the starting point. When he was brought back again Mr. Price dismounted, and they were eventually sent off without him. Constellation was first away, and led till the bend entering the straight when Sir John went up and challenged. A capital race ensued right up to the post, Sir John gradually forging ahead and securing the verdict by a half length.

EVEREST STAKES.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by Messrs. Krieg and Co. A handicap for all Bhutia ponies. 3 laps.

Mr. K. C. Gyalpa's br bh g Tiger, 9st. 7lbs.	Mr. Manly	1
Mr. Roland's d bh g Paddy	Mr. Chater	2
Mr. S. B. Hingun's g bh pony Tibet, 8st. 7lbs.	Native	3
Mr. R. Dunne's dun bh g Charlie, 6st. 7lbs.	Native	0
Mr. Manly's gr bh g Lucky Boy, 6st. 7lbs.	Native	0

BETTING: Evens Tiger, 2 to 1 agst. Tibet, 3 to 1 Paddy, 15 to 1 each Charlie and Lucky Boy.

Tibet was the first to break the line with Paddy and Tiger close up, and there was no alteration in this position till the second lap, when Tiger was sent up and wrested the lead from Tibet. Paddy made a great effort at the third round and passed Tibet, but could never get on any terms with Tiger, who sailed home an easy winner by a couple of lengths.

THE KHAGRA CUP.—For a Cup, value Rs. 49, presented by Mohiuddin Meerza. A handicap for all ponies 14-1 and under, which have run in the Lieutenant 2 Governor's Cup or the Regimental Plate. 2 laps.

Capt. J. H. Bowes-Wilson's b aus g Playful, 10st.	Owner	1

Mr Kelso's Hermit won the Ghorpuri Plate and the Kirkee Plate, while the Aga Khan's stable also supplied a couple of winners—Ajax in the Turf Club Cup and Grey Falcon in the Idar Plate. (FROM THE HOME PAPERS.)

LONDON, Friday, 14th September 1906.

KEMPTON PARK.

SUNSHINE smiled on the scene, last Friday, the attendance was a good one all round, and backers did not do so badly, the best satisfied of all being Lord Rosebery, who, beamed all over with good nature when Bezonian, after a desperate race, had upset the public idol, Galvani. Several other prominent patrons of the national sport were present in the paddock, and, taken all round, the one-day meeting was such a success as to make it desirable that, instead of a day apiece, the two big sister meetings should alternate year by year in a two days' meeting.

DONCASTER.

The welcome presence of the King, the guest of Lord and Lady Savile, at Rufford Abbey, turned the attention of England to the Town Moor, which this week, for all who are interested in the sport of kings, becomes like Boston to the Americans, the hub, of creation, and all who can get there do so.

The veteran sportsman, who noted the enormous attendance for a Tuesday, could indeed wonder what it would be like on Leger day. The long row of stands was crowded, and so was the enlarged structure on the far side, while the holiday folk trooped in thousands over the heather and furze-clad moor which sadly wants rain, and though the course, on which a vast amount of labour and care in watering had been lavished, was in better condition, all the artificial watering in the world is scarcely as efficacious as a good soaking rain. Right along the greener edge the far crowd stretched to the Intake turn, tents and various structures raising their heads above the black and white riband, while the coaching and carriage brigade was densely packed, and locomotion almost impossible in Tattersall's and the further enclosure. A record attendance indeed!

Linacre fly-jumped when the webbing ascended, thereby losing a couple of lengths, and Slieve Gallion dashed away in advance of Candahar on the right, Bezonian on the left, heading Rockbourne and Weatherock, My Pet II., lying next. Coming to the bend for home Slieve Gallion was showing out with a three lengths' lead of Candahar, who dropped away beaten. Shortly afterwards Bezonian became the nearest attendant upon the favourite, who came striding on apace, and though My Pet II. raced throughout at the distance after being much interfered with, and took second place, nothing could make the slightest impression on Slieve Gallion, who made all the running, and won by a couple of lengths; a length and a half divided second and third. Weatherock was fourth, Candahar (ran fast) fifth, and Linacre last throughout. Time—1min. 9⅖secs.

The sight on Wednesday was an impressive one, tight packing everywhere; and when the horses passed the stands the flash of so many faces all turning in the same direction was most peculiarly striking. Tuesday's enormous number was put in the shade, patrician and proletarian alike doing justice to the occasion, honoured by the presence of that thorough sportsman, King Edward the VII., and general regret was expressed that His Majesty had nothing good enough this year to carry the Royal jacket in the Leger. The county and grand stands were a blaze of beauty, the dainty toilettes of the fair sex, numerously represented, lending lustre to the mise en scène, and at their feet a mass of humanity seethed and struggled inside the spacious area enclosed by the railings, while the long tiers of cheaper stands, and the wide strip of ground up to the Intake turn was as difficult to traverse as a crowd in front of the hustings on the declaration of the poll. A phalanx of motors attested to the growing popularity of the flying monster, and right glad must their occupants have been to exchange the dusty country roads for the cool, tarred thoroughfares of Doncaster, where dust does not corrupt. Four-in-hands, barouches, phaetons, gigs, and id genus omne made an inspiring show, and in continuity a handy plateau from which generous hosts lavished hearty hospitality to enviable friends. A cheer some time after one announced the arrival of the Rufford Abbey party, headed by His Majesty, who, looking remarkably well, seemed very pleased at the hearty Yorkshire welcome, and with the seal of Royal approval, every man present felt the satisfaction of feeling that he was doing his duty to king and country. It was wonderful to see how good the going was after such a parching season, though the dust began to be beaten out of the turf.

Keystone II. and Troutbeck were saddled at the stables, but soon after entering the paddock the order came, "Mount, please, jockeys," and Lynham threw a leg over Malua, then Gingal, Prince William, and Beppo were next got ready, and the dozen runners were marshalled for the parade without incident, the preliminary canter being led by George IV. from Malua and

Gorgos, the first pair to line up at the gate being Beppo and Plum Tree, whilst a delay of fourteen minutes was occasioned by the temper displayed by Storm, whilst others fidgetty were Troutbeck and Keystone II. The Duke of Westminster's colt was well on his legs when the lever was handled, and trotting up to his horses, was, with Keystone II., the best off the mark, whilst Storm, George IV., Prince William and Gorgos hung fire, and got more or less badly away. When finding the balance of their stride, Troutbeck raced away in front of Beppo, the pair making a sound pace for Keystone II., who was closely attended by Harriet and Malua, then at an interval came Gingal and Haytor, whilst laying several lengths off came Gorgos and Plum Tree, the last three being Prince William, George IV., and Storm. Going up the hill Troutbeck was showing out a length from Beppo, who in turn was separated by double that distance from Keystone II. and Malua, whilst Gingal, who had commenced slowly, was moving up in front of Gorgos and Prince William, with Storm next, and Harriet now dropping into the ruck. Reappearing over the rise, Troutbeck was still at the head of affairs, having increased the advantage slightly over Beppo, whilst side by side came Keystone II., and Malua, and after a gap of three lengths came Gingal and Gorgos, behind whom lay Prince William. Haytor was now last, excepting the beaten-off Harriet. At the Red House Beppo reduced Troutbeck's lead, whilst Malua had deprived Keystone II. of third place, Plum Tree and Gorgos being the next pair in advance of Prince William and Gingal. At the five furlong starting-point Beppo had drawn almost upsides with Troutbeck, with Keystone II. well up on the rails, in front of Prince William, Gingal, and Gorgos. Rounding the Intake turn Gingal ran a trifle wide, and bumped and carried out Gorgos, and Troutbeck came on with a very slight lead of Beppo, who actually headed him 200 yards from home, but immediately dropped back again, and though Prince William came with a wet sail inside the distance, Troutbeck battled the finish out in the gamest possible style, and won a shade luckily, amid a tornado of cheers, by a head; a similar distance divided second and third. Keystone II. (always prominent) a neck away was placed fourth by the judge, Haytor fifth, then two lengths off came Storm (badly away) sixth, Malua (ran well) seventh, Plum Tree eighth, Gingal ninth, Gorgos tenth, and Harriet (beaten off) last. Time—3mins. 4½ secs.

One cannot continue the pursuit of business or pleasure at high pressure without a bit of a rest, and it came for some inscrutable reason at Doncaster on the Portland Plate day, when a comparative handful of spectators replaced the battalions that had hardly left a vacant inch of grass from the winning post up to the Red House on both sides of the course, were replaced by skeleton regiments, most of whose members had gone on furlough. The defeat of one of the most popular favourites in the Leger—a shattered idol—had something to do with this state of affairs, as after a general débâcle Yorkshire took a metaphorical spell at itself, but another important factor was the fact that His Majesty had also taken a rest, and society did the same. Before the second race the promised rain sent everyone to shelter, coming down steady fashion to tell of a reservoir in store. Of course umbrellas were scarce and the charm of a September afternoon was a bit marred, mild enough to stave off the evil day of greatcoats, which will soon become an adjunct to a racing kit. The going was harder, of course, but not so bad after all, and the card, including the Portland Plate, an appetising one.

ROWING.

CAMBRIDGE vs. HARVARD.

The International 'Varsity eight-oared race between Cambridge and Harvard, over the University course on the Thames, from Putney to Mortlake, resulted, as the Light Blues anticipated, in their victory by two lengths. It looked at one time as though the winning distance would be greater, but Harvard sported grandly in last three hundred yards and reduced their opponents' advantage considerably. An ideal day was obtained for such a struggle—bright and fine so although the wind was rather against the crews it was light and variable, and left scarcely anything to be desired. There was, therefore, nothing in the stations, and the race was fought out in a most sportsmanlike fashion.

A big crowd was expected, and duly arrived. Before eleven o'clock there was quite a large gathering to see the crews take a pipe-opener on the ebb tide. Opinions were still very varied as to the chances of the rival sets of oarsmen. Some people thought Cambridge rowed very well, and showed beautiful polish, while others declared they were unsteady, and looked too fine-drawn in appearance. The tide was late in turning, but when it did get round it came up in smart fashion. The towpath at Putney was crowded with people all along the half-mile between the Bridge and Ashlone-road, and certainly when the race started the banks of the river presented such a sight as had never previously been witnessed in the memory of the proverbial oldest inhabitant.

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.

Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses

Preparations for the race were made early. The toss for choice of stations resulted in the Cambridge president winning, and he chose the Surrey side. A departure from the ordinary course of procedure was made in regard to the starting of the racing boats. Harvard claimed to be started by Tom Gibson, who has been starting them in all their sprints; so Cambridge put in a claim to provide their own starter, in the person of Doggett Cobb. The arrangement was mutually agreed. Some of the launches that followed the race took up their positions an hour and a half before the appointed time to start, 4-30. The Hibernia carried Mr. R. C. Lehmann, the umpire, and the Maritana was her attendant. All the boats were tremendously crowded, but all were able to follow the race, without the slightest mishap. The wind had been shifting about a little, but did not promise to present any great difficulty by fighting the tide, and as a matter of fact the crews had smooth water to row in from start to finish.

At a quarter past four, Harvard, as challengers, got afloat from the London R. C. They had just left the hard when the Light Blues appeared, and each crew reached their starting boat well before 4-30. The actual time of the start of the race was really a little before the half-hour had struck.

Cambridge, as expected, went off in splendid style. They rowed 10 strokes in the first 15secs., 19 in the first half-minute, and 39 in the full minute. Against this Harvard showed a stroke more in the first 15secs., 20 in the half-minute, and 38 in the full minute. The Americans adopted these tactics with a view of trying to hold their opponents from the start. In this they failed, as the Cantabs began to show in the lead in a very few strokes. At the Duke's Head they were a quarter-length to the good, and at the London flagstaff the Cambridge coxswain was level with the Harvard bow man. It was a fine race to watch, and the crowd both on the Fulham embankment and the Putney towpath cheered vociferously.

After the first minute Stuart dropped to 34, but still kept getting away, although Harvard were rowing very hard, and even in the Putney Reach the result of the race was prognosticated successfully. The Light Blues were nicely clear at the half-mile, and reached the Craven Steps in 2mins. 19secs. from the start. Scott steered rather wide from that point to the mile on the Surrey side, and his example was followed by Blagden. Cambridge were still going away, and led by two and a half lengths when they "touched" the Mile Post, which is 125 yards short of the full mile over this course. This the Cambridge crew had rowed in 4mins. 7secs. Between this point and Hammersmith Bridge Cambridge considerably increased their lead; they were three lengths ahead at Harrod's and a little more at Hammersmith Bridge. Time—7mins. 23secs.

Harvard were still pulling along gamely, but had dropped to 33 to the minute, at which stroke they were giving more like their practice form than they had done at the start. A slight headwind prevailed up Chiswick, but the water was still good, and the crews made excellent progress on the fast flowing tide. All the way from start to finish of the course the banks of the river were black with spectators, who showed tremendous enthusiasm. At Chiswick Church, which the leaders reached in 11mins. 51secs., Cambridge were four lengths to the good; and although Harvard spurted gamely along the Devonshire Meadows, they could make little impression upon their opponents. Still, the gap between the boats was not so wide at Barnes Bridge. It was calculated at three lengths, the time returned being 16mins. 5secs. Harvard were rowing in good shape, but after going through the bridge Blagden failed to take the full advantage of the bend on the Middlesex station and the boat got in behind Cambridge, who looked a good four lengths in front of the White Hart.

Still the Americans had not given up all hopes. Filley spurted up to 35, and kept his crew going at that right to the finish. They certainly pulled up well, but Cambridge had the race in hand, and scarcely increasing their stroke from the 32 per minute which they had been rowing for the major portion of the journey, the Light Blues won well, by two lengths. This was the verdict by the distance judge, Mr. Fred Fenner, of the London R. C. The time for the distance was 19mins. 18secs., which is good, but well outside record.

Cambridge showed beautiful form throughout, and fully justified the confidence they felt in themselves. Their light mode of training, which was objected to by some people, was undoubtedly a good one with men who had undertaken so much practice work and race rowing during the last twelve months, and Messrs. S. D. Muttlebury and F. J. Escombe, the coaches, are to be congratulated on such a satisfactory result.

Harvard certainly rowed up to their good trials form, but were chopped at the start. Yet afterwards they regained it and finished the race in good shape, although losers. President Goldsmith, at the subsequent dinner, testified to the American crew's excellence by the remark: "We rowed every stroke as hard as we could." Mr. R. C. Lehmann, M.P., also heartily congratulated Harvard on the splendid way they finished the race. Colonel Willan, the chairman, was equally complimentary, and all rowing men of sound judgment agreed that for a losing crew Harvard rowed splendidly.

ATHLETICS.

S.L.H. AUTUMN MEETING.

Although in the Metropolis there are many athletic and cycling clubs, unhappily there are, from various circumstances, few able to promote sport on the same gigantic scale as that which has for a number of years past, been associated with the South London Harriers, and made their name famous.

Not only are the "Irrepressibles" fortunate in their ability to obtain the use of a first-class ground for their meetings, but they also invariably succeed in submitting a programme which appeal to the masses. Insatiable as the public appetite is for good things, the most exacting person must have been well pleased with the bill of fare provided by the S.L.H. on Saturday at Kennington Oval on the occasion of their autumn athletic and cycling meeting.

Ten events, embracing three hours and three-quarters sport, for which there were 578 competitors, made up the programme, which, although lengthy, was perfectly engineered, and certainly yielded some of the best racing of the kind seen in the South of England this season. Doubtless the Cambridge vs. Harvard Boat Race attracted many who would otherwise have patronised the S.L.H. meeting. England prides itself on its patriotism, and in that respect probably the boat race had a stronger claim upon the people. For all that, there were about 8,000 at the Oval, and it goes without saying that another success was scored by the popular club upon which it is to be warmly congratulated.

As regards the flat racing events, the outstanding features were the meritorious performances, from their marks, of W. Coales, Thrapston C. C., and H. M. C. Ledger, Ipswich Burton A. C. The former a diminutive Northants runner, possessing plenty of grit, gained the easiest victory of the day in the three miles handicap, off 60 yards, in good time. Though only twenty years of age, Coales is not a novice. During the three years he has been on the track he has been fairly successful in the Midlands, and the good opinion formed of him by the handicapper in this race was fully justified by the result. The winner will be a champion before long, and wear the colours of a prominent London club.

We have seen several very fast half-miles run at the Oval, but we do not remember a race over that distance being won in the remarkably fast time in which H. M. C. Ledger got home on Saturday. He started off 60 yards it is true; but A. Astley, the champion, would have been run of his legs in trying to concede such a start in 1min. 53⅗secs.

The final of the sprint, well taken by P. White (Highgate H.), furnished a surprise. The form of other men in the preliminary heats pointed to some one else as the likely winner. A further surprise was forthcoming in the 250 yards race, in which J. B. Densham displayed exceptional form and beat a good field.

Herne Hill H gave another taste of their quality when it comes to inter-team racing over a mile on level terms, and F. A. Knott (S.L.H.), who proved the fleetest taking part in the race, ran well to do 4mins. 26⅖secs.

At relay racing the S.L.H. continue to beat all comers, although the Polytechnic H. threaten to be dangerous rivals in the future, as well as the Highgate H. Certainly the result of Saturday's race gave one that impression. Whether the "Twort Cleminson A. C.," which was represented in the event by a team of brothers, will figure as prominently in this branch of athletics as the Graces have done in cricket remains to be seen. At their initial venture they beat as many teams as beat them.

The two cycling competitions furnished, as usual, some keen racing. W. Lower, Balham C.C., who won the mile, is an improving rider, and followed up his second to Buck in the mile championship the previous week by another well judged finish. Music was discoursed throughout the afternoon by the London Victoria Military Band.

100 YARDS HANDICAP (OPEN.)

Final.

P. White, Highgate H., 8½, 1; F. C. Curtis, Polytechnic Harriers, 6½, 2; W. W. Martin, Essex Beggles, 7, 3; J. A. Wells, Reading A. C., 4, 4.

HALF-MILE BICYCLE HANDICAP (OPEN.)

Final.

J. T. Scott, Peg C.C., 52, 1; J. Ing, Ux C.C., 95, 2; F. H. Harman, Put A.C., 50, 3; A. Harding, P.C.C., 70, 4.

ONE MILE INVITATION TEAM RACE.

F. A. Knott, S.L.H., 1; J. Gregson, St. B.I.A.C., 2; J. E. Deakin, H.H.H., 3; E. C. Barry, H.H.H., 4; H. D. Montague, M. H., 5; J. Henney, H. H. H., 6.

The actual runners were—South London H.: F. A. Knott, L. J. Manogue, A. W. Clay-Thomas, and W. R. B. Thomas. Herne Hill H.: J. E. Deakin, J. Henney, E. C. Barry, and N. S. Hutchinson. Polytechnic H.: S. de Conde Cookson, J. G. Beale, F. Hatch, and B. C. Long. Malden H.: H. D. Montague, J. F. Fitzgerald, and C. S. Talisbury. St. Bride's Inst. A. C.: J. Gregson, L. J. L. Pullar, F. J. L. Pullar, F. S. Cleveley, and W. A. Lines.

Team placings:—

Herne H. H., 3, 4, 6—total, 13 points, 1; Malden H., 5, 8, 9—total, 22 points, 2; St. Bride's Inst. A. C., 2, 7, 16—total, 25 points, 3; South London H., 1, 12, 13—total, 26 points, 4; Polytechnic H., 10, 14, 15—total, 39 points, 5.

From the outset this promised to be an interesting race, for individual honours especially. When the bell rang, Knott, Gregson, Deakin, and Barry were all together. Presently Knott drew away, and Gregson promptly challenged for the lead. However, the improving Erith runner was unable to hold the "Irrepressible," who eventually broke the worsted six yards ahead, with Deakin a yard further away. Knott's time—4mins. 26⅖secs.

250 YARDS SCRATCH INVITATION.

Final.

J. B. Densham, S.L.H., 1; L. F. Tremeer, S.L.H., 2; L. J. de B. Reed, S.L.H., 3; H. T. Harmer, S. H., 4.

Mr. Lockton effected an even start. At the half-distance Tremeer showed in front, and remained there until within twenty yards of home, when Densham, who is never a quick beginner, but a powerful finisher, came with a "wet sail," and won by five feet; rather more. Time—25⅕secs.

HALF-MILE FLAT HANDICAP (OPEN.)

Final.

H. M. C. Ledger, I.B.A.C., 60, 1; H. J. Wright, F. H., 52, 2; J. D. A. Green, P. H., 66, 3; S. C. Cann, U. H., 64, 4.

Ledger took the lead on rounding the last bend for home, and won by perhaps three yards; rather more. Time—1min. 53⅖secs.

ONE MILE BYCICLE HANDICAP (OPEN.)

Final.

W. Lower, Bal C. C., 70, 1; P. C. Curnew, Poly. C. C., 100, 2; W. H. T. Isaacs, P. A. C., 65, 3; J. B. Taylerson, Beau C. C., 75, 4.

Curnew shot to the front half-way round the last lap, and looked all over a winner. However, Lower with a well-timed effort came again, and won by inches; a wheel. Time—2mins. 19⅕secs.

THREE MILES FLAT HANDICAP (OPEN.)

W. Coales, Thrapston C. C., 60, 1; J. Howard, Reading A. C., 120, 2; R. G. Page Cambridge H., 175, 3; E. F. Judson, Blackheath H., 140, 4.

A striking tribute to the handicapper was paid in the fact that of the 91 entered 84 competed. Guy Holdaway and Coales shared the virtual scratch mark. The latter, however, soon dropped the "Poly" boy, and cut down his field very smartly. Indeed, he had worked his way to the front before two miles and a half had been covered. Keeping up the pace, he went further and further away from his opponents at almost every stride, winning by some 80 yards; fourteen; fair fourth. Time—14mins. 47⅖secs.

ONE MILE RELAY RACE.

S. L. H.—J. P. George, L. F. Tremeer, L. J. de B. Reed, J. B. Densham, 1; Poly. H.—W. S. Baker, G. A. Hawkins, F. R. Gibbins, C. C. Davies, 2; Highgate H.—J. Woolley, C. W. Fox, T. Poole, F. R. Yeatman, 3; Twort, Cleminson A. C. (made up of the brothers Twort, for whom "L. J." ran the final quarter-mile), 4.

Also competed:—Teams representing Malden H., Blackheath H., and Finchley H., who finished in that order. In the half-mile, Woolley set the pace: but he was never allowed to get far ahead, both Baker and George pushing him all the way. The latter actually finished first in 2mins. 0⅕secs., but Fox (H. H.) got going quicker than Tremeer (S.L.H.), Hawkins (P. H.) following on their heels, beat them, and Gibbins, for the Poly. H. was thus sent away with a useful lead in the second furlong. Reed (S.L.H.) followed after Tremeer, and Poole (H. H.) after Fox. Catching Gibbins in the straight, Reed sent Densham (S.L.H.) away with a big lead in the last quarter. The race was practically won by the S.L.H. from this stage. Davies (Poly. H.) ran pluckily after Densham, and retained his advantageous send-off over Yeatman (H.H.). The S.L.H. triumphed againby a dozen yards, and the Poly. boys upset expectations by finishing second. Winning team's time—3mins. 37⅕secs., second team's time—3mins. 38⅖secs.

440 YARDS FLAT HANDICAP (OPEN.)

Final

T. G. Green, W. P. A. C., 30, 1; C. G. Chander, P. H., 30, 2; W. G. Harris, H. H., 22, 3; G. A. Hansard, F. H., 28, 4.

Green raced away with the lead from the crack of the pistol, and never being caught won nicely by three yards; good third. Time—59secs.

ONE AND A-HALF MILES WALKING HANDICAP (OPEN.)

F. Donoghue, U. H., 210 yards, 1; H. W. Hines, H.H.H. and F. H., 340, 2; S. Paul, P. H., 280, 3; H. J. Boot, B. H., 270, 4; A. E. Harding, L.A.C., 175, 5.

Out of forty-five entrants, only two were absent. By dint of fair and smart walking, Donoghue had placed the result beyond all doubt at the bell, and won by about 20 yards; a fair third. Time—10mins. 1⅕secs.

The handsome prizes were presented after each race by Miss Norah Martin, sister of the club's honorary secretary.

POONA AND KIRKEE FOXHOUNDS.

20th September.—We started this morning by drawing a nullah hidden by crops, with the hope of picking up the line of a jack, so many of them having been known to leave the well-known covert near the 8th milestone in that direction for the "Sisters;" hounds were very busy all along the nullah and it was evident we were a bit too late, but on reaching the grass hounds took every advantage of a breast high scent and went with a rare rattle over a rise and we thought we were in for a good 30 minutes over the best of country, but they took the line sharp back to the crops behind us; forcing the jack through these, he next took to the long grass where, boulders being hidden, the riding was beastly. They drove him fiercely through this into the open country; here the pace was too good for this manœuvring jack who had not identified himself with much in the way of daring enterprise and his ringing tactics entailed grim consequences for he was rolled over and eaten from mask to brush. After this, the country was tried for a chink and one was soon viewed by the Master who laid the hounds on a crack, but this chink also proved a ringer and hounds got hampered by the field in consequence; they, however, ran over a lot of country and at a check one hound slipped away unseen; when discovered she was running with wonderful dash, the chink being within 30 yards of of her; before this we had sometimes had a brace and sometimes two brace of chinkara in front of us, but evidently they struck to the original as this one was best; sending forward the 1st whip to stop this hound the Master had the greatest difficulty in bringing up the rest of the pack, for the field following the 1st whip closed in on them and so cut them off. On reaching the leading hound they at once took up the line and ran it into a jawari crop; going beyond with, no doubt a fresh chink, the hunted one having cleverly induced a substitute to take his place, carrying this line to a quarry near Chinchwad camp, they suddenly threw up, and scent failing, nothing more could be made of the run. Altogether this was a most exhilarating gallop, and another pleasant day was brought to an end when we enjoyed an excellent breakfast, hospitably provided by Lieutenant-Colonel Mosse and the Officers, 114th Mahrattas.

22nd September.—To-day it was quite impossible to rouse a jack or even a chink, the meet being at the 7th milestone, and although many miles of lovely country were drawn the morning proved blank. It was a pleasant surprise to find a most charming breakfast prepared by the kind forethought and hospitality of that good sportswoman, Miss Mason, who, with her little charge the young Rajah of Akalkote, welcomed us all to a tent erected at the place of the meet.

LOYALIST.

OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

THE Ootacamund Hounds met on Saturday, 22nd September, at noon at the Toda Coffee Shop near Pykara. It was a grand hunting morning, with both the "southerly wind and a cloudy sky" and with these there was a slight drizzle, which promised scent and sport. On the way to the meet a lot of vultures and some jack were viewed by the assembling field over the road in Bacon Wood and thithert he Master trotted from this meet to see if he could not be of some use in breaking up this meeting of carrion seekers. There was not the least doubt about the meeting being broken up. Vultures and crows soared up into the mist and two jacks, gorged to the full with "unpurchased putrefaction" made the best way they were capable of through Briar Wood and along the new road leading to Bamboo Shola and thence up the back of Staircase, at the top of which hounds divided, one lot running to ground at the foot of Staircase, when the jack was killed below ground, and having subsequently been extricated, proved to be a fine old veteran, weighing 20 pounds—"Biggest Fox whatever was seen." The other lot of hounds ran their jack to ground in a drain below Gibbs' Shola, from which refuge he was dragged by Captain Vane and eaten by the pack. The Master then drew over a considerable stretch of country without finding.

Below Beadnell's, however, Captain Dennistoun, the First Whip, reported that he had seen vultures hovering close by and hounds were taken to the place. No sooner were they there than they picked up a line and away they went, the body of the pack across the bog and a couple in the opposite direction—a brace of jack evidently. The Master at first thought that the body of the pack were running heel, but changed his mind and away they went, with Captain Dennistoun in close attendance and the rest of the field riding with loose rein and bloody spur to catch the fleeing pack and the red coat that kept bobbing and disappearing and reappearing in front. Across the Waterfall Stream they ran, as if possessed of ten thousand devils; up for Rocky Covert and then left handed towards the Ghauts, but when over the Seegur Road they turned right handed nearly to the Black Bridge and away for Hanging Shola. Leaving this on their right, they screamed up the valley to Brookhampton, then ran left handed through impenetrable jungle—some of the field may still be there—on to the ghauts, where hounds divided somewhere near the Umbrella Tree and were "lost to sight, to memory dear." This was one of the most brilliant 35 minutes these hounds have ever had and a hunt not to be forgotten in a day. Hounds were subsequently found marking their jack to ground not far from the Umbrella Tree and the last of them did not reach kennels with the hunt servants till 3-30 on Sunday morning.

TRAILL & Co., 20, British Indian Street, CALCUTTA.

On Monday, 24th September, Andy Plantation was the scene of the meet. It was again a fine morning for hunting with a bite in the air and a dull chill drizzle, enough to make us think ourselves in England. The native whip viewed a jack not far from Andy Plantation and hounds ran hard through Pichal Mund Shola and up to Governor's Shola, the top of which they skirted, and then turned and raced down across the bog by the place of the meet and up to Gaylad Shola. A single hound carried on the line towards Limerick and the Master lifted hounds to him, but six couples ran on up the Parsons' Valley and were stopped by Captain Vane and these were probably on the line of the hunted jack. The rest of the pack meanwhile again divided and a long draw proving fruitless, they were taken home after a poor day's sport.

On Wednesday last the fixture was at 7 A.M. at Municipal Crossing, and seldom have we had a better day's sport. It is necessary to be up early if the meet is on the Home Downs, hence the early hour. It was another good day for hunting with a thin rain almost akin to mist. A jack had very recently left New Covert, but hounds were unable to really run him, so the Master held them round the back of Bagman. From Governor's Shola the Master went over the hill and tried the Parsons' Valley, but the mist was so thick that it is to be doubted if the hardest rider could have lived with hounds had they found there, so it was decided to trot back to Rallywood, which, however, failed us. At the bottom of Jackal Shola hounds picked up a stale line—how prettily they worked it over the Downs below Bagman and on over the hill top, leaving Mills' Covert on the right! There was every prospect of a good run. At Treble Crossing they were running, and hard too, up to the Pypkra Road, on which they threw up their heads. Had he gone to Brooklands? So the Master thought and he held hounds on. All the time we had gained was lost in this cast; the jack had turned sharp back from the road, hounds had been pressed on by the field and it must have been 15 minutes later when hounds carried the line slowly back towards Bluegums, just short of which they were again running, heads up and sterns down. Round the covert they chivvied him, up and down until they brought him again to the outskirts. He shot back again into the covert, however, for which we had the second horsemen to thank. Hounds never got fairly on his track again and a beaten jack saved his brush in the dense jungle.

It was now getting hot and hounds were being taken home, when just below Jackal Covert, there sat a jack just peeping at the Master from the hill top. It proved too much for him and he galloped up to the top, where there were no fewer than five jacks in a bunch! Only one sank the hill side and the Master dived down in pursuit, using voice and horn. Unfortunately, half the pack got a view of the other two brace of jacks going over the hill and then no mortal man could stop them. Boxer was right at the brush of the Master's jack and there were six and a half couple racing to catch him. How they ran up to Rees' Corner! The interval between Boxer and his jack had not diminished as they ran the path leading to Baikie and hounds fairly tumbled down the hill to Denmark Wood, running for his blood. The Master viewed the jack between Denmark and Woodstock. His back was in a bow and he was in a sorry plight, but he reached Woodstock and saved his life. Woodstock was full of jack and the Master stopped hounds. The rest of the pack ran a jack to ground in Baikie Wood.

ABLAKI.

THE GORDON'S HORSE HOUNDS.

IN response to an invitation from H. H. the Maharaja, the above pack are visiting Mysore during the Dassara festivities. Many a good run was seen in this country nearly thirty years ago when H. H. the late Maharaja kept an excellent pack, but as "Soapey Sponge" was scarcely out of leading strings in those days he is not in a position to "reminish." On Friday, the 28th ultimo, the meet was at Hinkal Racecourse (that is the old racecourse which did duty before the present excellent course was constructed), and the hour was 7 A.M. It was a fine morning and a heavy dew gave promise of a scent. H. H. the Maharaja most sportingly turned up at the meet and considering the heavy fatigues of the previous day, when the official portion of the Dassara was in full swing, this was a pleasant surprise to everyone. The Yuvaraja was out as also Mr. Maconochie, the Maharaja's Private Secretary, and a fair sprinkling of ladies, including Mrs. Wortabet, Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Traill, Miss Goodrick and Miss Moore. Moving off across the racecourse hounds spoke at once, but it was a "flattering tale" for scent almost immediately disappeared, and it subsequently transpired that the jack had been gone for half an hour. Drawing steadily across country, there was a pronounced affirmative in a large tope, and we were away almost directly travelling very fast over nice grass land. Two miles of hard galloping brought us to a small covert, through which the pack pushed their jack with hardly a pause, and a sharp left-handed turn produced more grass, where it was again a case of "sit down and ride." Twenty-five minutes of really delightful galloping, and then hounds entered a very large thick covert which seemed a formidable obstacle. Here three couples of hounds slipped clear away with their jack, and it was some time before the remainder of the pack could be collected. They then worked the line out with wonderful steadiness, gradually bending to the left, through small coverts, over broken ground and then more grass for a good half-hour, the pace being slow, but the hound-work well worth watching. Scent then failed, but just as he was going to be given up, the missing three couples turned up from the left and to the front. There was no doubt about the result of their work for their jaws bore sanguinary evidence and it was quite clear they had killed a little further on. Hounds and horses had been going for an hour and ten minutes, and the first half hour had been very fast, so that nothing further was done. It was a pity that the three couples had all the fun of the last part of the run to themselves, but it was no one's fault, and the gallop was in every way an excellent one.

S. I. MOTOR UNION SPEED TRIALS.

THE speed trials organised by the South Indian Motor Union held on the 26th ultimo were very successful. The entries were satisfactory, and the arrangements excellent. The course was over a distance of 1 mile and 7 furlongs along the South Beach Road, starting at San Thome and finishing at the north end of the Marina. Results are appended :—

CRICKET AT DARJEELING.

COOCH BEHAR TEAM vs. WEST RIDING REGIMENT.—Played on the Shrubbery Ground on the 26th September, the Cooch Behar Team winning by 41. The feature of the match was the good bowling on both sides and smart fielding, making runs difficult to obtain. Mr. Ford put up a good performance in taking three wickets in one maiden over, and during the innings putting out six for 21. Mehta and Salamuddin bowled well for the Cooch Behar side, and the latter also made top score of 43. Raj Kumar Victor gave us one of his hurricane innings to the delight of the spectators. He hit nine boundaries, 36, and five singles in about twenty minutes. Mr. Hammond fell to a yorker when seemingly well set, and Gupta played good cricket for his 30. Captain Strafford looked like making a good score, but unfortunately misjudged one of Mehta's breaks which beat him at 10. Mr. Tidmarsh, Sergeant Pollard, and Captain Wilson made a stand in the middle of the innings, but the tail failing to wag the regimental team lost as stated. The Maharaja of Cooch Behar gave a big lunch and tea on the ground, and the Band of the West Ridings was in attendance. The following were the scores :—

THE DURAND TOURNAMENT.

THIRD ROUND.

ROYAL SCOTS FUSILIERS vs. SHROPSHIRE L. I.—These teams met twice before a definite decision was arrived at. The first game resulted in a draw one goal each. The Shropshires scored in the first half and the Fusiliers after the interval. The match was replayed on the 25th ultimo when the Fusiliers were victorious by three goals to one. The Shropshires drew first blood, but their opponents were not long in equalising and they crossed over at half time with a goal each. Then the Fusiliers did most of the attacking and scoring two more goals won as stated.

BEDFORDS vs. NORTH STAFFORDS.—A close game was witnessed between these teams on the 24th ultimo. The Staffords attacked on starting and almost scored. Then the Bedfords ran down and the opposing back slipping they got through and scored a goal. The Staffords had decidedly the best of the game in the second period and were unlucky not to score. They rushed down repeatedly and once found the net, the point being disallowed for offside. Three corners and a free kick gave them opportunities for scoring, but every attempt was frustrated and the Bedfords left winners by a goal to nil.

3RD HUSSARS vs. GLOSTERS.—Played on the 25th ultimo. Full time was got through without score, but in the extra twenty minutes the Glosters put on a goal, by which margin they won. The cavalry men had the better of play but were weak in front of goal.

CAMERONIANS vs. WILTSHIRES.—In a rather one-sided game the Cameronians beat the Wiltshires on the 25th ultimo by two goals to nil. They attacked throughout and the Wiltshires were kept busy. Both goals were scored in the initial period.

SEMI-FINALS.

ROYAL SCOTS FUSILIERS vs. BEDFORDS.—A slow game between these teams on the 26th ultimo resulted in a win for the Bedfords by a goal to nil. The Fusiliers did not show their previous form and the Bedfords did most of the attacking, but lost several chances of scoring.

CAMERONIANS vs. GLOSTERS.—These teams put up a splendid game on the 27th ultimo in the presence of a large gathering which included their Excellencies Lord and Lady Minto. Play was fast and evenly contested during both periods, but there was no score. Extra time was played and then the Cameronians began to assert themselves. The Gloster defence was good and they kept the Scotchmen out, but they were beaten at last. A foul against the Glosters enabled their opponents to put through the only goal of the match.

FINAL.

CAMERONIANS vs. BEDFORDS.—An enormous crowd assembled at the final game of the tournament last Saturday. The Viceroy and Lady Minto, the ladies Elliott and a party from Government House were among those present, her Excellency distributing the prizes at the conclusion of the game. The opening exchanges were slow and then the Cameronians pressed and forced a corner. The Bedfords cleared and the teams attacked in turn, more than one chance of scoring being muffed. Off-side against the Bedfords gave the Cameronians a free kick and their forwards getting possession Pearson opened the scoring. On changing ends play was very level, but towards the close of the game the Cameronians got away and a mistake by one of Bedford's backs let in Mitchell who put on a second goal and their opponents failing to score the Cameronians won the match by two goals to nil. Appended is a synopsis of the tournament :—

SEMI-FINALS.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. A. AND S. HIGHLANDERS.—These teams met on the 22nd ultimo when the result of the match was a draw—one goal each. In the replay on the 24th a good game ended in favour of the Royal Scots by two goals to one. The Argylls drew first blood, the ball being headed into the net shortly before half time. On changing ends the Scots equalised immediately. Continuing to press they forced several corners with no result. The Argylls broke away on several occasions but could not get through; the Royals again attacked and Newbiggin put them ahead with a low shot. Up and down play in which the Royal Scots had the better followed till the end of the game. Teams :—

ROYAL SCOTS.—Pte. Bryce, goal; Ptes. West and Forster, backs; Pte. Deathridge, Lce.-Corpl. Finnigan and Pte. Lakin, half backs; Corpl. Wright, Ptes. Webber, Newbiggin, Kennaway and Parkes, forwards.

ARGYLL AND SOUTHERLAND HIGHLANDERS.—Sergt. Markey, goal; Ptes. Reid and Kelly, backs; Ptes. Macmillan, Laysley and Maclean, half-backs; Ptes. Fleming, Wright, Lce-Corpl. Quinn, Ptes. Dunn and Mowatt, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. J. Chatt.

LEICESTERS vs. EAST LANCS.—Played on the 25th ultimo. The first half was devoid of score but the Leicesters had rather the best of the exchanges. After the interval the Leicesters opened the scoring. Then the Lancs. got going and pressing hotly, shot after shot was sent in. Harriman ably defended his charge but was at length beaten.—Whitmore in trying to save a shot headed the ball into his own goal. The Lancs. continued to attack and more than once looked like scoring. Then the Leicesters worked the ball down, but the Lancs. cleared and returned to the Leicesters' territory. Here they obtained a corner and from the kick put the ball into the net. No further scoring; the East Lancs. thus winning by two goals to one. Teams :—

LEICESTERS.—Harriman, goal; Whitmore and Perkins, backs; Harris, Belton and Tomlinson, half-backs; Fieldhouse, Jackson, Hubbard, White, and Arnott, forwards.

EAST LANCS.—Lowe, goal; Duckworth and Smallwood, backs; Slater, Naylor and Hartley, half-backs; Simmons, Cottam, Booth, Dunn and Ainsworth, forwards.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

14th September 1906.

