THE RACE HORSE OWNERS' ASSOCIATION, LIMITED.

THE Race Horse Owners' Association has started on its career in the shape of a limited company, having held its first statutory meeting on the last Monday in January. This body has come into existence as the almost direct outcome of a suggestion made by the Stewards of the Jockey Club early in the summer of 1905, its mission being to care for the interests of owners in matters that lie without the purview of the ruling powers: but the scope of its operations, as proposed by the Articles of Association, was so wide it was hardly surprising that the Stewards should at one time have regarded the new body rather in the light of a potential rival than one to which they might look, if need arose, for organised support. The objects of the Race Horse Owners' Association are perhaps best indicated by the matter out of which it originally took its inception. In April last some 462 owners memorialised the Jockey Club Stewards, asking them to approach the various railway companies of Great Britain with the view of procuring if possible some reduction in the charges made for the conveyance of horses and stable lads: and also to see what their influence could do to induce the executives of various meetings to lower their charges for stabling and the accommodation of boys. The movement rose out of the growing sense that the expenses attendant upon racing are grown much heavier than they should become, and that some endeavour should be made to keep them within reasonable dimensions: it was in fact a bid for the continued existence of the "small owner" the man of merely average means who races for the sake of the sport and whose patronage of the turf was becoming more and more difficult by reason of the increased incidental expenses of racing. It is a matter of very small importance to the big owner, the Westminster, Rothschild or Cassel, whether his annual bill for travelling and stabling expenses be £300 or £3,000; but it is one of vital importance to the comparatively poor man who has to consider "fivers" and probably allows himself annually a fixed sum for his amusement. It would be nothing less than a calamity for English racing were the "small owner" driven off the turf: and we may safely assume that this contingency was prominent in the minds of the 462 owners who memorialised the Stewards in April last. In round numbers, some 1,500 names appear on the list of Colours Registered for flat racing and steeplechasing; and the number of signatories to the memorial was therefore more than sufficient to show that it represented very general feeling on the subject. The Stewards took the only step they could in regard [illegible] of railway charges; they [illegible] memorial to the Railway Co[illegible] with a letter from themselves [illegible] with its aims and requesting c[illegible] could not well do more tha[illegible] of sympathetic intermedia[illegible] the matter is one which does not co[illegible] within the scope of such a body as the Jockey Club whose mission does not cover such details as contingent economies in racing. Equally, the matter of stabling at various meetings is without their jurisdiction; for though a suggestion from such a body would hardly fail to receive the careful attention of those to whom it might be addressed, such a step might well open

…xecutive …y urge the …Stewards recog… such a matter would …ground, and their reply to …hat they sympathised with the …lay outside their province: and …ed that any steps to bring about the …in charges desired should be made to each …vidual meeting by somebody representing owners of race horses, rather than by the Stewards of the Jockey Club. Clearly the Stewards were right in the position they took up; the matter is essentially one for the owners who are directly interested, and the reply given the memorialists embodied a definite hint, almost a recommendation, that owners of race horses who sought to bring about reforms and economies should band themselves together and bring pressure to bear on executives of meetings.

"The cost of racing may be anything" says Mr. Alfred Watson in one of his books; and truly the man who opens an account at Weatherby's should have a substantial balance at his banker's unless his horses are to be a source of anxiety rather than of pleasure. The trainer's bill, £2-10-0 per week or £3-3-0, with it may be a percentage on winnings to the trainer: entries which amount to from 10sovs. to 200gs. (as for the Prince of Wales' Stakes at Goodwood) for each race, and may prove so much cash thrown away by a trivial mishap on the training ground, road or in the stable: travelling expenses, stabling at the meeting and jockey's fees, to say nothing of the countless small drains on the purse involved by other fees, registration of names, etc., may indeed make the cost of racing "anything." There is a wide field for the energies of the Race Horse Owners' Association if it set in earnest about the business of obtaining economies. One point that no doubt suggests itself to all, is the matter of presents to winning jockeys. We can well understand the generous attitude of mind, the glow of gratification which induces an owner to give or promise the jockey who has steered his horse first past the post, a sum of money wholly disproportionate to the service the lad has rendered. Three guineas for a losing ride and five for a win, as everyone knows, are the fees prescribed by Jockey Club rule: the losing fee is paid as a matter of course no matter how the race has been ridden, but how often is the rider of a winner rewarded with his prescribed five pounds five shillings and no more? Seldom we imagine. We can, of course, all bring to mind races which have been snatched out of the fire by a bit of clever riding, and in such cases it may well be urged, the jockey's achievement deserves special recognition: but take a race which has been won by the superiority of the horse, a race in which the jockey has done nothing but sit still; can it be affirmed in the cold light of reason that he has earned a cheque for two or three hundred pounds or more? To put it brutally the jockey in such cases simply profits by the natural elation of the owner at the moment. It is generally acknowledged that the present system of making large presents to jockeys is not good for them nor, what is more important, for the turf. And the system presents an obvious opportunity for the new association to bring about reform. If the members of the association can persuade themselves and one another to make an end of the practice of giving large presents to jockeys on the sole strength of the merit of the horses they ride, they will do a good stroke of work. Jockeys have learned to expect presents for wins as a matter of course; but we are very sure that the prospect of receiving one has nothing whatever to do with their endeavours to win. This matter of presents is one with which the Jockey Club does not concern itself, but it is one of no small importance to owners, especially to owners of moderate means to whom an occasional win means perhaps the "sinews of war" for another season's sport. The career of the Race Horse Owners' Association will be watched with no little interest.

When George Ulyett was in his prime, he was once playing in a Yorks cr. Lancashire match, which took place at Manchester, the ground being situated near the railway viaduct. George was batting for the first-named county when he gave the ball a tremendous drive. Just then a train proceeding to Bradford was passing over the bridge, and, to the astonishment of spectators, the leather disappeared through the open window.

It was generally expected that the ball had gone right through the carriage, but this was not the case, it being eventually found in the compartment on the train reaching its destination.

Sporting Notes.

WITH this issue The Indian Field enters upon the fifth year of its existence. We take the opportunity of thanking all our subscribers, advertisers, and contributors for their very valued support.

The weekly Simla Gymkhanas began last Saturday afternoon, when a very big crowd assembled at "Annandale" to witness and take part in the proceedings. Two hundred guests sat down to the tiffin provided by the Viceroy's Staff and the distinguished gallery included H.E. the Viceroy, Lady Minto, the Ladies Elliot, H.E. the Commander-in-Chief, and many high officials and their consorts. Appended are details:—

Tentpegging, for Gentlemen.—Touch 2 marks, take 4 marks and carry 6 marks. Marks given for pace, 15 competed for this event. Result:—

Captain C. Ross 1
Captain Bulkeley... 2

Calling Race, for Ladies.—There was four boxes placed round the race-course in which each competitor had to drop a card. The lady who completed the course leaving all the cards correctly and nearest to the time allotted was to win. The time was 11½. Lady Aileen Elliot came in first with Miss Ibbetson a close second. Twelve ladies started.

Education Stakes.—Ladies, nomination. Each gentlemen was given a sealed envelope with six questions enclosed. The gentlemen ran from a given point to his nominee who opened the envelope and answered the questions and replaced the card in envelope which was carried back by gentleman to the Judge. Questions (1) name statues in Trafalgar Square; (2) write in figures 2 Billions; (3) name rank of the Prince of Wales in the Army and Navy; (4) name secretaries and under-secretaries for India and Colonies; (5) write verse of four lines on Simla Rickshaws. Eighteen couples competed. Mrs. Morgan and Mr. H. Howard were first and H. E. Lady Minto and Captain Ross second.

Bending Race in Pairs—Ladies, nomination, marks given for style. Twelve couples competed and in the final Captain and Mrs. Rivett-Carnac were first, Lady Ruby Elliot and Lord Francis Scott second and Mrs. Buck and Mr. Howard third.

Rumble Tumble Stakes for ponies nominated by ladies and ridden by men, the latter drawing lots at the post for their mount, the rider of the winner taking the men's prize, the nominator of the last pony the ladies' prize. Lord Francis Scott came in first and Lady Violet Elliot won the ladies' prize. Ten ponies started.

The Calcutta Clay Bird Club opens its season this week and weekly shoots have been arranged up to the middle of August. Messrs. Lyon and Lyon have once more very kindly placed their picturesque little range at the disposal of the Club, and Mr. W. S. Burke again undertakes the Honorary Secretaryship.

As will be seen from our special correspondent's account of the Burma Polo Association's Tournament, the winners turned up in the Bhamo team who met and defeated the representatives of Rangoon in the final by 3 goals and 3 subsidiaries to 1 goal and 2 subsidiaries.

The Pachmarhi Polo Tournament (under I. P. A. rules) begins on the 28th instant: it is open to teams of which not more than two members have played in a first-class tournament. Entries, we are informed, close on the 21st instant.

From Mussoorie we hear nothing but eloquent praise of the new polo ground in the middle of the racecourse. There is every prospect of a good tournament next month.

The establishment of a seaside resort at Fraserganje has, we notice, begotten competition in the conversion of Cox's Bazar south of Chittagong into a similar sanitarium. A well-known Calcutta firm, whose vessels ply down the coast from the new provinces' port, are erecting an hotel at the place and one or two planters from the Assam tea districts wax eloquent regarding its several attractions. The actual sea run from Chittagong is but three hours to the entrance of the estuary. The place is peopled chiefly by Mughs whose temples may interest the archæologist though the frescoes therein are not overpleasing to contemplate. The surroundings are suggestive of the Cornish coast. The sands are firm and even, admirably adapted for the cyclist, also forming excellent links for the golfer; a nullah that is about to be pallisaded in, will provide a safe swimming bath as though there are many other places for a dip. sharks and sea-snakes are pretty much in evidence. The conchologist may revel in the great variety of shells. Beckti, pomfret, mullet, shrimps and bummelo abound, and are obtainable at prices that would put those ruling in the Calcutta New Market to shame. while the succulent oyster has been known for ages. One has not far to go into the interior for mixed shooting. Such is a summary of the eulogistic notice of the new Brighton, and as Chittagong may be reached by two lines of steamers from town as also viâ Goalundo and Chandpur at little expense, those who can afford to pitch business to the winds the coming hot weather might well pay Cox's Bazar a visit.

In directing the attention of our readers (the majority of whom are, naturally, interested in any improvements announced in connection with sporting weapons and projectiles), to the full-page advertisement of Messrs. Westley Richards in the front part of the paper, we should like to take the opportunity thus afforded us of saying a few words about the new "Fauneta" which is turned out in 28 and 30 bores. The improved form of bullet which the firm introduced, has permitted an altogether new system of weapons by the fact that they are able to get a longer bullet capable of flight without undue weight, and are enabled to make most efficient rifles in small bores, while at the same time they are no mean performers with shot.

Considered only from the rifle point of view, taking the 28-bore "Fauneta," the weapon weighs only 5¾ lbs., handles as easily as a walking stick, is perfectly balanced, and nevertheless is most effective. This has already been tried in Africa and a recent report received from there informs us that the weapon is as good as any sporting rifle for animals up to the size of zebra, and in four shots a sportsman accounted for two Duiker Buck and two Bush Buck at 250 yards.

Another gentleman in India who has one describes it as a "little ripper," and states that with regard to shot for quail and snipe shooting he has done wonders with it. In fact, he states it is the most successful season for quail in his experience. Messrs. Westley Richards and Co., Ld., have now made it in 20-bore and the weight of this can be from 6½ to 7lbs. In India where a sportsman does not carry his own weapon, the extra weight will not be felt. The 20-bore is, of course, the most powerful weapon. It shoots a 380 grains bullet, which will be made preferably of lead for great expansion, and it possesses the same accuracy as the 28-bore but has this advantage, that better shot patterns are obtained, and in fact, it comes near to be an ideal combination of the bullet and shot gun.

Of local sporting news this week there is practically none. There is not even a chance of a gymkhana at Tollygunge and even if one were advertised we do not think there would be any chance of its filling. The first of these sporting little affairs will be put on with the commencement of the rains, about the end of June.

Polo in Calcutta has received a bit of a fillip by the inauguration of the Junior Polo Club which seems to be going fairly strong. It is quite possible this new outlet for energy may slightly interfere with the fields in the Tollygunge Club Gymkhanas this year.

We hear of a large number of commissions having gone both to Australia and England for horses of all classes for the coming racing season, but so far we have heard of no purchases. Cables were exchanged with regard to the buying of Tartan for the Viceroy's Cup, but they came to nothing, as Tartan's connections refused to part with him.

The programmes of the Calcutta Races and Tollygunge Steeplechases for 1906-1907 are now published. There are no further comments that suggest themselves to us; we have already discussed them. The officers of the year are as follows:—Stewards:—Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apear, C.S.I., Mr. J. G. Dickson, Mr. W. Garth, Mr. J. R. Stewart, and Mr. J. D. West. The Officiating Secretary and Clerk of the Course continues to be Mr. James Hutchison, while the office of Handicapper and Clerk of the Scales has yet to be filled. The exact dates of the principal big races, namely, those of Rs. 5,000 or over are as follows:—

The Burdwan Cup	...	on Saturday, 22nd December.
The Trials	...
The Viceroy's Cup	...	on Wednesday, 26th December.
The Grand Annual	...	on Saturday, 29th December.
The Cooch Behar Cup	...
The Macpherson Cup	...	on Monday, 31st December.
The Indian Grand National	...	on Tuesday, 1st January.
The Tollygunge Plate	...	on Saturday, 5th January.
The King's Plate	...	on Saturday, 12th January.
The Metropolitan	...
The Prince of Wales' Plate	...	on Tuesday, 15th January.
The Merchants' Plate	...	on Saturday, 19th January.

Mr. G. J. Marshall proposes running Gally Slave in the Monsoon Hurdle Races: this should make a fairly useful addition to the ranks of the Monsoon jumping brigade.

The dates fixed for the Calcutta Monsoon Races are: 4th, 11th, 18th and 25th August, the 15th, 22nd and 29th September and there may be an extra meeting on the 6th October: the programmes of the first four meetings reach us as we go to press.

A Terai correspondent writes:—Thirty years ago Mr. Lloyds, manager in the Terai, and a Mr. James were camping in the vicinity of Mohurgong Garden, when one of their elephants went musth and breaking his chains made for freedom, and to this day roams the Terai Dooars, and the Mooroong with his jungle mates. For thirty years that and other elephants have been allowed to work their wicked wills on human life and property unrestrained, till the tale of mortality has grown year by year till it is past bearing. About two years ago the Government offered a reward of three hundred rupees for the destruction of Mr. Lloyds' runaway, which is now known as the club-footed rogue, by reason of some malformation caused by the chain round his foot which caused it to swell out. He is said to have but a single tusk, and that a small one, and yet I hear that the authorities will not give it up to the destroyer of this pest. I am under the impression that the same animal is known by the name of the Dooars rogue and the number of his victims alone mounts high, though I am certain that he is not the only offender. Last September an old woman and her two young children were sleeping in their hut. Hearing movements about their granary in the middle of the night, one of the children woke up their mother saying there were thieves at their dhan. The sound of human voices was enough. An elephant, which had just torn off the top of the grain house, charged the house and killed the woman and child, one child escaping by hiding. Next morning showed this animal to have been a female, for it had a calf with it. Though retreating to the Government reserved forest at night the Terai elephants are getting bolder and bolder, advancing well into the cultivated lands, ravaging crops, and demolishing houses and gardens everywhere, till the dread and loss caused by them is so great that jotedars or at least their tenants are throwing up their lands on all sides and the land will lapse into jungle wastes to the serious loss of Government land revenue; and so as Kipling, I believe, puts it the East, the ancient East sweeps away the ephemeral rule of the West and lapses into primeval savagery.

The stories of hair-breadth escapes are innumerable and daily more are added to the number—I will but relate two. The first one was told me by the manager of the Central Terai Tea Garden at Simalbaria. I was shown the woman, and spoke to her and saw the marks of her broken nose. All the coolies of the garden know the story and anyone who doubts can go or write and enquire for themselves.

A garden woman was washing at a small stream near some jungle. It was at a ford. Before she was aware of it an elephant had stalked out of the jungle and wishing to cross the stream picked her up, winding his trunk round her body, the end coming over her face and nose, and placed her gently or at least as gently as he could on one side of the path. There is no doubt that the animal meant no harm for she was not flung down, though the bridge of her nose and a rib was broken by the compression of his trunk. Yet another story, this time from the Tirihana side. Elephants were breaking into a cluster of huts in search of grain. One animal found a woman and baby in a hut, one end of which it had just demolished. It promptly put its foot on the child lying in its little basket cradle, but it picked up the mother and lifting her out of the house placed her on the ground unhurt and went on rummaging for grain.

The announcement of the proprietors of Pyrke's Provision Stores, Bombay, which appears a few pages further on in this issue, reminds us that the mango season is now on and that the celebrated "Afoos" jût of that delicious fruit—absolutely the best mango known to the world—is now in perfection. Consignments are being sent home and to innumerable Indian clients by Messrs. Pyrke: all who desire to make the acquaintance of the Queen

...Times of Ceylon:—"The members of ...eylon Game Protection Society have every ...eason in the world to feel incensed at the arbitrary action of the Governor in closing the game districts of the Southern Province in order to provide a Grand Ducal "battean." Many people would find it difficult to believe that Sir Henry Blake had gone so far as to protect sport in such an unsportsmanlike way, but the correspondence read at Thursday's meeting of the Game Protection Society leaves no room for doubt. Not only did the Governor order all sportsmen 'off'—and it is not clear whether the order has since been withdrawn—but one of the officials at the Colonial Office suggest that H. E. is prepared to justify his extraordinary action. We protest against what we consider to be an unsportsmanlike infraction of the laws of sport, and we decline to see justification for this in H. E.'s desire to be ultra-hospitable to a foreign nobleman travelling in Ceylon. Where is this sort of thing going to stop we would like Sir Henry Blake to tell us. Are we to understand that any foreign nobleman with a penchant for a big bag gained without difficulty is to have Government assistance in obtaining this, and that the interests of Ceylon sportsmen are to be sacrificed to this end? The Game Protection Society did well to risk a snubbing and record their protest. The walls of Westminster would ring with indignation were the interests of a section of the native community of Ceylon or India so arbitrarily sacrified. This is not the first time that a German Duke has received protection of this kind, but we hope it will be the last. Fair play is the essence of sport, and we believe our foreign visitors would themselves deprecate such official assistance towards their collections of heads if they knew the unsportsmanlike way in which alone it can be rendered. The whole thing is wrong, and no one knows this better than Sir Henry Blake, who comes from perhaps the most truly sporting country in the world. Let foreigners come and shoot in Ceylon by all means, but let them come as sportsmen and take their chance as Ceylon men do. With the growing popularity of Ceylon and the numbers of foreign and other equally distinguished British visitors who come here each year, we hesitate to think where this Government protection might not lead us to in time."

It is by no means unlikely, we hear, that one or two English greyhounds will be taken to South Africa this summer for the suggested Waterloo Cup at Kimberley, for speculation is certain to be brisk and the stake will be well worth winning. Mr. Jas. Walker, of Stanton Harcourt, Oxon., who came to the front so quickly as a judge during the past season, was in South Africa as Dr. Rutherfoord Harris's secretary for several seasons, and while there he did a lot of judging at coursing meetings. His idea is that there is a big opening for a summer season, there being plenty of game on the diamond fields, while in good hands a representative meeting held in the neighbourhood of Kimberley could not fail to attract support of the right kind.

During a residence of many years among four different tribes of Indians, I found, with very few exceptions, they were poor shots, either with the gun or rifle, says a well-known sporting writer.

When one considers that from young boyhood they have been in the habit of using a gun almost daily, and their very living depends, in a great manner, on accurate shooting, their poor marksmanship is to be wondered at; nevertheless, such is the case. A good wing shot is a rarity among the Indians.

The Montagnais of the Labrador and North Shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence are no exception, and this in a country where most of the wildfowl are killed flying. It is admitted they kill wild geese and ducks while on their passage north and south, but this is only possible from the immense numbers of birds and a lavish expenditure of ammunition.

It is a common thing for an Indian getting his spring outfit to go among the islands to take from the trader one hundred pounds of shot, a keg of twenty-five pounds of powder and two thousand five hundred percussion caps (they use muzzle-loaders). They always take about 20 per cent. more caps than are necessary to fire the powder, as they explain, to make up for what they drop.

We read of, and are told about, the great slaughter the Indians used to make among the buffalo in the good old days; but this success was not to be attributed to their good marksmanship, because they killed these noble beasts with their guns almost boute touchant.

One thing about their mode of loading and firing might be interesting to readers of the present day, inasmuch as a generation has been born and has grown up since the last buffalo roamed the plains.

The Indians and half-breeds who went on these periodical round-ups were armed with, and preferred, the old nor'-west muzzle-loading flint-lock. They could load and fire with such rapidity that one would almost fancy they carried a repeating gun. Suspended under their right arm by a deer thong was a common cow's horn of powder, and in a pouch at their belt a handful or two of bullets.

As the horse galloped up to the herd, the Indian would pour a charge of powder into his left hand, transfer it into the barrel of the gun, give the butt a pound on the saddle, and out of his mouth drop on top a bullet. As the lead rolled down the barrel it carried in its wet state particles of powder that stuck on the sides and settled on top of the powder charge. No rod or ramming was used.

The gun was carried muzzle up, resting on the hollow of left arm until such time as the Indian desired to fire. The quarry being so close no aim was required. On deflecting the barrel the trigger was pulled before the ball had time to roll clear of the powder.

The Indians saw that their buffalo guns had very large touch-holes, thereby assuring the pan being primed. When all the balls were fired a few others were chucked into the mouth and merrily went the game.

In these days of scarcity in the horse supply various artifices are resorted to in order to make the animal appear either younger or older than he really is. Of course, reputable dealers do not invoke the aid of any such deceptive practices, but we know that when the incentive is strong enough, as it is just now in the keen demand and high prices of both horses and mules, there are always at least a few men who are willing to take chances to get by deception a little more money out of anything they may have to sell. The process of "bishoping," or as it is more generally called, "fixing," a horse's mouth is comparatively simple, but the job must be extra well done to deceive an experienced horseman.

In the effort to make a colt appear older than he is the familiar instance of extracting the two small milk teeth which appear in four-year-olds as the last pair of the incisors above and below may be cited These are naturally shed and replaced by permanent teeth at five, but if they are pulled out no man can tell that the horse is not rising five years of age and has shed the last milk teeth before the permanent incisors have begun to show themselves and push the others out of place. A three-year-old may also be made to appear as though a year older by the extraction of the second pair of milk teeth. This part of it sounds simple enough, and it is.

On the other hand, the "fixing" of an old horse's teeth to make him appear young is a much more difficult proposition. As the horse advances in age his teeth grow longer and the grinding surfaces assume a different character to those of the age of eight or less. The method chiefly employed is to saw the teeth off with a fine steel saw to the proper length, and then by means of boring apparatus to dig out the necessary indentations and to stain the grinding surfaces by means of chemicals into the semblance of the colored marks prevailing in younger horses. These chemically produced marks, however, soon wear off in the process of eating, and the man who has bought a horse with a "fixed" mouth will surely be confronted with the teeth of his horse showing the proper length, but without the dark marks which proclaim the age up to eight years.

There is, however, little cause to be taken in with a horse that has had his teeth tampered with in this way. Any man who has had any experience with horses knows that the general appearance of the teeth changes as the animal grows older, utterly irrespective of the grinding surfaces. There is a change in color and direction which can hardly be mistaken, and the best thing to do is to let suspicion end all thoughts of making a purchase of the animal engendering it.

A very interesting report has been issued by the newly-formed Society for the Protection of Big Game, which subscribes ten shillings a year for the privilege of believing itself a factor in the universe. The belief is cheap at the money, remarks "Ranger" of the I. S. and D. News, and if the Society could only exercise any influence on the big game it would be the greatest bargain known and, the cheapest "learned" society to belong to. Game wardens would be very foolish people not to notice an increase of big game, because in that event they would lose office. But the big game of Africa must still depend upon the unexplored vastness of the country, and not on reservations without game-keepers. It is very satisfactory that in spite of threats of the rapid decline and probable extinction of the African elephant, some very monstrous tusks have recently been obtained in East Africa. In one case the shooter observed that the elephant was really troubled to carry his gigantic ivories. It is satisfactory because it proves almost certainly that the gloomy forecasts were too pessimistic. Elephants do not put on hundred weights of ivory in a few years, and this is proof enough that the monster having such ivory had never been seen before by white men. and also is presumptive evidence that many an unknown and unsuspected herd may still flourish. The recently killed giants must have had far above the average ivory as long ago as Gordon Cummings's South African adventures. The worst threat to these great beasts is that of applying the Indian kheddah system to them; although it is not long ago that one of the principal morning papers admitted a long article to its columns advocating the Indian kheddah system to be applied to African elephants, as the only means of preserving them from extinction. The sequel to this is that the kheddah system in Ceylon, Burma, and India has given out, so that the Indian Government has had to look further afield, and it now appears that the kheddah system is to deplete Africa of its elephants. It should be understood that this system implies merely the catching and taming of wild elephants, and that in confinement these beasts do not breed. Captain Stanley Flower, Director of the Zoological Gardens of Egypt, and a son of the late Controller of the British Museum, has proceeded to Central Africa to catch elephants for the Indian Government. It is an enterprise of great magnitude, especially if it is to be conducted without the assistance of already trained elephants. It has a good deal of speculative novelty in it also, as it is by no means certain that African elephants when caught old have ever been trained. Nothing, for instance, is known as to where Hannibal got his fighting elephants, and they may as easily have come from Persia as from Numidia. The principal regret about the kheddah system is that destruction of life is so great between the capture and the taming of the elephants. Still, it must be fine sport, and on the principle of the greater the danger the greater the sport must rank even before cow-punching.

It is rather dismal news to hear that Martha, the baby gorilla who has recently arrived at the London Zoo, is ill and not expected to recover. The Zoo authorities have done everything in the world for the unfortunate creature, but all, apparently, without any effect. For ourselves, observes a home paper, we greatly wish the public-spirited persons would forego the temptation to present young gorillas to the Zoo. The gorillas always die, and it is not pleasant to be told that it is impossible to get a young gorilla without first killing its mother. The Zoo authorities are believed to have been trying to engage a woman nurse, but experienced gorilla-nurses are not easy to come by.

The latest invention of the age is a bullet warranted not to kill, and primarily intended for the use of those who feel that a duel is the only proper means of protecting and preserving personal honour. Particulars of the invention have been communicated by Mr. Walter Winans, the famous revolver shot, who was present at a practical test made on the 6th ultimo at the Gardin de Paris. The bullet is the invention of Dr. Dierllers. It hits, but does not kill. It enabled a group of pistol shots to practise on each other under duelling conditions. Only one was hurt in the trials referred to, although all were more or less hit. The wounded man imprudently lowered his pistol after firing, and his opponent, who fired a moment later, hit his unprotected pistol hand and inflicted a nasty wound. The pistols had steel guards, rather like those on cavalry swords, which protected the hand when in the act of shooting, and the inventor warned the shooters not to lower the hand till their opponents had fired. With the eyes protected by strong motor glasses, no more protection was absolutely necessary, but those who preferred to make more sure wore padded long blouses. The shooters who hit all their men without a miss were Commandant Fergens and Mr. Walter Winans. Both disdained to wear any protection, except for the eyes.

Our Ootacamund correspondent writes:—The Nilgiri Game and Fish Preservation Society are very keen in their efforts to preserve the head of game on these hills. Or rather to increase and diversify it. For many years attempts to introduce the red jungle fowl of Ganjam and Northern India, have been in progress, but the birds have been hand-reared, and, independently of other drawbacks to this system, there are the two principal ones that they are not clever at feeding themselves, and that they are so tame as to become an easy prey to their natural enemies. Within the last few days, however, there has been a new departure in the introduction of two cocks and three hens of the wild Ceylon jungle-fowl, which is practically identical with the Ganjam species. To these birds have been added five hand-bred Ganjam hens, and this promising little covey has been turned down in "Governor's Shola," a big covert which has been preserved as an asylum for small game for some years. Results should be satisfactory, but whilst on the subject of jungle-fowl it may be mentioned that the grey jungle-fowl are not so numerous on the Nilgiris as they were a year or two ago. Moral, stop the shooting of hens for a year or two, and have no mercy on irresponsible youngsters who say that they shot a hen by mistake for a young cock.

The question of sambur and ibex is a doubtful one—that is so far as the measures to preserve them and improve the heads are concerned. Taking sambur first, there are many contradictory opinions given. "A" says that the horn limit should be raised from 27 inches to 30 or even 32 inches. And "A" knows what he is talking about, for he was shooting sambur on these hills years almost before your own correspondent was born. "B" on the contrary argues that if you raise the limit, there will be practically no shooting at all. As it is, says "B" and he too is an experienced shikari, most men do not care to shoot a stag under 30 inches. And he most truly adds that it is uncommonly hard to judge to an inch or two, when sambur present themselves in mist or fine weather, at all distances, at all angles and in all lights. Possibly "B" is also sound when he says that the average good stag on these hills does not exceed 32 inches; all that surpass this are more or less exceptional. And though Mr. Edward Hadfield, who last year shot the 42-inch champion stag for practically all time on the Nilgiris can afford to despise a 32-inch head, most people cannot do so. Ibex are another question. That their numbers have increased immensely of late is certain. A good shot of my acquaintance, who was out for a few days a week ago, told me that he had seen at least 300 ibex, but not one "saddle-back," and at ibex he did not fire a cartridge. Well this boy (he was only a boy) showed himself to be a sportsman: but the crucial point is what is best from an increased point of view. A reason has been given me by an older sportsman for the absence of the "saddle-backs"; which is to the effect that at this time of year they are much lower down the slopes. The "brown" bucks, although they often carry splendid heads, should undoubtedly be left alone for the present, because they are of use, while the "saddle-backs" are not, being past their prime and undesirable for breeding purposes. But the old females might well be shot off to some extent, although this proposition may probably meet with opposition.

Concerning fish. It has lately been reported that a few half-pound trout have been taken by native anglers for tench and carp in the lake, and as has been already written to you, a fair reward has been offered for very small trout produced by such anglers. A great authority—possibly there is no harm in naming Sir Frederick Price—is sceptical as to these half-pound trout, and believes them to be the Indian "trout," a species with an awful classical name which I cannot remember. On the other hand a specimen is said to have been seen by a canny Scotchman who has taken many a Scotch trout and is not likely to make a mistake. Certainly on the face of it the muddy Ootacamund lake is not a likely place for the breeding of trout, and the great authority quoted above pertinently inquires, "Where are your spawning beds"? As regards brown trout, it is more than doubtful whether they will breed in India under any circumstances, and concerning rainbow trout, it is to be feared that those introduced to the Nilgiris have been put down in unsuitable places. However there is to be a dragging of the lake to-morrow to try and settle the matter. Cynics remark that if otherwise unproductive, it is likely to develop an epidemic of typhoid fever!

Athletic Notes.

WE publish in this issue the complete results of all the Polo, Hockey and Football Tournaments held in India during the twelve months ending 30th April 1906, together with the centuries made in cricket during the same period. To our statistics this year we have added a Sportsman's Obituary which will be found on the last page of the paper.

The Calcutta Golf Club has just begun a Bogey Competition which is to run throughout the month: a handicap is also advertised for the 4th and 5th instant.

We find ourselves in cordial agreement with the following remarks made by a writer in an English sporting contemporary, for it has frequently been our lot to encounter the "pot hunter" and pseudo-athlete who measures his successes chiefly by the value of the prizes he lifts. Our friend writes:—

"One of the public school magazines has been urging the adoption, by the school in question, of medals instead of cups and other varied objects of utility and certa as prizes in the athletic sports. The general fitness and desirability of the principle proposed is obviously so strong that it is always remarkable that so few schools have followed the example of the universities in adopting it. There is no doubt whatever that a simple medal bearing the school arms, and a brief inscription and date, would be much more valued by every self-respecting schoolboy than the salad bowls, clocks, and carving-knives, of which he frequently now finds himself the astonished possessor. A challenge cup is, of course, not open to the same objections as prizes which become personal property, but a certain severity of taste is here, too, better than display. The English schoolboy is fully as capable as the ancient Greek of appreciating the splendid worthlessness of the crown of wild olive, and where the pot-hunting spirit so rarely exists, it is a pity to keep up the paraphernalia and appearance of it."

The Murree Football Tournament starts on the 28th instant. Entries closed last Saturday: we have not yet received the complete list, but are told to expect a good gathering of talent.

The "White Horse" whisky seems to be achieving in this country something like the popularity it enjoys in England. The Calcutta Agents—Messrs. Devereux and Co.—remind us of this fact with a sample which our resident expert pronounces extremely comforting under present atmospheric conditions.

The news of G. E. Larner's retirement from the amateur path has been received by all lovers of athletics at home and abroad, with a feeling akin to disappointment. The career of G. E. Larner, who may be regarded as the greatest walker the world has ever known, has been all too short, for it is only a matter of three seasons back that he created not a little sensation by his marvellous powers of locomotion. Although Larner only came out in 1903, in the following year he succeeded in winning the two and seven miles walking championships in such excellent time, that it was believed he would soon lower some of the records. At the end of July in that year he established a new world's record for three miles by covering the distance in 20mins. 34secs. A month later, at the Manchester Police Sports, he set up new figures for the mile, and on the same afternoon created a world's record for two miles—a most remarkable feat in one afternoon. Since that time he has swept the boards, long-standing records have gone to the wall on almost every occasion he has turned out. Larner, as is generally known, is one of the respected members of the Brighton Police Force, and a very much admired personage at the famous seaside resort.

The following are his chief walking performances on the path:—

The foreign entries for Henley Royal Regatta are all for the Diamond Sculls, and are as follows :—R. W. Adams, Mercantile R.C., Melbourne; Harrison Bourke, Tamar R.C., Launceston, Tasmania; W. B. West, West Philadelphia R.C., U.S.A.; and Miltiade Manno, Pannonia Club, Budapesth, Hungary. This is the largest entry of foreign scullers that has been made in the history of the regatta. Canadian, Dutch, German, and Belgian entries close on 1st June.

G. Stanbury, the winner of the Sculling Championship of the World in 1905 against G. Towns, has accepted Towns' challenge to contest the World's Championship in July, on the Parramatta River.

The final in the Finney Hockey Cup tournament was played on the Railway ground at Rawalpindi on Wednesday evening, the 25th April, between "D" Squadron, IX (Queen's Royal) Lancers and the North-Western Railway (Rawalpindi) Hockey Club, and resulted in a popular win for the Lancers by 2 goals to 1. The Lancers well deserved their victory, having had to work their way to this stage by playing such redoubtable teams as the Military Accounts Games Club in the second round, and the No. 6 M.B., R.G.A., in the semi-finals, and on each occasion winning by 2 goals to 1; whereas the Railway team had an easy walk over in their previous games.

As most people thought, the match for the wrestling championship of the world between Hackenschmidt and Madrali could end only one way—in the victory of the first named. The encounter took place at "Olympia" in London, last Saturday and Madrali was beaten, catch-as-catch-can style, by two throws to nothing.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—The drawing for the Aga Khan Hockey Tournament took place on Monday and play commences on the 7th. The new teams, not entered when I wrote last week, are the York and Lancaster Regiment from Mhow, the Bhusawal Gymkhana, St. Xavier's College, Calcutta, the Royal Scots, Parel Gymkhana, Pioneer's H. C., Bombay Boys H.C., R. G. A., Colaba, Fort and Proprietary High School, the Education Society and the City Club. With twenty-three entries, the tournament is in a better position than ever before and far more general interest is being taken in the event. Opinion differs as to which of these teams will come out victorious. St. Xavier's from Calcutta, Grant Medical or the Cathedral High School O. B. The Bombay Gymkhana is still weak and wants a lot of pulling together.

Rackets is usually reckoned a game for the young, but the recent successes of Major S. H. Sheppard, R. E. and Mr. Percy Ashworth prove that comparative veterans are still very much to be reckoned with. Indeed the former's dual victory in the Military and the Amateur Championships forms one of the first feats in the history of the game, and his many Anglo-Indian friends and admirers will be proud to know that the cognoscenti esteem Major Sheppard the best racket player who has appeared since H. K. Foster, a decidedly younger man as far as years go, by the way, than the Major himself.

May is here and the cricket season has begun at home. It does not seem likely to be a very exciting one, though Yorkshire, Lancashire and Kent should form a trio of keen competitors for the County Championship. Sussex too will be well in the running if Ranjitsinghji returns and plays regularly, as is promised, but this remains to be seen. Middlesex too and Essex, the latter perhaps in particular should do better than last year and Surrey are, on paper at least, capable of beating anybody at the Oval. There are likely to be few changes in the personnel of the various county elevens, and up at Cambridge, who should be decidedly stronger than their Dark Blue rivals it is said that ten old blues, at least nine, will be availabe out of last year's victorious eleven. R.A. Young and L. G. Colbeck will be watched with keen appreciation, and the Oxonians too will have plenty of batting with G. N. Foster, amongst others, sure to train on.

Many athletes are doubtless acquainted with the merits of "Paul's Mittens"—in our running days we regarded them as almost indispensable. To those who do not know of them we recommend a perusal of the advertisement appearing on page XI (inside back cover). All who walk, too, will find them a vast comfort and to those sportsmen who track their own game on the hills or plains they will come as a veritable boon and blessing, and if once tried, they will probably become permanent items in the Shikar Kit.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 13th April 1906.

WE have had uninterrupted summer since I wrote last : so warm has it been the last few days we could dispense with fires in the evening and sit with open windows. On the south coast it has been more than warm. Of 170 men of the 1st Battalion Buffs marching from Shorncliffe to Dover on Wednesday 30 fell out in consequence of the heat, and two died of heat apoplexy in Dover hospital! The Easter exodus began on Wednesday with unusual severity, thanks to the fine weather : the holiday season seems to have stolen upon us almost unawares this year, and the crowd of carriages in the Park of an afternoon has been more reminiscent of June than April. Mention of carriages in the Park, by the way, reminds me that the ban laid on motors last season by the Queen's desire is to be removed this year so far as electric carriages are concerned. These, it is officially announced, will be admitted during May, June and July between four and seven o'clock on production of licenses and badges to be procured at Office of Works. Since August last the motor-cars have been free of the Park, restrained only by the ten miles an hour order on the gates.

Parliament adjourned on Wednesday for the Easter holiday, having given the country something to think about in the shape of Mr. Birrel's Education Bill. The text of the measure fills four columns of the Times, and the first fruits of abuse about five columns : surveying these my soul is rejoiced by the reflection that the thing pertains to things political and I need not say anything about it, beyond offering the remark that the clergy of all denominations are dead against Mr. Birrell's "birrelligious" proposals and appear to have a strong following among the laity. An Education Bill squabble will be almost an agreeable change from, and assuredly a less harmful amusement than, the Chinese labour folly and setting Colonial Governments by the ears. Mr. Churchill seems to have accepted a hint from some quarter to effect that an inexperienced Under Secretary is not a Major Providence ; and his later utterances concerning Natal have been quite temperate.

Vesuvius has provided us with conversation and interest this week : those of us who like to be "in" everything maintain that the overhead mists that ofttimes visit us at this season (and others) have been darker than their wont the last day or two, and attribute their colour to fine volcanic dust wind borne from Vesuvius. I grant that the prevailing wind favours the carriage of dust ; I admit that the mist yesterday morning had a peculiar colour ; but inasmuch as it cleared away before ten revealing skies blue as ever London sees, I fear the volcanic dust theory cannot be upheld. It has been reserved for the Morning Post to put forward a scheme for the better control of Vesuvius. Reflecting that the Nile has been turned into nobler (irrigation) ways and Niagara harnessed to electric plant, "might not the rivers of fire from Vesuvius be directed into some trench or channel and discharged into the sea?" They might indeed if Vesuvius were regular in its habits, but the Morning Post's acquaintance with volcanoes appears to be slender. Next we shall have that hitherto usually sane organ framing a Bill for the Repression of Earthquakes and Byelaws for the Proper Control of Thunderstorms.

Like a beacon on a black night stands out the courage of Professor Mattucci and the carbunieri at the observatory. Heedless of the appalling surroundings the man stays at his post watching his instruments and sending messages of encouragement to the panic-stricken country below. It is magnificent.

SHOT

Sportsmen strongly recommend IMPROVED CHILLED SHOT made by the ABBEY IMPROVED CHILLED SHOT COY. of Newcastle-on-Tyne, England.

The "Pilgrims" gave Lord Curzon a dinner at the Savoy Hotel on Friday evening ; and he gave the Pilgrims a speech which contained some useful hints to His Majesty's Ministers at Westminster. His adjuration to "trust the man on the spot" was distinctly needed, and though the previous introduction of Lord Milner's name indicates that his remarks were to Mr. Winston Churchill's address, Lord Curzon's thoughts must have been running on the District Officer when he went on "do not weary or fret or nag him with your superior wisdom....They are loyal to you—do not have any fear about that. They are running your show not their own. They claim no immunity from errors of opinion or judgment, but their errors are nothing to be compared to yours....After all remember that these men know more of local facts than you can do yourself and their judgment on the whole is likely to be more correct."

A case which serves to exhibit the helplessness of the deserted husband was settled in the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division on Monday. Albert Smith took service as groom with Robert Kaye, a hosiery manufacturer : he gave Miss Kaye lessons in riding, "walked out" with her, and in the end married her secretly. Two days after the marriage Kaye and his brother-in-law heard of it, raided the premises where Smith and his bride were living and carried off the latter. Thereupon Smith brought an action against them and obtained a verdict for £500, which was paid : but he could not get his wife back, and therefore brought an action for restitution of conjugal rights. Sir Gorell Barnes ruled that Mrs. Smith was old enough to know her own mind and found for the groom husband. The result is therefore (a) Smith may have his wife if he can find her—which seems unlikely as she was not "produced" in court ; (b) that if he does find her no earthly power can make her live with him if she doesn't want to—which latter would clearly seem to be the case.

Miss Gertie Millar, otherwise Mrs. Monckton, has been suffering one of the unjust penalties of popularity. A firm of photographers produced and offered for sale a series of picture postcards representing the actress in various phases of undress, one card to which particular exception was taken showing her in her "nighty." The defendant photographers admitted that these pictures were libellous, inasmuch as they were contrived by sticking Miss Gertie Millar's head on the photo of somebody else's body : and the best defence they could offer was that if she had never yet appeared so lightly clad during her professional career there was no reason why she might not do so. Possibly they had in mind that dance by Miss Millar and others in pyjamas (in "The Orchid") where "She'll never wear a nighty any more" made such a hit with the gallery. The defendants undertook to neither publish nor sell any more of the pictures objected to.

Not mine I apprehend to touch upon the boat race. The hour, noon, and the beauty of the day brought about the largest crowd I have ever seen to the riverside from starting point to finish : but it was not so enthusiastic a crowd as usual. The appearance of the crews has hitherto always been the signal for an outburst of cheering : on Saturday, the dense crowd about the boat house saw the boats launched and the crews paddle down to the starting point with a murmur of gratification : the race was rowed almost in silence : and the cheering at the finish was perfunctory to a degree. The attitude of the crowd was the subject of universal comment : the idea that there was any "feeling" is preposterous, for Cambridge colours were flown by the majority. I take refuge in the belief that the crowd went out to see a race and resented the spectacle of a procession : for Oxford never had a look in.

Sunday, 1st April, was the "outsiders" Show Sunday, and last was that of the Academicians. The only picture that occurs to mind as possessing interest for you is Mr. Orchardson's not quite finished portrait of Sir Frank Younghusband. In a certain studio on Sunday afternoon came one who, recalling to my memory Mr. Sargent's portraits of two Miss Wertheimer's at the Academy a few years ago, observed that the painter had since done portraits of other members of the art dealer's family : and with such measure of acceptance that the dining-room, where the works hang, is become known to Mr. Wertheimer's friends as the "Sargent's Mess."

As usual in Holy Week there is rest at the Theatres, many of which are closed. The Garrick has been giving special performances of "Everyman," as appropriate to the season, and other houses suspend their ordinary programme. The Stage Society gave on Monday a performance of M. Brieux's "Maternité," which has been translated into English by Mr. Bernard Shaw. It is an unpleasant play, and M. Brieux has so allowed his ideas to carry him away that he is no more concerned to make his characters lifelike than were the authors of the old morality plays. Motherhood, whether licensed or unlicensed, is the subject, and according to M. Brieux the former is little less of a burden than the latter. It is hardly likely the piece will ever find its way to the boards of a regular play-house in England. The Stage Society loveth strong meat.

Miss Edna May was once identified with the part of the Belle of New York. It is a common thing for Belles of New York to develope into Belles of Mayfair, and that is what has happened to her at the Vaudeville Theatre. A variety entertainment of that name, strung on to a thin spun thread of plot, of the Romeo and Juliet order, was inaugurated on Wednesday evening, and won the suffrages of a large audience. Deservedly, too, for if the plot is so almost invisible, that is permitted to so-called musical comedies, and there are plenty of parts suited to the individuality of such actors as Mr. Arthur Williams, Mr. Farren Soutar, and Mr. Courtice Pounds, of such fascinating actresses as Miss Louie Pounds, Miss Ruby Ray, Miss Lilian Digges and Miss Edna May. The dresses are exquisite, the solos melodious if not very original (Mr. Leslie Stuart is responsible for the music, and Messrs. Basil Hood and C. H. E. Brookfield did the "book"), but the choruses are original and full of "go," and what more do you want beyond rousing choruses? Some of the dancing too is very attractive. Several of the performers, notably Miss Louie Pounds and Miss Edna May herself, show qualities of acting worthy of more solid material. But what of that? A flower is a flower whether at a wedding or a funeral.

Mrs. Patrick Campbell has been acting in "The Whirlwind" at Birmingham. This is an adaptation of M. Bernstein's "Rafale," which gave us Mme. Réjane's art in its most intense and passionate form during the past season at the Royalty. A good deal has been eliminated in the English version, but enough is said to remain to give "Mrs. Pat" scope. The play is to be given in London before long. It has also, of course, been a quiet week in the music-halls. At the Empire is a new turn by Mr. Bransly Williams called "Actors Day by Day:" Miss Daisy Cordell acts a young woman who is wooed in turn by Mr. Williams in the character of Mr. Alexander, Mr. Martin Harvey, Mr. Tree, Sir Charles Wyndham and others. His mimicry of the methods of each is exceedingly clever, though the dialogue struck me as open to much improvement.

A remarkably interesting and clever exhibition of conjuring was given at St. George's Hall on Tuesday, the members of the "Magic Circle" and Amateur and Professional Conjurors' Club being invited guests. Some of the feats were most extraordinary: one performed by Mr. Devant was particularly baffling: he produced a large tub with hollow ends, and covering these with white paper tapped the tub, whereupon Diogenes in classic dress burst out through the paper. Another, to the outsider, amazing feat was to borrow a watch, put it in a tiny bag and then produce from the bag a large waistcoat tied with ribbon to a live guinea-pig; a very clever elaboration of a very ancient trick.

Is another Great International Exhibition wanted in London? Mr. Bell, the member for Great Yarmouth, thinks it is, because no such exhibition has been held in London since 1862. One might suppose that a reason for concluding that it has not been wanted. It needs much power of belief to assume that exhibitions serve any informing purpose: I wonder what the takings would amount to if some courageous entrepreneur tried to engineer one at, say, Earl's Court with bands, cock shies, and the usual side shows. I fear me his appearance in the Bankruptcy Court would speedily follow.

I thought the boom in music hall wrestling was over, but evidently there are plenty of people who long to feast their eyes on Hackenschmidt and Madrali. The twain have been advertised to wrestle "catch as catch can" for the championship of the world at Olympia on Saturday, the 28th, and by Wednesday £10,000 worth of tickets had been sold at the box office apart from the unascertained sales at libraries, etc.

A strong committee of actors, managers and playwrights has been formed to start a National Shilling Fund for Miss Ellen Terry to celebrate her fiftieth year on the stage and place her future comfort beyond anxiety.

The District Railway Company has decided to abolish the sliding doors by which passengers refuse to leave as they were asked to do and use the space for seats It would have expedited matters much if people could have grasped the use of those doors: but as they prefer to scramble out against the incoming stream, they are to be allowed to do it.

Nothing like a really well chosen escort for a holiday. Thirty sewer cleaners of Marylebone are gone to Paris to visit the drains of that city, thus we may hope combining instruction with real pleasure!

I fear I was too previous in assuming that the L.C.C. is going to manage affairs in a business-like fashion. On Tuesday votes were carried for about £90,000 for the extension of electric trams, on which extensions it was clearly shown and frankly acknowledged there must be a considerable loss.

The Chinese Commissioners visited the War Office on Saturday and were received by Mr. Haldane and an imposing assemblage of Generals. Mr. Haldane promised to afford the visitors every facility in obtaining light on our methods of organisation and training. It is well the Chinese Commissioners did not come a year or two ago: the organisation system had been hard to master.

Have you read Mr. Upton Sinclair's book "The Jungle"? I presume the name refers to the remorselessness with which man preys on man, for the scene lies in "Packingtown," Chicago, and anything more remote from wild or natural life could not well be conceived. Dealing with the miseries of Lillmanian immigrants who have come to America as a "free country" owning two words of English among them "Chicago" and "job," the story is the most depressing thing I have ever laid aside unfinished. The condition to which "Trusts" and municipal politics as conducted in the States reduces the wretched foreign workers is a disgrace to humanity if this picture be not over drawn. It is horrible, but it is clever. Zola himself never drew pictures so sordid and repulsive with a more convincing hand. There is hardly a ray of sunshine from start to where I left off four-fifths through. I do not know which of the two phases of life set out is the more disgusting, the industrial as shown by Durham's beef killing establishment or the political. Read it if you want nightmare.

Review.

THE FOX.*

THE Fox cannot complain that he has been neglected in literature; but it is somewhat curious that, unless we count Mr. Smith's Life of a Fox a monograph, it has been left to a modern autho to devote a whole book to that animal. The last addition to the Fur, Feather and Fin Series edited by Mr. Watson is Mr. T. F. Dale's work "The Fox;" and the author deals with him from every possible point of view omitting not even his fur bearing cousins of the Arctic and Siberia nor his more distant relative the jackal. In this last we trace the affection Mr. Dale bears toward this country where, in years gone by, he bore prominent part in jack hunting. There is, perhaps, no animal in Britain whose habits and mode of life are better understood than the fox: his ways have been of necessity the study of M.F.H. huntsman and gamekeeper; and these among them have set on record all there is to know about him: a circumstance which relieves the present author from the necessity of that close personal study which justifies such a work under ordinary conditions. We are very far from asserting that Mr. Dale lacks personal acquaintance with vulpine life: his excursions in the field of hunting literature are quite enough to win for him title to write on the natural history of the fox; rather would we be understood to mean that the ground has been so thoroughly covered that there remains little chance of adding anything new; where this is possible the author does it: where it is not possible he deals with familiar facts in a fresh and entertaining fashion which more than satisfies.

We observe with interest that he does not accept the superior intelligence of the fox as proven. Thanks to the fabulist and dealer of folk lore the cunning of the fox has for centuries been held the apotheosis of all that is astute. Mr. Dale boldly maintains his doubt concerning the superiority of vulpine intelligence, and affirms that he has known both deer and hare to exhibit a cunning of trickery in chase which he has never known displayed by the fox. We are, we admit, not quite sure that he makes out his case as regards the hare—he offers no evidence in the shape of incident in connection with the deer: to assume that the hare deliberately went back in her tracks from a certain gate, is, we suggest to assume, too much. A hare, as we all know, beats the harriers time and again by the leap aside and change of course: but we want clearer proof that the change was made at the gate because she knew it would aggravate the difficulty of recovering the line. Without doubt the physiognomy of the fox has earned for him a reputation higher than he might otherwise enjoy—we hesitate to say higher than is his due. The sharpness of the head lends an air of cunning observable in no other beast with which we are acquainted: and of this the fabulist and the artist have made the most. Nevertheless, and while conscious of the impossibility of proving the case, we are much inclined to accredit the fox with more cunning or intelligence than the deer or hare. It is impossible to decide the point for the obvious reason that we cannot compare the trick of one with the trick of another unless we should chance to witness the adoption of each trick under precisely similar conditions: and were we fortunate enough to be able to institute such comparison we should be no further advanced, for the good reason that foxes differ in degree of intelligence and deer also.

The different measure of intelligence owned by individual foxes is a point on which Mr. Dale insists and of which he makes good use. He holds that it is the simple—not over intelligent fox—that gives most sport: that the fox which leaves covert on hearing hounds or even the horn and goes straight away for some distant earth [illegible] gives a good run and [illegible] is the stupid fox. Unac[illegible] his safety to his feet and is, [illegible] stands still and killed in the open [illegible] our author maintains, clings to cov[illegible] preference; taking to the open when [illegible] pack press him too closely and he runs ri[illegible] We should like to have the opinion of some old [illegible] of the Badminton for instance, on this point. We [illegible] to hear whether in his fifty years of experience with ho[illegible] has found reason to think that the fox which was hardes[illegible] get away the "ringing brute"—proves, when forced to go away, addicted to such dodgery as running through sheep, passaging wall-tops, hiding under hound's very noses and poking up friends to replace him in greater degree than the simple minded fox which goes away at once and runs till he is dead beat. We grant the plausibility of Mr. Dale's proposition that this variability is essential to sport: it is the proposition of a thoughtful man and appeals to us. It has the merit, pointed out by the author, of theortical soundness, inasmuch as if every fox were simple and went away at once hounds would kill every fox they move when scent serves: and were all foxes cunning men would give up hunting game that refused to give a run. Good, from the sportsman's point of view: but while, adopting the proposition, we grant the value of variability from the sporting standpoint, we cannot fail to see that it is, so far, only a very tempting theory.

There is another passage in Mr. Dale's work which rouses the spirit of enquiry. In dealing with the foxes of Scinde and the Panjab he propounds the opinion that these do not leave a scent, thus differing in a subtle but very important respect from the fox of Europe: and he suggests that this lack of scent is a natural safeguard from the attentions of larger beasts of prey. It might be urged that the tiger, leopard, and their allies do not hunt by scent, but let that pass; in the first place we all know that their noses are keen enough to detect the scent of a fox and we should be sorry to maintain that they make no use of their noses in pursuit of game. A stronger objection presents itself than this problematical advantage enjoyed. Scent was surely not bestowed on the fox to the end that hounds (or other enemies) might hunt him: it must have been bestowed upon him for some purpose beneficial to the species. Mr. Dale, in another connection, suggests that it enables a solitary animal to seek out a mate and this we take it is very probable indeed. But why, we are justified in asking, why is the Indian fox denied this advantage—if he is denied it? We venture to doubt whether it has been withheld from him; and we suggest that his apparent lack of scent is due to two not very obscure causes: first the heat of the sun which forbids the brick hard soil to "carry" scent, and second the comparative failure of nose observable in hounds and other dogs translated from a temperate climate to a hot one. We are strongly inclined to think that the Indian fox does leave a scent, less potent no doubt than the European fox, but strong enough to enable the dog to track the vixen: and we are perhaps right in assuming that when Mr. Dale denies to the Indian fox possession of scent he refers to it in the sense used by hunting men, that is comparatively not absolutely. His book bears evidence of so much thought, such careful consideration of fact and well weighed reasoning that we feel sure this is the explanation

The book indicates width of reading and practical field knowledge as well as clarity of thought. Naturally the voice of the hunting man predominates: it would be strange were a keen hunting man able to divest himself of his inherent instincts and approach the animal he has always regarded as his peculiar sports provider from the new and unbiassed point of view of the naturalist: nor is it desirable that he should do so for the fox holds a position which is held by no other animal in the world, and must be approached in a spirit appropriate to his unique position. The book contains a vast quantity of interesting and curious information appealing alike to hunting man and naturalist: and it provides the advocate of sport with a large arsenal of well tested facts and figures wherewith to confound and put to route the humanitarian decrier of foxhunting.

AN EXCITING ADVENTURE WITH A CROCODILE.

BEFORE proceeding with an account of the adventure I had with this crocodile, I think I had better give a few facts regarding the habits of these reptiles. It is not perhaps generally known, that crocodiles annually shed some of their teeth, and these dental renovations generally occur about February and March. During this period, they usually resort to some of the shallower parts, where they lie immersed in the ooze and among the aquatic plants and vegetation, in a semi-torpid state. They are then extremely sluggish and seem to do entirely without food, and are difficult to rouse unless actually stirred up. These saurians are certainly at their worst about June and July and they are often then heard bellowing at night. These manifestations may often be heard a long way off. It is also at this period that these crocodiles are most fierce and venturesome, and it is not unusual to see them at such times stalking bullocks ploughing by the water's edge. As the brutes frighten away their cattle, the ryots often combine together and manage to get level with some of the more venturesome of these monsters.

Some time towards the end of February last, I was out snipe shooting along the margin of a rather extensive marsh, towards the centre of which there lay some deep pools. The part I was shooting on, was mostly about knee deep. Rushes and reeds grew thickly about, while aquatic plants of sorts made the walking very heavy. I had been having very fair sport and had just shot a snipe, which I saw drop a long way off Fearing to lose the bird, I made a bee line for it. My shikari was walking alongside of me, while the coolie with the cartridges was following behind. I had come to about the place, where I had seen the snipe fall, when the shikari suddenly grasped me by the arm and whispered "koomir" (crocodile). I was rather annoyed at first at what I thought to be the man's impudence, for I could see no crocodile about nor the signs of any. I asked the man what he meant by thus catching hold of my arm, when he asked me to step back, as I should be putting my foot on the "koomir's" back at the next step, but I said, "where is the koomir, where is he? I cannot see anything." The man still insisted in pointing to something, some six inches to the left of where I was standing, saying the brute was there.

rather critical, ght discretion the preparing to clear out, ought to kill the thing him at a disadvantage. But I have only shot cartridges and glance off the shield like backs off these Never mind, saheb, load with any big shot ges you may have and the short distance will do e rest. But this is all very fine I said, moreover I cannot yet see any koomir, tell me on which side is his tail and where is his head." The shikari then pointed to some submerged aquatic plants that rose slightly above the surface and said, the head is there and the raising of the weeds had been caused by the crocodile slightly lifting his head. Having put in a couple of No. 2 shot cartridges, I advanced a step or so nearer and could not have been more then five feet off the spot indicated by the man and where the weeds were slightly raised.

Carefully aiming at the spot, I let drive right and left. The commotion that followed baffles description and would have put any earthquake in the shade! I just managed to escape by a few inches from being knocked over, for I am sure, if one of those tremendous whacks from the saurian's tail had caught me, I should have been minus one or perhaps both of my legs! The brute now sorely wounded put up his head and snapped his jaws, while the tail went knocking about like a sledge hammer. To escape the mud shower the brute was throwing about him we had to retire to a respectful distance. I thought the brute was now in its death throes, when all of a sudden master crocodile finding himself once more on an even keel, started with a frantic rush. Not wishing to lose the brute that had already given us some trouble, we followed him rapidly and coming up to him again, I had another two shots at his head; this was followed by another frantic rush, when he received the contents of two more barrels; this was again followed by the same kind of performance but his movements were not nearly so energetic as at first. He however, managed to put in another spurt and this brought him to some deep water when we lost sight of him.

But I was determined not to let the beggar have the better of me. The spot where he had gone down was some three or four feet deep, but the water being clear and free from weeds, we determined to rouse him up. A dingy was procured and we soon boarded it and made for the spot where the crocodile was said to be lying. When we got over the spot, sure enough there was the "koomir" lying peacefully at the bottom. I now turned to my men and asked how we were to get at the brute. They replied they would soon get him to show himself again and proceeded to do the needful. The first thing they did was to get a stout rope. I thought to haul up the body of the deceased koomir. But I was soon undeceived, when I saw them fish out the crocodile's tail and tie it. They now told me to be ready: as they said, that while one of them lay hold of the tail rope, the others would poke him in the ribs, when he would be sure to come out with open mouth, down which I was to blaze away both barrels!

Everything being now ready, I took up my position in the bow of the boat, anxiously waited for developments. Soon the lugging at the tail and poking in the ribs began, but for the first five minutes or so no results followed, when all of a sudden and with a sort of hissing sound, there suddenly emerged the monster's head within some four feet or so of where I stood, the jaws expanded to their utmost. Now or never said I to myself. I pulled both triggers and the next instant was sent flying into the bottom of the boat with my feet pointed skyward. Having recovered my feet, I thought I had had enough of this business and told my followers so. But they assured me my services would no longer be required as our late enemy had ceased to exist. Very soon and with the help of volunteers the body of the saurian was hauled up on the bank and was found to measure some fourteen feet; and he was proportionately bulky. It proved to be one of the snubbed nose variety, vulgarly called muggur or scientifically C. Palustris.

RAOUL.

YARNS OF AN OLD FOGEY.

II.

I OFTEN wonder how many of the good sportsmen and true in the East ever have tried barefooted stalking and tracking. Personally I have for years done this, and I also as seldom as possible take a man with me, carrying my own rifle and cartridges myself with a fid of sandwiches and couple of sticks of chocolate. Given a well-developed bump of locality, well hardened feet, and a good training in general jungle lore I personally know of no more delightful experience than to spend a long day after bison, tsine or elephants and to bag one or more absolutely "on your own."

Of course I would not recommend any young sportsman to try the game, and few old ones unless they are real woodsmen. It has taken me years of habitually going about barefooted whenever I could possibly do so to enable me to negotiate rocky, or what is much worse, gravelly going with comfort. Even now after a more or less prolonged spell in civilization I, for the first two or three days at least, go out with a pair of rope-soled shoes stuck in my belt, one on each side of me, for use in the most trying parts if required.

It is now some eight to ten years since I have done most of my shooting as I have briefly outlined above. I say, "most of my shooting" advisedly as, of course, one must get to know one's forests just a little bit before going into them alone. Get to know first the main natural features and their trend, such as hill ranges, streams, rivers, forest roads or paths, fire lines and the places where tracks may be most frequently found, take a compass in case of a cloudy day and which in any case is a useful adjunct. Do not forget which solstice the sun is in, in case by any means you leave your compass behind, a pair of rope-soled shoes tucked into your belt in case of accidents. A waterproof cartridge bag containing, say, 20 cartridges with ten or so in your pockets, a packet of sandwiches, your pet rifle, whatever it may be (mine is a ·450 or ·577) and kick off. Make for some well-known ground, a salt lick for choice, where you should pick up tracks by 7 or 8 A.M. Given, of course, a good shooting country which has not been much harried and if you do not bag by midday you and your woodscraftship are at fault and not your rifle or the country.

Very many people will, of course, be absolutely debarred from doing as I suggest, they probably have neither the time or inclination nor opportunity to spend a fortnight or so getting to know the forest in which they intend to shoot, but to all forest officers and men of leisure who shoot for pleasure my notes are particularly directed. Nothing is more damnable (and in my case leads to swear words and worse) than to have one of your two, three or four followers cough or make some other hideous noise to which natives seem peculiarly given just as you are nearing a herd. Again you can, when alone, make your own pace, stop and listen when you want to, you have nothing to distract your attention, not a sound or movement except your own. When once you get on fresh tracks and if the ground is soft tread as much as possible in the track where already any possibly dry material has been trodden down, go dead slow, do not hurry, by doing so you wind yourself, make that fatal dump, dump, dump, of the bare, or shodden foot which, more than anything I know of startles wild animals. Remember that unless startled or making for some well-known ground, such as a salt lick, the position of which I am presuming you know, the movements of all three species which I am particularly referring to (viz, elephants, tsine and bison), especially when in herds and feeding are slow and methodical and laziness personified. The one fatal thing of course, is wind. If you have this all right you'll get a shot to a moral certainty almost. Even with the wind wrong and blowing dead towards your quarry I have persevered and bagged on at least three red letter days I can remember vividly as I write.

When just topping a ridge move by inches and carefully quarter the ground in front of you with your eyes, listening, auribus erectis, until you are sure there is nothing in your immediate neighbourhood. Bison particularly are very fond of stopping, browsing around in circles, and lying down on a ridge. Once on the top stand or sit a minute or so and listen intently. The crack of a young bamboo shoot sometimes sounds like a pistol shot almost in the dead stillness, and further attention in the same direction will almost certainly bring more slight sounds to your ears all well known and identifiable to a woodsman, the touch of a horn against a bent down bamboo or of a hoof against a recumbent one, the dull muffled sound of the toss of a head against a flank to drive off flies, the "glumph" of a regurgitated cud or the swallow of a well-chewed one both of which actions cause almost exactly the same sound, the gentle low moo of a cow to her calf, all these are slight but well-known indications which should lead you to a certain shot.

I need not continue the track and subsequent stalk until the successful shot possibly followed up by another lays a magnificent bull low, the momentary pang of regret which I believe nearly every sportsman feels when he sees the rapidly glazing eye of one of God's finest brutes followed by a feeling of exultation as one runs the tape across and around the horns and realizes that alone you have possibly "bagged a record," or near it. Cut off a few branches of green stuff with your shikar knife lightly covering the carcase blaze deeply and clearly three or four trees all round so that such will be visible at a considerable distance and then if possible lightly blaze your way back to any well-known natural or artificial feature for the guidance of the men you send back for your trophy and for the meet. Personally I always tell my men in what direction I am going in the hopes of picking up tracks, but I never allow them to follow me even at a distance, a herd very often works round in a circle and crosses its tracks and may possibly, even probably, not notice your scent but will most certainly do so that of five or six more natives, one or more of whom, in Burma at any rate, will be smoking and the rest chewing.

I hope I have written enough to persuade some of my brother sportsmen to try the game, but young shikaris, unless most exceptionally gifted, should leave it alone until they have had five or six years' experience and constant practice, or they may, and probably will, find themselves hopelessly lost and benighted, which may mean a night spent out and possibly a bad go of fever, or if he loses his head and gets into a funk a furious fusilade to attract attention and bring people to him, waste of ammunition, and the most complete startling of the jungle for miles round to the utter ruin of sport.

BURMAH.

La Fleche on her day was undoubtedly fit to rank with the many famous mares whose names have figured so prominently in the past history of the Turf, but it may not be generally known how near she was to making her début on the other side of the mill-pond instead of remaining here to prove her prowess.

When in company with other "Royal rats"—as the irreverent term used to yearlings bred at the Royal Stud—La Fleche was sent up for sale, an American gentleman wired to Lord Marcus Beresford requesting him to buy the daughter of St. Simon, six thousand guineas being the limit of the commission. By some means, however, the message did not reach his lordship until the filly had been purchased by the late Baron Hirsch for five hundred guineas less than the Transatlantic turfite was willing to give. If only in consideration of the charitable manner in which Baron Hirsch disposed of La Fleche's winnings, everyone must be pleased that she remained on this side of the Atlantic.

A QUESTION OF WARRANTY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—To settle a dispute would you kindly say if mange is a justification for returning a horse to a seller after a warranty has been given with the animal. Also is it not customary for blanket, bucket, roller and small stuff to go with the horse when sold?

T. W. P.

ASSAM, 26th April 1906.

[Mange certainly justifies the return of the animal. It is included in Stonehenge's list of diseases that entitle the purchaser to return a horse warranted sound. Yes, stable articles go with the horse, unless it is bought at auction; this is the custom. —ED.]

INDIAN SWIMMING RECORDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I should be much obliged if you would let me know: (1.) The 100 yards swimming record for India. (2.) Other standard distance Indian records up to a mile (3.) Where I could obtain a description of the "crawl" swimming stroke.

J. W. W.

CALCUTTA, 27th April 1906.

[The Indian amateur records—all made at the Calcutta Swimming Bath, 100 feet long—are as follows:—100 yards, H. P. Henderson, 1min. 12⅘secs: 200 yards H. P. Henderson, 2mins. 47secs.; 400 yards, H. P. Henderson, 6mins. 53⅘secs. The late Mr. Henderson, a very fine swimmer, held all records out here, and his times have never been lowered, though on one or two occasions they have been approached.

The Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News, which reached Calcutta by last week's mail, contains an illustrated article on the "crawl" "trudgeon" and other strokes.—ED.]

AN ALTERATIVE MIXTURE FOR DOGS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you, or any of your readers, put me on to a really good, safe and reliable alterative and tonic for dogs? Many of the inmates of my kennel—especially the juvenile division—are completely off colour and run down after a protracted visitation of distemper some time ago. I cannot get them fit again though I have tried a few nostrums and four or five of the mixtures to be found in Stonehenge and Major C.'s Notes on Dogs. Worms, too, I find have taken firm hold of some of the terriers and positively decline to be ousted by areca nut or santonine. I shall be really grateful if some one can come to my rescue.

W. H. M.

[For an all-round mixture we unhesitatingly recommend "Benbow's," and we do so after years of experience. It acts like magic when given after distemper or any malady which leads to debility. It is a splendid tonic and as an agent in the preparation of dogs for show it cannot, in our opinion, be surpassed; indeed we should not think of showing a dog that had not undergone a course or two of "Benbow" ere he was benched. It soon produces perfect health conditions and its effect on the skin and coat is little short of marvellous. As a vermifuge it enjoys a well deserved reputation. We should strongly advise our friend to give it a trial; it is stocked by most chemists, we believe.—ED.]

TROUT FISHING ON THE DON.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I read with absorbing interest "W. F. B.'s" article in your issue of 19th April on the results of his trial of the Kintore Burgh water on the Don more especially so, as I know every yard of this stretch and also the water above this, as my father rented the latter stretch for some years. I must congratulate W. F B. on his splendid results, particularly as regards the size of his trout. The pool he alludes to at the junction of the two branches below the island was an old favourite of mine and I have often taken a good trout from its deep slow running waters. The trout become very shy as they are much fished over, but they are to be taken by the angler who fishes "fine and far off" and uses the dry fly occasionally. Just below this is the rapid stretch alluded to where one has to wade deep and cast a long line to reach the fat trout feeding just under the opposite bank. If one follows the main channel up beyond its division for about two hundred yards there is a splendid stretch of trout water which also requires deep wading to fish it properly. The water in question is about 4 feet deep, and runs slowly. On one occasion I took six trout from this piece of water weighing 5lbs. 6ozs., the largest 1lb. 6ozs., and the smallest 8ozs.

Further up just below the division of the stream there is a well known salmon pool with a long and very deep stream on the far side. I have sat and watched the trout rising there; such whoppers—the largest I ever saw clearly must have scaled over 5lbs. I have tried these fish repeatedly with wet and dry fly, but only very rarely with success. On one occasion I had tried a very large fish with every fly I could think of: each time he went down, but soon began to feed again. I suppose I spent 20 minutes over this trout. On glancing up stream I saw a man fishing down stream without any regard for the trout's seeing susceptibilities. Down he came casting monotonously with a long 16-foot rod. His flies made a splash each time they fell on the water. I sat and watched him. He had evidently got leave to fish as it was private water. He looked to be of the artisan class. Nearer and nearer he came until his flies came over my beauty. There was a lift of his rod and by Jove he was into my fish! He had no net and the way he pulled out that trout was a revelation in forcing tactics. He pulled it a little down stream and in less than five minutes he had it on the bank. This fish scaled 4lbs. I weighed it myself and it was the largest fish I ever saw taken in this stretch with the fly. My brother took one out of 4lbs. 7ozs. with "pair tail." So much for a fish's choice of diet. The man was using salmon gut and two loch size March Browns.

Above this pool, between it and the division of the river, in my opinion is one of the best stretches on the water. I have often made a basket of from 7st. 12lbs. on this short stretch, consisting of some oily pot eddies, and above this, a perfect trout stream and pool. To see the fish in the latter when on the feed is an extraordinary sight—rise, rise, rise—rises everywhere and all good trout, but so shy: the angler needs to be a skilful one who succeeds in catching many of them. On a fine May morning, with the trout feeding in this pool, one can realise what an angler's paradise is like. But here as everywhere on this stretch of water one must wade. To show how far more difficult it is to kill fish on this public water I may mention that in the stretch of private water above it is quite a rare thing to find the trout refuse your fly if properly presented. On this private water, which I have fished when quite young, and also in latter days, I have made some grand baskets. My best, speaking from memory, was nearly 24lbs., and the fish averaged over 3lb. I have taken fish up to 5lbs. 6ozs. with the minnow and I lost one of very nearly 8lbs. Our keeper took one of 10lbs. many years ago in what we termed "the old woman's pool (a woman was drowned there). With minnow one used to get splendid bags. I can give some—10 fish 19lbs., 6 fish 9lbs., and so on, and what splendid fat trout they are—these Don trout! No river in Scotland affords such feeding as the Don.

To return to the public water again. If one goes down stream below the large bridge there is a very rapid narrow rush. This holds some very large fish—it was here my brother got his fish of 4lbs. 7ozs. These large trout run like grilse and woe betide the man with a stiff running reel or a stiff rod unless he fishes with stout gut. Below this again we come to a long stretch of water with a high crumbling bank on the far side. It used to be my delight to drop a fly on to this bare bank and allow it to gently kiss the water—often and often just as the fly left the side after its fall there was a single tiny circle and then that electric like tug on one's line and then began the struggle that never seems to pall on an angler's heart. My favourite rod for this large river was a tiny 9-foot Dunkeld rod by Anderson and Anderson, Edinburgh, and I never want a better rod. I used the finest silk line and a reel with a regulator or check which one could alter at will. I found as a rule the art of sunken fly held its own, but at times one had to try "Dry fly." I will recall one incident. I spotted a large trout above me close under my bank. I was having lunch at the time. My companion made a bet that I couldn't catch the fish. Now the day was bright and clear, the fish was rising just under the bank in a piece of dead still water. I crawled up the stream keeping well away from the bank, and when I got level with the fish I wormed my way to the edge of the bank and looked over. There was my trout—a beauty, lying only some six inches under the surface, and even while I looked he came up in a slow and leisurely way and sucked down a tiny gnat. I cautiously withdrew and mounted the smallest dry fly I had—a black gnat. This done I again approached the fish having the rod in my right hand and the fly in my left. I slowly pushed the rod clear of the bank, pulled the line, and the recoil shot out the fly. No result, so I had a look—my fly was below the fish. I dared not cast, or move the rod, so what was I to do? I wound up the line till I had only the guttrace hanging free, and very slowly I moved the rod up towards the fish. He went down to my disgust. I wasted about five minutes having got my rod into position and at last up he came. My fly almost at once was over him and like a flash he had it—quite different to his former rises. There was a check, and away went fish and trace. I had wound the line in too far and the knot at the junction of my line and trace had caught in the top ring with disastrous results. My friend was highly amused and called me a poacher. Such incidents as these live in one's memory and one often recalls them when far away and in hotter climes such as we have out East.

In addition to this public stretch of water the "wanderer returned" can get some fine fishing at Alford by staying at the "Alford Arms." This is some 10 miles higher up the river and here the river is far prettier and runs more rapidly. In conclusion I would say that Aberdeen is an excellent centre to make for if the angler is not too flush of money. There is practically free fishing on the Ythan (finnock)—also very good sport to be had on the Deveron and the Ugie and other streams. Living in Aberdeen is absurdly cheap and the climate is the most bracing I know of, and hot too. Chilly during May, which is the best month for the spotted beauties in these parts.

THE NEW STEVENS ACTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—As the Stevens Single Shot rifles are now becoming better known in England and India, a short description of this Company's new sliding block action may be of interest to your readers. In the original Ideal Action the upper portion of the frame was cut away in the rear, so that the breech block was supported only below the barrel. In the new model that portion of the frame behind the breech is carried much higher, so that the top of the slots in the frame, in which the block slides, are behind the axis of the bore. The breech block is therefore supported by the frame directly behind the cartridge, and the new action is therefore just as strong and solid as the Winchester Single Shot, or any of the English sliding block actions.

This change in pattern was considered advisable, owing to the increasing use of smokeless powders. The old Ideal was amply strong enough for any charge of black powder, but now when high pressure smokeless powders have come into such general use, a specially strong breech closure is necessary to meet the excessive strains developed. High velocity cartridges have been brought out for both the ·32—40 and the ·38—55, and as the same shells are used, this new ammunition will fit rifles which were only intended for the old type cartridges loaded with black powder. The new Ideal Action has the rocking motion of the breech block which was such an excellent feature of the old pattern. As the breech rises, it has at first a forward as well as an upward movement. The cartridge is thus pushed home into the breech, after which the final movement of the block is a sliding upward one, in the slots of the frame.

This rocking movement is most valuable with long cartridges like the ·25—25 or ·28—30, as it prevents any chance of their being buckled if, as often occurs during hurried loading, they have not been pushed quite home by hand. The main spring in the new Ideal is also a great improvement over the old pattern: it is attached to the hammer by a stirrup, instead of bearing against it direct. This alteration gives a very smooth working lock. The Stevens Company now furnish special barrels of smokeless steel, if desired, at an extra cost of three dollars.

I alluded above to the ·37—40 and ·38—55 High Velocity Cartridges. I fancy few English sportsmen realize what an excellent little all-round weapon a ·32—40 rifle now is. For small game one could use a sharp pointed bullet, with about 5 grains of Schultze. This would give beautiful shooting, and would not mangle the game. For black buck and chinkara, a suitable charge would be 40 grains of Curtiss' and Harvey's No. 6 Black, and a hollow fronted lead bullet of 123 grains (Ideal Number 319261). For larger game one would use the soft pointed metal patched bullet of 165 grains, with a charge of 24½ grains of smokeless powder. This latter ammunition has a muzzle velocity of about 2,000 feet per second. It is a pity sportsmen in India do not go in more for loading their own cartridges. I know it is the difficulty of casting and lubricating bullets, which puts most of them off. As a matter of fact a very moderate attention to detail at first will ensure anyone casting bullets successfully. When this part of the art of cartridge loading is mastered, the rest is easy enough. In America there are a great number of people who delight in experimenting, and making up their own ammunition. It is owing to the constant researches of these numerous cranks, that rifle and ammunition manufacture has reached its present degree of perfection in the United States. The absolute lack of interest of the British public generally in the art of rifle shooting has been pretty well disclosed by the recent failures to raise money for National Clubs.

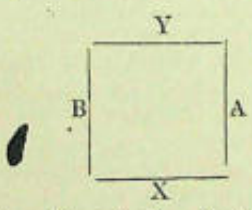
BRIDGE QUERIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I should be much obliged for your opinion on the following points which occurred at a game of bridge recently:—



A and B play X and Y—A deals and declares—no trumps, X doubles—A is "content"—Y leads ace of hearts out of turn. A says "The card is exposed and will be treated as such and left on the table."

X then leads ace of clubs. A says "But I have not exacted any penalty for Y's lead out of turn and I call on you (X) to lead a diamond." X says "as you treated my partner's lead out of turn as an exposed card you did exact a penalty and you cannot now exact a second penalty. Hence you cannot call a lead and my lead of ace of clubs is correct." X's argument is overruled and he is compelled to lead a diamond eventually losing two tricks, but all the time Y's ace of hearts was kept on the table (though not called) until hearts were led when, of course, Y took a trick with it and led a club to his partner.

The points I should like your opinion on are these:—

(1) If a card is led out of turn must it be kept on the table and as well a lead be called?

(2) Is keeping the card on the table and calling a lead out exacting a double penalty for one error!

(3) If a lead is called for a card led out of turn cannot that card then be picked up by the defaulter and kept in his hand during play?

(4) When A elected to treat the card as an exposed card was not X justified in considering that he had already exacted a penalty and therefore that X was justified in leading?

CUDDAPAH, 30th April 1906. X.

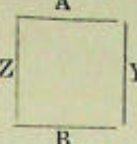
[1 and 2. To insist on the card being kept on the table for the purpose of calling it, and calling a lead is exacting a double penalty and is illegal. A elected to treat the card as exposed.

3 Yes, the defa... the card led in error, ... of the hand.

4 X, being justified in consi... Y's card as exposed and had ... perfectly entitled to lead. When Y ... should at once have put his cards on th... then have decided which penalty he would ...

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The following case occurred here the other da... at a rubber of Bridge:—



Y and Z are partners against A and B.
Score Y Z game and 20, A B. love.
Z deals and declares No Trumps.
A holds the following cards:—

Diamonds—Q. J. 10, 9, 3.
Hearts—K J. 4.
Spades—K. 6.

Should A, considering the score, double or not?

I should feel very much obliged by your kindly letting me have your opinion on this.

F. R. E.

SILCHAR, 6th April 1906.

[With the score A B. love Z. Y. 20 and game up, if A, being leader holding K. J. 4 of Hearts, Q. J. 10, 9 and 3 of Diamonds, K. 10 and 4 of Clubs, and K. and 6 of Spades, did not double "No Trumps" declared by the dealer, he should return to "Beggar my neighbour." Put on Ace instead of one of the Kings and a double would be justifiable at the score of love all.—ED.]

SADDLE AND GIRTH GALLS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Can you give me any good tip to prevent girth galls, or saddle galls?

Is washing all the parts of the skin which have been touched by the saddle or girths, with a strong solution of salt and water any good? Is a strong solution of alum better? Should I dust any "likely" spot over with some oxide of zinc? or should I give up riding??

M.

CALCUTTA, 1st May 1906.

[Bathe the parts several times a day with a warm lotion—a wineglassful of arnica (or whisky) to a bucket of water if the skin is not broken. Or try a cold water douche. Salt and water—1oz. in a tumbler of water is good. If the skin is broken, or there are open sores, try carbolic or zinc ointment, or this really good dressing:—5oz camphor, 1oz. fluid carbolic acid, mix in bottle and shake well before applying on lint three or four times a day.—ED.]

According to Mr. John Porter, Isonomy could have easily won the Derby secured by Sefton, for the eminent authority mentioned maintains that the Blue Riband hero of 1878 was inferior to Isonomy by about a stone and a half. That the latter was a smart horse his Cambridgeshire victory the same season proved. Possibly Mr. Gretton did not aspire to Derby honours, but in any case he landed a splendid coup over the Houghton event, the first instalment of the commission being sixty-six thousand to a thousand, and fifteen hundred to a hundred for a place—a useful start.

The Kingsclere trainer is certainly qualified to speak on the subject of good horses, for few men can show such a record as he. Apprenticed to honest John Day at Danebury, Mr. Porter, then scaling something under 6st., rode the celebrated double-event heroine, Virago, in all her gallops and thus early became associated with one of the many celebrities whose names are not easily forgotten.

NOTTINGHAM.

SUCH a contrast as Sunday's surroundings presented to Saturday's spring could only have been presented in England. A piercing north wind, swirling the dust in blinding storms, made pedestrians shiver again, however warmly clad, but fortunately the next day brought an improvement, though in the shade it was very cold at Colwick. In the olden days Nottingham was the one and only meeting held during Holy Week, but other managements have been imbued with the sentiments of Don Cæsar de Bazan, and Folkestone afforded handier attractions to the Metropolitan division. Nottingham, however, can be depended upon to supply a capital attendance on its own on Mondays, a more popular day in the Midlands than down south, and the executive should have been satisfied. Several leading patrons of sport were amongst the company in the members' stand whilst, as usual, the further public enclosures were better filled than Tattersall's. Under bright sunshine and a drying wind the going was improving every hour, and some fair sport was enjoyed, the only drawback to the programme being the placing of the hurdle race of two miles last on the card, with a twenty minutes' margin, if up to time, to run the race, weigh in, settle up, change from boots and breeches to ordinary attire, and catch the special—cutting it very fine, Messieurs!

Such a good attendance as Nottingham turned out when on holiday thoughts intent was not to be expected when business claimed the workers again, and the company on Tuesday fell far short of Monday's record muster, being mostly confined to the regular racing army. With the north-east wind sinking into a gentle breeze, an almost perfect spring day made it a pleasure to be out of doors, and visitors to the paddock could risk sitting in the sunshine in summerlike fashion with little fear of chills or rheumatism. The going was getting hard enough to make the hoofs rattle a bit, and one almost wished that the water carts that laid the dust on the private road and in the enclosures could have been multiplied to give the course a good artificial sprinkling, so quickly had the drying weather done its work.

FOOTBALL ASSOCIATION RULES.

THE LEAGUES.

The games in the Southern League on Saturday were of the interesting rather than sensational type. There were two unlooked for results. Millwall were expected to more than hold their own at North Greenwich against Plymouth Argyle, whose previous visits to London in search of League points had been consistently fruitless, but the Pilgrims scored the only goal of a somewhat scrambling game. West Ham United went to Park Royal, and defeated the Rangers on their own ground, but the latter must be accounted distinctly unfortunate, as the balance of play was largely in their favour. Fulham are steadily pursuing their way towards championship honours, and their win on Saturday against Northampton was very useful. The Cottagers have only three matches to play, and if they can avoid defeat in these the shield should come their way, as Southampton, well as they are going, will drop a few more points yet. Interest at Tottenham is somewhat on the wane, but the Spurs, with their unfamiliar forward line, sent Brentford away defeated 4—1. Portsmouth and Reading drew a game in which six goals were scored. Luton beat Norwich on the post, Swindon were outplayed by Southampton, and Bristol Rovers, at home, won by the odd goal in three against Brighton.

Heartiest congratulations to the Arsenal on their latest performance. They were without Ashcroft and Coleman, both at Glasgow, the latter being one of the reserves of the England team, but this was neutralised by the absence of Burgess and Livingstone, of the City, the former assisting England and the latter Scotland. Satterthwaite did immense service to the Arsenal in twice defeating Hillman, and the Gunners are now in quite a respectable position, with an excellent opportunity of mounting yet higher. It emphasises how closely the clubs are running when it is borne in mind that Bolton Wanderers, who are fifth on the list, and have played one match more than the Arsenal, have scored 36 points, while the Reds have 31 to their credit. The fight at the bottom of the table is now being waged between Nottingham Forest, Bury, and Middlesbrough, and the first-named alone failed to capture two points on Saturday. Middlesbrough have not yet lost hope, and their 5—0 win against Stock was convincing enough for anything. Bury found victims in Bolton Wanderers, and they are now only below the Forest in the table because of an inferior goal average. Everton could only draw with Wolverhampton Wanderers, but it may be that the Toffeemen are reserving themselves for the Palace. Anyway, Wolverhampton's fate is now irrevocable, and the efforts of the wearers of the black and gold have been made too late.

Manchester United did not do as they pleased at Homerton on Saturday, and but for an extremely lucky shot in the opening portion of the game they would have had to be content with a division of the points. Chelsea did not leave anything to chance at Burton, and if they continue scoring at the same rate in their remaining fixtures they will have a century of goals to their credit in League games alone. They are still one point behind Manchester United, and have played one more game. Their chances of promotion are not so rosy as they were a few weeks ago, but there is still hope. West Bromwich Albion lost their last opportunity, slight as it was, on Saturday, when they were beaten by Hull City by four clear goals. Bristol City avoided defeat at Burnley, and the championship should now be a certainty for them.

The League tables to date are appended:—

ENGLAND vs. SCOTLAND.

The thirty-fifth International encounter between England and Scotland is over, and the unexpected has happened. Scotland has won—and Scotland deserved to win. There is no room for a contrary opinion among the experts who saw the game. England was weak where she was expected to prove strong; Scotland was strong where she was expected to be strong, and strong also where it was generally anticipated she would be weak. On the play the Thistle deserved to win, and not the most rabid partisan of the Rose has any ground for cavilling at the result. Yet there is an element of an unsatisfactory nature about it. It is a terrible handicap for a team to play without a wing half for the greater part of the game. Makepeace had to leave the field in the first half, and he never returned, and his absence appeared to disorganise the English side. The match, the last of the Internationals of the season 1905-06, was played last Saturday at Hampden Park, Glasgow. Extraordinary interest was taken in the games and there was a record attendance. Menzies set the ball in motion to the accompaniment of a hurricane of cheering. The English forwards immediately forced their way down the field, but Raisbeck came to the rescue, a brilliant bit of heading on his part intercepting a pass that Bond meant for Shepherd. The visitors came again, and Harris looked uncommonly like getting through when Dunlop intervened. A free-kick for Scotland was of material assistance to the home side, but Smith when favourably placed sent ridiculously wide. Down came England again, only to be sent back by Aitken, and some delicate finessing between Aitken, Howie, and Stewart left the latter in possession within shooting distance, but he placed over the bar to an accompaniment of audible regret on the part of the expectant onlookers. The escape for the English goal was rather too close to be pleasant, and to readjust matters Harris gave an opportunity to Conlin to make off down the left wing. Aitken and McLeod were beaten in turn, and Harris, receiving the ball, again shot wide. Although playing against the wind, Scotland were well holding their own, and hereabouts they gave glimpses of that combination which was subsequently the distinguishing characteristic of their play. A corner against England left matters in Statu quos and then, following a run down McBride had to save, but before he could get rid of the ball Shepherd charged him, and the goalkeeper received a nasty knock, which necessitated a stoppage for a few moments. Shortly after resuming Makepeace was injured, and for the remainder of the game England played with only ten men. How greatly this handicapped them was soon apparent, for the Scottish team kept the ball as much as possible on their right wing, where Steward and Howie table to do pretty much as they liked. Burgess rose to the occasion, and Veitch and Harris also did some of the work which Makepeace was lamenting in the dressing-room he could not perform, but this distribution of labour weakened other parts of the team, and the effects were soon apparent. Raisbeck and his colleagues gave the Englishman not the smallest liberty. Their attempts at combination were strangled almost at their birth, and for an appreciable time Scotland dominated the situation. There was hope for the visitors when Conlin cleverly threaded his way past Raisbeck and McLeod, but at the critical moment, when the goal appeared absolutely at his mercy, he stumbled, and fell within the penalty area. From the clearance the Scottish inside forwards got under way, but Veitch cleverly robbed Livingstone, dribbled down, and shot at express rate, but the ball went just over the bar. The game continued of the ding-dong order, but it was not a great game so far. There was two much ballooning, and the forwards on the both sides often easily lost control of the ball, but this was due to some extent to its lively nature. The Scots, however, were the more nippy in their movements, and never allowed their opponents to settle down. A shot was occasionally sent in at each ends, but the Scots had the larger number of chances, though they failed to avail themselves of them, their shooting being faulty. Eventually Crompton had a free kick given against him for fouling Smith, and the kick was entrusted to Dunlop. He sent the ball to Howie, who was close in, and he shot. Ashcroft made what appeared to be a proper clearance, as he did not muff the ball in any way; but the referee pointed to the centre, and Scotland were a goal up after forty minutes' play. This was disappointing to the visitors, and there is no doubt it affected the play adversely, but they did not cease their efforts to defeat McBride. The defence led by the ubiquitous Raisbeck, would not, however, be broken down, and every attack that the English team made was beaten off—sometimes not without difficulty—but it was done. As half-time approached the Scots set up a warm bombardment of the English goal, and no one would have been surprised had it been captured, but it was successfully defended, and at the interval the score was:—

Scotland	...	...	...	1

Play was not resumed for fifteen minutes, but immediately operations were again in full swing Scotland took up the running. Howie losing control when he looked like going through. Shepherd was brought down in a manner not "according to Cocker," but the free kick was of no value, thanks to a dashing bit of work by Dunlop, though in the next minute a capital opening on the English left was allowed to go begging. Deliberate combination between the whole of the Scotish forwards enabled them to threaten Ashcroft again and again, but when a goal seemed a certainty Ashcroft or Burgess would rush in and save the situation. From a long return by the Rover, Bond made one of the few good runs he favoured the onlookers with during the afternoon, but instead of centring in good time he indulged in a single-handed tussle with Raisbeck, the Scot emerging from it with the ball at his toe. Down the field went the centre-half, and the running was subsequently taken up by Stewart and Howie, and the latter working himself into position got in a mighty drive which Ashcroft threw himself at, and turned aside at the expense of a corner. Harris now decided to bring Burgess up, and the result was that the Scottish forwards were repeatedly offside. They were pulled up with such frequency that some of the spectators were obviously irritated, but this was allayed when Howie accepted a centre from Smith, and guided, rather than kicked, the ball into the net well out of Ashcroft's reach. It was a capital goal, well worked for, and thoroughly deserved, and this second success of the Scots was met with a fusilade of cheers. The game was now apparently safe for Scotland, but they did not relax their exertions, and they were clearly the better team. The English relied for their attack upon spasmodic rushes, but these did not succeed against the rock-like defence of the Scots, who were now playing a winning game with a confidence begotten of success that presaged further disasters for the visitors. Menzies, who had been keeping his forwards well together, was twice pulled up for offside, the second time when he was right through, and following the second free kick the ball went out to Bond, who centred back, and Burgess grazed the top of the crossbar with a rasping shot. The Scots were not done with, and an artistic pass by Howie enabled Menzies to slip through. Ashcroft saving brilliantly from the centre-forward. A period of severe pressure on the English defence followed, and well was it that it never wavered. Not a moment's rest did the Scottish forwards give Crompton and Company and thrice in as many minutes the home team seemed bound to score, but they could not complete their work by defeating Ashcroft. That Scotland were playing by far the better game admits of no dispute, as there was more method in their work and it always looked more likely to result in a goal than the disjointed efforts of the English forwards, who could not get into their stride. At the other end, Crompton was playing the one-back game with so much intelligence that he frequently beat the Scottish forwards by his tactics, and it was seldom at this period that Ashcroft was called upon, though twice he ran out to clear while the back kept the men off. The scene shifted to the Scottish end and a free kick was awarded England for a foul just outside the penalty area. This was undertaken by Shepherd, who drove the ball between the players into the corner of the net, well out of McBride's reach. The closing stages of the game were in favour of the Scots until the last minute, when Shepherd made a determined effort to break through and equalise, but he was brought up by McLeod, and the game ended:—

ROWING.

THE 'VARSITY BOAT RACE.

The 'Varsity Boat was rowed on Saturday and the convenient hour of 12 o'clock for its start and finer weather than has been associated with it for many years past, caused an enormous attendance. The banks were thronged and only one thing was wanted—a good race. Unfortunately that was denied, for Cambridge, as was expected, won easily, and, what is more, led from end to end. There was more applause for the crews whilst they were doing their preliminary spins an hour before the race than when they were racing, and altogether it was a quiet affair. The race from first to last was a procession, and I have little doubt that had the Oxonians been capable of moving faster Stuart and his men would have won the race inside 19 minutes. The manner in which they cut out the pace at the start was quite a treat to watch. They were in perfect time, and the swing was as steady as the pendulum of a clock. Not once during the race did they lose their form, and I should think were happy in their rowing at all times. The form of the Cantabs throughout was first-class. Their sculling action, with its hard and quick beginning, was seen to greatest advantage under the placid conditions of the tideway. Stuart, whose steady rowing has been such a pronounced feature of the training, never once lost his head. He kept his men going at their best pace to the mile post, when they were 1½ lengths in front, after which he took matters comfortably to the end of the race. The crew swung out and finished well, and when answering Bucknall's spurt at Chiswick shot away again at a great pace, and proved that they had a deal more pace than they were showing the public. Then, the policy of stroking from the bow side of the boat was successful for the first time in the history of the race. It had only been tried once previously, in 1876, when T. C. Edwards Moss did the same for Oxford, but was beaten easily. It happened this year in rather a curious manner, for the stroke was set from the bow side in order to suit R. V. Powell, who it was originally intended should occupy the eighth thwart. After a while, however, he went to No 6 and Stuart to stroke, and there he was such a success that it was unnecessary to alter the work. For a Freshman, Stuart's success is notable, and the victory of the crew is to a large extent due to his personality.

Cambridge, as the challengers, were the first crew to show. They left the Leander Club boathouse about ten minutes to twelve, and got away from the hard with due despatch. There was a confident air about them that was pleasing to their supporters. Oxford got afloat from the London R. C. about five minutes later and were down to the starting boats in good time. Oxford had won the toss and taken the Surrey station, but the conditions were so even that there was nothing in it Sweaters were removed, and all the preliminaries carried out, and Mr. F. I. Pitman (Cambridge U. B. C.)—who stroked Cambridge to victory in the celebrated race of 1886, when such men as Steve, Fairbairn and S. D. Muttlebury were rowing for the Light Blues, and the late lamented Oxonian, D. H. McLean, was in the opposing boat—pronounced the word "Go!" about three or four minutes past twelve.

Both crews seemed to grip the water simultaneously, but the sharper catch and shorter stroke of Cambridge enabled the Light Blues to pull 39 strokes in the first minute, against Oxford's 37. A foretaste of what was to happen was appreciable in the first thirty seconds, as in that time Cambridge had obtained a lead of about half a length. This they had slightly increased at the London R. C. flag-pole, while at the Thames R. C. the advantage had been improved to a length. Cambridge had dropped to 34 strokes to the minute, and Oxford were rowing about the same, but the latter could not hold the leaders, who were clear at the half-mile mark, and shewed a length and a half to the good at Craven Point, after pulling 2mins. 7secs. Rowing with a beautifully smooth precision, the Cantabs kept drawing further away from their opponents, and had placed a length of day light between the boats at the Conservancy mile-post—time—3mins. 58secs. Between this point and Harrod's Wharf the leaders added to the advantage they had obtained and held a lead of about four lengths as they nosed Hammersmith Bridge, 7mins. 19secs. from the start. Oxford were 17secs. behind on the watch, viz, 7mins. 36secs.—not at all a bad performance, but it did not compare well with that of Cambridge. The Dark Blues were keeping their form well and rowing quite as correctly as they had ever shown in practice, but they could not go the pace of their opponents. Up Chiswick Reach Cambridge were pulling 32 strokes to the minute against a stroke more by Oxford, but the Light Blues kept their lead and added to it. Then rowing was full of life and dash, and Oxford, getting into their wash, were left still further behind. At Chiswick Church—time—11mins. 50secs—the gap between the boats was larger than ever, but nothing daunted, having once cleared Thorneycroft's and reached the Devonshire Meadows, Bucknall made a great effort to overhaul the Cantabs. He quickened up to 34 strokes to the minute, and the men behind responded gallantly. Cambridge kept on the even tenour of their way, and Oxford gained a little, but nothing to cause the leaders any fear of being caught. The Cantabs shot Barnes Railway Bridge with a good four lengths' lead, in 16mins. 4secs. The race requires little further description. Without quickening at all Cambridge held on their course to the winning post, which they reached comparatively fresh—winners, according to the distance judge, Mr. F. Fenner (London R. C.), by three and a half lengths, in the fast time of 19mins. 26secs. Oxford, who rowed a game, stern chase, were nearly all "pumped." Both crews went ashore at the Ibis B. C. at Grove Park, where they dressed and returned to Putney by launch. There the winners received a great ovation from a very large crowd. In the evening the two sets of oarsmen and some friends dined together at the Grand Hotel, under the presidency of Lord Desborough, better known as Mr. W. H. Grenfell, a great Oxonian oarsman and amateur champion punter.

ATHLETICS.

TWO AMATEUR A. A. CHAMPIONSHIPS.

Beautiful weather favoured the meeting held under the auspices of the Amateur Athletic Association at Stamford Bridge on Saturday last to decide the Seven-mile Walking and Ten-mile Running Championships. There was a large attendance, and the sport turned out very satisfactorily, despite the fact that the track, very loose in parts, was all against fast times. The walk brought out a field of twenty-eight, one less than the number entered. Unfortunately the absentee was the holder of the British Amateur record, G. E. Larner, Brighton and County H., who, acting under medical advise, has retired. In his absence the event fell to F. T. Carter, of Queen's Park H. He walked very fairly and in capital style throughout. The Queen's Park man led at a mile, and his position in front was never very seriously assailed afterwards, though Thomson, the Ranelagh Harrier, once looked like getting very close to the winner. Thompson and Martindale, the second and third men, occupied the same places last year behind Larner, their times being 51mins. 29secs. and 54mins. 17secs. respectively. A glance at the table below will show that they both succeeded in putting up an improved performance. The only unsatisfactory aspect of the race was the lap scoring. Sarel was sent a lap further than was necessary, a fact that was at once discovered in the Press Box and communicated to the officials concerned, who subsequently amended their declaration. For the second year in succession the ten-mile run went to A. Aldridge, of Highgate H. The holder experienced most dangerous opposition from J. G. Beale, and it is just possible that had the latter not been attacked by stitch at the most critical stage of the struggle the finish might have been a much closer affair. The Hampton harrier, third in the recent Southern Counties Championship, displayed splendid pluck and gameness in sticking to his task. He is undoubtedly a fine runner, and, given retention of form, the highest honours may yet be within his reach. Aldridge ran with excellent judgment and finished strongly. He owed something to E. Gardner for taking him along in the latter stages. Of the other competitors, F. H. Holford, of the Birchfield H., would probably have occupied a better place but for shoe troubles which caused him to make a change at seven and half miles and thereby lose half a lap. The chief officials were: Referee Dr. Badger; judges; Running—G. V. A. Schofield, R. W. Gale, H.A. Butler, and T. M. Abraham; Walking—H. Venn, C. J. Prant, J. E. Fowler-Dixon, G. Duxfield, and A. Smith; Standard Judge, E. H. Peling; Timekeepers, W. M. Barnard, G. C. Innes, A. Fattorini, and W. W. Alexander; Standard Timekeeper, C. Val Hunter; Starter, C. Lockton; Honorary Secretary P. L. Fisher.

There were twenty-eight starters, the only absentee from the card being the holder, G. E. Larner, of Brighton and County H., whose health will not permit him to train. The ex-holder, J. J. Butler, went off with the lead, Martindale, Clark, Hampstead H., and G. Stuart, Polytechnic, being close at his heels. At three-quarters of a mile the order was Martindale, Carter, and Clark, and at one mile, covered in 7mins. 10⅗secs. Carter was just in front of Martindale. This state of affairs was maintained for three miles, Carter gradually increasing his advantage from Martindale, while Clark's mode of progression brought a caution from Mr. Venn. Half a mile further Butler retired. Prior to this Thompson had deprived Clark of third place, and walking in telling style he challenged and passed Martindale just before the fourth mile was entered upon. At this stage the Ranelagh harrier was only thirty yards from the leader, but in the next mile, the fifth (37mins. 38⅘secs.), Carter widened the gap to seventy yards. Try as he would, Thompson could make no impression on Carter, whose style was good and fair. Ultimately the latter won by ninety yards; with Martindale beaten 120 yards by Thompson for second place. Clark, it may be mentioned, was disqualified after going 4¼ miles. The winner received the customary gold medal, and the second a silver medal. Bronze medals for standard time (58mins.) were secured by Martindale, Sarel, Palmer, Norton, Morris, Hammond, Jull, and Smith.

The field numbered twenty-three, the absentees including the Irish crack, J. J. Daly, W. Nelson, Hallamshire H., G. W. Fowles, Thames Valley H., J. Price, Small Heath H., P. Bishop, Reading A. C., and J. E. Deakin, Herne Hill H., cut out the early work, but at the end of a mile (4mins. 51secs.), G. Butterfield, Darlington H., had assumed command from Deakin and A. Townsend, Essex Beagles. In the next mile (10mins. 2⅘secs.) Pearce was leading from Butterfield and Pullinger, of Brighton and County H., but the next lap Aldridge spurted to the lead, with Butterfield and Beale as his nearest attendants. The Mile Champion had regained premier position at the third mile (15mins. 22secs., but in the next quarter he created some surprise by dropping out altogether. Aldridge then went on from Beale, who was moving splendidly about twenty yards in the rear. Unfortunately for the Hampton Harrier he had an attack of stitch and eased, which allowed Aldridge to improve his position. However, Beale hung on in the pluckiest fashion, and recovering somewhat went in pursuit. Aldridge completed half the journey in 26mins. 13⅘secs., and at seven miles led by nearly one hundred yards from Beale, with Pearce still third. BOXING.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS CHAMPIONSHIPS.

Under the patronage of Lieutenant-General Sir John French, G.C.V.O., K.C.B., K.C.M.G., Commanding the Aldershot Army Corps, the annual Public Schools Gymnastic Boxing, and Fencing Championship Meeting took place in the Headquarters' Gymnasium, Queen's Avenue, on Friday, before a large and fashionable attendance. The entries for the gymnastics were more numerous than ever, no fewer than forty schools and colleges being represented. The preliminary ties in the boxing were decided overnight, and when the competitions proper began the numbers left in for the various competitions were as follows:—Heavy-weights (catch-weights), 8; middle weights, 9; light-weights, 10; feather-weights, 15. In the fencing (Foil vs. Foil), there were 23 entries; and in the Sabre vs. Sabre, 10 entries. In the boxing several old faces were conspicuous once more, among them being R. K. Shaw (St. Paul's), last year's champion light-weight; J. D. Grafton Wignall (Clifton), the runner-up in the same competition; and C. G. Treatt (Westminster), who got into the semi-final of the Middles on the same occasion. The challenge shield for gymnastics was won by Dean Close School, Cheltenham, after a near thing with King William's College, Isle of Man, who were only 4 points behind. The cup and medal for highest individual points was won by W. Furness (King William's College), while the brothers W. G. and F. J. Liddersdale (Dean Close School) tied for second place, and each received a silver medal. The gymnastic exercises were performed particularly well, and compared most favourably with those of 1905. Improvement was also noticed in the foil and sabre contests, and higher points were obtained this year than on any previous occasion. AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIPS.

THE DOUBLES.

The final and championship round of the Doubles Amateur Championship produced one of the keenest matches seen this season all seven games being played, and it was not until the last game had been in progress for some time that the scoring went decisively in favour of the winners. Of the four players, Mr. Dames-Longworth was decidedly the best on the day. He played brilliantly in the court, and in a match remarkable for the comparatively small number of service aces, his service appeared the most effective. In reaching a really high standard of rackets, there was little to choose between the three other players. All played splendidly in the rallies, the hitting being generally hard, low, and clean, and although Mr. Miles, who won the championship last year with Mr. Baerlein, seems to have lost some of his power of return, his accuracy of placing was as good as ever. Details are appended :—

Final Round.

Mr. E. H. Miles (Marlborough and Cambridge) and Mr. F. Dames-Longworth (Charterhouse and Cambridge) beat Mr. P. Ashworth (Harrow and Cambridge) and Major S. H. Sheppard, D. S. O. (Royal Engineers) by four games to three, 85 aces to 67. Score: 15—4; 7—15; 7—15; 15—12; 11—15; 15—2; 15—4.

Dames-Longworth took the opening service, and scored a run of five aces by means of his fine service. Sheppard made up some ground, and the scores were called 8-4. Miles then got in and went to game at 15-4 with a sequence of six aces. In the second game Asworth begun in flattering style with a run of seven, but steady work by Miles brought the score to 11-7 against the leaders. However, Sheppard made the match one all. Aggressive work by Sheppard in the third game, and tame returns by Miles and Dames-Longworth gave Sheppard and Asworth the strong lead of 14-3. Dames-Longworth tacked on four aces, but the game and the lead went to the others at 15-7. The fourth game was very prolonged, and there was one lasting spell of hot work which roused spectators to a high pitch of enthusiasm. Mainly through Dames-Longworth's service, he and his partner went to 13-5, but their opponents rallied gamely and took six aces. The remaining points were hotly contested, but Miles and his colleague snatched a narrow victory by 15-12, thus drawing level. The fifth game went to Sheppard and Ashworth after a keen struggle at 15-11, after the game had favoured their rivals at 11-8. The feature of the sixth game was Dames-Longworth's grand play. His best run was six, including five by service, and it enabled him and Miles once more to equalise, the score now being three all. Sheppard and Ashworth went right off their game in the decider, a splendid sequence of nine to Miles, whose staying powers were remarkable, crediting the venterans with the game at 15-4, and the championship by four games to three

As owner, bookmaker, and frequently backer, Jackson, "the Leviathan," as he was then frequently called, had a great deal to do with the pulling of the strings in the Turf world over a quarter of a century ago, he also undertaking at times commissions that required delicate manipulation. Unlike many of his contemporaries, Jock of Oran did not retain the cream of the market for himself, and this fact, combined with his influence amongst the pencillers, caused him to be in constant demand for the execution of big jobs.

When, however, the owner of Fairfield backed anything for himself, it was his usual custom to employ some one else to get the "stuff" on, and generally speaking the amount was not a small one. On both General Peel and Blair Athol, Jackson stood to win a large sum, but a little while previous to the Derby taking place the squire decided to stand one animal only, his choice falling on the first-named, and it was accordingly decided to hedge the Blair Athol money.

The commissioners, however, soon found they had by no means an easy task, and in order to smooth the way for them it was arranged that Jackson should ostentatiously back "Blair" whilst his agents laid him at every opportunity. Everything went off all right, but when the accounts were gone into that night it was found the Leviathan had backed the horse for considerably more than his men had laid, and, unable to get out of the money, he was a big winner by Blair Athol's victory.

MADRAS.

A PLEA FOR ECO.'OMY.

A STUDENT of modern polo, either as a player or an onlooker, must have been long since impressed with the fact that soldier players, whether at home or abroad, form the backbone of the game, observes a writer in a home paper. Without their interest polo would be restricted to a few wealthy civilians, and little would be heard of it outside the private enclosures at Hurlingham, Ranelagh, and Roehampton. Happily for a training of our officers in times of peace, this is not so; polo as its expenses become less a matter of alarm, its finer points better understood, and its merits as a scheme of training in those qualities that combine to make the best officer more appreciated is growing each year in importance. But if this growth and prosperity are to continue, let it not be overlooked that just as regimental polo has in the past made the game in England what it is to day, so the Service players must be looked to in the future. They must be encouraged by the Army authorities, and encouragement in this matter means nothing more nor less than a realisation of all that the game means as an aid to efficiency in the field. Surely there is no need here to dwell on its many advantages. They have been emphasised in book and in speech, and it is only necessary to look down the splendid list of names forming the influential Army polo committee to be convinced that that emphasis has not been made in vain.

In India Lord Kitchener has proved himself more sympathetic in his attitude towards the game than was anticipated in some quarters. In England Lord Roberts, during his regime at Whitehall, was encouraging as well as sympathetic; and though rumours of dissatisfaction during the last year or two have circulated, they have so far proved to be nothing more substantial than rumours. The magnificent association of well-known polo players with events in South Africa during the war has not yet been forgotten. How could an over-zealous authority harm polo with such a record behind it? Polo need never fear an injury from a wise administration at the War Office so long as the regimental polo clubs and tournament committee hold in view the supreme necessity of keeping the expenses to a reasonable limit. Once let polo expenditure in a regiment get excessive and extravagant, and everything else in the regiment is at a risk of suffering and nothing so much as the game itself. I think the leaders of soldiers' polo realise now that if the game is to be recognised and fostered by the authorities it must be made as inexpensive as possible. The regimental polo club has helped as largely as anything else to this end. The idea was first practically demonstrated by Captain (now Colonel) de Lisle in India when he made the Durham Light Infantry team famous throughout India as polo players. He succeeded by combining restricted expenditure with thoroughness, through the medium of a polo club—a sort of regimental co-operative society for the benefit of the officers. Polo clubs are now the rule in the polo-playing regiments in Great Britain.

The Price of Ponies

It would be rather absurd to assert that polo is an inexpensive game. A poor civilian will find it beyond his reach, and before the days of polo clubs a poor officer had to leave indulgence in the game to his wealthy brethren. But polo, when all is said and done, is just as expensive as a man cares to make it; by getting his play as cheaply as possible he is doing the best service he can for the game. The same thing applies to hunting, which also is as expensive as a man cares to make it and anyone who has indulged in both—and practically all polo players go fox-hunting in season—will be prepared to concede that polo is cheaper than hunting. Polo can be made expensive enough to the man who chooses to graduate, say, at Ranelagh, and buy his ponies "ready made." Who will blame the man who "makes" a first-class tournament pony out of the raw and sells him at a fancy price to the graduate at Ranelagh? But nothing is more certain than this; that the day of high priced ponies, those fetching five, six, or seven hundred pounds, is past. This is for the good of soldiers' polo, for it is a sign of the tendency to study expenses more than has been the fashion in the past. Breeders are beginning to realise that it will pay them to breed ponies to type to sell as three and four-year-olds for anything between £50 and £100. The soldier-player in future will buy these sort, and train and "make" them himself, rather than pay well over £100 for a pony trained by other hands and ready at the moment to play in a game. As the work of the breeders proceeds there will be more ponies of the right sort available, with the inevitable result that prices will come more within the means of those officers who have to answer many other calls on their means.

Let it be realised that polo does not mean an excuse for extravagance and indulgence at the expense of efficiency, and regimental clubs may be assured that the authorities will encourage rather than dismay, and that the task of the Army Polo Committee, who will always form a fine bulwark to the game, will not be unduly heavy.

Rowing.

THE MADRAS BOAT CLUB.

Merchants and Bankers' Challenge Fours.—This annual event brought together five crews this year. Preliminary heats were rowed on the 25th, 26th, and 27th instant and the final last Saturday. The first was between the representatives of Messrs Best and Co. and Messrs. Arbuthnot and Co. The latter won by a couple of feet after an exciting race. Bests claimed a foul and the race was rowed again on Thursday, when Arbuthnots were again victorious this time by half a length.

Two heats were rowed on Friday. The Bank of Madras met and defeated Messrs. Gordon Woodroffe's by a length and three-quarters after leading all the way.

The race between Arbuthnot's and Parry's crews resulted in an easy win for Arbuthnot's by two and a half lengths. A crab caught early in the race in Parry's boat gave their opponents a good lead and though Parry's rowed hard they could not catch Faith's crew who won easily.

The final between Arbuthnot's and the Bank resulted in an excellent race, marred by somewhat erratic steering on both sides. An exciting finish ended in a win for the Bank by half a length. Crews as before.

CYCLING AND MOTORING IN ENGLAND.

MR. CHAS. JARROTT has just effected a very fine performance by driving a 4-h.p. Crossley car from London to Monte Carlo (about nine hundred miles) in 37¼ hours, after once missing the route at Versailles and going thirty miles out of his way. The Crossley is a British-built car, and was a conspicuous exhibit at the recent Agricultural Hall Show.

It has been stated that thefts from garages are increasing, and that the thieves who are, of course, expert drivers, have been able in many cases to get clear away with a car and dispose of it before its whereabouts could be traced. A good method of securing once's car from being tampered with is to have a lock fixed to the gear lever by which it may be locked in gear on the first speed, thus making it impossible to move the car. There are several other ways whereby a car can be rendered inoperative such as by removing the ignition commutator or wiper which would take but a few minutes to do, and the would-be thief then could not possibly start the motor.

Provided the weather lasts fine and dry over the Easter holidays, the great majority of motorists will doubtless avail themselves of the opportunity for touring on their cars. It may be well, therefore, to once more emphasise the importance of giving a car that has been used but little during the winter months a thorough over-hauling before undertaking a long journey. Apart from the annoyance and disappointment incidental to a breakdown whilst touring the expense of having repairs effected during holiday time is heavy, and the work is even then not so good as would be possible at home, and will probably need doing over again before the car is in a really satisfactory running condition again.

Carelessness and inefficient driving cannot be due to the want of opportunities for learning. One of the best schools of instruction for chauffeurs, both professional and amateur, is the Motoring Academy at Boundary Road, Notting Hill, founded and governed on a thoroughly sound and practical basis, which has only been open a few weeks, but already several of its professional pupils have, after a fortnight's instruction, succeeded in passing the most searching examination of the Automobile Club. A visit to the school at once convinces one of the great value and importance of such an institution. Driving is taught on standard cars of average difficulty of manipulation, and an open air track large enough to practice driving at the legal limit is so arranged that pupils may become competent to handle a car through the various intricacies common to a journey through crowded throughfares. For instance, a portion of the cemented track is smeared with soft soap for the purpose of accustoming the driver to skidding on a greasy road. Reversing is practised between parallel lines ruled across the ground. When the pupil is sufficiently advanced he is taken out into the midst of traffic and practically taught all the rules of the road. An excellent feature of the school is the course of illustrated lectures given by experts dealing with technical and constitutional details. Attached to the school is a museum containing specimens of every type of machine from the most primitive to the latest design, with engines, valves, pistons, gear-box, differential shaft, magnetos, accumulators, tyres, in short every detail down to the minutest bolt and screw. Such an establishment as the Notting Hill Motor Academy will be found to meet a most important requirement, and undoubtedly only wants to be known to be appreciated as it deserves.

The main thoroughfares leading out of London well merit the description of being "crowded" on a fine Sunday, for there is little cessation throughout the day in the passing of motor cars, cycles, and a fair number of horse-drawn vehicles. It may be owing to the large number of cars owned in and around London that the percentage of indifferent drivers is greater, but I certainly think there is more bad driving to be witnessed on the roads mentioned than in other parts of the country. A very noticeable fault is bad gear changing, and many drivers apparently think that brute force is the only way that a gear change can be effected. On the contrary, however, it is quite easy to change speed either "up" or "down," provided the principle governing their operation is understood and the change made at the right moment. Should a gear be found difficult, it is worse than useless to keep trying to force it in, as this will only result in grinding away the teeth, besides causing a great deal of noise. Another common fault is what is known as driving "on the brake," which means that the driver neglects to take advantage of the control which is possible by a judicious use of the throttle, and when slowing down to pass another vehicle or to take a corner simply declutches and puts the brakes hard on to reduce the speed. It is perhaps unnecessary to point out that this puts a very severe strain on the mechanism, and will even necessitate replacements of brake bands and an overhaul of the engine.

In an editorial note in an evening paper I read the astonishing news that the discovery had been made by an advanced student of biology and physiology that the oyster provides a means of locomotion superior at all points to any hitherto known. "Tickled," we are told, "by an electric current the oyster contracts its muscles; it is then made to expand them again." How delightfully vague! "The movement drives a piston and the oyster being the most muscular animal or fish for its weight in existence, the car speeds along at a rapid rate. For the oyster, as well as the car, the scheme opens out a future." I think so, too. We shall be tumbling over each other to bi valve (less) motors in the near future. It is a fit subject for boysterous laughter!

CRICK

Station vs. West Ridings season took place last Thursday o when the West Ridings won very ea only able to get a scratch team togeth three boys from St. Joseph's, and picking up they went on. The West Ridings, however, are as g nation as we have had up here, and it will be interesti the play when they meet a side that can put them ou mettle. So far they have played three matches, the pres one, and one each against St. Paul's and St. Joseph's, and won the lot fairly comfortably. In Corpl. Green they possess a strong and resolute bat, who plays with equal facility all round the wicket, and who scores at a rate which is most pleasing to the onlooker. The following were the scores:—

THE BEIGHTON CUP.