THE last men's Championships of 1906 are over, and the golfing world—such a large round one too, ever revolving,—must wait until 1907 has entered on its course for further developments. It is always sad to come to the end of anything, but there is scarce a touch of regret in recording the pleasant meetings of the Welsh and Irish Championships and we welcome in each a new Champion, true even as these words are being penned there is yet another so-called Championship in process of decision—that of the South of Ireland—and really one wonders what is a Championship, for every large competition confined to a certain area is now dignified by that name. Surely some inventive genius can suggest a term which does not mean so much as is implied by "Champion" and yet which fully explains matters and is a title which one would be glad and proud to earn. For these Championships are so numerous now-a-days, Champions spring up (champignon-like all over the world and in all walks of life and pleasure, that soon (like the D.S.O. in the South African War) it will be more distinguished not to be distinguished and here must this soliloquy end! and to Badyr must our thoughts be turned, for there the Welsh Golfing Union concluded a most enjoyable week's amusement with their own special competition for the Championship of Taffyland. The holder was Mr. John Duncan, whose sister won the second Welsh Ladies' Championship in June last. The first Golf Champion of the gallant little country, whence the heir to the British Imperial Crown takes his proud title, was Mr. John Hunter, who is still Mr. John Hunter of the Glamorganshire Club; he was the doyen of golf in his country and has done more than any other man to further and push the interests of the Royal game in the principality; now when the Annual Championship is a thoroughly sound and universally recognized institution he can look back with satisfaction on the splendid results of his labours, which is at all events something to have lived for not in vain. And now that the 12th annual contest has come to an end a cursory glance at the final heats will doubtless interest players far away from Wales and Badyr.

* * * * *

First of all as is usual in such events there was a qualifying competition, and the 16 top players met one another in the Tournament; these were Messrs. L. S. Davies, Charles Turnbull, George Renwick, junior, O. P. Traherne, H. H. Haslem, Hugh Duncan, S. P. Edmunds, Rev. W. E. Shaw, John Duncan, junior, E. V. David, Dr. Jocelyne, Thomas, W. T. Davies, L. H. Gottwaltz, James Hunter, S. T. Phœnix. Among the survivors of heats in each half were the holder (Mr. John Duncan) Dr. Jocelyne, Mr. W. T. Davies and Mr. George Renwick, a son of the late Senior M. P. for Newcastle-on-Tyne, he is quite young and a brilliant player, pupil of Willie Fernie, who began his golfing career in historic Alnwick and thence migrated to south Wales; since his arrival there he has rapidly reduced his handicap and improved his game. During his progress through the Championship from which he emerged victorious he had three tough antagonists to deal with; these were Dr. Jocelyne, of Badyr, a player of +1 distinction, then after defeating him only on the 19th Green, young Renwick had to meet John Duncan, junior (the holder), him he disposed of on the 16th Green, and finally set forth to meet Mr. W. T. Davies. In this round Mr. Renwick's Golf was sans peur et sans reproche: fearlessly he went for every bunker, his approaches, were indeed sans reproche, a true Bayard of Golf, and his score as appended here testifies to the fact, that he won his final of 9 and 7 by sound and sterling play. 1st round. Out: 6, 5, 5, 4, 6, 2, 5, 3, 4=40. In: 4, 4, 5, 5, 4, 3, 4, 4, 3=36=76. 2nd round. Out: 4, 4, 4, 3, 6, 3, 5, 3, 4=36. In: 4, 4, eleven holes in 41.

Here we must leave him crowned with glory and renown and with pen and paper cross over to Portrush where the fifteenth annual Irish Open Championship took place the first week in September. In the Stroke Competition, the forerunner of the big event, nearly 140 players tried conclusions, play commencing at 9 A.M. and not ending until "the shades of eve were falling fast" Since it became known that the Yorkshire Champion, Mr. H. H. Barker, had entered, and when his form was seen to be quite equal to that he displayed in his own country he started first favourite for the big event, nor were his supporters disappointed at the conclusion of the medal competition for his excellent 73 was never in danger of being touched by any other entrant. Next being Mr. G. R. Girdlestone of the Royal Wimbledon Club with 77. Mr. Barker's figures were as follows:—Out: 4, 4, 4, 5, 5, 4, 4, 4, 4=38. In: 5, 4, 2, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4, 4=35=73. Did ever player keep so conscientiously in one round to one figure? in 18 holes no less than 14 fours, no threes did he indulge in, a two at the 12 by the help of a 12 yards putt, 3 fives and the 73 was complete, and so what wonder that he started first favourite next day. Let us watch his progress through the heats, we start knowing full well that he has come through, but let us nevertheless pretend that the issue is yet in doubt, and Mr. Barker has not yet won his spurs as Champion of Ireland. A big "Selling Sweep" was productive of much amusement, and when his round of 73 was un fait accompli it was small wonder that he (Mr. Barker) sold for 40 pieces of gold. In the first round he met and defeated Mr. A. A. Reid, of Chester, by 5 and 4, then Mr. C. D. D. Morrison, of Bruntsfield, was his victim on the 15th Green. By 4 and 2 Mr. Thomson fell in the 3rd round to the victorious Yorkshireman—a golfer of the old school and a cricketer to boot. One A. S. Johnston next tried conclusions, but he too followed in the wake of the defeated others, and Barker entered the 5th round, but here Mr. H. D. Gillis in a heavy rain gave him a run to the 17th hole for his money: at the time all was even, at the 16th Gillis, the last remaining Irish player, was 2 down and a half at the 17th decided the match in favour of Barker. It were better to follow him to his doom or coronation (as we do not know the issue of events on paper).

Next day in the 6th round Barker was pitted against the Wimbledon player, Girdlestone, and here indeed he needed all his strength; a strong south-westerly gale was blowing as it can blow at Portrush and low scoring was an impossibility. Girdlestone ought to have won; he was 2 up and 4 to go, and only for missing a 4 feet putt on the 15th Green he would have been 2 and 3, but his putting at short distances was very poor that day and on the 18 holes the match was square. The 19th was halved necessitating teeing up for the 20th. Again a 4 feet putt was necessary to halve, for Barker's 3rd lay within a few inches of the hole. Here the old Oxonian missed again and the Yorkshire Champion entered the 7th round the (semi-final). This was followed by a large crowd, Barker being pitted against Mr. D. G. Mackenzie, but the issue of this match was not left long in doubt, for Barker turned for home 6 up and won by 5 and 3. The final consisting of 36 holes was played on Saturday, 8th September, between Mr. H. H. Barker and Mr. J. S. Worthington (the Irish Open Champion of 1904). The Mid-Surrey man did not show his usual form, and his short game was decidedly poor, whilst his long game was at times very wild. The wind was very trying, but did not appear to disconcert the Yorkshireman who stood 2 up on the morning round, the respective scores being: Mr. Barker—Out: 7, 5, 4, 4, 5, 4, 4, 4, 5=42. In: 5, 4, 4, 4, 6, 4, 4, 4, 3, 4=38=80: Mr. Worthington—Out: 6, 5, 5, 3, 5, 5, 4, 4, 4=41. In: 6, 4, 3, 7, 4, 6, 3, 6, 5=43=84. In the afternoon Mr. Barker did not relinquish his lead and the match was brought to a conclusion on the 14th Green, where the Yorkshire Champion became open Champion of Ireland and thoroughly did he by good sound golf establish his right to the honour. Time and space prevent my giving more exhaustive details of this interesting meeting, which brought together, if not the whole of the cream of the Amateur world, at all events a very large contingent of luminaries: the chief feature was the great number of matches which necessitated going on beyond the 18 holes, and the real good play which was witnessed by the large enthusiastic crowd. This meeting is becoming every year more and more popular and no one rejoices more heartily to see the trend of affairs than Colonel J. MacCalmont, M. P., who distributed the tangible mementos to the proud winners at the conclusion of the meeting. A great many of the competitors moved on to compete in the "South of Ireland Championship" taking place at Lahinch e'en while I write.

ANNUAL HANDICAPS.

A VERY successful tournament was held during August and September and in both Doubles and Singles there were some exciting matches.

In the first round of the Doubles Buckland and Saunders had a close match with Taylor and Ball, while Collin and Bromage had to play the whole five games before they disposed of Rae and Goodall who took the first two and looked all over winners, but had no chance in the last three games against Collin's fine all-round play backed up by an unexpected display of service from his partner. The meeting between these two pairs in the semi final produced an excellent match and though the losers made a determind effort to draw level in the fourth game Buckland's service pulled his side through.

For the final Beachcroft and Peck, who had made short work of their opponents in the two preliminary rounds, were the favourites and looked like justifying it when they reached 13—7 in the first game. Their opponents both serving well caught them at 14, and the game being set ran out at 3—0. The second game was another ding dong struggle from start to finish, Beachcroft and Peak leading nearly the whole time and the issue was in doubt right up to the last stroke after setting at 13 all. In the third game Buckland and Saunders were again set an uphill task as they could make no progress at all at first, but determined serving by both pulled them through and gave them the match by three games to love.

It was an exciting match all through and any body's game till the very end: the winner's service and the fact that Beachcroft was not in his best form just turned the scale.

The Singles provided good matches right through, and in seven out of the eleven played all three games were necessary to arrive at a decision. The final rested between Chatterton who only beat Buckland after a tough struggle in the semi-final having survived close matches with Collin and Eddis, and Rae who had had an easier task his only tight match being against Peck.

It proved a very hard tussle; Rae was serving very well the first game and steadily wiping off his big handicap won at 15—11.

In the second game he could not get going at all and Chatterton playing very steadily and well in the rallies beat him while his score was still a minus quantity. In the third game Chatterton drew steadily away and the match looked over but his opponent found his service again and with a long run of aces pulled the game and the match out of the fire. A fourth game was played under the impression that the final was the best of five and a close but "tired out" exhibition went to Rae by 17—14.

Chatterton, though well known to lawn tennis players in Calcutta, is a comparative novice at rackets, but his steady and accurate play in the rallies will be very valuable to him when he can develop a service which was his opponent's strongest point. It was a matter for regret that Warden, who had a great chance on the handicap, was recalled to Darjeeling.

Saturday, 22nd September, 1906.

This year the horse section was hardly the success it should have been considering the right good way in which the promoters set about their work. Lack of support in respect of entries was primarily responsible for this and, then again, the quality of the exhibits was, perhaps, a little disappointing.

But the dogs amply made up for these shortcomings The fact that the show was run under N. I. K. A. rules, and was a championship one to boot, resulted in record entries, and high class all round. The executive are to be warmly congratulated on the marked success achieved by the canine section and especially to Mr. R. Goodall, the Honorary Secretary, and Colonel W. Dawson, and Captain Pinney, the Sub-Secretaries, are the thanks of exhibitors and public alike due. There was a good attendance and a native band played at intervals. Appended is the list of prize winners.

BRIDGE.

Solution to Problem No. 11.

FROM A's lead of the 5 B must hold the knave or 10 of hearts, and there is therefore no danger of the suit being bluffed on the second round. To go game Z must catch one of the adverse honors, and get rid of a spade from Y's hand before losing the lead. Y accordingly leads the 10 of clubs, which Z allows to pass if the king is not played by B. If the finesse succeeds, Y leads his second club, and Z puts on the queen, knave, or 9, and leads the ace, discarding one of Y's spades if A does not ruff. If the ace wins he then leads the knave of trumps, and finesses unless A puts on king or queen. Playing the hand in this way the dealer has a fair chance of going game.

Bridge Problem No. 12.

Score: A B, 26; Y Z, 26. Z deals and leaves it to Y, who declares clubs. Y's (dummy's) and A's (the original leader's) hands are as follows:—

Y's HAND (DUMMY.)

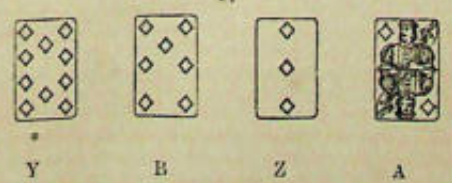
Hearts, K, 7; Diamonds, Q, J, 10; Clubs, Q, 10, 8, 3, 2; Spades, A, Q, 4.

A's HAND (ORIGINAL LEADER.)

Hearts, Q, 6, 3; Diamonds, A, K, 9, 2; Clubs, 6, 5, 4; Spades, K, J, 10.

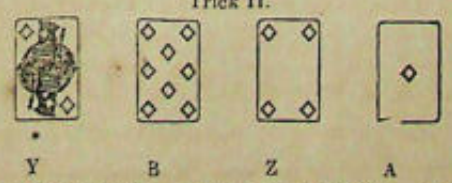
The first two tricks are as follows:—

Trick I.



Y B Z A

Trick II.



Y B Z A

Tricks: A B, 1, Y Z, 0. Tricks: A B, 2, Y Z, 0. What ought A to lead next, and why?

ENGLISH COUNTY CRICKET IN 1906.

THE "first-class cricket" season came to an end with the month of August amid a storm of prescription for the maladies from which the game in high places is suffering. Having regard to the vigour of the criticism offered by "W. E." and subscribed to by nearly every player of note whose opinion on the subject has been sought by the press, it must be allowed that the championship series of games offer less scope for hostile comment than might have been expected. We say nothing of the system upon which the county championship is played for; the least critical observer can see for himself that the conditions are not those properly constituting a championship at all and its defects have been the subject of remark for as many years as we can remember. In every campaign there is a tendency to rush to extremes, and the remarks made by Dr. Grace seem to have led many people to suppose that first-class cricket was going from bad to worse in the matter of drawn games. Examination of the analysis of matches played shows that this is not the case. Whether because captains have arrived at the conclusion that playing against the clock "is not cricket" or have been convinced thereof by falling off in gate money or by multitude of counsel offered with acerbity and point we need not attempt to decide; the fact remains that the proportion of drawn matches during 1906 has been smaller by a good many than in the preceding year. During the past season 172 matches were played and of these 43 were drawn: in 1905 the number of matches was 170 and of those 55 were drawn. The difference is very satisfactory to those who agitate for playing matches out taking sportsmanlike risk of defeat; the more so when we remember that it has been a remarkably dry season.

Examination of the records of previous years shows the improvement in a light still more satisfactory; making due allowance for "matches abandoned" the games classified as drawn have been more numerous in the four previous seasons than in that just over; a perfectly regular decrease there has not been, for in 1904 more matches were drawn than in 1903; but on the whole the tendency has been in the direction of decrease since 1902 when upwards of 71 games were drawn; we cannot lay hand at the moment upon figures for earlier years; but it may be remembered that 1902 was a bad season for batsmen and the failure to make sensational scores was assigned as pointed a reason for the number of matches drawn. Thus we arrive at the comforting conclusion that the storm of criticism levelled against modern cricket has less foundation in fact than some judges would have us believe. The drawn game arrived at by stonewall tactics, is, we cordially grant, the curse of cricket; but if the curse is decreasing, if cricketers have seen the error of their ways and are settling down to play the games out reeking less of averages than of the genuine spirit which prompts the player to do his best and win if he can or lose like a man, there is nothing more to be said. Credit for conversion to this wholesome view may be the due of the critics, the captains or the public or to all three forces in equal measure: as long as the lesson has been learned we are not disposed to quarrel about the identity of the teacher.

It must be granted that the season's record of matches lends some colour to Dr. Grace's argument that the present system does not provide that the best team shall come out at the top. Kent, the champion county for the year, played 22 matches, of which 16 were won, 2 lost and 4 drawn: four counties played more matches than did Kent: Yorkshire, the second county on the list, played 28 and won 17, Surrey the same number winning 18, Lancashire 26, winning 15 and Sussex, the unfortunate, 24 of whichonly 6 were won. Now let us look a little more closely into Kent's record for the year: she lost her out match with Yorkshire, who so nearly won the championship by 119 runs, and the home match against Yorkshire was drawn, the latter being 63 to the good when the game ended with seven Kent wickets down. Surrey comes third on the list; Kent beat Surrey fairly in both their matches. Lancashire stands fourth: Kent lost her first match with this county and won the second. Notts comes fifth on the list: with her Kent did net play at all. To Warwickshire, sixth on the list the same remark applies. Essex, seventh on the list, lost the first match to Kent while the second was drawn. The remaining nine counties are on the minus side, having lost more matches than they won, so we need not take them into account in considering Kent: beyond remarking that she played neither Northamptonshire nor Derbyshire among these nine. How does Kent stand towards those counties below her among the first six. Yorkshire, who stands second with 6 more matches played and one more win, beat Kent in one match and drew the second as already said: Notts, against whom Kent did not play at all, drew her first match with Yorkshire and won the second. Therefore we have this curious anomaly that the first county was beaten by the second, while the second was beaten by the fifth which never measured its strength against the first, but must "on the book" have given her a tremendous thrashing had she had the chance.

A championship held on these terms has manifestly some thing fragile about it. Yorkshire's position is far more certain: she lost one game to Surrey (third on the list), one to Notts (5th), and one to Gloucestershire who has sunk down to a minus percentage (9th); the only county with whom she did not measure her strength is Northampton, and inasmuch as Northants beat no county which Yorkshire did not beat also, and, further, was beaten by many who were beaten by Yorkshire, we may accept Yorkshire superiority over Northants as proven. Surrey's position as third on the list also leaves less to criticise than does Kent's right to stand at the top. Surrey with 18 wins out of 28 games has the best record of successes; and she played an out and home match with every county except Somersetshire. Surrey, we need hardly remind our readers, lost both her matches with Kent; but our point is that she tried her strength against all the counties except one, whereas Kent was untried against no fewer than four, one of which might certainly have beaten her. Manifestly this leaves something to be desired. An elementary condition of a championship is that each competitor shall play every other competitor, and this is what is wanted in the county championship. The system of rating counties, as we have more than once pointed out, is too purely artificial to give satisfactory results: and the only way of arriving at reliable results is to reduce the first-class counties to manageable numbers to the end that each shall play all others, out and home in turn.

THE SELFISH DISTRICT OFFICIAL.

FROM time to time complaints are directed against the so-called selfishness of the District Official, for keeping the sport obtainable in his District as much as possible to himself and discouraging the presence of men from a distance who try to get a little shooting.

These complaints are comparatively so numerous that it may be assumed that a good many such cases do occur and it may be of some interest to discuss the question and to ascertain or try to ascertain whether in some cases at all events there is not some very good reason for the attitude assumed by the District Official to account for what at first sight would appear to be a dog-in-the-manger policy adopted for the sole purpose of keeping the sport to himself on the part of the District Official. The District Official is after all, generally speaking, drawn from the same class as the majority of us out here, and there is, so far as can be seen, no reason why the mere fact of his having the power (which he undoubtedly has); should induce him to adopt such a policy for the mere purpose of keeping all the shooting to himself and making himself objectionable to other sportsmen.

We must therefore assume that he has, or at least thinks he has, some very good reason for adopting the attitude with which he is so often charged.

The following occur as being possible reasons for his action. In the first place it is quite possible that he has adopted his attitude in consequence of some sportsman (?) having either misbehaved himself or got the official's back up in some way and that he therefore vows that he will, for the future, keep out any man who is not either personally known to him or vouched for by some mutual friend. This is undoubtedly the reason in many cases and we can hardly blame the District Official if he takes this or some similar step; when he finds that what we may term the hospitality of the District has been abused or the unwritten rules of sport broken, and thereby ensures by the most certain possible means that it shall not occur again.

If that, most devoutly to be wished for, Game law for all India were to be passed so that any one offending in this way would be amenable to the law we are sure a great deal of the natural disinclination of the District Official to assist the, to him, totally unknown sportsman would disappear, as he would not be obliged as he is now, to stand by helpless while perhaps the only decent bit of game country in his District is devastated by a butcher whose sole desire is to make as big a bag as possible.

Of course we shall be told that such men are few and far between which is no doubt true; but it is equally true that there are such men and one of these getting into a District is quite sufficient to cause the District Officials for the next 50 years to fight shy of men whom they don't know; as the misdeeds of the offender are handed on from Official to Official and lose, we may be sure, nothing in the course of time. It is, moreover, sometimes the very last man who would be suspected of such conduct who is the offender and spoils the chances of future sportsmen for years to come. For instance it is within our knowledge that a man who poses as an authority on and has written a book on Indian Sport and who, no doubt, would be vastly indignant if he were denied the name of sportsman, made, with a companion: a bag, not so very long ago, part of which consisted of 2 buffaloes, BOTH COWS, and TWELVE BISON, NOT ONE HEAD OF WHICH WAS OVER 34 INCHES SPREAD.

Is it to be wondered at if this gentleman finds this particular District closed against him if he ever tries to go there again or that other sportsmen personally unknown to the District Officials have to suffer for his misdeeds?

Another cause of complaint against the casual sportsman of which we have heard is one, small in itself and one which we are sure would very seldom occur, but as we have said the mere fact that such things do occur leaves an indelible impression on the minds of the aggrieved and goes far towards prejudicing the welcome of future sportsmen, good fellows though they may be.

Late one night an Official in camp in a very lonely part of his District was aroused by the arrival of two belated and weary sportsmen who had been wandering about all day looking for their camp. Of course he did everything he could for them, scratched them up a meal of sorts, gave one of them his bed and the other his only long chair while he spent the rest of the night on the floor, found their camp for them the next day and sent them on their way rejoicing with repeated invitations to him the next time he was in head-quarters to look them up at their Mess (they belonged, we regret to say, to a crack British Cavalry Regiment) where they promised him no end of a welcome. What happened the next time he went into headquarters and met these two young gentlemen at the Club of which they were all three members, was that they looked him up and down, denied having the pleasure of his acquaintance and turned their backs on him. This it must be admitted is not the way to endear the stranger sportsman to the heart of the District Official.

A great may districts in India we are sure get the reputation of being swarming with game when as a matter of fact it is not so. This is due to the fact that some of the District Officials get good bags or what at first sight appear to be good bags: but it has to be taken into consideration that the man on the spot is necessarily the one who gets the shooting, and that what would be a very good bag for the visitor who comes for a month or two is a very poor bag for the man who has been on the spot for a year and is in the position of being able to take immediate advantage of "khubber." The fact that so and so, has bagged, we will say, five tigers in a certain district gets known and is talked about and everyone immediately jumps to the conclusion that it is a sporting paradise, quite unconscious of the fact that it may have and probably has, taken him a year or two to get them, whereas were the district the fine game preserve it gets the name of being he probably would have got twenty tigers in that time with the enormous advantage he enjoys of being always on the spot.

The stranger sportsman then, who is denied admission to what he genuinely believes to be a sporting paradise naturally thinks he has a grievance, whereas he is probably lucky in not being allowed to waste his time in that particular locality on the extremely offchance of getting game.

Another and in many cases the principal reason for the refusal of the District Official to grant a pass is based solely on a question of expediency. There are many localities where shooting is to be had (sometimes good, somtimes the reverse) where it is almost impossible for any one even the District Official himself, to get about the country and obtain supplies and it would be totally so except with the help of Government elephants and an army of coolies recruited sometimes days beforehand and practically "forced labour" and it is certainly not to the interests of these localities that this system of "forced labour" should be resorted to more often than is absolutely necessary and this of itself forms a very good reason for not allowing the casual sportsman, what he looks upon as his right, viz., a pass to shoot and "takeeds and purwans" for supplies and coolies. The District Officer knows the language, is probably personally acquainted with the principal men of the few inhabitants of these jungle tracts, is quite au fait with the various little idiosyncrasies of the festive jungle man and knows, moreover, what is perhaps the most important point of all and that is that any money meant to reach the jungle man, has got to be paid personally into his grimy paw or it will never get there; or if it does, it will be in an extremely attenuated form. The stranger on the other hand is in nine cases out of ten totally ignorant of the first three and even if he knows the latter is supremely indifferent to this most important point and does all his paying through his servants in which case all that reaches the jungle man is a tithe of his dues if as much.

That this is not an exaggeration is proved by the fact that the party before mentioned as the heroes (!) of the cow buffalo and baby bison bag left their particular shooting grounds with money owing all over the place with the consequence that numberless complaints have been going in to the District Revenue Officials and the next person who visits there will probably have great difficulty in getting coolies and supplies.

We presume we should do these gentlemen the justice to believe that they paid their servants what was supposed to be due and that the latter are the defaulters; though in view of the fact that these gentlemen trespassed into a forest reserve, shot there and left the district without notifying their arrival, presence or departure and omitted the small formality of taking out a shooting license, we are perhaps doing their servants an injustice in assuming that the non-payment for supplies was due to their peculations.

"You will be glad to know, madam, that your husband will almost certainly recover." Wife: "Oh dear me, doctor, what shall I do?" Physician: "Why, madam, what do you mean? Aren't you anxious that your husband should get well?" Wife (sobbing): "Yes; only, when you said last week you didn't think he would live a fortnight, I went and sold all his clothes."

"That was a great scheme old Shrewdly worked." "Didn't hear of it." "Gave it out that the first one of his eleven daughters to be married should have his entire fortune." "What was the result?" "Eleven elopements in one night." They can't determine which one was the first, so Shrewdly gets rid of the girls and keeps the fortune."

Sporting Notes.

THE accident to the mail steamer Isis will result in the mail being received in Calcutta next week probably too late to enable us to include in our next issue our London Sporting Letter—London Week by Week and other Home news.

The close of Poojah racing in the hill stations marks the second half yearly lull in Indian racing. The Simla and Mussoorie Meetings fell through entirely this season, the former through lack of interest, the latter by reason of certain small landslips on the new course and other causes. Darjeeling came to the rescue with four days' racing, wherein fairly good sport was obtained. If the executive would but relinquish that unpopular method of handicapping, the handicap by a committee of owners and others, these meetings might be made really attractive to outsiders. It is said that an application will be made by the Stewards for leave to hold meetings on the Lebong track under C.T.C. rules, and that the next meeting will blossom forth into one hundred or two hundred rupee prizes. This policy, being progressive, is worthy of all encouragement. Well-informed critics express grave doubts as to its advisability, but at least it might be given a trial; should better-class racing prove a failure the remedy will be a simple and short one, namely, reversion to the gymkhana status.

At best, these hill courses, Simla, Mussoorie, and Lebong, are only suitable for small ponies, as it is very difficult to keep even a big striding 14-1 with his head against the ever-circling rails. Always excepting the run-away entertainments, so frequently served up at this class of meeting, the rider plays a leading part in winning races on these tracks. Over and over again the best man grabs the rails and wins his race from the first corner. The Calcutta visitors, who backed Mr. Evers' mounts both ways all through the Darjeeling meeting, must have paid their expenses.

T. E. BEVAN & CO.,
CALCUTTA.

We have the finest selection of Pianos and Musical Instruments in India to choose from.

Great Scot is still kept at it, and Gilpin, his present trainer, talks of keeping him in training another year. The old horse ran third in his last venture and is now to be pulled out for the Cesarewitch, which will be over by the time these lines appear in print. Here he will, of course, have to meet some of the smartest handicap stuff in England. This is more like his distance and the newspaper critics give him some sort of a chance on form, but it will surprise those of us who saw his latest running in Calcutta if he bears out their prophesies.

Mr. Farquharson's path on the English Turf has hitherto been anything but a smooth one, but he evidently intends to push on to firmer ground as he is going into fresh training quarters nearer to Newmarket and the big London courses than his present location in Wiltshire. His Australian jockey Bradshaw is returning to India where he will very probably find plenty of work as his success with Dalkeith, and other Ceylon horses last season was almost phenomenal.

English horses are all the fashion again and they seem to be coming out in droves, so fast indeed that it hardly seems worth while to register their names and performances. "Mr. Charles" Steinhagar is, however, an exceptional horse and if the country suits him he will make the best of them gallop over the Cup course. The same owner has another long distance performer in Rosanule and a moderate sprinter named Pendred. This owner's stable, which is now becoming quite formidable, is in charge of Pringle at Bangalore. Mr. Bell-Irving's horses are in the same hands and he evidently intends to wipe out his reverses of last year, when ill-luck seemed to dog his footsteps very persistently. Talking of Bangalore recalls the well accredited report that Munderah will again go into training for the Viceroy's Cup. Last year he not only ran well, but very nearly took second place, his proximity being forgotten in the excitement of Long Tom's final dash. The Mysore horse came to Calcutta very late and could have done with a little more preparation.

The Calcutta track presents a very dreary aspect these days, the only prominent group after 7 o'clock of a morning being Mr. Lamotte's nice selection of horses getting steadily ready for cold weather purchasers. These good ladies and gentlemen had better make haste if they want the pickings as people will be shouting for hacks and hunters in the first week or so of December, when they are too likely to find the leavings only.

The stands are rushing towards completion, and now begin to wear a finished look, the ornamental rails and painted awning being already in place. The public are to be excluded from the entire racecourse area during October, and it is certainly true that the maidan within the rails is more cut about than usual at this time of year. The spirited performances of the Junior Polo Club and the increase of horses in training for the Monsoon races is probably sufficient to account for this, but it is difficult to see what remedy can be applied unless we have further heavy rain after which a big roller might do something to delete the deep hoof marks that make parts of this maidan almost unrideable.

The training track is undergoing the usual thorough preparation for the heavy demand made upon it in the cold weather. It is a great pity that there is no other track to relieve the pressure. Under present conditions there is throughout the season a constant cloud of dust over the course from 7 to 9 A.M. with which horses have to contend, over and above the nasty fogs which are themselves sufficient to make training in Calcutta a very difficult game. The day is perhaps far distant when we shall see a second flat racecourse in the suburbs of Calcutta, but the time seems to be approaching when the project of a new racecourse will be within the range of practical politics, as they say on the hustings.

Rumour was ever a lying jade, but the little birds will have it that the last word has not yet been said anent the evil deeds perpetrated by certain wicked racing men during the Calcutta Monsoon races. No doubt the searchers after truth have been encouraged by the awful example made of the Key West gang, and their investigations will have the sympathy of all good men. They will also be entitled to the support of that noble army of sportsmen who go about backing horses on private information, of which the poor "public" remains in total ignorance, sometimes to find that information to be misconceived and sometimes, positively false. Certainly let the evil-doers be stamped flat, but it would be nice if the operation were performed with some despatch. At the present moment we have this dark cloud of suspicion hovering over Theatre Road and in its shadow Smith points at Brown with a solemn shake of the head and Brown points at somebody else to the accompaniment of an obviously unnecessary cough. The atmosphere isn't healthy.

Mr. Kindersley, the Official Handicapper, has been taking notes in Poona, but Colonel Mayne, his co-adjutor, who has now reached India, will have but little opportunity of marking down any of the ever-increasing droves of horses in training for the cold weather season. So great is the increase that the question of rubbing down sheds on the Calcutta course is developing importance, if the paddock is to be enlarged, room will have to be found at the far end of the new enclosures, that is to say, opposite the School and the Zeerut Bridge. The crow's nest erected at this spot for the accommodation of a lynx-eyed Steward shouts aloud for criticism as the passerby can at once see that it commands the fatal turn but a degree better than the stands themselves. Still there would be an obvious difficulty in erecting such a structure anywhere without the enclosures and as an experimental measure it may on the whole be applauded. The poor man, who is told off to occupy the perch, won't bless it much in all probability, but perhaps the executive will take the job on in turns!

The Tollygunge Horse Show prospectus is out in good time and the date fixed is the 24th December, Xmas Eve and not Boxing Day or later as usual. No change has been made in the classing of horses and ponies, as a great success was achieved by the sub-committee last year. The fine show of animals, more particularly polo ponies and pony hacks, was largely due to the big Polo Tournament, and there should be sufficient visiting teams this year also to sustain this very noticeable improvement.

There will be another meeting of those taking part in the formation of the proposed Bengal and Assam Kennel Association on Monday next, the 15th instant, at the Royal Exchange, Calcutta. The meeting has been fixed for 6 P.M. and all interested are invited to attend.

It is now practically impossible for a private individual to import for his own use any rifle of ·450 or ·303 bores. This is made manifest in a Home Department Notification in a recent issue of the Gazette of India: it runs as follows:—

Sir,—In continuation of the Home Department letter, dated 20th November 1902, I am directed to forward for information a copy of a notification, dated the 11th September 1906, making certain amendments in the rules issued under the Indian Arms Act II of 1878, from which it will be seen that the Government of India have now decided, in supersession of all previous orders on the subject, to prohibit, subject to narrowly defined exceptions, the importation of all rifles of ·450 and ·303 bores, irrespective of the size of their chamber and action, and consequently of all ammunition which can be fired from such weapons: these exceptions are (a) in the case of ·303 rifles, single-barrelled weapons, sighted to over 1,000 yards, imported bonâ fide for match shooting purposes, and brought on to the equipment list of the regiment or corps to which the importer belongs, by the persons mentioned, and subject to the condition laid down in Home Department Notification No. 1982, dated the 14th May 1903: and (b) in the case of ammunition, such reasonable amount as is required for use with weapons of the prohibited bores which are already in the lawful possession of persons in this country.

I am to request that this change in the rules may be made widely known to the public and to dealers in arms and ammunition. The change now made in the rules will be embodied in the revised rules under the Arms Act, which will shortly be issued.

The notification runs: In exercise of the powers conferred by sections 17 and 27 of the Indian Arms Act (II of 1878) the Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct that the following further amendments shall be made in the notification of the Government of India in the Home Department, dated the 6th March 1879, as amended by subsequent notifications. Paragraph 1. For the words "if rifles of ·303 bore or rifles of ·450 bore of the Martini-Henry pattern, if such rifles have been imported into British India subsequently to the 20th February 1901, without the special sanction of the Government of India, balled ammunition which can be fired from rifles of the bores and pattern aforesaid," substitute the words "rifles of ·303 or ·450 bore, and balled ammunition which can be fired from such rifles." At the end of the first clause of paragraph 1 after the words "carry or possess," add the following proviso: "Provided also that no prohibition or direction contained in sections 13, 14, 15 or 16 of the Indian Arms Act, 1878, shall apply to persons in possession of rifles of ·303 bore or ·450 bore which have been lawfully imported into British India before the date of this notification." Paragraph 6, note to rule 5, for the words "any rifles of ·303 bore or rifles of ·450 bore of the Martini-Henry pattern," substitute the words "rifles of ·303 or ·450 bore."

In our Shikar columns this week will be found a very interesting record of sport in Siam entitled "A New Hunting Ground."

Second entries for the Lucknow Autumn Meeting are published to-day: final entries close on the 10th proximo.

A writer to the Times of Ceylon deplores the extinction of game, which he states is fast approaching in the Colony. He writes: Large gangs of hunters, outfitted at Matale, Kurunegala, and such centres, accompanied by mongrel packs, and armed with guns and nets, have finished their business thoroughly so far as the open parks (the rightful domain of the spotted deer) are concerned: the rest of the work is being completed at the waterholes during the dry season. I give the Colony ten years at the outside to see the spotted deer extinct, exclusive of such as may survive in the sanctuaries and the foot hills.

I heard a funny tiger story the other day, quite true though, writes a correspondent. A tiger came into a village in one of the districts I have to inspect, so the villagers turned out the village buffaloes, these all at once got together as they do with their heads down and went for the tiger, who retreated backwards, with his face to the herd; they went on like this till they got outside the village and on to the far side of the Luhari Rusta, where there was a big deep P. W. D. burrow pit half full of water, the tiger backing away from the buffaloes fell backwards into this, and not being able to get out, was half drowned and so easily killed by the villagers. Rather a rum way of killing a tiger.

A very big mahseer was recently caught in the Hatty River, Coorg, by Mr. Murray Aynsley, the well-known southern India sportsman. A correspondent describing the catch writes: "He used a 16 feet rod, weighing only 2lbs. and very pliable, and a Luscombe No. 8 spoon. Fishing from a coracle, he at once knew that he was into something big, but the most sanguine anticipations could not have equalled the reality. A hundred yards of line went out with the first rush of the mahseer, and the light coracle was then towed rapidly down stream. At last the fish stopped and came up-stream, Mr. Aynsley eventually getting below him, and his boatman managing to jam the coracle on to a rock and hold on. The heavy rush of the stream, and all the strain the fisherman dare put on then combined against the fish, and he began gradually to tire. At length, after a two hours' fight, the boatman gaffed the mahseer, and when the size of the fish is considered, it is wonderful that he was killed so soon. The dimensions are as follows, and will no doubt make a stir amongst Indian fishermen:—Weight, 104lbs.; length, 5 feet 6 inches; girth, 37 inches; mouth (across), 8½ inches; tail (across), 19 inches." This is by no means the record mahseer as we have seen it stated. The late Mr. G. P. Sanderson in his "Thirteen Years among Wild Beasts in India" tells of one of 150lbs. killed by him and we could quote many more authentic records of mahseer which weighed over 120lbs.

What is believed to be the biggest shark ever captured was recently in San Pedros Bay, on the Californian Coast. When taken from the water, this monster weighed 14,000 pounds. It measured from tip to tip 32 feet, and the circumference of the body just forward of the huge dorsal fin was 5 feet. Across the immense mouth (horizontally) when opened it was 2½ feet, while from the ti of the snout to the point of the lower jaw it measured 3½ feet. The shark became hopelessly enmeshed in some 1,500 feet of the fishermen's nets. So far as is known, the largest shark previously caught was 22 feet long—ten feet less than the one mentioned above.

The Field says :—"The Natural History Museum has recently received from Mr. J. C. White, political officer in Sikhim, a valuable gift in the shape of the skins and skeletons of that rare Himalayan ruminant the takin (Budorcas taxicolor), which, although living in the Mishmi Hills, within sight of British territory, has never apparently yet been killed by a European sportsman. The specimens presented by Mr. White are the spoils of a female and her calf, and the former is of special interest in finally settling a question which has given rise to some dispute. Some years ago Mr. A. O. Hume (in opposition to the view of Brian Hodgson) suggested that the horns of the adult cow taken were altogether unlike those of the bull. A correspondent in India wrote, however, to say that, according to his experience, the horns regarded by Mr. Hume as referable to the female really belonged to the young male. Mr. White's specimens definitely confirm the truth of the latter view, the horns of the cow received at the museum being similar to those of the adult bull in every respect but their inferior dimensions."

Our contemporary is in error in concluding that the takin has never been killed by European sportsmen. There have been at least half a dozen authentic records published and to go no further there are two very fine pairs of horns—the fifth largest recorded—adorning the staircase of the office of The Indian Field.

Entries for the Lucknow Autumn Sky Meeting close to-morrow.

The home papers announce the departure of many sportsmen for North and Central Africa for the usual big game campaign, but from current rumour we learn that Bengal is likely soon to afford inducements to sportsmen equal to any that either the Congo, the Gambia or Zambesi can furnish, as a company is said to be in process of formation for extensive clearing of the vast areas of eka waste for jute cultivation. These huge seas of grass harbour, herds of buffalo, and in the deltas of the big rivers while nearer the hills swamp deer, sambhur and smaller fry seek asylum therein, moreover it is more than probable the Government of the new province will soon be compelled to take measures for thinning out the many obstreperous bull elephants whose depredations are causing much loss to the cultivator and endangering his life.

Lord Harris has been interviewed by a representative of the Morning Post on the question of County Cricket reform. As one who has done so much for the best interests of cricket, but especially for Kent cricket, his lordship's views must carry considerable weight. Lord Harris will be applauded by a good many cricketers, especially of the old-fashioned kind, for his statement that he never liked the County Championship as an institution, and that the fact of their winning the Championship was to his mind the least interesting feature of Kent's cricket of the past season. He is right, too, in urging that it would be a pity if any scheme of cricket reform were to prevent old friends among the counties making the matches they chose. No scheme of reform stands a chance of success if it begins by imposing irritating hard-and-fast conditions. It is only when a cricket eleven feels a certain sense of irresponsibility that its members really enjoy what is, after all, first and foremost a game.

By taking four wickets for Thornbury against Crofton, on the 19th ultimo, Dr. E. M. Grace brought his aggregate number of wickets for the season up to 350, thus establishing a world's record. Upon such a notable occasion, it is interesting to give the figures of the doctor's career. He commenced playing in 1851, and, allowing for one year he did not play, he has taken 11,700 wickets and scored 76,100 runs. He last played for Gloucester County in 1896 against Warwickshire. He has twice topped 3,000 runs in one season.

Owing to the majority of motor accidents being due to skidding, a movement is on foot to make the studding of tyres compulsory by law, at least in the crowded streets of towns, but these studs give but a poor grip on such surface as asphalt, patent stone, sets, or any other material which our road makers are puzzling their brains about in their efforts to give us something that will last for more than the usual three months; this is about the time one can reckon upon for a decently smooth surface under present circumstances.

Another brutalising and senseless motor race! This time in America. We are informed by Reuter's Agency that "The race for the Vanderbilt motor trophy over a course of 297 miles at Long Island had been won by Wagner from France, who averaged over a mile a minute. Two hundred thousand spectators were present. Seventeen cars started. There was a chapter of accidents, some of the cars running off the course: one spectator was killed and four injured, and one competitor was pitched out and is unconscious."

SIR FREDERICK LUGARD'S resignation gave rise to a certain amount of gossip at the Clubs: the almost inevitable idea in many minds being that he had found it impossible to do justice to the difficulties of his work in Nigeria under the present Government. There may be something in it, though Mr. Keir Hardie's sympathetic attitude towards black evil-doers does not represent faithfully that of Lord Elgin. Six years of arduous work in such a country and climate seems to furnish reason enough for resignation, and as Sir Frederick's six years have expired, it is not surprising that he should seek rest or change.

Full particulars of the Grantham accident only reached London in course of yesterday, the work of searching the wrecked train having occupied the hours of darkness. At present the cause of the disaster is quite obscure: we only know, from the guards of the wrecked train, that when they found they were rushing through the station they tried to use their brakes and these would not act: indicating that the engine driver was using his brakes and monopolising the power. It is suggested that by one of those oversights to which humanity is liable, the driver forgot to shut off steam or divert it from the task of driving to the brake. The accident was inevitable when the train tried to take at 40 miles a curve round which the maximum speed is ten.

How many Royal Commissions has the present Government appointed? Tuesday's Gazette announced a new one "to enquire into and report upon the practice of subjecting live animals to experiments whether by vivisection or otherwise" to enquire into the law and to report if any or what changes are desirable. Colonel Lockwood, M.P., is the only member of the Commission who is a recognised anti-vivisectionist. Four of the ten are doctors and one is a famous veterinary surgeon: Sir William Church is one of the doctors, and is a recognised champion of vivisection.

By a mere coincidence the Saturday before this Commission was appointed, the Mayor of Battersea formally unveiled a bronze-dog monument which the anti-vivisectionists have erected in a Recreation

Ground in Battersea "to the memory of the brown terrier dog done to death in the laboratories of University College in February 1903 after having endured vivisection extending over more than two months and having been handed over from one vivisection to another until death came to his release." This remarkable monument cost £130 and the subscribers have collected £300 to indemnify the Borough Council in event of a libel action being brought against them. In the next column of the paper in which I read this is a letter from a maimed man asking, temperately enough, for the creation of some bureau which shall try and procure work for unfortunate fellows who have lost limbs. Truly we are a strange people take us "by and large."

Not without reason the Spectator is very much pleased with the six months' experiment Colonel Pollok carried out with 100 men under that journal's ægis. Last Saturday it came out with an article in which it urged the entire remodelling of the Militia on "Spectator Company" lines, to wit, six months, training and afterwards service on volunteer lines. The Spectator—or Mr. St. Joe Strachey—is now convinced that universal service is a thing much to be desired "not for military but for moral and physical reasons."

The poor Underground! It can't make ends meet on the very reduced fares it adopted after the motor omnibi took the streets, and its action in raising the fares again has provoked a storm of protest. Really the language held at the meetings of protest in Wimbledon, West Ham, and other suburbs would lead a stranger to suppose that the District Railway is a philanthropic institution existing solely to convey "daily breads" to the city and back at a nominal charge. All kinds of drivel has been uttered from proposals to boycott the railway to the ultra absurdity of "nationalising" it. It is fair to say that when season ticket-holders were asked to organise a boycott, none came forward! There is not much to complain about if you look at the figures. Here are some of the third class fares. Return Hammersmith to Mansion House, 13 miles, 6d., ditto Ealing Mansion House, 11 miles, 4d., Harrow or Hounslow-Mansion House, 16 miles, 6½d. single.

The new motor 'bus regulations has been drafted and negotiations are afoot between police and proprietors concerning these. One praiseworthly clause requires the latter to declare the route their vehicles will follow and forbids variation of the same. This is eminently desirable: the passage of the motor 'bus makes a street barely habitable and the demand for houses in such has been sinking steadily—that part of Sloan Street opposite Cadogan Gardens occurs as an example. Cromwell Road is another: aforetime essentially a private residential street, seven houses in ten are now boarding establishments. Among minor but vital details the regutions require the absence of vibration, noise and the dropping of oil; the dropping of petrol has been a matter of serious complaint not only by reason of the smell, but because it injures the wood paving and makes asphalt dangerously slippery. The restrictions as to advertisements are making sad the souls of proprietors, but there is likelihood that these will be relaxed: advertisements pay better than passengers, one gathers, and if the back and front of a car is to be kept clear of these how great the loss! The police have lent sympathetic ear to this plea or to the intimation that fares must be raised to meet the loss, and it is probable that some concession will be made.

The number of motor fatalities since I wrote last has been unusually large. The one in which the Duchess of Connaught's motor was unfortunately involved, of course, claimed most attention. The boy's death, as everyone anticipated, was found by the Coroner's jury to be the result of pure accident: the lad darted out from behind a market cart and fairly ran into the motor which was travelling six or seven miles an hour through Hounslow. It seems that the lamp or its bracket struck him on the face: his skull was fractured and he died a few hours later at the hospital whither the Duchess and her friends saw him carried.

Before saying anything about Mr. Hall Caine's "The Bondman," produced last night at Drury Lane, it behoveth me to speak of the pains Mr. Arthur Collins has taken to help the critics to a just appreciation of the play. The invitation ticket is for the dress circle, but the critic might witness the preliminary Tuesday afternoon performance from any seat he liked in any part of the house from stall to gallery: then in addition to the synopsis there is a complete copy of the play with explanatory remarks: and finally there was the usual first night stall to enable the conscientious critic to see the play again and, we will suppose, correct his opinions by cross bearings and reduce them to Fahrenheit and sea level for the enlightenment of the public.

Starting, I must admit without prepossession in favour of Mr. Hall Caine, who takes more thought for advertisement than is becoming in a real genius, I weigh the Bondman and wonder whether the enthusiastic applause to which the piece went last night was a tribute to Caine or Collins—to the play or to the really wonderful scenery and stage effects which recall in their more animated moments the Hippodrome masterpieces. The drama consists of two tableaux with 4 acts between: the first two acts are fairly called drama: the other two are pure melodrama, and poor stuff at that. Truth to tell, if it had not been for the unconscious humour of the thing here and there, one would dismiss it as sheer fustian. The atmosphere of halting vengeance and impulsive forgiveness pervades the play: Jason (Mr. Frank Cooper) starts out from Sicily for the Isle of Man to revenge himself on half-brother Michael for his deceased mother's shame and desertion: but only Greeba (Mrs. Pat Campbell) is at home, Jason having gone to Sicily to bring Michael home. Jason at Greeba's instance forgives Michael and Greeba under pressure brought to bear so clumsily that one had to laugh at the procession of family influence renounces Michael to whom she had sworn eternal fidelity in the last act and becomes affianced to Jason. Michael has been neglectful about writing from Sicily: indeed he only thinks it worth while putting pen to paper when he has become Governor of the island and he writes to ask Greeba to come out to him.

To Sicily we all go in Act III.: political intrigues are rife: there is prospect of a real row between Jason and Michael, but an ex-Governor interferes in time and sends the latter, as he has already sent the former, to the sulphur mines. And now the melodrama begins in good earnest. Jason and Michael, neither knowing who the other is, are chained together. The ex-Governor, now Governor in fact, has not much governing to do: he spends most of his time making things unpleasant for the two prisoners. The prisoners learn one another's identity, but merely to enable them to show their true nobility of character: Jason refuses to give Michael the cut (or was it Michael who did the refusing); and Michael or Jason saves Jason or Michael from a fiery mine and carries his chain companion to safety up a mountain. In Act IV. Michael (I think; but the confusion long ere now was complete) is blind and a political prisoner on an island with Greeba as his housekeeper unknown to him. The cruel Governor has signed his death warrant, but somebody draws his attention to the detail that he is the prisoner's grandfather and he tears up the warrant.

Dear Editor, you will say this is a wild and confused pretence at description of the Bondman: but had you sat out four acts of trite and high falutin dialogue, and puzzled yourself over the rapid complications of Jason and Michael in Acts III. and IV., you would be lenient. I've no doubt the piece will hold the Drury Lane stage for a long run: the smell of sulphur when that mine explosion occurs is alone enough to make the fortune of the piece. Mr. Caine's admirers don't laugh in the wrong places: indeed they never laugh at all: for if there is one quality in which that great man is deficient it is humour: and his clientèle would regard laughter as impious.

Miss Marie Tempest made her début as a music hall artiste on Monday night and the Palace audience gave her a rapturous reception. She seemed just a trifle nervous at first, but this disappeared after her first song and the remaining three left nothing to desire. Her last "The Nightingale Song" suits her voice admirably and bouquets flowed in upon her very freely.

It was rumoured early in the week that Madame Humbert, recently released from prison, had been asked to appear at a London music hall—presumably in company with the famous safe which contained no millions—but a difficulty arises: the eminent swindler is on ticket of leave and may not quit France.

The much-discussed "Cecil Case" was disposed of at the Old Bailey on Tuesday. Mrs. M. L. Stanley, who seems to have been the victim of singular delusions, has for a long time past been distributing pamphlets wherein she stated that Lady Gwendolen Cecil had given birth to an illegitimate child by the chaplain at Hatfield, which child had been declared to be her's—Mrs. Stanley's. Not the faintest shred of evidence in support of these assertions was forthcoming: the defendant was not able to find a lawyer to defend her, and undertook the job herself. She admitted publication and pled "fullest justification:" the trial did not last very long, and the jury found her guilty of libel without leaving the box: result six months for Mrs. Stanley and documents impounded for the Public Prosecutor who may find therein reason to proceed against some people who appear to have egged Mrs. Stanley on.

The case was a singular one. The prisoner belongs to a respectable family and for a time she was organist at the private chapel at Hatfield. Her health broke down and in 1889 she left: declined the offers of assistance made her by the late Marchioness and tried hard to get loans of money from the Salisbury family. These endeavours to get money continued for six or seven years and then the woman began to use menacing language: this gave her proceedings the uglier look of resolute endeavour to blackmail. Evidently her campaign centred against Lady Gwendolen, concerning whom she fabricated the abominable charges set out in the pamphlet. Thirteen thousand of these precious documents were found in her possession: and the woman admitted that she was in the habit of distributing them broadcast, putting one into any hand she could. My own idea is that Broadmoor would be the most suitable place of retirement for Mrs. Stanley.

We are threatened with the extinction of the black currant, in England: the fruit grows scarcer every year, the reason being the difficulty of coping with the mite which has made the black currant its own. The next generation, say the pessimists, will know not the black currant: a sad prospect when we think what black currant jelly was used to disguise in our nursery days.

It is probable that the new over-bridge tramways will be opened next November: the work of uglifying the embankment proceeds apace.

A NEW HUNTING GROUND.

IT is some months since, with a brother, who had elected so to spend some of his long leave, I visited a forest, in the course of an inspection, which proved to be an unusually good shooting ground and I have ever since intended to give an account of our experiences, for the benefit of those who love to wander with shot gun and rifle. A hazy remembrance of a grouse from some correspondent of the Indian Field as to the unwillingness of sportsmen to give information re any shooting they know of; and, secondly, the idea that the experiences here set forth may serve to strengthen the opinion expressed by so many experienced shots in the controversy which lately took place in your columns, as to the best all round battery have at length brought me to the scratch.

With regard to the information Mr. Editor I am not writing for the benefit of travelling millionaires who "buy" their sport by employing large numbers of elephants and beaters, and for that reason the wise will not endeavour to find "the happy hunting ground" from my discription, but to anyone or any party vouched for by the editorial guarantee, as good and moderate sportsmen, no information will be withheld; if on perusal of our experiences they think a trip to the far country of Siam, and thereafter, a nine days march (each way), worth while. I think the luxurious sportsman will not rise to the bait.

Returning to Siam from short leave in India I met B. (my brother), in Bangkok, about the 14th of March last, and business reasons compelling me to hurry, spent but few days in Bangkok, and B. knowing of many places where he could spend his leave more profitably, threw no obstacles in the way of an early departure.

A long train journey on the 17th landed us at the starting point of our march. Blackened fields and burning plains told us that the jungle fires were probably also in full swing, and encouraged us to hope that the game would have congregated by the watercourses and green jungle adjoining, and the day, the 18th, spent in overhauling my camp outfit was grudged by both of us. B. had confined himself strictly to his gun, bed and chair, and a couple of small canvas bags, since he was to make use of my elephants and camp outfit, and not a pound of superfluous kit was allowed. B., coming from a country where he gets no big game shooting, had only brought a double barrelled Greener's shot gun, and I had promised to lend him my ·405, new smokeless Winchester repeater, and to fall back on my only other weapon, a 12 bore hammerless ejector shot-and ball gun, by Cogswell and Harrison; which, with so many of your correspondents, I consider the best battery for a man of moderate means and transport facilities.

From the 18th we spent five days marching across open flat country with little or no shade and anyone who has tried this at the end of March between 10° and 20° North will agree that it is no subject to dwell upon.

From native report we judged that it might be worth while to carry our rifles ahead on the 25th morning, and we first heard the sharp bark of a sambur hind, and sighted the "good-bye" ends of three animals, but got no shot. On the 27th we met O., now of the Royal Siamese Forest Department, and in former days a brother planter in Coorg. We were received none the less joyfully by O., in that we carried up a ·303 rifle and a revolver, to replace his battery, which had all been st len only a short time before. He raised B.'s hopes by assurances of sport while lamenting the fact that he had himself just done a trip through a country teaming with game, without a single sporting weapon. Having come to the conclusion that the elephants had quite earned a day's rest after eight days hot marching, we arranged to halt, and have a beat next day. Being the only man who carried a shot gun, I took no advantage of a chance or two at peafowl, for fear of something better breaking back, and the only result was a barking deer, shot by B. As none of us had ever used the new ·405, we looked with much interest at the wound. The shot fired at the deer as it ran away had passed through from rump to shoulder, leaving an exit wound of sufficient size to show that the soft-nosed bullet had begun to set up, even on so small an animal After lunch B. took one direction, and latter on, O. and I took another. O. saw three sambur hinds and then we got a shot at a barking deer, which we missed. I also missed a pig, which O. put up, and which crossed through some bamboos in front of me. The next morning we parted from O., much grieved at his being unable to return with us, and being unable to make our destination Mah Ray (not on the map Mr. Editor), camped nearly on the top of the watershed between the small creek we had been following and the main river, and amused ourselves by fishing one of the nearly dried up pools in a small mountain stream, using rice as a bait. In a little over an hour we landed over 120 small fish; at least I remember that it worked out at over two a minute, between us, and uncommonly good eating they made, served with bread and butter like whitebait.

The next day we reached Mah Ray, K. meeting us about 3 miles out. He assured B. that he would find no lack of game; and going for a stroll the same evening we saw a barking deer and altogether, five sambur hinds, quite close round the camp.

The next day while K. and myself went into business matters, B. took his way off to the north, with a couple of coolies, and about 11 o'clock one of them returned to say that B. had shot a boar, which, not being far from camp, was soon carried in. B. as usual saw sambur hinds, in fact the country seemed full of them and the tracks of tsine and buffalo were also plentiful. The next day I fired two barrels at a barking deer and, as I found subsequently, broke its foreleg with one. After much running, and firing bullets seven, I brought it to bag, and found that, excluding the coup de grace, I had hit it three out of six running shots; average about 60 yards distance; which as it was amongst grass and bamboo was better than I should have done with a rifle. He who snears may try for himself. Shooting at thin skinned animals in thick jungle, specially if they be as speedy as the lissom barker, once he gets going, is best accomplished with the oft-handled and familiar shot-and-ball gun.

K. and myself strolling out one evening about this time, separated, K. going up the almost dry bed of the river and I taking the left bank. We were nearly home when a sambur sprang away from a thick bush near me. The light was bad, but a hasty glance at the head seemed to me to show horns, and I took a snap shot; "Chaw." my big half country-bred dog, following hard on its heels, but returning so quickly that it seemed that the deer must have soiled to throw him off so quickly, and I shouted to K. and cut across to the river.

There we found the track of the sambur and blood, but K. having been round a bend had not sighted him crossing. We called some men from camp and put on the terriers, but darkness came on, and we never retrieved the deer. This was one of two which I lost on this trip after hitting them behind, and I feel sure, that if it is worth while trusting to a shot-and-ball gun at all (for it is always a heavy weapon if any use) one might as well go in for a combination pigeon-and-ball gun, i. e., one of those guns bored to take a very long cartridge and shoot an exceptionally heavy charge of powder If any of your readers know a maker who makes a shot and ball gun 12-bore to take the long cartridge, I should be very glad of the information.

B. next bagged a sambur and another good boar. The former he shot at about 200 yards range, using the 100 yards sight and hitting two out of three shots, which speaks well for the trajectory of the ·405 Winchester. I had been in writing all day, the day B. got his second boar, and he enquired on his return whether I had examined the wound, and was much aggrieved to hear that I had not. "A beautiful shot," he declared with much modesty, "he was half hidden by bamboos and I had to take him at once or he would have disappeared, and I hit him through the heart. It couldn't have been better" he added while curing his honest thirst.

Writing of the evening peg reminds me of an awful experience which befell us about the time C. C. C. joined us. The latter had come up the river taking a count of the logs therein, and never having met him I was naturally somewhat interested in what sort of man I might have to live with, and work with, for such was his fate, and mine. However to continue the tale; C. had a Khamu "boy" from the eastern border of Siam, who like most newly-arrived Khamus knew as much about the various things he found in our kit, as a buffalo. Now we had condoled with O. over his losses when he told us that his hired carriers had decamped with all his remaining whisky. Suddenly remembering that we also had paid off three carriers, a panic-tricken search took place, and revealed the fact that we had only one and-a-half bottles of whisky, and one and a half bottles of gin, for four weeks between two of us! We hastily despatched a fleet messenger, and, on calculation, thought we could do fairly well for the 14 or 16 days; he would take travelling light to return with some more. We had reckoned without the Khamu boy, however, who was led in the same evening by my indignant servitor, who explained that he had found the savage washing our plates with the gin! The Khamu said he thought it was water. Taking into consideration his guilelessness I explained, as calmly as my emotions would permit, what he had done; while B., not feeling sure of his self-control, went out hastily and lit a soothing cigarette. Every evening after tea, sometimes before B. returned from his daily stalk, I used to stroll a little way from camp. Not half a mile away I met a tsine bull one evening for the first time, but when I saw him he was already in full retreat through thick saplings and the dusk favouring him, I missed a snap-shot.

About this time finding I had to wait a couple of days for some contractors, after my work was over, I also got my turn at stalking. On the first I got up with a herd of tsine, and this being the first time I had seen tsine with the exception of the instance just mentioned, over-anxiety led me to fire at the biggest on sight. It fell dead on the spot and proved to be a cow. Sorrowing greatly and cursing myself I followed the herd, but luck had righteously forsaken me and I got nothing more.

The second day I made an early start and while walking ahead of the stalker about 7-30 A.M. I saw a tsine bull only about 70 yards away, among some small saplings growing close together. He was standing quite still so I motioned to the Karen not to move and crept gently towards him. When I got to within 50 yards, I saw his head was towards me, and a slight movement made me think he had spotted me, so, using a sapling as a rest, I fired at his chest. He rushed off at right angles and up a hill, and a shot at his back was acknowledged by a kick. He disappeared round a hill, and, picking up his tracks, we followed. We had scarcely gone 400 yards when the Karen pointed to the right and said, "There are some sambur there, but I can't see if there is a stag." I looked and saw the stag at once, but he was a very long shot for the ball gun; however I knelt and fired, and as the smoke cleared saw him still standing head on, and fired the second barrel. He swung round but still stood staring, side on this time. Hastily reloading, I fired at his shoulder and he disappeared with a clatter after the hinds. Finding blood we followed him up, and about half a mile on saw him walking slowly through the jungle about 70 yards ahead. I fired at once and bowled him over, finishing him off when I reached him; but of the three first shots one had missed; one had chipped a brow antler and the third had struck him behind the shoulder. I freely confess my failures and misses, as well as the "bulls" as I think the relation of the latter only affords very meagre grounds on which to base an opinion of the relative merits of shot-and ball gun and rifle. Having covered him with yern, we went back to the tracks of the bull. These became mingled with those of another bull, and what blood we found was mostly from the wound in the chest on the branches across the path. The blood ceased after a time and the tracking, over stony ground, became so difficult that the Karen wanted to give it up. However I cheered him on, and about 12 o'clock he suddenly pointed excitedly ahead, and I saw a fine tsine lying amongst the bare saplings in rather open ground. I edged to the right, so as to get a thick tree, 10 yards a head, in line, and then ran quickly to it over the soft ashes of the burnt jungle. Arrived there, I saw the tsine move his head and look "half on," rather suspiciously, but I crept gently forward to another 10 yards further on. As I reached it the tsine got up and displayed the proportions and horns of a fine bull, and as he rose I knelt down and fired a shot behind his shoulder, followed by the second barrel as the smoke cleared. He swung round and galloped off, one foreleg flying loosely, and seeing his predicament and not being anxious for another long tracking job I ran after him and got in a couple more shots at his rump, which seemed a rather futile experiment with only 3½ drams to drive a ·780 grain bullet, but the shock downed him, and he made several ineffectional attempts to rise I then became aware of the fact that I had only one cartridge left, so I stalked him to about 30 yards and looked for a vital spot. With his back towards me, however, he presented nothing but a neck shot, and rather than try and go round with only one cartridge I took it. This did not, however, finish him, and as he again vainly attempted to rise and was obviously too weak to do so I walked round him and then close up to him. He grew momentarily weaker, but I was glad to see my Karen stalker coming up with the long stove pipe gun always carried by them in this part of the country, and I made him go up and finish the poor brute at once. Then we examined it for the first wound in the chest, signs of which had been so plentiful on the track, and a suspicion which had crossed my mind when I first saw him, became a certainty. This was not the first bull at all! We had evidently changed on to the track of the other, which had mingled so frequently with that of the one first wounded. Having no more cartridges I could only set off for home, which we reached early enough to send out for the heads the same day. The sambur there carry very poor heads. The one I shot this day being the best we got, 29½ inches.

B. by this time had added a couple of sambur to his bag, but had not seen a single tsine, bison, or buffalo, and was beginning to be a bit anxious as to the probability of his getting a shot at anything big. When his turn came, it came rather unexpectedly, as is often the case. One day our elephant riders told us they had seen a herd of ten or fifteen tsine crossing the river a mile below camp, headed by a big "black" bull. A few evenings later C. and myself went off for a stroll, rifle in hand, and B. crossed the river with the Karen with whom I had been so successful. About 5-30 o'clock we heard a shot from B.'s rifle, followed, in a minute, by two more, which made me remark to C. that it sounded as if B. had got something bigger than usual to shoot at. We returned to camp without having seen anything, and shortly after B. arrived and informed us with great complacency that he had shot "the black bull." Having forgotten what our elephant riders had told us, we asked him to explain this misterious description. He repeated emphatically that he had shot "the black bull." Evidently that animal had been on his mind since it had been reported to us by our elephant riders, and his bad luck heretofore, made made him yearn for it. We congratulated him heartily and went out the next morning to photo it before it was cut up, and we certainly came to the conclusion that the title of "the black bull" was justified. It carried a magnificent head, the measurements of which, duly attested by three of us who measured it together, were sent to you in May, and came fifth on the list of heads recorded in the Indian Field Shikar book, 1904 edition.

We had now only a few days remaining, in which I had to shift camp twice, and B. accompanied me. At our first resting place B. tracked some bison, and after climbing some very steep places, and getting fairly "fed up," saw then bolting away on the other side of a very steep ravine, and being unwilling to follow further he took a shot from where he was, and finding that he had missed returned to camp.

At the second camp we found a dead tsine bull, in a far gone condition showing no signs of having been killed by tiger or dogs, and I came to the conclusion that he was probably the one I had wounded and lost, and offered a reward for any bullet cut out of him, but no one rose to the offer. The same evening I strolled along the opposite, i.e., right bank of the river, and coming home, crossed a strip of bamboo. Just as I was merging a tsine cow trotted out of the same belt and across in front of me, then a young bull, (which I let pass), and then another cow. Suddenly I caught a glimpse of the dark skin of a bull as he came through the bamboos, and covering him as he appeared, I shot behind the shoulder at 30 yards. To my surprise he turned round and made for me, and I fired the second shot at his shoulder. This turned him in the direction of my coolie who had been following about 30 yards behind. The latter developed a great turn of speed, for a khamu, and the bull's attention to him allowed me to get in a third shot, after which it turned off into the bamboo jungle. We started tracking at once, but darkness came on, and as we did not know the jungle we had to make a branch of the river, at the head of which we had pitched camp, and follow it up till we got home. There was just sufficient light to see the thousands of fish scurrying up the shallow water ahead of us as we walked, and, partly in the hope of an answering shot from camp, I fired into the brown once, and got a fish of about 3lbs. weight, like a big English roach, and two smaller ones. Arrived home I found B. had only just come in before me. I started tracking again early next morning feeling sure that I should find my bull close to where I had first shot him, but, alas! this was one of the cases that exemplifies the fact that that a shot and ball gun of the 3½ dram variety was not made to shoot cattle, for I never saw him again.

We were altogether fifteen days in the forest and were perhaps unlucky not to come across buffalo, the tracks of which were very plentiful, but I hope that is a pleasure reserved for a future occasion. The Karens, though they shoot the bison and tsine, did not strike me as being awfully keen to show us any buffalo. They said they chiefly went in herds, and that the unwounded as well as the wounded charged on sight. On our return march we camped on another creek, and my brother and myself bagged a water lizard 6 feet 4½ inches (between pegs) in length, the biggest I have ever seen. I peppered it with shot and it ran into a hollow fallen tree, and defied "Chaw," till I managed to oust it with a long tough creeper and B. shot it with a bullet.

The men were much pleased, as they said it was excellent eating!

We rather regretted not having seen one very interesting animal said to exist down there, the tapir, but we did not even see a track of it.

MERELY A FISHING TRIP.

ALL angling cruises are so much alike that their description is liable to become monotonous. Still, the occurrences and happenings of each are in a measure dissimilar, which will possibly excuse the relation of a trip that afforded me much sport and enjoyment.

The sun was shining over the Illinois hills as my canoe poked her nose into the waters of the Mississippi and turned southward to the head of the backwater whose length I meant to angle that day. Some anglers arrange their tackle before starting out, some at the point where they intend to fish, and others, who are wealthy enough to afford it, hire someone else to do all this work for them. I do not belong to either class, as will be explained. Landing when the backwater was reached, I cooked breakfast, which in itself was a rare treat for a city man. Though the bacon was burned and the eggs fried too hard, the coffee and bread were good, and one rarely cares to eat much so early in the morning Then the dishes (tin ones) were washed, my pipe lighted, and the tackle made ready. For bait I had a pail of minnows, some angle worms, and a variety of spoon hooks and flies. Besides these I could easily catch frogs, crawfish, and grasshoppers, and it may be well to note under what conditions each sort of bait was offered, and the species of fish that accepted it.

My first stop was on a bar covered with about six inches of water, dropping at its lower end to a depth of three feet, with numerous ripples made by projecting snags. West of the bar was a channel some three feet wide and two feet deep, edging the shore. A secret learned in the days of bare feet and short pants was that the fish would work in the deep water below the bar until this channel was found, and then follow it. Few anglers knew of the channel, and, in consequence, it was not "fished to death." A sand pike was landed with the first minnow cast; then a sheepshead and a wall-eyed pike. After a half-hour's fishing the canoe was pulled across the bar, and I dropped down to where a fallen tree lay with its entire length in the water, here about two feet deep. The current had scooped hollows along each side of the trunk, and the larger limbs, which still clung to the parent stem, formed archways through which the fishes darted and played. It seemed a fine spot for black bass. As I anchored above the tree I could see the water wave and circle with their movements, and a minnow dropped beside the log was eagerly taken by a small mouth. Owing to the disturbance made in playing him, I thought best to wait ten minutes before another cast was made. I let this minnow drift in among the limbs and around the trunk, but not a fish was enticed, though I could see abundant proof that they were there. When a live minnow will not attract a game fish, some fishermen will give up in despair, and say "It's no use." But there are anglers who know better. An artificial fly was next sent to the proper spot, but either it was too dull in colour or the sun was too bright; anyway, the fish would not take it.

It is at times such as this that experience and perseverance count. A few minutes spent ashore yield a supply of grasshoppers, and the first of them turns the trick by hooking a rock bass; the next, a sunfish. This last capture is a "straight tip," and a change is made to angle worms, which entice other sunfish, a bullhead, and—that most stubborn of fighters—a dogfish. A hooked dogfish invarialy churns up the water and frightens other fish away; so the anchor is lifted and the canoe floats to where a fallen maple lies with the tips of its branches submerged. The water is deeper here, and presently the worms are discarded for minnows. For a half-hour the crappies bite so fast that count of those taken is lost; then they bite no longer, nor will grasshoppers, worms, or crawfish induce a solitary nibble. Back to the old log again, where minnows yield a black bass, a rock bass, and a tripped bass in quick succession. Then a spoon hook is substituted, and a wall-eyed pike surrenders to its charms; a few more sunfish acknowledge their fondness for worms; a catfish is adducted by a grasshopper, and the sport lags and it is time to go elsewhere.

A leaping bass splashes under a steep bank where the water runs deep and swift. A deftly-aimed fly drops into the centre of the whirl, and a short strike shows that he is in fighting trim, and evidently hungry. He strikes short again at the second cast, and after that neither fly nor minnow well tempt him. A whirling spoon hook brings another half-hearted strike; worms are offered him, but he declines them with contempt. Crawfish, grasshoppers, and frogs are the only items remaining on the bill of fare, and must be procured ashore. When, at last, the frog is offered, a catfish accepts it with great willingness. I am confident the bass is still there and as second choice I tender him a grasshopper, which is greedily taken by a nice rock bass. Then on to the hook goes the "real thing" a crawfish—and a three-and-a-half-pound small-mouth responds gallantly to the invitation, and is soon lying in the canoe to be admired at my leisure.

I lunch in the shadow of a great elm beside a bubbling spring, and a good smoke and a long rest put me in shape for the remainder of the day. Then the canoe is headed upstream, and the sport commences anew. A minnow lures a nice pickerel from beside a stump in the water; two black bass follow the whirring spoon from their rocky shelter; another school of crappie is encountered, and the little catfish show quite a liking for grasshoppers. Off a shelving bank a mud-turtle toys too long with the hook, and there are sand-pike in the channels ready to risk much for a square meal. The last place fished is in the shade of some leaning maples, and here, for the first time during the day, a fly is effective. Three black bass are added to the string: then I paddle ashore, dress the catch, take down the rods, stow the tackle neatly, and at eventide am at home, tired and content.—E. K. Stedman, in Sports Afield.

Shooting.

AVERAGE FORM.

UNDER the abovenamed heading I wish this week to address a few words to those of my readers who go to make up the great bulk of latter-day shooters; in other words, to the rank and file of the shooting community, as distinguished from those whom I referred to recently as crack performers. Most men will come to consider themselves (I hope) as of the rank and file, and what I have to say now is of them, and not of the cracks.

Rider Haggard has said in some one or other of his interesting novels that there is no joy on earth to equal that felt by a moderate shot when he pulls off a series of brilliant "doubles" or other difficult shots. It may be that this is going to far and that the redoubtable Rider is giving play to his ever-versatile imagination. Be this as it may, however, there is more joy and satisfaction to the moderate shot in killing three or four doubles at snipe, driven grouse, or partridges, then the same achievement gives to the crack. Of that there can be no doubt. It has fallen to my lot to referee a good many shooting matches in my time and more especially at clay birds have I seen the one or two experts present, such as Ellicott or Dr. Moran, break bird after bird away up into the forties and fifties, and even higher, without a miss. Such performances are unequalled; nevertheless, the performers showed no signs of exhilaration or pleasure—they took it as a matter of course, and, on the whole, looked rather weary and bored over it than otherwise. Such uninterrupted monotony seemed to pall upon them, in spite of the round after round of applause from the spectators. And naturally so, for there is little excitement associated with a certainty, and that either of the aforenamed shooters could break fifty or more up, without a miss, was a certainty to the meanest intellect on the ground. At live pigeon shoots the same sentiments prevail, though we do not see the long runs of kills at live birds that we do at clay ones. Given the moderate shot on the other hand, and anyone can see by the mere expression of his face how keenly he is enjoying his success if he is shooting well. No one can mistake his state of mind after that last 'double rise" so neatly taken, for his state of mind is written in block type right across his smiling visage. Perhaps, then, good old Rider Haggard was not drawing the long-bow to any great extent when he said there was no joy on earth to equal that of the moderate shot when shooting up to form.

Average form then may be said to be that degree of proficiency possessed by about eleven out of every twelve shooters you come across. "Average form" in the field or at the traps introduces us to a vast number of shooters. Their name is legion. They represent the great bulk, or indeed the whole, army of sporting gunners, and the comparatively few expert or crack performers float above them in an atmosphere of their own. The latter can never be touched, so we may as well leave them alone. For the rest we find quite a lot of well-known sportsmen among the "average form" majority. Most of those whose names are now figuring in the sporting papers as lessees of such-and-such a moor in Scotland are merely average form men, although the bags they and their party may make are enormous. And here you see is just where it all comes in; because to miss, say, two or three shots or more in a day's shoot will not influence the total make-up of the bag to any great extent, but it will put the man who misses them out of the running for honours as an expert or crack performer.

So that average form is always likely to remain the prevalent form, or, indeed, I may say the standard form. Let a man shoot consistently up to this standard and he may go anywhere as a game or trap shot. He enjoys his sport and looks the world in the face. He knows there is just the possibility of his missing the very next bird or beast that gets up before him; he knows he may, for that matter, miss the next two or three shots that offer; and this element of uncertainty gives a zest and interest to his pastime that some well known authorities contend the experts and cracks never enjoy. Well, if so, all the better; the greatest good of the greatest number may be transposed for once into the greatest pleasure of the greatest number, and there you are. The happiest evening parties I have ever attended or been present at have been fireside gatherings after hard work on moor or bog, when the day's doings and adventures came up for discussion. The jacksnipe that could not be got on wing the second time, the only woodcock seen all day and badly missed by the outside gun the big flock of golden plover that rose just out of shot, and the brace of teal that "M." shot with a smart right and left—all are gone over again as the shadows fade and the glowing wood fire throws bright glares across the room. Such details might not interest "cracks," because the jacksnipe would not have got the chance to show a second time, and the woodcock not have been missed. The plover probably would not appeal to cracks either in or out of range, and, as for the teal, why, they were shot in any case. But to men of average form all this applies and appeals; they enjoy themselves to the full, and if all men were like unto them the realms of sport would be all the better for it.—D. I. HAMILTON, in Shooting Times.

BRIDGE QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Before starting three-handed bridge, the players agreed to ignore the rule—that "the difference between the scores of the two losers is also paid by the third player to the second."

The rubber was won by A. The highest number of points was scored by B.

A., while admitting his indebtedness to B., claimed, as the winner of the rubber, to be paid by C.

On the other hand, B., as the highest scorer, claimed, that he (and not A.) should be paid by C.

Whom should C. pay?

G.

[This query really requires a Solomon or a Full Bench for its decision. If it was actually agreed that the "winner of the Rubber" was to be paid by the two losers, C. should pay A. and not B., and A. should pay B. as was done. If, as was probably the case, it was merely agreed that the two losers should pay the winner (without any thing being said as to the rubber) both A. and C. should pay B. It is (see Hellespont) a very common practice for players to play "Cut throat" without reference to the rubber, merely adding 50 points to the score of the player who wins a game, and taking this as more nearly representing what the parties intended we should say that both A. and C. should pay B.—ED.]

INFORMATION WANTED.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you, or any who read your popular paper, say what I should do in this case. My dogs are constantly suffering with small abscesses between the toes and under the armpits. The latter are very troublesome and in one dog there is now a group of five in size from a good big pea downwards, very angry and inflamed looking and a source of constant irritation to the dog. The dogs are very carefully fed, and regularly exercised on the maidan, not on chain, but running after horse or bike. Can you say what is the cause and what the treatment? A soi disant "expert" has, I consider, failed to correctly diagnose the case and talks of "heat" and "worms".

T. A. W.

[Very probably caused by those obnoxious hangers on known as cherkantas, the spear-like grass seeds that at this season stick closer than a brother to one's nether garments when grass is traversed. If T.A.W. will have his dogs' feet and other parts carefully examined directly they return from their exercise, he will doubtless find the source of the trouble abundantly apparent, on the webs of the feet especially. These cherkantas penetrate the skin, set up inflammation which the dog's lingual attentions seem to aggravate, and these small abscesses are developed. Remove the cause promptly and the trouble will vanish. If any of the abscesses suggest a lancet open them, and after cleaning apply carbolic oil dressing and take means to prevent the dog licking the parts, such as chaining up his head short for a couple of hours.—ED.]

A NARROW ESCAPE IN LADAK.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The other day I was reading a graphic description of the perils of mountaineering in the Himalayas. It is extraordinary how very few sportsmen come to grief, though nearly all have narrow escapes at times.

I experieced one very unpleasant incident myself. It was towards the end of May 1903 when I was ibex shooting in the Wakka nallah, near Maulbeck, in Ladak. The main nallah is a deep and gloomy gorge, winding up for twenty miles into the heart of the mountains. It is on an average only about two hundred yards broad, but the sheer rock walls on either side are in places a thousand feet high The ibex are sought for up the side glens, among the sparse vegetation which grows on the steep slopes.

One peculiar feature of the mountain sides here is the long shale shoots, which are so smooth and steep that every boulder which finds its way into them, at once starts rolling; soon the pace increases, till bounding from side to side the flying fragment dislodges other pieces of rock in its course, so that at last a roaring, whirring avalanche of stones and dust tears down the hillside into the valley below.

One day, after a tremendous climb, I had succeeded in getting above a herd of ibex, and two bucks had fallen to my manulicher. One was killed at comparatively short range, as he stood on one of the shale shoots just described. The other had got far away up the mountain before the fatal bullet overtook and laid him low. I clambered with my shikari down to the ibex first killed, while another man was sent up the hill to recover the head of the second one. This latter was extraordinarily heavily built and clumsy for a Kashmiri, and his awkwardness very nearly caused a disaster.

I had got down to the dead ibex, which had slid a considerable distance and lay close to the confluence of two of these mountain slides, which rose up and up like immense toboggan shoots till their top ends were lost amid the snow.

Suddenly I heard a rumbling in the distance, and soon this sounded louder and nearer. Then the whizz of stones passing overhead warned me what to expect.

Between the shoots and fortunately close to was a tiny hummock . . . towards this I crept as quickly as possible. As I crawled a huge stone grazed my shoulder, while another passed within a foot of my head: they had acquired such velocity in their long downward flight, that they came by with a whirr and hum like shells from a howitzer battery.

No sooner had I crouched behind my protecting hummock than with a deafening roar a great shower of boulders of all sizes swept over me amid a storm of small stones and dust.

In a few moments all was quiet again, and I could hardly realize that in those eventful seconds the shadow of death had approached, all but touched, and passed. But for that little shoulder between the shoots, I should have been carried battered and lifeless down the slope. The shikari who was lower down, and near the outside of the shoots, had taken refuge among some rock close to him.

The whole of this avalanche of big stones was caused by the heedlessness of the man sent for the second ibex. Crossing one of the slides a quarter of a mile higher up, he had carelessly dislodged some boulders; these had disturbed others, also in loose equilbrium, and so a few stones had soon started hundreds of others in a headlong descent down the slides.

Second Day, Wednesday, 3rd October 1906.

THE weather was again kind enough to clear up for the second day's racing which was a very big improvement on the first day's, though the course after the continuous heavy rain was, perhaps, not as fast as it might otherwise have been.

Proceedings commenced with the Hurdle Race for which Clifton and Prags shared favouritisne, but One and Only, very nicely ridden by her owner, waited on them until the run in and then came away with a good deal in hand, winning by three lengths and a great many pounds.

The extra race, with a field of eight practically unknown ponies, provided the talent with a puzzle they were quite unequal to and Othello, a rank outsider, won like a race horse, almost unbacked the remaining seven altogether behind him some ten to twenty lengths.

The public paid the handicappers the compliment of never knowing what to make favourite and the one finally selected was more often than not the wrong one.

At the close of the Races the Lieutenant-Governor gave away the cups and prizes which had been won during the Poojas. Details:—

DONCASTER.