THIRD ROUND.

LA MARTINIERE vs. NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—These teams met on the 27th ultimo on the Customs' ground, the soldiers being defeated by a goal to nil. The Fusiliers were first conspicuous for a good run down, but Lucas relieved and the Martiniere scored through Mackertich after a nice piece of combined play. They continued to have the best of the play till the interval, but could not add to the score. The second half was fairly even, both goals were attacked in turn, but neither team scored and the Martiniere won as stated. Teams :—

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—Corpl. Newton, goal; Lieut. E. L. D. Foster and Corpl. Crow, backs; Sergt. Longden, Capt. Montague and Pte. Davis, half-backs; Pte. Lambert, Capt. James, Lieut. C. W. Ritson, Sergt. Wilkinson and Pte. Harris, forwards.

LA MARTINIERE.—Roseboom, goal; J. Pritchard and Lucas, backs; Watling, Kelly and Bath, half-backs; Sooki, Clyne, Cody Pemberton and Mackertich, forwards.

WANDERERS vs. B.-N. RAILWAY.—This match was played on the Town Club ground on Friday, a fast and even game ending in a draw of two goals all. Macpherson and Ismay scored for the Railway, Pickard and Duff for the Wanderers. The match was replayed on the Hornets' ground on Monday, the Wanderers winning by 2 goals to 1. Goldsmith opened the scoring for the Wanderers shortly after starting, and though the Railway had the best of the play this was the only score at the interval. On resuming A. Duncan equalised and Ismay sent in a couple of shots which Fox cleared. Then the Wanderers pressed and Hudson scored an easy goal. Despite their efforts the Railway were unable to get on terms again and the Wanderers won by 2 to 1. Teams :—

WANDERERS.—Fox, goal; Zemin and White, backs; Jewell, O'Sullivan and Wakham, half-backs; Goldsmith, Cruenburgh, Walkem, Hudson and Duff, forwards.

B.-N.R.—Haydn, goal; Clarke and Robins, backs; Coxe, E. Brewster and D'Santos, half-backs; A. Duncan, H. Duncan, Ismay, Brewster and Macpherson, forwards.

H.L.I. vs. TOWN CLUB.—The replayed tie between these teams resulted in a win for the H.L.I. Neither team had scored when time was called, but during an extra period Sergt. Breslin put through for the soldiers.

Y.M.C.A. vs. SIBPUR.—Played on the Y.M.C.A. ground on Saturday. The home team attacked first, but the ball was soon taken to their territory and the goal was bombarded, but the shooting of the Sibpur forwards was extremely poor and they were unable to score. In the second half they again attacked and seemed determined to score. A mêlée in front of the Young Men's goal enabled Showers to put the ball through. They continued to press and Patterson put on a second goal. The Association were forced to defend all through. Sibpur thus winning by 2 goals to nil.

SIBPUR.—Street, goal; Brown and McGrath, backs; Milchem, Showers and Vardon, half-backs; Haupt, Murphy, Lawton, Patterson and Ansell, forwards.

Y.M.C.A.—Gordon, goal; Reynolds and Clarke, backs; Collingwood, M. Remfry and Glover, half-backs; Foucar, Vanspal Price, H. Remfry and another, forwards.

CUSTOMS vs. CANAL SPORTING.—This game was played on Saturday on the Customs' ground. The home team had matters their own way throughout and eventually won by 5 goals to nil. McCready, Vears and Simmons scored in the first half, the last named putting on 2 goals after the interval.

CALCUTTA vs. HORNETS.—The meeting of these teams had been looked forward to with great interest and a large crowd lined the Calcutta ground on Monday evening. The Hornets pressed immediately on starting. Cooper relieved, but the ball was brought back and a corner signalled, nothing resulted and Calcutta attacked. Midfield play followed till Sherman put in an excellent run down but shot wide. He was conspicuous for another run shortly after and seemed certain to score but he was not backed up and the opportunity was lost. Barnes next had a shot at goal but hit the post. The Hornets then attacked but Main relieved. Rosser and Apcar for the visitors and Simson and Sherman for Calcutta were responsible for good runs, but no scoring took place and the interval arrived with a blank sheet. On changing ends the Hornets returned to the attack, but Calcutta got the ball away and Barnes and Sherman tried to score but without success. The team continued to attack till L. Rosser got away and put the ball through. The Hornets pressed hard at this period and missed several opportunities, Mabert, Russell, Apcar, all failing to get through. Sherman was playing at the top of his form and made ground time after time, but the Hornets' defence was good. Apcar next got away, but was stopped by McCaw and Barnes and Badham both had shots which missed the Hornets' goal by inches. Calcutta tried hard to equalise but in vain and the Hornets won a good game by a goal to nil. Teams :—

HORNETS.—Stainer, goal; Yackjee and Hollow backs; Cooper, B. Rosser and Power, half-backs; Rosser, Mabert, Apcar, Smith and Russell forwards.

CALCUTTA.—Cooper, goal; McCaw and Main, backs; Remington, Pearson, and McKenzie, half-backs; Badham, Burns, Sherman, Simson, and Martin forwards.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ONE of the most interesting games played during the week was that between the Y.M.C.A. and Sibpur College. The College came out on top by two goals to love and there was just about this difference in the play on the day. The Young Men had if anything the better of the first half but could not score, and after changes of ends Sibpur, although they had the better of the game, scored two very moderate goals. The first was from a bully inside the circle and the other about two minutes before time was up from a mêlée in front of goal. Sibpur will have to produce much better form than this if they wish to win the tournament outright, and it does not now look to be the certainty that it was at one time imagined. Personally I do not think any local combination will take their number down, but we have to reckon with the two up-country teams, in the Bhagalpur Police and Ranchi, both of whom, I hear, are quite above the average.

On the other side of the tournament the competing teams have not been of much consequence. The Martinière College, as I anticipated, were too good for the Fort team and although they gave a very creditable display I do not give them much chance of getting any further, as they will have to meet either the Police team or Ranchi. Either of these two teams should figure in the final, and I give for preference my vote to Ranchi. If they can show anything like the form of previous years I think they have a very good chance indeed. Neither Sibpur nor the Hornets are as strong as they were last season and I should not be surprised to find the Cup leave Calcutta on this occasion. It will certainly add to the interest of the thing and may tend to induce other up-country clubs paying us a visit next year.

The Bhagulpur team, I can assure them, will receive a warm welcome and I wish them best of good fortune. It is to be hoped that in the coming ties where a visiting team is concerned that the public will acknowledge their appreciation of good play, and not let their personal feelings carry them too far in favour of their own particular club. Encouragement we know, is most beneficial to success, and it is the least we can offer to a team who will be without many actual supporters of its own.

The much looked for game between Calcutta and the Hornets was played on the former club's ground on Monday last. The game was in every way up to expectation, and as was anticipated by not a few the Hornets proved to be the better side by the only goal scored. Calcutta, as I heard remarked, were beaten at outside forward and this is quite correct. Both the Hornets' players, L. Rosser and Russell were in fine form and greatly attributed to the success of their side. The rest of the forwards were very erratic and missed several chances of scoring. Apcar, who was playing centre forward, was all over the field and hardly ever in his right position, while Russell seemed to have no objection to putting in a little extra hard work on the right wing. They should be made to keep their places. Powell was the best half on the field and the same can be said about Yackjee at back. On the Calcutta side Cooper in goal was a revelation, and although gifted with a little luck, some of his saves were really quite first class. The backs and halves were not so good as usual. McCaw, who can be usually relied upon, was not so safe as I have seen him be, and Pearson at half was most disappointing. In fact the halves gave the forwards very few opportunities. The front rank although at times showing good combination did not take the few opportunities of scoring that was offered them. On two occasions when Sherman got away his pass back to the centre was not taken advantage of and I am inclined to think that had either of the inside men been up a goal would have been certain. But if Calcutta missed one or two chances their opponets missed five or six. However the game was a well contested one and it must be acknowledged that the better side won, although great credit is due to the losers for the good fight they put up.

The B.-N. R. after having played a drawn game with the Wanderers (practically a St. James' combination) had to admit defeat last Monday by 2 goals to 1, and all Ismay's efforts could not obtain the requisite goal to produce a further draw.

The next match of real importance will be that between the Hornets and the Customs and should result in a fast and even struggle. The winners of this game will play Sibpur in the semi-final, so that there is still plenty of excitement awaiting lovers of hockey.

Boxing.

THE POONA BOXING TOURNAMENT.

Referee :—CAPTAIN LLEWLYN, R.N.R., P.O.S.N.Co.
Judges :—MAJOR HOBBS, Connaught Rangers and LIEUT. ELLIS, 94th Russell's Infantry.
Time-keeper :—MR. H. J. ILLESLY.

THE Annual Meeting at Poona started last Monday and the station was full of boxing enthusiasts, for a week an excellent stand had been erected on the general parade ground and the show being well in the open helped to minimise the heat which has been rather bad in Poona lately. Some excellent fights have been witnessed and the entries were very large. The Bantam Weights was won by Pte. Wilson of the Royal Scots after a good bout with Pte. Shaw of the East Lancs. The Feather and Light Weights attracted the largest number of competitors, no fewer than twenty-eight turning out in each class. The former was won by Pte. Blake (Middlesex) and the Light Weights by Bombr. Chapman ("G" Batty., R.H.A.)

The Middle Weights were notable for no less than three disqualifications. In the contest between Sergt. Thomas and Dr. Dawson, the latter was seconded by Sergt. "Tiger" Smith. This gentleman was particularly noisy, prompting Dawson and was eventually ordered off the grounds by the Referee, who stopped the fight and disqualified Dawson. The battle between Sergt. Thomas and Pte. Dixon ended in Dixon being disqualified for butting, while Pte. Hall was also put out for a foul hit in his contest with Pte. Mulholland. The final was between Sergt. Ranger and Pte. Robertson, the Gymnastic Sergeant securing the victory.

There were but two bouts in the Heavy Weights. The first a gory battle between Lce.-Cpl. Smith (Lincolns) and Sergt. Henry (Connaught Rangers) resulted in a win for Smith, who easily disposed of Dr. Roger of the Dorsets in the final.

The Boys' competition provided some good sport, Boy Upshon of the 77th Co R. G. A. defeating Boy Mills of the Durham Light Infantry in the finals, after beating of that plucky little boxer Cadet Brewin of the Poona Volunteers in the semi-final round.

The officers' contests brought out four competitors in the Middle Weights and seven in the Light Weights. Capt. Cowie, R.A.M.C., won the Light Weights after a hard slogging match with Lieut. Carlisle, while another Army doctor, Lieut. Noke, secured the Middle Weights. Details :—

Few cross-country riders suffered more from falls than Jem Adams. Many of his tumbles, indeed, would have more than sufficed for a man not possessed of the indomitable courage of the jockey in question. But though, perhaps, temporarily knocked out, Jem invariably came up, if not exactly smiling, at all events ready to face the starter once more.

Harry Custance rather happily christened this man of many accidents "Bones," and assuredly he deserved it especially after the contretemps at Auteuil. Jem was on Sidthorpe, and in negotiating an exceptionally awkward jump the horse blundered, threw his jockey, and in some inexplicable manner fell on the prostrate horseman. When picked up Adams was, of course, unconscious, and remained in that condition so long that his life was for some time despaired of; but even when he again returned to a knowledge of the things that were happening, his chance of ever again appearing in the saddle seemed a slight one, his injuries consisting of eight fractured ribs and a broken chest-bone.

The Naturalist.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF BIRDS AND ITS WORK.

THE questions are sometimes asked by those unfamiliar with the work of bird protection in this and other countries, "Why should birds be protected?" and, "What has the Society done to protect them?" What does it want to do?

Into the whole subject, scientific and economic æsthetic and humanitarian, this is not the place to enter.

WHY BIRDS OUGHT TO BE PROTECTED.

Birds, it may briefly be said, ought to be protected because they are of infinite value in the scheme of Nature; because they are living and, in many ways helpless creatures, whom it is a duty to shield from ill usage; because, above all, they form the most beautiful part of that wild life remaining to us which is the salt and savour of a modern and artificial age. No one wishes to see a birdless England. Few can wish to see an England in which are none but a few of the commonest and hardiest birds. But fewest of all are the people who realize how completely persecution can sweep away a whole species, and how rapidly the work of "dis-birding" a country can proceed. Yet this persecution and this dis-birding is exactly what is going on in England, and not only in England, but throughout the world. The most beautiful, the noblest, and the most wonderful species are being quickly reduced in numbers; many have been exterminated, many are on the verge of extinction, while the steady decrease in others can but end in their eventual disappearance if present conditions continue.

The ignorant cry, "Surely there are plenty of birds!" misses the whole point. Plenty of birds there may still be, in a sense, in a great part of England, because the persecution of one species may mean (for a time) the multiplication of some other species, and because the grander and finer forms of wild life inevitably disappear before the smaller, more abundant and more omnivorous tribes, are affected.

In our own country the last century saw species after species lost to us—probably for ever—which were, and might still be, the pride of a naturally rich avifauna. Of the 370 or 380 species placed on the list of "British birds," some 270 or 280 are or were residents or regular visitors to our islands. Scarcely more than 200 can be truthfully called "British" birds to-day. Some thirty species are named by Mr. W. H. Hudson as either having been extirpated, or brought within measurable distance of extirpation, in recent years.

FROM WHOM BIRDS NEED TO BE PROTECTED.

In the distruction of birds, great and small, there are five principal agents, beyond natural causes and that growth of population which is necessarily adverse to the larger and to the more delicate forms of wildlife, and is made more so than it need be.

First, there are those who destroy for destruction's sake: the heedless boy who ravages the hedgerows in spring and delights in catapults, air-guns, and stones at all times; the lout with a gun; and the cockney sportsman. They are responsible for much cruelty, for the killing of various home-birds and migrants, especially nestlings; and for the senseless shooting of sea-birds, and occasionally of rare visitants.

Secondly, the bird-catcher, responsible for the decrease of all those birds sought for caging, or for the dishes of a certain class of rich people—Goldfinch, Linnet, Lark, Wheatear, Lapwing, etc. This class, like the first-named, requires dealing with chiefly because of the intolerable amount of ill-treatment involved: in the case of the one offender through indifference, and sometimes from love of tormenting; in the case of the other for the reason that torment is inseparable from the methods employed in the catching, transit, and sale of wild birds. The persecution of the Lapwing and the wholesale destruction of Larks are also points worth attention.

Thirdly, the trader and the feathered woman, jointly responsible for the devastation wrought among the loveliest birds of all lands.

Fourthly, the gamekeeper, responsible for the extinction or extreme rarity of most of our large birds, especially predatory species and uncommon visitors.

Fifthly, the private collector, who finishes the work begun by gamekeeper and plume hunter; his "hobby" causing him to pay especial attention to species already reduced to rarity.

Each of these classes requires, to some extent, a different treatment.

WHAT THE SOCIETY IS DOING.

CLASS 1. Education, not only humane education as such, but the development in every child of an intelligent delight in wild life, must take into account the destruction arising out of ignorance. This is being dealt with more or less by nature-study and the use of humane reading-books in schools. The Society issues Educational Leaflets, and has introduced Bird and Tree (Arbor) Day Competitions (now established in six counties), which endeavour, it is to be hoped with success, to strengthen the work of teachers, and to impart a wholly new enthusiasm and reality into the study of natural life.

CLASS 3. Pending natural and international legislation, the Society has from the first appealed, and must still continue to appeal, to the better sense and better taste of women, setting plainly before them the cruelty and waste of life for which they ent of India in 1902 against the and feathers is another token of progress interest of landowners in the preservation is essential to the success of efforts to ever-rejudice of the gamekeeper. In response to 5,000 landowners, sent out by the Society in 1893, much pathy in the Society's work was excited and numberless personal letters, having the same purpose, are written with good results every year. After years of uphill work the Society obtained in 1901 an Act of Parliament making the use of the cruel pole-trap illegal.

CLASSES 2 and 5. Here the remedy lies largely in increased pressure from that public opinion which it has been the aim of the Society for fifteen years to develope and strengthen. When it is considered an unnatural and undesirable thing to cage winged creatures, and to kill for the tables of those who are not hungry beings whose small bodies provide no sustinance, and when the nation is sufficiently enlightened to resent the injury done to the community by the bird-catcher, bird-catching will die out for lack of encouragement. When it is regarded as a shameful and despicable thing to kill and possess the stuffed remains, or the egg, of a vanishing species, the private collector will probably cease to exist. Public opinion must, however, be expressed by definite laws and penalties as well as by indefinite influence, if it is to be effectual.

In 1889, when the Society for the Protection of Birds was formed, the only protection given to wild birds was that of a general Close Time under the Act of 1880. Since 1889 the Society has been instrumental in obtaining, through the help of its members in both Houses of Parliament, the Bird Protection Acts of 1894 1896, 1901, and the two Acts of 1904. In 1889 there was no protection whatever for any bird during eight months of the year; no amount of cruelty to a wild bird was punishable; the one Act was incomplete and not sufficiently elastic. The succeeding Acts have placed it in the power of County and Borough Councils to protect any species completely for the whole or part of a year, to protect eggs, to set apart protected areas as bird sanctuaries or as breeding-grounds, to forbid Sunday bird-catching, etc. Power has been given to magistrates to confiscate birds, whether dead or alive, and eggs, illegally taken, together with decoys, nets, traps, etc.; without this power the law against collector and bird-catcher was almost valueless. Under the Acts of 1894 and 1896 some 130 Orders (many of them obtained at the instance of the Society) are now in force in County and Borough Council areas in England, Wales, Scotland, and (Act of 1894 only) Ireland. The Society takes further steps to defend special breeding-grounds of rare species by the employment of Watchers, and by grants to local effort, and has been granted by the Lords of the Admiralty the help of the Coastguard in protecting coast birds.

WHAT HAS YET TO BE DONE

As a record of sixteen years of existence, with an income never rising beyond three figures, the progress made may not appear altogether unsatisfactory. The further progress indicated by an increasing interest in birds, manifest on every hand, is more difficult to appraise. What has been done can be regarded, however, only as the beginning of the work.

We still need improved and consolidated legislation—legislation not only on the Statute-book, but known and understood by the people, and having the support of an enlightened popular opinion. In particular, we urgently need more adequate means for coping with the whole traffic in wild birds, and more stringent laws for dealing with the "possession" of protected birds and eggs, whether they are in the bird-dealers' or poulterers' shops, or in the hands of collector or trading naturalist. We need far more efficient and uniform protection for rare species.

We need more sanctuaries for wild birds, and more Watchers to guard them.

We need the aid and support of landowners, gamekeepers, and farmers in the preservation of interesting species, and this must be sought by diffusing a knowledge of birds, and by scientific investigation into the economic question

We need to train and educate the children of the nation by a general extension of Bird and Tree Competitions, in secondary and private schools, as well as in elementary schools.

Beyond this, and to obtain all this, there is needed constant and patient use of every occasion and opportunity on which information can be given, knowledge widened influence extended, sympathy evoked, a truer feeling roused, a further step in advance achieved. For this the co-operation and practical support of every bird-lover in the kingdom is asked, and should not be asked in vain.—Bird Notes and News.

STRAY NOTES.

MR. RICHARD KEARTON, who is one of our most distinguished students of bird-life, stated in a recent lecture that adult male birds will sometimes feed the young of other species. Mr. Kearton has seen this happen on several occasions, and was able to show his audience a photograph of a robin feeding a nest of young song thrushes! Possibly this habit of birds feeding others of an alien race may help to throw light on the mystery of the cuckoo. But it is difficult to account for the evolution of such a habit, which cannot possibly benefit the bird, on the principles of natural selection. It may be a mere aberration of instinct, and not an act of predisposed good will.

The British Ornithologists' Club held its annual lantern-slide show last month, when some interesting pictures of bird-life were thrown on the screen. The feature, perhaps, was the series of photographs taken by Dr. Wilson, of the "Discovery" expedition, in the Antarctic. The Emperor, King, and Adela penguins were all illustrated by a remarkable series of photographs, while various points in the life-history and anatomy of those birds were explained by Mr. W. R. Pycraft, of the Bird Section of the British Museum. It is worthy of note that those photographs of bird-life in the Antarctic were most of them taken at midnight, the light at mid-day having proved far too strong for satisfactory results.

It is well-known that ducks often lay green eggs, but it is not a little strange for a hen to do so. Mr. Drieberg of the Ceylon Agricultural School came across a hen that laid light green eggs. There was nothing abnormal about the egg save the colour. Some of these were presented to the Museum at Colombo.

If scientists are to be trusted, it is a mistake to suppose that the lives of animals are peaceful and happy. Worms are in constant terror of birds. The smaller birds are never free from dread of hawks, or owls, or cats. Cats are afraid, not only of their ancient enemy the dog, but of the wicked small boy who throws stones. Dogs are afraid of one another, and in mortal terror of cows. Horses are haunted by the swish of the whip. Sheep appear to suffer from a constant prevision of the butcher. Sprats are tortured by the expectation of being swallowed by the mackerel, and mackerel are always expecting the same fate at the jaws of the shark. Almost every living thing is afraid of man.

Besides, not an animal exists who is not being perpetually gnawed by hundreds of parasites. The woodcock and turbot swarm with tape-worms. In the young caterpillar the ichneumon fly lays its eggs, and the little creatures that are hatched eat the caterpillar till not a particle is left. Thousands of little worms live in the rabbit, and when a dog eats him they lodge themselves under the dog's tongue and often drive him mad with pain.

Great tumours are raised on the backs of sheep and cattle by parasites which bore under the skin. Even the crocodile suffers from never-ending toothache, caused by a little beast that lodges in his jaw.

In fact, it is as true with regard to animals as of men—that there is no peace for them on earth.

The Story Teller.

THE DRESS CLOTHES OF MONSIEUR POMPONNET.

IT was thanks to Touquet, that she was able to look so chic—the little baggage!—yet of all her suitors Touquet was the one she favoured least. He was the costumier at the corner of the Rue des Martyrs, and made a very fair thing of the second-hand clothes. It was to Touquet's that the tradesmen of the Quarter turned as a matter of course to hire dress suits for their nuptials. It was in the well-cleaned satins of Touquet's that the brides' mothers and the lady guests cut such imposing figures when they were photographed after the wedding breakfasts; it was even Touquet who sometimes supplied a gown to one or another of the humble actresses at the Theatre Montmartre, and received a couple of free tickets in addition to his fee. I tell you that Touquet was not a person to be sneered at, though he had passed the first flush of youth, and was never an Adonis.

Besides, who was she, this little Lisette, who had the impudence to flout him! A girl in a florist's, if you can believe me with no particular beauty herself, and not a sou by way of dot! And yet—one must confess it—she turned a head as swiftly as she made a "buttonhole;" and Pomponnet, the pastrycook, was paying court to her too—to say nothing of the homage of Messieurs Tricotrin, the poet, and Goujaud, the painter, and Lajeunie, the novelist. You would never have guessed that her wages were only 20 francs a week, as you watched her valse with Tricotrin at the ball on Saturday evening, or as you saw her enter Pomponnet's shop when the shutters were up on Sunday afternoon, to feast on his strawberry tarts. Her costumes were the cynosure of the Boulevard Rochechouart!

And they were all due to Touquet, Touquet the infatuated, who lent the fine feathers to her for the sake of a glance, or a pressure of the hand—and wept on his counter afterwards while he wondered whose arms might be embracing her in the costumes that he had cleaned and pressed with so much care. Often he swore that his folly should end—that she should be affianced to him, or go shabby; but lo! in a day or two she would make her appearance again, to coax for the loan of a smart blouse or "that hat with the mass of geraniums and the brilliant buckle"—and Touquet would be as weak as ever.

Judge, then, of his despair when he heard that she had agreed to marry Pomponnet! She told him the news with the air of an amiable gossip when she came to return a ball dress that she had borrowed.

"Enfin," she said—perched on the counter, and swinging her remorseless feet—"it is arranged. I desert the flowers for the pastry, and become the mistress of a shop. I shall have to beg from my good friend Monsieur Touquet no more—not at all! I shall be his client, like the rest. It will be better hein?"

Touquet groaned. "You know well, Lisette," he answered, "that it has been a joy to me to place the stock at your disposal, even though it was to make you more attractive in the eyes of other men. Everything here that you have worn possesses a charm to me. I fondle the garments when you bring them back; I take them down from the peg and dream over them. Truly! There is no limit to my weakness: for often when a customer proposes to hire a frock that you have had, I cannot bear that she should profane it, and I say that it is engaged."

"You dear kind Monsieur Touquet," murmured the coquette; "how agreeable you are!"

"I have always hoped for the day when the stock would be all your own, Lisette! And by-and-by we might have removed to a better position—even down the hill. Who knows? We might have opened a business in the Madeline Quarter! That would suit you better than a little cake shop up a side street! And I would have risked it for you—I know how you incline to fashion. When I have taken you to a theatre, did you choose the Montmartre—where we might have gone for nothing—or the Belleville? Not you—that might do for other girls! You have always demanded the theatres of the Grands Boulevards; a cup of coffee at the Café de la Paix is more to your taste than a bock and three hard-boiled eggs at 'The Purple Monkey.' Heaven knows I trust you will be happy, but I cannot persuade myself that this Pomponnet shares your ambitions; with his slum and his stale pastry he is quite content."

"It is not stale," she said.

"Well, we will pass his pastry—though, word of honour, I bought some there last week that might have been baked before the Commune; but to recur to his soul, is it an affinity?"

"Affinities are always hard up," she pouted.

"Bah!" exclaimed Touquet; "now your mind is running on that Gustave Tricotrin—by 'affinities' I do not mean hungry poets! Why not have entrusted your happiness to me? I adore you. I have told you a thousand times that I adore you. Lisette, consider before it is too late! You cannot love this—this obscure baker!"

She gave a shrug. "It is a fact that devotion has not robbed me of my appetite," she confessed. "But what would you have? His business goes far better than you imagine. I have seen his books; and, anyhow, my sentiment for you is friendship, and no more."

"To the devil with friendship!" carried the unhappy wardrope dealer. "Did I dress you like the Empress Josephine for friendship?"

"Do not mock yourself of it," she said reprovingly. "Remember that "Friendship is a beautiful flower, of which esteem is the root.'" And having thrown the adage to him, coupled with a glance that drove him to distraction, the little flirt jumped off the counter and was gone.

Much more wistfully she contemplated parting with him whom the costumier had described as a "hungry poet;" but matrimony did not enter into the poet's scheme of things, nor for that matter had she ever regarded him as a possible parti. Yet a woman may give her fancy where her reason refuses to follow, and when she imparted her news to Tricotrin there was no smile on her lips.

"We shall not go to balls any more, old dear," she said. "Monsieur Pomponnet has proposed marriage to me—and I range my self."

"Heartless girl," exclaimed the young man, with tears in his eyes. "So much for woman's constancy!"

"Mon Dieu!" she faltered, "did you then love me, Gustave—really?"

"I do not know," said Tricotrin: "but since I am to lose you, I prefer to think so. Oh, do not grieve for me—fortunately there is always the Seine! And first I shall pour my misery into song; and in years to come, fair daughters at your side will read the deathless poem, little dreaming that the Lisette I sang to is their mother. Some time—long after I am in my grave, when France has honoured me at last you may stand before a statue that bears my name, and think, "He loved me, and I broke his heart."

"Oh," she whimpered, "rather than break your heart, I—I might break the engagement! I might consider again, Gustave."

"No, No" replied Tricotrin, "I will not reproach myself with the thought that I have marred your life: I will leave you free! Besides, as I say, I am not certain that I should want you so much but for the fact that I have lost you. After all, you will not appreciate the poem that immortalizes you; and if I lived, many of your remarks about it would be sure to irritate me."

"Why should I not appreciate it? Am I so stupid?"

"It is not that you are stupid, my soul," he explained; "it is that I am transcendently clever. To understand the virtue of my work one must have sipped from all the flowers of literature. There is to be found in it Racine, Voltaire, Flaubert, Renan—and always Gustave Tricotrin," as Lemaitre has written. He wrote '—and always Anatole France,' but I paraphrase him slightly. So you are going to marry Pomponnet? Mon Dieu, when I have my sous in my pocket, I will ruin myself for the rapture of regretting you among the pastry?"

"I thought," she said, a little mortified, "that you were going to drown yourself!"

"Am I not to write my lament to you? I must eat while I write it—why not pastry? Also when I am penniless and starving, you may sometimes, in your prosperity—. And yet, perhaps, it is too much to ask!"

"Grant you credit, do you mean? Oh, yes, Gustave, how can you doubt that I would do that? In memory of—"

"In memory of the love that has been, you will allow me to run up a small score for cakes, will you not, Lisette?"

"I will, indeed?" she promised. "But, but—Oh, it's quite true, I should never understand you! A minute ago you made me think of you in the Morgue, and now you make me think of you in the cake shop. What are you laughing at?"

"I laugh, like Figaro," said Tricotrin, that I may not be obliged to weep. When are you going to throw yourself away, my little Lisette? Has my accursed rival induced you to fix a date?"

"We are to be married in a fortnight's time," she said. "And if you could undertake to be sensible, I would ask Alphonse to invite you to the breakfast."

"In a fortnight's time hunger and a hopeless passion will probably have made an end of me," replied the poet. "However, if I survive, the breakfast would certainly be welcome. Where is it to be held? I can recommend a restaurant that is especially fine at such affairs, and most moderate. 'Photographs of the party are taken gratuitously in the Jardin d'Acclimatation, and pianos are at the disposal of the ladies';' I quote from the menu. I study it in the window every time I pass. There are wedding breakfasts from 6 to 12 francs per head. At six francs, the party have their choice of two soups and three hors d'oeuvres. Then comes 'poisson'—I fear it may be whiting—with sauce crevettes, filet de boeuf with tomates farcies, bouchees a la Reine, chicken, pigeons, salad, two vegetables, an ice, assorted fruits, and biscuits. The wines are Madeira, a bottle of Macon to each person, a bottle of Bordeaux among four persons, and a bottle of champagne among 10 persons. Also coffee and liqueurs. At six francs a head! It is good hein? At seven francs there is a bottle of champagne among every eight persons—Pomponnet will, of course, do as he thinks best. At eight francs a bottle is provided for every six persons. I have too much delicacy to make suggestions, but should he be willing to soar to 12 francs a head, I might eat enough to last a week—and of such quality! The soups would then be bisque d'ecrevisse and consomme Rachel. Truite saumonee Joinville would appear! Asparagus 'in branches,' and compote peches marasquin would be included. Also, in the 12-franc breakfast, the champagne begins to have a human name on the label!"

Now, it is not certain how much of this information Lisette repeated to Pomponnet. But Pomponnet having a will of his own, refused to entertain M. Tricotrin at any price at all. Moreover, he found it unconventional that she should desire the poet's company, considering the attentions that he had paid her; and she was forced to listen, with an air of humility which she was far from feeling, to a lecture on the responsibilities of her new position.

"I am not a jealous man," said the pastrycook, who was as jealous a man as ever baked a pie, "but it would be discreet that you dropped this acquaintance now that we are engaged. I know well that you have never taken the addresses of such a fellow seriously, and that it is only in the goodness of your heart that you wish to present him with a blowout. Nevertheless, the betrothal of a man in my circumstances is much remarked; all the daughters of the hairdresser next door have had their hopes of me—indeed, there is scarcely a neighbour who is not chagrined at the turn events have taken—and the world would be only too glad of an excuse to call me "fool" Pomponnet's wife must be above suspicion. You will remember that a little lightness of conduct which might be forgiven in the employ of the florist would be unseemly in my fiancee. No more conversation with Monsieur Tricotrin, Lisette! Some dignity—some coldness in the bow when you pass him. The Boulevard will observe it; it will be approved."

"You, of course know best, my dear Alphonse" she returned meekly. "I am only an inexperienced girl, and I am thankful to have your advice to guide me. But let me say that never, never has there been any 'lightness of conduct' to distress you. Monsieur Tricotrin and I have been merely friends. If I have gone to a ball with him sometimes—and I acknowledge that has happened—it has been because nobody more to my taste has offered to take me." She had ground her little teeth under the infliction of his homily, and it was only by dint of thinking hard of his profits that she abstained from retorting that he might marry the daughters of the hairdresser and go to Uganda.

However, during the next week or so, she did not chance to meet the poet on the Boulevard, and since she wished to conquer her tenderness for him, one cannot doubt that all would have been well but for the editor of Le Demi-Mot. By a freak of fate, the editor of Le Demi-Mot was moved to invite Mr. Tricotrin to dine at his house two days previous to the wedding. What followed! Naturally Tricotrin must present himself in evening dress. Naturally, also, he must go to Touquet's to hire the suit.

"Regard," said the costumier, "here is a suit that I have just acquired. Monsieur will observe that it is of the most distinguished cut—quite in the latest fashion. I will whisper to Monsieur that it comes to me through the valet of the Comte de Chateau-Leroy!"

"Mon Dieu," said Tricotrin, "let me try it on!" And he was so gratified by his appearance in it that he barely winced at the thought of the expense. "I am improving my position," he soliloquized; "if I have not precisely inherited the mantle of Victor Hugo, I have, at any rate, hired the dress suit of the Comte de Chateau-Leroy!"

Never had a more impressive spectacle been witnessed in Montmartre than Tricotrin's departure from his lodgings in the Rue des Trois Freres shortly after 6 o' lock. Wearing a shirt of Piton's, Flamant's patent-leather boots and a white tie contributed by Goujaud, the young man sallied forth with the deportment of the count himself. Only one thing more did he desire—a flower for his buttonhole; and Lisette remained in her situation until the morrow! What more natural, finally, than that he should his to the florist's!

It was the first time that she had seen her lover in evening dress, and sentiment overpowered her as he entered.

"Thou!" she murmured, paling.

On the poet, too, the influence of the clothes was very strong; attired like a jeune premier he craved with all the dramatic instinct of his nature for a love scene; and, instead of fulfilling his intention to beg for a rosebud at cost price, he gazed at her soulfully, and breathed "Lisette!"

"So we have met again!" she said.

"The world is small," returned the poet, obvious of the fact that he had come to the shop. "And am I yet remembered?"

"It is not likely I should forget you in a few days," she said more practically. "I did not forget about the breakfast either; but Alphonse put his foot down."

"Pig!" said the poet. "And yet it may be better so! How could I eat in such an hour?"

"However, you are not disconsolate this evening? she suggested "Mon Dieu, what a swell you are!"

"Bah, some fashionable assembly that will bore me beyond endurance!" he sighed. "With you alone, Lisette, have I known true happiness—the tram rides on summer nights that were joyous because we loved, the simple meals that were sweetened by your smiles!"

"Oh, Gustave!" she said. "Wait, I must give you a flower for your coat!"

"I shall keep it all my life!" vowed Tricotrin. "Tell me little one—I dare not stay now, because my host lives a long way off—but this evening, could we not meet once again? For the last time, to say farewell? I have nearly two francs 50, and we might go to supper, if you agree.

It was arranged before he took leave of her that she should meet him outside the debit at the corner of the Rue de Sontay at 11 o'clock, and sup with him there, in a locality where she was unlikely to be recognised. Rash enough this conduct for a young woman who was to be married to another man on the next day but one! But a greater imprudence was to follow. They supped, they sentimentalized, and when they parted in the Champs Elysees and the moonshine, she gave to him from her bosom a litte rose-coloured envelope that contained nothing less than a lock of her hair.

The poet placed it tenderly in his waistcoat pocket; and after he had wept, and quoted poetry to the stars, forgot it. He began to wish that he had not mixed his liquors quite so impartially; and on the morrow when he woke he was mindful of nothing more grievous than a splitting headache.

Now, Touquet, who could not sleep of nights because the pastrycook was going to marry Lisette, made a practice of examining the pockets of all garments returned to him, with an eye to stray sous; and when he proceeded to examine the pockets of the dress suit returned by M. Tricotrin, what befel but that he drew forth a rosetinted envelope containing a tress of hair, and inscribed, "To Gustave, from Lisette. Adieu."

And the editor who invited M. Tricotrin had never heard of Lisette; never heard of Pomponnet; did not know that such a person as Touquet existed; yet the editorial caprice had manipulated destinies. How powerful are editors! How complicated is life!

But a truce to philosophy. Let us deal with the emotions of the soul! The shop reeled before Touquet. All the good and the bad in his character battled tumultuously. In one moment he aspired to be generous and restore to Lisette the evidence of her guilt; in the next he sank to the base thought of displaying it to Pomponnet and breaking off the match. The discovery fired his brain. No longer was he a nonentity, the "odd man out"—chance had transformed him to the master of the situation. Full well he knew that there would be no nuptails next day were Pomponnet aware of his fiancee's perfidy; it needed but to go to him, to say, "Monsieur, my sense of duty compels me to inform you—" How easy it would be! He laughed hysterically.

But Lisette would never pardon such a meanness—she would always despise and hate him! He would have torn her from his rival's arms, it was true, yet his own would still be empty. "Ah, Lisette, Lisette!" groaned the wretched man; and, swept to the evil by the force of passion, he cudgelled his mind to devise some piece of trickery, some diabolical artifice, by which the incriminating token might me placed in the pastrycook's hands as if by accident.

And while he pondered—his "whole soul a chaos"—in that hour Pomponnet entered to hire a dress suit for his wedding!

Touquet raised his head, blanched to the lips.

"Regard," he said, with a forced calm terrible to behold; "here is a suit that I have just acquired. Monsieur will observe that it is of the most distinguished cut—quite in the latest fashion. I will whisper to Monsieur that it comes to me through the valet of the Comte de Chateau-Leroy." And unseen by the guileless bridegroom, he slipped the damning proof into a pocket of the trousers, where his knowledge of the pastrycook's attitudes assured him that it was even more certain to be found than in the waistcoat.

"Mon Dieu!" said the other, duly impressed by the suit's pedigree; "let me try it on. . . . The coat is rather tight," he complained; "but it has undeniably an air!"

"No more than one customer has worn it," gasped the wardrobe dealer haggardly—"Monsieur Gustave Tricotrin, the poet, who hired it last night! The suit is practically new. I have no other in the establishment to compare with it. Listen Monsieur Pomponnet! To an old patron like yourself I will be liberal. Wear it this evening for an hour in your home. If you find it not to your figure, there will be time to make another selection before the ceremony to-morrow. You shall have this on trial, I will make no extra charge."

Such magnanimity was bound to have its effect, and five minutes later Touquet's plot had triumphed. But the tension had been frightful. The door had scarcely closed when he sank into a chair, trembling in every limb, and for the rest of the day he attended to his business like one moving in a trance.

Meanwhile, the unsuspecting Pomponnet reviewed the arrangements with considerable satisfaction; and when he came to attire himself, after the cake shop was shut, his reflected image pleased him so well that he was tempted to stroll abroad. He decided to call on his betrothed, and to exhibit himself a little on the Boulevard. Accordingly he put some money in the pocket of the waistcoat, soaped his silk hat to give it an additional lustre, and sallied forth in high good humour.

"How splendid you look, my dear Alphonse!" exclaimed Lisette, little dreaming it was the same suit that she had approved on Tricotrin the previous evening.

Her innocent admiration was agreeable to Pomponnet. He patted her on the cheek.

"In truth," he said carelessly, "I had forgotten that I had it on! But I was so impatient for the morrow, my pet angel, that I could not remain alone, and I had to come to see you."

They were talking on her doorstep, for she had no apartment in which it would have been convenable to entertain, and it appeared to him that the terrace of a cafe would be more congenial.

"Run upstairs and make your toilette, my loving duck," he suggested, "and I shall take you out for a tasse. While you are getting ready, I will smoke a cigar." And he drew his cigar case from the breast pocket of the coat, and took a matchbox from the pocket where he had put his cash.

It was a balmy evening, sweet with the odour of spring, and the streets were full of life. As he promenaded with her on the Boulevard, Pomponnet did not fail to remark the attention commanded by his costume. He strutted proudly, and when they reached the cafe and took their seats he gave his order with all the authority of the President.

"Mon Dieu," he remarked, "it is pleasant here, hein? And then stretching his legs he thrust both his hands into the pockets of his trousers. "Comment?" he murmured. "What have I found? . . . Now is not this amusing—I swear it is a billetdoux! He bent, chuckling, to the light—and bounded in his chair with an oath that turned a dozen heads towards them. "Traitress," roared Pomponnet, "miserable traitress! It is your name! It is your writing! It is your hair! Do not deny it. Give me your head—it matches to a shade! Jezebel, last night you have met Monsieur Tricotrin. You have deceived me!"

Lisette, who have jumped as high as he in recognising the envelope, sat like one paralysed now. Her tongue refused to move. For the instant, the catastrophe seemed to her of supernatural agency—it was as if a miracle had happened, as she saw her fiancee produce her lover's keep sake. All she could stammer at last was—"Let us go away. Pay for the coffee!" "I will not pay, shouted M. Pomponnet. "Pay for it yourself, jade I have done with you!" And leaving her spellbound at the table, he strode from terrace like a madman before the waiters could stop him.

Oh, of course, he was well known in the cafe, and they did not detain Lisette, but it was a most ignominious position for a young woman. And there was no wedding next day, and every body knew why. The little coquette, who had mocked suitors by the dozen, was jilted almost on the threshold of the Mairie. She smacked Tricotrin's face in the morning, but her humiliation was so acute that it demanded the salve of immediate marriage, and at the moment she could think of no one better than Touquet.

So Touquet won her after all, and though by this time she may guess how he accomplished it, he will tell you—word of honour—that never, never has he had occasion for regret.—The Observer.

JAUNTS IN BURMESE JUNGLES.

I.

THE rains of 1903, found me tied down to a small station on the frontier of Upper Burma. The deadly monotony of this out-of-the-way spot was beginning to tell on the nerves and tempers of our limited community. The monsoons in this hill station are indeed a severe trial on one's patience. The solitary form of outdoor amusement was tennis, but from June till November even this pastime could very rarely be indulged in owing to the inclemency of the weather. Other means of exercise were nil, unless one chose to put on shorts and go for a wet and slippery climb, but energy to carry this into effect was more often than otherwise lacking. By hook or by crook I was determined to shake the red mud of this white man's settlement off my feet, and embark on a six weeks' jaunt in some jungles far removed from the haunts of civilization. Many were the warnings kindly meant, but perhaps less kindly received, as to the folly of camping out at that time of year. With the sportsman, however, such hardships are all a part and parcel of the day's work, and without a certain amount of toil and trouble, the hunter thinks ill of his trophies. How difficult it is to make satisfactory arrangements at a distance. The scene of my prospective jaunts lay over 100 miles distant, and to reach these vast forests, it was necessary to tramp most of the way on foot. As the so-called road after reaching the valley was impassable for anything but two legged transport, one had to place reliance on the headmen of villages for coolies, and in such outlying districts rarely visited by the more responsible district officials, it frequently requires considerable pressure before coolies are forthcoming, especially when the fields are under preparation for sowing or transplanting the paddy. I was well pleased in one sense, however, for a friend had kindly promised to procure for me the best tracker in the district. It was with many misgivings that I set out from head-quarters during the first week of August in pursuit of the lordly bison, and his less bulky congener the tsine, and any other of the smaller quadrupeds that Dame Fortune might throw across my path. The march to the plains and up the valley passed without incident, but on arrival at my destination my hopes of good sport were dashed to the ground on hearing that the tracker who had been engaged to accompany me had been taken on by a globe-trotting Sportsman (sic). As he was the only man who knew thoroughly the reserved forest in which I had intended to shoot, that portion had to be handed over, with ill grace I must confess, to dives. How irksome it was to be kicking one's heels about, counting each day as it passed and waiting for other trackers to come in, for in a strange country one is helpless without a reliable guide. A hunter was secured at last, and we retraced our footsteps for about thirty miles down the river. The night is spent in the same tumbled down shanty in which I slept a week ago, on my march up the valley, a whole precious week of leave wasted and I have not even reached my hunting grounds. Coolies are at length collected, and next morning when the first faint tinge of colour lightens the eastern sky, the tracker and I are wending our way through the ghostly forest glades to the haunts of the noble gaur while servants and baggage take a better path up the bed of the stream which drains this reserve. The formation of these forest reserves is somewhat peculiar, and it will be worth our while to pause for a minute to examine their nature. The main chain of the Pyingadaungs runs almost due north and south. To the west of these mountains, and distant from them about eight miles, runs a second ridge parallel to the higher hills termed the Outer Pyingadaungs. At regular intervals these two ranges are connected together by spurs, so that the country is divided up into well-defined basins, each with its own distinct system of drainage forcing its way through a gap in the lesser line into the river M— Following the tops of the Main and Outer Pyingadaungs, and the crests of the connecting spurs are cut fire-lines. When the wild beasts of one reserve are on migration bent, they will have to cross one or other fire-line, and as often as not these artificially constructed paths are utilized by the denizens of the forest as regular game tracks. Hence if a hunter follow a fire-line for any distance, he will be able to ascertain pretty accurately the movements of the creatures of which he is in quest. A trudge of about six miles culminating in a very steep ascent of about 200 ft., brings us panting to the fire-line of the outer range. We follow this southwards for some distance and then plunge down into the gorge beneath. Anon we strike the tracks of a herd of bison some three days old. What memories those well-known hoof-marks call up—days spent on the hill tops of Southern India, days passed amid the elephant grass of the terais of Upper Burma. It is some months since I have seen the spoor of a bison, moulded in the soft mud—the very sight of it makes one's every sense become at once on the alert. Those cloven imprints at least point to the fact that these jungles are not destitute of game, and it rests with fickle Fortune whether the fatal bullet speeds true, or whether with a snort of indignation at being disturbed, our quarry is off on his mad career for liberty, crashing through bamboo clumps as easily as the ordinary human being can put his fist through a sheet of brown paper. We follow the maze of these tracks, but never get nearer to the herd than 2½ hours; it is decided to abandon the pursuit, strike down to the stream below, and make a detour by the further slopes to camp, reading the signs of the forest as we pick our way cautiously through those arching colonnades of bamboo and big tree jungle.

The sun has sunk about half way down the western sky; as we cross a gently sloping spur our footsteps are arrested by the tracks of a solitary bull bison. The huge beast has been grazing gradually up into the forest above during the early hours of the morning. Here he has broken off the juicy top of a bamboo shoot; the more succulent part has been chewed, and the stump has been tossed away as another tender stalk has caught his eye. Thus zigzagging to right and left he has leisurely taken his way upwards. It is 3 P.M., and though I am sorely tempted to follow those luring hoof-marks, prudence bids me wait till the morrow. This is my first tramp through the jungles for some months, and wind and limb are beginning to feel the effects of the unwonted exertion. When tired out the hunter is far less capable of pitting himself against the craft of the denizens of the jungle than he is when fresh, it is therefore decided to turn our faces campwards. Before returning to seek a well-earned rest, the tracker is called up, and we discuss our movements for the next day. I incline to [illegible] follow where they [illegible] other feeding grounds du[illegible] always a long one, especiall[illegible] start. The tracker maintains th[illegible] to ring the jungle, and if he has left [illegible] are bound to strike his tracks with les[illegible] give way to his plan, for on the face it seems [illegible] day we cover a complete circle, but never do we c[illegible] the trail of which we are in search. We climb up hil[illegible] dale, traverse broad expanses of wooded spurs, trudge an[illegible] fire-line for many a weary mile, branch off down a game tra[illegible] to the creek below, and so back to camp, but our quest is fruitless. The broad paths flattened out by a herd of elephants are the only visible signs of wild life, but these pachyderms had left for other more favoured resorts full a week ago. Our mid-day repast is eaten in a rocky gorge, full of well-hidden natural caves. Here we happen on the spot where a serow has fallen a victim to one of the larger carnivora. There is the place where the prey all unconscious of his doom, was suddenly pounced upon. The marks of the scuffle are still easily discernible. The broad trail of broken undergrowth where the warm carcase has been dragged leads up into a half-concealed hollow under a projecting slab of rock. A few scattered bones and the gnawed skull are the only remains of the tragedy. The tiger and the panther have in these limitless forests to work hard for their food and when one of the ferae naturae are seized a full meal is made and nothing is left for the vermin to devour.

The tracker has had his essay to circumvent the bull and has failed. There is nothing left now but to unravel the tangled skein of those imprints, though they be 48 hours old. It has been raining off and on since dawn, and we reach camp weary and foot sore and drenched to the skin. As I turn in under the genial warmth of a cosy blanket, I reflect on the chances of the morrow. Though the spoor is 48 hours old at this very moment that bison is somewhere within that rinsed portion of forest; tracking will be easy as the ground is sodden, and if the Fates are kind the old solitary bull should, meetaphorically speaking, be in the hollow of my hand. But when in pursuit of the forest creatures nine-tenths of the rub is what our Aryan brothers call kismet. One may move ever so quietly, make no possible errors, and apply every reasonable precaution, but all to no purpose. The position in which the animal is found in heavy jungle is all luck. One cannot alter the stars in their courses; the pressing of the trigger in the grand finale is as easy for the novice as for the experienced hand if he only keeps a cool head. A sudden change of wind, meeting with the animal concealed behind some friendly screen, it is such like uncertainties that make the pursuit of big game the sport it is, that is, that make the hunter keen to bring down his quarry in the face of all difficulties.

We are all up and about before the stars have died out from the sky, and eagerly step by step we pick out the trail that beckons us onwards. The tracker is in front, I with my .577 follow behind him, and my Gurkha orderly with the 8-bore brings up the rear. We have reached a small plateau, but the tracks show no sign of being any newer, in fact they are filled with water. A heavy shower of rain comes on and I slip on my waterproof cape—a snort—a glimpse of a black mass making one wild bound—a series of terrific crashes and then silence. I rush forward to the lip of this level patch cocking my rifle as I dash on, but the quarry has gone. I know full well that the bull will not stop till he has placed many a mile between himself and danger. Why did not any of us see that huge bulk of flesh 19 hands in height standing within 50 yards. As we cast around the reason is evident. It was a caprice of Fortune that just at the critical moment the bull should be hidden behind some gigantic ant hills. The swish, swish of a body moving through the undergrowth must have roused him to attention. One glance at the disturbers of his solitude sent him whirling round, one leap fully 20 feet took him out of sight; a track of broken bamboos and uprooted saplings showed us the direction and force of his flight. We examined the neighbouring ground, and found that he had not wandered more than two hundred yards in any direction for 36 hours. The young bamboo shoots were unusually numerous, and this was probably accountable for his unwillingness to quit the spot. The pursuit was carried on in the hopes that Fortune might favour us, but such was not to be. We had been on the trudge for several hours and had filed out into an open glade with undergrowth up to our armpits. I stumbed over a hidden log, and as I recovered myself I saw a bamboo being violently agitated. That was the last I saw of that bull. It was a dejected trio that straggled back to a very damp camp with a very smoky fire, poor comforts after an unlucky jaunt, but we had the consolation that always attends the unsuccessful hunter. Dame Fortune must turn her back from us if we woo her for a sufficient length of time but when in an adverse mood that wooing nearly drives one to distraction.

BRIDGE BELIEFS.

FALSE CARD CALL: THE MINIMUM STRENGTH.

WANT of leisure and the unfortunate loss of a note-book (containing various hands in which the False Card call would have been of use) have been the cause of the delay of this article. In the interim I have sent up the two previous articles to "Bascule," of the Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News. A subscriber to the Indian Field sent up the first article to the Field to get the opinion of Mr. W. H. Whitfeld, who is considered by many the greatest living authority on cards, and who is card editor of the Field in succession to "Cavendish." Bascule, except he has acknowledged the papers has said nothing, but by a strange coincidence the week after their arrival he has himself written articles on the "circular" discard, as well as the French discard, to both of which I called attention. Mr. W. H. Whitfeld in acknowledging, made the following comment:—"There is merit in the suggestion. The signal has, however, been used to signify strength in the suit just opened." The remark does not do Mr. Whitfeld credit, as I expressly guarded myself against the danger of utilising the call in one's partner suit, as it might be taken for an "echo," although as a matter of fact such a deduction could hardly ever be made, and it is most difficult to manufacture an instance, where any such mistake could occur. As for it having merit, I and two different partners, to whom after cutting I had explained the signal, made two rubbers instead of losing them during the past month, and as an ounce of practical utility is always worth more than a pound of theoretical utility, I have at the end of this article given the two instances. That the rule will take time to come into general use is more than probable, but that once it is grasped it will be as much used as the universal "Petering" I have not the remotest doubt. For the benefit of those, who have not seen the previous articles, I recapitulate the rule:—

"If a player play a false card it is an intimation that he holds a great suit he wants led; and if he has to discard, he will discard from that suit." The rule is as simple as any rule can be, and not even the Bridge tyro can fail to grasp the rule.

Now as regards the minimum strength, in which it would be advisable to utilise the call, it is easy enough to dogmatise in certain cases, the difficulty is to formulate rules in doubtful cases. My advice is to try the call at first only with great and unquestionable strength. Afterwards, when it is realised the extraordinary efficacy of the call, the skilful player will find numberless opportunities for utilising the call in desperate situations. To take an instance. Dealer declares "none" with their score standing at 12 in the rubber game, and the leader and his partner are love. A leads Q. of Hearts and Dummy and the Pone have the following hands:—

Diamonds J 10 7 4
Clubs Q 6 2
Spades K 9 2

	Dummy
A		B
	Dealer

Hearts 6 5
Clubs A J 9 7 4 3
Spades 10 5 3

It would be obvious to B. that there is only one chance of saving game, and that is in Clubs, and then only if A holds the King, and leads it if he gets in. The question would arise whether B would be justified in playing the "false card" call. It is clear that A if he hold the King of Clubs guarded, would, in the ordinary course of things, be very unlikely to lead it, but on the other hand, if he knew B had a great suit, the probabilities are he would lead it in preference to Spades. It is in cases like these that the skilful player will find his opportunities. Supposing A held

Hearts Q J 10 8
Diamonds K 7 6
Spades J 8 7 4

It is clear if A holds up his King of Diamonds for the object of seeing whether B is calling or not, and then leads King of Clubs instead of trying to clear Hearts, that A and B will make the odd, instead of losing two tricks and the rubber. This is an extreme case and I can conceive no case in which the call would be justified with less strength where the "caller" is behind the declarer. Where the "caller" is over the declarer, less, strength is, of course, required. In such cases no one can be dogmatic. It depends on the score, the known skill of one's partner in his power of making deductions, and such like things.

In some cases I think one can be dogmatic, and in the following cases I should say the call should invariably be made.

A. Where a player holds two certain tricks in a suit if led, e. g. A. K. in either hand or A Q with King in exposed hand, where the caller is over the exposed hand, or where the caller is original leader and the King not in Dummy.

B. Where the "caller" holds three honours in a suit, one of which is the Ace, or without the Ace, but where one of the other honours is in Dummy and the "caller" is over Dummy.

The cases where the Pone holds three honours without the Ace or two honours with the Ace are cases too difficult upon which to formulate any rules.

Now to come to the actual cases of actual play I should mention that on both occasions my partners had passed out of the "petticoat" stage of Bridge. It is, of course, quite useless to ask any one to play the "call," unless he has some pretentions to being a Bridge player. The following were the hands:—Score game all A B. 0 Z Y 10.

Hearts K J 10

Trick 2. K H — 6 H — Dummy A B Dealer — 7H — 2 H
Trick 3. J H — A H — Dummy A B Dealer — 4H — 3 H

My partner at once led the Q. of Clubs followed by a small one, and we made five Clubs, three Diamonds, and one Heart. In the ordinary way my partner would have gone on with Diamonds, and we must have lost two tricks, and if he discards badly three tricks. As it was we made game and "rub."

In the other case I was the leader and our score was 20 and our oponents were twelve. The game was the first of the rubber. The following were the hands:—

Hearts A Q 8
Diamonds A K 7
Clubs K 7 6 3

Trick 6. 7 S — K S — Dummy A B Dealer — 4S — 3 S

and then 6 of Spades and we made the odd trick. Dealer should have played the Queen on my Jack first round, but many players prefer to play the Ace straight away as there is nothing to show where the King is. Had dealer put on the Queen, B should have discarded his other heart on the Diamond and not a Spade. Under any circumstances Dealer could only make the odd if A leads the King of Spades If B had not called I should have cleared my hearts and must have lost two (and probably four) tricks and game instead of making it. Of course there is no certainty that we should have lost the rubber, but to stand a game down helps considerably. There were a number of other instances, but for one reason or another nothing came of them. It is preferable for any players utilising this convention to announce it to the table. Fortunately it is not like the circular discard, that wants half an hour's study before the ordinary Club man can grapple with its intricacies. "Bascule" says it would not be desirable for two players to play the "circular discard" at a Club where it was not used. I don't agree with him myself. If two players utilise a known and published method of discarding, which their opponents won't trouble to consider or if they have considered don't think it worth playing, why two other players, who have troubled to consider and do think worth playing, should be debarred from using, is beyond me. To utilise some signal that is only known to the players using it is, of course, quite a different thing. The announcement can be made in very simple fashion. A loquitur "B, what do you discard from?" B loquitur "I discard from weakness unless I play a false card when I shall discard from strength."

CRITICUS.

AN INTERESTING BRIDGE POINT.

THE following interesting point has been sent to us for settlement. "A and B are partners against C and D, no trumps being declared. A, the dealer, leads Clubs twice, the second time C, fourth in hand, throws the three of Spades in error, discovers his mistake and wins the trick with the Ace of Clubs. Can A insist on his then leading the three of Spades actually calling a lead?"

Rules 72 and 73 are the rules in regard to exposed cards in general.

Rule 72 says "All cards exposed by the dealer's adversaries are liable to be called and must be left upward on the table . . . . ." and Rule 73 describes what are exposed cards. Rule 94 lays down the penalties for a revoke discovered in time and the part of the rule that refers to the point in question is as follows:—"If the player in fault be one of the dealer's adversaries the dealer many call the card thus played in error or . . . . ." There is no explanation as to what calling a card actually means. Strangely enough Hellespunt, Dalton, Pontifex, Foster to mention the names of some of the leading writers have been entirely silent on the point which is constantly cropping up. The point is really a simple one. The right of calling a card is the right of saying "I call upon you to play the exposed card," and it is quite immaterial whether the player called upon is the leader or is merely playing to a trick. To put the rule in other words "whenever a player has an exposed card he may be called upon to play that card (provided he does not commit a revoke by so doing) whenever it is his turn to play." C. J. Melrose in his "Bridge Whist," 2nd edition), in p. 70, in giving the laws of Bridge writes as follows under Rule 64:—

Cards exposed at any time during the play by one of the dealer's opponents are liable to be called, etc., etc., etc. . . . .

The manner of calling an exposed card is as follows:—

(a) If the suit of the exposed card is led from elsewhere the dealer can say "play the exposed card."

(b) When it is the offender's own lead the dealer can command that he lead the exposed card.

(c) If a suit other than that of the exposed card is led from elsewhere, the dealer can say "follow suit or give the exposed card," and this he can repeat on subsequent cards until, if no longer able to follow suit, the offender will have to give the exposed card."

ENGLISH AND COLONIAL CRICKET.

WITH the match played at Newlands, Cape Town, on the last days of March and 2nd April, the tour of the English team in South Africa came to a close. The visitors played 26 matches during their visit and won seventeen of them: but the matches upon which public interest centred were necessarily the five played against teams representative of South Africa: and as four of these were lost, and badly lost, the tour cannot be regarded with much satisfaction from a cricket standpoint. When the team was selected by the M. C. C. to uphold the honour of the Mother Country in South Africa there were not wanting critics who maintained that its composition was not what South Africa was entitled to expect. There were some good players among those who went out: Mr. Pelham Warner had the assistance of Mr. Leveson Gower and Mr. J. N. Crawford, of Denton, Relf and Haigh: but the team could not be regarded as in any way representative of English cricket, and those who recollected the good work put in by the South African team which visited England a couple of seasons back foretold the very indifferent fight Mr. Warner's men would put up for it.

To briefly summarise results: match No. 1 was won by South Africa by one wicket: No. 2 was won by South Africa by nine wickets: No. 3 was won by South Africa by 243 runs: No. 4 was won by England by four wickets: and No. 5 was won by South Africa by an innings and 16 runs. Various explanations have been put forward, conspicuously the matting wicket used in the Colony: but in our judgment the captain's explanation is the acceptable one—the best men won. The English team as a whole proved fair in batting, weak in bowling, and bad in the field: and as the South Africans paid their visitors the compliment of putting the best men they could into the field, disastrous defeat followed inevitably.

Now we do not know, noboby outside the narrow ring of the inner councils of the M. C. C. can know, by what method the English team was selected. We do not know whether pains were taken to select the best players available or whether the services of any passable player who offered were accepted. We can quite understand that it might not be feasible to get together a really representative team for a winter tour to the Colony: but we are very strongly of opinion that if such impossibility revealed itself, courtesy required that the invitation be frankly declined with the explanation that cricketers worthy of such opponents as South Africa can produce could not, for the various reasons governing the movements of private individuals, be got together. We believe we are right in saying that South Africa "stood" the expenses of the trip: and if we are correct, there was all the greater reason for treating the Colonial hosts with proper respect. It is not, we submit, respectful nor sportsmanlike to accept an invitation to play a series of matches and scrape together a scratch team for the purpose. If the singular feeling prevailed that any team was good enough to send to South Africa, it would have been infinitely better to have sent none at all. The Colonial cricket world has the right to feel aggrieved. On their erstood that they wanted to measure ves against a team representative of the keting strength of England that they might discover their own weaknesses. The request was acceded to by arranging for the visitors a match against "an eleven of England!" It was admittedly a good team: but it was far from being representative of the Mother Country and certainly did not include all, or nearly all, the players who would have been chosen to play in a real "test" match: good as the eleven was the South Africans made hares of their opponents, winning by nearly 200 runs: thus demonstrating that they were by no means the unworthy foes, the treatment accorded them seemed to suggest was the opinion of the M. C. C.

This kind of thing does not make for good feeling, and there are broader reasons than those of sporting etiquette for hoping that the Mother Country will adopt a more worthy attitude towards South Africa in the future. As somebody has remarked recently in connection with cricket tours, more is done by sport for the promotion of goodwill than by politics: and the forces of cricket are potent for the promotion of good feeling. If the South African cricketers on the visit to England in 1904 had suffered ignominious defeat in the majority of matches played, instead of winning the great majority with plenty to spare: then there might be some excuse for treating South African cricket in the spirit of contemptuous indulgence which has been shown it: but when the Colonial players have shown themselves so formidable we are to be pardoned for propounding the treasonable theory that the M. C. C. preferred not to risk defeat of a team declared to be representative of the old country. There must be some reason for the attitude adopted in 1904 towards the South Africans as visitors and in 1905-06 to the Colonials as hosts: and it most assuredly will not be urged that it is due to want of prowess on their part.

We contrast the treatment of the South African cricketers with that accorded the Australians in their first visit to England in 1878. The Australians proved themselves very worthy foes in matches against the counties: they won ten and lost five games: but their successes and failures are of less account than the composition of the teams put into the field against them. They wanted a match against the Players of England: and the projected match at Lord's, it was sought to arrange for them, was not as representative as was hoped only because the professionals demanded £20 per man for playing, and the visitors did not see their way to pay it: but they did meet a representative team of professionals on 11th and 12th September on Prince's Ground at Chelsea and beat them handsomely. Their wish to play a representative team of amateurs was also gratified, for Lord Londesborough selected a very strong eleven which included such men as the Hon'ble A. Lyttelton, Messrs. C. L. Thornton, A. N. Hornby, A. E. Steel, and A. Appleby: a team as strong in bowling as it was in batting. This match was played at Scarborough and remained unfinished but much in favour of the Colonials. Looking back further to the year 1861 when the first visit of an English eleven was paid to Australia, we find the names of some of the giants of the day among the team selected, Caffyn and Hearne, for example. The circumstances under which the eleven went were certainly different from those under which the team for South Africa was selected last year: but it was good enough to give the sporting Colonials a "run for their money" and to gain a lesson in cricket by which they profited. That is one of the chief ends of interstate cricket: to improve the standard of the game. The accepted theory is that the best cricket is that played in England, and that it is the mission of the Mother Country to foster the game in her Colonies: and while that theory obtains, England owes it to herself to send out to any Colony that plays the game seriously a team representative of her best, as it is to put forth her best when the Colony sends a team home and asks to try its strength. To do otherwise is neither good manners nor good policy.

Sporting Notes.

BEYOND noting the dates of the Calcutta Monsoon Meeting in our last issue, we were unable to refer to them, as we got our copies just as we were going to press. The executive are to be commended on settling these details and advertising their first four cards at such an early date this year. This was necessary, considering the way these races are increasing in importance year by year. The experiment of raising the stakes has been more than justified by the results of last year, and it is almost certain that these Monsoons will far exceed their predecessors in every way, not only in respect of fields, but also in the number of up-country stables represented.

The first four meetings are fixed for each Saturday in August and for these four meetings the programmes are already to hand. There is a break in the proceedings from 28th August till the 15th September. Then comes a second series of these meetings, on 15th, 22nd and 29th September, with a probability of even an eighth meeting on 6th October. Previous to last year there had never been more than six meetings, last year we had seven, this year we shall probably to go one better.

Opinions are divided as to the soundness of introducing a three weeks' break in the middle of these meetings. We incline to the belief that a week's rest for horses, men and public would amply meet all requirements. As now arranged, the season is, in our opinion, too protracted, and this view of the position, we feel confident, is fully shared by the mofussil contingent, who support the Monsoon Meetings. Then another point seems to have been overlooked. The Doorga Poojahs this year begin on the 23rd September—exceptionally early—and end on the 4th October, so that as at present arranged the sixth and seventh meetings will take place right in the middle of the Poojahs. Though this may not so much reduce the fields, it will reduce very considerably the gate money, which after all is a very important feature. We suggest that while leaving the eighth meeting (if there is one) till 6th October, the fifth, sixth and seventh meetings should be brought forward.

The programmes of the first four meetings to hand are practically identical with those of last year, all the races being of the value of Rs. 750 and Rs. 1,000, except those confined to G. R's. The re-arrangement and alterations of last year have been adhered to, and the G. R. races are designated as Amateur Hurdle Races, etc. To summarise the contents of the first four meetings, they embrace twenty-three races. Of these there are twelve races of the value of Rs. 750 a piece as against eight of Rs. 1,000. The remaining three are confined to G. R's., the value of these is only Rs. 500. Of the twenty-three races there are as many as seven hurdle races, which is a liberal allowance, being just under one in three, but the Monsoon Races are essentially an occasion for the illegitimate game. There are in each day two races for ponies. The most striking feature of the programme is the result of the resolution carried at the last Calcutta Turf Club meeting, and that is the very popular reduction in the entry fees for the races which are now never to exceed 2 per cent. of the value of the race. This is very much appreciated by owners to whom the costly entry fees previously in force were a severe drain.

The excessive heat we have been enduring for the last week or two has made itself felt not only on horses that have to be out working in the heat of the day, but also on what race-horses are summering here in Calcutta. Mr. Rodocanachi was unfortunate enough to lose one out of his stables on Monday. The horse seemed in good health and did light work early in the morning: in the middle of the day it fell down dead in its stall from failure of the heart. The horse was a bay gelding called Silver, and was imported from Australia last July by Norton.

We hear Wishart is on his way back from Australia. He apparently went down for little more than the sea trip and cannot have had much time to execute his commissions in Australia.

There are curious rumours about the pony Mandeville which was raced in Calcutta in the cold weather. She subsequently went over to Bombay and was sold there for, it is said, Rs. 6,000. Now a Mr. Pearson turns up and claims to be the owner of the pony and declares that the seller had no authority whatsoever to dispose of the animal, and it is further said that Mr. Pearson wishes to race the pony here in the Monsoons. It will be interesting to hear the sequel.

Sceptre has thrown a foal. With Sceptre for its dam and Cyllene as its sire it will be very interesting to watch this little lady's future career: whether she will carry all before her, win "the triple crown," and be classed with her distinguished mother and Pretty Polly as among the greatest mares of the age, or whether, as is quite probable, her racing career may prove an ignominious failure remains to be seen. Race-horse breeding is always a lottery, whatever the blood may be.

T. Scott is away in Europe. He took three horses home with him, one of them being the flashy Australian mare Loch Clieveden, by Lochiel—Lady Clifden. It is intended to breed from her.

The others he took with him were Up Guards and Nobleman, but these two are bound eventually for New South Wales. Up Guards will thus become one of the best travelled horses of the world and should prove a very valuable addition to the sires of New South Wales, not only on his own qualifications of make, shape and performances, but also on account of his being an own brother to that famous horse Count Schomberg, who is the sire of Black Arrow who ran in this year's Two Thousand Guineas and is entered for the Derby. Up Guards himself, it will be remembered, small horse as he is, won the Chester Cup in England before being imported to India, where he ran second to Cherry in the Viceroy's Cup of 1900, and himself won it the following year. Nobleman has for the past four or five years been doing stud work at the Poona Stud Farm and is said to be destined to sire polo ponies.

The Tollygunge Club have followed the lead of the Calcutta Turf Club and are advertising the dates on which they propose holding gymkhanas. There are to be two in June on the 16th and 30th and two in July on the 14th and 28th: thus from the 16th of June we shall get a pretty continuous supply of racing right on into October.

Dr. J. H. B. Martin, the equine dentist, has now returned to Calcutta from a tour up-country and in Bombay. He has apparently had quite a busy time of it while away.

All who shoot in India are acquainted with the eminent firm of Joseph Lang and Son, and know that their name on a gun or rifle is a guarantee of reliability and excellence in every detail. It will, therefore, be needless to introduce them to our readers, we merely wish to mention in this para. that we have received from Messrs. J. L. and Son copies of their latest catalogue, which illustrate their well-known specialities and all of their novelties, which are gaining rapidly in popularity. We also refer our readers to their advertisement further on.

First entries for the Civil Service Cup and Army Cup will be found to-day in our Turf columns.

There was only a small attendance at the sale of the late Sir James Miller's horses at Newmarket last month. Top price was realised by Roquette (2 years), by Chaleureux out of Roquebrune, sold to M. E. Blanc for 2,500 guineas. Mr. James Hare on behalf of Lord Rosebery paid 1,150 guineas for the four-year-old Amitie, by Chaleureux out of La Sagesse, and for Harp (2 years), by Chaleureux out of Jodel, Mr. W. Raphael bid up to 610 guineas, the same gentleman also purchasing a colt (2 years), by Sainfoin out of La Sagesse for 1,650 guineas. For the remainder prices ruled small.

Few persons are better known in the world of sport than Sir Ralph Payne-Gallwey, of Thirkleby Park, in Yorkshire. He is a most enthusiastic gunner and archer—indeed, the most expert bowman in England—and the author of several books on both shooting and archery. He can shoot an arrow a quarter of a mile, and when on the top of his form hit a very small mark from a considerable distance. His Majesty the King has asked Sir Ralph Gallwey to let him into the secret of his phenomenal skill with the simple bow and arrow. So Sir Ralph will shoot before his Majesty in June.

The programme of the Lucknow Autumn Sky Meeting is printed to-day; the dates are the 18th and 20th October, entries closing on the 1st September and 12th October.

Great Scot is steadily adding to his list of friends and admirers in England; thus the Sporting Chronicle:—"Great Scot, who raced with much success in India in the colours of the Hon. Mr. A. A. Apcar, is now doing good work in P. P. Gilpin's team at Newmarket. Our resident correspondent describes him as a grand looking horse that is likely to be heard of in connection with the Gold Cup at Ascot."

The Southern Mahratta Races, fixed for the 24th and 26th instant, have been abandoned; the old, old reason—lack of support.

A few well-meaning but misguided people have recently been ventilating their opinions on the subject of the lions in the Gir Forest. We have always been on the side of those who advocate their preservation (indeed from the point of view of the "balance of nature" theory we would even like to see preservation extended to tigers in certain districts) consequently we are quite in accord with the remarks of Mr. E. P. Stebbing who, in a letter to the Pioneer, says:—The lioness in India produces but 2—3 cubs at a time, the period of gestation being about 108 days. It is commonly accepted that when a species approaches extinction, its vitality becomes greatly diminished. In the case of the lion there is an Arab assertion, which has now been proved to be based on actual facts, that for some reason, which is at present not well understood, the mortality amongst young

The Secunderabad Polo Tournament was won by the 13th Hussars "A" team who beat "B" team of the same regiment by 2 goals to nil.

Not long ago two white miners employed in North-Western Rhodesia had an exciting adventure with a lion. The incident occurred at night while the men were asleep in camp near the Broken Hill Mine, the property of the Northern Copper Company. Pushing open the reed door of the hut they occupied, the lion gripped one of the sleepers, an Englishman named Thornton, with its teeth, and lifted him from the bed. His cries awoke his mate, who pluckily attacked the brute, and compelled it to drop its prey. The released man instantly grasped his rifle and shot the lion dead. Thornton was badly mauled.

The second Simla gymkhana was held last Saturday afternoon, Government House and official circles being strongly represented in the gallery and among the competitors. Results—Captain Ross won the spear lifting, ring tilting and tent pegging item; the Bazaar Stakes—usual conditions—went to Mrs. Cogswell and Major Peacocke, with Mrs Walker and Capt. Wylly second; the prize for the best turned out rickshaw was awarded to Mrs. Cogswell; in the Musical Ride Mrs. Rivett Carnac was first and Lady Violet Elliott second; Captain and Mrs. Rivett Carnac carried off the Academy Stakes; and the programme wound up with the Heavenly Twins Stakes in which handkerchiefs had to be taken from posts, tied, and the riders were required to come in holding their knotted mouchoirs between them: the winners were Captian and Mrs. Rivett Carnac.

The Secunderabad Senior Polo Tournament begins on the 26th July; it is open to all Indian Regiments and Gymkhanas.

"Shikari" writes to a Bombay paper:—

"Will any sportsman kindly recommend me the name of a good firm of taxidermists in India who could set up heads nicely and who could be relied upon to safely return one's trophies, even if they be exceptionally good, without attempting to bag them, as has been my sad experience."

While one naturally sympathises with the bitter cry of this unfortunate sportsman, one may be forgiven the smile his query evokes. A long experience of so-called "taxidermists" in this country convinces us that some of them need a few special clauses in the Indian Penal Code. A large number are arrant imposters, most of them are stupendously incompetent, few are even tolerably honest. We could fill columns with the sad experiences of the unwary who have been duped or exasperated by these miserable sharpers. Many of them are—or used to be—natives trading under bogus English names, and when they have worked their wicked will on trophies (supposing them to have been honest enough to return such to the owners) the results have been so grotesque we have on more than one occasion seen victims nearly reduced to apoplexy in the struggle to decide whether to give way to hysterical laughter or rush out and slay the perpetrator of the outrage. We here refer to them as a class, we are, of course, aware that there are honourable exceptions and we ourselves know of three firms who turn out first-class work and whose business methods are not open to the slightest objection: if any of our readers are in the same boat as "Shikari" we shall be glad to help them by giving the names of these firms. This may read suspiciously like an advertisement, but it isn't: the desire is to help sport and save sportsmen from being victimised.

Athletic Notes.

A REPORT of the annual General Meeting of the Calcutta Swimming Club appears in the usual place to-day. The season begins to-morrow with a two lengths' novices handicap and ends with the Autumn Meeting on the 15th September. That good swimmer and muscle-merchant, Mr. A. R. C. Miller, is once more Honorary Secretary.

Full details of the "Glasgow Trophy" and the Calcutta Silver Medal competitions run by the Rangoon Golf Club are published further on.

The final game in the Finney Challenge Cup Hockey tournament resulted in a win for "D" Squadron, 9th Lancers, who beat the N.-W. Railway by two goals to one.

The prize for the Marathon Race at the recent Olympic Games was worth lifting. Herring, the professional, returned to Canada with two thousand pounds!

Those really gallant little cars, the "Wolseleys," have just added to their laurels by winning the Nilgiri Reliability Trials.

The annual competition for the St. Andrew's Silver Tankard begins to-morrow on the Calcutta golf links.

The Calcutta Swimming Club begins its season to-morrow evening with a handicap race for novices over two lengths of the Bath, 200 feet. The Bath has just been refilled, after the usual monthly cleaning, and is looking very attractive in these sweltering days: it is pleasant to have to record a large increase in membership with the advent of the hot weather. After all, the damaging statements made in certain quarters last year (and which were subsequently withdrawn on threat of criminal proceedings) do not seem to have affected the Bath. Our readers will recollect that the editor of this paper, himself a member of the committee, took up the cudgels on behalf of the Swimming Bath, and was promptly sued for damages to the tune of Rs. 20,000. He countered heavily by immediately proceeding against the man who it was considered had libelled the management of the Bath, and having compelled that individual to withdraw his statements and make an amende, awaited further developments, which came later on, when the suit against him was withdrawn. It cost him a considerable sum of money, but we think all interested will allow that he succeeded in thoroughly vindicating the management of the Baths.

There seems to have been a good deal of grumbling in connection with the Olympic Games, the share English athletes took in them and the attitude of the A.A.A. The chief causes of complaint were the paucity of English competitors and the difficulty regarding "expenses." A well-known athletic scribe, in the course of a long screed to a London sporting daily, says:—

Not without reason, complaints from all quarters are being made concerning Great Britain's connection with the Olympic Games. It is urged that we shall be very poorly represented, both numerically and otherwise. Probably not more than one per cent. of the competitors will hail from the United Kingdom. And (with notable exceptions) the charge is just that "Britain's best" will not be engaged, especially now that Messrs. Larner, Cornwallis, Aldridge, Welsh, etc., have cried off. On the contrary, quite a small army of American athletes are on their way to Athens, and, proportionally, the entries from other countries are quite as flattering. The question arises, Does Great Britain take the International meeting seriously or not? Judging from recent A.A.A. action, it does not. At any rate, the governing body wished it to be known that competitors going out from England "are not to be taken as representative of the country."

Their decision has been condemned in no uncertain fashion by many critics, and rightly so. The A.A.A. exists for the encouragement of amateur athletics, and, on the whole, it has done its work well; although there are certain flies in the amber. But why does it invariably fight shy of International reunions? International athletic meetings of this nature are the silken tie, so to speak, which binds nations in one common brotherhood all the firmer. Life can offer no more splendid spectacle than that of the various nations of the world united in common pursuits, and fighting for supremacy in sport or pastime. Why, therefore, should the A.A.A. stand aloof on historical occasions such as these?

From the higher criticism point of view, indeed, it is the duty of the A.A.A. to take an active part in such International functions. Great Britain has long boasted pre-eminence in all-round athletics, and, despite the advance of America, Australia, South Africa, etc., practically does so still. This fact is recognised by most of the other nations of the world, hence they also expect organised action by Britons on such occasions as that under discussion. Such apathy as that shown by the A.A.A. this year is construed by them in two ways, i.e., either (a) that Britons wish to stand aloof from other nations with old-time reserve, or (b) that they fear to put matters to the test. As most people are aware, neither of these conclusions are correct. From His Majesty the King downwards, all sorts of sportsmen are keenly anxious to see the Old Country engaged in friendly strife with other nations at Athens. As regards the implied inferiority, well—the outspoken remarks of so many athletic champions tell their own tale.

As will be seen from the cricket news in our London Sporting Letter, the first run of the first-class season was scored by Dr. Grace on Easter Monday—a single from a straight drive. On the same day the first hundred of the season was scored by E. H. D. Sewell, the old Indian smiter, who scored 107 in about an hour and three-quarters. Smith bowled the first ball, N. A. Knox took the first wicket, L. O. S. Poidevin was the first batsman out, and Davis made the first catch.

Sewell also scored the first hundred of a season two years ago at the Crystal Palace for London County against Surrey. He then made 181 out of 466 for eight wickets. In 1902 he made 90 at Easter against Surrey for London County. He has begun the season right well.

In a letter to the Times, Professor T. Case, the President of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, makes the following suggestion:—"As the umpire cries 'wide' when the ball is out of the batsman's reach, so when it is within it, but is left alone, let him cry 'near.' While 'wides' are scored by addition to batsman's side, 'nears' should be subtracted from the batsman's own score, which in some cases might become an actual minus to the side. Cricket would then not be so dull, because it would be once more a game."

In The Field to hand by the last mail there are some very sound remarks contributed by the well-known aquatic authority who writes over the initials "R. H." on certain lessons from the recent Varsity boat race. It not infrequently happens, he observes, that the University boat race is devoid of any particular interest. There may be two crews of good quality, who cover the course in fast time, the favourite winning. Or the crews may be poor, as in 1904 and last year, and the result is only such as may be reasonably expected when the character and the actual performances of the two crews are compared. Occasionally, however, the wrong crew wins, as in 1883, or the race is very close, as in 1890 and 1891, or the finish may be sensational, as in 1886, 1896, and 1901. And there are also times when the practice of the two crews and the result of the race tend to upset previous axioms of rowing, and controversy may ensue, as was the case after the Henley of 1900, when a Belgian crew, rowing in a very unorthodox way, and with various hindrances, nearly defeated a powerful Leander eight.

This year the question aroused by the University race is, "Do welter weights pay?" The old axiom that no man over 12st. 8lbs. can pull his weight seems likely to be seriously questioned. For Cambridge, averaging about 11st. 13lbs., have defeated an Oxford crew averaging 12st. 5lbs., and with considerable ease. One is forced, therefore, to ask, Does a president act wisely in choosing very heavy men? Is it not better policy to consider very seriously the expediency of giving the 13st. man his blue, and to endeavour to find a medium weight to fill the vacant thwart? For Mr. Powell appears to have arranged his crew on these lines. He put himself at six, a place where one would naturally look for a giant such as Mr. Muttlebury, Mr. Fletcher, or Lord Ampthill. Mr. Johnstone, whose place in the two previous races in which he has taken part was three, was put five, and the eventual inclusion of Mr. Donaldson, the only really heavy man in the boat, was in doubt even during the last two or three days of the practice on the Cam. Mr. Evans, however, pursued entirely different tactics. He appeared to make up his mind from the first that he, Mr. Kirby, and Mr. Jones should row six, five, and four respectively in the Oxford boat, and this arrangement was adhered to almost throughout the whole practice.

It is, of course, unjust to ascribe the victory or the defeat entirely to the men in the middle of the boat; nevertheless, a bad welter weight is obviously a greater disadvantage to the crew than a good one, and the three above-mentioned Oxford men certainly seemed, during the race and during much of the practice, to contribute to a considerable extent to the sluggishness of their boat. Not that they did not row hard; all three seemed to be exerting themselves, and were as much distressed as the rest of the crew at the finish; but they failed to "send down" as much water proportional to their weight as numbers four, five, and six in the Cambridge boat, and we are forced to conclude that, except in the cases of unusually powerful oars, a middle-weight man should, ceteris paribus, be chosen in preference to the heavy oarsman. This is borne out by two facts. Firstly, the best scullers are not heavy men. Messrs. Brickwood, Woodgate, Casamajor, Playford, Unwing, F. I. Pitman, and Kelly can none of them be described as heavy men, and many scullers of almost equal fame were, and are, light or only moderately heavy; while Messrs. G. and V. Nickalls are almost the only scullers who can be described as "heavy." The second fact which may be brought up to prove the case against welter weights is that the old fixed seat crews often covered the course—and those were the days when the course was not kept as clear as it is now—almost if not quite as fast as the sliding-seat crews, because in 1873, the year of the first sliding eights, the fashion of including heavy men in a crew was in its infancy. The first crew to average 12st. rowed in the late sixties, and yet this average is considered as light nowadays.

I therefore venture to question very seriously the expediency of employing 13st. men, unless they are of quite exceptional calibre, and perhaps the welter weight may become a rara avis among winning University crews. The other lesson which the recent race teaches us is the advisability of obtaining scullers and giving them a place in the final eights. Messrs. Donaldson, R. V. Powell, and Stuart will be handed down to posterity as good University scullers as well as oarsmen. Mr. Powell and Mr. Stuart easily beat the record for the Cambridge Colquhoun Sculls last November, and in the previous autumn Mr. Donaldson nearly accomplished the same feat when he defeated Mr. Powell. A sculler must be a good waterman, a hard worker, and cool headed, and all these qualities are essential to good oarsmanship; if he can be taught to keep time he will probably be a very fair oar, while the power of initiative which a sculler must necessarily exercise is of great advantage if he comes to stroke an eight. Let us, therefore, give to the boat race of 1906 the credit of establishing the latter proposition, and of helping to justify the former.

Motorists in India will watch with interest the result of the experiments now on foot for substituting alcohol for petrol as fuel. Perhaps there is not much to choose between the two, but the determination to adopt vegetable spirit has been decided on by the announcement that the oil trusts in America had concluded to raise the price of petrol by 50 per cent. This will explain the recent shipment from Borneo to the States, which certainly did look like the proverbial "carrying coals to Newcastle." We trust the rival fuels will be thoroughly tested, for at the first blush although alcohol would seem to recommend itself on account of its greater freedom from smell and smoke, if petrol is properly distilled from the less heavier oils that have been used hitherto, it should be as devoid of these objections as the best kerosine is. It does not much matter which comes out of the trial triumphant, for both the mineral and vegetable bases are abundant in our eastern districts.

A rather indignant letter in one of the London papers suggests that motorists should be brought under the same law that is enforced upon locomotive owners, who are bound to consume their smoke. The writer proceeds to say that, by a simple mechanical contrivance a partial vacuum could be formed while the car was in motion, the dust sucked up by pipes in the rear of the machine and deposited in a chamber. The recommendation would deserve more notice if the suggestor had entered fully into an explanation of the contrivance. We fear, however, Calcutta dust alayment is beyond our best up-to-date engineering skill.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—A good breeze on Saturday made the three events at the Yacht Club more interesting than has been the case for several weeks. The "A" class handicap was won by Turquoise and the "B" class by Trixie, Pixie being second. The Tomtit class brought out eight starters and the breeze had so stiffened that it took a lot of careful sailing. Maud, entered by the R. E. officers, won by a few seconds from Clutha with Tomtit third, while the class prize went to Lapwing.

The Bombay Gymkhana Tennis Handicap has started and several games have been played. The handicapping is a bit erratic, but with the number entered, many being practically unknown to the handicappers, it was probably hard to get things as even as they are. Up to the end of the week the following games had been decided in the singles.—Jupe beat Green, Captain Thompson beat Sanderson, Blake beat Boggs, Philipe beat Huggins, Nigel Jones beat M. P. Jones, who retired during play and Robinson beat Curling. In the doubles Coombes and Hart beat Curling and Hopwood, and Haynes and Sanderson beat Green and Thomson.

The attempt to decide who should carry away the Beighton Hockey Cup was unsuccessful. The Hornets and Ranchi teams met on the Calcutta F. C. ground last evening and played a draw of one goal each.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 20th April 1906.

From Wednesday's Times: "The sunshine of last week was greater in duration over Great Britain, than in any week since that ended 24th August 1901." And next line "snow fell heavily yesterday in East Lothian." Whereto I may add that, after a brilliant Easter Monday, the change was very rapid: Wednesday and Thursday saw such a frigid gale from the north-east, that the snow storm in the Lothians might have been expected in London at any hour. If the exodus for the Easter holidays this year was larger than usual it was also shorter: for people to whom time is of small account were back again on Tuesday making oath that they would never leave town again at this season. And truly my dear Editor, unless you go and stay with friends to get a last day with hounds or a first day with the rod or do something else definite—a three-day visit for the sole sake of getting out of town is, to me, anathema—you are very much more comfortable at home. Hotel residence at any "resort" at holiday time, to my thinking, combines the maximum of hustling and discomfort with the maximum of misdirected expenditure.

Revolving these matters on the fourth consecutive day of closed shops, it appears to me that the magnet which shall draw the holiday-making public of the better sort to the country at such seasons, is Better Cooking. England is dotted densely all over with beautiful and not inaccessible villages whither one would gladly go and loaf for a day or two (as one cannot freely on "a visit") could one rely on getting anything to eat but ill cooked bacon, dubious eggs and sweet, sticky beer. When our magnificent education system shall have imparted to the women of these islands the art and mystery of making an omelette and a few other comestibles, then shall the turn of the village inn come again, to the advantage of all parties.

To larger matters. It was some time since William had sent a telegram, and his thoughtfulness in sending that statesmanlike message to Count Galuchowski was much appreciated. It gave us a conundrum to guess:—Who did it please? I claim credit for a solution, to wit "Leader writers;" but this I grant is open to the objection that His German Majesty did not intend to gratify mere

After Vesuvius the 'Frisco earthquake! It is a singular thing that this second terrible seismic disturbance should occur almost in the same latitude on the opposite side of the world: Naples is 41° N.; San Francisco 37°45 N., there is really little difference between them when you reduce it to miles. Sir William Crookes or some other scientific man who makes such matters his speciality will have something to say about this ere long, no doubt, that will lift it from the level of mere coincidence. By the way you observe that they are getting up a subscription in Italy to present Professor Mattucci with a gold medal. Was ever such recognition more splendidly earned?

Mr. Sidney Colvin voices the feelings of many of us in his attack on the motor 'bus. The thing is no doubt a convenience, nobody will take a horse 'bus if there be chance of a seat in the other; but there are motor 'busses and motor 'busses: and the thundering row made by some, the appalling stench of others, and the volumes of blue smoke given off by yet others, make up together a really ghastly nuisance which we are only now beginning to realise at its full worth. A man who came home from the East a day or two ago remarked that when he left London four years ago it was a "quiet place": the motor 'bus has made a difference which he could appreciate. Perhaps there is hope for us in the new electro 'bus, a trial trip of which was made on Wednesday. I met it stealing quietly and inodorously down Sloane Street at about 12 miles an hour, and recognising its merits at the first glance paused to pray for its speedy adoption.

What would become of this country, of the Empire, if "Social Democracy" ever got on top. The leading lights of this school of absence of thought have been airing their views at Bradford, and among other speakers was the once notorious Mr. Hyndman, who informed his hearers that "in India we were draining away the wealth of the country and producing a state of starvation and misery unparalleled in the world, and the people of India would be quite justified in making war on us. He said plainly that if a rising should take place against our rule in India, Socialists should do their best to prevent reinforcements being sent to keep those people down." A better informed democrat having suggested that native tyranny might be "even worse" than English tyranny Mr. Hyndman assured him that "for thousands of years before we obtained India that country managed to get on extremely well and they were a peaceable, well developed, industrious people. He could not conceive a worse system of rule than that of India by England." And this is the sort of stuff that is poured out for an enlightened electorate!

Easter appears to be the chosen season for the opening of the flood gates of drivel. On Sunday a mass meeting of domestic servants was held in the Park to "call public attention to the many grievances we suffer and to demand immediate legislation." A butler, who spoke first, explained that a chief grievance was the system of giving characters: it was not compulsory upon an employer to give a servant a character. It crossed my mind that the speaker would not have found a truthful chit of much use to him in his search for a new situation; contrariwise. A man who looked like a footman called for the State registration of registry offices some of which are dishonest: this sensible contribution to the proceedings was followed by the complaint of a fat footman who had known a page boy made to sleep in cupboard under the kitchen stairs. The next speaker was dull and I left; but returned in time to hear a blowsy female fulminating against the misconduct of mistresses who persist in "coming downstairs to the kitchen." She was heard with sympathetic attention, though some of the crowd betrayed inclination to cheer in an ironical spirit.

After the lull of Holy Week comes the Holiday week outburst of theatrical activity. It began on Saturday, at the new theatre where was produced "Dorothy o' the Hall," a romantic play by Paul Kester and Charles Major, which secured a decidedly favourable reception. The scene is Haddon Hall, so appropriate a background for a romance, and the heroine is that Dorothy Vernon who eloped with the hereditary foe of her house, Sir John Manners, son of the Earl of Rutland. The play, however, is not woven round the elopment, but around some imaginary events that preceded it. Dorothy is tricked into the belief that Sir John, with whom she has fallen in love at first sight, is her cousin Sir Malcolm, the suitor favoured by her family. Sir John gets into political difficulties, largely owing to the machinations of Sir Malcolm, and Dorothy saves him, disguised once as a page, and again as Mary Stuart. Those familiar with the styles of Miss Julia Neilson and Mr. Fred Terry can imagine the opportunities such plot offers them. The latter scores an undeniable success; Miss Neilson is rather overpowering and as usual the ring of conviction is lacking, though in one scene she is almost sincere in her methods. The play is ingeniously contrived, the authors are experts in stage craft and the scenery of course is lovely. It always is nowadays.

The Apollo Theatre has a new entertainment called "The Dairymaids." There are pretty and taking songs by Paul Rubens and Frank E. Tours, and the book is by A. M. Thompson and Robert Courtneidge. There is a certain Lady Brudenell (Phyllis Broughton) who has two nephews (Mr. Passmore and Mr. Horace Lane), and is interested in Dairymaids. So are her nephews, in another way disapproved by their aunt. Her manœuvres and their manœuvres; there you have the plot. Disguises, songs, dances, and acrobatic, or athletic turns. There is a bevy of Sandow girls who, clad in Greek draperies, wield Indian clubs very gracefully and there you have the action of the entertainment. There is plenty of harmless if not very original fun, and the piece went with acclamation, one feels almost tempted to quote, "for those who like that sort of thing, etc."

Mr. Cyril Maude has revived Mr. Robert Marshall's "Second in Command," in which he again delights the audience as Binks; truth to tell the play is Binks et aut nihil. It is difficult to believe that it is six years since he was last seen in it, but I believe that to be the case. Mr. Bourchier has done well to revive "The Merchant of Venice" during the Easter holidays. I cannot avoid the reflection that a revival of Jew baiting, such as the Italians practised within living memory would be popular in England—having regard to the zest with which the wrongs of that wretched old Israelite are received by Christian brethren at the Garrick.

Mr. H. B. Irving now precedes "Mauricette" concerning which I wrote a week or two ago by "Markheim," a one-act play founded on R. L. S.'s weird and not particularly satisfactory story of the same name. Mr. W. L. Courtney is responsible for the adaptation, and has done what he can to get over the difficulties inherent in the task, but it must be admitted that the "fine fleur" of its weirdness evaporates in the boards. Mr. Irving as Markheim did his best to suggest the atmosphere of mystery and horror; but his performance was not an epoch-making one, like that of his father in "The Bells" (which the piece somewhat recalls) and the finest Stevensonian touches are much more effective in the printed page than when translated into action.

At last, again, we have a real Comic Opera; for there is a story skilfully told, and well sustained throughout the whole two acts of "Castles in Spain" which was produced at the New Royalty on Wednesday evening. Which story by Mr. Cosmo Hamilton is wedded to really delightful music chiefly by Mr. Harry Fragson (who, by the way, is a Frenchman), though he has incorporated with it some numbers from a Spanish opera "La Gran via." The hero, impersonated by Mr. Fragson himself, is a certain de Beauséjour, a victim of the artistic temperament, who pays nor debt nor wage, but is so fascinating that he is adored by all his dependants. The heroine is an American girl, Violet Stanford, who runs away from her convent and comes to Beauséjour's flat where she proposes to stay a week, and have a good time, as she "doesn't know another soul in London." While Beauséjour is trying to convince her of the impossibility of her staying with him, her father appears and she is hurried away, for Beauséjour's manner of life is not one to commend itself to an astute American. Stanford, however, falls into the hands of a Spanish blackmailer; Beauséjour acts hero, and a match between him and the enterprising Violet necessarily follows. Violet is delightfully acted by Miss May de Sousa. She has some charming songs to which she did full justice. The performance decidedly adds to her already considerable reputation. Mr. Fragon's performance was also deserving of high praise: and they twain were excellently well supported.

"Mammoth Programmes" are of course the rule at the Music Halls and kindred haunts this week. The Hippodrome has the Russian giant again. Machnow is rather a depressing spectacle: his huge person is a weariness to him, and you can imagine that a cold in the head would prove fatal to vitality so low as that the languor of his movements indicates. He has to climb three easy steps over the arena wall and to do this required the aid of two men on whose shoulders he rested his elbows.

The Coliseum has been giving an entertainment of portentous length: a feature of the very mixed show here is the "Zoo" in which girls take the part of parrots on perches and rings: they are wonderfully well got up. Malcolm Scott, "the Woman who Knows," is back again after a year's absence and is one of the attractions at the Pavilion: where also is a comical turn by Mr. George Mozart, who takes off the mannerisms of the bar maids at Lyons' and other refreshment places: "The Teapot Queen" is distinctly clever, but I doubt whether the haughty, flirtations or supercilious females travestied will quite appreciate its beauties.

The Lyceum is running Moung Sing Hpoo, the 34-inch Burmese dwarf: he has learned a very little English and a few simple gymnastic tricks since I last saw him, but of course his chief virtue is negative—he does not grow.

* * * * * *

The Pygmies from the Congo region who attracted so much attention at the Hippodrome on their first appearance, are now at the Crystal Palace. These have quite fallen into the ways of the show creature, and shake hands with quite a patronising air when 'Arry makes advances. These also have learned a little English: enough to say they don't want to go home and to say "bad bad" about the fickle climate which gives them colds.

It is affirmed by the C. O. that the results of the hot-day march by the Buffs last week were greatly overstated: that two or three men only fell out by the way, not 30 as reported. Two of the men, however died in Dover hospital.

Shikar.

A SHOOT IN BURMA.

In ...ber 1904 I started from Rangoon to Lapadan by ... I left the railway at the latter station and proceeded by bullock cart towards the highlands in the west. About thirty miles' travel brought me to my destination, a small village close to the foot-hills. I had been instructed to apply to the headman of my village I wished to stop at, that functionary in this case at once agreed to let me have the use of an empty house and to provide a shikari and beaters. I had taken my cook boy along with me. The headman, however, made it conditional that all I shot with the exception of what I wanted for my own use and the skins, should be sent to the bazar for sale. I got all put right that night and on the following morning started in quest of game, accompanied by a shikari and two Burmans. I was first taken to a small lake and there secured a couple of geese and five ducks with which I sent the two men to the village giving them orders to return to me at once. The shikari and I then went into the foot-hills and almost immediately came across the spoor of a head of elephants. These animals are, however, protected.

While considering whether to go further in among the hills I was startled by the shikari uttering a yell and climbing into a tree. He shouted to me to do the same pointing up the valley, down which was coming, like a tornado, a wild bull bison with his head near the ground and foaming at the mouth. I saw there was no chance of a bullet stopping him, and that my safety lay in also getting up into the tree. I slung my rifle, caught hold of a branch, and hoisted myself up just in time to escape the infuriated animal. He came to a stand seemingly nonplussed at our disappearance. I was sitting on a branch, just high enough to be out of his reach. He was not long in sighting me, and began dashing round and round, bellowing and tearing up the turf with his feet. Unfortunately in climbing, the buckle of my cartridge belt broke, and the belt fell to the ground. I was thus left with only one round, that in the rifle, and I did not wish to waste it. Being above the bison I could not be sure of putting in a fatal shot, and my only chance was to try to cripple him. Waiting an opportunity I fired, hitting him on the right shoulder. The shot did not disable but seemed to make him more furious, and our chance of getting away soon seemed a poor one. We had spent a couple of hours in the very unpleasant predicament, when there came a shout. The shikari at once answered it informing me that it came from the two men returning from the village. He directed them how to approach, telling what had occurred, and dodging from tree to tree, they came within fifty yards of us. Suddenly one of them showed himself, waving his bright red head gear and the bison immediately gave chase. The Burman cleverly dodged the animal, leading him away from us. This continued for about half a mile when the Burman treed, the bison taking up his watch underneath.

We, of course, lost no time in getting down and, I recovering my cartridge belt, went off in pursuit. I took to the left of the track with my rifle and the shikari, with my shot gun loaded with ball, the right. We utilized all the cover available, and got within shooting distance when a bullet from my rifle took effect in the neck of the bison. That made him shake his head and go slower. The shikari then got a chance and hit him behind the right fore leg, bringing him to his knees. But the fight was not quite knocked out of him, for he regained his feet and charged right in the direction of the shikari, who let him have the second barrel right in the forehead. This stunned him, and I ran up and gave him his quietus. He was a tough fellow and full of fight, and it took five bullets to kill him. The shikari and I returned to the village leaving the two Burmans to bring in the carcass.

Next morning about 6 o'clock we started and, going to the lake, kept down by the side of the rivulet that ran out of it. I got some snipe and duck and purposed working into the foot-hills when, not ten yards in front of us, a magnificent male leopard rose from out of the long grass and, with a growl, sprang right across the stream. I took a flying shot, wounding him, but not fatally. We at once crossed the brook and took up the trail. We pushed on, as it appeared the leopard was bleeding freely, and ran ourselves right in among a herd of about twenty wild water buffaloes. They instantly showed hostile intentions, and it seemed a nasty outlook for us. To fire would have been useless, but, as luck would have it, the wounded leopard broke cover close beside us and in full view of the herd, which at once gave chase. The leopard being wounded was soon overtaken, bowled over, and the whole herd, in a very systematic way, trampled him to death and out of all shape, the skin being literally cut to pieces. The leopard showed pluck as long as strength remained in him, and left many cruel wounds on the buffaloes. We had meantime sought cover, watching the whole proceedings, and were glad to see the herd go off. On our way back we beat both sides of the stream in search of the leopard's mate, but failed to find.

We went further to the north the following day and in among higher hills, taking a bullock cart with us. The hills were rugged and rocky, having many deep ravines, gorges, and dangerous precipices. Up one of these gorges I and the shikari proceeded, and ordered the beaters to follow. The gorge led to higher ground, and was only about six feet wide with sides like walls. On turning a bend we came suddenly upon a large black bear who at once got up on his hind legs and made for us. I let drive at him but somehow his fore paws, protected his chest, and the bullet took effect in the left one, and running up and lodging at the joint. Bruin came on like a whirlwind and I was dashed up against the rocks with great violence. I was unconscious and must have been there for some time, when the Burman beaters found me. They staunched the blood from the cuts I had sustained and administered some brandy from my flask. This brought me round, to find that the shikari had met with a worse handling. The bear had not only knocked him down, but upon him had left the marks of both claws and teeth. His wounded paw must have prevented him from hugging the life out of both of us. The two beaters had not entered the gorge, and they saw the bear pass out of it and take his way up a second ravine. They observed that he was lame and left blood marks by which he could be tracked. The shikari and I were assisted to the cart and driven to the village. Our wounds were dressed, the pain relieved, and we had a rest until the second day after.

On the morning of the third day I started to look after the wounded bear with a following of about fifty Burmans, armed with heavy daos as sharp as razors. At the mouth of the gorge the trail was taken up and followed about half a mile up the ravine. Here we came upon a tunnel-like cavern, into which bruin had evidently entered. I sent a bullet from my shot gun into the cave and from the grunting that came forth we were sure we had found our friend. The question then was how to get him out. At last smoking was resolved upon, and the Burmans soon had a pile of dry grass and branches of trees put up ready to set fire to. We were busy at this with my rifle and shot gun resting against the rock when our previous antagonist came from behind us with a rush and scattered the men in all directions. I jumped for my rifle, but before a shot could be fired he had knocked down half a dozen men, injuring some of them seriously and entered the cavern. The thing was all over in a couple of minutes. The injured men were sent home in the cart and it ordered to return.

There were now two bears in the den and we proceeded to smoke them. Green grass was thrown on the fire and a suffocating smoke rolled into the cave at the mouth of which I and the shikari took our stand ready to shoot if the bears charged out. We were on a sort of platform, one side of which terminated in a sheer precipice of over 50 feet, and we required to be careful. At last both animals came out coughing and sneezing scattering the fire, and I and the shikari lodged a couple of bullets in them. This enraged them and they both charged, and were met bravely by the Burmans with their daos. The latter cut deeply, and the bears fought furiously, knocking the men down like ninepins, and using their teeth. They were prevented from hugging, as when they attempted it, a slash from a dao made them quit their hold. At last a chance came and I and the shikari firing at the same time finished off the female: the male tried to get back into the cave but was prevented. We drove him to the edge of the precipice fighting every step, and a bullet in the ribs sent him over. When the body was brought out it was found terribly bruised, and the skins of both were useless. At any rate they were of little value had they not been cut, as the hair on them was very long and coarse. Some of the men were again pretty considerably injured and had to be taken home in the cart.

A fresh expedition started next morning to the hills, said to be the home of numerous tigers. The beaters were sent to a large nullah filled with long grass and bush, but it was drawn blank. We next beat the grass on the banks of a stream rising in the hills and out of it started two rhinoceros; they were of different kinds, one very bulky. I let them go, and continued the beat which brought us to a lot of rocks and out amongst them started a large tigress. I fired and missed, and she bounded off towards and entered a ravine. I and the shikari, after endeavouring to sight the tigress from the heights on each side, placed ourselves at the mouth and sent the beaters to the top to drive the game downwards toward us. When she was driven to the edge of the shelter she broke back through the beaters and this was repeated again, the second time the brute mauling one of the men. At last she was forced to break cover and I got a stern shot at her, the bullet taking effect in the hip. She made for a narrow gorge filled in the bottom with large rocks and débris, and which proved to be a regular cul-de-sac. The sides were perpendicular and we tried to get a shot from above, but could not. The beaters could not drive, and they fell upon an equally effectual plan to make the tigress quit. Making torches of the resinous roots of trees they lighted them and went up on both sides of the gorge and threw them down. The rubbish in the bottom caught fire, making it too hot for the tigress, who came out with a bound knocking down the shikari, and making up the opposite bank. I let go at her and, as luck would have it, broke a hind leg. She fell and lay quiet. I cautioned the Burmans not to go near her, as I did not think she was dead, but one of them, dao in hand, approached her and was about to cut her across the head, when she suddenly made a sweep with a paw knocking him some distance and tearing the flesh from his ribs. She endeavoured to drag herself towards the wounded man, when I crept up and, getting within three yards, shot her through the head.

This ended ten days' rather rough, but altogether pleasant sport, notwithstanding the unceremonious way bruin used me.

Argus, golden, and silver pheasants, peafowl, jungle fowl and waterfowl, deer of many kinds and pig were numerous. I invariably made good bags of them. The trip actually cost me nothing, all expenses being covered by the proceeds of the bazar sales.

Fishing.

TROUT FISHING IN NEW ZEALAND.

"GOD might have made a better angling country than ours," wrote an enthusiastic New Zealand trout-fisher once, "but it has not yet been discovered. The angler detects design even in its geographical configuration. Take the South Island, for instance. Right through the centre of it runs, like a backbone a chain of mountains. Snow-covered and glacier-belted, they carry every here and there lakes on their hips, like soldiers' canteens. Radiating from these lakes and mountains, as the ribs of the human body, innumerable rivers and streams swing themselves east and west to the sea. Less than a generation ago these had no interest for an angler. His rod had never cast a shadow over them, for—save for bull-head or eels and other unconsidered fish trifles—there was no trout in them. Now they are, as an enthusiast once put it, 'fairly stiff wid 'em.' For this the work of the Acclimatization Societies is worthy of all praise."

New Zealand has, indeed, not without good reason, been called the Anglers' Paradise. In this much favoured land the trout-fisher may whip or troll thousands of miles of good fishing waters for seven months of the year, October to the end of April, for the expenditure—ridiculously small it seems to the new arrival—of £1 on a license fee. It is the cheapness of the shooting and fishing in the land of the Maori that surprises even more than its exceeding abundance. There are no vexatious survivals of the old feudal game laws of Europe and Great Britain.

The best trout waters are free to anglers and the best of the lordly antlers of the Wairarapa and Hawea and South Nelson deer forests are secured either on government lands or on the domain of large sheep farmers who readily accord permission to the reputable stalker to shoot over their properties. Every summer brings out to New Zealand spo… anglers who have … their inexhaustible supp…

The quantities and weigh… trout taken from New Zealand w… be beyond belief were they not atte… records. Trout catches in special localiti… by the ton. The phenomenal success which has … the acclimatization of trout is quite on a par w… prolific increase of the deer herds. The trout with which the rivers and lakes are stocked are the California rainbow (Salmo-irridens), English brown trout (salmo-fario), and the Loch Leven trout. Attempts to acclimatize the true salmon have, so far, been only partially successful, but the trout has found the country a most congenial habitat. The acclimatization of trout began in Otago in 1867, and the first successful hatching took place there in 1868. In 1868 some young trout were placed in the Canterbury Rivers, and in the Wellington province the first successful matching-out and liberating of fish took place about 1882.

No more striking illustration can be given of the abundance of rainbow trout in the fishing waters of the North Island of New Zealand than the enormous catches at Rotorna during the fishing season. During the 1903-04 season upwards of twenty tons of trout were caught in Lake Rotorna and vicinity and adjacent streams. This great quantity was, however, eclipsed by the catch of the 1904-05 season beginning in November and ending on 30th April. A register was kept of all the knowe catches, and it is from this that the figures wern compiled. Many anglers, however, particularly Maoris, did not record their catches. The register kept shows that during the period mentioned not less than 17,762 fish of an aggregate weight of 61,052 pounds or over twenty-seven tons, were taken from Lake Rotorna and Rotti, and the streams which flow into and drain from them. The unregisterd catches not included in this return are considered to be at least 50 per cent. more so that probably forty tons of rainbow trout—to give a moderate estimate—were captured in this most prolific of fishing waters during the last season. The greater proportion of the trout were taken by means of "trolling" on Lake Rotorna. In spite of this enormous take, the supply of fish shows no apparent diminution; the streams and the lakes are rich in the food supplies that the trout loves, and the beautiful brooks that spring from the hills surrounding Rotorna are ideal breeding-places.

At Rotorna, indeed, are all the elements that combine to make the angler's pastime a delightful one. Fish are wonderfully abundant, of good quality and marvellously game; the climate is mild and pleasant; the angler may fill his basket within a few hundred yards of his hotel; and all in a grand scenic garden of which the components are the lakes of lovely blue, the rippling crystal streams, the purple wooded hills and the snowy jets of steam rising from many a geyser and hot spring. The fisherman way whip a score of good rivers within easy distance of Rotorna town, and he may enjoy some excellent sport on the lake itself, where trolling from power launches and boats has become established as a very successful fishing method.

Near the shores of Lake Rotorna there is a remarkable little spot known to the whites as the "Fairy Spring," and to the Maoris as the "Puna-a-Tuhoe" ("Tuhoe's Fountain"), which is taboo to rod and line, but which is a fascinating sight for the angler in the spawning season. The spring, about three miles from Rotorna town, bubbles up in a fern-covered hollow the source of a considerable stream running into the lake. The fountain pool is literally thick with trout in the spawning season; one wonders how all these hundreds of speckled beauties can find swimming room, so abundant are they. This spring and the stream it supplies are protected as breeding-places; millions of fry annually find their way down from the Puna-a-Tuhoe to the lake.

But Rotorna is by no means the only abundantly stocked fishing region in the North Island. Lake Waikaremoana, a beautiful mountain lake, 2,000 feet above the sea, a day's coach drive from Wairoa, Hawkes Bay, is earning fame amongst anglers for its splendid fish, which, like those of Rotorna, weigh anywhere from 5 to 20 pounds. Ten-pounders are as common as, say, 1½ to 2 pounders in English or American fishing streams. The Waikato River teems with fish from Lake Taupo to the sea.

In the South Auckland district where the Main Trunk Railway runs through the beautiful region known to the Maoris as the Rohe-potae and to Europeans as the "King Country," the land abounds in crystal clear streams flowing through a romantic limestone country, now rushing down in short rapids and now stealing along in quiet reaches and deep pools. These are ideal trout-streams, already carrying good fish, and the angling possibilities of the King Country rivers, when their waters are fully stocked, are very great indeed. Coming southwards to Taranaki and Wellington, there are good fishing waters in innumerable places, chiefly stocked with brown trout.

The South Island is an older fishing district than the North, and brown trout of enormous size are frequently taken. The fish are exceedingly plentiful and show great "fight." One monster landed some time ago near Blenheim in the Marlborough Province, measured nearly three feet in length and weighed 28½ pounds. This fish was exhibited at the St. Louis Exhibition in 1904. As in the north, trout of 10 to 20 pounds in weight are frequently taken. Canterbury, Otago and Southland are beautiful fishing districts with innumerable clear streams coursing through the grassy plains or curving around the tussocky hills. Then at the mouths of the large, snowfed rivers, "where the sea-trout's jumping crazy for the fly" there is grand sport. The sea-brown trout grows to a great size, and remarkable catches are made at mouths of such streams as the Waiau, Ashburton, the Rangitata, the Waitaki and others that drain the glacial lakes and

And even in the remote interior of the Sounds Country, between the great lakes and the West Coast Fiards, the angler may ply rod and line along the Clinton River and in Lake Ada surrounded by scenery grand beyond description.

EXTRAORDINARY FELINE VITALITY.

SIR,—I am told that in a recent issue of your paper there appeared an account of a tigress which, after being shot through the brain, lived for 8 hours. If the article happens to have been written by either Mr. S. J. Stone or Mr. Clifford Batten and refers to a tigress shot by the latter I can vouch for it, for I was present at the time and on the second day after the occurrence followed her up and recovered her.

I, however, think she lived more like 14 hours and am certain she travelled considerably over, or at any rate, quite a mile, in spite of her wounds. I should like to know if there is any other case of an analogous kind on record. I do not refer especially to carnivora, but any and all animals. I have never in all my experience either heard of or witnessed any other case like it, for I assure you the brain was a veritable pulp and the brain pan was in quite half a dozen pieces. I was able to pass a twig about 6 or 7 inches into the tigress' head without it meeting with any obstruction whatsoever.

OUR MIGRATORY GAME BIRDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Most of the migratory game birds have been later than usual in leaving us for their northern haunts.

I have shot snipe almost daily up to the 29th April; most of the birds I got were pintails. My shikari tells me that there are still a few about, so will have a try again to-morrow. Blue-winged teal have also been very plentiful of late and my shikari has never failed to get me a few almost daily. Both snipe and teal are now nothing but what you might call balls of fat, in fact they are a little too rich for most people.

For the past few nights, I have heard both curlews and green shanks winding their way northward. The "crew e é, crew e é" of the former and "pu, pu, pu" of the latter sounding clear and distinct in the still night air. I could not very well judge at what height the birds were travelling, but they must have been fairly high, well out of range of shot. The birds being so late in leaving us this year is I conclude owing to the absence of the storms or north-westers we usually get about this period. Nevertheless this migration of birds is a subject that has yet to be satisfactorily solved, it is still verily a mystery.

A NEW SMALL BORE BALL AND SHOT GUN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The little 28-bore ball and shot gun brought out by Messrs. Westley Richards & Co., and called by them the Fauneta is a wonderful little weapon for its weight. The specimen I saw weighed only five pounds eleven ounces and handled, as all first-class weapons should, beautifully. It was hammerless with single trigger and fitted with flap sights like an ordinary sporting rifle. The rifling appeared to be very similar to Hollands' Paradox system, only two or three inches at the muzzle end of the bore being choked and rifled with quick twist ratchet shaped grooves.

The bullet seemed to be about an inch long and fitted with a brass or copper cap; it was, however, very light for its length, the weight being only 290 grains, which permits of the very high muzzle velocity of 1,660 feet per second without undue strain: the charge as said to be the new propellant axite. The cartridge case appeared to be of thin brass like Kynoch's "Perfect." The little gun is said to do well with shot, the charge being ¾oz. driven by 25 grains of amberite, a charge which I found did very well in India for snipe, etc., in a 20-gauge gun. As this little weapon is said to be accurate enough to put a succession of shots into a 12-inch square at 300 yards, no fault can be found with it on this score.

Its high muzzle velocity, some 4,000 feet or more greater than that of an ordinary ball and shot gun, gives its bullet a very flat trajectory, practically equal to an ordinary express up to 150 yards. The striking energy of the bullet is about 1,770 foot pounds at the muzzle, and though its lightness causes it to lose speed rapidly it would probably strike a blow of 1,000 foot pounds or more at 120 yards, sufficient for most purposes, if none of the energy were wasted in over penetration, by using the copper-capped expanding bullet.

Being so light and handy the Fauneta could always remain in one's own hands and be on the spot when required, it ought to be a charming companion for the jungles and no doubt many will think it so.

STEWARDS :
MAJOR JAMESON. | HON'BLE MR. HILL TREVOR.
MAJOR BUTLER. | CAPTAIN COOPER.
Hon. Secy. COL. H. HATHAWAY.

First Day, Thursday, 3rd May 1906.

THE opening, bar one or two drawbacks, was fairly successful. The course was by no means at its best, and opportunities for mild speculation were practically restricted to a totalisator owing to the non-appearance of certain expected bookmakers who got hung up somewhere en route. But the weather was cool, the threatened storm held off, there was a big attendance, H. E. the Governor was "At Home" and there was plenty of go and jollity about the proceedings. The races were nearly all won by favourites and the finishes were, for the most part, a bit straggling. Details :—

Secretary, Lucknow Races.

Just before the collection was taken up one Sunday morning a negro clergyman announced that he regretted to state that a certain brother had forgotten to lock the door of his chicken house the night before, and as a result in the morning he found that most of the fowls had disappeared. "I doan' want to be pussonal, bredr'n," he added, "but I had my s'picions as to who stole dem chickens. I also had reason fo' b'lievin' dat if I am right in dose s'picions date pusson won't put any money in de plate which will now be passed around." The result was a fine collection; not a single member of the congregation feigned sleep. After it was counted the old parson came forward. "Now, bredr'n he said, "I doan' want your dinners to be spoilt by wonderin' where dat brudder lives who doan' lock his chickens up at night. Dat brudder doan' exist, mah friends. He was a parable gotten up fo' purpose of finances."

KEMPTON PARK.

In weather and attendance the Easter Monday Meeting established a record. On the roads the dust was blowing in clouds, inside the "waterworks" had kept the turf green, and the contrast between hard and soft was shown by the billiard-table-like hardness of the ground in the paddock, and the two lovely verdant stretches of the new Five Furlongs and the old "Jubilee" Course, both of which were just perfect. Not only did the proletarians crowd the enclosures and flow in tides of humanity on the course, but the meeting appealed as forcibly to the patrician side, and amongst a goodly company in the Club Enclosure we noticed the Duke of Devonshire, who had the satisfaction of seeing the success of Burgundy, Lord Rothschild, "Mr Leopold," Lord Daimeny, and many other principal supporters of the national sport. In lengthening their card to eight events the executive erred on the score of generosity, as we could well on a day like this have dispensed with the two hurdle races, and particularly with the Holiday Selling Hurdle, and judging from the general concensus of opinion, amateur and professional six races at longer intervals, giving time to get one's breath between whiles and enjoy a more leisurely paddock inspection, would, in future, fulfil every obligation. NEWMARKET.

What discomforts we should have suffered without Tuesday's opportune shower of rain, that came just in the nick of time, one shudders to imagine, for so keen and strong was the wind that dust was beginning to swirl in clouds from the drying roads, but thanks to the Jockey Club, more considerate than the town authorities, the drive from the top of the town redeemed the first mile, as the water-carts gave welcome proof of their presence. There is very little of the holiday element connected with Newmaket at any time, and still less so when the racing army renews its acquaintance with the Heath after the winter races. That the attendance would mainly be provided by the regular habitues of the Turf who yearly wage internecine war, in which neither side admits victory, was to be expected, and the company hardly came up to the strength of the usual standard. Bitterly cold it was in the full blast of the north-east wind, and the small company present were glad of the shelter of the stand; the breeze fortunately blowing from the back. Under the conditions the going was not so hard as might have been expected.

In the teeth of such a gale and the face of such weather nothing less important than a Cesarewitch or a Cambridgeshire on the card could have increased the attendance on the 19th instant. If one could discriminate between worst and worse, the weather was certainly not so rough as before.

CRICKET.

SURREY vs GENTLEMEN OF ENGLAND.—Played at the Oval on 16th, 17th and 18th April, Surrey won by eight wickets. A beautiful morning on Easter Monday induced about 8,000 people to go to the Oval to see the beginning of this match, and they enjoyed a most attractive day's cricket. Dr. Grace made some fine strokes in his 21, out of a total of 43, but the innings of the day was the 107 by E. H. D. Sewell, who going in first wicket down with the total at 6, was not out 87 at lunch time, his innings at last ending for 107, after he had been at the wickets for an hour and fifty minutes. His first fifty runs were scored out of a total of 81. He hit sixteen 4's, and was seen quite at his best. Later, H. G Keigwin, a brother of the Cambridge Blue, played very pretty cricket, while Odell, Bell and Lawton all made most useful scores. Surrey had to bat for an hour before stumps were drawn, and scored 81 for the loss of a wicket, Hobbs being bowled at 56 for an excellent 29. Hayward, who seemed to be in as good form as ever, carried his bat for 56. He only survived for a few minutes on Tuesday, but Holland played an attractive game, and Goatly showed steadiness and resource in his innings of 53. He and Davis put on 64 runs in in forty minutes during their partnership for the fifth wicket. The tail did not add largely to the score, and Surrey were 60 runs behind on the first innings. The Gentlemen would have fared badly when they went in again but for a brilliant innings by Lawton who made 69 in an hour, and another good display by Keigwin. Nevertheless, they were able to set Surrey the task of making 235 in the fourth innings of the match. Of these, 81 were scored without loss before stumps were drawn, Hayward making 20 and Hobbs 11. The weather, which was unpleasantly cold on Tuesday, became wintry yesterday, and the fieldsmen and bowlers were considerably handicapped. Hobbs and Hayward made the best use of their opportunity, and before they were parted they had made their side practically secure of victory. During their partnership they put up 135 for the first wicket in an hour and twenty-five minutes, Hayward scoring most of the runs; he hit a 5 and twelve 4's. After the dismissal of Hayward, Hobbs received valuable assistance from Holland. The two men put on 82 in half an hour, and the match was over by ten minutes past one, Surrey having made 201 runs in an hour and a half. Gamble created a most favourable impression as a bowler in the two innings of the Gentlemen.

PUBLIC SCHOOL CHAMPIONSHIPS.

Expectations were fully borne out at Queen's Club yesterday when Charterhouse and Wellington qualified for the final of the Public Schools' Championship. In each case victory was obtained with a deal to spare, and no question can be raised as to the two best pairs in the competition having qualified to fight out the issue to-day.

Again chief honours went to Wellington, whose display against Eton was as stylish as it was effective. The Etonians were the more forcible in their hitting, and at times Bovill made some brilliant strokes, but neither he nor Hannay was so consistent as Brougham and Harrison. The latter pair possessed the valuable asset of level-headedness, combined with admirable understanding. Brougham is easily the best individual player of the twenty-four who have appeared this week, and he seems to have imparted much of his remarkable self-possession to his diminutive partner, who yesterday supported him splendidly and seldom made a mistake. On the other hand, Eton failed to make the best of their opportunities, with the result that the ball frequently came back easily to the Wellingtonians, who put their opponents out with a telling smash. The Etonians—Hannay in particular—were at fault in hitting too high, whereas Harrison and Brougham made a series of well placed strokes just above the board, some of the latter's placing being brilliant. Eton were possibly feeling the effects of their gruelling game with Harrow of the preceding day, but they began in promising style, Bovill winning the spin and opening with a sequence of six. Brougham retaliated finely, and his first hand yielded no fewer than thirteen aces, the Wellington pair during this period quite outclassing the Etonians. Bovill, however, got in with four, and two by Hannay made the scores 12—13 before Wellington won at 15—12. A stubborn contest ensued in the second game, Brougham made two runs of five whilst Wellington were going to 10—3, but Hannay and Bovill, by a series of small scores pulled up to 13 all (set 5), five unproductive hands subsequently being played before Wellington won by 18—13. Another fine uphill struggle was made by Eton in the third game. Broughton opened for Wellington with a sequence of nine, but with Hannay showing some of his best form Eton pulled up to 10—12. Harrison then taking Wellington out at 15—10. Although three games behind, Eton continued to make a great effort against a cleverer pair. They went to 8—1 in the fourth game, but six by Harrison, followed by two from Brougham, enabled Wellington to lead at 9—8. Bovill and Hannay reversed matters by taking seven of the next eight aces, and Eton won a capital game at 15—10. Only one more game was necessary, and this went to Wellington by 15—11. Harrison making consecutive runs of three and six, after Eton had led by 10—4, and at this stage playing rather better than his partner. Wellington thus won the match by four games to one.

The semi-final between Charterhouse and Rugby was by no means so interesting. The former won by four games to love, but will have to show improved form to beat Wellington to-day. Hooman, again hit with tremendous power, and the Rugbeians, who were frequently beaten by the pace of the ball, made many ineffectual attempts at volleying. As was the case on Wednesday, Crockford was more consistent than his partner, who fell away badly in the closing stages. A moderate first game went to Charterhouse by 15—12, Rugby being rather unlucky to lose after Crockford had pulled up from 7—14 to 12—14 before playing out of court. The second game was noteworthy for a fine opening run of thirteen by Garnett, who was the neatest and steadiest player of the quartette. Crockford served well, and replied with six, but Garnett then added the necessary two and won at 15—6. Play was faulty all round in the opening stages of the third game, the ball frequently being hit too high, and several times out of court. The longest run was six by Agnew, but Charterhouse won by 15—12. Rugby led by 5—3 in the

THE SUB-TARGET GUN COMPANY.

Gentlemen,—It affords me pleasure to testify to the value of the Sub-Target Rifle, one of which was set up on the steamer, and was in constant use by the members of the Canadian Rifle Team during the voyage from Montreal to Liverpool and afterwards at the Canadian Headquarters at Bisley, where it was in almost constant use. I consider it of great value in the instruction of recruits in holding and sighting, and also in detecting and correcting the individual errors of eyesight. For practice in trigger-pulling it is of great advantage, even to the experienced marksman.

My daily use of the Machine at Bisley, was, I feel, of advantage to me in my work on the ranges, where I was winner of the King's Prize.

Very truly yours,

THE SUB-TARGET GUN COMPANY.

Gentlemen,—Having used the Sub-Target Rifle frequently during the N.R.A. Meeting at Bisley, just closed, I am pleased to testify to its value in promoting steadiness in holding, sighting and trigger-pulling.

To the recruit it must be especially useful in these respects, as the tell-tale "needle" points out every "fault" of the man. I believe that its general adoption and use by the Army, Navy, Volunteers, Rifle Clubs and in the Public Schools would go a long way towards making a nation of reliable shots for Imperial Defence."

BOXING.

DOINGS AT WONDERLAND.

There was an excellent attendance at Wonderland on Saturday, when Mr. Harry Jacobs staged another very interesting programme. The items on the card were the opening bouts of an 8st. 12lbs. novices' competition, the third heats of an 8st. 4lbs. competition, and several six rounds contests. The contest that claimed most attention was that between Joe Fletcher (Camberwell) and Ned Kiley (Marylebone), the latter having taken the place of Rudolf Unholz, who had met with an accident, Fletcher winning in five rounds. Darkey Haley beat Joe Barrett in the same number of rounds. Officials :—Referee for the contests, Mr. B. Meadows (appointed by the Sporting Life); referee for competition and timekeeper, Joe Minden; seconds, Jack Natty, Jack Farley, Charley Smith, and Tom Ireland; M.C., George Harris; whip, Albert Drixon. Messrs. Harry Jacobs and Jack Woolf looked after the general arrangements. I append details of the big sixrounds contest.

Joe Fletcher (Camberwell) beat Ned Kiley (Marylebone).—This was the chief event of the evening. Kiley, who, as stated, had taken the place of Unholz, looked in fairly good condition, and was seconded by Jack Farley and Tom Ireland. Fletcher was also in good trim, and looked well after his trip to Brussels, where he defeated H. Webster. Fletcher was attended by Charley Smith, Jack Natty, and Fred Duffett. Fletcher, who has a crouching style, led-off lightly with the left. This he repeated, and was countered with Kiley's right. Fletcher then put in left and right, and after a sharp rally, time was called. In the next round Kiley was first to lead. Then Fletcher sent the left home on the head. Getting close together, some grand two-handed work was done, Fletcher having the best of the bout. The third round was hotly contested, for no sooner did they face each other than left and right went to work with a will, the blows of each having plenty of sting in them. Fletcher was the quicker, and took the lead. In the fourth round the men again started in a most determined manner, Kiley trying with the right, and Fletcher with the left on the body and the right on the head. Fletcher caught Kiley with the right and brought him down. In the fifth and last round Fletcher, seeing that his man was weak, went after him left and right, and the men got in holds. On breaking away Fletcher waited with the right, and, seeing an opening, sent it across and brought Kiley down again, and the latter was counted out. The referee thereupon declared Fletcher the winner, amid loud applause.

THE MAHABLESHWAR TOURNAMENT.

SIX teams entered for this tournament which opened on the 1st instant and, taken all round and making due allowance for the fact that most of them were not either at full strength or playing up to their usual form, the competition was interesting and at times the standard of play was distinctly good. The games were of five chukkers of 25 minutes in all, and ponies were limited to 12 a-side.

The tournament opened with the meeting of the 10th Hussars and the 33rd Queen's Cavalry who were unfortunately without the services of their best players and in consequence offered but a poor resistance to the hard-riding, straight-shooting Hussars, who won by 9 goals and 5 subsidiaries to 1 goal and 2 subsidiaries. On the same day the Poona Horse met and defeated the Poona Wanderers by 2 goals to 1 goal and 1 subsidiary after a game that was remarkable for keenness, pace and evenness of form. Teams :—

In the second round, played on the 2nd instant, a couple of really fine games were decided. The first was between the 10th Hussars and the Government House team and it was full of exciting play; the Hussars, however, wore their opponents down and emerged victors by 5 goals and 1 subsidiary to 3 goals. When the Poona Horse met the 29th Lancers it was soon seen that they were in for a soft thing. The play afforded abundance of interest and excitement; but the Lancers' initial efforts were not destined to be maintained to the end and they had to acknowledge a beating by no less than 7 goals 2 subsidiaries to 1 goal and 4 subsidiaries. THE FINAL.

POONA HORSE vs. 10TH HUSSARS.—I have only just time to post you the result of the last match on Saturday, 5th instant, in which these redoubtable opponents were pitted against each other. It was a dashing game from start to finish and was generally pronounced to be the fastest and most interesting of the competition. That the teams were evenly matched we all knew, and as the result showed there was practically nothing between them, for the margin of victory was but a single subsidiary and the defence on either side so strong that only 2 goals were notched throughout the match. In the second chukker the Poona Horse scored a goal and 2 subsidiaries. The Hussars got their goal in the third chukker and a subsidiary in the fifth, the game ending in a win for the Poona Horse by 1 goal and 2 subsidiaries to 1 goal and 1 subsidiary. Teams :—

DUST AND DUST PREV...

THE season is at hand when observation may app... be directed to the annoyance caused by the dust of m... cars. Observation is of two kinds—the lazy kind, whose usef... result can only be an increase in the vocabulary of execration, and the intelligent form, which, by noting minute differences and by suggesting intelligent hypotheses to explain them, can eventually guide us to reproduce on all cars the minimum dust-raising qualifications which may be noted on any one. The publication and record of such observations from the largest possible number of points of view is invaluable. The motorist may observe why one road surface is less dusty than another, the pedestrian why one car is less dusty, the manufacturer may report that with the same car one type of tyre is less dusty. If only the cause of the dust be forthcoming, all cars can, within a reasonable time, be brought up to the better standard. It remains with the Press to determine for itself whether invective or reason shall be allowed to predominate in the correspondence they will without doubt shortly publish. So far only generalities have been reached. We find that :—(1) Sharp corners and excessive road cambers lead to slip, and therefore to dust. (2) More dust is raised by cars from a rough road than from an equally dusty road if it be smooth for an equal speed of travelling. (3) Watering the road moderately diminishes the dust. (It is noteworthy that many of the grumblers living by the roadside have not realised even this!). (4). Tarmac is one of the best anti-dust road surfaces. Tar macadam, the spreading of crude oil on roads, the spreading of oil emulsions in water on the road are important palliatives. (5) Wood asphalt, cobbles, and setts are not dusty, save after use by horse traffic. (6) Cars with smooth, boat-shaped under surfaces are less dusty than others. (7) Cars with flaring mudguards fitted with leather flaps near the road level are more dusty. (8) Cars on high wheels well clear of the ground are less dusty. (9) Cars with large tool-boxes at the back reaching low down between the back wheels are dusty. (10) Large car bodies are in some cases dustier than small ones. (11) Blowing off the exhaust near the ground is dusty. (12) Cars fitted with engines having an insufficient fly-wheel or an uneven turning effort from any cause are more dusty. (13) Cars whose chassis are mounted on very easy springs having a large up and down travel will suck up the dust with each rise and fall of the body on rough roads. (14) Front wheels or rolling wheels raise less dust than back wheels or driven wheels. (15) Smooth pneumatic tyres are dusty. (16) Solid (or pneumatic) rubber tyres are more dusty at higher speeds and with high-powered engines. (17) Non-skid devices such as small steel studs, etc., not only do not increase the dust, but actually diminish it. Amongst the instructive negative conclusions from experiments made by the Automobile Club are :—(18) The car fitted with two long vertical dust screens placed near the ground between the road wheels and the chassis, extending the full length of the car edgewise to the direction of travelling (i.e., arranged to prevent the dust-laden air thrown up by the road wheels from mixing with air draught which passes underneath the car) showed no improvement from these attachments. (19) Horizontal screens fixed so as to closely embrace the driving wheel tyres and adjustable to various heights from the ground were tried in the hope that they might throw back on to the road the dus-laden air raised by the wheels, and so prevent it from becoming entangled in the air eddies at the back of the car. No good result was obtained. I need not rehearse the instructive results obtained by Lord Montagu of Beaulieu's tests on various kinds of road treatment, nor by Mr. W. R. Cooper's beautiful experiments, nor dwell upon certain minor car questions such as avoiding the centrifugal draught due to spokes by employing disc wheels, etc., but I would like to put in practice the suggestion of the first paragraph of this letter by putting forward a tentative explanation of the observations Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 15, 16, and 17 above. The answer is contained in these words—the differential gear. On a macadam road which presents the normal number of mounds, hollows, and irregularities, it constantly occurs that one driven wheel is making good and effective contact with the road, while the other is skipping lightly over those hollows which in dry weather may be called "dust puddles" If the car be travelling slowly the wheel simply rolls down into the puddle and rolls out at the other side. If the wheel be heavy and travelling fast, however, it cannot follow the profile of downward slope of the puddle, and it leaves the road following an approximate parabolic curve. At that instant it loses all adhesion with the ground, and thereupon, owing to the peculiarity of the "differential gear," the wheel which has good adhesion ceases to transmit any forward effort from the engine, and the wheel which has no adhesion immediately begins to spin round at an increased rate of rotation. Under its own inertia the car continues to roll on till the skidding wheel approaches the ground again. It at once churns up whatever dust it may come in contact with, while its speed is being brought back by friction to the normal wheel speed corresponding to the rate of forward movement. The importance of this defect of the differential extends to other questions. This, however, is a totally different matter, which, in any case, is likely to be brought before the public by the results of a 1,000-mile trial of an appliance which dispenses with the differential, and which is now on test by the Automobile Club.—MERVYN O'GORMAN in The Motor.

Though "Tiny" Wells gained the reputation of being a dandy, by the attention he invariably bestowed upon his attire, the wearer of Sir Joseph Hawley's celebarted cherry and black did not put on expensive tastes with his fashionable garments, and in the matter of "style" any of our present-day jockeys would have lost him entirely.

In the St. Leger of '69, Wells, on Pero Gomez, avenged the the latter's Derby defeat, congratulations, it need hardly be said, being showered on the lucky and Sir Joseph Hawleh, who, as usual, landed a useful sum by this victory. After tye weighing-in process had been satisfactorily carried out, "Tiny" strolled into the paddock, and, espying his employer in the distance, walked up to Sir Joseph and requested the loan of half-a-crown, as he desired to have a drink. Fancy at the present day a fashionable jockey, who had just won a classic event, having to borrow the price of a "wet!"

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL IN CALCUTTA.

OLYMPIANS vs. H. L. CHERMSIDE, ESQ.'s XI.—Olympians opened their season on the 4th instant by playing, on their own ground, a scratch team kindly got together by Mr. H. L. Chermside, which included several players well-known in Calcutta League Football. Midway through the first half F. G. Gould (Chermside's XI) scored for his side, and almost immediately after half time H. M. Sherman got through and scored with a fast shot. Olympians subsequently scored through A. A. Gould, and the game ended Chermside's XI two, Olympians one.

DALHOUSIE vs. NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—There was a meeting of the kind known as "friendly" between these teams last Saturday and the venue was the "Dal's" ground. A fairly good game was had and the soldiers scored a win by two to nil.

CALCUTTA vs. RANGERS.—While the Hockey Cup tie was going on in another part of the maidan last Saturday, these teams met in a game on the Rangers' ground, Calcutta winning by 2 to 1. Binning scored for Calcutta and Davis for the Rangers.

DALHOUSIE vs. HIGHLAND L. I.—Played on the Dalhousie ground on Tuesday evening in half a gale of wind. It was a scratch affair most of the time as Dalhousie were trying some new players, while the soldiers were at full strength at the end of a more or less interesting scramble—principally less—they left the field with a goal each. Teams :—

DALHOUSIE.—Kay, goal; Reynolds and Jackson, backs; Napper, Williamson and L. Prike, half-backs; Hunter, Holley, F. Prike, Pritchard and Graham, forwards.

H. L. I.—Lees, goal; Tait and Renton, backs; Barteman, Howard and Fairly, half-backs; Ennis, Duncan, Daverine, Lees and Allen, forwards.

RANGERS vs. NORTH FUSILIERS.—The result of this lop-sided game on the Rangers' ground last Tuesday was a win for the military team by 3 goals to nil.

CALEDONIA vs. OLYMPIANS.—This match was played on the 8th instant on the ground of the former club. The home side had the advantage of strong wind in the first half and did most of the pressing, but failed to score. Early on in the second half J. G. Pybus scored for Caledonia and repeated the operation before the close, the final score being Caledonia 2, Olympians nil.

Golf.

CALCUTTA GOLF CLUB.

ON Friday and Saturday last there was an extra competition for a Cup kindly presented by a member of the Club, which, after a most exciting finish, fell to Mr. J. G. Melrose, the late Amateur Champion of Ceylon, with a well played scratch round of 82. Mr. Melrose's win was very popular, as it was felt that his success since he arrived in Calcutta had hardly been commensurate with his deserts. He was one of the last players to come in, and up to the time of his arrival there was a tie between no less than eight competitors at 83 nett, while four more had returned 84. This must, we think, be quite a record, and it was a pleasure to see the scratch players well to the fore. The course was in excellent order, in spite of the long drought, but the high wind on Saturday afternoon made accurate play rather difficult. The full scores sent in were as follows :—

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

20th April 1906.

THE great festival—Easter—brings in its train many things; it brings feasting and laughter after the long fast and dolour of the 40 days of Lent, it sometimes brings fine weathers and it invariably brings golf. Railway travelling is an abomination, a necessary evil to enable the great majority to get away from murky towns, for this same great majority have no motor cars wherewith to enjoy independence of trains and their attendant miseries and discomforts, and the homely useful bicycle is not nearly so popular a means of transit since the motor fiend made roads unbearable and unsafe; with their inevitable train of blinding dust and reckless selfish driving. This year the week preceding Easter was one long succession of brilliantly sunny days, so that outside the radius of the water cart, the cars stirred up impenetrable, unavoidable, most disagreeable clouds of dust, dust which invaded eyes, ears, nose, and hair without compunction, made the way-side hedgerows with their bursting buds and delicate green look like a weary old hoary snow and lichen-covered stone wall and distracted the careful housewife in many and many a cottage who, poor soul! had laboriously washed and put up clean curtains as a humble tribute of the Easter Festival. There is no gainsaying it, that the damage and inconvenience caused by rich selfish motorists is enormous and unpardonable, which all the good that the great game of golf brings in its train is not capable of counterbalancing. The list of accidents caused by cars during the Easter holidays was appalling in its length and serious results, and on the other hand only one very slight accident to a woman crossing a common, who was struck by a wild tee shot, is recorded on the black list against golfers.

Since the "Haskell Case" the market has been strongly reinforced with new rubber cored balls; of these the Improved Golf Ball Company have brought out several good sorts. The "White Star" must, for flight, durability, and general satisfaction, rank very high. The ball flies extremely well off both wood and iron, it putts true, and does not easily gash nor does it lose its shape at all, even after several rounds. This Company have already made a name with their "White Vulcan," White Imp," "Elasture," "I. G. B.," etc., and these are obtainable at the Company's works, Locksley Street, Limehouse, London, E.

It is whispered, and this is really a truthful whisper, that Sandy Herd is coming south, leaving after many years his northern home at Fixby and taking up the engagement of professional to the newly-formed Fulwell Club at Hampton Hill, Middlesex, where he will take up his residence early next month. After that we shall have Braid, Taylor, Vardon, and Herd, the redoubtable quartette, established in the south and the north will find some difficulty in getting a four capable of accepting a challenge from the world-famed professionals mentioned above.

Several new records were established during the Easter holidays, perhaps of all these that made by Lieutenant C. K. Hutchison at Sandwich in a three ball match is most worthy of note. The figures were as follows :—Out : 5, 4, 3, 5, 3, 3, 5, 2, 4 = 34. in : 4, 3, 4, 4, 4, 5, 3, 4, 4 = 35 = 69. The partners were Mr. S. Mure-Fergusson and Mr. C. E. Hambro, M. P. Of course all seaside links are just now particularly easy for scoring, if there be no high wind, and with the exception of Saturday, the weather was absolutely perfect, no wind, brilliant sun, and the ground dry without being dried up—conditions which lend themselves admirably to record breaking. In the final of the Sidgwick Cup St. George's Club Foursome Tournament under handicap Messrs. Robertson (5) and Robertson—Walker (5) beat Messrs. Caird (5) and Pringle (6) by 5 up and 3 to go, the defeated pair showed good form in going round in 80, but the winners managed to get the lead and kept it despite any efforts made by their opponents. At Seaford the Turner Cup Tournament attracted a large field, the winner, Mr. G. A. R. Hilliard, with a handicap of (5) beat in the semi-final Mr. F. B. Dawson (8) by 4 and 3 and in the final somewhat easily disposed of Mr. Winearls (12) by 6 and 5.

At the Ladies' Meeting, Mrs. F. W. Brown (née Gilroy) a bronze medallist in last year's championship, beat her own record of 65 by 5 strokes. Mrs. Brown's remarkable score, even on a short links, was made up as follows :—Out ; 4, 2, 3, 3, 3, 2, 3, 4, 4 = 28 ; home—3, 3, 3, 3, 4, 3, 4, 4, 5 = 32 = 60 : truly be the course short or long to hole 9 holes in 28 strokes requires no small amount of skill and accuracy. Mrs. Brown is likely to be heard of at Burnham in the Ladies, Championship and also will be invaluable to Sussex in June at Hollinwell, when that county competes as winner of the South-Eastern Divisions in the County Finals, the other competeing teams being Yorkshire, Devonshire, and Lincolnshire. At Harlech too great doings were done at Easter by members of the Royal St. David's Club. Seventy-eight players entered for the Captain's Cup, and the "Walter Best" Cup in the former competition. Lord Maidstone (— 1) and Mr. F. Scarf (scratched) tied at all square, while Mr. Blain (2) won the "Walter Best" Cup with 4 holes up. In this competition Mr. John Graham, junior, made a record of 34 for the last nine holes. Bogey for those holes being 40.

The Oxford and Cambridge Golfing Society are having an Irish tour and their first match took place at DollyMount on Easter Monday against the Royal Dublin Club, the teams consisting of 14 players a side. The Society won the Singles in the morning by 10 matches to 4, and the foursomes by 5 points to 2, thus winning on the day by 15 points to 6. Some very prominent golfers were to be found on either side, and perhaps of all the matches that between the British and Irish Champions, Mr. A. G. Barry and Mr. H. A. Boyd, was the most interesting and closely contested. It is quite curious, and yet not curious how utterly Mr. Barry is capable of going off his game, and how marvellously he pulls himself together at the crucial moment. In this match he could not hit a ball going out and turned for home 4 down. The return journey was against a rather stiffish wind, but this seemed in no way to disconcert him for his driving and approaching were very accurate, and at the 15th his adversary had lost his very substantial advantage and at the 17th Mr. Barry for the first time in the round assumed the lead. On the home green Mr. Boyd's ball tipped the hole for a half and the match went to the British Champion by 2 up. Appended are the teams with result of each match.

Over the water, not St. George's, but La Manche, golfers too were busy, the Le Touquet Club held a very successful open meeting for which 74 competitors entered. The Gold Medal was won by G. Morley with 85—4 = 81. After a tie with Mr. D. Brown 91—10 = 81 who took the Silver Medal. Mr. G. C. Healing 83—1 = 82 was third, the latter won the Gold Medal for best scratch score and also the first sweepstake.

We must now hark back a bit to what was on Friday, 6th April, a very important occurrence in the golfing world, namely, the finals of the London Foursome Tournament. The contesting parties were Mr. W. H. Fowler and James Braid for Walton Heath, and Mr. S. H. Fry and J. H. Taylor representing MidSurrey, and the match was played (according to conditions set forth on the organisation of the tournament) at Walton Heath. Such a beautiful course and such a lovely day—and "only man was vile"—this is a quotation, no aspersion on the play, sex, or, on the men engaged, for with the exception of Mr. W. H. Fowler, who was off his game, the golf was good. Mr. Fowler seemed to lose confidence after a bad start, and never really got into his stride and the very large gallery did not appear to have the effect of spinning him on to better efforts. One knows the feeling so well and especially is this want of confidence accentuated in a foursome and very often one's very strenuous efforts only succeed in making matters worse. Braid played his usual placid unruffled game, but the combination representing the Mid Surrey Club was unusually strong and the keen and tricky greens seemed to act in concert with them too, enabling them to pull off the match with a very large margin and the handsome trophy is held by the Mid Surrey Club until some other pair from another club can wrest it from them in the spring of 1907. The enterprise has been an unqualified success from start to finish and the two pairs engaged in the finals were undoubtedly the strongest couples in and "fancied" from the onset.

THE BEIGHTON CUP.

SECOND ROUND.

TOWN CLUB vs. H. L. I.—This match, which had ended unsatisfactorily, was replayed on Wednesday evening, when the Town Club won by a goal to nil. The game was not particularly interesting, the shooting of both teams being very poor. Banerjee scored the only goal of the game. Teams :—

TOWN CLUB.—Das Gupta, goal ; Mitter and Bagchi, backs ; Chuckerbutty, M. Roy and Banerjee, half-backs ; K. Roy, B. Roy, Deb, Mozumdar and Sukul, forwards.

H. L. I.—Sim, goal ; Cameron and Allen, backs ; Wade, Greer and Low, half-backs ; Lieutenant Kilburn, Morrin, Breslin, Dewson and Dempster, forwards.

THIRD ROUND.

MEDICAL COLLEGE vs. TOWN CLUB.—Played on the Town Club ground, the home team being defeated by two goals to one. The visitors attacked at the start and Dingavan scored. The Town Club played up and Deb equalised. The game was very level till the interval, but on resuming the Medicos had the best of the play. They lost several chances of scoring however, and only one more goal was put on, Dingavan again being responsible.

FOURTH ROUND.

HORNETS vs. CUSTOMS.—These teams met on Tuesday last when, contrary to expectation, the Customs were beaten by four goals to nil. The first half was very even, the ball travelling up and down the field. Apcar netted the ball for the Hornets and this was the only score at the internal. The Customs pressed hard on resuming, but their shooting was anything but their strong point. At length Rosser got away for the Hornets, and passing to Smith, the latter put through. Again the Customs attacked, but without success. The Hornets were in excellent form and were shooting accurately. Apcar and Smith added two more goals, and though the Customs tried all they knew to score their luck was out and the Hornets secured a victory as stated. Teams :—

HORNETS.—Staynor, goal ; Yackjee and Hollow, backs ; Power, B. Rosser and Cooper, half-backs ; Rosser, Mabert Apcar, Smith and Russell, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Frederick, goal ; Quiterio and Adams, backs ; Anderson, Edwards, and C. Barlow, half-backs ; Fertado, McCreedy, Simmons, T. Vears, and H. Vears, forwards.

WANDERERS vs. RANCHI.—The cognoscenti predicted that the visitors would win when they played their match with the Wanderers last Thursday. They proved to be right, for Mr. Whitley and his sable young Christians delighted us with a really good exhibition of hockey, at times rising to the well remembered brilliance they used to display when they descended on Calcutta in the early days of this tournament. Ranchi pressed practically throughout the first half and scored 2 goals therein ; they might have got more had it not been for the sound goal-keeping of Fox. The Wanderers played up very pluckily in the early part of the second half ; but when the pinch of the struggle came in and condition inevitably asserted itself, the Ranchi men wore them down and put in two more goals, while Goldsmith scored the Wanderers' goal soon offer play began. This left Ranchi victors, after an unusually hard game—especially strenuous and exciting in the second period—by 4 goals to 1. Teams :—

WANDERERS.—Fox, goal ; White and Zemin, backs ; Cox, O'Sullivan and Rowe, half-backs ; Goldsmith, Cranenburgh, Walkem, Hudson and Duff, forwards.

RANCHI.—Nehemiah, goal ; Richard and Mini, backs ; Subarano, Sharan and Boas, half-backs ; Issrie, Suleman, Whitley, Sadhu and Manuel, forwards.

MEDICAL vs. LA MARTINIERE.—Played last Thursday. It was a fast game from start to finish ; and the sides were very equal in pace and combination : the first period was destitute of score, though the embryo chirurgeons had a shade the best of the argument. Late in the second half D'Arcy put in their only goal and the boys from Loudon Street, finding themselves unequal to the task of getting level, had to leave beaten by one to nil. Teams :—

LA MARTINIERE.—Roseboom, goal ; Lucas and Pritchard, backs ; Bath, Kelley and Watling, half-backs ; Sukias, Clyne, Cody, Pemberton and Mackertich, forwards.

MEDICAL.—Heppolette, goal ; Domingo and Hendrick, backs ; Baker, Pell and Lewis, half-backs ; Burns, D'Arcy, Dingavin, Marchant and Rogers, forwards.

SIBPUR vs. BHAGALPUR.—It was very sporting of Bhagalpur to support this tournament ; we would that we could say their form was commensurate with their enterprise. Alas! it was not ; for, if we put aside their goal-keeper, and Knyvett and Sealy in their front line the others were considerably below tournament form as we understand it here Of Sanyal, the mighty custodian, we could write much, we are only restricted by the knowledge that the exigencies of space render it necessary to make our hockey reports rather brief. He gave a really marvellous display, keeping out stingers that seemed impossible to deal with, over and over again when it seemed "all Lombard Street to a China orange" that the Sibpur attack must end in his being beaten, he would emerge serenely from the onslaught after dealing with shots that none of but the very best would care or know how to tackle. Sanyal was superb ; he let through three it is true, but he must have "put away' ten times as many. Sibpur were not the team we are accustomed to see ; they were clean off their game and their weakness in front of goal, their dribbling and neglect of passing were very noticeable. However they won by 3 to nil. Teams :—

SIBPUR.—Street, goal ; Brown and McGrath, backs ; Milchem, Showers, and Vardon, half-backs ; Murphy, Haupt, Lawton, Pattison, and Ansell, forwards.

BHAGALPUR.—Sanyal, goal ; Sharling and Catchup, backs ; Waterworth, Beakpark and White, half-backs ; Knyvett, Sealy, Sen Gupta, Sirha and Tim, forwards.

HORNETS vs. SIBPUR.—Naturally much public interest centered in the fixture that brought these teams together on the Rangers' ground last Monday. Both sides have an enviable reputation and all who gathered round the ground confidently expected a good show. There was a great crowd who watched every point in the struggle with these old and well matched rivals with keen enjoyment. The Sibpur men had a trifle the best of the first half of the game, and after some really scientific passing and speedy and clever foot work on both sides, Ansell hit into the net but was ruled off side. This player and Lawton were next conspicuous for some pretty combination, the outcome of which was a fine attempt at goal by the latter ; but Staynor, the Hornets' custodian, saved this and several other shots that bristled with possibilities ; his defence was one of the best features of the game. Then Lawton unfortunately got his knee cap put out, but repairing the damage limped on again and play proceeded. After this came some warm work by the Hornets who maintaining an almost continual attack from now till the call of half-time got two goals through Apcar and Smith. A final rush by the Sibpurians was irresistible and Ansell beating Staynor the first period closed with the score : Hornets 2 goals, Sibpur 1.

Up and down play marked the first part of the second half, with, perhaps, here and there a tendency to dribble when passing might have been more profitable : but the Hornets, who seemed full of running, were soon very busy in their opponents' ground and the nimble and clean hitting Rosser added the third goal for his side amidst a tumult of exultation from their supporters. This success practically put the issue beyond a doubt, for though Sibpur seemed to "come again" and did some splendid work as a team and evinced here and there a deal of individual merit the Hornets held the game safe and won by 3 goals to 1.

RANCHI vs. MEDICAL.—This semi-final game was also played on Monday evening and provided the warriors from Chota Nagpore with a nice easy game and a win by 2 goals to 1. The margin of victory was not big, but the winners did not appear to over exert themselves—a wise policy seeing the tough struggle they were likely to have last night.

FINAL ROUND.

HORNETS vs. RANCHI.—Last evening the Hornets met Ranchi on the Calcutta ground in the final round of the Beighton Cup, the result being a draw of one goal all. The match was exceptionally fast throughout, both sides showing admirable combination. Ranchi, on the evening's play, seemed the more dangerous team and were always quicker on the ball than their opponents. The score sheet was blank up to half time ; but soon after the resumption of play one of the Ranchi forwards was penalised for a foul inside the area. From the resulting penalty bully. Apcar had no difficulty in scoring. Play was very fast and even after this and from a melee in front of the Hornet's goal mouth Ranchi managed to equalise. But despite the efforts of both teams, no further score resulted, and the whistle blew shortly after this leaving the match undecided. Vast crowds were present, and the match was voted quite the most exciting of the season.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE hockey during the past week has been full of interest. The first of a series of really good tussels, was the game played between the Hornets and Customs. The former left the field with a four-goal victory, and although there is no disputing the fact that they were the better side on the day's play the score does not, in my opinion, represent their superiority over their opponents. At forward the Hornets held an advantage, but nowhere else. The Customs were unlucky to have to take the field without Jewell, a distinctly fast and clever player, and the younger Viers, although working hard, did not do particularly well. The halves on either side played brilliantly and kept the game going at a very hot pace. Hallam for the winners was probably the best back on the field and played as good a game as I have ever seen him play, and it was clearly the younger Rosser's day out. He hardly made a mistake and played a splendid game at outside right. I have heard him referred to as one of the best forwards in India ; this is rather a tall order, but I also think that on his day he has few equals. There is no getting away from the fact that in hockey as in other games a player may be favoured with a little good fortune, and although I do not for a moment say that Rosser has more than his share it strikes me that a player, who, like Rosser, receives the ball while going at top speed down the touch line has to run a rather big risk of losing it altogether. The unevenness of the ground or the spin on a ball are both quite sufficient to turn a brilliant piece of play into an utter failure, and in the case of the latter the only reward one gets is groans and deep sighs from the gallery. Rosser's game, I am of opinion, is the correct one and it is a pity it is not practised by men in Calcutta.

Last Saturday on the Calcutta ground the Bhagalpur team proved to be a good deal below Calcutta standard. It was quite expected that they would give Sibpur a good game, but we were sadly disappointed. The goalkeeper was the best man on the visiting team side and Sharling at back and Seeley the inside right were also often conspicious. Knyvett at outside right did not get many opportunities, which was rather a pity as he could certainly have often made considerable headway. The halves struck me as being the weak joint in the armour. It is to be hoped, however, that they will not be discouraged by their defeat, as it must be borne in mind that they were pitted against one of the strongest combination in the city. I hope to see them come up smiling again next year, with the services of two or three players who were unable to assist them on this occasion.

Ranchi had little difficulty in accounting for the Wanderers on Friday last, and although their game against the Medicals extended them more they were always a winning side.

By far the most interesting game in the tournament was that played between the Hornets and Sibpur on Monday last, which resulted in a win for the former team by 3 goals to 1. The biggest crowd I have seen this season attended the game.

To put it even mildly in my opinion there was only one team in it from start to finish and that was certainly not the winners. A more unsatisfactory result, when the standard of play is taken into consideration, cannot be imagined. The College were all over their opponents and they had the hardest of hard lines time after time not scoring. To commence with, the first goal they scored through Ansell was ruled off side; if it was it must have been a very near thing. They, however, continued to press for some minutes, but could do everything but actually score, and but for the splendid defence of Staynor at goal must have put through on more than one occasion. The Hornets scored two goals during the first half and it was on almost the only two occasions on which they were in their opponents' 25. Credit is due them certainly for making the most of their chances, but the most impartial critic could not for a moment say that they deserved their two-goal margin of victory. The team seemed to go quite to pieces, and it was only spasmodic efforts on their part that took the play into their opponents' territory.

Congratulations go to the winners, and sympathy certainly remains with the losers; it is satisfactory to remark that, from start to finish, the game was played in the most sporting of sporting spirit.

When Ranchi met the Hornets last evening a splendid game, fast and scientific, was seen, but no definite result was arrived at, the score being one goal all. Apear got the Hornets' goal from a penalty shot close in, and Ranchi scored their point from a scrimmage in goal—mouth.

Riding.

CURIOUS WAGERS AND EXTRAORDINARY FEATS.

CONSIDERABLE interest was recently aroused in sporting circles by a match made between two Reigate residents, the event, it may be remembered, being a race on horseback, for £100 a-side. The conditions were that Mrs. Aggio, the wife of a well-known veterinary surgeon at Reigate, should ride her grey mare, six years old and standing 16 hands high, against Mr. W. Wyatt's grey gelding, 14 hands (owner up), one mile on the flat. The race took place on Epsom Downs near the Grand Stand on the Derby course, and the result of it was an easy victory by eight lengths for the lady rider, who went to the saddle at 11st. Mr. Wyatt rode at 9st. 6lbs., and would no doubt have won had not his horse which started favourite at 2 to 1 on, ran out of the course some distance from the finish. There was not much wagering on this race, and there were not many spectators, as such events nowadays do not find particular favour with the powers that be.

It was not ever thus, however, and there are many existing records of races, usually run on the road, between rival equestrians who backed their respective steeds. More commonly these events took the form of a race against time, and the task undertaken in olden days show that both horses and riders were possessed of remarkable stamina and power of perseverance.

One of the earliest of these matches against time was that entered into by one John Lepton, of Kenwick, Yorkshire, who, in the reign of James I.—in 1604, to be precise—undertook to ride five times between London and York within the six working days of the week. Mr. Lepton, who was one of His Majesty's grooms, set out from St. Martin's-le-Grand between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning on the 26th of May, arriving between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening of the same day at York, where he put up for the night. The following day he returned to London and duly made his appearance at his original starting-point at 7 P.M. The rider spent the night in town and started off again at 3 o'clock the next morning. The journey to York was safely accomplished by 7 o'clock that evening, and leaving the northern capital about 3 A.M. next morning, Mr. Lepton reached town again between 7 and 8 P.M. Only one stage of the journey now remained to be completed and this was accomplished in the usual time, Mr. Lepton completing his task between 7 and 8 on the Friday evening, not only well within the stipulated six days, but with a day to spare. We are not told how many horses were used in the performance of this somewhat weary task, but we are assured that on the following Monday, Mr. Lepton returned to town and appeared at His Majesty's Court at Greenwich "as fresh and as chearful (sic) as when he first set out."

Much more remarkable was the performance of Mr. Bernard Calvert, of Andover, who, on the 17th of July, 1619, set out on horseback from St. George's Church, Southwark, to ride to Dover on his way to France and back in the day. From Dover, according to the Baker's Chronicle this record-breaker "passed by barge to Clais," whence he came back as quickly as his primitive cross-Channel vessel would carry him, and by 8 o'clock in the evening he was back at St. George's Church 'fresh and hearty," and ready to receive the congratulations of his friends, and the State money.

Many a pedestrian has essayed the task of covering a given number of miles in a stated period of successive hours, the most recent of these achievements being that attained by Willian Buckler, who, in August and September last, covered 2,028 miles 720 yards in 1,000 consecutive hours at Ardwick Athletic Grounds, Manchester. Such feats on horseback were never, it seems, of very common occurrence, but in 1701, a Mr. Sinclair, of Kirkby, Lonsdale, evidently tempted by a wager of 500 guineas, essayed to ride his galloway on the Swift, at Carlisle, a distance of a thousand miles in a thousand successive hours, and, what is more, he accomplished his task successfully in the stated time.

Innkeepers have always been, and still are, of a speculative turn of mind, so that one is not surprised to hear that in the year 1745 Mr. Cooper Thornhill, master of the Bell Inn of Stilton, in Huntingdonshire, backed himself for a considerable sum to ride three times between his domicile and London in the space of fifteen hours. Mr. Thornhill was allowed as many horses as he pleased, and started upon his journey on Monday, 29th April 1745. The times occupied by the rider were as follows:—

	H.	M.	S.
From Stilton to Shoreditch Church, London ...	3	52	59
From Shoreditch Church to Stilton	3	50	57
From Stilton to Shoreditch Church	3	49	56

The distance between the two points is 71 miles, so that the rider covered 213 miles in 11 hours 33mins. 52secs. and won his wager by the large margin of 3 hours 26mins. 8secs. inside the allowed time of 15 hours. Newmarket Heath has been the scene of many matches, but certainly one of the most remarkable was that in which "Jennison Shafto, Esquire," backed himself against time to ride fifty miles (using as many horses as he required) in two successive hours. One is pleased to learn that this intrepid horseman completed his task well within the allotted time, for, with the aid of ten trusty steeds, held ready at certain points of the measured course, Mr. Shafto galloped home at the end of his fiftieth mile, 1 hour 49mins. 17secs. after he first put foot to stirrup.

Two years later the same Jennison Shafto, who was evidently a speculator of no mean order, is discovered ready to wager "Hugo Meynel, Esquire," the sum of 2,000 guineas on the following terms:—Mr. Shafto to get a person to ride one hundred miles a day (on any one horse each day) for twenty-nine days together; any number of horses not exceeding twenty-nine to be employed. Mr. Shafto chose a certain John Woodcock as his representative, and accordingly on the 14th of May, 1761, the latter set out on his long journey at the uncomfortable hour of 1 o'clock in the morning. And such good progress did Mr. Woodcock make that he successfully concluded his ride of nearly 3,000 miles in the twenty-nine days without requisitioning the services of more than fourteen horses.

The highway from London to York was, as we have seen, a favourite rendezvous for rival horsemen, and a sensational match took place over this course on Tuesday, 24th August 1773, between Mr. Thomas Walker's hackney gelding and Captain Thomas Hay's mare, Mr. Walker rode his own horse, while Captain Mulcaster rode for Captain Hay, and the pair started from Portland-street, London, at thirty-five minutes past ten on the evening of the day named. The race had a tragic ending, for Mr. Walker's horse broke down six miles short of Tadcaster and died next day. Captain Mulcaster, therefore gained an easy victory for Mr. Hay, arriving at Ouse Bridge, York, in 40 hours 25mins. The arrival of the mare at the end of her journey is a matter for some surprise when we learn that she consumed no fewer than twelve bottles of wine en route, but neither these nor the length of the journey seem to have affected her, for we read that on the following Thursday she was out at exercise on the Knavesmire.

During the last week in September, 1781, a remarkable trial of endurance was embarked upon by Richard Hanstead, of Lincoln, who, with a look of grim determination on his countenance, threw his leg across a famous grey horse which he owned at the time, and swore to cover 420 miles in the week or perish in the attempt. This race against time was ridden over the Lincoln two-mile course, and so excellently did the worthy Richard and his faithful horse perform the task, that when the 420th imaginary milestone was passed, there were still three hours and a half of the week to run.

The English butcher has always been intimately associated with the horse, not, like his German brother of the same calling, after the demise of the noble animal, but in life. Butchers, too, besides being fond of horse-dealing, are generally good sportsmen, and such was Samuel Halliday, a purveyor of meat, who flourished at the latter part of the eighteenth century. Halliday lived at Leeds, and on the 10th of October, 1783, wagered a friend to the extent of a £10 note that he (Halliday) would ride from Leeds to Rochdale, from thence to York, and back again to Leeds (a distance altogether of 110 miles) in 20 hours. Halliday was a heavy man, for he owned to over 14st. of avoirdupois, while his mare is reported to have been of slender build, and not even 14 hands high. But the pony did it in spite of the 14st., enabled her master to finish "with ease" in less than 18 hours.

A very sporting match was that which took place round the Flat, at Newmarket, on 28th December 1786. Mr. Hull, the owner of a horse named Quibler, essayed to ride the animal twenty-three miles over the course named in the space of one hour. Quibler fully justified the confidence placed in his powers of speed and endurance, for he covered the distance in 57mins. 10secs., and won for his master the sum of a thousand guineas.

Six years later—on 15th August 1792 to be exact—two gentlemen of Stamford, named respectively Messrs. Cooper and Brewer, had a dispute as to the abilities of a horse named Labourer belonging to Mr. Brewer. Mr. Cooper wagered the sum of £50 that Labourer could not go twenty times round the Preston "race ground"—the distance once round being exactly a mile—in the hour. But Labourer was in his best mood, as it happened, and achieved fame for himself and a victory for his master by performing his allotted task in the good time of 54 minutes.

There may be, so far as we of the present day are concerned, nothing remarkable in some of the feats of horsemanship here referred to. Better performances than these have been achieved since then in more than one instance, while in some cases the correctness of the figures may be open to question. At the same time, these old records of prowess in the art of equestrianism are interesting even if they are not all convincing or even very extraordinary. They knew at least that our speculative forefathers were deeply imbued with the spirit that is called "sporting."

Sir John Thursby, when talking about the idiosyncracies of certain racehorses, has instanced the predilection which Grave and Gay has for a little donkey. They are inseparable companions, so that when Grave and Gay goes to a race meeting the donkey has to go too. The small quadruped realises its own importance, however, giving itself airs in consequence. One of these is a truculent objection to be boxed; wherefore, when the thoroughbred has to go a journey, the services of half a dozen men are required to box the donkey, which has to be carried in.

This love of thoroughbreds for other animals would furnish enough copy to fill a volume. Goats, dogs, and cats are usually welcomed by them, more especially the two last-mentioned friends of man, as they keep rats and mice away from the stables, and few thoroughbreds will touch corn over which a rat or mouse has passed. There are, however, exceptions to the rule as far as cats are concerned, and it occurs to the mind that St. Symphorien, the property of Mr. John Hammond, was one of these. Being in a savage mood, it was thought that the rats had been disturbing him, so a cat was introduced to his box one evening. In the morning only some scraps of fur and a tail remained of poor puss. "The Saint" having devoured the rest of her.

THE CALCUTTA SWIMMING CLUB.

THE annual general meeting of the Calcutta Swimming Club was held in the Bath premises on Monday, 30th April.
There were present Mr. A. R. C. Miller (in the chair) and Messrs. A. R. Coard, G. H. Harnack, L. Prike, A. Bergmann, A. Munro, J. S. Munro, and W. Govan, Honorary Secretary.
The following were chosen to act on the committee for 1906:—President: Mr. W. Bushby; Members: Messrs. G. O. Rushton, G. H. Harnack, W. Govan, L. Prike, L. G. De Bretton, and W. S. J. Willson; Honorary Secretary, Mr. A. R. C. Miller.
At a subsequent meeting of the committee the following programme of events was drawn up:—

" 10th " —Three lengths handicap.
" 17th " —Final three lengths handicap.
" 24th " —Two lengths sealed handicap.
Saturday, 15th Sept.—Autumn Meeting.

Though "Charley" Head owned not a few useful horses during his career as a penciller. they were seldom made the medium of a plunge though whenever the money was put down it is safe to say it was not left. Owners at the time of Charley's appearance on the Turf were frequently indulging in plunges on their good things, and it was undoubtedly the fact of a few of these coming untied that showed Head the danger of "going for the gloves."
At Newmarket one back-end three very hot divisions were all "having a go" in a certain race worth winning for the stake alone, not to mention the additional inducement of practically unlimited betting. Amongst the score or so of runners that face the stater was one belonging to Cherly, but with no money for the horse he was soon placed amongst the "any price outsiders" division. Even the friends of the genial bookie did not, as frequently happened, get the tip, and the animal started with a penny having been laid against him. When, therefore, the outsider was seen to be winning easily, it was hardly to be wondered at if the layers yelled, closed their books, and prepard to adjourn to the refreshment bar.
"I say, Charlie," remarked one of his confreres, who with his clerk was about to celebrate, "you might have let us stand in.'
"Did you have to pay over it?" demanded the winning owner.
"Hardly," laughingly responded the metallician. "Had a skinner."
"Yet you're not satisfied," blazed forth Head. "You ungreatful set of ——! I let the horse run for your books, and all. Well, the next——"
"Never mind Charley," broke in the erstwhile grumbler, come and have a bottle. Come on!"
"No. thanks," coldly responded the irate bookie; "when I want a drink I can puy for it myself."
And, despite the penciller's persuasion, Head refused to "adjourn."

A DREAM RESULT.

I HAD just got back from a heavy day's racing in which the common enemy had once more beaten the talent, and was on the point of enjoying my solitary bachelor dinner when my old pal George Howard made his appearance. Now, George is one of the best fellows in the world, but because I am connected with sport, he seems to think that there is no other subject upon which I can converse, and in consequence whenever his cheery face turns up at my "digs" I know I am in for a dose of "shop."
"What sort of a day have you had, Billy?" he asked. "Not over lively, I should say, judging by the results. You're not overfond of 100 to 8 chances."
"Oh, I managed to hold my own," I replied, as indifferently as I could.
"Oh, I know what that means, old chap. I've told that tale myself before to-day. Now, if I'd been down there, I should have had a real good day."
"What a pity you weren't George; somehow you always seem to pitch on the wrong day to go to a meeting. I never hear you crowing much on the way home."
"You've got 'em bad, Billy; never mind, old boy, to-morrow's another day. Let's change the subject. What do you think is going to win the City and Suburban?"
"Is that what you call changing the subject. I do wish, my dear George, that you would realise the fact that there are times when the mere mention of racing is an abomination to me."
"I can quite believe it, I've experienced the same sort of thing myself, but to tell you the truth, Billy, I've got a special reason for asking you the question."
"Really? Well, if my opinion is worth anything to you, I'm sure you're quite welcome to it, but I'm dead out of form, and anything I fancy I should advise you to keep right off."
"Well, what is it?"
"I fancy Borkos will win."
"Well, he won't!"
"Oh, I quite believe that; but, just as a matter of curiosity, I should like to know why you are so positive of the fact."
He was silent for a moment, and I looked up in surprise, for that is not George's failing as a rule. He seemed to derive encouragement from my look, but it was with a decidedly diffident air that he asked, "Do you believe in dreams?"
I put down my knife and fork, and stared at him fixedly, putting as reproachful an expression on as my good-tempered face would admit.
"Oh, yes," I replied, "I believe in dreams all right. I've had too many not to do that, but if you mean do I look upon them as a favourable method of forecasting winners, I answer most emphatically, No! Dreams of all sorts and conditions are due, in the majority of instances, to an overloaded stomach, and if you are affected very badly in that way I should suggest your interviewing the family doctor as soon as may be."
"Billy, old chap, they spoilt a good parson when they made a racing man of you. But I don't mind a bit. I came fully prepared to be laughed at, and now you've had your go, let me have mine."
"Fire away," I said, resuming stoking operations. Once set George going and I knew there was a chance of finishing my dinner in peace.
"Well, I dreamt as plain as a pikestaff that I saw the result of the City and Sub. printed in the evening paper in bold type: Hercat first, Borkos second, and Trianon third. What do you think of that?"
"Not much," I replied; "there is just the chance that you are right as regards Borkos; anything I back seems to get second; beyond that I am not at all in love with your other selections."
"Stop a bit, you haven't heard all of it yet. I've had that dream two nights running; how's that!"
"No good, according to the rules that govern these wonderful dreams; you must dream it three times before you've got a 100 to 1 chance."
"All right, you keep on laughing, but if you'd seen that result as plainly as I did you'd sing a different tune—two nights in succession, too."
"Go home and dream it for the third time, George, and I'll talk to you about it; for the present, suppose you light up a cigar, and by way of changing the conversation, we'll put in an hour at the Coliseum."
Poor George, seeing that he could make little or no impression on me, gave in at length, and I dismissed the whole thing from my mind. In the course of my travels I had heard plenty of dream yarns, but somehow or the other never until after the race had been run. Hence my scepticism was pardonable, as I have not a grain of superstition in my nature, and honestly believe dreams to be the outcome of bad digestion.
Judge of my astonishment, then, to receive a wire from George Howard on entering the ring at Derby the following day as follows:—
"Same dream again last night.—George."
I related the incident to one or two on the journey back to town, and in consequence was inundated with all sorts of stories relative to the wonderful dream tips that had come off, many of which I already knew. I quite anticipated a visit from George Howard that evening, and sure enough he turned up with a broad grin on his cheery face.
"Well, I took your tip, you see, and dreamt it for the third time; do you know what I'm going to do now?"
"I haven't the remotest idea, try and dream it for the fourth time."
"Dont be an ass, Billy. I'm going to back it, my boy. I can get 50 to 1 about Hercat, and I reckon it's good enough to win a big stake over. I've had a bit of luck lately on 'Change, and by Jove, I'll play up my winnings."
"What about the other two; what are you going to do about them; going to let them run loose?"
"What's the good of messing about with them? If the dream's good for anything they'll only get placed, and that's no catch; better have all the money on the winner at fifties."
"You're making pretty certain he's the winner, anyway," I laughed, "so I'll just have a fiver on for luck, but, all the same, I shall stick to my original fancy, Borkos, and back him each way."
George smiled knowingly as he pocketed my fiver, evidently delighted that he had succeeded in convincing me to that extent even. The interval between the making of his big bet and the day of the race was a distinctly memorable one to both of us. Right up to the night before it looked any odds on Hercat not starting at all, and when at last we saw his number hoisted in the frame I openly accused George of having bribed his owner to run him.
George laughed heartily at the idea; he was all on his toes, as the saying is, and had run down with me especially to see the race run. I was on fairly good terms with myself, as Borkos, whom I had fancied at the outset, came to a very short price before the start.
There was a long delay at the post, but at last "They're off!" was shouted, and George was all on wires. As they raced round Tattenham Corner I could see Borkos holding a nice place and going well within himself, the nearer they got to home the better he went, and I looked in vain for the violet stripes of Hercat, although Trianon was lying handy.
Suddenly, just as thousands of throats began to hail the victory of the favourite, a horse left the ruck, and going two strides to everything else's one, drew up to Brokos's girths, and a terrific ace home ensued. First one and then the other got his head in front and after a magnificent struggle the pair passed the post so closely locked together that not a soul could name the winner.
While the talent shouted for the favourite, the ring hailed the outsider as the victor, and they were right, as No. 22 went up first, with Borkos second and Trianon third.
"My dream!" exclaimed George triumphantly, pointing to the number-board; "it's come true, Hercat's won."
Poor George's joy, however, was destined to be very shortlived, for on returning to scale it was discovered that the jockey on Hercat had lost one of his saddle-cloths, and being unable to draw the weight, was promptly disqualified, to the delight of backers of the favourite.
"Hard lines, old chap," I said, endeavouring to administer a little consolation through the medium of a bottle of champagne.
"It was a great tip, wasn't it? but the dream was right, after all."
I didn't quite catch his meaning at the time, but on the following evening he brought me the newspaper cutting neatly framed, containing the result exactly as he had dreamed it:—

Trianon, 3.

"Hang that up in your room, Billy; perhaps you'll be more inclined to believe in dreams in future."

HOW COLLECTORS SHOOT.

IT is curious to observe how the hunting instinct in the Englishman has survived through all the vicissitudes of the four thousand years which have elapsed since his Aryan ancestor roamed the slopes of the Mustagh and the valleys of the Caucasus. Then he hunted the wild beasts of the forest and built up his family on the spoils of his bow and spear. Clad in the skins of the wild beasts slain by his own hands, his bow slung across his back, with spear in hand, he wandered alone, with the tigerish tread of naked feet, and slowly stalked his prey to within arrow-range. Then twanged the bow and flew the arrow, followed the chase of the stricken beast, ending in the death-blow with the deadly spear. We see him, in our mind's eye, break up his quarry, shoulder it, and return to his solitary dwelling in the forest, where his skin-clad wife and offspring relieve him of his burden, and prepare the simple meal of roast or broil for their carnivorous appetites. The Aryan hunter was necessarily solitary, and a law unto himself; and jealousy was the characteristic which distinguished him, even in those far off days. No doubt, when another hunter poached on his grounds, there was mortal combat, and one or the other soon lay on the ground with a smashed skull or a hole through his body. We read that, even within historic times, after our ancestors had tamed the beasts of the field and gathered the first grass seeds which supplied them with wheat and barley, the hunter caste remained solitary. The man of flocks and herds followed his horses, cattle, and sheep; the tiller of the soil was attached to his fields; but the primitive hunter remained true to his forests, and was solitary and jealous as of yore.

His descendant, the latter-day sportsman, is solitary and jealous still. Conditions are changed indeed, but the main-springs of his actions are the same. His modus operandi also is very far removed from the simple and direct methods of his ancestor. In certain very upper provinces of the Indian Empire, let us say, a "Collector Sahib," with his ancestral instincts strongly developed, holds a shooting district. His shikar arrangements are organized on a scale befitting his high position. "Commandeering" was no doubt very efficiently performed in the land whence that word came, but the sporting head of an Indian district has reduced it to a fine art. A "parwana" of two lines sent to his able lieutenant, the tehsildar, and the thing is done. The bandobast that follows deserves detailed notice, as a contrast to the simple arrangements of his sporting ancestor. The services of all the elephants owned by private gentlemen in his jurisdiction are requisitioned; numbers of villagers from far and near are impressed; the village bania, perhaps unwillingly, attends: village chowkidars are assembled by the score; horse, foot, and elephantry converge from all points of the compass, on a remote jungle, the chosen hunting ground of the "Hazur." His able assis-

...apping, ...ense, incon- ...ral population. ...of territory, support- ...here are, of course, native ...gnity can be upheld only by ...r elephants. That was the idea ...d the simple man (to take one as an ...) to invest his thousands in these expensive ...mals, but when a sporting Collector comes along, he is very soon disillusioned. These ponderous animals of the chase are soon seen standing in the Collector's compound waiting on his pleasure. He may wish to visit a snipe jheel for an evening's pastime, or his sporting instinct may yearn with acute longing for the tiger's lair in the low-lying forest-clad hills on the borders of his district. There the elephants proceed—and so the game goes on. The far off owners have the honour of paying the necessary expenses, all the time—a heavy item when considered in the lump. These simple minded gentry who dreamed only of their own izzat when the elephant mania seized them now discover that it is good policy to cultivate instead the Collector Sahib's goodwill, with the help of their huge beasts. They may on festive occasions borrow them from the "Hazur" for a few days, but on the whole they shrewdly decide that it will pay them best to let them attend on the all-powerful "Hakim," and put their own personal honour and glory in the background. They know that circumstances will arise which will make the Collector's mehrbani valuable beyond price. They are conscious by instinct that, in these days Cæsar is above suspicion and incorruptible, and that no direct advantage can be hoped for, on account of their pachydermatous connections—but indirectly what benefits their imaginations conjure up.! There are the subordinate officials of the district staff. They can work these gentlemen (every one of whom is aware of the connecting link) for the thousand and one transactions which landed proprietors have constantly to worry through. Then there are the neighbours, friends as well as enemies, and the population in general. Among these, they can work their will to the last extremity while the halo of this connection is reflected round them. These shrewd men, one is sure, can turn the obligations under which they have placed the representative of Government, into a hundred channels for their own benefit, and so they are content with the arrangement.

The peasants removed from their homes have no such consolation. The generosity of the "Hakim" many extend to the gift of a few anas a day, for each man, to keep body and soul together; but the bodies and souls of his wife and children, and the disjointed affairs of his simple village life, are often ignored. The village shop-keeper, who has been forced to carry his stock in trade into the solitary forest, fares even worse. His regular business in the village, of course, goes by the board. That is a calamity which he might survive, were it not that, after he has removed his goods to the Collector's camp, he has to sell them by retail to the numerous members of it, at a special rate, fixed by the tehsildar, which represents to the retailer a loss of 25 per cent. on each transaction.

The hard case of the unfortunate village watchman, however, is the worst. This humble public servant receives a monthly stipend of three rupees out of which he has to contribute four annas for his uniform. The wage therefore on which he and his family support existence amounts to the small monthly sum of two rupees and twelve annas. On this pittance he has to serve three masters —the headmen of the village, the police, and the Revenue Department. If we consider for a moment the many legitimate duties which he has to perform, it requires small effort to imagine the dislocation of rural affairs when the Collector arrives on his hunting grounds for a season's relaxation. His duties then resolve themselves into the score of drudgeries which he is obliged to perform if he is to please his numerous task-masters. When the principal personage who has created all this turmoil, arrives on the scene, the officious tehsildar, the obsequious Sub-Inspector of Police, and their myrmidons, are galvanised into a nervous activity which is transmitted, rank by rank, to the lowest village menial impressed for the occasion. The Head Constable of Police, retained at the public expense specially to act as "head" shikari, appears, and makes his report of the tigers and panthers which he has been feeding, with village cattle, to keep them located for the "Hazur's" rifle. Consultations are held, and the usual business of shikar begins. It may last for a day, or a week, or a fortnight, as the Collector's will dictates.

Another act of this drama, constantly played before the public, must not remain unnoticed. The jealous instinct of the old-time hunter, so thoroughly engrained in the character of his modern successor, sometimes drives the latter to extremities of unscrupulousness quite unworthy of his official status. His efforts to keep off others with sporting instincts from his favourite grounds, would seem to employ a considerable portion of his time and energy. They are removed by a firm, and sometimes very rough, hand, when they happen to encroach on his special preserves. Even his official assistants are not allowed near! Junior Magistrates, Police Officers, Canal Officers, even Forest Officers, the custodians of his hunting grounds, are occasionally warned off unceremoniously, while the unofficial outsider, though allowed in under certain restrictions, is so worried with well-concealed obstructiveness, that these tactics soon result in the early retirement of the impertinent intruder.

An obstinate member of his district staff who becomes recalcitrant in these sporting matters, turns his official superior into his deadliest enemy. Quarrels regarding the use of elephants have been frequent. The Collector stands on his "right" (!) to the use of these sporting animals, whenever and wherever he pleases, and in support of his mistaken attitude brings forward the "custom" (!) instituted by former generations of Collectors! As a special favour one animal for a short period, may be lent, but the "Hazur's" "right by custom" to their exclusive services is at the same time made sufficiently clear. Even touring, in portions of the district where the favourite grounds happen to lie, is taboo! Any touring official showing undue inclination to linger in those parts, is soon warned off, and his tour regulated for him, in the opposite direction. The "Hazur's" tigers none may even look upon, their purdah is as strictly guarded by his anxious-to-please minions, as the haram of the Grand Turk. It follows that there are now and then strained relations between the head of the district administration and his assistants, and the irritation is kept alive by demi-official pinpricks, which at times become veritable spear thrusts. Eventually, the subordinate seeks refuge in another district; or may be, the bullied officials combine and lay their grievances before the head of the Provincial administration, with serious consequences to the sporting bully.

These petty jealousies and bickerings among the rulers of the land, are, of course, closely watched by the native staff of the district, and taken advantage of, in true Oriental fashion; while the general population experience a certain satisfaction as they watch, in their stolid way, the varying changes of the drama. It is one of the few consolations left to the subject race to know that their foreign rulers, though strong and masterful, are in many of their actions swayed by the mean and petty jealousies to which they themselves are so prone. There are certain regulations laid down by the Government of India, for the guidance of officials in these matters. Those concerning the "borrowing of horses and carriages from natives" were issued as a general order on the 7th April 1886, and were republished for the information of those concerned, only a few months ago. "Officers of the Government may occasionally avail themselves of the proferred assistance of native gentlemen," of the proferred assistance of native gentlemen," on "occasions of State ceremonial, or when a rapid and long official journey has to be made" * * * and "when no other means of locomotion are available." "This procedure, however, should be seldom resorted to," and * * * "only under circumstances which will not increase an inconvenient obligation." Other regulations regarding the use of elephants were issued in G. O. No. 392-111 76A of 7th April 1886. And these were revised in 1893.

In the face of orders so explicitly laid down, and continually republished to keep them fresh in the memories of the representatives of Government among the Indian populations, can sporting Collectors say that they have not incurred "inconvenient obligations" in every direction, while enjoying their numerous shoots at the expense of others? Of course, it is not difficult, with easy consciences, to ignore obligations, but that is certainly not one of the characteristics of English gentlemen.

Sporting Notes.

THERE is still very little Calcutta course news, in fact there is absolutely nothing going on. The weather has been more bearable during the week, thanks to the thunderstorms and rain mercifully vouchsafed us. The first local fixture is a Tollygunge Club Gymkhana a month hence on the 16th June. The programme for this, we hear, is to embrace a hurdle race, a maiden race, and a hack race, a polo pony race, and a race for 14-2's and under, the card concluding with a visitors' race for maiden horses, open to all comers.

Fitzgrafton has just been purchased for £1,800 by Mr. McKenna for India. Though this has been contradicted, we are informed on the best authority that Fitzgrafton has been bought for Mr. Apcar. Last year the horse held a very prominent position in Australia as quite one of the cracks of the year, but this year he has proved some what of a disappointment to his connections.

This is said to be rather a characteristic of the Grafton horses, which show very striking form as young but fail to come up to expectations as six-year-olds. By the Australian papers to hand a week or two ago, it appeared that negotiations had been on foot for Fitzgrafton's purchase from more than one quarter. He is a very fine stamp of horse, and the other purchaser wished to procure him to take to England and offered £1,500 for him. This offer was refused by the owner who held out for more.

Fitzgrafton is a bay horse (entire) by Grafton (imp.) out of Olive Branch, and will be a six-year-old from the 1st of August. His winning record since August 1904 to last December, is three races off the reel at the Queen's Turf Club when he won the King's Plate of 1¼ miles in 2mins. 9¼secs., carrying 9st., the Brisbane Cup value £400 carrying 10st., doing the 2 miles in 2mins. 32secs., and the Royal Stakes of 9 furlongs at the same meeting. At the same place last December he won the Spring Stakes, 1¼ miles, in 2mins. 14¼secs., carrying 9st. 3lbs., and another race which resulted in a match between him and one other competitor. As a three-year-old, he won six races out of seven starts including the Brisbane Cup.

The Sydney Cup is an event which always carries a certain amount of interest for racing men in India, run as it is just at a time of year when there are several commissions out for horses to win the Viceroy's Cup. Cherson was bought last year by Mr. O. M. D. Bell after running third in this race, while Acetine ran second in 1902 to Wakeful, and Merloolas won it in 1898. This year the race has been won by the light weighted Noreen, while Tartan won it last year, but ran unplaced this year. He is among the several horses competing in this race this year which have been negociated for by Indian buyers the others among the also ran being Gladsome, Marvel Loch, and Lord Ullin's Daughter. We give a list of the horses as placed as their respective weights may later on interest our readers, when the cup purchases are completed.

(1) Noreen, 6st. 7lbs.
(..) Boabdil, 8st. 3lbs.
(4) Gladsome, 8st. 12lbs.
(5) Tartan, 9st. 13lbs.
(6) Lord Ullin's Daughter, 8st. 10lbs.
(7) Marvel Loch, 9st. 4lbs.

While the rest of the field included Fitzgrafton, 9st. 2lbs., Maniapoto 8st. 10lbs., Tatterdemalion, 8st. 4lbs., Scot Free, 8st. 4lbs., the rest being under that weight. Thus it was a race that went essentially to the light weights.

Two days previously Fitzgrafton, 9st. 6lbs., though second favourite, ran unplaced in the Doncaster Handicap, which was won by Little Toy, 7st., with Noreen, 6st. 10lbs., third.

The following para clipped from an Australian paper may be of interest :—"All Fitzgrafton's good track work went for nothing, and seemingly the Queensland champion can safely be treated with greater leniency by our handicappers than has hitherto been the case. His final gallops certainly pointed to him as having excellent Doncaster prospects, but he was never sighted in that race, and though he had every chance in the Sydney Cup racing in company with Noreen behind Maniapoto, along the back, he was one of the beaten division when heads were turned for home. In his own State he has won under big weights at two miles, but in first-class company a mile and a half is probably as far as he cares about. Although Mr. McGill is particularly fond of the handsome son of Grafton, he may now be inclined to regret not accepting the 1,500 guineas offered for him recently." He has apparently had no cause for regret.

The Hon'ble Mr. Apcar has also purchased the bk m Airloch, by Lochiel—Fiancé (5yrs.) and the b f Dea, by Grafton—Thea (2yrs.).

Several of the C. T. C. Stewards being away from Calcutta, Mr. A. G. H. Macpherson has been appointed to act during their absence. We congratulate Mr. Macpherson on the distinction thus conferred: he is beginning early to follow in his much-respected parent's footsteps.

There is at present a difference of opinion existing between a number of owners and the stewards of the Calcutta Turf Club. In view of endeavouring to improve the status of the turf, and to ensure straighter running, the jockey question has been gone into, with the result that a protest, signed by a large number of owners, has been addressed to the stewards, objecting to their granting licenses to boys who come up from Australia and who have failed to get licenses down there through having ridden at unregistered meetings. They say these boys are the riff raff of Australia. The stewards, however, have, we understand, declined to move in the matter, but we are led to believe that they will be approached again.

Flair has been scratched for the Derby.

Our Darjeeling correspondent writes :—

We have never had a meeting under better conditions than the recent one. The weather was perfect all through and the going in capital order. The attendances were large each day, though speculation was not up to the standard of former years. The management of all departments was of the best and the whole thing went with a hum from opening to finish. Most owners are quite satisfied with the results, as really only a couple of ponies with any pretentions to racing, have not won. Mr. McCall has the best riding average, he seems to understand the "hang" of the soup-plate courses, which he negotiates at most hill stations. Gazelle won the Lieutenant-Governor's Cup in most taking form, thus turning the tables on Nelly Roy who beat her for the "blue riband" last meeting.

Usually excellent, the Bangalore course is at present very hard, and it is possible that this fact may have something to do with the paucity of entries for the Bangalore and Mysore race meetings. It is no fault of the Stewards or the Race Secretary. In common with many other parts of India this Station is suffering from unusual drought, and accordingly the course is not in a very safe condition for the training of valuable horses. But another factor in the sum-total of comparatively poor entries for these meetings, at which nearly forty thousand rupees are offered in prizes, may be found in the multiplicity of racing engagements on the Bombay and Poona side. Seventeen "extras" or thereabouts are announced for Poona, and they begin in July, so that it is quite clear that animals cannot run there and go to Mysore and Bangalore as well. Bangalore owners can be well nigh counted on the fingers of one hand, and if outsiders do not run their horses the Bangalore and Mysore meetings may as well cease. Most emphatically it is not the fault of the men who try to promote racing there, but as in so many other trades the money is all getting into a few places and all other localities are crushed out. Whether this will make for the good of racing eventually is a question. It is said that there was some very

…ason, and un- … a racing—or any … the more difficult it …ings straight. It becomes … matter of business and less one of … indeed he would indeed be a wilfully … optimist who did not recognise that racing …low principally a matter of business all over the world.

However the above is perhaps rather beside the general question of the diffusion or the centralisation of racing centres in India. The argument might be based on another ground, which is that sportsmen should not be selfish, but should give and take all the world over. A very large proportion of exiles from the old country like the chance of a little sport, but if it is only to be found in four or five places in India, a very small proportion of them will get it. The man with the biggest capital can create a monopoly, and the race club with the longest purse can probably gradually absorb most of the racing in the country, but it is not a generous or unselfish thing to do in either case. Bangalore and Mysore struggle along, helped by generous donations from H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore, who, moreover, dispenses the most lavish hospitality annually during the race week; but they can only just keep their heads above water. Bangalore is a wonderful summering place for horses, some of the most valuable animals in the country go there: in ordinary seasons, moreover, the course is an excellent training course and breakdowns are practically unheard of, a striking contest to other well-known Indian race-courses. It remains that if owners care to keep racing going there they will have to back the efforts of the Stewards up a bit. The training fees will not keep the course in good condition in a dry year.

It is proposed to hold an Open Gymkhana at Mussoorie on Saturday, 26th instant.

We are glad to hear that the executive of the Tollygunge Club Dog Show are already actively engaged over their preparations for next show—some time in January 1907. We believe we are correct in saying that their rules will henceforward follow closely those of the Kennel Association, and we hear that strenuous endeavours are to be made to strengthen the list of judges by inviting the co-operation of certain well-known upcountry officials. A move in the right direction, we think, is the suggestion to substitute medals for the rather heterogenous collection of cigar cases, card cases, inkpots, and flower vases that have hitherto figured so largely on the prize list. We hear that it is also contemplated to hold the Dog Show on a separate day and not link it up with the Horse Show as usual: the idea is one that has our hearty support and we trust the promoters of the Club will be able to fix it up and secure a vacant date. If, as some are inclined to think, the dogs may not attract a good gate if disassociated from the horses (we do not for a moment grant this) it might be feasible to hold the flower show on the same day as we are given to understand some people have already proposed.

The Telegraph Department, somewhere between Calcutta and London, seems to have made up its mind to delay our special English race telegrams. For four weeks on Thursday mornings messages that should, in the ordinary course, have been in our hands by 6 A.M., have not reached us till midday, or thereabouts, and on one occasion much later. Our telegram giving the result of the Chester Cup was handed in at the London Office at 6-55 P.M. on Wednesday, 9th instant: it reached our office at exactly 11 A.M. on the 10th. We mention these details for the information of many of our readers who have complained of the late delivery of the paper.

The programme of the Lucknow Autumn Meeting is published to-day.

By the death of Mr. John Reid, of Govan, Glasgow, only one white survivor of Dr. Livingstone's African exploring parties remains, to wit, Sir John Kirk.

A story is told of a dog which was particularly obnoxious to the other canine inhabitants of his village. Whether he was affected with fleas or itch is not recorded, but the poor animal was subjected to such persistent "ragging" by the other dogs that his owner decided upon clothing him in a leather coat studded with sharp spikes, so that the animal resembled a very prickly porcupine. This novel costume, it is said, has caused some painful surprise and much indignation among the dogs of the village; but the armoured one pursues his way in peace.

Where, asks a writer in an exchange, is the great crop of colts that the prophets told us would mature in 1906? When horse breeding began to breath, again in 1898 and to become general in 1899, expanded in 1900 and still more largely followed in 1901, we were assured by many seers with owl-like wisdom that by the year of grace 1906 there would be a plethoric oversupply of horses and that prices would once more have fallen below the point of profit. Now here we are in that year, prices are on the highest level, take them all through, ever known, and the shippers are hunting high and low, wearing out shoe leather in great quantities and though seeking many horses finding few. Obviously the prophets have erred somewhere. They are now without honor in any country so far as the horse business is concerned. Not so long ago it was confidently stated by a certain species of the genus calamity howler that "we had gone through the period of scarcity and not known it." Perhaps we did travel along such a line, but if we did not know it, it could not hurt us. The actual fact is, that whatever may be said of its past, the present horse market looks awful good to the man up a tree. Thousands of four-year-olds that are not yet "hard horses" in the language of the trade and therefore not fit to turn to work in city streets, are being sold each week in all the great marts, a great many three-year-olds are being marketed, and as adverted to elsewhere even two-year-olds are passing through the auction sales at all of the leading centres of trade. Diligent inquiry elicits the most contradictory views as to the supply of colts and fillies not yet three years old, but it is sure that if the present rate of borrowing from Peter to pay Paul, that is, the drawing on not only one, but two or three successive crops of foals, to meet the demands of the present, we must bump into the stone wall of an undersupply sooner or later, and it surely looks as though things would soon be worse than they are now.

Full reports of the Darjeeling Races and of the big Flower Show will be found in to-day's paper.

With an average entry of just two for each race it is not surprising to hear that the Simla Summer Races have been abandoned.

The dates of the Simla Polo Tournament have been altered to 26th, 28th and 30th May, and the Horse Show date has been altered to 9th June.

The programmes of the extra meetings which are to be held in Poona in July and September have been issued. The programmes for the extra meetings in October will be issued later on. As usual all the meetings take place on Saturday and there are seven events arranged for each meeting, the seventh being a "Closed Race." An interesting feature of those meetings is that the 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th will include a hurdle race of 1¼ miles distance over six flights while the sixth meeting has a steeplechase for ponies, 14-2 and under at a distance of about 1 mile and 7 furlongs. There is also an inducement for keen competition in two events of each meeting where the first prize is Rs. 500, the second Rs. 200 and the third Rs. 100. The other prizes are of the usual range, viz., Rs. 200, Rs. 100 and Rs. 50.

Only five "road coaches" will be running out of London this summer instead of twenty, which were on the road only a few years ago. The "Vivid" and the "Present Times" run to Hampton Court, the "Perseverance" to Dorking, the "Venture" to Windsor, and the "Vigilant" to Brighton. Four of the coaches start from the Gordon Hotel, Northumberland Avenue, and the fifth from the Hotel Cecil.

Our Ootacamund correspondent writes:—There are a few points which cropped up at the recent meeting of the Nilgiri Fish and Game Association which may interest your readers. The shooting of jungle-hens will, with the approval of Government, be prohibited during the season of 1906-07: this measure was suggested in my letter to the Indian Field of a month ago. The experiment of bringing yearling rainbow trout from Ceylon to the Nilgiris is to be attempted, and it is much to be hoped that it will result in success. However, an expert authority in Ceylon lays stress on the fact that it must be looked upon purely in the light of an experiment and a hazardous one and there is no doubt that this is the case, the transport of trout through a tropical climate being necessarily attended with much risk. The introduction of the Ceylon species of jungle-fowl to the Nilgiris has already been announced in your columns, and there was nothing else on the agenda of the late meeting which calls for comment.

In the last number of the Journal of the Bombay Natural History Society there is a letter regarding certain buffalo measurements to which the Honorary Secretary of the Society adds a footnote saying:—"The above measurements are very good, but Burke, in his "Indian Field Shikar Book" (published in 1904, but now withdrawn from publication) mentions eleven with longer horns." In case this note may give Indian sportsmen the impression that the book is now unobtainable we think it advisable to say that only the second edition was withdrawn, owing to the action taken by a man named Rowland Ward, who apparently had a better right to publish certain measurements than we had. A third edition of the book has since been published, and is now obtainable at all Indian booksellers, and at the office of this paper.

In the Bombay Natural History Society's Journal just received Mr. F. Gleadow, I. F. S., records having found the cast skin of a dhaman or rat snake which measured 9 feet 9 inches. A good snake it must have been that shed this skin, but not nearly a record; dhamans have been killed over 12 feet, we killed one at Damookdeah Ghat on the E. B. S. Railway in 1878 that measured over 11 feet.

Athletic Notes.

WE tender our very hearty congratulations to the Ranchi Hockey team on their thoroughly well-earned victory in the Beighton Cup last Friday evening. They met the Hornets on Wednesday last and met "foemen worthy of their steel," but a definite result was not arrived at till the second attempt, a couple of days after, when Ranchi won by 2 goals to 1 and carried off the cup for the fourth time. It was the Rev. E. H. Whitley who skippered the first team that came down in 1897 and it was indeed an inspiriting sight to see him, after nine years, playing up with undiminished brilliance and skill and taking a lion's share in that excellent combination and unrelenting attack that gave his men the victory.

We take a personal interest in this competition for we had something to do with starting it. In 1894, when the Rev. Peach was Joint Honorary Secretary of the Indian Football Association, he was offered a cup by the late Mr. T. D. Beighton who had always been a keen onlooker at the matches on the Calcutta maidan and, being on the eve of retirement, was desirous of doing something to promote his favourite game. Mr. Peach found himself rather embarrassed when he received this generous offer, for the I. F. A. already governed as many competitions as they could properly look after and the prospect of yet another was almost alarming. In his dilemma Mr. Peach sought our advice; we suggested that the Cup should be given for hockey which was then in its infancy here and stood in need of some encouragement; Mr. Beighton very readily agreed and the Beighton Hockey Cup was competed for for the first time in 1895 and for the

A book that should interest every motorist in India has just been published at the Times of India Office, Bombay: we refer to "The Motorists' Road Guide to Gwalior State." In these days of railways and well-kept trunk roads hundreds of miles are of very little account to the man with a motor car; so that though the little book deals with the highways in a single large State its contents may well have attraction for enterprising motorists in Northern, Eastern and even Southern India who, in practically a few hours, could reach Gwalior and try the tours set forth in the itineraries so concisely arranged and so artistically carried out. A history of the important places in Gwalior gives the enquirer in tabloid form much useful information and prepares the way for the big, clearly printed map which shows pucca and unmetalled roads, foreign and proposed roads, railways, rivers, nullahs, dâk bungalows, petroleum depôts, etc., in short all the matters with which a touring motorist needs to make himself acquainted. The large map is supplemented by no less than forty-one coloured section maps similar to those which were so much in evidence on the famous Delhi-Bombay Trials in 1904: these are at once a most useful and elegant feature of the book which, in all other respects, reflects the greatest credit on the compilers and publishers.

The All-India Boxing Championship which is to take place at Simla on the 12th, 14th and 16th of next month, is evidently going to be an extra big affair if its promoters meet with success; and we trust they may. It is to be open to all officers, N.-C. officers and men of the Regular Forces and Volunteer Corps in India. A strong Committee has been formed with Major-General R. A. G. Clements, C.B., D.S.O., Commanding the Sirhind Brigade, as President, and the following members:—Major E. H. Montressor, Royal Sussex Regiment; Captain H. R. Milvain, 12th Royal Lancers; Captain R. M. Davy, Gloucestershire Regiment; Captain F. T. Williams, S.S.O., Kasauli; Captain W. L. Osborn, Brigade-Major, Sirhind Brigade; and Lieutenant A. C. S. Clark, Wiltshire Regiment; Captain H. G. Hyslop, Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders, and Superintendent of Gymnasia, Northern Command, is the Honorary Secretary.

An excellent programme has been arranged, and it is calculated to draw a large number of entries. Three silver cups are offered in the Officers' Competitions—Catch Weights, Middle Weights, and Light Weights; while there are the following competitions for N.-C. officers and men—Catch Weights, Middle Weights (11st. 4lbs. and under), Light Weights (10st. and under), and Feather Weights (9st. and under). There will also be a Boys' Competition. The boxing will be conducted under the revised Queensberry rules, and entries should be made to the Superintendent of the Gymnasia, Kasauli, not later than the following dates:—1st Entries.—N.-C. officers and men, free by 22nd May, 2nd N.-C. officers and men, Rs. 3 by 9th June. Boys' Competition free by 9th June.

The special feature of the meeting will be the All-India Championship, which will consist of a challenge shield or cup to be presented to the regiment which scores most points throughout the tournament, and to be held for one year. Five points will be awarded for a first and two points for a second place and all competitions will be included.

A camp will be opened at Jutogh on the 21st May for the accommodation of competitors from the plains or distant hill stations, and applications should be made to the Officer Commanding, Infantry Detachment, Jutogh. Competitors from the neighbouring hill stations will be accommodated there from 9th June.

The Sporting Chronicle is responsible for a tale of an elephant acting as goal-keeper in a "Soccer" match. "It was a match, Aston Villa vs. Theatricals (unlimited in number and in kind), for the benefit of the local charities. It was at the suggestion of the writer that the elephant was pressed into service. The animal was then at a local circus, and the proprietor good-naturedly allowed him to take part in the game, the writer's idea being that he would make an excellent custodian, and he did, for he was placed broadside on, and very few shots got by him.

"He resisted all efforts at charging him through the goal with sublime indifference; indeed, even the mighty Foulke would have been consumed with envy if he had been on the ground that day. But the proprietor did not bless the concoctor of this exhibition for, incidentally, we may say that it was a snowy day, the elephant caught pneumonia, and died as the result of his meddling in pastimes with which he was unfamiliar."

The annual meeting of the Derbyshire County C. C. was held at Derby on the 23rd ultimo. Mr. S. H. Evershed, president of the club, occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance. In moving the adoption of the report the Chairman stated that on last season's working they lost £500, exclusive of the amount received from the Test matches, which really ought not to be taken into account. He alluded in enthusiastic terms to the interest which Lord Curzon, of Kedleston, was taking in the County Club, and expressed regret that illness prevented his being present. Mr. Evershed moved the election of Lord Curzon as president of the club, and said he considered they were fortunate in being able to enlist the services of a man bearing a name than which none was more illustrious or held in greater honour throughout the Empire. The motion was seconded by Mr. Arthur Wilson in eulogistic terms, and was carried with acclamation.

Mr. Delacombe afterwards read a letter from Lord Curzon, in which he said he should feel it a high honour to be elected to the position. He regarded cricket as something more than a game. It was an institution by which the county patriotism, county individuality, and county good feeling, all excellent things, could be kept alive. It encouraged some of the finest qualities in the English physical energy, the love of sport, and the faculty of concentration. Since his return from India, he had been interesting himself in Derbyshire cricket, and had written over seventy letters with his own hand, the result being that he had already secured an addition to the subscription list of over £350 per annum. What was really wanted, however, was that the public should not be indifferent to the labours of the team, and that there should be a large increase in the numbers of guinea subscribers. The reading of the letter was hailed with much applause.

We have tried to teach the Aryan brother how to play our games. He is to be met with everywhere nowadays on the football, cricket, and hockey field, and frequently he exhibits a degree of proficiency that comes as a pleasant surprise to those who are fated to see him mostly in those phases that do not so directly appeal to the ruling race and which for the most part fail to arouse the enthusiasm of the stranger. But it is probable we shall never make a true sportsman of him try we ever so hard. We are not singular in this impression; we see it is shared by the Head Master of the Central Model School at Lahore. He writes:—

"Without casting any aspersion on the conduct of the boys of any school in particular, I venture to think that, notwithstanding the efforts of school authorities, Indian students have yet to learn the most valuable lesson from the West, namely, how to accept a defeat in a game."

The following remarkable letter from a well-known writer of fiction and drama was received by the Press Manager, Olympia, on the eve of the Hackenschmidt-Madrali match. The writer was asked if it might be quoted from, and he replied:—"Quote, by all means, if you like, but for Heaven's sake don't let it be known that I am the writer":—

"Dear Sir,—Please send me a reserved seat for the Hackenschmidt-Madrali match on 28th April, for which I enclose a guinea. I want to be a savage for one night; to have a Roman holiday, with gladiators fighting for me. Pity you can't get Hackenschmidt and Madrali to kill each other. Of course, this is not according to the ethics of the L. C. C., and I quite understand that if one man really hurts the other the contest will be stopped, and the whole proceedings will be on the most correct lines of wrestling according to the Græco-Roman rules. (The writer is in error here, as the style was 'catch-as-catch-can.') But in conventions I know that death will be in the heart of each man, and that he would like to worry the other to the final ultimate issue. There are effete people who talk about 'arranging' this kind of thing. I don't believe it for a moment. If either man, in cold blood, agreed to let the other throw him, it is not in human nature to carry out the compact. Figure to yourself the scene; the 10,000 spectators strained to the highest point of expectation at the sight of the writhing athletes on the platform, the intangible, irresistible contagion of the crowd that is worked up to the point of bloodmadness, each wrestler with the limbs of his enemy actually in his grasp, each with a reputation to uphold, that which is more to him than lands or gold. You have the primeval man fighting the primitive battle of sheer strength, with no weapons, no material of attack except arms and legs, with the simple end of forcing his enemy's shoulders to the ground. It will be magnificent. It will be barbaric. But it will be quite 'selon les regles,' and the brute in each man, aroused through many struggling moments to its primitive savagery, will collapse at the sound of the referee's whistle, and the victor and the conquered will afterwards shake hands and

Last week we extracted an interesting letter from The Field on the subject of the recent Varsity Boat Race. We now reproduce a reply from "C. W. D." who says:—"Being quite in agreement with the author of the letter referred to, as to his belief that increase of strength is not commensurate with increase of size, I would like to say, from my own experience of strong men, which is not inconsiderable, that I consider it works in an inverse ratio, and that, weight for weight, the advantage is decidedly with the smaller man, especially when the gain of weight is due, mainly to increase of height.

As regards rowing, it has been said that, since the days of sliding seats, it is possible to employ big men (who would experience difficulty in rising up satisfactorily at the beginning of the stroke on a fixed seat), for the reason that the slide enables the oarsman to come up to the stretcher, and to begin the stroke with a flat and nearly vertical back. This seems to imply a generally superior muscular strength (over his own weight, at least) on the part of the lighter man. Of course, one now and then meets with phenomenal men, but it seems to be generally accepted that 'big men' are more sluggish than middle-weight men, and seems to be proved in the case of boxers. There is one point, however, in connection with this year's Oxford crew, which your contributor does not touch upon. From observations during the practices, I should say that the welters in the Oxford boat are, individually, good men, and, before coming to the conclusion that they did not justify their inclusion in crew, it would be well to weigh carefully the fact that the balance of weight was very unequal—an excess of about 3½st. on the stroke side—and this, to judge by accounts in the press, was due to accident rather than design.

The inclusion of the No. 7 who rowed in the race had to be resorted to at quite a late period in the training, viz., just prior to the departure of the crew for Oxford, owing to the fact that the No. 7 selected at that time had sustained injuries while out with the Draghounds, and perforce had to stand down; and he was of considerably greater weight than the one who eventually rowed in the race. If the boat had kept on an even keel (if I may be allowed the term for a keelless boat) during the race, the inference would be that the welters, who were mainly on the stroke side, were not pulling anything like their weight; but, seeing that the boat rolled all the way it seems to prove that the 3½st. excess on the one side was doing its excess of work, or, at any rate, nearly so. This great inequality of arrangement doubtless supervened at too late a stage of the proceedings to be altered, for to change an oarsman from one side of the boat to the other requires much practice to be satisfactory; some men cannot accommodate themselves to the change at all. The No. 7 who rowed is an undoubtedly fine oarsman, but, seeing that his oar was narrowed in the blade, his strength obviously, was unequal to his company, and this narrowing occurred on the already light side. I was greatly flattered to read that Tom Sullivan confirmed my fears on this point in a letter to the Sportsman, 3rd April 1906.

For the foregoing reasons it seems hardly fair to suggest, even, that the heavy men of this year's Oxford crew were failures; moreover, two of them were in last year's winning crew, as was also the stroke. It is a fact that in the vast majority of cases the heavier crew has won, though the disparity has not always been great, and I have not yet investigated whether the superiority of weight has been due to a general level in this respect, or to the presence of very heavy individuals. It is thought by some that a little weight, apart from the question of muscular force, is useful over a long course, as tending to minimise labour when once a momentum has been obtained. It is doubtful, too, if Mr. Evans could have recovered properly from his attack of influenza from which he suffered while up river, in the interval of leaving Oxford and arrival at Putney. This hardly bears on the point, but, if true, is a factor against success.

It is interesting to note that the Cambridge crew of 1899, considered by some to have been the finest ever sent to Putney, exactly balanced on the two sides of the boat, averaging 12st. 2¼lbs., a heavy crew, and that the four heavy men ranged between 12st. 9½lbs. and 12st. 10½lbs., none being of excessive weight. In 1898, when the race took place in a veritable sea, the winning crew had an excess of weight on the stroke side of but 6lbs., and the losing one 3¼lbs. on the bow side, and many doubted if either crew could arrive at the goal in such a sea; and in "Pitman's year," 1886, the excess was but 11lbs. on the stroke side. It is argued in some quarters that the bow side can afford to be rather lighter, because, being nearer the front of the boat, its pull has more influence in turning the boat out of its course than that of the stroke side. This seems not unreasonable.

These observations are not written in any way to detract from the fine performance of Cambridge, but as an effort to vindicate Mr. Evans's original selection, and also as an effort to uphold a theory that equality of weight on the two sides of a boat is of great value.

Among the results of important cricket at home last week were the following:—

The M. C. C. beat Derbyshire by five wickets. Lancashire beat Warwickshire by eight wickets. Surrey beat Leicestershire by an innings and 270 runs. Northampton beat Worcestershire by 4 runs, and Yorkshire beat Hampshire by seven wickets.

This mail brings news of the death of the Rev. Frank Marshall, Rector of Mileham, Norfolk, and formerly headmaster of Almondbury Grammar School, Huddersfield. Before he left Huddersfield, ten years ago, there was no more familiar figure on the football grounds of Yorkshire and in the football legislative chamber than Frank Marshall. His interest in all branches of athletics was keen, but football was his favourite game. He was a convinced believer that Rugby football was the grandest game possible for schoolboys to play and he never budged in his insistence on its great superiority to the Association code both for boys and men, but especially for boys. When the split in the Rugby Union came he stood by the old organisation. The son of a schoolmaster and a native of West Bromwich, Mr. Marshall was fifty-nine years old. He was educated at Brewood Grammar School, Staffordshire, whence he took one of the scholarships at St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1868 he graduated 38th wrangler, and was then appointed the vice-principal of Carmarthen Training College, afterwards becoming headmaster of Wednesbury Collegiate School. From there he was appointed headmaster of King James' Grammar School, Almondbury, in 1878.

The late tennis tournament in Ootacamund produced no player of really first-class merit; none indeed so good as Graham who won the Singles last year. Captain Robb, I.M.S., this year's winner, is a player with a long reach, clever at the net and with a severe service, nearly all of the pace of which comes from a curious turn of the wrist as the bat strikes the ball. But Captain Copeland, although he could not get a set in the final would probably have won had he been in his usual form. He was palpably stale, and I never saw him play a worse game, either in this or the Handicap Singles, when he again lost the final owing 30 to Buckley, a steady but ordinary player. Robb and Copeland walked away with the Open Doubles and the other matches call for no comment.

The Bangalore and Ootacamund cricket match is one of the principal Ooty cricket fixtures of the year and it was won easily by the home side, who hit up 108 without the loss of a wicket at their second knock. The result was principally due to two splendid innings by Marsden of the Pioneers, who scored 71 and 79 not out, and is now a bat worthy of his place in really high-class cricket. He has a correct and pretty style, is a most punishing hitter, a splendid field and can bowl a bit on occasion.

The attempt to get up a regatta to be held, as usual, on the boat canal at Kidderpore during June has been unsuccessful. The Calcutta Rowing Club at the moment is suffering from want of members keen enough to undertake the necessary practice and training for race rowing in this weather. The inspiriting enthusiasm of a few years back has died out for the all-sufficient reason that Messrs. Hoare, Power, Charles, Graham, Medd, and a few other extra keen men (and men who went in for no other form of athletics) are not in Calcutta, one or two are, alas!, no more, others have left rowing for polo and paper-chasing and a few have joined the noble army of buddhas. These fluctuations are common to all athletic clubs in India and must always be while the European population is migratory: so while it seems a pity that the C. R. C. should just now fail to exhibit the activity that is usually associated with its operations, doubtless it will recover from the stagnation that now prevails and emerge once again in a spirit that will revive old glories.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 27th April 1906.

WINTER returned to us this week. On Tuesday morning snow was falling when I got up—or when I ought to have been getting up—and from the northern parts of England we had reports of heavy snow falls on Wednesday and bitter cold. We had no more snow after Tuesday, but the north east winds went through one. Yesterday brought something like summer again, and no doubt next week we shall be complaining bitterly of the fishmonger who failed to send the ice in time for lunch. If the world can produce nothing to match a typical English spring day assuredly it has nought to match our spring climate.

Professor Mattucci, able now to spare attention from Vesuvius, has announced that the eruption in Italy and the earthquake at San Francisco were due to one and the same cause: he pronounces that close relation exists between the two disturbances. It makes for uneasy thought.

* * * * * *

I doubt whether a more graphic account of an earthquake has ever been written than that given by Dr. Fleming to the Times' correspondent at Los Angelos,—vide the paper of Monday, 23rd. He conveys the atmosphere of tension in a painfully vivid fashion and also gives a lurid impression of the physical movement: "It seemed quite natural the the tops of buildings to careen over and for the fronts of houses to fall out. I don't even remember that the women screamed. The street shuddered, but the buildings somehow righted themselves again when I thought they had crashed together over my head." For gruesome method this will be hard to beat. A policeman was seen to "take the name of a victim pinned down by burning wreckage and then, at the sufferer's request, fire a bullet into his brain."

* * * * * *

On the whole the prompt institution of martial law seems to have worked extremely well. How many looters have been shot on sight, I suppose we shall never know—nor shall we know how many shared the fate of the unfortunate foreigner who failing to understand an order given by a soldier was by him shot. The plan of commandeering all vehicles to prevent the owners extorting extravagant sums for their use and of putting sentries over the surviving food stuff shops must have been the means of preventing riot. Already the people are considering the plans for rebuilding the city, but that is what one expects in the States. Steel, it is said, is to be used almost universally: the superior stability of steel frame erections has been very conspicuous.

* * * * * *

The President's action in declining offers of pecuniary aid from other countries is of course the subject of criticism. The promptitude with which Canada and New Zealand came forward is noteworthy. The Duchess of Marlborough, Lady Curzon, Mrs. Chamberlain, and other American ladies in England at once started a subscription movement among Americans in this country: and aid from this source will hardly be declined.

* * * * * *

The Army Council has dealt with the offenders in the Clark Kennedy ragging case. Colonel Cuthbert is placed on half-pay: Captain Stracey is removed from the adjutancy: Mr. C. E. P. Hamilton has his leave stopped for a year and is twice passed over for promotion. Mr. Harford and Mr. Joleffe have leave stopped for a year and are once passed over. Lord Glancis, Mr. Jervoice, and Mr. Ballantine Sykes have leave stopped for six months and are once passed over. Messrs. Ramsay, Drummond, Smith, Orr Ewing, Siddell Grainger and B. L. Fletcher (not all of whom were before the court-martial), have their leave stopped for six months. All these malefactors, except Colonel Cuthbert, are "severely censured." Surgeon-Major Whiston, who discovered and reported that Mr. Clark-Kennedy wanted washing, is made the recipient of an expression of the Army Council's "displeasure at his action." I wonder why the Army Council is displeased with him. He was bound to report what was the matter with his patient, and did so: I suppose there is a Regulation which would empower a doctor to make a confidential report. If so one can quite understand the displeasure of the authorities: it is much better that regiments should wash their dirty subalterns at home.

* * * * * *

The wretched business having taken the course it did, the Army Council had no option but to deal with the criminals as they have done. Ragging is prohibited and they ragged: so they disobeyed orders and have been punished for disobeying orders. Of course public sympathy is with them, and I fancy that official sympathy lurks behind that "severe censure." The case provides a serious warning to subalterns—if there are any more—who do not wash. No C. O. can ever again, in his own interests, leave a Clark-Kennedy to his brother subs to deal with: he must settle the sordid business off his own bat, and thus the dirty subaltern will get small chance of regeneration. C. O.'s, I presume, are not going to tell off a medical officer to inspect daily the corpus vile of a suspected subaltern. Perhaps the knowledge that a strong recommendation to send in his papers will be the C. O.'s method of dealing with an offence which under more robust conditions, a mock court-martial would have dealt with, will teach undesirables the error of their ways, but I doubt it. Subalterns' rule at least gave the young man gone wrong a chance of reform: that chance is now withdrawn.

I am glad that Colonel Cuthbert goes on half-pay, as, when this disagreeable business has blown over, his past services will be remembered and he may get another job. Some of the soldiers with whom I discussed the matter while the sentence was pending thought it quite likely he would be told to quit altogether: but the clubs eye the War Office under the Great Unwashed Government with grave suspicion. The source of all the pother lost little time in leaving. Whether he got a hint to go or not, does not appear, but he would hardly have waited for any encouragement.

The row in the Ladies' Gallery on Wednesday night lent quite a novelty to the proceedings though it was only a matter of minutes. Mr. Evans, about quarter to eleven, was speaking against Mr. Kier Hardie's motion in favour of female franchise when there was a sudden outburst of excited cries from behind the grille. I say "sudden" although there had been ere then a few shrill cries of "Divide" and some cheers from the gallery: the outburst, which led to the intervention of the police, appeared to be the answer to a preconcerted signal. The ambitious dames vied with one another in the shrillness of their cries until Inspector Scautlebury appeared. The sight of the police calmed most of the women who left the flag one had been waving through the grille and cleared out with promptitude. Mrs. Pankburst who is, I believe, a leading light went quietly: but one of her lieutenants evidently thought a vote was to be had if she fought for it and this ardent politician, Miss Millington by name, refused to leave: the obliging inspector therefore carried her out. The evicted females then attempted an impromptu indignation meeting in the corrider, but a brutal police swept it away with awful politeness closing their ears to the desperate proposition of one lady agitator that they "must commit a few murders" to arouse popular attention.

It is a very long time since women made a "scene" in the house. The last row was on 2nd February 1778, when the ladies in the strangers' gallery refused to obey an order to withdraw with the men. The messengers were obliged to use force and it took them two hours to remove these strong limbed females. It was this incident which led to the total exclusion of women from the House until the new chamber was built in 1836.

* * * * * *

Apparently there are certain among the chosen of the people who mean to make Lord K. of K. a target. Mr. Morley on Tuesday assured Dr. Rutherford that no special feeling had been roused in the native army of India by the "schemes of the Commander-in-Chief" and that the spirit prevailing was excellent. Nevertheless that great good man, Sir Henry Cotton, has given notice of a motion to "call attention to the military situation in India." The idea seems to be that Lord K. of K.'s strivings after a higher standard of efficiency have created wide spread discontent which is likely to produce grave consequences.

Much talk, some temper and unconscious humour are the ingredients of Maxim Gorky's four act play "The Bezsemenovs" produced on Monday at Terry's by the Mermaid Society. It is a play with a purpose: and the purpose is to show the unwisdom of educating people above their station. If Tatiana and Piote, the daughter and son of the house painter Vassily Vassilievitch Bezsemenov (that is his name) had not been educated they would have got on much better. They come home to recognise how dreadfully common are V. V. B. and Akoulina their mother: and because they show their recognition and mope and grumble V. V. B. bundles them and their friends out of doors: and if he had done it in one act instead of requiring four he had done it better. There are two good and amusing characters in the play: a bibulous old birdcatcher and a village choir master also addicted to strong waters. We could have enjoyed more of Pertchikine and Tetereff and a great deal less of the ravings of the Bezsemenov family.

Mr. Alfred Sutro's new four act Comedy "The Fascinating Mr. Vanderveldt" can hardly be called a success. Mr. Bourchier is not endowed with the qualities needful to be "fascinating" and he did not appear to me to fulfil the author's conception. It was not this shortcoming that makes the play rather dull: the plot is rather a series of scenes than a plot: and Lady Clarice Houland (Miss Violet Vanburgh) who is to be fascinated by the pseudo gay dog does not greatly interest. We felt that the earnest Colonel Ragner (Mr. Aubrey Smith) who warns her against Vanderveldt by asking her to warn against him a woman Lady Clarice does not know (!) was bound to win hands down against a professianal fascinator. And when Vandervelt lures Lady Clarice away to a remote village in a motor-car and declares his designs upon her we know that that opportune curate meant rescue without scandal. Mr. Vandervelt in a word is a "howler" and it is not easy to imagine to what class "victims" of whom he boasts, belonged, if not to that of the simple dairy maid. The play is unreal and does not come within recognisable distance of the "Walls of Jericho:" it is often tedious and not always sensible.

This is Shakespeare Week and Stratford on Avon and His Majestys alike have been celebrating the occasion. Mr. Tree gave "The Tempest" on Monday, "King Henry IV" on Tuesday, "Twelfth Night" on Wednesday, "Hamlet" last night: and to-night the "Merry Wives of Windsor" with Miss Ellen Terry as Mrs. Page. Of the first, it may be said the most notable fact is that Mr. Lyn Harding did Prospero and Mr. James Hearn, Stephano, and did their parts exceedingly well. Mr. Tree, of course, was Caliban and Miss Viola Tree was Ariel. I am told that "Henry IV" was played to rather an empty house. A pity, for Mr. Tree finds the part of Falstaff one of the most suitable in his long list and did himself full justice. Mr. Basel Gill was a great success as Hotspur. "Twelfth Night" brought a full house: it is always a safe draw. Great things were expected of Miss Dora Hole who was cast for Maria, but the lady hardly did justice to her opportunity. She was out of form and nervous, though she gained confidence as the play drew on: her voice is hardly strong enough for so big a house as His Majestys. Given a part that suits her, Miss Hole is about the most promising of the rising generation of actresses. She was "discovered" by the Mermaid Society and made her mark at once as Flippanta in "The Way of the World. Of Hamlet last night there is little to be said. Have I mentioned that Mrs. Tree has been playing in these Shakespeare revivals?

The English Drama Society gave "Love's Labour Lost" at Bloomsbury Hall on Wednesday: honours went to Miss Isabel Roland for her performance of Rosaline.

On Saturday at Wyndham's "The Girl Behind the Counter" a musical comedy by Messrs. L. Bantock and Arthur Anderson, music by Howard Talbot, was produced. There is a suspicion of plot in Act I, but it "mizzles out" in Act II: and the piece being "musical comedy" this surprises none. Beautiful dresses, excellent staging and clever fooling however relieve musical comedy writers of any trouble in the matter of plots and the audience was well pleased with the fare provided. Your musical comedy audience asks not novelty of idea holding that the old is better: and as Act I. is a milliner's shop and Act II. the Baron's Court Exhibition we were quite at home. Miss Isabel Jay as Winnie Willoughly, the General's daughter, has a part that suits her admirably: Mr. Hadyn Coffin has—a Hadyn Coffin part. The music is bright and tuneful and the lyrics which are clever are well sung: but some verses it must be said won less favor with stalls than gallery. Mr. Horace Mills as Adolphus Dudd, a shop boy, made a decided hit: Mr. Lawrence Grossmith as Lord Gushington was also very funny.

A "find" of singular interest is reported from the shores of the Wash. About seven hundred years ago, as English History told us at school, King John lost his luggage while crossing the Wash: antiquaries have tried for centuries to "locate" the scene of the accident, and the theories of Mr. St. John Hope have been, accidently, confirmed by the discovery of a silver cup with gold handles bearing the date 1162. It is thought that this can only be an item of King John's lost plate chests.

Miss Marie Corelli has obtained continuation of the injunction granted by the Vacation Judge against the publication of pictorial postcards by a firm of publishers. These postcards "purport to depict scenes in the private or home life" of the eminent authoress, and she pleads are of a nature to expose her to ridicule and contempt. Apparently even passion for self-advertisement has its limits.

On Saturday at Killary, Pomeroy, Co. Tyrone died George Fletcher, aged 118 years: he was the oldest man in the Kingdom. Jabez Balfour was released from Parkhurst last week after serving eleven years of the fourteen to which he was sentenced. He was instantly pounced upon by the Weekly Despatch to write a book on his imprisonment for serial publication at £100 a week. Truly no success succeeds like some failures.

THE TERROR OF MANKIND.

I AM generally spoken of as the "terror of mankind:" why I do not quite clearly understand, as after all, man and man alone has to thank himself for making me what I am. This much I know that wherever my name is mentioned among men, it is always in a subdued whisper that they speak of me, with furtive anxious eyes they glance from right to left, and behind and before, nervousness foreign to the blustering race seizes upon them. One could almost be inclined to think they were but poor women in men's clothes from the manner in which they act, they cannot advance ten paces without halting to glance behind, their forward advance seemed checked by an overwhelming desire to know what is on the other side of yon bush before they advance near it. It is most extraordinary. I have known men and mankind for years and years quite intimately, and at quite close quarters I have met them, sometimes unexpectedly and sometimes of fell intent, but I have never noticed this extraordinary nervousness in their manner before. Our passing acquaintanceship was always of rather a friendly kind, a friendly kind of give and take sort of friendship—where one party gives and the other takes. I must admit en passant I generally did the "take" part, but still it was all done in quite a friendly spirit. Now all is changed. If I am sighted by man, woman, or child, with a cry of terror and a howl of execration they flee from me, as if I was possessed of the devil, or crowd together in groups, yelling and howling as if the world were coming to an end No, I don't like this sort of treatment at all. I must avoid these fellows in the future if I do not want to be insulted like this. I cannot stand it all. This is the way they act in my jungles whenever I meet them now, it was not always thus. What they may do in their cities, their clubs, and societies, I do not know. I am jungle bred, and an inhabitant of the jungles. For cities and their attractions I care not a jot, but man, as met with in the jungles, I take great interest in, he has been for me a life long study.

Formerly in the days of my innocent youth, my dear dead mother taught me to dread the sound of man's voice, to avoid him like poison, to skirt round the spots where the woodman's axe shouts, whack! whack! whack! to a silent listening jungle. Thus for the first few years of my life, I lived in terror of

In fact after one or two accidental encounters, I began to regard him as quite a merry sort, easily startled and very noisy when suddenly surprised, but quite a cheery good sort, ever ready to break out into laughter and to roar over an adventure, as soon as ever his heart beatings became normal again.

I remember quite well early one morning crossing an open ploughed field in the dim twilight. When half across I heard human voices coming from the jungle, towards which I was heading. I immediately dived into a biggish patch of bramble and grass at the edge of a path through the field, and sat down to listen, and to see what I could from behind the bramble stems. The men, three in number, advanced coming along the path which passed my shelter, talking loudly in the blustering way they do. I was dreadfully scared, but determined to sit tight on the hope they would pass by without noticing me. I knew my coat bended beautifully with the yellow dry grass, and the darker bramble stems and branches, but my heart did thump. I feared that it must be heard by the men as they came nearer. They approached and had almost passed the clump of grass, when suddenly the youngest of the three, a mere boy of eighteen summers, raised his lathi, they were all armed with lathis, and he brought it down with a sounding thud, into the clump of bramble and grass, smack bang on to the middle of my back, with a shout of "arè khar-kosh jago" (wake up, oh sleeping hare) this was an indignity I could not take sitting, and to be called a hare for sooth, and mind you the lathi was iron bound and hurt; so with a "woof woof" I sprang out and dashed for the jungle. Out of the corner of my eye I saw them, just a glance. I never saw three such surprised, and terror-stricken objects in my life. A moment and they all yelled blue murder till long after I had disappeared from view. Reaching the jungle's shelter I turned and looked at the men. They were laughing fit to split their "sides.' Oh my son cried the old man, "that was a very fine hare you startled. Ho! ho! ho! "They were mighty fine and jolly fellows those three I can tell you.

Hallo! What's this?

"Reward Rs. 400 will be paid to any person who will kill the Burrabugwa man-eating panther. Signed A. B. C., Collector, Burrabagwa."

This notice was stuck up on the door of the village Patel's house in large print in four or five languages. I am not much of a linguist, nor have I matriculated, nor joined the ranks of the failed B. A.'s, but my dear, dead mother taught me just enough to worry out the meaning of what this notice meant. In a flash I understood all. The Collector of the District, a man I only knew by name, never having set eyes on him, evidently objected to my breakfast menu, what this had to do with him I could not understand; but this I knew full well, having overheard many a conversation of passing bunniahs and coolies, as I lay hidden in some dense forest by the road-side, that rupees and pisa are the gods of men, and for pisa they will do any and everything. A cold shudder ran down my spine, right to the very end of my tail. With a sickening feeling of approaching trouble I stuck down my tail and fled from the village paths where I had wandered in hopes of picking up a stray goat or a sleeping dog—fled to my securest haunt, to think quietly over the matter. After all, as I have already said, man has only to thank man for my becoming a man-eating panther—the terror of mankind—but that's another story which I will tell you directly.

About two years previously, one day, when I was resting under the shade of a huge corroünda tree, in the breeziest spot I could find, suddenly a terrific din, shouts of men, bugle calls, and violent tom-tomings began, about a mile from me. I lay wide awake, listening without moving a muscle, and soon it became apparent that the noise and its makers were, slowly, but surely, approaching the portion of the jungle where I was lying up. Now as a rule I lie up in the rocks and caves on hill tops, whence I can command a good view. But after a very heavy breakfast off a young buffalo calf, and a long, long satisfying drink from a crystal clear stream near by, I had felt too lazy to go to my old lie-up place, and had chosen a shady bush near by for my midday siesta, fully intending to make an early tea on the remains of the buffalo calf in the evening. Now whatever was the meaning off all this row? could anyone have found out that I had killed that calf? Anyhow if this noisy crowd came any nearer, I must move off to a safer hiding place. The crowd did approach and so I got up and slunk off, heading for a safe cave I knew of in a hill a mile and a half away. I had proceeded about three-quarters of a mile and was slouching along quite quietly, when suddenly—Bang! Whiz! Thud! I heard the roar of a rifle, and the same moment felt a smashing blow in my right forepaw. I was down and rolled over, but was up in a second, and like a flash of lightening, dashed off for the cave at forty miles an hour. Bang! Whiz! Ping! and a bullet went whistling over my head—a narrow shave indeed which made me duck, as I sped on to safety.

Arrived at the cave I lay down panting. It took me some minutes to regain my breath, and now for the first time, I had a chance of examining my poor wounded paw. A terrible smash. It must have been caused by a heavy express rifle being fearfully smashed up and bleeding profusely. I licked the wound gently. Oh! the pain and agony of it! An hour after the man who had wounded me, and a crowd of beaters, came to the mouth of the cave where I was lying up. They had tracked me by the blood marks. No hard job, considering how freely I had bled. They tracked me right into the cave. Not satisfied with the damage they had done me, nor the pain they had caused me, these fiends must needs torture me further. They tried to smoke me out burning grass and rubbish in the mouth of the cave and shoving it down with long bamboos. Luckily the cave was a real good one, with many passages, and long tunnels in it. The smoke got into my eyes and smarted badly. Inflamation had set up in my paw and the pain was so intense that I could not bear to put my foot on the ground at all. Had I been fit and well I should have made a dash for liberty, away from this choking smarting smoke—anything would be better than this slow lingering death. Trying first one tunnel then another to try and avoid the smoke, I came across a miserable jackal, crouching huddled into a corner his nose glued to an air hole connected with the outer air. Him I drove with a roar from his point of vantage, frightening him so much that he bolted for the cave's mouth, falling a victim in the blazing grass crammed into the entrance I instantly jammed my own nose into the orifice, to which the jackal had had his nose glued. Great Heavens! what an instant relief. Once again I breathed the fresh air of heaven, and my lungs threw off the load of smoke which was slowly stiffling them. And thus I sat for hours, my eyes shut, and living and breathing only through my nose.

The jackal's death was my salvation. The beaters had heard my angry roar as I drove him from the air hole, and shortly after the rank smell of fried jackal assailed their nostrils. They knew I was in the cave and they knew nothing about master jackal's presence there. They could only draw one conclusion—and they drew it. My angry roar was to them my last death wail.

The smell of fried jackal was to them just fried panther. A short palaver, a few regrets at my beautiful coat being spoilt, and away they went, satisfied at having been the death of me, unsatisfied because they had lost my pelt.

The smoke cleared but slowly from my underground refuge and I sat for hours just breathing fresh air, and feeling my broken paw throb, throb, throb.