THE fact that the King would again be present brought the rank, fashion, and beauty of the county to the stands, and though the attendance suffered by comparison with Tuesday and Wednesday, the Cup Day attracted a huge crowd. Tattersall's and the further rings were crowded to excess. On the far side a big crowd surged round a long line of vehicles, whose owners had taken the pleasantest way by far, and picnicked with all the laisser aller of a Derby Day, showing that though in quickness of transport the rail beats the road, the old-fashioned style is the best. His Majesty met with an enthusiastic reception, and hundreds who could not or did not afford to go a-racing cheered the progress of the Rufford Abbey cortège on its return journey to the station, the universal regret being that the Royal colours had not been successful in the Prince of Wales' Nursery, once won by the mighty St. Simon, but the King's filly, Osella, was denied the satisfaction of a place after running forward enough to encourage hope. The pride of the morning was almost too bright, and at one time it looked as if we were to suffer from a repetition of Thursday's drizzle, but, content with a shower, Nature dried its tears, and a placidly calm afternoon enhanced the pleasures of the day. Thursday's soaking had worked wonders on the moor, refreshing the parched going, which was most appreciable after the recent hard state, and with fields, for the most part, panning out well, a brilliant wind-up was given to a grand meeting.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

Taking a rapid survey of Saturday's football, there are many reasons for satisfaction. The official and professional season opens on 1st September, but the majority of amateur clubs delay a beginning until the third Saturday in September, and the amateurs were out in full force on Saturday. They certainly began under suitable conditions. In some of the districts rain fell heavily, but generally speaking the climatic conditions were admirable. That there is no falling off of interest in the Association game so far as the public are concerned is evident from the gate returns, although the 30,000 at Newcastle to witness the revenge of the Novocastrians for the defeat inflicted on them at the Crystal Palace by Everton last April was below expectations. Professional football is still on the crest of a wave of popularity, and amateur football never previously showed such signs of vigorous life.

THE SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

The clubs playing at home in the Southern League had matters largely their own way. Of the ten games in the tourney the visiting side was successful in only one, there were two drawn games, and seven home victories. Thus early in the season the lack of success on the part of the forwards has been made manifest; but they did something to redeem their character on Saturday, for there was an average of more than three goals per match, and it is seldom, indeed, that such a large tally has rewarded their efforts. For once in a way, the First Division Leaguers placed a less number of goals to their credit than their Southern League rivals, while the Second Leaguers were a good third.

The four Southern League matches in the Metropolis provided only one surprise—the solid defeat of Crystal Palace by Fulham, the holders of the shield. The Cottagers had not shown such form in their earlier engagements as to suggest that they would earn winning brackets against the Palace, but the re-arrangement of the forward line worked wonders. A three clear goals' victory admits of no argument, and the detractors of Fulham should now have the grace to pay a tribute to their prowess. The Palace were disappointing, but the forwards were put off their usual game by the opposing defence. Fulham is the only club in the leading leagues whose goal has not yet been captured. Brentford came with a wet sail against Queen's Park Rangers, at the Middlesex county town, but though they deserved to win there was not the disparity between the teams which is suggested by the 4-1 score. The Bees took chances; the Rangers did not, and that explains much. The winners gain one point as compared with last season's result. Watford are satisfied with the division of the points at Leyton, after a rousing game, watched by a big crowd, and both teams will make a good show in the competition if they maintain the level they reached on Saturday. Millwall had to wipe out the defeat on their own ground last season inflicted by Northampton, and they did so by exactly reversing the scores. It was a most popular win.

As all the home clubs in the other games escaped defeat they should be accounted happy, but Swindon would have been better pleased had their forwards beaten Eggett. No goals were scored, and Tottenham thus take a point in a match which last season they lost by 2—0. Reading went under at Portsmouth by the narrowest possible margin, and the form of the winners was not convincing. There will have to be a solid improvement if they intend to remain No. 1 on the list. West Ham had to take the field at Norwich without Wildman, who was on the injured list and his absence was sufficient to turn the scale. Play was of a sensational order, and one of the features was a great effort by the Hammers in the last ten minutes to get on equal terms. Norwich deserved their win, and aspiring champions must keep watchful eyes on the Canaries. New Brompton just got the better of the improved Brighton team in a heavy scoring game, and Plymouth Argyle, playing below full strength, had an easy journey at home against Bristol Rovers, whose defence was very shaky. Southampton, who are experiencing some rude buffetings from Dame Fortune, found Luton again too good for them, but a loss by 2—1 looks much better than last season's overthrow of five to love.

LEAGUE I.

Many fine achievements have been written in the annals of the Arsenal Club since it made the plunge into professionalism, but it has not, in my opinion, any more brilliant success in its now voluminous records than that gained on Saturday over the proud Prestonians. This win was very sweet to the Gunners, because they had never previously obtained a couple of League points at Deepdale. In fairness to the losers it should be mentioned that their back division was weak, Call being very poor, but the visitors cleverly turned this to account, concentrating the bulk of their attack on the spot least capable of resisting it. The work of the Arsenal throughout was brainy, and the right wing was brilliant, Bellamy giving a display up to International requirements. There were missed chances on both sides, but there generally are, and victory went to the side which deserved it on the run of the play. Last season's corresponding game was a two-all draw.

Several of the home clubs in the First Division of the League had a sorry time. Liverpool, the champions, were at Anfield-road, and they suffered a dramatic defeat from Sunderland by the odd goal in three. This was most humiliating to the Liverpudlians, for last season Sunderland provided them with 4 points. Sheffield United were worsted at Bramall-lane by Manchester United, who have already justified their promotion, and the much-discussed Middlesbrough Club could only score one of the four goals obtained at Ayresome Park in their game with Sheffield Wednesday. Bolton Wanderers, who have one of the best line of forwards in the League, had a profitable journey to Derby, the Rams losing by the solitary goal scored, and Notts County could not do better than halve the points with Stoke, this being a repetition of last season's result. Aston Villa overwhelmed Birmingham, who never looked like repeating their 1905-6 success. Manchester City earned their first point by playing Bury to a draw at Hyde-road, the Blackburn Rovers were soundly beaten by Bristol City, whose form shows improvement every week, and Newcastle United came out on top in a Titanic struggle with Everton.

Aston Villa have now gone to the head of the table, while Stoke, who were first last year at this time, bring up the rear.

LEAGUE II.

The metropolitan clubs in the Football League enjoyed themselves right royally on Saturday. The Arsenal's great win has been dealt with, and reference has now to be made to the victories of Chelsea and Clapton Orient. If the Pensioners will serve up football every Saturday similar to that which they showed when meeting Bradford, they will be found next season in the upper circle. There is no doubt in my mind upon that point. I am equally certain that more artistic inside work than McDermott's is wellnigh impossible. It was a great day for all the forwards, and defence was solid, only one mistake being made during the afternoon, and that cost a goal. Clapton Orient have struck a winning vein, Glossop's easy defeat being most welcome to the loyal supporters of the North London club, who were especially delighted at the sparkling finish of the Orientals. The Throstles did well to win at Barnsley, and Leicester Fosse, in sharing the spoils with Leeds City, on the latter's ground, did what few other clubs are likely to do. Poor Nottingham Forest lost at Burnley, and Wolverhampton Wanderers could do no better than draw with Blackpool at the Molyneux Grounds. The Wolves have only four points from four matches, while the Foresters have not yet won a game. The other games do not call for special comment.

SWIMMING.

BLACKWALL TO GRAVESEND.—Although numerous attempts have been made this season to equal the performances of M. Holbein, Captain Webb, and J. Wolffe of swimming from Blackwall to Gravesend, it was not until yesterday that the desired object was attained. It was considered that Mr. Walpole Hiller was attempting a hopeless task. This gentleman is a member of the Sheffield Otter Club, is forty years of age, and weighed yesterday about 10st. 6lbs. For the present task he had undergone a thorough preparation; in fact, it was considered that he had trained almost too fine for a task of this description. However, this did not prove to be the case, for despite the fact that he did not set up any fresh figures, he succeeded in reaching Gravesend in 5hrs. 44mins. He was accompanied by M. A. Holbein, and Mr. T. W. Crout acted as pilot. Although the tide served well, and the temperature of the water was about 62, the weather was most cheerless and cold. The swim must be considered one of the best performances for the distance.

It was five minutes to three when the swimmer (well covered with a preparation made by Holbein) took the water, the weather at the time being very dull. Taking matters leisurely, Victoria Dock (distance, half a mile) was covered in 13mins. At Woolwich Ferry (three miles, time 58mins.) the Sheffielder was going exceedingly well, and half a mile further (the Royal Arsenal Clock) Hiller had been in the water 1hr. 4mins., which was a little more than a minute better than J. Wolffe's time. At this juncture the water became somewhat choppy, and Beckton Gas Works (4½ miles) was negotiated in 1hr. 21mins. Rain was now falling heavily, and the Southern Outfall, seven miles from the start, was passed in 1hr. 55mins., Rainham Creek (8¼ miles) in 2hrs. 16mins., and Erith Causeway (10½ miles) twenty minutes later. Hiller was still in front of J. Wolffe's time, but some minutes behind Holbein's and Captain Webb's for the same distance.

Three hours 5 minutes was occupied in reaching Purfleet, when just after the swimmer received a hearty cheer from the boys of the Cornwall training ship. About Stone Court the swimmer experienced a rather bad time, and darkness was rapidly setting in. Greenhithe was breasted in just five minutes under four hours.

As usual, Long Reach proved a tremendous task, but by careful coaching Grays Thurrock was passed 27mins. later, this being by far the slowest part of the journey. Pegging gamely along, Northfleet Light was passed in 5hrs. 15mins., and although the tide was now fast giving out, the Sheffielder succeeded in getting level with Gravesend Pier at thirty-nine minutes past eight, having been immersed 5hrs. 44mins.

When he had concluded, Hiller was in splendid condition, quite strong and warm, and, unaided, dressed himself very speedily.

THE POONA AND KIRKEE HOUNDS.

26th September.—The fixture to-day was Aundh with the hope of getting sport beyond the river which until now has been too high to ford. Considering a ball had been given at Government House the night before, a very good number, including His Excellency Lord Lamington, turned out. Hounds were soon busy in a low crop and when one after another gave tongue we all hoped we were in for a nerve bracer, for a bit of delightful country lay before us, great was our disappointment when the music suddenly ceased and when the master saw the e-use there was nothing but a huge jungle cat's head left to tell the tale. An hour or more was spent in drawing every likely spot but without reward for patience, and a blank must be the record.

29th September.—A farewell dinner to the M. F. H. and Mrs. Sheringham, who are returning to England in a day or two, was given by the members of the Hunt. Covers for eighty were laid and guests assembled at the Gymkhana Club at 8-15. His Excellency the Governor of Bombay presided and a most cheery evening was spent in a charming way, his very flattering remarks as to the result of Colonel Sheringham's six years' devotion to Poona hunting must have been extremely gratifying, and to show their appreciation in a substantial form a cheque was given to him by Lord Lamington in the name of the members. The health of Colonel and Mrs. Sheringham was then drunk with musical honours. After a most suitable and straight little speech from the M. F. H., the Honorary Secretary, Mr. Enthoven, suggested an adjournment to the ball-room, where dancing to the strains of the excellent band of the East Lancashire Regiment was thoroughly enjoyed for an hour or more.

In the unavoidable absence of General Richardson, President of the Hunt, Surgeon General Trevor gave the Royal toast, and when the health of the King Emperor had been drunk, Lord Lamington expressed the universal regret at the absence of General Richardson, who was at the last moment called away on a sad errand to Ahmednagar.

30th September.—Yerrowda. "To finish the season." There is a sad ring in this notice, but the last meet resulted in a very pleasant morning's sport; after drawing the heavy crops around the jail a line was picked up on the grass land beyond and when once the hounds had settled down they ran with their usual drive, except that the grass was rather too long, the going on the whole was not bad, although at one nullah where the ground was a bit boggy there were no fewer than five empty saddles until the crops again came in our way light at first but getting heavier and heavier as we neared "the sisters," this being the jack's point; so far he had gone straight through everything, nullahs, ploughed land, crops, and all, but in a denser covert than usual a slight check occurred and at this critical moment a hound was accidentally ridden over by one of the field, the hounds were casting themselves, but hearing the cry of the injured hound they all turned back, and although they appeared to carry the line back almost in the direction they had come they soon gave it up, so to prevent damage to the crops they were stopped and as the coverts appeared to become denser the further we went from home the master very reluctanly gave up hunting. But for 3½ couple being left in kennels slightly lame all would have been out to-day, as it was 20 couple were at work as fit a lot as one could wish to see.

LOYALIST.

THE GORDON'S HORSE HOUNDS.

THAT anathema maranatha of M. F. H's, a heavy fog, hung over the Mysore country when we assembled at Chickhalli Bridge on the Nassipur Road on the 1st October. It was the second day's hunting in Mysore, and H. H. the Maharaja—good and keen sportsman that he is—was again out, as also his brother, the Yuvaraja; Colonel Desaraj Urs, Colonel Lender and other good men and true. Mrs. Traill, Mrs. Wortabet, Mrs. Gibbs, Miss Moore, Miss Samuel and Miss Goodrich were also hunting, and there were one or two habits which were strange even to the observant and susceptible eyes of "Soapey Sponge." Matters opened dolefully enough. Scent was practically non-existent, and although the eager pack feathered once or twice on apparently stale lines, they could not carry it. Then the sun appeared and the fog lifted, but still scent would not lie, and hard as the Master and his whips worked, it looked woefully like a blank day. Perseverance however was at length rewarded, for at last hounds opened on a fairly fresh line and a few hundred yards further on Warrior almost had him by the scruff of the neck in some cultivation. With a desperate effort the jack got away, and breaking from the crops, set his mask straight for Chamundi Hill with the leading hound close at his brush. A spare neck would not have been a bad thing, for there were plenty of stones about if not much fencing, but they ran at such a pace that it was necessary either to gallop hard or resign yourself to losing them. For three miles on end they simply flew, the scent being breast-high and the slower hounds tailing a good deal. Chamundi Hill loomed fairly close, but stout jack as our quarry was, he was destined never to reach it, for Warrior, who led throughout the run, collared him in a small bush where he had apparently laid down utterly used up, and a rattling good gallop concluded with a satisfactory kill. Many men went well, the Yuvaraja especially so, and of the ladies' brigade it was a tremendous race between Mrs Traill and Miss Moore. The latter was actually the first lady up and was presented with a well-earned brush. Two good runs and two kills—for they undoubtedly killed on the previous Friday although the trophies were not recovered, does the G. H. H. much credit, and they have contributed not a little to the enjoyment of His Highness' European guests at the Dassara festivities.

3rd October.—Still enjoying the generous hospitality of H. H. the Maharaja, we "all went a-hunting to-day," at the 90th milestone on the Manantoddy Road. One of the field accosted the Master with the air of importance proper to a man who has "seen the fox" and it appeared that he had noticed a jack in the vicinity a quarter of an hour before. Rather long for this country, but nevertheless hounds were laid on and to everyone's delight promptly responded by a burst of music. "Hold hard one minute gentlemen," and this being done we are away, galloping for all we are worth after this flying pack, which never gives a jack much time to get his wind back when they are hustling him along. Ten minutes of hard going and up go their heads. Wisely Mr. Gledstanes leaves them alone for a minute or two, but they can make nothing of it and it is only after some perseverance on the part of the Master that the line is recovered. A somewhat difficult check to account for, and the jack must have got a good start, for it lasted nearly ten minutes. Again we ran fast in a southward direction, and gradually bending to the right. I am not acquainted with the country and so find it almost impossible to describe these Mysore runs when back in Bangalore it will be easier. The ground here was fairly open and quite a herd of antelope crossed the line in full view, but not a hound left the original quarry. The pack this morning was a weak one, owing to a stupid mistake by one of the hunt servants, and this fact probably saved the jack's life as further on he got into some difficult country with thick coverts calling for a strong pack to push him through. At a road there was a slight check, but they picked it up again themselves and pushed him through a small covert in their usual business-like style. Then however a large stretch of jungle was reached with high grass, and here notwithstanding strenuous work on the part of the small pack he beat them. Colonel Anderson had a nasty purl towards the end of this good run, his horse stepping into a hole and coming down in a heap. The Colonel got off with a broken collar-bone and H. H. the Maharaja promptly took him back to Government House in his motor-car. A second run of sorts took place later on when a weak jack was accounted for in about fifteen minutes. Miss Samuel who had gone like a bird in the first run received the brush. It should have been said that the time of the first run from start to finish was about an hour, and notwithstanding the long check the going was very fast at times. We bid farewell to our generous host and return to Bangalore to-morrow.

Athletics.

THE NEGLECT OF "FIELD EVENTS"

A FEW years ago a controversy arose as to whether "field" events, i.e., those of the "heavy" type, should be deleted from the 'Varsity Sports. In this instance the traditional conservatism of our leading seats of learning operated for good from the point of view of the lover of all-round athletics, and no change was made. Recently the subject was revived by an Oxonian, who, in a communication to a weekly contemporary, again advocates the abolition of the Hammer if not the Weight.

The reasons advanced for this course are that such exercises as hammer-throwing and weight-putting are out of date, and that they do not properly belong to athletic sports at all, but are really a branch of gymnastics. In regard to the first of these reasons, I should like, with all deference, to ask anti-hammer-throwers and weight-putters precisely what they mean by "out of date." Ask a Scotsman, Irishman, or American whether hammer-throwing, shot-putting, caber-tossing, and the discus yield pride of place for popularity to the path events.

At the Highland gatherings, where stalwarts like A. A. Cameron, Alex. Munro, Jas. Morrison, and in bygone days Donald Dinnie, Davidson, and Johnstone, delighted the onlookers by their feats of strength, the running items are voted "flat" events in more senses then one. In the Emerald Isle the performances of Tim Kiely, five times winner of the A.A.A. "Hammer," and burly Denis Horgan, who has nine "Shots" to his credit, are keenly followed by nearly all votaries of athletics. Across the "pond" the celebrated Duffey's name is scarcely more familiar than those of Flanagan, Martin Sheridan, Wesley W. Coe (the old Oxonian), and his great rival at shot-putting, Ralph Rose. It is true that these events do not arouse much enthusiasm in England, but surely the reason is not far to seek. While every reasonable encouragement is afforded them in the countries just referred to, English athletic clubs, when they include them in their programmes at all, which is not often, usually rush them through in the remotest quarter of the ground during the progress of one of the racing items, and, in contrast to the promptitude with which the results of the track events are announced on the board, it not infrequently happens that any information as to the winner of the hammer or weight is deemed quite unnecessary. What wonder, then, that the latter sports "are not understanded of the people."

The fact is that these sports do not receive fair treatment. Considered, however purely as a form of sport, and apart from mere questions of popularity with spectators, in what sense are heavy events "out of date?" Surely not because of their antiquity, else running would be still more out of date. There is no logical reason why strength, as well as speed, should

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.
Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

not be cultivated to-day as much as in the earlier history of athletics. Equally curious—especially when emanating from an alumnus of the centre of the classics—is the argument that hammer-throwing really belongs to gymnastics, and not to athletic sports. The nearest approach to hammer-throwing practised by the Greeks was the discus, which was one of the five feats comprising the pentathlon, and was of course, performed in the stadium, like the other four. The group name—field events—of such sports as hammer-throwing and shot-putting is surely indicative enough of their athletic character. Fancy throwing the hammer in the average gymnasium of to-day!

Considering the track events usually outnumber the "strong man" feats in the ratio of half-a-dozen to one, surely the hammer and weight may well be allowed to retain their modest share of the programme undisturbed. After all, we do not want to become a race of greyhounds pure and simple, to the neglect of the bull-dog qualities which have been the national pride. Hammer-throwing and shot-putting are splendid exercises for developing strength and vigour, and the idea that heavy events must make a man slow is a fallacy easily capable of demonstration. This class of performer usually provides the best all-round exponent, which was the object aimed at by the model athletæ of ancient Hellas. We rightly thrill with admiration at the spectacle of Morton negotiating the hundred in 9⅘ths or Shrubb covering half-a-score of miles in less than 52 minutes, but the sprint champion and the distance ex-champion are "peds" only. Tom Kiely has not only touched 150 feet with the hammer, and put up first-class figures for the shot and throwing the 56lbs. weight, but is equally at home at the hurdles, leaping, and the flat. Twice he has won the American amatuer all-round athletic championship, comprising ten mixed feats. His rival for this title, Martin Sheridan, is another example of the kind. How many crack "peds" could go out of their element and win such a competition? Even burly Denis Horgan can carry his 17st. over the sticks in good style, and the professional champion of Scotland, A. A. Cameron, another giant, not only holds numerous records for heavy events, but has done 5 feet 6 inches at the high jump, and is a capable sprinter.

So much have heavy events been allowed to fall into decay in England that I cannot call to mind a single really first-class native performer to-day, with the exception, perhaps, of A. H. Fyffe, the Oxonian—who, I believe, is of Scottish parentage, though educated at Winchester—not that it is essential to the encouragement of such sports that there should be a galaxy of "stars," any more than it is necessary, in order to render the sprint exciting, to have a man who can do the hundred in even time. At the same time if fair attention be given to the hammer and weight there is no tangible reason why England should not produce some first-class exponents. It is to be sincerely hoped that the opposition which exists among a section of the A.A.A. will not be allowed to prevail; the elimination of these events from the championships would practically sound their death-knell. Rather let us hope that the numerous affiliated clubs will support the muscular branch of athletics with less lukewarmness than in the past, following the suit of the L.A.C., the leading club in the Metropolis being one of the few consistent adherents in this respect.

As to the plea sometimes heard that field events are tedious, it may be pointed out that our go-ahead "quick lunch" relatives across the Atlantic include four (instead of two) such items in their Championships, and if they do not find them slow, why should the more phlegmatic Briton? Our Yankee friends, in fact, practise these branches to such good purpose that Yale and Harvard can usually be relied upon to make backs of Oxford and Cambridge with the hammer and weight. Our representatives have made a very inadequate show at the Olympic Games, which include a considerable proportion of field exercises. Let us hope that by the time the next festival arrives we shall be better equipped.

Henry Vignaud, Secretary of the American Embassy at Paris, enjoys telling of an American who was being shown the tomb of Napoleon. As the loquacious guide referred to the various points of interest in connection with the tomb, the American evinced the greatest interest in all that was said. "This immense sarcophagus," declaimed the guide, weighs 20 tons. Inside of that, sir, is a steel receptacle weighing 12 tons, and inside of that is a leaden casket hermetically sealed weighing over 2 tons. Inside of that rests a mahogany coffin containing the remains of the great man." For a moment the American was silent as if in deep meditation; then he said: "It seems to me that you got him all right. If he ever gets out cable me at my expense."

AUTOMOBILE NOTES FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 21st September 1906.

IT has now become a common practice to place the petrol tank at the rear of a chasis beneath the frame. This is certainly the best position for it, but on big touring cars, which need to carry a large supply of fuel, it is advisable to see that the petrol tank is not too deep and will allow for sufficient road clearance when the car is fully loaded. There is danger otherwise of fouling any obstruction in the road and getting stranded through a punctured tank, which, if it occurs in the country, would entail considerable delay, unless other spare tins of petrol were carried on the car. Even then an effective repair to a broken tank is very difficult to manage away from a workshop. Recently a motorist who was held up by trouble of this kind, and found it impossible to repair the damaged petrol tank, reached home by an ingenious arrangement of the rubber tube connection from his tyre pump, one end of which he attached to the carburettor and the other to a petrol tin which his companion held above the motor, thus securing a temporary gravity feed.

Now that winter is approaching, it is necessary to guard against accidents from side slip on wet and greasy roads. The armoured tyres now generally in use are very effective when new as a means of prevention, while there are one or two detachable non-slipping devices, such as the Parsons chain, which can be recommended for use with smooth tyres. It must always be remembered, however, that the avoidance of trouble from side slip rests mainly with the driver, who, if he is experienced, can safely control a car over grease, even without the assistance of any means for prevention of side slip.

The Autocar has sounded a note of warning in respect to the provisions as regards taxation which are to be embodied in the new Motor Bill. The proposal is for a tax to be imposed at the rate of £1 a horse-power, with a minimum of £5, and when it is remembered that the majority of cars in use range from between 15 and 20 horse-power the effect of such an imposition can be imagined. It does not seem possible that such a measure will be allowed to pass. The motor industry has now become very large and an increasing source of prosperity to the country, and such an attempt to restrict the use of motor vehicles must meet with the strongest opposition, not only from motor-car owners, but also from the large number of workers who are indirectly interested.

This year is the tenth anniversary since the passing of the Act, which came into force November, 1896, enabling motor cars to be run on our highways. The remembrance of that first run to Brighton is one that will never be forgotten by those who participated in it. A suggestion has been made by Messrs. C. Jarrott and McRobie Russell that the pioneers who took part in this first run should meet together this year in celebration of the marvellous progress which has been made in this short space of time. The suggestion that early types of British motor vehicles should be carefully preserved is one that should be strongly supported. There must be many erstwhile famous cars now relegated to some odd corner of a factory and forgotten. One calls to mind in this connection the first types of Wolseley and Argylls as being of the very first cars to be built in Great Britain.

New regulations for controlling motor omnibus traffic have just been introduced by the Scotland Yard authorities. A very strong feeling against these vehicles appears to exist in the West End of London. There seems to be some cause for complaint if, as is started, 'buses are kept running all night along some of the routes. It is said that beginners are taught how to drive and become acquainted with the various routes during the small hours, and too much of this certainly does not seem fair to residents who are thus disturbed. It is too early to expect the perfect motor public service vehicle yet, and indeed the improvements which have already been made in the last two years are very considerable. The noise complained of is to a great extent due to overworking the vehicles and not giving sufficient time to overhauling and adjustments. On the other hand, the public notice this noise rather more because they are as yet unaccustomed to it. As time goes on it will be accepted as a matter of course and pass unnoticed. There will also, of course, be improvements in this respect embodied in new types of vehicles. Great efforts are being made to discover a suitable anti-skidding device for use with motor omnibuses, something which shall be effective without destroying the road surface In the mean time it might be worth consideration that in greasy weather the busy thoroughfares should be kept well washed by means of hoses attached to the stand-pipes, it being well known that there is no tendency to sideslip on a really wet surface, the danger being when the mud is in a half-dried condition. As horse traffic get reduced the roads will become much cleaner, and it will probably be found possible to introduce improved methods of road construction which will obviate all danger of slipping in wet weather.

The Mercedes Company has announced that they will abstain from taking further part in racing, as they feel that the results attained do not justify the enormous expenses entailed. Like in the palmy days of cycle racing, so it has been with motor races. Since it has ceased to result in any direct benefit to the industry by furnishing new ideas which could be embodied in touring cars, the trade is gradually ceasing to take an active interest in racing. The purely sporting side of motor racing will no doubt keep it alive for some time, but the heavy expenses attached will not permit of any but the very wealthiest class taking it up.

A good sporting event, and one which will also be of direct benefit to the industry in the matter of design, is the Tourist Trophy contest, taking place on the 27th in the Isle of Man. Forty-five cars have been entered, and as the circular course is but forty miles round there will be plenty of excitement for spectators and no long periods of waiting in between the passing of cars. Many well-known drivers will be taking part, notably the Hon'ble C. S. Rolls and A. Lee Guinness, of Gordon-Bennett fame. The Midland and London and North-Western Railways are arranging special facilities for visitors to the island to see the race. The following day there will be a competition for the "Graphic" Trophy, which had to be abandoned last year through rain and fog.

COOCH BEHAR TEAM vs. ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—Played on the school ground on the 1st October, the Cooch Behar team winning with a lot in hand. The Maharaja's son, Prince Victor, comes out top in the batting. His methods are delightful to watch, as there is no scratching about for runs during his innings, and the hurricane way in which he always belts the bowling all over the place, rouses the spectators to a pitch of enthusiasm which must be very gratifying to the player. Mr. Mehta's bowling was very successful in this match, as he accounted for no less than eight St. Paul's wickets. The following were the scores:—

COOCH BEHAR TEAM vs. THE STATION.—This two-day match, though much interfered with by rain, gave us quite the best cricket of the season. The Station batted first and strung together the total of 246, for which four batsmen and Mr. Extras was mainly responsible. Mr. Marsham has worthily upheld his reputation to be reckoned amongst the foremost batsmen in India, his play in this and other matches during the week. With scores of 45, 108, 68, and 48 not out he averages a good 89, which is quite tip top. Quarter-Master-Sergeant Mangles made a meritorious 65, and Major Stockley hit hard for his 53. Most of the Cooch Behar team came off, Prince Victor unfortunately failing by putting one of Blackmore's twisters into the hands of a waiting slip. Mehta and Mukerji played brilliant and attractive cricket for their centuries, the latter still being in possession when the innings were declared at 491. Mr. Hammond gave us a taste of his old form by hitting up a 26, in quick time being out to a fine catch in the long field. The ball which disposed of Mr. Pickford's wicket in the second innings of "the Station" knocked one of the bails a distance of forty-six feet from the stumps. The following were the scores:—

THE STATION vs. THE VISITORS.—This last match of the season on "The Shrubbery" ground, thanks to the fine score of Salamuddin, resulted in a win for the Visitors within 5 minutes from call of time. Most of the Cooch Behar team were on the side of the Visitors, and by the strange caprice of dame chance Mukerji and Mehta who carried all before them yesterday, were to-day dismissed without scoring. Mukerji skied a ball and was caught outside the boundary. Thinking himself caught out he left his place and was promptly stumped by Green, who, by the way, put up some smart work during the afternoon. Prince Victor gave us a rattling display again to-day, and Mr. Hignell gave us a taste of his old form. Mr. Hammond was run out when seemingly well set, and Corporal Green, heavy with the laurels of the Calcutta and Madras Rugby Cups, put up 38 in his brilliant style. The following are the scores:—

DUSSERAH WEEK AT WALTAIR.

"A MOST successful Dusserah Week" was the verdict after the Gymkhana held on Saturday last, a function which closed the week's festivities. A fair sprinkling of friends from outstations came in to swell our numbers, and we were glad to welcome two gentlemen from Calcutta who, to the satisfaction of the ladies, were both dancing men, and who, we hope, enjoyed their stay sufficiently to induce them to sample the attractions of a Waltair Week again some other time.

We were indebted to the Rajah of Vizianagram for his Band and the prizes for most of the events during the week, and when the Rajah presents the prizes one knows they are going to be something pretty handsome, as he is not a man who does anything by halves.

The festivities commenced on Wednesday evening with a Club dance, the Band of the E.C.R.V. supplying the music, and we were favoured with a nice cool night after the heavy rain of the previous two days, so that everyone was in the best of form and mirabile dictu, there was not a single rubber of ladies' Bridge played during the evening. This, to anyone who knows Waltair, speaks for itself as to the success of the evening.

On Thursday afternoon the venue was the links where mixed pairs competed for prizes presented by the Rajah of Vizianagram, these were won by Mrs. Stone and Mr. Buchanan, who put up a very useful score and secured a silver mounted mirror and a card case respectively. Mrs. Campbell was "At Home" on the ground afterwards and the Band of the E.C.R.V. discoursed sweet music during the evening.

The same evening we all assembled at the Club for a dinner and a "small and early dance" most sportingly provided by Mr. V. A. Brodie, the Judge, and Major Armstrong, Adjutant, E.C.R.V., who had issued invitations to the whole station, so that though nominally "a small and early" it certainly wasn't very small, and as it turned out was not particularly "early." Any way it was a most enjoyable function and our best thanks are due to our two sporting hosts.

Friday afternoon was devoted by cricket, Mr. Campbell's XI vs. Mr. Caplin's XI. The ground was a bit soft after the deluge of Monday and Tuesday, so that it was more or less of a bowler's wicket. The match resulted in a draw. Scores given further on.

The dance of the week followed that evening and was a Poudrée one given by the Rajah of Kuropam at the Club, and the music was supplied by the Rajah's Band. The Club rooms had been quite transformed by the decoration committee of ladies headed by Mrs. B[illegible] with ferns and foliage plants. The supper tables, [illegible] on the lawn, were groaning [illegible] while the whole of the grounds were illumin[illegible] Chinese lanterns, which cast just the necessary [illegible] sort of glimmer over the "Kala juggahs." The Rajah received his guest at the head of the steps, while Miss Brown, who acted as hostess on his behalf, met us in the drawing-room, which was very tastefully arranged and the [illegible] hidden by handsome embroidered "phoolkaries." The guests in anticipation of a very enjoyable evening, arrived with commendable promptitude and at half-past nine, when the first extra struck up, the rooms were crowded. The only thing to mar one's pleasure in the slightest was the weather which had suddenly turned very close, but this did not seem to damp the spirits of the dancers, whatever it may have done to collars and shirt fronts, and it was not until 3-30 A.M., that the last carriage left the Club after one of the best dances we have had for some time. At supper the Rajah proposed the King's health which was received with the usual honours, while our host's hospitality was referred to in a neat little speech by Mr. Brodie, and was received with immense enthusiasm and musical (!) honours.

During the week a mixed pairs shooting competition was carried on for which the entries were very numerous, two pairs tied and this still remains to be shot off. Scores up to date are given below. The prize presented by the Waltair Gymkhana is a pretty little pearl-set safety pin.

Another event running during the week was a Handicap Billiard Tournament, the prize for which was a handsome pocket Aneroid Barometer presented by the Rajah of Vizianagram. The handicapping was in the hands of Messrs. Campbell, Hamilton and Arbuthnot and the results show that they in most cases judged the form of the competitors pretty accurately. Full details are appended.

THE WHISTLING COON STAKES.

Rev. Stone nominated by Mrs. Stone, 1. Won easily. Twelve other pairs competed.

"LA SORTIZA."—Men to gallop under a gallows furnished with rollers on which ribbons are wound with rings hanging from them and take the rings with a spear.

Ten or twelve pairs turned out for this event which took some time, as the competitors found some difficulty in getting the rings. Eventually honors were fairly well divided; five gentlemen managed to secure the six ribbons, which themselves formed the prizes.

POLO CROQUET.—Men mounted, ladies on foot to drive a croquet ball across the ground by alternate strokes. Smallest number of strokes to win

Mr. Deane and Miss O'Donoghue	7
Mr. Arbuthnot and Mrs. Stone	8
Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan	8
Seven other pairs competed.

LADIES' EGG AND SPOON RACE.—To walk 50 yards, run 25 yards and hop 5 yards.

About 20 ladies toed the line for this event and all got on swimmingly till the hopping began when the air was full of eggs and feminine swear words. Mrs. Caplin was adjudged the winner with Mrs. Durell second, though there was not more than a spoon's length between four or five of the field.

The last event of the evening was the Go-as-you-please Race which was described on the programme as to "Drive, ride, walk, bike, or use any other peripatetic artifice round the course in an unknown time." This has always been a most popular event here, and this time the entries surpassed all that we have ever had before, as the entire assembled company, with the exception of the time-keeper, went in, walking two and two "in the gloaming" being apparently the popular method of progression, though jutka carriages and ponies were also to be seen. The joke of this event is that nobody except the time-keeper knows what the time is, so it's a pure lottery who crosses the line nearest the correct minute. The time on this occasion was 64 minutes and the event was won, curiously enough for the third time in succession third, by Mr. Arbuthnot, though it was a close thing, the next competitor being only four seconds behind him.

The very handsome prizes, provided by the Rajah of Vizianagram, were then presented to the lucky recipients and Mr. Campbell in a short speech thanked the Rajah for all he has done during the week to add to the success and conviviality, a speech which was received with loud applause and three hearty cheers.

THESE sports, which are always most popular, came off this afternoon in most inauspicious weather, but this did not prevent a very large number of spectators from being present. All the arrangements were excellent, and the hospitality of the Fathers unbounded. Mrs. Thorold very graciously presented the prizes, and the Band of the West Riding Regiment discoursed sweet music during the afternoon.

J. Robertson came out champion of the afternoon with four highly meritorious performances. He won the 100 yards in 10½secs., was second in the 120 yards hurdles, won the 220 yards in 24½secs., and the 440 yards in 61secs.—a excellent record. The following are the particulars :—

STRAY NOTES.

THE theory that the sense of colours is possessed to a high degree by animals, and especially by birds, furnished a basis for some of the most beautiful and fruitful of the Darwinian theories of sexual selection. No Darwinist doubts that the brilliant colours of the male birds of some species are destined to attract the attention of the female birds, and this presupposes naturally on the part of these birds a fine sense of colour. Wallace has asserted that to the fact that certain plants bear fruit of brilliant colours is due their preservation; the animals, attracted by these colours, break the fruits from the trees or plants, carry them off and thus indirectly assist in the dissemination of the seeds which they contain over large tracts of land.

And this function of selection on the part of animals presupposes in them a certain sense of colour. Still, scientific documents in support of these hypothesis are rare. Professor Dahl relates some interesting experiments which he made with a monkey. He coloured some sweets with a certain coloured dye, and some bitter substances with that of another colour. He declares that after a few attempts the monkey learned to leave without even tasting those articles of food coloured with the dye which indicated bitter tasting substances and seized at once upon those which indicated sweets. Varying the experiments sufficiently he found that the monkey distinguished all the different colours readily save only dark blue. He calls attention to the fact that Mayer has stated that many savage tribes cannot distinguish dark blue from black, and that even children do not distinguish this colour until later than all others.

A naturalist writes that, never seeing a snake charm a bird or animal, he concluded it was a superstition or fancy, devoid of fact. So he continued to think till an explorer friend of his told him what he had lately witnessed. He was riding along on a prairie in the Unted States, and saw a prairie dog within a few feet of him, which refused to scamper to his hole, as prairie dogs usually do when approached by man; on the contrary, he sat as if transfixed to the spot, though making a constant, nervous, shuddering motion, as if anxious to get away. "My friend," he continues, "thought this was strange, and, while considering the spectacle, he presently saw a large rattlesnake coiled up under some bushes, his head uplifted, about six or seven feet from the dog, which still heeded him not, but looked steadily upon the snake. He dismounted, took the dog by the head, and thrust him off, when the snake, which had up to that moment remained quiet, immediately swelled with rage and began sounding his rattles. The prairie dog for some time seemed benumbed, and hardly capable of motion, but grew better, and finally got into his hole. My friend then killed the rattler. I know of nothing," writes the correspondent, "in all nature of so dreadful appearance as the eye of a rattlesnake. It is enough to strike not only birds and little animals, but men, with nightmare. There are few men who can look upon an angered rattlesnake within a foot of two of the eye—and stand it more than a moment."

Several specimens of the walking fish have recently arrived at the Zoological Gardens, where they may be seen in one of the tanks in the Tortoise House. This species, which comes from the West Coast of Africa, is familiarly known as the [illegible]. Its mode of progression is extraordinary, its appearance peculiar. Its very prominent eyes are set close together, and provided with outer lids, and are finely movable. At the base of the pectoral fin the muscular development is so considerable as to enable the fish to use its fins as arms. By means of its fins it raises itself, and at the least sign of danger it makes off at a remarkable speed. Its progress is something between a hop and a jump; it is most amusing to watch the manner in which it skips from one stone to another. It can raise itself out of the water, and climb reeds and so forth with the greatest ease. It inhabits shady pools, and seems quite out of its element in deep water. Insects form its chief food in a state of nature; but in captivity earthworms have been found a very good diet. From time to time a good many of these interesting creatures have been exhibited in the menagerie, but usually their life in captivity is short.

In his "Country Notes" in the Standard, Mr. Geo. A. B. Dewar, writing on the inquisitiveness of animals, says pure inquisitiveness belongs not to man alone. Puppies are curious to examine life and movement about their homes. Every stranger—man, woman and child—that approaches their country garden or field must be eagerly smelt at as well as barked at. "I have two puppies just now," Mr. Dewar continues, "one a water spaniel, that bristle with curiosity, especially towards evening—when they grow suspicious and menacing also over anything around and outside their own little sphere. The 'good house dog' instinct may be strong even in pups, but this alone does not explain the droll interest they show in strange things and strangers. It is the same with some birds and fish, such as trout and perch. I once let down an artificial minnow into a pool in the river Hallingdal, and watched a party of perch examine it; they literally bristled with curiosity as they swam about the glittering intruder. But the most amusing case I have seen of late years was that of a peewit among the wild Berkshire downs. I sat down near the bird, which again and again ran up to inspect me. It would retire only to return and stare at me once more, now and then taking a short run and seizing a bit of food, and then starting at me again. This peewit made no plaint, and seemed not distressed at my presence; whereas it repeatedly swooped down and struck at a couple of pheasants which were too near its eggs or young. The pheasants took no notice whatever of these threats, and only made off when I came near. Why the peewit did not actually strike the pheasants I could not understand. It seemed unable to get its courage quite to the striking point. It could have struck the birds with its beak or its spur with ease and absolute safety; they could not have returned the cuff, for the pheasant has none of the peewit's agility on the wing. But it is so often the case with angry birds—for one blow that is actually given, a thousand are threatened. How seldom does the pipit or swallow really cuff the cuckoo!"

Master (to newly-engaged cook): "You needn't say anything to your mistress, Jane, but have you a policeman for a sweetheart?"

Cook (indignantly): "Certainly not, sir."

Master: "Then you'll have to get one, or else leave. I want someone to eat up the cold mutton."