For days I lay in this cave, suffering from raging fever, the paw so bad I could hardly dare to move. After the third day, dying of hunger, almost mad from thirst, I ventured out in spite of the aching wound, to seek drink and food. Drink I found easily enough, and drank and drank as if I should never have enough. The cool trickling water of the stream did my fevered paw a power of good. The inflamation was slightly reduced and the pain less intense after I had stood in the stream for nigh on an hour. And then a raging hunger seized me. I hobbled round on three legs in search of game. Wonderful! I saw pig, and deer, and peafowl in plenty, and my hunger-stricken eye watered at sight of so much food, but get near them I could not. And soon the light of day appeared, and a fear greater even than my unsatisfied hunger, drove me back to the hill cave. Shall I ever forget that long long day. The sun rose slowly slowly. Would he never move faster? Would the dark night never come? At last my hunger drove me, fainting and weak, out from the cave about five in the evening while it was yet day in search of food. I hobbled around the jungle's edge. The peafowl and hares seemed to know I was badly wounded and sat within tantalising distance of me, derisive smiles upon their faces. Never had I known them so tame and fearless before. At last round a bend I came upon a small child gathering wood. At sight of her, it was a girl clothed in a red saree, I sank softly into the long grass. She had not seen me. I watched her cautiously, and as I watch the longing for food grew stronger and stronger. Here she was one of the dreaded human race, yet she seemed weak enough. There was no one near her, she was all alone, talking softly in lisping accents to herself as she busily gathered together a twig here and a twig there to add to her ever increasing bundle that lay in the open patch of glade, Should I try? the longing for food grew more and more intense, my brain reeled from faintness. But fate decided the matter. The child had spotted a dry branch lying straight behind me, a branch that would add many twigs to her nearly completed bundle, and she came straight towards me. Another pace and she would be upon me. With a bound I had her by the throat. Not a sound did she utter, just gave one convulsive movement and then lay still in my grip. My fangs pierced deep into the soft throat as I drank greedily, voraciously of the hot warm blood. My faintness left me and I felt a returning strength flow rapidly through every vein, as my pulses beat stronger. Oh! the joyous feeling of growing satisfaction after that cruel, cruel hunger. Would I ever be satisfied, should I ever have enough? just then a voice in the jungle called out "arè chokri kahan hai" (where are you little girl). A terrible fear assailed me. I seized the corpse and flinging it over my shoulder retreated to my cave, keeping to the deep undergrowth for shade and shelter.

For days I remained in my cave assailed by a fear of an unknown vengeance. Conscience, ever guilty, makes cowards of us all. Surely I could not kill man it said without dire vengeance being meted out to me. In my calmer moments I reflected how weak indeed had been this human being, how easily it had been killed. Why, even a peafowl or a hare would make a greater fight for life, than did this weakling child.

After many days, again driven by hunger I went out, and finding my paw too painful to use for the neck breaking stroke needed to kill a cow, or deer with, had again to have recourse to killing a woman, a full grown one this time, for my dinner. She made a fearful noise, it is true, when she spotted me, but was as easily killed as the child, and was very good eating indeed, being plump and young. Since then I have killed many, both men, women, and children. Women and children are child's play to kill, but an armed man is more dangerous as he may do damage with his weapon before being killed. One woodman whom I carelessly attacked from in front gave me a fearful gash with his light iron headed axe, before I reached him cutting off three toes from my right forepaw, the one that was smashed up by the rifle shot.

So now I am permanently lame on that leg, and as I can no longer capture and kill wild game I am perforce—thanks to man—forced to kill man for my sustenance.

Between ourselves I must say I like human flesh better than anything I ever tasted before.

But this notice—Rs. 400 reward—is too much of a good thing. Is this nemesis approaching? What is the meaning of it all—am I the panther of Burrabugwa referred to?

Surely, for have I not all my life lived in these jungles.

I must now move elsewhere, and find pastures new where I am unknown. Hark! what's that?

The shouts of human voice, a tom tom or two booming across the jungle's silence. a bugle call, a rifle shot cracking sharp upon the stilly air.

LOCH FISHING IN SOUTHERN SHETLAND.

IN a former letter I gave a general sketch of Southern Shetland as I knew it, several years ago. I have lately received letters which show that Lochs Spiggie and Brow are practically the same now as they were in 1898. Also Henderson's boarding house is still run on the same homely and comfortable lines as of old. Under these circumstances a short description of the lochs and the fishing may perhaps be of interest to readers of The Indian Field. Anglo-Indians on leave at Home will find that good and cheap fishing is by no means easy to get in the south; so that some of them possibly may fancy a visit to the wild north, where trout are still confiding, and living is cheap.

As regards getting to Spiggie, perhaps the most comfortable way is to take one of those boats which coasts from port to port. By so doing one sees something of the Orkney coast, and can go ashore at Stromness where the boat stays about three hours. Then one is landed at Spiggie itself, whereby the tiresome twenty-two miles drive from Lerwick is avoided. Of course the time taken on the voyage is decidedly longer, thirty hours, instead of the sixteen of the direct mail from Aberdeen to Lerwick.

Another point is that if one is disembarked in Spiggie Voe the carriage of kit is thereby simplified. The fixing up of several big portmanteaus on one of the open barouches, used in Shetland, is rather a nice operation, if any room is to be left for the passengers!

Loch Spiggie is about a mile and a quarter long. It lower and wider end is close to the Voe, and a little stream runs out of the loch into the sea. By this stream sea trout are able to enter the lake. At the seaward end the shores are sandy and the water shallow; as we go further up we find miniature cliffs and rocky banks edging the water. Every here and there picturesque bays break the line of rocky shore. The top end of the loch finishes in a good sized swamp, which joins it to Loch Brow. Although this marsh is wet and deep I do not think it ever offers a continuous water way between the two lakes, for though there are plenty of sea trout in Spiggie, I never saw one taken out of Brow. In this latter loch the trout rise freely throughout the whole season, but in Spiggie the fly is of little good after the end of July. Although the Brow trout run considerably smaller than the Spiggie ones, yet fish there of over a pound are not at all uncommon. The fisher in Brow will usually have one or two fish of a pound and a quarter, to a pound and a half, and half a dozen of three-quarters, to half a pound, in his basket. In Spiggie few fish are caught under three to the pound. Three-quarter pounders and pounders are common, while a considerable number exceed the pound. In 234 pounds of trout caught in Spiggie and Brow in 1898, I had 41 of a pound or over. Three of these weighed 2lbs., 2lbs. 2ozs. and 2lbs. 6ozs. respectively. The best fish I ever saw taken in Spiggie was 4¾lbs.; it was caught on a worm by one of Henderson's men.

For Brow somewhat small flies are best, for the loch is sheltered and rough water is the exception. On the more exposed water of Spiggie rather large flies are best. Size however, is varied according to the day. On calm summer evenings I used to get fish by wading and using small river flies on fine drawn gut.

My favourite part of Spiggie, was the shallow end near the Voe. Close to the exit of the stream there is a belt of rushes: the water along their edge is quite shallow, but there are often good fish feeding there. I remember getting a trout of a pound and three-quarters on a small dark coloured fly, right among these reeds : he rose to me in about eighteen inches of water.

One has to manipulate the boat very carefully in shallows, to avoid frightening the fish. I used always to work the boat myself, as I rather enjoyed the exercise of pulling back to the head of the drift. I regulated the pace by having a good sized stone attached by a rope to the thwarts near the centre of the boat. The length of the rope governed the rate of drift ; by allowing the stone to touch bottom one could stop the boat altogether.

In Shetland I found my favourite fly the Coch-y-bonddhu, was not appreciated at all. The most killing patterns are Grouse and Claret, Red and Teal, Heckam Peckam, Zulu, March Brown, and a special Zulu tied small, with a little silver tinsel showing on the body. I did not use the March Brown much on Spiggie or Brow, but one summer evening I took thirteen trout weighing eight pounds on Loch Clumley entirely with this fly. The water was like glass and the fish were feeding round the edges ; I threw into the circles of the rises, and the trout took like tigers ; two or three had the March Brown well down their throats !

Clumley is a dismal little tarn, unprepossessing in every way : the trout in it are large headed and black, but fight well in spite of their ugliness. Brow is a jolly little loch : I never remember coming away from it empty handed. One could always reckon on getting some trout, however unpropitious the day.

It is moreover good everywhere except right in the middle. By using small flies and very fine tackle one can get fish in Brow, even when there is a glass calm. Indeed fishing in a calm is very pretty work, but requires 4x gut, so one has to be very cautious when a big one is hooked.

There would be no excuse for worm fishing in Brow seeing that the trout rise so freely ; and moreover the bottom is far too weedy for worm. Spiggie has stretches of fine sandy bottom free of weeds, and in August and September fly fishing is practically useless so that one may then resort to the worm with a free conscience.

Besides trout, the wormer catches flounders and eels. The former have got into the loch from the sea, and have become acclimatised and bred in the fresh water.

Sea trout are often caught in Spiggie, but owing to many of its brown trout also having acquired the habit of visiting [illegible] whether a fish is [illegible] in the loch, or a [illegible] from the sea. Of cour[illegible] go to sea : many of them [illegible] tence in the loch, and these do [illegible] ordinary yellow trout in appearance.

The typical Spiggie trout is so silvery [illegible] repeatedly when hooked, that it is difficult [illegible] realize that he is really a brown trout with marine habits. The yellow trout of Spiggie which have never left it, are exactly similar in appearance to the trout of Brow.

In the Voe, at the mouth of the stream which runs out of Spiggie, the sea trout will take a fly in the salt water. It is worth remembering, however, that although Shetland sea trout will rise to the fly in salt water, they will take a worm thrown like a fly, and worked below the surface, very much better.

There is good sea fishing in Spiggie Voe.....Lythe and Saithe for spinner and fly ; and grey gurnards, codling, and flounders for mussel and herring at the bottom.

THE BEST POSITION FOR THE LINE OF SIGHT.

(Communicated by Messrs. Carl Zeiss, Jena.)

ADVERSE criticism, to which our telescopic rifle sight has been subjected on account of its greatly elevated line of sight—stigmatised by some eminent sportsmen and shots as wrong—has occasioned the following brief essay. To remove this mistaken impression we may say at once that the new position of the line of sight, suspected as false, is even more correct than any previous position.

We were quite unprepared for the objection, that the line of sight had an unsuitable position, when placing the telescopic sight upon the market. Our aim had been to devise an instrument which should afford a very large field of view, into which, however, the barrel with a low position of the ocular should not obtrude itself. To accomplish this, as is well known, we chose a prism telescope of the ordinary parallell-vision kind, that is, with some little distance intervening between the axis of the objective and that of the ocular, which one in model (a, with rather high magnification and somewhat short eye-point distance) amounts to 58 mm (2¼ ins.), in the other (b, with lower magnification and greater eye-point distance) to 41 mm (1·6 ins.). When such an instrument is mounted upon the rifle as shown in figure 1—objective above, ocular below and the axis of the ocular so high above the axis of the bore as the axis of the direct-vision telescopic sight usually is laid, i.e., about 50 mm (2 ins.)—in spite of its uncommonly large aperture the cone of the field of view scarcely extends so far down as the muzzle, that is, it presents, in fact, an unobstructed field.

Was now the innovation, in placing the line of sight so high above the axis of the bore, useful or not ? To this can a satisfying answer only be given based on figures. A clue is straight ways afforded by the fact, that the line of sight occupies the best position when it is tangential to, but does not intersect, the trajectory of a shot in the point aimed at.

Reference to figure 2 will make this fundamental principle quite clear. Here the trajectory of a shot is represented with exaggerated ordinates, and differing from the usual diagrams illustrating the trajectory of a shot, the axis A of the bore being maintained horizontally, that is, the elevation being made equal to zero. The rifle, whose shot describes this curve, is supposed to have three different sighting devices to which three differently laid lines of sight may correspond. All the three sighting devices may be adjusted to the distance d^1, so that their lines of sight intersect at this distance on the trajectory. The middle one forms the tangent, above referred to, to the trajectory, at the point d^1 and may be briefly designated as Tang. d^1. Of the two scant lines of sight, s^1 cuts the trajectory for the first time at a little distance beyond the muzzle and then a second time in the point d^1, whereas s^2 has its first intersection with the trajectory in the point d^1 and the second at a yet greater distance.

Had the point aimed at been by chance exactly the distance d^1, to which the marksman had adjusted the three aiming devices in conformity with his estimation, in aiming with any one of them the trajectory would pass through this point. The three sights are in this case of equal value : the marksman hits the point aimed at whichever of the three lines of sight he makes use of. Generally, error attends the estimation of distance, hence also the adjustment of the sight is falsified. The true distance of the point aimed at may be either smaller than d^1, as, for instance, d^0, or greather, as d^2 (cf. Fig. 2). In both cases it can no longer be of equal value to the marksman which of the three sights he employs.

In the first place we will suppose d^0 to be the true distance. If now the line of sight s^1 be used, its intersecting point with the dotted line d^0 is the position of the point aimed at relatively to the trajectory. The shot goes past far overhead ! To a yet greater amount the trajectory is wide of the mark, only in this case below it, if the marksman make use of s^2, that is, the point aimed at lie in the intersecting point of this line of sight with the line d^0. As compared with these two cases the deviation of the shot in using the tangential line of sight (Tang. d^1) is relatively trifling.

If the error due to incorrect estimation lie in the opposite direction, viz., the point aimed at having really the distance d^2, the trajectory passes through close underneath the point aimed at, when this lies on the line of sight Tang. d^1 (and the line d^2) whilst in sighting along s^1 or s^2 the deviations are much greater.

Generalising these considerations, the following states the case with very close approximation. With a line of sight correctly adjusted to a definite distance, that is, passing through the point of the trajectory lying at this distance, objects at other distances, both nearer and more remote, are hit most accurately, when it forms the tangent to the trajectory, and in other cases so much the more accurately, the less it deviates from the tangent.

Our investigation must now be directed to answering the question: in which telescopic sight for a medium distanced object, i.e., for the average value of the distances at which one would usually risk a shot, the line of sight approaches nearest to the condition of tangency, in the old scant instrument or in the new one with elevated objective ? For the information relating to the path of the shot requisite for the solution of the problem we are greatly indebted to the Management of the German Testing Depôt for Small Arms, Halensee, Berlin, who most obligingly supplied us with established data for half a dozen cartridgess of different calibre. Of these we will select two for our purpose, viz., I. and II., both appertaining to cartridges most generally used by sportsmen, I of small calibre and elongated ball and II of large calibre and shorter ball. The data were obtained by means of an experimental arrangement in which the muzzle and target were placed in the same horizontal line. Fig. 2.
Three positions of the Line of Sight.

The given points of the paths of the shots I and II were first plotted out upon a sheet of drawing paper two meters in length. The horizontal and the vertical scales were chosen to differ, so that the height as compared with the distances were exaggerated 200 times. By joining the individual points in both drawings two curves were obtained, the vertical projections of the trajectories magnified vertically and reduced horizontally.

We have not made immediate use of these two curves as it rather appeared expedient for the purpose of comparison to eliminate the difference in the elevation of the axes of the bore appertaining to the two curves where for in both cases this elevation was made equal to zero. Each curve then varies a little from its real configuration as plotted out, the depth, however, of a point on the curve below the axis of the bore—measured in the direction of the force of gravity—must for any distance remain the same as in the orginal curve, because the original elevation deviated very little indeed from zero. After that the re-modelling of the two curves could be executed in a very perfect manner.

The further development of the drawings of the curves may be explained upon Figures 3 and 4, in which they are reproduced greatly reduced. Curve I in Figure 3 proceeding from the centre of the muzzle on the horizontal axis A of the bore extends to 200 m that of II in Figure 4 only to 100 m. In both Figures 1 mm represents 1 meter horizontally and 5 mm vertically. In this 200 times exaggeration of the height as compared with the horizontal scale the gun on the left is fore-shortened to an apparently erect staff, above which the sighting devices extend as thin lines : in Figure 3 these are our telescopic sight Model b, an ordinary telescopic sight T and the usual fore sight M, in Figure 4 similarly as in Figure 3 but with the addition of our Model a. The height of the tip of the sight M above the axis of the bore is 18 mm. The axis of the direct telescopic sight T is 50 mm above the axis of the bore. The axes of the oculars of both our Models are also 50 mm, while the height of the axis of the objective for Model a is 103, for Model b 91 mm.

While a telescopic sight is being adjusted to another distance, the line of sight turns about a point in the height of the axis of the objective, as in adjusting ordinary sights about the tip of the fore sight. This point lies in the objective, if the sight be adjusted for different ranges by moving the cross-wires, as in our Model a. It lies behind the objective (in lens telescopes in the middle point of the cross-wires and in prismatic telescopes in the image of this middle point projected by the prism system) if the sight be adjusted by shifting the objective, as in the case in our Model b.

Trajectory I. (Calibre of rifle 6·15 mm).

Figure 3 would now be completed by drawing lines of sight from each sighting device (more correctly from each turning point) towards the points 50, 100, 150 and 200 m distance on the trajectory. The tangential line of sight should also be drawn through each of these four points on the curve as Tang. 50, Tang. 100, and so on.

As is easily seen Tang. 200 falls very wide, and Tang. 150 fairly wide, outside the reach of all the sights. Tang. 100 has about the position occupied by the line of sight 100 of our Model a, as is seen on comparison with the position of this Model in Figure 4. It will be also seen, that our Model b for objects at 90 m and the ordinary telescopic sight for objects at 75 m distance would approximately satisfy the condition of tangency. Tang. 50 coincides fairly well with the line of sight M 50 over the usual back and fore sights. In so far as 100 m can be regarded as an average value of the distances, for which weapons of 6 mm bore are used, our telescopic sights with elevated objective are better adapted for such small calibres than the telescopic sights of the former kind, while they in their turn are superior to the back and fore sights.

Trajectory II. (Calibre of rifle 11·1mm).

The path of the shot II in Figure 4 has been supplied for all sights with the lines of sight 50 and 100, and in addition the tangential lines for the same distances. Tang. 100 this time lies well without the region of the sighting devices, Tang. 50, however, approaches very near to line of sight 50 of our Model b. Further, it is at once seen, that our Model a must be adjusted to a distance a little beyond—and the squat telescopic sight T a little less than—50 m, to render their lines of sight tangential lines. Could 50 m be regarded as the average distance of objects for weapons of the larger calibre 11 mm, then our Model b on such weapons approximates best to the condition of tangency, but at the same time our Model a and the ordinary telescopic sight might also suffice.

There might here some examples be given for the measure of the deviation of the shot from its mark arising from the incorrect adjustment of the sights in consequence of an error of judgment in the estimation of distance. If rifle I (Figure 3) be used to shoot at a mark 80 m away, whilst the sighting device stood at 100 m, the results would be as follows: With the ordinary sights (line of sight M 100) the shot would be 1·4 cm too high, with the line of sight T 100 somewhat less, i. e., 0·8 cm, and with the Zeiss b 100 only 0·1 cm too low. The tangential line of sight Tang. 100 corresponding as already mentioned to the Zeiss Model a makes the shot deviate from its mark about 0·5 cm (below).

For rifle II (Figure 4) the error may be of the opposite character in estimating the distance, for instance, the sights may be adjusted to 50 m while the mark is at 60 m. The lines of sight 50 may be conceived to be prolonged through the point 50 on the trajectory until at the distance 60. With M 50 T 50 and Zeiss b 50 the shot passes 1·5, 0·9 and 0·1 cm below the mark respectively, with Zeiss a 50 0·2 cm above it. Had, however, a telescopic sight been at command, which when adjusted to 50 m would exactly furnish the line of sight Tang. 50, then the shot would deviate from its mark about 0·3 cm below.

It is easy to understand from Figures 3 and 4 the reason, why in the above examples the use of the tangential line of slight is attended with very small indeed, but not the smallest, deviations of the shot from a mark, whose distance does not tally with the lines of sight as adjusted: the deviation zero is obtained by means of that secant line of sight, the other intersecting point of which with the trajectory lies in the true distance of the mark. The use of this secant line, however, results in correspondingly greater deviations than the tangential line of sight, if the error in estimating distance be of the opposite kind. Since the possibility of errors of both kinds occurring must be taken into consideration, the practical advantage lies with the tangential line of sight above all others.

It is to be deplored, that each sighting device fulfils the condition of tangency in one individual adjustment for distance only. Perhaps an inventor may some day produce a sighting apparatus, for those who delight in having a beautiful piece of mechanism upon their weapons, whose turning point of the line of sight in adjusting to another distance automatically adjusts itself (for example, moves in an involute of the curve of the shot), so that the line of sight is always the tangent. Well could he call it "the ideal sight!"

A NEW AIR RIFLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—In going round the gun shops the other day I saw a very neat looking little weapon, the Britannia air rifle, at Watson Brothers' in New Bond Street. I inspected it and was so taken with it that I became its possessor, and I think it is quite one of the best, if not the best weapon of its kind at the present time. It is made by G. C. Bonehill of Birmingham.

In appearance it resembles a rook rifle, and has none of the awkward lines of the ordinary air gun. It is well balanced and handles well. Its weight is 6½lbs. and its total length appears to be about 36 inches. The barrel drops down to compress the spring which can be set for short range or for long range up to 50 yards to which distance the pellet carries with considerable force. The rifling is of a very shallow, polygroove type and the pellets, which have slightly cupped bases, just show the marks of the rifling on the base.

The pull off can be lightened by turning a screw which fits into the head of the scear. It can be set with safety for a 6lb. pull. The rifle shoots with surprising accuracy according to the diagrams (shown in the circular) made by Mr. Hirst.

Mr. Hirst's shooting shows groups of seven successive shots in a one inch bull at 25 yards, 10 shots in a 2 inch bull at 35 yards, and 6 shots out of 10 in a 2 inch bull at 50 yards.

The rifle is sighted with the usual sporting sights for 25 and 50 yards.

With the spring compressed to the first notch, short range, the pellets penetrate from a third to half an inch into a deal board, with the spring fully compressed the penetration is slightly greater, at six yards; this is enough for killing small animals—birds, squirrels, etc.

The pellets are very cheap, 1*s.* 2*d.* a thousand, so it is not expensive work keeping one's eye in at target practice with the air rifle.

B.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The present policy of preventing the importation of coloured labour into South Africa, is no doubt an imitation of the legislature of Australia and New Zealand. "A White South Africa" is the parrot cry. That the adoption of these measures will ever, even in the dim future, prove in the least beneficial to our South African Colonies, is highly doubtful. As regards the present there is no doubt at all; the exclusion of coloured labour is disastrous.

In Australia and New Zealand the native races have never been a really serious menace to the existence of the white settler. In South Africa, on the contrary, in spite of constant wars with the various tribes, we find to-day 80,000 Basutos armed to the teeth, and ready to create trouble; while a deep seated unrest is pervading the other native races as well. In fact there is a possibility of this restlessness culminating in widespread rebellion. None of the South African natives are naturally fond of work or industrious. People who will not work cannot remain contented. Meanwhile these undesirable aborigines are in an enormous majority, and consequently for peace and safety's sake it is desirable to encourage settlement by Whites. This is in fact the only way of getting rid of the danger. There is another point, too, in which South Africa differs from Australasia. We have had to wage a bitter and protracted war against the original white settlers in order to maintain British suzerainty. In the hearts of our late antagonists, it is but natural that hostile feelings should rankle. Thus wretched South Africa remains a house divided against itself. That the Kaffir is a hopeless beast, is generally conceded. Starvation is the only thing which will make him work in these days. For races like these slavery seems the only thing; and that being unfortunately out of date, the Kaffir must remain as a mere cumberer of the soil unto all ages.

Much of the country, especially in the Transvaal, is of such a nature, that the settler must farm on a more extended scale than is necessary in, say, New Zealand. The colonist in fact requires a certain amount of capital and cannot prosper without cheap native labour. Natives also are indispensible for domestic service. The mining industry, on which the financial prosperity of the country depends, cannot possibly be carried on without an ample supply of unskilled labour. Cut off all importation of coloured workmen and what will be the result? The new colonies will languish. Those Englishmen who have gone out there, will forsake a land where they cannot possibly make a comfortable living. The country will be inhabited eventually only by scattered and impoverished Boer farmers whom the Imperial Government will be continually called upon to protect against Kaffir risings.

After all, for whose sake is this absurd outcry against coloured labour raised? Simply for the sake of the white storekeepers.....the scum and sweepings of Europe. Only a part of them are even English. The greater proportion are Jews, or mongrels of various nationalities. The fear is that these precious storekeepers will be cut out of their livelihood, if Indians whose attributes make them born traders, are allowed into the country.

Instead of legislating for the Anglo-Saxon farmer colonist and making South Africa a desirable country to him, we devote ourselves to catering for a class composed for the most part, of undesirable aliens!

The Indian Government, if called upon, could supply plenty of labour of the most desirable kind. Hard working, law abiding, intelligent people, all that is asked is that these workmen, who are loyal fellow subjects, should be well treated in the land across the "Black Water" in which they have adventured themselves.

It will be interesting to see what efforts the present Government may make towards the solution of this great labour question.

Meanwhile would-be colonists had better not go to South Africa.

A Blunder-Bus—A motor-bus when it breaks down.

"It's the pace that kills," as the man said when he was run over by a motor car.

An Irish priest was denouncing the use of alcohol from the pulpit. "It's whisky makes you hate your wives," he said. "It's whisky makes your home desolate. It's whisky makes you shoot your landlords,' and, thumping the desk he added, "It's whisky makes you miss them when you do shoot them!"

The American actress, Miss Maude Adams, tells a story of a coloured couple once personally known to her says the Liverpool Post. Peter was very bashful, and, having decided, firstly, that he desired Miss Johnson for his wife, and, secondly, that he dared not ask her in person, had recourse to the telephone to make known his passion. He rung her up at the house of her employment, and inquired: Is that you, Miss Johnson? Yaas, came the reply. Well, Miss Johnson, I'se got a mos' important question to ask you. Yaas. Will you marry me Miss Johnson? and the answer came, Yaas, Who is it, please?

THE TURF.

NEWMARKET.

MILDER weather, consequent on a lull in the bitter wind, though most acceptable, came too late to save the situation. There is always supposed to be some amount of pleasure connected with the national sport, and it is not to be expected that those whose duties do not compel them thereto are going to make it a purgatory. Hence many would be visitors had returned home on Thursday, and a skeleton battalion covered the retreat of one of the smallest forces that ever stormed Newmarket in any previous Craven Week. Nothing was stirring, but stagnation. Newmarket afforded a barren hunting ground to the camp followers, who having picked the racing body tried to get meal out of its bones, 7s. 6d. being a tentative fare on Thursday night from the stand to the town, while it would have paid the local folk to have taken lodgers at the cost of the fires, just to keep their rooms aired. As a local habitation, Newmarket is but a name, thanks to the new station, the railway spelling ruin to the small businesses that lived by casual catering, but one man's meat is another man's poison and the London brigade now dine at home. As in every branch of life, Shakespeare's dictum came true, the tide in the affairs of men being more or less taken at the flood, to the relief of backers, who had experienced a bad time, and about got their own back, perhaps with a little bit to spare. Details :—

EPSOM.

If we could not get it in meal at Epsom we got it in malt, but the snow proved a most unsatisfactory substitute for the promised rain that had been hanging all round the horizon, and when the sun came out the going was still uncompromisingly hard, but one important feature was fulfilled, the dust was laid. Such a beastly morning told against strong forces from Town as Epsom Downs, are except in midsummer, a by no means enviable spot for a picnic, and the falling-off in the outside crowds was noticeable in the enclosures, which were by no means so well filled as usual. Perhaps to-morrow the special service may meet with better patronage, but as was the case at Newmarket, the "upper ten" were in a minority. A dead-heat and five of the other races won by heads and necks, it was quite a sporting day, and there were just enough favourites scoring to make the backers' experiences interesting. Details :—

Though the Great Metropolitan can claim its status from that worthy body the "bungs" of London, the younger handicap, the City and Suburban, appeals, with vastly stronger claims, to the general public. To those who contemplated Epsom on wheels, the outlook was by no means promising, but one salient fact out-balanced the watery sky, inasmuch as the pretty roads through the orchards of Surrey had been laid by a more potent power than the Urban County Council's water carts, and boot and harness was the order of the day, the road division making a brave show. With three routes by the "iron horse," nowadays far and away the most comfortable way of doing Epsom, the old crush at the stations was obviated and racing brought, metaphorically, to London's back door, the Metropolis rose to the occasion as in former years, saving what looked like a forlorn situation. Indeed, the rings and enclosures were as well filled as usual, and amongst the company present were many of the principal supporters of the Turf. The going could not but be hard, but the edge of the clouds had generously enough done their sprinkling, and Mr. Darling may console himself with the aphorism that all's well that ends well, as sunshine smiled upon his efforts towards the finish. SANDOWN PARK.

After the bustle and turmoil of Epsom racegoers breathed again in the comparative quietude of Esher's beech and fir groves. Grateful for the fact that the nipping eager air of the past few days had given way to a south-west breeze. It changed again to the north as usual, but too late to catch any victims to bronchitis or the newly-developed influenza. For the past week the course had been watered with every appliance handy, though the Sandown executive have not the everflowing wells to draw upon that make the task so easy at Kempton. Nevertheless the going was in capital order all round, a record to be

RACKETS.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS' CHAMPIONSHIPS.

If classic style and elegance of pose were the principal attributes of a rackets player, Wellington would have won the Public Schools' Championships with consummate ease. A prettier or more graceful pair in repose or movement than Brougham and Harrison have not been seen since the competition was instituted, but, after fighting their way to the final, they had to succumb yesterday to stamina and strength. The Charterhouse pair, Hooman and Garnett, worked admirably in harness, and though they did not win their games by big margins they always seemed to have something in hand. Brougham was the most finished artist of the four. His coolness and resource for one of his years were superb, and he should make a name for himself in years to come. His partner was full of pluck, but weakened in the closing stages. Hooman's service was at times unplayable, while Garnett did great execution in the rallies. For a left-handed player he is pretty smart. The gallery was crowded with spectators, and the cries of the school-boys were so deafening that it was a relief when the match was over.

In the first game the first ace fell to Hooman, but runs of five each to Harrison and Brougham gave Wellington a strong lead. A foot fault against Brougham rather disturbed that player's composure, and five to Hooman followed by three aces to Garnett saw the scores marked 13—13 (set 3), Garnett eventually going to game at 16—14. Wellington made a gallant response, and took the second game very easily at 15—4, Brougham opening with a capital sequence of eight aces (four by service). The third game was keenly contested. A run of seven by Brougham placed Wellington well ahead at 12—7, but Hooman and Garnett replied with four apiece, and won the game at 15—12. In the fourth game Brougham flattered his school by running up a brilliant hand of ten aces, but Harrison could not keep pace with his partner, and the steady methods of Charterhouse again prevailed. Hooman took the scores to 13—13 with a run of six, and the leaders finally won at 18—14. Wellington made a good fight in the fifth game and led at 10—8, but they failed to get going again for Hooman went to game with a dashing run of seven (five by service). Result : Charterhouse (C. V. Hooman and R. M. Garnett) beat Wellington (H. Brougham and E. C. Harrison) by four games to one (16—14, 4—15, 15—12, 18—14, and 15—10) (68 aces to 65).

OXFORD vs. CAMBRIDGE.

THE SINGLES.—Oxford avenged their defeat in the Doubles by a victory in the Singles at Queen's Club, West Kensington, on Saturday, the 21st. This was in accord with expectation, G. N. Foster, the Oxonian, proving a more finished exponent of the game than his opponent. He won by three games to love—a fair index of the general run of play. Wolton was very uneven. He made a stubborn fight at the start, a set to three being necessary ere the first game went to the Dark Blue. The Cantab was easily vanquished in the second, while in the next after looking a beaten man, he recovered finely and won. Failing to maintain his improvement, the honours, as above mentioned, were secured by Oxford. There were very few spectators, and the form on the whole was only moderate for an Inter-'Varsity fixture.

The first game produced a very stubborn fight. After 6 all Foster got away with a hand of three, but Wolton quickly drew level. Neither man succeeded in drawing decisively away, and it became 14—14. In the set to three Foster just won at 17—16. By small sequences Foster got nicely in front in the second game, and doing well, especially in the court, he finished with a run of four and victory at 15—4. Next time it was level scoring until 5 all. Then Wolton fell off, and Foster contributing five reached 10—5. At this stage the Cantab certainly looked a beaten man, but he recovered so well indeed that a hand of five brought him level at 11 all. A ding-dong battle then ensued for the lead, in which Wolton, maintaining his improvement, kept in front, and Foster was beaten at 15—13 The cheer from the gallery encouraged the Cantab, and for the first half of the fourth game he played pluckily and steadily At the start Foster went to 5—1, but then Wolton crept up until it was 5 all and subsequently 7 all. The Dark Blue, however, would not be denied, and only allowing his opponent to score one more ace he secured the rubber. Result :

G. N. Foster (Malvern and Worcester College, Oxford) beat St. J. Wolton (Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge) by three games to one (17—16, 15—4, 13—15, and 15—8)—69 aces to 43.

THE DOUBLES.—The cognoscenti of rackets received a rare set-back yesterday, at Queen's Club, when Cambridge turned what appeared to be a forlorn hope into a sensational victory. When Oxford entered upon the fifth game—with two games in hand—there were few Light Blue supporters daring enough to hope for a turn in the tide. Nevertheless, the black-markers stuck gamely to the work and contested every inch of the way with the utmost doggedness. There was little science in their methods, but there was the compensating quality of grit, and when they pulled the game out of the fire after a protracted set-to Dark Blue partisans became more subdued. There was a time in the sixth heat when the match hung in the balance, the scores being called 14—14, but at the critical moment Foster, after great effort for his side, lost his service, and Wolton, keeping a cool head, took the next three aces and practically settled the issue. In the deciding game, the Oxonians got flustered, but the Light Blues played with superb steadiness and won the match by four games to three. Foster was the most stylish player of the four, but he was not consistent, either in his service or in the court. Butterworth was erratic, and could not stay long in the rallies. Pound was sound rather than brilliant, and Wolton after an uncertain start, warmed up in dashing style, and quite outshone Foster in the closing stages. The form was only moderate for an Inter-Varsity fixture.

In the first game, the Cantabs went away quickly, and scored nine aces off the reel. Their opponents then drew up, and Foster getting in at 8—11, went to game with a sequence of eight, which he increased to twelve by taking the first four in the second game. Pound and Wolton could make no headway, and lost this game at 15-2. Cambridge improved in the next game, and two runs of three to Pound and a hand of five aces to Wolton gave them a big pull at 13—2. Foster tacked on four, but the Light Blues won at 15—6. Oxford took the fourth pretty easily at 15—4. Foster running out with a sequence of six, but the fifth game proved a desperate affair, and there were frequent spells of unproductive play so keen were the men. Cambridge came out of the ordeal with great credit and won at 15—11. The ball was often out of the court, but on the whole the steadiness of the Light Blues was much to be admired. The sixth game witnessed a tremendous set-to. Wolton scored the first six aces, but five to Butterworth and a single to Foster equalised the figures. Wolton now got a couple, and Pound followed with a pretty hand of five, and Cambridge led at 14—8 Thanks to a clever run of five credited to Foster the scores were called 14—14 (set 3), but Foster then lost his service and Wolton went to game at 17—14. Each pair had now won three games, and for a long time the deciding game was in doubt, Cambridge leading at 11—10. The Light Blues, however, never got flurried, and the imperturbable Pound gave Cambridge the victory with a run of three amid great enthusiasm. Result :

CAMBRIDGE (St. J. Wolton and W. G. Pound) beat Oxford (G. N. Foster and H. M. Butterworth) by four games to three (11—15, 2—15, 15—6, 4—15, 15—11, 17—14, and 15—10) (79 aces to 86).

BILLIARDS.

The Scottish champion came out of the money match at Glasgow, for which the Sporting Life was stakeholder, with flying colours. It was veritably a race against the clock on the last day, for Aiken required no fewer than 2,124 to gain the victory when the penultimate session was entered upon. The Scotsman, however, rose to the occasion in great style, and by the end of the afternoon session had practically assured himself of a win. The huge total of 2,623 points were scored in one [illegible] I should say.

In the match [illegible] large crowds by his [illegible] at times, and earned [illegible] what was a stern chase all the [illegible] cidence that each player compil[illegible] breaks in the match, but the Scotsman[illegible] 7,567 points accruing from his "centur[illegible] with the 6,912 of Inman. In addition, Aiken [illegible] record in the match, with 328 on Thursday of th[illegible] and 348 on the following Tuesday.

Edward Diggle was going great guns in the early part of [illegible] match with Harverson at Thurston's and actually got to within 50 of his opponent's total, but subsequently the Colonial dropped into his stride, and drew away again. Harverson's cue was causing him some trouble early on, but the necessary "repairs" apparently worked wonders, and he has since given some brilliant shows. He has rather the worst of the position at present, but he is such a rare uphill fighter that he may yet push Diggle hard for victory. The match has caught on with the patrons of the Leicester-square Saloon, large attendances being the rule.

H. W. Stevenson broke fresh ground during the first half of the past week by taking Willie Cook to Llanelly and engaging in a short game of 4,000 up. Stevenson did not display anything above the ordinary—an unusual occurrence for him—but he played sufficiently well to give Cook a long start and a beating. The appended tables show the progress, or retrogression, as the case may be, of the other players engaged during the week :—

BOXING.

LIGHT-WEIGHT CHAMPIONSHIP.

As is customary upon the eve of the Epsom Spring Meeting the directorate of the Convent Garden establishment arranged last evening one of the strongest programmes of the season. Although the proceedings were not of an International character, the bouts arranged proved sufficiently attractive to draw a crowded house The chief event was the contest between Jabez White (Birmingham) and Jack Goldswain (London), who had signed articles to box twenty rounds for the 10st. championship and £350. The battle that the Midlander put up against Jimmy Britt in America a few months ago, when he was defeated, did not by any means lower him in his partisan's estimation, and the reverse was somewhat atoned for upon his return to this country by his victory over Bob Russell during the first week of the present year. Goldswain also had enhanced his reputation by triumphing over Fred Buckland (South Africa), which ith a six rounds contest between Johnny

ury) and Seaman Cope (Portsmouth). This mmary fashion, the civilian terminating the bout in ing round. The next item, which should have been of ounds' duration, was contested between heavy-weights representing respectively the Army and Navy. This bout lasted scarcely so long as its predecessor, the sailor gaining a decisive victory in less than a round. After a three rounds trial between a couple of sons of the sea, preparations were made for the principal event of the evening. White was immediately installed a very war m favourite, 2 to 1 on being offered by his partisans with but very few takers. Goldswain, who looked rather too light, began in excellent style. Being generally the aggressor he kept pinking his opponent with the left on the face, and by the time that half the stipulated number of rounds had been traversed, he had established a good lead. White, on the other hand, appeared somewhat slow, although there appeared a good deal more sting behind his deliveries than in those of his opponent. At the end of the fifteen round White warmed up a bit, and at close quarters more than held his own. Entering upon the sixteenth round the betting had veered round to 6 to 4 on Goldswain, which odds were fully justified, for from this period he kept well ahead, and received the award on points.

The concluding item of the evening was a fifteen rounds contest between those well-known middle-weights, Pat O'Keeffe (Canning Town) and the ex-amateur, Charlie Allum (Notting Hill). The pair had signed articles to box fifteen rounds at 11st. 2lbs. for £50 a side and a purse of a similar amount. The contest, which only lasted six rounds, was of a rugged nature owing to the clinching tactics of Allum, who, however, was decisively beaten.

Officials.—Owing to Mr. A. F. Bettinson being indisposed, Mr. Tom Scott undertook the dual capacity of M. C. and referee, and Mr. E. Zerega acted as timekeeper.

ATHLETICS.

THE OLYMPIC GAMES.

The opening of the Olympic Games took place on the 22nd instant. Early in the afternoon it rained slightly, but as the strains of the British and Greek national anthems heralded the approach of the Royal visitors the sun shone out brightly.

Bursts of cheering rang out as King George and King Edward, accompanied by Queen Alexandra and Queen Olga, drove through, followed by Princess Victoria, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the members of the Greek Royal family, and a brilliant suite. Conspicuous among the Royal group was Prince Louis of Battenburg, chatting with his daughter, Princess Alice.

When all were seated, the Crown Prince, President of the Games, moved forward, and saluting King George, read an address containing the following passages:—"By the generosity of a son of the Greek Fatherland, it has been possible for the Stadium to be restored to its ancient splendour, and invitations to the present games have been issued to all nations who consider sport as a mighty means of civilisation and progress. Our labours have been rewarded by the presence of the International phalanx now aligned before your Majesty, and the King of the mighty British Kingdom. Of whatever country the victors may be, we hope that they will remember that we have bound their temples with wild olive growing on the banks of the Alpheus, and they will remember that their victory has been acclaimed on sacred soil, as ancient as Athens, by descendants of these ancient Hellenes who recognise as brothers all those whom the gymnastic art—a noble daughter of Hellas—has brought here to victory. I have the honour, Sire, to beg your Majesty to proclaim the opening of the games." (Loud and prolonged cheering.)

King George then advanced to the edge of the Royal dais, saluted and proclaimed the opening of the Games in a few words.

The second day was chiefly spent in deciding minor events such as tennis, football, and shooting. No Englishmen or Americans were engaged in these competitions.

The most important feature of the day was the fencing competition in the Zappeion, in which the Englishmen figured well. Lord Howard de Walden lost the preliminary pool after a splendid struggle, being beatten by Casmir (Germany), who fenced in the Italian style. The best display on the English side was given by Mr. Edgar Seligman. M. Kavanagh (France) won the pool, Mr. Seligman being bracketed second.

In lawn tennis M. Caridia, cousin of the English player, played, for Greece, and was beaten by M. Decugis (France) (6—1, 6—0).

In the cycling races all the Englishmen were defeated, the only good show being made by Bouffler (Polytechnic), who got into the final, but was defeated.

King George, who is showing the greatest interest in everything connected with the games, again visited the Stadium in the afternoon and witnessed the gymnastic displays.

P. O'Connor, who was expected to do so well for England in the jumps, sprained his foot while jumping.

The rowing and swimming races in the bay of Phalerum began about 10 o'clock on the 24th. The Italians won the races for four-oared gigs and six-oared Navy whalers in slashing style, while the French took second place in the four-oared contest, and the Greeks finished second and third in the six-oared whaler event.

The race for sixteen-oared barges was won by the Greeks.

The races were followed by the swimming events. The first heat for the 100 metres was won in fine style by C. M. Daniels (New York Athletic Club) Healy (Australia) being second, and J. H. Derbyshire (England) third. Paulo Radmilovic, the Welsh swimming champion, finished first in the second heat, being followed by Halmy (Hungary) and Marquand Schwartz (America). All these will compete in the final to-morrow.

The principal swimming event was the mile race, which was won by H. Taylor (England) by a good 100 yards.

Shorty before noon King Edward and all the other members of the British and Greek Royal parties, with the exception of Prince George, proceded to the Zappeion to witness the specially arranged fencing bout between the English and German teams. England was represented by Lord Desborough, Sir Cosmo Duff-Gordon, Mr. C. Newton Robertson, and Mr. Edgar Selingman. The German team, which was composed of Harren Erkrath De Bary, Casmir Petri, and Schon, was hopelessly outclassed, the Englishmen scoring nine hits to two.

In the revolver shooting, Cyeneter (Switzerland) and Fauconnier (France) were the winners.

The tandem bicycle race was won by two Englishmen, J. Matthews (Putney A. C.) and A. Rushen (Putney A. C.). German pairs were second and third.

In the 333⅓ metre bicycle race, Verri (Italy) was first (22⅘secs.) Crowther (Leeds) close behind and Mejof (France) third (23⅕secs.) Times subject to correction.

On Wednesday, 26th instant, M. J. Sheridan, of the Greater New York Irish Athletic Association, won the throwing the discus contest with a throw of 135ft. 8in., beating his own world's record, made at Montreal nearly two years ago, by 2ft. 1in.

The five-miles race was won by H. C. Hawtrey, London Athletic Club, by fifty yards, from Svanberg, Sweden, in 26mins. 11⅘secs. E. Dahl, Sweden, was third, and J. J. Daly, the Irish champion, fourth.

The 20 kilometres bicycle race was won by W. J. Pett, Putney Athletic Club, and the five kilometres by Verri, Italy.

C. M. Daniels, New York Athletic Club, won the 100 metres swimming race, Halmay, Hungary, being second, and Healey, Australia, third.

W. Eury, of Yale University, secured the standing long jump with a leap of eleven feet. W. A. Schick, of Harvard University, who won the sprint in the Havard and Yale vs. Oxford and Cambridge match, in London, two years ago; S. Abrahams, of Cambridge University; and A. H. Healey, of the Blackheath Harriers, who hold the 100 yards championship of Sussex, secured their heats in the 100 metres races, but were beaten in the second round. Those who qualified for the final were Archie Hahn, of Milwaukee, N. Barker, of Australia, Robinson, Moulton, Lindberg, and Eaton.

In the 800 metres race, Wyndham Halswell, the British quarter-mile champion; R. P. Crabbe, of Cambridge University; E. B. Parsons, of Yale; Lightbody, of Chicago, the American half-mile champion; Pilgrim, Runge, Hellstorm, and Bacon qualified for the final.

Great disappointment and sympathy are felt by the English athletes in Athens at the unfortunate accident which has befallen H. C. Hawtrey. As the result of Wednesday's five miles race which he won in 26mins. 11⅘secs., Hawtrey is now in hospital with an injured ankle.

THE NILGIRI MOTOR TRIALS.

THE COMMITTEE'S FINAL REPORT.

THE following is the Final Report on the Nilgiri Motor Trials of 1906 by the Committee of the Southern India Motor Union:—

The Trials were held with the view of finding the most suitable car for planters and others, for business and other purposes, within the limits of the Nilgiri and Wynaad Districts. The nature of the roads other than main ones puts a premium on small cars, owing to the winding of the roads, their narrowness and the number of zig-zags; many of which are unfenced or at the most protected with small mud banks. As enquirers had expressed a decided wish for cheap cars a handicap for cost was decided on. The marks were given as follows:—

(1) For cost, maximum 20; a car costing Rs. 2,000 would get 20 marks. A deduction of 1 mark for each Rs. 200 by which the listed price in India exceeded Rs. 2,000 was made. If the car was not listed by any agent in India 50 per cent. was added to the English price.

(2) For speed, maximum 40; one mark for each 1-10 mile per hour average above 8 M.P.H.

(3) For ease of turning, maximum 40; at each of four specified corners a car got 10 marks for turning clean and lost 10 if requiring to back more than once or to be manhandled.

(4) For brake control, maximum 20; tested by power of stopping on meeting obstacles round blind corners. See order for Brake Control.

(5) For extra passengers, 4 per passenger.

(6) For extra seating accommodation, 2 per seat.

The marks were decided on in accordance with conditions stated by various planters and others as requisite for their work in these districts. Most specified an average speed of 8-12 M.P.H. as meeting all their requirements. It was therefore decided to give marks for this, in spite of the temptation to make drivers overrun their engines on the lower gears. Complete control was demanded. The course was 67 miles in length. The start was from Charing Cross, Ootacamund (7,112ft. above sea level.) The route followed was—

The course was a very severe hill-climbing test. The roads were typical of the average Nilgiri District roads and with a few exceptions the surface was good. The nature of the country entails a very winding course, which included 20 turns of 300° or more. Enquirers about cars had objected to any necessity for backing at such corners and experience has shown that such is exceedingly dangerous and were unfenced khuds are concerned, is almost certain to lead to an accident sooner or later. Great stress was, therefore, laid on this point.

The road was indicated with screens thus:—

"TRIALS"

These proved very suitable. Messrs. Edmiston, Sykes, Andrews, Colonel Banks and Major Sullivan kindly assisted in placing these screens. Messrs. Buckley, Hodgson and Mackenzie kindly consented to act as Judges and Starters. Mr. Bernays, Assistant Superintendent of Police, made the necessary Police arrangements which were eminently satisfactory. Mr. J. H. Hull took charge of the open screen. Mr. A. H. Hull took charge of the closed screen. Messrs. Hannyngton and Brodie were in charge of Coonoor Control:—

The entries were:—

Captain Sturrock's 5 h. p. Oldsmobile, Scratched.
The Hon'ble Mr. Stokes's 10 h. p. White (Steam), Scratched.
Major Babington's 7 h. p. Swift, Mr. Barton Wright.
Captain Tyrrell's 5 h. p. Oldsmobile, Scratched.
Mr. Scovell's 16-20 h. p. DeDion, Scratched.
Mr. Lawton's 6 h. p. Rover, Mr. Fearon.
Mr. Dandison's 5 h. p. Wolseley, Mr. Castle Smith.
Captain Twist's 6 h. p. DeDion, Mr. Rogers.
Colonel Benson's 9 h. p. Speedwell, Mr. Scovell, Mr. Leighton.
Messrs. Simpson and Co.'s 10 h. p. Turner Miesse-(Steam), Mr. Green, Mr. Price.
Captain Traill's 6 h. p. Wolseley, Mr. Brailsford.
Mr. Court Lowe's 8-10 h. p. Humber, Scratched.
Mr. Bosworth Smith's 6½ h. p. Royal Humberette, Scratched.
Mr. O. Hood's 6 h. p. Speedwell, Captain Bald.

The 7 h. p. Swift won the Cup obtaining the maximum possible marks for that car. The 5 h. p. Wolseley won the second cup.

Brake Control was divided into two parts. The first part was the open screen test. A screen with a 7 ft. gap was placed across the road round a blind corner near Springfield. The car had to pass without touching. All obtained full marks (10). The 7 ft. gap proved too wide to be of much value as a test. It was decided on as several bridges in the district are of this width. The second was a severer test. A screen with the word "Stop" on it was placed across the road on a slope near Karteri round a blind corner. Cars had to stop and obtained 1 mark for each yard short of the screen at which they stopped, with a maximum of 10 marks.

The order of Brake Control was:—

No of car.		Marks.
3.	7 h. p. Swift	10
The only car that obtained full marks.
7.	5 h. p. Wolseley	9
9.	9 h. p. Speedwell	7
6.	6 h. p Rover	5
11.	6 h. p. Wolseley	4
14.	6 h. p. Speedwell	1
8.	6 h. p. DeDion	1
10.	10 h. p. Turner-Miesse (minus 10)	10

This was the only car that carried away the screen. The weight of the car caused it to skid a considerable distance when the brakes locked the wheels.

In both cases the screens were round corners which the competitors did not know, and the first sight of the screen was obtained at 30 yards distance. The screens were on down grades.

The Judges' Report is as follows:—

Car No. 6, 6 h. p. Rover—average speed, 10-9; speed, 29; cost, 18; marks for handiness, 30; brake control (closed screen) 5 and (open screen) 10; total, 92.

Car No. 9, 9 h. p. Speedwell—average speed, 10-1; speed, 21; cost, 10; marks for handiness, 10; brake control (closed screen) 7 and (open screen) 10; extra seats, 4; total, 62.

Car No. 3. 7 h. p. Swift—average speed, 14-4; speed, 40; cost, 11; marks for handiness, 40; brake control (closed screen) 10 and (open screen) 10; total, 111; won first cup.

Car No. 11. 6 h. p. Wolseley—average speed, 11-7; speed, 37; cost, 12; marks for handiness, 20; brake control (closed screen) 4 and (open screen) 10; total, 83.

Car No. 8, 6 h. p. DeDion—average speed, 9-5; speed, 15; cost, 9; marks for handiness, 30; brake control (closed screen) 1 and (open screen) 10; extra seats, 2; total, 67.

Car No. 10, 10 h. p. Turner-Miesse—average speed. 12-2; speed, 40; cost, 9; marks for handiness, 10; brake control (closed screen) 10 and (open screen) 10; extra seats, 4; total, 54; carried an extra passenger, but did not obtain the two extra marks for him as he did not weigh 10st.

Car No. 14. 6 h. p. Speedwell—average speed, 10-1; speed, 21; cost, 18; marks for handiness, 30; break contral (closed screen) 1 and (open screen) 10; extra seats, 2; total, 82.

Car No. 7, 5 h. p. Wolseley—average speed, 11-1; speed, 31; cost, 16; marks for handiness, 30; brake control (closed screen) 9 and (open screen) 10; total, 96; won second cup.

The following was the order for speed:—

Car No.	Name of Car.	Running Time.	Marks.	Average Over.	Speed Under.
		Hs. Ms.
3	7 h. p. Swift ... Non-stop.	5-23	40	12-4	12-5
10	10 h. p. Turner-Miesse ...	5-28	40	12-2	12-3
	7 stops for water; and general look round at one stop.
11	6 h. p. Wolseley	5-42	37	11-7	11-8
	Stopped 7 minutes for temporary repairs on account of small accident.
7	5 h. p. Wolseley	6-2	31	11-0	11-1
	5 stops, petty engine trouble.
6	6 h. p. Rover ...	6-8	27	10-9	11-0
	6 stops all very petty, except one of 25 minutes to adjust contact breaker.
14	6 h. p. Speedwell	6-35	21	10-1	10-2
	Several petty stops to adjust trembler blades.
9	9 h. p. Speedwell	6-36	21	10-1	10-2
	A large car. The impossibility of gathering speed before it was necessary to check for the next corner told very heavily on this car. Non-stop.
8	6 h. p. DeDion...	7 3	15	9-5	9-5
	4 petty stops for water and oiling.

One mark was allotted for each tenth of a mile average speed in miles per hour over 8 miles. The maximum marks that could be obtained for speed were 40. The running time was arrived at by deducting from the total time between start and finish the duration of stoppages in Cooner control, stoppages on account of tyre troubles elsewhere, and stoppages by order of the observer. These latter were given for the purpose of avoiding risk of accidents and to allow cars to keep a reasonable distance apart, where it was impracticable to pass.

The 7 h. p. Swift and 9 h. p. Speedwell alone qualified for non-stop awards.

The following was the order for turning power or handiness at zig-zag corners:—

3.—7 h. p. Swift, 40 marks—full marks.

6.—6 h. p. Rover, 30 marks—failed at Kotagiri Roads Junction corner.

8.—6 h. p. DeDion—failed at Kotagiri Roads Junction corner.

14.—6 h. p Speedwell—failed at Coonoor Club corner.

7.—5 h. p. Wolseley—failed at Kotagiri Roads Junction corner.

11.—6 h. p. Wolseley, 20 marks—failed at the Khundah Road corner, and had a slight accident entailing manhandling.

9.—9 h. p. Speedwell, and 10.—10 h. p. Turner Miesse, 10 marks each—failed at all except the Wellington zig-zag upper corner.

Four average corners were selected for testing turning power. These were:—(1) the junction of the Kotagiri Roads; (2) the upper corner in Coonoor Club Compound; (3) the upper corner on the Wellington zig-zag; (4) the junction of the Manjakumbai, Kundah and Devashola Roads. Ten marks were given for each corner if it was turned clean and ten marks deducted at each corner, if the car required to back more than once or was manhandled. Marks were given for this point on account of the nature of the country, which gives this point particular importance. Provided there is a space to manœuvre any car can get round any corner, but it is decidedly dangerous to back towards an unfenced khud, particularly at night. A small turning circle is practically a sine qua non in these districts. The 10 h. p. Turner-Miesse steam car was the only one that used paraffin as fuel, and obtained 9 marks for it. Marks were allotted as follows:—If paraffin was used a maximum of 10 marks provided not more than half a gallon of petrol was carried for starting purposes. If more than half a gallon of petrol was carried 9 marks subject to a deduction of 3 for each ¼th of a gallon of petrol used in excess of half a gallon. Omitting the marks for cost the order was—

	Marks.
7 h. p. Swift	100
6 h. p. Rover	74
6 h. p. Speedwell	64

	Marks.
10 h. p. Turner-Miesse	63
6 h. p. DeDion ... ... — ...	58
9 h. p. Speedwell	52

[NOTES.—These trials emphasised the value of three forward speeds on cars for use in these hills, they also brought out very clearly, particularly when trial runs with other cars are also considered, as far as the hill district work is concerned: (1) the value of a small turning circle; (2) the great value of being able to use the engine as a brake at corners; (3) the utility of an additional air inlet. The loss of power due to the rarefaction of the air was also noticed. Several drivers stated that the difference in power of the engine at 5,000ft. above sea level from that obtained at 7,000ft. was very marked. A theoretical loss of about 20 per cent. occurs at 6 000ft. above sea level, when the loss due to diminished compression pressure is neglected. No marks were allotted for petrol consumption. The winning car, however, used 2¼ gallons in covering the 67 miles.]

MOTORING AT HOME.

LONDON, Friday, 27th April 1906.

THE motor-car is rapidly showing its effect in the depopulation of main roads for residential purposes. To live on a popular highway means to exist with the windows perpetually shut, and an exodus of householders is consequently a result to be expected. The boards of house agents form a leading and permanent feature in the landscape, and the houses only let, if at all, at greatly reduced rentals. It, therefore, becoms a question for property holders whether, when the main road runs tortuously, it is not worth while making a sacrifice to the wolves by opening up more direct roads, and so preserving the amenities of the remainder of their property.

It is wonderful how the motor movement keeps on growing in these islands. I have been reading up the import figures for some years back, and I find that in the first three months of 1904 the imports of cars and parts amounted to £517,774; in the same period of 1905 they increased to £753,491, while this year they reached the remarkable figure of £1,214,062—double what they were two years ago. Isn't that delightful? Of course some shallow thinkers will tell you that imports of motor-cars are not a good thing. They are talking nonsense, and they don't know it, some of them. A greater part of the increase is due to imports of foreign parts to be made up here, thus affording work to the poor, uncared-for, starved British workingman. Besides, the British industry is growing at such a tremendous pace that its clothes no longer fit it. Our makers cannot keep up with the demand, and it is the foreign car that enables us all to have a vehicle. If it were not for them, many of us would have to be content with a bicycle or a wheelbarrow.

"How many separate parts or pieces of metal or other material are there in a motor-car?" was the question I was asked the other day and, off-hand, I would not venture to make a shot at it, but I am quite certain of this that, had I done so, I should have been under the mark, and I think if any reader of this note will just put down on paper the number of parts he thinks his car might contain, and then go down and examine it with pencil and paper, even without taking it to pieces, he will find his estimate woefully under the mark. A car is simple enough in its broad conception, we have only some half-dozen to a dozen broad components, such as the engine, the gear-box, the back axle, the front axle, the steering gear, and so on: but each of these individual sections is in its turn composed of a number of parts and of a much larger number than most people have any idea of. When I was at the Agricultural Hall Show, for instance, I stopped before a stand of one of the accessory firms in which a back axle, with differential, was laid out on a table in pieces, and without going very closely into all details I totted up the number of separate pieces— counting in bolts, nuts, washers, split pins, and such like small items, all as separate pieces—to something like 150. Now when people are inclined to cavil at the prices they have to pay for a motor-car, let them not forget that their car contains some hundreds, and possibly even thousands, of pieces, each one of which has to be made by special tools designed for the purpose. and each one of which has to be assembled into its position with proper care, and it will begin to dawn upon them "where the cost comes in."

There is a tendency towards using much higher powered motors for 'buses with the view of making them more effective when carrying full load. There is the consideration of extra petrol consumption, but this is almost counterbalanced by the extra speed and work obtained on the higher gears. A new company has been promoted within the last few days to exploit an electrically driven omnibus. On the score of quietness this should be greatly superior to those driven by petrol motors. There are, however, many points in which the power may possibly fail as a successful competitor. The new pleasure car designed and built by Mr. Herbert Austin was sent out for its road trials last week. These tests have been entirely satisfactory, the absense of noise being particularly noticeable. There are many special features in this car's construction, and it is particularly interesting from the fact that Mr. Austin's experience in motor manufacture dates back to the period when cars were not allowed to travel at a greater speed than five miles an hour. Mr. Austin at that time was experimenting with the forerunners of Wolseley cars which have done so much to uphold our British reputation for workmanship and reliability.

As a rule I am no believer in half measures, in compromises, in convertible machines, in combination instruments which may be anything from a toothpick to a coal hammer, and full satisfaction in any one direction is rarely obtained by such compromises. I was, however, a few days since shown an idea which may possibly have something in it more than at first would meet the eye. It was spoken of as a "semi-pneumatic" tyre, and consists of a number of balls within a cover, or of air compartments therein. Each compartment is connected directly with the open air by a very small channel, and the theory of its action is this: As each ball or compartment is brought under the wheel, the weight of wheel and car above it presses the aperture against the ground and closes it, so that the air within the compartment is compressed and forms a cushion of air for the car to momentarily rest upon. The first effort at compression before the compartment gets fully beneath the wheel has caused a little of the air to be forced out from the narrow aperture, so that, upon its leaving the ground and the pressure being removed, an expansion of the air chamber sucks in a little fresh air to take the place of that which has been expelled. Of course there cannot be the same air pressure within the tyre to support the weight as is the case with a hard-pumped continuous tyre, so that the result would probably be more like riding on a partly deflated one, but as a counterbalance to this there would be an absolute immunity from the effect of punctures and at the same time the constant drawing in of a little cold air from the atmosphere shoul tend to keep the tyre cool and prevent destruction by heating. The whole thing is, of course, a compromise, and just how far between the two extremes the net result will be found, remains to be seen in practice.

OILED ROADS IN CALIFORNIA.

THE making of road surfaces by means of oil is peculiarly a feature of California ingenuity, says the Sacramento Union. The spectacle so common to the Californian is looked upon with perplexity by the visitor who does not understand the absence of dust, the smooth resilient surface, and the impermeability to water. Then when it is explained to him that these admirable features are due to oil, he examines the road with a new interest as illustrating a kind of roadmaking of which he has heard, but which has not yet been introduced to the world outside of California.

But its advantages are so great that it must eventually be adopted elsewhere, and California will be called upon to supply her full share of the oil. Already experiments have been made in Texas, and also to a limited extent in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Indiana, Colorado, and the District of Columbia. England, France and Switzerland have also been tempted into trials, and when these tests have been proved to be satisfactory, it must be found that the use of oil upon roads has become an established principle.

The remarkable effect of oil upon road surface was almost an accidental discovery. In 1898 the Supervisors of Los Angeles county, confronted with the problem of intolerable dust, determined to try the effect of oil as being probably more efficacious than water. They had reason to be satisfied with their experiment, for the dust disappeared and was no more in evidence for the season.

A renewal of the application for the following year was equally successful, and it was then found that the dust was permanently banished. Dust in the southern part of the State means more than it does in the northern. In the south it was one of the great miseries of life, one of the plagues of existence. It could not be excluded from the houses, because it was as pervasive as the air itself, while its destruction of orchard produce was one of the permanent discounts upon agricultural profits. But wherever the oil has been spread the dust has become merely a page of history.

But it was very soon found that the abolition of the dust was a secondary advantage only, and that from the struggle against a nuisance, an important discovery had been evolved. It was noticed that the oil exercised a binding effect upon all loose particles, and that a kind of asphalt covering had been made that was quite unlike any kind of road yet known. Roads that were hitherto almost impassable through drifting sand and soft clay became hard, tough and resilient, and where driving had been a labor and a nuisance it had become a pleasure. These results, of course, varied in degree, but they were sufficiently evident to show the importance of the discovery and to tempt to new investigations and observations.

At the end of the year 1904 practically the whole of California had risen to its opportunities and oiled roads were the order of the day. Los Angeles county was in the van as the pioneer, and no less than 383 miles of roads and 130 miles of streets testified to her energy in improved construction. In all, forty counties had adopted the new methods to a greater or less extent. San Francisco had only ten miles and Sacramento had 108, Santa Clara had 173 miles and Ventura 150. The total for the State was 2,776 miles, and in addition there were 1,099 miles of oiled railway bed, certainly a remarkable showing for so short a space of time. In Sacramento county the first work was done in 1902, and the best examples of the work are perhaps to be found on the six miles extending south from Sacramento on the Upper Stockton Road, the eleven miles extending east on the Folsom Road, and the three miles on the Riverside Road.

Nathaniel Ellery of the State Department of Highways probably knows as much about oiled roads as any man in California. With a view to getting the most up-to-date opinion upon the subject a Union reporter asked Mr. Ellery to say something as to the latest experiments and conclusions upon a matter so important to the State. Has the last word been said as to the way in which the work should be done, and the present results—admirable as they may be—the best that can be looked for? Is there a right way and a wrong way of oiling roads, and are different methods called for by different kinds of surfaces? These and many similar questions were propounded to Mr. Ellery, and he answered them all with admirable and patient clearness.

"The oiling of roads," he said, "has not been so successful as it should have been. The methods could, in my opinion, be so far improved upon as to effect an immense advance over what we have at the present time, and to give us permanent results instead of impermanent."

The whole subject, and every department of it, has to be made the subject of minute and analytic study. The oil itself varies greatly in its constituents, and of course no two roads are identical in their make-up. Every road has its own individuality, and any particular variety of oil may be congenial to one kind of road and not to another. We want to know exactly how the oil will behave on different kinds of roads and in conjunction with different soils. Oil and sand, for instance, produce a kind of artificial bitumen that gives good results, while oil mixed with alkali will disintegrate as a result of certain chemical processes. In such cases the effect is temporary and not of much practical value, but between these two extremes there are many gradations. There is one general principle that must be adhered to in road building, and in the oiling of roads, and that is to keep the density of the soil even and equal, and the density of the soil may vary every few yards. It has also to be remembered that lime has a chemical action upon the oil, and when this takes place it destroys the qualities in the oil that are necessary to the making of a good road. In a general way it may be said that the whole question resolves itself into a study of soils. You must know the road that you are working upon, and you must modify your conditions to suit its individuality.

Perhaps the very best road is a macadam treated with a heavy asphalt oil. The oil should be allowed to penetrate between the top layers of rock, so as to cement them together. The oil that remains upon the top should then be sanded, and the sand should be allowed to thoroughly incorporate with the oil. No traffic should be allowed to pass over it for a week or ten days so that it may get firm and solid. If such a work is thoroughly and carefully done an ideal road will be the result. You will then have a bituminous macadam.

Oiled roads should be built for heavy traffic as well as for light, and it is from the heavy traffic that the complaints have largely come. Oiled roads have been said to throw a great strain upon the horses, and to produce an undue drag. Now this ought not to be, and it would not be if the right conditions were observed. The road that is to be used for heavy traffic ought to have some kind of foundation, and it must be saturated with the oil. A macadam road such as has been described, where the oil has been allowed to drain in, will have none of the disadvantages sometimes complained of, and it will be suitable for heavy traffic without undue strain upon the horses. The system has already been transformed by experiments since the early days of its discovery. In such places a lack of success has been encountered, while in other places the success has been very marked. There ought to be a uniform success, and there will be when conditions are properly observed and studied. Even density throughout the work is of primary importance, and the oil should be taken up with a good sand. Then the results will be satisfactory. But oil alone will not suffice for heavy traffic. For this there must be a foundation if you are going to have a surface that will withstand the pressure of heavy wheels.

Adobe soils that are often met with present special difficulties. The only thing that can be done with adobe is to give it all the sand and fine gravel that it will hold. It should be saturated with the sand [illegible]. Then oil it, being ca[illegible] result will be as good as [illegible]

In addition to the informa[illegible] the bulletin upon the subject t[illegible] ment of Highways contains much [illegible] oiled roads of Sacramento county have [illegible] kinds—gravel, adobe, red clay, sand, sandy lo[illegible] The best results have been secured from macad[illegible] the next best on sandy loam, while the most difficult ha[illegible] those on adobe soil. In some cases an injury has been ca[illegible] by the rows of trees, which have produced a continual dripping of water and an undue amount of shade. The oil was obtained from the Kern county oil fields at a cost of 70 cents per barrel, delivered in Sacramento. For the city streets the quantities used were 1·42 gallons per square yard for gravel streets and 1·34 gallons for the macadam streets.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION I.

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS vs. H. L. I.—Played on the Fusiliers' ground on Saturday in a strong and steady south breeze, in the face of which the Highlanders did most of the attacking in the first half; but they were rather erratic in shooting at goal and lost several chances. In the second half of the game, helped by the wind, they were constantly in their opponents' ground and scored a goal through Lees. They might have scored more but for the very sound and smart goal-keeping of the Fusiliers' custodian. A penalty kick enabled the Fusiliers to get level and the game ended in a draw of a goal each.

CALCUTTA vs. Y. M. C. A.—This game was not a good one to watch, being loose and slipshod for long periods together; but the C. F. C. had the upper hand of their opponents and made up for their wretched shooting in the first half by notching a couple through Sherman and Leaman, in the second and winning by 2 goals to nil, and taking top place in the senior league so far.

DALHOUSIE vs. HOWRAH.—The meeting of these teams on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday produced a very ordinary sort of game and it was obvious that neither side had yet got into its football stride. Holley scored a goal for the "Dals" in the first half, and Bennett did ditto for the Howrah men in the second—one all.

RANGERS vs. CALEDONIANS.—These clubs started their football season on Saturday on the ground of the former. The game was destitute of interest, combination or excitement, and it behoves both teams to get their forwards to practise together. Neither side succeeded in scoring, and but for good individual play by Margrett, Brown, and Tom Davis for the Rangers, and Irvine, Wade, and Wilson for the Caledonians, the game would have savoured more of a preparatory schoolboys' Saturday afternoon match than a first League engagement. Directly the game was started the Caledonians took the ball into their opponents' territory, but a very feeble shot went wide. Several opportunities were spoilt by Pybus laying too far back on to his halves, and by Durant and Wilson shooting instead of centreing.

The Rangers soon after got possession when the only piece of combination of the game was shown. Davis passing out to his right wing who ran down and centred, Davis sending in a stinging shot which just missed the goal. The Rangers continued to press until half time, hitting the cross bar on two occasions. The second half was conspicuous for long shots with no sting, and was utterly devoid of interest. The Rangers had slightly the best of the game, but Durant missed an open goal. Davis played a great game for his side and showed a good turn of speed, but he did not receive much support. The Caledonian halves, who show promise, were continually baulked by Pybus lying so far back. A pointless draw was perhaps the best finish of such a game.

CALEDONIANS vs. HOWRAH.—On their own ground the Caledonians succeeded in drawing with Howrah, each side scoring a goal. Play was anything but good, combination being at a discount except for one bout of passing by the Howrah forwards. The Caledonians began to press as soon as the game started and forced a corner which was cleared. The ball was soon brought back and two shots were safely negotiated by Sharp, the Howrah goal-keeper, who throughout played a sound game. Bowkett and Bennett then worked the ball down to their opponents end, but Wade cleared, and Durant shot over the cross bar. A corner soon followed to the Caledonians, and Dewsbury spoilt a good chance by hanging on to the ball instead of passing. Play remained in the middle of the field for some time, but the Howrah forwards gradually worked the ball down to within shooting distance and Bennett scored with a shot that Duigenan should have saved.

Howrah had the wind against them in the second half and had to play on the defensive. Durant twice shot over the bar, the Caledonians proved themselves very weak in front of goal, and should have scored on several occasions. The best piece of passing now took place between Bennett and Smith which nearly ended in Howrah being two goals to the good, but the ball went behind. Chandler scored for the Caledonians, but was offside. Things looked bad for the home team as only about five minutes remained for play, but Durant succeeded in putting in a hard shot that Sharp had little chance of saving, thus making the scores equal, and two minutes after the whistle blew. All the backs played well for Howrah as did F. Bennett in the forward line, whilst for the Caledonians Irvine, Wade and Byrne were conspicious, the forwards being still very slow.

DIVISION II.

CUSTOMS vs. OLD XAVIERIANS.—Played on the Armenian ground—a win for the Customs by 3 goals to nil. McCready scored 2 and H. Vears 1 goal.

MEASURERS vs. B.-N. R.—A draw was the result of this game, played on the Measurers' ground on Saturday—neither side scored.

CALCUTTA "B" vs. MOHAN BAGAN.—This was a very wearisome game to watch. Calcutta did practically what they liked, took matters very easily and won by 5 goals to nil: Drew scored 4 of these and Baker 1.

DALHOUSIE "B" vs. ARYANS.—On the "Dals'" ground on Tuesday evening the home team were defeated by 1 goal to nil.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL IN CALCUTTA.

OLYMPIANS vs. LA MARTINIERE.—This match was played on the ground of the former club on the 15th instant when neither side were at their full strength. An even game resulted, but in the second half M. Watling scored for the school with a soft shot and Martinière thus won 1—0.

BEIGHTON HOCKEY CUP.

FINAL.

RANCHI vs. HORNETS.—Played on the Calcutta ground on Friday, 11th May, after a draw of one goal all on the previous Wednesday evening, this match resulted in a win for Ranchi by two goals to one.

After the very brilliant fight put up against the Hornets by the Mission boys on Wednesday, local fancy veered round strongly in the direction of the up-country team, and when the Rev. E. H. Whitley led his pupils on to the C. F. C. ground on Friday, they were hot favourites for the Beighton Cup. The game started on the stroke of 5-30 P.M. and Ranchi at once attacked with vigour, but were almost immediately pulled up for sticks.

The free hit put the Hornets in possession of the ball, but Sharan cleverly took the ball away from Mabert and Smith and set Ranchi going again. Hollow and Yackjee stopped the rush and Russell and Apcar took the ball up to the Ranchi goal at full speed but failed to score, Apcar's shot going wide. Sharan was here much in evidence for the Ranchi team and put in some very brilliant bits of defensive work. Although the Hornets gained two corners in quick succession they could not get past the Ranchi defence, and Sadhu, gaining possession at this point, rushed the ball down to the mouth of the Hornets' goal, where, with the assistance of the other forwards, determined efforts were made to score. Hornets conceded a corner to their opponents, but Rosser cleared from the circle, only to be pulled up by the Ranchi backs before he had got properly going. A bully in the circle for sticks put the Hornets' goal in jeopardy, but the ball was again cleared by their backs, and play was quickly transferred to the other end of the ground. Here again Sadhu came to the front and carried the ball back again to the Hornets' goal where he passed to the inside left who put the ball through. This was disallowed for off-side and the free hit gave Russell and Apcar possession of the ball. The game here became highly exciting, both sets of forwards making combined rushes up and down the field, but failing to penetrate their opponents' defence. After the younger Rosser had been robbed of the ball when within a yard of the Ranchi goal, the ball was quickly sent down to the other end of the field and Hornets had to concede a penalty corner. Nothing resulted from this, but immediately afterwards a free hit was given for sticks against the Hornets. The Hornets' backs failed to clear, and Emmanuel rushed in and scored the first goal, amidst a roar of applause. Half time was called a few minutes after leaving Ranchi one goal up.

From the bully off, on the resumption of play, the Hornets at once attacked in earnest and carried the ball into the Ranchi "25," gaining a corner from which the ball was rushed through, bringing the score even, one goal all. Both teams began to play up all they knew now, and Mabert and Rosser were very conspicuous for the Hornets. A bully inside the circle and a corner hit brought them no luck, and Sadhu gaining possession of the ball ran nearly the whole length of the ground. Here the Rev. Whitley and Suliman came to his assistance, and the ball was transferred to Emmanuel on the outside right who beat Staynor with an amazing shot from a seemingly impossible angle. This put the Ranchi team ahead again, two goals to one. There was not much time to go after this, and an imminent nor'-wester seemed likely to stop the game outright. Both goals were several times at the mercy of the respective forward lines, but no further score was registered, despite the frantic efforts of the Hornets to draw level. The whistle blew for time very shortly after, leaving Ranchi winners of the Beighton Cup for 1906, after having played two of the hardest matches seen for a very long time on the Calcutta maidan. The Honorary Secretary of the I. F. A., in presenting the trophy to the Rev. E. H. Whitley and silver medals to each member of the winning team, congratulated them on the very fine exhibition of hockey which they had given and also referred to the consistent form of the Hornets who had come through from the second round, and had beaten several formidable opponents in the earlier rounds of the competition. THE AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT.

THE first games in this year's Aga Khan Hockey Tournament took place on Tuesday. In order to expedite the play two grounds have been made end to end which involves an invidious distinction being made between each set of competing teams, one being picked for the ground with the grand stand, the other being left, each day, almost deserted. The first day saw the Cathedral High School Old Boys matched against the Connaught Rangers. The Old Boys pressed from the start and it was evident that the Rangers had found themselves on a surface with which they were ill acquainted. For some time play was even towards the Connaught goal, but a combined rush by the Old Boys' forwards gave the inside right a change which entirely defeated the goal-keeper. The soldiers retaliated with a good rush but the Boys' backs were two of the best players in the field and kept the ball a long way from the net and well outside the circle. Nothing more was scored by half time and, despite some excellent combined play by the Boys' forwards, they failed to increase the score in the second half although once or twice the ball got dangerously near the Rangers' goal. Throughout it was a keen, sporting struggle, giving the Old Boys a victory of one to nil.

Pioneers vs. Elphinstone High School.—This also proved an even game but attracted little attention. Throughout the first half the School line was repeatedly crossed, but the Pioneers made nothing of their corners. In the second half play ruled more or less continuously towards the centre of the field, though occasional rushes were made. It was not till just on time, however, that the Pioneers got well inside the School circle and a goal was scored thus avoiding a draw.

The Royal Scots vs. Education Society.—Once more Schoolboys met soldiers but this time with a different ending. The Boys started off well and kept the Scots very busy in their "25." After a time the soldiers got an opening and quickly took the play to the other end and the Schoolboys' goal was badly taxed once or twice. Play continued in the Byculla territory and some hard shots were made and cleverly stopped so that half time was scored with love all. In the second half, however, the Boldiers' superior weight told. Play was at once taken beyond the boys' "25" and the goal-keeper was given considerably more than his fair share of work. The backs helped well but could not help the ball getting into the net as the result of some fine passing. Scarcely five minutes later the Byculla goal in rushing out for a save gave a "sticks." The penalty forced a kick behind and the corner was quickly followed by a second goal. Play followed more evenly, the boys putting in some plucky play, but towards time the Scots made a rush and again scored with comparative ease and so won by three to nil.

The York and Lancasters vs. Bhusaval H. C.—At the same time the York and Lancaster Regiment met the Bhusaval Hockey Club. It was the regiment's game from the start and for some time the ball was never out of the Bhusaval "25." The last named made some sporting attempts but they failed through lack of combination. Half time was called with the score three to nil in the regiment's favour. The second half saw Bhusaval playing up much better and after several attempts they scored. The regiment also scored, however, so that they won by four to one.

The City H. C. vs. The New High School.—Thursday's play consisted of one match the King's Regiment having scratched against the Fort and Proprietary High School Past and Present (a somewhat heavy title for a team). It was a very keen and interesting contest in the match between the City and the New High School. At once the School attacked and nearly got home, but the goal made an excellent save and the City getting the ball rushed the whole length of the field. A corner resulted but no advantage was obtained and soon after another rush took play down to the City circle when the School opened the score. Even play followed and both sides made more mistakes than are ordinarily allowable. After a time the School got advantage but failed to score through bad shooting; the School again played well but the City team bucked up and kept the ball in the School quarters for a period. Then from play in the centre play was taken into the School quarters and a goal resulted. The second half saw some better combination and the rest seemed to have got both teams out of their wild hitting. Nothing more had been done by this time, but when an extension was granted the School made a tremendous effort and gained the odd point so winning by two to one.

The Bombay Gymkhana vs. Bombay Boys.—This match on Thursday proved quite the most uninteresting of the first round. The Gymkhana secured a hollow victory of nine goals to nil, but it must be said that the Gymkhana put in all the "beefs" they knew against their very light opponents. Scoring started at once, Carroll, Fenton, Palmer, and Jones making the goals between them. Play was rarely at the Gymkhana end and the Boys' goal was by no means up to the mark in fact the team is not worthy of more than a junior contest.

The Grant Medical College vs. Parel Gymkhana.—The Medicos had an easy time against the Railway men on Friday. They made a rush at the commencement and at once scored. The Parel men tried to retaliate but again the ball reached their line and was kept there with a lot of hard hitting behind until another goal was scored. Parel then made some good attacks, but they were ill sustained and another score for the Medicos gave them three to nil at half time. On re-sumption Parel pressed well, but their forwards were too slow and so missed scoring. Several attempts ended in the Medicos getting their fourth goal. The fifth followed soon after and completed the scoring, the Railway men making a very plucky show against a far superior team.

Cathedral High School vs. Bombay Customs.—The Customs had an easy thing after the first quarter of an hour when they tired out the Boys. The first score was made by the Customs just before half time, and though after the bully off the Boys put in all they knew they were forced back and three goals were scored in quick succession. Play was then carried for a time into the Customs quarters, but soon went to the other end of the field and three more goals followed leaving the Boys beaten by seven to nil. The most noticeable part of the game was the sporting spirit of the Boys who, but for their lack of Kelly weight, would be as good as anything in the lists.

R. G. A. vs. R. I. M.—Saturday saw the R. G. A. team from Colaba pitted against the R. I. M. Dockyard. The Dockyard showed up wonderfully and opening with a good rush kept the Garrison team busy throughout, Kelly scored first with Jeffery following up soon after. Three goals had been scored fairly easily by half, while Gilder brought up the score to four and to five in the second half the Garrison fairly to score.

Cathedral High School Old Boys vs. Pioneer H. C.—There was not much doubt that the Cathedral Old Boys would prove victors in this. The Boys pressed hard at the start, but were gradually driver back for a time, then from the right wing a good centre was passed on into the net. The Pioneers worked hard and prevented further scoring before half time. The second half, however, saw the Old Boys getting round the Pioneer halves in a splendid way and the game ended with a victor of three to nil for the Schoolboys.

NET-FIVES.

MANY people must feel the need of an active open-air game which can be played in the small spaces dwellers in towns have at their disposal, where lawn-tennis or fives-courts of the standard dimensions are out of the question.

"Net-fives" is the result of an effort to develop such a game, and is a game for two, three, or four players in a court 27 feet by 13 feet with wooden or brick walls and a cement floor. The game has most of the merits of fives, says a writes in The Times, but is very much cheaper; in ordinary circumstances the cost of the court need not exceed Rs. 300, and might be less. Mr. Lancelot Speed, the inventor of the game, had a floor laid at the cost of £4 10s. Doing all the carpenter's work himself, he spent £6 on wood and £1 on wire netting. When the court is built, a "Badminton" net, a few balls at 4½d. each, and rubber shoes complete the equipment. The ball used being a soft one, any old pairs of gloves can be used, as it is not necessary to have them padded as in fives. If ladies wish to join—and they have been found to learn the game quickly and to play it well—they must wear a gymnastic costume, as skirts render play impossible owing to the low flight of the ball.

From the annexed plan it will be seen that in some ways the court represents a miniature tennis court, but with a pent-house on one side only, not at both ends. Although by chance Mr. Speed developed his game without having studied the history of tennis there is an undoubted "reversion to the type" of early forms of that game when it was still played with the hands. In the subjoined plan the ledges and buttresses represent only what happen to be the peculiarities of Mr. Speed's own court; for, of course, in planning a net-fives court any existing side or end walls can be worked in, with their irregularities, which can be made to form hazards in the game after the fashion of the tambour and grille in tennis. Unevenness in the brick-work of walls is of no disadvantage, but the floor must be smooth. It is well to slope the floor slightly towards one end and to arrange in other ways to allow water to drain off. Half-inch match-boarding can be used for walls and pent-house, and if a space is left between the floor and the lowest boards water can escape and sweepings from the floor can be readily cleared away. The height of the side and end walls need not be more than 7 feet; but to secure additional space wire netting should be added, making the total height 12 feet, and over the top more netting (possibly with a larger mesh) should be stretched where it is desirable to prevent the ball falling outside the court. Of course a glass roof would allow play in all weathers, and the ball being a soft one no panes would be broken. As play is generally more popular in the afternoon, it would be well, where possible, to have a side and not an end wall towards the west.

The game is suited for both "singles" and "doubles," and for two against one. It has been found in practice that one player cannot defend a court more than 13 feet wide. Where a "dedans" or space for spectators to see through is required, fine wire netting strained tightly allows the ball to rebound well enough. In designing a court it is well to try to have the entrance to one or other side of the net on the plain side where no pent-house is built.

For the colour of the walls a pale grey-green shade of paint has been found to answer. The colour of the ball should be chosen with reference to that of the walls, so as to show up well against them—a bright yellow is good.

The ball used is a soft one, and cannot cause any injury. It is made of small pieces of sponge covered with a network of silk or string. Those found best adapted to the game have been obtained from Wisbey and Co., Bishopsgate Street within, E.C. The diameter of the ball is 3 inches full, and the weight 1oz. It will stand several days' play. A heavier ball does not play so well; the lighter the ball the better the game.

The rules for net-fives have been drawn up with experience of those for tennis, fives, and squash-racquets; but it is not claimed that they are in any way final, as for any special hazards, etc., rules can be introduced, as in the Harrow "house squash-courts." A study of Marshall's "Annals of Tennis," the "Badminton" and "all England" volumes on tennis, fives, and racquets may lead to ideas.

Mr. Speed has for some years been making experiments with details of his court, such as the position of buttresses, angle of the pent-house, height of net, etc., and believes that the dimensions and the rules now given will be found to lead to a game which is excellent in itself, and is also a thoroughly good introduction to fives with a hard ball in an expensive court.

RULES.

The Service-box.—As the service must not be volleyed, the lines nine inches from the back walls are so placed to prevent the ball being served so gently as not to rise, and also to prevent it falling in the angle of the wall and the floor—(a "nick")—making returns an impossibility.

Piffle-Lines.—Piffle-lines are the lines painted on the floor two feet on each side of the net. Their object is to prevent sneaking play, and standing over the net to smash the ball down.

The Grille.—A grille should be placed in each end wall. The best dimensions are 2 feet length and 1 feet 6 inches height. The lower edge should be 3 feet 6 inches from the floor.

The introduction of the grille is intended to favour close aiming in play. The two grilles need not be in places accurately corresponding to each other in both sides of the court, but advantage can be taken of existing irregularities in the walls.

The grille can be constructed as a box, so that the ball will remain in it. If this cannot be done, a net of string can be stretched over the space indicated, and if small sleigh bells are attached to it, there can never be any doubt as to the grille being fairly struck by the ball.

It counts an ace in favour of the player who gets a ball into the grille in his opponent's court.

Rules for the "Single" Game.

The ball must in every case be hit over the net, and beyond the piffle-lines. (See plan.)

The ball must be fairly hit with a single blow of the hand or wrist and must not touch any other part of the striker's person, under the penalty of losing a stroke.

The ball must not be caught or held in any way except to serve.

The Service.—The ball when served must first hit the slope of the pent-house, or the wall above it, or both. It must not touch the side wall of the pent-house below the slope, or it is a "fault."

The ball must fall within the service-box on its first touching the floor, or it is a "fault."

The First-cut.—The non-server, or striker-out, must not return the service before the ball has touched the floor—i.e., the ball must not be volleyed when service is taken.

One "fault" puts the server out.

After the first-cut the ball is returned alternately by either player.

It is a good return although the ball touch the top of the net.

A "rally" or "bully" is lost by the player who fails to return the ball over the net, and beyond the piffle-line.

If a player in striking a ball should send it so hard that it rebounds from the back wall into or under the net on his opponent's side or between the net and the piffle-line, he loses the stroke.

"Lets."—A "let" (where no ace is scored by or after the serve) is usually agreed on in case of a dispute as to the correctness of a serve, or the fall of a ball inside or beyond the piffle-lines.

It is a "let" if the ball when served falls into a grille. There can be no other "lets."

Scoring.—The best method is that used in fives.

The result of each "rally" is either to add one (an ace) to the score of the server, or to put him out.

With fives-scoring the game is one of 15 points, and if the players are 13 all, the game may, at the option of the "hand-out" side, be set to 5; if 14 all, to 3. (It is not a bad plan for players to change courts by crossing the net when either side reaches a score of 5 or 10 points.)

If players are used to it, the scoring can be that of lawn-tennis; but it has generally been found that games are too short with this scoring.

The Eight-Handed Game, or "Doubles" (Four Players).

When the game is played by four persons, if A and B (with first innings) play C and D, A goes in first and serves from the service-box on the "I" or "in-players'" side of the net.

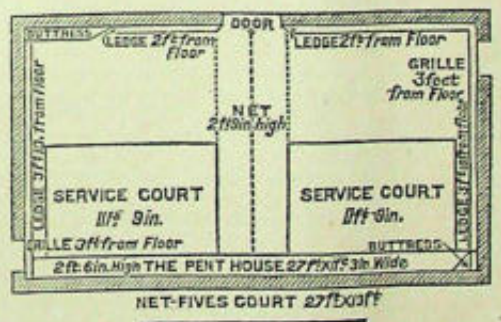
C stands on the service-box of the "O" or the "outplayers'" side.

When A is put out, B takes his place, and when B is put out, the side is "hand-out," and C and then D go in next. C and D serve from the service-box on their side of the net.

"Two out."—If C, when taking the service as striker-out, loses one point to the opposite side, he is said to be one out; if he loses a second point he is said to be two out, and D takes his place to take the service as striker-out. If D, in his turn, lose two points, he is two out, and C becomes striker-out again; and so on until A and B are put out.

A player may return a ball which has struck his partner full on any part of his body except his arm from elbow to wrist, and hand. This rule intended to stop violent slogging at an opponent, and leads to amusing and unexpected returns.

By four players the rule as to piffle-lines can be ignored, except as to service. The ball when served must fall beyond the piffle-line into the service-box.



NET-FIVES COURT 27ft x 13ft

Entered by telegram, but not yet confirmed," is a common thing to find attached to the names of platers belonging to some of the "sharp" division, who seem to require considerable inspiration before making their eleventh-hour entry. One of the clique alluded to could, if he felt so disposed, relate an incident with an obvious moral concerning the use of the "wire" for the purpose mentioned, but as he, with the modesty of his class, will in all probability keep silent, the tale shall be told for him.

To effectually disguise the identity of the gentleman, he shall be known as Mr. Black Discovering by some means unknown to to the majority of men that sundry animals little, if any, above plating form had been entered in a race worth winning, this disinterested sportsman, although it was rapidly nearing the time for the closing of the event, entered a couple of his horses by the medium of the speedy telegram. Then the animals were dispatched to the meeting, and the owner followed in due course, expecting to find he had a soft thing on, and that with him meant having a plunge.

On glancing at the top-weights when the entries were made public, Mr. Black noticed with great satisfaction that they were very moderate indeed, and proceeded to see what impost his candidates had received. Carefully though he searched, however, their manes were not to be found, and hurriedly he interviewed the clerk of the course.

"Oh, yes!" that official said, when asked if the entries had not been received; "but they were too late. Something went wrong with the telegraph wires, I believe."

'Twas even so. An accident to one of the poles had delayed all messages over an hour, with the disastrous result know.

Of course, the affair was noised about, or it would not appear here, and for some time afterwards Mr. Black's temper could be easily upset by asking if he had entered anything by telegram lately.

THE postponed two lengths Novices' handicap was decided this evening before a fair gallery. The entrants were but three in number and they finished in the following order :—

J. S. Munro (12 secs. start ; time—5½secs.) ...	1
H. Jones (5 secs. start : time—50 secs.	2
J. V. Watkins (scratch ; time—15½ secs.)	3

Munro was in front all the way, having been treated too leniently in respect of his handicap. Watkins was a good third.

The Horse.

THE HORSE IN DAYS GONE BY.

THOSE who are fond of the horse may be interested in some scraps of information gathered from a little book, which was published in 1726, a copy of which the writer picked up in a shepherd's hut on an Australian sheep run, entitled "The Farrier's and Horseman's Dictionary." The author was evidently a man of great erudition, and his method of approaching his subject and treating it, so far as it was understood in those days, emphasizes much of the simple wisdom, as well as the errors and superstitions of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Many of his precepts have not yet been improved upon, and though it is probable that our standard of requirements in the matter of horseflesh, and our knowledge of what is honest in dealing with it, has improved much since the days in which he wrote, yet one cannot but feel that his sincerity is unimpeachable. He lets us into the secrets of the jockey and horse dealer with such apparent and ingenuous faith in our appreciation of the trouble, he has taken for us, that though we may not feel inclined to allow our help to use the means he describes to make our horses seem other than they are, we cannot find it in our hearts to quarrel with him on the score of the benefits which he wishes to confer on them.

The Horse, he tells us in defining the "noble Beast," is a Creature by Nature valiant, strong and nimble, and of all other Beasts the most apt and able to endure the most extreme Labour. The quality of his composition being so moist that extreme Heat will not dry up his Strength, and extreme Cold freeze the warm Temper of his spirits. He is gentle and loving to Mankind, docile, and when an impression is fixed in his Brain, not apt to be forgetful. He is wakeful above most other Beasts, and will go through his Labour with a most empty Stomach. He is generally cleanly and of a grateful Scent.

The book is a very quaint and curious little collection of partly forgotten lore, and contains among other things "Direction for the Knowledge of Horses, or Instructions How to make a right Judgment of their Goodness and Imperfections," some of these directions being so very ludicrous and unexpected that it is worth while to quote them, if not for equine at least for human amusement. Some of the definitions too, are full of unconscious humour, and a few of the prescriptions would be quite sufficient to make a modern horse's hair stand on end, or "become up-right," as the little book quaintly puts it, in treating of a cure for horses whose hair is in the habit of assuming this unusual position. There are directions for almost every possible situation in which a rider might find himself and the paces of the horse are particularly considered in treating of the education he ought to receive. If his movements are not sufficiently brisk, the "Aid of the Tongue" is strongly recommended, this being, a sort of "agreeable Clacking, or a certain Sound, which the Horseman makes in striking his Tongue against the Roof of his Mouth when he would animate the horse, and sustain him, and make him work well in the Menage." If, however, he is so lethargic as to be unmoved by this gentle mode of encouragement, we may fear that he is attacked by the "Sleeping Evil," a disease which will end by making him "sleep continually and deprive him of Memory, Appetite and all Alacrity of Spirit ; white and dun horses are most subject to this Distemper, which proceeds from cold." In order to effect a cure for it, we must "keep him continually awake by Noises and Frights. Then bleed him in the Neck and Palate of the Mouth, and let his drink be water, in which Camomile, Wheatblack Star, Bran, Salt and Vinegar have been boiled ; make it lukewarm, and it will not be improper to put Parsley seed and Fennel seed into it. Also perfume his head and make him Sneeze and anoint the Palate of his Mouth with Honey and Mustard. Bathe his legs, and stop his hoofs with Bran, Salt and Vinegar boiled together. Apply it as hot as it can be borne, and let the stable be lithsome and full of noise. You may also hold to his Nose Volatile Spirits or Salts, as Sal Amoniack and Hartshorn." When the horse has sufficiently enjoyed this treatment, we are led to infer that he will be perfectly cured—unless perchance he should not survive it—and his mettle and spirit will return in all their pristine vigour.

Now, there are some persons, we are told, who confound "Fieryness with Vigor or High Mettle," and the definition of the two qualities is worth recording. "Fieryness is an earnest and immodest desire of Horses to go forwards, and are subject to fret, trample and dance, through the Desire they have to gallop, nor will suffer any horse to go before them. Such Horses are good for nothing but to fatigue the rider and themselves. A vigorous and true mettled Horse is one that is very cold in his actions, but very obedient to the Spurs; whose sides are all very sensible ; though we can not say but Fiery Horses are sometimes very high mettled ; but it is their fault to be so, with this fretful and fiery Disposition."

There is a charming disregard of grammar and sequence about these remarks, born of the days when each man was a law unto himself as to the way in which he should express his thoughts, for as long as his general drift was intelligible to his readers, the average author of two centuries ago recked little of an occasion and local obscurity in style or expression. Yet the author evidently writes for all sorts and conditions of horsemen and horsewomen, both the most cultivated as well as professionals of a lower type, and he does not disdain to give us among other things a recipe to "Make an old Horse seem young," to "Make a white star in a horse's forehead or elsewhere," to "Make a red or a black star," or to "Dye a mane or tail red or scarlet, yellow or gold." The method of making an aged horse seem but six years old would to-day call forth so much just indignation from humane societies that I will not venture to quote it. Though I fear that some of the directions are but too well known in certain quarters, but the quaintly callous way of stating these directions reminds us of the fact that our great great great grandfathers were far less timorous on the subject of pain in animals than are we. As to the beautiful colours we may produce in our horses' manes and tails "by boiling them in the Dye," to be done by means of a charcoal brazier, held up to the proper height from the ground, with a board between it and the horse's body as a humane precaution against the heat, we are hardly likely to appreciate them, unless scarlet manes and tails should come into fashion again.

There is, however much humanity as well as worldly wisdom about the following directions for feeding a horse, but though the substance of them is well known, the method of stating them is charmingly naive : "If there be any particular meat or drink that you would have the Horse eat, that you know is good for him, and he refuses it, do not thrust it violently upon him, but win him to it by gentle Means and Allurements, especially when he is most hungry and dry, and always give him less than he would have and in order to bring him to it sooner, to mix that he loves most with that he loves least, till both become alike familiar. And by this means the Horse will not be a stranger to anything that is good and wholesome."

A last piece of advice as to the management of horses on secret expeditions might be very useful to couples about to elope, should they intend to ride away on horseback. The hint comes in connection with a little dissertation of the "Cry" of the horse, at any time unpleasantly loud, and might be exceedingly disastrous in its results to a lady, the success of whose hopes depended upon a silent transport. This cry or neigh is not a sound which is heard so very often, and yet accidental circumstances may arise at any moment to produce it, more probably perhaps when silence is especially desired than at any other time. So the author counsels his readers "fairs" to "tie a list of woollen cloth in many folds about the tongue, and he will neither Neigh nor make any extraordinary Noise with his Voice, when you are upon any expedition that would not have your horse to Neigh or make a Noise." STRAY NOTES.

WE are told that the improvements taking place at the London Zoological Gardens would astonish some of the old-time visitors. Old buildings have been removed and given place to up-to-date houses, and efforts are constantly being made to show the inhabitants to the best advantage with natural surroundings. It is difficult to record the arrivals of new animals, so frequent and numerous are they, and on every side one notes improvements and extensions. Another bridge across the canal is contemplated, and this, when completed, will greatly add to the convenience of visitors. With reference to the Prince of Wales's collection, it is proposed to exhibit the animals as a complete collection on the north bank of the canal which will be reached by the new bridge.

There has been deposited in the Insect House at the London Zoo a specimen of the bird-eating spider, which earns its name by occasionally including in its menu some of the brilliantly-hued humming birds and vari-coloured finches which abound in the South American tropics. It is doubtful whether the silken threads which he spins in profusion constitute his most effective tackle for securing his prey ; indeed, it is more probable that the little birds get caught through alighting upon the banana and other leaves in the twisted folds of which the spider makes its home. The similarity of his colouring to the bark of trees, to which he attaches himself, is also a powerful factor in enabling him to approach his prey. The bird-eating spider is much smaller, although not less ferocious in appearance, than the tarantula. The body of a full-grown tarantula is as big as a hen's egg, and on an average it gives from 20 to 40 yards of silk, the weaving of which was expected at one time to prove a very considerable industry in some of the Australian Colonies. The silken output of the bird-eating spider is greater in proportion ; but little, if any, of this material will be seen in the vivarium which forms its new home at Regent's Park. It has now no use for a web, for it is fed on the larger and more succulent variety of the ordinary cockroach.

The product known as "tortoise-shell" is in reality the shell of a species of sea-turtle ; or more accurately it is the skin of the turtle, for it consists not of the bony covering or shell proper, but the thin outer scales that overlie it. It is perhaps not generally known—certainly not so widely as it ought to be—that this so-called tortoise-shell of commerce, the material from which combs and hairpins, plain and ornamental, are made, besides, a multitude of trinkets for pocket, desk, and dressing-table, is obtained at the cost of the systematic torture of the animals from whose bodies it is taken. The shelling process varies in different countries ; but in every case it is cruel. We find it stated on the authority of many trustworthy observers that in order to remove the shell of their victim the turtle-fishers have recourse to fire. Here, for example, is the account quoted by Darwin, in his "Naturalist's Voyage round the World" :—

"We saw several turtle, and two boats were then employed in catching them . . . . A man standing ready in the bow dashes through the water upon the turtle's back ; then clinging with both hands by the shell of its neck, he is carried away till the animal becomes exhausted and is secured. Captain Moresby informs us that in the Chagos Archipelago, in the same ocean, the natives by a horrible process take the shell from the back of the living turtle. It is covered with burning charcoal, which causes the outer shell to curl upwards : it is then forced off with a knife, and before it becomes cold is flattened between boards."

The wretched animal is not killed, but is allowed to crawl away or turned back into the sea to re-plate itself, to be put through the torture again as soon as the new growth of the shell-segments (thirteen in all) is mature. Boiling water is also used, but more generally the plates are detached by the application of fire.

A writer in the Evening Post (New York), who visited the island of El. Roncador on a turtle-hunting expedition at the invitation of one who was engaged in the business, gives the following particulars of the cruelty as he saw it :—

"At night the fishers conceal themselves along the shore as well as possible, and when the turtles come up out of the water on the beach they rush forth and turn them over on their backs with iron hooks, leaving them secure in this position until morning. It is the method by which the scales are loosened which is the repulsive part of the business. The turtles are not killed, as that would lead to extermination in a very few years. After capturing them the fishers wait for daylight to complete the work. The turtles are turned over again in their natural position and fastened firmly to the ground by means of pegs ; then a bunch of dried leaves or sea-grass is spread evenly over the back of the turtle and set afire. The heat is not great enough to injure the shell, merely causing it to separate at the joints. A large blade, very similar in shape to a chemist's spatula, is then inserted horizontally between the laminæ, which are gently pried from the back. Great care must be taken not to injure the shell by too much heat, and yet it is not forced off until it is fully prepared for separation by a sufficient amount of warmth. The operation, as one may readily imagine, is the extreme of cruelty, and many turtles do not survive it. Most of them do live, however, and thrive, and in time grow a new covering, just as a man will grow a new finger nail in place of one he may lose.

A Doctor took it into his head to go rabbit shooting, and started out bright and early on a beautiful morning, fully armed for game. About four o'clock in the afternoon he returned, tired out and empty-handed, telling his wife he hadn't killed a thing, whereupon she remarked triumphantly : "I told you so," adding in the next breath : "If you had stayed at home and attended to your legitimate busines you might have been more successful."

Monday, 7th May 1906.

IT is unfortunate that the meteorological conditions are invariably against the Flower Show and the downpour we had on Sunday night and Monday morning prevented many late exhibits from coming in. The pity of it is that the weather had been absolutely perfect up to this and everything was in grand condition ; it must have been a great disappointment to those who had prepared for the show and were unable to send in. The same cause effected the attendance which can scarcely be described as a full one. The Joint Honorary Secretaries, Messrs. F. A. Möller and G. H. Cave, and Mr. D. S. Murray as Honorary Treasurer, worked hard for the success of the show and with the nice tact which pleases everybody.

Mr. Morganstern, of the Darjeeling Farm and Nursery Company, carried off the "Blue Ribbon" of the show, the Lieutenant-Governor's Prize, with a very effective group of Pilargoniums, Petunias, Colombi, Aquilegias, etc., set off with a tasteful arrangement of Palms.

There were seventeen exhibits for the principal ladies' prize, and this was awarded to Mrs. C. T. Weston for a beautiful table decoration of Vanda Roxburghi orchids. Mrs. E. A. Wernicke took the second prize in this division, and Mrs. Shannon the third. Many other tables came in for much admiration, particularly those of Mrs. Maidlow and Mrs. O'Malley.

There was a good display in the vegetables and fruits divisions but there should have been more exhibitors for this class. The following were the prize winners :—

THE PROGRESS OF POLO AT HOME.

WHILE ways, means, and methods are debated and alterations of rule discussed, the game itself continues to gain in popularity either to prove that polo is not a "rich man's game" in England or that the number of rich men are increasing with striking rapidity. The spread of the game is well shown by comparing the list of clubs given in Captain Miller's New Guide and Almanac for the current year with earlier lists of clubs. This year, we learn from the list referred to, there are 49 clubs in England, 16 in Ireland, and 1 in Scotland: turning up the list given in the edition of the late Mr. Moray Brown's "Polo" published in 1896 we find there were in that year 27 clubs in England, 12 in Ireland, and 1 in Scotland. We can find reasons for the comparatively slender increase in the number of Irish clubs: the atmosphere of the unfortunate country is not one that tempts men of money to remain there and England gains what Ireland loses. Polo has never taken very deep root north of Tweed: a curious thing, for there are no keener hunting men than the followers of the several Scottish packs of hounds and it is from among the hunting men of the rising generation, that the majority of polo recruits are forthcoming. Turning to England, the fact that the number of clubs has increased from 27 to 49 in ten years, and that despite the collapse of several among the older provincial clubs, is sufficient proof of the growing popularity of the game and necessity to exercise care in framing new rules or altering old ones lest the spread of polo be handicapped. We can have very little doubt but that the rise of numerous new clubs has been largely due to the work done by pony breeders under the auspices of the Riding and Polo Pony Society. Dearth of suitable ponies was the stumbling block from the date the game took form and shape in England and we have the changes in height sanctioned as lawful to witness the endeavours made to remove this difficulty.

A satisfactory feature of the new list of clubs is the number of regimental institutions, these indicate that the attitude of the authorities in Pall Mall is at least indulgent and that the rules formulated a season or two ago for the conduct of the regimental tournament have been found to work satisfactorily from the point of view of players as well as from that of the authorities who direct the destinies of soldiers' polo.

We do not suppose that the ponies used by members of provincial clubs are all of a height that would satisfy that Hurlingham or Ranelagh player, nor is there is any reason why they should be. It has often appeared to us that the proposition which was put forward some years back by a writer in Baily's Magazine might with great advantage have been adopted by clubs which do not seek to gain distinction in the county tournament, but have been found to play the game for amusement and nothing else. That proposition, in effect, was that the game should be divided into classes regulated by the

...on ponies ...14 hand, and ...ponies of 13-2 and ... that such an arrange- ...ing to promote the game ... cardinal difficult is to get ponies ...ght, stout enough to play on. To this ...nd answer that the difficulty is not one only ...eight but of quality, and that if men on the Welsh border in Hampshire, Devon and the Fell country are content to use the native ponies there to be found, cheap and ready to their hands they can get quite as much fun out of polo as we in this county obtain from the station game where the size of ponies is not scrutinised with the care that is exercised when the serious business of a great tournament demands loyal observance of rule.

No inconsiderable changes have been wrought in the British native breeds of ponies during the last few years, though such changes necessarily do not affect the average of the "wild" droves. The greater need of attention devoted to large ponies of course accounts for the superior strenght and quality of the classes of these at the annual show held at Islington, but the character of many of the animals exhibited in the "small" classes has been cordially commended. Thus in the class for brood mares not exceeding 12-2 only four entries were received for the last show: that for mares under 13-2 was also poorly supported; but that which accepted mares up to 14-2 was a strong one both in numbers and quality. So with the stallions: and it would have been observed by those who keep an eye on these matters that the "Eastern" class was also a good one. The breeding of winners is not by any means always given, and it would be rash to assume that because a breeder lives in Hampshire, his successful pony was one of forest blood. We are only safe when regarding those classes restricted to the "mountain or moorland" ponies which are being used increasingly to cross with more breedy animals. Comparison of the entries at this Society's Show during the years of its existence indicate a steady, if not rapid, increase and, we may fairly assume, the existence of a larger stock of ponies from which to choose: and the larger the choice the more reasonable the price at which a useful pony can be bought, ergo the greater the facilities for playing polo and material for forming clubs.

It goes without saying that the average provincial or county club, save in a few favoured cases, has but a small members' roll. To play polo with any regularity we need leisure as well as money, and the man who has not the necessary leisure is likely to find himself out in the cold. It is curious, moreover, to observe the viccissitudes through which the provincial club passes in course of its career: we have in mind an Essex Club which, during its career of eleven years, has changed its ground four times and its name twice. The supply of polo players, though Essex probably is the residential county of more rich men per square mile than any other home county and is great as a breeding area, appears to be limited: the original members of a club grow too heavy to play, marry and give up the game or drop out for some other reason: and there being no new blood to replace the old, the club collapses or follows the fortunes of the surviving members to pastures new. The polo club may in future days boast a continuity and vitality equal to that of the local cricket club; but pace the increase in number which we welcome as a most promising and cheering symptom we doubt whether that era has been reached yet. It is to the regiment that we must look for continuity of polo existence as represented by the club outside the great metropolitan centres, though we hasten to add that there are now on the club list names which have held place there since such lists were first compiled.

A performance almost equal to that frequently talked of feat, "driving a coach-and-four through an Act of Parliament," was achieved by Sam Page, the driver of the Winchester mail, on 16th September 1795. It seems that Mr. Lackington, a well-known bookseller and publisher of that period, had a dispute with Mr. Willan, the horse-dealer, respecting the size of his (Mr. L.'s) shop, the "Temple of the Muses," in Finsbury Square, which the publisher said was big enough to admit of a four-in-hand being driven round it.

As both were positive the other was wrong, a bet of five hundred guineas was made, and Sam Page was selected by the bookseller to settle the wager. On the day named the Winchester stage-coach, full of passengers, was driven in, round and then out of Mr. Lackington's shop, without doing the least damage, the proprietor, in his own carriage, following the mail.

Sam Page was presented with twenty guineas by the winner for having successfully accomplished the feat.

Sporting Notes.

WE publish to-day the programme of the Meerut Autumn Meeting. The dates are the 10th, 13th and 15th November and entries close on the 1st August, 15th September and 3rd November.

There are to be twelve classes catered for at the forthcoming Simla Horse Show, plus a couple of jumping competitions, and there are to be two prizes in each class. The show opens on the 8th proximo.

The shooting party of His Highness the Maharaja of Cooch Behar comprised himself, Major and Lady Violet Crawley, His Highness the Maharaja of Bikanir and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Edwards. The total bag was—fourteen tigers, of which the biggest were 9 feet 11½ inches, 9 feet 10 inches, and 9 feet 9 inches, a fine bull buffalo with horns 9 feet on outside curve, and a bear. On two occasions they bagged two tigers in one day.

Our readers may be interested in the recent visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to the extent of desiring to possess a lasting memento of their progress through the country: if so, we commend to their attention Messrs. Higginbotham's announcement re the Souvenir Album which appears among our advertisements on page IX to-day.

A. Pratt, the Rangoon trainer, has arrived in Calcutta; he will probably open a stable and may train a few for the Monsoon Meetings.

We regret to note a serious riding accident of which Lieut. McLeod, of the 21st Pioneers, was the victim, on Thursday last. While schooling a horse over hurdles on the Poona course the animal fell and Lieut. McLeod was carried off to the Wanowrie hospital unconscious.

In our London Sporting Letter to-day will be found full details of the race for the Two Thousand and One Thousand Guineas, reports of the big wrestling match between Hackenschmidt and Madrali, of the finals in the Worlds Tennis Championship, the first meeting of the L. A. C., and the Public Schools Championships.

The B.-N. R. time tables have just been subjected to certain changes which sportsmen will do well to note: details are given in the advertisement further on.

H. E. The Governor of Bombay, accompanied by Colonels Grantham, Ferris, Forbes and his staff were shooting in Kolhapur lately. They were disappointed of a tiger which H. E. slightly wounded, but Colonel Grantham got a black panther, supposed to be the first ever brought to bag in Kolhapur.

"Rapier," who makes the following remarks in the I. S. and D. News, will find many of our readers in complete accord therewith:—"One of the exasperating spectacles which we see racing is some utterly malevolent brute of a horse who resolutely declines to face, or indeed go near, the barrier he observes. The rest of the field are standing still in their appointed places ready to go, but the one recalcitrant beast stations himself thirty or forty yards behind, and, if he is not turning his flanks to the gate, turning his tail to it. By degrees the spirit of insubordination spreads. Another of the field begins to back and kick, this sets a neighbour off, and in a minute or two the lot are at sixes and sevens. Then they are got into line again, all but the original offender; he is still at it, and gradually the others again start their vagaries. Once more the line is made with the single exception. 'Why doesn't he let them go and leave that wretch!' somebody asks in angry tones, and there is cordial agreement that he—the starter—ought to do so. It is a difficult point! The horse has been trained for the race, and his entrance paid so that the owner is entitled to a run for his money; perhaps also the animal has been backed, and it will be more than annoying to pay over a horse that never started, though he was technically a starter. On the other hand, the unruly one is upsetting the chances of, at any rate, several of the rest, who were well conducted till he began, and probably there is a heavily weighted horse or two with something between 9st. and 10st. on his back, whose prospects are diminishing in consequence of the burden he has to support. Not seldom the troublesome one gets a big advantage in the end, for while the others are standing still he at length moves up, and, the starter having concentrated attention on him, the barrier flies up as he reaches it. To be thus in action instead of standing still means a huge pull in favour of the mover. Certainly none of the present starters lack patience; at times I am inclined to think that they exhibit almost too much."

The third Simla Gymkhana was held at Annandale on Saturday, the 19th instant, in the presence of a big gathering. We append details.

1st Event.—Gentlemen mounted will pick up a basket, take vegetables off tilting posts and place them in basket. First in with vegetables wins. Six competed. Major V. Brooke was first and Mr. Whitby second.

2nd Event.—Millinery Stakes. Gentlemen ride to ladies with a piece of ribbon. Ladies match ribbon from an assortment, and tie a bow round gentlemen's neck, the latter then rides back. First past the post with well tied bow and correct colour wins. Twelve couples competed. Major and Mrs. Boudier won, with Capt. Young and Miss Du Cane Smithe second.

3rd Event.—Missing word competition. Gentleman will be given sealed envelope enclosing a sentence with certain words omitted. He will ride to the lady and together they will fill in the missing words. Gentleman then rides back to the winning post. Fourteen couples entered. Mr. and Mrs. Cogswell won. Mr. Howard and Mrs. Buck and Captain and Mrs. Rivett Carnac a tie for second place.

4th Event.—Ladies' Egg and Spoon Race. Seventeen ladies entered, Lady Violet Elliot winning with Mrs. Buck second.

5th Event.—Lloyd-Lindsay Competition. Gentlemen and ladies ride 300 yards to firing point. Gentlemen dismount, while ladies hold horses, gentlemen fire 5 shots at target, mount and complete course. Marks for accuracy of shooting and quickness. Miss Triscott and Mr. Whitby were first, Lady Ruby Elliot and Captain Bulkeley a mark behind, and Mrs. Buck and Mr. Howard third.

Mr. A. W. Grosser has, we see, renamed Bassini, the horse over which he and a certain local dealer went to law: the unfortunate quadruped is now called Swindle!

The I. P. A. Polo Pony fair will be held at Umballa next November.

The officers of the 93rd Highlanders, stationed at Poona, brought off their first paperchase this season early on the morning of the 17th instant. Starting from the Mess the course lay towards the west of the ranges to Bibgari, thence viâ Khandwa Kwid to Wanowri prison where the finish was and where the officers were "At Home." There were quite a nice lot of jumps and the pace was fast for most of the way. Messrs. J. Kennedy and Maclaine laid the paper and among the field were Major A. F. Mackenzie, Capt. Morris, Messrs. R. R. Forbes, Cox, Meade, Belvoir, Skewes, Gordon, Huntley Wright, Bradley, Gout, Black and Vandergucht.

Apparently Monsieur Edmond Blanc's chance of winning any of the classic races in England this year is small, as his filly Blue Fly (Flying Fox—Bluette) who is entered for the Oaks and Leger, as well as the Coronation Stakes was beaten on Sunday, April 29th, in the French One Thousand Guineas by her stable companion Sais (Flying Fox—Venia), the latter ridden by G. Stern won easily by four lengths in very fast time.

Sais was bred and born in the Jardy stud and is entered for the French Oaks and Grand Prix, but has no English engagements.

Blue Fly who, in addition to being entered in the above mentioned English races, is also engaged in all the most important French races, was bred by Monsieur M. T. Donsdebès, and as a two-year-old ran three times, twice second, once beaten a neck by the undefeated colt Prestige, and on her third and last appearance last season she won the Criterium International from seven others.

Mr. W. H. Walmsley's celebrated little mare Housemaid II. landed in England, en route for Ireland, none the worse for her voyage. She goes to the stud at once.

Those who remember good old Highborn, the Maharaja of Cooch Behar's gallant black gelding, who won the Viceroy's Cup in 1892 and 1893, the Durbhungah Cup in 1892, the Merchants' Cup in 1893 and 1894, and other good races, may be interested to read a reference to him that comes from Australia. In the course of an article on "Buckjump Riders' Experience," appearing in the Sydney Referee, Jack Prendergast says:—"Highborn, who ran second to Carbine in the Melbourne Cup, and afterwards won the Sydney Cup and many races in India, was the next worst buckjumper to Bobs and Dargin's Grey I have ever been on. After he had thrown a number of jockeys, he was handed over to me to break him in. I can promise you it was a lively experience. It was after I had finished with him that he earned a reputation as a racehorse; none of the jockeys could get any good out of him before."

Mr. Rowland Hudson, well-known in Tirhoot planting and sporting circles, recently had a very bad spill out pigsticking: he broke his collar bone and some ribs.

News is coming to hand every week now, showing that buyers for India are busy down in Australia making purchases and fulfilling their commissions. Those with commissions for high classed horses are finding some difficulty in securing their requirements, for the race horse in Australia appears to be getting yearly a more costly article. This may appear at first sight a great advantage to Australian sellers, but it is a factor which we have little doubt will lead to trouble. More and more commissions every year are diverted from Australia to England, as Indian owners are now beginning to realise that they can get a superior article from the old country.

One of the principal purchases noted in this week's Australian papers is that of Olynthus for India, by R. S. Hart. Olynthus is a big bay gelding by Corinth—The Oaks, a seven-year-old and a very good jumper. He should have quite a good chance of winning this year's Indian Grand National, but he is not such a good horse as Kipling. The horse belonged to Mr. R. Allen, who has been selling off his string, and it is announced in the papers that Olynthus was sold to a Mr. Foulsham for 170 guineas. As a matter of fact he did not change hands at all on this occasion, but was bought during the week by R. S. Hart. We notice he was handicapped in a hurdle race at Randwick, which was run on the 29th April to carry top weight, 12st., with Ryde 11st. 2lbs., and the rest of the field 10st. 2lbs. and under. In a hurdle race at the A. J. C. Autumn Meeting on 15th April Ryde, carrying 9st 12lbs., proved the winner, while Olynthus, carrying 11st. 8lbs., finished unplaced, though he started a hot favourite. Last year Olynthus had no less that five wins to his credit out of fourteen runs, though strictly speaking the two first of these were two small hurdle races in November and December 1904. His next win was not till May 1905 when he won a £108 hurdle race from a small field, and another of £112 which he won the same month, the celebrated Grand National Steplechase horse, Bellis, running unplaced in this race, carrying 1st. 10lbs.; as also did Greenstone carrying 9st. 7lbs., which was imported to India last season by Mr. O. M. D. Bell. On 3rd June Oblivion, carrying 9st. 8lbs, beat him carrying 11st. by five lengths, with Transval unplaced carrying 11st. 4lbs. This was £176 hurdle race at the A. J. C. and two days later at the same meeting he wins the hurdle race carrying 11st. 4lbs. with Transvaal II. carrying 10st. 12lbs., Oblivion being a non-starter. At Williamstown the following month Oblivion won a hurdle race from a field of twenty runners carrying 10st. 8lbs., with Olynthus 11st. 3lbs. and York 9st. 12lbs. unplaced. He was handicapped at 11st. 4lbs. for the V. R. C. Grand National Hurdle Race, which was won by York, but made no show, and he again ran unplaced four days later.

Dea, a two-year-old brown filly by Grafton—Thea, was also announced to have been sold at Mr. R. Allen's sale to a Mr. Kennedy for 305 guineas. This filly, as we are already aware, has really been purchased for the Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apcar by Mr. McKenna.

Dea, though only a two-year-old, has already raced on two or three occasions and shows very good promise. She ran unplaced in the Juvenile Stakes of £192 on 30th December last. On 13th January, however, she ran second to Beckey in the Nursery Handicap, the race being run in 1min. 3½secs. for the 5 furlongs, being beaten by three lengths. On 26th January, in the A. J. C. First Nursery Handicap of £172, she ran third to Poseidon, who won by four lengths with half a length between second and third. The time for this race was exceptionally smart, being 1min. 1¾secs. for 5 furlongs, so she the ought to be pretty hot stuff.

Mr. Apcar's other purchase, Airlock, is a black mare, a five-year-old by Lochiel—Fiancée and has three wins to her credit. As a four-year-old she won the Birthday Handicap of £72 by six lengths, cutting out the 6 furlongs in the smart time of 1min. 15¾secs., carrying 8st. 12lbs. She followed this up by winning the Flying Mile at Warwick Farm, her very next appearance, by two lengths in 1min. 46½ses., carrying 9st. 12lbs. She put up a very brilliant performance on 25th November, winning the Osterley Handicap of £198 over 6 furlongs in 1min. 13secs. She carried 9st. 2lbs., was second top weight and defeated a field of seventeen runners finishing three lengths in front of the second horse.

The four-year-old bay horse, The Master, by Projectile (the sire of Long Tom) out of Housemaid, has been purchased by Mr. F. S. Reynolds for India. The price is stated to be a high one. He has a very good reputation in Queensland, where he has won a number of races. On 24th April 1905 he won the Novice Handicap of 1 mile in 1min. 44½secs. and on 27th May won the Queensland St. Leger Stakes of £810 by three lengths, but two days later carrying 8st. 3lbs., he ran unplaced to Fitzgrafton when he won the Brisbane Cup carrying 10st. However, on the 3rd June, he won the Moreton Handicap of £250 of 1¼ miles in 2mins. 8¾secs., and another 1¼ mile race the following week. In August he won the Exhibition Handicap of 1½ miles in 2mins. 40¾secs., carrying 9st. 10lbs. and in January he won the January Handicap over 1¼ miles.

At Messrs. H. Chisholm's sale the following well-known horses were offered:—Machine Gun realised top price, namely, 950 guineas, but Charles Stuart was passed in when bidding ceased at 800 guineas, the reserve being 2,000 guineas. Ryde, who won a hurdle race the other day, was passed in at 120 guineas, while for Proceed, second in the Sydney Cup, Truce and the well-known Steeplechaser Up-to Date received no bid. Mr. R. B. Lamotte bought a chestnut gelding Mistake, by Riversdale, a six-year-old, probably for the Hunter class.

Mr. R. McKenna has also purchased a brown gelding, Trustee, by Inspiration, out of Orphan Girl, a five-year-old, and a bay gelding by Simmex imp. out of Carbina, four years, while Mr. F. S. Reynolds has bought a bay gelding by Rifleite, out of Viverly—Grandmaster a three-year-old while Mr. D. Norton has bought a half sister of two of the above, a two-year-old called Olive Lee by Refleite out of Orphan Girl.

An instance of what wonderful pluck some horses have is shown by the case of Merry Jest, who fractured two fetlocks when running in a steeplechase the other day at Randwick. Although it is certain that he was hurt when he dropped right back over a mile from home, he kept going and got over all the jumps, but was in such a bad way entering the straight that the rider had to pull him up. It is believed that Merry Jest fractured one fetlock comparatively early in the race and the other at the last jump. He, of course, had to be destroyed.

[illegible]a Association, [illegible] of planter sports- [illegible] are adversely affected [illegible]ew game regulations, have [illegible]overnment of Eastern Bengal and [illegible]est which we reproduce below. The [illegible]t is that under these rules reserved forests [illegible]ually become close preserves for officials—the new rules have caused the same just outcry in other parts of India—and they make suggestions we trust the authorities will carefully consider and, if possible, act upon. The letter runs as follows :—

The Chairman, Assam Branch Indian Tea Association, has addressed the following to Mr. P. C. Lyon, Chief Secretary to the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam, with regard to the rules for the regulation of Sport in Reserved Forests :—

Sir,—The attention of my committee has been drawn to the rules for the regulation of sport in reserved forests, as published in the Assam Gazette of the 18th March 1905.

The subject came up at the annual general meeting held in November last, and again was before the committee at its meeting on the 10th March 1906.

The rules (clause 3) prohibit all shooting, trapping, or fishing within a reserve forest without a permit, the fee for which is Rs. 10. This permit is available only from the 1st June to the 31st January, while clause 5 admits of special permits to approved sportsmen between the 1st January and the 30th June, at an additional fee of from Rs. 30 to Rs. 20 for residents of the province. Clause 8 exempts gazetted officers of the Forest Service, Assam Commission, and Police from taking out permits.

My committee desire to say that any rules tending towards the preservation of game and a close season would meet with its full support, and a resolution to this effect was passed and sent to Government in the middle of 1903.

The regulations, as published, place the two best months for shooting outside the conditions of the ordinary permit-clause 3 save under clause 5, when an additional fee is demanded, exclusive of that charged for each animal killed, a fee which seems out of all proportion to the privileges offered.

In other parts of India, as the Government say, the best large game shooting is virtually confined to the Government Reserved Forests ; there, the residents beyond Government officers are few, while substantial fees are rightly imposed on those who come to India merely for sport. But in Assam the reverse is the case, the permanent residents of this Valley form the majority, gazetted officers being few, while the "globe-trotting" sportsman, where not the guest of Government, is almost unknown ; hence the same stringent rules for sport in Reserved Forests would seem to be unnecessary, and certainly no reason apparently exists for the freedom extended to the official as compared with the restrictions imposed on the non-official class of sportsmen, the latter being—we venture to say—quite as good sportsmen and being more permanently resident have everything to gain by the preservation of game, the necessity for which they were the first to draw the attention of Government to.

It is true that in Assam the area of Reserved Forests is small as compared with the total area of waste and jungle, but as such shooting tracts as the Kasirunga and Lakoa Bheels have lately been made into Reserves under Forest Administration, and as other tracts may be similarly treated, the Reserved Forests under the regulations published become virtually a close preserve for the official class.

I am further to draw attention to clauses 6 and 7, under rule 5 of permit B, of the regulations under review. In Assam, where considerable stretches of jungle exist in the neighbourhood of Forest Reserve and no sport is obtainable until after the jungle is burnt in February or later, the conditions under the above clauses, viz., to give 24 hours' notice previously to entering any Forest Reserve, and that every permit holder shall be accompanied by a forest guard, practically closes the reserve, to any resident sportsman shooting in the neighbourhood should game—on being followed—once enter the reserve, save as before stated to the privileged class of Government officers who can alone follow game into the reserve without notice and without a guard.

We have the honour to respectfully ask that the permit—Form A—be altered so as to admit of sport under it from the 1st September to 30th June following, as we take no exception to sport in the reserve being under some form of permit ; but we submit that save for gazetted forest officers whose duty it is to conserve the Government forests, permits as suggested under Form A should be made compulsory for all Europeans resident in the valley, official and non-official alike, while the special permits under Form B might be made applicable only to non-residents of Assam.

It seems not unlikely that pigeon-shooting may one day be prohibited at Monte Carlo. The Prince of Monaco recently wrote to the Paris Figaro condemning pigeon-shooting, and, someone having written to him on the subject, he replied that "he hoped that one day the sport would be banished from Monaco." We believe that the company which have the concession of the gaming tables also hold the famous pigeon-shooting ground, and in this case it is a far cry to the banishment of pigeon-shooting from Monte Carlo, as the company has, we believe, a lengthy term of years yet to run.

The Ceylon Observer understands that it is the opinion of a leading sportsman that if Government is both unable and unwilling to enforce the existing rules of the Game Ordinance, any further and at all more complicated rules cannot be enforced? If the rules became more elaborate, some sportsmen in the island would give up shooting altogether. The sportsman above referred to regards it as quite wrong to kill only bucks ; for every miserable buck left alive, he says, there are 20 does, and if he had his way he would prohibit the shooting of bucks altogether for two years and only allow does to be shot.

The following good story of summary justice is told by the Globe :—Towards the end of last July, when his giant mind was almost entirely obsessed by the thought of his young pheasants, a gamekeeper found a poacher rabbiting on his preserves. He was too busy to hale him before the magistrate, with the result that that official received a letter next day, explaining that the offender had been dealt with summarily and fined five shillings and two shillings costs, "which I beg to enlose."

Athletic Notes.

SOME time after the rains break it is intended to hold an Open Rackets Tournament in the United Service Club courts at Simla.

Our Naini Tal correspondent writes that the first regatta of the current season came off with great eclât on the 12th instant, that entries were good, though one missed certain well-known performers this year. Competition was undoubtedly keen in most of the races and tolerably good rowing form, coupled with an abundance of fun, characterised the carrying out of the programme, of which the following are the results :—

SCRATCH FOURS.—Won by Messrs. Gilbert, Coode, Muir, and Russell, Mrs. Dawson, Cox.

DEPÔT RACE.—Durhams "A" beat the Oxfords in the final.

MIXED DOUBLE SCULLS.—The "inside" boat, Miss Yeatman and Mr. Gilbert, Miss Fasson, Cox, beat the "outside" boat, Mrs Hartley, Mr. Leake, Mrs. Strange, Cox.

P. AND O. PADDLING RACE.—Won by Miss Campbell, Miss Gome, Captain Bannerman, Mr. Darlington and Captain Hollins.

MIXED CANOE RACE.—Won by Miss Murray and Mr. Naylor.

Mr. J. V. Watkins, a speedy local swimmer, has expressed his intention to try and lower the Indian quarter mile record of 6mins. 53¼secs. made by the late Mr. H. P. Henderson at the Calcutta Swimming Bath some years ago and never since approached. The Committee of the Bath have fixed Saturday, 9th June, at 5 P.M., for the purpose, and it is, we should say, more than probable that the record will be well beaten, for Mr. Henderson was never pushed in the race and came in practically alone and easing down. He could easily have knocked nearly a minute off this time.

The South Indian Golf Championship has been won by Major F. W. D. Quinton who, in the final round, met and defeated Major Elliott by 8 up and 7 to play over a 36 holes course.

Ranjitsinghji is engaged on a book to be called "Cricket, and how to play it." It will be interesting to see what he can have to add to what has already been well said by scores of able writers and good cricketers.

It is strange to hear that Bob Fitzsimmons has decided to return to the ring and have another cut at Jack O'Brien. The Cornishman will be 44 years old on 2nd June next—an age at which even a well-preserved man like Fitz should think of other things but fighting. Poor old Bob is dead broke, and, we suppose, the once great boxer is now glad to take a chance even for the loser's end of the purse.

It is announced that Joe Darling, who has captained Australia in so many Test matches, is retiring from first-class cricket. He has bought, it is said, a station at Mount Barker, in South Australia, and intends to go in for sheep rearing on a large scale.

Joseph Darling was born on 21st November 1870. He first visited England, under the captaincy of G. H. S. Trott, in 1896, and he has himself led every Australian team that has toured in England since—that is, in 1899, 1902, and 1905. He also captained the Australians at home against A. E. Stoddart's second team in 1897-98, and against A. C. MacLaren's team in 1901-02 ; but when the M.C.C. combination visited the Antipodes in 1903-04, he was farming in Tasmania, and unable to play.

At his best, Darling was probably the most dangerous left-handed batsman that Australia has produced, with the single exception of Clement Hill ; but he was a versatile player, who could hit or display a most stubborn defence, according to the demands of circumstances. It very frequently happened that he was called upon to play his careful game, and often he scored very slowly indeed, but it is as a hitter that he will be longest remembered. His driving, when he chose to give full scope to his powers, was of tremendous power.

Darling was a safe and active fieldsman, but perhaps he was greatest of all as a captain. He had a remarkable faculty for choosing the right bowler for the moment, he was exceedingly quick at finding out an opposing batsman's weak points, he worked always in spirit with his bowlers, and he was a general to the finger-tips.

As a batsman, he reached his best during the tour of Stoddart's team in 1897-98, when in the five Test matches he scored 537 runs, with the tremendous average of 67. Three times in the five games he exceeded the century, scoring 101 at Sydney in the first match, 178 at Adelaide in the third, and 160 at Sydney in the fifth.

The English Ladies' Golf Championship has been won by a Mrs. Kennion who beat the holder Miss Bertha Thompson (Beverly), by 4 to 3.

Anything which will alleviate the dust nuisance will, we are sure, be received by motorists and anti-motorists with the greatest alacrity. Long before the motorist was thought of, dust was too evident, but motors and increased traffic of present days have made matters worse. A preparation, called "Pulvicide," is said to be effective in laying dust, and is at the same time economical in use. Its constituents are creosote, pitch, resin, and soda, and these are supplied in 40-gallon casks. Ten per cent. of the emulsion is added to water, and the roads are then watered in the usual manner, with the result that a fine, hard surface is obtained. The saving is very considerable in labour and water, as one watering lasts ten days. We understand that "Pulvicide" is being tried by various corporations at home with very satisfactory results.

The boxing tournament held by the Manchesters at Trimulgherry ended last Friday with the following results :—Private Kelly, 13th Hussars, won both the bantam and feather-weight competitions, beating Private Warren, Royal Fusiliers, in 30 seconds by a clever knock-out blow in the bantam class, and Private Collins, Manchesters, in the feather-weights.

In the middle-weights Corporal Harlowe beat Corporal Morris, Manchesters. In the heavy-weights Private Clayton beat Private Bassington, 13th Hussars, in the second round. The Hon'ble Mr. C. S. Bayley, C.S.I., I.C.S., presented the prizes.

As we learned by wire a fortnight ago the second meeting between Georges Hackenschmidt, the famous Russian wrestler, and Ahmed Madrali, the almost equally famous Turk, was nearly as brief and as dramatic as was the first. That the Russian is absolutely the best man known to fame, in both the Græco-Roman and catch-as-catch-can styles of wrestling, he has now established beyond doubt. That Madrali is a very good man he has proved by his easy victories over such fine wrestlers as Alec Munro and Tom Jenkins; but Hackenschmidt is as far in front of Madrali as the latter is ahead of the other well-known men. A report of the big match appears among our London Sporting news to-day.

Bicycles are now quite common objects in the streets of Chinese cities and towns, and meet with a ready sale among the better class natives. Even motor-cars have begun to find their way into the establishments of the rich, but the rightfully bad roads militate against their use except in the most limited way, and the national antipathy against foreign innovations has not yet been weakened to any appreciable extent. The twentieth century will hardly see a tournament in Peking of motor-cars owned by Chinese and driven by their own chauffeurs. But who can say with assurety that that time will never come?

With the rifle John Chinaman has not as yet had much practice, but he is an apt pupil, and having discovered to his cost the marvellous power of his weapon, he is making it his business everywhere to learn how to use it and, most important of all, how to keep it clean from dirt and rust. The jong will soon be a relic of the past, and the Chinaman himself will gaze upon it with curiosity.

The various sports which the Englishman has taken into all parts of the world do not meet with much approval from the Chinaman, although the servants attached to the cricket and football clubs in the ports and foreign stations of the interior have a more or less expert knowledge of the games, which are of useful account when a side is short of men. In Hong Kong and the Straits Settlements the Chinese youths play cricket and football in increasing numbers every year, but it is doubtful if the example will ever be followed by any considerable section of the native population. Chinese coolies often play a good game of tennis and lift a golf ball in a style worthy of a professional player. But the average Chinaman is content with his kites, cards and ducks.

We append results of several important cricket fixtures decided in England last week :—

The M.C.C. beat Kent by 69.
Notts beat Leicestershire by nine wickets.
Somerset beat Warwickshire by eight wickets.
Essex beat Northampton by eight wickets.
Yorkshire beat Kent by 119.
Surrey beat Hants by 10 wickets.
Lancashire beat Oxford University.

The Calcutta Golf Club announces the handicap competition for the Colombo Medal for the 1st and 2nd proximo.

Many in Calcutta will remember Mr. G. F. Kellner; they will be interested to hear that shortly after his arrival in England he took up Golf seriously and made such wonderful progress at the game that ere his second season he had won a good many competitions and is now quite entitled to consider himself first class. Only last month he won the Cornwall Championship beating Mr. J. K. Willis in the finals. There were twenty entries for the Championship. A qualifying round by strokes, was played over thirty-six holes, and in this the best return was 152, by H. A. Jenner, North Cornwall, who did 78 in the morning and the fine score of 74 in the afternoon. G. Keller, North Cornwall, with 78+78=156 was second; J. K. Willis, Newquay, 81+82=163, third; J. H. B. Carlyon, 84+85=169, fourth.

On Wednesday, 26th April, the competition for the individual championship was brought to a close. In the semi-final Kellner (North Cornwall), going round in 77 strokes, despite a strong north-easterly wind, beat Carlyon (Falmouth) by 7 up and 5 to play, and Willis (Newquay) beat Jenner (North Cornwall) by 6 and 5. In the final Kellner defeated Willis by 4 and 3. Both men showed good form under adverse conditions, the winner's score being two strokes better than Bogey. Kellner, who has recently been playing a lot with Harry Vardon at Le Tonquet, had only once previously taken part in the Cornish championship. We offer our good old friend our very hearty congratulations.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—The amicable settlement between the Bombay Hindu and Parsee cricketers which was arrived at through the efforts of Mr. Cheetham some time ago has proved short lived. A meeting of Parsee clubs was held last week to reconsider the matter and, thanks to some very unnecessary comments in a Parsee paper, the old feud is now as strong as ever. In April it was arranged that a Hindu-Parsee Presidency match should come off in the autumn. At the meeting held last Thursday fourteen teams reconsidered the matter, and though the premier club, the Parsee Gymkhana, protested, the meeting by 10 to 1 carried the following resolution :—

Considering the abrupt way in which the Hindu Gymkhana cancelled the fixtures with the local Parsee Cricket Club in September 1904 without their consent or at least without consulting them, and looking at the wording in which their (Hindu Gymkhana) present Resolution is drafted, this Fixture Meeting of the representatives of the Parsee Cricket Clubs is of opinion that the present Resolution of the Hindu Gymkhana does not amount to a withdrawal of their Resolution of 6th September 1904, and therefore they (this meeting) cannot withdraw their Resolution of 14th May 1905. Under these circumstances it is premature to consider the second part of the Hindu Gymkhana's Resolution of 6th April 1906, at present.

The whole thing is exceedingly childish and is not very likely to benefit the Parsee teams.

The chief Parsee matches for the coming season have now been definitely fixed. The annual Presidency match takes place at Poona on the 13th, 14th and 15th of September. The Parsee and Poona Gymkhanas meet in a two days' match on the 16th and 17th of August on the Bombay ground and the Bombay Gymkhana and the Parsee Gymkhana meet twice. The first will be a whole day match on 7th August on the Parsee ground and the second a half day match on the maidan on 8th September.

Palli Hill boasts an excellent little Gymkhana and a week ago a match was arranged between two tennis teams, the visitors being from the Bombay Gymkhana. The following scores resulted: Philipe and Thompson (Bombay) beat Braund and Wright (Palli Hill) by 3 to 2. R. Reid and Robinson (Bombay) beat Durnford and Pechey (Palli Hill) by 3 to love and Laidlaw and Taggart (Palli Hill) beat Huggins and Thacker (Bombay) by 3 to love, Bombay thus winning by one set which proved the easiest of the lot. An open air dinner and concert filled in the evening very pleasantly.

The Bombay Gymkhana has at last commenced its new buildings to the extent of closing the tennis courts on the site required. A meeting is to be held to increase the debenture borrowing power.

The Harwood league is commencing operations again and at the annual meeting held last week it was shown that last year's expenses, Rs. 718, were Rs. 177 in excess of receipts. In order to wipe out the debit balance it has been decided to leave the entrance fee at Rs. 10 each club, but to increase the contributions of Rs. 30 to Rs. 50 to cover general expenses: Mr. Justice Russell, one of Bombay's best sportsmen, was re-elected President and Mr. C. M. Ross, Vice-President. Mr. F. Hogan is shortly leaving for England and Mr. A. R. Sharpe is likely to take his place as Secretary.

Sam Newman, the professional boxer, who has put up three good fights in Bombay this year, is in Calcutta arranging to provide a big boxing entertainment if he receives sufficient encouragement.

THE "INDIAN FIELD SHIKAR BOOK."

The third edition of the above has been before the public a few weeks and has, apparently, been well received by those for whose benefit it was compiled. We reproduce some of the kind and flattering things our contemporaries have said about it :—

In a previous volume of the Indian Forester we recorded the appearance and briefly reviewed Mr. W. S. Burke's exceedingly handy little Shikar book. That it was a long felt want was soon apparent from the fact that a second edition was called for very shortly after the first appeared. Unfortunately, owing to some claims of infringement of copyright on the part of Messrs. Rowland Ward, the authors of "Horn Measurements," the second edition had to be withdrawn. Our previous review will have shown our readers the great value to the Indian sportsman of the little work, and it is not too much to say that the enforced withdrawal of the book came as a grievous disappointment to numerous sportsmen who first heard of its existence in its disappearance and were thus unable to procure a copy. Nothing daunted, however, by fate's unkind stroke Mr. Burke set to work to redraf the Shikar book, with the result that we now have before us a third edition, and we may premise by saying that from the Indian Saikaris' point of view it is no whit inferior to the editions which preceded it. Before proceeding to a brief review of the book in its present form we may draw attention to one undoubted improvement. The game registers, instead of being bound up at the end of the book itself, are now inserted in a pocket in the cover and refills can be obtained from The Indian Field Office—a decided boon to those who like to keep records of the game they kill.

author commences with a chapter on the big ... of the country, giving the scientific and vernacular names of each species mentioned, its habitat, period of gestation (often still uncertain or quite unknown). description (a sportman's description unencumbered with technicalities). measurements, habits, the best place to aim at to ensure death and, lastly, record measurements. To the notes upon the latter is usually appended a table giving full details including locality where the specimen was shot and the name of the sportsman or the present owner of the trophy. In this edition the author has made a notable and valuable departure with reference to the measurements of the trophies he enumerates. In his own words "But what I regard as of more value to the present day Sportsman are the numerous measurements of big game shot now-a-days, and which must assuredly be of more interest to the Indian Shikari than records of trophies shot several decades ago."

The habitat given for the Serow (Nemorrhædus bubalinus) as "throughout the Himalayas 6,000—12,000 feet" will admit of modification. This animal is found at much lower elevations than 6,000 feet and has been shot in the Siwaliks.

Turning to the Game Destroyers the author points out that owing to the marked decrease in game in many parts of India owing to the increasing efficiency of firearms, the increase in native professionals and the extension of cultivation, it has become urgently necessary for all sportsmen to turn their attention to the game destroyers. Such animals as the leopard and smaller cats (indeed all the Felidæ), wolves and wild dogs, civets and mongooses, martins and weasels, are all active game destroyers. Crows and owls are egg thieves and chick destroyers, whilst eagles, buzzards and falcons prey upon birds and pigeons. These latter birds of prey, however, also feed upon rats, snakes and other small noxious animals and so do good in this way. The Land Game Birds are next taken in hand and treated in the same way as the big game save that there are no tables of measurements. These are followed by the Water Game Birds and we feel confident that this portion of the work will prove of the very greatest use to "wild fowlers;" for amongst no other class of sportsmen have we met with such gross ignorance coupled with such confidently-held and expressed opinions as to the names of the various birds forming the contents of a bag of waterfowl, using the term in its widest sense.

The Sporting fish are divided into three divisions—the river, esturial, and tank fish. Under seasons for fishing no mention is made of the United Provinces. On the waters of the Dun Fishing Association and the rivers to the east the best seasons are April, May, September and October. The notes on care of fishing tackle should be of use to the tyro.

Mr. Burke next turns to the great subject of camp equipment, and although, in writing in a journal published under the auspices of the Forest Service, it is scarcely necessary to lay down views on a matter in which each of our readers would consider himself, from long practice, an expert, yet we have found a perusal of the author's chapter on this subject both instructive and useful. Autres pays autres mœurs and many a man serving in the distant south of this great Continent may, through Mr. Burke, obtain a wrinkle or two of how things are done in the far north. Space will not permit of our more than alluding here to the excellent Chapter on Guns, Rifles, and Ammunition. We note that the author apparently considers a ·450 No. 2 cordite to be powerful enough for any thing. The ·400 taking the Jeffery 3 inch ·450—·400 cartridge, loaded with 55grs. of cordite and ·400 grs. bullet on the Jeffery No. 1 is not, in our experience, sufficiently powerful for bison.

The list of dâk bungalows must have been a difficult one to compile We would point out that there is no longer a dâk bungalow at Mohand (Saharanpur-Dehra road) in the Meerut Division. It was closed several years ago. There is a Forest and Public Works bungalow, each with a chowkidar, at this place. We think Mr. Burke's Shikar wrinkles, which follow, will prove of use as well as interest even to the great body of district touring men who peruse this journal. His Sportsman's Library is excellent, although some of the books included are by no means easy to procure at the present day.

A note upon snake bites and their treatment, which is not quite so up-to-date as it might be, terminates Mr. Burke's work.

The book ends with reprints of the various Shooting Rules in force in the different provinces of the country.

We are of opinion, an opinion which we pronounce without hesitation, that all sportsmen will join us in extending our heartiest thanks to Mr. W. S. Burke for the trouble he has taken to give us just what we all require when out in the jungles on shikar bent away from our reference books.—"A Sportsmen's Pocket Vade Mecum."—The Indian Forester.

The "Indian Field Shikar Book," compiled by W. S. Burke and published by Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Company has been written to meet a specific want, and we can confidently say that he attempt has been both happy and successful. The first few chapters of the book are devoted to big game, land and water game birds, and sporting fish; and are full of most interesting and accurate details, such as the local names of the various animals, their habitats, descriptions, and sizes. In many cases a list is added of authenticated record measurements. The chapters at the end of the book, which may be summarised as containing shikar wrinkles put into a succinct and readable form, are excellent, and cannot fail to be both useful and valuable; and the last chapter deals with the laws and regulations in the different presidencies and provinces of India.

The book itself is of a most convenient shape and size for the pocket, and is bound in a dull green cloth so that if taken out and referred to in the jungle or elsewhere, it would not attract attention. There is a separately bound game register carried in a pocket on the back cover of the book, of which refills may be obtained from the publishers.

Mr. Burke has collected together in the most thoroughly practical manner, not only those multifarious items of information which a sportsman should know and remember, but also those to which he might possibly have occasion to refer; and this we consider still more important. To the sportsman in the jungle or out on the snow-ridge, the knowledge of some trifling fact sometimes acquires a temporary value which only they themselves can realise, a situation which arises out of the dangerous habit that many shikaris grow into of relying too much upon their memory, and their versatility. There is far more in the business of shooting and fishing than can be committed to memory, and Mr. Burke has come to their aid with a first-rate little book of reference.—Englishman.

A third edition of The "Indian Field Shikar Book" has just been issued by Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Company. Parts of the book have been rewritten and the whole has been brought up to date. Mr. Burke's excellent manual is, as we need not say, indispensable for all Shikaris who take their pursuits seriously.—Statesman.

The popularity of the "Indian field Shikar Book" is attested by the fact that it has run into a third edition. Both the author, Mr. W. S. Burke, and the publishers, Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., may be congratulated, the one on the mass of useful information he has collected, and the other on the manner in which it is presented to the public. In these days especially—not perhaps without justification—one associates the term cyclopædia with bulk, if not weight; but a cyclopædia measuring 6½ins. × 4ins. × 1 in. can assuredly lay claim to pocket size, and nothing could be lighter than Mr. Burke's style of setting forth useful facts and interesting figures. The sections devoted to game, game birds, game destroyers, and sporting fish are models of conciseness. The latest game regulations are given, and "Shikar Wrinkles" may be found useful by some. Other chapters deal with the care of fishing tackle, camp equipment, guns, rifle and ammunition, snake-bites and their treatment, and a list of dak bungalows. A little book of game registers is bound up separately and inserted in a pocket inside the back cover. Both printing and paper are good.—Civil and Military Gazette.

We have received the third edition of "The Indian Field Shikar Book" (Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co.) by Mr. W. S. Burke, the Proprietor and Editor of that paper. This shikari's vade mecum has now become indispensable to all who would do any shooting in India, from the more ambitious big game shooting with all its impedimenta of camp, transport, beaters, etc., to pottering round the outskirts of the station, picking up a brace or so of quail, a stray hare, etc. Every shikari has his library of sporting literature, of which, by the way, an excellent list is given in the volume under review; but these cannot be carried and referred to while out shooting, whereas the Shikar Book in its neat pocket book form can, as it takes up but little room in the kit bag or valise. It has been brought thoroughly up to date in the matter of "records," game laws, etc., while all other parts of the book have been thoroughly revised and corrected where necessary. The "griffin" will be very thankful for tips and "wrinkles" on a variety of matters, lack of knowledge of which while out on a shooting trip makes all the difference between success and failure, comfort or discomfort. A feature of the new edition is that the game registers have been taken out of the book and neatly bound, placed in a pocket inside the back cover. This is a far more convenient arrangement, especially as "refills" can be had. The get up and printing of the book are excellent and reflect credit on Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., Calcutta, who are the publishers of a number of other volumes dealing with shikar of all kinds in India.—Madras Mail.

The third edition of Mr. W. S Burke's "Indian Field Shikar Book," which has recently been issued by Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., of Calcutta, can be recommended to every sportsman in India who has a rod or gun. Mr. Burke is generally known as Editor of the Indian Field and his word on sporting matters always meets with ready acceptance. This book shows that his knowledge of game is as great as his knowledge of games. Every branch of Shikar finds a place in the book, and under the heading of "Big Game" is a host of information which will appeal to and instruct both the novice and the man who is experienced. Habits, records of measurements and details of service when in camp all find a place, and equal care is devoted to birds, fish and all the other inhabitants which make this country so favoured of the sportsman. Even here Mr. Burke does not stop. He is by no means only a theorist and his Shikar Wrinkles cover most of the things one wants to know. The "Shikar Book" is cheap at Rs. 5 and no one will regret its purchase.—Bombay Gazette.

Mr. W. S. Burke, of the The Indian Field, has issued the third edition of his now well-known Shikar Book, which will be found a slightly thicker and decidedly improved volume, containing all the best features of the first edition with additions and improvements, embracing, as it does, numerous measurements of game shot now-a-days, which must be, the author thinks, with considerable reason on his side, of much more interest to the modern Indian sportsman than records of game shot many decades ago, when conditions were quite dissimilar and game of course much more plentiful than at present. The latest edition contains all that invaluable information presented in a form easy of reference, as regards the description and habits of big and small game, where to find and how to shoot it, hints regarding weapons and ammunition, camp equipment, shikar wrinkles, dawk bungalows and the latest game laws and regulations, besides a mass of information as regards both shooting and fishing which made the first edition so much appreciated. In the new volume, too we notice that the game register is bound separately and carried in a pocket on the back cover, refills being obtainable of the Publishers, Messrs. Thacker and Spink. The price is Rs. 5.—Rangoon Times.

The third edition of "The Indian Field Shikar Book," compiled by Mr. W. S. Burke, the Editor of our sporting contemporary The Indian Field, has reached us, and is in every way an admirable publication and one which no sportsman should be without. It is well arranged, of a very convenient size, and contains a vast fund of information about every beast of venery, bird of the air or fish, that the sportsman is ever likely to meet with in India and it does great credit to its compiler. There are some valuable records in the book, and the practical advice which it gives must needs be of value both to the old shikari and to Young Hopeful with his first gun. The notes on the record measurements of the Royal Bengal tiger are of much interest * * * * The book is bound to increase in popularity and we tender the Editor our felicitations.—I. D. News.

London Week by Week.

London, Friday, 4th May 1906.

SIGNS of the London season are with us. Town seems to be as full as it can hold and judging by the number of circulars from house agents, the demand for furnished houses this year is unusually large. On the gates of the Park hang new notices forbidding the entrance to those hallowed precincts from 4 to 7 P.M. of motor vehicles "except electric carriages specially licensed." This latter concession is reasonable enough, for the electric vehicle contributes nothing to the wide gamut of various smells with which the other machines poison the atmosphere. In connection with the beginning of the season a very remarkable fact is to be noted. I cannot at this moment recall a single main thoroughfare in the West End that is not at the moment available for traffic. Not one of the streets is "up"—to any extent, that is: and we are asking if a sort of street millennium is dawning.

* * * * * *

Tuesday, being May day, was consecrated to the sacred cause of Labour; and the day being fine and warm English Labour, as is its wont, spent the shining hours lying on its stomach in the Park, what time the Anarchists held meetings to condemn everything and everybody and above all themselves in that site of silliness north of the serpentine. A feature of Tuesday's anarchical display in the Park was the vast proportion of foreigners: and a singularly frowsy and disreputable lot these were, of physique so miserable one laughed at the display of police precaution the authorities had provided. The East End loafer marched from the embankment in small quantities and exhibited his enthusiasm for inflammatory speeches by spreading himself face down on the grass as aforesaid. The British workman, genuine article, was totally wanting, more credit to him.

* * * * * *

The London Police have been passing through an unwonted phase of zeal, or pure stupidity which leads members of this most estimable body to arrest unoffending passers by on suspicion of being suspicious characters—I choose the phrase of set purpose—and run them in to be discharged by the Bench next day. A question was asked in the Commons on the subject, but small satisfaction was obtained from Mr. Herbert Gladstone: much more to the point was Mr. Denman's advice to the respectable French woman who was arrested while waiting for her husband in Regent Street about midnight. She thought so fine a thoroughfare must be above reproach: and really the woman's mistake and indignation were pardonable. But how is the decent foreign visitor to know which of the streets in this city are fit for respectable females after 8 P.M.? The echo of the street answers huskily "none."

This is private view day at the Academy: Wednesday was a "press day" and I spent the afternoon in the galleries doing the show at leisure and in comfort. There are only two ways of doing the Academy in comfort: one is to go on a press day and the other is to get up early on a wet day and spend there the hour most people devote to breakfast. The brotherhood of critics opined that the show this year is "mixed": some very good things are there and some very bad; which after all is what one might safely say of any Academy. One of the most striking portraits is that of the Bishop of Ripon by Hugh, son of Briton, Riviere. Mr. Sargent's portraits this year do not betray that eerie skill of his for conveyjng temperament or character by method of treatment. His presentation portrait of Lord Roberts is restful and dignified but not vigorous; his picture of Mrs. Frederick Guest pleases more than any other of a lady in the galleries, and if I like less that of Miss Coats (daughter of the Paisley threadmaker) it is, perhaps, because the subject lends herself less happily to his brush. Mr. Edwin Abbey is represented by one large canvas "Columbus in the New World," a nightmare of scarlet ibises. The discoverer kneels upon the strand; a pace or two to the left a couple of followers kneel with banners: and the rest is scarlet ibises flying seaward in a cloud. The colour scheme is furious: it hits you in the face and makes your eyes water. Mr. Luke Fildes has but one canvas, a portrait of the Hon'ble Mrs. Burn. Mr. Richardson's portrait of Sir Frank Younghusband is a fine bit of work and a remarkable likeness. In the water colour room Mr. Talbot Kelly has a couple of clever Burma sketches and Mr. J. R. Middleton has returned to the Shway Dagone Pagoda for inspiration. Otherwise the artistic potentialities of the East are neglected. I do not remember having seen a Turkish painter's name in the catalogue before: Osman Hamdy Bey sends a nearly life size picture of a "Young Emir studying", hard, guileless of atmosphere and unmistakeably Eastern in method and yet having force. Mr. Goscombe John's white marble statue of Sir John Woodburn which is to be erected at Lucknow is in the central hall: at first sight I thought it was a statue of Lord Rosebery!

It appeared to me that the average merit of the works in the gallery which, of time-honoured custom, is devoted to small pictures is much higher than usual, and that a change of policy has been adopted by the hanging committee. There are not nearly so many "thumb nail" canvases six inches by eight and thereabout: and those of the smallest size that do occur are conspicuously good. Exhibitors this year take themselves seriously: one pictorial jest only recurs to mind and that is Mr. Denis Eden's "The luxury of vain imagination" in the strictest conventional method of portraying mediæval sovereigns the painter has a child goggling with delight as it poses with monkey on a stick for sceptre, schoolroom globe for orb and regal appointments to match. The effect is very comical. Another very charming child picture is Mr. Charles Sims' "The Land of Nod"; very human children in their nighties and pyjamas in a cloud setting appropriate to angels; somewhat bizarre but original and arresting.

Tuesday saw a frantic rush to the new premises of the Times Book Club in Oxford Street. "The Greatest Sale of Books" ever heard of was advertised and the women flocked in their thousands to buy second-hand novels, etc., at all prices from threepence to half a crown. The Library must get rid of its surplus books and I judge that this proved a very effective way to do it, though at least one girl of my acquaintance came away after spending two hours en queue without getting near the counter of her hopes. The discounts ran to tenpence in the shilling: whence this thusness. I do not think the T. B. C. service improves: it is hard to get the books one wants, ask you never so promptly, and days elapse often before you get the books you don't want.

A new and perhaps valuable experiment is in progress at Hounslow. Last autumn Colonel A. W. A. Pollock, late of the Somersetshire L. I., declared that if a recruit were properly trained he would, in six months, be a "more skilful fighting man than the modern British soldiers of any length of service." He confided this opinion to the Spectator which rose to the occasion and found the cash to enable Colonel Pollock to experiment with 100 men. These have for the last six weeks been housed in Government huts at Hounslow, and are paid and treated like ordinary Tommies, saving only that the sole punishment for offence is expulsion. Among the crowd are men of all classes, and Colonel Pollock, who is doing the training himself with the aid of one sub, is delighted with the progress made. Sanguine persons believe that the achievements of the "Spectator Experimental Company" will prove "the whole fundamental training structure of the Army to be antiquated and rotten." In five months or less we shall no doubt hear all about the result.

Some truely extraordinary escapes are reported from San Francisco. One of the Leland Stanford University buildings occupied by girl students was wrecked, the roof falling in and carrying down with it all of the three floors: half a dozen girls fell clear from the top storey to the basement and were unhurt! Another astounding incident occurred in the Zoological building; a marble statue fell through the cement pavement and was dug out without a scratch; the floor evidently "gaped" and swallowing the statue closed over it. A valuable lesson is conveyed by the fall of other buildings: some of the more important were specially designed to withstand earthquake shock: all these were reduced to ruins while others close by, not so designed, came through the ordeal with comparatively little hurt. Near San Jose a flower garden was turned into a lake of mud from which a dozen geysers were spouting.

Anyone who passed His Majesty's Theatre early in the morning of Friday last would have seen a vast concourse already assembled round the doors leading to the unreserved portions of the Theatre. That evening took place the presentation to Miss Ellen Terry of a silver casket by the Playgoers' Club, in memory of her fifty years of stage life. As I mentioned last week she was to appear in the "Merry Wives of Windsor." The long wait did not damp the enthusiasm of the audience, and after the deafening reception of the heroine of the evening the "Merry Wives" went with verve. It was at the end of the play as Mistress Page was going off Falstaff cried "stop Mistress, stop," and she came back to hear a rhymed address, written by Mr. Louis Parker and spoken by Falstaff (Mr. Tree) expressing the views of the world generally in regard to herself. After the address Miss Terry stood for a moment as if wondering what to say and behold a dove from the sky bearing in its beak a paper with the exact words fitted to express all that was in Miss Terry's heart. She spoke with unconcealed emotion. Afterwards came the presentation of the silver casket, and more thanks, wherein she referred to the fact that this year she and Sir Henry Irving had hoped to be publicly honoured together. Saturday, the 28th April, was actually the 50th anniversary of her first appearance upon any stage. It was in 1856 she played the part of the young Prince Mamyllius in the "Winter's Tale" at the Princess Theatre, and on Saturday afternoon she honoured the occasion by appearing in a new Shakespearean part at the Adelphi, that of Francisca, the nun, in "Measure for Measure." She comes on only in the first act, and has but five lines to say, but, of course, the opportunity was seized to give her a tremendous ovation, and she was not allowed to go off without saying a few words to the enthusiastic audience. In the evening she was seen in the ordinary course at the Court where she is taking the part of Lady Cicely in "Captain Brassbound's Conversion." There also the audience overwhelmed her with applause and flowers; and again obliged her to make a little speech, in which it was inevitable that she should incorporate the constantly recurring line in her part "you have all such nice faces."

The Coronet Theatre is for the time being tenanted by the Moody Manners Opera Company, and on Tuesday they gave a most interesting performance of Tschaikovsky's Opera "Eugene Oniegin." This is only the second time the Opera has been heard in London, and the last time was fourteen years ago, though the present Company produced it last February at Sheffield, and it is to be heard at Covent Garden later in the season. Apart from the special interest attaching to the work the performance was an exceedingly good one; earnest and artistic endeavour seemed to inspire the whole cast, and Madame Fanny Moody and Mr. Charles Manners themselves gave really distinguished interpretations of their respective rôles. The series of Operas to be given during the fortnight of which nearly a week has elapsed includes as well Carmen, Maritana, Lohengrin, Le Marriage De Figaro, Tannhauser Il. Trovatore, and the Bohemian girl; so there is food for all tastes.

Mr. Tree closed his Shakespeare week on Saturday with a revival of "Julius Cæsar," and in a speech after the fall of the curtain, announced that the experiment had been so successful that he intended to repeat it every year. In fact Shakespeare decidedly spells success at present, and he means to produce in the autumn "Macbeth," a "Winter's Tale" and "Antony and Cleopatra," and to revive "Henry IV, Part I." The cast in "Julius Cæsar" was not entirely the original one at His Majesty's. The most important variations were the Brutus of Mr. Basil Gill, and the Casca of Mr. James Hearn, which were both excellent. Mr. Henry Neville's Julius Cæsar was hardly as satisfactory. In the meantime Mr. Tree has resumed the run of "Nero."

One outcome of the Hackenschmidt-Madrali wrestling match at Olympia last Saturday (which the former won, two falls to love in very few minutes) is the burlesque wrestling at the music halls. At the Oxford on Monday "Whack-em-swift vs. Mad-reilly" provoked much laughter though it struck me as rather over elaborated. Whack-em-swift was a very small boy and Mad-reilly was Mr. Harry Tate wearing all the pillows he could cram into a very loose suit of clothes. The twain wrestled and Mad-reilly having taken two falls (among the ten committee men crawling about the floor) the curtain fell on a free fight in which the minute Whack-em-swift was getting much the best of it.

The Daily News has organized a "Sweated Industries Exhibition" at the Queen's Hall, and though the idea is not new, it is carried out in somewhat a novel way; you see the workers slaving at the trades which yield them at the most twopence an hour; some of them indeed make as little as three farthings, and for that have to provide some of their own materials, such as thread or paste. The trades include glove stitching, beading ladies' shoes, covering racket balls, sewing tennis balls, matchbox making, card board and paper bag making, etc., etc. Altogether there are twenty-two stalls with two workers at each, and full details are given in the catalogue of the rates of pay, conditions of labours, and hours of work necessary to earn the barest living wage. Of course the actual conditions of labour cannot be reproduced at the Queen's Hall; the workers are probably in more comfortable case and certainly better fed than they have ever been before.

Giving evidence before the Select Committee on London Cabs and Omnibi on Tuesday, Chief Inspector Basset condemned the taxameter: he said it could not be used with the complicated system of cab fares in use in London. The fault lies with the instruments now in use: it goes on scoring up miles against the hirer while the cab is at a standstill in a block. One would think it was within human ingenuity to overcome this difficulty, a thing operated by the revolutions of the wheel suggests itself as the obvious way out of the impasse.

A West Australian blue fourpenny stamp is to be offered for sale at the end of this month. There are only nine specimens in existence and the last one sold brought £400 at auction.

Mr. T. H. Woods, of Christies, who died last March has left over £530,000.

The L.C.C. has come to the conclusion that it had better draw in its enterprising horns. An arrangement has been made whereby the Thames Steamboat Company shall carry all the traffic from Chelsea up-river while the Councils' boats ply between Chelsea and Greenwich. This ought to reduce the ratepayer's bill a trifle.

The widening of Piccadilly between St. James's Street and Arlington Street is next to be taken in hand: it is one of the places most fertile in production of traffic blocks.

The L.C.C.'s bill for a Hall is before a Select Committee. It is proposed to buy a site in Lambeth just below Westminster Bridge on the river front. The estimated cost is under a million and three-quarters, against which the L.C.C. sets £400,000 as its interest in Spring Gardens and £20,000 a year paid in rent for outside offices. The officials employed by the L.C.C. number 1,909 and are increasing.

ONLOOKER.

One Charlie Cracroft, a croupier at a gambling-house in St. James's Square, once made a bet with a stalwart, half-drunken gambler that he would carry him three times round the square without stopping. The wager was accepted. It was a bitter night, and the ground was covered a foot deep in snow. Taking advantage of this circumstance Cracroft, when they had got to the door, said, "The wager is that I carry you, but not your clothes."

"You're a d ——d swindler," cried the stranger; "but I'll take you at your word." And, notwithstanding the piercing cold, he there and then divested himself of every scrap of clothing and jumped on Cracroft's back.

The proposer of the wager had now nothing for it but to try what he could do, and made a start. The lookers-on, pretty well "sprung," began to pelt them with snowballs, until at length the sorry steed, who was only a small man, slipped and fell, almost exhausted.

"Up you get!" cried the stranger, clinging round Cracroft's neck until he nearly strangled him. But the crestfallen croupier begged him to get off.

"Not a bit of it," answered the other. "You would have robbed me of ten pounds if you could, and now, by my soul, you shall carry me back to the club."

Digging his naked heels into Cracroft's sides, and squeezing his throat so that he could hardly breathe, the vindictive one spurred on his tottering Rosinante until he was backed high and dry into the hall of the club again, where the croupier, greatly to his mortification, had to hand him over his well-won wager.

KASHMIR, ITS SHOOTING AND ITS GAME LAWS.

I THINK my following experiences in Kashmir will be instructive to sportsmen meditating a shooting trip to that country, and who are ignorant of the ways of the Kashmir Game Preservation Department. They may be the means of saving them an infinite amount of trouble and annoyance. I will be as brief as I can. I had made up my mind to visit the Kajnag district at the opening of the present shooting season to try and bag a couple of markhor.

In the Jammu and Kashmir State Game Laws' Notification for 1905-06, it is laid down under Rule 2 that:—"Special rules are issued and a special permit is required for the Kajnag," and certain other districts "without which no one is permitted to travel or shoot in them."

I accordingly applied to Major Wigram, the present Secretary of the State Game Preservation Department, to furnish me with the special rules and permit. These were supplied to me by that officer on the 1st March 1905.

By the permit I found I was permitted to travel and shoot in those portions of the Kajnag and Kafrkund which are incorporated under the Kashmir State Game Preservation Department—no dates being mentioned. Under Rule 3 of the special rules supplied to me, and to which I very naturally looked for guidance, it was notified that the shooting season on the Kajnag and Kafrkund would be held to extend from the 15th April. Briefly, the permit allowed me to travel and shoot in the Kajnag district, and the special rules simply laid down the 15th April as the commencement of the shooting season. There is absolutely nothing in the latter prohibiting any one, already provided with a permit, from travelling in the district or settling down in a nala before the 15th April. I accordingly arranged to leave Baramula on the 6th April with the idea, as my wife was with me, of marching by daily stages to any nala I might find vacant. When I signified my intention to my shikari, he certainly did suggest that I should write and enquire of the Secretary if there was any objection to my travelling in the district before the 15th April, but as there was no such prohibition in the rules I considered it quite unnecessary to trouble him in the matter. At the same time, I consulted a brother sportsman who was bound for the same destination, and who, it is almost needless to add, put the same construction upon the rules that I had done, viz., that they did not contain any prohibition against travelling before the above date. He had already arranged for baggage ponies and expected to overtake me on the road in a few days, as he was travelling much lighter than I was.

Having informed the Baramula Tehsildar who raised no objection of the direction in which I was travelling and obtained from him the number of baggage animals I required, I made a start, as arranged, on the 6th April, leaving my boats at Baramula at the temporary disposal of my son and his family whom I shortly expected there from India.

When my wife and I had accomplished about five miles of the first stage, we were overtaken by a gentleman—a stranger—who, without introducing himself, took upon himself to ask me in a very brusque manner if I was aware that I was breaking one of the State game laws in entering the Kajnag District before the 15th April! Thinking that he knew no better and did not mean to be rude, I, without taking any notice of his manner, shortly asked him to point out to me the particular rule he accused me of breaking. He was unable to do this, and obliged to admit, after I had shown him my copies, that no such rule existed. However, he then produced a letter he had received from Major Wigram, in reply to a reference made to him on the question, to the effect that the Kajnag districts were absolutely closed for sport and travel until the 15th April. I may add that the gentleman who accosted me, was employed on the Staff of the Kashmir Railway, and at the time, working from Baramula, where he had his headquarters, also that he informed me that he had seen my preparations, for the journey going on at Baramula but thought it would be an act of presumption on his part to warn me until I had actually made a start—very considerate of him I thought! To proceed. There was no questioning the meaning of Major Wigram's letter, and although I was naturally much annoyed I, of course, decided not to proceed any further on my journey. I could not, at once, return to my house boat at Baramula for reasons already stated, so decided to camp at the first convenient spot I could find and thence to write to Major Wigram giving him all particulars, and to await his reply before retracing my steps.

This I did at a village about a mile further on. In my letter to the Secretary I stated the exact facts, telling him that I was innocent of any intention of breaking any rules or of stealing a march on any other sportsman, pointing out at the same time to him that as a matter of fact I had not broken any published rule as far as I was aware, and asking if he could not allot the Kajnag nalas with the aid of a committee according to priority of application and allow me to remain where I was as a matter of convenience until the season opened on the 15th April. On the 7th April, that is to say, the day after I had left Baramula, one of Major Wigram's rakhas or gamekeepers, arrived at my camp and showed me a notice, warning all sportsmen that the Kajnag District was absolutely closed for travelling as well as shooting until the 15th April. It was not dated, nor did it state under what published rule the notice had been issued. The man who brought it, on my asking him why he had not shown me the notice at Baramula where I had been staying for some days previous to my departure, replied that he had only the day previously been hurriedly sent out by Major Wigram from Srinagar with instructions to show it to all the sahibs going to the Kajnag. I told him I was writing to Major Wigram explaining to him under what circumstances I happened to be encamped where I was and intended to await his answer to my letter before moving which I could not anyhow do at once as my boat was occupied at Bárámula, and owing to an incessant downpour of rain my tents were soaking and could not be struck. The man left later in the day. Owing to the rain my letter to Major Wigram could not be posted until the 8th April. On the 10th April, before I had received a reply to it, came the following telegram from the secretary, dated 7th April:—"Kajnag District absolutely closed till the 15th. Your shikaris' license will be forfeited if he takes you in or secures a nala before that date." The italics are my own.

One would suppose from the wording of the above telegram that Major Wigram, when writing it was under the impression that I was about to enter the Kajnag District—and yet, when later on, I found fault not only with his procedure of condemning me of breaking the State Laws, without even so much as asking for my explanation as well as with the decidedly objectionable tone of his telegram and subsequent letter—his excuse was, that he took the action he would have done in any similar case because as his jemedar had shown me the order (sic) at my camp one march from Baramula on the 7th and it was reported! to him that I was remaining on after that date, he had no other alternative but to act as he did! The above telegram was followed on the next day by a visit from another of Major Wigram's subordinates—a jemadar—who presented me with a letter from him, in which he stated he had been ordered by his master to deliver to me in person. It was dated 8th April and read as follows:—

Dear Colonel Fenton,—I am informed that you have entered the Kajnag District before the commencement of the opening of the district on the 15th, though it is possible that you have altered your plans on receipt of my wire. If the first is the case I am directed by the Resident in Kashmir to request that you will at once conform to the rule and leave the district until the opening day. He further desires me to add that the rules must be strictly adhered to and any breach of the rules will be sufficient reason for cancelling the permits granted to any sportsman. I shall be much obliged if you will send back an answer by the bearer. Yours etc.

H. WIGRAM, Major.

Major Wigram had obviously not received my letter when he wrote the above, although it would seem from the wording that when penning it he was unaware of my movements, it is quite clear from a letter subsequently written by him that he had full information of my whereabouts at the time of writing, and I fail to understand why he could not have awaited my reply before threatening me with the deprivation of my license at the hands of the Resident and treating me as if I were deliberately attempting to evade the Game Laws.

To continue. I replied to Major Wigram's letter much to the same effect as I had already written in my first letter to his address—at the same time requesting, for very obvious reasons, that the whole of the correspondence which had passed between us should be placed before the Resident, and pointing out that in absence of published rules on the question in point it would be clearly unfair to punish my shikari who was no more to blame than I was in the matter. As there was no knowing when I might receive an answer to my letters, I at the same time arranged to return to Baramula, as soon as the rain ceased and sent instructions to Baramula for securing another boat. This I did on the 13th April. Later on I received the following reply from Major Wigram to my first letter:—

"My dear Colonel Fenton,—I sent a man, Jemedar Attar Mahomed Khan to you yesterday before I got your letter and under instructions from the Resident. The whole point is that the permit to travel and shoot in the Kajnag commences on the 15th. It was given to you as a special case and as a convenience to you. T. T. (Another sportsman the one I had consulted at Baramula) would have received his in time to commence shooting on the 15th. I shall take very good care in future not to issue a single permit under the actual day. The special rule closing the district was published everywhere two years ago (!) when the district was closed and every shikari is aware of the prohibition against entering the district. Moreover every jemedar has an order of the rule issued under the Resident's instructions.

I fear sportsmen are very apt to read the rules to suit their own convenience and not refer any doubtful points to me.

I am sorry for any inconvenience caused, for if one makes a single exception to any rule, it immediately gives ground for a precedent which leads to incredible trouble. Take your case. If the sportsmen coming up from down below heard you had entered the district, do you suppose a single one would stay outside the limits of the district. As it is, I am assured that they are waiting at bungalows on the far side of the river, and I do not consider it fair that they, who are obeying the letter of the law, should be placed at a disadvantage by the sportsmen who are not so strict." Further remarking shortly that it was too late this year to put a stop to the antiquated system of racing in nalas, and moreover that a shikari was under the terms of his license responsible that the game laws were not infringed upon.

I can only remark that I was not made aware that I was being specially favoured when I was given my permit before the 15th April, nor had I the remotest wish of being so favoured. If there is any such great objection to publishing in so many words, the prohibition against travelling before the 15th April, in the rules applied to sportsmen and to which they naturally refer for guidance, the idea, not to issue the permits until the actual date (15th April) is decidedly a brilliant one! but has, as most sportsmen will agree, its drawbacks! The letter evades the fact to which I had drawn Major Wigram's attention that the special rules for the Kajnag contained no prohibition against travelling before the 15th April to anyone armed with a permit. The special rule published two years ago (!) he refers to, I have not yet been fortunate enough to find, although he declares it to have been published everywhere. The Cockburn Agency did not know of its existence, neither was I able to obtain a copy from the Baramula Tehsildar who, if anyone, should be in possession of a copy. Had the latter even known of any such rule I presume he would have brought it to my notice when I applied to him for baggage ponies, as he, as well as the whole of the Baramula bazaar, knew I was going into the Kajnag District on the 6th April. Perhaps every jemadar carries a copy, but I was several days at Baramula before making a start, and not a single jemadar came near my camp. I have since asked several subordinates of the department to show me the rules, but they one and all declared they did not possess a copy. It being such a very important one, why is it not republished every year, with the rest of the rules, or separate copies of it supplied to both sportsmen and shikaris with their permits? Why keep it in the background, to be sprung upon any sportman who, quite innocent of its existence, unintentionally breaks it?

As a rule, I have found that sportsmen, worthy of name, are not apt to read the rules to suit their own conveniences. A rule if properly worded should not admit of two separate meanings, but I am sure that any sportsmen finding that it did so, would, as a matter of course, refer it to the Secretary, who seems to ignore the fact that sportsmen have a reputation to keep up as well at he has. It is almost unnecessary to draw attention to the tone of the letter which clearly implies that in the Secretary's opinion I had been guilty of unsportsmanlike conduct, and worse, and he should take good care that I knew it! Not the slightest idea seems to have entered his head that he himself was in any way to blame in the carrying out of his own duties!

My further experiences in trying to reach the Kajnag were somewhat amusing, if nothing else! On the evening of the 14th April I made a second start from Baramula in company with my son, who was not shooting; this time keeping to the left bank of the Jhelum River which is outside the Kajnag limits. Our object being to wait at a point nine miles down the river, where there is a ferry, until midnight when we could cross over and enter the Kajnag District without in any way infringing the Secretary's notice. On arrival at the ferry, however, the owners of the ferry boat declared that the passages was far too dangerous to be undertaken in the darkness of night, and judging from the look of the currents, there was no doubt that they were perfectly right. So there was nothing for it but to cross the river whilst there was yet daylight and spend the intervening hours up to midnight in the ferry boat moored to the opposite bank! This we accordingly did. Crossing over punctually at 8 P.M. I remained in the boat until the first minute after midnight, when we made a start for the first good nala we should find vacant.

Before crossing the river, we called upon a sportsman whose camp had been pitched for several days past on the left bank almost opposite the ferry, and who, I had previously ascertained, was also bound for the Kajnag but having been warned by the Secretary beforehand of the prohibition against travelling, was waiting until the 15th April before entering the district. While the three of us were talking together towards the dusk of the evening our attention was drawn by one of the men present to a horseman riding along the opposite side of the river in the direction of the Markhor nalas. We had no difficulty in recognising the rider as being the railway official who had accosted me on the road on the 6th April and naturally concluded that he was taking steps to secure the Simber nala, the one which we knew he wanted before it was possible for anyone else to do so. It seems, however, that we were unjust in one surmise for on being subsequently questioned in the matter by the Secretary he strongly denied having had any such intention as we had supposed. We owe the gentleman an apology, but considering the fact that up to that date his work was done from Baramula, that as far as we were aware his men were still working nearer to that place than to the Simber nala which he wanted to secure, that the dusk of the evening is not the usual time for changing camp, and that he disappeared in the direction of the Simber where, moreover, we were positively assured he had gone, we had some excuse for arriving at the supposition we did.

Anyhow, as both the sportsmen on whom I was calling and I had hoped to secure the Simber nala, we were naturally somewhat irate at having been done out of it, as we at the time supposed, in this way! My friend indeed was so much so that he crossed the river as soon as possible and passed my boat in the foot-steps of the horseman some hours before midnight. We, i.e., my son and I, sat patiently on in the boat (the ferryman I think thought we had gone mad!) until by the local time it was one minute past twelve o'clock, when we too made a start knowing full well that we should have a tough race, with a bad start, with the men who, as the Secretary had informed me, were waiting in the bungalows down the Mari Road, until they could cross over on the 15th. We passed by the Simber nala, knowing it to be already occupied by this time by someone, and made straight for the Goortal where we arrived after a long and tedious march shortly after daybreak on the 15th. Inquiries at a village we passed on the road led to the belief that we should find the nala unoccupied, but alas! we were soon to be undeceived! As we approached the village precincts, we had no difficulty in recognizing a Kashmiri shikari in the man seated by a fire, or his sporting sahib in the figure lying fast asleep under the chenar, well wrapped up in a long posteen! Curiously enough it turned out to be the sportsman whom I had met and consulted at Baramula. He admitted he had crossed over from one of the bungalows on the Mari Road at about 8 p.m. on the previous evening and secured his nala about the time I was leaving my boat! The Maidan nala was the next best to secure, but when I mentioned the names, he informed me that his friend, who had crossed over with him, was already there!! Also that by this time Kurnai nalas were probably all occupied! There was just a chance of the Goojar nala being vacant, and for this we made at once, as fast as we were able, adding another two miles at least to our long night march. It was, indeed, a relief to find the nala in question unoccupied when we reached it!! Of course I could have turned out both the other men who had not followed the strict letter of the notice, but refrained from doing so. All this trouble and annoyance was simply the result of carelessness on the part of the Authoriteis in not taking care that an important rule was properly promulgated. It is true that the Secretary has, all along, in his correspondence with me practically insisted that it was so, but such I maintain was not the case.

We are all liable to make mistakes, although some of us may be unwilling to admit them, and when the rule was brought to my notice I was quite prepared to adhere to it, and leave the district as soon as I was able to do so if my suggestion for the allotment of the nalas was not carried into effect! It was not with the methods of the Secretary, however, that I had so much to find fault as with the discourteous tone he choses to adopt in his letter to me, condemning me of unsportsmanlike, not to say ungentlemanly, conduct without so much as demanding a word of explanation. In my final letter to him I complained of this. The Resident, through whom I forwarded my letter, sent it on without a single remark. The reply I received from the Secretary through the same channel ran as follows:—

"I must again repeat that I regret you have been inconvenienced in this matter and also that you should feel aggrieved that an explanation was not asked for before the issue of my telegram requesting you to leave the district, but as my jemedar showed you the order (copy attached) at your camp one march from Baramula on the 17th, and it was reported to me you were remaining on after that date I had no alternative but to take the same action I should have done in any similar case."

The italics are my own. The letter obviously fails entirely to give a proper explanation for the Secretary's procedure. The wording of the telegram to start with was objectionable, and whatever reports may have reached him through native sources, surely he should have waited for my written explanation before addressing me in the tone he did.

After all, the Secretary, who, by the way, owes his billet to sportsmen, without whose action his department would never have been called into existence, has to deal, with officers and gentlemen and the least they have a right to expect from him is to be treated as such and not to be condemned, as I was, of unsportsmanlike conduct without being allowed a word of explanation.

From complaints, which I heard in the valley, it is clear that the rules themselves are in some respects considered unsatisfactory by sportsmen, but considering the liberality of the Darbar in allowing the country to be overrun by sportsmen on payment of a practically nominal sum, I do not think there is much cause for complaint in this direction. The Darbar, so long as it is the Darbar, is at liberty to make its own rules on the subject. If is for the Resident to see that they are adhered to by sportsmen who are not State subjects, and moreover to take care that, when these are given their licenses by the Secretary, who is, I presume, a State servant, they are also provided with copies of every single order or notice for the time being in force. It is obviously wrong to leave them to find out for themselves, or not as the case may be rules, like the one I fell foul of, published years before and left in out of the way corners, or in the hands of low paid subordinates and shikaris. At the same time everyone is not gifted with tact and it is obviously necessary that some strict procedure should be framed by the Resident which should allow a sportsman to give an explanation of anything that may appear against him before condemning him and not leave it to the discretion of a Secretary to treat a gentlemen as he might a poacher!

Although according to the Secretary, there is nothing wanting in the rules, as they stand, I should not be at all surprised if certain alteration, for the better were made in them in time for the next shooting season. If such is not found to be the case, I should certainly advise every sportsman who is new to Kashmir, when applying for his shooting license, to obtain copies of all orders and notices not given a place in the rules, or to make quite sure that none such exist.

When, if ever, the antiquated system of racing for nalas will be stopped and the latter allotted according to priority of arrival and application in the valley, is a question which undoubtedly require early consideration and settlement. If it is thought inadvisable to apply the system to the open nalas, there cannot be an iota of doubt as to the advisability of applying it to closed tracts like the Kajnag, Aston, etc.

Another matter too, would, at the expense of a little time on the part of those who are responsible, be rendered far pleasanter than it is at present, viz, that of the shooting in the actual valley itself as well as in the larger ravines, like the Erin Bandipura and Wangal leading into it. It is obvious that no single sportsman can or does expect to keep all the shooting in any one of these large ravines to himself, but not a soul seems to know how many guns each of these ravines is supposed to hold, or with a certain number of guns in each, what the limits are of each shoot. The consequence is that there are endless disputes brought about as a rule by lying lambardars and shikaris to serve their own ends. All this might so easily be remedied by the issue of a few simple rules. As it is at present, in every such dispute, reference has to be made to the Secretary, who, at the time, may be miles away in Ladakh or elsewhere, time is lost, and one or other of the disputants has to suffer.

L. L. FENTON,
Lieutenant-Colonel.

FISHING IN FLORIDA.

A CHRISTMAS EVE arrival in Jacksonville on the boat from New York, darkness, taking a late train and an all-night ride 300 miles southward to Fort Myers, and we wake, seemingly "translated" from the bare trees, raw winds and bleak skies of Staten Island, off New York, to look at dense cane-brakes, and into queer palmetto jungles where crimson flamingoes and white herons make astonishing bits of color amongst the green; where little alligators and sunning mud turtles seem to be asleep on logs above which a soft wind sways the long southern moss streaming from all the trees! It is royal!

A perfect luncheon served on the cool porch of a surprisingly good hotel bowered in orange, grape fruit, and tangerine trees all golden and heavy with fruits among their green, and which the guests are invited to pick and eat at absolute pleasure and know for the first time what real oranges are! A tent, food supplies, three glass demijohns of drinking water, guns, rods, and a case of beer are placed in the waiting launch by the guide—a silent, Seminol Indian; and we are off to the upper end of Caloosahatchee Bay, trolling without success in salt water with a big silver "spoon" and hook at the end of 200 feet of stout oiled-silk line.

At Olga village we place our camp outfit into canoes hewn from single cypress logs by the Indians, and proceed up the drainage canal, cross Lake Hickapoochee and get a three and a five-pound "trout" or large-mouth black bass, thence by canal again into round Lake Okeechobee, in the heart of the Everglades! It is thirty miles across, shallow, and wild and remote beyond our dreams! We camp on Observation Island and take "perch" and more "trout," on scarlet bass flies and the spoon hook.

The next morning we skirted the northwest shore of the big lake and loafed and fished and camped dolce far niente. Some painter yet mute and inglorious will become immortal by placing on canvas the weird "moods" of the Fisheating and Kissimee rivers that "run" into Okeechobee. To the angler who is receiving his first impressions of that outdoor spree, Nature seems crazy, fairly shuddering with her own loneliness and something akin to fear that gets on one's nerves and may be found appalling. There were orchid blossoms, starring lagoons guarded by sombre cypresses, and by mangrove trees with roots coming down all around the trunks from six feet above the water, forming cages with central columns; and with slim roots dangling from branches, and even from germinating seeds yet on the tree sending out these feelers for the water all about the trunk rising from miry ground. Every knoll had the white blooms and green, ripe fruit of wild strawberries. Small, spotted "Virginia" deer came to drink. The Indian told of a few little black bears hereabouts. We saw awful moccasin snakes in trees over water, and a few rattlesnakes, and saw and felt a few millions of gnats and mosquitoes. All the water was dangerous to drink and the windless air and heat made the jungles intolerable a few rods from streams or lakes. At the mouth of the Fisheating River we were waked far in the night by a convention of barking 'gators cruising northward a furlong from shore.

There were myriads of wild fowls, mallard, redhead and merganser ducks, a few brant geese and rails, coots, mud hens and gallinules, with drumming grouse, calling quails, the queerly rising turtle doves so much hunted in Florida and such delicious eating, and scattering flights and races along shore of plovers, snipe, woodcock sometimes and sandpipers, curlews, robins, crows, shrikes and cardinals besides hundreds of herons and flamingoes and literal dozens of turkey buzzards. And mockings' birds? It was mating time with them, and they would squal and fight in a seeming death struggle right on the ground not a dozen feet from us. In Florida they are anything but musical when in a wild state. Their squawks made sleep impossible long before sunrise. This region is headquarters for residents that wear fathers. Many of the game birds graced our camp "table."

A demijohn of water sitting in a canoe is several times more loquacious than a Seminole Indian guide. He goes barefooted and trouserless by preference, detests a hat, is said to speak a mixed jargon of Spanish and English, and some Indian gibberish. Speak to him and he places his fingers on his lips; he is fishing or hunting and desires silence. He is a Napoleon of liars. "Runaway Joe," our own guide, called at his cabin among those trackless swamps where a tyro would lose himself and perish if he had a hundred lives, and showed his best possession, a photograph of a twelve-foot alligator, with a colored boy riding him. "Made um dead wuv big stick. Ugh! sol' um ter mans in Pullattky. He making fourteen trunks sowt o' hide. Dat pickcher show it."

Let no sportsman venture into those fastnesses without his Indian guide to moor the canoe off shore, away from insects, spread the mosquito net over a good bed and cook fish and game to perfection. Some of our city chefs could learn much from him about roasting, broiling and frying. His judgment of the movements of a little Florida bob deer he has cornered on a point of land extending into water is marvellous. He does not waste powder and ball then, but holds his heavy hunting knife in his open palm, and, with a powerful sweep of his arm throws it fifteen or twenty feet to sink five or six inches into that deer! He will drive its point two inches into a cypress; and it takes a strong man to remove it.

The winter fishing in fresh water is not much better than in the North, but we secured more than enough fish to eat. Lures of fish or bacon, deer meat, or bright flies on No 2 hooks and cast clumsily, brought occasional perch averaging one pound each and trout weighing as much as five pounds each, bass, all lazy comparatively soft and coarse-grained, and dawdlers nearly spoiled by and seemingly ashamed of their homes. We were told that from about 15 th April to November these bass may be taken almost at pleasure in nearly all Florida lakes. But there is no real fight in them. A small-mouth black bass in the Delaware River has a dozen times more "ginger" in him. Yet the large-mouth bass of Lake Okeechobee is very edible when sauced with woods hunger.

It is Dream Land down there; the very natives move as if in one long reverie. In the Everglades all sounds, especially at night are queer—seem parts of stillness rather than noises, and weird as the velvet shadows over shadows forever brooding in "moods" and silences and twilights even at midday where ghostly moss swings and streams beside and over the pools. Contrasts? Horrible reptiles and heavenly clusters of strangely hued flowers; the haunting consciousness of dependence on a savage who could kill you and hide for a lifetime, the partial expectation that you may wake up and find you have had a bad attack of nightmare; and yet it grips the heart with a hypnotic force one cannot explain except to say it is all so novel, wild and unexpected in its vividness of first impressions!

It is a land of paradoxes. At Sarasota we picked some of the "new crop" of strawberries before New Year's Day. Turkey buzzards, protected by law, sat in pairs and quartettes on the peaks of the houses right in the village, or came strolling to back doors and watched families at dinner. Near West Palm Beach we were astounded to see twenty or more wild ducks fly long before we were within gunshot, and alight on water within twenty feet of a woman, from whose hand they ate "shucked oysters!" I had said "boo!" to statements on the boat from New York that I would see this. The state law punishes severely any person who may injure a wild duck within one mile of the corporation limits of the Beach. The ducks know just where the line of that imaginary circle is drawn. I myself coaxed them to within fifteen feet by throwing clams to them from an oyster boat.

At Weir's Lake is another paragon of a hotel among oranges left on the trees for guests. They see, taste and smell the foliage and fruits of pepper, camphor and persimmon trees, cabbage and sago palms and palmettoes and cocoanuts, guavas, pineapples, all beside a lake quite exquisite in loveliness, its admirably clear and blue waters laving a beach of white sand all its twenty-four miles of circumference. Good rowboats free to guests, fishing tackle and bait and a gasoline launch to take ladies to the four islands with orange groves on them are to be hired at small rates. That is refreshing in Florida. After 15th March and until 15th November the fishing is fine—pickerel (grass pike), perch and "trout" being plentiful. After forty years of angling vacations, I know of no spot so worthy of the term "earthly paradise." But all the fresh water fishes are comparative loafers—too lazy to put up a real fight.

Salt water fishing is different! Down among the "Keys" it is good even in winter—south of the mainland where one sees the Southern Cross in cloudless night skies, and needs a yacht and a lifetime to explore the coral reefs and atolls, and get acquainted with dolphins and sharks, flamingoes, pelicans and soaring frigate birds.

But for good fishing let the man on vacation visit Fort Myers after 1st May. The sport will soon surfeit him with its excellence. Or at Sarasota he may walk five minutes from the train to the excellent hotel right on the shore of the Bay, note exquisite wood and water views, and smell orange blossoms amid which are mocking birds, while he lunches on the broad verandah. Ten rods further he may launch a rowboat, ply oars for four minutes, and anchor among groupers often so big and plentiful that the sport becomes slaughter, and he quits. Any moment he may hook a giant pompano, Spanish mackerel, bonito, barracuda or sea bass, all sea rovers, uneducated fighters to the core. Even if he uses tarpon tackle, a kingfish from three pounds to several feet long may cut his work out for him in an instant. And the water looks so placid and innocent inside that bay!

A launch may be entered at that dock, and in an hour you are past Cedar Point, Pelican Beach, with its hundreds of queer birds that stand in a row and snap and scold at you in passing, and out into the Beauty.

Icilma Fleur Cream prevents the skin from shining when warm, and checks the growth of superfluous hair. No woman can hope to keep the delicate hues of a transparent rose-white complexion in a hot climate unless she uses regularly Nature's marvellous skin tonic, Icilma.
Of all good Chemists and Stores.—ICILMA CO., Ld., 142, Gray's Inn Road London, England.

...ith waters blue as Naples Bay and air nobody ...er breathed. There the kingfish are perfect in numbers, size and gameness. Try it.

And you will see not one but a dozen playing tarpon, tumbling and rollicking along in sheer mischief and joy of life and strength—perhaps harrying a school of mullet and killing scores in sheer piracy. They leap five or six feet from the water, showing eyes as big as the end of a hoe-handle; and no burnished bar of silver could glisten more brightly in the sunshine than the wet sides, armored in silver scales often three inches across, of the megalops atlanticus, a "cuss" in either Latin or English—the cruel, gallant savage and Robin Hood of the salt water.

We saw a fight with one of these shining brutes. The angler baited an awful hook with a mullet fourteen inches long, and let a tide trail this bait away from the boat a hundred feet to rest on a bottom twenty feet under water. Then we admired the waves, blue water, white caps and long lines of palmettoes on far-off shores, the flying ducks and curious pelicans. We smoked, read a magazine, chatted, yawned, asked if lunch and iced beer were ready, and were sorry we had come from quail shooting among the orange groves. We listlessly, hopelessly looked at the eight-foot tarpon rod of ironwood, even its top a half inch in diameter—a clumsy, awful stick with an absurdly strong reel costing $50 jammed and locked to its butt, and at the 200 yards of "bed-cord" line wound on that reel. It seemed a ridiculous travesty as we thought of our four ounce trout rods used on Michigan and Canada streams. Then luncheon and grumbles, predictions of no success here if we fished for a week, and then that line began to straighten as the mullet was drawn right away from the boat five, ten, thirty, fifty feet. The soft air seemed charged with electric portent. I could hear my heart beat as I waited for the strike that seemed five minutes in coming. The face of my comrade, about to make his first tarpon strike, was white and pinched with the awful strain of those waiting moments. He passed his hand over the reel, gave one last look at the line to make sure it would run out easily, and lifted the tip until it pointed to the zenith! The hook went home somewhere in the lower jaw of that tarpon a hundred feet away. The black handle of the reel hummed and made a seeming circle while 200 feet more of line unreeled in that first rush. The heavy brake was applied, and the line became slack. Thirty feet away a long crack was spilt in the water, and, lightning like, five feet of gleaming tarpon were hurled into the air as if by dynamite—and he was gone—gone with the hook broken before the fight began! The impotent line lay limp through 300 feet of water. Three dismayed men looked at each others' blank faces, and tried not to swear. Then the owner of that launch grinned and grinned as he drank our beer and smoked our cigars. That is an everyday experience in the Gulf and even in the Bay at Sarasota. The hot climate does not make Mr. Tarpon lazy.

RIFLE NOTES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—"Feur-de-Lys" mentions in his Rifle Notes that the new American Springfield cartridge, which shoots a 220 grain bullet and for which the Winchester Company have brought out a repeater of the 1895 model, would be an admirable one for hill shooting I quite agree with him as the bullet which is practically of the same calibre and weight as the ·303 would with its high velocity of 2,250 foot seconds be infinitely superior both in trajectory and in striking force—its superior speed would bring out the merits of its soft nose projectile which would expand on striking far more than the slower moving ·303.

The ·303 however has been lately enormously improved by the Westley Richards firm who have rechambered it for the ·375—·303 cartridge which imparts the very high velocity of from 2,500 to 2,700 foot seconds to a bullet of the ordinary service weight of 215 grains. This cartridge is as superior to the ·30 cal. Springfield as the latter is to the ordinary ·303. Unfortunately the Lee action of the Government pattern is not strong enough to stand the force of this cartridge though the same action as made by the Remington firm in America, with its front locking lugs of the Mauser pattern, could easily do so. The Westley Richards firm fit Mauser actions to magazine rifles chambered for the ·375—·303 which, except being slightly longer is of the same pattern as the ordinary ·303.

I have just seen in the papers that the Ross rifle, lately adopted by the Canadian Government in place of the Lee-Metford, has been experimented with successfully with a cartridge giving a muzzle velocity of 2,730 foot seconds. This rifle is of the same calibre and carries the same ammunition as our ·303, so I suppose for experimental purpose they have merely rechambered it for the ·375—·303 W. R. Pattern Cartridge which is the only one I know of that gives this extremely high velocity in a ·303 barrel. The Ross straight pull rifle has a front locking action similar to the Mauser which I suppose accounts for its being able to stand this very high pressure ammunition.

The Ross rifle, though it has a full length barrel, is as light as the new short rifle and is a well balanced weapon. The Canadians seem well pleased with it. The new German light pointed military bullet of the Spitzer pattern would be quite outclassed by the ·303 with the new cartridge.

SIR,—Works of a character appealing to the sportsman are not very numerous at Burlington House this year. The first that calls for notice is Mr. C. E. Swan's "The Day of Reckoning" (No. 59): a tiger, excellently modelled, occupies the foreground, and had the artist been content to despense with accessories, his work demanded nothing but praise: but it was a mistake to put those two excited beaters in the long grass ten paces away from the tiger: and another mistake was to put the elephant with the howdah, twenty paces in rear of the coolies. It is improbable that any tiger would crouch to drink in this composed fashion with the enemy so near him: if the gesticulating coolies did not betray their presence the bagh must be able to hear the approach of the elephant. On the other side of the doorway of this room hangs the diploma work of Mr. John Swan, the new R A, "Tigers Drinking" (No. 129): the picture is more boldly and roughly painted than Mr. John Swan's wont and perhaps for that reason appeals the more strongly. Mr. Arthur Wardle in "A Sylvan god" (No. 157), a dusky boy playing with a pair of leopards, has been exceedingly successful: the litheness of the leopard sprawling in the foreground is suggested most happily and the colouring is particularly good. Mr. Edwin Alexander takes us to other fields in "Winter's Victim" (No. 189) a stag lying dead on the snow, a crow about to investigate his nose: the body of the stag lacks something of the limpness of death and one would expect the ribs of a starved deer to show rather more distinctly: otherwise a cleverly composed picture in which the wintry atmosphere is well conveyed. Mr Edmond Brock in "The Springtime of Life" (No. 245) has a portrait group in a skiff, a young man pulling two girls; clean and fresh looking people, but not very interesting. Mr. Chas. Stewart's "Fire!" (No. 285) is a spirited piece of horse painting: two white horses with an engine, at the gallop, approaching the spectator: the horses in strong action are vigorously painted and leave no opening for hostile criticism The motor-car is a useful machine, but does not lend itself very well to the painters' art more especially when it is a white motor: and Mr. Shlto Douglas' portrait group of the Hon'ble Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Carnegie and their two sons (No. 326) would have lost nothing had it not included most of that motor-car. Mr. Edgar H. Fischer has a good study of Tigers in No. 337 "Dawn!," one is drinking—the tiger slaking his thirst has a special fascination for the artistic fraternity—and the other is growling at something over the water. No. 349, "Water Jump at Sandown," is by Miss Elmir Wigram: one horse has just landed over the regulation water and the rest are brushing through the guard fence in a bunch. The conspicuous figure, the landing horse, suggests questions concerning attitude: the set of his limbs are rather reminicent of a nag refusing dead than of the same alighting over water: the rider was in luck to have kept his saddle: a very loose seated jockey this. Miss Lucy Kemp Welch in No. 356. "The Joy of Life" has a small mob of rough horses careering in a field—a huge canvas. It is a capital study of equine anatomy and shows ripening of powers in one of our cleverest horse painters. "A King of the Desert" (No. 369) is Mr. S. Vedder's not very original title of a not very original picture: lion and lioness The lion is roaring—head up and thrust forward as lions do not stand when roaring—at something over the water and the lioness, interrupted in drinking, appears to be turning up her glaring green eyes to her lord in enquiry: there is a certain little want of modelling in the lion. Mr. Alfred J. Minnings "Ponies at a Horse Fair" (No. 416) shows half a dozen unkempt ponies of assorted colours tied against a low hedge right rear elevation: a good piece of modelling is the piebald at this end of the line. Miss F. Mabel Hollams has been very successful in "His last fence" (No. 468): a hunter lying dead by a low quick set hedge with his owner in pink kneeling at his head and a few sympathisers standing. She convinces us that the horse is dead. Miss Maud Earl sends one of her clever dog pictures in No. 477 "The end of the Trial," a team of wolf-like dogs in a snowscape under a forbidding sky: the work stands out in memory with peculiar distinctness. Mr. William Wallis' 'Death of the Roebuck' (No. 504) refers to a form of a sport surely seldom practised in this country—if the dead buck has been run down by the panting greyhound that sits beside the quarry. Mr John Charlton's study of hounds in "Gone to Ground" (No. 520) entirely satisfies; and so does Mr. Hadland's picture of hounds in kennel hardby. Mr. Alfred Minnings forsakes his favourite ground, the fair and market for the hunting field in No. 540 "The Meet at the Bell." I like it less than many of his works though the horses and hounds are exceedingly well done. Miss Florence Jay has painted some good hound pictures and shows great promise: her "Run to Earth" (No. 637) is full of vigour and shows careful observation of hound life. Mr. Sanderson Wells can put horses on canvas and his "Rushing the Hill: Derby Day" (No. 714) is very good; the driver of the coach is springing his cattle up a gentle slope: the off leader perhaps is putting more work into his collar than the gradient demands, but that is a trifle.

The angler's gentle craft is rather neglected this year: the only pictures dealing with it are Mr. F. Yates' "A Bite," (No. 32) showing a small boy fishing with a stick in a woodland beck with a fox-terrier in attendance; a quiet reposeful work not very redolent of sporting character: and Mr. Robert Meyerhume's No. 970 of an old man in a boat on a reedy mere, baiting a large hook. Mr. A. D. Greenhill Gardyne has in the Black and White Room a picture of "Captain S E. Crawfurd and a Giraffe" (No. 1356) which deserves a word of notice. Nor should Mr. Arthur Gough's "Coaches at Ascot leaving the Course" be forgotten.

RAZORS AND STROPS.

Most of our readers know by personal experience of the excellence of the razors turned out by the Wilkinson Sword Company, Limited, of London and Sheffield, others must have often heard their good qualities extolled by those discriminating individuals who, on the principal of "ask for the best and see that you get it" provide themselves with implements for securing one of the greatest of modern luxuries, a comfort without which life in the East would be intolerable—a clean shave. Their patent safety razors are now quite the rage in this country, and with them is supplied an ingenious mechanical strop. For the ordinary full sized razor built by them the firm have now perfected a double action stropping machine. To shave well and quickly one must strop well or perfect results will not be obtained. Stropping is an operation difficult to perform, as most shavers well know, and many devices have from time to time been introduced to render stropping easy, but all these instruments have the great disadvantage that, although they in some measure sharpen a blade when first used, they soon leave a very undesirable blunt edge, because they are not capable of stropping at the correct angle.

The Wilkinson Machine overcomes this, and is recognised as the only perfect machine for stropping razors, giving precisely the same result as the highly skilled hairdresser. This stropper enables one to open the frame before placing the razor in position so that it is impossible to cut the strop. When the strop is pulled the razor moves vertically, and the strop laterally, giving heel to toe movement representing a perfect imitation of the skilled barber's hand.

We wound up the meeting with success. The Committee's arrangements continued good, the course ditto, and the starting quite up to the mark. THE race meeting held to-day was quite a sporting little function though the attendance at it did serve to show how deserted Madras is at present. A card of five races had been provided, but one of these the All Comers Plate fell through for lack of entries The going on the Island Course was fairly hard after the prolonged spell of dry weather we have had ; but the racing on the whole was good. Major Elliot, I.M.S., in addition to organising the meeting, did the starting, while Mr. A. D. Jackson very efficiently officiated in the judge's box. The Band of the Madras Volunteer Guards played during the afternoon. Appended are the details :—

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK.

BRIGHT skies at this period of the year are generally enjoyed at the expense of an easterly wind, but after chopping round the compass it settled down a point south of west yesterday afternoon, to general satisfaction, and great-coats, much in evidence of late at Newmarket and Epsom, were of more benefit to the cloak room attendants than their owners. The general brightening up had a healthy effect on the attendance, a good one all round, and both paddock and lawn presented a pretty picture, thanks to the bright tints of the early season frocks of the ladies. The company was both large and representative in every department, whilst, despite the hard going, fields ruled well, and some excellent sport was enjoyed, and backers, who have been getting the worst of it of late, came away on pleasanter terms with themselves. Backing against the sun the breeze got nearer the sea on Saturday, and woolly clouds broke the steely blue expanse of sky that for so long has attested the presence of the wind that is neither good for man nor beast, while a spitting of rain at intervals strengthened the hopes of the farmers raised by Friday night's showers. They came quite àpropos to the situation for steeplechasing, putting the hard going into more seasonable conditions for a venture that savoured more of Auteuil than Sandown, as by this time our "leppers" have mostly gone into summer quarters, the cream having been skimmed off the milk, but the result showed that cross-country racing dies hard, as fields, results, and sport were satisfactory. For a wonder the afternoon looked like passing off without accident, until marred by one fell swoop in the last race, which kept all the bad luck for a holocaust, whereby Sunstroke II. and Caper (the one breaking a shoulder in the first, and the other a leg in the second round) had to be destroyed within a very short distance of each other. Bad luck for Mr. Phillips and Mr. Singer.

It was refreshing to see how widespread was the interest at the "illegitimate" game, of which we only lately took a partial and now a final farewell, as the attendance was a real strong one in every department, quite a ladies' day, in fact, in the paddock and members' lawn, while the road division was a strong one, and the rings were well patronised. In the latter respect the executive, by asphalting and grading the public enclosures, deserve support, and it is to be hoped that their example may be followed at Newmarket in the half-crown enclosure, which at present is not a desirable pitch on a dry, windy day. Details:—

NEWMARKET.

Once upon a time, when racing was conducted on patrician principles, the first spring meeting had no rivals, but with Monday and Saturday no longer drawn blank, it was somewhat startling to see such a crowded special as left Liverpool Street and if one wanted an explanation of the growing fashion for making Newmarket a Metropolitan Meeting, it was supplied by the three big dining cars crowded with people intent on beginning the day well with a substantial lunch. As a popular turfite of the old school sturdily remarked:—"You can't back winners on eggs and bacon!" Newmarket, free from dust and dirt, looked clean as a new pin, thanks to recent rain, which had made the Heath good going. After the apology for an attendance of the Craven week, the company which included many of the principal patrons of the Turf, may be written as good, and those present were treated to a capital opening to a Two Thousand week. Details:—

Classic races, except at such holiday resorts as Epsom and Doncaster, fall flat, stale, and unprofitable, and the few people abroad this morning did not suggest a big crowd for the Two Thousand Guineas. Newmarket was as dull as ditch water, and but for the sales the morning hours would have been leaden indeed. Moderate may be written of the attendance, which was more select than numerous, while a bitterly cold wind in the absence of sunshine made a very bleak expanse of the Heath indeed.—Details:—

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES—Of 100sovs. each h ft., for entire colts and fillies foaled in 1903; the owner of the second receives 400sovs., and the owner of the third 200sovs. out of the stakes. R.M. 1 mile.

Sir J. Thursby's bl c Bill of the Play, by Bill of Portland—Opera Dance ...	Mr. G. Thursby	0

(Winner trained by R. Marsh.)

BETTING: 100 to 30 agst. Gingal, 5 to 1 Bill of the Play, 6 to 1 Admirable Crichton, 7 to 1 Beppo, 10 to 1 Frustrator, 100 to 8 Dame Agneta colt, 100 to 7 each Ramrod and Black Arrow, 20 to 1 Gorgos, 25 to 1 Spate, 33 to 1 each Albert Hall and Black Auster.

When Mr. Owen released the tapes, Bill of the Play was caught broadside on, and left fully a hundred yards. As so often it the case, the most troublesome at the post got the best away, as Black Arrow jumped off in front of Admirable Crichton, Beppos wide on the left. Ramrod, Gorgos, towards the right, Frustrator, on the stand side, Gingal, on the top ground, and the Dame Agneta colt and Albert Hall heading the remainder, of whom Spate was last, except Bill of the Play, who followed on in hopeless pursuit. They had hardly come across the flat before Admirable Crichton headed Black Arrow, the pair drawing away clear from Beppo, Ramrod and Gorgos, Frustrator losing ground and dropping back behind Dame Agneta colt and Gingal. A change took place near Bushes Hill, where Gorgos raced up to the leaders, of whom Black Arrow was thus early in trouble, and his place was quickly taken by the Dame Agneta colt. Coming down the hill Admirable Crichton, as on former occasions, commenced to flounder, and immediately Dillon picked up his whip he inadvertently caught Ramrod a cut across the head, causing him to swerve out to the left and interfere with Beppo.

THE TURF.

SANDOWN PARK.

BRIGHT skies at this period of the year are generally enjoyed at the expense of an easterly wind, but after chopping round the compass it settled down a point south of west yesterday afternoon, to general satisfaction, and great-coats, much in evidence of late at Newmarket and Epsom, were of more benefit to the cloak room attendants than their owners. The general brightening up had a healthy effect on the attendance, a good one all round, and both paddock and lawn presented a pretty picture, thanks to the bright tints of the early season frocks of the ladies The company was both large and representative in every department, whilst, despice the hard going, fields ruled well, and some excellent sport was enjoyed, and backers, who have been getting the worst of it of late, came away on pleasanter terms with themselves. Backing against the sun the breeze got nearer the sea on Saturday, and woolly clouds broke the steely blue expanse of sky that for so long has attested the presence of the wind that is neither good for man nor beast, while a spitting of rain at intervals strengthened the hopes of the farmers raised by Friday night's showers. They came quite apropos to the situation for steeplechasing, putting the hard going into more seasonable conditions for a venture that savoured more of Auteuil than Sandown, as by this time our "leppers" have mostly gone into summer quarters, the cream having been skimmed off the milk, but the result showed that cross-country racing dies hard, as fields, results, and sport were satisfactory. For a wonder the afternoon looked like passing off without accident, until marred by one fell swoop in the last race, which kept all the bad luck for a holocaust, whereby Sunstroke II. and Caper (the one breaking a shoulder in the first, and the other a leg in the second round) had to be destroyed within a very short distance of each other. Bad luck for Mr. Phillips and Mr. Singer.

It was refreshing to see how widespread was the interest at the "illegitimate" game, of which we only lately took a partial and now a final farewell, as the attendance was a real strong one in every department, quite a ladies' day, in fact, in the paddock and members' lawn, while the road division was a strong one, and the rings were well patronised. In the latter respect the executive, by asphalting and grading the public enclosures, deserve support, and it is to be hoped that their example may be followed at Newmarket in the half-crown enclosure, which at present is not a desirable pitch on a dry, windy day. Details:—

NEWMARKET.

Once upon a time, when racing was conducted on patrician principles, the first spring meeting had no rivals, but with Monday and Saturday no longer drawn blank, it was somewhat startling to see such a crowded special as left Liverpool Street and if one wanted an explanation of the growing fashion for making Newmarket a Metropolitan Meeting, it was supplied by the three big dining cars crowded with people intent on beginning the day well with a substantial lunch. As a popular turfite of the old school sturdily remarked:—"You can't back winners on eggs and bacon!" Newmarket, free from dust and dirt, looked clean as a new pin, thanks to recent rain, which had made the Heath good going. After the apology for an attendance of the Craven week, the company which included many of the principal patrons of the Turf, may be written as good, and those present were treated to a capital opening to a Two Thousand week. Classic races, except at such holiday resorts as Epsom and Doncaster, fall flat, stale, and unprofitable, and the few people abroad this morning did not suggest a big crowd for the Two Thousand Guineas. Newmarket was as dull as ditch water, and but for the sales the morning hours would have been leaden indeed. Moderate may be written of the attendance, which was more select than numerous, while a bitterly cold wind in the absence of sunshine made a very bleak expanse of the Heath indeed.—Details:—

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES—Of 100sovs. each h ft., for entire colts and fillies foaled in 1903; the owner of the second receives 400sovs., and the owner of the third 200sovs. out of the stakes. R.M. 1 mile.

Sir E. Vincent's br c Black Auster, by Persimmon—Crusado	H. Blades	0

BETTING: 100 to 30 agst. Gingal, 5 to 1 Bill of the Play, 6 to 1 Admirable Crichton, 7 to 1 Beppo, 10 to 1 Frustrator, 100 to 8 Dame Agneta colt, 100 to 7 each Ramrod and Black Arrow, 20 to 1 Gorgos, 25 to 1 Spate, 33 to 1 each Albert Hall and Black Auster.

When Mr. Owen released the tapes, Bill of the Play was caught broadside on, and left fully a hundred yards. As so often it the case, the most troublesome at the post got the best away, as Black Arrow jumped off in front of Admirable Crichton, Beppos wide on the left. Ramrod, Gorgos, towards the right, Frustrator, on the stand side, Gingal, on the top ground, and the Dame Agneta colt and Albert Hall heading the remainder, of whom Spate was last, except Bill of the Play, who followed on in hopeless pursuit. They had hardly come across the flat before Admirable Crichton headed Black Arrow, the pair drawing away clear from Beppo, Ramrod and Gorgos, Frustrator losing ground and dropping back behind Dame Agneta colt and Gingal. A change took place near Bushes Hill, where Gorgos raced up to the leaders, of whom Black Arrow was thus early in trouble, and his place was quickly taken by the Dame Agneta colt. Coming down the hill Admirable Crichton, as on former occasions, commenced to flounder, and immediately Dillon picked up his whip he inadvertently caught Ramrod a cut across the head, causing him to swerve out to the left and interfere with Beppo.

"I shall soon be travelling again in the Rocky Mountains, and shall depend a good deal upon Liebig's Extract—that is to say, upon LEMCO, which is the only Liebig's Extract I recognise."—EDWARD WHYMPER.

provided with LEMCO are equipped for all emergencies in the food line. In addition to its unique food value it is compact and will keep for any length of time.

LEMCO

The original and only genuine Liebig Company's Extract.

Then into the Dip Higgs caught the last-named up, but in trying to get him into line again he baulked the Dame Agneta colt. In the Dip Gingal and Admirable Crichton were beaten, and Gorgos, tackling across to the right, assumed command, closely tackled by Bamrod and Dame Agneta colt, the latter of whom came up between the pair of them and actually showed in front fifty yards from home, but Gorgos, coming again, got the best of a scrambling finish by a head; a neck divided second and third. Beppo (baulked) was a good fourth, Admirable Crichton a fair fifth, Black Arrow sixth, Spate seventh, then after a big gap came Gingal eighth, Albert Hall ninth, Frustrator tenth, and Bill of the Play last throughout. Time—1min. 43⅘secs.

Pleasant was it next day to find that the bitter blast had given way, and the wind had at last gone south, and more people were abroad than on the Two Thousand Guineas morning. Of course, the bulk of the crowd had melted away, leaving the attendance to the regular habitués of the Turf, who seem to share the King's predilection for Newmarket, the paddock and club enclosure holding a fairly strong company, but the enclosures were but sparsely attended. Pulverising under the wind, the light, chalky surface of the Heath was not such bad galloping, but a white, low-lying haze made it a bad day for glasses. Details:—

After the lack of interest shown in the Two Thousand Guineas it was not to be expected that the fillies' race to-day would cause much excitement. Very little was known about them, but on last year's form Sir Daniel Cooper's Flair appeared to be a long way in front of her rivals.

There was no increase in the attendance of yesterday, so the number of people present was far below that of Wednesday. When racing started there was an undecided tone about the weather, as a strong wind blew across the Heath and kept the rain clouds scurrying on, but there was a rise in the temperature, a change much appreciated after the icy blast of Tuesday.

The field for the One Thousand stopped short at twelve. Flair was the centre of attraction, and has come on nicely since last season, having filled out and thickened. Some thought her short of a gallop or two. Ulalume appeared in much better condition than when she ran a fortnight ago, and this remark also applies to Victorious. Snow Glory was also greatly admired, but the others did not appear to create much interest.

In the race Flair very quickly showed that she had retained her two-year-old form, and for half the journey indulged Paid Up and Lischana with the lead, but when Bernard Dillon allowed her to go to the front, just below the bushes, she shot out without an effort, and quickly put the issue beyond doubt. Down the hill she came like a cricket ball, and many of those in the rear, recognising the situation, dropped anchor. Her performance to-day was a very smooth one, and should her owner prefer to run her in the Derby instead of the Oaks Lally will find a dangerous rival. Neither Ulalume nor Snow Glory ran up to expectations, but Lischana was undoubtedly second best.

Here Flair drew out clear, and won in a canter by three lengths; three-quarters of a length separated the second and third, Chewink was fourth, Snow Glory fifth, Ulalume sixth, Victorious seventh, Andromeda filly next, and Lady Mischief last. TENNIS.

WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP.

C. FAIRS vs. F. GARCIN.—The concluding day's play of the International match for the tennis championship of the world and £500, between "Punch" Fairs (holder) and Ferdinand Garcin (French champion) took place on Saturday before a distinguished company. By taking three sets right off the reel, Fairs won the match in decisive fashion by seven sets to four, and at the same time remains with that old institution, Prince's Club.

The dominating feature of the contest was the deliberate and determined way in which "Punch" Fairs, after losing four sets out of the first five, attacked his opponent. This form of attack was so severe and sustained that he actually won the next six sets off the reel; and, moreover, when it is borne in mind that Ferdinand at the commencement of the sixth set was playing with the same marked judgment and coolness as in the first stages, the result is the more remarkable. The fact is, the tennis fighting qualities of "Punch" are curiously enough only thoroughly tested when he is set an uphill task, when his resource in extricating himself from difficulties appears to the onlooker to be truly marvellous, whilst in the first day's play he allowed himself to be enticed into playing a facsimile game to that of the fleur de lys champion, in which he was dexterously beaten. On the second and third days he showed us a vigorous and attacking order of play. In short, he presented us with the obverse side of the medal. His stroke from the back-hand corner of the service side into the grille, and his shots for the winning gallery and dedans were most effective. It cannot be said that the floor play gave us many short chases, but the returns by "Punch" probably account for the absence of short chases. In the old days, volleys were unknown; nowadays, to prevent a short chase, the method is to volley, but the effect is not necessarily conquering, for last week at Brighton Fairs never used the volley as a means of return, whereas Garcin always did so. Ferdinand was ready either on the back-hand side or fore-hand side to volley every return. He failed absolutely through "Punch's" ability to put a slow ball down. Writing in haste on the evening of both previous days' play, it was very easy to make too much of the points which struck the spectator. Reviewing the match with care, it is possible to write in a judicial manner. The obvious criticism is that Ferdinand developed a game upon the first day the like of which has never been seen in England before, and most probably never has and never will be seen in any court in England or France. If people will remember the serious nature of the match, and will at the same time recollect that Ferdinand had to play good tennis as a matter of business, it becomes at once obvious that his exhibition on the first day was one of the finest things ever done. Chase, too, was bad for him in the two opening sets, and he never played a stroke over the net which would have lost the chase except upon three occasions. That this was possible against a player of Fair's capabilities needs emphasising. Not only emphasising, but insisting upon—for none other than Ferdinand could have accomplished it. But Fairs has won against a man of this sort.

On the first day Fairs was not favoured by fortune. His shots for the dedans invariably hit the penthouse, and from the other side of the court he was equally unlucky with the grille and the winning gallery. One must not look at the match from a purely tennis point of view, for it was a match for the championship of the world. When Garcin took the fifth set on Wednesday and led by four sets to one, the result seemed a foregone conclusion. Fairs, however, did not seem to think it so. He won the sixth set, making the score 4—2, and by so doing decided the result of the match, for had he lost the set he must have lost the whole match. By gaining it he got that confidence which was necessary for him to play his free and open game, and subsequently his attack was so strong that he never allowed Garcin to take another set, but won outright. It should be said that Mr. J. R. McLean was mainly instrumental in bringing about the match, and thus providing the members of the Prince's with a grand exhibition of tennis. The Hon'ble N. S. Lytton officiated as referee, and A. Forester marked the game. The full score of the match was 2—6, 3—6, 6—4, 4—6, 5—6, 6—4, 6—4, 6—2, 6—3, 6—4, and 6—2 (56 game to 47).

ATHLETICS.

L. A. C. SPRING MEETING.

The premier London club held its first meeting of the present year on Saturday in showery weather. The Public Schools Championships produced no startling performances, but the times recorded in the running events were fully up to the average, while W. H. Dunnett (Ipswich) maintained his last year's standard of excellence in the hurdles and the jumps. The 100 yards, won against the wind in 11⅕secs by J. S. Royle, was a good race; but in his heat C. H. Williams recorded ⅕sec. faster, just beating V. Shearman, who made his effort a trifle late. In the half H. C. W. Pile (Newbury), although defeated, showed form which stamps him as a future flier at the distance. A 440 yards novices' race only secured a very moderate entry, and none of the competitors appear likely to secure championship honours, although the victor, B. W. Connolly, runs in very fair style. The four miles inter-borough walk was notable rather for variety of styles than for any really excellent display, with the exception of that given by the winner, E. E. Larner, who is in no way related to the record holder.

The sprint went to a novice, J. R. Herridge, who was consequently unable to compete in the Novices' 440 which came later in the programme. L. J. de B. Reed, 2½, and L. J. Cornish, 3½, won their heats in the first round, but did not qualify in the second series. The Members' Half was one of the best races of the day, and under the climatic condisions both Cumberlege and Lintott performed excellently, while Densham displayed his usual pluck at the finish. The Steeplechase Challenge Cup race went to the young Blackheathers, R. F. C. Yorke, who, with more practice, should make a good steeplechaser. The distance handicap (1½ miles) looked like going to J. J. Allen from the very start. The civil servant, who ran in the 10 Miles Championship, was evidently bent on breaking up his field, which he did, and yet retained sufficient energy to beat C. S. Long at the finish. The rest of the middle and long-mark men were out of the hunt early in the race, R. G. Hebert (Blackheath) being third and F. A. Knott (S.L.H.) fourth from virtual scratch (85 yards), a mark also occupied by C. G. Holdaway, who, however, was never prominent. Results of the final:—

100 YARDS HANDICAP (Open).

J. R. Herridge Hampton H. 6½ 1 | W. R. Bryson, Finchley H. 9½ 3
R. W. Kelly, Granville F.C. 10½ 2 | G. Connolly, Blackheath, 10½ 4
Won by half a yard; others close up. Time—10-0⅕secs.

880 YARDS MEMBERS' HANDICAP.—C. P. Cumberlege, 14 yards, 1; J. F. Lintott, scratch, and J. B. Densham, 8, dead-heated for second place.

H. Norrey led for the first lap and then retired; leaving E. F. Vowles and H. F. Wash in front. Cumberlege was well up, with Lintott handy. A furlong from home the former drew out and won easily by eight yards; Densham just catching Lintott on the tape. Time—2mins. 1⅕secs.

TWO MILES STEEPLECHASE CHALLENGE CUP.—(Members.)

R. F. C. Yorke ... 1 | F. B. Thompson ... 3
D. F. McNicol ... 2 | A. H. Bek 0
There were only two in the race and Yorke was the better jumper, especially over the water. In the last three laps he drew right away, and won by sixty yards. Time—12mins.

ONE MILE AND A HALF HANDICAP. (Open).

J. J. Allen, Civil Service A.A. 245 ... ... 1 | G. F. Piper, Belgrave H. 150 5
C. S. Long, Polytechnic H. 185 ... ... 2 | S. G. de Cookson, Polytechnic H. 115 6
R. G. Hebert, Blackheath H. 140 ... ... 3 | F. Hatch, Reading A. C. 160 7
F. A. Knott, S. L. H. 85 4 | A. E. Gardiner, Cumberlege H. 150 8

Allen soon took the lead and forced the pace throughout. Meantime the only other long-mark man to show up was C. S. Long. Knott, from virtual scratch, was well among his men at a mile, and when the bell went he looked like getting through; but on the last bend Long came again and went for Allen, who, however, had sufficient reserve to win all out by two yards; Hebert, five yards away, just clear of Knott. Time—7mins. 5⅖secs.

440 YARDS NOVICES' RACE.

Connolly 1, Peachey 2, Kinghorn 3. Won by four yards; a foot second and third. Time—59⅖secs.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS' CHAMPIONSHIP.

100 YARDS.

J. S. Royle, Harrow, 1; C. H. Williams, S. E. College, Ramsgate, 2; N. Y. L. Wellman, Wellingborough, 3. Although worst away, Royle finished strongly, and won by half a yard. Time—11⅕secs.

120 YARDS HURDLES.

W. H. Dunnett, Ipswich, 1; N. Y. L. Wellman, Wellingborough, 2; H. R. Kitson, Brentwood, 3. Time—17⅖secs.

440 YARDS.

H. B. Thomas, Battersea Grammar School, 1; H. L. P. Jolly, Framlingham, 2; J. W. H. Park, Leatherhead, 3.

An excellent race, in which the winner displayed very promising form, and won by eight yards. Time—55secs.

880 YARDS.

A. J. N. Williamson, Highgate, 1; H. C. W. Pile, Newbury G. S. 2; H. D. Jackson, Brentwood, 3.

Pile set a warm pace from the start, but failing to last right home was beaten in the straight by Williamson, who won by ten yards. Time—2mins. 9⅖secs.

ONE MILE.

J. H. W. Pack, St. John's, Leatherhead, 1; W. Foss, Eastbourne, 2; H. D. Jackson, Brentwood, 3; P. H. C. Cavenaugh, Royal Naval School, 4; J. E. Rowntree, King Edward VII School, Chelmsford, 5.

Foss led the best part of the way, having at first Cavenaugh and afterwards Pack in close attendance. A furlong from home Pack made his effort, and shaking off Foss won well by thirty yards. Much interest was taken in the performance of Rowntree, who is a little nipper far smaller than the others. Although half a lap or more in arrears, he finished out bravely. Time—4mins. 58⅕secs.

THREE-QUARTERS OF A MILE STEEPLECHASE.

R. E. Lincoln, Framlingham, 1; M. C. Bird, Harrow, 2.

A rather uninteresting race, the form displayed being poor. At the finish Lincoln broke the tape while his antagonist was taking the water jump. Time—4mins. 42secs.

HIGH JUMP.

W. H. Dunnett, Ipswich, 5 feet 5 inches, 1; G. R. Sayer, Highgate, and S. H. Stevens, Reading, 5 feet 1 inch each, dead-heated for second place.

Dunnett won at 5 feet 2 inches, but afterwards jumped 5 feet 5 inches.

LONG JUMP.

W. H. Dunnett, Ipswich, 20 feet 3½ inches, 1; C. H. Williams, S. E College Ramsgate, 19 feet 2¼ inches, 2; E. A. Stanway, St. John's, Leatherhead, 18 feet 5 inches, 3.

WRESTLING.

HACKENSCHMIDT vs. MADRALI.

With a suddenness that was startling, with an ease that was astonishing, George Hackenschmidt beat Ahmed Madrali at Olympia on Saturday night for the catch-as-catch-can championship of the world. Of actual wrestling there was but five minutes thirty-four seconds—a tabloid of excitement which served to make and mar a reputation and to add a page to wrestling history.

FIRST BOUT.

Hackenschmidt advanced to the scratch with a light, jaunty step, and Madrali, who was bare-footed, stealthily approached him. There was in every respect a great contrast in the general appearance and attitud of the combatants. The vast building was hushed in silence, and instant expectation of a sensational break in the solemn stillness that prevailed but for the briefest period of time. Hackenschmidt was artistic, and his pose waiting the attack, classical. Madrali appeared as though he had commenced, and was indulging himself in a rest, though he looked a trifle mischievous, and intent on anticipating an immediate rush from his adversary. They shook hands, and were quickly at work, and as quickly slipped away. A little systematic finessing, and Madrali grabbed Hackenschmidt's neck, but soon relaxed his hold, being outside the pale of the conditions. Creeping close, they were soon at cross purposes again in search of an opening.

Madrali for a few seconds was on his knees but was up and away. Here arose a short scrummage on the floor, and swiftly violent attacks for a hold. Hackenschmidt with a lightning-like leap wriggled out of danger, and was first on his legs. In a few seconds they were again at close quarters, and Madrali in the embrace of Hackenschmidt, who held him with vice-like tenacity. Madrali attempted a bridge, but Hackenschmidt easily broke it down, and throwing the Turk over with manifest ease, placed Madrali on both shoulders very decisively. Time—1min. 3secs.

SECOND BOUT.

Hackenschmidt, brimful of confidence, clutched Madrali by the neck, and swung him round like a baby, to the astonishment of the spectators. Another brief passage of arms, and they were on the ground, with Madrali behind, and Hackenschmidt on all fours. This was the hold that, it was said, if Madrali secured, would certainly crown his efforts with success. Pierri made no secret of this weeks before the contest, and good judges of wrestling, strange to state, corroborated him. Madrali's favourite hold flushed his partisans with short-lived excitement. It was a palpable flash in the pan. The Turk, however, exercised all his tremendous strength in the endeavour to turn Hackenschmidt over. The Russian was on his hands and knees, with Madrali's arms tight under the lower region of the abdomen. At times Hackenschmidt rose high, and then flattened himself on the mat again. Meanwhile Madrali held on like grim death, and Hackenschmidt bided his time, moving to and fro, and timing Madrali's effort to dislodge him with discriminating patience. This continued until Madrali, with concentrated force, applied with all his might, clutched Hackenschmidt's arm, and just as quickly the Russian dragged it out of danger. The opportunity presented itself for which Hackenschmidt has been waiting.

Madrali's move cost him the fall. As he endeavoured to twist the Russian over, Hackenschmidt raised himself to a height that frustrated Madrali's intended operations (the wrist-hold and half-nelson). Snatching his arm from Madrali's reach, Hackenschmidt got on a left wrist-hold and twining his leg round Madrali's with the deadliness, in its environment, of a boa-constrictor, summoned all the physical force at his command. Slowly but surely he bore down upon Madrali, who vainly attempted a bridge, which availed him not, and in the twinkling of an eye he was on the broad of his back. Time—4min.

Madrali regained his feet, and slowly sought the refuge of his corner. Hackenschmidt, elated with victory, donned his robe and ran out of the ring, and thus ended the catch-as-catch-can wrestling championship, in far easier fashion than the greatest admirers of the Russian, or Hackenschmidt himself, ever anticipated. The Turk, a ruined wrestler, made his exit almost unnoticed, though there were quite a number who, while regarding the man as always very much over-rated, yet pitied him; for without a doubt, as a wrestler, Madrali was ever in a class far beneath the rôle of champion.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

Ootacamund, 19th May.—The hunting season in Ootacamund is now in full swing, but we have not yet had nearly enough rain on the downs to make the sport as good as we have come to expect it. Scent has been catchy and the mornings usually very hot. There have been some very good runs, notably that on Thursday last, of which I send you an account. Colonel the Hon'ble R. T. Lawley has been Master, but, unfortunately, he has been in poor health since he came up here and has not been able to attend many of the meets. In his absence the horn has been carried by Captain Dennistoun and Captain Vane. Colonel Lawley has now been ordered Home and the Mastership has gone to Captain Dennistoun. A new draft of hounds arrived from England last week and looked very promising. Below I send you an account of Thursday's run.

The meet on Thursday was at Fernhill, the residence of H. H. the Maharaja of Mysore. It was a lawn meet with the usual photographs. There was a large field out and we were all glad to see Captain Dennistoun out again. Hounds started about 6-40 viâ Golf and Rees' Corners and the Master drew over the shoulder of Bagman, hounds finding a brace of jacks in New Cover. Hounds ran fast to Mills' Cover and through it, one jack turning left handed across Blackmore Vale towards Rally-wood, followed by one hound, and the rest of the pack hunting their jack down to Treble Crossing, back along Municipal Stream, across the stream below Bagman, over the road and along the Golf Links, then right handed back towards New Cover where scent failed rapidly and after casting around Bagman nothing more could be made of it. The Master then proceeded to draw Mills' Cover, but just below the cover hounds struck a line and the jack was viewed. The pack ran close at his brush down to Municipal Stream, which they crossed below Bagman. The jack crossed the road on to the Golf Links as if pointing for Lascelles but turned south and ran down to Treble Crossing. Here he was headed by some of the field and got to ground in a water course close to Mills' Cover. The terriers were put on and killed him.

The Master then drew up Blackmore Vale, where a jack had evidently been, but he had been gone a long time and we went on, drawing the lower part of Rallywood without success. Then we moved over to Rawlings Nullah, near the bottom of which Captain Haseltine followed a jack, who headed as if for Staircase, but leaving it on his left ran almost straight to Gibbs' Shola, with hounds not far behind and the pace warming up. At the road, however, hounds were brought to their noses and the jack was then viewed on the other side of Briar Shola. Captain Dennistoun lifted hounds and took them down at a gallop laying them on the other side of the stream. They then hunted their jack past the edge of Briar across the Pykara Road and turned up again towards the ridge of Herbert Plantation. Here two sambur were right in the middle of the pack, who took no notice of them. Hounds then took the line down into the shola below Herbert Plantation, where the jack must have lain down. As it was late and very hot hounds were taken home, reaching the kennels at 10 o'clock. A busy but somewhat disappointing day.

MOTORING AT HOME

LONDON, 4th May 1906.

A MOTORIST, driving in Surrey recently, found himself in a police trap, from which he escaped by the aid of a small mirror, which was affixed to the dash-board for the purpose of observing the traffic behind him. Driving at well over the "legal" limit, he suddenly observed in the glass a wave of something white behind him, and shrewdly guessing that this meant a police signal, he slowed down to a crawling pace. Farther on he came on a rustic, holding a watch in his hand, to whom the motorist blandly observed, "This is a fast car, eh, constable?" "Yes," was the surely response, "better mind you are not had up for loitering."

The fact that several Irish candidates in the recent examinations who have been doing duty as chauffeurs for a considerable period failed to get even a driving certificate, gives some idea of the number of incompetent men who are at present driving cars, seeing that comparatively few candidates presented themselves, and these, naturally were men who expected to do well. As an instance of the colossal ignorance shown in one or two cases, a candidate who was asked what was inside the engine was unable to attempt a reply. If the Government would only make it compulsory for all drivers to hold the certificates of the Automobile Club, they would do more for the safety of the public than any amount of restrictive measures regulating the speed. This is a point which has not been nearly sufficiently ventilated. At the present moment we know of drivers who are constantly on the road who would not have the slightest chance of passing the examinations in question, and who, needless to say, are unfit to be entrusted with the care of a vehicle which requires a considerable amount of skill and a still larger measure of judgment.

Although the design and manufacture of pneumatic tyres during the past few years have tended greatly to their improvement and reliability, yet the question of their upkeep and renewal is still the most important feature for consideration by car owners. With the introduction of armoured non slipping treads the tendency to puncture has been greatly reduced; on the other hand, the new tyres, being very strongly made, are more difficult to remove when repairs become necessary, and cause much inconvenience when this has to be done by the roadside. It is somewhat surprising, therefore, to find that tyres do not receive more regular attention by owners and drivers, for it is quite a usual thing to leave them untouched beyond an occasional pumping up until a puncture occurs, and one constantly sees wheels with the security bolts (which hold the tyre in position) so rusted up that the task of removing them alone would take up a good deal of time. To ensure good service, tyres require regular attention, and the valve and security bolts kept in good condition. Then when the inevitable puncture occurs the task of repair is rendered comparatively easy.

As an illustration of how necessary it is to replace a tyre properly in position after a repair has been effected, a motorist told me of a puncture that happened on his car late at night, and in the hurry to get going again one of the holding down bolts was overlooked and omitted when putting the cover back on the wheel. The tyre was apparently all right, but they had barely travelled another mile before it burst, and it was then found that the tube had blown out through the bolt hole. Another repair had to be made, and this time due care was taken to see that everything was quite right.

While the law which imposes a fixed speed limit remains in force there is not like to be any lessening of police activity in setting traps. The absurdity of expecting a driver to exactly gauge his speed at any given point is evident, and why the law cannot be amended so as to apply to reckless driving only is what motorists cannot understand. Under the latter conditions the general public would be better safeguarded, and the undignified proceedings whereby police officers hide in hedges to trap the unwary could not then be continued, as, unless it could be proved a driver was endangering the public safety, he could not be proceeded against for a purely speed offence.