THE DEVIL MIRROR.

A CERTAIN wealthy old East Indian had died in Madras. His furniture, most of which was said to be antique and valuable, was to be sold by auction in the house in which he had lived so long. The day before the sale would-be buyers were invited to inspect. Among the rest came Mrs. Franks, wife of a judge, who lived by the Adyar. Several articles of furniture took her fancy, among them an old-fashioned oblong wall mirror framed in ebony.

The mountings of this ancient looking-glass, which was about five and a half feet by three, were plain, but of extraordinary depth and solidity. The back seemed to be of wood of some kind, but its nature was not apparent owing to the surface japanned black. This japan was of almost steel-like while the workmanship and fitting were of such that one could hardly see where the back the frame. On the day of the sale Mrs. secured all things she wanted without difficulty, se, including the were duly sent to her house by yar.

looking-glass was given a place of honour in the Franks' hall, and as the workmanship puzzled and interested judge, he was at some pains to discover the mirror's history. spite of all enquiries it could not be traced beyond the old East Indian at whose death it was sold. There were, however, curious tales about the old man, in which devils with the Evil One played a prominent part.

Everyone who examined the mirror was puzzled as to the country of its origin. All agreed it was neither Indian nor European. The extraordinarily hard japan of the back pointed to China or Japan.

Some days after this Mrs. Franks ran downstairs in a hurry on her way to pay some calls in Madras. When she reached the hall she suddenly got into her head that her hat was not straight, so went to the mirror to put it right. She was a bright pretty woman, with a good deal of colour, but on looking into the glass she was astonished and dismayed to see a reflection from which all the radiancy had been in some way abstracted. Her face looked grey, wan, and misty. "Good gracious what a fright I am!" and she dashed upstairs again to her room. Her own toilet glass soon reassured her that it was certainly not herself that was at fault, so she straightway concluded that lack of light in the hall was responsible for the unsatisfactory reflection from the glass there.

Next day after breakfast, Laura, the English maid, came to ask Mrs. Franks to look at the hall mirror "For when I looked in it just now Ma'am I seemed quite green." Mrs. Franks went with the girl, and to her great astonishment did see a livid green tinge in the reflection of her face and white dress. Then as she gazed faint black lines appeared framing in her reflected image; suddenly to her horror it come upon her that this framing border was in the shape of a coffin—with a sharp cry she sprang away from the glass, and at the same moment both mistress and maid thought they heard a faint laugh.

"Did you see anything, Laura?" gasped Mrs. Franks.

"No Ma'am only that you looked green just as I said; but I fancied I heard someone laugh."

"Look in the glass yourself Laura," and somewhat reluctantly, the maid stepped in front of the mirror. The same curious green hue pervaded the girl's face and white apron. Mrs. Franks began to feel ashamed of her fears. "It is only that the hall is dark and the mercury at the back of the glass is so old that it does not reflect properly." So speaking she turned away. A low, mocking laugh seemed to issue from the mirror. It was only when they had reached the end of the passage that little Mrs Franks, to the great injury of her dignity, realized that their exit from the hall had been extremely hurried, and that she was holding Laura's hand tightly in her own.

Some evenings later, when the Franks were at dinner, they were startled by a shrill cry from the hall, and Laura burst into the room with a face like chalk. "Oh" she gasped, "there is a black animal out there trying to get into the mirror"! The Judge ran out to look at the glass, but it appeared to be just the same as usual.

When the frightened girl had become more composed he cross-questioned her as to what she had seen. Laura's story was somewhat incoherent, but one thing she stuck to, that she had seen a dark coloured indistinct-looking animal the size of a large terrier, trying to get into the mirror. She did not see the head—that seemed to be in the glass, but she was quite sure that it had a long tail.

Two days later Franks' Madrassee butler declared he had seen a black beast without a head on the stairs, and that he wanted to leave at once.

The Franks decided instantly that it was better to lose the mirror than the butler; the latter being a treasured domestic who had been with them for years.

Then Mrs. Franks bethought herself of her brother's wife at Agra, who had always been ardently interested in spiritualism. Accordingly, she wrote her sister-in-law a long letter, fully describing the peculiarities of the mirror, and had that offending piece of furniture carefully packed and sent off by train.

The scene is now transferred to Agra, where Colonel Cardew, Mrs. Franks' eldest brother, and his wife, lived in a pretty bungalow known as the Am-ki-Kotti near the native lines. Like many of the Agra houses, it was thatched, and stood in a big compound full of larger trees—many of these were mangoes and from them the house took its name. At the back, bordering country road, were a number of fine tamarind trees. A verandah ran all round the house. Mrs. Cardew's room out at the back, and on its wall she had the Madras firmly fastened with long nails.

In the tamarind trees in rear of the bungalow lived troop of hanuman monkeys, and with the animals Mrs. Cardew had made friends—one large and aged monkey was especial pet, often coming into the house when she was at morning tea, to get bananas.

One evening, about a week after the the mirror Mrs Cardew had come in from her early. The sun had set, but it was still light. On to her room she was astonished to find the old monkey under the looking-glass apparently dead. She examined the creature, and finding that it was still breathing, got some whisky, and with the help of a spoon forced it to swallow a little.

The monkey then began to show signs of returning consciousness. While it was gradually coming to, Mrs. Cardew noticed that the hair around its face seemed to be much greyer than before. Suddenly the animal recovered full consciousness, and straightway uttering a shriek of utter terror, dashed from the room, and vanished among the tamarind trees at the back.

After that, to Mrs Cardew's great distress, none of the troop could be induced to come near the bungalow, though they were friendly as usual if she went and offered them bananas. Also she noted with great surprise that the monkey had received with white, had become quite white and head. That this animal had seen something which fainting with terror seemed clear enough; also the vision whatever it was, remained so vivid a monkey three years approaching the house.

Colonel and Mrs Cardew became great strange possessions and their interest their return one news that the sweeper was very sick, as the men sahib's room. Copious doses of man, and he was then able to relate how creature with the head very sunk between the getting out of the looking-glass on the wall. "The Devil's eyes were very bad," he said and so terrified him that he ran away and locked himself into his godown.

The Colonel and his wife went and gazed into the mirror but could see nothing unusual. As they turned away, however, both heard distinctly a mocking laugh which seemed to come from the ceiling-cloth above them, and then the canvas bulged and waved with the weight of something passing across it. As the roof was known to be full of civet cats the Colonel decided that it must have been one of these beasts which ran across the ceiling-cloth: but the laugh was inexplicable. Just above the looking glass there was a small tear in the cloth, which neither of the Cardews remembered having seen before. One night, not long after, Mrs. Cardew quietly woke her husband and pointed to this hole in the ceiling. The room was faintly but sufficiently lighted by a lamp turned low and placed on the floor. He looked at the hole and saw something like dark hair protruding from it, and then suddenly out of the rent came a long black, hairy limb, with what looked like a small dark coloured human hand at the end of it. This sight was too much for even Mrs. Cardew's strong nerves, and she uttered a shrill cry.

At this the whole ceiling cloth bulged and waved, as though it would burst and drop the horror behind it upon their heads. At the same time a clamour of indescribable noises came from the dark regions under the thatch. What the sound was like neither of the Cardews were afterwards able to describe, but both were agreed that it impressed their minds as being half human, half beast-like. The Colonel jumped out of bed, turned up the lamp and put it on a table: the room was now brilliantly illuminated. The hole in the canvas was there, but the ceiling cloth was flat and still, while the mysterious mirror reflected only Colonel Cardew's startled face, and the furniture behind. The next day the Cardews were careful to say nothing to the servants; but the head sais came to inform them that in the night all the mokeys in the tarmarind trees had suddenly waked up and ran away gibbering and screaming. Also the body of a drowned civet cat was found in the well, into which it had apparently fallen in its hurry to leave the vicinity of the bungalow.

About this time two loathsome looking fakirs appeared and took up their residence beside a large tank outside the compound, but not far from the back of the stables.

These men were wild, filthy looking objects, their naked bodies grey with a covering of ashes, while their evil eyes glimmered through the tangled mass of hair which almost hid their face. Soon the saises and grass cutters all declared that though there were only two fakirs there, they sometimes saw three figures when the moon was up, one much smaller than the other two.

Less than a week later the mystery was added to the mystery. The head sais' little two was found under a mangoe tree dead. It appeared to have been killed by some animal; claw-like marks on the limbs, while the throat was torn open as though for the purpose of sucking the child's blood.

It at once was clear that the mirror had been taken from the sais' godown. Just the sleeping place there was a hole in the roof which had been noiselessly removed; the beast or it was, had pulled the little girl up carried it along the roof of the godown pipal, and thence from tree to tree, to the corner of the compound, out of which little corpse when finished with.

The police in, and Mrs Cardew had the mirror placed in a disused outhouse. All half-suppressed laughter kept neither the Colonel nor his wife looking glass had vanished from the outhouse, the fakirs were gone too, leaving no Cardew went straight off to a friend, District Police, and told him the whole story from beginning. The policemen looked amused and very but promised to try and trace the fakirs and the more was heard for about a fortnight, when Cardew received a message from the D.S.P. asking him to go at once to Muttra with him, as he had just heard that the bodies of two fakirs had been found near there, the men having been apparently killed by wild beasts.

They reached Muttra about mid-day and at once set off in a gharry to view the bodies. The scene of the deaths was a patch of jungle about ten miles from Muttra.

On arriving at the place, which was guarded by a police naick and three constables, Colonel Cardew and his friend carefully examined the corpses, and the ground around them. The bodies were undoubtedly those of the men who had lived for a time near the pond. Both fakirs were very much lacerated and their throats torn open. Large handfuls of their long hair which had been dragged from their heads during the struggle, lay scattered around. The ground was hard except in one small hollow where a little rain water still lingered. In this soft place there was a hand-like impression, and about this imprint was one extraordinary peculiarity—clearly sealed in the mud were the marks of four fingers and two thumbs. There was no sign anywhere of the lost mirror, and in spite of the closest enquiries and the offer of a large reward, nothing more was ever heard of it. Nor was any further light thrown on the mysterious death of the two fakirs.

Apparently they must have been at first friendly with the evil being which was so closely connected with the ebony mirror; but the monster, for some reason unknown, had subsequently turned on them.

Colonel Cardew bitterly regretted not having broken open the back of the looking-glass, when possibly its secret might have been disclosed. A plaster of Paris cast was taken of the double-thumbed handprint, and this the Colonel keeps in remembrance of a curious and unexplained mystery.

of bewilderment and savage anger. The situation is far from pleasant. I am in an open dell, with an infuriated quadruped closer to me than the nearest good-sized tree. In two bounds that ponderous, though none the less active, mountain of muscle could be down on me. On such occasions an immense advantage is assured by taking the initiative. The hairy throat and broad chest present the only target at which to aim, but there is no thought of aligning the sights in such a tight corner. A fraction of a second may make oceans of difference. The rifle is raised and as the butt touches the shoulder the woods reverberate with the echoes from the discharge of the ·577. In cases where life is in danger the experienced hunter will always keep a fresh barrel in reserve, until he sees how matters are likely to turn out, and what course the pursued intends to adopt. With a shot the beast swings round on its haunches and plunges off, followed by a bullet from my weapon. A third shot is obtained at about 100 yards distance, then silence falls, but only for a few seconds. A crash of splintering bamboos is heard, then a prolonged drawn bellow of agony sends the nerves vibrating. I know full well that the death knell of my victim has sounded. I look round for my doughty tracker, and discern him sneaking down the hill side, shouting out in his terror and excitement that I have killed a huge bull. I curse him for a liver-hearted coward, but proceed to think over the circumstances afterwards dispassionately when I have arrived at the conclusion that perhaps the very fact of the beast bolting was the best thing that could have happened, for it instantly distracted the bison's attention from my person. We now trace the spoor; blood-stains are plentiful, and there is no difficulty in keeping to the trail. Anon I catch a glimpse of its massive carcase tightly wedged up against a clump of bamboos, and jubilantly I rush down the gradient to survey my prize.

Oh—horror—its a cow! Never for one instant had it entered my head that the beast which I had been hunting with such perseverence for six long hours and more might possibly be a cow. When I first espied the animal, owing to the peculiar position of its head, the horns were practically invisible, so that there was no clue afforded me as to the identity of the sex of the quarry. Moreover why should a cow bison thus go solitary The mistake was one of pure bad luck, and not lack of judgment or carelessness. The deed was done, and no amount of regret could bring back life to that pale blue pupil. Blame could be attached to no one, it was simply one of the vagaries of Dame Fortune. An examination of the hide revealed the fact that the first bullet had sped high. Instead of catching the beast in the centre of the throat, as I had intended it to do, it had found an entry in the centre of the nose, on the chest pad between the two nostrils. It pierced an exit half way up the jaw, and eventually punched a hole through the left ear. Had the creature been gazing direct at me at the instant of my pressing the trigger, the bullet must have penetrated the brain. It so happened that the muzzle was inclined slightly to the left, which accounted for the position where the projectile pierced the skin on its outward course. The line taken by this missle will clearly indicate the angle at which the bison was holding its head. The second bullet was the mortal one, and penetrated both lungs. As fresh meat was required in camp the body of the beast was opened, and its heart and a portion of its liver was extracted, and handed over to the tracker to carry. It was a sorrowful cavalcade that turned its footsteps campwards. After a trudge of half-an-hour we emerged on to a cutting through the forest. I was positive that this must be the fire line connecting the main and outer Pyingadaungs, and separating the two areas of reserved forest, in which event we had merely to follow it down, and then strike out northwards, thus cutting into the stream on whose margin our bivouac had been erected. The hunter maintained that this clearing could not possibly be the fire line, as it was running in the wrong direction. He insisted that our shelters lay south-west from the spot on which we were then standing, whereas I was prepared to lose a gold mohur if our camping ground did not point north-west. This argument raged for nearly a quarter of an hour. I was extremely reluctant to relinquish my point, but as the tracker professed to know the forest and as I was a perfect stranger, there was nothing to do but to trust to his judgment. We left the clear open cutting, and plunged down a densely-clad slope, till we reached the bed of a small watercourse. To add to our discomfort the rain began to descend in a steady downpour, and soon we were drenched to the skin. The labour entailed in descending the bed of the stream was enormous. It was entirely blocked up by large slippery boulders, ledges of jagged rock, and fallen trunks of trees. Every step taken was a strain on the muscle, and progress was impossible without the aid of the hands. The nullah, too, seemed to take an unwholesome delight in describing a series of exaggerated "S's." Occasionally we would attempt to cut off a corner by scaling the intervening ridge and slipping down the further slope. Meanwhile darkness began to descend. On one of these side excursions, owing to the greasy state of the surface, my feet went from under me, and a sprained wrist resulted. I had barely recovered from this accident, plodding on delibrately, when an exclamation from the hunter made me look up. I discerned a black object crouching in the undergrowth. Owing to the gloom it was impossible to see the sights of the rifle. After the first shot, my attendant raised such an ear-splitting noise, that I took my eye off the object to glance at him as I thought he must be in some danger, however he was only shouting through sheer fright. I had no time for a hurried leave, as the beast beat a hasty retreat. Our visitor was not a bear, but he escaped unhurt. It was in reality far too hard to hold the ·577 straight, and the injured wrist proving painful. In fact I had reached that stage of bodily fatigue in which one cares not what is going to happen. The supplies had long since been on the sharp edges of the rocks, the leather full of holes, and I was practically limping along. Of course had at least reached the level, but to a dogged sort of efforts to retain them were futile. About was forced to acknowledge that we were and that we had not the slightest clue as to locality. The situation had to be faced; there was no help for it, we must pass the night somewhere in the neighbourhood.

Has the reader ever experienced that fearful sensation of being irrevocably lost in a vast forest? If so I trust that I never wish to experience a second time. Sitting in a comfortable arm-chair in the coziness and shelter of one's own abode the meaning of the word "lost" conveys nothing. But when one is irretrievably mazed in the depths of an enormous tract of jungle, with never a habitation within leagues, then the full force of the fateful expression goes echoing through the brain till one seems on the verge of insanity. Lost! Lost! Lost!—which way is camp, north, south, east, or west? 'Tis impossible to say, for if such was known we should not be lost. The hunter was by this time nearly frightened out of his senses, but something had to be done. The first realised was that one night at least must be spent in and the next thing to be done was to make our nocturnal as comfortable as circumstances would permit. The outlook was nevertheless most disheartening. Rain was descending in sheets, every leaf was dripping, every twig poured forth a little runnel of water. Every dead branch was sodden, and there were but a few minutes of semi-darkness remaining. I roused the tracker from his lethargy, only to discover that he was not the possessor of a knife of any description. This single fact can best illustrate what sort of follower had attached himself to my camp. Can one imagine a man calling himself a hunter going for a day's outing without a knife? It was now conclusively proved what a useful weapon is a kukri. I had four forked sticks cut, and had despatched the brute to collect the leaves of a wild plantain tree to act as a roof to our dwelling. Darkness, inky blackness, had fallen by the time that our rude hut had been completed. We were at any rate protected from the rain, but a fire was absolutely necessary. The tracker had busied himself collecting some old logs of wood, but these by themselves were worse than useless. I stumbled forth to a place where I had noticed a clump of bamboos, and was rewarded by a fire. The kukri was used a dead stem with which to start coating of dampness, and the work scraping off the outer shavings were carefully peeled off a handful of thin wafer-like When a goodly-sized heap of these was the inner dry surface. was kindled, and to our joy a minute flamed a small portion half-an-hour we coaxed, fondled and nursed thirst forth. For flame surely with more care than ever flame was tiny tongue of and our labours were rewarded by the fierce glow of before, blaze. Oh, those mosquitoes, and those sandflies! Willing devouring hunger was their's. From their ferocity one would judge that they had tasted no animal food for a century. But the problem of our own nourishment was one which required attention. All eatables that had been taken out in the morning had been consumed, but an exhausted frame demanded refreshment. The heart and portion of the liver, that had been cut out of the bison in the early afternoon, now came in handy: again with the aid of my kukri slices were cut off from these hunks of meat, chopped into cubes of about an inch, spitted on a thin piece of bamboo, and placed in the glowing embers. A fizzling and spluttering announced that they were being roasted, and these half-cooked lumps of flesh were devoured, on my part I must confess without much relish. It was highly necessary, however, to keep up our strength, for it was impossible to say what difficulties might have to be faced on the morrow. What a dismal night that was! The clouds lifted slightly, but still a steady and soaking drizzle continued without cessation. Ever and anon I would start up from some fantastic dream of pleasant days spent in other climes. I would stare round the murky gloom, in a dazed sort of fashion, till memory came back with a rush, to realise that instead of roaming the downs at Dover, I was lost in a huge forest of Upper Burma. Then as the sleep of absolute exhaustion dulled the brain one would once more merge into sudden wakefulness, by the sound of a rustle in the thicket beyond the radius of the glow of the fire. How those hours of furtive slumber dragged out. Five o'clock saw us devouring more scraps of semi-roasted liver washed down with muddy water from the stream at our feet. As the dawn began to force its way through the grey pall that shut out the landscape, we once more resumed our tramp. I had fully determined to strike out my own line on that morning; the plan I had elucidated was at any rate a safe one, namely, to follow down the creek till it emptied its waters into the main river. There at least we should meet with a hamlet or two. This scheme would probably entail a trudge of twenty miles or more—if, however, spelt "safety," if in our wanderings we had not crossed to the east of the Pyingadaungs. If the latter were the case, we might roam for 100 miles without encountering a habitation of any description.

Hullo—what's this mean!

There is no mistaking that imprint, it has been made by a water buffalo. What a relief to the mind is that ugly hoof mark. It indicates that somewhere not far off is at least a collection of huts. There upon the level is the dull clank of a clapper, fastened to the neck of one of these vicious beasts. Never have I been more pleased to see a specimen of these evil looking beeves. We follow up a bye-path, and nearly fall into the arms of a man and child. He is the head man of the village, the only one in the forest reserve, area about 100 square miles. Luck has befriended us at last. The shelter of his house is placed at my disposal, together with a clean change of his clothes. Soon the hostess has a savoury curry laid out before me, a repast that a king would not scorn, think I, were he involved in a similar situation. Two elephants happen to be at work near the hamlet. These are despatched post haste to bring in my camp.

The servants, too, have had a night of it—to return to head-quarters with a woeful tale of a missing master is not pleasant to sleep on. As it turned out I was perfectly correct in my surmise about the first line and direction of camp.

So ended the most disastrous day throughout the annals of a somewhat extensive shikar career. A cow bison shot, a bear missed, and a night spent to all intents and purposes lost to the world.

MORVEN.

It is not often that a jockey can boast of having made a successful first appearance in the saddle at the early age of eight; yet such was the experience of Mr. G. S. Thompson, up to a few years ago, a well-known gentleman rider in English

From babyhood he had an almost intuitive knowledge of riding. From the time he could sit upon a pony he would accompany his father across country, frequently finishing in the first flight at the end of a long run. When he was eight years old his father made a match to run a pony called Maid of Skelgate against an animal, the property of another gentleman, who shall be nameless, at catch weights, each to ride his own animal, and the distance to be half a mile.

On getting ready for the start, Mr. Thompson, sen., discovered that a jockey, who was in Scott's stables, and who had ridden several winners in public, was about to ride his opponent's horse. Against this step he remonstrated, as it was understood that the conditions stipulated for gentleman riders only. When the articles which had been drawn up, however, were looked through, it was found this clause had been omitted, and Thompson's foxy opponent openly boasted that he had got the best of the match, as Thompson weighed fully 11st., while the jockey was under 7st.

Annoyed at the trick, Mr. Thompson made no reply, but riding off to his carriage, where his wife and family were seated, he said: "Hand me out George; I'm too heavy."

And the next moment a little dark-eyed fellow, in a blue cloth frock, ornamented with gilt buttons, was mounted on Maid of Skelgate; and as he cantered down to the post accompanied by his father, without boots or breeches, showing his little red legs and white knickerbockers, the cheers which went up from the crowd could have been heard for miles around.

"What am I to do, papa? the boy asked, when the starting-post was reached.

"Why, hold your reins tight, and directly the flag falls come home as fast as you can."

These simple instructions the boy obeyed to the letter, and won in a canter. At this time his weight was within a pound of 8st., so that with all due deference to the tales which are told respecting Mr. Kitchener when he rode Red Deer in the Chester Cup, little George Thompson was probably the lightest jockey that ever rode in public.

of bewilderment and savage anger. The situation is far from pleasant. I am in an open dell, with an infuriated quadruped closer to me than the nearest good-sized tree. In two bounds that ponderous, though none the less active, mountain of muscle could be down on me. On such occasions an immense advantage is assured by taking the initiative. The hairy throat and broad chest present the only target at which to aim, but there is no thought of aligning the sights in such a tight corner. A fraction of a second may make oceans of difference. The rifle is raised and as the butt touches the shoulder the woods reverberate with the echoes from the discharge of the ·577. In cases where life is in danger the experienced hunter will always keep a left barrel in reserve, until he sees how matters are likely to result, and what course the pursued intends to adopt. With a wounded beast swings round on its haunches and plunges off, followed by a bullet from my weapon. A third shot is obtained at about 100 yards distance, then silence falls, but only for a few seconds. A crash of splintering bamboos is heard, then a long drawn bellow of agony sends the nerves vibrating. I know full well that the death knell of my victim has sounded. I look round for my doughty tracker, and discern him sneaking up the hill side, shouting out in his terror and excitement that it was a huge bull. I curse him for a liver-hearted coward, but begin to think over the circumstances afterwards dispassionately I have arrived at the conclusion that perhaps the very fact of his bolting was the best thing that could have happened, for it distracted the bison's attention from my person. We now trace the spoor; blood-stains are plentiful, and there is no difficulty in keeping to the trail. Anon I catch a glimpse of its massive carcase tightly wedged up against a clump of bamboos, and jubilantly I rush down the gradient to survey my prize.

Oh—horror—its a cow! Never for one instant had it entered my head that the beast which I had been hunting with such perseverence for six long hours and more might possibly be a cow. When I first at the animal, owing to the peculiar position of its head, the horns were practically invisible, so that there was no clue afforded me as to the identity of the sex of the quarry. Moreover why should a cow bison thus go solitary The mistake was one of pure bad luck, and not lack of judgment or carelessness. The deed was done, and no amount of regret could bring back life to that pale blue pupil. Blame could be attached to no one, it was simply one of the vagaries of Dame Fortune. An examination of the hide revealed the fact that the first bullet had sped high. Instead of catching the beast in the centre of the throat, as I had intended it to do, it had found an entry in the centre of the nose, on the moist pad between the two nostrils. It pierced an exit half way up the jaw, and eventually punched a hole through the left ear. Had the creature been gazing direct at me at the instant of my pressing the trigger, the bullet must have penetrated the brain. It so happened that the muzzle was inclined slightly to the left, which accounted for the position where the projectile pierced the skin on its outward course. The line taken by this missle will clearly indicate the angle at which the bison was holding its head. The second bullet was the mortal one, and penetrated both lungs. As fresh meat was required in camp the body of the beast was opened, and its heart and a portion of its liver was extracted, and handed over to the tracker to carry. It was a sorrowful cavalcade that turned its footsteps campwards. After a trudge of half-an-hour we emerged on to a cutting through the forest. I was positive that this must be the fire line connecting the main and outer Pyingadaungs, and separating the two areas of reserved forest, in which event we had merely to follow it down, and then strike out northwards, thus cutting into the stream on whose margin our bivouac had been erected. The hunter maintained that this clearing could not possibly be the fire line, as it was running in the wrong direction. He insisted that our shelters lay south-west from the spot on which we were then standing, whereas I was prepared to lose a gold mohur if our camping ground did not point north-west. This argument raged for nearly a quarter of an hour. I was extremely reluctant to relinquish my point, but as the tracker professed to know the forest and as I was a perfect stranger, there was nothing to do but to trust to his judgment. We left the clear open cutting, and plunged down a densely-clad slope, till we reached the bed of a small watercourse. To add to our discomfort the rain began to descend in a steady downpour, and soon we were drenched to the skin. The labour entailed in descending the bed of the stream was enormous. It was entirely blocked up by large slippery boulders, ledges of jagged rock, and fallen trunks of trees. Every step taken was a strain on the muscle, and progress was impossible without the aid of hands. The nullah, too, seemed to take an unwholesome delight in describing a series of exaggerated "S's." Occasionally we would attempt to cut off a corner by scaling the intervening ridge and slipping down the further slope. Meanwhile darkness began to descend. On one of these side excursions, owing to the greasy state of the surface, my feet went from under me, and a sprained wrist resulted. I had barely recovered from this accident, plodding on deliberately, when an exclamation from the hunter made me look up. I discerned a black object crouching in the undergrowth. Owing to the gloom it was impossible to see the sights of the rifle. After the first shot, my attendant raised such an ear-splitting noise, that I took my eye off the object to glance at him as I thought he must be in some danger, however he was only shouting through sheer fright. I had no time for a hurried left and right, as the beast beat a hasty retreat. Our visitor was a cow bear, but he escaped unhurt. It was in reality far more difficult to hold the ·577 straight and the injured foot long painful. In fact I had reached that somewhat acute stage of bodily fatigue in which one carefully considers the probabilities had camping since going to happen. The sharp edges of the rocks pierced leather on the holes, and I was practically limping along course had at length reached the level, to a dogged sort of efforts to track were futile. About was forced to acknowledge that we were and that he had not the slightest locality. The situation had to be faced; there was no help for it, we must pass the night somewhere in the neighbourhood.

Has the reader ever experienced that fearful sensation of being irrevocably lost in a vast forest? It is a trial that I never wish to experience a second time. Sitting in a comfortable arm-chair in the coziness and shelter of one's own abode the meaning of the word "lost" conveys nothing. But when one is irretrievably mazed in the depths of an enormous tract of jungle, with never a habitation within leagues, then the full force of the fateful expression goes echoing through the brain till one seems on the verge of insanity. Lost! Lost! Lost!—which way is camp, north, south, east, or west? 'Tis impossible to say, for if such was known we should not be lost. The hunter was by this time nearly frightened out of his senses, but something had to be done. The first thing realised was that one night at least must be spent in the open, and the next thing to be done was to make our nocturnal residence as comfortable as circumstances would permit. The outlook was nevertheless most disheartening. Rain was descending in sheets, every leaf was dripping, every twig poured forth a little runnel of water. Every dead branch was sodden, and there were but a few minutes of semi-darkness remaining. I roused the tracker from his lethargy, only to discover that he was not the possessor of a knife of any description. This single fact can best illustrate what sort of follower had attached himself to my camp. Can one imagine a man calling himself a hunter going for a day's outing without a knife! It was now conclusively proved what a useful weapon is a kukri. I had four forked sticks cut, and had despatched the brute to collect the leaves of a wild plantain tree to act as a roof to our dwelling. Darkness, inky blackness, had fallen by the time that our rude hut had been completed. We were at any rate protected from the rain, but a fire was absolutely necessary. The tracker had disappeared himself collecting some old logs of wood, but these by themselves were worse than useless. I stumbled forth to a place where was rewarded by proving had noticed a clump of bamboos, and a fire. The kukri was soon a dead stem with which to start coating of dampness, and the work scraping off the outer shavings were carefully peeled off a handful of thin wafer-like When a goodly-sized heap of these was the inner dry surface. was kindled, and to our joy a minute tongue of flame surely with more care than ever flame was and our labours were rewarded by the fierce glow of a before, blaze. Oh, those mosquitoes, and those sandflies! Their devouring hunger was their's. From their ferocity one would judge that they had tasted no animal food for a century. But the problem of our own nourishment was one which required attention. All eatables that had been taken out in the morning had been consumed, but an exhausted frame demanded refreshment. Sporting Notes.

OUR Bangalore correspondent writes:—There is a lot of very interesting work going on upon the race-track at present, and the only reason that I have not discussed the work in general and the Cup candidates in particular, is that it is still somewhat early days as regards the big race. In fact the entries not having closed yet, there are still uncertain starters and horses which may or may not even be entered. However to take the big horses first I will begin with Mr. Apcar's two candidates Fitzgrafton and Mallard. Mr. Apcar's latest cup importation is looking uncommonly nice, and is thoroughly well. He is galloping with Dea and this morning the pair went round the course twice travelling fast over the last nine furlongs. From the start Dea led the horse three or four lengths, but he closed up easily at the three-furlong post, and finishing like a lion had three lengths the best of it at the end. I missed them at the nine-furlong post, but the last half mile was even time. With regard to Mallard, he is looking well, but is only doing easy work as is natural after racing at Poona. He trotted round twice this morning with Ballark as his companion.

Coming to the three Cup candidates from Tom Ferguson's stable there can be no doubt that if they go on well, two of them at least are very dangerous. A quite unprejudiced and very able and experienced judge said to me on the course to-day that he had never seen Long Tom going so well. The gelding is naturally a horse that looks big, and he is, of course, still a bit short of work. But he is very happy; his usual lazy self when trotting, and has any amount of stuff left when really asked to gallop. Tom Ferguson knows him in and out, and if short of work now his backers may be sure that he will get that work before the flag falls for the Viceroy's Cup, and will start as fit as hands can make him. A great deal of interest will centre about the Maharaja of Mysore's Cup horse, which has also been put under Ferguson's care, and here I am tempted to make a bold prophecy. The horse has come on out of all recognition, is perfectly good tempered and as sound as a bell—notwithstanding certain detractors who may or may not be interested. This morning he went twice round the course with the hurdle-racer Pennant and they ran home from the six-furlong post. Even time was taken from the point at which they began to gallop, and even time was also taken for Long Tom, who went alone. But Munderah was pulling his jockey out of the saddle at the finish, and he is practically certain if he keeps well to be pretty handy when the winner of the Viceroy's Cup passes the judge's box. The track was very heavy this morning after rain and the times cannot be taken as a criterion. But to all good punters I would say that they should keep an eye on these two. Contest, the other Cup candidate from Ferguson's stable is well, and is doing good work, but over the Cup course he can hardly have a chance with either Long Tom or Munderah.

Pringle is here, genial and pleasant as ever and he has a probable Cup candidate in Steinhagger, an Irish colt lately imported. He looks a good one, but is palpably backward, and—so saith Dame Rumour—has not the best of feet. He will hardly be got fit in time to do himself justice for the blue riband of the Indian turf, and so far as can be seen at present need not be seriously considered. The Master is a horse in Wishart's stable about which there is a good deal of discussion. It has been generally understood that he would start for the [illegible] Cup and several people who ought to [illegible]one does, have discussed his chances [illegible]. But again it has been stated upon good [illegible]ty that he was never intended for a Cup [illegible]and that he will not even be entered. Be it may, he is doing good work and looking [illegible]although he seemed to finish a bit tired in a [illegible]quarter speed gallop this morning. The [illegible]dvice which can be given in conn[illegible]ion with [illegible]e Master is to look out. He is at [illegible]resent an [illegible]ncertainty in every way, but he may come into the [illegible]narket by and bye.

The above remarks about include the Cup candidates at present training in Bangalore. There are however, some good jump horses in training, and remarks upon these will no doubt be of interest considering that the value of the Indian Grand National has been raised this year and that entries seem likely to be good. Wishart has some decidedly good "leppers" here, but Adviser did not seem to like the hurdles this morning. I believe this horse has got the Melbourne course all right, and the hurdles here are naturally only child's play to a horse that can jump a country. Yet he checked, and jumped very high when he did go. The truth seemed to be that he expected something the other side and was surprised when he found nothing there. Henrique and Seclusion from Watson's stable did two fast schools over hurdles and fences, being accompanied on the first occasion by another of Wishart's string, Santa Maria. The latter seemed green, and as regards the two well-known ones, they both travelled at a great pace, Henrique going the faster but chancing his fences a good deal, whilst Seclusion jumped well and from every point of view pleased me. Strathspey went over three hurdles, jumping well and Loch Lochie, one of Ferguson's jump horses, was very handy and comfortable, skipping over the hurdle as though it were fun to him.

Oscar Dignum has three horses lately out fr[illegible] England, Vespasia, Royal Guest, and Jolly Abb[illegible] the latter being a queer coloured grey. They are all in hard and regular work and looking well. This morning the three did a half-mile gallop at three-quarter speed, Vespasia finishing well in front, the grey next and Royal Guest some three lengths behind. These horses will all run at Calcutta, and it may be well to make a mental note of them, especially of the mare Vespasia, who shows a lot of quality and travels very fast. Her half-mile this morning was timed at 58 seconds. There is not a great deal more to say at present, but you shall have a weekly letter until our crack candidates leave this sanatorium and to you. Declaration and Olympheus are doing these two being jump horses in Ferguson's st[illegible] and a special word must be said for Airl[illegible] Ridden by Thompson this morning, she was u[illegible] versally admired, and there can be little doubt th[illegible] Watson's stable contains a sprinter in this m[illegible] that will race right up to her big Australi[illegible] reputation. More next week.

We look forward with interest to the publicati[illegible] of the book on shikar which His Highness t[illegible] Maharajah of Cooch Behar has had in hand so[illegible] time: we understand it will make its appearan[illegible] this cold weather.

Poor old Fred Gerrard, well-known to the old[illegible] generation of turfites in India, died last week at Bangalore of acute bronchitis. He achieved some success as a trainer, was in the service of several of the big guns of the racing world at one time or another, and did well as a jockey, his triumphs including a win in the Viceroy's Cup of 1884 when he rode the Hon'ble Mr. Apcar's celebrated chesnut horse Statesman, who beat a field of nine and covered the two miles course—as it was then—in 3mins. 37secs. He won for Messrs. Apcar and Abbott the Merchant Cup on Somerset the same year.

It is rumoured that Barney Allen, the Australian horse dealer, is dead. His descent on Calcutta three years ago will be remembered by many.

The result of the investigation by the Calcutta Stewards into the ramifications of the misdealings known as The Chump Case has been published during the week. Baboo M. Ganguli and the two horses Fotheringay and Kalyani are "off" for life and training licenses have been refused to Piper and Smith, two local trainers. The details upon which the Stewards' fiat is founded are not made public, and this dignified silence no doubt adds to the salutary effect of their action in this unfortunate business. It is understood that the connection of certain bookmakers with the affair has yet to be dealt with and further disqualifications in this direction are expected.

Racing in Lucknow has proceeded in unusually warm weather. The Maharajah of Cooch Behar's Matin Bell ran away with a minor event; this pony, another of Mr. O. H. M. Bell's importations, may compensate her owner for the loss of his fine pony Bells. Now that the Maharajah's sons are taking so kindly to racing, as well as polo, the Cooch Behar jacket may soon be prominent again in first-class racing. But a stable full of Cup and open handicap horses involves a far heavier outlay than was the case ten years ago and people do not enter the lists so readily as of yore.

The announcement of Mr. Hutchison's appoi[illegible] ent as permanent Secretary to the Calcutta [illegible] Club has met with a general chorus of pl[illegible] and approval. The late Duke of Cambridge used to tell with considerable relish the following story of a friend of his, a celebrated Colonel :—During the Egyptian war of '82, Major——was shot in the knee, and the projectile made a hole of some depth. When the surgeons were probing the wound and causing endless torture, the poor officer begged to know what they were hunting about for. "We're searching for the bullet," was the reply. "What! looking for the bullet? Why, damme, I've had it in my pocket all the time."

Everyone who shoots should provide himself with a copy of Messrs. Lyon and Lyon's very latest illustrated catalogue. In some respects we consider it an improvement on others the firm have produced, and there can be no doubt of the interest the contents have for most of us. Well arranged, well printed, and replete with good and moderately priced things, it is a compilation on which we heartily congratulate the firm.

The Rangoon correspondent of our Allanabad contemporary, writes :—

A tiger two days ago made its appearance in Henzada, where it attacked three Burmans who were armed only with knives. Henzada district, near the mountain range, simply swarms with wild beasts such as elephants, bears and tigers, and they are extremely bold, so much so that the inhabitants of numerous villages see their dogs, fowls, and cows carried away under their very noses without, in most cases, being able to help it. The latest instance was in Kyet Kwin village. Three villagers went out at about seven o'clock in the morning to cut bamboos when a tiger stealthily came and at a bound was upon one of them. The tiger took hold of the man's thigh and the man put his arms round the animal's neck and held on as tightly as he could, shouting for help. One of his companions ran away abandoning the unfortunate man to his fate. The other, regardless of the danger he himself was in, approached the struggling group and, poising his dah landed a blow on the animal's head which went through the skull and the monster fell lifeless. He was rewarded for bravery with a sum of Rs. 40 by the Assistant Commissioner, and Rs. 80 was collected by the villagers, while the fugitive was covered with opprobrium, and by common accord has been ostracised by them.

On the time-honoured audi alteram partem principle we append some details of what Mr. R. J. Farquharson had to say to a home sporting paper on the Nightfull case which we recently noticed.

"Now I will tell you exactly what happened, observed the old Ceylon turfite. At Windsor, Nightfull ran in a mile and a quarter race with 9st. up. She could never live with the others and finished a very bad last. When she was beaten badly, Bradshaw still persevered and rode her hard; this was foolish with a badly beaten horse and annoyed me somewhat. At Birmingham, on the 3rd instant, she had to carry 8st. 9lbs. over 1 mile and 5 furlongs. Though there were only four starters she behaved very badly at the gate and reared up frequently, and this I am sure disconcerted Bradshaw. She had in her work previously kicked him off four times and is a very funny one to ride. This to me accounts for the race he rode on her. My orders were not to knock her about if she was beaten, orders which, as you know, are given every day of the week. The race was run very slowly at first and she went well, quite differently in fact to previous race at Windsor, being able to lead the field—a lot of wretches—for a long time, and when she was beaten Bradshaw did not drive her. To my great surprise the Stewards sent for Bradshaw, expressed themselves dissatisfied with Nightfull's running and told me my jockey had broken the Rules—if so I did not see a horse at all as I understood cautioned us against anything at the meeting incomprehensible, and left the Stewards' room before I explained what I had asked Bradshaw to do. I have won. I told them they could have said anything they liked, but I contradict any such assertion. I accordingly left the Stewards' room and thought the matter was satisfactorily settled, but unfortunately the papers only reported what happened at our first interview and said nothing about the second, the nature of which I have stated. The consequences have been unpleasant for me, and I have written to the Stewards for an expression of their opinion in writing, which I hope they will grant me, for publication. To prove that there was nothing wrong about Nightfull's running I started her on Saturday in the North Surrey Handicap, at Sandown, 1½ mile, 9st., and put up Mornington Cannon, whom you will admit is irreproachable. There were six runners and she again failed to make any show, and could only get a bad fourth. Cannon told me afterwards that she did her best, but had no pace.

An offence, happily of unusual occurrence, was brought home to an English owner and trainer at the recent Folkestone meeting. The condition of the gelding by Sir Visto out of Acmena having been brought to the notice of the Stewards by several trainers, the Stewards called L. Collins, the trainer, before them to explain why he allowed the jockey to weigh out for the gelding for the Juvenile Selling Plate. Mr. E. S. H. Champney, the official veterinary-surgeon to the meeting, examined the Acmena gelding, and reported that he was suffering from a severe cold, was running from the nose, and must have been coughing for several days. The Stewards—Sir James Home, Mr. H. J. King, and Colonel Dansey—fined the owner and trainer £10 each, and instructed the Clerk of the Course to report the matter to the Stewards of the Jockey Club.

There will be no polo at the Sonepore Meet this year. Local teams could not enter owing to the early date, so the tournament was postponed till next year.

We read that an extraordinary fish, weighing 3cwt., and 12 feet in length, was captured early this month in Dover Straits by the Boulogne trawler, Notre Dame de la Mer. Fishermen could not identify the species, but were of opinion that it belonged to the shark family. The tail was over a yard long, and shaped curiously like a scythe. The fish had two large fins near the head, a long spinal fin, and two others near the tail.

In England the singular craze for outlandish pets has again become prevalent, and the ladies who a year or two ago took their walks abroad with a lizard or a small tortoise tethered by a gold chain to their waists, are now to be seen carrying lemurs and similar queer small fry about with them. One can understand, by a stretch of sympathy, the mental attitude of the lady who allows herself to become the slave of a corpulent pug or a snappy toy terrier, but the craze for the bizarre does not stop here. Pet snakes of various dimensions are not uncommon—they are such "creepy, crawly darlings"—and report says that bears—baby bears that is—are to come into fashion as pets this season. As a contemporary justly remarks, one can almost tell when a baby bear is too big to be kept any longer as a pet—when it eats up one of the family.

The polo tournament at Secunderabad for Sir Charles Egerton's Cup has been won by the 26th Light Cavalry who beat the 13th Hussars in the final by 4 goals 3 subsidiaries to 3 goals 4 subsidiaries.

The Madras hunting season will begin early in November. Seventeen and a half couple of hounds arrived by the Clan Mackintosh in good condition and these will most likely be supplemented by a small draft of seasoned hounds. Mr. W. O. Horne, I.C.S., will be Master and will be assisted by Messrs. Gibson and Torrie as Whips, the duties of Honorary Secretary being undertaken by Mr. H. M. Giles.

Sometime ago The Indian Field contained an editorial notice respecting Messrs. Westley Richard and Company's Patented Wind-gauge Back-sights and Sights with Vernier Elevating Screw, by which the vernier usually carried in the pocket, becomes unnecessary, the sight itself carrying in a simple mechanical form mechanism which serves the same purpose as the separate vernier. This sight needed the use of a special leaf and bed, that is to say, it differed from the service pattern, and is used on sporting and target rifles in Africa, but not being Government pattern cannot be used on the British service rifles. The same principal of sight is adopted on their Sherwood rifle.

In order to meet the objection that the sight was not suitable for service rifles, they have now applied a similar arrangement of vernier elevator, and of wind-gauge slide of a new pattern for use with the service leaf as detailed in the description given to-day in our Shooting columns.

The British War Office has approved the wind-gauge principal, as our readers are aware and for the first time during the last Bisley, slides capable of wind-gauge movement for use with the service leaf, were sanctioned by the National Rifle Association. Most of these slides consist in a primitive arrangement well-known for over half a century, and principally consist of a dove-tail piece working on the slide right and left. This piece being moved by the pressure of the thumb and finger.

The slide introduced by Messrs. Westley Richards and Company is sanctioned by the National Rifle Association, and as will be seen, is made for attachment to the Government Service Lee-Enfield and Lee-Metford Leaf. The slide is moved laterally for wind-gauge purposes by turning the milled head wheel or screw by which very fine register of lateral movement is obtained.

Underneath or at the back of the slide, is a spring which engages into notches formed in the head of the wheel. There are three notches and as the wheel is turned the spring snicks into each and thereby registers to the touch and to the ear the amount of wind-gauge movement taken. The screw is cut to 50 threads to the inch and divided into these three parts gives 150th of an inch for each division. Thus it will be seen that this wind-gauge slide also has a micrometer arrangement.

We do not know of any other form of sight slide for wind-gauge purposes attachable to the service leaf which possesses such advantages or is so mechanically constructed as this Micrometer Slide.

Our readers will also observe that this slide is constructed when desired for use with the vernier elevating screw adjustment by which minute adjustments can be made in the sight elevation. The slide is fitted with a catch which has its further end threaded and so engages with the thread of the screw. By pressing on the catch the slide is released from the screw, and may be so moved up and down the tangent leaf in the ordinary way. It will therefore be seen that the attachment of the screw to the leaf in no way impedes the ready adjustment which is possessed by the ordinary service sight. But there is this advantage that if it is desired the slide can be moved by working the screw and it is intended that its movement by ...rew is for fine adjustment. Let us say a man ...es the slide by hand to 1,000 yards, and his ... are going high in the bull; he can by ...ng the milled head lower his sight a fractional ... of an inch, each division of the vernier scale ...esenting 150th of an inch, that is one inch ...ach 100 yards.

...ith the present service sight, in order to make ...is fine adjustment he would have to take from his ...kit a separate vernier, apply it to the sight and then put it back again.

Placing a screw on a tangent leaf to work the slide up and down is not new; in fact it is as old as the hills. The novelty and the improvement in this new arrangement consists in constructing the slide in relation to the elevating screw so that the slide may be worked up and down the leaf either by hand or by means of the screw. It is obvious that for the slide to be alone capable of motion up and down the leaf or tangent solely by turning the screw, would involve much delay in adjusting the sights besides putting the screw to considerable wear in always being employed to move the leaf.

There are many shooters in India interested in this question. These sights are being successfully used in Australia: they were only introduced in England for the first time at the last Bisley Meeting. They could not be supplied without the sanction of the N.R.A. but will be in more general use at the next Meeting.

Imperial Horse Fairs and Shows of the United Provinces will be held at Aligarh, Bulandshahr, Muzaffarnagar and Meerut (Nauchandi) during the months of February and March next.

All who shoot will endorse the sentiments ex... pressed by "Mannlicher" who writes to ou... esteemed of Allahabad as follows:—"Now that t... cold weather shooting season has commenced, mig... I draw your attention to the following? Ru... appear to be formed or are in formation for ... preservation of large game, but none for ... protection of small. I have recently seen seve... testimonials of "chits" given by globe-trotters to two professional shikaris. They are mostly from Americans and Germans, and one of the latter 'sportsmen' relates how the shikari showed him such 'good sport' (or words to that effect) that he was able to slay (this word is mine) no less than fifteen 'black-bucks' in one day. Should such wretched butchers be allowed the use of gun or rifle during the sojourn in this country, and would it not be as well for the police to keep an eye on them and their doings? Also, for the authorities to license native shikaris and have them registered by the Police or Forest Departments? It is hard luck on all who have to spend their lives in this country and who are fond of a day's fair shooting to find their sport or chance of sport spoilt by a merciless butcher and an equally rascally native. Globe-trotters are wealthy people as a rule and should be made to pay license and be limited to so many head of game dur... their stay in India. I ask what sort of sportsm... save an American skin-hunte... would dream of su... cruel massacre?"

We are tired of alluding to the Calcutta Municipal Market live snipe brutalities. The latest fatuous pronouncement is to be found in the following paragraph communicated to the local papers:—"The question of cruelty to birds, especially in regard to those exposed for sale in the Municipal Market, has for some time past been under the consideration of the Calcutta Corporation. Section 559 (35) of the Municipal Act deals particularly with the matter, and as an attempt to prevent the sale of live snipe the General Committee of the Corporation framed and submitted to the Local Government a bye-law actually forbidding the sale, Mr. Thomas Stokoe, Barrister-at-Law, on consultation, gave as his opinion that the proposed bye-law is legal. A copy of this opinion was forwarded to Government. The question was then referred to the Officiating Advocate-General, who, disagreeing with Mr. Stokoe, declined to advise the Government to sanction the proposed bye-law, and the Government have given effect to Mr. Sinha's opinion."

This opinion was possibly based on the ground that the snipe is not a "domestic animal or fowl" hence he is beyond the law as it at present stands. All we can say is—and we have said it before—the sooner all game birds brought into the market for sale are legally regarded as "domestic," for the special purpose of protecting them from cruelty, the better. The efforts of the Municipality are commendable, the obstruction of the authorities disgusting. Meanwhile the bird-selling fiends continue triumphant. Verily in some respects Calcutta remains the "African village" Dr. Simpson found it several years ago.

We have seen a good many catalogues of fishing gear in our time, many of them very well got up, but we must confess that for general attractiveness, style and contents we have never seen anything to approach Rod and Tackle, a publication which leaves very little doubt that Messrs. Westley Richards and Company, Limited, are as eminent in their efforts to cater for the angler as they are in respect of the man who shoots. Printed and illustrated in quite the latest and best style Rod and Tackle will instantly fix the attention of those who fish, not only as regards the details it gives of the innumerable accessories necessary to the gentle art, but because of what is set forth regarding rod building to curve ordinates, gut, flies, principal fish and fishing stations. A comprehensive and creditable compilation.

Carried.

(b) That the following alterations in the Rules of Racing proposed by the Stewards be passed.

Rule 1. To delete the present definition of a "Maiden" and to substitute :—

"A 'Maiden' is a horse which has never won a race (value Rs. 50), other than a match or private sweepstakes, at any recognised meeting in India or any other country."

Rule 91 (ii) (c). To delete clause (c) :—

"When a penalty is imposed on winners of two or more races or on winners of an aggregate value, or on winners of a fixed sum, without specifying the value of the races to be taken into account, the penalty shall apply only to winners of races in any country of the value of Rs. 200 and upwards, unless it is imposed in a race confined to Maidens, in which case it shall apply to winners of races of the value of Rs. 50 and upwards."

Rule 71. Delete the para :—

"The fees to Native Jockeys shall be half the amount allowed to other Jockeys," and substitute :—

The fees to Native Jockeys who have won a flat race of the value of Rs. 500 or upwards shall be half the amount allowed to other Jockeys.

The fees of Native Jockeys who have not won a flat race value Rs. 500 upwards shall be :—

For a winning mount on the flat Rs. 25. For a losing mount on the flat Rs. 12-8, irrespective of the value of the race.

The fees for winning and losing mount respectively in a Race or Steeplechase are double the amount for a flat race.

Carried.

The Secretary having explained the steps taken by the Stewards to secure a Lease of the Poona Race Course, put the following proposition to the meeting :—

"That the Members of the Turf Club approve of the Stewards making the best arrangements possible to secure a Lease of the Poona Race Course.

Carried.

The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chair.

A reward of Rs. 50 is offered for the destruction of a rogue elephant which frequents the neighbourhood of Kachugaon in the district of Goalpara, as it is causing a great deal of damage to crops, huts etc. Some Assam clerk has described the beast as "about 8 cubits high and having 2 teeth." For teeth read tusks we suppose ; but "eight cubits" or in other words twelve feet high—Bap re bap !

There is some prospect of the next Olympic games which will take place in July, 1908, being held in London. This decision may seem strange at first, but not when the real significance of the Olympic movement is appreciated.

"If the revival of the Olympic games," said the Rev. R. S. de Courcy Laffan, Honorary Secretary of the British Olympic Association, "was merely a sentimental revival of an event of historic interest, then the games could only be held in Greece, but the Olympic movement has a practical purpose. Its object is to bring the different nations together and foster a sense of kinship between them, just as the Olympic games of ancient Greece fostered a feeling of unity in the whole Greek world. The revival aims at taking the old Greek idea and adapting it in the best way possible to the conditions of the modern world."

It is a mistake to suppose that the games, which it is hoped may be held in London, are the natural successors to the games held this year in Athens. The present Olympic movement had its origin at the International Athletic Congress held at the Sorbonne in 1894, when its direction was assigned to an International committee. Of this committee Baron Pierre de Conbertin is President, and it includes representatives from no less than twenty-three different countries.

Three Olympiads have been celebrated, at Athens in 1896, at Paris in 1900, and at St. Louis in 1904. The competitions are rigorously confined to amateurs, and every effort has been made to make the games fully representative of every form of modern athletic contest and of every nation of the civilised world.

It was after the first Olympiad held in Greece in 1896 that the Greeks thought of organising Olympic games, in their turn to be held quadrennially in Athens. The war caused a postponement of the plan, so that the first games only took place this year.

"But if the wider purpose of the International Committee is to be fulfilled," explained Mr. Laffan "it is essential that the Olympic games should be held in different centres, and in place more generally accessible than Athens."

"Congress and similar gatherings," he continued "where representatives of different nations come together, good as they are, only bring together the grey headed, the people who have for the most part realised that every nation has something to learn from its neighbours.

"The youthful element is wanting. But in these international games it is the young men who will be brought together—the very people who have most prejudices, and are quite sure they know everything. But in games they will learn to respect one another ; not only each other's prowess but each other's courtesy and uprightness, and so on. So, we hope these international Olympic games will accomplish a very good work."

The last meeting of the International Committee was held at the Mansion House, in June 1904, and it was then decided, on the motion of the Italian delegates, to hold the 1908 Olympiad in Rome. Difficulties have arisen to render this plan impossible and the committee have expressed a great wish to hold the games in London. The British committee warmly approved, provided the support of the principal amateur athletic and sporting associations of the country could be secured.

"So far all the answers we have received," said Mr. Laffan, "have been favourable, but all the replies have not yet come in. Then, our committee must meet and come to a formal decision. But I have very good hopes that the matter will go forward. Our endeavour will be to include all modern sports so far as it is practicable."

The Billiard Tournament at the Secunderabad Club was of considerable interest throughout and particularly so when in the final Messrs. Griffith and Moir, of the 26th Light Cavalry, met in a close contest which ended in a win for Mr. Griffith by by 35 points in 250 up.

The Dalhousie Athletic Club smoking concert at the Calcutta Concert Hall last Saturday night provided a large gathering with a most excellent evening's entertainment. Every item was first class, and reflected equal credit on those who contributed to and those who arranged the programme.

Messrs. Simpson and Platnauer of Calcutta move with the times, so that their recent migration from dismal Bentinck Street to cheerful Chowringhee hardly comes as a surprise, though it is a sign of progress on which their numerous constituents will heartily congratulate them. The congested district in which their former show rooms were situated and the fact that the business had long since grown too big for the old premises necessitated the change, and doubtless the public have not been slow to appreciate the new departure. Their new show rooms, at 15, Chowringhee are, nearly complete now and therein we find samples of the big stocks which will continue to be stored in the old place. China and crockery, silver and plated ware, cutlery, lamps, glass, electric fittings, domestic etceteras are all represented. Some of the specimens of Royal Worcester and Crown Derby ware struck us as particularly fine, indeed one seldom sees such Exquisite china out here. Electro-plating is one of the firm's most popular specialities, another is the facility they offer to athletic sports promoters in the choice of trophies, cups and medals. The firm are sole agents for Simpson, Hall and Co.'s celebrated electro-plated ware (which we believe are offered at English rates) for Dietz's lanterns, for the Lux Incandescent kerosine oil gas lamps and other necessaries to comfort and elegance in the Shiny East. We wish our friends a full measure of success in their new enterprise.

The Football Tournament in connection with Lady Minto's Fancy Fête will be held in Calcutta on or about the 28th January next and will be open to Station, Regimental Companies of R. G. A. Batteries, or Brigade Divisions of R. H. A. or R. F. A., Volunteer or other Clubs in the Northern, Eastern, Western Commands, Secunderabad Division and Burma Division, all of which Commands and Divisions will be represented. Calcutta local teams will also be represented, including regimental teams at Fort William, Barrackpore, and Dum-Dum. All Divisional ties must be played off by 15th January. Among the prizes to be competed for will be a Cup presented by Lord Minto, a silver cup to the captain of the winning team, gold medals to each member of the winning team and silver medals to each member of the second team. A further list of prizes will be issued later. The return railway fares of representative teams, eleven members only, proceeding to Calcutta, will be paid. Entries, accompanied by an entrance fee of Rs. 15, are to be made to Captain G. Walton, Honorary Secretary, Melrose, Simla, by 15th November (midnight), from whom the rules of the Tournament and other information can be obtained on application.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 5th October 1906.

THE City Corporation is not pleased with the London Press. The new Old Bailey is quite ready to be opened—copious descriptions of its charms and conveniences, from the statuary in the Entrance Hall, to the four tiers of cells "communicating direct with the dock," have been published and the newspapers had thoughtfully arranged for His Majesty to formally open the building at the end of this month. Unfortunately they omitted to consult the King ; and when the Corporation approached His Majesty through the recognised channels it was informed that the King could not give a day for the business at the time suggested. I should not be surprised if the King's presence were denied the function altogether. The traditions of the Old Bailey, so grim and sordid, ill accord with those of the throne in a ceremonial sense. The incongruity of a Royal opening becomes manifest when you try your hand at framing a speech for His Majesty to deliver on the occasion !

Reports of the Church Congress at Barrow, occasion for many and long speeches, and the Railway Servants Congress at Cardiff, occasion for much and vitriolic recrimination, occupy a large area of the newspapers this week. The proceedings of the latter are the more interesting, apart from their animation because the socialistic flag has been frankly hoisted. Labour does not differ from other political parties in the essential respect of dividing against itself.

Major Pringle reports that the Salisbury railway accident was due to the excessive speed at which the train was driven round the curve : the evidence shows that the rate may have been as much as 70 miles an hour, which is more than twice that allowed by the Company's directions for this section of the line. A good deal had been said about the alleged practice of passengers tipping the engine driver of this train to secure a fast run up to town, but Major Pringle found no reason to believe this. The guard, Harrison, is blamed for his failure to apply the brake under his control when he realised that the train was travelling at dangerous speed.

Quite an exciting time had the keepers at the Zoo early last Friday morning. The Polar bears, pardonably tired of their particularly uncomfortable (to human eyes) quarters, succeeded in breaking down the gate of the cage. The she bear, with an instinct that appeals, made straight for the buffet by the band stand, and prowled around it in the fog: she was very loth to quit, but eventually yielded to the temptation of food scattered along the path to the cage. She charged the assembled keepers when their attentions grew too pressing, but nobody was hurt. The male bear was driven back to the cage by a workman who saw it climbing over the outer guard rail: he very pluckily attacked the beast with a plank that was lying near.

Having read Major Godfrey's translation of Engineer Constructor Politovsky's letters to his wife (published as "From Liban to Tsushima" by Mr. John Murray) I no longer marvel at the Dogger Bank incident: on the contrary, I marvel that more such incidents did not occur. M. Politovsky wrote good letters and naturally he wrote with perfect absence of restraint: the atmosphere of nervousness, ignorance, and suspicion that pervaded the Russian fleet was perfectly incredible: the officers and men saw Japanese everywhere and the evil machinations of England in every difficulty. The ignorance of the officers about their own vessels was astounding: videlicet:—"Yesterday heard a quarrel among the sub-lieutenants about how many stoke holds there were in the Suvaroff and how the boilers were placed. Officers, who had by order of the Admiral, kept watch in the stoke hold, were quarrelling over these things. How sad it was, and yet I could not listen to them without laughing." M. Politovsky's story is one of perpetual passage from ship to ship repairing damages: first one vessel breaks down, then another: torpedo boats collide by sheer clumsiness, everything that can break down does so until the lives of the unfortunate Engineer Constructors on whom fell the duty of repairing were not worth living. M. Politovsky was under no illusions about the defects of the fleet. This was written on 31st March when the fleet was off Kamranh Bay. "If you could but imagine what is going on! If it were possible for me to tell you all about it you would be amazed, should I live I will tell you afterwards. No, there is no use our fighting. Things have come to such a pass I can only wring my hands and feel assured that no one can [illegible] his fate." Poor man: he went down in the Suvaroff.

There are rumours afloat that the Times Library is in reality the first step of an American syndicate towards the capture of the whole publishing business of London. A week ago I received from Printing House Square a fat pamphlet entitled "The Publishers and The Public," wherein is set out the details of a correspondence which took place fifty years ago on the subject of retail prices of books and also a circular recently issued by the Publishers' Association. I do not suppose you would be interested in details, but the said pamphlet does something to lend colour to the rumour of an American Book Trust in this country. Publishing and journalism are nowadays so closely intertwined that the Trust will have to take over a goodly proportion of the London press with the publishers.

I cannot help thinking that "The New Aladdin" produced at the Gaiety on Saturday has suffered from too many cooks. Two authors did the book, four the lyrics, and three the music: and I can't say that the piece is stronger than others which have had a smaller Array of Talent to give them birth. "The New Aladdin" is called a Musical Extravagance, but it bears convincingly family resemblance to the Musical Comedy we know so well. The first Act wherein Lally (Miss Lilly Elsie) finds the magic Ring in the Bond Street curio shop of his uncle, Ebenezer (Mr. Hy. Grattan) is decidedly good and we thought the syndicate responsible had struck out quite a new line between burlesque and comic opera. Act II, the Palace in Cathay whither the Ring has transported people, was a disappointment: the plot fizzles out after the manner of musical comedy plots and the thing becomes a series of songs and scenes in the accustomed fashion. It is a pity because there are great possibilities in the idea as first presented to us, the Genie of the Lamp (Mr. Geo. Grossmith, junior) turned loose in town with his archaic ideas is of itself enough to make sport for an evening. Another good idea is the Lost Constable, who can't find his own way, much less direct strangers, about the London which the Genie has so drastically rearranged. St. Paul's is moved somewhere out to Chelsea, the Gaiety is placed next the House of Commons and Romani's is opposite the Burlington Arcade. Miscellaneous as "The New Aladdin" is, I have no doubt he will catch on: many of the lyrics are clever and the music is light and tuneful enough to suit the B. P.

At Terry's, also on Saturday, was produced a condensed version of Holcroft's century old comedy "He's Much to Blame" and An Entirely New and Original Musical and Satirical Play in Two Acts called "Yellow Fog Island:" the latter, in addition to being new and original and musical and satirical, was dull. I was not able to satisfy myself where the satire came in: but long before Act I was over most of us wished that the Lord Mayor, who was entertaining King Dysma, would give him his lunch and have done with it: the Mayoral secretary, Simkins, who, to atone for the failure of distinguished guests to arrive, personates them himself, is a wearisome being: the authors appear to have raked up all the aged jokes on record and some of them were worn beyond recognition as jokes by sheer wear and tear. "He's Much to Blame" is a poor piece of work. In its original form it may have been amusing, but it certainly is not in its present guise. If the audience did not take it very seriously there was reason in the circumstance that the actors did not do so either: the play appeared to suffer from want of rehearsal. As the two pieces are no longer in the bill at Terry's it seems unnecessary to say more about them.

The Follies are now at the Tivoli giving a new skit called the "Bustler of Bath." It is a rather personal parody of the methods and mannerisms of Mr. Seymour Hicks, whose vivacity and unwearying activity are cleverly taken off by Mr. Pelissier as the Duke of St. Vitus—by no means an ill chosen name. There is much bustle and noise, some clever songs—notably the parody of Miss Ellaline Terriss' song ("They never teach you that at a Dramatic School") and some smart topical allusion. One retort struck me as neat. Somebody called Miss Camille Sydney "Camel:" whereupon the lady responded "Don't call me 'camel:' it's Miss Edna May who's got the hump." The unpleasantness at the Vaudeville arising out of Miss May's childish resentment at the small type in which her name was put in the bills, has furnished occasion for much "topical" remark on the stage since it occurred.

I do not suppose that it emanates from a naval source, but the report of the sinking of the "Landrail" in this morning's paper reads quaintly. The old vessel had been used as a target for gunnery experiments and "as the battleships manœuvred they riddled her with shells." After this a crew was put aboard her "and she was being towed back towards Portland when without the slightest warning she took a lurch and sank." A vessel, which had been carefully riddled with shells an hour or two before, might, one would suppose, be expected to sink without any very definite warning of her intention to do it.

The L.C.C.'s Thames Steamboat Service was suspended for the winter months on Wednesday. I suppose the Committee responsible has realised that it is really not worth while to conciliate the 360 men employed on these boats at the expense of the ratepayers: that they [illegible] lose more than 360 votes by continuing the scandalous waste. There is some talk of petitioning the Council to maintain a winter boat on the lower reaches of the river—Blackheath and Greenwich—but it is to be hoped the voice of the few who want it will pass unheeded.

The remaining guns of the "Montagu" have been recovered from the wreck, also the propellers: and the divers are now removing the carriages from the barbettes and all other such "fixings" as can be detached from the hull and turned to account. There is no sign of breaking up, though there has been some very rough weather lately.

Mrs. Craigie, otherwise John Oliver Hobbes, left property to the value of £24,500.

A quantity of Roman silver coins were found near the old British Camp at Sheffield, a few days ago, by workmen excavating for foundations for house. They bore dates from A. D. 60 to 80 and were in such excellent preservation that the local publicans accepted them in exchange for beer.

Saturday saw the Great Balloon Race start from Paris and Sunday and Monday saw the competitors alighting in various parts of France and England. An Italian and an American balloon got furthest, coming down in Yorkshire: four or five alighted on the Norman coast preferring not to face the perils of crossing the channel. It was reported that cries for help were heard on Sunday night from a balloon passing over Evreux: but it was only Mr. Rolls and his companion shouting enquiries as to their whereabouts in their best French. M. Santos Dumont, who had a motor balloon, was the first to come down: his arm had been somewhat badly hurt: it was caught by the machinery. The American, Mr. Frank Lahm, who went to ground (I hope the expression may be properly borrowed) 7 miles from Whitby, was adjudged the winner.

The candour of the unemployable is refreshing when he is of cynical mind and fears not to speak truth. A man who sought refuge in the Pulham (Norfolk) Workhouse informed the guardians that he did not propose to do any work: he did not feel equal to it. Having ascertained that their guest was equal to it they gave him a stone breaking job: this was declined: "If that is your decision gentlemen" said he in the Board-room when he was summoned, "I must leave the house rather than submit to it. I came into the house for rest, not to work.

THE NILGIRI IBEX.

A POURING wet morning—the first [illegible] seen during my six weeks' stay in Ooty—greeted our eyes as we woke on the day intended for our start on a trip to the Koondahs. The rain looked liked continuing too, never a bit of welcome blue could be seen in the heavens, so there was nothing for it but to turn loose the pack ponies to graze on the hillside and to defer our departure till the morrow. We were a friendly party of five, three ladies and 2 men, the former bent on sketching and a pleasant rest from the incessant gaieties of an Ooty season, while we men were naturally on slaughter fixed. Our main objective was the securing of a good ibex, only one of which (and that must be a genuine saddle-back) is allowed to be shot by each holder of a license in the year. "Ibex" said our friends, "O you'll see ibex, but you'll be lucky if you see a saddle-back and thundering lucky if you get a shot at one." So it was with feelings of respect and something of awe that I looked forward to tackling the most wily of goats on his own precipitous hillsides. Now for those who know not the beautiful blue mountains I must explain that the Koondahs are a great stretch of the Nilgiri plateau, green valleys, grass covered hills, dense sholas: and clear running streams. Sholas are small tracts of dense jungle that nestle away in almost every sheltered site on hillside or in ravine. The scenery is grand in the extreme, not perhaps with the grandeur of the snow clad Himalayas, but with a beauty of its own. Stand some morning at early dawn on the topmost peak of great Makurti, and if fortune stands your friend you will be rewarded by such a view, that many a year of service in the low lying plains of India will hardly dim its memory.

At first, looking west naught is to be seen save billowy clouds of rolling mist, shining like driven snow when lightly touched by the rays of the rising sun. Behind one to the east lies a tableland of rolling hills, bright velvety green where the sun touches their grassy slopes while small billows of mist still roll aimlessly about amid the shadowy uplands. Between one and the rolling hills, lies a deep valley, in which, as a winding silver thread, the Pykara River runs its placid course, till some few miles down it gathers itself into rapids and cascades previous to taking its mighty leap down to the plains below. But turning again to the west, the sea of cloud lightens slowly, but perceptibly then comes a zephyr of wind, and suddenly before one, floating in air and seemingly so near that the point of the alpenstock might dislodge the topmost rocks, rises the sharp serrated cone to Nilgiri Peak. And even as one watches it grows, and shedding its encircling garment of mist, peak after peak of its attendant satellites come into view. But still between one and the towering peak opposite the mist lies thick, till wind and sun at last triumphant, the veil of clouds at last is rent and the full beauty of hill, dale, and forest breaks upon one. Should you be so lucky as to get one of those rare days when the atmosphere is absolutely clear, then no mere description can possibly do justice to the scene. Some thousands of feet below one to the north-west lies the Ouchterlony Valley, dotted here and there with tiny doll's houses, fine red lines marking the roads connecting the various estates. Then in front tower the Vellacher-amullies, giant blue forest clad mountains, while toward the south-west mile after mile of undulating plainland stretches away to a faint azure line—the sea. But back once more to Ooty and the pouring rain. Tiffin found it still steadily raining, and though only the middle of May, we found ourselves speculating blankly whether or no the monsoon could have given Columbo the slip, and burst upon us unawares.

Next morning however dawned fairer, if overcast, and by 8 A.M., a string of some fifteen pack ponies were wending their way across the down-heading for the jagged tooth of rock that crowns Makurti's summit. For the first few miles the ladies drove, then abandoning the carriage, we started to tackle the march in earnest, one pony with side-saddle accompanying us, the ladies taking turns to ride thereon. It was but a short march our first one, and noon saw us on the top of a high hill, gazing down on to our camp, rapidly taking shape and form as the coolies erected the tents under the guidance of shikaries and boys The site was ideal, a small grassy lawn, with steep banks leading to a large pool, the only quiet water in the brawling rushing stream, while behind lay a dense shola climbing the hill-side, and interesected by a small rill of clear fresh water. Tiffin finished we betook ourselves our several ways, Mr. B. to try for a sounder of pig—with chance of a sambhur stag—promised by the shikari, the ladies to bathe in the river, while I with rod in hand departed to investigate a small stream some two miles distant, into which some yearling trout had been turned a few months previously. But fishing was quite hopeless, the heavy rain of the last few days having made the smaller streams a mere soup, so after a slight detour to see the view from by a cairn—where Captain Preston, of the Ooty, a former master of the Ooty hounds, lost his life drowning some years ago, I turned my steps camp-ward.

As dusk Mrs. B. and accompanied by the shikari Munnion—my shikari—climbed the hill immediately in rear of the camp, and were rewarded by the sight of some six or seven sambhur, who were grazing at the edge of a large shola opposite. Two were stags of about 20 and 25ins., but 26ins. being the minimum length which it was permissible to shoot; we had the pleasure of watching them peacefully feeding, without any of the desire to cut short their existance, which is so often a bar to the enjoyment of a quiet survey of the different habits of the jungle.

Next morning's march meant a long, long pull up, and right glad were for an over-cast misty morning, and even a sharp shower of rain was preferable to old Sol who later on struggled through his watery curtain, and made our climb a thing of heat, and many "views-to-be-admired pauses." But even the long lane, though it may have no turning, has an end, and over a late breakfast the fatigues of the march were forgotten. An easy afternoon making comfortable the camp that was to be home to us for the next seven days, and next morning at day-break found us all fresh and keen to be off, the ladies to sketch and photo the cloud effects of the rising sun, while we mere men, were bent on the death of the mountain goats. A toilsome climb up a high hill and Munnion and I called a halt, the telescope being produced, and the surrounding country surveyed. Mr. B. and his shikari, a speck in the far distance, were seen ascending to a lookout of their own; for the rest the hills and dales lay lifeless under the rays of a misty sun. For half an hour nothing stirs, even though some two miles of landscape lie beneath our gaze, then the keen vision of the shikari espies a dot, which investigation with the glass discovers to be a doe sambhur, about one and a half miles distant, a second one also is shown lying beneath a rock. Then from a nearer shola, three pig appear, the young hopeful, grubbing apparently too near his irascible parent, is suddenly with many squeals and grunts—unheard by us, but imagined—chased back into the friendly jungle by the cantankerous old boar. After this we abandoned our position, and dipping into the valley make for another hill at some distance off. Reaching the foot, fortune favours us, a moving speck, on the sky-line resolves itself into a good sambhur stag, one well worth shooting, so that, there and then a stalk was commenced, with much panting and blowing on my part and anathemizing of rarefied hill air.

But alas, an exceptionally brilliant stalk finished, we emerged near the summit of the hill, the stag however was evidently a passenger, and had not even condescended to wait and admire our arduous ascent. But we had reached our goal after all, a short rest, and again my inestimable attendant's eyesight is to the fore and he claims to have seen, what he says, he thinks, was a very fair saddle-back on a hill some one mile distant. As for me, not by the utmost imagination can I believe I see anything approachidg an ibex, but readily admitting my inferiority the telescope is brought to bear, and not till five minutes have elapsed do I at last discover the animal, and a saddle-back it is, lying down beside a rock identical in colouring with himself.

Another long stalk, and suffice to say another disappointment. The sun was now well up, and for the first morning, I considered we had had enough excitement, so towards breakfast we turned our steps, hastened by a heavy mist that came sweeping up out of the Ouchterlony Valley, which after encircling us for some time, with a sensation of damp cotton wool suddenly turned to brisk and heavy rain. Mr. B. had escaped the rain, having returned to camp a short time previously. He also had obtained nothing. Whatever our various intentions for the afternoon were they were all marred by dense white mist, which, creeping up from the plains, enveloped everything in impenetrable cloud, turning later to rain, and making our dinner an affair of dampness, though luckily our spirits invigorated by the hill air, and delightful freedom of camp life, were proof against sharing the same fate. Next morning was much a repetition of the first though with a different ending myself wandering afar returned emptyhanded, but Mr. B striking out a new line, arrived home to breakfast triumphant, a cooly in rear bearing the head of a good saddle-back. And a word as to how Mr. B. bagged his quary, a stroke of great luck as he told us. He and Cheppani, his shikari, had stalked a herd with great care and caution, but a trea herons current of air had betrayed them, and off the herd had dashed saddle-back in the centre.

Mr. B, thinking that they had gone for good, sent the shikari round a hill to take a survey of the country. He saw nothing but evidently the saddle-back who had separated from the herd scented him, since he suddenly appeared again round the hill in front of Mr. B., and standing still some 150 yards distant; was bowled over by the unerring rifle of the latter. It was with slight jealousy that my congratulations were tendered, consolation lying however in the fact, that now Mr. B., his ibex shot, could no longer indulge in the delightful thrills of anticipation, that still were mine every time a herd of ibex or solitary sentinal appeared in view. But next day came my turn, and thrills of anticipation died for me also that morning. The ladies had come out too, accompanied by the tiffin cooly, and our rendezvous was to be the top of great Makurti Peak. Munnion and myself starting ahead pushed on past the base of the peak till we stood looking towards the towering heights of Nadgani, across the deep forest clad ravine, in which the Nilambur River takes its rise. It was not till more that an hour's vain searching of the country had passed, that a solitary ibex, silhouetted for one instant against the skyline, discovered the herd for which he was evidently doing sentinel. He was more than one and a half miles distant, so that there was no need for caution or secrecy yet awhile, so long as we avoided the sentinel's own mistake and kept clear of the skyline. Twenty minutes however brought us to a point from where stalking had to be commenced in earnest. And here began our difficulties, the wind, fairly strong and steady on the heights, became exceeding tricky in the vallies, and for some time quite debarred us from getting at the herd at all.

For now we had seen the herd, some twelve in number, and slightly appart from them and downhill was a saddle-back, a really good head; while lower down the ridge, some 300 yards off, we could see half a dozen more does. The ibex were feeding about or lying resting on a long spur that ran out and away from a high hill down into the ravine below. To approach from above was hopeless, the ground being in most parts absolutely devoid of cover. To get round and approach from the other flank was also out of the question, since the further slope of the spur fell away to a precipice some 700 or 800 feet in depth. There remained but two ways, first to approach direct, second to make a detour and try to get below them. But the second scheme would take up too much time, since as the wind blew direct from this flank, a chukker of some two miles would be entailed, and we had no guarantee that the ibex would not suddenly move off to their midday haunts on some precipitous hillside. So there remained but one direct approach and of the fact that this frontal attack was difficult there was not much doubt. To begin with it was necessary to keep well up hill to avoid letting the ibex get our wind, and this meant crossing two ridges in full view of the herd, the nearer of the two ridges being within 200 yards of them. But it was no good waiting, so off we started with infinite caution. The first ridge was successfully negotiated, though not without an uncomfortable halt whilst a suspicious doe gazed our way. The second ridge slowly surmounted and alas our quarry were seen trotting quietly off down the spur evidently having got our wind. But there remained the second lot of ibex, still apparently unsuspicious, of which some six could be seen within 200 yards of us on another small ridge.

But a very big "but," there was an open spur within 50 yards of them that had to be negotiated unless, indeed, a saddle-back should stroll up and show himself. However fortune, tired at last of upsetting our carefully laid plans, suddenly turned a smile upon us. A small wisp of cloud, sweeping up the hill-side heralded a light billowy mist, which came rolling slowly up. Taking advantage of a thick billow we made a hasty dash and crossing the ridge quietly under its friendly shelter, knew we were now within 50 yards of the herd. A puff of wind and the cloud rolled passed but no ibex were to be seen, but we knew they could not have gone far, so hastily pushing up a small slope in front we found ourselves suddenly within 30 yards of the herd, who were gathered in a bunch in a small hollow. A gallant saddle-back in the middle; but too late his does surrounded him as they breasted the opposite slope, twice my rifle cracked and twice the mountain goat staggered; just he managed to top the ridge, but his bolt was shot and with hardly an effort to save himself, he rolled down a steep hill-side till checked by a small watercourse. He was stone dead when we reached him, and afer a snap-shot photo taken had been as he lay, we skinned him there and then. Of the rest of our trip there is not space enough to write, but the sambhur seen, and the tiger, and of the good stag missed, by me, not by Mr. B.; this must be told some other day; but this much may I add, that for delightful scenery, pleasant climate, and a quarry that will tax your utmost skill and endurance, it would be hard to beat a ten days trip after ibex on the Nilgiri mountains.

Fishing.

FISHING FOR GROUPERS IN RORATONGA HARBOUR.

RORATONGA is the principal part of the Cook Islands, South Pacific, and is the last one reached by the steamships which ply between Tahiti and New Zealand. About ninety years ago it was the scene of many massacres and cannibalistic feasts, scores of English missionaries, with their wives and families, falling victims to the natives' spears and clubs. Before these savages were subjugated by the English government there was not a harbour in all the South seas more dreaded by sea-faring men than this one. It was early in October 1904, when the steamship Tauiuni on which I was a passenger, dropped anchor in this beautiful crescent-shaped harbour. We had been watching the outline of this mountainous island from early dawn and when the vessel's engines stopped we were all anxious to set foot ashore.

It is a strange fact about the fascination all these islands seem to possess for everyone who has ever visited them, it is something that is never forgotten. The peculiar indescribable fragrance of the innumerable varieties of tropical verdure which was carried seaward that morning on the breezes from the evergreen mountains and valleys across the white, pebbly beach on which masses of seaweed were tossed by the restless surf, seemed to add to the magnetic charm of the place. The three mountainous peaks were crowned by fleeting clouds, while the deep ravines, preciptous sides, gently sloping tablelands and foothills were as devoid of trees, gardens and houses as they were thousands of years ago. The base of these islands was hidden by a heavy growth of cocoa palms which extended completely around the island.

The few little white cottages, with their corrugated iron roofs, brown coral huts covered with pendennis leaves and frail-looking warehouses in which copra was stored, clustered around the plaza in the centre of which a high flag pole was floating the English flag in the breeze. This was Roratonga. The principal street, which terminated at the wharf, on which a warehouse was built, was intersected by three other streets or roads, one of which was the principal driveway around this island. From the deck of the vessel glimpses were obtained of pretty white houses amidst the heavy foliage while along these roads, which followed the curving line of the beach, could be seen a procession of natives clad in white light pink, red and yellow, moving toward the village to learn the news from the "outside world." A flotilla of canoes manned by natives whose only wearing apparel consisted of a loin-cloth or "pareu" and a straw hat or specimens of some other styles of headgear, such as a dilapidated Scotch tam o'shanter that at one time had graced some French gendarme, a stovepipe hat that had seen better days, and a golf cap two sizes too small for its happy wearer. All these swarthy, brown men were anxious to convey passengers to the wharf for a shilling a head, and as each canoe could only carry two passengers besides its crew, it did not take long to make a selection and go ashore. On landing among these innocent-looking, laughing natives it would not do to be shy about shaking hands and returning the customary salutation, "Urana!" or "How do you do?" I have found this habit characteristic of the Maoris of New Zealand, who used the words "Kia Ora!" and Hawaiians the very expressive word "Aloha!" warehouse was filled with products of the island, viz. sacks of cobra, bunches of bananas and plantains, crates of oranges and limes, barrels of lime juice, and boxes of wide straw to be shipped to Franch vid Aukland, and this article is used by the millinery trade and commands a high price both here and abroad.