Gear changing is one of the most difficult things a novice has to learn, requiring a knack which can only be acquired by practice. Sliding one gear into another can only be quickly and easily accomplished when both are running at the same speed, and it is in the judgment of the correct moment where the driver's skill in doing this lies. On heavy vehicles missing a gear is a more serious matter than with a pleasure car. A new gear system has recently been brought out in France, in which the various gear wheels are always in mesh, one set being mounted on drums which run freely on a shaft until engaged by means of an internal expanding friction ring, operated by a lever sliding inside the shaft. This latter is made hollow. The speed changes are controlled in the usual manner from the driver's seat. This idea overcomes the difficulty already mentioned in selecting the right moment for changing. On the other hand, there is a possibility of causing serious damage if a low speed is thrown in carelessly when the vehicle is travelling fast.

The Glasgow Corporation have added still another motor-propelled vehicle to their fire brigade equipment. The latest is a petrol-electric fire escape, in which a petrol motor, running at constant speed, generates electricity from a dynamo, which in turn is conveyed to motors on the driving wheels. The ladder is raised by a separate small motor, and has an extention of eighty-five feet.

In the Circuit European, which is to be the big touring event of the year, Great Britain will be represented by the Wolseley, Daimler, and Humber Companies, and it is expected that our representatives will make a good showing in an event of this character, in which general reliability is the chief factor in success.

THE CALCUTTA LEAGUE.

DIVISION I.

RANGERS vs. DALHOUSIE.—This was a good game, played on the Rangers' ground and remarkable for the sound defence of both sides. Dalhousie, not quite at full strength, did the bulk of the attacking in both halves of the game, but their attempts at goal were frequently lacking in direction and mostly devoid of sting; consequently the homesters' goalkeeper had a tolerably easy though lively time for the most part. Undoubtedly the visitors ought to have scored more goals than the one which gave them the win. This was the outcome of a kick after "a behind" as the Australains call it, and neatly placed by Williamson the ball was headed through by Holley. The shooting of the 'Dals" was wilder than ever towards the end of play. Team :—

DALHOUSIE.—Kay, goal; Stimson, and Sinclair backs; Ball Woods and Napper, half-backs; Barber, Graham, Prike, Holley and Williamson, forwards.

RANGERS.—Smith, goal; Brown and Margrett, backs; Cavan, J. Davis and Wheeler, half-backs; McKay, Bennett, T. Davis, Gault and Glen, forwards.

Referee :—Mr. E. E. Rope.

CALCUTTA F. C. vs. NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—This was a hard fought, but rather one sided game, the whistle sounding on a C. F. C. victory of three goals to nothing—all three points scored by Sherman. The chief fault observable in the play of the soldiers was an indecision in front of goal which at times amounted to absolute feebleness. They crossed over with Calcutta leading by one goal, and towards the end of the second half Sherman sent in two stingers that Hobday might well be excused for letting through. Teams :—

CALCUTTA.—Dods, goal; Storey and Burn, backs; Graham, McDonald-Smith and Crawfurd, half-backs; Kerr, Fyffe, Binning, Sherman and Ansell, forwards.

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—Hobday, goal; Patterson and Goodings, backs; Forebanks, Causley and Russell, half-backs; Popplewell, Paine, Worley, Sanders and Madison, forwards.

CALCUTTA F. C. vs. DALHOUSIE A. C.—The C. F. C. ground was the rendezvous of these teams last Saturday, and a disappointing display was the result. Both the Calcutta forwards and half-backs played a very poor game, but their backs were conspicuous for consistent good work. Nothing was scored in the first half, but in the second the Dalhousie scored a goal from a corner kick, Dods having touched the ball, and Prike scored a second goal from a free kick awarded for a foul; but this was not allowed by the referee who should have another careful look at the rules. Thus the D. A. C. won by a goal to nil.

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS vs. HOWRAH.—A good hard game was witnessed on the soldiers' ground. Howrah scored through Bennett and the Fusiliers equalised through Worley and won by 2 to 1 when Paine found the net, just before call of time.

RANGERS vs. Y. M. C. A.—On the ground of the latter the Rangers inflicted a three to nil defeat on their opponents. It was rather a straggling game, and the winners had quite the best of the luck.

CALEDONIANS vs. H. L. I.—The Caledonians were decidedly unfortunate in being beaten by three to nil by the H.L.I. on the Rangers' ground on Saturday, as they had quite their share of the game, and there is little doubt that the second goal scored by the Military was clean offside. On several occasions the military goal was in danger, and the Civilians were unlucky in not scoring. Immediately after the start the H.L.I. ran down and narrowly missed scoring, but soon after good combination between Pybus, who was outside right, and Durant enabled the Caledonians to force two corners and a regular bombardment of the Military goal ensued, but good defence and bad luck were against the Civilians. From the break away Devlin scored, and soon after Lees, who was palpably offside netted again, the point being allowed.

Half time thus found the Military two up, and during the second half their custodian had several anxious moments, owing to good shots and accurate centres from Pybus. Devlin from a fine centre from Bottleman secured the third point for his side, and the whistle found the Civilians pressing. H.L.I. have a fine set of backs and their forwards putting aside gallery play, are a tricky lot. Irvine and Wade played a sound game at back for the Caledonians, as did Byrne at centre half, and Pybus and Durant in the forward line.

CALEDONIA vs. Y. M. C. A.—The Caledonians at last succeeded in winning a match at the expense of the Y. M. C. A. their own ground, on Tuesday, and after a continual bombardment of the Y. M. C. A. goal, beat them by 3—0. This score would have been considerably larger, were it not for the fine performance of Behrend in goal, who is quite the Fregoli of the football world in Calcutta, and is this season playing for the Y. M. C. A. The Caledonians are unfortunate in losing such a keen sportsman, as he was the mainstay of the club in football, tennis and cricket, and the Club would have lost several of their matches, or at least made a shocking display had he not, at a critical time, come to the rescue. In the first half, Irvine, who had gone forward, scored a goal, and, during the second half, two more were scored by Irvine and Durant respectively. The Caledonians throughout had the best of the game, and Duigenan was never called upon to save. For the winners Wade, Chandler, Irvine and Clegg played well; whilst for the Y. M. C. A., Behrend, Reynolds and Rayneau did practically all the work.

DIVISION II.

ST. XAVIER'S vs. 75TH R. G. A.—On a very wet ground the Collegians were at home to the Gunners last Thursday and after a slushy struggle in which correct football was out of the question the R. A. won, through Doyle, by one to nil.

MEASURERS vs. CUSTOMS.—On the Measurers' ground a draw of two all was the result of this match. Berkley was credited with both the goals obtained by the Customs, while brothers W. and H. Griffiths scored for the Measurers.

HORNETS vs. 75TH R. G. A.—On the Hornets' ground the home team lost by two to one. Doyle scored twice for the winners, and L. Rosser scored the point for the Hornets.

ST. XAVIERS vs. MEDICAL.—St. Xavier's on their own grounds were beaten by the Medical by two goals to nil. Dingavan and Marchant were credited with the scoring.

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS "B" vs. B.-N. R.—This match played in the Fort result in a win for the Fusiliers by eight goals to nil. Kelly (3), Hall (2), Bell, Gayde and Daly were the goal getters. The Railway had out a very job lot.

CUSTOMS vs. HORNETS.—An unsatisfactory match played on the Customs' ground on Monday. The homesters were obliged to send in a weak team and the Hornets were more unfortunate still in having to play a man short all through the game. The Customs got two goals (Berkley and Marsden) and won by two to nil.

NORTHUMBERLAND "B" vs. MEASURERS.—This uninteresting game was decided on the National ground on Monday, the soldiers winning by two goals to nil. The beaten team made a tolerably good show and several times came near to scoring, but they will have to improve much in their shooting ere they can expect to get goals.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Association football season in Calcutta has rarely been ushered in to the accompaniment of so miserable an exhibition of the game as was witnessed in the opening matches of the 1906 League competition. It is safe to say that, with the possible exception of the two military teams whose physical fitness is a matter of course, not one of the other six competing teams were in any sort of training at all on the first Saturday of play. Though a certain amount of improvement in this respect must naturally follow as the season progresses, it is passing strange that so little combined effort should be made by teams to get into some condition before entering on the serious business of the League. It is true that the undue extension of hockey has for several years past interfered seriously with the possibilities of training for football, although most of the League teams managed to play at least one friendly match prior to the commencement of this season's competition. The League competition has always been so tightly sandwiched in between the Beighton Hockey Cup competition and the I. F. A. Shield Tournament that it has been found impossible to have more than eight teams playing in the League, and consequently there has always been an outcry, rising in latter years almost to a shriek, from junior clubs against their exclusion from the proud and haughty eight. Mr. D. L. Walker undertook, a few seasons back, to assuage the wrath of the juniors by introducing a Civil and Military League, which at once became a popular success.

But this season will see the consummation of a very general desire for the amalgamation of these two distinct Leagues into one body of two divisions, both observing the same rules, with the bottom team of the First Division and the top team of the Second Division changing places at the commencement of each season. This arrangement has been adopted none too soon, but now that it has been placed on a sound and satisfactory footing the benefits accruing to the Association game in Calcutta cannot fail to be obvious. There are some who have advocated a later

...e for the commencement of "socker" in Calcutta. It is all very nice to make out and dried plans to one's own complete satisfaction, but suggest the above plan to a "rugger" man and I fancy his answer would be more forcible than polite. A lot of the "rugger" played in Calcutta is doubtless "piffling," but some of it is very good indeed.

Of the first four League matches played on Saturday, 12th instant three were draws, and in the fourth, Calcutta beat Y.M.C.A. after a poor and straggling game by two goals to love. Calcutta's display was extremely disappointing, whilst the Y.M.C.A., as usual, had not a single forward capable of making a respectable shot at goal.

The meeting of Caledonia and the Rangers on the latter club's ground was a truly amazing spectacle. Both teams trotted about the field comfortably enough, but seemed to have forgotten all about getting goals. The natural result was a pointless draw and both sides seemed to have enjoyed themselves hugely.

It was generally anticipated, from what was known of the form of the two military teams that the H. L. I. would have no difficulty in disposing of the Northumberland Fusiliers. They might have done so but for the fatal inclination of their forward line to play to the gallery. The Fusiliers certainly did not deserve to lose and in that case the result of a draw of one goal apiece cannot but be regarded as satisfactory.

The match between Caledonia and Howrah on the Caledonia ground on Tuesday, 15th instant, resulted in another draw, the score being one all. The play was not of a high order, and both teams were equally deficient in front of their opponents' goal.

Dalhousie beat Rangers by one goal to love on Wednesday, 16th instant, after a very fairly interesting game. Dalhousie should have won by a greater margin, but some of Prike's best shots were saved in fine fashion by the Rangers' goal-keeper. Here again the defence of either team was superior to the attack.

Calcutta beat the Northumberland Fusiliers by three goals to love the same afternoon on the C. F. C. ground. H. Sherman scoring all three goals. The soldiers played a good passing game, but their defence was not particularly strong.

Last Saturday's matches were all decisive, though no prolific scoring was indulged in by any team. Calcutta put out a scratch team against Dalhousie and went under by one goal to love. Prike really scored a second goal from a free kick for hands against Crawford, but the referee refused to allow the point. H. Sherman was unfortunately "crocked" during the game and was a passenger during the second half. The Calcutta half-backs were, with the exception of Crawford, hopeless in their efforts to repel the attacks of Prike and his fellow forwards, and but for the very fine play of Gahan at back for Calcutta Dalhousie must have put up a much larger score. Stimson played a really splendid game at back for Dalhousie. From the spectators' point of view, the play was of a deadly dull and uninteresting nature. The Dalhousie team have improved tuamendously and may be said to be going strong for the League Championship and the Walter Locke Cup.

On the Rangers' ground the H. L. I. beat Caledonia by three to love. The Caledonia team showed the best form yet seen and more than held their own during the game. Their lack of "shooting" proficiency, however, was very conspicuous. Devlin (1) and Lees (2) scored for the H. L. I.

Calcutta have had bad luck in losing the services of the elder Sherman, who put his knee out in a friendly match with Dalhousie some weeks ago and has been unable to play since then. Bertie Cooper is away on three months' leave, and V. Cooper is down the river. Fyffe goes on furlough immediately and will not be able to appear for Calcutta. Thus at once the C. F. C. is deprived of four of its "star" men, and in view of this fact, it is not hard to see why Dalhousie was able to win its League match against the Calcutta team on the 19th. Everyone was pleased to note the re-appearance of Dalling in the Dalhousie team last Saturday. He appears to be well rid of the unfortunate attach of sciatica which crippled him recently. Jackson, the Howrah man, has not been turning out for Dalhousie lately, and Williamson and Stimson have been playing in the full-back line.

Who says football is not for the old? I am told on good authority that the combined ages of certain three members of the Dalhousie team last Saturday totalled the respectable sum of 105 years.

It would be interesting to know why the referee gave a goal kick in this match after Prike had shot through from a free kick awarded against Crawford for hands. Rules 9 and 11 of the Laws of the game prove that Dalhousie really beat Calcutta by two to love.

The Rangers are making a determined effort not to be left behind this season. Their position is now fourth in the League and if they can retain this they will do very well. Y. M. C. A. have scored neither a goal nor a point yet.

The Annual General Meeting of the I. F. A. takes place at the Dalhousie Institute to-morrow, 25th, at 5 30 P.M.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL IN CALCUTTA.

OLYMPIANS vs NATIONAL SPORTING—This match was played on the 8th instant. It was the National's first appearance this season and they only had a weak team out, while the Olympians were almost at their full strength The Olympians throughout had the best of a slow game and scored twice in the first half, Thomaides and Gould being responsible. In the second half the Nationals scored in one of their rare break aways and the Olympians thus achieved their first victory of the season by two goals to one.

CALCUTTA 'B' vs. DALHOUSIE "B."—A game between these teams on the D.F.C. ground last Friday evening ended in a win for the homesters by three goals to one. It was a funny game occasionally, but there was a lot of earnestness in the air that made amends for a lack of high class form.

OLYMPIANS vs. OLD XAVERIANS.—This match was played on the 22nd instant on the ground of the former. The match was chiefly noticeable for the absence of any understanding whatever between the Olympian players. J. G. Pybus scored two goals for the visitors, one in each half, on both occasions running clean away from the opposing backs, while Bagot scored for Olympians just on the call of time. Score: Old Xaverians two, Olympians one.

The millionaire ironmaster, owner of Student, Marie Stuart, Doncaster, and other famous racehorses, at one time kept badgers for the sport of badger baiting. One day a friend backed a dog of his to draw Merry's favourite badger. On the day appointed the dog fell ill, and Mr. Merry accepted a small forfeit. "Why," inquired his friend, "did you let me off so easily?" "I don't know," was the reply, "how ill your dog may be, but I do know that my badger is dying."

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

LONDON, 4th May 1906.

CONGESTION on the green, on the tee, in the bunkers at short holes, at long holes, in fact congestion everywhere, and yet it is all so interesting that one feels one must fight against and shoulder one's away through the throng and at last arrive at the couple that one wants to watch. We grumbled at the rain which spoilt the early spring fixtures and now of course everyone is complaining of the drought which greenkeepers and players alike aver is doing irreparable damage to inland courses and to sea-side links. Threats of a water famine make the authorities chary of indiscriminate watering and so the greens are like a sheet of ice and one scarcely dares to tap the ball, and absolutely shiver at the thought of the consequences of a topped approach which sends the ball flying off at a tangent of my potent rage at alleged ill usage; and speaking of balls, another very excellent one is just floated, the White Heather, a production of Alec Macintosh of Burnt, Ash Hill, Lee, London, S. E. and one that recommends itself by reason of its many good qualities for every sort of golfer, hackers, clean hitter, toppers and the like, but it is high time to get on for the links and to have even such fascinating subjects as balls without which very few games or sports of any kind can be carried on. Of course all the female golf population are thinking, dreaming, talking of little else than their Championship which ere these lines are in print in far away India will be decided to the satisfaction of one only out of the large total of one hundred and eleven whose names were drawn at the Council Meeting on Thursday, the 3rd May. Last week were the three great meetings of the year and for these events even the railway companies contributed their share and showed their approval by making special concessions and granting cheap fares. Champions from all parts of the United Kingdom came and saw and conquered, but contrary to custom the Irish Champion (Miss May Hezlet) did not succeed in carrying back to the native land the spoil which generally falls to her victorious bow (?) whenever she crosses St. George's Channel. Undoubtedly the great competition of the past year among ladies is that arranged by the proprietors of the "Boudoir" magazine for which prize to the value of over £105 were presented: these were open for competition to all clubs affiliated to the Ladies' Golf Union, and the player in each club who showed the lowest aggregate of six returns made under handicap on a Club Medal Day qualified to compete in the finals. These were held by kind permission of the Enfield Club on their green on Friday, 27th April and in addition to the Boudoir Finals the 'Golfing' Challenge Cup and Ladies' Golf Union Gold Medal were played for, also two extra aggregate prizes to add interest. These as might naturally be expected drew together a large assembly of champions, silver medalists and all sorts of players and the "Boudoir Bath," as a witty Irishwoman christened the 40 guinea first Prize Bowl, went to Mrs Besley of the Wimbledon Park Club. I know I am trespassing unpardonably and so these legends of Ladies' Links must be discontinued and I must revert to the doings of the mere man. First of all let us jot down a few remarkable performances in the record breaking and making, but perhaps of these the most notable is Mr. D. Stanley Froy's feat over the London Scottis, course on Wimbledon Common on 30th April, when he went round in 69 strokes, beating both amateur and professional records of 74 and 70 respectively made by Mr. V. A. Pollock and by R. Munro. Another quite unique performance was by Ben Sayers of North Berwick when this well-known professional holed everyone of the outgoing holes in four which is believed to be without precedent on the Royal and Ancient Links at St. Andrews. And being at the Mecca of golf in our thoughts and it is only meet and right to record the outline of the business transacted at the meeting held there under the presidency of Colonel Kinloch when Mr. W. Herbert Fowler made his startling proposition to change the date and month of the Amateur Championship and exceptional interest was taken by reason of the revolutionary movement. The object of bringing this proposition before the business meeting of the club was that in the event of its being approved, it and certain other changes might be placed before the meeting of delegates of the 24 clubs which govern the Amateur Championship. Mr. Fowler moved first "that in the opinion of this meeting, it would be advisable to hold the Amateur Championship in August or September instead of in May." One of the primary objects of this proposal being to afford better opportunities to that section of the amateur golfing community, which owing to claims of business has little chance of getting sufficient practice for the meeting in May. There ensued much discussion and ultimately Mr. Fowler withdrew his motion and it was agreed to request the delegates to ascertain at their next meeting if it is considered advisable to alter the date and to report. Mr. Fowler, full of plans of a revolutionary and radical character, then moved, "That in the opinion of this meeting the time has come when the best interests of the game demand that the number of greens on which the championships are held should be increased;" this too was rejected for some years as every body knows, the greens over which the Amateur Championship is held are St. Andrews, Prestwick, Muirfield, Hoylake and Sandwich. This business meeting was only the prelude to the Annual Pleasure Meeting of the Royal and Ancient Club held in the spring for the Silver Cross and the Silver Medal presented in 1846 by the Golfing Society of Bombay. The former much-coveted trophy was won by "one of the old "Brigade" celebrated as the longest driver in the golfing world, Mr. Edward Blackwell, who went round in 82, while Messrs. Stuart Paton, Robert Maxwells. Herbert Fowler tied at 83 for the second prize and the Bombay Medal. Owing to a variety of circumstances the scoring was much higher than usual, in fact since 1901 the Silver Cross has never been won with any return so high, and last year Mr. Pease took it with 76, the chief reason for the high scores was the extreme difficulty of putting, the greens being very fiery owing to the drought. This is the third time Mr. Blackwell has become temporary posessor of the Cross who, now 40 years of age, has had some curious experiences in his somewhat chequereed career and twice for periods of five years while ranching in California he had not even seen a golf club and after both of these long spells of enforced rest from the green, he came back and won the King William IV Medal on the Royal and Ancient Course. Mr. Blackwell is just now farming in Worcestershire, where his opportunities of enjoying the great game are rare. It will be remembered that two years ago Britain pinned their hopes on him for the Amateur Championship when he stood up in the finals to oppose Mr. Walter Travis.

The golfers' handbook and year book for 1906 has appeared and all players are glad to welcome the red-covered volume once more. A special feature is the admirably executed map of the British Isles on which every golf course is indicated by a red dot. Simultaneous with the appearance of this volume is published the Ladies' Golf Union Year Book, edited by Miss Issette Pearson and which is invaluable to officials: the Ladies' Golf Union now embraces a membership of over 150 clubs and consequently the work of editing the book increases enormously from year to year. The book can be obtained from the publishers. "The Golf Agent Edinburgh and London, for the very reasonable sum of 2*s.*

THE AGA KHAN TOURNAMENT.

SECOND ROUND.

THE first week's play has weeded out some of the weaker teams and play during the last few matches has been of a higher order than at the start. The most interesting part of the week has been the appearance of the St. Xavier's team against the East Lancashire Regiment. If it did not call out the best play of which they are capable it at least showed that they are quite the best team entered and there is little doubt that they will extend wonderfully when occasion demands.

BOMBAY GYMKHANA vs. ELPHINSTONE COLLEGE.—Monday saw the Gymkhana team just out of the lists. At the start they attacked strongly for a while, but the College were combining well and by a smart pass and rush the ball was taken into the Gymkhana "25". Busch relieved well and the Gymkhana men who were further up the field took the ball back quickly to the college circle without profiting thereby. Soon after the College again got the ball and Pleader on the outside left managed to put in an excellent shot which opened the score. Again the Gymkhana pressed from the bully, but the College backs were too good and some time elapsed with a give and take play before Troupe got hold of the ball and planted it into the net. The College played up harder after this, but both sides were a little wild at times and a less lenient referee would have pulled up several people for sticks. Settling down after a few minutes, the College put in some sound work and though they were frequently repulsed by Busch and Baker eventually a second goal was added to the College score. Nothing further happened before half time, but after the interval the Gymkhana put in some of the best play they had given this season. A well combined attack brought the ball slowly nearer and nearer the college goal and eventually Troupe equalised. Pressure was still kept on the College; but the Gymkhana failed to break through. The effect was that the College eventually tired out their opponents, somewhat and Cholla working the ball up the field scored the winning goal for the College.

FORT AND PROPRIETARY HIGH SCHOOL vs. NEW HIGH SCHOOL.—The match calls for little comment. The Fort and Proprietary High School won by two to one but one would hardly describe the game as good hockey. The pace was fairly good, but there was so much talking that it became wearisome and the time was not relieved by any brilliant play.

ROYAL SCOTS vs. YORK AND LANCS.—This match, the only one on Tuesday, attracted one of the biggest crowds as, the two soldier teams promised something better than some of the school-boy teams had put up. The game proved quite up to expectation. The Scots opened strongly and though repulsed at first kept up the pressure till Collins made first score. Immediately after Collins again got the ball into the net and this considerably worked up the Mhow men who pressed hard only to find the Scots' back like a stone wall. Then taking a difficult chance the Scots were off down the field and after some smart passing Lucas scored the third goal. Things were looking black for the York and Lancs by this time, but they kept their tails up and following up a strong attack Cameron opened the Mhow score. Even play followed, but it was clear their score had heartened up the Mhow men and they commenced harassing the Scots' defence on all sides. A corner resulted in nothing, but the ball was soon brought back on the right and from a splendid centre Cameron put in a hot shot which defeated Duff. Half time arrived with the score one goal in the Scots favour, but on resuming the York and Lancs. put in all the weight they could and kept the Scots pressed back in their own quarters. The halves and backs, however, worked well together, and it was not for some time that a miss by one of the backs let the ball into the circle when Hogge equalised. Even play followed, both sides playing their utmost. Once the Scots attacked strongly and looked dangerous, but the ball was cleared back and from the centre the Mhow men rushed and failed to score by inches. Still play kept close to the Scots' circle and at last from a scrimmage Liddle put on the fourth goal. Very fast play followed, the Scots making frantic efforts to pull up again, but time was called with the Mhow men victors after a splendid tussle.

ST. XAVIER'S vs. THE EAST LANCS.—The game, played before a tremendous crowd, started with a rush by the Calcutta team who showed from the first that each man knew and trusted his neighbour—a spirit sadly lacking in teams of the Western side. The soldiers repulsed well and play was taken to the centre for a time until another attack brought the ball quickly down and, from a pass by Vanspall and Fischer, Owens found the net. St. Xavier's again attacked after the bully and got near the line, but erratic shooting spoiled their chances, for the Lancs, backs were in good form. Play remained on the soldiers' "25" till half time, but after the interval the College quickly showed their superiority and pressing from the first Owens scored the second goal. Again play rushed straight to the soldiers' end and Fischer put in an excellent and successful shot. The soldiers then attacked, but were driven back from want of combination at the critical moment and Manual soon after scored the fourth goal. The bully put the ball in the St. Xavier's quarters, but not for long and the College took it slowly up the field and Owens scored the fifth and final goal. Midfield play followed and nothing exciting happened in the few minutes before time was called.

GRANT MEDICAL vs. BOMBAY CUSTOMS.—The runners up of last year found an easy task before them with this new team. The Customs did their best, but are lacking in experience and were hardly encouraged by the tremendous partisanship in favour of the Medicos who opened the score soon after the start. The Customs pressed at times, but were nearly always beaten back, and thanks to exceptionally feeble play by the Customs back the Medicos ran their score up to five, the Customs never improving on a lucky goal scored easily in the game. The Medicos were obviously the better team being more nippy with the ball in all ways and the result was a foregone conclusion.

ELPHINSTONE COLLEGE vs. FORT AND PROPRIETARY HIGH SCHOOL.—This was one of the most sorry performances imaginable. The College kept up a continual attack and the regularity with which they outmanœuvred the School became almost monotonous. The game ended with a win for the College by nine goals to one.

THIRD ROUND.

C. H. S. (OLD BOYS) vs. YORK AND LANCS.—Friday saw the opening of the third round with the winners of last year, the Cathedral High School Old Boys pitted against the York and Lancs. It proved a close contest and one well worthy of the large attendance of spectators. The soldiers opened but did not get very far and a reply by the Boys was equally unsuccessful thanks to the efforts of the backs. The bully put the ball back close to the soldiers' line and some tough work resulted. A splendid effort of the Boys was just saved by Needham and a minute later the soldiers had the ball well up the field, but they could not penetrate the defence and half time was called love all.

On resumption an attack by the Boys was several times repulsed, but the pressure was kept up and eventually Spilling shot in and, the goalkeeper missing a kick, scored. Then the soldiers rushed the Boys' territory and though the backs defended well for some time eventually Cameron found the net with a smart shot. Very close play followed, but when time was called the score was still one all and an extras five minutes each way was decided upon. The result was the keenest play of the tournament. The first half saw the ball move almost by inches so carefully was each man marked down. The second half, however, saw the Boys make a splendid rush and Fido, the outside right, receiving the ball when there was no one to help him twisted through the defence and won the game.

ST. XAVIER'S vs. R. I. M. DOCKYARD.—The opening of this match came rather as a surprise. In the first half the Dockyard held their own wonderfully and crossed over with a goal to the good. The Calcutta men pressed hard at times, but it was by no means an easy thing for them to keep their goal clear in the first half. From some play round the Dockyard goal when good chances were twice badly mulled the Dockyard got away with the ball on the right wing and forced the ball into the College "25" and Kelly after some good manipulating shot a goal. The College retaliated with a big rush, but though they kept in the Dockyard "25" failed to score. The second half gave Owens an enormous amount of work. The College got away with the ball on the right but in a pass to inside left was given off side. The R. I. M. then got in a run, but play was brought back and after a tussle in the circle Owens scored the first goal for his side. Them R. I. M. again got a look in and got perilously near the St. Xavier's goal, but wild play spoiled the chance and a rush the whole length of the field gave Owens another rather difficult chance which doubled the score. A few minutes later after a good run the same position of players occurred and Owens again scored. For a time the R. I. M. looked like getting another goal but the whistle went leaving the Calcutta team victors by three to one after a good fast game.

Riding.

THE MATTER OF LADIES' SADDLES.

THE first side saddle of which there is any mention in history was designed and made for Anne of Bohemia, first wife of Richard II., of England, in 1388. It is a matter of history, more or less legendary, that Anne, who was a sister of Wenceslaus, the German emperor, through whom Jan Hus and Wyclif became associated, and formulated what afterwards became the Protestant Bible, was slightly deformed, and could not travel on horseback after the custom of the day, unless she chose to ride on a pillion, or pad behind a man. Being a woman of spirit, and fond of hawking and other sports of the fields she demanded and got a sort of saddle on which she could sit otherwise, yet manage her own palfrey with safety. Prior to that, women who rode on a horse without a man in front, to whose belt they could cling, used the cross saddle, which was very different from the "pig skin" of the present generation. Joan of Arc rode astride, in full coat armor, and so did numerous other maids and dames of those times of blood and iron and without exciting more comment than an Indian squaw does when she straddles a pony.

Some historians contend that the adoption of the side saddle was an outcome of crinoline and hoop skirts, and possibly this is the case. A woman with hoop skirts riding a cross saddle would be diverting but not elevating except to the hoops. It is more likely, however, that as years rolled on and women were compelled to remain more closely in their castles than they could in the middle ages, and only strong men were safe afield, that they rarely rode abroad except on a pillion behind a man, and in consequence gradually got out of the way of riding astride.

The first saddle with a tree came into use in the fourth century, and it was 300 years later before stirrups were invented. The evolution of the saddle has been almost the same in all countries and among all nations. The horseman in the beginning neither knew nor appreciated the benefits of a saddle for both the horse and the rider. Probably his first makeshift of that character was a robe which served as a blanket in camp as well as a cushion by day. As the practice of wearing armor and other accoutrements of war grew, however, the stirrup was naturally evolved, as a means of assisting the rider to mount the steed which was increasing in height while the rider was adding to his personal impedimenta.

As to whether the cross saddle for women is destined to become more popular than the side saddle, the writer would not like to express an opinion. That it is better for the horse there can be no doubt. But whether it is safer, or more comfortable for the rider is a question that the best women riders will probably decide for themselves and their less expert sisters. If the writer were required to name the two greatest women riders he has ever seen he would be compelled to select an example from each school—the side saddle and the cross saddle. There is probably no doubt that Madame Marantette is peerless as an equestrienne in the side saddle. She established a high-jumping record with Old Filemaker before Heatherbloom made all the other timber-toppers look small, and she always scorned a cross saddle. True, she is an exceptional woman rider, but there have been and are to-day many horsewomen who can sit a jumper as well as the best man. And so far as the matter of the side saddle is concerned, a several years ago that he found it safer to ride a vicious horse with a side saddle than with the regulation cross saddle. To be sure he meant the English hunting saddle on which the average rough rider would hardly feel safe with a bucking broncho under it, but aside from that point there is reason to believe that it would be at least as difficult to unseat a muscular rider from a three horned side saddle as from a Mexican tree with stirrups bobbled, provided the girths did not slip. On the other hand Miss Lucile Mulhall the premier cowgirl, rides nothing but a cross saddle of cowboy shape, and it is hard to believe that any horse could shake her off. She and her sisters, who all ride astride, are graceful, well-formed girls, and there is nothing that a man can do on horseback that they can not duplicate.

Women of the writer's acquaintance who have become accustomed to the cross saddle, declare that it is safer and more convenient than the method which was until the last few years regarded as conventional while the adherents of the other school are just as first in their opinion that the lady should keep both feet on one side of the horse. Probably both are right.

The matter of modesty is not to be considered in the discussion, for both the cross and the side saddle are modest.

From a hygienic standpoint, there seems to be little to choose between the two modes of riding, but that little is in favor of the cross saddle. Any physician who has given the matter any consideration will testify that serious structural defects have accrued to young girls who have been permitted to ride side saddles that were too large for them. The same might also result from a cross saddle that did not fit the rider, but the difficulty here can be in a large measure obviated by the use of the stirrups.

To sum up the matter, the writer would suggest that the ladies will ultimately decide which they wish to use and they will use it whether it be the side saddle or the cross saddle. It is largely a question of style.

WATER POLO.

The Calcutta Swimming Club played the first match of the season on Tuesday evening, when they met and defeated a team from the 5th Northumberland Fusiliers by 6 goals to 1. The Bath team held the upper hand from start to finish, and it was only at the end of the game that the Fusiliers obtained their point, more through carelessness or the part of the Bath backs than through any good play by the Fusiliers. It is to be remembered however, that the soldiers have had no practice whatever, in fact most of the men were new to the game; we dare say they will give a better account of themselves later in the season. They meet the Bath team again on Tuesday, the 29th current.

The Naturalist.

STRAY NOTES.

IF the world were birdless, says a naturalist, man could not inhabit it after nine years' time in spite of all the sprays and poisons that could be manufactured for the destruction of insects.

A very extraordinary habit of various species of ducks is worthy of mention (writes Mr. Percival Westell). The drake, or mallard, who dons the finest matrimonial dress is the one who is most likely to be paired off first. Away the happy couple go, leaving the rest of the company to pick and choose as they please. Curious to relate, however, nest building has hardly commenced before the drake forsakes his wife, and goes into hiding. The female is left to complete the homestead, lay her greenish clutch of eggs, and rear the young. Most birds moult after the nesting season is over, but this rule does not apply in the case of the wild duck, for the drake's purpose in seeking such early seclusion is to moult his feathers! More curious still, when the drake has moulted, he assumes the temporary garb of the female, wearing a mottled-brown plumage, but as autumn approaches, he once more assumes the richer dress.

Those who watch the monkeys scrambling and quarrelling over their nuts at the Zoo, the rhinoceros opening his pink cave of a mouth to a hail of buns, or the lion roaring over his bones, seldom stop to consider the other side of the picture, when the animals are out of sorts or seriously ill. Dozens of birds and animals come on and go off the sick list every week, and prescribing for them is no light task. Difficult though it be, it is a mere recreation to compelling the patient to take the medicine prescribed. Dr. Chalmers Mitchell, the Secretary to the London Zoological Society, tells a story about the dosing of a young Malay bear. The Malay is an undersized-looking animal, with a beautiful white fur collar, bandy legs, and a perpetual grumble. The infant patient was roped and put in a sack, with the idea of keeping him from scratching. Castor oil was prescribed, and some was poured in a saucer, and a teaspoon was placed in readiness beside it. A keeper got the bear's head in chancery between his knees, and Dr. Mitchell got the castor oil ready. Then the bear worked his claws out through the fabric of the sack, and obtained a good grip of the Doctor's garments. The patient's face was soon a mask of castor oil, but none was swallowed, while the Doctor's clothes were being reduced to flock. Bout after bout was won by the bear, and in half an hour his well-wishing opponents gave up the contest. The juvenile Malay was turned loose from the sack into the limited freedom of the cage. The patient felt himself all over tenderly, and then, walked straight to the castor oil in the saucer and lapped it up with every appearance of relish!

Robins are notorious of choosing extraordinary situations for their nests, and one of the latest instances of this peculiarity is one built in a drawing-room. Mrs. Armistead, honorary secretary of the local branch of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Trefnant Glyn, Garth, Anglesey, has at present a robin sitting on its nest of eggs in her drawing-room. "The bird," she says, "comes and goes through the window, which is left open on purpose, and, although the members of the family are constantly in the room together with a Persian cat and a fox-terrier, the bird takes no heed of either, and the cat never interferes with the bird. The nest is built on the edge of a bookcase, which is in a recess at the far end of the room. The nest has been photographed with the bird on it, but, although the nest is plainly to be seen, the bird does not show so well, it being rather dark to take a good photograph. The bird has been going to and fro for the last three weeks and evidently intends bringing up its young in its comfortable quarters."

Few people realise what a great amount and variety of food is required to feed the residents of the London Zoo. For the year ending 30th April the bill amounted to no less than £6,500. To the fishmonger alone was paid a sum of £500. Worked out in kind, the dietetic requirements of the Society's menagerie are even more striking. Two hundred and twenty-five horses, 263 goats 302cwt. of biscuits, 25cwt. of rice, 27,960lbs. of whiting, 1,902lbs. of herrings, 28 710 eggs, 14,587 pints of milk, 12,138lbs. of place, 2,353 pints of shrimps, 532 tins of preserved milk, 518lbs. of sugar, and 50 jars of beef tea. The vegetarian element at Regent's Park is also by no means a negligable quantity, for, in addition to 32,000 bananas and 2,025lbs of grapes, there have been consumed 223lbs. of raisins, 104lbs. of currants, 159lbs. of figs, 99cwt. of carrots, 89cwt. of potatoes, 1,454lbs. of dates, 6,816 oranges, 35cwt. of monkey nuts, 105lbs. of Brazil, 10,293 lettuces, 945 lemons, and 71 bunches of onions. The number of animals living in the Zoo on 31st December, 1905, was 2,913, an increase of 561 over the figures on the same date in 1904. They included 1,554 birds, 639 mammals, 560 reptiles and amphibia, and 110 fish. The additions during the year numbered 2 781, or only 182 fewer than the Zoo's entire population at the end of the year.

We had just passed Wimbledon, where tickets had been collected, and a gentleman who had deemed it prudent to absent himself during that ceremony, emerged from beneath the carriage seat—hot, dirty, and dilapidated.

"Well, you've got through all right this time, lad," said the Captain sympathetically.

"Yes, but it don't allus come off. Why only a week or two back I was a-goin' to Windsor, and we'd got to Slough all right. When they comes round for the briefs I gets under the seat, same as I done to-day, gents. Just as he was a-goin' out of the kerridge the guard sings out—

"'Ave I got 'em all, gentlemen?'

"Well, gents, I'am blowed if some bloomin' juggins, a-sitting in the corner, don't say—

"'Yes, guard, you've got 'em all 'cept one gentleman's. There wasn't room for him in the carriage, so he got under the seat!'

"O' coorse they lugged me out then and there, and the beak fined me forty bob or fourteen days."

"Did you do the fortnight?"

"Well, look at my 'air?"

The paucity of this adornment was certainly ample proof that our fellow-passenger had retired from the public gaze for the time indicated.

Travel and Adventure.

JAUNTS IN BURMESE JUNGLES.

II.

WHEN the hunter has cut himself temporarily adrift from the bonds of civilization, and has betaken himself for a spell to the haunts of Nature, what a companion he will find his favourite dog, or for that matter a friendly pariah will often afford him a fund of amusement. On this particular jaunt I had with me a well-bred and affectionate little fox-terrier, and also one of her numerous progeny, though the latter did not keep up at all the credit of the family in the way of points and appearance. It is a truism, that every owner of a hound of whatever description, non-descript or pedigree, invariably considers his canine slave far and away more intelligent than that of any other human being. In Society (with a capital "S") the extraordinary cleverness of "Fido" is frequently displayed ad nauseam, and when one begins to enlarge on the almost miraculous feats of one's own crop-eared whelp, an incredulous "Oh, really!" comes as a gentle reminder that there is only one clever dog and that dog is 'Fido.'

On the 21st August 1903 camp was being moved, as we had worked out the portion of forest described in a previous narrative. The tracker and I had planned to make a long detour, and arrive in the fresh camp in the evening, when everything would be spic and span. We started off at daybreak leaving the coolies and menial establishment with the impedimenta to follow at their leisure. Our routes were the same or about a couple of miles, up the bed of a water course, which had to be crossed and recrossed at frequent intervals. We had proceeded for about a mile and a half, when our attention was arrested by the rustling of the undergrowth immediately in our rear. Needless to say I was ready to receive the pursuer on the instant, as from the time camp is quitted at dawn till it is reached again at dusk, my trusty ·577 never leaves my hands. On occasions when one is suddenly startled by the sense of danger, thoughts flash through the mind quickly, and the only beast that my thoughts could fix upon, which could possibly have the courage to dog our footsteps, was a tiger or a panther. I must confess that my pulses quickened as the waving grass and leaves denoted that the prowler was steadily but cautiously advancing. My chagrin can best be imagined when, instead of seeing a striped or spotted head turning the corner, out crept a little ball of black and very dirty white—my fox-terrier bitch! In the confusion of loading up she had slipped her collar and made after me direct. She had waded through the stream thigh deep in a very strong current, at least a dozen times, and it speaks well for her nose that she was able to follow our scent so accurately. Here was a predicament; what was to be done with the dog. Now when in the pursuit of bison a dog is a most undesirable addition to one's company. A long-drawn howl of lament, when the spoor is red hot would provoke one almost to commit murder. By dint of threats without actual violence, she was induced to turn tail and retrace her steps, and I trusted that no slinking panther would pick her off.

Our path now lay up a wooded spur, which speedily became so steep and rocky, that climbing was rendered very difficult; however the track was greatly improved by the previous passage of two elephants. One of these judging by the size of his imprints, must have been an enormous old tusker. On reaching more level ground a halt was called to enable us to regain our wind. We had been seated for the space of about five minutes when up jumped an animal not 50 yards away, and with a crash was out of sight. A fleeting glimpse of a dark back was all that was obtained. In all probability we had roused a serow from his mid-day siesta, for no other beast could have negociated that ground at the pace he did expect a member of the goat family. After ascending well up the slopes of the Main Pyingadaungs, we struck the tracks of a solitary bull bison. They were a day or two old, but the slots seemed fresh enough to warrant following, and they led in the direction we wished to go. About 10 A.M. a small hill-side streamlet was reached, and after casting around to see that we had not sat down in the lion's mouth so to speak, we called a halt for a snack of food. We had been resting for about half an hour, when the swish of a moving body in the high grass on the further side of the rivulet made me seize my 577. This time, however, the culprit was—"Puppy." Nothing, however, would induce the little beast to come near me, even a proffered chicken bone was not tempting enough to coax him within reach. The situation was extremely ridiculous, and I could not suppress a laugh. There we were seated on opposite banks of a two-foot burn eyeing each other furtively. If I made a movement towards him, he promptly disappeared, to slink back again directly I had regained my seat. Master Puppy, whom I had up to date heartily despised, a so called fox-terrier, with a long curly tail, nose quite 16 annas in my estimation. For fully five miles, from the spot where we had left the creek below, he had persistently followed by nose alone our wanderings. We had traversed some of the worst country imaginable, grass at times well over our heads, places where hands and feets were necessary, we had doubled back on our tracks when we found we were on a blind trail, but in spite of all obstacles he had run us to earth. We were seven miles at least from the old camp, and equal distance from the next so we were forced to take the hound in tow. We worried out the tracks of the old bull for several more hours, but though we came upon several places where he had lain down, it was evident that something had frightened him, and that he was travelling to some other forests further removed from disturbing elements. The chase seemed hopeless, so we eventually abandoned it arriving at our new camping ground late in the afternoon. During the whole day's outing Master Puppy never approached nearer to us than 50 yards, but when we reached our destination he was once more all fun and frolic. Puppy though of low origin on the father's side, was evidently a high thinker.

Camping arrangements, as far as the writer is concerned, are quite different in the Land of Pagodas to what is customary in India, and a description of what I have practised on this side of the Bay of Bengal may be of interest. I have long since discarded a tent. It is my experience that a tent especially in the rains is a positive nuisance and moreover a decided encumbrance. In hilly districts one's camp equipage must be transported by coolies, and as many of the forest-enclosed hamlets consists of only a few huts, the number of able-bodied men available is extremely limited, hence one has to discard everything that is not absolutely necessary. The Burman coolie has two methods of carrying a load. His customary manner is to divide his burden into two portions each weighing about 20lbs. These bundles are suspended from either end of a flat notched stave, especially prepared for the purpose, something after the fashion of a bow, but of course much broader and thicker. They are as springy as a willow, and as the carrier jogs along in a hurried sort of trot, slipping the pole from shoulder to shoulder over the nape of his neck, the packs jerk up and down, in time to the step. When the load istoo heavy or not suitable to be suspended in this way, it is slung in the centre of a stout bamboo, on the trunk of a small sapling with the bark peeled off, and is then carried by two coolies. An 80-lb. tent, when wet, with bathroom attached togther with poles and pegs will require four coolies. When pitched it is stuffy, cramped, admits no fresh air, and is a regular trap for every form of insect. It is a trouble to pitch and strike, and in soft or stony ground both iron and wooden pegs are useless, besides which they are constantly being lost necessitating the manufacture of new wooden ones at the next camping ground. My shelter comprises two Willesden canvass water proof sheets, 12 feet by 9 feet, with a similar sheet for servants and trackers. When travelling one sheet holds my bedding and wearing apparel, thereby dispensing with a valise; the second protects my rifle cases which is a distinct advantage. In the third is stowed servants' bedding and their clothes. The Burman villager is very handy at building a hut. On arrival at the site of the camp two men are despatched to chop down the corner posts and the two uprights or three where necessary to carry the ridge pole. Soon the noise of their dahs resounds through the forest and in half-an-hour the poles and sufficient bamboos are being dragged to the spot where the shelter is going to be erected. In the meantime two other coolies have been engaged in excavating with their dahs, holes for the uprights. The bamboos are now split up into four, parts, the forked uprights are put into position, the ridge and eaves' poles are adjusted, the split bamboos, form the rafters, the sheets are thrown over this frame work, and tied down with pliant bamboo shavings, taking care that on the windward side the sheet almost touches the ground. In the space of an hour at the very most a shanty has been constructed 8 feet broad and 16 feet long; allowing two feet for over lap in the centre, rainproof, and by the addition of branches and elephant grass on the top, held down by other split bamboos, our shetter is also rendered sun-proof. Here we have ample room for everything. There is no knocking the table over in the struggles to get the gun cases extricated from under the camp cot; there is no rubbing our faces in the soiled linen suspended from the rope under the ridge pole. The rifle cases are laid out in order on a platform of bamboos, one's clothes are folded neatly and occupy another platform. The suspended soiled linen has a corner of its own, well out of the way; one does not feel like a mangy dog in a still more mangy kennel, with not even room to turn round to bite its own tail. This primitive and airy hut may not suit the tastes of other sportsmen, but it has been adopted by me after a thorough trial, and nothing would induce me now to return to the oven-like tent.

One's shooting costume, too, is also primitive, and follows the fashion of the country to a certain extent. Every sportsman has more or less a different pattern of coat, and each no doubt, possesses some distinctive advantage. The coat I wear is made of khaki, sleeves being cut off short at the elbow. The lower edge is occupied by four roomy pockets, one over each hip and two at the back. There is a pocket in the plait on the left side after fashion of those in a Norfolk jacket with a similar but smaller watch pocket just above. Over the left breast are divisions for six ·577 cartridges; above the pocket on the right hip are spaces for six 8 bore cases, and between these and the buttons there is just room for six 450 rounds. The shirt is made of silk and wool. This material is light, cool, fully absorbent, and, moreover I find it a great preventive of prickly heat, as owing to its softness it does not irritate the skin. The thighs are clothed in a pair of ordinary dark blue Chinaman's trousers reaching half ways down the calf of the leg. These possess several advantages. They are strong and durable, light and, moreover, they dry in five minutes after wading through a stream. There is nothing so fatiging as trudging in a pair of breeches that take an hour to dry; one is far more liable to get chafed and the discomfort of having wet garments clinging round one is well known. In the Chinaman's trousers, the action of the knees is entirely free. In hill climbing, especially where the forest is of bamboo this recommendation cannot be over-estimated. A pair of thick woollen stockings clothe the legs, and the footgear consists of leather socks and chuplies. When on the fresh trail of a bison, the chuplies are invariably discarded, and I track in the leather socks. The soles of these are so thin that every twig can be felt under foot; there is no blundering on to a dead branch, cracking it with an explosion like a powder mill blowing up. The finishing touch is the rain case. Mine costs me about five rupees and takes less than an hour to make. Purchase an ordinary Willesden canvass, best quality, 6 feet by 2½ feet waterproof sheet. Out of this cut a semi-circle 2 feet in radius, and make a place for the neck diameter nine inches. Two more sections can be made from the spare pieces and attached, so as to make a wider spay at the bottom edge. This is a simple but very effective device and an absolute necessity when hunting during the monsoons. The cape can be slipped on and off with ease, forms an excellent protection to both shoulders and hips, and keeps the locks of one's rifle dry. The above costume is far from elegant in appearance, but it is cool, comfortabe and workmanlike.

MORVEN.

In the earliest days of racing horses were just as much given to in-and-out running as at the present time. Eleanor, Sir Charles Bunbury's famous mare, furnishes a case in point. She was the best filly of her day, and won the double event of Derby and Oaks. At Huntingdon, however, with odds of 10 to 1 betted on her, she went down before a common plater called Two Shoes, but at her very next effort—at Egham—Eleanor defeated a first-rate horse named Bobadil and several other opponents, odds of 10 to 1 being betted on Bobadil.

BIRD PROTECTION IN ENGLAND.

IT seems at least a question open to discussion whether or not the Preservation of Birds in Great Britain is being carried too far. Every County Council has power to apply the Acts to such species as its wisdom or sentiment may dictate; and though in very numerous cases the use of the weapon given them has been productive of good results in regard to certain species, there is no doubt whatever that in many instances comparatively common birds have been protected until their increase renders them something more than a nuisance to the fruit-grower and the farmer. In a word the state of things brought about in some counties is such that man requires protection against birds in far greater degree than birds need protection against man. It was urged, when the agricultural interest strove to make its voice heard on its own behalf, that the occupier was sufficiently safeguarded by the liberty left him to destroy birds on his own land: the plea was plausible, but it was not, and is not, one that commends itself to the good opinion of those having knowledge of the facts. Fruit-growers and farmers have not the necessary leisure to take the defence of orchard and cornfield into their own hands; and to try and protect either by systematically destroying every nest on a farm, if the task were undertaken, would be as efficacious as Mrs. Partington's classic endeavour to fight the Atlantic's invasion of her doorstep with a mop. While destructive birds are protected all round the farm it is manifestly of little use attempting to protect the farm by the prevention of nesting in the trees and hedges thereon. There can be no doubt whatever, thanks to the Protection Acts, that birds of all species are far more numerous now in England than they were fifty years ago. The writer has made a practice of enquiring of old farm hands and gamekeepers in any part of the county he might be staying, whether in their opinion bird population has increased since their birds' nesting days: and the answer has invariably been in the affirmative. The explanation, too, has been always the same: "You're not allowed to go out clap netting 'long the hedges and in the ivy wall o' nights: and the police will be down on you or the boys if they catch you taking eggs." The sparrow alone is named as the bird concerning whose increase no definite opinion is obtainable and the reasonable probability is, that the Sparrow Clubs which exist in so many parishes throughout the country have been the means of keeping these "winged vermin" within limits. There is no doubt that the wholesale destruction of the sparrow has done something to encourage the wider distribution of other small species, more attractive but hardly less mischievous. Finches and tits are more welcome than the sparrow for obvious reasons: but against them, more particularly the bullfinch and the great tit, the fruit-grower has scored a black mark which the County Councils, so far, have failed to acknowledge. Mr. W. B. Tegetmeier, the veteran ornithologist (now in his ninetieth year) has for a good many years past been waging war on the fruit-growers' behalf against these two species: but it is an uphill task. Reason has a poor chance against sentimentality, and bullfinch and tit being pleasant to look upon, the claims of the unfortunate fruit-grower are ignored. Still more marked is the case against the Great Tit: but this bird's depredations on fruit are, in the opinion of the Board of Agriculture's expert, unproven and for that its good work against insect life is recognised the species is particularly commended to the farmer's indulgence. The situation is curiously unpractical. On the one hand we are deluged from time to time with vigorous protests against the unfair rivalry of Normandy, Brittany, and (in a less degree) Norway with the British fruit-grower. Favoured by light charges by steamer and railway, it is urged, the English grower is ousted from his own markets by the foreigner. The cheap transport, no doubt, has much to do with it, but it is not the sole difficulty with which the home grower has to contend. French common sense long ago recognised that the agriculturist was better worth protection than the birds and the scarcity of small species so noticeable in most parts of France, regrettable from the ornithologist's point of view gives the small farmer an enormous advantage. He can grow his fruit without the expense of employing bird watchers and buying acres of netting: the English grower, thanks to the tender care exercised by County Councils for the birds, cannot do it.

The matter is not one that can be settled off-hand by wholesale legislation. Economic ornithology to only too many dwellers in the country is still a sealed book. The agriculturist is prone to see only evil where good also exists and his insistence upon the one lends a weapon to the hand of his opponents the out and out Bird Protectionists. The starling offers a striking example: it is acknowledged that this common bird is a valuable ally as a destroyer of the "leather jacket," the grub of the familiar daddy long legs which above all grubs is destructive to the roots of grass. The farmer has only a welcome for the flocks of starlings which invade his pastures: they are doing his business and in the cheapest and most effective fashion, a flock of starlings will pick out and destroy more leather-jackets and other harmful grubs in a day, than a dozen hands with patent poisons and nostrums will kill in a month. But there is another side to the picture: other seasons, other tastes: a starling or two in the orchard will play greater havoc with the cherries than any bird of its size excepting, possibly, the black bird or thrush. The Board of Agriculture has borne testimony to the deserts of the starling in one of its leaflets, but that leaflet is silent concerning the iniquities of the starling in the cherry orchard. The difficulty is to strike a balance between the good deeds of the bird and the bad: none can prove that the value of his operations as a grub destroyer are greater than the mischief of his doings as a fruit-eater: and he has accordingly been awarded the benefit of the doubt. This sound and admirable principle of English law has been carried too far in dealing with other species. An eloquent example suggests itself in the case of the gulls in sea board counties: until fifteen years ago or thereabouts there was nothing to be said against the campaign of protection carried on in favour of the majority of gulls—of the smaller species: they did no harm to anyone and in the ploughing season, in conjunction with the rooks and other shore species, were helpful as grub eaters in the newly-turned furrows, but in those days the pisciculturalindustry was practically unknown: and with the development of what has now attained to considerable dimensions employing much capital and labour, a new field of mischief was opened up to the gulls. The fish hatcheries which occur on nearly every river in England nowadays appealed to the gulls as convenient and accessible feeding areas especially in rough weather: and the pisciculturist has found that the gull, towards whose protection from the wanton butchery by cockney gunners, he himself probably contributed, is his worst foe. This is a case particularly hard to deal with: the pisciculturist must defend his own property, for there is something to be said against removing the ægis of protection from half a dozen allied species over a whole county in favour of the two or three hatcheries which may represent the industry within its boundaries. The impartial onlooker, unbiased by possession of field and orchard on the one hand and unendowed with any consuming love of bird life on the other, sets himself a difficult task when he attempts to find species of birds for which a clear case for protection may be presented When he has acquitted the swallow and its kindred of harmful appetite, and has added to these the names of the wagtails and the owls, he has practically exhausted the list of common land birds which can offer a perfectly "clean slate." The great families of wading birds are sufficiently harmless, but these do not come with in the purview of the economic ornithologist. The birds against which the former has his real grievance are the passerines and a few members of other orders: and the commoner the species the greater his grievance.

The outlook is not hopeful: at the present time the whole trend of thought is in the direction of protecting birds of whatever species at whatever cost. It will, perhaps, have been noticed that Her Majesty the Queen has recently signified her cordial approval of the endeavours of a worthy society to make an end of the destruction of birds for millinery purposes. The labours of this society have the support of vast numbers of people and deservedly: theirs is an object which the economist, at all events, cannot but approve. Such endeavours, however, make themselves felt beyond the radius of their direct purpose: public opinion does not discriminate: public feeling cannot support a campaign against the wearing of plumage by women, and sympathize at the same time with the farmer who wants native birds left more to the tender mercies of the scarer and schoolboy. The farmer may count it a particular benevolence on the part of nature that she saw fit to endue the sparrow with a plain coat and withheld from it any gift of song: for assuredly were the bird pleasant to look upon or to hear the Sparrow Clubs had long ere now been crushed out of existence by the voice of popular indignation. Foolish but well-meaning writers have pleaded with some effect the cause of "God's little sparrows:" that the Almighty might take some account of the farmers is a point which appears not to have entered the not very wise heads of these advocates.

Sporting Notes.

THERE was a lot of fast work on the Calcutta course on Tuesday morning, not only on the flat but over the hurdles, the going being good for both. The training track this year is in first-class order, and those using it on Tuesday described it as like galloping on velvet. The going on the hurdle race-course was good, but the fourth flight and the pony course (situated as it is at present) is a veritable death trap, and unless the position of it is altered we shall see a very nasty accident before the Monsoon season is over. There is at present a deepish ditch cut straight across about eighteen feet before one gets to the hurdle. The result is that most of the horses attempt to jump this and whether they do or simply blunder into and through it, they are thrown clean out of their stride just as they are preparing to take off.

It will doubtless have the effect of making horses clever, but this sort of thing seems rather flying in the face of Providence. It can very easily be remedied by moving the hurdle forward on to the drain itself. There was something of the same trouble last year at the fourth flight of horse hurdles, but Mr. Beresford had it remedied in this manner as soon as it was pointed out to him.

There has been a good deal of schooling going on this week, though so far there has been nothing going the full course, and the jumping is nearly all confined to the pony hurdles. Last Thursday Smallman had his trio of jumpers over the hurdles, Loch Spey, Scotch Thistle, and that smart jumping pony Discussion, who is still to the fore and going strong. Parole accompanied them over a couple of flights and they all jumped well. Smallman then got to work with three from Mr. Galstaun's string,—Rustler, Hoop Iron and White-foot. Hoop Iron and Rustler are both candidates for the hurdle race on the first day; Hoop Iron is still a bit green at the game, but has plenty of time in which to improve.

On Monday morning Mr. Pugh took advantage of the good going and rode Pope over three flights as schoolmaster to Watchfire (Shelldrake up). The grey at present is not very certain as to whether he appreciates hurdling or not and would have liked to have stopped at the first two. This is, however, only the second time he has been ridden over jumps. On Tuesday morning Yuyslas (Mr. Pugh), Cymmerau (Mr. Barrow) and Brown Moor (native) went a nice working gallop over four flights, all three jumping in good style. The two latter are likely to run in the hurdle race on Saturday week at the fourth Tollygunge Club Gymkhana.

The same morning Loch Spey (Smallman), Scotch Thistle (Shelldrake) went once round, as also did Bucentaur and Parole (Mr. Barrow). Mr. Galstaun's were also lepping, and so were Fusilier (Mr. Evers) and Sylvia (Bloss). The two latter were only sent over a couple of flights and came home about half pace on the training track.

A great feature of the Calcutta Monsoon Races is the hurdle racing, indeed it flourishes here far more than anywhere else in India. With the three classes of jumpers now to be catered for, it makes an important and pleasing item in the Monsoon programmes when there are often as many as three hurdle races in the course of the afternoon. Now even a fourth class is asked for and this is for an Amateur Pony Hurdle Race. It is, however, no use having these unless owners are given sufficient warning as many of the amateur ponies are away up-country, and their owners not seeing this class catered for have not brought their ponies back to this salubrious climate. We have in mind such as Energy, Good Chap and Mistlebird. Of the ponies already here there are Zig Zag, Geebung, Wivenhoe, Moonray, Blossom, Knockout, Branga Puck, and one or two others, so quite a good field might be got together.

The Open Horse Hurdle races and the Amateur Horse Hurdle Races both give promise of bumper fields. The Open Hurdle Race on the first day, in spite of Pope, Harold and Parole being barred on account of having won over Rs. 800 hurdling, should have most of the following entered—Hoop Iron, Rustler, Pure Gold, Loch Spey, Scotch Thistle, Watchfire, Hello, Bucentaur, Bellvoye and possibly Loyal and one or two others, such as King Pin and Bareilly which are said to be jumpers and to be coming down in charge of Heywood, who is also bringing Solace.

When contemplating the Amateur Hurdle Race at the second meeting close on twenty horses occur to us, Sylvia and Gleam, winners last year at the Monsons, Fusilier, the winner of the Hunters' Hurdle Race in the cold weather, Sauce, also a winner replacing Pretender in Mr. Hamilton's colours, Cain and Fairy, Orphan Boy, and our old friend Jacinth. Of the newer lot Trilby, who has been summering up in Darjeeling, Ynyslas, Lady Gold, Lucifer, Jorrocks, Brown Moor, Little Ray, Great Hart, Queen of Harts and Riccaton, who, we hear, jumps hurdles quite nicely though he draws the line at mudwalls!

Ping Pong and a new English pony of Mr. Galstaun's Sylpho, Mr. Deakin's Trilby, Mr. Pugh's Manon, and Mr. Price's Marie Lloyd arrived from Darjeeling on Wednesday. Mr. Price despatched them from Darjeeling at dawn on Saturday. They arrived at Siliguri at noon on Sunday and should have arrived in Calcutta on Monday afternoon! The Eastern Bengal Railway again!

In addition to other probable arrivals from up-country Mr. J. D. Scott will doubtless swoop down on Calcutta and take away some of the loot. The Hon'ble Bingham is to ride anything he runs over hurdles.

Bouquet and Leda are also said to be coming down for the Monsoon races.

Marie Lloyd comes to the charge of Mr. Kenneth Campbell, who is also training Lady Gold and Geebung. Mr. A. Price does not himself get down till August.

The third Tollygunge Club Gymkhana Meeting was another very successful affair. Several of the G. R.'s there have not yet, however, quite fallen into the habit of procuring their number cloth, several being forgotten, and one or two even using the wrong numbers. This led to an unfortunate disappointment to a certain gentleman who, having no programme, after surveying the competitors went and backed his fancy on the totalisator, the pony, a very smart looking one by the way, being Lady George which was carrying the number 12. On Lady George winning he went to collect his money and was informed No. 12 had not won but No. 9, so he lost his money. It was hard luck.

The afternoon was decidedly warm, but the going was tip top. The bookmakers must have had a pleasant day out as in one instance only did the favourite get home. The honours of the afternoon lay undoubtedly with Mr. Evers, who not only won the last two races, but was third in two others and second in another.

There were two jump races on the card and they were decided first. There were, however, only four and three runners respectively. Every one was pleased to see Mr. Woodburn at last land a win with Moonray. Mr. E. B. Hill's Wivenhoe ran second, having only arrived a couple of is days before she tailed to stay it out. She a very fine jumper and, being for sale, should be worth buying for paperchasing.

Mr. Barrow landed Queen of Hearts a winner in the Steeplechase, having ridden a patient race throughout. It was unfortunate that her sporting owner Mr. Pierson was laid up and was thereby prevented from riding his mare to victory.

One of the upsets of the day was in the Beginners' Plate for which The Camel and Great Hart shared the favouritism, being the two top weights. Great Hart only struggled into third place while The Camel compounded down the straight. We were very pleased to see Mr. Pauntley once more steering a winner. Riccaton is apparently a good deal faster horse than people imagine and might run well through the mud in the Monsoons. Agamemnon ran well in this race with his light impost getting second place.

Another favourite went down in the Club Cup in Miss Trenton, Mr. "Holmes" landing Pylara a winner by a length, after making all the running, Miss Trenton only getting fourth.

Blossom was favourite for the next race, the Pony Purse, but he also failed even to run into a place, the winner turning up in Lady George. Knock Out would probably have won had he not got badly left at the start. This was the best field of the day with no less than eleven runners.

Sal was considered an absolute certainty for the last race and started at 2 to 1 on, but only ran fourth out of five runners, the race again falling to an outsider in Jorrocks.

Sir Thomas Lipton, of tea and bacon celebrity, has, we are told, "decided definitely not to challenge for the America Cup next year." We receive the announcement with satisfaction.

Mr. J. R. Keene, the American turfite, has not been too fortunate as regards Sysonby, that smart colt having joined the equine majority on the 17th ultimo. According to Luffan death ensued from blood poisoning. This is intelligible, as previous reports gave it that Sysonby was suffering from horse leprosy. That Sysonby had his fair share of success during the two seasons he trod the Turf will be seen when we note the fact that $178,673 have fallen to the share of his owner in stakes alone. The crack was a son of Melton, winner of the Derby in 1885, and Optime, a mare which was a good American filly in her day. How good Sysonby was is difficult to estimate, as he had nothing of extraordinary merit to beat as a three-year-old. Indeed, before he developed the unlucky disease that has proved fatal, his four-year-old career was looked forward to with great interest, more especially by his owner, who wished to see him set seal upon his excellence during the present year. Which reminds us that there is an impression abroad that Sysonby held an unbeaten record. This is incorrect, as the colt succumbed to Artful, a daughter of Hamburg, in the rich Futurity Stakes for two-year-olds.

Colonel J. Nunn, who has lately been appointed Principal Veterinary Officer in India, arrives next week and takes up his duties.

The prospectus of the Rawulpindi December Meeting is published to-day: the dates are the 13th and 15th December, entries closing on the 9th October and 6th and 29th November.

The first meeting of the 30th Lancers' Foxhounds took place at Bangalore on Saturday last. There was a large field to meet Mr. Gledstanes, the Master, and the fifteen couple showed good sport and killed in the open.

While we are all ready to join in the outcry against the native shikari, the horn and skin merchant and other game slaughtering agencies that have of recent years forced upon our attention the necessity for game preservation in practically every part of India, we must not overlook the sporting soldier whose shooting methods are at times violently opposed to the desirable end we are struggling to attain and whose ideas of "sport" are now and then decidedly crude. By all means let the British soldier enjoy his shikar, but for goodness sake let his operations be subject to proper control, and let those in authority over him endeavour to inculcate sporting principles or ere long—if we are to gauge existing conditions by certain letters that have recently appeared in a contemporary—T. Atkins will become as great a menace to game preservation and as inveterate an exterminator as any in the land. "An Officer" writes to the Pioneer:—"Goodness knows that no one grudges Thomas Atkins his sport, but let there be moderation in all things and let the close season be observed. Only recently a party of soldiers, cavalrymen in the C. P., had shot over 80 black buck and their leave was not yet up! How many more months will game in India last at this rate! Let Tommy shoot all the coots—"them black duck"—and such like he desires, but surely C. O.'s might insist, when issuing passes, that no more than two antelope or deer of any sort should be shot by each holder of a pass. No sportsman who has known India for the last 20 years but can be appalled at the pace at which game is disappearing. It is the same cry everywhere, pig and small game; pig and fish; nothing can save India now from a sporting point of view, but moderation even yet may give us a few more years of fairly good sport."

To what is set down above we can add our personal testimony. We have just seen, in the office of a well-known firm of gunmakers in Calcutta, letters from soldiers in which they gleefully record bags of forty and fifty black buck! One man, writing for a further supply of cartridges wherewith to continue the slaughter, announced that in the few weeks he had used a certain rifle he had killed over sixty head of game! The firm very rightly put his letter into the waste paper basket. This class of shooter is nothing more than a murdering ruffian who should be deprived of his weapon and never again be permitted to disgrace himself and his regiment. Ignorance is, of course, mainly responsible for this state of things; but in these days there is little or no excuse for it, and officers will materially help sport in this country if they will firmly discountenance anything of this sort and insist on all possible occasions that "slaughter" is not a synonym for "sport."

An extraordinary angling exploit recently occurred on Lough Melvin, Fermanagh. Fishing with a trout rod, Mr. Barbour, a gentleman from Birmingham, had a most trying experience in negotiating a salmon weighing only 11½lbs. He hooked the fish at 10 o'clock A.M., and it was 8 o'clock P.M. before it was safely landed. He played the fish out of a boat, in which he had two experienced fishermen as assistants, and the boat was taken several times from the end of the lake at Garrison to Rosse's Point and back, a distance of over three miles. The progress of "play" was watched by a large number of anglers and others. At 7 o'clock P.M. Mr. Barbour and his men were supplied with luncheon, and immediately afterwards a relief party was organised, as the fish showed no signs of exhaustion. A veteran fisherman, named Willie Walmsley, now arrived on the scene, and it was decided to give him the gaff. After a few attempts he succeeded in safely landing the fish, amid loud applause from the large crowd of spectators.

Here is a tip for removing rust from steel. First immerse the article to be cleaned in a strong solution of cyanide of potassium. Then mix to the consistency of thick cream a paste of cyanide potassium, castile soap, whitening, and water, and, after immersion, brush the steel briskly, using the paste.

Madras has got ahead of Calcutta in the matter of her aquarium. The estimate of Rs. 11,530 for construction of the building has been sanctioned and the work begins forthwith. It will probably be years before Calcutta gets level in this respect.

Mr. F. D. H. Joy sends to the Field from Central India a remarkable story about a tiger. "A party of five of us were out tiger shooting in Central India during the month of May in a well-known tiger centre" he writes, "but, although panther and bears were plentiful enough, the object of our expedition was conspicuous by its absence. Kills were tied out in all directions, and twice news came in that there were marks where tigers had sat contemplating the luckless calves, and then decided that they were not hungry and moved on.

On another occasion a tiger came out and examined a panther kill, but the youngest member of our party, who was seated in a tree above, neglected to seize the golden opportunity. Eventually two of our party, whose time was limited, went off in disgust, and the very next day a native came running into camp with a most remarkable story, which was afterwards corroborated by a personal inspection of the place.

The man was out on duty collecting honey, and, seeing a likely porcupine cave, filled up the mouth with brushwood, set it alight, and sat waiting on a little slab just like one of those seats for wayfarers outside the Hospital of St. Cross, near Winchester. The fretful porcupine, I may remark, is regarded as a great delicacy among the aboriginal tribes. Nothing, however, turned up, and so he went off, disappointed of a good supper. The next day, hoping against hope, he returned to the cave, and found—not a porcupine, but a tigress. She had never had the courage to face the brushwood, and so had been suffocated to death. The cave overhangs a very deep pool of water, which never dries up in the hottest weather, and had she charged out the impetus would have forced her to rush straight over the edge, a drop of some 50 feet. The usual approach is a very long and narrow ledge, which we ourselves only managed with considerable difficulty. I suppose the tigress discarded the idea of a plunge from such a height, although the pool is 16 feet or 18 feet deep. She was a young, though full-grown, tigress, and measured 8 feet 5 inches. I should be very interested to know whether any of your readers could furnish another instance of one man, unarmed and unassisted, killing a tiger."

At the recent Norwich assizes a spaniel was put in evidence in a trial for the offence of night poaching, in which the practical sole issue was one of identification, or otherwise, of the accused as one of the poachers who had been in conflict with keepers on the night in question. The prosecution averred that a black dog with white breast had been with the poachers that night; also, that the accused kept such a dog; from which alleged facts identification of the prisoner was said to be strengthened. The prisoner denied having been present at the affray, and called witnesses for alibi. He denied that he owned a dog, but admitted there was a dog owned by someone else which often followed him. In due course a spaniel was produced on the counsels' table; this dog apparently differed from the description by the prosecution of the dog of the affray, which was alleged to have been observed at other times in prisoner's company. The prisoner admitted his acquaintance with this dog, and when he called to it (by name), the dog bore witness to the friendship by distinct demonstrations of pleasure and recognition. This discounted the prosecution theory, but there came rebutting evidence of game keepers and police to the effect that the dog on the table was not the same dog that so frequently kept company with the prisoner. The case had been tried at the previous assizes, and the jury disagreeing, the prisoner had been out on bail. This theory of a black dog with white breast in the affray, and in prisoner's company at other times, had not then been suggested. The prosecution did not give notice of it to the defence for the second trial until overnight. The learned judge, Sir Alfred Lawrence, in summing up, directed the jury that the dog evidence, so far as it was tendered against the prisoner, was doubtful at the least, and appeared almost to sum up for an acquittal for want of thorough identification. However, the jury convicted, and his lordship, remarking that he was bound to act on the verdict, passed a sentence of twelve months' hard labour.

That there had been a serious poaching affray was undoubted; the only question was one of identity of the prisoner, and while in no way sympathising with night poaching, we are inclined to feel with the learned judge that the evidence of identity was, to say the least, of a nature that demanded the most careful analysis before coming to an adverse conclusion. Surprise was disclosed in some quarters at the admission of this dog as a quasi witness. What was done was in full conformity to the law of evidence under British jurisprudence. If it were otherwise a lame (or sound) horse could not be produced on an issue of breach of warranty; nor could the claims of rival ownership to dog or cat be tested by observation in court as to which of the claimants the disputed animal seemed to prefer.

A sad shooting accident at Dulwich reminds the Field that three conditions must be fulfilled to produce a state of danger. First of all, the rifle must be loaded; secondly, it must be pointed in a wrong direction; and, thirdly, the finger must be resting on the trigger. The concurrence of these three factors of danger frequently arises, but it is not until someone is killed that such incidents become public property. A state of panic is apt to arise when these things happen, because the exceptional publicity they necessarily receive produces a wrong impression on the mind. The newspaper reader may, for instance, be excused if he thinks that the manufacture of explosives, as ordinarily carried on, is a dangerous operation; yet the average number of deaths for the past decade for the whole of the factories in the United Kingdom is 7·5 per annum. Operations are regarded as dangerous or the reverse according to the sensational aspects of the accidents which arise. The exercise of proper care in the handling of firearms can only be cultivated by rigidly following certain simple rules. It is no answer to a charge of improperly pointing a rifle at another person for the guilty party to explain that the arm was unloaded. Three links are necessary to complete the chain of circumstances which produces an accident, but if the presence of any one link is ignored it is only a question of time for the fatal coincidence to arise. A loaded gun, as such, is not dangerous. The danger consists in forgetting that it is loaded, and forgetfulness of this nature may easily arise on the part of any unaccustomed person whose vigilance is momentarily distracted from the one point which should always be uppermost in the mind. In the presence of firearms the attention should be constantly directed towards the need for exercising special care. The adoption of suitable precaution will, in due course, become second nature, and the gun or rifle will cease to be handled with the indifference which is accorded to the ordinary umbrella or walking stick. In the case of beginners no censure should be considered too severe when an allegation of dangerous handling is answered by the assertion that the weapon was not loaded. Most accidents arise from the belief that an unloaded rifle may be treated like any other inanimate object, whereas it should be understood from the very start that a firearm must be handled differently from anything else in the world.

Racecourse superstitions are innumerable and curious: here are a few.

The man who having bet detects himself singing before a race is doomed to lose. His only safeguard is hedging.

Money carried for three days in a man's shoe or a woman's stocking is invested with absolute confidence in its winning powers.

Some men never back a horse except at odds of six to five or nine to five. They assert that they always win at those prices and lose at others.

Few betting men have the courage to wager their money after having seen a cross-eyed person. Such an occurrence is a hoodoo of the worst sort.

The appearance of a gray horse never fails to cause anxious search for the red haired girl. The combination will always be regarded as invincible.

When an accident occurs at the starting post, and a jockey finds it necessary to dismount, there is a great scramble among the superstitious to bet on his horse.

Many persons have an odd fancy for backing horses according to certain numbers on the programme, but the reasoning and deductions of no two men are the same.

Sticking a pin through the programme from back to front is a popular method of picking winners, and it is about as good a way as any in these degenerate times.

Personal contact with a hunchback brings good luck. Women have been seen to leave their seats in the grand stand and rush down to the lawn for the purpose of touching a hump on a dwarf's back.

Last week we were in error when we stated that Dr. Spooner Hart, junior, was acting for Dr. Adams during the latter's absence from Calcutta; we should have said that Dr. T. Assheton Smith had arranged to take over Dr. Adams' duties.

Following closely on the death of Sysonby, the crack American four-year-old, comes the news of the scratching from all engagements of Prestige, the undefeated French three-year-old.

The brown colt Prestige (Le Pompon—Orgueilleuse) was bred by the late Mr. J. Ravant and made his first public appearance on Saturday, 17th September 1904, when he was put up to auction, but withdrawn at 9,800 francs. He subsequently passed into the hands of Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt and was trained for all his engagements by W. Duke. His first race was at Maisons Laffitte and he was the mount of J. Ransch, an American, (as are his owner and trainer, who rode him to victory in all his two-year-old engagements,) he wound up the season with seven wins and 150,850 francs, to his credit.

Unfortunately for his connections, Prestige was not entered in any of the classic races either in France or England this year, but still he managed to win nine races worth 202,393 francs, his last appearance being in the Prix Seymour (2,400 m.) at Longchamps.

Among the valuable stakes from which Prestige has been struck out, are the Prix du President de la Republique run last Sunday at Maisons Laffitte, the Grand Prix du Conseil Municipal at Longchamps, in both of which races he might have met Pretty Polly, the Grand Prix de Vichy, and the Grand Prize at Baden.

Old John Day was once victimised by the gentlemen jockeys at Bath. In a field of a dozen horses he had one which he knew to be so wretchedly bad that he took the liberty of laying the odds to a £50-note against him at 15 to 1. But the "amateurs" had breakfasted together, and, comparing books, had come to the conclusion that the best way to make money out of the race was by letting "honest John's" horse come in first.

This result the gentlemen riders had no difficulty whatever in bringing about—one bolting at the first opportunity with three or four others after him, some falling off, while the remainder of the horses were deliberately pulled, until the Danebury nag came in almost by himself.

Everyone congratulated the owner, who, besides his bets, had the felicity of paying the police charges for the meeting and standing ten dozen of champagne for the privilege of winning. They say that on that day "old John's" face was a caution to see.

Lloyd Osbourne says that Robert Louis Stevenson once invited a friend to visit him in Samoa.

His friend said that nothing would give him greater pleasure if he could secure the leisure to do so. "By the way, Louis," said he, "how do you get to Samoa, anyhow?"

"Oh, easily," responded Stevenson, "you simply go to America, cross the continent to San Francisco, and it's the second turning to the left."

Athletic Notes.

THE English 100 Yards' Swimming record was on the 22nd ultimo lowered at the Richmond Baths by C. M. Daniels. He swam the distance in 57⅘secs., which is 1⅗secs. better than the previous record. The Indian record 1min. 9¼secs. put up at the Calcutta Swimming baths by Mr. J. V. Watkins the other day is a long way behind this.

At a meeting of the Stewards of the Henley Regatta, held to pass the entries, the action of the American Amateur Rowing Association in connection with the visit of the crew of the Vesper Boat Club of Philadelphia, U.S.A., last year, was considered. It will be remembered that it was a question of money matters, and that suspensions followed. The Henley Stewards decided that in future no entries of the Vesper Club would be accepted for Henley, and Mr. W. A. L. Fletcher gave notice of a drastic motion to bar all entries from the United States in future and we trust the motion will be carried; American ideas of sport can never be on all fours with those held by British amateurs. Further details regarding this matter will be found in our Rowing Column

Our golfers will doubtless be interested to hear that James Braid, who recently won the Open Championship at Home, did so (and for the second time) playing with the famous "White with Red Dot" ball. Some details of this excellent ball will be found on the back cover of this paper.

Captain J. G. Greig, the great Bombay cricketer, now at home, has not escaped the attentions of the Athletic News poet as thus:—

Rataplan! Rataplan!
He's a military man—
A soldier who is "fit to stand by Cæsar;'
And at the peaceful game
Of cricket he's found fame,
For, in vulgar parlance, he's a reg'lar "sneezer."

Ratatat! Ratatat!
You should see him with a bat—
Oh, the bowler who is wise will not disdain him,
For the willow blade he wields
Like a sword on martial fields;
He smites as though bisecting a stout Paynim.

Rataplan! Rataplan!
From Beersheba unto Dan
He whops the loose long-hop, with muscles bunching;
And he keeps a keen "skinned eye"
On the curly ones so sly,
And waits until one comes that asks for punching.

Ratatat! Ratatat!
He's as active as a cat
In the field, for scouting is with him a hobby;
And opponents ever shun,
When he's present, the short run,
With a "keep your eye on Greig—he's playing bobby!'

Rataplan! Rataplan!
He's the sort of Englishman
Who's equally at home, at War or Cricket
When the time comes, I'll engage
He will lustre battle's page
As a brave defender of Britannia's wicket.

We remind our readers of the boxing match which is to come off at the Theatre Royal, Calcutta, on the 27th instant. It is a 15-round contest between W. Fisher, whose form is pretty well known to local patrons of boxing, and Gunner Vickers, a hefty R. G. A. man from Fort William. Mr. W. O. Rees has undertaken to referee and doubtless an efficient timekeeper and two judges will be forthcoming before the day. Meanwhile the plan of the house is at Messrs. T. E. Bevan and Company's. The contest is for a purse and 75 and 25 per cent. of the gate to winner and loser respectively. It would, perhaps, have been better if the men had arranged to box for the purse alone, the profits on the entertainment being given to some local charity.

A rather interesting motor car contest came off in Rangoon last Saturday. It took the form of a hill-climbing test between a Turner-Messe steam car, carrying seven people and a petrol-driven Rover carrying five. The latter wasn't in it, the steam car winning by no less than thirteen seconds.

The following are the results of home cricket matches played during the week:—

The Gentlemen beat the Players by 45 runs.
Hampshire beat Northampton by 8 wickets.
Kent beat the West Indians by an innings and 14 runs.
Eton beat Harrow by 4 wickets.
Surrey beat Essex by 268 runs.
Notts beat Derbyshire by 5 wickets.
Yorkshire beat Sussex by 6 wickets.
The matches Worcestershire vs. Somerset, Leicester vs. Hampshire, Warwickshire vs. Lancashire were drawn.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—There has been remarkably little happening in Bombay during the past week. Fine weather prevailed for the greater part, but the week finished with a downpour on Saturday which put cricket quite out of the question. The first round of the Harwood League has closed with the Royal Scots, who take the place of the Yorkshires, last year's winners, with 23 points for twelve games, at the head of the list with maximum points, 14 for seven games. The Y. M. C.A. have shown up excellently this year with five wins out of seven games and are second on the list with the Telegraph team third with only one point less. The Gymkhana has done rather badly with only three wins to its credit, but the team is working better together now and should show up in the later stages. The City Club and the Parel Gymkhana have both had a bad time of it, the former having won one and drawn one, while the latter have lost all their matches.

The game between the Rovers and R. G. A. was interesting. The Gunners started with the wind in their favour and looked dangerous for a time, but the Rovers retaliated well and towards the end of the first quarter broke through and scored their first goal. A second was put to their credit early in the second half and as nothing else was scored, despite some excellent shots put in, they won by two to nil. The second round of the League commenced on Wednesday when the Y. M. C. A. and the Gymkhana made a draw with nil all. At the previous match the Y. M. C. A. won by two to nil, but for the return the Gymkhana had a strong team and a keen game resulted, though the forwards on both sides can do with a little more dash in their play. The Gymkhana had the best of the game towards the end, keeping close to the Young Men's goal, but the defence proved too strong. The other game played last week was between the Rovers and the City Club in which after a flat first half when the City Club, failed to score from a penalty, the Rovers ran home by two to nil.

In the Rugby world the game of the week has been Scotland vs. The World which was not without its amusing side. The game resulted in a win for The World by one goal (5 points) to nil after an even game. Scotland pressed at the start and was heavier in the scrums, but the World pulled well together after a time and forced play to the Scots' end. Big efforts were made to score but it was almost half time before Palmer got possession and in a smart run passed to Bridge, who in turn passed to Baker to put down behind the line. Rhe Phillipe converted and half time followed almost immediately. A penalty for Scotland was not properly used and an excellent attempt at a drop kick by Colin Ross was not successful. The World again made a rush only to be brought back and time was called immediately.

The Second Mounted Sports organized by the Gymkhana came off on Wednesday and was particularly successful. The weather was excellent and the entries were good. Mr. L. Barraclough won the tent-pegging with Mr. F. Shettle second and Mr. J. F. Parkin third, while Mr. C. Stileman won the jump with Mr. Henderson Gray second and Mr. F. R. Hill third. In the tennis ball nomination race Miss Dimmock and Captain Nash were first and Mrs Potts and Mr. Phillips second, while third place was divided between Mrs. Keys and Captain Keys and Miss Turner and Mr. Griffin. The rules of the chattie race made it somewhat exciting. Riding up to chatties competitors had to pick them up with a stick and ride home, whilst anyone was allowed to break anyone else's chattie while being carried. The winners were Mrs. Barraclough and Mr. Parkin. Mr. Griffin and Mrs. Nash won the Artist Triumph Stakes, while Mr. Shanks and Miss Crawford were second and Mr. Barraclough and Mrs. MacCausland third. The Pony Scurry went to Mr. Gore's Talot ridden by Mr. Griffin with Mr. Ralli's Florican and Mr. Jupe's pony second and third. In the Horse Scurry Mr. Mackie won by a neck from Mr. E. M. Webb's Bounder with Mr. Henderson Gray's Janet ridden by Mr. Palmer, a close third.

The inter-office golf competition at Barrackpore is proceeding merrily, and some fine aggregates are being sent in. Indeed we understand that 611 is the best returned as yet, and that one of the favourite teams has recorded something like 640 as the combined effort of its six representatives. The tournament will last throughout July, and seeing that the teams which have already played had a distinct advantage in the condition of the course, which is daily getting rougher and heavier, it is now thought that a total of 600 will prove easily victorious. This quite bears out our original idea that though the competition may be very good fun, it is certainly not golf.

Miss Dorothy Campbell, who won the Scottish Ladies' Golf Championship the other day at Cruden Bay, is, we believe, the sister of Lieutenant Campbell of the West Riding Regiment who scored such a brilliant victory in the Indian Amateur Championship at Tollygunge last January. Miss Grace Robertson, of Troon, who reached the semi-final stage, is also the sister of a well-known Anglo-Indian golfer, another sister of whose, Miss D. Robertson, was strongly fancied for the Ladies' Championship of India, on its inception last cold weather.

The County Cricket Championship at home is assuming a much more open complexion, and Kent, thanks to the brilliant successes of Mr. K. L. Hutchings and Woolley, the young Tonbridge colt, have been making it uncommonly hot for some of the leaders, though not yet at their own full strength or near it. Surrey have superseded Yorkshire at the head of the table for the time being anyhow, but fine side though they are and magnificently as Hayward is batting, we rather doubt their ability to stay there if a spell of difficult wickets comes round.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 29th June 1906.

WE have had another week of summer, and the inevitable thunderstorm is hanging about to mind us of the mortality of our sunshine. There are more people in London than ever before or appear to be: some attribute the appearance to the weather: others attribute the fact to the convenience offered by residential hotel and boarding-house. I wonder whether the London season will run its usual course this year, i.e., be regulated by the duration of Parliament. Many people say it will not: that the last week of July, or earlier if this weather continues, will see town emptied though C.B. and his dismal men continue their sittings. The sincere rads are convinced, by the way, that there is some dodgery over that Chinese proclamation: they cannot believe that it says what the Under Secretary says it is meant to say, and they regard with frowning suspicion the adoption of orthodox oriental phraseology. Those who haunt Westminster affirm that there is only one man more sick of his business than Mr. Churchill: to wit Mr. Birrell. Rumours of a Cabinet split grow steadily louder: the wish is their father no doubt: but unless tales are grossly exaggerated there would seem to be ground for them.

The Denshawi outrage has been much discussed at the clubs: the theory that received most acceptance was that the invitation to shoot pigeons in the village was given by some budmash posing as the sheikh, who took his bucksheesh and his departure, leaving the soldiers to the wrath of the village people. Yesterday's news knocks the bottom out of the theory, as we are told that the sheikh gave the Britishers lunch and provided conveyances to take them to the village. This information does not improve the situation, rather the contrary, as it looks as though the attack had been premeditated and as though the sheikh might have been in the plot. Denshawi, I am told, lies in region notorious for the antipathy of its inhabitants to foreigners, and is the abiding place of truculent Arabs who are always eager for a row. The trap, if trap it were, was a very easy one to fall into, as those big pigeon cotes familiar to everyone who has been in an Egyptian village are recognised sources of sport for soldiers to whom the gentle fellah is usually ready to extend a welcome on receipt of cash. By the way, writing of Egypt, I hear that Colonel Cuthbert, late of that battalion of Guards whose motto is, by the flippant, now written Itch Dien, is to get a good appointment in that country. So say they professing knowledge, it has not been gazetted yet.

Colonel Mark Bell died on Tuesday at Earlywood Lodge, Wendlesham, aged 63. He will be remembered both for his remarkable coolness and courage in action and for the enterprise and daring with which he carried out various journeys of exploration in the East single handed and often in disguise during the eighties. I suppose it is now a very open secret that by these journeys he added materially to the information possessed by the Foreign Office at Simla. He had won his V.C. in the Ashanti Campaign, and it was after his work in the East, in 1887, that he was made A.-D.-C. to the late Queen. The C.B. followed in 1893. Colonel Bell was well known at the meetings of the Geographical Society, to whose journal he was a frequent contributor.

That was an extraordinary series of escapes which took place on Highgate Archway Road held on Saturday. An electric (overhead wire) tramcar "took charge" on that gentle incline and played havoc with everything that came in its way; a hearse, a furniture van and a cab, before it met nearly its match in a motor-'bus. The latter had no chance with the tramcar travelling 30 miles an hour and the car simply played with it: pitched the thing against a shop front from which it ricochetted into the tramcar's path again to be bowled once more fairly into a shop on the other side of the road. Eventually the runaway was brought to a stand by a heavy electric light standard which broke its momentum sufficiently to let a stationary car act as a stop buffer. Three men were killed and twenty were more or less severely injured: the casualty roll is the most remarkable thing about the business: this road on Saturday afternoon is one of the busiest thoroughfares in the north of London: the runaway was full of passengers when it started (many jumped out as the speed increased) and so was the 'bus with which it collided. The agility of the population in getting out of the way explains their salvation.

Father Bernard Vaughan has been drawing crowded congregations (I had nearly written "houses," and having regard to the spirit in which people go to listen to the castigators, I doubt me but the latter word is the better) to the Farm Street chapel. Father Vaughan has been "going for" Smart Society and doing it with a will. I have no particular tenderness for the moneyed bounders who for the greater part pass as "smart" people: they lack both manners and morality according to standards of average sanity: but the Reverend Father rather missed his mark when he devoted the whole of a fiery sermon to the Sin of Extravagance. What possible harm can there be in spending all the money you have? Your folly benefits many and hurts none but yourself. Some day I will write a little sermon myself on the Wisdom of Extravagance: that parable concerning the talent in a napkin will exactly suit as a text.

I am delighted to see that a vigorous protest is being entered against the "Children's Spectacles" scheme to which H.R.H. the Princess Christian was induced to lend her name. The idea was to get up a fund to provide children who needed them with glasses: now glasses such as most children require cost about a shilling or 1-3 a pair: and if we are to understand that parents cannot rise to that, the sooner society is reorganised on German paternal government lines, the better. It is a piece with the abuse of charitable maintenance of Hospitals in London. Forty-one per cent. of the deaths (other than those of infants) in London are those of persons in receipt of charitable or gratuitous medical help: 15 per cent is the proportion over the rest of England. About 3,000,000 (three million) applications for attention are made annually at the London hospitals. Surely not all these are unable to pay for medical attendance for themselves. If you suppose so, stand for ten minutes at the "out patients" door of St. George's any day of week and mark the clothes of the people.

It is a curious thing, but London is the only large city in England which has no proper ambulance service for the dealing with street accidents. The L.C.C. has been incubating the matter for a long time, but in such matters its great mind works very slowly: it has got so far as to resolve that two experimental ambulances shall be provided; but beyond this it cannot at present proceed owing to the insurmountable difficulty of deciding whether they shall be horse or motor ambulances. When it is a matter of ruining Greenwich Observatory the L.C.C. does not hesitate: that is a mere trifle to be taken in its stride, so to speak: but when you come to such an important matter as deciding whether two ambulances shall be drawn by horses or motors, the L.C.C. wants time, lots of it, to make up its massive mind.

Theatrical news this week is practically nil. I imagine that the Ellen Terry function brought about a reaction, for the managers complain that business is become very bad: it is, however, quite possible that the fine hot weather has its influence on bookings for those parts of the house not sold in advance, for the Earl's Court grounds are crowded and the Welcome Club is doing a roaring trade. Mrs. Patrick Campbell closed her season at the Cri with some abruptness: I am not surprised, for "The Macleans of Bairness" had not the appearance of long life. "Othello" at the Lyric is in its last nights stage; so is "The Shulamite" at the Savoy and "Colonel Newcome" at His Majesty's: the last named is to be revived later on however. The "Spring Chicken" at the Gaiety has grown into a tough fowl by the reckoning of time, and the day of its acceptance is, I suppose, running out: at all events it is on the "off" list of the next week or two.

Saturday evening saw the first of a series of open air performances at the Botanic Gardens in Regents Park. It was blowing half a gale and the difficulty was to hear anything said by the players in "Midsummer Nights Dream." It was very pretty, very quaint, and very interesting: but I am not weaned from my view that drama of whatever kind is best seen under cover.

The "Gibson Girl" case, thrice tried, came to an end last week at the hands of Mr. Justice Grantham and a special jury. The point for decision was rather a fine one; to wit, what constitutes a dividing line between actress and chorus girl; and if there were any to which side did the "Gibson girls" in The Catch of the season belong. It was decided that the Gibson girls in that play were distinct from the chorus, though many managers and actors maintained in the witness box that they were referable to the choral species. But what chance has a mere actor manager or a score of him against a good looking girl who maintains that she is an actress and as such entitled to longer notice than the fortnight agreed on! Miss Ethel Karri (now Mrs. Hawkins) was adjudged a verdict on all points by the gallant jury who did not leave the box, and the judge left it to counsel to agree about the matter of costs. The trial has attracted a good deal of attention: we are indebted to one of the witnesses for a very good definition of the difference between actress and chorus girl: the former "expresses her part individually, the latter express it collectively:" but if we accept this what becomes of the claim of the Gibson girl who is entirely quantitative and measured by the dozen, to rank as an actress?

The murder of Miss Hogg on 11th June at Camberley was more than a passing sensation until the end of last week when another outrage occurred. A man walked into Major Waite's house in the Sandhurst grounds and attacked Miss Waite with a knife: this about eleven o'clock on Saturday morning. Miss Waite, though badly cut about the face and hands, managed to get to the bell and ring it; whereupon the visitor left. The cadets, servants and every man attached to Sandhurst were turned out at once to search the woods, but they failed to find the man. The reasonable assumption is that he is a lunatic: but the circumstance does nothing to allay the scare which reigns at Camberley.

Mr. Robert Naysmith died last week in Islington Infirmary. I never heard of him before and I don't suppose you ever did, but he was a remarkable man. He made an honest but, I apprehend, disagreeable livelihood by eating glass, nails and long hat pins at moderate charges. This diet in the long run disagreed with him, and abbreviated a career otherwise blameless and possibly useful. Medical evidence at the inquest showed that Mr. Naysmith was in a "very emaciated condition:" which indicates that such items as pins and brass headed nails (30 of which were found in his inflamed interior) are not nourishing. He called himself a "human ostrich:" what he thought himself does not appear.

Messrs. Kynoch, the Birmingham ammunition makers, have won their case against Mr. Faber, M.P. Mr. Faber made a speech at a garden party at Boston in which he made remarks on Messrs. Kynochs' methods of seeking business which, he said, involved the use of Mr. Chamberlain's name as a bait. Messrs. Kynoch regarded the remarks as libellous and the special jury did so too, finding a verdict for the company with reasonable damages. Mr. Faber's evidence was to effect that he put his trust is statements published by Truth: also that he merely used Kynochs as a stick to beat the late Government with. No doubt he will choose his weapons of offence and the occasion for each utterances with more discretion hereafter.

At the instance of Mr. Asquith, the sentence on Miss Billington, agitator-suffragiste, has been reduced to a fiver or one month. Mrs. Parkhurst applied on Monday for summonses to compel "C.B.," Mr. Asquith and Mr. Lloyd George to attend as witnesses in the cases pending against other suffragistes. Mr. Lloyd George was said to have advised them in a speech to "go for their enemies in the cabinet and the greatest enemy of all, Mr. Asquith: but Judgment in the "Toby M. P." appeal case was given on Monday. The Master of the Rolls read a long judgment in course of which he dealt with the ingredient of malice: he held that the Judge at the trial did right to leave this point to the jury and was of opinion that the Judges of Appeal could not usurp the functions of the jury by reversing the verdict given on or partly on that ground. The other two Lord Justices agreeing the appeal failed.

The Bench at the County of London Sessions could not agree in the now famous whisky case. So until the appeal from Mr. Fordham's decision is reheard, as it no doubt will be, we shall remain in the dark concerning the nature of the product of the Patent still as compared with the Pot.—Phew! these law cases are dry work in weather like this: lets have a peg.

ANOTHER BOOK ON BRIDGE.*

"COSMOPOLITAN BRIDGE" is a short book on the Queen of Card Games by "Red Lancer" and is published and printed by the Time of Ceylon, Colombo. Works on Bridge are so common nowadays that any book, which woos the public with any prospect of success, must put forward old ideas in fresh and more attractive garb, or must contain new ideas. Dalton's "Bridge at a Glance" seems to have reached the high water-mark of putting old ideas in concise and precise language, and "Cosmopolitan Bridge" in no way threatens Mr. Dalton's supremacy. There is only one new idea in "Red Lancer's" book, and that is his suggestion as to the correct lead in No Trumps doubled by the third player. His suggestion is expressed in the following words:—

(a) When the dealer makes no trumps, and the third player doubles, let it be understood that the lead be the best Heart in the leader's hand.

(b) When the Dummy makes no trumps, and the third player doubles, let it be understood that the lead be the highest card of the leader's weakest suit.

The rule could, we think, be put more shortly and concisely, while the arguments in favour of such a convention are not set out very clearly, but the suggestion is undoubtedly worth consideration. At the end of the book there are a number of instances where it would undoubtedly be of value, but whether on examination the convention might not prove a double edged weapon is another matter. It is clear that the third player could not double on Hearts alone under this convention.

"Red Lancer" discusses the various discards used at Bridge and unhesitatingly opines that "The French Discard" is the only one worth a thought, and dismisses the "Discard from strength," the "Circular Discard" and "The Seven Discard" as "thoroughly bad." "Red Lancer's" "cocksuredness" does not convince us any more than his arguments. Under the heading "Spades at lose all" he writes "Never be tempted to make what third rate players call a Defensive Spade Declaration. It is the poorest, weakest form of play, and no good player could be guilty of it. . . . Do not be misled by writers on this subject; there are plenty of men who write, without knowing the A B C of what they write about, especially as regards Bridge." This raises a smile though it is in poor taste. Many of the very finest players in England believe in and utilise a Defensive Spade Declaration, and in many places in India it is an almost universal practice when the dealer's hand is below a certain strength. It may surprise "Red Lancer" to hear that Mr. W. H. Whitfeld, the Card Editor of the Field, is a strong supporter of a Defensive Spade Declaration. Mr. Whitfeld is known to be one of the finest Bridge players in London. "Heliespont" is also known to be a first class player. "Red Lancer" devotes a number of pages in criticising a little book called "New Ideas" which not one Bridge player in 10,000 has read. "Red Lancer's" sarcasm is rather wasted, and if he had wanted to break lances on such a thorny subject as "A Defensive Spade Declaration" he might with more point, but less judgment, have chosen "Hellespont" as a foeman.

Shikar.

AN EXCITING TIGER SHOOT.

OUR party, consisted of six guns,—five men and our hostess—besides several ladies, who did not shoot. We started after breakfast, each of us taking a lady on the back seat of our howdahs. It was a very long distance to where we were to start the shikar, and we did not reach it till after a couple of hour's travelling, and having to cross a river before getting there. We let the elephants have a good drink as we passed the river, and getting to the place, chosen for the commencement of our beat, we started operations. Before going far, however, we saw a man coming along in charge of some cattle; and I asked him if he knew anything about the tiger. He replied that he had, just shortly before meeting us, been talking to a cowherd, who told him that his cattle had just bolted from the spot, where they were grazing, and that one of the old bulls of the herd had been pulled down and killed by the tiger, just about an hour before we arrived on the ground. I put the man up on a pad elephant, and took him to the "Old Shikari," and we immediately made tracks for the place, where the tiger had killed the bull. It was not very far away, but we had to recross the river to reach it. Some of the sportsmen wanted tiffin first, but the majority decided that the beat should come off first and the tiffin afterwards. M. and I were placed as stop along the river and C. got the billet on the left. M. and I hurried off to our places, and we took up a beautiful position, where, if the tiger broke, it would come straight towards us. Stripes did not keep us waiting long, for presently the elephant began to trumpet and we heard a roar, and the crack of our hostess' rifle,—first blood to our hostess. Three more shots were fired and his majesty roared, but would not leave the place, so we left our position and went to join in the fun. We just got up in time to see all the elephants break back as the tiger roared again. Eventually he tried to sneak away, but was turned by our hostess, who fired again, and the "Old Shikari" fired immediately after and broke the tiger's back. He was lying in some very thick grass and thorns, and our fighting male elephant trampled this down very carefully until C. got a glimpse of stripes and fired. He roared again and the elephants bolted again. Three more shots were fired, but did not succeed in finishing him off, though, as he was gasping, we knew that it was nearly all over. One of the party said that there were signs of a second tiger, so we all left this one to hunt for the other but without any success, and we eventually had to come back again to where we had left our first tiger dying. We found him quite dead, and after taking it's photograph, had it padded and sent on to camp. Everyone was very pleased that our hostess had got the first tiger, which was a very fine looking one and measured nine feet and eight inches. We then adjourned for tiffin.

After satisfying the inner man, we started again with our sport. We looked up some grass lower down the river and presently saw some vultures sitting on the trees round about, and a lot of crows on one large tree. We proceeded to the spot and found that a cow had been killed there, so orders were given for a machan to be made in a tree close by, and M. elected to sit up on the chance of the tiger coming out to the kill. M. sat up for some time, but though the tiger came near he did not show himself, so M. gave it up and came back in time for dinner.

We had buffaloes tied up at two different places, where the tiger was in the habit of crossing the river, and in the evening, as we were having a stroll with the dogs, we met the shikari coming back from having tied them up. He looked awfully frightened, so we asked him what was the matter. He said that as he was going along with the buffaloes, he came face to face with the tiger, who was panting heavily (probably he had been chasing some animal), so he beat his stick on the ground and on the trees, and the tiger made off. He immediately tied up one of the buffaloes there, and the second one, about two miles lower down. In the morning he went to see if either had been killed, and came back and reported that the second one had been killed. So we had breakfast, and went and beat the place but without success. It was decided to put a machan up and in the evening one of the party would sit up. We left the shikaries to fix it up and we went on and crossed the river, to beat a very big "bojie." As we got to this "bojie," a big herd of cheetal came out quite close to us, and went dashing off. I was doing stop on the right and saw two very large herd of cheetal go out of the "bojie" which the elephants were beating, and a big blue bull sauntered out, seemingly not a bit afraid of my elephant. At last we came to the end of the place and I saw the "Old Shikari," with his rifle in his hand, and he called to me that the tiger had been put up. We then went off to a nullah and we beat it a long way up but without anything turning out, so came back and had tiffin after which we returned to camp. C. and H. went and sat up over the remains of the kill. They came back soon after nine o'clock, and told us that the tiger came close by, but did not show himself, as he seemed suspicious that something was wrong, and quickly went off.

Before they came away, they tied another young buffalo to the stump of a tree close to the "machan." After dinner C. and I arranged to go off about 3 A.M. It was pitch dark when we got on to our pad elephant, and went off, and it was nice and cool at that hour of the morning. We got to the place, and as luck would have it we found the machan without any difficulty, and quickly climbed up into it. We looked at the stump, where we knew that the buffalo had been tied, but in the dim light we could see nothing, so we concluded that the animal was lying down. However when the day broke and the partridge and peafowl were beginning to call, and we could see clearly, we found that the buffalo had gone, and there was no rope to be seen either—the tiger must have taken it off before our arrival. We waited a little while, and then I said to C. "let's be off, it is not much use sitting here any longer." So I stood up in the machan and shouted to the men to bring the elephant, and when he came up, I got down and went to the stump where the buffalo had been tied, and there I found a big patch of blood, and I looked up to C. and said, "I say, the buff has been taken." I saw in what direction he had been dragged, and followed up the marks without thinking, and went right up to a lovely patch of thick grass, into which it had been dragged. I wanted to have a look at the "kill" if possible. I stood for a little while and listened, but heard nothing, and the grass was so thick that I did not venture into it. If I had only known it, the kill was not five yards from where I was standing. I now got on to the elephant with C and we thought of putting the elephant through the grass, but decided not to do so. We had a look round and found that the tiger had left the spot. We went back to camp and after breakfast, the whole party came out, and we beat it very carefully up to the kill, and round about. The shikaries got down and tracked him, and found that he had gone across the river; so the "Old Shikari" determined to beat the swamp, in which (the evening before) the man had told me the tiger lived. We went across the river and straight to the swamp,—and a splendid piece of ground it was too.

Heavy "nurkul" grass and water on each side, and in the middle a dry patch, covered with thick, tall "ratua" grass. The "Old Shikari" told me to wait with the rest of the elephants, whilst he went and placed C. and himself as stops, as he alone knew where the tiger would be likely to break. "When you see me wave my umbrella, bring up the elephants, and start the beat." So I waited and I saw them go off and after about a quarter of an hour's wait, I saw him wave his umbrella, and at once gave the order "forward." We started H. on the left flank and our hostess and myself on the right. Here and there the elephants could go a little way into the "nurkul" but the majority of the ground was boggy. We had beaten nearly up to the end when one or two elephants trumpeted on the left. At the same time the shikari on my side said "Look out Sahib! the tiger is going on ahead." I waved to the "Old Shikari" and then went up to him and told him that the tiger was there. The swamp was close to the closed blocks, and it was essential to have most of the guns on that side, because Mr. Stripes would only have a short distance to go, to get away into the Government closed blocks, where, not having passes, we could not have followed him. Here, somehow the line went wrong, and the beat had to start again. I went round with the elephants, and was on the left flank the second time. My mahout said to me "Sahib keep on the other side of this "nurkul" but I would not listen to him. The beat started, and when it got towards the end of the swamp, the elephants began making a noise, and presently my shikari shouted to me to come where he was, as the tiger was standing in front of his elephant, and would not move. I dashed my elephant down into the swamp, and she at once went up to her girths into the bog, and it was only after some difficulty, and plenty of rolling about, that I managed to get out, and round to where he was, but, before I reached him, there was a bang, and a shout that the tiger had been knocked over. It was "Old Shikari" who had fired and wounded the tiger. He knocked it clean over, and it lay rolling on the ground, but presently it picked itself up, and went back into the grass. Some trees, being in the way, prevented the "Old Shikari" from getting in a second shot. We went into the grass, and followed up the "pugs" which led straight ahead, and then turned off to the right into the "nurkul." The elephants could not go in, as it was very boggy and they might have got stuck. So the "Old Shikari" placed our hostess and C. and H. as stops, and he and I went round to beat the patch that was in the middle, and where the tiger had got up from the first time. We got to the patch and began beating the lovely "ratua" grass, and when we had got to the thickest part there was a roar, and the tiger got up in front of my elephant, and went straight down towards C. who saw it coming and waited until it was fairly close, and then fired at it. It stopped and turned, and he fired a second shot, then the tiger bolted into the "nurkul." It was terribly boggy just there, and the elephants would not go in. There was a great noise going on, and the "Old Shikari" and I were waiting about twenty yards apart, for, some of the elephants to go in, when presently, as one or two of the elephants were persuaded to move forward, we saw one reed at a time go down, and crack, and we knew that the tiger was coming towards us. Very slowly he came, crushing down the reeds carefully, and at last he reached the edge of the "nurkul," and sat down in the heavy "ratua" grass in front of the "Old Shikari," and about ten yards off. I called quietly to him to ask if I should shout for the elephants to come round, and he nodded back, so I shouted to the men to bring all the pad elephants, and when they came up, I, with the big fighting elephant, moved towards the tiger, who was sitting tight,

When we got close up to him, he moved slowly along, sticking close to the heavy cover all the time, and presently he gave a bound and went across to the "nurkul" on the other side and we put in our elephants after him, never thinking of the bog, but simply going for all they were worth, and after a lot of rolling about in the bog (the feeling being just like as if you were on the sea in very rough weather) we managed to get across, but the tiger had beaten us, for he had doubled back to the heavy "ratna" grass in the middle again. Here ended the first chukker.

The "Old Shikari" then told me to go and take my place on the right, for fear the tiger might break and get away. I did so, and saw all that was going on, being out of action myself. The "Old Shikari" took the elephants back again, and beat the "ratna," and this time the tiger went into the "nurkul" on that side again. Presently one of the elephants went rather close to him, and he roared and made for the elephant, who quickly scuttled out of the "nurkul." Then the big fighting elephant was put forward, and the tiger charged him also: instead of his turning and rushing out as the other had done, this elephant went straight for the tiger, and pinned him between his tusks, but the ground being wet and soft the tiger managed to wriggle out from between them, and gave the elephant a good smack across the trunk for his pains. It made a very severe wound, but the good old elephant did not seem to mind it at all. The tiger, meanwhile had gone further into the "nurkul," and we could not fire the place as it was near to the closed block; so at last the "Old Shikari" called up his shikari and gave him his shot gun, with several cartridges, and told him to fire where he saw the reeds shaking, so the man fixed himself on his pad, and fired. Immediately there was a roar, and out came the tiger. The "Old Shikari" fired and hit him, and he went back again into the grass. Again the shot gun was called into requisition, and on the man firing the tiger roared and came straight out, this time meaning mischief. The "Old Shikari" fired at him, and hit him as he came out, but that did not stop him, and rushed close up to the elephant with his mouth wide open, and the "Old Shikari" gave him the contents of the second barrel down the throat. He turned and fell, and C. who had come up, also fired two shots at him, as he dragged himself back into the "nurkul." The elephants behaved splendidly; the one the "Old Shikari" was on stood like a rock when the tiger charged her, and curled her trunk up underneath her chin. When the tiger had dragged himself back into the "nurkul," the "Old Shikari's" rifle jammed and after a great deal of worry, he managed to extract the empty case and reload. Then we all went forward but there was not a sign of the tiger, till one of the small elephants dashed in and out of the "nurkul," and its mahout saw the tiger lying stone dead, with its head in the water. We put a rope put round his throat, and one of the elephants dragged him out of the swamp on to dry land.

NOTES ON VARIETIES OF TROUT.

THE Rainbow Trout (S. irideus) has now achieved a great reputation for stocking purposes. These are handsome hardy fish, running to thickness rather than length; moreover they have the additional merit of being free risers. The Rainbow is at its best in lakes and reservoirs: it has wandering propensities which make it more difficult to establish well in streams.

Some were put into the Llugwy near Bettws-y-coed, but though I fished this river a good deal this spring, and caught a great number of trout, I did not get a single Rainbow among them. Irideus is easily distinguishable from the common brown trout by its red water-line streak, and pink or pale lake lower fins. It has also generally a pink edge to the dorsal fin, and a patch of pink on the gill-cover. The colouring, of course, varies greatly in different individuals. In brightly coloured specimens the horizontal side streaks are broad, extending well above and below the water-line, and are of the most brilliant light crimson, or crimson pink. The patch of colour on the gill cover is vividly bright also. In more soberly hued individuals the side streak is narrower, and duller in tinge.

The Fontinalis has not proved such a success in England as the Rainbow: it is still more given to wandering, and when put into reservoirs has a tendency to die out after doing well for a time. Fontinalis are also more brilliantly coloured than our own native trout .... The throat and lower jaw are white, while the belly is red. There are white edges to the lower fins, but the dorsal fin is brown mottled.

I have seen cross breds between Fontinalis and Irideus: these are known as Zebra trout, on account of the curious wavy yellow markings on their sides. They are mules and do not reproduce.

There is another variety of the Rainbow found in some American rivers, which is known as the Steelhead. This has the red lateral streak, but is much less brilliant than irideus. The peculiar steely sheen of the head and shoulders may possibly be the reason for the name.

The Loch Leven trout (S. levenensis) is another favourite for stocking ponds and lakes.

A number of Loch Levens were once turned into the Gryfe, a small stream near Kilmalcolm in the West of Scotland. I fished this little river for several successive seasons, and used to think I could pick out the levenensis from among the trout in my basket, though life in a stream had considerably altered their colouring. Certainly the size of the trout in the Gryfe was very satisfactory, for half pounders were common, while occasionally one got a fish of three-quarters or over.

For warm climates like the Indian hills, and the north of New Zealand, the Rainbow is by far the best, as it can stand fairly high temperatures.

It is to be hoped that trout will eventually be successful in the Neilgherries .... I used always to think that the Pykara looked a perfect trout stream. There are also brooks out in the direction of the Koondahs, which could, I believe, be made suitable, by damming and deepening the pools.

I have come to the conclusion that the mahseer is not a very satisfactory fish for stocking hill lakes with. All the carps are endowed with too much brain, and if over fished for they become almost uncatchable. I have in former letters pointed out how this extreme intelligence on the part of the fish has caused the present deterioration of the Kumaon lakes. Everyone knows that the Naini Tal lake is now worth nothing from a fisherman's point of view, although full of good mahseer. The Ootacamund lake has been stocked with such numerous varieties of undesirable fish, that it is astounding to hear that trout have been lately caught in it.

I certainly do not think that the lake itself is now worth bothering about. On the Neilgherry plateau there are however numerous places where artificial ponds could be made at small cost. So if once trout could be established there, it would not be difficult to add to the water area suitable for them.

WEBLEY AND SCOTT AUTOMATIC PISTOL.

MESSRS. WEBLEY AND SCOTT of the Premier Gun Works, Weaman Street, Birmingham, and 78, Shaftsbury Avenue, London, have produced a new Automatic pistol for which they claim, and in our opinion justly, several advantages. The weapon shown to us was one of the smaller make—·32 calibre, and was original in appearance being exceedingly light, handy, and well balanced. It consists of five principal parts,—body, barrel, breech slide, magazine and guard; the ease with which the pistol can be taken apart for cleaning purposes is not the least of its advantages. The weapon is a marvel of ingenuity and compactness: the magazine, carrying eight cartridges, is concealed in the stock, which is so placed that the balance is left entirely undisturbed by its gradual depletion. The mechanism whereby the cartridges are raised into the chamber and ejected after firing is most cleverly arranged and seems specially devised to permit rapidity of discharge without risk of jamming The latter action—ejection of spent cartridge—is accomplished by utilising the recoil.

The method of using the pistol is simplicity itself. You place the hammer at cock, lock with the convenient safety bolt which flanks it; withdraw the magazine from the butt, load up with cartridges and replace. The breech slide is then drawn back as far as it will go and sharply released: this movement admits a cartridge into the chamber and cuts it off from the magazine

The recoil ejects the empty case and brings a fresh cartridge into the chamber from the magazine.

The ·32 Webley Automatic shown us weighs 20 oz. with the magazine containing eight cartridges, the length over all being 6¼ inches: the charge is 3½ grains of smokeless powder and 75 grains bullet.

One great advantage possessed by this pistol over the revolver is obvious at first sight: there is absolutely no gas leakage, as inevitably is the case when chamber and barrel are distinct parts, however carefully fitted. Hence the exceptionally great penetration, the bullet at 20 yards range penetrating seven 1 inch pine boards placed one inch apart.

Messrs. Webley and Scott make these pistols for two distinct kinds of ammunition—the Colt ·32 or the Browning 7·65 automatic cartridge, and each pistol is legibly marked to show the ammunition appropriate thereto. The weapon is so convenient and embodies so many improvements on, not only the revolver but other magazine pistols, it cannot fail to win popularity. We learn that the War Office are considering a "Webley Automatic" of somewhat heavier calibre than the pocket pistol shown us. To Mr. Whiting, one of the Directors of Messrs. Webley and Scott, is due credit for this ingenious new pistol.

AN OLD RACING PONY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I shall be grateful if any of your readers can give me information as to whether a country-bred pony named Son o' Mine, once a racing pony, is still alive. If so, he must be an old pony now, and I should be glad to hear of his well-being.

THE SHRINKING OF HORNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Do bison heads shrink? Eighteen years ago I bagged, on one day, two heads which gave a spread, carefully measured, of 40 inches and 39 inches a real red letter day that of which I hope to tell your readers sometime. I had these heads remeasured lately—the measurements now sent are 33½ inches and 38 inches. If this is so it would be interesting to know the present measurement of the Ditmas' headgiven in the "Indian Field" Shikar Book which was also shot about twenty years ago in the Wynaad. I am quite confident of my measurements made at the time, which were, as far as I can remember, taken by Mr. Claude Du Pré Thornton of the I.F.S. and myself within a few days of their being shot.

BURMA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—The experiences of "Hungal" in his pursuit of the wild goose, related in the Indian Field of 5th July were very interesting reading.

But I fear that he speaks from a higher platform than is possible for most of your readers. I, for one, have matched myself against the "silly" goose and so far come off second best for a week, by day and by night. I tramped the very ground where "Hungal" killed his bags, but not once did I even let off my gun at the wily birds, for hours I stood in the freezing water of the burn; for miles I carried the great 8-bore gun; many a time did I start out sworn to be "evens with them" this time. But all in vain. By day I searched for feeding grounds and by night I waited on the line of flight. But the prayed—for gale never came—clear cloudless skies were all I got, in which the geese floated safely by day and against which, by night, nothing was visible, even by the light of a full moon. Once only did I get within shot of the geese and that was when I was reconnoitring without a gun. The only gale that came brought darkness that could be felt, and all I succeeded in doing was to break my head by walking into a gate post! But the memory of that week is one of the happiest I have and with pleasure would I exchange the best jhil in India for the haunts of the Aberlady geese and the molecatchers, but a hundred Indian duck are not to be compared with one English goose. Still hoping to be evens with them.

PHEASANT SHOOTING IN THE HIMALAYAS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—I have read with interest "E. L. K.'s" article on the above subject, but after many seasons' shooting in some of the wildest parts of the Himalayas cannot agree with all he writes.

For instance, there is no reason why in beating for Kalij "the guns should have no say in the matter." Few native shikaris understand beating, and fewer still how to place the guns. I consider beating to be the most sporting way of bringing game birds to bag, and if properly carried out really sporting shots can often be obtained at Kalij, birds slanting down to left and right and occasionally a shot well overhead. Good sport, too, can be had with a well trained dog and only two or three beaters at either Kalij, Koklass or Monaul, but it depends a good deal on the nature of the ground. For Cheer a wide ranging setter who is steady at his point is the best dog. Koklass are in my opinion the fastest fliers of any game birds, getting up their speed with wonderful quickness and generally having a curve in their flight. I never saw the country, however, where a score of Koklass could be shot in an afternoon. A bird that has such a dashing flight should never be potted in a tree. As to the best shot to use I find the following to be the most useful: For chukore and black partridge shooting in September one ounce of No. 6½ or No. 7 shot in a 12-bore cylinder gun. For the other months 1¼ oz. No. 6. or 1⅛ oz. No. 5. the former for choice, for all game birds. Monaul and snow pheasants will not "come down" to any shot unless hit well forward, and this is easier to do with No. 6, owing to the good pattern it gives, than any other size, and No. 6 will break a wing as well as No. 4. No. 3 makes a very bad pattern, there being only half the number of pellets in the charge compared to No. 6. A charge of 1½ oz. No. 4 is suitable for a modified choke 12-bore, but for a cylinder give me No. 6, 270 to the ounce.

GARHWALI.

A BETTING QUERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—Would you kindly give me your opinion re the following bet. About five days before the Derby was run for I wired to a certain bookmaker "100 each way His Eminence," having only that minute seen the latest quotations from home in which the horse mentioned stood at 12—1. I got an answer that 800—100 had been booked and 100—100 place. I immediately wired back that I would not accept the bet as it was not the market price. He wired back the bet must stand, and I wired again that I would not accept it. I wrote to him about it twice and he has not even answered the letters, except to twice send in an account for Rs. 200. Do you think this is a fair bet from perhaps the biggest bookmakers in the country 8 to 1 and even money a place? This bookmaker in his circulars says he acts subject to home market prices which is hardly what he did in this case. In my telegram I did not mention any odds, of course, but simply market price. He had ample warning that I did not wish to lay the bet. I subsequently got market price from another bookmaker.

Saturday, 14th July 1906.

WE give below the results of the racing this afternoon and deal more fully with the items in our sporting notes. The rain held off and though it was intensely steamy there was a full attendance and no end of keenness among the competitors. The course and grounds looked quite at their best and all the details for one's comfort had been carefully studied under the eagle eye of Mr. Jameson, the Secretary to the Club, and to him our thanks are due for the up-to-date appointments apparent on all sides, while for the running of the card in first class style the members and the public are indebted to Mr. J. M. Turner. It was an afternoon of surprises and in almost every race the good thing somehow came undone; this being so the bookmakers—Messrs. Russell Pymm, Atkinson, J. THE TURF.

NEWCASTLE.

HOLDING in regard the very unpromising outlook, fully as many sportsmen paid a visit to High Gosforth Park on Tuesday as could reasonably have been expected under the circumstances. Prior to the hour set for the opening, drenching showers descended, which looked like continuing, and this decidedly unpleasant state of affairs must have deterred many from putting in an appearance. All said and done, the attendance was very little below the average, however, and, fortunately, matters meteorological improved greatly as the day progressed. The state of the race track was surprisingly good, if a shade on the soft side, and this in a measure may have had something to do with the many upheavals of form that occurred. Buckminster was a very easy winner of the North Derby, and Mr. Dalgleish can be voted an extremely lucky man to have purchased the staying son of Isinglass for the small sum of 350 guineas from the same batch as Spearmint was bought from.

NORTH DERBY—Of 1,500sovs. (1,000sovs. to the owner of the winner, 300sovs. to the nominator of the winner, and 100sovs. each to the nominator and owner of the second); for three year olds, 1½ miles.

In marked contrast to the opening day, the conditions were delightfully summerlike and the picturesque Park was seen at its very best. There was also an improved tone given to the racing, the outstanding features being the victory of the North Country bred and trained Outbreak in the Northumberland Plate, the success of Mr. G. Newton's four year old in this time-honoured long-distance contest affording considerable gratification to the large concourse of Northumberland and North Durham pitmen, who not only regard the week in the light of a general holiday, but devote it entirely to racegoing in a true sporting spirit.

Much the best sport of the popular fixture at Gosforth was reserved for the concluding afternoon, when, though the sky was overcast and the weather threatening at periods, it remained fine. Satisfactory fields were provided in each of the events, with the exception of the Park Apprentices' Plate. Backers, as had been their experience on the preceding afternoons, again met with indifferent success, several well-backed favourites failing to realise anticipations.

BISLEY, ENG.

THE SUB-TARGET GUN COMPANY.

Gentlemen,—It affords me pleasure to testify to the value of the Sub-Target Rifle, one of which was set up on the steamer, and was in constant use by the members of the Canadian Rifle Team during the voyage from Montreal to Liverpool and afterwards at the Canadian Headquarters at Bisley, where it was in almost constant use. I consider it of great value in the instruction of recruits in holding and sighting, and also in detecting and correcting the individual errors of eyesight. For practice in trigger-pulling it is of great advantage, even to the experienced marksman.

My daily use of the Machine at Bisley, was, I feel, of advantage to me in my work on the ranges, where I was winner of the King's Prize.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) S. J. PERRY,

BISLEY CAMP, SURREY,
24th July 1905.

THE SUB-TARGET GUN COMPANY.

Gentlemen,—Having used the Sub-Target Rifle frequently during the N.R.A. Meeting at Bisley, just closed, I am pleased to testify to its value in promoting steadiness in holding, sighting and trigger-pulling.

To the recruit it must be especially useful in these respects, as the tell-tale "needle" points out every "fault" of the man. I believe that its general adoption and use by the Army, Navy, Volunteers, Rifle Clubs and in the Public Schools would go a long way towards making a nation of reliable shots for Imperial Defence."

Very truly yours,
(Signed) ALF. J. COMBER,
Gold Medalist, 1905.

THE SCOTTISH CHAMPIONSHIPS.

A great performance by Lieutenant Windham Halswell, the British Quarter mile Champion, was the feature of the Scottish Championship meeting at Powderhall Grounds, Edinburgh, on Saturday. Entered for the four shorter-distance races, Halswell, who began his public career at the corresponding meeting of a year ago, was variously encouraged to attempt the feat of winning at all four distances, and discouraged to attempt so severe an undertaking. With Dr. J. H. A. Ling, an old Scottish cycle racing champion, at his elbow, Halswell was encouraged in the long run to attempt all four distances, and he created great enthusiasm by winning at each, his feat eclipsing the three wins on one afternoon of A. R. Downer (accomplished, however, on three successive years) and of J. McGough. The last named in 1903 won the Half-mile, Mile, and Four-mile, while Downer in 1893-4-5 won the 100 Yards, 200 Yards, and 440 Yards. In addition to these three, Halswell won the Half-mile, a distance Downer never touched. This prevented a comparison with either of Downer's triple wins, and in addition Halswell won his Championships in a manner all his own. In the 100 Yards he got well off his mark, but lost speed over the next fifty yards, only getting into his running with eighty yards covered. Stark, the holder of the title, was leader twenty yards from home, but a terrific burst of speed by Halswell landed him a winner by a couple of feet. He next tackled the Half-mile, which he won from McGough by seven yards, bowling over another title-holder in W. D. Anderson. The 220 Yards Race found Halswell win another surprisingly run race. Halswell, starting second from the inside, was thrown out of his stride by two fellow-competitors jumping in front of him, and he looked hopelessly out of the race on the bend, but, bursting through his men, he came up the straight in grand style, and beat Kitson, who had led from the start, by two yards. This brought him level with Downer and McGough, and in the last race of the day, the Quarter-mile, he made his great record secure. Half-way through he was lying among the last three of six, but his great stride and pace carried him past his men in the winning straight with every ease, and he beat his men by a round dozen of yards, amid such enthusiasm as has not been manifested in Edinburgh since "Downer's days." The other winners were naturally eclipsed, but McGough, winning the Mile, created a record by a fifth successive win, and Stevenson retained his title in the Four-mile. The Three-mile Walk, won in good time, took 14½secs. off a Scottish record, which has stood since the Championship meeting of 1884, and gave a genuine walker, R. Quinn, his third Championship. In one of the muscular events a new-comer, T. Kirkwood, beat Scottish "native" record, while in the other T. R. Nicolson came within a few inches of his own record. The weather, dull and still, favoured the track events, but the heavy, sodden ground was against the jumpers, and, while Milne retained his High Jump title with ease, K. G. Macleod—who was unplaced in the sprint and did not run in the 220 Yards Race—won a very poor broad jump. Nor was Stronach pushed in retaining the Hurdles. It is understood that the greater number of the placed men will run in the English meeting of Saturday week, while Scotland will send a strong team to Ireland on 14th July. Details:—

CYCLING.

N. C. U. CHAMPIONSHIPS.

Over 6,000 spectators witnessed the first stage of the N.C.U. Championship Meeting at the Northumberland County Athletic Grounds at Gosforth, near Newcastle, on Saturday. Delightfully fine weather favoured the proceedings, but an easterly wind was a little troublesome to the competitors. The outstanding events in Saturday's programme were the quarter and one mile national championships. E. Payne, the holder of both events, retained his titles. He showed very fine judgment, and in each case won with something to spare. The standard time for the mile was 2mins. 25secs. and the limit was fixed at 3mins. Only local interest attached to the remaining events. Results:

SWIMMING.

C. M. DANIELS BEATS 100 YARDS RECORD.

At the Richmond Public Baths on Friday evening the club programme included a Southern Counties Water Polo Championship match against Bournemouth S. C., and a match with Cambridge University S. C. Also an attempt on the English 100 yards record by C. M. Daniels, amateur champion of America. The present record stood at 59secs. made by Zottan de Halmay, at Weston-super-Mare, on 14th August 1905. It will be remembered that in an attempt on the 150 yards at the Nautilus Gala last week Daniels succeeded in beating both the 100 and 150 yards, which unfortunately could not be recognised by the Amateur Swimming Association, owing to the fact that they had not been notified of the attempt. On Friday the S. C. A. S. A. official timekeepers were A. St. P. Cuffiin (Barry S. C.), R. W. Jones (Cygnus S. C.), and starter W. H. M. Marx. These returned the time as 57⅖secs. exactly the same time that Daniels put up at the Nautilus Gala. In the match against the Bournemouth Club the home team led at half-time by 2 goals to 1, and, having all the best of the game in the second half, won by 4 to 1. They were not so successful against the 'Varsity, being beaten by 4 goals to 1.

THE INTER-'VARSITY CONTESTS.

Always a popular function, the inter-'Varsity swimming and water polo matches, decided at the Bath Club, Dover-street, Piccadilly, on Monday, attracted a brilliant assembly, which included such notabilities as the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough, Lord Stanley and Lady Alicia Stanley, Lord Elcho, Lady Desborough, Mr. and Mrs. R. Maguire, the Hon'ble Mrs. Guest, the Hon'ble R. Nister, Mr. Lewis Malet, the Hon'ble J. Ward, etc. The Light Blues gained first position in each race, but with Oxford finishing second and third in both the 50 and 100 yards, points were equal until the quarter-mile, which, ending with a balance of points in favour of Cambridge, gave them victory. They also won the team race, but Oxford somewhat retrieved their position by taking the water polo by 2 goals to nil.

Lord Desborough presided, and the officials were:—Referee, W. H. M. Marx (Richmond S.C.); timekeeper and starter, H. E. Webster (Otter S.C.); judges for races, J. E. Raphael (O.U.S.C.) and G. H. Rope (Otter S.C.); goal scorers, J. E. Raphael (O.U.S.C.) and H. L. Beale (O.U.S.C. and Otter S.C.) Details:—

100 YARDS (four lengths).—T. Williams, Peterhouse (Cambridge), 1; H. H. Sutton, Jesus (Oxford), 2; A. H. Harpur, Oriel (Oxford), 3; R. C. Martin, Clare (Cambridge), 4. Williams was leading at the last turn, and won by a foot; a yard second and third. Time—1min. 10⅕secs. Oxford, 5 points; Cambridge, 5 points.

50 YARDS (two lengths).—J. G. Scoular, St. John's (Cambridge), 1; S. Roe, Balliol (Oxford), 2; N. F. Howe-Brown, Oriel (Oxford), 3; R. E. Grice-Hutchinson, Trinity (Cambride), 4. Scoular led all the way, and won by half a yard; Roe beating Howe-Brown by a yard. Time—31secs. Oxford, 5 points; Cambridge, 5 points.

QUARTER-MILE RACE (eighteen lengths, less one yard).—T. Williams, Peterhouse (Cambridge), 1; J. Stanger, Lincoln (Oxford), 2; C. H. Fowler, Trinity (Cambridge), 3; S. Hide, Jesus (Oxford), 4. Williams, the Light Blue, led from the first stroke, and, swimming powerfully, was never in danger. At the half-distance he had a three yards' advantage, and eventually won by five yards; four yards second and third. Time—7mins. 2⅕secs. Cambride, 4 points; Oxford, 6 points.

Cambridge thus won by one event to nil, the 50 and 100 yards races both being drawn.

TEAM RACE (four a side).—Cambridge—K. Ll. Bennett (Clare) R. E. Grice-Hutchinson (Trinity), R. C. Martin (Clare), and J. G. Scoular (St. John's)—beat Oxford—H. H. Sutton (Jesus), A. S. Roe (Balliol), A. H. Harpur (Oriel), and E. G. Morris (Hertford)—by four yards. Bennett put up a three yards' lead for the Cantabs, and this was slightly added to in turn by Grice-Hutchinson and Martin, Scoular eventually winning by the margin stated. Time—2mins. 9⅕secs.

WATER POLO.—Cambridge won the toss, and defended the deep end. Oxford had somewhat the better of matters during the first half, and Morris, the Captain, scoring a couple of good goals, they led by this number to nil at the change of ends. In the second half the Light Blues were mostly in their opponents' water. A splendid long shot hit the bar, and twice the Oxford goalkeeper made fine saves; but nothing further resulted, and Oxford thus won with the interval score unaltered.

OXFORD.—H. F. B. Brett Smith (Corpus), E. H. De Tiel (St. John's), A. H. Harpur (Oriel), E. G. Morris (Hertford), H. Fry (St. John's), H. A. Sutton (Jesus), and N. F. Howe-Brown (Oriel).

CAMBRIDGE.—W. J. D. Smythe (Pembroke), K. Ll. Bennett (Clare), R. E. Grice-Hutchinson (Trinity), K. J. A. Davis (King's), G. T. Lloyd (Clare), J. G. Scoular (St. John's), and J. H. Barr (Christ's).

During the evening there was an exhibition of diving by Messrs. C. A. Barron, P. Forrester, J. Osman Halliday, A. Ladenburgh, A. Ridge-Jones, and P. C. Turbutt, all members of the Bath Club.

MISS KELLERMAN AND THE CHANNEL SWIM.

Miss Kellerman has made special arrangements for training at Broadstairs. She began active work on Wednesday, and intends at the outset to make a good swim from the Ness Buoy—known by a variety of names, not the least of which is "Long Nose." It is situated almost in a line with the North Foreland Lighthouse. Miss Kellerman's training will be in the direction of the Goodwin Sands, keeping a respectful distance from the much-dreaded death-trap. The water during the last week has greatly increased in temperature, and the sea bids fair to continue smooth. Miss Kellerman, however, never goes in fear of cold water. Mal de mer is her greatest dread. Cold water, as was proved in the recent swim in the Danube, disconcerts her but little, and if sickness can be avoided she is safe for fourteen hours. Miss Kellerman is in far better swimming condition than last year—stronger and faster. She is pretty confident of far better results, and will make this effort the greatest of all the many triumphs with which her name is honourably associated. Broadstairs is selected for her preparation in consequence of manifold advantages and freedom from too much public attention. She will not leave for Dover until the end of July, save and excepting to fulfil a brief engagement in Paris, which will not occupy more than a couple of days. Then she immediately returns to Broadstairs.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

THE meet on Saturday last, 7th instant, was at the Club, for the Annual Hunt Breakfast. More than a hundred people were present, including His Excellency the Governor and his staff, Captain Heseltine, the Master of Hounds, the Hon'ble Mr. H. P. Hodgson, Field Master, Captain Dennistoun and Captain the Hon'ble H. C. Vane, Whips, General Sir Charles Egerton, Sir James Thomson, Mr. Von Maurig, and many others. After the breakfast we moved off about 10-30 A.M. to the Golf Club. The Master then crossed the Municipal Stream close to Elmhurst Corner and just above this hounds picked up the line of a jack, who ran below Mills' Covert, over the shoulder, down to the Blackmore Vale, and straight up to Rallywood, through which hounds hustled him, on through Sheffield and up the Krurmund Bridle Road to Andy Plantation, running very fast all the time. Here the Master had to lift them and first trying left handed, he made a wide encircling cast down Parsons' Valley and over by Limerick Shola without success. We then turned off towards Gaylad Shola, but hounds picked up a line short of it, ran over the shoulder below Kunthengulli Village into Hecuba Wood and on by the bottom of Tiger Shola to Leeds Shola, where scent failed the country being very dry. We then drew Monkey Shola, Jackal Shola and over the Downs to New Covert without success; then down through Dairymaid to Denmark Wood, hounds picking up a line in the rough above the Avalanche Road just opposite Cairn Hill. They ran back through Denmark Shola and over as if for Woodstock; then sharp left handed down through Dairymaid, across the swamp, up the hill to Druid and on to Jackal Shola, finally losing their quarry in Baikie Wood. This hunt lasted over an hour and a half; it was a good hunting run. Hounds returned to kennels by 3-30 P.M. The day improved as it went on, but scent was never very good.

On Monday, 9th instant, the place of meeting was the 7th milestone on the new Pykara Road, and there was a fairly large field out. It was a hot morning, but with a good heavy dew the first move was in the direction of Gibbs' Shola, which was blank, as was Briar Shola, but we found a brace of jacks in Wenlock Shola and hounds hunted one, which broke at the bottom of the covert, ran through Wapshare's Hare Shola, past the east side of Bacon Wood, down to the nullah below Briar, along the road and up into the small shola right at the back of Staircase. Here the jack turned back, breaking at the bottom of the covert; then he turned right handed up again and went over the ridge to Herbert Plantation, on through Briar and Wapshare's Hare Shola, back to Wenlock. He then began to run much the same ring as before, hounds hunting him slowly with a failing scent until he was finally lost in the shola at the back of Staircase. This was an excellent run of over an hour.

It was now very hot and the Master drew down the valley below Shaw's Plantation and Hungerford, and up to Porlock Wood. On the top of Newmarket hounds picked up a line and ran fast towards Rallywood, a jack being viewed coming up from the bog almost to meet them. He turned and fled only a few yards in front of the leading hounds, a second jack being viewed into Rallywood and a leash out at the top. Hounds carried the line of one of these into and through Monkey Shola on past the top of Dudley Shola and turned left handed back towards Jackal Shola, when a sudden and very heavy storm of rain coming on scent failed absolutely and nothing more would be made of the line.

This was a hard day on both horses and hounds and it was very hot. Scent was fair early in the day, but was bad later as the day grew hotter.

On Thursday last the hounds met at 7 A.M. at Double Crossing and jack sat basking in the sun below Mills' Covert as we drove along the Pykara Road to the meet. The opportunity was too good to be missed and hounds were soon driving along in his wake over the Downs to Jackal. Perhaps the heat was trying, perhaps he found the road better going, at any rate he hugged it most assiduously. Whilst Hearty, head up, fairly raced up the gutter alongside the road. What a crash of music as hounds marked the place where he left the road. Left handed into Sheffield they dived, while most of us galloped the road alongside the covert. Hounds did not favour us, however, for they turned up the hill through the covert and Mr. Hodgson showed us the direct route to the top of the hill above Andy Plantation.

All on and running hard hounds fairly raced down the hillside by Andy Plantation, crossed the bog at the bottom and rose the opposite hill and all seemed going well as the chorus swelled in Governor's Shola. Hounds divided in the shola, however, exactly where it is difficult to say. Captain Dennistoun held up about six couple on the top side of Governor's Shola and the Master galloped them far over a mile down the Krurmund Path in pursuit of Limerick, who must have been close to the jack all the way down the path. At about the 6th milestone he turned away right handed and hounds hunted down to the Mudunkod Mund. Here Captain Dennistoun viewed him very beat and the Master could hear the main body of the pack running behind us. With a bit of luck the pack might have again become united, but unluckily the main body were running a sambur and it was but a poor hunt over the mountain to Kurumudu Shola, where the Master stopped them.

Hounds returned in two divisions—one lot of six couples with Mr. Hodgson having set up a sambur stag in the Kurumudu Stream, the remainder with Major Glyn having set up a hind higher up the stream. The Master trotted back along the Krurmund Path and viewed a jack going very steadily, having crossed the path. Hounds were soon at him, he sat upon a small covert, but they pushed him out and brought him back in a circle to the Krurmund Path. He was only just in front of them and very beat, and at last Lionel, a tail hound, met him and bowled him over. Who-woop, and stiff as a cratch.

We worked our way back to Rallywood, which proved tenantless, but just below hounds picked up a stale line and hunted slowly to Mills' Covert, where they marked him to ground. The terrier soon had him out and hounds chivied him down to the Municipal Stream and on to the Golf Links, where he sought shelter in one of the artificial earths which Major Quinton, our sporting Golf Secretary, has especially prepared beneath his "browns" for the use of jacks in inclement weather.

Captain Dennistoun now went and fetched 12 couple of fresh hounds from kennels, so that 28⅕ couple awaited jack's début on the Golf Links, the terrier again urging him to make up his mind. What a particularly unpleasant surprise for jack to have Gallant at his brush and 28⅕ couple eager for his blood! They gave him no peace and killed him beneath a rock just by the Municipal Stream. This was an excellent day's sport.

ABLAKI.

Rowing.

NAINI TAL GYMKHANA CLUB REGATTA.

Saturday, 14th July 1906.

THE first event on the card, the scratch fours, was timed for 4-30, but as the rival crews went out, down came the rain in torrents with a high wind of Cheena against which all the races had to be rowed.

Everyone was soaked to the skin at once, so it was decided to leave it to our fair coxes to decide whether to row back, or start the race they unanimously voted for going on.

The following were the entries:—

SCRATCH FOURS.—From Pillar No. 2.

[Inside.]	[Middle.]	[Outside.]
Capt. Tyndale	Capt. Goodfellow	Mr. Naylor
Mr. Ransford	Capt. Matthews	Mr. Cheeke
Capt. Marshall	Mr. Bayley	Mr. Muir
Mr. McNeight	Mr. Gould	Major Bayley
Cox—Miss Lomas	Cox—Miss O'Donnell	Cox—Mrs. Strange.

The outside boat scratched at the last minute having looked on at the practices of "Inside" and "Middle," during the preceding week and their hearts failing them.

So two only came to the line "Inside" being a hot favourite.

The two boats started well and kept together until 50 yards from the winning post when "Inside" collapsed. "Middle" also had enough but managed to just cross the line quarter length ahead of their adversaries.

The race was a really good one to watch, the issue being in doubt from start to finish.

MIXED DOUBLE SCULLS.—From Pillar No. 1.

Heat No. 1.

[Inside.]	[Outside.]
Mrs. Woodyatt	Miss Darvill
Major Woodyatt	Mr. Peake
Cox—Mrs. Reid	Cox—Miss Tyndale

The next event on the card was the first heat of the double sculls which was easily won by the "Inside" boat, the "Outside" boat stroke did not seem very much at home but they struggled gallantly on to the end.

Heat No. 2.

[Inside.]	[Middle.]	[Outside.]
Miss Yeatman	Miss Campbell	Mrs. Du Pre
Capt. Goodfellow	Mr. Ransford	Mr Gould
Cox—Miss O'Donnell	Cox—Miss Lomas	Cox—Mrs. Strange.

The second heat was a really good one, the "Outside" boat being a hot favourite, the "Inside" being fancied next and the "Middle" not at all. There was not half a length between the boats at any time "Inside" won eventually by three feet with "Middle" second and the favourites last.

Final.

[Inside.]	[Outside.]
Mrs. Woodyatt	Miss Yeatman
Major Woodyatt	Capt Goodfellow
Cox—Mrs. Reid	Cox—Miss O'Donnell

This was a great race, no one on the boat house was certain who had won until the judge declared the "Inside" the winners by the narrow margin of two feet.

P. AND O. PADDLING RACE.—From Murray's Landing Stage.

Miss Cruickshank.	Miss Yeatmans. Crew.
Miss E Cruickshank.
Capt. Rice.
Mr. Naylor
Mr. Alexander.
3	4
Mrs. Woodyatt.	Miss Tyndale.
Miss Campbell.	Mrs. Goodfellow.
Mr. Tod.	Major Woodyatt.
Mr. Borton.	Mr. Cheeke.
Mr. Ransford.	Capt. Goodfellow.

This also was a good race, there not being half a length between all four boats, No. 1 boat crossing the line by a very narrow margin.

Just at the finish of this race the storm became so bad that it was decided to abandon the rest of the programme with the exception of the last event.

MEN'S CANOE RACE.—From Murray's Landing Stage. Competitors to paddle standing.

Capt. Hollins.
Mr. Alexander.
Mr. Naylor
Mr. Ransford.

It proved no easy work to paddle standing in the teeth of a 20-knot breeze with the spindrift flying off the lake, and most of the competitors sat down abruptly.

Mr. Naylor won easily, the remaining boats being upset, and their occupants taking to the water which they found far warmer than the rain.

The committee are to be congratulated on having got so far through a programme that it was evident from the first would be impossible to complete on account of the weather.

HENLEY AND AMERICAN OARSMEN.

THE controversy respecting the status of last year's Vesper (Philadelphia) crew, who were beaten for the Grand by Leander, reached its climax at the recent meeting of the Committee of Management of the Henley Royal Regatta, when the whole circumstances, both before and after the race, were reviewed and correspondence on the subject read.

It appears that in March last year the Henley Secretary received a communication, signed by Mr. James Pilkington, president, and Mr. Fred Fortmeyer, Secretary of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen of America, in which the following passage occurred:—

We have carefully considered the amateur standing of each member of the crew, as to whether he is qualified under your, and our own rules, and we unhesitatingly endorse them.

After the regatta in 1905 rumours were current with reference to the amateur status of some of the crew, and an investigation was undertaken by the Executive Committee of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen of America. The result was communicated to the Henley Committee, who, on Saturday, published the following :—

The report of the Committee and the resolutions of the Executive Committee of the N.A.A.O. show :—

1. That the Executive Committee of the N.A.A.O. did not make enquiry into the status of the members of the Vesper crew to the extent which they led the Henley Committee to believe had been done prior to certifying their qualifications.

2. That the cost of sending the Vesper crew to Henley was mainly defrayed by public subscriptions.

3. That all the members of the Vesper crew accepted money.

4. That the sworn declarations of some of the members of the Vesper crew, made before a notary public, were in some particulars untrue.

The Committee of Henley Regatta thereupon unanimously agreed to the following resolutions :—

(a) That no entry of the Vesper Boat Club of Philadelphia, or any entry comprising any members of the club's crew of 1905, be accepted in future.

(b) That the Committee were unaware of a public subscription being raised to defray any of the expenses of the Vesper crew, or the entry would not have been accepted, as such a means of defraying expenses is a disqualification to anyone entering Henley Regatta.

Mr. W. A. L. Fletcher, D.S.O., gave notice that at a future meeting of the Committee he would propose "That it is advisable that in future no entry from the United States of America be accepted."

I. F. A. SHIELD TOURNAMENT.

DALHOUSIE vs. HOWRAH.—These teams met on the Dalhousie ground on Thursday last, the game ending in a draw, each team scoring a goal. A good deal of foul play was witnessed and a player from each side were ordered off the field for fighting, their case being dealt with by the I. F. A. next day. On Friday the game was replayed on the Calcutta ground, when the Dalhousie team won by a goal to nil. Play during the first half was in favour of the Trades Club and after a couple of abortive corners they managed to score, Prike heading into the net, exchanges ruling fairly even till the interval. On resuming play was very level, both goals being visited in turn, but neither teams could score and torrential rain during the concluding stages of the match prevented anything like good play, the game ending as stated in a win for Dalhousie. Teams :—

DALHOUSIE.—McKenzie, goal ; Reynolds and Jackson, backs ; Storey, Stewart, and Weggell, half-backs ; Holly, Woods, Prike, Stimson, and Ball, forwards.

HOWRAH.—Martin, goal ; Jessop and Bennett, backs ; Glover, Simmons, and Hart, half backs ; Smith, Robertson, Apear, Waddel and Kerr, forwards.

Referee.—Mr. F. Lees, Rangers' F. C.

H. L. I. vs. NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—These teams met on the Calcutta ground on Saturday when the game ended in a pointless draw, though the H. L. I. had rather the best of a sticky game. The match was replayed on the Dalhousie ground on Monday before a huge crowd. The H. L. I. passed at the start and obtained a corner. Nothing was gained but shortly after Innes nearly scored. The Dum-Dum team continued to press and Goodings slipped leaving Lees a fine chance. Burns got the ball away, but Lieutenant Malcolm was up and put it into the net. The Fusiliers made great efforts to equalise, but though several shots were put in Lees cleared them all in good style. Lees looked like adding a second goal to the H. L. I. score, but his shot was cleverly put away. On changing ends the H. L. I. attacked and had considerably the best of the game. Innes and Lees were conspicuous with some splendid dribbling. A corner or two and a couple of free kicks gave the Highlanders opportunities of augmenting their the Fusiliers were able to keep them out to the end. The Fort team played hard and occasionally put in some good runs, one of which, just before time was called, enabled Payne to send in a hard shot which Lees just got away. Teams :—

H. L. I.—Lees, goal ; Renton and Howard, backs ; Robertson, D'Arcy, and Munro, half backs ; Lieutenant Malcolm, Collins, Lees, Allen and Innes, forwards.

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—Burns, goal ; Goodings and Watson, backs ; O'Neill Russell, and Firebanks half-backs ; Hone, Daly, Mattison, Payne, and Harris, forwards.

CALEDONIA vs. SOVA BAZAR.—The Caledonians beat Sova Bazar on their own ground on Tuesday by 4—2, and the most satisfactory part of their performance was the fine game played by Pybus on the right wing and Byrne at centre half. The game was not one sided, especially in the second half, and had Mukerjee kept goal during the first ten minutes as he did during the remainder of the game, a different result might have been obtained. During the first ten minutes Caledonia put in 3 goals. Irvine (2) and A. B. Rosser being responsible. S. Ghose scored after a good run down and just before half time a penalty kick was awarded Sova Bazar, which resulted in a second goal being scored. The teams crossed over 3—2 in favour of the homesters and during the second half, so well did the Babus play that the Caledonians were only able to score one more goal, which was obtained by Irvine, who thus scored 3 out of the 4 goals for his side. For Caledonia Pybus throughout played a beautiful game, showing much judgment and accuracy in his centres, and can certainly claim a large share in at least two of the 4 goals, Durant was fast but was not playing his usual game. The halves were good, and Wade and Chandler were quite safe at back. Behrend did all that was asked of him. Sova Bazar went to pieces during the first ten minutes but after that played a plucky and clean game. Mukerjee in goal saved some beautiful shots. Their forwards all played hard and their two wings were very fast.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

JUDGING from the enormous crowds one sees on the maidan nowadays it is only natural to infer that the I.F.A. Challenge Shield Tournament is increasing in popularity and interest every year. The first match of the competition was held on the Customs' ground on the 10th instant when the Customs beat Rangers by a penalty goal to nil. I have heard various accounts of the circumstances which led to the award of this penalty kick by the referee. Some say that it was for a foul against Lawton, but the generally accepted solution is that Lees, the Rangers' half back, handled the ball within the penalty area. Lees himself states that he headed the ball and it trickled down his arm, whereupon the referee gave a penalty kick to the Customs. I was sorry to see the Rangers go out so early in the competition, but I cannot help thinking that the Goddess of Fortune would have favoured them more had they been keen enough to put out a full team. As it happened, only nine men arrived in regulation kit, and Messrs. Calderwood and Margrett were impressed to complete the eleven, both these players being considerably handicapped by the fact that they were not properly shod for football.

The second match of the tournament was played on the Dalhousie ground on the 11th instant when the home team met Howrah United. The incident which occurred in the latter stages of the game has already been fully discussed, as also has the action of the I.F.A. Council in suspending the Howrah man for six months and the Dalhousie man for twelve months. The Dalhousie Club to a man declare that the Howrah man started the "scrap," whilst they are equally convinced on the other side of the river that it was the Dalhousie man who was to blame. However, I believe that no less than six members of the I.F.A. Council saw the incident with their own eyes, so all talk of "prejudice against the Dalhousie Club" or "not being in possession of all the facts of the case" is bosh.

Full evidence was given at the Council Meeting and this evidence was carefully taken down in writing. By Rule 13 of the I.F.A. Rules, a Special Council Meeting, ten to form a quorum, has yet to confirm these sentences and if either of these two players has anything more to say he is quite at liberty to attend the meeting.

Whatever may be said of the comparative severity of the sentences imposed on these two players, there can be nothing but praise for the very prompt way in which the I.F.A. Council have taken the matter up. On previous occasions when similar degradations of the game have occurred it has not been unusual for an almost intolerable period to elapse before the matter was officially taken up. On this occasion, the affair occurred on the 11th and a full Council meeting of twelve members and a Vice-President heard the referee's report on the 12th instant.

The re-play between Howrah and Dalhousie came off on the C.F.C. ground on the 13th instant when Dalhousie just struggled home by a goal to love. The game was spoilt by a heavy downpour of rain, but this did not appear to affect the interest of the thousands of spectators who lined the ropes. Dalhousie now meet Chinsurah Town Club in the second round. Dalhousie will certainly have to go very much stronger if they are anxious to figure in the final stages of this competition. The exhibition of their forward line in the drawn match with Howrah was extremely feeble, whilst Prike could not do anything right. In their present state they should not survive the semi-final round unless they bring off one of those surprising exhibitions similar to that which won the Shield for them last year. In fact I anticipate a "pan-military" match in the final on the 28th.

It was very generally expected that the meeting of the Northumberland Fusiliers with the H.L.I. would produce an infinitely more scientific exhibition than that witnessed on the C.F.C. ground on Saturday. Seldom has such execrable shooting been seen in a Shield tie. The ground was a bit slippery after Friday's rain, but the H.L.I. appeared to have the legs of their opponents whilst their defence was what I predicted it would be, viz., well nigh impregnable. Neither set of forwards was up to the mark and although shots were plentiful the direction was in all cases very much wide of the mark. Towards the end of the game the Fusiliers put the ball through from a free kick, but the goal was not allowed, and the match resulted in a pointless draw.

In the re-play on the Dalhousie ground on Monday, the science of both teams was much below par. The H.L.I. scored the only goal in the first half of the game and won the match by that margin. It struck me as being terribly sticky football and the Fort team palpably overtrained, went to pieces in the second half. During the first half there was really nothing to chose between the two teams, but after the resumption of play the H.L.I. pressed almost continually and Renton invariably returned the ball as soon as the Fusiliers got going. Lieutenant Malcolm for the H.L.I. showed a fine turn of speed and a thorough knowledge of the game.

After long delay, the Walter Locke Cup for the League Championship was presented to the H.L.I. after their match on Saturday.

The Sibpure boys turned up on the C.F.C. ground on Monday for a friendly game with the Calcutta "B" Team, but as only four Calcutta men turned out the game was abandoned. This is not as it should be.

One effect of the Shield Competition has been to run up the price of packing cases to fabulous heights. Judging from the appearance of the ricketty furniture hawked about at these matches, it is a wonder we do not hear of broken legs or other accidents.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL IN CALCUTTA.

CALCUTTA "B" vs. OLYMPIANS.—The Calcutta Club got together a pretty strong "B" team to play Olympians on Tuesday, the 10th instant, on the Calcutta ground. The Olympian forwards showed good form, especially the two outside men Gould and Kingcome, who got in several accurate centres, but half time arrived with no score. On restarting Bagot scored for Olympians and it was only close on time that Macdonald Smith came right through and equalised, and thus for the third consecutive year the match between these two teams ended in a draw. Score : One all.

OLYMPIANS vs. "C" Co., NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—These teams met on the Olympians' ground on Friday last, the 13th instant. The Olympian forwards proved too strong for the military defence and McIntyre scored twice and Bagot once. The Fusiliers were only able to score one goal just on time, while it was raining heavily, and even then one of the Olympian backs helped the ball into the net.

Score : Olympians, three ; "C" Company, one.

OLYMPIANS vs. BAND, NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.—This match was played on the Olympian ground on Tuesday, the 17th instant. The Band scored soon after the kick off, and although the game was evenly and pleasantly contested Olymyians failed to score, and the Band put through a second close on time. Result : Band two, Olympians nil.

CLEEK COMPETITION.—The annual nine holes cleek competition, which finally winds up the season, was held over the Maidan links on Friday and Saturday last, and as so often furnished some surprising scores. Mr. Carr, a limit handicap man, proved the winner with a phenomenal round of 44—7=37 nett, or three strokes less than a scratch player is supposed to take to the nine holes when playing with all his clubs. Mr. Guise, whose handicap has recently been reduced, and Mr. Melrose, who missed quite an easy putt for 40 at the last hole, also returned excellent cards. The course was in first-class order, the ties being very much better owing to the scanty rainfall than is usual at this time of year, and a very large number of members took part in the competition, the best returns made being as follows :—

NAINI TAL GYMKHANA.

THE fourth gymkhana meeting took place in weather that was beautiful which almost everyone in Naini Tal was present.

The regatta on Thursday was rather a fiasco as it had already been once postponed and at 4 P.M. it was pouring.

None of the scratch four crews turned up in full strength, so the boats had to be redrawn at the last minute, some events fell through altogether, and the talent was so poor that on second thoughts I tore up the account I had written for your columns.

Yesterday's proceedings began with the POLO BALL AND HOCKEY STICK RACE.—Gentleman to hit a polo ball round two posts and back to starting point through a goal.

There were only two who had a look in in this race from the start, Mr. Toulmin and Captain Goodfellow getting right away from the rest of the field and finishing half the length of the ground ahead, Captain Goodfellow eventually winning, Mr. Toulmin being a good second.

GURKHA RACE.—There was a field of about fifty entered for this event, the course being the usual "khud" course from the flats right away up to a flag placed on the upper mall, round it and finish in front of the pavilion. I tried to find out the winner's name, but could not find corresponding letters to fix it on paper.

TRAINING TEST RACE.—Trot from starting point to first post, rein back from first to second post, passage from second to third post and gallop to winning post.

The judges set themselves a hard task when they elected to judge a field of eight perform ing haute école as above, all together it would have been far more satisfactory to have run the contest in heats or singly. Captain Goodfellow was first past the post, followed by Mr. Gould and Captain Rice.

Captain Goodfellow and Mr. Gould were disqualified for not passaging properly, the prize going to Captain Rice.

MUSICAL WAND.—Ladies to trot or canter, as indicated by the music played by band, outside a circle of wands when the band stops they will halt by a wand, failing to do so disqualifies.

In the end Miss Impey and Miss Yeatman were left in; the band stopping for the last time left Miss Impey the master of the situation.

NOT AT HOME BOX RACE.—Ladies will gallop round a marked course and drop their cards into not at home boxes. The boxes will be on the ground and ladies are to dismount, put their cards in the boxes and mount, without assistance.

Mrs. Lawrence won this event with the greatest ease, but was (for reasons best known to the judges) disqualified and the prize was awarded to Miss Murray.

GOAT HERDING.—Ladies on foot, gentlemen mounted, riding canes and parasols only to be used.

The couple who pen the goat in the shortest time win.

This entailed harder work on the ladies than on the gentlemen. The pen consisted of flimsy structure of bamboos with strings and red flags.

Our Honorary Secretary got inside to see that there were no infringements of the rules, and then, to quote a well-known author, "a strange thing happened," no sooner had the goats been loosed than with one accord they made for our Honorary Secretary, nothing could stop them; they dashed through the gate, some in their anxety to get inside leaped the sides, and then rubbed against him showing symptoms of delight.

There have been several attempts made to explain this extraordinary occurrence, but no satisfactory solution has yet been arrived at, and it is as much as one's life is worth to ask our Honorary Secretary.

Miss Impey and Captain Rice won this event by a fraction of a second, all the others being close up.

BAND RACE.—Twelve lady competitors turned out for this. A very stout bandsman won hands down with "God save the King." Miss Cruickshank being the lucky lady.

TELEGRAM STAKES.—Gentleman to gallop to lady with a telegram form on which is a skeleton message; message to be completed by lady and handed to gentleman who will gallop with it to winning post.

Mrs. Bannerman was the only lady who was able to complete the message. Mrs. Henry very kindly gave away the prizes, and so ended a most pleasant afternoon. Advice is usually unpalatable, but I feel sure that Naini Tal Gymkhanas would be more popular if there was less disqualification of winners, who have erred, if they have at all: by reading the rules of the various competitions correctly, which are subsequently altered by the judges without due warning being given.

There was not a single event in yesterday's programme which did not leave a loophole for an objection. And a great deal of unnecessary ill feeling would have been saved by a little more time spent over the framing of the rules or failing that by their more liberal interpretation.

And draws.

John Barry was Mayor of Cromwell, New Zealand, when, in the prosperous times of gold-digging, it was the headquarters of the diggers. He was not a reputable person, but he was muscular, and kept the turbulent population in order. On one occasion he applied to the council for a fortnight's leave of absence that he might visit Dunedin. It was granted. Barry overstayed his leave, and the Council, being offended, thereby passed a vote of censure on him. On arriving home, Barry attended the next meeting of the Council, over which he presided. The minutes of the previous meeting were read, in which occurred the entry "A vote of censure was passed on the Mayor for overstaying his leave." "Who proposed that vote?" demanded the Mayor. "I did," said a Councillor standing up. John stepped from the president's chair, walked up to the member and saying "Then take that!" felled him to the ground. "Who seconded the resolution," asked the Mayor, resuming his seat in the chair. No one answered. "Then," said the Mayor, as there was no seconder "I need hardly say that it's informal. Mr. Clerk scratch it off the minutes."

Superstitious backers had the tip direct for the Grand National of 1871. As a train containing racegoers reached Liverpool Station, the day previous to the big race, a lamb jumped from one of the cattle trucks, and made his way down the line at full speed. Of course, such a novel spectacle attracted much attention, and believers in omens decided to back The Lamb, who had won the race three years previously with 12lbs. less than he was then asked to carry. In the hands of "Mr. Thomas," Lord Poulett's horse gained his second victory as decisively as the first.

AN INTERNATIONAL HORSE SHOW IN LONDON.

THE scheme reported by home papers to organise next year in London an International Horse Show which shall offer prizes for harness horses, hacks, hunters and ponies is interesting in more ways than one. It is interesting as evidence of the fact that horse-breeders in England have awakened to the truth that there is something to be learned from the horse-breeders of other countries. Thirty years ago all but a few travelled horsemasters would have flouted the idea that "foreigners" could teach the Briton anything at all about horseflesh: but the present generation has had the truth so resolutely pressed home upon it, has, through trusted representatives such as Sir Walter Gilbey, the Righ Hon. Frederick Wrench and some others, been convinced that what is known in Great Britain about horse-breeding is not the end of knowledge; and that we may, if we will, obtain some valuable hints from the breeders of the Continent. It would be strange if the horsemasters of Normandy, Prussia and Austro-Hungary were unable to tell us something about the business we have, since Saxon times, regarded as the monopoly of Britishers. Continental nations for more than a century have been forced to make horse-breeding a national concern, horses being an indispensable item in the primary duty of self-defence. Hence the establishment of enormous public breeding studs which have been, and still are, replenished regardless of cost with the best blood of the time—drawn, as we may congratulate ourselves, principally from England and Ireland. Hence too the progress that European horsemasters have made in the science of horse-breeding and their ability to offer us object lessons in the shape of horses evolved for a definite purpose. This progress and its fruit are the results of continuity of policy for long periods of years. We can point to nothing like it in our own country; such continuity is wholly incompatible with the system, or want of system, prevailing at home. There are brilliant examples of studs, world famous almost, built up by single private individuals; but the span of any one life is not long enough to evolve permanent and lasting results in horse-breeding. Fifty years of single minded endeavour to arrive at a predetermined result does not suffice; years must be lost in experiment, in the correction of error, in the elimination of the bad or indifferent results which have ensued from an error in crossing. And even if the predetermined type of horse is successfully evolved after years of careful pairing and crossing, the successful breeder closes his career with the knowledge that he has done no more than lay a foundation upon which others may or may not build. It goes without saying that many generations are necessary to establish any stamp of horse as a breed: constancy of characteristic, inherent power to bestow on progeny the character which has been produced, only comes after many generations when those characteristics are become fixed or as the breeders term has it "constant." It is in this vital matter that the State studmasters of the Continent have the advantage over us. The studs exist for a definite purpose; the policy of one chief superintendent, or whatever he may be called, is the policy of his predecessor and will be that of his successor.

Thus the continuity of aim and object which has enabled the Continental studmasters to do what we, lacking such continuity of purpose in organised form, have failed to do. We except from this rule of course the thoroughbred; the Turf as an influence stands alone in directing the destinies of the pure breed, and the Turf has, in a sense, done for the thoroughbred what continuous and organised stud work has done for other races of horses on the Continent.

The projected International Horse Show could not fail to offer home breeders some instructive object lessons. America, Canada, France, Germany, Holland, and Belgium are the countries named as those whom it is more especially intended to invite as exhibitors. We trust that the countries are named merely as evidence of catholicity of the scope of the exhibition. The French breeders can show the Briton what can be done by judicious crossings of blood in the shape of carriage horses. The Norman farmer for generations has been an ardent lover of the trotting horses; the French Haras authorities, with an eye upon the requirements of the army, have for generations nursed the trotting blood; whence the evolution of perhaps the finest harness horses in the world, built up on foundations of Hackney, hunter and thoroughbred blood—most of it obtained in the first case from England. These Norman horses are now firmly established as a breed; the descent of the progeny of Norman stallion and Norman mare can be recognised at a glance; the Norman harness horse can be depended on to perpetuate the blend of qualities, the conformation, the character which have been, to use a clumsy phrase, collected to make him: and inasmuch as there is no animal which fetches a higher price at Tattersalls than the first class carriage horse; and inasmuch as the Norman horse is the product of English strains of blood wisely and carefully blended, the interest of such an exhibit to the home breeder is sufficiently obvious. The "man in the street" will not take in the lesson; and he may be pardoned for his failure, since he has for years been accustomed to regard as English the horses he sees in well turned out carriages at home. The fact that by far the most of these are imported is unknown to him and would perhaps be indignantly denied by his patriotic soul were the truth suggested to him. Germany can give us a useful object lesson in the production of harness horses of a more powerful stamp: the Oldenburg and Hanoverian coach horses have been famed for centuries; these breeds, the Oldenburg at all events, owe much to blood obtained from Yorkshire, but again the use made of it demonstrates the value of results procured by judicious crossing and continuity of purpose. It may be doubted whether the low countries can offer us much in the shape of object lessons; England was importing "Great Horses" from these regions nearly a thousand years ago, and the Flemish horses have played no small part in building up the Shire and other heavy draught breeds. Perhaps the most interesting examples of a carefully "made" breed are those which the Hungarian State studs might send to the exhibition. Horse-breeding on a large scale has been carried on in Hungary for a very long time; at Mezohëgyes there are some 650 brood mares of various strains belonging to the State; this is the largest of the four public breeding farms; and at these are stationed a proportion of the public stallions, nearly 3,000 in number, owned by the State. The great interest, to Britons, of the Hungarian horse lies in the fact that it has been evolved for the saddle as carefully and successfuly as the Norman horse has been evolved for harness. Certain "families" of horses for the saddle have been recognised as constant breeders for thirty years and more, and these form the foundation stock of a type of saddle horse which can be relied on to breed true inter se., it would be too much to expect that so recently established a type should possess the impressive power of a breed of high antiquity, but in course of time we need not doubt the Hungarian saddle horse may be used upon a mare of other strain with the certainty that the sire will bequeath his character to the offspring: even as the Arab inevitably impresses his offspring from any mare with his own distinctive qualities and characteristics. Regarding as we do every saddle horse as a potential hunter, the Hungarian product must appeal to the sporting instincts of the Briton; and as this type has been built up on the lines of the hunter, exhibits from the stables of the Hungarian State studs will be among the most interesting in the exhibition. At the Great Paris Show of 1900 nearly forty different breeds of horse from nearly every part of Europe were to be seen. The opportunities for comparison at such an exhibition are unrivalled, and they are, unfortunately but naturally, rarely offered to the horse lover of any country. We hope that the executive of the projected London show will be well supported and that the Governments of Europe will lend the assistance they lent the Paris show.

One sees and hears some funny things at soldiers' meetings now and again. The other day at a military steeplechase gathering in the south of England one amateur declared no less than 2st. 10lbs. overweight, and that, too, for an animal with the awfully suggestive name of Gordelpus! He crawled in with the crowd.

Miss Flirti was decidedly pretty, and not averse to admiration from male friends. A little while ago she called upon some acquaintances who owned a rather handsome brother.

"We are just recovering from influenza,' explained one of the ladies, after their exclamations of delight had somewhat subsided, "and, of course, must not kiss you."

"How sad!" sympathetically commented the visitor. Then turning to the sufferers' brother—"I hope you haven't got influenza, Mr. Fairmash?"

Miss Flirti afterwards wondered why she wasn't asked to stay and have some tea.

Sporting Notes.

A LIST of the horses in training for the coming Monsoon Races will be found in our Turf columns. The list does not so far include any of Mr. J. D. Scott's horses, as we have not yet heard any really definite news as to whether he is coming down or not. This information will be available when we see the list of entries for the first day of the Monsoon Races. So far the list is comprised of no less than 117 horses and ponies and of these as many as 57 are jumpers, which being just under half, is indeed a very liberal percentage and in itself straightaway justifies the large number of jump races. If an owner is willing to risk his horses over jumps, and if they have to learn to jump, the risk is considerable, it is only right that he should be given plenty of opportunity of paying for the value of his animal.

All those in charge of horses for the ensuing campaign are now hard at work, as the first Monsoon Meeting is close upon us, the entries themselves closing on Monday evening. The training track is open three days a week for fast work, weather permitting, from 5-30 A.M. to 7-30 A.M., though it was not opened on Tuesday as the going was considered to be too heavy. The Stewards are exacting a stricter régime this year and have issued notices that all gentlemen and professional trainers and jockeys, training or riding horses on the course must get written licenses or permission before doing so. Another innovation is that a fee of Rs. 20 will be levied on each horse which may have made use of the training track and does not start in any race during the Monsoon Meetings.

Wishart, it has now been decided, is not coming up for the Monsoons, but is to remain in Bangalore and then go to Poona, though a small detachment arrived from him on Saturday after spending the best part of the week in the train.

Four horses came up from Bangalore, arriving on Saturday. Winklet and Odin belonging to Mr. Paris, and Nevermore and Dalbeattie for Mr. "Holmes." Dalbeattie, however, has never got over his hip trouble and is to be broken to harness. Odin arrived lame, the result of the journey. It is not certain whether Winklet is to race in the Monsoon Meetings, but Nevermore will probably be running in the Amateur Hurdle Races.

Leda and Bouquet are also expected from Bangalore during the week. They have changed hands and are now the property of Mr. B. B. This gentleman, it will be remembered, was so unlucky as to lose Second Thought when schooling over hurdles at the end of the cold weather, the pony falling and breaking its neck.

With such a large number of jump horses in the place, the racecourse is very merry on jumping mornings, Tuesdays and Saturdays, and also on Thursdays, and numerous schools are to be observed.

The schooling on Saturday morning was full of incident and several fell by the wayside. The first school we saw consisted of Rustler (Smallman) and Hoop Iron (Spillain) accompanied by Shelldrake on Bareilly. Accompanied is scarcely the right word in this instance, as Bareilly only accompanied the other two about twenty yards when feeling a touch of the spurs he proceeded straightway to buck Shelldrake off. Misfortune, however, pursued the other two and at the third hurdle Rustler pecked very badly but did not actually come down. The jolt, however, injured Smallman, so that he could not continue the school and had to pull up, so Hoop Iron had to go his way on his own.

Two more went out shortly after from Mr. Galstaun's stables, Pure Gold (Spillain) and Harold (Northmore). Shelldrake took Bareilly out again with these and this time he behaved himself all right. It was the Spillain's turn to be downed. At the second hurdle Pure Gold got mixed up with the jump and came down heavily, Spillain getting a nasty fall which laid him out temporarily. He was, however, in the saddle again on Monday.

Bucentaur went a school early on Tuesday morning with another whose name escapes us, both performing well. After them Scotch Thistle (Shelldrake) and Loch Spey (Smallman) went through. Scotch Thistle blundered very badly at the second flight and came right down on his knees. Shelldrake, however, sat him and pulled him on to his feet again, but in so doing strained the muscles of his shoulder which had not thoroughly recovered from his fall on Saturday. Fairy (Mr. Antram) and Lady Gold (Dr. Hossack) were the next couple to go, preparatory for the hurdle race at the Tollygunge Gymkhana on Saturday next. They were both fencing in good style.

The last school of the morning was from Mr. Pugh's stable and consisted of a quartette, Pope (Mr. Pugh), Watchfire (Shelldrake), Gleam (Mr. Evers) and Cymmerau (Mr. Barrow); they all started together from the Big Tree, but Gleam was pulled up after the second flight and Cymmerau after the third, Watchfire and Pope continuing over the fourth. Pope was fencing as faultlessly as ever and Watchfire showed an improvement in his previous efforts, but still requires another school or two. This stable also has Ynyslas, Wivenhoe and Brown Moor. They are all jumpers, the only one confined to the flat from this stable being Manon, who returned a week ago from Darjeeling. Mistlebird is still in Darjeeling, but is expected down shortly.

To run shortly through the other strings which intend taking part in the Monsoon Meetings and which we have not already alluded to, Mr. Galstaun's is, of course, the largest; he has as many as five jumpers now in his stables, four horses and a pony, namely, Pure Gold, Hoop Iron, both big winners in the flat in their day, and Rustler, a winner over Tollygunge last January. Harold is also of this string. He is a winner over hurdles, having won one of the Monsoon hurdle races last year. Nor does he confine his efforts to hurdles, as he ran second to Don Q. in the Tollygunge Cup at Tollygunge in the cold weather. He has Whitefoot for the open pony hurdle races, and among his flat racers he has here the ever green Springlock, who fairly revels in the mud, Riverside, Defendant, Hum Drum and Hande'lian, and the new English three-year-old Craigendarrie; Gowan, Sylpho and Ping Pong for the pony flat races, but Circus Girl is still in Darjeeling and is not coming down.

Mr. Dudley, who is training for Mr. A. N. Dass, has Trencherman, Clynder, Miss Trenton, Carnival, Lollipop, Meta and Rezia, all bar the last will be confined to the flat, and only the first two are of any class. He also has his own mare, Leading Lady, and Mr. Woodhouse's Moonray, the latter will go for any amateur hurdle race there may be for ponies, while Leading Lady should be more at home on the flat, where she has a fair turn of speed, as she looks a bit light for hurdling.

Norton is training for Mr. Rodocanachi and Mr. Deakin, besides having one or two of his own. They comprise Silver, Manloch, Trentside Lad, Small Scotch, Trilby, who will be running in the amateur hurdle races, and that smart English mare Downland, who like so many English horses is having trouble over sweating, and Don Q, the winner of this year's Tollygunge Plate. The pony contingent of this stable are Black Patch, Hint and the hurdler Shylock.

W. Smith, who has his stables out at Ballygunge, has a miscellaneous lot, of which Bucentaur and the pony Kalyani are the only jumpers. The remainder are Loyal, Belle Cole, Charleston, Her Majesty, Nirvana, and The Chump.

Smallman's lot are nearly all jumpers—Loch Spey, Scotch Thistle, Hello, Bengali and Discussion for the pony events. You Dare is also among this lot.

Piper trains for Mr. Grosser and has that nice little horse Cyril and Merrie Elsie, but it is said that he is not going to start either of these at the Monsoon meets, but will keep them for the cold weather. The others are Bassini, who is now known as Swindle, Fotheringay, and Narwona, who was imported by Billy Griffiths, but has not raced in India yet, though he ran unsuccessfully a few times in Australia.

There are a number of small strings besides professional and otherwise. Walker has Mynangore, Reinzette, Queen of Gems and Batanzas, while Ted Kerr has Parole and Esperanto. Bloss has Ivanhoe II, Vanity Fair and Miss Beryl, and is also working Fusilier. Lucifer, Riccaton and Devils' Limit are each trained by their respective owners and the same remark really applies to many of the amateur horses.

Mr. Evers has charge of Sauce, Cain, Jorrocks and Branga, and Mr. Cowper Metalwing, Jacinth and Woodbine. Mr. Holmes is working his own Nevermore and Energy and Mrs. Carter's Cyclone.

Psalm, which was leased by Mr. Galstaun, has been returned to Mr. O. M. D. Bell, who may start that failure Bellevoye once or twice.

Heywood arrived a week ago from Poona with a couple of jumpers of Mr. Austen's, King Pin and Bareilly. They are both new horses and are intended for the open hurdle race. He also brought with him Solace and a pony called Lady Min.

Hello also arrived during the week from Behar. A certain local sportsmen had intended purchasing him, but he arrived in such a rusty and ragged condition that the deal is off.

Mr. G. B. Par's has been appointed an acting Steward during the absence of Mr. J. G. Dickson.

Each one of the Tollygunge Club Gymkhana race meetings seems to eclipse its predecessor, and the fourth, coming as it does just a week before the opening of the Monsoon meetings, fairly lays claim to this, having simply bumper entries all round, and we should be afforded a first-class afternoon's sport. Even the hurdle race has as many as eleven entries, and they are of a better class than has run over jumps at these meetings so far this year, including as they do Sauce, Cain and Sylvia and Leading Lady. The hurdle race unfortunately clashes with the July Stakes, in which no less than six of the nine entries are entered in the hurdle race, the only three single entries being Nevermore, the winner of this year's Paperchase Cup, and Sal and Molly.

The Russa Stakes, which is the open 5-furlong race, has no less than thirteen entries, several owners doubtless being glad to give their horses a dress rehearsal. Devils' Limit, Thundercloud and Harold appear the best of this lot.

The open pony race, the Club Vase, has as many as fourteen entries, the best of them being Whitefoot, Energy, Ping Pong and Discussion. There are fourteen also in the other pony race, four of them being dual entries.

The Novice Stakes has twelve would-be competitors, of which Lord Chippendale is probably the best, with Great Hart the best known of the remainder. Agamemnon nas strained his shoulder and will not start.

Mr. Curtis Heywood arrived by the mail in time to see his game mare Sylvia run another Monsoon season over hurdles. She is quite a landmark among the hunters.

The Quetta Dog Show has been fixed for the 15th September. Dog owners who are unable to travel may send their exhibits, the Honorary Secretary undertaking to have them met at the railway station and to look after them while they are in Quetta.

The Bangalore Horse and Dog Show will be held on the 17th and 18th proximo. An excellent prospectus has been issued. There are twenty-three classes in all for horses and ponies, among them being competitions for heavy and light weight hunters, cavalry and artillery horses, hired chargers, infantry chargers, hacks, thoroughbreds, jumping competitions, for the best turnout driven by a lady, for the best four-in-hand team, etc. Mr. A. Swifte of the Carabiniers is Honorary Secretary, Mr. Hamilton, Essex Regiment, taking charge of the dog section.

Continued wet weather and the consequent unplayable state of the ground has caused the Secunderabad Polo Tournament, which was to have begun on the 16th, to be put off daily. The opening game was played on Tuesday when the 20th Deccan Horse beat the Royal Artillery team by 4 goals and 7 subs. to one goal and 2 subs.

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—The third of the mud sports came off on Wednesday, being favoured with a really fine afternoon until nearing the end when rain sent everyone to the tents and the two scurries had to be abandoned. Mr. F. R. Hill won the tent, pegging with Mr. E. Ralli second-while Mr. J. T. Parkin was easily best in the jumping.

The Hidden Treasure Stakes fell to Mr. G. D. Rice and Mrs. Wilson, Captain Markie and Miss Tudball being second, and Mr. J. Bruce and Miss Andrews third. Mr. Henderson Gray and Mrs. McCausland won the Affinity Race, the latter carrying a tennis ball on a racquet, and the meeting ended prematurely with Mr. F. R. Hill and E. C. Griffin winning the Lloyd Lindsay race, Mr. Beale and Mr. Shanks being second.

Our Bangalore correspondent writes :—At present all sporting operations are at a standstill owing to heavy rain. However there are a few words of gossip which may interest some of your readers. The Carabiniers will send a polo team to Poona and it will be a galloping team, but scarcely so strong as the lot which won so handsomely in the late tournament in Bangalore. Mr. Kennard has gone to England, and his place at No. 1 will be taken by Mr. Webster. Captain Heseltine cannot get away from Ootacamund, and his place at back will be taken by Colonel Leader. The latter is a steady back and an experienced player whilst Mr. Webster will ride for his life and has excellent ponies. But Mr. Kennard at No. 1 and Captain Godfrey Heseltine at back are hefty players to replace. Nevertheless "the Carbs" will take beating with Captain Cole and Captain Watson as the other two and needless to say they will take all the good wishes of Bangalore with them to Poona. Why cannot a regiment like the 6th Dragoon Guards stay here for ever?

We are glad to learn that His Excellency the Right Honourable the Earl of Minto, Viceroy and Governor-General of India, has been pleased to appoint Messrs. James Murray & Co., the well-known chronometer and watch makers of this city, as his watch and clock makers.

We reproduce from an Irish paper an interesting article on the origin of polo. The writer is Mr. James Davidson who will be remembered by the older generation of Assam and Bengal sportsmen as one of the pioneers of tea and polo, or "hockey" as it used to be called in those remote days. Mr. Davidson, although almost patriarchal in years, we are pleased to hear, keeps his end up wonderfully and is a regular follower of the County Down Staghounds: there are few better judges of a horse and few who can even now beat him over a country. Here's more power to him.

Athletic Notes.

THE boxing match for the Championship of Calcutta between Fisher and Gunner Vickers will take place at the Theatre Royal to-morrow night. There will be three preliminary contests between Pickering and Walker, Hood and Evans, "Dixie Kid" and Johnston.

The Madras Hockey Tournament opened on Monday evening. Two matches were played: in the first the Cheshires beat the 40th Brigade R. F. A. from St. Thomas' Mount by three goals to nil, while in the other the Suffolk Regiment, the holders of the Cup, beat the Madras Volunteer Guards by two goals to one. The Pioneer team has scratched.

A remarkable performance was put up at the Crystal Palace on the 3rd instant. A. Marshal, the young Colonial playing for London County vs. Croydon, scored 300 runs which included three sixes and forty-one fours. He also took five wickets for 60 runs. His score is a record for the ground.

In our English Sporting letter this week will be found full details of Henley regatta, which was another brilliant success. The entries were the largest on record and some excellent form was shown. It was disappointing that Leander was unable to put in an eight to defend their title in the Grand Challenge. The Argonaut crew were much fancied, but they were beaten by Trinity Hall, who turn in succumbed to the Belgians in the final. The Diamond Sculls attracted thirteen competitors, five of whom were foreign entries. Everyone was delighted to see Blackstaffe win after his many unsuccessful attempts for the coveted trophy. The Cambridge crews were in good form and no fewer than eight appeared in the finals of the races. Leander's win in the Stewards' Challenge Cup and First Trinity's victory in the Ladies' Challenge Plate were expected, while in the Visitors' Cup Third Trinity justified expectations by defeating Jesus College. The Wyfold Cup was won by London R. C. who beat Thames in the final. The Silver Goblets brought out some first class pairs and Third Trinity and London were expected to meet in the final: the former disposed of Leander after a splendid race and London finished ahead of the Belgians. But a foul early in the race was given against them and the Sport Nautique appeared in the finals, Third Trinity beating them very easily. The light blues scored their fourth success when Christ's College beat First Trinity in the final for the Thames Cup.

"The accident to Teste proved more serious than was at first supposed. His thigh was broken and his hand bared to the bone. He also suffered greatly from internal pain. . . . Sisz eventually won in 12hrs. 14mins. 7secs. He rode the whole of the last round with a broken spring." Perhaps those two extracts from reports sent to London newspapers sufficiently well sum up the results of the Grand Prix Motor Race over the Sarthe circuit, with headquarters at Le Mans. In England, fortunately, public taste has decided against motor racing. Everything that it is necessary to know about motors capable of travelling eighty miles an hour over ordinary roads has already been found out, for the plain reason that ordinary roads in England were never built, and never will be built, for racing motor-cars. Englishmen do not see that any good object is gained by this senseless racing. It is already known that, given certain conditions, a 100 horse-power motor-car can travel, say, 50 miles in a certain time. What more is there left to be found out? How much faster it is possible to go? But although human ideas as to the pleasure of travelling at more than express speed change, the human body does not change. It cannot be made to stand either driving or being driven in a motor-car at any rate greater than a certain speed which allows an ordinary man to see, to hear, and above all, to think. That is the broad and simple reason which makes these racing trials, which result year after year in the maiming of drivers and the smashing of good cars, supremely ridiculous and unnecessary.

Votaries of lawn tennis have indeed been having their fill of their favourite pastime at home this summer, and the Championship meeting at Wimbledon attracted enormous crowds, the lawn tennis girl with her fan being well in it for once with her slightly patronising Henley sister and her sunshade. Among the fairer portion of the spectators F. L. Riseley, A. F. Wilding, the young New Zealand and Cambridge University crack, and of course H. L. Doherty, were the idols of the hour, while the success of Miss Douglas in the Ladies' Championship against the American Miss Sutton, who beat her last year, was also immensely popular. It was universally admitted to be the hardest of luck on the Americans that their champion, Beals Wright, who cut his hand so severely just before leaving home, had not recovered sufficiently to play, but his presence in their team would hardly have turned the scale against the very powerful English quartette, the brothers Doherty, F. L. Riseley and S. H. Smith.

In the Championship itself F. L. Riseley, by most brilliant play, won his way into the challenge round against H. L. Doherty, but the latter's generalship once more pulled him through, and gave him his fifth successive victory in the big event, so that next year he will have a chance of rivalling W. Renshaw's record of six consecutive wins. Riseley and S. H. Smith, however, owing to apparently superlative tennis on the former's part, had the satisfaction of beating the Doherty brothers in the challenge round of the Doubles Championship, a feat which they also accomplished in 1902. But there is a well justified and growing opinion that challenge rounds are a mistake, and that the holders of Championships should take their share of the burden and heat of the day, and play right through the tournament. Suppose, to take an example from the Amateur Golf Championship this year, Mr. Robb, after winning at Hoylake, had been called upon to play Mr. Barry for the title. The odds would be all against the challenger, and so it is in lawn tennis, though perhaps to a less degree. Even lawn tennis champions may possibly be knocked out in the preliminary rounds, and are, at any rate, liable to have their nerve, skill and endurance pretty severely tested on their way through a big tournament.

Writing of golf, it is satisfactory to note that the Championship of France has been won by a Frenchman, and the best golfer whom France has yet produced, to wit, Arnand Massey of Biarritz, who was sixth this year and fifth twelve months ago in the British Championship. Not inappropriately too a Jersey man, Tom Vardon, was placed second, and Edward Ray, another Channel Islander, came out third. Golf Illustrated recently had some interesting statistics showing the unrivalled predominance in the eleven Championships in which they have competed together, of the great Triumvirate, Harry Vardon, Braid and Taylor. Taken whether by strokes or placings Vardon leads, with Taylor within ten places and thirty strokes of him lying third. Alec Herd, generally regarded as the next player in order of merit and an easy fourth on the list, is seventy places and 100 strokes behind. Prodigious!

This little paragraph is a panegyric on Tom Hayward. The mere fact that he scored 208 runs for Surrey against Warwickshire at the Oval on Thursday, 5th July, and thereby registered his tenth three-figure innings and an aggregate of 2,000 runs for the season is much, especially to the average-mongers, but the circumstances and style in which he has made his runs this year, and the pace at which he has scored are infinitely more to all who have cricket as the national game at heart. In the match under notice Hayward helped himself to 24 runs, 6 4 4 4 6 off five consecutive balls, and it goes without saying that with a little more cricket like his, and that shown at Lord's on the same day in the first innings of the University match, we should hear no more about the unattractiveness of first class cricket, and the need for tinkering with the rules of the game, to replenish depleted county exchequers.

In recognition of his four successive hundreds Lord Dalmeny presented Hayward with a handsome souvenir in the shape of a silver cigarette case with the following inscription :—

Gentlemen vs. Players, ended in a draw.
Worcester beat Northamptonshire by 21 runs.
Yorkshire beat Derby by ten wickets.
Sussex beat Hampshire by an innings and 9 runs.
Kent beat Essex by 72 runs.
Yorkshire beat Somerset by an innings and 6 runs.
Lancashire beat Sussex by 281 runs.
Kent beat Gloucestershire by 90 runs.
Derby beat the West Indians by 6 wickets.
The following matches were drawn :—Warwick vs. Surrey Worcester vs. Leicester; Essex vs. Northampton.

At Lord's Cambridge were undoubtedly the stronger side, and it is history that they eventually beat Oxford by 90 runs, but the Dark Blues must have played up well, and all the honours of the match did not go to the winners. Cambridge batted practically all the first day for 361 runs, M. W. Payne, their brilliant wicket-keeper who went in first, actually hitting up 64 out of 73 for the first wicket in half an hour's play, and scoring the whole of the first 45 runs. R. A. Young, an extremely sound but not over-enterprising batsman, went in first with Payne and was last man out, having batted five hours for 150, and L. G. Colbeck, the hero of last year's match, was also in fine form.

It is recorded that the Oxford eleven fielded splendidly all day, and did not miss a single chance; and their first bowler, N. R. Udal, in spite of a strained side, which was all strapped up, and which prevented him from bowling at much more than half his proper pace, took seven wickets for 133 runs. Take it all round, this is what University cricket should be; a lesson in the spirit as well as in the practice of the game. We trust that the 'Varsity match will never again be tarnished by Cambridge bowlers bowling wides to the boundary in fear lest Oxford batsmen would save the follow-on by knocking their own wickets down! That is not cricket!

Our Bombay correspondent writes:—Less interest seems to be evinced in the second round of the Harwood League though probably weather has much to answer for, so much indeed that play has, at times, been impossible. The Telegraph team met the Parel Gymkhana on Tuesday and romped home with 5 goals to one. The Railway men have scarcely kept up the promise they gave at the opening of the season and their play is very weak whilst the Telegraphs have improved wonderfully.

On Wednesday the Y. M. C. A. played the City Club and won by 3 to nil after an easy contest, the Parel Gymkhana and the City Club thus being at the bottom of the list.

The Gymkhana have decided to make new arrangements for boating. At present the boat-house is on the dangerous Bandra creek, a Sabbath day's journey from Bombay, and, consequently, neglected. Now Mr. McIlwright is endeavouring to get a site on the harbour which will make all the difference. The greatest difficulty to be met is the lack of accommodation for business purposes and this will take some surmounting.

The week end has seen the departure of a Gymkhana team to play a series of cricket matches in Kathiawar. A fairly strong side has been got together, the chief merit being among the bowlers. The team consists of Messrs. Cadell, Sanderson, Hogg, J. Monteath, Otto, Stileman, Croft, West, McNaghten and Priestly with a varancy which was only filled at the last minute. Amongst their opponents will be Messrs. Rendall, Hobson, Templar Luck, Capt. Bennett and players from the 123rd.

Golf finds many devotees is Bombay now that the maidan has softened under the Monsoon and fifty have entered for the Golfers' Cup, which will be played for in five rounds. In the first round O'Conor, H. Blair, Capt. Keys, E. F. Nicholson, A. P. Scott, E. E. Coombs, G. Huggins, W. E. Crum, C. Keith and Cooke, A. Royd, W. F. Ross, G. Miller and D. Revie were victorious while fourteen drew byes. The past week, however, has been far too wet for much outdoor amusement.

An interesting boxing entertainment was held in Bombay on the 19th instant, the principal event of the evening being the fight for the Bantam Weight Championship of India. There were four preliminary contests. In the first Boy Evans of the Royal Scots met Boy Condon of the Connaught Rangers, Evans winning on points. Next came a three-round contest for a silver cup between two amateurs, J. Jafferies and T. Phillips; the former won on points. A six-round bout for a purse between Pte. Denman of the Connaught Rangers and Pte. Macfarlane, Royal Scots, ended in the fifth when Denman, who had had the worst of the fight all through, retired. Lce.-Corpl. Cunningham (Leicesters) was to have met Gnr. Lyons, R. F. A., in a three-round bout, but the latter was away taking part in the S. I. boxing tournament in Madras, and Lce.-Corpl. Whitehurst (Leicesters) took his place. The fight did not last long, Whitehurst being floored in the first round and counted out. The last item was the fight for the Bantam Weight Championship, fifteen rounds, for the gate money. The contestants were Pte. D. Wilson (Royal Scots) (8st. 4lbs.), who won the Bantam Championship at Poona this year, and Pte. Hitchens of the Connaught Rangers, who had secured this honour at Lucknow some years ago. Hitchens had rather the best of the two opening rounds; the third was very level, but in the fourth Wilson sent his opponent to the boards and though Hitchens got up to continue he found he had put his left wrist out and had to retire, Wilson being declared winner. Capt. Rundle, R. E., officiated as referee, Messrs. E. R. Fischer and P. Brownrigg as judges, and Major Baynes as time-keeper.

Mr. W. Mason, the well-known Silchar cricketer, is now at home and when we last heard of him was with an English cricket team touring in the West of Scotland and exhibiting quite his best form.

London Week by Week.

Friday, 6th July 1906.

THE accident to the American boat express outside Salisbury Station in the early hours of Sunday morning, with its appalling list of victims, has overshadowed other topics during the week. Fortunately, owing to the late hour at which the steamer arrived at Plymouth, less than fifty of the passengers elected to leave the boat, and continue their journey by train. But for this the death roll would have been still more terrible, as out of this comparatively small number twenty-three were killed, seven "seriously injured," three "less seriously," and only eleven escaped altogether unhurt. In addition, four of the railway servants are among the dead, while two are among the less seriously injured. A railway inspector standing on the platform seems to be the only person who saw the train actually leave the rails, but the noise of the impact with the milk train, and with the girders of the bridge over Fisherton Street, is said to have been heard in most parts of the city, and to have sounded like a terrific explosion.

* * * * * *

Various speculations, of course, are afloat as to the possible cause of the accident—a snapped axle has been suggested—but in face of the statements made by some of the passengers it is difficult to believe that the speed was not excessive when rounding the curve just outside the station. Thirty miles an hour is the regulation speed through the station and round the curve, but it is said, on fairly good authority, that the last two miles before the train rushed through the station were covered in 1¾ minutes—a speed of 68½ miles an hour. Whether the train "ran away"—a not unheard-of possibility—is only matter for speculation (both driver and fireman being among the killed) until the signal men produce their time-books and the guard of the train gives his evidence before Major Pringle at the Board of Trade inquiry. But for coming into collision with the milk train the boat express would probably have gone over the bridge into Fisherton Street; as it was, the shock of the collision flung one passenger bodily out of the train, over the bridge, into the street below. The courage and patience of the injured, the complete absence of panic, and the promptitude and care with which all that was possible was done for the sufferers, are bright spots in the terrible tragedy.

Our brief spell of hot weather ended in the exceptionally heavy rainfall of last Friday, and shows no symptom of returning. The rain began soon after midnight on Thursday, and did not slacken perceptibly until after 8 o'clock on Friday morning—a strong N.-E. wind blowing meanwhile. The total fall recorded by Negretti and Zambra's rain gauge at Holborn, during the eight hours, was nearly 1¾ inches, an extremely rare record here where a fall of an inch in that time is considered unusually heavy. It is almost unnecessary to add that the District Railway was flooded, and near Earl's Court the sight, so painfully familiar when a fall beyond an average summer shower occurs, was to be seen, of passengers obliged to leave their trains, and wade to their destinations as cabs were not, and a seat in an omnibus was infinitely more difficult of attainment than a seat in the House of Lords in this present year of grace.

The good people of Croydon are somewhat sceptical as to the genuineness of the earthquake with which they are informed they have been favoured. The most level-headed among them seem to find a good and sufficient reason for the disturbance of their slumbers in the torrents of rain, and the gale that prevailed during the night of Thursday week. If to these elemental troubles a traction engine, or a more than usually blatant and objectionable motor chanced to pass their way, the noise and vibration would produce a very creditable imitation of the mild English earthquake. In the meantime a local halfpenny paper, which first announced the visitation in startling head lines, probably gained no small advantage thereout.

It is hardly a matter of surprise that the jury in the "Christian Science Case" failed to agree, when one considers the extremely contradictory nature of the evidence forthcoming on the important point of the relations existing between Major Whyte and Dr. Adcock—as to whether they were the usual ones of doctor and patient. Although it is doubtful whether the Crown will proceed further in the matter in face of Judge Righam's strong pronouncement, the case is technically sub judice, and therefore further comment upon it must be delayed.

The woman who was charged by a policeman at the Clerkenwell Police Court on Wednesday, with being disorderly and using bad language, between 12 and 1 o'clock in the morning, was lucky in having three witnesses of unimpeachable position, who, struck by what they overheard in passing, took the trouble to follow the policeman and woman to the Police Station to hear the charge, and then attended the Court to give their version of the affair. Their evidence proved beyond doubt that —to use the Magistrate's words—"there was nothing to bear out" the charge of disorderly conduct, and that no bad language was used. In discharging the accused the Magistrate said, with truth, that the thanks of the public were due to the men who had taken the trouble to come forward to help the cause of justice. It is not pleasant to think what the woman's position would have been had they not chanced to pass at the moment.

As the militant "female suffragists," in spite of Mr. Paul Taylor's almost pathetic appeal to give an assurance that they would not again disturb the peace of Cavendish Square (his appeal to one of them at the mature age of sixty-four she ought to know better, was especially funny) sternly refused to "barter their liberty of action" by giving any such undertaking, the Magistrate felt it his duty to order each of them to enter into her bail in £50 to be of good behaviour for twelve months, and to find a surety for a similar amount, or in default to go to prison for six weeks. The three women, who declined to find securities, have gone to prison, and no doubt are already enrolled by their admirers among the noble army of martyrs.

* * * * * *

The women failed to appreciate the width of the gulf that separates the views of Radical candidates on election platforms from those held by the self-same Rads when they have reached the safe and pleasant haven of office; and in creating obstructions and disturbances in public thoroughfares were merely attempting to carry a Radical doctrine to its logical conclusion; about the most foolish step they could possibly take, with a Radical Government in office.

Something like a panic has been created by the intention, widely attributed to Mr. Haldane, of cutting down the Army, in obedience to the behests of the extremists in the Cabinet, and Mr. Brodrick's letter in yesterday's Times express the general feeling. If rumour may be trusted, Mr. Haldane proposes to disband two battalions of Guards, eight or ten battalions of the Line, and from thirty to forty batteries of Field Artillery. The gain by the reduction of two battalions of Guards will be £100,000, and to make this paltry saving, the richest country in the world, will, as Mr. Brodrick pertinently remarks, make itself the laughing stock of the world. It is almost inconceivable that without strong pressure Mr. Haldane would have contemplated so suicidal a policy. It was probably a case of throwing something to the wolves, and the efficiency of the army will be a specially toothsome morsel to Messrs. John Burne, Keir Hardie, Crooks, and others of that ilk; as well as to the proud possessors of a Nonconformist conscience. His statement in the House next Thursday will be awaited with great interest, leavened with no small amount of anxiety.

The theatres have suffered this week from the counter-attractions of Henley and the Warwick Pageant. Ten out of the twenty-eight of West End theatres are already closed; two more, His Majesty's and the New, close to-morrow, while "last nights" are very generally, if somewhat vaguely, announced. Very few of the suburban theatres are open; the Coronet, where "His Excellency the Governor" is being played, by a capital company, being a noteworty exception. The play is preceded by an extremely unconventional, and somewhat amusing, entertainment entitled "A Waste of Time."

The sixth week of the season of French plays at the New Royalty was opened on Monday by M. Gaston Meyer, with Mdlle. Martha Brandès in M. Georges de Porto-Riche's four-act play, "Le Passé." The play is written with some skill, but its chief merit unquestionably lies in providing in the character of Dominique Brienne a first rate part for the principal actress. Mdlle. Brandès dominates the play, the other actors serving as little more than a chorus. Dominique, the heroine, a lady with a past, has taken to sculpture as a consolation for her desertion by as contemptible a villain as has ever appeared on the boards, and has made a success of it. Among her queer artist friends is one Antoinette Bellangé, who is separated from her husband, but wishes to be reconciled to him for her little daughter's sake. To this end Dominique promises to help her, but meantime Antoinette falls in love with a man who is no other than Français Prieur, Dominique's faithless lover. This interesting gentleman calls on his old love to ask her to be so kind as not to interfere, and during the interview they find themselves falling in love again. There is, naturally perhaps, a scene between the two women, and Antoinette before leaving tells Dominique that she is to meet Français next day at a little house at Neuilly. When Français appears Dominique uses some strong language, calling him a coward and a liar, to which he agrees without turning a hair, but finally she confesses that despite these slight blemishes he is dear to her still. He, fatuously, remarks that he had foreseen her infatuation for his worthy self—or words to that effect—and that he has prepared a little house specially for her, at Neuilly. This last "inexactitude" breaks the spell, Dominique tells him she knows the house was prepared for Antoinette; sends him away, and as the curtain falls, accepts her faithful lover, Maurice Arnault, a colourless personage. The moral of "La Passé" appears to be that inartistic lying is not only a crime, but a blunder, and that an occasional dash of truth imparts an air of probability to imaginative statements. Mdlle. Brandès is not only a handsome woman, with a beautiful voice and much charm of manner, but she possesses the supreme gift of fascination, and she lives,—not merely acts,—her part. Mdlle. Caron was excellent as Antoinette, and M. André Calmettes played the disagreeable part of Français Prieur with skill.

Last night Mdlle. Brandès appeared for the only time this season, in "Francillon" by Dumas fils. It is a lighter play than are most of his: the subject of it, the conduct of a wife who believes, without good reason, that her husband is faithless. There is little action in the piece, but a good deal of both earnest and amusing talk. To-night and to-morrow night Mdlle. Brandès appears in M. Sardou's "L' Espionne," a second and revised edition of his "Dora," of which the English version, "Diplomacy," had such a phenomenal success in the Middle Ages.

Yesterday Mr. Charles Frohman gave a novel entertainment at the Aldwych Theatre in the form of the first of the three matinées at which he presents Miss Ruth St. Denis in Hindoo dances. In the first dance, "The Spirit of the Incense," Miss Denis feeds two censers with incense which burns with lights of different colours, and has a charming effect. Miss St. Denis possesses the lithe suppleness of the East, though she does not look oriental, and has wonderful arms which she uses to advantage in her second dance, which is called "The Snake Charmer," and is extremely clever. Scene—an Indian street, with natives squatted about. To them presently comes a conjuror who produces milk out of an empty jug. To him succeeds Miss St. Denis, and her dance is almost entirely done with her arms which represent snakes. On each hand she wears two large bright green jewels, which by her skilful manipulation she suddenly makes to appear as eyes, which gleam with a baleful light. She kneels, and the snakes appear to crawl about her. In the third dance "Radha," Miss St. Denis, charmed her audience by her serpentine grace, and her decorative sense was strongly shown by her handling of a long chaplet of roses. The entertainment was brief, lasting less than an hour.

An interesting item of theatrical news is that next winter Mr. Frohman intends to present Mr. Pierre Berton's play "La Belle Marseillaise," which was such a success in Paris; and that Mr. John Hare will appear in it in the character of Napoleon. The English translation is by Mr. Ryley, and the piece will be staged under the direction of Mr. Dion Boucicault. After the London run Mr. Frohman hopes to take it into the provinces.

Other announcements of future arrangements are that Mr. Lewis Waller begins his autumn season at the Lyric on 15th October, and that Mr. Arthur Collins has fixed on "Sinbad" as the subject for the next Christmas pantomime at Drury Lane. It will come as a novelty, as it has not been seen at the house since 1882. The book will be the joint production of Mr. Collins and Mr. Hickory Wood, and both Miss May de Sousa and Mr. Harry Fragson will be in the cast.

It is now announced that Mdme. Yvette Guilbert, after her tour in Europe and Egypt, intends to return to London for the purpose of studying the title rôle in a stage version of Mr. George Moore's "Esther Waters," the said version having been written by Mr. G. Moore himself in association with Mr. Knoblanck.

Faust was repeated on Saturday night at Covent Garden, with three noteworthy changes in the cast. Marguerite was played for the first time this season by Melba, whose singing if, perhaps tamer than usual, was altogether delightful. M. Laffitte, who won laurels in Massenet's "Le Jongleur de Notre-Dame," filled the title rôle with credit, though he has but little variety of expression; and M. Marcoux's somewhat unconventional rendering of the character of Mephistopheles made a good impression. To-night Gluck's "Armide" will be performed for the first time in England, although it was written about a hundred and thirty years ago. It is an immensely difficult work to mount, as it includes eight different scenes. The cast is a very strong one. New scenery has been painted, and every effort is being made to produce it as completely as possible.

By the death of Senor Garcia—brother of Malibran, and teacher of Jenny Lind—who passed away in his sleep on Sunday in his hundred and first year, a link with one of the most famous periods of opera is broken. To many he was perhaps best known as the inventor of the laryngoscope. He retained his keenness of mind and wonderful memory almost unimpaired to the end.

The L.C.C. continues to spend other peoples' money gaily. The steam boats' account last week was not more satisfactory than has been the case heretofore: the loss on the week's working being £1,800. A daring attempt to discuss the matter was promptly squashed by the Chairman's ruling that it was a question for the Rivers' Committee only, an equally indecent attempt on the part of another moderate member to discuss the cost of the wall paper being put on a Committee room—said cost being 10s. the piece—was also suppressed by Mr. Evan Spicer, Chairman, who announced that this particular vanity was the business of the "Establishment Committee." The Finance Committee appears to exist solely for the purpose of recording and endorsing the expenditure of the other Committees, as appeared when Colonel Rotton ventured a meek inquiry as to its functions. Its Chairman, Lord Welby, answered "that the Committee saw that the accounts presented were duly authorised and in order." There is much truth in the ancient adage anent beggars on horseback.

The Henley week has been a complete success from every point of view; perfect weather, not a drop of rain, and plenty of sun without great heat; perfect rowing conditions, and an attendance bigger than ever, both ashore and afloat. This year will be remarkable for the Belgian victory, it being the first time the Grand Challenge Cup has been taken out of England: and for Blackstaffe's win, which was immensely popular.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN CRICKET TOUR.*

An authoritative report of any cricket tour is expected now-a-days of the captain under whom the eleven goes forth to do battle with colonial teams: and we are surprised that Mr. Warner's account of the South African tour should have appeared sooner rather than that it appears at all. The backbone of the book* is the series of letters he wrote during the tour for an evening paper in London; these have been amplified from various sources and remodelled for volume publication: and the result is a very sportsmanlike, honest and discriminating record which makes excellent reading—that is to say, if the reader has not read and heard enough about the M.C.C. tour in South Africa already. There lies the enemy. Never has a tour been more widely canvassed and discussed: never has the M.C.C. been more sharply criticised than for its apparent indifference as to the quality of the team which was sent out to South Africa. Mr. Warner does not say much about this aspect of the matter: having accepted command he naturally stands by his choice and does not say a word that suggests dissatisfaction. He says candidly enough that it is a hard matter to get together an amateur eleven who will consent to give up a whole winter to cricket in a distant colony: he names a few good players whom the M.C.C hoped to secure and did not: but he maintains that he had "a good sound team and one that appeared strong enough for the purpose—till we arrived in South Africa." Then the visitors found out their mistake: when they had played three provincial matches the quality of the combined South African eleven they were to play in the test matches became clearer to them and Mr. Warner in one of his earliest letters confessed that, though they were "full of confidence," a combined South African team would take a tremendous lot of beating.

We are not going over the particulars of the tour which, as everyone knows, comprised five test matches, four of which the colonists won, and 21 provincial matches of which the visitors won 16, lost one (against the Transvaal) and drew four. Full details are set down in the book for all to read and digest at their leisure. The verdict of the author is that South African cricket has improved 50 per cent. since he went out with Lord Hawke's team in 1898 99: that the representative colonial eleven batted better and bowled better than, and fielded quite as well as the English visitors; and that South Africa can now put into the field a team which an All England eleven will find it hard to beat. Mr. Warner makes no excuses for the defeats sustained; but reading between the lines we are inclined to think that the visitors were handicapped by the matting wicket to which the colonials are accustomed, and that the more subtle influences of climate and atmosphere were not without their effects. He thinks the tour has given South African cricket a stimulus which is apparently needed, as we notice that public interest in the game is somewhat on the wane, even as it is said to be in England. The matches were well attended however and there was never on any South African ground a symptom of disorder: a conspicuous contrast to the behaviour of the Australian spectators on certain memorable occasions.

Incidentally we have some interesting pictures of various phases of colonial life, British and Boer, some glimpses of the battlefields of the war, and last but not least, from the wider point of view, of that much mistaken "slave," the Chinese coolie. The author's remarks on the lot of the man upon whom so much mistaken sympathy has been bestowed by silly people in the Old Country are precisely what might be expected of a man of ordinary sanity and honesty. We do not know that the photographs with which the work is illustrated add much to its interest: they are for most part very indifferently reproduced: this however is a very minor defect in a book whose interest lies essentially in the text.

TIGER SHOOTING ON THE CHURS OF THE BRAHMAPUTRA.

A FEW years ago when stationed in the Rungpore District, I had the opportunity of getting some tiger shooting with a party of four, N., W., D. and self.

It was towards the end of March 189 , that we found ourselves in camp some 18 miles from headquarters. We mustered all the elephants we could from the neighbouring rajahs and zemindars and these numbered twenty-two. On arriving at the shooting ground the following morning with 19 hathis, an unfortunate incident depriving us of three of these valuable adjuncts to a tiger shoot. To get to the shooting ground, we had to cross over to the left bank of the Brahmaputra, our camp being on the right side of it. Though it was now what might be called, the dry season of the year, the bed of this mighty river was still over a mile broad. To get all the elephants across, was no easy job, and it took us fully an hour before we had all but three safely landed on the opposite side. Most of them took to the water easily enough; but a huge brute, who had evidently turned musth meant to have his own way, for no sooner, had he been brought to the water's edge, than he turned sulky and refused to go any further. After a good deal of persuasion, the mahout induced him to go in for a few yards; but the forward movement came suddenly to an end, the rogue refusing to go an inch further. A boat was sent for, and this soon turned up having on board men armed with long poles, who tried to add force to persuasion. But the elephant seeing the boat coming, faced about and with a shriek of rage charged down on it, the men just managing to get out of the way by getting into deep water. The now infuriated monster began charging all the boats that were close inshore a good many of which had been got together to take us a cross. Our safety lay in getting into deep water and as far out as possible. Seeing the boats out of his reach, the monster quickly waded back to the shore, where the next thing he did, was to try and get hold of his mahout, but the position the man was in somehow prevented the brute getting at him with his trunk; failing in this, he next deliberately tried to shake him off his back and there began a most exciting contest between man and beast. The rogue tried all he could to unseat him and we who watched with breathless anxiety, thought every moment that the man's doom had arrived, for if the brute could only get hold of him, he would have been soon trampled into a shapeless mass. The man however triumphed and the rogue finding himself baffled sullenly walked back towards the camp. Most of the other elephants were already half way across, so it took us some time to get a couple of them back and these were at once marched off to secure the musth hathi for his mahoot dared not get off his back. With the help of these the rogue was soon secured and extra strong chains and ropes used in manacling him. We were thus deprived of three of our elephants.

As soon as we got across, we formed the elephants in a line and moved towards some heavy looking koshore jungle, intermixed with tamarisk, the cover being much thicker and heavier than it looked from outside. The elephants entered it from the south. We had gone nearly half through this cover, when one of the beater elephants began showing signs of uneasiness. Very soon the waving grass showed us that something was moving ahead. The line of elephants was now quickly moved forward and soon a very fine looking tiger broke out and made for the next cover, a rather heavy patch of jungle. He was exceedingly quick and we had only time to get a few snap shots at him, when he disappeared. Following as quickly as we could and thinking that the tiger would perhaps break out and make for the next cover I shouted to N and D who were on the left to make for the gap between. The jungle in which the tiger had now taken shelter, was a tolerably long one and seemed to follow the dried up course of the river. W and myself quickly moved ahead, thinking, that the tiger might break back at the further end. The beater elephants now slowly came up, and some of the mahouts shouted, that they could see something moving ahead, but this was soon followed by the unpleasant news that they had come to some boggy ground and could not safely go through. Luckily we had provided some of them with crackers, while others had bags of stones with them. The crackers were soon lighted and pitched into the cover, while those provided with stones began a bombardment; this brought out the tiger, roaring loudly and going diagonally across our front into some grass about three feet high. As he galloped at full speed through this grass, we both fired at him, and by the way the brute whisked his tail, we made pretty sure he was hit. He then went the next jungle, which extended along a sort of peninsula. This cover looked fairly heavy and extensive, but beyond it gleamed the white sands of one of the churs of the Brahmaputra, while the next cover lay fully half a mile away. The tiger was now caught in what looked very much like a trap, for he would either have to cross the bare open patch of sand or charge back through the line of elephants to get to some of the heavier cover we had already gone through.

The beater elephants were soon again formed into line and had not advanced far, when the tiger, who must have been on the a lert, suddenly broke out. As he did so, he offered a fair chance to D which he was not slow to avail himself of. The tiger was hit but too far back to stop him and growling loudly continued his onward flight for a few yards disappearing into a heavy looking bit of jungle. We again pushed forward, but before we had got to the spot where we had seen the tiger go in, he suddenly broke out and came charging down straight at the line of elephants. In an instant, the whole of the nineteen elephants had wheeled round and were in full flight, most of them panic stricken and completely out of hand. We all now turned round in our howdahs and opened a regular fusillade at the infuriated brute, who was following us. It was a truly wonderful sight to see this line of nineteen elephants, all rushing away at their best pace, but keeping their formation and going parallel to each other. We were in the meanwhile taking advantage of any opportunity we got to have a shot at our foe; but the rocking of the howdahs, made anything like straight shooting an impossibility. The brute now dashed forward at the hind quarters of N's elephant and hung on a couple of feet or so from the howdah. The elephant wheeling round and round at first prevented N from firing; for all he could do, was to keep himself off from falling out, taking, however, advantage of a momentary pause, he leaned forward and placing the muzzle of the rifle at the tiger's head blew his brains out. But the grip he had of the pad, was such that, there he hung stark and lifeless for fully a couple of minutes to the dread of the terrified elephant. The tiger, who like most chur tigers and cattle killers, was a big brute measured just a trifle under ten feet. He had been hit seven times but had fought pluckily to the last notwithstanding. On our getting back to camp, we were informed that another tiger had been seen by some herds men who were grazing their buffaloes, we decided to have a try for it next day.

The following morning saw us on the ground, with the addition of three more elephants we had got the loan of. One of them belonged to Maharanee Surnomoyee of Cossimbazar and was said to be a staunch shikari elephant. As the elephant I had ridden the previous day, was far from being comfortable and steady, I was glad to get the loan of this new mount for the day, but was rather disappointed, when she was brought round for me to mount. She was old and thin and was minus one eye; however, as they say, looks do not always count for much. The cover indicated to us by the herds men was an extensive piece of null grass, a good deal trampled down by buffaloes. There did not seem to be much cover at first, but the trampled down grass afforded shelter underneath, as in places it formed as it were a sort of arched roof. A proper line was now formed facing north, and we carefully went through every likely looking place, but saw no signs of the tiger. As the men, who brought the news, were so sure that the tiger was still at home, we decided to give it one more try. About the centre of the cover ran a dried up watercourse some ten feet broad and about five in depth; the whole being overgrown by a tangled mass of tamarisk and wild convolvulus. We now decided that one of the pad elephants should walk long this nullah. The line was reformed, and we began beating back. I was on the extreme left, with only one pad elephant on the outside of me. We had gone perhaps half through the cover, when some of the elephants began showing signs of uneasiness. My elephant's excitement was now such that she was almost beyond control and with tail on end and ears cocked she hunted like a dog; my position in the meanwhile was far from being an enviable one. All of a sudden down she went on her knees, flinging one of my guns out of the howdah, which went off, slightly wounding the pad elephant next to me. It was all I could do now, from falling off myself. My elephant had pinned the tiger to the ground, or tigress as she proved to be, who, on her part, was biting and tearing at the poor beast's trunk. The tigress managed at last to squeeze herself out and to get away my mount following in full cry. During the scrimmage most of the other elephants had again taken the alarm and got out of hand so that when the tigress cleared off none of the others could fire at her. She disappeared into a heavy bit of null jungle about six or seven feet high; thither we followed as quickly as we could, the line somewhat disorganized and my own mount, who was still a good deal excited and out of control, leading. The cover, though high and heavy, was made up of a long narrow strip through which we beat carefully without finding any signs of the tigress. We thought at first that she had jumped down the bank under cover of which had made for the next piece of jungle. But a careful survey of the ground showed no footmarks and we were wondering what had become of her, when suddenly she out rushed from right among the beater elephants, who seemed quite unaware of her presence. As she galloped past, we all fired and she rolled over like a hare. My fiend of an elephant seeing the tigress bowled over dashed forward and the next instant was down on her head. The impetus of the charge made her lose her balance, she rolled over on her left side, flinging me out with the contents of the howdah. I fell soft and regaining my feet, was not long in clearing out. Luckily the tigress was past mischief and the little life she might still have had in her was not long in being extinguished by the elephant. She measured a little over nine feet.

RIVER AND LAKE FISHING IN INDIA.

II.

THE selection of a rod in this country is rather a difficult matter, though a very important one. It is not always, or even often, that a hardworked Government official is within reasonable reach of a rodmaker's, or rather a rodseller's, shop. Tackle shops rarely make up their own rods, which is perhaps just as well, since there are few sellers who make the stocking and sale of fishing tackle a speciality. At home there is generally a respectable tackle shop with a good reputation within easy reach and you can make your own selection or ask an experienced friend to assist you. If you have no experience of your own, and no friend on whose judgment you can rely, the dealer can generally be trusted to give you a satisfactory article if you tell him what sort of a rod you require. In India you rarely have either the opportunity of making your own personal selection, or a friend on the spot who can do the needful for you. The vicissitudes of Indian service and the uncertainty about obtaining leave at the particular time when it is required, frequently interfere with your being able to make all arrangements of this kind some time beforehand, and you are then reduced to the alternative of ordering from the price lists of Indian firms. Under these circumstances the following hints may be useful:—

Your rod should always have standing rings, those known as snake rings are the best. They reduce the friction on the line to a minimum, and as their shape allows of a certain amount of play in the rings, the risk of their being worn through by the line is avoided. If, however, a ring does get grooved ever so slightly, it should be removed as soon as possible and a fresh one substituted, or it will certainly fray the line.

Rods are frequently sold with unnecessarily large rings on the butt, decreasing in size towards the tip. These very large rings serve no useful purpose, are unsightly, and are liable to get bent when the rod is being carried in its bag.

The top ring should invariably have a revolving steel core. This is very important. The greatest friction of the line is on this ring, and I have known a brass top ring get half cut through in one day's mahseer fishing. When this happens, the ring always retaliates by fraying the line until it becomes untrustworthy. When you have once obtained a rod with proper rings, any native blacksmith can make up snake rings from a pattern. Some few can also make up the top ring with revolving steel core, but it is preferable to purchase a spare supply of these from the shop, with the rod. They are inexpensive and are easily tied on.

The preservation of rods in an Indian climate is a matter requiring some attention. They should be well oiled once or twice a year. The rings should be retied and the rod revarnished at the same time. These are all matters which you can see to yourself, thus saving you the expense and delay of sending your rod to a shop.

A rubber button at the foot of the butt is a great comfort when fishing, or playing a fish, with the butt against your groin.

The majority of fishermen fix the reel on the rod with the handle on the right side, and play their fish with the reel downwards. By doing this, the rod gets no relief from the constant strain in one direction and is liable to become warped and lose elasticity. The strain of a spoon working in strong water is in itself sufficient to keep a constant bend on the rod, and the playing of a fish with the reel downwards continues and increases this strain. I attribute my having been able to keep my rods straight and elastic for many years largely to my having adopted the practice of putting on the reel with the handle on the left side of the rod, and then turning the rod over when playing a fish. The handle is then on the right side and the reel and rings are on the upper instead of the lower surface of the rod. This reverses the direction of the strain and corrects the tendency to warp. Rods should always be carried in partition bags, having a separate partition for each piece, to save the risk of bending the rings, scratching the varnish, and indenting the ferrules. When not in use, each piece of the rod should be hung up by a loop of string at the finer end with a small weight at the lower end, to prevent warping, and should be inspected frequently to make sure that insects have not bored into it. If incipient borings are detected, a slight touch of varnish applied to the affected spot is sufficient to check further mischief. Lockfast joints are I think preferable to the ordinary ferrules, and are less likely to stick when the joint is wetted.

Split cane rods, though all that can be desired in many ways, are liable to go wrong in an Indian climate, and if purchased from Indian shops are often unreliable. Their price, when they are really of the best quality, is very much higher than that of greenheart rods, and the latter, though somewhat heavier, length for length, than those made of other woods, are hard to beat for casting power and endurance. Many good and experienced fishermen are in favour of Castle Connell rods; others consider that the excessive length of the pieces (a 16 foot rod is generally made in two pieces only), renders them liable to damage and difficult to pack for rough journeys, that their balance is defective, that their thinness in the centre constitutes a weak point, and that putting them together is a nuisance. Personally, I have discarded them in favour of the jointed rod, for the above reasons, but where experts disagree it is unwise to lay down the law for or against any particular pattern.

* * * * *

We come next to the reel, and here you may suit yourself fairly well in India, since all tackle shops of good repute, stock English reels of every standard size and pattern. There are so many sorts of reels which have more or less to recommend them, that it would be invidious to name any parcticular pattern as specially suitable for mahseer fishing. It only remains therefore to mention faults and defects which should be avoided, and to give a general idea of what is required when making a selection. First and foremost among the things to be avoided, are the numerous checks invented for the purpose of stopping or retarding a heavy fish when running out a dangerous quantity of line. I would particularly impress upon the beginner to avoid all checks which can be imposed by any form of pressure on the revolving plate. In theory, these can be regulated to any degree required, by varying the pressure of a thumb or finger on a knob. In practice however, you will find that in the excitement of the moment you will in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred apply pressure sufficient to suddenly check the revolution of the plate altogether, and if you do this with a heavy fish making his first run, (which is just the time when you would be most likely to do it), you may say good bye to your fish and to part of your tackle. Another very frequent defect is the unnecessary thickness of the "pillars" connecting the two side plates, and their position far inside the plates, thus considerably reducing the line carrying capacity of the reel. Nearly all reels by English makers possess these defects. There seems to be no reason why the pillars should not be level with the circumference of the side plates, and turned over and rivetted on the outside thereof. Many American reels are made in this way. A reel should not be narrow. A broad reel holds much more line than a narrow one with no appreciable difference in weight or cost. The "drum" (the centre bar on which the line is wound) should not be very thin. A fairly thick drum allows the line to run off more rapidly and with less friction—especially towards the end—than a thin one.

Never, if you can help it, use a reel with a crank handle which is an invention of the devil for catching up and fouling the line between the plate and the handle. Use a revolving plate with the handle fixed in it. The check of the reel should not be stiff. As the line runs off, the check works more and more stiffly, until towards the end it sometimes requires a dangerously hard pull to draw off the line.

To a beginner, I would say, use a bronze revolving plate reel; later on, it will be found that a Malloch or Silex reel is a great comfort, especially when wading. The Malloch reel is something in the shape of an hour-glass. The barrel can be released on one side, and turned parallel with the rod instead of at right angles to it, allowing the line to run off freely when casting, and it can then be swung back into position and used as an ordinary check reel. The Silex is a check reel from which the check can be removed by pressure of a spring, allowing the line to run freely from the reel when casting. At the end of the cast the release of the spring brings the check into action again. Both of these reels relieve you of the necessity of having a quantity of slack line hanging between your reel and the first ring of your rod when making a long cast. There are various methods of manipulating the slack to prevent it from dragging in the water when wading, or from catching on the ground when casting from the shore, which will be discussed further on, but none of them are so entirely reliable as to enable you to make a certainty of casting out all the slack without some risk of entanglement as it runs out. Avoid ebonite reels. Remember that the mahseer is a powerful and game fish often running to great size and that the jar and strain on the reel when a big fish is running out line, necessitate the use of reels made of strong and enduring material.

EARLY SNIPE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—On Friday last, the 20th, I saw the first snipe of the season and they are I think very early. I saw the birds, three of them, about 5 o'clock in the evening; the weather being cloudy and boisterous. They were apparently surveying the country and were high up; the last I saw of them was making for a favourite bhil or marsh about half a mile from here and where I got my last snipe on the 3rd of May; this gives an interval of less than three months of the birds being away from the country. The 20th of July is very early for snipe to appear, the earliest I ever saw them before was in 1873 on the 18th July, a year we had an abnormally high floods.

RAOUL.

A CONTRAST.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—On Saturday, the 20th January last, was run on the Calcutta racecourse the Pony Purse, the race was won by First Bell easily by two lengths, Bess second a length and a half in front of Mr. J. C. Galstaun's Circus Girl (J. Robinson).

After the racing the jockey of the third horse, J. Robinson, was called before the Stewards and suspended from riding for a week for not making sufficient use of his mount.

On Wednesday, the 4th instant, was run at Newmarket, the Stetchworth Plate, the race was won by River easily by three lengths, Lord Derby's St Faustino (D. Maher) second.

The Racing Calendar states:—The Stewards of the Newmarket Meeting after the Stetchworth Plate on Wednesday called D Maher before them for unnecessarily flogging St. Faustino who ran second. They severely reprimanded him and cautioned him that any repetition of the offence would be met by the withdrawal of his license

ODDS AND ENDS.

CANE-BUILT RODS, ETC.

SIR,—As I have said before Greenheart has served me so well, that I have considerable doubts as to built cane being really necessary for ANY kind of fishing. A great many anglers, however, hold different views, so very possibly it may be of interest to some of your readers if I set forth the gist of the notes I have collected on the subject. American split cane rods can be bought in London for as little as eight to ten shillings. It is scarcely necessary to state that such are absolutely useless rubbish. They have no backbone, are made from any sort of bamboo, badly glued, and with the silk whippings much too far apart. The American glued-up rods at a guinea to thirty shillings are, to my mind, almost equally useless: they are not sufficiently well made to stand hard work, and all suffer from that common complaint of American trout rods—weakness and whippiness.

Next come English-made rods, sold by manufacturers who have a reputation for the lowness of their prices. Now many of these built up rods are quite honestly made tools, which will stand a lot of hard work, while the prices are about half those asked by the half dozen or so notable rod makers, whose names are hall-marks of excellence. But the two or three-guinea trout rod, has not that perfection of finish, that neatness in every detail, that we find in the five-guinea works of art of the great masters Also it is not safe to leave to one of these minor makers the selection of the balance and action which is likely to suit one If you want to buy a cheap cane-built rod, which is to be a success, you must go to the factory yourself and select what you want; or failing that, get a friend who knows just what you require, to go for you.

Cane-built rods should be closely whipped, not too fine in the top and with the action coming well into the hand.

I had a look at and handled one of the Grant Vibration rods, which are being advertized just now. As far as I could see it was a very ordinary Greenheart rod, made, to my mind, like all Scotch rods much too stiff in the butt. Line driers are indispensable articles, especially to the angler in India. A new and most excellent pattern is the "H.R.H.," price 3s. 6d. I have seen it exposed for sale in several of the tackle shops in the city. It consists of two flat pieces of brass, which can be fitted together at right angles thus forming a four-armed winder. When not required for use the winder folds flat. Porcelain-lined rings are now obtainable at 6d each. They are very useful for spinning rods as the line passes through them with great freedom.

It is certainly an advantage to have one of these rings on the butt, next to the reel.

Mr. Geen has brought out an excellent new phantom minnow. The tail only revolves, and instead of three trebles there is one double hook only. This double hook is so arranged that it can be readily removed and replaced by another when necessary. I think this minnow might do well for mahseer, as double hooks which lie flat give ample hooking power and are less likely to come to grief than trebles.

The treble hooks on ordinary phantoms, are, moreover, very difficult to replace when blunted or broken.

I hear that tubular steel centres to cane-built rods have not proved a success owing to the difficulty in tempering the thin steel tube satisfactorily.

THE PALÆOLITHIC HUNTER.

It is difficult for the hunter of these days, armed at he is with deadly weapons, against which no wild beast has a chance, to realize the position of man during the Pleistocene period. At the dawn of the Stone Age the primitive hunter, had as yet attained to no great skill in the fashioning of his flint implements. The bow was not discovered, and probably the most lethal weapon at our forefather's command, was a roughly pointed stone lashed to the thick end of a wooden shaft. In those days the animals which roamed the jungles and plains of Western Europe, had no fear whatever of mankind: it was only to the smaller beasts that the primitive hunter armed with his flint tipped spear, was in any way formidable. The skin-clad nomad who wandered through the wild, must have led a very precarious existence, seeing the formidable beasts he was liable daily to fall foul of. Tigers with enormous upper canine fangs (Machærodus) infested Europe. Cave bears (ursus spelæus), beside whose vast dimensions all modern bears shrink to insignificance, were common everywhere. Rhinoceroses of several kinds browsed upon the plains. Lions, leopards, and hyænas, made sleeping on the ground unsafe. Bison and urus (bos primogenious) flourished. While as if all these beasts were not enough, there were mammoths, and straight-tusked elephants, wont doubtless to go must on occasion, like the elephants of the present day. Imagine yourself O hunter of modern times transported backwards to the Pleistocene. You are armed with a flint-headed spear, and are being chased by a must mammoth. There is a nightmare for you! But it is nightmare that must have been often stern reality for primitive man.

Fortunately for the Palæolithic hunter, there were plenty of other creatures which he could chase with good hope of success. Deer, hares, rabbits, foxes, marmots, and beavers were plentiful. Some of the deer, indeed, such as the Irish cervus giganteus, must have been too big and powerful to kill until the invention of the bow. Doubtless bows and arrows came into use towards the end of the Pleistocene period, for the deposits in the higher layers of certain caverns of this epoch, indicate a great advance over the hunters of the beginning of the Stone Age. Bone needles and harpoons, and rough portraits of the animals of the chase incised on horns and tusks, show that the hunters of the late Pleistocene were almost on a par with the Esquimaux of the present day. The recent discovery of the skeleton of an urus, with part of a flint arrow-head embedded in the bone, and the heads of other arrows lying associated with the remains, prove that the hunter of the past dared to attack these formidable beasts, with what in our eyes seem most puny weapons.

In a cavern in Kent were found flint palæolithic implements associated with the broken jaw of a woolly rhinoceros! One wonders how on earth these primitive men managed to dispose of so formidable a beast. Possibly the animal was bogged, or, perhaps, when it lay asleep under a cliff, a big rock was tipped over on to it. Who knows? As the hunters of the past advanced in intelligence, no doubt they devised traps and pitfalls for the larger game. Possibly weighted spears were dropped on to the mastodon's backs, as they passed under trees, as elephants were killed in Africa by certain tribes in recent times. The researches of geologists have at any rate taught us that at one period man was by no means the Lord of creation. On the contrary he eked out a precarious existence in the midst of herds of dangerous beasts. Only the growing intelligence of the primeval hunter enabled him by his superior cunning to flourish amid such surroundings. In the day he went forth to his hunting, but at night he either barricaded himself in some suitable cavern, or took refuge, like his monkey ancestor, in the tree tops.

Second Day, Thursday, 19th July 1906.

Cool weather favoured the sport this afternoon and an attractive programme was run through. As on the first day a race had to be divided, the Shums-ul-Mulk Plate with fourteen starters being run as two races, both giving us exciting finishes. In the last race an objection was lodged against the winner, Afghanistan, on the ground that he carried no penalty for his win in the Hyderabad Service Plate earlier in the day. The Stewards came to a decision the next day. The owner of Afghanistan contended that under the rule governing maiden races, he should not have carried any penalty over the weight shown in his declaration given before lotteries. The Stewards held that the rule governing the conditions for maiden races does not apply to the case, and that under Rule 97 the pony should have carried the penalties prescribed in the terms of the race. They disqualified Afghanistan, placing Sallawar first and Flashpoint second. The Clown did not weigh out. Details:—

They went out driving, but the coachman seemed a "bit off." While dashing down a hill at breakneck speed one of the passengers made a grab at the reins.

"Leave go!" excitedly shouted the driver; "them reins is as rootten as tinder."

Yet they said the drive wasn't enjoyable.

Wife: "William, I do think our boys are the worst I ever saw. I'm sure they don't get their wickedness from me."

Husband (snappishly): "Well, they don't get it from me."

SANDOWN PARK.

STARTLING surprises have distinguished our variable climate this year, and those who wanted rain had even a stronger dose of it than fluttered the agricultural dovecotes after Windsor last Saturday. In Sussex, all down the line, water lay in pools. The rain came nicely apropos for Sandown, which can take any amount of it, and we have never seen the going better at the end of leafy June. Up to twelve o'clock on Friday the outlook was so unpromising that the comparative paucity of the attendance is easily accounted for, but several prominent patrons, including Lord Alington, the Duke of Portland, Mr. R. C. Vyner, and the Duchess of Westminster, who was radiant with smiles after Troutbeck's victory were in the members' box. Tattersall's was well attended, and the further rings held a fair complement. Those who stayed away must have regretted their caution as it was a regular backers' day.

SANDRINGHAM STAKES—Of 2,000sovs. (1,500sovs. for the owner and 250sovs. for the nominator of the winner, 100sovs. for the owner and 50sovs. for the nominator of the second, and 75sovs. for the owner and 25sovs. for the nominator of the third); for three year and four year olds. 1½ miles.

Saturday brought an improvement all round in weather, sport, and attendance at Sandown, Tattersall's and the public enclosure being crowded. The seal of Royal approval was given by the presence of Prince Christian, who was joined in the club-box by Lord Sefton, Lord Cholmondeley, Sir Edgar Vincent, and several prominent supporters of the Turf who had been present on Friday. The turn of Fortune's wheel enabled the ring to get even with the talent on Friday's deal, the defeat of Bellavista being a crushing blow, while Velocity was not everybody's money, and after Ascot backers were shy of Whitechapel.

TWENTY-NINTH RENEWAL OF THE BRITISH DOMINION TWO YEAR OLD RACE—Of 1,000sovs. (the nominator of the winner to receive 100sovs. the owner of the second 50sovs., and the nominator of the second 25sovs.) 5 furlongs.

NEWMARKET.

A beautifully cool breeze swept across the Heath, and the sky was overcast, the result being most enjoyable on Wednesday. When visitors had settled down the attendance was a good one. The welcome presence of the King, who was met by Prince Christian, ensured an influential gathering of rank and fashion on the far side of the course, while Tattersall's as usual was well attended, and the free-listers mustered in force on the grand coign of vantage the Ditch. Thanks to the recent rains, the Heath looked fresh and green, and the Bunbury course, always good going was never better.

JULY STAKES—Of 50sovs. each; for two year olds; second receives 100sovs., and the third saves stake; New T.Y.C. (5 furlongs and 148 yards).

Another goodly company assembled yesterday to greet the King, who looked remarkably well, while the cool costumes of the fair and the light flannels and straw of the sterner sex formed a pretty old English picture against the shining green background of the beech plantation, whose leaves just whispered to a faint breeze while sunshine was paramount. Although the card contained no item of particular importance the attendance again topped the average, the going was good, fields plethoric, the Plantation Plate producing 26 runners, and racing of an interesting nature throughout, a heavy afternoon to wit.

ROWING.

HENLEY ROYAL REGATTA.

Henley wound up as it began—in a blaze of triumph. The weather was again brilliantly fine, and the course from end to end was one mass of people before the first race was rowed.

The programme consisted of one more event than usual, owing to the addition of the Gunners vs. Sappers four-oared race, hitherto rowed on the Medway. A start was made with the final of the Stewards' Challenge Cup, which had only attracted two entries—Leander and Third Trinity. Two of the Leander men had raced in the Goblets, while Third's quartette had competed in the eight and the four for the Visitors' and the Goblets. Third were the better fancied. They showed pace at the start and were going quite as fast as their opponents at the finish, but the half-length lead the Leander had obtained by spurting at the mile served the wearers of the cerise colours well, and sufficed to win the Cup. The winners are all men of big reputations. Guy Nickalls was competing in his seventy-fourth race at Henley, and he has won almost every event at the regatta more than once. R. B. Etherington Smith was the stroke of the Leander crew that beat both the Belgians and University of Pennsylvania in 1902, and he was accounted one of the best oarsmen sent out from Cambridge University for some years past. F. S. Kelly got his Blue at Oxford, and won the Diamond Sculls three times out of four, while A. K. Graham is another Oxford Blue. The losers were four Cambridge Blues.

The Belgians achieved their ambition of winning the Grand Challenge Cup. Their large-bladed oars were very effectively used under the influence of the light, favourable breezes, and may once more draw attention to the oar question, and the necessity for making big men row big blades. Trinity Hall, who were the English finalists, did not do so well as on Wednesday. No doubt their stroke felt the effects of his races in other events, and his splendid effort against the Canadians told its tale.

First Trinity, Cambridge, won the Ladies' Plate. They improved considerably during their stay at Henley, and raced very well, indeed. Christ Church, Oxford, however, made an interesting struggle against them, and their form was very creditable to their coach, H. C. Bucknall. The Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers' race came next. The Gunners were fancied most, as they had J. H. Gibbon, one of Cambridge's famous strokes, to set the work, and had done a lot of work on the course, but the Sappers completely upset calculations. Rowing a faster stroke, but sliding very short, they slipped their opponents early, and the result was never much in doubt. The Belgian pair merely paddled over behind Third Trinity in the Goblets. London and Thames had a hard struggle in the Wyfold Cup, but in the end the former were able to repeat their victory of last year.