The residence portion of Roratonga is noted for the number of neatly painted cottages, each surrounded by a vine-covered lattice verandah on which the householder and his family may be seen at all hours of the day basking in the shade. Each cottage is built in the centre of a lawn, dotted by coffee or cocoa plants, mango, orange or lime trees, besides banana and plantain palms. Some of these cottages were almost hidden by ivy as they nestled close to the trunks of the wide spreading branches of beautiful bread fruit tree; others were shaded in a grove of young cocoa palms, the fronds of which were almost hiding the entrance, while towering far above them were the umbrella-like tops of older palms nodding and swaying in every breeze. The missionaries erected a church here many years ago and nearly every native is an attendant. This edifice, buitl of coral, is typically English from the foundation to the tall steeple. It forms one of the principal attractions to the traveller, for its sides, belfry and steeple are covered with English ivy, while around it are the graves of all the missionaries who passed away here, and, in one corner, are rows of tablets erected to the memories of those who had been massacred. In the rear of this church dwelt the ex-queen of the Cook Islands, a large, good-looking native, whose cottage and grounds were kept scrupulously clean by a retinue of servants who deemed it an honour to obey her every wish. I found her to be very affable, intelligent and far above the average native in knowledge.

The tolling of the bell on the Tauiuni came floating across the water, and as it was the "bewitching hour of lunch," I turned back and, hunting up my ferryman, started for the ship. The sun was shining brightly and as I looked over the side of the frail craft into the calm, crystal-like waters, it seemed as if I was floating in midair far above a forest of trees, long grassy meadows and heavy foliage, but ever and anon a huge fish or a school of smaller ones darted out and then retreated among the green leaves and emerald-tinted branches, thus dispelling the illusion, for that seaweed was fully twenty fathoms beneath me. Part of the anchor of the steamship could be plainly seen resting on a bed of white coral and sand, and a school of fish, resembling the groupers found along the shores of the Bermuda Islands were moving backward and forward as if in quest of food. In answer to my inquiry as to the chances of catching them I was told that on account of the clearness of the water and their wariness it was impossible to seine them, while their vision was so keen they would not come near a hook and line, but that the natives caught them by a method peculiarly their own and not practiced on any of the other islands in the South Seas. I was exceedingly anxious to see this done and was delighted when my informant told me he saw one of the fishermen coming toward the ship and pointed him out from among the group of laughing natives who were paddling and racing to and fro between the vessel and shore. His canoe was painted white and made apparently for a much smaller person than its occupant, who must have weighed fully 250 pounds. He paddled along lazily until within twenty yards of the ship when he stopped. On his head he wore a wide straw hat, a white linen shirt covered his massive frame, while around his waist he wore a gandy-coloured pareu. His arms, legs and feet were bare. His feet were crossed and from one knee to the other I noticed he had a light line neatly coiled with the hook fastened in his pareu. In front of him, on the bottom of the canoe, was a box filled with cocoanut; on the side of the craft was suspended an oblong box about six inches deep, with a glass bottom. Behind him, on a raised shelf, rested about thirty smooth flat stones about the size of hens eggs. Carelessly paddling around he would stop and deftly placing the handle of the paddle under his left arm lift off the observation box and holding it over the water peer through it until he saw a school of fish near the bottom. Hastily hanging the box in its place he disengaged the hook and taking a handful of the cocoanut he crammed it into his mouth, and after masticating it, baited the hook, then, to my surprise, reached around and picked up one of the stones. Carefully laying the baited hook on the flat side of the stone, he made a turn with the line around it and then taking more of the masticated cocoanut he wrapped that with another turn, and continued this until the stone was almost hidden; he then made the line secure to it with a half-hitch. It resembled a snowball as he almost noiselessly paddled over to the spot from whence his canoe drifted. He carefully laid the stone on the surface and as it sank paid out the line with one hand and held the observation box close to the water. When the bait was below the school of fish he gave the line a sudden jerk, this unloosened the stone and as the cocoanut, being of an oily nature, floated upward there was a "milk-like cloud" around the line and the hungry fish dashed for every particle. One greedy fellow swallowed the hook and was soon floundering in the bottom of the canoe. The lone fisherman, having carefully coiled his line as before as he pulled this fellow to the surface, repeated the process of baiting his hook and dropping it among the wary denizens of the deep until about eighteen were captured, then throwing his line down he quickly paddled to the shore. As he disappeared around the end of the wharf I wondered who it was that taught him to catch fish that way. I had fished for mullet with the natives of Tahiti, been out beyond the reefs to the big bonita holes off Titaroa, and caught a boatload of these fish; I had seen the natives of the Isle of Atiu catch flying fish with mosquito-like nets, and excitedly stood all night inside the reef at Papeete, Tahiti, where the many beautifully-coloured fish were attracted within spearing distance of our canoes by the bright lights of bunches of cocoa-fronds which projected from the bows of every craft, but never had I seen fish caught in such an interesting manner while the thermometer was registering close to 100 degrees in the shade as I did during that short stay in the enchanting harbour of Roratonga.—

A NEW WIND-GAUGE SIGHT SLIDE.

FOR THE LEE-ENFIELD AND METFORD SERVICE PATTERN LEAF.

THE new wind-gauge slide submitted to us by Messrs. Westley Richards and Company of London and Birmingham, is sanctioned by the British National Rifle Association, being designed expressly for use with the ordinary service Lee-Enfield Tangent. Now that the principle of wind-gauge sights is accepted by the Military authorities, many patterns of movable slides have been introduced. The one adopted by the War Office for attachment to the present sights, consists of the well-known dove-tailed slide which is pushed upon by thumb and finger in order to move it to the right or left.

Messrs. Westley Richards' sight has many claims to recognition as a thoroughly effective wind-gauge slide. By turning the milled head the bar of the slide is moved across and thus fine adjustment can be readily obtained. The scale or divisions are marked on the left hand side of the slide bar, and the slide itself is formed as a pointer to indicate the amount of lateral movement that has been given.

The slide is also fitted with Westley Richards' Patent Micrometer arrangement. The wheel or head is divided into three parts, and into each of these three parts or notches a spring at the back of the slide snicks as the wheel or head is turned. The screw is cut 50 threads to the inch, and each division of the head gives 150th of an inch representing 1 inch for each 100 yards range. At every one-third turn the snick of the spring into the notch on the wheel conveys audibly and to the touch the amount of wind-gauge allowance registered without troubling the shooter to read the scale referred to.

The slide when attached to the leaf fits well and does not wear loose. There are only two main parts of simple construction. The price of each slide is 9s 6d.,—a very reasonable figure for such a perfect wind-gauge appliance. To attach this slide to the ordinary service leaf it is first necessary to remove the cap or top.

Messrs. Westley Richards and Company have also brought to our notice a new military back-sight for Lee-Enfield Service Pattern, which can be readily attached by any shooter to the bed of its service pattern rifle. The slide which is made upon the wind-gauge principle before described, is connected to work with a screw fitted at the side of the tangent leaf. This screw is for the purpose of elevating the slide in correcting elevation, and so forms a vernier, thus rendering superfluous a separate vernier usually carried by the shooter in order to attain fine adjustments at sight elevation. The sight leaf is divided on the right hand side with a vernier scale each division representing 150th of an inch for each 100 yards.

The slide is provided with a catch the other end of this catch is screwed or threaded for engagement with the thread of the elevator screw. By pressing upon the catch this catch is released from the screw and so the slide is permitted to move up and down the tangent by hand in the ordinary way. For obtaining fine adjustment the elevating screw is turned, and by engagement with a slide catch moves the slide up or down in the same way as would be done on the ordinary sight if a separate vernier were used.

This Vernier Elevating Sight Leaf in combination with the Wind-gauge Micrometer Slide, makes an effective form of sighting apparatus for match shooting. The price is from 25s. to 30s. each complete ready for attachment to the service bed.

MARKSMEN OF MARK.

TIMES and scenes alter with the ages, but the spirit of sportsmanship inherited from our forefathers is unchangeable We are as a nation to-day as much devoted to sport as even our ancestors were, and if our knowledge of wood craft is not so complete as theirs, we are no way behind them in other respects. With regard to marksmanship, we can only compete with our forebears in the art of drawing the longbow when the scene is the smoking-room and the lamps are lit; but with weapons of to-day in our hands, who will say that we are one whit behind them in feats in which the eye, the hand, and the brain amalgamate to direct the modern equivalent for the bolt to its mark?

They were brave shots, those wielders of the bow whom balledmongers loved to honour in such works as "A Mery Geste of Robyn Hode" or "The Names of the Three Archers;" brave shots and brave men, but, perhaps, susceptible to flattery, and not unwilling to grant to the poet the fullest licence for favourable exaggeration. They may, as is said of Robin Hood, have "hit the mark a hundred rod, and caused a hart to die," or at a distance of four hundred yards, some say "eight hundred" (the discrepancy is but trifling when the longbow is concerned), aimed at a "hasell rodde" and "clave the wand in two," the feat performed by Cloudeslie. But, notwithstanding our admiration for and knowledge of their skill, and of the Act published in the thirty third year of Henry VIII., of whom it was written, Nemo enim ipso rege Britannicum ingenium arcum contentius flexit nemo certius atque validius sagittavit which forbade any person over the age of twenty-four to shoot at a mark at less than two hundred and twenty yards distance, we are entirely at one with the monarch, who, on witnessing Cloudeslie's feat, remarked, "Over Gods forbode"—which translated means "God forbid"—"that thou shoulde shote at me." To show what the "record" is capable of, ere we take leave of the bow, we should mention that in 1798 the Sultan of Turkey is said to have shot an arrow from a Turkish bow 972 yards and 2¼ inches.

A pigeon shot of extraordinary merit in the early part of last century was the gamekeeper of Sir H. Mildmay, a man named Tupor, who, we learn, "for a considerable wager, shot six pigeons out of ten, with a common ball. He afterwards, to decide a bet, hit a cricket ball with common shot, twelve times successively, betwixt the wickets, bowled by Harris, one of the sharpest bowlers in the Hambledon Club"—with regard to the "sharpness" of Harris's bowling Nyren wrote, "His balls were very little beholden to the ground when pitched: it was but a touch and up again; and woe be to the man who did not get in to block him, for they had such a peculiar curl that they would grind his fingers against the bat." Tupor's performance was, therefore, extremely fine, and what one would expect from a man who is said to have killed swallows with a single ball.

When the Red House, the forerunner of Hurlingham, and a place noted for its shooting matches, situated on the ground now occupied by Battersea Park, between the east gate and south end of Chelsea Bridge, was in the height of its popularity, Captain Ross performed some prodigies of shooting there, notably in 1828, when at thirty yards rise, from five traps, he killed 76 birds out of 80; three of the remainder settled on the fence, which disqualified them, and the fourth bird was hard hit, though the shooter's first barrel missed fire. There were no restrictions to the charge of powder and shot, and the weapon manipulated by the famous shot was a percussion-cap gun—to be exact, a 11-bore gun by W. Moore. Thirteen years later, at Edinburgh, in a match with Lord M'Donald at 35 yards range, Captain Ross killed 52 birds out of 53, a feat on a par with that which he accomplished when winning a wager for £100 from a Mr. Foljambe. The terms of the wager were that Captain Ross, armed with a pistol throwing a single ball only should kill ten brace of swallows on the wing in the course of the day, a feat which he successfully accomplished before breakfast.

In Waterloo year the then Duke of Rutland accomplished a performance that filled the sportsmen of that era with admiration. In the course of a day's shooting, lasting nine hours, at Chevely Park, he killed no fewer than 125 head of game; while four years previous to this, Lord Kingston, having made a considerable bet that he would shoot 40 brace of partridges on the 1st of September at his manor at Croydon proceeded to accomplish his task pleasantly and half a brace more than he stipulated, before sunset. These performances were of the same era as that of Mr. John Lacy, of Wimborne Minster, who between sunrise and four o'clock shot 30 brace of partridges, 10 brace of hares, and 12 couple of rabbits. What these excellent sportsmen would have said if they had been told that, some 60 years later, Lord Walsingham would kill 842 grouse in the course of one day, and 16 years later still would fire 1,515 cartridges at grouse and bring down 1,058 birds with them in the course of 11 hours and 18 minutes, we had, perhaps, better leave to conjecture. Nevertheless, we can but admire even at this space of time, the prodigies of shooting accomplished by Mr. Jenkins, who killed 20 brace of partridges, without selecting the same in one day with 40 shots, and who did not miss a bird in the course of four days' shooting.

Of famous and fully authenticated single shots there is none, perhaps, that quite eclipses the sculptor, Chantrey's. While shooting in the woods at Mr. Coke's seat at Holkham on the 20th November 1829, two woodcock rose to the artist; he fired one barrel, and both birds fell—an unparalleled feat with regard to woodcock, a particularly difficult bird to shoot at any time. Naturally, the event had to be immortalised in some manner, so the sportsman who killed the birds carved them in stone, while a number of famous people, who were invited to do so, sent suggested inscriptions, none of which, however, had the honour of adoption. Perhaps the best of these rejected suggestions was the work of Lord Jeffrey, one of the founders of the Edinburgh Review, who wrote:—

The sculptor killed them with one shot;
And when the deed was done
He carved them—first upon one toast
And then upon one stone.

This stone, however, was far from being one of Chantrey's best efforts, and a witty commentator suggested the following lines as appropriate:—

Luckless our fate; a doubly luckless lot:
A sportsmen carved us, whom an artist shot.

Severe, perhaps, but, undoubtedly, a pleasant ingenuity.

The occasional shooting feat should, undoubtedly be received with repectful caution. A certain sportsman, whose ability to shoot the proverbial haystack was doubted by all who knew him, once pointed out a target painted on a barn door, with a bullet in the bull's-eye. This shot he claimed to have made at one thousand yards' distance. General but polite disbelief was apparent on all sides, which, the marksman perceiving, caused him to wager an oyster supper on the truth of his assertion. The bet accepted, the sportsman produced his witnesses, who corroborated his assertion, and claimed the wager. Thereupon the loser challenged at least the right to know the conditions of so admirable a fluke. Said the sportsman, "I shot the bullet at the door at a distance of one thousand yards, and then I painted the target round it."

INFORMATION WANTED.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Would "C.B.M." from upper Chindwin—(vide his letter in your issue of the 18th instant)—inform a brother sportsman how he became possessed of the Westley Richard's ·375-303 rifle with which he has done such wonderful shooting. The importation of this type of rifle is strictly forbidden in India as everybody knows. Is Burma exempt from this restriction being, as I believe, as not included in "India."

"C.B.M." would also confer another favour by giving a full description of his new rifle for the benefit of those on this side.

OLD INDIAN SHIKARI.

AN INDIAN SWIMMING CHAMPIONSHIP.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Could you, through the medium of your paper, promote an Annual Swimming Championship for all India, to be competed for either at Bombay or Calcutta. We have championships for every form of sport as far as I am aware, except swimming, and a series of 50, 100 yards and other distances would doubtless bring forward some good talent.

CHAMPION MAHSEER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—On behalf of my friend, Mr. Murray Aynsley, I should like to bring the following points to your notice. Mr. Murray Aynsley does not assert that his mahseer, (weight and measurements of which have already appeared in your columns) was the largest mahseer ever brought to land. Sanderson's 150-lb. fish for instance was dragged out on a night line with no rod; it was hauled out hand over hand on a cord as thick as a carpenter's pencil, and this is quite another game. Many large mahseer have no doubt been netted, but what Mr. Murray Aynsley says is that he believes it to be the record mahseer taken on rod and line, with salmon tackle and a light line. His winch measured 4 inches in diameter, with a bar of 1½ inch, and this will show the thickness of the line he was using, as he had 140 yards of it. On such tackle, spinning or with fly, Mr. Murray Aynsley believes his 92-lb. fish to be the record mahseer.

I only write this letter because he is too modest to do so himself and because I should like to obtain a bit of information on the subject.

J. M. BABINGTON.

BRIDGE QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The following incident occurred in Bridge. When the hands had been dealt A, the elder hand, sorted his hand and put them down, after the declaration had been made, in a pack on the table face upwards, the top card alone being visible. The dealer claimed all his cards as exposed cards.

A contended that the penalty is only imposed upon three contingencies (accidental):—

(b) when the dealers adversary throws his cards on the table face upwards (which occurs at the end of a game or in a fit of temper);

(c) when the card is otherwise exposed, to be read in the ordinary meaning of the word.

If the makers of the rules had intended the penalty to be imposed upon the deliberate placing of the cards on the table which were not exposed, they would have stated their intention. It was decided to refer the matter to you for disposal.

J. D. S.

RANCHI, 19th October 1906.

[Rule 71 deals with the point in question. A's partner has no right to double that is all. The card is an exposed card and the dealer many call upon A to lead it at once. As A probably intended to lead it there is really no penalty. A's other cards are of course not exposed. Fancy a poor fellow who smoked a pipe putting his cards face downwards on the table for the purpose of lighting his pipe having his cards called.—ED.]

Secretary:—MAJOR J. H. ENSOR.

First Day, Thursday, the 18th October 1906.

THE opening day must have been a great disappointment to those who had taken so much trouble over this fixture. It is many years since the meeting has been so poorly supported both by racing owners and the public. The absence of the public from the Civil Station was most noticeable, and can only be accounted for by the fact that the majority of the residents have not yet returned from the hills. It is to be hoped that the second day's racing will receive better support. The weather was all that could be desired and the racing, in spite of the poor fields, was interesting. It was a backers' day throughout. Details:—

THE NOVICE PLATE.—Rs. 150 to the winner and Rs. 50 to the second. For C.-B. Ponies 14-1 and under, and other ponies 14-0 and under that have never won a Flat Race value Rs. 50 or over. English and Australasian ponies 14-0 to carry 11st., C.-B. ponies 14-1 to carry 9st. 7lbs. W. I. ¼ mile.

H. H. Maharaja of Cooch Behar's bk aus m Matin Bell, 10st. 2lbs. ... ... Southall 1
Thakur Sripal Singh's b e m Silver II., 10st. 8lbs. ... ... W. Evans 2
Lalla Radha Mohun's b cb m Naughty Girl, 7st. 11lbs. ... ... Stuffy 3

BETTING: 2 to 1 on Matin Bell, 3 to 1 agst. Silver II., 2 to 1 Naughty Girl.

The field got off to a good start, Naughty Girl being slightly in the rear. Near home all three were level and a splendid race took place down the straight. Matin Bell drew out just in front of the stand and won by one and three-quarter lengths; three-quarters of a length separated second and third. Time—53secs.

THE NOVICE ARAB PLATE.—Rs. 150 to the winner and Rs. 50 to the second. For Arab ponies 14-2 and under that have never won a Flat Race value Rs. 50 or over. 14-2 to carry 11st., W. I. ¼ mile.

Second Day, Saturday, 20th October 1906.

One was glad to note the very marked improvement in the character of the racing on Saturday, consequent on the better support that was forthcoming. There was a large gathering in which the military element, of course, predominated, but the company included quite a number of civilians. Among those present were General Sir E. Locke Elliot and Lady Elliot, Mrs. Leslie Porter, Mr. S. H. Butler, C.I.E., Mr. Griffin and many others. The fields were large and in the last event, in which Soheil won a splendid race, seven horses actually faced the starter. The Dilkusha Plate, in which five ran, was won in very fast time by Lady Knight, ridden by Barrett, who also rode the winner in the second race. That popular owner, Thakur Sripal Singh, who had a number of horses running, had the satisfaction of winning two events, in both of which W. Evans scored. The public again had the best of the exchanges with the bookmakers. The racing went off without a hitch, great credit being due to Major Ensor, the Secretary, for the way in which the meeting has been conducted. Details:—

Something that Every Parent and Teacher should know.

WHY SOME CHILDREN ARE WRONGLY TERMED STUPID.

MANY CHILDREN suffer from defective sight.
Their parents are generally ignorant of this and think one child is better endowed than another. Often the dullest and apparently most stupid are the most intellectual.

Many of our eminent men and women wear glasses. Timely glasses would enable defective sighted children to see as well as others, and out-distance them.

The great point is to ascertain the defects, and to periodically have the eyes examined.

Eye Strain is frequently the cause of nervous derangement. Eye strain is due to slight defects, which can be cured by lenses

NEWMARKET.

A DEPLETED attendance in every department was left to enjoy a halcyon day, on the 28th ultimo, as after Thursday's meagre sport many intending visitors stayed at home, and a long array of cabs laden with luggage told of early departures. The talent, who had done badly, had little chance of getting even with the enemy, but then winners are generally hard to find at Newmarket, and till the advent of the much-wanted rain the book form will be but a broken reed to rely upon.

NOTTINGHAM.

Monday is a favourite and convenient day for Nottingham which, as usual, sent a strong contingent of sportsmen to help swell a goodly muster, in which the Metropolitan brigade was well represented, and many prominent patrons of the national sport were noticeable in the members' enclosure. After the adamant going at headquarters, the excellent condition of the course, "in sheltered vale," came as an agreeable surprise, the grass being freshly green, thanks to the plentiful watering the straight had received and the heavy dews overnight, but, contrary to anticipation, fields were but of scanty proportions.

The attendance on Tuesday was not commensurate; the prospects of a wet day kept many intending visitors at home, while business again claimed the busy bees, who, like their confreres at Sheffield and followers of St. Crispin all over England, celebrate the Monday; but Tattersall's and the members' enclosure were up to the average.

FOOTBALL.
ASSOCIATION RULES.

The first month of the 1906-07 season is past history, and it is possible to make a more trustworthy estimate of the strength of the teams as a result of the knowledge born of experience than was the case a month since, when the only data were performances of previous years, both club and individual, and the not unpardonable optimism of club managers as to the stars they had captured. In some instances the high hopes which revolved around new players have been justified. As to others, it were generous to draw a veil over the scene. If there be, however, one lesson more convincingly taught than another so far as the current season has gone, it is the wonderful similarity in playing stength of the majority of the leading clubs. It is not so many years since certain clubs in each of the big Leagues were regarded as chopping blocks. The result of nineteen out of twenty matches in which they took part was a foregone conclusion. That does not obtain to-day. Is it a certainty that Aston Villa would beat Blackburn Rovers, Chelsea defeat Blackpool, and Tottenham overcome Reading? I have taken these clubs because they are the top and bottom of the Leagues in which they compete. The results on form might be predicted with a fair measure of success, but not with absolute certainty, and this is all for the good of the game.

How do the clubs stand in the Leagues as compared with the beginning of October 1905? Taking the Southern League, Plymouth Argyle and Bristol Rovers had each obtained nine points from five games, and were first and second respectively, but to-day the Argyle have won three of the six matches they have played, and Bristol Rovers a similar number from a half-dozen games, besides which they have taken part in a draw. The Pilgrims have dropped to thirteenth place, while the Rovers are fifth, and as to the former there is no doubt that it is the defence at fault, thirteen goals having been given away up to date. Reading, now at the bottom of the table, did very little better last season, and Fulham are nearly square, except that their defence does not show anything like so good a record. West Ham have made a notable advance, Brighton have improved, and so have Swindon and Northampton, but Southampton have deteriorated to such an extent that they have not yet won a game, and their goal record is on the wrong side. The first month's work in 1905 left Tottenham eighth, but they are now first, as the result of recent improvement, and they are playing so well as to suggest they will not easily be dislodged. Luton have fallen below last season's form, and Millwall have just held their own, but Norwich have a much better record, for whereas in September, 1905, they did not win a match, they are now the only club in the competition to boast a clean sheet.

The first four clubs in the premier division of the League have got off the mark in vastly different style to last year. Aston Villa, now at the head, had, at the corresponding date in 1905, to be content with sixth place, while Woolwich Arsenal, treading to-day hard on the heels of the Villa, were twelfth. The Gunners had to be content with five points from six matches, but they have this season extracted nine from a similar number, and instead of their goal record being on the wrong side, it is two to one in their favour. This is improvement indeed. Newcastle United have now four more points from a match less, and Bolton Wanderers, who are fourth, and have not lost a match, had not then placed a win to their credit. Blackburn Rovers, with still a cypher opposite their name in the "won" column, show a deplorable falling off, and so do Stoke, who, as against five wins and a loss, have now to be content with three points from three drawn games. Sheffield Wednesday have receded, but Bury and Sunderland have improved, while Liverpool are in a somewhat similar position.

In the second divison of the League, substituting Nottingham Forest and Wolverhampton Wanderers for the promoted clubs, Chelsea, the present leaders, are in a better relative position, both as to points and goal record; but the most remarkable advances have been made by Leicester Fosse and Hull City, the former having climbed from seventeenth to second, and the latter from tenth to third. West Bromwich have a slightly better record, and so have Clapton Orient, while Gainsborough Trinity, the only club in this division not to win a match in September last year have now seven points from six matches. Blackpool, Barnsley, and Chesterfield are on the down grade, but Burslem Port Vale have improved their position, and so have Lincoln City. Neither Wolverhampton Wanderers nor Nottingham Forest have played in a style worthy of First Leaguers, and unless there be a radical alteration in the methods of both teams they will remain in the lower division.

SOUTHERN LEAGUE.

There was only one victory on Saturday to the credit of an away team, the Spurs defeating Luton at the Beds town. The success of the North Londoners was significant, this being the first time they had garnered in both points at Luton since 29th April, 1901, two days after they had won the F. A. Cup in the replayed tie at Bolton. Saturday's result was a fair indication of the way the game went, for Tottenham were the better team, though Luton missed chances, and had more than their share of ill-luck. Portsmouth had no difficulty in disposing of Northampton, at Fratton Park; but Norwich City had a surprise at the Newmarket Ground, Swindon, who were beaten pointless last season, dividing the points, after looking uncommonly like returning with both in their possession. There was also a draw at the Palace, West Ham sharing the honours with the home side, and Fulham must be very well satisfied with the result of their visit to Millwall, the draw of last year being repeated. Reading did poorly at Plymouth, and Queen's Park Rangers offered less resistance than was expected at Leyton, the home brigade delighting their supporters with a three clear goals' win. Brighton deserved to win against Bristol Rovers, but had to be content with one point, the visitors being presented with a goal in ridiculous fashion. Watford had to submit to defeat from New Brompton, at Gillingham, and Southampton were once more mastered by Brenford.

LEAGUE I.

The Arsenal have the honour of being the first team to bring away a point from the Aston Villa ground this season. Blackburn Rovers, Stoke, and Birmingham had been defeated in turn at the Aston Lower Grounds, the total goal scoring being nine to three in favour of the Villans. The chances of the Arsenal were discounted by changes made almost at the last moment, but they rose splendidly to the occasion, and gave the best exhibition of scientific football seen at Birmingham this season. The forwards were at times dazzling, and but for uncertainty in front of goal, the home team would have been easily defeated. Of the other results, the most notable was the defeat of Middlesbrough at Ayresome Park by Manchester City, who are rapidly running into form, and the defeat of Liverpool by Everton at Anfield Road, had also a strong touch of the dramatic element. Stoke did more than was expected of them in sharing the points at Bolton, but Sheffield Wednesday were most disappointing at Newcastle, the Novocastrians, converting a least season's defeat of 3—0 into a 5—1 victory. Bristol City could only draw at home with Birmingham, and Manchester United have yet to win their first home game.

The League I. table, made up to date, is as follows :—

	P.	W.	L.	D.	Goals For.	Agst.	Pts.

LEAGUE II.

The Chelsea vs. Leicester Fosse match dwarfed all the others in the Second Division of the League on Saturday. Both entered into the contest with an unbeaten certificate, Chelsea having won three and drawn one, while Leicester Fosse had won four and drawn one. It will be remembered that last season each team scored three goals at Chelsea, but at Leicester the Pensioners won by the only goal scored. The game under notice was worthy of the teams. The work was not so finished an exposition of football as previous displays given by both sides, but the players were obviously infected by the prevailing excitement, and they put up a hard, keen struggle, which was well worth watching. Chelsea won by a goal to love, and the balance of exchanges were in their favour to just about this extent. Slow in starting, they showed much insistence when in their stride and the goal they obtained was the outcome of a delightful movement. Congratulations to Chelsea on their elevation to the head of the table. Clapton Orient did not repeat last year's win over Bradford City, but they shared the points and there is no doubt that the Orient, under the new management, are going along very well. The sensation in this division on Saturday was provided by West Bromwich, who humbled Wolverhamton before their own supporters by 3 goals to love.

RUGBY RULES.

THE SOUTH AFRICANS' TOUR.

MATCH v. EAST MIDLANDS.—Charming weather was associated with this important match at Northampton on the 27th ultimo and a crowd of between 9,000 and 10,000 persons witnessed the game. At the outset the Colonials did poorly, but after the first twenty minutes they had matters very much their own way, and ran out winners by 37 points to nil. There were many critical onlookers, and the poor opinion formed at the outset was gradually changed. The visitors, like the home side, carried numbers, and it was consequently fairly easy to distinguish the players.

The East Midlands started, and the first scrum was in the Colonials' twenty-five. Burmeister was called upon, and found touch at twenty-five. A round of passing by the home backs got the ball to Harding, who was smartly collared by Loubser. Stegmann then secured, and the ball was rushed into the home half, where a knock-on by Hirsch spoiled an opening. Mobbs and Palmer got away, and a line out took place near the Colonials' twenty-five. The Midlanders had a "free" through Harding, but the kick was charged down. Ragged work on the part of the visiting forwards let the home men in but clever passing got the ball to Loubser, who, when looking dangerous, was beautifully collared by Peppe. Atkinson cleared, and good forward work led by Warren forced play into the Colonials' twenty-five. After a bout of midfield play smart combination got the ball into the hands of Hirsch, who passed beautifully to Loubser, but he knocked on and thus spoiled a capital opening. The Colonials pressed, but Harding relieved to touch twice in quick succession. After twenty minutes Stegmann scored for the visitors, grounding in the corner. Carolin took the kick, and added the goal points.

On the ball again coming in play Mobbs secured and ran well before passing to Harding. From the visitors' twenty-five the forwards went away, and Hirsch scored, the place-kick, taken by Carolin, failing. The Colonials continued to command the ball, and after thirty minutes' play Villiers, from a pass by Hirsch, scored the third try, and Carolin added the major points. Within a couple of minutes Stegmann, running half way down the ground, added the Colonials' fourth try. Carolin's kick dropped short. Directly after the interval arrived, the South Africans having a 15 points lead. Up to this stage play had been carried on at a great pace, and the lead would have been more pronounced had full advantage been taken of the opportunities. Half-time result :—

On resuming Preston was missing, and Coles took his place at half, whilst Morrison went on the wing. Stegmann looked dangerous when collared by Peppe, and play settled down in the home twenty-five. Carolin and Dobbin handled, but Mobbs and Johnson brought relief. Morrison well stopped a dangerous rush, and Stegmann lost the ball when nearly in. Loubser also spoiled an opening by knocking on. Try as they might, the Midlanders could not get away, and five more points were added when Stegmann dashed over for Carolin to goal. Roux was pulled down by Peppe a couple of yards from home. The Colonials had a free kick, in response to which White found touch near the home twenty-five. Preston, who had a nasty knock on the head, now returned. A round of passing by the home backs looked promising until the tackling proved too keen. Then Stegmann secured another try, and Carolin again goaled.

From a pass by Hirsch Loubser ran in. Nothing came of it as he had crossed the dead-ball line. Villiers was the next scorer, and Douglas Morkel, by the aid of a splendid kick, majorised. Blundering on the part of the home backs let in Loubser, the place-kick failing. For a period the home men had more of the game. Villiers now left the field, William Morkel taking his place. Hirsch was the next to score for the Colonials, though Douglas Morkel failed to convert, and the end came with the result :—

MATCH v. MIDLAND COUNTIES.—Very few people who witnessed the South Africans' opening game at Northampton were prepared for the startling display given by our Colonial visitors at Leicester on Saturday. From first to last they held an almost unbroken winning sequence. Their combination showed a vast improvement, while the whole of the side were evidently very fit. There is much in their play to remind one of the New Zealanders—the instantaneous recovery after a tackle, the real go—ahead work all through, in addition to speed and physique, for instance. The Midlanders had their defence speedily pierced, and really never got properly going all through the game. The attendance was very gratifying, and about 14,000 spectators were present. The conditions for play were splendid, the weather being bright and sunny, and the turf in fine order.

Roos set the ball in motion, the Midland Counties defending the Aylestone-road end. Just at the outset the Midlands had the advantage, and Bainbridge was twice prominent. Following a loose rush, Burmeister was collared in possession in his own half. This incursion was very brief, and carrying two or three packed scrummages in fine style the Colonials reached the home line. Two or three little bursts were made, and only with the greatest difficulty checked. Then Brink made a dive from a loose scrum, and although held he left the ball loose for Mare to easily complete the movement. Carolin converted, and thus early the visitors were five points up. This was disheartening, but none the less well deserved. For a short time the Colonials swept all before them, and De Villiers was soon over again, but recalled for a forward pass.

The home representatives were defending gamely, but their pack was overwhelmed at this period, and the Africans several times came very near scoring. Ultimately Cartwright and Russell came away with some good footwork and actually reached the reverse twenty-five. The stay was of a brief nature, and some pretty passing by the Springbokken followed. Carolin received a transfer which appeared forward, and swerved over the line, and was again successful in adding the goal points. The visitors were seldom very far away from the Midlanders' goal-line, and brilliant work in a line-out brought success. The ball was tipped out to Carolin, who brought off a magnificent dropped goal. Notwithstanding these continued reverses, the Midlanders were playing pluckily, and Shaw and Cartwright again led an attack by loose footwork, which appeared to be the only style of play to upset the Colonials. Once the ball was back in a tight scrum, it was speedily rushed or wheeled back. Kirk might once have given Hind a fair chance, but preferred to kick. Stegmann went away at full speed, but was well tackled, and just on half-time the line-out tactics were again successful, and Douglas Morkel was in at the corner almost unopposed, himself failing to convert, the score at the interval reading.—

Early in the second half the Counties profited by a free kick. With commendable dash they maintained their advantage, and Russell and Cartwright dribbled over the line. Cartwright literally flung himself at the ball, and a shout went up for a try. Disappointment was general when the referee gave a dead ball verdict. The Counties were now exhibiting much better form. Alexander, who had previously been weak in his returns, got in some fairly lengthy kicks, and Cooper twice pulled down Stegmann when the lastnamed appeared to be well away. The play at this period was most exhilarating, and fast work of something approaching a give-and-take nature followed. Eventually an attack was broken up, but the Colonials were never far away, and a splendid typical Welsh round of passing by Carolin, Jackson, and Melker sent the latter in for a brilliant try. D. Morkel took the kick and missed by inches.

There was plenty of passing hereabouts, but the Midlanders were now laying close up and were fairly successful in neutralising the exchanges. Matthews dribbled right through to Burmeister, and Russell, who had backed up slipped in attempting to get through. A penalty-kick taken by Cooper fell short. Away to the other end the South Africans went in a body. The tackling was all right, but was unable to prevent De Villiers from dropping a goal at short range. Immediately afterwards Carolin was over again, D. Morkel kicking a fine goal from a difficult angle. Only a few minutes remained for play, and the Midlands men, or at least some of them, were so pumped that one or two more scores were only just averted. Just on time Bainbridge came away to centre, and the game ended :—

MATCH v. KENT.—When the New Zealanders made their initial appearance on a Metropolitan ground they had played several matches in the provinces, and had established a remarkable record. They met Surrey at Richmond, and won by eleven points to nil, this being a smaller margin than that by which they had won the previous thirteen games. The South Africans have not left London in the cold shades of neglect for so long a time, and as they had so easily disposed of the East Midlands and Midlands, and had not had their line crossed in either game, there was considerable curiosity as to whether they would be held by the powerful scratch side which Kent put into the field on Wednesday at Blackheath.

It was slightly after the advertised time when the Colonials entered the field, and they were most heartily welcomed, the cheers being renewed when Kent, led by Basil Hill, came into the enclosure, after having submitted to the ordeal of being photographed. Carolin kicked off, and Edwards touching down, Carolin had a second kick, and this time he found touch well in the Kent quarters. Loose play was the order for the first couple of minutes, the County forwards more than holding their own, and they followed up so keenly that the opposing three-quarters could not get to work. Hill led his forwards in an ugly rush, but Stegmann did a clever bit of fielding, and finding touch in the Kent twenty-five with a well-judged kick, he enabled his side to develop a strong attack. Morkel, Roos, and Mare were prominent with forceful foot work, but this was neutralised by fine defensive play by Hearson, who drove the visitors back to the half line. The relief was only temporary, and following a scrummage close to the Kent goal-line, Carolin dashed through from among a crowd of players, and scored a try from thirty yards out. He took the place kick himself, from a somewhat awkward angle, and sent the ball slightly wide of the distance post. As the play had gone Kent did not deserve to be three points to the bad, and they made a sustained effort to get on equal terms with their formidable opponents. The three-quarters sadly lacked combination, but they did some excellent individual work, and the halves lost no opportunity to make ground by judiciously finding touch. For a time the Africans were compelled to act on the defensive, and when they were kept in their own twenty-five, where several scrummages were formed, the cheering was of an exultant character. In open forward work lay Kent's strength, and again and again they made resolute attempts to break through the opposing resourceful defence. They did not succeed, but they were beaten only by superior tactics, and the accurate fielding and kicking of Mursburg, who seemed ubiquitous. The home team continued their aggressive work, and a neat pass by Jones to McEvedy, who was favourably placed, looked uncommonly like spoiling the maiden record of the Colonials; but the attempt to drop a goal did not get beyond that stage, the ball passing a few feet wide of the left post. The game still ran in favour of the county team, who were putting up a great fight against their rivals, and when the visitors sought to break up the attack, they were driven back by Koop, who found touch well in their twenty-five. Then came a startling change in the game. Led by their captain, the African forwards broke down opposition by a mighty rush, and after a temporary check, Roos got clear and grounded the ball in a favourable position, but this was nullified through a previous knock on. The county carried the scrum in exhilarating fashion, and Morgan placing Koop in position, the Heathens made considerable ground before being grassed by Stegmann. The African forwards, keeping the ball close, gave Kent an anxious time with their rushes, and on one occasion [illegible] the situation by managing to touch [illegible] sprint with S. Morkel. A humorous incident [illegible] Marsburg plunged into the fray when Kent were [illegible] means of a characteristic rush, and he turned [illegible] his inexpressibles were sadly mutilated, and a shield [illegible] round him by the players. A mackintosh was [illegible] his disposal, and he was about to leave the field when [illegible] appeared with another pair, and in the midst of [illegible] colleagues and opponents the full back effected [illegible] change, and play was resumed amid an outburst of [illegible] mirth. Hitherto the county team had had their [illegible] the game, but as play progressed they were gradually [illegible] There was a perceptible slackening among the forwards [illegible] following up, and this enabled the opposing three-quarters [illegible] more easily exercise their powers of combination. Loubser was conspicuous in initiating several promising movements, and occasionally the ball would be sent across the field by stages, each man knowing what to do and how [illegible], and also knowing full well that his colleague would be there to receive it from his pass. A couple of scrummages close to the Kent goal line had an ugly look about them, but the Africanders were held in the first, and Jones touched down from the second. An onward move, led by the Kent forwards, was checked by Melker, and after a brief spell of loose play Stegmann endeavoured to drop a goal, but although the direction was accurate and the strength sufficient, there was not enough elevation, the ball passing between the posts under the bar. After the dropout play was in the centre for a time, and De Villiers having failed to find touch, De Melker made his mark from the return and D. Morkel essayed a brilliant but unsuccessful attempt to score, the ball striking the left post, and rebounding into the field. There was a short stoppage because of an injury to Reid, and a few moments afterwards the interval arrived with the score :—

When play was resumed it was noticed that Basil Hill, the Kent captain, was an absentee, and an inquiry elicited the fact that a ligament of his shoulder had given way. This was a severe handicap to the home county, and there is no doubt that the loss of their skipper had a dispiriting effect on the forwards, whose play suffered by comparison with that in the opening half. This was not observable immediately, as Kent were quickly in the African half, and Dobbin failing to get in his kick, there was some bustling work, which culminated in Koop making a poor effort to drop a goal. The county still held their own until Loubser entirely altered the complexion of affairs by an individual dash, but having kicked forward he was beaten in a race with Jones who fielded in fine style and found touch near the half-way line. Six minutes after the restart a superb bit of combined play, with a thrilling run as a complement, gave the South Africans their second try. Dobbin secured from a heel out of a scrum, and promptly transferred to Carolin, who made capital headway before passing to Melker, and the latter, when about to be tackled, sent on to Stegmann. The Western Province man went off at full speed, and after evading the attentions of Stringer, he crossed Edwards, and obtained a try behind the posts. Mare was entrusted with the kick, and he easily scored a goal, thus increasing his side's advantage to 8 points to love. Henceforward, struggle how they would, Kent were a beaten team. It is true they were unremitting in their attempts to stem the current that was running so strongly in favour of the visitors, but success did not attend them. Once or twice hereabouts Edwards did not gather the ball well, and only a clever recovery on his part averted disaster. It was, however, merely delaying the inevitable, for the Colonials were playing in such confident style, that every minute suggested they would add to their advantage. Brink having followed through at a spanking pace, picked up, and passed to De Villiers, who drew the defence towards him, and then gave to Loubser, who got over and scored a try far out. D. Morkel failed to convert from the difficult angle, and the next incident of note was a short suspension while Morgan recovered from a nasty knock he received on the head when about ten yards from his own goal line. Play, on recommencing, remained for an appreciable time in the Kent twenty-five, any attempt to transfer the scene of operations being promptly defeated by the Colonials, who had quite taken the measure of their opponents. Edwards, in endeavouring to find touch when hard pressed, ballooned the ball, and Millar rushing up took it in his stride as it descended, dashed over the line, and scored a try behind the posts. Mare obtained the major points, and the South Africans were now leading by 16—0. Scarcely had the onlookers recovered from the thrill of excitement which had followed these incidents when De Villiers was seen making tracks for the Kent goal line. He half doubled when going full speed and his feint enabled him to clear the immediate opposition which threatened to bar his further progress, but in sheer desperation his opponents closed in towards him to check his onward movements. Roos, who was in attendance, received the pass at the psychological moment, but as he had not a clear opening, he sent on to Stegmann, and he in turn to Reid who crossed the line, and Carolin kicked a goal. In the closing minutes Kent made a last despairing effort to break down the opposing defence, but the Colonials stubbornly refused to give way, and when no-side was called, the result was :—

BOXING.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB.