The greatest possible interest was shown in the Diamond Sculls in which the issue was fought out between H. T. Blackstaffe, of the Vesta, and Captain W. H. Darell, of the Household Brigade. Blackstaffe first rowed at Henley for the Thames Cup in 1893, and began sculling in the Diamonds in 1896, when he was beaten by the ultimate winner, the Hon'ble Rupert Guinness. The following year he was runner-up to E. H. Ten Eyck, the American, and in the two following years he occupied the same position to S. H. Howell, of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. In 1900 Blackstaffe did not not take part seriously in the Diamonds, and rowed in a Vesta four. Then he was beaten by E. G. Hemmerde, University College, Oxford, and in 1901 was defeated by C. V. Fox, of the Brigade of Guards. In the following year he was defeated by R. B Etherington Smith. This was F. S. Kelly's first year of winning. In 1903 the Vesta man was beaten by F S Kelly, but missed 1904, when L. E. Scholes, of Toronto, was successful and last year Blackstaffe was runner-up to F. S. Kelly. This year being an open one, Blackstaffe was always a good favourite, and he justified the confidence of his friends very readily. He got away from Darell early in the race, and was able to get a breather. At the mile he had the race in hand. The victory was most popular all round, for it was Blackstaffe's tenth year of competing. Christ's Cambridge, and First Trinity, Cambridge, had a rare tussle in the Thames Cup. Christ's led most of the way, and although hard pressed all through, got to the winning-post first by six feet. The day's programme, and the most successful regatta, perhaps, on record, was wound up by Third Trinity and Jesus College contesting the final of the Visitors' Cup. Third had had a hard race against Leander in the Stewards' Cup, but they were expected to account for Jesus, and the expectation proved correct, as Third won well. The challenge cups were presented to the winners by Lady Esther Smith, wife of the Hon'ble F. W. D. Smith, M.P. Details:—

Hall expected to make a good race, but with the weather conditions to their liking the Belgians, proved too fast. Rowing 41 strokes against 42 by their opponents, Hall got away the better, only to find the Belgians come up at once and begin to open out a strong lead. At the quarter-mile post the foreigners had obtained a length advantage, and kept adding to it, so that the half-mile semaphore showed them one and a half lengths in front. At Fawley (time—3mins. 25secs.) the leaders held a two-lengths call of Hall, and the race was really won. Stuart spurted, but his effort had no effect, for the Belgians had a two and a half lengths' lead at three-quarters of a mile, and in spite of a second spurt by Hall the visiting crew were three lengths ahead at the mile. Seeing pursuit useless, Hall eased down to a paddle, and the Belgians going right away, won by three lengths. Time—7mins. 9secs.

Christ Church got off in good style, rowing 40 strokes in the first minute. First were a stroke less, but they began to forge ahead gradually, and led half a length at the quarter-mile. First looked like going away gradually, but "The House" held on determinedly, and the distance between the boats was unchanged at the half-mile. Christ Church were still clinging to their opponents at Fawley (time—3mins. 21secs.), but First began to get a little more lead up to three-quarters of a mile, where the positions of the boats showed the Cantabs three-quarters of a length in front. Form had been good in both crews up to this point, and it was maintained to the mile. Here Christ Church were almost done with, and First, keeping on at a steady rate of striking, won by one and a quarter lengths. Time—7mins. 28secs.

This event opened the last day's programme, and proved one of the most exciting struggles of a memorable regatta. Guy Nickalls took off Leander at a great pace, rowing 39 strokes to Third's 36. In spite of this the Cambridge crew were slightly in front at the top of the Island. Both crews adopted cutting-down tactics, and the boats travelled very fast. At the quarter-mile Third were a quarter of a length ahead, but beyond that they could not get up to the half-mile. At Fawley (time—3mins. 40secs.) Third had slightly increased their lead. Leander spurted splendidly, but Third kept them at bay, and were still quarter of a length to the good. Directly, afterwards Nickalls called upon his men again, and they responded splendidly. Leander went up fast, and got into the lead, showing half a length advantage at the mile. It was still a great struggle, however, and at the bottom of Phyllis Court Powell spurted, and Third began to gain. Leander replied, and the excitement among the spectators was intense. Third spurted so strongly that they appeared to get level, but Leander rowed very strongly to the judge's box, and gained the verdict by two feet. Time—7mins. 36secs.

Perhaps the greatest interest of the day was taken in this race, because Blackstaffe had rowed in the Diamonds for so many years, and although runner-up almost invariably had never won. It proved a fine struggle to Fawley. Blackstaffe went off at 36, against 31 by Darell, and led by half a length at the quarter-mile, and a length at the half-mile. Darell drew up a bit, but Blackstaffe soon got away again, and at three-quarters of a mile led by three lengths. Both were sculling in good form, but at the mile Blackstaffe had drawn right away, and the issue was never in doubt afterwards, Blackstaffe winning by several lengths. Time—8mins. 35secs.

ATHLETICS.

L. A. C. SUMMER MEETING.

To be candid, successful as was Saturday's summer sports meeting held under the auspices of the London Athletic Club at Stamford Bridge Ground, in point of interest it did not attain the high standard which in past years has been associated with this particular fixture. For instance, one has been accustomed to look to it for a guide to championship form in the following week. On this occasion, however, there were competing fewer "stars" in the athletic firmament than usual, presumably owing to similar meetings elsewhere claiming attention, and he would be a bold man who could, as a result of this gathering of our premier club, point to a coming A.A.A. champion a few days hence. For all that, class was pretty well represented by nearly all the club's cracks—several of whom are among the speediest of the day—supporting the various flat events, and the programme produced some keen racing, which was witnessed by a crowd of average dimensions here. Perfect weather prevailed but the cinder track, after Friday's deluge of rain was on the soft side.

Hunting.

THE OOTACAMUND HOUNDS.

ON Saturday, 14th July, we met for a bye-day at the Pykara Bridge at noon. There was not a large field out, owing to the weather and the long distance of the place of the meet from the station, and many of the people who did turn up soon went home again. The day was a cloudy one and looked promising for good sport, but it began to rain at 12 o'clock and soon afterwards there was a deluge. It was hardly likely that on such a day there would be much scent. A sambhur hind from Tuvalkandi Mund gave us a little trouble and it was nearly two o'clock before a jack was found close to the Waterfall Road. Hounds ran him straight to some rocks below Kengodu Hill, from which refuge, although we could see him, we were unable to dislodge him. Nothing short of a well-directed squib would have done this, the terrier being quite unable to persuade him to evacuate his commanding position on a ledge of the rocks.

As the master was drawing hounds away from the covert one of them essayed a leap from the top of a precipice dropping about 30 feet into a jungle below. The jungle saved him and he was apparently none the worse for his aerial trip. A jack from Khed Shola was killed before we were fairly going and one from Wenlock Wood gave us little better sport. He sought refuge in a watercourse in Wapshares' Hare Shola and hounds got in after him and killed him there. It required a spade to recover him. By now it was five o'clock and too late to draw again; so we came home.

On Monday, 16th instant, the hounds met at Audy Plantation on a regular monsoon morning. It was very thick and there was a heavy drizzle at times. A fairly large field was out. The master moved off down the Bog and almost at once Captain Dennistoun viewed a jack coming out of it by the crossing near TRAILL & Co., 20, British Indian Street, CALCUTTA.

Limerick Shola and Gaylad Shola. Hounds picked up the line and ran over the hill across the top of Parson's Valley, skirting Middle Bit Shola and almost straight to the south end of Sambhur Shola, where they dwelt for a few minutes. Then they went on round the next two spurs to the south down almost to Nunjenad village, up the Nunjenad stream into dense fog, through which we galloped backwards and forwards for some time, most of us having a very hazy idea of where we were. Then hounds took us down again into Sambhur Shola. The master next made a wide cast round by Nunjenad village and up to the top of the hill above it, hounds having divided, there being jack all over the place. On the top of the hill hounds struck a fresh line and the jack was viewed several times in front of them. He took us down through the shola where the Muthugar stream flows and then turned right-handed into a shola on a hill overlooking the Ketocheral stream. Here unfortunately three or four couple of hounds charged into a sambhur, which they hunted across the stream up into the Emerald Valley Tea Estate and back down into the stream again, where she soiled and hounds were called off without much trouble, except two, who required a little persuasion from Captain Duff and Captain Vane.

The master then took hounds back to the shola where they had charged, to try if they had put their jack to ground, but without success. We then proceeded homewards by the Avalanche Bridle Path. This was a long, hard day for both horses and hounds, as we were running practically without ceasing from 7 A.M. to 10-30 A.M.

Tuesday was another bye-day, the hounds meeting at the Kennels at 1-30 P.M. It was a real thick monsoon day, with a dense mist and drizzle, varied by heavy showers at intervals. There was a fairly large field out. We first drew Mossy Bank and along under the Havelock Road to near Tudor Hall, where hounds opened on the line of a jungle sheep, but quickly lost interest in it. We then drew through the south-west portion of Aramby Wood, between the wire fence and the Ampthill Road to the end of the plantation beyond Brookhampton, but without success. Then the master took hounds over to Hanging Shola, which contained a jack, but nothing could be made of him, scent being very bad. We then moved on to Brooklands and hounds hit off a rather stale line among the rocks on the ridge just east of Black Bridge and hunted slowly across the Connemara Road, where no more could be made of the line. The master then drew towards Rocky, hounds picking up a line just before topping the ridge which runs north-east from Rocky. They hunted very prettily across the bog by Karimuli Mund, then on nearly to Waterfall Shola and left-handed down to and across the Waterfall River, pace improving as they went, on up over the hill as if for Pamela's Crossing and then left-handed over the river again and back along their former line, across the river and up into the shola just east of the Sholur Bridge Road. We then went home, reaching Kennels at 5-15 P.M. Scent was distinctly poor all day and most of the jacks were underground on account of the rough weather.

ABLAKI.

GORDON'S HORSE HOUNDS.

THE sporting 30th Lancers' pack, which has been lately established in Bangalore, have only just begun operations when continuous rain has put a temporary but effective stopper upon hunting. However a bye-day and one legitimate hunt have been brought off, and the pack show very great promise of sport to come, other things being equal. The bye-day was at the fourth mile-stone on the Anekal Road and does not need much description. Only a few people were out, and the country gave the jack too many opportunities of ringing and seeking cover to afford a good run. However, he was killed after some pottering work in which the excellent hunting qualities of the hounds showed themselves and—"there's an end."

The first legitimate day, which took place on the morning of the 15th instant, at Hebbel Cross Roads, provided much better sport, and indeed there was a real good 25 minutes' gallop. The field was a good one, and included sundry ladies, the British Resident and the Yuvaraja of Mysore. Mr. Gledstanes hunted fifteen couple of excellent hounds, and Mr. Walker acted as first whip. After one or two fruitless draws to the west of the Tumkur Road, there was a very decided affirmative in a large mango tope, and the jack made tracks in no time. Hounds did not get away on really good terms, and he had a very fair start, but notwithstanding the fact that they were not yet in condition, the pack ran so fast when out of cover that he had to hustle. For a mile and a half he ran straight for the Silledar lines and then, finding the pursuing chorus uncomfortably near, turned sharply left handed down a big nullah. But the pack turned with him and wonderfully well, considering that they are comparatively new to the country and one another and he was shoved across the Imperial Service Lancers' Polo ground and on for three-quarters of a mile beyond. The transport lines here interfered with him and getting fogged he entered a native courtyard where hounds ran into him after a really smart gallop. The Master presented the brush to Mrs. Stirling (Essex Regiment) who went well throughout. Further draws were ineffective, and the hounds were taken home.

It may be said that the Gordon's Horse pack at present consists of thirty couple of hounds, drawn from the Duke of Beaufort's, the North Warwickshire, the Tickham Hunt and others. Some of them are grand hounds, the dogs being noticeably superior to the bitches, as is only natural, the best bitches being, of course, retained at home for stud purposes. The hunt has its annals at Aurangabad, where for several years Colonel Wapshare hunted the pack with much success, and it is greatly to be hoped that they will add to their laurels in Bangalore. Colonel Wapshare, by the way, may shortly be expected to be on leave in Bangalore for a few months, and during his stay he will carry the horn again and give the benefit of his extensive experience to his sporting subalterns. It may be added that one and all of these young gentlemen are enthusiastic in their comments upon their late C. O. both as a soldier and a huntsman.

Polo.

THE HISTORY OF POLO.

IT may not be uninteresting to young players to know a little of the history of polo, and how that we are indebted to our connection with the East for this popular pastime, which may be said now to rank high amongst our national games.

Mr. J. Moray Brown says :—"It is generally admitted that every sport has its utility. Angling teaches a man patience and self-control; hunting improves not only good horsemanship, but pluck and observation; whilst shooting inculcates quickness of hand and eye, coupled with endurance and the power of bearing fatigue. Football, cricket, rowing, rackets, and tennis bring to the front and encourage qualities that are essentially manly; and perhaps no sport tends to combine all these lessons so much as polo; none makes a man more a man than this entrancing game; none fits him more for the sterner joys of war, or enables him better to bear his part in the battle of life. Pluck, endurance, submission to discipline, good temper, calmness, judgment, quickness of observation, self-control, are all qualities as essential in a good polo player as in a good soldier; and last, but by no means least, there is no finer school in which to acquire the art of riding.

"Essentially the game of a horse-loving nation, polo appeals irresistibly to our tastes, and year by year has not only obtained a firmer footing at home and in India, but has spread far and wide. There is something very attractive in the game—the mad ride, the mere pleasure of hitting the ball, the satisfaction of outwitting an adversary by superior horsemanship and strategy, are all factors that must appeal to the dullest and most lethargic temperament. Then, too, polo comes at a season of the year when there is no hunting, and the horsey man, who pines for a gallop and excitement with an object, finds in the game an outlet for his superfluous energies."

Even those who are most intolerant of sport cannot but acknowledge that polo is a fine and manly game, and one that has the advantage of being devoid of that element of gambling which has tended so much to degrade many of our other sports, for it is a sport that induces men to run personal risks for mere honour and glory—a refreshing reflection in these days when the widely different terms of "sportsman" and "sporting man" are so frequently confused by the ignorant.

Polo was first played in British territory by Europeans in the tea-growing district of Cachar, India, under the name of "hockey," in 1854-55. Tea planting was then in its infancy in Cachar, where some dozen or so of planters had begun opening their various estates. The valley and villages were full of Manipuris, resident agriculturists, who had been obliged to leave their native State for political reasons, or who had emigrated voluntarily, taking with them their families and polo ponies. Each group of these villages had its little native polo club, and games were of frequent occurrence.

About this time the tea gardens were so scattered, and so far away from the Sudder Station of Cachar, that, except at Christmas times, the planters hardly ever came into the station; but when they did on rare occasions, a scratch match would be got up on the detachment parade ground between half a dozen Europeans and twice the number of Manipuris—that is, three Europeans and six Manipuris on each side.

In 1857-58 the stormy days of the great Indian mutiny prevented play, as the tea-planters to a man not only shouldered their guns and marched with the sepoys, but, by their local knowledge and influence, tended greatly to prevent the spread of disaffection in Cachar. When the wave of rebellion had quieted down Captain Robert Stewart, who was then Deputy Commissioner of Cachar, and Captain Joe Sherer, his assistant, started and organised in 1859 the first European polo club in the world. They had no difficulty in doing so, for between 1854 and 1859 the European population had greatly increased, and the game was becoming more popular and better known year by year. The first meeting was held in Captain Stewart's bungalow in March 1859, and the following is the list of the original members:—Captain Robert Stewart, Captain Joe Sherer, Messrs. James Davidson, Julius Sandeman, James Abernethy, Ernest Ekhart, Arthur Brownlow, W. Walker, and J. P. Stuart.

Before long the active young mercantile blood of the great Calcutta houses whilst visiting their tea estates in Cachar became bitten with the mania. They used to see Stewart, Sherer, and their merry men playing, and from time to time took balls and sticks to Calcutta, where they began to play in earnest, and started a club of their own.

So popular did the sport become that an invitation was sent from Calcutta to Captain Sherer asking him to bring down a team of Manipuris to show them how the trick was done. A subscription was raised by the planters to defray the expenses, and Captain Sherer started in February 1864, with a team of Manipuris, who went by the name of the "Band of Brothers." Their names were—Tullain, Chowba Onnun Sing, Omah Sing, Tubal Sing, Atoomba, and Monge Pa. Nowadays a regiment could as easily be conveyed to the Transvaal as this team in those days. The journey was by boats down the river, and took ten or twelve days.

The game took like wildfire in Calcutta, and Captain Joe Sherer not only obtained the honoured title of "Father of Polo," but was entertained at a great banquet in the Indigo Mart at Calcutta, and received a more tangible recognition of the value of the services he had rendered to polo in being presented with a most handsome tankard and solid silver salver.

I. F. A. CHALLENGE SHIELD.

CALCUTTA F. C. vs. SOUTH LANCASHIRE REGT.—The meeting of these teams had been looked forward to with the greatest interest and a hard tussle was expected, but contrary to all calculations the game on the Calcutta ground last Friday proved a runaway victory for the local team by six goals to nil. The opening exchanges were fairly even, each goal being visited in turn and both custodians being called upon to save. Then the home forwards got away and Fyfe had a shot, Hill cleared, but Sherman sent in another, the ball hit the post and rebounded into play. Forster was lying handy and put it into the net. The Jubbulpore team played hard and an exciting melee took place in front of the Calcutta goal, but the ball went behind. The C. F. C. next attacked and a penalty kick for a foul enabled them to score their second goal. They continued to press till half-time, and after Fyfe had added the third point after a splendid dribble, Hill cleared in turn shots by Sherman, Binning and Forster. On changing ends the home forwards gave some good exhibitions of dribbling and combined play, but it was not till half way through the second moiety that the fourth point was registered, Fyfe banging the ball into the net from a pass by Sherman. The Lancashire men got away occasionally, but the ball was soon returned to their own territory. Collins retired hurt, and during his absence Binning took the ball down and a fine passing run, in which all the forwards had a share, terminated in Sherman notching the fifth point. Drew added a sixth shortly after and the whistle called time, leaving the "red and white" victors as stated. Teams :—

CALCUTTA F. C.—Dods, goal; Gahan and Cooper, backs; Crawford, McConnell and Ansell, half-backs; Binning, H. Sherman, Fyfe, Drew and Forster, forwards.

SOUTH LANCASHIRE.—Hill, goal; Crowther and Richards, backs; Dr. Collins, Sudbury and Boylan, half-backs; Jones, Hulbert, Dr. Fetherell, Boylan, and Briscombe, forwards.

HIGHLAND L. I. vs. CUSTOMS.—The H. L. I. were expected to beat the Customs easily, but the game on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday was anything but a soft thing for the Dum-Dum team, for the Riverside men played a great game, while the soldiers were much below their usual standard. The Customs attacked at the start, Vears just missed and Lees was twice called upon to save from McCreedy. The Highlanders next got away and Lieutenant Malcolm nearly scored, but the ball was returned to the other end and McCreedy just missed the post. Vaughan, Anderson and McCreedy all had chances, but could not put through. Three corners in succession against the H. L. I. were abortive and half-time was piped shortly after. Crossing over the Customs pressed, but the ball was taken down to their goal where Lees put through, the point, however, being disallowed for offside. Then a penalty kick to the H. L. I. gave them the only goal of the match. The Customs played hard, but their efforts to get on terms were fruitless. Vaughan, Berkley and Echlin all attempted to score, but Lees cleared, and they had to retire beaten by a goal to nil. Teams :—

H. L. I.—Lees, goal; Renton and Howard, backs; Robertson, Darcy and Munro, half-backs; Lieutenant Malcolm, Collins, Lees, Allen and Innes, forwards.

CUSTOMS.—Furtado, goal; Anderson and Goldsmith, backs; Marsden, Edwards and Hirst, half-backs; Echlin, McCreedy, Vaughan, Berkley and Vears, forwards.

DALHOUSIE vs. CHINSURAH.—This game on the 18th instant resulted as was generally expected in a win for Dalhousie who were victorious by three to nil. They outclassed the visitors and Prike scored three goals—one in the first and two in the second half. This score would have been larger had it not been for the excellent goal-keeping of the Chinsurah custodian. Teams :—

DALHOUSIE.—Mackenzie, goal; Storey and Reynolds, backs; Napper, Stuart and Wiggall, half-backs; Bull, Woods, Prike, Stimson and Holley, forwards.

CHINSURAH.—Karmarker, goal; Pal and Mondol, backs; Chunder, Chatterjee and B. Pal, half-backs; N. Mukerjee, S. Mukerjee, H. Pal, S. Pal and K. Seal, forwards.

CALCUTTA F. C. vs. CALEDONIA.—Calcutta succeeded in getting into the final of the Shield Competition by beating the Caledonians by 1—0. The game was spoilt in a great measure by the rain, but considering the conditions play was fast and interesting to watch. The Calcutta forwards showed much the better combination which enabled them to put in several shots but Behrend surpassed himself and gave an exhibition of goal-keeping that is seldom seen in Calcutta. Fyffe and Sherman were in good form, indeed, all the Calcutta forwards played well, whereas on the other hand the Caledonia forwards were at sea in the first half. The teams crossed over at half time with the scoring sheet blank. Caledonia were first to get away in the second half and a lovely pass by A. B. Rosser went a-begging. Calcutta were back again in the Caledonia area, Wade almost putting through his own goal, but thanks to Behrend, a goal was averted. A pretty pass by Fyffe enabled Binning to open the score for Calcutta, after which the Caledonia forwards settled down to serious work and it was extremely hard lines that they did not score on two occasions. Chandler, Byrne, Wilson and A. B. Rosser played a splendid game, Chandler being probably the best man on the field.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OF the four matches in the Second Round of the I. F. A. Challenge Shield Competition, the two in which the native competing teams were interested naturally failed to evoke much interest and Caledonia and Dalhousie had no difficulty in establishing their rights to enter the semi final rounds. There was far too much promiscuous and unnecessary charging in Caledonia's exhibition against the Sova Bazar men—a thing for which the wily Babu is always on the look out, when playing a European team, and very often takes advantage of, to the complete discomfiture of his enemy.

Dalhousie did not extend themselves greatly in disposing of Chinsurah by 3—0. The match was a very tame affair, and it would scarcely be right to imagine that the Trades Club showed their best Shield form on this occasion. Jackson was absent from the back division owing to an injured shoulder, and Storey took his place.

As soon as the ties were drawn and it became known that Calcutta would meet the only outside entry in the second round, the South Lancashires' football record became a general topic of discussion and argument. Now that we have seen what Calcutta did with them last Friday, we can only imagine that local football in Jubbulpore is not up to much. I do not remember ever to have seen any team go to pieces so quickly and so thoroughly as the South Lancs after the second goal had been put on from a penalty kick. The Calcutta forward line played an irresistible game all through and no match this season has produced anything so good as the combination between Fyfe, Sherman, and Drew. The only thing worth recording, as far as the South Lancs were concerned, is the very determined play of their goal-keeper, who undoubtedly prevented the score from running into double figures.

If the extent of Calcutta's score in this match was a surprise, no less so was the form exhibited by the Customs in their match with H. L. I. on the Dalhousie ground on Saturday. It was widely anticipated that the Customs would scarcely figure at all in the game, but as it happened, the Dum-Dum men's play exactly reversed these speculations. The military team were not in it. They were outplayed everywhere and would never have won but for the penalty kick awarded to them. The Customs had the hardest of hard luck in not scoring on several occasions, and they certainly should have been awarded a penalty kick when one of the H. L. I. backs handled the ball in the penalty area. The ball went behind and the referee gave a corner kick which was cleared. The linesman's efforts to acquaint the referee with the true state of affairs were not noticed and so the Customs lost an excellent opportunity of equalizing matters—an opportunity which should most obviously have been awarded.

The results of the Shield Competition up to Saturday last are as follows :—

1st Round—

Customs beat Rangers ...	...	1-0
Dalhousie beat Howrah United	(1-1)	1-0
H. L. I. beat Fusiliers ...	(0-0)	1-0

Second Round—

Caledonia beat Sova Bazar	...	4-2
Dalhousie beat Chinsurah ...	...	3-0
Calcutta beat South Lancs	...	6-0
H. L. I. beat Customs ...	...	1-0

The final match will be played on the C. F. C. ground on Saturday, 28th, as a "Charity Match."

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL IN CALCUTTA

OLYMPIANS vs. ENTALLY.—This match, in the second round of the Trades' Cup, was played on Tuesday, 24th July, on the Olympian ground which had been rendered very heavy by the rain. It was understood that the Babus had lodged a protest with the referee, Mr. S. L. Platnauer (Dalhousie) on the score that the flag staffs marking out the corners of the ground were less than five feet high. The game itself was of the most one sided description, Entally being completely outplayed, the only feature worthy of note was the fine form shown by Kingcome, playing inside left for Olympians, who scored no less than four goals, while Bagot scored one. Entally, who were seldom dangerous, scored one goal helped through by one of the Olympian halves. Result :—Olympians five, Entally one.

GOLF IN THE BRITISH ISLES.

6th July 1906

THIS date invariably conjures up visions of bilious looking documents, and if one is lucky, of receipts of sums of £ s. d. It does not remind one of any great and stirring events in the golfing world and yet there are many interesting matches and meetings to chronicle, of minor import certainly compared to open championships, but still worthy of note. Perhaps to amateurs the St. George's Cup competition ranks before all other matters; this annual event took place at Sandwich, on Monday, 25th June, in beautifully fine weather, and resulted in a tie between Mr. Robert Harris with 79+76=155 and Mr. S. Mure-Fergusson 75+80=155. As both the players had to return to London, it was arranged to play the tie at some later date on the same course. The well-known veteran, Mr. Fergusson, has many a time and oft made bold bids for carrying off the Cup with no success, though he has been near enough and played sound enough golf, and Mr. Harris has already made his name so well known that he has even been spoken of as a future champion. The field over which these two triumphed on this occasion was a large and very representative one, of the best amateur golfers of the day including Mr. Ed. Blackwell, Mr. Mansfield Hunter, Mr. C. K Hutchison, Mr. de Zoete, etc., and of these the following headed a list which must, from necessity, be curtailed :—

Mr. R. Harris ...	... 79+76=155
„ E. Blackwell ...	... 81+77=158
„ T. M. Hunter ...	... 79+80=159
„ S. H. Fry ...	... 82+78=160, etc., etc.

One of the oldest clubs in Scotland, which has existed nearly 300 years, is Dornoch, and on this club His Majesty has been pleased to confer the title, prefix should I say?—of "Royal;" there are many royal clubs, but few which can date back to the beginning of the 17th century when the ill fated Stuarts were on the English Throne. For weeks the Parliamentary Handicap has been engrossing the time and thought (not we hope to the exclusion of their minor interests and business at Westminster) of the M.P.'s; this tournament, the Parliamentary Handicap, begins with a preliminary canter, when all the competitors meet on some chosen green, this year at Littlestone-on-Sea, and the 16 survivors of this canter are eligible to compete and play off by match play on any green by mutual consent. It is an extremely interesting feature of the golfing year, and is very well managed. With the revolution which the General Election effected additional interest was centred in the competition this year, and while many of the old familiar names were absent, there was on the other hand a numerous influx of quite good players, of these the winner, Mr. Newnes, from the onset, was conspicuous. The semi-finals were contested by Mr. F. Newnes and Mr. Rainy. The former was giving 5 strokes and won on the 17th green, the other pair being Mr. Badeley and Mr. Emsley-Carr, for which Mr. Badeley emerged victorious on the 18th green. When a Parliament has an enormous Radical majority, it seems only fitting that the Golf Tournament played by its members should be won by a Radical too. Consistency is everything, though this same consistency was not conspicuous in the final when Mr. Badeley only succumbed to Mr. Newnes at the last hole owing to a fatally ill-timed visit to the bunker. Both winner and runner-up are old 'Varsity athletes. Mr. Newnes (who, by the way, is the son of Sir George of that ilk) represented Cambridge in the inter-'Varsity match in 1897. Mr. Badeley took part for Oxford in the quarter mile race in 1895-96 and 97 and also acted as stroke of the Trinity crew, and although he only seriously took up golf later on, in 1901 he won the Parliamentary Tournament.

Is one ever weary of hearing of the doings of the great Quartette? Methinks at times one is! and yet one cannot open a daily paper without seeing fresh and wondrous deeds accomplished by one or other. Even when they have never seen a course or when they open a new Links, these phenomena never seem to make mistakes, thus when on Saturday, 30th June, Braid and Taylor played a 36-hole match over the new Hindhead Course, when the champion beat his old friend and foe by 3 to 2, Braid scarcely made a mistake in the morning round and at the end of 18 holes was 6 up, but Taylor pulled himself together in the afternoon and took his opponent to the 16th green. The course is a very fine one, being 5,770 yards in length and is laid out over the hills and undulations so characteristic of beautiful downy Surrey. On Wednesday, 4th July, while all the fashionable world were dividing their interest between Henley Regatta and the Lawn Tennis Finals at Wimbledon, the southern section of the Professional Golfers' Association were busily occupied in qualifying for the News of the World Tournament at Stanmore; here again the inimitable trio headed the lists, James Braid and Harry Vardon tieing for first place with totals of 143 (Braid 69+74=143, Vardon 70+73=143), then came J. H. Taylor one stroke more with 70+74=144, and then Rowland Jones 70+75=145, whilst at the other end of the list F. Leach, G. Charles, W. E. Reid, C. R. Smith and H. R. Chestney have to play off for the last 4 places. The finals of the London County Golf Association Championship has been won by Sussex, the 4 Counties who as divisional winners were entitled to compete being Yorkshire (holder), Lincolnshire, Derbyshire and Sussex.

THE SEA-SERPENT.

THE circumstantial account given at a recent meeting of the London Zoological Society by Messrs. Nicoll and Meade-Waldo of a strange monster seen by them from the deck of Lord Crawford's yacht, the Valhalla, while cruising off Para on the morning of 7th December 1905, has once more awakened popular and scientific interest in the question as to whether there really exists some huge unknown marine creature, which, for want of a better name, we may continue to call the sea-serpent. As both gentlemen are amateur naturalists, and, therefore, it is to be presumed, trustworthy observers, who are not likely to mistake a "spar clothed with long seaweed" for a living animal, their account cannot possibly be dismissed as a mere traveller's tale.

According to the account given at the meeting referred to, the two gentlemen on the occasion in question were standing on the deck of the yacht about 10 A.M., when their attention was caught by a curious sail-like object of some 4 feet long and 2 feet high waving from side to side in the water. While examining the strange phenomenon through their glasses, a huge eel-like neck, some 6 feet long and as thick as a man's thigh, suddenly reared itself up, bearing a great turtle-like head, with large eyes. It was dark coloured above and silvery white below. After a few moments the head and neck were slowly lowered, and when level with the water were violently lashed from side to side, churning up the water into great sheets of foam, after which it disappeared as suddenly as it had risen.

It does not appear that the yacht was immediately put about although this was done later, without, however, any result.

Very noteworthy is a statement made the following morning by two of the ship's officers, who are said to have heard nothing of Messrs. Nicoll and Waldo's experience, to the effect that during the night of the 7th they noticed a disturbance about one hundred yards distant from the vessel, which they were subsequently convinced was due to some huge animal travelling at a rate somewhat in excess of that of the yacht.

That the animal seen by Messrs. Nicoll and Waldo (and we can scarcely refuse to believe that they saw a huge creature of some kind) was not a whale, seems perfectly certain. The long neck seems equally conclusive against its being either a turtle or a seal; while the sail-like object which first attracted their attention, and is suggestive of a back-fin, is not only incompatible with the creature being one of those two animals, but equally militates against its being a gigantic sea-snake. Moreover, it seems doubtful whether a snake, no matter what its size, could have elevated its head and neck to such an extent out of the water.

Having eliminated the groups in question, there is apparently no other group of known animals to which the creature can be assimilated, for it seems certain that it could not have been a sea-cow.

A most significant circumstance is the similarity of the account given by Messrs. Nicoll and Waldo to that recorded by the officers of H.M.S. Dædalus many years ago, which were received with little more than open ridicule by a late eminent naturalist.

Clearly then, if the creature be a reality at all, it must either be the representative of some totally unknown group, or it must be the survivor of some group supposed to have been long since extinct.

The giant sea reptiles which survived latest in time were probably then collectively known as mosasaurs, from their typical representative the mosasaurus, but even these did not survive beyond the close of the secondary period, or the very commencement of the tertiary period, so far at least as we are aware; none of their remains having been discovered throughout the long series of deposits undoubtedly referable to the latter epoch. Moreover, the form of the head and neck in this group is not of the right type to accord with the description of the sea-serpent.

The long-necked plesiosaurs, on the other hand (which may have been furnished with a back-fin), accord much better with the description of the sea-serpent; but in this case, again, the evidence points to their extinction at the close of the secondary period of geological history.

If a sea-serpent exists, two very remarkable facts require explanation. Firstly, why do we not find evidence of its existence during the tertiary period; and, secondly, why is it seen so seldom?

Even if it belong to a group of which no other representatives are known, it must have had ancestors; and remains of the latter ought to occur in tertiary deposits. It has, indeed, been urged that the known tertiary deposits are for the most part of comparatively shallow water origin, and therefore ought not to be expected to contain the remains of a deep-sea monster. But if the sea-serpent is an air-breather (and if it is not, why should it ever come to the surface?), it cannot live at any very great depths, where its body cavities would be crushed in by the pressure, as has been ably argued in regard to the alleged similar habits of whales. Indeed, the same argument will hold good if it be a gill-breather, for a creature that lives at enormous depths cannot possibly come to the surface without injury, and vice versâ. In any case, therefore, its fossil remains, or those of its ancestors, ought to have been discovered.

As regards the second point, it is inconceivable to suppose that there are only two or three individuals of the species in existence; and if this negative proposition be accepted, while we also regard the creature as an air-breather, it is impossible to understand why it is so seldom seen.

The whole affair is, however, at present a hopeless puzzle. While on the one hand we hesitate to reject the testimony of such observers as the officers of the Dædalus and Messrs. Nicoll and Waldo (not to mention others), all the circumstantial evidence available is against the existence of such a creature. All that can be done under such circumstances is to await with open minds what the future has in store for us.

The Story Teller.

AN UNREVEALABLE SECRET.

JIM Blake, though one of the best fellows on earth, was a victim to that all too prevalent complaint—impecuniosity. Many of Jim's closest friends, and especially his wealthy relations, were of opinion that if he had not sought to woo Dame Fortune by means of the Turf he would have been better off.

In this they were wrong, for Jim was a real good judge of racing, and at times had abnormal runs of luck, and piled up nice little parcels. The true reason of Jim's impecuniosity arose from the fact that although he made money, he had not the faintest idea how to keep it. In fact, as he once admitted to me in one of his rare outbursts of confidence, it was either the Hotel Cecil or Rowton House with him. Once Jim had a decent balance at the bank, he would live like a "jungle" millionaire; nothing was too good for him, and it was only when the sinews of war began to run dry that Jim realised it was time to look around and make a bit more money.

Whether Dame Fortune, like most of her sex, resented being periodically neglected or not, the fact remains that, like the rest of us, when he wanted money most Jim found it hardest to get hold of, and winners difficult to find. Jim's greatest act of extravagance occurred after a tremendously successful week at Ascot, when his winnings ran into four figures. On the strength of this he got married, and for some time I quite lost sight of him.

Eventually I heard that he was living quietly in a small country town not far from Cambridge, the news reaching me in a characteristic letter from Blake, in which he informed me that he was "stony broke," and a quarter's rent was due. How was I going?

Fortunately for my impecunious chum, I was on the high water mark at that particular moment, and sent him a "pony," in return for which I received a profuse letter of thanks, followed a week or so later by the return of the borrowed money, and then occurred another period of silence.

Then, in the spring of the following year, having backed the winner of the City and Sub., I was doing myself pretty well at the Carlton, when who should walk in and take the table next to me but my old pal Jim Blake.

"Forsaken the Cecil?" I said laughingly. "Always the same old Jim."

He jumped at the sound of my voice, and seeing I was alone, took a seat at my table, and I saw by his general appearance that things were going well with him.

"Back the winner to-day, old chap?" I asked, after he had given his order

He looked mildy reproachful, and shook his head.

"Haven't backed a horse for nearly a year," he replied.

"What a parcel you must have packed up last time you did?" I ventured.

"You're right, and you're wrong, Billy, my boy; but as you're mainly responsible for my being in my present enviable position, you are fairly entitled to hear how I managed it."

"Delighted to hear it," I replied. "Glad I've been some use to somebody. Enlighten me."

"I am the possessor of a paying system." He uttered the words with an air of gravity that would have done credit to a judge passing the death sentence, and I was proportionately tickled.

"At last," I said, scoffingly. Allow me to congratulate you, most fortunate of men, and at the same time remind you that we are old pals."

He laughed in his old-time way, thoroughly enjoying the joke.

"Well, I know you're a pal, Billy, for it was that pony of yours that laid the foundation of my parcel."

"Let's hear all about it," I said, becoming curious.

"Well, it was like this. After we settled down in the country, in obedience to the wish of my wife's father, I began to find things get a bit slow, and spent a lot of time up at Cambridge, where we used to go the pace a bit. I got in with a pretty hot lot of undergrads., and soon found the money flying, I can tell you. My efforts to get a bit with the local bookie proved fruitless, and things went from bad to worse. Then it was that I dropped you that letter, as I was up a tree with my bookie."

"I seem to have some dim recollection about the cash being required for rent and such like matters," I said, quizzingly.

"Oh, that was true as far as it went, but to be quite candid, Billy, I am a bit of a Socialist, and believe that self-preservation is the first law of nature. Landlords are fair game."

"Good old Jim," I remarked.

"Well, to proceed. I squared up with my man, and that night, on the way home, I came across a chap who used to be in one of the stables at Newmarket, and he promised to wire me some good stuff if I'd send him the odds to half-a-quid over the winners."

"I know that type," I said, "the neighbourhood round there is full of 'em."

"Shut up, Billy, and listen. You're quite wrong. He sent me some clinkers, and playing it up in the old sweet way, I had a couple of hundred to draw on the following Monday. Of course, I stood the boys a good dinner, and we made a night of it, which we repeated the following Monday, when my winning account was nearly doubled. The fun began when one of the boys suggested that I had discovered a system, and ought to let them share the secret. I'd had plenty of wine, and in replying to the toast of my health, I drew the long bow a bit and told them, although I couldn't tell them how it was done, I didn't mind telling them what to back each day. Well, that did it. We had another good week, and the word went round that Jim Blake's system was infallible. Lord how I laughed in my sleeve. The number of friends I suddenly discovered at Cambridge was simply marvellous, and I dreaded the time when my lucky tipster should strike unlucky. That time never came, however."

"Why, bang it all, man, you don't mean to say he kept up that form?" I asked, incredulously.

"He never had the chance to lose it, for after about a fortnight of it, the bookie came to my house one Sunday evening with tears in his eyes, begging me to keep my information to myself, as he would speedily be ruined if this sort of thing went on. I told him such a thing was absolutely impossible; my life wouldn't be worth living if I attempted to keep my system to myself. Then he suggested that I should put the boys on some 'stiff 'uns,' and we'd cut up the swag. I repudiated this idea in my most indignant manner, and in the end we came to terms.

He paid me £500 down and £5 a week to clear out and live anywhere I liked, so long as I did not hold any communication with any of his clients. We have both held religiously to our contract so far, and as you see, I'm going strong. After travelling abroad for a while, I took a share in a little business up here that looks like bringing me in a thousand a year."

"And the bookie? Didn't he want to know what the system was?" I asked.

"Rather, but I told him nobody could work it but myself; the secret could not be revealed. The best of the joke was that after I got back from Switzerland, I found a packet from the hairdresser who received my telegrams, inclosing over thirty wires, and not a winner on one of them!"

THE HIGHER HIMALAYAS AND BEYOND.

SHOOTING IN TIBET.

AT our next halting ground (Garm-pani, Hot-water) were two springs, one hot and the other cold; around the former was a yellowish encrustation, and the water tasted slightly sulphurous. Here, I found it necessary to leave behind two more ponies with a man to look after them. The caravan was now reduced to five baggage and two riding ponies.

Our next stage was Piwook. Grass here was very scanty and it was a bitterly cold and bleak spot, the thermometer registering 10 degrees of frost outside my tent at 6 A.M. The climate of these high altitudes is very trying, in the mornings before the sun has risen far above the horizon, one side of your face is scorched and blistered by its rays, which seem to penetrate more easily through the rarefied atmosphere, the other side is lashed by a biting, icy wind. The result of this is that the skin of the face is continually peeling off in small flakes. The next march was one which will remain in my memory; I quote from my diary. "July 15th—Camp (Piwook) to Camp (near Herpa-Tso) 15½ miles.—A long and tedious march, mostly over a stony, and in places, boggy 'maidan.' The stones seemed to be floating on a kind of morass into which the struggling ponies sank nearly to their hocks. Never have I come across a bog of this description before, and do not wish to again. The only man who had been as far as this—one of the Ladakis—had forgotten the way, so afte fruitlessly wandering about trying to find a place on which to spend the night, we pitched camp in the dark, three miles from any drinkable water. One pony, very exhausted, did not arrive till 9 P.M. It was found dead the next morning."

The following day was spent searching for wild yak to the North of the Herpa-Tso, but though plenty of old horns were found and some fairly fresh tracks of "doong,"—as the natives call them—moving in a southerly direction, no signs of the animals themselves. On returning, I found camp had been shifted about three miles to a more convenient position on the borders of the lake. Still continuing southwards along the edge of the water, I sighted a flock of geese in a small creek. Quickly exchanging my rifle for a shot-gun, I filled my pockets with cartridges, and commenced to stalk them. Creeping up behind a small hillock to within about fifteen yards, I opened fire and succeeded in accounting for seven with eight cartridges before they took it into their heads to fly away. They proved to be of the bar headed species, and much to the delight of my shikari, who was, or at any rate pretended to be, a strict Mussulman, he succeeded in "hallalling" three or four of them before, or at any rate, very soon after, they had breathed their last. They made a welcome change of diet from the daily menu of antelope venison, of which I was getting somewhat tired. During the summer months, duck and geese migrate from the plains of India and settle on the lakes in the highlands of Ladak and Tibet for the purpose of breeding. In hill stations, on the outskirts of the Himalayas, they can often be heard during the night flying overhead in vast flocks to or from their breeding grounds. I found my tent had been pitched in the centre of a colony of Tibetan Mouse Hares, which resemble tailless rats. It was amusing to watch them popping in and out of their burrows. Wishing to obtain a specimen or two, I fixed up a few snares with some string and wire, and soon secured a couple. The afternoon was quite hot, the thermometer in my tent, showing 79° F. at half-past four.

On 18th July camp was moved to five miles beyond the Herpa-Tso, and this was our most easterly position,—about 295 miles E. of Leh, and 542 from Srinagar,—as owing to the wretched condition of the ponies, I did not consider it advisable to proceed any further. Here, we rested a couple of days, which were spent in again searching for wild yak. To the south of camp were parallel valleys, leading up to a high range of dark-coloured mountains. Accompanied by my two shikaries and the tiffincoolie, I ascended one of these valleys and after a steep and laborious climb, reached the summit, which must have been between nineteen and twenty thousand feet above sea level. On the far side, was a deep ravine running eastwards towards another of these interminable plateaux. In the distance towering above, and on the opposite side of the plain, were white fields of snowy peaks as far as the eye could see. It was indeed a glorious sight, filling the mind with awe, as one gazed at the vast solitudes of the unknown beyond; a view on which few human eyes had ever gazed before. In these desolate regions, no sound breaks the silence, a silence almost terrifying in its intenseness. It is in places such as these, that imagination taking wing, soars through realms of infinity; for a few brief moments this Earth of ours is left behind, and in fantasy we have reached one of the myriad dead worlds which revolve eternally in boundless space.

But having ascended the hill to look for yak, we were soon busy with telescope and binoculars scanning the valley below. Not a sign did we see, and were soon descending along the opposite side of the hill to that up which we had come. After about two hours we reached the plain, which we had observed from our coign of vantage on top of the ridge. Still no yak were visible. Tired and disgusted, we took up a strategic position on a small rock at the side of the plain from which most of it could be seen, and discussed the "tiffin" for which I was always only too ready. Having awaked from a customary tiffin-produced nap, I cast my eyes once more dejectedly across the plain. What was that solitary black speck about a mile and a half away? Surely! Yes! it must be a yak at last! I called excitedly to my shikari to bring the telescope, which showed I had not been deceived, and revealed a fine old solitary bull yak slowly grazing across the "maidan;" though on what he could find to graze in such a barren spot, it was difficult to imagine. Having sufficiently feasted our eyes upon him, we had then to decide the best means of approach. The plain was as bare as the palm of one's hand; not a vestige of cover to be seen anywhere. A consultation was thereupon held. K. was for allowing him to pass us, and then, as the wind was blowing in the right direction, to crawl up to him from behind. For my part, I considered this a much too risky proceeding, as, should he happen to look round, the game would have been up at once. My idea was to allow him to get into a nullah in which direction he seemed to be moving, and to try to stalk him from there. However, after waiting a considerable time he refused to move into this nullah as I had hoped; and so, since it was beginning to get late, I decided to fall in with K's. plan. He also said that yak as they were not good at seeing, depended on their keen sense of smell for protection. This proved to be the case. Cautiously descending the slope, we got well in rear of our quarry and commenced the stalk. Lying flat on our stomachs we again surveyed him through the glasses. He was feeding away from us and appeared totally unconscious of our presence. We then ran about two hundred yards, lay down and had another look. Time after time, this performance was repeated until we had arrived within about four hundred yards of him. It was an agonising time; the suspense was awful; I thought every minute he would turn round and see us. At this distance we rested, not quite sure what was to happen next, and also in order that I might regain my wind. Running at this high altitude is not calculated to steady one's aim. Then a bit of luck happened. There was a slight dip in the ground in front of us, which we had not before noticed; into this he walked, and was hidden from sight. Testing the wind with some dry sand, we quickly hurried forward. I peered over the edge; there he was unsuspiciously feeding and not more than thirty yards away. Taking my double-barrelled ·400 cordite rifle from K., I fired at him just behind the shoulder. Off he galloped as though he had not been touched. It was a horrible moment! A bullet from my left barrel struck the ground just in front of him. Then, staggering, he faced about, and I knew it had been his death gallop. By this time I had reloaded; my third bullet struck him in the shoulder at 240 yards; he collapsed. Life was worth living after all! K. seized me by the hand which he shook violently, saying "bahut burra wallah sahib!" (a very big one, master!). Advancing to examine our prize, we found he really was a magnificent bull. The horns taped 33 inches on the outside curve, he carried a magnificent black coat, the long hair reaching from half way down his flanks to within a few inches of the ground, a massive black tail, and on his back a few tufts of reddish wool, while the hair around his muzzle was slightly grey and grizzled.

The first bullet had entered a few inches too far back, but would undoubtedly have proved fatal. The whole stalk had only occupied an hour and a half. We now signalled to the local shikari and tiffin-coolie who had been left behind on the rock; they had, however, heard the report of my rifle, and were soon espied hurrying towards us across the open. It was as much as the four of us could manage to sever the beast's head from his body. Leaving the two men to carry the head, K. and myself hurried back to camp, where we arrived long after dark, and sent out several more coolies to help the men back with their load.

During the next morning, which I spent in bed, the skin was brought in, pared down and pegged out to dry. In the afternoon, I had another look for yak to the north of camp; none were seen, but I shot a good antelope; (horns 23½ inches, with a record spread of 19 inches from tip to tip.)

SOLUTION TO BRIDGE PROBLEM No. VI.

THE dealer should put on dummy's king of diamonds, and, if it wins, lead a small heart up to his own hand, finessing the knave or queen. If the finesse comes off, he goes on with the ace, with a fair chance of dropping the king, and in any case proceeds to clear the suit. This is his best chance of going game on the one hand. If Y were to play a lower diamond than the king, B would win the first trick (since A cannot have led from ace, queen knave), and would not be likely to return the suit up to the guarded king and 10. In all probability, he would change suits to club or spades, and the dealer must not risk the latter suit being opened before he has cleared his hearts. Unless he puts on Y's king at once, his chance of being able to finesse in hearts is practically nil. If B takes the king with the ace, he will probably return his partner's lead, and Y guards the suit on the fourth round.

A leads the 6 of clubs. How ought the dealer to play the hand and why?

In a Birmingham theatre some years ago a lady exhibited a curious instance of absence of mind. Triping into the dress circle she knelt down and devoutly offered up a short prayer prior to the rise of the curtain, thinking for the moment that she was in church.

A cardsharper, who had evidently been doing the races, joined a small group of farm servants in a wayside public-house. Failing to interest the company in the mysteries of the three-card trick, he in apparent sheer desperation exclaimed:—

"Well, look here, chaps. I'll bet any of you five shillings I can cut the ace of spades, any one of you to shuffle and arrange a pack of cards as you like," at the same time producing the "prayer-book," which he pushed towards a likely victim, who agreed to accept the wager, took up the pack, shuffled them, and then placed them on the table.

The sharper then took his knife and cut the pack clean through, at the same time saying.—

"There! I've cut the ace."

"Nay, thoo hesn't," quietly replied the yokel. "T' ace o' spades is up ma sleeve—see?"

VOLCANOES AND EARTHQUAKES.

WE are all more or less interested nowadays, either directly or indirectly, in volcanic eruptions and earthquakes; those of us who have the misfortune to be located within the tropics to a much greater degree than those who dwell beyond the "earthquake-zone." This general interest at the present moment has not been lost sight of by the enterprising editor of our American contemporary, the Popular Science Monthly, who, in his June issue, has provided the public with two most excellent articles on these subjects. In the first of these Professor H. H. Turner, of Oxford, discusses the times and places of earthquakes, while in the second Major L. E. Dutton gives us his views with regard to the influence of radio-activity (that is to say, the action of radium) as a factor in giving rise to volcanic eruptions. An account of some of the leading conclusions reached by these two eminent authorities—and more especially those relating to volcanic eruptions—can scarcely fail to interest a large number of our readers.

Before the days of radium two main causes were believed to be at work in the production of volcanic eruptions:—First, the upraising to near the earth's surface of the molten matter, the liquid white-hot magma which underlies the crust: and, secondly, the presence of water. There are reasons for believing that the bulk of the earth's interior is an incandescent solid; but immediately beneath the earth's crust—say, some twenty to twenty-five miles down—it is possibly liquid, or capable of becoming so on relief of pressure. In places known as lines of weakness this molten matter penetrates upwards, comes in contact with water, and by converting it into steam rends the rock above and breaks out.

That well-known authority, Professor T. G. Bonney, for instance, has written as follows:—"We may conclude that the lava is generally supplied from a zone situated at a depth of twenty to twenty-five, or possibly thirty, miles in the crust of the earth." There is indeed no question about the presence of steam in every outburst; and Sir Archibald Geikie states that it has been estimated that 999 parts in every 1,000 of the white cloud which hangs over an active volcano are steam. It was, however, always acknowledged that there were great difficulties in comprehending how these forces are brought together, how, especially, the enormous amount of water is supplied, but the facts were held to warrant the conclusion that these are true causes.

With regard to this old theory, Major Dutton observes that it is impossible to conceive any valid cause which would bring the zone of molten rock at one point within a couple of miles of the earth's surface, and again carry it down elsewhere to a depth of something like thirty or forty miles below. This being the case, whether we attribute the cause to the earth's secular cooling, or to a subterranean disturbance or displacement which could mechanically thrust up near to the surface a portion of the earth's core.

Again, as regards the influence of water on eruption, the Major writes as follows:—"The pressure of the overlying rock at a depth of three miles is about 18,000lbs. to the square inch. [Against the 15lbs. of our atmosphere.] At a depth of four miles it is about 25,000 pounds to the square inch. At such a pressure it would be impossible for water-vapour to lift its covering and force a way to the surface unless it had a temperature greatly exceeding 12,000 C. It would have to be heated to a considerably higher temperature to do it. But with increasing temperature the heat is conducted away more and more rapidly until the loss of heat is equal to the quantity generated, and thereafter there is no increase of temperature."

According to the same writer, there are four main factors connected with volcanic outbursts, the last of which is based on inference rather than on definite knowledge. The first fact is the solidity of the earth's interior. The second is the comparative smallness of the amount of matter ejected during any one single volcanic eruption in relation to the bulk of the earth as a whole. Thirdly, we have the repetitive nature of volcanic eruptions; a single eruption never followed by others being a phenomenon of exceeding rarity. As regards the fourth factor, there is a large amount of evidence to show that the rent of the reservoir which supplies the material for a volcanic eruption is at a comparatively small depth below the surface, probably never more than three miles deep, seldom more than two and a half miles, and in some instances certainly less than a mile. The indications point to the conclusion that most eruptions originate at a depth between one mile and two and a half miles; such evidence being based on the earthquakes which generally accompany them and form an integral part of the phenomenon. To measure the depth of origin of such earthquakes is, it may be added, a comparatively easy mater. As regards the cause of the earthquake, there is little doubt that this is the sudden rending of the solid rock immediately above the reservoir of molten lava. The distance separating the zone of fracture from the molten lava cannot, of course, be definitely ascertained; but it could not, in Major Dutton's opinion, be more than a mile without making itself felt in the greater depth of the quake.

Having established these facts and inferences, the author summarises his theory of volcanic eruptions in the following words:—

"They are caused, I conceive, by a development of heat resulting from radio-activity in limited tracts at a depth of one to three—at the very utmost not over four—miles from the surface, which is some times sufficient to melt the rocks affected. The melting is gradual, and when a sufficient quantity of rock in melted, the water which it contains becomes explosive, and usually suffices to break through the covering, constituting an eruption. When all the lava is erupted, and the reservoir is exhausted, it closes up for a time. If the heat continues to be generated, more lava is melted, and in due time another eruption occurs. It may be repeated hundreds or thousands of times."

Not only does this satisfactorily explain the very general repetition of volcanic eruptions on the same spot, but it gets rid of the great difficulty of understanding, how a mass of water could obtain access to a deep-seated mass of molten lava, for it is the water contained in the unmolten rock which forms the active agent as soon as the melting point has been reached. Again, a volcanic eruption is now shown (if the theory be true) to be a purely local phenomenon having no sort of connection with the super-heated interior of the earth generally. It is an affair of the crust and not of the core.

As regards the heating agent, the opinion is gaining ground that radium as we know it is but a transitory condition of matter, and that it is produced by the breaking up of some other element, while it is itself dissipated in the form of radio-activity. The quantity existing in the earth at any one time is in all probability approximately constant, and is also apparently sufficient to produce the amount of heat necessary for volcanic eruptions. Practically the only other supposition necessary to complete the theory is that radium should be periodically generated at certain localities at a comparatively small depth below the surface; and that this is really the case is almost conclusively demonstrated by the presence of this unstable element in the waters of thermal springs.

Little space remains in which to refer to Professor Turner's paper on earthquakes. From what has been stated above, it is clear that earthquakes may be, and generally are, attendant on volcanic eruptions; but the converse of this proposition is by no means true. Moreover, the relegation of volcanic eruptions to the rank of purely local and comparatively superficial phenomena tends to discount the idea that there can be any direct connection between disturbances at distant parts of the earth, as, for instance, at Vesuvius and San Francisco.

On the other hand, another line of evidence tends to show that there may be reasons of special activity throughout the earthquake-zone, and consequently that the two phenomena above referred to were intimately connected.

At the eruption of Mont Pelée in Martinique a few years ago it was pointed out that the moon was at the full at the commencement of the outbreak, and consequently the "pull" of the sun and moon at that moment was almost directly in the same line. Lord Kelvin has calculated that these attractions are so great that unless the earth's crust were more rigid than steel they would produce a tide. At 4-0 P.M. Greenwich time on the day of the Mont Pelée outburst the sun and moon were almost exactly over St. Vincent and Martinique. The island lies in about 15 deg N. latitude, and the sun was 16 deg. N. and the moon 14 deg. Their "pull" was therefore at its maximum; and three hours later the tangential attraction was at its maximum. Some years ago Professor J. W. Judd observed that "no very direct relation has yet been established between the lunar periods and those of volcanic outbursts, yet recent close observations upon the crater of Vesuvius by Professor Palmieri seem to lend support to the view that such relations may exist." There is no question of the varying amount of the lunar and solar attractions; the question is whether the variation—that which makes the difference between spring and neap tides—is sufficient to account for the liberation of the subterranean forces, that is to say, according to the new theory, to induce the supreme moment of tension when the high pressure water-vapour snaps the roof of the reservoir of radium-melted lava.

These combined solar and lunar forces, if sufficiently powerful to effect this, would likewise give rise to a tide of tension passing round the globe which would induce earth-movements in all places of weakness in its course.

Professor Turner is, however, of opinion that there is another and more powerful agency of an analogous nature to which we may perhaps attribute the occurrence of periodical waves of movement along the earthquake-zone. This agency is the existence at certain times of exceptional irregularities in the rotation of the earth itself.

After referring to the abovementioned action of the sun and moon on the tides, and perhaps on the crust of the earth, the Professor proceeds as follows:—"If the influence of these two bodies were more nearly equal, instead of the moon being so predominant a partner, we can imagine times when the tides would be barely perceptible. Similarly there are apparently two contributors to the variation in our earth's rotation, which sometimes act in unison and sometimes in opposition. They are more nearly equal in influence than are our moon and sun; and consequently there are times when these two contributors nearly balance one another and the axis of rotation remains almost steady. But in due time the contributors reinforce one another and the axis acquires a considerable "wobble." Each bend of the axis then describes a curve composed of wide sweeps and sharp bends; and the evidence seems to be that at the sharp bends we are particularly liable to earthquakes."

Whether this theory will receive solid support from careful observations, is now the question of the day.

"Man is the only animal that has a perfect organ of speech," said B.B., after an argument with his better-half upon the superiority of the "lords of creation."

"So has a woman," objected the fair defender of her sex.

"No, she hasn't," her husband asserted. "Woman is made without stops."

It cost him a new bonnet.

A married man who had been out shooting, but who had not been successful, rather than return home empty-handed, stepped into a shop and purchased a hare.

"There, dear," he said to his wife on getting home; "you see I am not so awkward with the gun after all. Isn't he a fine fellow?"

"My dear," said the wife, as she carried the animal to her nostrils, and put it down with a grimace, "you were quite right in killing him to-day. To-morrow it would have been too late."

There was a great deal of rain preceding the Derby of 1849, and the going was very bad. The Flying Dutchman had small feet, and thus could never act properly through dirt, but Marlow lay well with him in the middle of his horses to the mile post, when he discovered he had the speed of all his opponents and could win. Rounding Tattenham Corner Hospur came up most unexpectedly on the right, and went over the ground like a swallow, showing no signs of coming back till three or four strides from home, when Marlow, who had a length to make up, gave The Flying Dutchman "one, two" and the last stride gave him a short neck victory.

Whitehouse, who was on the back of Hotspur always maintained he won; but the only response Marlow would make to this assertion was, "You won at the wrong place, George; you didn't win at Judge Clark."

Sporting Notes.

OUR list of trainers' lots, which will be found in another column, with additions and alterations, now amounts to 140 horses and ponies, and of these 55 are entered for Saturday's racing, the First Calcutta Monsoon Meeting. Entries for Saturday are, as a matter of fact, a little disappointing considering the large number of horses in training here, and it would have been expected that the six races would have attracted more than 57 entries. However, the reason of this probably is that Saturday's races are "terms" races, and many owners are doubtless waiting for the handicaps. A redeeming feature, however, is that of all the entries, there are only two double entries, so the strikings out should not be very extensive.

There had been considerable doubt all along as to whether Wishart would come to Calcutta for the Monsoons or not. He found himself in difficulties, as one owner wanted him here, another at Poona, while a third wished him to remain at Bangalore. However, he has turned up here after all, arriving early in the week with Mornine, Goldstamp and his own horse, Warstripe. So far we have not seen much of the latter, but the two former will be at the top of the open flat races here, both being good winners. Another smart couple from Bangalore which, however, are not entered for the first day's racing, are Leda and Bouquet, both good winners.

Wishart and Mr. J. D. Scott are about the last that are likely to arrive. Neither of them however have anything with which to augment the open hurdle races. Talking of hurdleracing we are glad to see that our suggestion about the fourth flight of pony hurdles has been carried out, and this flight is now placed immediately in front of the nasty ditch which was such a menace to it. The hurdle racecourse is now in excellent order, the bridging of the ditch in front of the third flight being an entire success.

As we have already remarked, the response for Saturday's racing is disappointing, but we have no doubt the succeeding meetings will be better. There are only 57 entries for the six races, which works out an average of only slightly over nine for each race, which is of course exclusive of scratchings. The Trial Hurdle race is the first on the card and for this there are only seven entered. The terms, however, of this race exclude several horses which might quite well be running, such as Parole, Harold, old Pope, and we think Don Q is a winner in Australia and is thereby also excluded. The limitation to horses that have never won Rs. 800 seems in this case to be unhappy and we think the Stewards might do well to do away with this next year. Hoop Iron or Rustler should have a good look in as they are both now thoroughly schooled and have been fencing in very good style, and have been having lots of it. On Tuesday they galloped a mile on the flat alongside the hurdles, both moving well, though with the hurdles out of the way Hoop Iron naturally had the best of it.

Bucentaur seems to be a much improved horse over hurdles and is going very nicely; he galloped a mile over them on Tuesday ridden by his trainer, W. Smith, who will ride him in the race accompanied by Hautboy ridden by Northmore, who is also engaged to ride him on Saturday. Hautboy is still a bit green over his hurdles and was all but down at the last flight. Watchfire is also entered for Saturday and he went a school over the last four flights on Tuesday ridden by his owner, Mr. Pugh, accompanied by Pope (Northmore) and Brownmoor (native). Watchfire's jumping has much improved. This lot was followed by Metalwing (W. Smith), who seems by no means a pleasant ride over hurdles. Scotch Thistle is also running on Saturday He is looking in good fettle and with his experience he is bound to run well.

The Stand Plate is a pony flat race with eight runners. Here again Mr. Galstaun has a couple entered, Ping Pong and Silphoe, both of which ran in the gymkhana on Saturday, finishing respectively first and third. Sylphoe, by the way, is wrongly described as Australian, being of course English. Lady Min, Pincal and Esperanto also ran on Saturday, the remaining three are Solace, Hint, and Kathleen, Mr. J. D. Scott's.

The principal flat race of the day is the Summer Plate, in which Mr. J. D. Scott is represented by Gentle Lady and Magician. There are twelve entries for this race, but the only new-comer is Kingpin, who won a couple of small 6-furlong races in Australia. Most of the others are very old friends, to boot the aged Springlock and Parole at the head of the list, East Ferry, Goldstamp, Loyal, the wayward Nirvana and Fotheringay.

The Amateur Plate has also attracted a dozen and there are two or three pretty useful ones among them, considering the race is for horses which have never won a race of any description Rs. 50 or over. The pick of this lot are Devil's Limit, Dreadnought and Leading Lady, and they should finish in that order. It was a bit of a surprise to the "Amateur" contingent to find Mr. J. D. Scott's name figuring with Lady Viola in this race, which is confined to members of the local clubs.

The Pony Trial Plate has a scratch lot of seven entries only, of which Mr. J. D. Scott's Wal is probably the best. Golden Tip has returned to Monsoon Racing, where she competed fairly well two or three seasons ago.

The Maiden Horse Plate has two double entries out of the eleven, these being Devil's Limit and Dreadnought, both being also entered for the Amateur Plate. They should run prominently in whichever race they go for. Harold ought to run well and that smart little English three-year-old, Craigendarrie, who caused the upset at Tollygunge on Satur day. Batanzos might also run well in this race and so might Wake Up, if she is less green than she was in the cold weather.

The Stewards of the Calcutta Turf Club have now made the appointment of the second handicapper to the Turf Club. They have selected Col. Mayne. He has lately retired from the Army, and is at home, though he has spent nearly all his service out in India. Though little known down Calcutta way, he is very well known and most popular up-country, where he has always taken a very keen interest in racing. We think his appointment will give universal satisfaction, and with two such able men as Mr. Kindersley and Col. Mayne, the handicapping this cold weather should prove most satisfactory. Mr. Kindersley arrived in Calcutta on Tuesday morning. He will not have much time to look about him.

The Fourth Tollygunge Club Gymkhana meeting held last Saturday came well up to all expectations and proved the best day's racing we have ever had out there, and the executive, and more especially the hardworking Honorary Secretary, Mr Maurice Turner, to whose untiring efforts the success of these meetings has been in a great way to do, are to be congratulated on having put before the public a series of such good little meetings. They have gone far to dispel the monotony of the last six weeks, and if we get nearly such a good meeting next Saturday we shall be very lucky. It was thought that the heavy rain of Wednesday night and Thursday morning would have made the course heavy. But with the intervening fine day the going was on the contrary absolutely tip top—just like good English turf.

Mr. Evers, who rode in every race, and Mr. Dudley were both in good form, each of them steering a couple of winners apiece. Mr. Galstaun's stables managed to annex both the open races, though it was won in the first instance by the wrong horse, Craigendarrie, Harold being the one that carried the stable money.

This race, the Russa Road Stakes, afforded a magnificent finish between Craigendarrie (Mr. Pugh), Dreadnought (Mr. Holmes) and Lollipop (Mr. Dudley). They raced stride for stride all the way from the distance, the former winning by a short head from Dreadnought, who went out a very hot favourite, who in his turn only got home a neck in front of Lollipop. The handicapper had the laugh of several people who were dissatisfied with the allotments in this race, as they said Lollipop was "chucked in," while that Craigendarrie, who won after declaring 3lbs., was hardly treated.

Of the eleven entered for the hurdlerace, the Hie Over Stakes, five started, quite sufficient as a matter of fact for the narrow course. As it was the favourite, Lady Gold, ran out at the first hurdle. Jorrocks appears to be a great horse at these meetings and this is his third win, Mr. Evers again winning by getting well away.

The Pony Plate was a strung out affair in spite of having eight runners. It resulted in a regular walk-over for Mr. Dudley on Knock Out, who led from start to finish, winning by two lengths from Branga, who was three-quarters of a length ahead of Wivenhoe, who in turn was three lengths ahead of the rest.

In the Club Vase Sylphoe and Energy made the running till the straight, when Mr. Galstaun came up with a rush on Ping Pong, the favourite, and won by a length from Energy, with Mr. Galstaun's second string Sylphoe third. Lady Min got away with Mr. Deakin after the finish and gave him rather a nasty fall.

The two greys, Great Hart and Lucifer, shared the favouritism for the Novice Stakes, though the light weighted Betsy was well backed. There is little doubt that this race should have been won by Lucifer, but Mr. Evers riding a very determined finish succeeded in scoring by half a length.

The last race on the card resolved itself into three runners, Nevermore, Sal and Sylvia all being non-starters. The race was won by Leading Lady by a shorthead from Fairy.

The course having dried up again fairly well by Saturday morning there were several sets of jumpers. Don Q went a goodish school accompanied over two or three flights by Mr. Kenneth Campbell on Riccaton, who will probably ride him in the Amateur Hurdle Race on 11th August. Bucentaur (W. Smith), Metalwing (Northmore), and Cain (Mr. Evers) then started over the horse course. Cain was rather outpaced and pulled up, while Metalwing blundered into the third flight and was also stopped. The best school of the morning was Hoop Iron (Spillain) and Rustler (Northmore). They went a good striding pace over the full course, both jumping faultlessly, and we look to one of them as the winner on Saturday.

Four then went from Mr. Pugh's lot—Pope (Mr. Pugh), Watchfire (Northmore), Ynyslas (Mr. Barrow) and Gleam (native). The two latter pulled up after three flights, the others completing the full course. They all jumped well, Watchfire getting mixed up a bit with one flight.

On Tuesday morning the training track was open, which it has not been for a long time, and nearly all the Monsoon horses were moved along at paces varying from eight to twelves annas before a large and interested crowed of spectators, all busy gathering what information they could.

The lawsuit which has for many days taken up the attention of the High Court at length came to a conclusion on Tuesday. E. I. Timol, the late owner of Cherson and many other racehorses, stood charged by his firm and his relations together with one Mooljee with criminal breach of trust. It was generally expected that Timol would get off scot-free. Things, however, turned out otherwise, in spite of the fact that the Hon. Mr. Justice Brett summed up for an acquittal. The jury, however, brought in a verdict of guilty by a majority of 7 to 2 against Timol, with the result that he was sentenced to four years' imprisonment. Mooljee got off on the count that there was not sufficient evidence to prove him guilty, which the Judge said was the equivalent of an acquittal. Mr. E. I. Timol's career on the Indian turf has been short and sweet.

During the last week there have been several valuable additions to the strings already here for the Monsoons. Heywood arrived ten days to a fortnight ago with a string of about half a dozen, while Mr. J. D. Scott put in an appearance on Saturday with a string of eleven, six of which he has entered for Saturday, namely, Kathleen, Gentle Lady, Magician, Lady Viola, Wal and Duplex II. Among the others are said to be Honest Lady, Despedido, Esmeralda, while the only jumper he has brought is the pony Bones.

One of the best of the Amateur Hurdle race horses is already hors de combat and this is Sauce. It is very hard luck on his sporting owner, Mr. Kenneth Hamilton, who only at the end of last season replaced Pretender by Sauce.

Dalkeith was entered for the Liverpool Cup, in which he was to carry 8st. 2lbs. but did not fulfill his engagement. Details of the race for the London Cup appear in our English Sporting letter this week. It will be seen that Mr. Farquharson's horse ran poorly, finishing last in a field of nine.

The Sonepore Open Polo Tournament is advertised to begin on the 29th October, and the finals for the Challenge Cup are down for the 3rd November.

The Secunderabad Junior Polo tournament ended in a win for the 26th Light Cavalry, who beat the Futteh Maidan Gymkhana in the final by 5 goals and 5 subsidiaries to 2 goals and 2 subsidiaries.

Owners and trainers are reminded that first entries for the Lucknow Autumn Meeting close on the 15th instant.

In Parliament, a few days ago, Mr. Rees, the new member for Montgomery Borough, asked the Secretary of State for India if he would make inquiry regarding the indiscriminate offer of reward by the Government of, and by the local Governments in, India for the destruction of tigers and leopards; and whether, seeing that these animals keep down the head of deer and sounder of pig, which destroy the crops of the cultivator, he would consider the propriety of discontinuing to offer such rewards at the cultivator's expense to the cultivator's detriment. In reply, Mr. Rees was informed that Mr. Morley did not consider the discontinuance of these rewards advisable, and he was of opinion that any indirect advantage to crops that might result from the multiplication of tigers and leopards would be more than counterbalanced by the increased danger to human beings, cattle, and domestic animals. Mr. Rees was, evidently, not content with this, as in a supplementary question, he pointed out that "the animals were personally known to the inhabitants."

The instinct, or what you like to call it, by which animals are enabled to find their way home from long distances or migrate to places that they have never previously visited, has been a puzzle to naturalists from the earliest times. A writer in the Monthly Review, Mr. C. B. Newland, attributes this quality to a natural law, that of heredity. He thinks that it is a guiding power distinct from intelligence, and animals have this faculty highly developed, whereas man possesses it only in a very modified degree. Man before committing himself, reflects, and then acts accordingly, as his own individual intelligence prompts him. Animals, on the contrary, rely on the accumulated knowledge of thousands of generations of their kind, which is stored up in nerve-cells ready for immediate use as occasion may require. A man lost in a forest, without a compass, and unable to take observations, would probably fail to find his way out; but an animal, having the homing instinct, is never at a loss providing the way is possible. A cat eight months old, the writer relates, was sent in a shut-up basket to a village some ten miles out of the town of Nice. On the third day the same animal reappeared at its former quarters. In this and like cases there can be no question of landmarks. Instinct it is, and instinct alone, which accounts for these acts. People exclaim, "What marvellous sagacity!" The occurrence causes astonishment because it is the performance of an inferior animal, and one beyond the attainment of man, with all his superior knowledge.

In the issue of our German contemporary Weidewerk in Wort und Bild, for April, Professor Paul Matschie gives a fully illustrated account of the twelfth annual exhibition of horns, antlers, and other sporting trophies now being held at Berlin. As usual, the exhibition is in the main restricted to trophies obtained during the past year, which in the great majority of the classes are alone eligible for prizes. In some classes the number of specimens exhibited falls below that of last year's show. In the red deer, for instance, the number of heads shown is 286 against 305, while those of roebuck number only 585 in comparison with 1,574. Fallow-deer heads, on the other hand, show a slight increase (61 against 56), elk heads are practically the same (12 against 13), but chamois show a very large increase, namely, 133 against 97. The red deer heads appear, however, to be of unusually fine quality, since they succeeded in winning 145 prizes against 117 last year. The finest red deer trophies included one 22-pointer from Mecklenburg Schwerin and a second from Galicia, and five 20-pointers. The first shield for red deer heads was won by the Duke of Pless with an 18-pointer from Upper Siberia. The fourth and seventh shields were awarded to His Majesty the German Emperor; while the Crown Prince was also a successful exhibitor in this class.

In the roebuck class H. M. the King of Saxony won the third shield with a fine head; the first being taken by a splendid specimen shot by a forester in East Prussia. Kaiser Wilhelm won the first shield for fallow deer with a magnificent pair of horns obtained in December last in Würtemberg. Among the other exhibits, reference may be made to a large series of trophies from East Africa shot by H. H. the Duke Adolf Friedrich of Mecklenburg and his companions. They include heads of a waterbuck and of a zebra respectively made the types of new species by Professor Matschie. The foreign class also includes a collection of trophies obtained by Lieutenant D. Kauffmann in the Punjab, Mysore, and Kashmir, among which there appears to be one good gaur head. A collection of 27 fox heads—all shot—must appear rather startling to English sportsmen.

"How do I train the birds?" said Mdlle. Rosa Naynon to a Press representative. "That is something of a State secret; but I don't mind telling you that you can't drive them or push them like you can four-footed animals. Pain makes them nervous, savage, and useless We pet them and tempt them with food, and it requires a great amount of patience. A dog or a cat is not afraid of you, but it takes months to convince a bird that you are not his enemy. You have to learn his eccentricities. A cockatoo, for instance, won't let anyone get behind him. He will always wheel so as to face you. I suppose this trait serves some useful purpose when he is wild. Cockatoos mate for life, and often live to be 100 years old. When one of a pair dies, its mate is inconsolable. Yet if one gets sick, he is as good as dead, unless immediately isolated. His fellows simply tear him to pieces. Why, I don't know, unless it is some instinctive precaution against contagious disease.

All our readers know what a marvellous revolver shot and all-round good sportsman Mr. Walter Winans is, so they will join us in congratulating him on winning the revolver Championship of Holland on 8th July. The conditions were 60 shots at 35 meters, bull 15 centimeters, trigger pull 2½ kilos. Mr. Winans won with a score of 52 cartons, and the revolver he used was a Dutch Colonial, 11 milimeter, extra long barrel, Swiss breech, with Smith and Wesson grip.

Athletic Notes.

THE boxing championship of Calcutta last Friday was won by Fisher, who knocked Vickers out in four rounds. Details further on.

In our English Sporting letter this week will be found details of the A. A. A. Championships and of the cricket matches between Oxford and Cambridge, and Gentlemen vs. Players.

The South Indian Motor Union propose to hold a motor gymkhana and speed trials in Madras early in September, provided sufficient entries are forthcoming.

The final game in the Madras Hockey tournament was played on Saturday between the Manchester Regiment from Secunderabad and the Cheshire Regiment from Wellington. The Manchesters won by a goal to nil.

We regret to hear of a nasty accident to Captain Twist of the 13th Hussars, Secunderabad. While playing golf recently he hit a ball which rebounded from a rock and caught him a terrific blow on the eye. He was immediately taken to hospital and it was at first feared that he would lose the eye, but we are glad to hear of more favourable reports.

Racket players will read with interest the announcement that the annual tournament held by the Club of Western India will begin at Poona during the race week and last from the 10th to the 20th September. It will be open to all India. Already we hear of likely entries from some of the Southern India cracks. Is there any chance of Bengal, or say Calcutta, being represented?

The world's sculling championship for £500 a side was decided on the 28th instant on the river Paramatta when G. Towns beat J. Stanbury by twenty lengths. Last year it will be remembered Stanbury beat Towns. The winner of the championship this year has secured it on two previous occasions, in 1901 when he beat J. Gaudaur in Canada, and in 1904, when he beat Tressider on the Paramatta. Towns is also holder of the Championship Cup of England, having won it first in 1899, and again the following year, since when there has been no race. J. Stanbury has been champion sculler of the world on five occasions. In 1890 he beat W. O'Conner, in 1891 J. McLean, in 1892 T. Sullivan, in 1896 C. R. Harding, but was beaten the same year by J. Gaudaur. Last year he secured the title for the fifth time and has had to surrender it again.

Motorists, especially ladies, who find the protection of the person and clothing from dust one of the direst problems of the craft, may probably find it worth their while to make trial of the virtues which are claimed for mohair cloth as a dust-resisting fabric. Most people's acquaintance with mohair as an article of costume is confined to that inexpensive accessory, the bootlace; but it is asserted by those who have tried it that the slipperiness of this woven goats' hair prevents dust from working into it with anything like the penetrative power which it exercises upon ordinary wool or silk, and that a single good shaking will remove every particle of powder from the most thickly covered coat or cloak. Mohair cloth, moreover, will stand washing, which is also a considerable point in its favour. The stuff is especially suitable for ladies' dustcloaks, but there are also men's "mohair tweeds" upon the market.

The Lawn Tennis tournament at Bangalore has been postponed sine die owing to the wet and windy weather.

Mr. C. B. Fry has met with another accident. He was induced to believe that his leg had sufficiently recovered to enable him to play in a local match the week the last English mail left, the result was that the leg again gave way, and Fry had to be carried off the field. There is reason to fear that this second accident will keep him out of the game for the rest of the season.

The last day's play in the 'Varsity match at Lord's quite made up for the dullness of the Friday's cricket, and the plucky batting of Wright, Foster, Martin, and Curwen redeemed an otherwise weak display by Oxford, in whose favour, however, it is to be recorded that they did not miss a catch or give away a run in the field throughout the game. Taken all round, it will be known as Payne's match the Light Blue wicket-keeper securing five victims in the Oxford second innings, thus splendidly following up his exceptionally brilliant hitting on the first day. The fact is that Cambridge were a better side all round than Oxford, and proved it, and were one eleven to be picked from the two teams, we doubt if more than G. T. Branston and N. R. Udal of the Dark Blues would find places in it.

Fashions come and go in cricket as well as in other things, and the recent undesirable revulsion at home in favour of fast bowling will be greatly strengthened by the wonderful success of Fielder and N. A. Knox in the recent Gentlemen vs. Players' match at Lord's. Fielder actually took the whole of the ten wickets in the first innings of the Gentlemen at a cost of 90 runs, while N. A. Knox, ably backed by W. Brearley, also of course a very fast bowler, fairly won a splendid game for the Amateurs, though had Hayes sacrificed his wicket to save Hayward's, the result might have been the other way. Altogether it was a fine game. The Hon'ble F. S. Jackson turned out, for the first time this season, to captain the Gentlemen, and, as so often, won the toss and eventually the match, his share being a characteristic and invulnerable 40 in the first innings when everything was going wrong for his side; and in the second innings, R. H. Spooner, H. K. Foster and G. L. Jessop all scored freely, and a greater treat than to see three such players in form against the pick of professional bowling and fielding can hardly be imagined. C. B. Fry, who has unfortunately strained his leg again and is unlikely to play any more cricket this year, was the principal absentee from the Amateur rank, three of the new recruits, P. Perrin, J. N. Crawford and K. L. Hutchings, did nothing between them, while Hirst and Arnold were unable to turn out for the players.

Warwick beat Somerset by 139 runs.
Leicester beat Worcester by an innings and 34 runs.
Lancashire beat Essex by 13 runs.
Somerset beat Gloucester by 212 runs.

Surrey beat Yorkshire by nine wickets.
The matches Sussex vs. Yorkshire; Notts vs. Sussex were drawn.
The match between the England Eleven and the West Indians was abandoned owing to rain.

We regret to hear of a serious accident while cycling to Mr. O. M. Barnes, Manager of the Commercial Bank of India at Karachi. He was picked up unconscious and is reported to be suffering from concussion of the brain. We hope he will make a quick recovery.

The six-a-side football tournament at Naini Tal this year concluded rather unsatisfactorily. The A teams of St. Joseph's College and Philander Smith College met in the final, the game ending in a pointless draw. Extra time also gave no result, but following a rule introduced this year that corners should settle drawn games, the game was given in favour of St. Joseph's.

We are glad to learn that H. E. the Viceroy has been pleased to confer upon Messrs. Stewart & Co. the appointment of carriage builders to His Excellency. This follows the appointments of nineteen preceding Viceroys and Governors-General.

Our Bombay correspondent writes :—The chief event of the week in Bombay has been the loss of the Pilot schooner with three European Pilots and some ten lascars. Among the unfortunate victims was Mr. D. J. Harris, to whom Association Football in Bombay owes much. He was one of the original members of the Rovers' Club and was the prime mover in the collection of funds for the purchase of the silver cup which is now competed for in the Rovers' Tournament. All the victims were keen sportsmen and the accident which came as a blow to all Bombay is especially felt by those who frequently met the three unfortunate men in sporting circles.

The Y. M. C. A. have rather fallen from their high estate in soccer and will have to be very hard working indeed to get up at the top of the list in the Harwood League. The Royal Scots had an easy day when they met the Telegraph and won by four goals to nil in frightful weather. The Scots had won in the first round and on this occasion recorded their eighth consecutive win. The first half, played with the wind, gave two goals to the Scots and a third came shortly after half time, whilst some neat play brought the score up again almost on the call of time. In the match between the Bombay Gymkhana and the City Club it was ever more of a walk-over. The City men never showed up at all in the attacks, and the Gymkhana put in five goals with comparative ease, while the City Club spent the whole time on the defence and never scored.

A very much better game was that between the Y. M. C. A. and the Telegraph. The former started with the wind and pressed hard, but even when round the goal lacked the finish to take advantage of openings and it was close on half time before Pooler headed in the ball from a corner kick. The second half saw the Y. M. C. A. playing a man short and the Telegraphists early managed to equalise and here the scoring ended though some excellent attempts were made.

Tiger Smith has left India, possibly for good, as, having bought himself out of the 10th Hussars, he is now well on his way to England. He leaves India with a sturdy record and Bombay, remembering past pleasures, wishes him luck in the arena he has chosen. The following is his record :—

WITH Henley, the Lawn Tennis Championships, the 'Varsity Match, and Gentlemen vs. Players, lovers of sport have had no lack of interest lately. No more sporting game was ever fought out at Lord's than the one which ended on Wednesday in victory for the Gentlemen. The best innings for the winning side was that played by Mr. Jackson, but the finest exhibition of individual play in the match was, beyond question, given by Mr. Spooner, whose batting was a treat to see. The weather was all that could be wished, and it is said that over eight thousand people were present. The crowd at the Oxford and Cambridge match on Saturday seemed greater than ever, and though the victory of Cambridge was a foregone conclusion, the match, thanks to Curwen and Martin, came to a more dramatic close than could have been expected. Pretty faces and pretty dresses were much in evidence, and if the play, until the closing hours of Saturday, was somewhat lacking in excitement no one seemed particularly inclined to grumble thereat.

By common consent this year's Henley was, to the full, as pleasant a meeting as has been known. The Belgian success was welcomed, and it cannot, with a decent regard for truth, be averred that the absence of American crews was regretted. After the unpleasantness in connection with the visit of the Vesper Club last year, the motion of which Mr. Fletcher has given notice, will not cause surprise. It was proved beyond a shadow of possible doubt that the Vesper Rowing Club paid money down to the crew that were in the final of the Grand last year, and the Henley Stewards will be asked to prevent, by legislation, the possibility of anything of the kind occurring again. There is, in fact, much to be said in favour of a proposal which was discussed and rejected by a large majority several years ago, to reserve Henley for crews inside Great Britain.

* * * * * *

It is now some years since Mr. Casper Whitney urged that Henley rules should be adopted in America in their entirety. Like most men possessing an average amount of common sense and knowledge of the world, he failed to see any reason for the absurd attempt to bring together in sport elements of society that never meet elsewhere on equal terms. Mr. Whitney did not succeed in carrying his proposed reforms, the American Rowing Clubs declining to restrict their membership to amateurs. This being so, there can be no hardship in their being excluded from Henley, which, as long as may be practicable, should be jealously guarded from the taint of professionalism.

The celebration of Mr. Chamberlain's seventieth birthday passed off without a hitch, and both the organizers of the demonstration, and the object of it, should alike be congratulated thereon. What was, in the first instance, intended as merely a local tribute of affection and admiration became a recognition, not only from Great Britain, but from all "His Majesty's Dominions beyond the Seas." The first part of Mr. Chamberlain's life—that devoted to municipal affairs—was honoured on Saturday : the second devoted to Imperial service was specially prominent on Monday, and culminated with his fine speech at Bingley Hall, and the congratulatory messages which poured into Birmingham from all parts of the world.

Mr. William Redmond's loyal soul is disquieted within him at the seditious nature of some utterances attributed to a Rev. R. Patterson at Belfast lately, who is reported to have warned His Majesty that he "must at once cease coquetting with the Church of Rome, or his Throne would rock." The idea of such a contingency is too painful for Mr. Redmond, and in the House on Monday he anxiously inquired what action the Government intended to take in the matter. Amidst a good deal of ribald laughter from the Opposition the Attorney-General for Ireland gravely expressed his sympathetic appreciation of the horror and indignation with which the Hon. Member naturally regarded such language and could understand his ardent desire that criminal proceedings should forthwith be taken against the Rev. delinquent. Having regard, however, to the fact that there appeared to be no serious risk of any actual breach of the peace following the language used, the Government did not propose to take any action thereon. And with this answer Mr. Redmond had perforce to be content.

Considerable adverse comment has been roused by Mr. Justice Bigham's pronouncement on the Christian Science case. It is generally felt to be important that the great question underlying the case should be settled once for all. Whether any person applying to an invalid a method of mental treatment in place of treatment by duly qualified medical men should be regarded as taking the place and undertaking the responsibilities of an ordinary medical attendant. By interposing his views Mr. Justice Bigham has made it practically impossible that another trial should take place—it being inconceivable that his opinion would not influence a jury—and thereby he has done the reverse of a public service.

The London Traffic Commission, which was appointed three years ago, has just issued the final volume of its report, and it is curious to note that in no place does it seem to have evoked less interest than in London itself. The enormous bulk of the technical evidence gathered, and of the discussions of experts, will deter ordinary mortals—life being short and engagements many—from diving into the ponderous volumes and to experts many of the questions must be left. But the advantages of the chief recommendation of the Commission must appeal to all. The establishment of a central authority to control every branch of London traffic might possibly, after some years' labour, evolve a degree of order out of the present chaos. Needless to say the L. C. C. considers itself the best, indeed the only body fitted to constitute the Traffic Board, but to its intense disgust the Commission expressly states in the report that whoever else may be in command of the London traffic the L. C. C. must not. The reasons for this are patent. Two qualities above all else must the Traffic Board possess—efficiency and impartiality. Now the L. C. C. may be the most efficient body in existence ; its trams and steamboats models of successful management, its financial statements above suspicion, and its members very Solomons ; but impartial it would not be. For every present traffic evil more trams would be the unfailing specific, and it is not difficult to foretell the fate of any scheme put forward by a competing private body.

It is a relief to see that the Commission specially excludes the overhead railway system from the means of transit which it is desirable to encourage here. In New York the noise and inconvenience are insufferable, in wider thoroughfares than most London ones, and when the system was introduced in Berlin it ruined the streets along which it ran. Trams filled with passengers, running at the level of one's first-floor windows, would indeed be the crowning misery to many of us, already driven to the verge of distraction by the amenities of the motor-'bus.

The first performance in England of Gluck's "Armida," at Covent Garden, last Friday, was a noteworthy musical event, and the experiment was amply justified by its success. The plot is badly constructed, its weaknesses being many and obvious. It deals with the efforts of the enchantress Armida to enslave Rinaldo, who alone among the Crusader Knights has resisted her charms. The second act, in which Rinaldo is lured into Armida's magic garden, is a scene of rare beauty. Armida enters, dagger in hand, to wreak her vengeance on him, but after several attempts to nerve herself for the deed, she sinks down by him, and bids the spirits transport them to the bounds of the universe. In the third act we learn that Armida's love has been rejected, and she summons the Spirit of Hate to her aid. In the fourth act, which might well be omitted, as it has little connection with the plot, two of Rinaldo's fellow crusaders set out to rescue him. The last act, which takes place in Armida's garden, is the most beautiful. Rinaldo has completely given himself up to Armida's charms, when the two knights appear, and persuade him to leave her. Armida left alone, calls upon the demons to destroy her palace, and to bear her away in a winged chariot, a command which they obey. No trouble has been spared to mount the opera and its production reflects the greatest honour on the management. The ballets have been beautifully arranged, and the dances possess much grace and charm. The scene in the second act representing Armida's garden, with the dance of Naiads, is a dream of beauty. Mdlle. Bréval perfectly realized the part of Armida, Mdme. Kirkby Lunn was very striking as the Spirit of Hate, and delivered the music, which suits her voice to perfection, very finely. It was altogether a performance not easily to be forgotten.

The present run of "Colonel Newcome" concluded on Saturday, and His Majesty's is among the many theatres closed for the holidays. In the speech with which Mr. Tree acknowledged the hearty applause that followed the ringing down of the curtain, he briefly indicated some future plans. While he is on tour with "Colonel Newcome." "Business is Business," and "The Man who Was," "The Winter's Tale" will be produced at His Majesty's with Miss Ellen Terry as Hermione, and Mr. Charles Warner as Leontes. On his return Mr. Tree hopes to revive "Colonel Newcome," and he repeated the promise he made some weeks ago of another Shakespeare fortnight next April.

"La Bascule," with which the seventh week of the French season at the Royalty opened on Monday, possesses a plot so thin as to be almost a skeleton. It is the story of a middle-aged and amorous personage whose heart is expansive enough to love his young wife "better than anything in the world," and at the same time (low be it spoken) a charming actress "to distraction." The play opens in Rosine Bernier's dressing room of the theatre, where Hubert de Plouha, the "see-saw" of the piece, visits her after an absence of four years. He mentions in an airy manner that he is married, but declares that though he adores his wife he is perfectly capable of adoring Rosine too. Rosine, who is herself married to a count, tells Hubert she detests married men, but nevertheless allows him to become her lover. The second acts finds the de Plouhas staying in the country house of the de Jugans', not far from Rosine Bernier's home. She telegraphs to Hubert to come and see her, and as a measure of precaution signs the telegram with her husband's name. This alarms de Plouha who despatched a friend with a letter to Rosine breaking off the acquaintance, but when he finds how the land lies he is furious with his friend for having given the letter. However he patches up a reconciliation with Rosine and shortly afterwards visits her at her house at Passy, but he is so nervous and takes so many absurd precautions against being seen that Rosine gets tired of him, and to punish him locks him up in her rooms and goes off to the theatre. Unluckily Hubert is due that evening at a family gathering to witness the signing of a cousin's marriage contract, and as he fails to appear everyone goes in search of him to all the police stations in Paris. De Jugan who suspects Rosine goes to the theatre and obtains de Plouha's release. An absurd story of an arrest by a mistake of the police is accepted by Mdme. de Plouha and the curtain falls on a reconciliation. It is a piece that requires skilled acting, but acted as it was on Monday, it was most amusing.

Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's new play, "The Hypocrites," has been printed for private circulation. Some of the leading characters are the vicar, the curate, the lawyer and doctor of a little country town in the South of England, together with the Lord of the Manor, and a neighbouring baronet, with their respective wives and families. Mr. Charles Frohman is engaging a strong company for the production in New York in which Miss Jessie Milward will take the important part of Mrs. Wilmore, in whose boudoir at the Manor House the story opens.

In view of the withdrawal of "The Fascinating Mr. Vanderveldt," Mr. Bourchier has arranged to produce at the Garrick on the 25th instant his adaptation of Anatate France's "Crainquebille" under the title of "Down our Alley," and will himself appear as the old costermonger. Mr. Bourchier has transferred the action of the play from the costermonger quarter of Paris to that of London, and it is rumoured that one of the most striking scenes takes place in a police court. The proceeds of the first performance will be given to the Charing Cross Hospital. It is reported that Mr. Arthur Collins has just engaged Mrs. Patrick Campbell to play the heroine in "The Bondman," which will be his next Autumn drama at Drury Lane. The Ben Greet Company has opened a fortnight's season of pastoral plays at the Crystal Palace: the plays being "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "The Comedy of Errors," and "Twelfth Night."

Confidence in Sir Edward Grey does not increase, and a little incident last week has still further weakened it. Certain Radical sentimentalists, whose feelings were entirely unmoved by the brutal murder of Captain Bull, were deeply concerned at learning that four of the murderers had been hanged, and certain other ruffians concerned in the outrage, flogged. Sir Edward Grey, when baited by the precious faction, afforded them unbounded satisfaction by his declaration, in reference to the executions, that there could be but one impression produced by the details as they appeared in the papers. Under present conditions in Egypt there can be but one impression as to the effect which such an admission on his part will produce. It is high time to realise that the crusade of hysteria on the Radical, Irish, and Labour benches would justify an insurrection against white rule, not only in Egypt and Natal, but in India also. It is rumoured that the construction of the road between India and Tibet has been stopped, and Unionists should remember that, even in foreign policy, nothing is impossible to this most wonderful of governments.

The murder of Miss Hogg at Camberley seems destined to take its place in the list of mysterious undetected crimes. It is uncomfortable, to say the least of it, to realize that it is possible for a murder to be committed in a far from lonely spot, in broad daylight on a June afternoon, and though discovered within half an hour of its perpetration, for the murderer to disappear as completely as if the earth had swallowed him up. What the Coroner was aiming at in his examination of the surviving sister can only be imagined, but to an unprejudiced onlooker it seemed unreasonable to expect an unfortunate old woman, whose head had been battered, and throat cut, to give her evidence in a more lucid and connected manner than she did. In fact in some of her answers Miss Caroline Hogg distinctly scored.

Yet another motor-'bus accident in consequence of the brakes failing to act. Terrible as were the result of the accident—nine passengers being killed and all more or less injured—many very seriously—they were as nothing compared with what they must have been had the accident happened in the crowded street of a town. The same defect which caused the accident on Handcrove Hill may show itself at any time in one of the 'buses which are the bane of existence in London at present, and their very real danger is an additional argument, if one were needed, in favour of the appointment, without delay, of a Board to deal with the question of London traffic.

Interest in the Public School Day at Bisley undoubtedly increases, and this year fifty schools—a larger number than heretofore—competed for the Ashburton Shield. An unusually large number of spectators watched the shooting yesterday. The Duke of Wellington watched his son shooting for the Wellington College team, and Mr. Humphry, member of the N. R. A. Council, had the satisfaction of seeing his son make a splendid score for Rugby. Dover won the Shield for 1906, after a very close finish at the 500 yards range with Winchester, which only wanted one hit anywhere on the target to win with their last shot. Harrow came third, having scored two less than Winchester. Featherstone (of Uppingham) was the winner of the Spencer Cup; St. Paul's won the Veterans' Challenge Trophy; and Repton the Schools' Rapid-Firing Match. Denstone, which made the same score, having a greater number of outers. The weather was unfavourable, the light being changeable and a strong wind blowing across the range.

I have not time to do more than allude briefly to Mr. Haldane's speech last night. His experience at the Bar has not been wasted, and he made a plausible statement of his case, but the changes he proposed are even more sweeping and radical than was rumoured. The Regulars are to be reduced by 20,000 men; two battalions of the Guards are to go; and the 3rd and 4th battalions of the Northumberland Fusiliers, the Royal Warwickshire, the Lancashire Fusiliers, and the Manchester Regiment. The Horse Artillery providentially does not go into the melting pot. The schemes for the Auxiliary Forces are still under consideration, but the War Office seems, in its wisdom, to contemplate placing them under the fostering wing of the County or Borough Councils. Mr. Balfour aptly likened the action of the Secretary for War to that of a trustee, who gambled with trust funds, and there too often found that although he had every intention of putting back the fund he was unfortunately not in a position to do so.

The account of the discovery of the horribly mutilated body of a white man, with a description of the bloody rites performed upon it by Mesini's impi, are entirely omitted from the Westminster Gazette's version of Reuter's message from its correspondent with Colonel Mackenzie's force. It is really too tactless of Mr. Keir Hardie's down-trodden friends to commit such unpleasant crimes at exactly the moment when he is favouring them with appreciative epistles; and it is still more tactless of the Unionist Press to publish such ill-timed, inconvenient messages.

At last the humanitarians have scored, and something has really been done to satisfy the ardent spirits below the gangway and the I. L. P. anent Chinese "slavery." The words "tremblingly obey" are to be removed from the new proclamation. Mr. Winston Churchill has not vouchsafed to tell us what words he proposes to insert in their place. The Saturday Review suggests "obligingly comply with," as likely to meet the views of that ever courteous gentleman.

At the American banquet here on Independence Day, Mr. Whitelaw Read dwelt with even more than average Transatlantic self-complacency on his countrymen's habit of "drawing no decorous veils over wrong-doing, and harbouring no failure which they were not eager, the moment they proved it, to drag under the eyes of the world." Most of us, until we read this statement, laboured under the delusion that, until a novelist made it impossible any longer to draw a decent veil over the iniquities of the American meat trade, there was a conspicuous lack of eagerness to show up, or improve the conditions; and Congress showed not the slightest desire to sift the matter to the bottom. The Inspection Bill is, by the way, in many respects a victory for the packers, who have gained both the points on which they most strongly insisted—that the date of inspection should not be placed on the tins, and that the Government should bear the cost of inspection.

That America sends Great Britain something even worse than its canned meat appears from the evidence given by an American before the Lords' Committee on Juvenile Smoking. The witness stated that not only is the stuff of which the American cigarette is composed gathered and made up in filthy surroundings, but it is drugged with opium and cocaine. These are among the foreign manufactured articles which might be heavily taxed with advantage to the community, though the advantage accruing to our revenue therefrom would be nil.

Jewels sold at Christie's on Wednesday realized £70,000, which is the highest sum reached in one day this season, and larger than any amount attained on a single day since 1902. A necklace of 47 pearls brought £10,000. £4,800 was paid for a five-row necklace of four hundred and seventeen pearls, with an oval brilliant clasp. A gold snuff-box, presented by George IV to Captain Sir Bentinck Doyle, who commanded the squadron which took Queen Caroline's body to Brunswick, fetched £135. It is stated that Mr. Leonard Courtney has decided to take the title of Lord Courtney of Penwith. Obviously neither of the titles suggested by the Globe as specially appropriate—"Lord Kruger of Kilbriton," or "Lord de Terriere"—commended themselves to him.

ONLOOKER.

Shikar.

THE BHOY'S FIRST HIMALAYAN IBEX.

FORTUNE had sent me to a district well known for game. Shortly after arrival I engaged a shikari, and sent him out to prospect for red bear. After about ten days, he sent in word that he had spotted two red bear, and two ibex. I had a good deal of work to do, so could not start for the ground till ten days after receipt of the news. I mounted my riding-mule, Kismet, and left——on the 29th October 1905, arriving at my first stage——, 8,000 feet, in the afternoon. From here I engaged coolies, and left at 6 A.M. next day for the shooting-camp, which I reached at 1 P.M. Just above the camp was a large rock which commanded a view of the valley ahead. We got up here, and spied out the land—a gently-sloping nullah, with fairly steep hills on either side. Away up at the head of the nullah you could see the remains of an avalanche, great hummocks of ice and huge boulders—toil and sorrow to walk over! The head of the nullah was about three hours' walk, though it looked much less. The shikari pointed out the places where he had seen the bear and ibex. They were honest now. After searching the ground thoroughly, we moved up the nullah, about four miles; but divil-a-foot of any game was there in sight!

It was now 3 P.M., and as I had been walking since 6 A.M., I thought it was time I went on strike—accordingly told the shikari he had better go on ahead, and see if he could spot any game. He returned after a couple of hours, and through the glasses showed me two herds of ibex, one with three animals in it and the other with six, the former being close and the latter right away at the head of the nullah. It was too late now to do anything, so we returned to camp. Cold did you say? Pitch your camp at 12,000ft. on the last day of October, with the snows all around you and then say if you ever knew what it was to feel warm! I was glad when dinner was over, even though my chef was an excellent man. All my cutlery were aluminium and every time I lifted a knife or a fork I felt I had hold of icicles. May the divil seize me! Why didn't I bring my 'Primus" stove with me! With the exception of my foot-gear, I tumbled into bed just as I was, pulled the bed-clothes over my head, and slept like a pig. The Colleen always says I sleep like a pig.

Up next morning at 4-30 I started at 6 A.M. just as it was light. About 8 A.M. we spotted our first herd of three—needless to say the big 'un was not amongst them. We saw the fresh tracks of two red bear, each leading into a separate patch of small birch jungle at the water's edge, out of which with ten men you could have "hanked" them easily. We must finish with the ibex, who were furthest off, and then have a "go" at the bear next day. So we didn't waste any time, and moved on reaching the foot of the slope, above which the ibex were, about 11 A.M. Had breakfast, but didn't enjoy it, as I spent my time looking at the beastly hill up which I had to go to get above the herd. Straight up and down like the side of a house! However, breakfast over, we had better make a start. It took us one hour and a half to get to the top of the hill. If you know what it was to climb a hill at an angle of 45°, elevation 14,000 feet, well—the rest is in the book!

We ensconced ourselves behind a rock, and peeped over; there about 300 yards distant were our friends, eight bucks in all, enjoying their mid-day siesta. They were on gently sloping ground, with good grazing. At 2 P.M. they began to move; we crept down on to a rock about 100 yards below and got ourselves into a good position for a shot should they graze our way. Joy! They are coming towards us. The shikari says the biggest is 47" and the next 45". Good enough for masther! After a bit, the herd separated, the smallest ones coming up in our direction. Where are the big 'uns? 3 P.M. and never a sign of them; they were behind a rise in the ground. "Shikari, my friend, the young ones will be on to us before the big ones appear, so we had better quit." Accordingly we moved up the hill-side about 100 yards behind a nice big rock. I subsequently felt proud of this move. Just as the shikari peeped over, he turned and whispered, "The big ones are below us!" I crept forward, and there they were, 100 yards off. It was worth many hours' toil only to watch the magnificent beasts; they looked absolutely grand! I laid down, and put my sweater on a rock to rest the rifle on. "Now sahib, don't get buck fever, the middle one is the biggest. Wait till he crosses that snow-patch, and then fire." Just as he got on to the grass and stood broad side on I pressed the trigger click! A miss fire! Did I say "dear?" Up went the four heads, gazing slap at us! I lay still and did not attempt to reload, for movement meant instant detection. After a while they thought it was O.K., and started grazing again. Nothing puts a man off more than a miss-fire. Fortunately I remembered this, and also bore in mind the seven hours' weary tramp I had had. Carefully I extracted the cartridge, and gently pressed another forward (I was using a Jeffrey's Mannlicher Magazine ·256). A mighty long time the monarch of the herd takes to stand broad side on! Another steady shot, and yet another click! Curse the Mannlicher! What has gone wrong with it? This time the ibex did not hear. However, I still remembered not to make an ass of myself, waited a bit longer, and the King of the Herd stood three-quarters on. Bang! went the Mannlicher. The buck stretched out all four legs, shook his tail, and the whole herd was off? But I knew my friend was a "goner," and didn't waste a second's thought on him. "Sahib, the one leading is the next biggest." I thought they'd stop to gaze when they reached a small rise in the ground ahead. Divil-a-foot! So I banged the next shot at the second biggest just as he topped the rise, he was end on—result, a clean miss! Away they went over the snow, but the King was a good last.

Through the glasses I could see he was in a bad way. The shikari said he was hit low down in the fore-leg, and was just a bit lame. "Sixpence, my friend, for you, if he is hit anywhere there!" The buck now got on to very bad ground, and as I had no grass-shoes, and was only wearing chapplies, we sent the tiffin-coolie to go and cut his throat; to watch that coolie through the glasses was as good as a play. He got up to the beast, who could only just stand, and gave such an unearthly yell that the poor buck tried to bolt, fell, and came whizzing down a steep snow slope, the ear-piercing yell thus having the desired effect. We went down, and woe's me! On looking at my rifle, I found the bolt had jammed! After much difficulty I got the bolt out and extracted the cartridge. After replacing the bolt, I found it would go only three-quarters in—here's a how d'ye do! Even though it was 5 P.M., and I was 14,000ft. up in the air, I forgot that it was late, forgot the cold, forgot the ibex, and could only gaze with sorrow on my rifle, and wonder what had gone wrong! I had used the beautiful little weapon for years with never a miss-fire, or a jam. 5-30 P.M., and I could make nothing of it, except that the extractor might have got a bit bent in pressing forward a cartridge. However, had better make tracks for camp. On the way down, we came to the Ibex, and found that I had hit him full in the shoulder, and owing to his standing three-quarters on when I fired, the bullet had passed out at his chest. Here are the measurements:—Length, 44½"; girth at base, 11⅛"; tip to tip, 26½".

Going uphill was bad, distinctly bad; but going down was infinitely worse. We reached the nullah bed shortly after 6 P.M., dark at 6-30 P.M., and we arrived in camp at 8 P.M. After darkness overtook us, we had a holy time scrambling over boulders in the nullah!

Well, the rifle having gone wrong, the only thing to be done is to clear out, leaving the red bear behind us. Cold at night? Frozen solid! Moved on next day, and about 5 P.M., when I was within a quarter of a mile of the camp, there was a red bear, walking leisurely up the hill-side! Did I say "gram?" No nothing! Perhaps I did use the little word that rhymes with jam!

On arrival I found the drabi, whom I had left behind with the mules, looking a shade darker than white! He informed me in fear and trembling, that the bear had just chased him! If I only had a camera with me, that drabi's phiz would have been worthy of a place in Punch!

Up to this, I have always carried a spare fore-sight, thinking that was the only part of the rifle likely to go wrong. Worse luck! know better now, I have written Home for a spare bolt.

Subsequently I found that on trying to force the cartridge forward when the rifle had jammed, the bolt head had slightly been knocked out of shape, which a little sand papering for five minutes set right. The miss-fires were due to the striker having too much oil on it, and owing to the great elevation this oil had congealed. I now always wipe the striker clean of oil before going out and have never had a miss-fire since. For hill-shooting I swear by a Mannlicher.

PLANXTY.

A CORNER OF KUMAON.

MANY years ago Sir Henry Ramsey, the King of Kumaon, fell in love with Binsar and build himself a house to crown one end of the ridge. Here he lived after his retirement, until for health's sake he was advised to go to England, where he died. Those who do not know Kumaon might wonder at its great hold on the affections of a great man, but a visit to Binsar brings understanding, and probably an attack of "Kumaon fever" to the visitor. The symptom of this most infectious disease is a strange longing and love for a little country far separated in distance and tradition from the land we call home: a love so persistent that it has led many Englishmen to settle in Kumaon on retiring from active work, and yet not feel themselves exiled. These hills are full of scattered homesteads, some owned by quite old ladies who never seem to realise their lonely isolation or to desire a more exciting life

Binsar does not court popularity. So but few people have ever heard of it, or know that it is 14 miles beyond Almora, and at its highest point. Flagstaff Hill is just under 8,000 feet high. Thus uplifted above its neighbours it would scorn to be very hot even under a June sun, and the ways of a dust storm it knoweth not. Binsar is always cool, and delightfully green, never wearing the dusty, brown hues of most hill stations in the hot months; Binsar life is a supreme holiday, and spells freedom in every sense; pet eccentricities can be aired without hurting anyone's feelings. Individuality in dress can be indulged, for the panthers and monkeys are not hypercritical, and one need wear no mask to hide one's real self from the world, for there is only old Mother Nature to see what lies underneath, and she knows most things already.

The journey is a long one, but if blessed with an appreciation of the beautiful, and a saving sense of humour, it resolves itself into a three days' picnic. The last attribute is necessary in order to wrestle with Kumaoni coolies and yet maintain one's mental equilibrium. The Kumaoni is doubtless a worthy specimen of his kind, and can be at times quite witty, but his movements are leisurely and the ruling passion of his life is rupees.

The first thing in journeying to Binsar is to arrive at Kathgodam, when a most wicked old coolie agent extorts all he can by means of a seraphic smile that quite masks his inward depravity, and almost makes one forget to count the change. The march to Bhim Tal is a hot and steady climb, but once there, the peaceful beauty of the little lake, nestling amongst the hills, is a sufficient reward. If one pines for more luxuries than a dâk bungalow affords, there are two nice little hotels near the lake. Quite a number of people spend their two months' leave here, preferring it to the hard work of a Naini season, and the fishing is an unfailing attraction.

From Bhim Tal to Peora is a double march of 19 miles, but usually done in one day, having breakfast and a rest at Ramgarh. It is quite possible to get the whole way to Almora in a day, by laying out a dâk, but unless there is need for such haste it is more pleasant to do one or two marches daily, for the road is beautiful and the type of scenery ever changing as one gets further into the hills. Dâk bungalows have been built at each stage, and are quite good of their kind. There is the usual murghi, slender of body and long of leg, waiting to be chivied round the compound for the sahib's breakfast, and the usual tin of strawberry jam which must have accompanied Noah on his voyage.

Just before reaching Peora the road winds along the face of a steep cliff, at a rather dizzy altitude. This path is aptly named the Galleries, and it is advisable not to gaze too long on the little stream far below!

The Dootial coolies are a marvellous sight with their enormous loads—indeed so hidden are they beneath them that it looks exactly as though one's boxes and bundles had taken unto themselves legs and were gaily marching up the hill. These men are trained from tiny children to carry more than the human frame is built for, but of course they pay for it in enlarged hearts and early senility. The women are equally Herculean, and it is recorded that two, relieving each other at intervals, carried a grand piano up to Almora—and arrived smiling.

One leaves Peora with regrets, for it is a lovely little spot: but beauty in Kumaon seems to be progressive, so there is always the hope that the next stage will be better still. This is scarcely realised in the case of Almora, though the march there takes one through a pine forest so redolent and so beautiful that every sense is satisfied. Almora itself has little to commend it; its surroundings are bare and brown and in May and June it is said to be exceedingly hot and stuffy. The 1 3rd Gurkhas have been stationed here for many years, and have made themselves very comfortable indeed. Almora is a Civil as well as a Military station, and, in addition, a great missionary stronghold. The "outward and visible signs" of Christianity seem to be a forgetfulness to salaam to the sahib log, and a tendency towards corsets and French heels, rather reminiscent of the converted chief with his paper collar and pair of spurs. Strange that a "changed beast" should so often find expression in weird adornments.

One more march of 14 miles brings one to Binsar. One can see the promised land from Almora on a clear day, standing high and beautiful above all the other hills. This last march is particularly interesting, so clearly defined is the demarcation line between the fir zone, and the higher altitude oaks and rhododendren trees. When the latter are in full bloom Binsar is a gorgeous sight. The hill, or more strictly ridge, is thickly wooded, and a fertile source of revenue to the Imperial Forest Department, to whom it now belongs. They preserve it for charcoal, and the charcoal burners wander about cutting down trees marked by the forest rangers. Then they make them into a big pile, cover it with mud, leaving one small opening at the bottom. Here the pile is lighted, and left for 15 or 20 days, when it is all converted into charcoal.

No hill fires are allowed in Binsar, and the thick undergrowth and numerous trees afford fine shelter for panther, sarow, karkar, wild dog, gurrl bears and monkeys, to say nothing of khalij and all manner of wild fowl It should be a sportsman's paradise, but the khuds are prodigious and it is frightfully hard work recovering any trophies. Also, since the Forest Department annexed Binsar they have imposed stringent game laws, most annoying for the Binsar residents so long accustomed to be a law unto themselves. There is now a close season till 1st July, after which permits are issued for Rs. 10 a month. Meanwhile panthers multiply in peace and not only ruin the game shooting, but have no false modesty about entering compounds and carrying off the most toothsome cow or goat they see. It is not unusual to meet one in an evening stroll.

Binsar views are unrivalled in their breadth and beauty. Nowhere is there that shut-in feeling which one gets in most hill stations, be they never so lofty; one feels on the top of the world. To the north, and on clear days seemingly quite near, is a magnificent snowy range, stretching uninterruptedly from Thibet to Nepaul, and including Badrinath, Kedarnath, Trisoul, Nandadevi, and a big mass of Nepaul peaks. Sometimes they stand out clear and sharp, and overwhelming in their loftiness: at others the bases are cut off by banks of cloud, and the peaks float in ethereal loveliness high up in the sky. Sunset effects are beautiful beyond description, the cold snow first lighted up by a rosy blush which changes into tender blue-green and purple tints, finally passing away and leaving them dark and lonely. Ever changing, ever wonderful, ever majestic this snowy rough height represent the mystical and the ideal in life. The Pindari glacier is only 9 marches away, and Badrinath, the sacred mountain, about 6. The only difficulty in either pilgrimage is food, which must all be taken with one. Nearer Binsar are several places of interest. So should one get restless there are always places to see.

Binsar would have little charm for those to whom society is a necessity of life. There are but six houses all told, and one is a Forest Bungalow, often lent to visitors by the courtesy of the Deputy Commissioner, to whom one must apply. In the social sense of the term there is nothing to do, yet somehow life at Binsar is always full. Its a grand place wherein both to work and be lazy, and nowhere else could one feel so well, so full of vigour and exhiliration. Its an Arcadian life, and lucky are those who can spend a holiday in Beautiful Binsar.

TURTLE DOVES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE INDIAN FIELD."

SIR,—When rowing up the tidal part of the River Arun, near Arundel Castle, I was greatly struck by the number of turtle doves (turtur turtur). In flight and habits they are curiously like the common Indian dove. For instance, if there is a dead branch standing well out from a leafy tree they delight to perch on it. Although the note is not quite the same as that of any of the Indian doves, yet there is sufficient similarity in the low lazy "coo, coo" to serve as a strong reminder of a hot sleepy compound, with its Neem and Pipal tree.

The handbook to the birds of the British Museum mentions that turtle doves are yearly increasing in numbers in the British Isles.

They only stay for the summer, coming in May and leaving again in September.

APPENDED are results of the racing at Tollygunge this afternoon. Fuller details will be found in our Sporting Notes. POONA FIRST EXTRA MEETING.

Saturday, 28th July 1906.

THE Poona racing season opened this afternoon with a programme of eight events. The course was on the heavy side so times were a bit slow, but excellent finishes were witnessed, the Summer Plate resulting in a dead-heat. It was not a good day for backers, as only two favourites came in. Appended are details:—

MADRAS GYMKHANA SKITTLE RACE MEETING.

STEWARDS :

MR. A. D. JACKSON. | MR. H. A. IRWIN.
MR. H. A. B. VERNON. | CAPT. H. KIRKPATRICK, I.M.S.

Honorary Secretary :—MAJOR R. H. ELLIOT, I.M.S.

Saturday, 21st July 1906.

IN accordance with the determination to hold two meetings a month during the off season, a Skittle Race Meeting was held on the Island to-day. The attendance was rather better than it has been hitherto this season, and the sport offered interesting if not very classy. The two distance handicaps were the best races of the day ; but in results one contradicted the other. On the result of the first it was argued that it was much more difficult to bring animals together by distance handicaps than by weight handicaps, and with a lead of 40 or 50 yards in a mile, the rankest outsider would have no difficulty in keeping in front and eventually defeating a first class animal. The horse race on Saturday proved this to a certain extent, while the pony race did the opposite. It is well to remember, however, that the weights being catch-weights without any minimum limit, this factor must also have played some part in the results. For instance Roxburghe, in addition to giving Cossack 46 yards start, had to carry something like 13st. in weight. A very formidable task indeed. The prizes were a very pretty selection of Silver Cups, which were presented to winners after the meeting. The Band of the Madras Volunteer Guards played during the evening, which was cloudy and pleasantly cool. Appended are the details :—

THE TURF.

NEWMARKET.

IN the absence of sunshine last Friday the temperature had not abated one jot, but the clerk of the weather kindly held of the promised rain which was left till after the general departure. From first to last the surroundings have been charming. His Majesty did not patronise the concluding day's proceedings with the result that a great falling off was noticeable on the far side, a result forshadowed by the early morning exodus of luggage-ladden traps that kept the porters on the departure platform busy. The business portion of the racing community stuck to their guns to the finish, and both Tattersall's and the commodious half-crown ring were well patronised.

ALEXANDRA PARK.

The attendance on Saturday was a very good one, Tattersall's ring being crowded, and the Club enclosure reminded one of a miniature Ascot, bright with the summer costumes of the fair sex, and well patronised by the leading supporters of the national sport. As to the holiday crowd, it was stupendous, the carriages from Farringdon-street and King's Cross being crowded. Over the vast assemblage the sun poured his power through the clear air. On heavy clay, the going is a bit awkward to deal with, either very dry or very muddy, but the happy medium had been caught, and the course was never in better condition, according to the expert opinions of the jockeys who rode over it.

Half Holiday gave trouble at the post, and when the lever was pulled he whipped round and was left, and Let Go the Painter jumped away with a slight advantage of Tom Funny, but on fairly settling down the latter took up the running from Mr. Corlett's gelding, the pair at an interval of a couple of lengths being attended by Ninias, then after another gap came Speculor, Kolo, and Best Light, the whipper-in being Royal Arch. Turning out of the straight Tom Funny was followed by Let Go the Painter and Speculor, the latter moving up on the rails well in advance of Best Light and Ninias. This order went undisturbed for half the journey where Best Light and Kolo both improved their positions, whilst Dalkeith and Royal Arch became tailed off. When well in the line for home Let Go the Painter resumed command from Tom Funny, who was in difficulties on re-entering the straight, and Speculor took closer order with Let Go the Painter, whom he headed opposite the stands, and though Best Light stayed on into second place at the distance, he failed to reach Speculor, who won comfortably by a length and a half; a head divided second and third. Ninias was fourth, Tom Funny (eased) fifth, Kolo sixth, and Dalkeith last.