The opening of what promises to be a very busy season at headquarters took place on Monday evening. Although it is customary at the Covent Garden establisnment to defer the first "special" until the end of October, the management departed from this rule, and included in their initial programme a match in which two of the most prominent feather-weights participated. This was the encounter between Johnny Summers (Canning Town), England's acknowledged feather-weight champion, and Boss Edwards (Marylebone.)

When the lights were turned up the theatre wore an animated appearance, for, despite the fact that many of the club members are away shooting, there was scarcely a vacant seat in the building. The first pair to enter the ring were Corporal Blake (1st Royal Fusiliers) and Seaman Moriarty (late of H.M.S. Wildfire), who were down to box ten rounds. A better lead off it would have been hard to find; in fact, it proved one of the best-contested bouts seen in the building for some time. It was science versus pluck, in which the latter enabled the soldier to pull a long-odds chance out of the fire and gain a well-merited award. This contest over, Arthur Ellis (South Africa) and Johnny Sullivan (Bermondsey) indulged in what was termed a four rounds trial. It proved, however, to be more of a contest, and a fine bout ensued. Preparations were then made for the principal event of the evening. Summers was at once made a pronounced favourite, and for sometime he carried everything before him. Edwards, as hard as nails, and exceedingly strong, gamely disputed every inch of the way. It appeared during the ninth round that the end had arrived, for Summers dealt out some very heavy punishment. Towards the end of the bout the exchanges were hardly so exhilarating as one could wish to see, and after the full number of rounds had been contested, the decision went to Summers

Mr. J. T. Douglas officiated as referee, Mr. E. Zerega timekeeper, Mr. A. F. Bettinson M.C., while for the minor bouts Bill Baxter and Arthur Gutteridge seconded the competitors.

Johnny Summers (Canning Town) beat Boss Edwards (Marylebone). Summers was the first to enter the ring, having for his attendants Arthur Gutteridge, Darkey Haley, and George Slark. Edwards quickly followed, being seconded by Bill Baxter, Bill Green, and Sally Morgan.

Upon taking the centre, Edwards, who assumed a somewhat crouching position, looked rather the smaller. After a brief spar Summers reached the face lightly with the left. Upon again attempting to lead Edwards was met with a nice body punch, which Summers followed up by reaching the head and body with lightning rapidity with the left. This for a while nonplussed the Marylebone youth, and the East-Ender, working his opponent into a neutral corner, was very busy when the round terminated.

Each started well at the second meeting, Edwards attempting aggressive tactics, but he failed to "find." The Canning Town boy weaving in Summers punched his man very effectively on the body, and when time was announced Summers was a very hot favourite.

Immediately upon resuming, each tried to be first, and a clinch occurred, both having to be cautioned by the referee to break away. Edwards appeared to have obtained more confidence, and he met the attack several times by dashing out the left on the face. Summers drew his man on cleverly, but failed to penetrate his defence, while just before the close Edwards dashed across his right, which delivery Summers neatly blocked.

Edwards opened up the fourth round by driving his right home on the body, which brought about a melee, in which neither gained much advantage. Receiving a punch on the throat, Edwards slipped to the ground, and upon rising he raced round the ring to avoid punishment. Summers just managed to land on the body when time was called.

In the fifth round Summers kept "pinking" his opponent with the left. Timing his man well, the East-Ender crossed him with the right, and sent the Marylebone youth down. Edwards managed to rise, but could not stall off the attack, and Summers looked all over the winner when the round terminated.

In the sixth round Summers eased up somewhat, and for a while Edwards performed fairly well. Towards the close Summers used his left very effectively.

The succeeding meeting was contested on far more even lines, Edwards putting in some good two-handed work, while Summers was content to parry the blows.

The eighth round was somewhat in favour of Edwards, who was generally the first in his deliveries, and these appeared to have much more sting behind them than Summers. The latter appeared to be going hardly so well as hitherto.

In the ninth round, however, a change came over the scene. Summers, waking up feinted with the left on the ribs, and his opponent, dropping his guard, Summers dashed across his right which landed on the jaw, and Edwards went to the boards. Upon rising he resorted to holding tactics, to avoid punishment, and Summers was unable to finish his man. In attempting to shove him off, the East-Ender swung his man down.

The following meeting was a deal in favour of Summers, who failed to make use of several opportunities afforded him.

In the eleventh and twelfth rounds the exchanges were of a rather straggling character. Summers several times made an effort, but failed to bring the bout to a decisive issue. Edwards, although gradually losing ground, kept gamely plodding along, and in the fifteenth round got home some heavy body punches.

As the bout progressed Summers, although possessing the master hand, lacked the necessary dash to finish his man, who, it is only fair to state, proved a very awkward customer to deal with.

In the concluding essay each man boxed very determinedly, but Summers was always well in front, and at the close the referee declared him the winner.

SECUNDERABAD INTER REGIMENTAL TOURNAMENT.

FINAL.

26TH LIGHT CAVALRY vs 13TH HUSSARS.—Having defeated the 20th Deccan Horse in the first round the 26th Cavalry met the 13th Hussars in the final of the tournament for General Sir Charles Egerton's Cup. The game was played on the 18th instant and was hotly contested throughout. The Cavalry eventually winning. Details :—

First Chukker.—The 13th got away and drew first blood hitting a subsidiary. But the 26th were soon on the ball and Griffiths notched a goal. Score: 2[illegible] Cavalry 1 goal. 13th Hussars 1 subsidiary.

Second Chukker.—Popham hit a goal for the Cavalry and then the Hussars pressed though nothing came of their attack. Colonel Wiggin injured his wrist during this chukker and the game was stopped for a time. Score: 26th Cavalry 2 goals. 13th Hussars 1 subsidiary.

Third Chukker.—The Hussars were seen to advantage in this period. Twist scored a goal and followed it up with a minor point. Score: 26th Cavalry 2 goals. 13th Hussars 1 goal 2 subsidiaries.

Fourth Chukker.—The Hussars continued to attack and Twist hit a goal. Score: 26th, 2 goals; 13th, 2 goals 2 subsidearies.

Fifth Chukker.—Fast play up and down the field was followed by a subsidiary and a goal to the 26th. Moir then put in a brilliant run and hit another goal for the Cavalry. Score: 26th 4 goals 1 subsidiary. 13th 2 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Sixth Chukker.—A foul against the 26th gave their opponents a hit. Griffith saved but the Hussars pressed and registered another goal. The 26th played hard and before the close of the chukker had added two subsidiaries to their score. Score: 26th 4 goals 3 subsidiaries. 13th 3 goals 2 subsidiaries.

Seventh Chukker.—Taylor hit a minor point and the Hussars tried hard to get the equalising goal. Captain Twist was hit on the forehead by the ball and received a nasty cut. A couple of minutes before time a second subsidiary accrued to the Hussars and the game ended with the score: 26th Cavalry 4 goals 3 subsidiaries 13th Hussars 3 goals 4 subsidiaries. General Hamilton presented the cup to the winners and congratulated them on their success Teams :—

AUTOMOBILE NOTES FROM HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 5th October 1906.

FINER weather conditions than those which prevailed in the Isle of Man on the day of the Tourist Trophy Race could not have been wished for. After a slight fog in the early morning the sun broke through, and by nine o'clock, when the first car was despatched, the atmosphere was clear and bright, with the warmth of a mid-summer day. Owing to withdrawals through accident or disqualification, and absentees from other causes, only twenty-nine cars faced the starters out of an entry of forty-nine, the first to get away being the Arrol Johnston driven by Napier, which combination won last year's race. At intervals of one minute and a half the other cars were despatched, the new Vici going last.

Several retirements took place during the first round, but Napier passed the post still leading, having occupied three minutes over the hour for the first forty miles. C. S. Rolls was close behind, having caught up and passed the two Darracq cars, his time being a bare fraction over the hour. Then came the Argyll, and it was evident that these three leading cars were in for a close race if they could only maintain their speed and at the same time run within their petrol allowance of twenty-five miles to the gallon. None of the other cars made such good times as these three, but nevertheless they ran near enough to make it a difficult matter to prophesy the ultimate winner. It was known that many of these later cars were very speedy, and could do a fast round if "let out," but the drivers were evidently saving themselves for the final stages of the race. News now came that Mr. Northey's Rolls Royce had retired with a broken spring. The Bianchi was stopped at Sulby Bridge, and the Deasy had jammed its gears.

The last car to complete the first round had barely passed when Rolls was announced on his way down the mountain, and soon flashed by, to be followed a minute later by the Argyll. It was evident the Arrol Johnston had been delayed through trouble, and this was later announced to be due to a puncture followed by a succession of burst inner tubes, which caused a delay of over an hour. This put the car out of the running for first place. Napier stuck to his task, however, and eventually finished seventh, a splendid performance in the circumstances. Meanwhile, the duel between Rolls and his car with George on the Argyll was exceedingly interesting, but unfortunately for the latter a portion of his ballast got loose and was lost overboard, causing some delay and eventually the car was disqualified for this reason. It was the hardest of luck on the driver, who drove consistently well all through. The Rolls Royce, however, could hardly have been beaten on the day. Splendidly driven and running each circuit with the utmost regularity, it completed the four circuits in 4 hours 6 minutes, which averages thirty-nine miles and a half an hour—a marvellous speed when one considers that this was a touring car of only 20-horse power. Owing to the Argyll's disqualification, the second place was gained by Berliet, driven by M. Bablot, while a Darracq, driven by Lee Guinness, was placed third. The two Humber cars were the only team to finish, and their regular running made a very good impression. The two Siddeleys had bad luck during the second round, with chain trouble, which caused one to retire, but that driven by Mr. A. E. Crowdy, after a long delay, put up two very fast circuits and ran into eight place, also gaining the distinction of having saved the largest amount of petrol, as he finished the 161 miles with over a gallon of spirit in hand.

The race was a most interesting one to watch, and in spite of the high speeds maintained over a difficult course, no accidents occurred. As one of the competitors drily observed, "all the reckless drivers had been eliminated during practice spins." As a consequence of the large amount of petrol saved by some of the cars which finished, it is possible that the allowance for next year's race will be still further cut down. However, the exceptionally good weather conditions which prevailed no doubt had a considerable effect in this direction, and had it turned out a wet and windy day we should have witnessed a much keener struggle to finish on the petrol allowance. The day following the big event a race was held for the "Graphic" Trophy over a four-mile course on the road from Douglas to Castletown. Ten cars took part in this event, which was won by C. A. Glentworth on a 50-horse power Napier.

The first international race for aeronauts was started from Paris on Sunday, the British representatives being the Hon'ble C. S. Rolls, who had to hasten his departure from the Isle of Man in order to reach Paris in time for the event. Mr. Hedges Butler was in charge of the second English balloon, and Professor Huntingdon controlled the third. The object of the race is to travel as far as possible before descending, and many of the competitors had fully prepared themselves with warm clothing and large food supplies in anticipation of a long journey. All the balloons have descended.

A rate dispute is being carried on in the Potteries district between manufacturers and the railways canal owners. A heavy motor vehicle has been tested and found to effect a considerable saving both in time and cost of carriage. This is but one more instance of the advantages which will surely follow the general introduction of mechanical traction, although it is to be hoped that, so far as possible, the bulk of heavy goods carriage will still be dealt with by the railway companies, as the highways are not yet fit to sustain heavy motor traffic for any length of time. It is very satisfactory, however, to manufacturers to know that in the motor vehicle they have a powerful argument against the institution of exhorbitant rates by the public carrying companies.

CALEDONIANS vs. NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—The Caledonians opened their season with a two-day match with the Fusiliers, and succeeded in getting beaten by 6 wickets a result brought about chiefly by bad fielding and a well played if somewhat lucky innings by Sergeant Wilkinson of 61. On the first day the weather was anything but favourable, and caused the game to be stopped three times, the wicket consequently being slow and runs difficult to get. The Caledonians won the toss and batted first, scoring only 57, Chandler (16) and Edwin Christensen (14) being the only double figures. The Military fielding was anything but good, but Salier kept a good length and was the pick of the bowlers. In reply the Military put together 131, of which Sergeant. Wilkinson scored 61, Christensen, Chandler and Dimsdale getting two wickets apiece. The fielding was disgraceful, Wade and Corbett being bright exceptions. On the second day with a minority of 74 to face, the Caledonians made a disastrous start, losing Twidale, Corbett and Dimsdale for under 10 runs. But Chandler, Christensen and Durant put a much better complexion on the game, and it was due to their efforts that the score of 114 was obtained. Chandler played a beautiful innings of 39, and Christensen and Durant slogged merrily for 31 and 22 respectively. Requiring 41 runs to win the Military were thought to have a soft thing on, but when Major Fishbourne and Wilkinson were got rid of for 4 each, it looked as though they might have to fight hard, but Bitson 16, Major Enderby (9 not out) and Salier (8 not out) soon settled the business and won the match for their side by six wickets. Wade made two beautiful catches at mid on, otherwise the Caledonian fielding was again poor. Christensen once more bowled well, and Corbett's underhands proved difficult to get away. Score :—

CALEDONIANS vs. SPORTING UNION.—The Caledonians could only make a draw with the babus in this match, a result brought about chiefly through the delay made by each of the babus in coming in to bat. They won the toss and put their opponents in, Twidale and Byrne facing Gupta and Bose. Byrne was out first ball and Elliot only secured 1, but Twidale and Dimsdale made things look better. The score was taken to 73 for eight wickets when the Caledonians declared, Wilton 14, Chandler 14 and Dimsdale 18 being the chief contributors to this not very brilliant total. The babus succeeded in getting 44 for eight wickets when time was called, Bose being the top scorer with 9. Elliot and Chandler both bowled well, and the fielding showed a slight improvement. HARRIS TOURNAMENT.

LIVERPOOL REGIMENT vs. A. AND S. HIGHLANDERS.—Played on Saturday, the 13th instant, a good game resulting in the defeat of the Highlanders by two goals to one. The Liverpools drew first blood, Sergeant Lovery putting through, and though the Argylls played hard they could not get on terms in the first half. But on resuming Quin equalized. A goal to the Liverpool was disallowed for off-side, but they were determined to score again and after obtaining two corners a second goal was scored by Lovery.

THE FINAL.

LIVERPOOL REGIMENT vs. LINCOLN REGIMENT.—These teams put up an excellent game in the final on the 15th instant There was little to choose between them in the first half which ended without score. In the second period the Liverpools began to press and sent in several hot shots, all of which Green disposed of. Then a foul against the Lincolns gave their opponents a free kick from which a goal was scored. The game ended shortly after leaving the Liverpool Regiment victorious by a single goal. Teams :—

LINCOLNS—Corpl. Green, goal; Venson, Corpl. Dromy, backs; Muir, Sculpa Burton, half-backs; Marcloo, Neil, Saunder, Radcliffe, Gibson forwards.

FOOTBALL IN RANGOON.

THE football season of 1906 is just over and on the whole may be considered a great success. Some of the more important matches were interfered with by rain, notably the final of the Walter Locke competition under Association rules. That great interest is taken in matches under Association rules in Rangoon is attested by the crowds of European, Burman and natives of India who throng the enclosure. During many of the matches it was impossible to get a seat and a view of the game at all was only obtainable over the heads of those compelled to stand, the wet state of the ground generally precluding a seat on the grass. Very great interest is taken in Association Football by the Burmans as their own game of "chin lone" consists in a number of men or youths standing round in a circle and kicking a wicker ball into the air before it touches the ground. This makes them very adept at handling the ball to speak metaphorically. Some of the kicks they make are wonderful and remind one of the way a ballet girl at home winds up a step dance with a double high fling, which is exactly the way a Burman often reaches a high ball. There were five competitions under Association Rules and one under Rugby. Rangoonites, however are not yet educated up to Rugby, and very few people turned up to watch the matches under Rugby rules. This may partly have been accounted for by the elements which were most unpropitious. One match under Rugby rules was played in such a storm of rain that one wonders how the referee could possibly carry out his duties. Owing, however, to the press of fixtures it was impossible to put off matches on account of the weather, though it was done in one case owing to the ground becoming too flooded for play. Another reason too, doubtless, was the fact of two regimental team of the Middlesex and King's Own Lancaster Regiment having come down from Upper Burma. The former entered a team for the Walter Locke and the latter entered one for the Walter Locke and one for Rugby, and naturally their stay in Rangoon was limited.

The following were the competitions under Association Rules :—The Junior Challenge Cup for which over 20 teams entered the Students' Cup for which 10 teams entered, the Football League Championship for which 8 teams entered, the Walter Locke shield for which about 10 teams entered and the William Younger Cup limited to two teams.

There was only one tournament under Rugby rules.

The season commenced on the 16th June and the first three competitions ran on, more or less, concurrently till the 1st September, when the last League match was played.

The Junior Challenge Cup and Students' Cup were keenly contested, the former being won by the Baptist College and the latter by the Government Collegiate School, A. "C." Company, Devon Regiment, were in the final of the Junior Challenge Cup and lost after a good game.

The chief interest of course entered in the League Championship for which the following teams entered :—The Devon Regiment the Gymkhana, the Burma Oil Company, the Y. M. C. A., the Port Defence Volunteers, the Government Collegiate School (Burmans), and 79th and 85th Batteries R.G.A.

This interest was maintained at a high pitch up to the last match, namely, that between the Devons and the Gymkhana, because if the result was a draw, these two teams and the Y. M. C. A. would all be equal and would have had to play it out between themselves for supremacy. However, the Gymkhana put all doubts at rest by defeating the soldiers and therefore hold the proud position of League Champions for 1906. This was all the more creditable as they lost one of their best and most reliable players shortly after the game began, the cause being a twisted knee. However the other 10 players playing a fine game and assisted somewhat by the overeagerness and mistakes of the Devon back division, were more than compensated for their heavy loss.

The next competition was the Walter Locke Tournament, for this several teams entered most of those in the League entered with the addition of two regimental teams from Upper Burma, a Rangoon Civilian team and a combined school team (Burmans). The semi-final of this produced three great matches between the 79th R. G. A. and the K. O. Regimental team from Shwebo. The first two games, extra time being played, were drawn. The final game concluded also with a draw of 1 goal each. The 79th, however, had been playing 10 men for about 20 minutes, one of their backs being injured. The committee, however, ruled that the match could not be postponed, so it was decided to play extra time, the 79th only having 10 men, with the result that the K. O.'s got 3 more goals. This was undoubtedly very hard luck for the 79th. In the final on a wet ground, the Y. M. C. A. beat the K. O. rather easily. The King's Own although they came down with a great reputation never seemed to be able to make the Y. M. C. A. extend themselves and there is no doubt the better side won.

For the Rugby Tournament the Gymkhana, Devons, Y. M. C. A., a combined Battery team, and the King's Own from Shwebo entered. Owing to the weather no fast football was possible and the King's Own won. This they are to be congratulated on as they very sportingly entered teams for both Association and Rugby. In spite of the state of the ground some good football was witnessed. The final tournament was for the W. Younger Cup under Association Rules. Two teams only entered, one representing Upper and the other Lower Burma. The tournament is limited to three games, and best out of three has it. In the first match Lower Burma very easily defeated Upper Burma on a wet ground by 7 to 1. In the second match after a good game Lower Burma again won by 4 to 0. This ended the tournament. Before closing this résumé of the season I would add that sport in general, and football in particular in Rangoon, has suffered a heavy loss by the retirement of Colonel Lawford, whose tenure of appointment as Colonel on the Staff in Rangoon terminated in August when he left us for England. He has been President of the Burma Athletic Association for the last five years and has always keenly identified himself in all matters of sport. Good luck go with him.

FOOTBALL IN ENGLAND.

THE PROMISE OF A GREAT SEASON.

BY E. H. D. SEWELL.

NOT for many years past has the opening of the Rugby season been so eagerly awaited or its prospects so widely discussed as the present. Last September we knew a body of players was due from New Zealand, but it is quite true that no single follower of the game in the United Kingdom had the remotest idea of the calibre of the men forming that body. We were not forearmed by being forewarned, and when the Devon County XV fell in the first match like autumn leaves before a gale the Rugby world fairly gasped. It certainly awoke from years of lethargy, and as a general result of the memorable tour which succeeded the Devon defeat is wide awake to-day for a season, an adumbration of some of the prospects of which I attempt here.

Like last season the first half of this one will be largely occupied by a team of players from abroad, on this occasion South Africa. Their first match will be played on the 27th of this month at Northampton against a fifteen representing the East Midlands and they are engaged to play 28 matches which include internationals with each of the four Unions of the United Kingdom and also matches against all our counties, both Universities and Dublin University, as well as the Newport and Cardiff Club, the only two fifteens in club football proper that will oppose them. For some time past many rumours have been bruited about as to the strength of the visitors; but from the best informed sources it is known that they are a grand tackling side, that they will not shine on heavy grounds, that their only likely weakness will be at half-back and that they play eight forwards, packing in the usual shape of three front rank, three middle rank and two at the back. Socially it is said the team is mostly made up of sons of officers and parents in South Africa society and with scarcely an exception is a country-born combination, the majority of which has never been outside South Africa. There is no doubt of their general all-round ability, and while it is unlikely they will ever score such a number of points as their famous predecessors it is equally probable our men will find them difficult to score against. On the other hand, our teams will not twice make the error of going into the arena half defeated and with the avowed intention of playing defensive football only—the biggest mistake ever made in Rugby.

The prospect of a keen and close struggle for supremacy among London clubs has never been brighter. In fact so situated will Blackheath on the Scottish, London Welsh and Harlequins be that there will be this season some almost International matches in town. Unfortunately for Welsh and Scottish enthusiasts who cannot get to Edinburgh when the Welsh XV visits there early next year, the London Welsh and London Scottish team will try conclusions with necessarily weakened teams on that date in town.

Dealing first with "the club," as Blackheath is known all over the world S. A. Hill, who will captain the side, will have the services from time to time of such first-class players in their respective positions as H. Lee (Cambridge Hospital) and E. M. Harrison (Middlesex) at full-back; of Basil M... F. Alexander (reserve for South A... (East Midlands), C. A. Priday, ... London Scottish will have much the same team... with the important additions of E. D. Simson ... the Scottish International half-backs as a regular... will be very well off in this position as Dr. Louis G... available until Christmas and A. L. Wade (Middlesex)... again be playing. Greig is a Glasgow Academical, who is in the Navy. C. G. Ross, an Old Lorettonian, and also a West of Scotland player, is resident in town and will play for the famous red-stockinged brigade. A. L. Purvis and M. W. Walter whose football nationality was the cause of some soreness among English and Scottish partisans last season, will be again seen on the three-quarter line. J. L. Forbes, who played for Scotland vs. Wales in 1905, may also play, but is said to have retired.

London Welsh will, for the fourth successive season, be led by A. F. Harding and his vice-captain is another Welsh International forward, J. F. Williams. The full back position is at present rather an open question. Harding has himself filled it with infinite credit at times and, if all goes well forward, this versatile player will be seen there again. At three-quarter H. T. Maddocks (Wales), Timmins, C. E. Lewis; F. J. David and, perhaps, occasionally the famous E. T. Morgan will play. Morgan is at present in Wales and has been much advertised to play for a Welsh club. The greater probability is that he will not be seen very often in club football anywhere, but will play for Wales when the International matches come round. At half-back his brother, W. Morgan, will again partner C. F. Rowlands with Vivian Gabe (Middlesex Hospital) as reserve half. The forwards will be Harding, Williams, T. C. Jenkins H. S. Copsock; F. H. Clay, C. T. Hawkins, and Thompson, who will probably get his Light Blue this year. As to formation if the veteran Wallace H. Watts can be prevailed upon to play again he will be given a roving commission. Otherwise the London Welsh will play eight forwards unless opposed by seven when they will have a man ready to pull out of the scrum. This is always an easy matter with them owing to the characteristic versatility of all Welsh players of class.

The Harlequins will again, contrary to rumour that has small foundation in fact, have the help of C. E. L. Hammond in the pack and the assistance of T. S. Kelly of Exeter, Devon, and England therein. J. S. G. Birkett is again available, but reports credit Cornwall with the probable aid of Rev. J. G. Bussell, one of the very best light-weight forwards of last season. It was hoped at one time that the Old Cheltonian Captain Ivo Barrett, the tants cricketer, would be available for the three-quarter line, but he is away back again to his appointment in the Malay Straits after a good though short season in Hants cricket. The Harlequins will be very strong and the rivalry between the four clubs mentioned very keen this year.

Richmond do not promise so well, but a change in captaincy may make a difference. It is not known yet whether C. B. Atkinson, of Bedford, will play for Rosslyn Park or Blackheath. For the latter, with his old partner Finlinson, he might make a name for himself.

At the universities Oxford will have the assistance of some Rhodes scholars from New Zealand and South Africa, among them W. K. Flemmer, who played half-back on occasion last year and who will be partnered at times by his old schoolfellow S. H. Williamson, of St. Andrew's College, Grahamstown. The pair may get their Blue, having in W. H. Sykes, their most formidable rival. Cozens Hardy, who is captain, has the same centre three-quarters available, and of these N. W. Milton, of Marlborough, a young brother of C. H. and J. G. already mentioned in connection with Blackheath, may one day carry on the family tradition in International caps.

At Cambridge L. M. Macleod having gone down H. J. P. Hearson, who was wrongly left out of last year's Varsity match, is captain and has J. H. Scoular (Scotland) at full-back and K. G. Macleod (Scotland), and G. G. Kono again available at three-quarter with himself. J. Burt Marshall will probably not play again, although the treatment he has received for his back trouble during two or three months this summer at Brighton is said to have done him much good. W. H. Penny may get in on the third line and H. Hosken (Cornwall, Middlesex, and Leys School) has again an obvious chance if he returns from South Africa for the season. At half J. V. Young, of Eastbourne College, is sure to be well tried. Little is known of the prospects forward, but the pack will be up to average merit, though Hearson will be lucky if he gets any one to even partly replace H. G. Monteith, the old Fettesian and Scottish International, who is now at London Hospital. L. M. MacLeod will never again play for Scotland, at all events on Scottish soil, according to present determination.

28th September 1906.

THERE is yet another new Champion—a someone who has earned his golf title by sheer hard work and good play, earned the epithet of South of Ireland Champion, which comes not by heredity as does his own—Viscount Glerawly, eldest son of the Earl of Annesley. This is the first time on record that a Belted Earl's eldest son has ever emerged victorious out of the finals of a Golf Championship—may it not be the last! In Ladies Golf thrice did the daughter of a Belted Earl (Eldon) carry off premier honours in the Open Ladies' Championship and as the game has now been adopted and become hot favourite among sports by the upper ten, probably before very long Mr. Smith and Miss Jones will have to acknowledge the superiority of royalties and strawberry leaves, when extremes meet on a Link. Let us take a brief glance at Lord Glerawly's records; for some time his name has been familiar to those who follow golf matches closely and attentively. Last spring the lordling secured a place in the Light Blue Team in the Inter-Varsity match, but unfortunately his position in the team obliged him to meet the one man on t'other side who was playing golf, but previous to that he had taken a prominent part in big events and in the Amateur Championship in the third round Lord Glerawly gave the eventual Champion (Mr. James Robb) a very tough match before he could be disposed of. The South of Ireland Champion, who, of course hails from the far north-east of the Emerald Isle, plays a very pretty game and is particularly noted for his approaching and putting, and during his triumphal progress at Lahinch he needed all his skill to enable him successfully to overcome such players as Mr. Considine, Mr. R. G. Graham, Mr. J. Forde (Cork), Mr. Wise (Lahinch), Mr. Lurcott (South Herts), who the previous day had created somewhat of a sensation by beating Mr. G. R. Girdlestone (Wimbledon), and finally Mr. Browning (a local crack who was much fancied). The final round consisted of 36 holes. In the morning the players were fairly evenly matched as far as the turn, but the 18 holes showed the Light Blue Player superior by 6 holes up, and this somewhat alarming lead he never relinquished, winning the Championship by 10 holes up and 9 to play. His round in the forenoon was made up thus :—

Out : 6, 5, 5, 6, 4, 4, 5, 4, 5=44 Home : 5, 3, 3, 4, 5, 4, 7, 4, 5=40=84.

1895 J. S. Browing at Lahinch.
1896 Brian O'Brien at Lahinch
1897 F. Ballingall at Lahinch.
1898 F. Ballingall at Lahinch.
1899 J. R. Gairdner (Mid Surrey) at Lahinch.
1900 F. Ballingall at Lahinch.
1901 W. Dodd (Liverpool) at Lahinch.
1902 W. Ballingall at Lahinch.
1903 J. B. Ballingall at Lahinch.
1904 D. Forster (Frinton) at Lahinch.
1905 Horace Castle of Chiswick at Lahinch.
1906 Lord Glerawly (county Down) at Lahinch.

It will thus be noticed that the annual event is always played on the same green—a quite unique proceeding.

Another "so genannte" Championship, which always attracts a large field, was held at Lossiemouth, at the same time as the estivities above narrated were proceeding in Ireland. In spite, however, of the counter attraction, quite a large number of golfers congregated, a cosmopolitan collection indeed, including Mr. Frank Scroggie, Dr. Chalmers, from Deeside, Mr. Stewart Dobson from Deal, and a great great many who have yet to make their names famous in golfing circles. A hundred years ago Lossiemouth was known only on the maps as a small fishing village, near Elgin, on the Moray Firth. Now this same village grown out of all recognition attracts southerners and Sassenachs from all parts, for are not the Links of the Moray Club well known, well proven, and good? By playing consistent golf, keeping on the line which a strong wind made no easy matter, Mr. F. Scroggie eventually came out top and is now crowned winner of the Northern Amateur Championship. Some day it would be very interesting to make a list of their so-called Championships among ladies and men, for their name is legion and the title is sometimes regarded as not a barren and unnecessary honour by all who cannot win one! Grapes are sour!

One of our most enthusiastic golfers is the Bishop of London (Winnington-Ingram) instead of denouncing the game, without having tasted the sweets thereof as so many clerics are in the habit of doing, the Lord Bishop encourages golfers in every way, and escapes from his many duties whenever he can to invigorate his body, and refresh his mind at this healthy pastime : would that there were more like his lordship—the old Marlborough boy.

Again has that fine sportsman, Sir Ralph Payne-Gallway, vindicated the superiority of bow and arrow on the green ; this time in a match with Mr. Eden Gawne, a London player, marked +3. The first match went to the man with the clubs, by 3 u. and two to play, but in the return Sir Ralph was victorious by 5 and 3. Vive la flèche.

The Hanger Hill Club at Ealing recently held a very successful Open Meeting, divided into senior and junior classes. There were over 80 competitors and some very well-known players were included, although being somewhat early in the season, a great many habitués of Open Meetings had not returned from their holidays. The scratch prize for the best 18 holes was won by the old Light Blue Captain, Mr. Geoffrey Hoffman, who completed his round in 74 strokes. Mr. B. Robertson, entering from the Hythe Club, won the handicap aggregate prize with 79+74 nett=153. The Hanger Hill Club is one of the easiest of access in London, the course is long, and may I be pardoned for saying so, rather monotonous, but the Club House is really beautiful ; such doors, such fire places, such panelling, saved by the good golfer from the devastating, razing hand of the iconoclastic developer of estates, this property of the Nelson's will long enjoy immunity from destruction and annihilation ; laus golpher!

In the Qualifying Tournament of the Midland Section of the News of the World Championship for Professionals only there was a record entry at Sandwell Park on Wednesday, 19th September. The chief honours of the day went to the brothers Cawsey, the Malvern pro. George accomplishing two fine rounds of 74+78=152 and his brother Harry from Ashford Manor, Middlesex, was 1 stroke worse, i.e., 153. George Cawsey is undoubtedly a fine player, but, and in this case it is a big But with a capital B ; he does not like losing. If all goes well he can do as great things as anyone, but any little rift within the lute will make his music very out of tune. Anyhow, let us hope he will do well in the forthcoming Final at Hollinwell next week.

In Scotland, that is at St. Andrews and North Berwick, there is still a large gathering of celebrities. Prominent among these are Mr. A. J. Balfour ; Lord Roberts (a spectator) the Grand Duke Michael of Russia, etc., etc. The Autumn Meeting at North Berwick was largely attended, including Mr. J. E. Laidlay, H. W. de Zoete, Cecil Hutchison, J. R. Gairdner, Mansfield Hunter, etc. With a very fine aggregate making 158, Mr. de Zoete came in a winner of the Challenge Medal open to members of the Rival Tantallon and Bass Rock Clubs. In preparation for the Great Autumn Meeting week things are humming at St. Andrews, the Links are crowded, the weather is beautiful, and the green in first rate order what wonder then that those who are eligible to take part in the revels congregate at Mecca and prepare to do great deeds ; 2-ball, 3 ball, 4-ball matches, played by experts can be witnessed any day, by disengaged players if there be any such idlers at St. Andrews. The three brothers Scot, sons of Lord Eldon are there, so too, Mr. Norman Hunter, Mr. Horace Hutchison, Mr. V. A Pollock, Mr. Leslie Balfour Melville, the two Blackwells, Mr. Low, and the Amateur Champion of 1905, Mr. Gordon Barry. Oh! what a game golf is ; there is nothing to compare with it except a fine run 'cross country when a southerly wind and a cloudy sky proclaim it a hunting morning.

Miss Rhona Adair is to marry Captain Algernon Cuthell on 17th October. Will the bonds of matrimony lead to her forsaking the Links of golf?

GOLF IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA GOLF CLUB vs TOLLYGUNGE CLUB.—This week's match was, unless we are mistaken, the first between representative teams of these two clubs, and proved a very great success : so much so indeed that a return game at Barrackpore next month is already practically arranged. Calcutta were slightly the favourites, and at the close of the singles led by the narrow margin of three holes Messrs. Sinclair and Dick were the principal contributors to the Calcutta total, while Messrs Stewart and Youngson did best for Tollygunge. In the interval between the morning and afternoon rounds there was a very heavy rainstorm, but little inconvenience was caused except to the first match, as the course dried up wonderfully. Mr. Mitchell Innes was in fine form and with Messrs. Drimmie and Melrose both rather off their game, was principally responsible for the addition of five holes to Tollygunge, while their success in the foursomes altogether by 9 holes to 6, gave them a victory on the whole day's play by three holes : a very level and interesting result. Full scores :—

Cards.

Solution to Problem No. 18.

AT the score it is useless to try for anything short of game. A's lead marks B with the queen of clubs. To make certain of four tricks in the suit Z must put on Y's ace, first round, so as to hold the king, 9, etc., over the possible queen 10, 6, 2 in B's hand. If A led from knave, 6, 2, B holds queen, and 10 only and Z in that case can win five tricks in the suit. With any other distribution, however, he can only win four, and so must try for a trick in diamonds. Having won the first trick, therefore, Y leads the 2 of diamonds. If B holds the ace without the queen, he is certain to place the latter card with Z, and will very likely put on his ace in order that he may give A a ruff, or lead up to dummy's weakness in spades. If he does, Z will ruff, play three rounds of trumps, leaving the lead in Y's hand, and get rid of a spade on the king of diamonds; after which Y leads a club, and Z finesses unless B puts on queen or 10. If B does not put on the ace of diamonds, Z plays as before, except that he does not lead a second round of diamonds, and may still win the game with the distribution of clubs above referred to. In this way he takes the best chance of getting out on the hand.

How ought B to proceed, and why ?

"Old Alec" did her Grace of Montrose a good turn when he won the Lincolnshire Handicap for her with Oberon. It was said the little horse was backward, and his running even was doubtful until he arrived at Lincoln.

The stout lady was sunning herself at Cannes, and the mere fact of her absence on the Continent suggested the improbability of her colours being seen in the race. Anyhow, Oberon was quite neglected in the betting, and when it became known an hour before the race that the Duchess had travelled post haste from the South of France, reaching Lincoln in the night, even this gentle hint was not accepted save by the most persistent followers of the stable, and Oberon started at 40 to 1—and won! The grey Buchanan had previously made the old man's name familiar in the sporting houses of the City of Great Tom.

For some years "Alec" had a few horses running on his own account, apart from those he trained for the Duke of Beaufort and others, and the old man managed very well to help himself at nice prices to some very decent stakes.

When horses hailing from other stables show ridiculously contrary and inconsistent form their owners and trainers are occasionally called upon for an explanation. But not so with Alec Taylor—the ruling powers evidently felt satisfied that the old man had a knack of having his own way.

Coromandel for the Cambridgeshire was most decidedly a win after the old chap's own heart. The grey mare had led the Cesarewitch field on to the flat (making running for the winner, her stable companion, Ragimunde), and the reporters had mistaken her for a grey hack, as she was running wide on the far side so that she did not come into the description of the race at this point. That suited old Alec down to the ground, for he was enabled to back her at such a nice price as 7 to 1 in a field of seven.

The Manchester November Handicap was old Alec's special mark. It is doubtful whether he would have cared to win a Derby in preference. Corrie Roy, Stourhead, Carlton, and Parlington were all prepared by the Mystery Man of Manton, and it was not his fault that Madame D'Albany did not follow in their footsteps. It was only the penalty incurred by winning the Liverpool Autumn Cup which stopped her.

Buckstone, the Ascot Cup winner of 1863, and North Pole, another thoroughbred horse, were taken out to Hong-Kong under the care of the late Robert Sherwood, who went there to succeed Tommy Lye in the management of Jardine, Matheson and Co.'s racing stable.

Buckstone did not live long in the East, but North Pole won the Challenge Cup from Messrs. Dent and Co.'s Haddington, which was trained by Richard Sherrard. North Pole was ridden by a clerk in Jardine-Matheson's house. And thereby hangs a tale.

Mr. W. Mackenzie, who subsequently had a share in Sycee, the Lincolnshire Handicap winner of 1869, was in China at that time and used not only to ride for, but to manage, Jardine-Matheson's racing stable. He had a grudge against a sportsman who was a leading barrister at Hong-Kong. The year before Buckstone was bought, Haddington had been sent out, and had swept the board of the principal trophies. The clerk in question mentioned above, either a Dane or a German, who had never ridden in a race, was "put in" by Mr. Mackenzie to take a bet of twenty thousand dollars to a thousand from the sporting lawyer that he would ride the winner of next year's Challenge Cup. The bet was laid, and Mr. Mackenzie went home. Buckstone and North Pole were purchased to extinguish Messrs Dent's Haddington, and Mackenzie returned to superintend them and teach the clerk how to ride. Though the crack died, the second string was good enough to win the Challenge Cup, and pull off the big bet.
